[*777] The Seventh Claim for Relief in the California Complaint, id., at 46-47 (PP141-145), and the closely similar Sixth Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint, id., at 97-98 (PP140-144), [*25] charge a group of domestic primary insurers, foreign reinsurers, and the ISO with conspiring to restrain trade in the markets for "excess" and "umbrella" insurance by drafting model forms and policy language for these types of insurance, which are not normally offered on a regulated basis. Id., at 33 (Cal. Complaint P101). The ISO Executive Committee eventually released standard language for both "occurrence" and "claims-made" umbrella and excess policies; that language included a retroactive date in the claims-made version, and an absolute pollution exclusion and a legal defense cost cap in both versions. Id., at 34 (Cal. Complaint P105).

LEdHN[6A][] [6A]Finally, the Eighth Claim for Relief in the California Complaint, id., at 47-49 (PP146-150), and its counterpart in the Fifth Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint, id., at 95-97 (PP135-139), charge a group of London and domestic retrocessional reinsurers [5] with conspiring to withhold retrocessional reinsurance for North American seepage, pollution, and property contamination risks. Those retrocessional reinsurers signed, and have implemented, [*26] an agreement to use their "'best [627] endeavors'" to ensure that they would provide

---

[5] The California and Connecticut Complaints' Statements of Facts describe this conspiracy as involving "specialized reinsurers in London and the United States." App. 34 (P106); id., at 87 (Conn. Complaint P110). The claims for relief, however, name only London reinsurers; they do not name any of the domestic defendants who are the petitioners in No. 91-1111. See id., at 48 (P147); id., at 96 (Conn. Complaint P136). Thus, we assume that the domestic reinsurers alleged to be involved in this conspiracy are among the "unnamed co-conspirators" mentioned in the complaints. See id., at 48 (Cal. Complaint P147); id., at 96 (Conn. Complaint P136).

such reinsurance for North American risks "'only . . . where the original business includes a seepage and pollution exclusion [*778] wherever legal and applicable.'" Id., at 35 (Cal. Complaint P108). [6]

LEdHN[6B][] [6B]

[27] C

Nineteen States and a number of private plaintiffs filed 36 complaints against the insurers involved in this course of events, charging that the conspiracies described above violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. After the actions had been consolidated for litigation in the Northern District of California, the defendants moved to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action, or, in the alternative, for summary judgment. The District Court granted the motions to dismiss. In re Insurance Antitrust Litigation, 723 F. Supp. 464 (1989). It held that the conduct alleged fell within the grant of antitrust immunity contained in § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b), because it amounted to "the business of insurance" and was "regulated by [2900] State Law" within the meaning of that section; none of the conduct, in the District Court's view, amounted to a "boycott" within the meaning of the § 3(b) exception to that grant of immunity. 15 U.S.C. § 1013(b). The District Court also dismissed the three claims that named only certain London-based defendants, [7] invoking [*28] international comity and applying the Ninth Circuit's decision in Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, N. T. & S. A., 549 F.2d 597 (1976).

The Court of Appeals reversed. In re Insurance Antitrust Litigation, 938 F.2d 919 (CA9 1991). Although it held the conduct involved to be "the business of insurance" within the meaning of § 2(b), it concluded that the defendants could [*779] not claim McCarran-Ferguson Act antitrust immunity for two independent reasons. First, it held, the foreign reinsurers were beyond the regulatory jurisdiction of the States; because their activities could not be "regulated by State Law" within the meaning of § 2(b), they did not fall within that section's grant of immunity. Although the domestic insurers were "regulated by State Law," the court held, they [*29] forfeited their § 2(b) exemption when they conspired with the nonexempt foreign reinsurers. Second, the Court of Appeals held that, even if the conduct alleged fell within the scope of § 2(b), it also fell within the § 3(b) exception for "act[s] of boycott, coercion, or intimidation." Finally, as to the three claims brought solely against foreign defendants, the court applied its Timberlane analysis, but concluded that the principle of international comity was no bar to exercising Sherman Act jurisdiction.

We granted certiorari in No. 91-1111 to address two narrow questions about the scope of McCarran-Ferguson [628] Act antitrust immunity, [8] [*30] and in No. 91-1128 to address the application of the Sherman Act to the foreign conduct at issue. [9] 506 U.S. 814 (1992). We now affirm in part, reverse in part, and remand.

[*780] II

---

[6] The Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Claims for Relief in the California Complaint, id., at 49-50 (PP151-156), and the Seventh Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint, id., at 98 (PP145-146), allege state-law violations not at issue here.

[7] These are the Fifth, Sixth, and Eighth Claims for Relief in the California Complaint, and the corresponding Third, Fourth, and Fifth Claims for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint.

[8] We limited our grant of certiorari in No. 91-1111 to these questions: "1. Whether domestic insurance companies whose conduct otherwise would be exempt from the federal antitrust laws under the McCarran-Ferguson Act lose that exemption because they participate with foreign reinsurers in the business of insurance," and "2. Whether agreements among primary insurers and reinsurers on such matters as standardized advisory insurance policy forms and terms of insurance coverage constitute a 'boycott' outside the exemption of the McCarran-Ferguson Act." Pet. for Cert. in No. 91-1111, p. i; see 506 U.S. 814 (1992).

[9] The question presented in No. 91-1128 is: "Did the court of appeals properly assess the extraterritorial reach of the U.S. antitrust laws in light of this Court's teachings and contemporary understanding of international law when it held that a U.S. district court may apply U.S. law to the conduct of a foreign insurance market regulated abroad?" Pet. for Cert. in No. 91-1128, p. i.

The petition in No. 91-1111 touches on the interaction of two important pieces of economic legislation. HN2[] The Sherman Act declares "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, . . . to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN3[] The McCarran-Ferguson Act provides that regulation of the insurance industry is generally a matter for the States, 15 U.S.C. § 1012(a), and (again, [*31] generally) that "no Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance," § 1012(b). Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act makes it clear nonetheless that the Sherman Act applies "to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State Law," § 1012(b), and § 3(b) provides that nothing in the McCarran-Ferguson Act "shall render the . . . Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation," § 1013(b).

[2901] Petitioners in No. 91-1111 are all of the domestic defendants in the consolidated cases: the four domestic primary insurers, the domestic reinsurers, the trade associations ISO and RAA, and the domestic reinsurance broker Thomas A. Greene & Company, Inc. They argue that the Court of Appeals erred in holding, first, that their conduct, otherwise immune from antitrust liability under § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, lost its immunity when they conspired with the foreign defendants, and, second, that their conduct amounted to "act[s] of boycott" falling within [*32] the exception to antitrust immunity set out in § 3(b). We conclude that the Court of Appeals did err about the effect of conspiring with foreign defendants, but correctly decided that all but one of the complaints' relevant Claims for Relief are fairly read to allege conduct falling within the "boycott" exception to McCarran-Ferguson Act antitrust immunity. We therefore [*781] affirm the Court of Appeals's judgment that it was error for the District Court to dismiss the complaints on grounds of McCarran-Ferguson Act [629] immunity, except as to the one claim for relief that the Court of Appeals correctly found to allege no boycott.

A

LEdHN[7][] [7]HN4[] By its terms, the antitrust exemption of § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act applies to "the business of insurance" to the extent that such business is regulated by state law. While "business" may mean "[a] commercial or industrial establishment or enterprise," Webster's New International Dictionary 362 (2d ed. 1942), the definite article before "business" in § 2(b) [*33] shows that the word is not used in that sense, the phrase "the business of insurance" obviously not being meant to refer to a single entity. Rather, "business" as used in § 2(b) is most naturally read to refer to "mercantile transactions; buying and selling; [and] traffic." Ibid.

The cases confirm that HN5[] "the business of insurance" should be read to single out one activity from others, not to distinguish one entity from another. In Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 (1979), for example, we held that § 2(b) did not exempt an insurance company from antitrust liability for making an agreement fixing the price of prescription drugs to be sold to Blue Shield policyholders. Such activity, we said, "would be exempt from the antitrust laws if Congress had extended the coverage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act to the 'business of insurance companies.' But that is precisely what Congress did not do." Id., at 233 (footnote omitted); see SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 459, 21 L. Ed. 2d 668, 89 S. Ct. 564 (1969) [*34] (the McCarran-Ferguson Act's "language refers not to the persons or companies who are subject to state regulation, but to laws 'regulating the business of insurance'") (emphasis in original). And in Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, 102 S. Ct. 3002 (1982), we explicitly framed the question as whether "a particular practice is part of the 'business of insurance' exempted from the antitrust [*782] laws by § 2(b)," id., at 129 (emphasis added), and each of the three criteria we identified concerned a quality of the practice in question: "first, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry," ibid. (emphasis in original).

LEdHN[1B][] [1B]LEdHN[8A][] [8A]The Court of Appeals did not hold that, under these criteria, the domestic [*35] defendants' conduct fell outside "the business of insurance"; to the contrary, it held that that condition was met. [10] See 938 F.2d at 927. [2902] Nor did it hold the domestic defendants' conduct to be "[un]regulated by State Law." Rather, it constructed an altogether different [630] chain of reasoning, the middle link of which comes from a sentence in our opinion in Royal Drug Co. "Regulation . . . of foreign reinsurers," the Court of Appeals explained, "is beyond the jurisdiction of the states," 938 F.2d at 928, and hence § 2(b) does not exempt foreign reinsurers from antitrust liability, because their activities are not "regulated by State Law." Under Royal Drug Co., "an exempt entity forfeits antitrust exemption by acting in concert with nonexempt parties." 440 U.S. at 231. Therefore, the domestic insurers, by acting in concert with the nonexempt foreign insurers, lost their McCarran-Ferguson Act antitrust immunity. See 938 F.2d at 928. This reasoning fails, however, because even if we were to agree that foreign reinsurers were not subject to state regulation (a point on which we express no opinion), [*36] the quoted language from Royal Drug Co., read [*783] in context, does not state a proposition applicable to this litigation.

LEdHN[8B][] [8B]

LEdHN[1C][] [1C]LEdHN[9A][] [9A]LEdHN[10A][] [10A]The full sentence from Royal Drug Co. places the quoted fragment in a different light. "In analogous contexts," we stated, "the Court has held that an exempt entity [*37] forfeits antitrust exemption by acting in concert with nonexempt parties." 440 U.S. at 231. We then cited two cases dealing with the Capper-Volstead Act, which immunizes from liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act particular activities of certain persons "engaged in the production of agricultural products." [11] Capper-Volstead Act, § 1, 42 Stat. 388, 7 U.S.C. § 291; see Case- Swayne Co. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 389 U.S. 384, 19 L. Ed. 2d 621, 88 S. Ct. 528 (1967); United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 84 L. Ed. 181, 60 S. Ct. 182 (1939). Because these cases relied on statutory language referring to certain "persons," whereas we specifically acknowledged in Royal Drug Co. that the McCarran-Ferguson Act immunizes activities rather than entities, see 440 U.S. at 232-233, the analogy we were drawing was of course a loose one. The agreements that insurance companies made with "parties wholly outside the insurance industry," id., at 231, we noted, such as the retail pharmacists involved in Royal Drug Co. itself, or "automobile body repair shops or landlords," [*38] id., at 232 (footnote omitted), are unlikely [*784] to be about anything that could be called "the business of insurance," as distinct from the broader "'business of insurance companies,'" id., at 233. The alleged agreements [631] at issue in the instant litigation, of course, are entirely different; the foreign reinsurers are hardly "wholly outside the insurance industry," and respondents do not contest the Court of Appeals's holding that the agreements concern "the business of insurance." These facts neither support even the rough analogy we drew in Royal Drug Co. nor fall within the rule about acting in concert with nonexempt parties, which derived from a statute inapplicable here. Thus, we think it was error for [2903] the Court of Appeals to hold the domestic insurers bereft of their McCarran-Ferguson Act

[10] The activities in question here, of course, are alleged to violate federal law, and it might be tempting to think that unlawful acts are implicitly excluded from "the business of insurance." Yet § 2(b)'s grant of immunity assumes that acts which, but for that grant, would violate the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, or the Federal Trade Commission Act, are part of "the business of insurance."

[11] We also cited two cases dealing with the immunity of certain agreements of labor unions under the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts. See 440 U.S. at 231-232. These cases, however, did not hold that labor unions lose their immunity whenever they enter into agreements with employers; to the contrary, we acknowledged in one of the cases that "the law contemplates agreements on wages not only between individual employers and a union but agreements between the union and employers in a multi-employer bargaining unit." Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 664, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). Because the cases stand only for the proposition that labor unions are not immune from antitrust liability for certain types of agreements with employers, such as agreements "to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units," id., at 665, they do not support the far more general statement that exempt entities lose immunity by conspiring with nonexempt entities.

exemption simply because they agreed or acted with foreign reinsurers that, we assume for the sake of argument, were "not regulated by State Law." [12]

LEdHN[9B][] [9B]

[39] LEdHN[10B][] [10B]

[*794] [638] [2908] [EDITOR'S NOTE: The page numbers of this document may appear to be out of sequence; however, this pagination accurately reflects the pagination of the original published opinion.]

III

Finally, we take up the question presented by No. 91-1128, whether certain claims against the London reinsurers should have been dismissed as improper applications of the Sherman [*795] Act to foreign conduct. The Fifth Claim for Relief in the California Complaint alleges a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act by certain London reinsurers who conspired to coerce primary insurers in the United States to offer CGL coverage on a claims-made basis, thereby making "occurrence CGL coverage . . . unavailable in the State of California for many risks." App. 43-44 (PP131-135). The Sixth Claim [*40] for Relief in the California Complaint alleges that the London reinsurers violated § 1 by a conspiracy to limit coverage of pollution risks in North America, thereby rendering "pollution liability coverage . . . almost entirely unavailable for the vast majority of casualty insurance purchasers in the State of California." Id., at 45-46 (PP136-140). The Eighth Claim for Relief in the California Complaint alleges a further § 1 violation by the London reinsurers who, along with domestic retrocessional reinsurers, conspired to limit coverage of seepage, pollution, and property contamination risks in North America, thereby eliminating such coverage in the State of California. [20] Id., at 47-48 (PP146-150).

[41]

[2909] LEdHN[3B][] [3B]LEdHN[11A][] [11A]LEdHN[12A][] [12A]LEdHN[13A][] [13A]At the outset, we note that the District Court undoubtedly had jurisdiction of these Sherman Act claims, as the London reinsurers apparently concede. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 37 ("Our position is not that the Sherman Act does not apply in the sense that a minimal basis for the exercise of jurisdiction doesn't exist here. Our position is that there are certain circumstances, and that this is one of them, in which the interests of another State are sufficient that the exercise of that jurisdiction should be restrained"). [21] Although the [*796] proposition was perhaps not always free from doubt, see American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, 53 L. Ed. 826, 29 S. Ct. 511 (1909), it is well established by now that HN6[] the Sherman Act [*42] applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States. See Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582, n. 6, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); United States v. Aluminum Co. of

---

[12] The Court of Appeals's assumption that "the American reinsurers . . . are subject to regulation by the states and therefore prima facie immune," 938 F.2d at 928, appears to rest on the entity-based analysis we have rejected. As with the foreign reinsurers, we express no opinion whether the activities of the domestic reinsurers were "regulated by State Law" and leave that question to the Court of Appeals on remand.

[20] As we have noted, see supra, at 776-777, each of these claims has a counterpart in the Connecticut Complaint. The claims each name different groups of London reinsurers, and not all of the named defendants are petitioners in No. 91-1128; but nothing in our analysis turns on these variations.

[21] One of the London reinsurers, Sturge Reinsurance Syndicate Management Limited, argues that the Sherman Act does not apply to its conduct in attending a single meeting at which it allegedly agreed to exclude all pollution coverage from its reinsurance contracts. Brief for Petitioner Sturge Reinsurance Syndicate Management Ltd. in No. 91-1128, p. 22. Sturge may have attended only one meeting, but the allegations, which we are bound to credit, remain that it participated in conduct that was intended to and did in fact produce a substantial effect on the American insurance market.

America, 148 F.2d 416, 444 (CA2 1945) (L. Hand, J.); Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States § 415, and Reporters' Note 3 (1987) (hereinafter Restatement (Third) Foreign Relations Law); 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust* [639] *Law P236 (1978); cf. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962); Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U.S. 280, 288, 97 L. Ed. 319, 73 S. Ct. 252 (1952); United States v. Sisal Sales Corp., 274 U.S. 268, 275-276, 71 L. Ed. 1042, 47 S. Ct. 592 (1927). [22] Such is the conduct alleged here: that the London reinsurers engaged in unlawful conspiracies to affect the market for insurance in the United States and that their conduct in fact produced substantial effect. [23] See 938 F.2d at 933. [*43]

LEdHN[12B][] [12B]

[44] LEdHN[13B][] [13B]

[45]

[*797] LEdHN[11B][] [11B]According to the London reinsurers, the District Court should have declined to exercise such jurisdiction under the principle of international comity. [24] The Court of [2910] Appeals agreed that courts should look to that principle in deciding whether to exercise jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. Id., at 932. This availed the London reinsurers nothing, however. To be sure, the Court of Appeals believed that "application of [American] antitrust laws to the London reinsurance market 'would lead to significant conflict with English law and policy,'" and that "[s]uch a conflict, unless out-weighed by other factors, would by itself be reason to decline [*798] exercise of jurisdiction." Id., at 933 (citation omitted). [640] But other factors, in the court's view, including the London reinsurers' express purpose to affect United States commerce and the substantial nature of the effect produced, out-weighed the supposed conflict and required the exercise of jurisdiction in this litigation. Id., at 934.

LEdHN[11C][] [11C] [*46]

---

[22] JUSTICE SCALIA believes that what is at issue in this litigation is prescriptive, as opposed to subject-matter, jurisdiction. Post, at 813-814. The parties do not question prescriptive jurisdiction, however, and for good reason: it is well established that Congress has exercised such jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. See G. Born & D. Westin, International Civil Litigation in United States Courts 542, n. 5 (2d ed. 1992) (Sherman Act is a "prime example of the simultaneous exercise of prescriptive jurisdiction and grant of subject matter jurisdiction").

[23] Under § 402 of the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 (FTAIA), 96 Stat. 1246, 15 U.S. C. § 6a, the Sherman Act does not apply to conduct involving foreign trade or commerce, other than import trade or import commerce, unless "such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on domestic or import commerce. § 6a(1)(A). The FTAIA was intended to exempt from the Sherman Act export transactions that did not injure the United States economy, see H. R. Rep. No. 97-686, pp. 2-3, 9-10 (1982); P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P236'a, pp. 296-297 (Supp. 1992), and it is unclear how it might apply to the conduct alleged here. Also unclear is whether the Act's "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" standard amends existing law or merely codifies it. See id., P236'a, p. 297. We need not address these questions here. Assuming that the FTAIA's standard affects this litigation, and assuming further that that standard differs from the prior law, the conduct alleged plainly meets its requirements.

[24] JUSTICE SCALIA contends that comity concerns figure into the prior analysis whether jurisdiction exists under the Sherman Act. Post, at 817-818. This contention is inconsistent with the general understanding that the Sherman Act covers foreign conduct producing a substantial intended effect in the United States, and that concerns of comity come into play, if at all, only after a court has determined that the acts complained of are subject to Sherman Act jurisdiction. See United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 444 (CA2 1945) ("It follows from what we have . . . said that [the agreements at issue] were unlawful [under the Sherman Act], though made abroad, if they were intended to affect imports and did affect them"); Mannington Mills, Inc. v. Congoleum Corp., 595 F.2d 1287, 1294 (CA3 1979) (once court determines that jurisdiction exists under the Sherman Act, question remains whether comity precludes its exercise); H. R. Rep. No. 97-686, supra, at 13. But cf. Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, N. T. & S. A., 549 F.2d 597, 613 (CA9 1976); 1 J. Atwood & K. Brewster, Antitrust and American Business Abroad 166 (1981). In any event, the parties conceded jurisdiction at oral argument, see supra, at 795, and we see no need to address this contention here.

[47]

LEdHN[3C][] [3C]When it enacted the FTAIA, Congress expressed no view on the question whether a court with Sherman Act jurisdiction should ever decline to exercise such jurisdiction on grounds of international comity. See H. R. Rep. No. 97-686, p. 13 (1982) ("If a court determines that the requirements for subject matter jurisdiction are met, [the FTAIA] would have no effect on the court['s] ability to employ notions of comity . . . or otherwise to take account of the international character of the transaction") (citing Timberlane). We need not decide that question here, however, for even assuming that in a proper case a court may decline to exercise Sherman Act jurisdiction over foreign conduct (or, as JUSTICE SCALIA would put it, may conclude by the employment of comity analysis in the first instance that there is no jurisdiction), international comity would not counsel against exercising jurisdiction in the circumstances alleged here.

LEdHN[3D][] [3D]LEdHN[14][] [14]The only substantial [*48] question in this litigation is whether "there is in fact a true conflict between domestic and foreign law." Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. United States Dist. Court for Southern Dist. of Iowa, 482 U.S. 522, 555, 96 L. Ed. 2d 461, 107 S. Ct. 2542 (1987) (BLACKMUN, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The London reinsurers contend that applying the Act to their conduct would conflict significantly with British law, and the British Government, appearing before us as amicus curiae, concurs. See Brief for Petitioners Merrett Underwriting Agency Management Ltd. et al. in No. 91-1128, pp. 22-27; Brief for Government of United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as Amicus Curiae 10-14. They assert that Parliament has established a comprehensive [*799] regulatory regime over the London reinsurance market and that the conduct alleged here was perfectly consistent with British law and policy. But this is not to state a conflict. HN7[] "The fact that conduct is lawful in the state in which it took place will not, of itself, bar application [*49] of the United States antitrust laws," even where the foreign state has a strong policy to permit or encourage such conduct. Restatement (Third) Foreign Relations Law § 415, Comment j; see Continental Ore Co., supra, at 706-707. No conflict exists, for these purposes, "where a person subject to regulation by two states can comply with the laws of both." Restatement (Third) Foreign Relations Law § 403, Comment e. [25] Since the London reinsurers [2911] do not argue that British law requires them to act in some fashion prohibited by the law of the United States, see Reply Brief for Petitioners Merrett Underwriting Agency Management Ltd. et al. in No. 91-1128, pp. 7-8, or claim that their compliance with the laws of both countries is otherwise impossible, [641] we see no conflict with British law. See Restatement (Third) Foreign Relations Law § 403, Comment e, § 415, Comment j. We have no need in this litigation to address other considerations that might inform a decision to refrain from the exercise of jurisdiction on grounds of international comity.

[50] IV

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the cases are remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

[800] JUSTICE SCALIA delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Part I, and delivered a dissenting opinion with respect to Part II. []

With respect to the petition in No. 91-1111, I join the Court's judgment and Parts I and II-A of its opinion. I write separately because I do not agree with JUSTICE SOUTER's analysis, set forth in Part II-B of his opinion, of what

---

[25] JUSTICE SCALIA says that we put the cart before the horse in citing this authority, for he argues it may be apposite only after a determination that jurisdiction over the foreign acts is reasonable. Post, at 821. But whatever the order of cart and horse, conflict in this sense is the only substantial issue before the Court.

[*] JUSTICE O'CONNOR, JUSTICE KENNEDY, and JUSTICE THOMAS join this opinion in its entirety, and THE CHIEF JUSTICE joins Part I of this opinion.

constitutes a "boycott" for purposes of § 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1013(b). With respect to the petition in No. 91-1128, I dissent from the Court's ruling concerning the extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act. Part I below discusses the boycott issue; Part [*51] II extraterritoriality.

I

LEdHN[2B][] [2B]Determining proper application of § 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act to the present cases requires precise definition of the word "boycott." [1] It is a relatively new word, little more than a century old. It was first used in 1880, to describe the collective action taken against Captain Charles Boycott, an English agent managing various estates in Ireland. The Land League, an Irish organization formed the previous year, had demanded that landlords reduce their rents and had urged tenants to avoid dealing with those who failed to do so. Boycott did not bend to the demand and instead ordered evictions. In retaliation, the tenants "sent Captain Boycott to Coventry in a very thorough manner." J. McCarthy, England Under Gladstone 108 (1886). "The population of the region for miles round resolved not to have anything to do with him, and, as far as they could prevent [*801] it, not to allow any one else to have anything to do with him. . . . The awful sentence of excommunication could hardly have rendered him more helplessly alone for a time. No one would work for him; no one [*52] would supply him with food." Id., at 108-109; see also H. Laidler, Boycotts and the Labor Struggle 23-27 (1968). Thus, the verb made from the unfortunate Captain's name has had from the outset the meaning it continues to carry today. To "boycott" means "to combine [642] in refusing to hold relations of any kind, social or commercial, public or private, with (a neighbour), on account of political or other differences, so as to punish him for the position he has taken up, or coerce him into abandoning it." 2 Oxford English Dictionary 468 (2d ed. 1989).

Petitioners have suggested that a boycott ordinarily requires "an absolute refusal to deal on any terms," which was concededly not the case here. Brief for Petitioners [2912] [*53] in No. 91-1111, p. 31; see also Reply Brief for Petitioners in No. 91-1111, pp. 12-13. We think not. As the definition just recited provides, the refusal may be imposed "to punish [the target] for the position he has taken up, or coerce him into abandoning it." The refusal to deal may, in other words, be conditional, offering its target the incentive of renewed dealing if and when he mends his ways. This is often the case -- and indeed seems to have been the case with the original Boycott boycott. Cf. McCarthy, supra, at 109 (noting that the Captain later lived "at peace" with his neighbors). Furthermore, other dictionary definitions extend the term to include a partial boycott -- a refusal to engage in some, but not all, transactions with the target. See Webster's New International Dictionary 321 (2d ed. 1950) (defining "boycott" as "to withhold, wholly or in part, social or business inter-course from, as an expression of disapproval or means of coercion" (emphasis added)).

It is, however, important -- and crucial in the present cases -- to distinguish between a conditional boycott and a concerted agreement to seek particular terms in particular [*802] [*54] transactions. A concerted agreement to terms (a "cartelization") is "a way of obtaining and exercising market power by concertedly exacting terms like those which a monopolist might exact." L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 257 (1977). The parties to such an agreement (the members of a cartel) are not engaging in a boycott, because:

> "They are not coercing anyone, at least in the usual sense of that word; they are merely (though concertedly) saying 'we will deal with you only on the following trade terms.'
>
> ". . . Indeed, if a concerted agreement, say, to include a security deposit in all contracts is a 'boycott' because it excludes all buyers who won't agree to it, then by parity of reasoning every price fixing agreement would be a boycott also. The use of the single concept, boycott, to cover agreements so varied in nature can only add to confusion." Ibid. (emphasis added).

---

[1] Section 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1013(b), provides:

"Nothing contained in this Act shall render the said Sherman Act in-applicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation."

Thus, if Captain Boycott's tenants had agreed among themselves that they would refuse to renew their leases unless he reduced his rents, that would have been a concerted agreement on the terms of the leases, but not a boycott. [2] The tenants, of course, did more than that; [643] they refused [*55] to engage in other, unrelated transactions with Boycott -- e.g., selling him food -- unless he agreed to their terms on rents. It is [*803] this expansion of the refusal to deal beyond the targeted transaction that gives great coercive force to a commercial boycott: unrelated transactions are used as leverage to achieve the terms desired.

[56] The proper definition of "boycott" is evident from the Court's opinion in Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951 (1914), which is recognized in the antitrust field as one of the "leading case[s] involving commercial boycotts." Barber, Refusals to Deal under the Federal Antitrust Laws, 103 U. Pa. L. Rev. 847, 873 (1955). The associations of retail lumber dealers in that case refused to buy lumber from wholesale lumber dealers who sold directly to consumers. The boycott attempted "to impose as a condition . . . on [the wholesale dealers'] trade that they shall not sell in such manner that a local retailer may regard such sale as [2913] an infringement of his exclusive right to trade." 234 U.S. at 611. We held that to be an "'artificial condition,'" since "the trade of the wholesaler with strangers was directly affected, not because of any supposed wrong which he had done to them, but because of the grievance of a member of one of the associations." Id., at 611-612. In other words, the associations' activities were a boycott because they sought [*57] an objective -- the wholesale dealers' forbearance from retail trade -- that was collateral to their transactions with the wholesalers.

LEdHN[2C][] [2C]LEdHN[15][] [15]LEdHN[16A][] [16A]Of course as far as the Sherman Act (outside the exempted insurance field) is concerned, concerted agreements on contract terms are as unlawful as boycotts. For example, in Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U.S. 30, 75 L. Ed. 145, 51 S. Ct. 42 (1930), and United States v. First Nat. Pictures, Inc., 282 U.S. 44, 75 L. Ed. 151, 51 S. Ct. 45 (1930), we held unreasonable an agreement among competing motion picture distributors under which they refused to license films to exhibitors except on standardized terms. We also found unreasonable the restraint of trade in Anderson v. Shipowners Assn. of Pacific Coast, 272 U.S. 359, 71 L. Ed. 298, 47 S. Ct. 125 (1926), which involved an attempt by an association of [*804] employers to establish [*58] industry-wide terms of employment. These sorts of concerted actions, similar to what is alleged to have occurred here, are not properly characterized as "boycotts," and the word does not appear in the opinions. [3] [*59] In fact, in the 65 [644] years between the coining of the word and enactment of the McCarran-Ferguson Act in 1945, "boycott" appears in only seven opinions of this Court involving commercial (nonlabor) antitrust matters, and not once is it used as JUSTICE SOUTER uses it -- to describe a concerted refusal to engage in particular transactions until the terms of those transactions are agreeable. [4]

---

[2] Under the Oxford English Dictionary definition, of course, this example would not be a "boycott" because the tenants had not suspended all relations with the Captain. But if one recognizes partial boycotts (as we and JUSTICE SOUTER do), and if one believes (as JUSTICE SOUTER does but we do not) that the purpose of a boycott can be to secure different terms in the very transaction that is the supposed subject of the boycott, then it is impossible to explain why this is not a boycott. Under JUSTICE SOUTER's reasoning, it would be a boycott, at least if the tenants acted "at the behest of" (whatever that means), ante, at 792, the Irish Land League. This hypothetical shows that the problems presented by partial boycotts (which we agree fall within § 3(b)) make more urgent the need to distinguish boycotts from concerted agreements on terms.

[3] JUSTICE SOUTER points out that the Court in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978), found the term "boycott" "does not refer to "'a unitary phenomenon,"'" ante, at 788 (quoting Barry, supra, at 543 (quoting P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 381 (2d ed. 1974))), and asserts that our position contradicts this. Ante, at 793-794. But to be not a "unitary phenomenon" is different from being an all-encompassing one. "Boycott" is a multifaceted "phenomenon" that includes conditional boycotts, punitive boycotts, coercive boycotts, partial boycotts, labor boycotts, political boycotts, social boycotts, etc. It merely does not include refusals to deal because of objections to proposed terms.

[4] See United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U.S. 293, 295-296, 298, 89 L. Ed. 951, 65 S. Ct. 661 (1945) (refusal to engage in all transactions with targeted companies unless they agreed to defendants' price-fixing scheme); United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 535, 536, 562, 88 L. Ed. 1440, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1944) (discussed infra, at 808-809); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 722, 88 L. Ed. 1024, 64 S. Ct. 805 (1944) (word used in

LEdHN[16B][] [16B]

[60]

LEdHN[17][] [17]In addition to its use in the antitrust field, the concept of "boycott" frequently appears in labor law, and in this context as well there is a clear distinction between boycotts and concerted agreements seeking terms. The ordinary strike [*805] seeking better contract terms is a "refusal to deal" -- i.e., union members refuse to sell their labor until the employer capitulates to their contract demands. But no one would call this a boycott, because the conditions of the "refusal to deal" relate directly to the terms of the refused transaction (the employment contract). A refusal to work changes from strike to boycott only when it seeks to obtain action from the employer unrelated to the employment contract. This distinction is well illustrated by the [2914] famous boycott of Pullman cars by Eugene Debs' American Railway Union in 1894. The incident began when workers at the Pullman Palace Car Company called a strike, but the "boycott" occurred only when other members of the American Railway Union, not Pullman employees, supported the strikers by refusing to work on any train drawing [*61] a Pullman car. See In re Debs, 158 U.S. 564, 566-567, 39 L. Ed. 1092, 15 S. Ct. 900 (1895) (statement of the case); H. Laidler, Boycotts and the Labor Struggle 100-108 (1968). The refusal to handle Pullman cars had nothing to do with Pullman cars themselves (working on Pullman cars was no more difficult or dangerous than working on other cars); rather, it was in furtherance of the collateral objective of obtaining better employment terms for the Pullman workers. In other labor cases as well, the term "boycott" invariably holds the meaning that we ascribe to it: Its goal is to alter, not the terms of the refused transaction, but the terms of workers' employment. [5]

[62] [*806] [645] The one case in which we have found an activity to constitute a "boycott" within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act is St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978). There the plaintiffs were licensed physicians and their patients, and the defendant (St. Paul) was a malpractice insurer that had refused to renew the physicians' policies on an "occurrence" basis, but insisted upon a "claims made" basis. The allegation was that, at the instance of St. Paul, the three other malpractice insurers in the State had collectively refused to write insurance for St. Paul's customers, thus forcing them to accept St. Paul's renewal terms. Unsurprisingly, we held the allegation sufficient to state a cause of action. The insisted-upon condition of the boycott (not being a former St. Paul policyholder) was "artificial": it bore no relationship (or an "artificial" relationship) to the proposed contracts of insurance that the physicians wished to conclude with St. Paul's competitors.

LEdHN[18A][] [18A]Under the standard described, [*63] it is obviously not a "boycott" for the reinsurers to "refuse to reinsure coverages written on the ISO CGL forms until the desired changes were made," ante, at 788, because the terms of the primary coverages are central elements of the reinsurance contract -- they are what is reinsured. See App. 16-17 (Cal. Complaint PP26-27). The "primary policies are . . . the basis of the losses that are shared in the reinsurance agreements." 1 B. Webb, H. Anderson, J. Cookman, & P. Kensicki, Principles of reference to a refusal to deal as means of enforcing resale price maintenance); Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 461, 465, 467, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703 (1941) (boycott of retailers who sold competitors' products); United States v. American Livestock Commission Co., 279 U.S. 435, 436-438, 73 L. Ed. 787, 49 S. Ct. 425 (1929) (absolute boycott of a competing livestock association, intended to drive it out of business); Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 610-611, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951 (1914) (discussed supra, at 803); Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 376, 57 L. Ed. 1232, 33 S. Ct. 780 (1913) (word used in passing).

---

[5] See, e.g., Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Stone Cutters', 274 U.S. 37, 47, 49, 71 L. Ed. 916, 47 S. Ct. 522 (1927) (refusal to work on stone received from nonunion quarries); Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 462-463, 65 L. Ed. 349, 41 S. Ct. 172 (1921) (boycott of target's product until it agreed to union's employment demands); Gompers v. Bucks Stove & Range Co., 221 U.S. 418, 55 L. Ed. 797, 31 S. Ct. 492 (1911) (boycott of company's products because of allegedly unfair labor practices); Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 52 L. Ed. 488, 28 S. Ct. 301 (1908) (boycott of fur hats made by a company that would not allow its workers to be unionized). See also Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 503-505, 84 L. Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982 (1940) (distinguishing between ordinary strikes and boycotts).

Reinsurance 87 (1990); see also id., at 55; Gurley, Regulation of Reinsurance in the United States, 19 Forum 72, 73 (1983). Indeed, reinsurance is so closely tied to the terms of the primary insurance contract that one of the two categories of reinsurance (assumption reinsurance) substitutes the reinsurer for the primary or "ceding" insurer and places the reinsurer into contractual privity with the primary insurer's policyholders. See id., at 73-74; Colonial American Life Ins. Co. v. Commissioner, 491 U.S. 244, 247, 105 L. Ed. 2d 199, 109 S. Ct. 2408 (1989); B. Ostrager & T. Newman, Handbook on Insurance Coverage [*807] Disputes [*64] chs. 15-16 (5th ed. 1992). And in the other category of reinsurance (indemnity reinsurance), either the terms of the underlying insurance policy are incorporated [2915] by reference (if the reinsurance is written under a facultative agreement), see J. Butler & R. Merkin, Reinsurance Law B.1.1-04 (1992); R. Carter, Reinsurance 235 (1979), or (if the reinsurance is conducted on a treaty basis) the reinsurer will require full disclosure of the terms of the underlying insurance policies and usually require that the primary insurer not vary those terms without prior approval, see id., at 256, 297.

JUSTICE SOUTER simply disregards this integral relationship between the terms of the primary insurance [646] form and the contract of reinsurance. He describes the reinsurers as "individuals and entities who were not members of ISO, and who would not ordinarily be parties to an agreement setting the terms of primary insurance, not being in the business of selling it." Ante, at 788. While this factual assumption is crucial to JUSTICE SOUTER's reasoning (because otherwise he would not be able to distinguish permissible agreements among primary insurers), he offers [*65] no support for the statement. But even if it happens to be true, he does not explain why it must be true -- that is, why the law must exclude reinsurers from full membership and participation. The realities of the industry may make explanation difficult:

> "Reinsurers also benefit from the services by ISO and other rating or service organizations. The underlying rates and policy forms are the basis for many reinsurance contracts. Reinsurers may also subscribe to various services. For example, a facultative reinsurer may subscribe to the rating service, so that they have the rating manuals available, or purchase optional services, such as a sprinkler report for a specific property location." 2 R. Reinarz, J. Schloss, G. Patrik, & P. Kensicki, Reinsurance Practices 18 (1990).

[*808] LEdHN[18B][] [18B]JUSTICE SOUTER also describes reinsurers as being "outside the primary insurance industry." Ante, at 789. That is technically true (to the extent the two symbiotic industries can be separated) but quite irrelevant. What matters is that the scope and predictability of the risks assumed in a reinsurance [*66] contract depend entirely upon the terms of the primary policies that are reinsured. The terms of the primary policies are the "subject-matter insured" by reinsurance, Carter, supra, at 4, so that to insist upon certain primary-insurance terms as a condition of writing reinsurance is in no way "artificial"; and hence for a number of reinsurers to insist upon such terms jointly is in no way a "boycott." [6]

LEdHN[18C][] [18C]

JUSTICE SOUTER seems [*67] to believe that a nonboycott is converted into a boycott by the fact that it occurs "at the behest of," ante, at 789, or is "solicited" by, ibid., competitors of the target. He purports to find support for this implausible proposition in United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 88 L. Ed. 1440, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1944), which involved a classic boycott, by primary insurers, of competitors who refused to join their price-fixing conspiracy, the South-Eastern Underwriters Association (S. E. U. A.). The conspirators would not deal with independent agents who wrote for such companies, and would not write policies for customers who insured with them. See id., at 535-536. Moreover, Justice Black's opinion for the Court noted cryptically, "companies not members of S. E. U. A. were cut off from the opportunity to reinsure their risks." Id., at [647] 535. JUSTICE SOUTER speculates [*809] that "the [S. E. U. A.] defendants could have [managed to cut the targets off from reinsurance] by prompting reinsurance companies to refuse to deal with nonmembers." Ante, at 789. Even assuming that [*68] is what happened, all that can be derived from S. E. U. A. is the [2916] proposition that one who prompts a boycott is a co-conspirator with the boycotters. For with or without the defendants' prompting, [6] Once it is determined that the actions of the reinsurers did not constitute a "boycott," but rather a concerted agreement to terms, it follows that their actions do not constitute "coercion" or "intimidation" within the meaning of the statute. That is because, as previously mentioned, such concerted agreements do "not coerce anyone, at least in the usual sense of that word," L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust 257 (1977), and because they are precisely what is protected by McCarran-Ferguson immunity.

---

the reinsurers' refusal to deal in S. E. U. A. was a boycott, membership in the association having no discernible bearing upon the terms of the refused reinsurance contracts.

JUSTICE SOUTER suggests that we have somehow mistakenly "posited . . . autonomy on the part of the reinsurers." Ante, at 792. We do not understand this. Nothing in the complaints alleges that the reinsurers were deprived of their "autonomy," which we take to mean that they were coerced by the primary insurers. (Given the sheer size of the Lloyd's market, such an allegation would be laughable.) That is not to say that we disagree with JUSTICE SOUTER's contention that, according to the allegations, the reinsurers would not "have taken exactly the same course of action without the intense efforts of the four primary insurers." Ibid. But the same could be said of the participants in virtually all conspiracies: If they had not been enlisted by the "intense efforts" of the leaders, their [*69] actions would not have been the same. If this factor renders otherwise lawful conspiracies (under McCarran-Ferguson) illegal, then the Act would have a narrow scope indeed.

Perhaps JUSTICE SOUTER feels that it is undesirable, as a policy matter, to allow insurers to "prompt" reinsurers not to deal with the insurers' competitors -- whether or not that refusal to deal is a boycott. That feeling is certainly understandable, since under the normal application of the Sherman Act the reinsurers' concerted refusal to deal would be an unlawful conspiracy, and the insurers' "prompting" could make them part of that conspiracy. The McCarran-Ferguson [*810] Act, however, makes that conspiracy lawful (assuming reinsurance is state regulated), unless the refusal to deal is a "boycott."

LEdHN[2D][] [2D]Under the test set forth above, there are sufficient allegations of a "boycott" to sustain the relevant counts of complaint against a motion to dismiss. For example, the complaints allege that some of the defendant reinsurers threatened to "withdraw entirely from the business of reinsuring primary U.S. insurers who wrote [*70] on the occurrence form." App. 31 (Cal. Complaint P89), id., at 83 (Conn. Complaint P93). Construed most favorably to respondents, that allegation claims that primary insurers who wrote insurance on disfavored forms would be refused all reinsurance, even as to risks written on other forms. If that were the case, the reinsurers might have been engaging in a boycott -- they would, that is, unless the primary insurers' other business were relevant to the proposed reinsurance contract (for example, if the reinsurer bears greater risk where the primary insurer engages in riskier businesses). Cf. Gonye, Underwriting the Reinsured, in Reinsurance 439, 463-466 (R. Strain ed. 1980); 2 R. Reinarz, J. Schloss, G. [648] Patrik, & P. Kensicki, Reinsurance Practices 21-23 (1990) (same). Other allegations in the complaints could be similarly construed. For example, the complaints also allege that the reinsurers "threatened a boycott of North American CGL risks," not just CGL risks containing dissatisfactory terms, App. 26 (Cal. Complaint P74), id., at 79 (Conn. Complaint P78); that "the foreign and domestic reinsurer representatives presented their agreed upon positions that [*71] there would be changes in the CGL forms or no reinsurance," id., at 29 (Cal. Complaint P82), id., at 81-82 (Conn. Complaint P86); that some of the defendant insurers and reinsurers told "groups of insurance brokers and agents . . . that a reinsurance boycott, and thus loss of income to the agents and brokers who would be unable to find available markets for their customers, would ensue if the [revised] ISO forms were not approved," [*811] id., at 29 (Cal. Complaint P85), id., at 82 (Conn. Complaint P89).

LEdHN[2E][] [2E] LEdHN[19][] [19] LEdHN[20A][] [20A]Many other allegations in the complaints describe conduct that may amount to [2917] a boycott if the plaintiffs can prove certain additional facts. For example, General Re, the largest American reinsurer, is alleged to have "agreed to either coerce ISO to adopt [the defendants'] demands or, failing that, 'derail' the entire CGL forms program." Id., at 24 (Cal. Complaint P64), id., at 77 (Conn. Complaint P68). [*72] If this means that General Re intended to withhold all reinsurance on all CGL forms -- even forms having no objectionable terms -- that might amount to a "boycott." Also, General Re and several other domestic reinsurers are alleged to have "agreed to boycott the 1984 ISO forms unless a retroactive date was added to the claims-made form, and a pollution exclusion and a defense cost cap were added to both [the occurrence and claims made] forms." Id., at 25 (Cal. Complaint P66), id., at 78 (Conn. Complaint P70). Liberally construed, this allegation may mean that the defendants had linked their demands so that they would continue to refuse to do business on either form until both were changed to their liking. Again, that might amount to a boycott. "[A] complaint should not be dismissed unless 'it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'" McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S.

232, 246, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957)). Under that standard, [*73] these allegations are sufficient to sustain the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Claims for Relief in the California Complaint and the First and Second Claims for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint. [7]

LEdHN[20B][] [20B]

Concur by: SOUTER

Concur

[*784contd] [631contd] [2903contd] [EDITOR'S NOTE: The page numbers of this document may appear to be out of sequence; however, this pagination accurately reflects the pagination of the original published documents.]

SOUTER, J., delivered an opinion concurring in the judgment with respect to Part II-B, in which WHITE, BLACKMUN, and STEVENS, JJ., joined.

B

That the domestic defendants did not lose their § 2(b) exemption by acting together with foreign reinsurers, however, is not enough reason [*74] to reinstate the District Court's dismissal order, for the Court of Appeals reversed that order on two independent grounds. Even if the participation of foreign reinsurers did not affect the § 2(b) exemption, the Court of Appeals held, the agreements and acts alleged by the plaintiffs constitute "agreement[s] to boycott" and "act[s] of boycott [and] coercion" within the meaning of § 3(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, which makes it clear that the Sherman Act applies to such agreements and acts regardless of the § 2(b) exemption. See 938 F.2d, at 928. I agree with [*785] the Court that, construed in favor of the plaintiffs, the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Claims for Relief in the California Complaint, and the First and Second Claims for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint, allege one or more § 3(b) "act[s] of boycott," and are thus sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. See infra, at 789-790; post, at 811.

In reviewing the motions to dismiss, however, the Court has decided to use what I believe to be an overly narrow definition of the term "boycott" as used in § 3(b), confining it to those refusals to deal that are "unrelated" or "collateral" [*75] to the objective sought by those refusing to deal. Post, at 803. I do not believe that the McCarran-Ferguson Act or our precedents warrant such a cramped reading of the term.

The majority and I find common ground in four propositions concerning § 3(b) boycotts, as established in our decisions in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978), and United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn., 322 U.S. 533, 88 L. Ed. 1440, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1944). First, as we noted in St. Paul, our only prior decision construing "boycott" as it appears in § 3(b), only those refusals to deal involving the coordinated action of multiple actors constitute § 3(b) boycotts: "conduct by individual actors falling short of concerted activity is simply not a 'boycott' within [the meaning of] § 3(b)." [632] 438 U.S. at 555; see post, at 800 ("'boycott'" used "to describe . . . collective action"); post, at 801 ("To 'boycott' means 'to combine in refusing to hold relations'" (citation omitted)).

Second, a § 3(b) boycott need not involve an absolute refusal to deal. [13] A primary goal [*76] of the alleged conspirators in South-Eastern Underwriters, as we described it, was "to force nonmember insurance companies

---

[7] We agree with JUSTICE SOUTER's conclusion, ante, at 790-791, n. 18, that the Seventh Claim for Relief in the California Complaint and the Sixth Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint fail to allege any § 3(b) boycotts.

[13] Petitioners correctly concede this point. See Brief for Petitioners in No. 91-1111, p. 32, n. 14.

into the conspiracies." [14] 322 U.S. at 535; [2904] cf. Joint Hearing on S. 1362, H. R. [*786] 3269, and H. R. 3270 before the Subcommittees of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 78th Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 2, p. 335 (1943) (statement of Edward L. Williams, President, Insurance Executives Association) ("The companies that want to come into the Interstate Underwriters Board can come in there. I do not know of any company that is turned down"). Thus, presumably, the refusals to deal orchestrated by the defendants would cease if the targets agreed to join the association and abide by its terms. See post, at 801 ("The refusal to deal may . . . be conditional" (emphasis omitted)).

[77] Third, contrary to petitioners' contentions, see Brief for Petitioners in No. 91-1111, pp. 32, n. 14, 34, 38-39, a § 3(b) boycott need not entail unequal treatment of the targets of the boycott and its instigators. Some refusals to deal (those, perhaps, which are alleged to violate only § 2 of the Sherman Act [15]) may have as their object the complete destruction of the business of competitors; these may well involve unconditional discrimination against the targets. Other refusals to deal, however, may seek simply to prevent competition as to the price or features of the product sold; and these need not depend on unequal treatment of the targets. Assuming, [*787] as the South-Eastern Underwriters Court appears to have done, that membership in the defendant association was open to all insurers, the association is most readily seen as having intended to treat all insurers equally: they all had the choice either to join the association and abide by its rules, or to be subjected to the "boycotts," [633] and acts of coercion and intimidation, alleged in that case. See post, at 808 (describing South-Eastern Underwriters as involving a "boycott, by primary insurers, [*78] of competitors who refused to join their price-fixing conspiracy").

Fourth, although a necessary element, "concerted activity" is not, by itself, sufficient for a finding of "boycott" under § 3(b). Were this the case, we recognized in Barry, § 3(b) might well "'devour the broad antitrust immunity bestowed by § 2(b),'" 438 U.S. at 545, n. 18 (quoting id., at 559 (Stewart, J., dissenting)), since every "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce," 15 U.S. C. § 1, involves "concerted activity." Thus, we suggested, simple price fixing has been treated neither as a boycott nor as coercion "in the absence of any additional enforcement activity. [*79] " 438 U.S. at 545, n. 18; see post, at 804 (contending that simple concerted agreements on contract terms are not properly characterized as boycotts).

Contrary to the majority's view, however, our decisions have suggested that "enforcement activity" is a multifarious concept. The South-Eastern Underwriters Court, which coined the phrase "boycotts[,] . . . coercion and intimidation," 322 U.S. at 535; see n. 14, supra, provides us with a list of actions that, it finds, are encompassed by these terms. "Companies not members of [the association]," it states, "were cut off from the opportunity to reinsure their risks, and their services and facilities were disparaged; independent sales agencies who defiantly represented non-[association] companies were punished by a withdrawal of the right to represent the members of [the association]; and persons needing insurance who purchased from non-[association] [*788] companies [2905] were threatened with boycotts and withdrawal of all patronage." 322 U.S. at 535-536. Faced with such a list, and with all of the other instances in which we have used the term "boycott," we [*80] rightly came to the conclusion in Barry that, as used in our cases, the term does not refer to a "'unitary phenomenon.'" 438 U.S. at 543 (quoting P. Areeda, Antitrust Analysis 381 (2d ed. 1974)).

---

[14] As we have noted before, see Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 217, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 (1979); SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 458, 21 L. Ed. 2d 668, 89 S. Ct. 564 (1969), the McCarran-Ferguson Act was precipitated by our holding in South-Eastern Underwriters that the business of insurance was interstate commerce and thus subject generally to federal regulation under the Commerce Clause, and to scrutiny under the Sherman Act specifically. Congress responded, both to "ensure that the States would continue to have the ability to tax and regulate the business of insurance," Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. at 217-218 (footnote omitted), and to limit the application of the antitrust laws to the insurance industry, id., at 218. In drafting the § 3(b) exception to the § 2(b) grant of antitrust immunity, Congress borrowed language from our description of the indictment in South-Eastern Underwriters as charging that "the conspirators not only fixed premium rates and agents' commissions, but employed boycotts together with other types of coercion and intimidation to force nonmember insurance companies into the conspiracies." 322 U.S. at 535.

[15] Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U.S. C. § 2, prohibits monopolization of, or attempts or conspiracies to monopolize, "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations."

The question in this litigation is whether the alleged activities of the domestic defendants, acting together with the foreign defendants who are not petitioners here, include "enforcement activities" that would raise the claimed attempts to fix terms to the level of § 3(b) boycotts. I believe they do. The core of the plaintiffs' allegations against the domestic defendants concern those activities that form the basis of the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Claims for Relief in the California Complaint, and the Second Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint: the conspiracies involving both the primary insurers and domestic and foreign brokers and reinsurers to force changes in the ISO CGL forms. According to the complaints, primary insurer defendants Hartford and Allstate first tried to convince other members of the ISO that the ISO CGL forms should be changed to limit coverage in the manner we [634] have detailed above, see supra, at 773-774; but they failed [*81] to persuade a majority of members of the relevant ISO committees, and the changes were not made. Unable to persuade other primary insurers to agree voluntarily to their terms, Hartford and Allstate, joined by Aetna and CIGNA, sought the aid of other individuals and entities who were not members of ISO, and who would not ordinarily be parties to an agreement setting the terms of primary insurance, not being in the business of selling it. The four primary insurers convinced these individuals and entities, the reinsurers, to put pressure on ISO and its members by refusing to reinsure coverages written on the ISO CGL forms until the desired changes were made. Both domestic and foreign reinsurers, acting at the behest of the four primary [*789] insurers, announced that they would not reinsure under the ISO CGL forms until changes were made. As an immediate result of this pressure, ISO decided to include a retroactive-date provision in its claims-made form, and to exclude all pollution coverage from both its claims-made and occurrence forms. In sum, the four primary insurers solicited refusals to deal from outside the primary insurance industry as a means of forcing their fellow primary [*82] insurers to agree to their terms; the outsiders, acting at the behest of the four, in fact refused to deal with primary insurers until they capitulated, which, in part at least, they did.

This pattern of activity bears a striking resemblance to the first act of boycott listed by the South-Eastern Underwriters Court; although neither the South-Eastern Underwriters opinion, nor the underlying indictment, see Transcript of Record, O. T. 1943, No. 354, p. 11 (P22(e)), details exactly how the defendants managed to "cut off [nonmembers] from the opportunity to reinsure their risks," 322 U.S. at 535, the defendants could have done so by prompting reinsurance companies to refuse to deal with nonmembers, just as is alleged here. [16] [*84] Moreover, the activity falls squarely [*790] [2906] within even the narrow theory of the § 3(b) exception Justice Stewart advanced in dissent in Barry. Under that theory, [17] [*85] the [635] § 3(b) exception should be limited to "attempts by members of the insurance business to force other members to follow the industry's private rules and practices." 438 U.S. at 565. I can think of no better description of [*83] the four primary insurers' activities in this [16] The majority claims that this refusal to deal was a boycott only because "membership in the association [had] no discernible bearing upon the terms of the refused reinsurance contracts." Post, at 809. Testimony at the hearings on the bill that became the McCarran-Ferguson Act indicates that the insurance companies thought otherwise. "We say 'You do not issue insurance to a company that does not do business the way we think it should be done and belong to our association.' . . . It is for the protection of the public, the stockholders, and the companies . . . . You know when those large risks are taken that they have to be reinsured. We do not want to have to take a risk that is bad, or at an improper rate, or an excessive commission, we do not want our agents to take that, nor do we want to reinsure part of the risk that is written that way. We feel this way -- that some groups are doing business in what is not the proper way, we feel it is not in the interest of the companies and it is not in the interest of the public, and we just do not want to do business with them." Joint Hearing on S. 1362, H. R. 3269, and H. R. 3270 before the Subcommittees of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 78th Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 2, p. 333 (1943) (statement of Edward L. Williams, President, Insurance Executives Association).

[17] In passing the McCarran-Ferguson Act, Justice Stewart argued, "Congress plainly wanted to allow the States to authorize anticompetitive practices which they determined to be in the public interest." St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 565, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932, 98 S. Ct. 2923 (1978) (dissenting opinion). Hence, § 2(b) provides that the federal antitrust laws will generally not be applicable to those insurance business practices "regulated by State law," and presumably state law could, for example, either mandate price fixing, or specifically authorize voluntary price-fixing agreements. On the other hand, Congress intended to delegate regulatory power only to the States; nothing in the McCarran-Ferguson Act suggests that Congress wanted one insurer, or a group of insurers, to be able to formulate and enforce policy for other insurers. Thus, the enforcement activities that distinguish § 3(b) "boycotts" from other concerted activity include, in this context, "private enforcement . . . of industry rules and practices, even if those rules and practices are permitted by state law." Id., at 565-566 (emphasis in original) (footnote omitted).

litigation. For these reasons, I agree with the Court's ultimate conclusion that the Court of Appeals was correct in reversing the District Court's dismissal of the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Claims for Relief in the California Complaint, and the Second Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint. [18] [86] [*791] The majority concludes that, so long as the reinsurers' role in this course of action was limited to "a concerted agreement to seek particular terms in particular transactions," post, at 801-802, the course of action could never constitute a § 3(b) boycott. The majority's emphasis on this conclusion assumes [2907] an artificial segmentation of the course of action, and a [636] false perception of the unimportance of the elements of that course of action other than the reinsurers' agreement. The majority concedes that the complaints allege, not just implementation of a horizontal agreement, but refusals to deal that occurred "at the behest of," or were "solicited by," the four primary insurers, who were "competitors of the target[s]." [*792] Post, at 808 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). But it fails to acknowledge several crucial features of these events that bind them into a single course of action recognizable as a § 3(b) boycott.

First, the allegation that the reinsurers acted at the behest of the four primary insurers excludes the possibility that the reinsurers acted entirely in their own independent self-interest, [*87] and would have taken exactly the same course of action without the intense efforts of the four primary insurers. Although the majority never explicitly posits such autonomy on the part of the reinsurers, this would seem to be the only point of its repeated emphasis on the fact that "the scope and predictability of the risks assumed in a reinsurance contract depend entirely upon the terms of the primary policies that are reinsured." Ibid. If the encouragement of the four primary insurers played no role in the reinsurers' decision to act as they did, then it is difficult to see how one could describe the reinsurers as acting at the behest of the primary insurers, an element I find crucial to the § 3(b) boycott alleged here. From the vantage point of a ruling on motions to dismiss, however, I discern sufficient allegations in the complaints that this is not the case. In addition, according to the complaints, the four primary insurers were not acting out of concern for the reinsurers' financial health when they prompted the reinsurers to refuse reinsurance for certain risks; rather, they simply wanted to ensure that no other primary insurer would be able to sell insurance policies [*88] that they did not want to sell. Finally, as the complaints portray the business of insurance, reinsurance is a separate, specialized product, "the availability [of which] affects the ability and willingness of primary insurers to provide insurance to their customers." App. 18 (Cal. Complaint P34). Thus, contrary to the majority's assertion, the boundary between the primary insurance industry and the reinsurance industry is not merely "technical." Post, at 808.

---

[18] The First and Sixth Claims for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint, and the Seventh Claim for Relief in the California Complaint, which also name some or all of the petitioners, present special cases. The First Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint alleges an overarching conspiracy involving all of the defendants named in the complaint and all of the conduct alleged. As such, it encompasses "boycott" activity, and the Court of Appeals was correct to reverse the District Court's order dismissing it. As currently described in the complaint's statement of facts, however, some of the actions of the reinsurers and the retrocessional reinsurers appear to have been taken independently, rather than at the behest of the primary insurer defendants. I express no opinion as to whether those acts, if they were indeed taken independently, could amount to § 3(b) boycotts; but I note that they lack the key element on which I rely in this litigation to find a sufficient allegation of boycott.

The Seventh Claim for Relief in the California Complaint, and the virtually identical Sixth Claim for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint, allege a conspiracy among a group of domestic primary insurers, foreign reinsurers, and the ISO to draft restrictive model forms and policy language for "umbrella" and "excess" insurance. On these claims, the Court of Appeals reversed the District Court's order of dismissal as to the domestic defendants solely because those defendants "acted in concert" with nonexempt foreign defendants, 938 F.2d, at 931, relying on reasoning that the Court has found to be in error, see supra, at 781-784. The Court of Appeals found that "no boycotts [were] alleged as the defendants' modus operandi in respect to [excess and umbrella] insurance." 938 F.2d, at 930. I agree; even under a liberal construction of the complaints in favor of plaintiffs, I can find no allegation of any refusal to deal in connection with the drafting of the excess and umbrella insurance language. Therefore I conclude that neither the participation of unregulated parties nor the application of § 3(b) furnished a basis to reverse the District Court's dismissal of these claims as against the domestic insurers, and I would reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals in this respect. The Fifth, Sixth, and Eighth Claims for Relief in the California Complaint and the Third, Fourth, and Fifth Claims for Relief in the Connecticut Complaint also allege concerted refusals to deal; but because they do not name any of the petitioners in No. 91-1111, the Court has no occasion to consider whether they allege § 3(b) boycotts.

[*793] The majority insists that I "disregard the integral relationship between the terms of the primary insurance form and the contract of reinsurance," post, at 807, a fact which it seems to believe makes it impossible to draw any distinction whatsoever between primary insurers and reinsurers. Yet it is the majority that fails to see that, in spite of such an "integral relationship," the interests of primary insurer and reinsurer will almost certainly differ in some cases. For example, the complaints allege that reinsurance contracts often "layer" risks, "in the sense that [a] reinsurer may have to respond only to claims above a certain amount . . . ." App. 10 (Cal. Complaint P4.q); id., at 61 (Conn. [*89] Complaint P4(f)). Thus, a primary insurer might be much more concerned than its reinsurer about a risk that resulted in a high number of relatively small [637] claims. Or the primary insurer might simply perceive a particular risk differently from the reinsurer. The reinsurer might be indifferent as to whether a particular risk was covered, so long as the reinsurance premiums were adjusted to its satisfaction, whereas the primary insurer might decide that the risk was "too hot to handle," on a standardized basis, at any cost. The majority's suggestion that "to insist upon certain primary-insurance terms as a condition of writing reinsurance is in no way 'artificial,'" post, at 808; see post, at 806, simply ignores these possibilities; the conditions could quite easily be "artificial," in the sense that they are not motivated by the interests of the reinsurers themselves. Because the parties have had no chance to flesh out the facts of this case, because I have no a priori knowledge of those facts, and because I do not believe I can locate them in the [2908] pages of insurance treatises, I would not rule out these possibilities on a motion to dismiss.

Believing [*90] that there is no other principled way to narrow the § 3(b) exception, the majority decides that "boycott" encompasses just those refusals to deal that are "unrelated" or "collateral" to the objective sought by those refusing to deal. Post, at 803. This designation of a single "'unitary phenomenon,'" [*794] Barry, 438 U.S. at 543, to which the term "boycott" will henceforth be confined, is of course at odds with our own description of our Sherman Act cases in Barry. [19] See ibid. Moreover, the limitation to "collateral" refusals to deal threatens to shrink the § 3(b) exception far more than the majority is willing to admit. Even if the reinsurers refused all reinsurance to primary insurers "who wrote insurance on disfavored forms," including insurance "as to risks written on other forms," the majority states, the reinsurers would not be engaging in a § 3(b) boycott if "the primary insurers' other business were relevant to the proposed insurance contract (for example, if the reinsurer bears greater risk where the primary insurer engages in riskier businesses)." Post, at 810 (emphasis deleted). Under this standard, and under facts comparable [*91] to those in this litigation, I assume that reinsurers who refuse to deal at all with a primary insurer unless it ceases insuring a particular risk would not be engaging in a § 3(b) boycott if they could show that (1) insuring the risk in question increases the probability that the primary insurer will become insolvent, and that (2) it costs more to administer the reinsurance contracts of a bankrupt primary insurer (including those unrelated to the risk that caused the primary insurer to declare bankruptcy). One can only imagine the variety of similar arguments that may slowly plug what remains of the § 3(b) exception. For these reasons, I cannot agree with the majority's narrow theory of § 3(b) boycotts.

[92]

Dissent by: SCALIA

Dissent

[*812] [648contd] [2917contd] [EDITOR'S NOTE: The page numbers of this document may appear to be out of sequence; however, this pagination accurately reflects the pagination of the original published documents.]

SCALIA, J., delivered a dissenting opinion with respect to Part II, in which O'CONNOR, KENNEDY, and THOMAS, JJ., joined post, p. 800.

---

[19] The majority contends that its concept of boycott is still "multifaceted" because it can be modified by such adjectives as "punitive," "labor," "political," and "social." Post, at 804, n. 3. This does not hide the fact that it is attempting to concoct a "precise definition" of the term, post, at 800, composed of a simple set of necessary and sufficient conditions.

II

Petitioners in No. 91-1128, various British corporations and other British subjects, argue that certain of the claims against them constitute an inappropriate extraterritorial application of the Sherman [649] Act. [8] It is important to distinguish two distinct questions raised by this petition: whether the District Court had jurisdiction, and whether the Sherman Act reaches the extraterritorial conduct alleged here. On the first question, I believe that the District Court had subject-matter jurisdiction over the Sherman Act claims against all the defendants (personal jurisdiction is not contested). Respondents asserted nonfrivolous claims under the Sherman Act, and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 vests district courts with subject-matter jurisdiction over cases "arising under" federal statutes. As precedents such as Lauritzen v. Larsen, 345 U.S. 571, 97 L. Ed. 1254, 73 S. Ct. 921 (1953), make clear, that is sufficient to establish the District Court's jurisdiction over these claims. Lauritzen involved [*93] a Jones Act claim brought by a foreign sailor against a foreign shipowner. The shipowner contested the District Court's jurisdiction, see id., at 573, apparently on the grounds that the Jones Act did not govern the dispute between the foreign parties to the action. Though ultimately agreeing with the shipowner that the Jones Act did not apply, see discussion infra, at 816, the Court held that the District Court had jurisdiction.

> "As frequently happens, a contention that there is some barrier to granting plaintiff's claim is cast in terms of an exception to jurisdiction of subject matter. A cause of action under our law was asserted here, and the court had power to determine whether it was or was not well founded in law and in fact." 345 U.S. at 575.

[*813] See also Romero v. International Terminal Operating Co., 358 U.S. 354, 359, 3 L. Ed. 2d 368, 79 S. Ct. 468 (1959).

[94] [2918] The second question -- the extraterritorial reach of the Sherman Act -- has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of the courts. It is a question of substantive law turning on whether, in enacting the Sherman Act, Congress asserted regulatory power over the challenged conduct. See EEOC v. Arabian American Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 248, 113 L. Ed. 2d 274, 111 S. Ct. 1227 (1991) (Aramco) ("It is our task to determine whether Congress intended the protections of Title VII to apply to United States citizens employed by American employers outside of the United States"). If a plaintiff fails to prevail on this issue, the court does not dismiss the claim for want of subject-matter jurisdiction -- want of power to adjudicate; rather, it decides the claim, ruling on the merits that the plaintiff has failed to state a cause of action under the relevant statute. See Romero, supra, at 384 (holding no claim available under the Jones Act); American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, 359, 53 L. Ed. 826, 29 S. Ct. 511 (1909) (holding that complaint based upon foreign conduct "alleges no case under the [Sherman Act]").

There [*95] is, however, a type of "jurisdiction" relevant to determining the extraterritorial reach of a statute; it [650] is known as "legislative jurisdiction," Aramco, supra, at 253; Restatement (First) Conflict of Laws § 60 (1934), or "jurisdiction to prescribe," 1 Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States 235 (1987) (hereinafter Restatement (Third)). This refers to "the authority of a state to make its law applicable to persons or activities," and is quite a separate matter from "jurisdiction to adjudicate," see id., at 231. There is no doubt, of course, that Congress possesses legislative jurisdiction over the acts alleged in this complaint: Congress has broad power under Article I, § 8, cl. 3, "to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations," and this Court has repeatedly upheld its power to make laws applicable to persons or activities beyond our territorial boundaries where United [*814] States interests are affected. See Ford v. United States, 273 U.S. 593, 621-623, 71 L. Ed. 793, 47 S. Ct. 531 (1927); United States v. Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 98-99, 67 L. Ed. 149, 43 S. Ct. 39 (1922); American Banana, supra, at 356. [*96] But the question in this litigation is whether, and to what extent, Congress has exercised that undoubted legislative jurisdiction in enacting the Sherman Act.

Two canons of statutory construction are relevant in this inquiry. The first is the "longstanding principle of American law 'that legislation of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.'" Aramco, supra, at 248 (quoting Foley Bros., Inc. v. Filardo, 336 U.S. 281, 285, 93 L. Ed. 680, 69 S. Ct. 575 (1949)). Applying that canon in Aramco, we held that the version of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 then in force, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e to 2000e-17 (1988 ed.), did not extend outside the territory of the United States even though the statute contained broad provisions extending its prohibitions to, for example, "'any activity, business, or industry in commerce.'" Id., at 249 (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 2000e(h)). We held such "boilerplate language" to be an insufficient indication to override the presumption against extraterritoriality. Id., at 251; see also [*97] id., at 251-253. The Sherman Act contains similar "boilerplate language," and if the question were not governed by precedent, it would be worth considering whether that presumption controls the outcome here. We have, however, found the presumption to be overcome with respect to our antitrust laws; it is now well established that the Sherman Act applies extraterritorially. See Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582, n. 6, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962); see also United States v. Aluminum [2919] Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (CA2 1945).

---

[8] The counts at issue in this litigation are the Fifth, Sixth, and Eighth Claims for Relief in the California Complaint. See App. 43-46 (PP131-140), id., at 47-49 (PP146-150).

But if the presumption against extraterritoriality has been overcome or is otherwise inapplicable, a second canon of statutory construction becomes relevant: "An act of congress [*815] ought never to be construed to violate the law of nations if any other possible construction remains." Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy, 6 U.S. 64, 2 Cranch 64, 118, 2 L. Ed. 208 [651] (1804) (Marshall, [*98] C.J.). This canon is "wholly independent" of the presumption against extraterritoriality. Aramco, supra, at 264 (Marshall, J., dissenting). It is relevant to determining the substantive reach of a statute because "the law of nations," or customary international law, includes limitations on a nation's exercise of its jurisdiction to prescribe. See Restatement (Third) §§ 401-416. Though it clearly has constitutional authority to do so, Congress is generally presumed not to have exceeded those customary international-law limits on jurisdiction to prescribe.

Consistent with that presumption, this and other courts have frequently recognized that, even where the presumption against extraterritoriality does not apply, statutes should not be interpreted to regulate foreign persons or conduct if that regulation would conflict with principles of international law. For example, in Romero v. International Terminal Operating Co., 358 U.S. 354, 3 L. Ed. 2d 368, 79 S. Ct. 468 (1959), the plaintiff, a Spanish sailor who had been injured while working aboard a Spanish-flag and Spanish-owned vessel, filed a Jones Act claim against his Spanish employer. The presumption against [*99] extraterritorial application of federal statutes was inapplicable to the case, as the actionable tort had occurred in American waters. See id., at 383. The Court nonetheless stated that, "in the absence of a contrary congressional direction," it would apply "principles of choice of law that are consonant with the needs of a general federal maritime law and with due recognition of our self-regarding respect for the relevant interests of foreign nations in the regulation of maritime commerce as part of the legitimate concern of the international community." Id., at 382-383. "The controlling considerations" in this choice-of-law analysis were "the interacting interests of the United States and of foreign countries." Id., at 383.

[*816] Romero referred to, and followed, the choice-of-law analysis set forth in Lauritzen v. Larsen, 345 U.S. 571, 97 L. Ed. 1254, 73 S. Ct. 921 (1953). As previously mentioned, Lauritzen also involved a Jones Act claim brought by a foreign sailor against a foreign employer. The Lauritzen Court recognized the basic problem: "If [the Jones Act were] read literally, [*100] Congress has conferred an American right of action which requires nothing more than that plaintiff be 'any seaman who shall suffer personal injury in the course of his employment.'" Id., at 576. The solution it adopted was to construe the statute "to apply only to areas and transactions in which American law would be considered operative under prevalent doctrines of international law." Id., at 577 (emphasis added). To support application of international law to limit the facial breadth of the statute, the Court relied upon -- of course -- Chief Justice Marshall's statement in Schooner Charming Betsy, quoted supra, at 814-815. It then set forth "several factors which, alone or in combination, are generally conceded to influence choice of law to govern a tort claim." 345 U.S. at 583; see id., at 583-593 (discussing factors). See also McCulloch v. Sociedad Nacional de [652] Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 21-22, 9 L. Ed. 2d 547, 83 S. Ct. 671 (1963) (applying Schooner Charming Betsy principle to restrict application of National Labor Relations Act to foreign-flag vessels).

[101] Lauritzen, Romero, and McCulloch were maritime cases, but we have recognized the principle that the scope of generally worded [2920] statutes must be construed in light of international law in other areas as well.

See, e.g., Sale v. Haitian Centers Council, Inc., ante, at 178, n. 35; Weinberger v. Rossi, 456 U.S. 25, 32, 71 L. Ed. 2d 715, 102 S. Ct. 1510 (1982). More specifically, the principle was expressed in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (CA2 1945), the decision that established the extraterritorial reach of the Sherman Act. In his opinion for the court, Judge Learned Hand cautioned "we are not to read general words, such as those in [the Sherman] [*817] Act, without regard to the limitations customarily observed by nations upon the exercise of their powers; limitations which generally correspond to those fixed by the 'Conflict of Laws.'" Id., at 443.

More recent lower court precedent has also tempered the extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act with considerations of "international comity." See Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America, N. T. & S. A., 549 F.2d 597, 608-615 (CA9 1976); [*102] Mannington Mills, Inc. v. Congoleum Corp., 595 F.2d 1287, 1294-1298 (CA3 1979); Montreal Trading Ltd. v. Amax Inc., 661 F.2d 864, 869-871 (CA10 1981); Laker Airways Limited v. Sabena, Belgian World Airlines, 235 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 236, 731 F.2d 909, and n. 109, 235 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 731 F.2d 909, 731 F.2d 909, 938, and n. 109 (1984); see also Pacific Seafarers, Inc. v. Pacific Far East Line, Inc., 131 U.S. App. D.C. 226, 236, 404 F.2d 804, and n. 31, 131 U.S. App. D.C. 226, 404 F.2d 804, 404 F.2d 804, 814, and n. 31 (1968). The "comity" they refer to is not the comity of courts, whereby judges decline to exercise jurisdiction over matters more appropriately adjudged elsewhere, but rather what might be termed "prescriptive comity": the respect sovereign nations afford each other by limiting the reach of their laws. That comity is exercised by legislatures when they enact laws, and courts assume it has been exercised when they come to interpreting the scope of laws their legislatures have enacted. It is a traditional component of choice-of-law theory. See J. Story, Commentaries on the Conflict [*103] of Laws § 38 (1834) (distinguishing between the "comity of the courts" and the "comity of nations," and defining the latter as "the true foundation and extent of the obligation of the laws of one nation within the territories of another"). Comity in this sense includes the choice-of-law principles that, "in the absence of contrary congressional direction," are assumed to be incorporated into our substantive laws having extraterritorial reach. Romero, supra, at 382-383; see also Lauritzen, supra, at 578-579; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S. 113, 162-166, 40 L. Ed. 95, 16 S. Ct. 139 (1895). Considering comity in [*818] this way is just part of determining whether the Sherman Act prohibits the conduct at issue. [9]

[104] [653] In sum, the practice of using international law to limit the extraterritorial reach of statutes is firmly established in our jurisprudence. In proceeding to apply that practice to the present cases, I shall rely on the Restatement (Third) for the relevant principles of international law. Its standards appear fairly supported in the decisions of this Court construing international choice-of-law principles (Lauritzen, Romero, and McCulloch) and in the decisions of other federal courts, especially Timberlane. Whether the Restatement precisely reflects international law in every detail matters little here, as I believe this litigation would be resolved the same way under virtually any conceivable [2921] test that takes account of foreign regulatory interests.

Under the Restatement, a nation having some "basis" for jurisdiction to prescribe law should nonetheless refrain from exercising that jurisdiction "with respect to a person or activity having connections with another state when the exercise of such jurisdiction is unreasonable." Restatement (Third) § 403(1). The "reasonableness" inquiry turns on a number of factors including, but not limited to: "the [*105] extent to which the activity takes place within the territory [of the regulating state]," id., § 403(2)(a); "the connections, such as nationality, residence, or economic activity, between the regulating state and the person principally responsible for the [*819] activity to be regulated," id., § 403(2)(b); "the character of the activity to be regulated, the importance of regulation to the regulating state, the extent to which other states regulate such activities, and the degree to which the desirability of such regulation is generally accepted," id., § 403(2)(c); "the extent to which another state may have an interest in regulating the activity," id., § 403(2)(g); and "the likelihood of conflict with regulation by another state," id., § 403(2)(h). Rarely would these factors point more clearly against application of United States law. The activity relevant to the counts at issue here took place primarily in the United Kingdom, and the defendants in these counts are British corporations and British subjects having their principal place of business or residence outside the United States. [10] Great Britain has established a comprehensive regulatory scheme [*106] governing the London reinsurance markets, and clearly has a heavy "interest in regulating the activity," id., § 403(2)(g). See 938 F.2d at 932-933; In re Insurance Antitrust Litigation, 723 F. Supp. 464, 487-488 (ND Cal. 1989); see also J. Butler & R. Merkin, Reinsurance Law A.1.1-02 (1992). Finally, § 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act allows state regulatory statutes to override the Sherman Act in the insurance field, subject only to the narrow "boycott" exception set forth in § 3(b) -- suggesting that "the importance [654] of regulation to the [United States]," Restatement (Third) § 403(2)(c), is slight. Considering these factors, I think it unimaginable that an assertion of legislative jurisdiction by the United States would be considered reasonable, and therefore it is inappropriate to assume, in the absence of statutory indication to the contrary, that Congress has made such an assertion.

---

[9] Some antitrust courts, including the Court of Appeals in the present cases, have mistaken the comity at issue for the "comity of courts," which has led them to characterize the question presented as one of "abstention," that is, whether they should "exercise or decline jurisdiction." Mannington Mills, Inc. v. Congoleum Corp., 595 F.2d 1287, 1294, 1296 (CA3 1979); see also In re Insurance Antitrust Litigation, 938 F.2d 919, 932 (CA9 1991). As I shall discuss, that seems to be the error the Court has fallen into today. Because courts are generally reluctant to refuse the exercise of conferred jurisdiction, confusion on this seemingly theoretical point can have the very practical consequence of greatly expanding the extraterritorial reach of the Sherman Act.

[107] [*820] It is evident from what I have said that the Court's comity analysis, which proceeds as though the issue is whether the courts should "decline to exercise . . . jurisdiction," ante, at 798, rather than whether the Sherman Act covers this conduct, is simply misdirected. I do not at all agree, moreover, with the Court's conclusion that the issue of the substantive scope of the Sherman Act is not in the cases. See ante, at 796, n. 22; ante, at 797, n. 24. To be sure, the parties did not make a clear distinction between adjudicative jurisdiction and the scope of the statute. Parties often do not, as we have observed (and have declined to punish with procedural default) before. See the excerpt from Lauritzen quoted supra, at 812; see also Romero, 358 U.S. at 359. It is not realistic, and also not helpful, to pretend that the only really relevant issue in this litigation is not before us. In any event, if one erroneously chooses, as the Court does, to make adjudicative jurisdiction (or, more precisely, abstention) the vehicle for taking account of the needs of prescriptive comity, the Court still gets it wrong. It concludes that no "true [*108] conflict " counseling nonapplication of United States law (or rather, as it thinks, United States judicial jurisdiction) exists unless compliance with United States law would constitute a violation of another country's law. Ante, at 798-799. [2922] That breathtakingly broad proposition, which contradicts the many cases discussed earlier, will bring the Sherman Act and other laws into sharp and unnecessary conflict with the legitimate interests of other countries -- particularly our closest trading partners.

In the sense in which the term "conflict" was used in Lauritzen, 345 U.S. at 582, 592, and is generally understood in the field of conflicts of laws, there is clearly a conflict in this litigation. The petitioners here, like the defendant in Lauritzen, were not compelled by any foreign law to take their allegedly wrongful actions, but that no more precludes a conflict-of-laws analysis here than it did there. See id., at 575-576 (detailing the differences between foreign and [*821] United States law). Where applicable foreign and domestic law provide different substantive rules of decision to govern the parties' dispute, [*109] a conflict-of-laws analysis is necessary. See generally R. Weintraub, Commentary on Conflict of Laws 2-3 (1980); Restatement (First) of Conflict of Laws § 1, Comment c and Illustrations (1934).

Literally the only support that the Court adduces for its position is § 403 of the Restatement (Third) -- or more precisely Comment e to that provision, which states:

> "Subsection (3) [which says that a State should defer to another state if that State's interest is clearly [655] greater] applies only when one state requires what another prohibits, or where compliance with the regulations of two states exercising jurisdiction consistently with this section is otherwise impossible. It does not apply where a person subject to regulation by two states can comply with the laws of both . . . ."

The Court has completely misinterpreted this provision. Subsection (3) of § 403 (requiring one State to defer to another in the limited circumstances just described) comes into play only after subsection (1) of § 403 has been complied with -- i.e., after it has been determined that the exercise of jurisdiction by both of the two States is not [10] Some of the British corporations are subsidiaries of American corporations, and the Court of Appeals held that "the interests of Britain are at least diminished where the parties are subsidiaries of American corporations." Id., at 933. In effect, the Court of Appeals pierced the corporate veil in weighing the interests at stake. I do not think that was proper.

---

"unreasonable. [*110] " That prior question is answered by applying the factors (inter alia) set forth in subsection (2) of § 403, that is, precisely the factors that I have discussed in text and that the Court rejects. [11]

[*822] * * *

I would reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals on this issue, and remand to the District Court with instructions to dismiss for failure to state a claim on the three counts at issue in No. 91-1128.

References

Supreme Court's views as to validity, construction, and application of McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1011-1015), concerning regulation of business of insurance by state or federal law

43 Am Jur 2d, Insurance 37; 54 Am Jur 2d, Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices 11, 225-227

24 Federal Procedure, L Ed, Monopolies and Restraints of Trade 54:11, 54:115

24 Am Jur Trials 1, Defending Antitrust Lawsuits

15 USCS 1, 1012(b), 1013(b)

L Ed Digest, Conflict of Laws 45, 97.5; Restraints of Trade, Monopolies, and Unfair Trade Practices 9.7

L Ed Index, Boycotts; Comity; McCarran-Ferguson Act; Sherman Act

ALR Index, Boycotts; Comity; McCarran-Ferguson Act; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

Union activities violating the federal antitrust laws--federal cases. 9 L Ed 2d 998, 20 L Ed 2d 1528.

What constitutes [*112] "boycott, coercion, or intimidation" for purposes of 3(b) of McCarran-Ferguson Act (15 USCS 1013(b)). 52 ALR Fed 255.

Refusals to deal as violations of the federal antitrust laws (15 USCS 1, 2, 13). 41 ALR Fed 175.

Extraterritorial application of federal antitrust laws to acts occurring in foreign commerce. 40 ALR Fed 343.

Nonlabor picketing or boycott. 93 ALR2d 1284.

End of Document

[11] The Court skips directly to subsection (3) of § 403, apparently on the authority of Comment j to § 415 of the Restatement (Third). See ante, at 799. But the preceding commentary to § 415 makes clear that "any exercise of [legislative] jurisdiction under this section is subject to the requirement of reasonableness" set forth in § 403(2). Restatement (Third) § 415, Comment a. Comment j refers back to the conflict analysis set forth in § 403(3), which, as noted above, comes after the reasonableness analysis of § 403(2).

In re Catfish Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, Delta Division

June 28, 1993, Decided

No. MDL 928, Cause No. 2:92-CV-073-D-O

Reporter

826 F. Supp. 1019 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9748 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,395

In re CATFISH ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Core Terms

catfish, prices, conspiracy, processed, fish, products, Pride, class action, plaintiffs', class certification, predominance, antitrust, price fixing, certification, defendants', fraudulent concealment, damages, named plaintiff, class member, meetings, Fresh, Farm, processors, motion to dismiss, minimum price, diversity, purchasers, distributors, alleged conspiracy, statute of limitations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion is disfavored, and it is rarely granted. Dismissal is never warranted because the court believes the plaintiff is unlikely to prevail on the merits. Even if it appears an almost certainty that the facts alleged cannot be proved to support the claim, the complaint cannot be dismissed so long as the complaint states a claim. To qualify for dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint must on its face show a bar to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When a defendant moves to dismiss a complaint, the court focuses solely on the legal sufficiency of the pleadings. The court is restricted to the face of the pleadings and may look only within the four corners of the complaint in evaluating a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

The sufficiency of a complaint is governed foremost by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), which requires a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. It is well settled that the statement of the claim should provide the defendant with fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim, a blanket allegation of a conspiracy is deemed insufficient to place the defendant on notice of the claim in order for defendant to formulate an adequate responsive pleading.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. And in antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to sustain a claim of a conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff will be called upon to prove, (1) that a conspiracy, combination, or agreement (i.e., concerted action) existed, (2) with an aim to restrain trade by suppressing and eliminating competition by fixing prices of a product, and that (3) the plaintiff was injured by such concerted action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > General Overview

HN7[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

Fraudulent concealment tolls the Clayton Act's, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, statute of limitations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN8[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

In ruling upon a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), the court must apply Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s requirement in harmony with the simplicity of notice pleading as allowed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) does not negate the simplicity and flexibility contemplated by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, and it would be error to focus on Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s particularity requirement in a vacuum.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN9[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that the circumstances of fraud be pled with enough particularity to put the party on notice as to the nature of the claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > General Overview

HN10[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

The doctrine of fraudulent concealment contains two elements which a plaintiff must prove. First, the defendant concealed the conduct complained of; and, second, despite the exercise of due diligence, plaintiff failed to discover the facts that form the basis of his claim. It is generally recognized that the statute of limitations is tolled only if the defendant has engaged in affirmative acts of concealment.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > General Overview

HN11[] Fraud & Misrepresentation, Nondisclosure

Fraudulent concealment can be shown where the acts of concealment are intertwined with the acts of price fixing. Proof of fraudulent concealment is found with any evidence of efforts designed to keep price fixing activities secret.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Discovery Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > General Overview

HN12[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Discovery Rule

In order to avail the doctrine of fraudulent concealment and its equitable tolling of the statute of limitations, the plaintiffs must show that they failed, despite the exercise of due diligence on their part, to discover the facts that form the basis of their price fixing claim. The statute of limitations is tolled only until such time as the plaintiff, exercising reasonable diligence, could have discovered the facts forming the basis for the claim. The plaintiffs need not have actual knowledge of the facts before the duty of due diligence arises; rather, knowledge of certain facts which are "calculated to excite inquiry" give rise to the duty to inquire. The statute of limitations begins to run once plaintiffs are on inquiry that a potential claim exists.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN13[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) establishes four requirements for class certification which must be met before consideration of certification under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) or (b)(3).

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

HN14[] Parties, Joinder of Parties

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Superiority

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN15[] Remedies, Injunctions

An action may be certified as a class action only if the court finds that it meets all requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1)-(4), "numerosity," "commonality," "typicality," and "adequacy"; and Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)'s additional requirements of "predominance" of common questions and "superiority" of the class method for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy are also satisfied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN16[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In ruling upon a motion for class certification, the substantive allegations contained in plaintiffs' complaint are accepted as true. However, the court does not delve into the merits of plaintiffs' substantive claims in ruling upon such a motion. Likewise, a predetermination of the merits of the defense of the suit is also inappropriate.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN17[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Numerosity

The requirement of numerosity is fulfilled when the potential class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN18[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Beyond the absence of an adverse interest between the representatives and the class members, a claim by a representative party may be deemed "typical" if it is one which should be "reasonably expected" to be raised by members of the proposed class. Furthermore, in instances wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in a common scheme relative to all members of the class, there is a strong assumption that the claims of the representative parties will be typical of the absent class members.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN19[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The tailored focus on a typicality inquiry is whether other members of the class have the same or similar injury, whether the action is based on conduct which is not special or unique to the named plaintiffs, and whether other class members have been injured by the same course of conduct.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN20[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Adequate representation turns upon the qualifications and experience of plaintiffs' counsel to conduct the litigation and whether the plaintiffs have any interests antagonistic to the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN21[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The court's role at the class certification stage in assessing the proposed methods of proving damages is quite limited. The preliminary inquiry is whether or not the proposed methods are so insubstantial that they amount to no method at all.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN22[] Private Actions, Remedies

It is generally recognized that some relaxation of the plaintiff's burden of proving damages is tolerated once an antitrust violation and resulting damages have been established. The relaxation for the standard of proof in an antitrust case is a logical and natural result of a willingness to accept some measure of uncertainty due to the difficulty of ascertaining business damages.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Superiority

HN23[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

In addition to the predominance of common questions, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) certification calls upon the court to consider the manageability of a class action and whether or not the class action is superior to other methods of adjudication.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN24[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1).

Counsel: [1] For the Plaintiffs: John W. "Don" Barrett, BARRETT LAW OFFICES, P O Box 631, 404 Court Square, Lexington, MS 39095-0631. Frank O. Crosthwait, Jr., CROSTHWAIT, TERNEY, NOBLE & ALLAIN, P. O. Box 29, 100 Court St., Indianola, MS 38751-0029. Richard G. Noble, CROSTHWAIT, TERNEY, NOBLE & ALLAIN, P. O. Box 29, 100 Court St., Indianola, MS 38751-0029. Janet G. Arnold, HOLCOMB, DUNBAR, CONNELL, CHAFFIN & WILLARD, P. O. Box 707, Oxford, MS 38655-0707. Vance K. Opperman, OPPERMAN, REINS & PAQUIN, 2200 Washington Square, 100 Washington Avenue South, Minneapolis, MN 55401. Warren Rubin, GROSS LAW OFFICES, 1500 Walnut Street, 6th Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19107. James S. Bailey, Jr., BAILEY, HARRING & PETERSON, Lincoln Center, 1660 Lincoln Street, Suite 3175, Denver, CO 80264. Todd R. Seelman, BAILEY, BARRING & PETERSON, Lincoln Center, 1660 Lincoln Street, Suite 3175, Denver, CO 80264. Richard O. Kingrea, ADAMS AND REESE, 4500 One Shell Square, New Orleans, LA 70139. Gordon Ball, GORDON BALL, ATTORNEY, Suite 750 NationsBank Center, 550 W. Main Avenue, Knoxville, TN 37902.

For the Defendants: Stephen Lee Thomas, LAKE, TINDALL, HUNGER & THACKSTON, P. O. Box 918, 127 South Poplar, Greenville, MS [2] 38702-0918.

Judges: Davidson

Opinion by: GLEN H. DAVIDSON

Opinion

[*1022] MEMORANDUM OPINION

This litigation presently consists of thirteen individual lawsuits which were filed in various federal district courts throughout the country. While most of the actions were filed here in the Northern District of Mississippi, there were also filings in the Western District of Washington, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, Eastern District of Louisiana, and the Eastern District of Tennessee. In accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 1407, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation has transferred all cases to this district for centralized and consolidated pretrial proceedings.

The named plaintiffs in this litigation are food distributors who purchased catfish and catfish products from 1981 until 1990, from various companies that were engaged in the business of processing and selling farm raised catfish and catfish products. In the consolidated class action complaint which was [*1023] filed on October 14, 1992, the named plaintiffs (distributors) invoke section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15) [1] as a means to recover treble damages, costs of suit, and attorneys' [3] fees for the defendants' (processors/sellers) alleged violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act. The sum and substance of the consolidated complaint is that the defendants have engaged in a combination and conspiracy, since at least 1981 through 1990, to suppress and eliminate competition in the catfish industry by fixing prices of catfish and catfish products sold throughout the United States. It is alleged that the defendants agreed to establish minimum prices for catfish and certain catfish products and to adhere to the established minimum prices. As a consequence, plaintiffs allege injury in that the prices paid for catfish were artificially high and at non-competitive levels.

As noted above, the litigation began as thirteen separate actions filed in various districts. [2] [6] However, since all actions have been consolidated under the "master file" for pre-trial [4] treatment, the court had the benefit of consolidated motions, responses, and memorandum briefs which pertain to all actions. The named plaintiffs, on behalf of themselves and a class of all those similarly situated, are as follows: State Fish Distributors, Inc.; Robert Orr-Sysco Food Services Co.; Randle Trout Distributors, Inc.; Farm House Food Distributors, Inc.; and, American Seafood, Inc. The defendants in this case are the following catfish processors: Magnolia Processing, Inc. ("Magnolia"); Delta Pride Catfish, Inc. ("Delta Pride"); Simmons Farm Raised Catfish, Inc. ("Simmons"); Farm Fresh Catfish Company ("Farm Fresh"); Country Skillet Catfish Company ("Country Skillet"); ConAgra; and Southern Pride Catfish Company, Inc. ("Southern Pride"). [3] All defendants, except for Southern Pride, have filed motions to dismiss plaintiffs' third amended class action complaint. The motions to dismiss are advanced under F.R.C.P. 12(b)(6), failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, and 9(b), failure to aver fraud with particularity. Also ripe for consideration is the motion by the named plaintiffs to certify a class action pursuant to F.R.C.P. 23. In order to better understand [5] the legal issues which the court considers, a brief sketch of the catfish industry is presented before addressing the motions to dismiss.

[*1024] Background

---

[1] The complaint also seeks injunctive relief pursuant to § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26 (Supp. 1993).

[2] State Fish Distributors, Inc. v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-20-D-O, N.D. Miss.; Farm House Food Distributors, Inc. v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-030-D-O, N.D. Miss.; Randle Trout Distributors, Inc. v. Country Skillet Catfish Co., et al., 2:92-CV-122-D-O, transfer from W.D. Wash.; American Seafood, Inc. v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al, 2:92-CV-113-D-O, transfer from E.D. Pa.; Levy World Limited Partnership v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al, 2:92-CV-114-D-O, transfer from E.D. Pa.; American Seafood, Inc. v. Southern Pride Catfish Co., Inc., 2:92-CV-115, transfer from E.D. Pa.

The following cases were dismissed without prejudice so that plaintiffs might subsequently file a claim in the event a class action suit, pursued by other plaintiffs, is certified: Rose's Wholesale Seafood, Inc. v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-026-D-O, N.D. Miss., Notice of Voluntary Dismissal pursuant to F.R.C.P. 41(a)(1) entered June 17, 1992; Lemoyne Cold Storage, Inc. v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-031-D-O, N.D. Miss., Rule 41(a)(1) Stipulation of Dismissal entered August 31, 1992; Robert Orr-Sysco Food Serv. Co. v. Country Skillet Catfish Co., et al., 2:92-CV-044-D-O, N.D. Miss., Order of Dismissal entered April 8, 1993; J & M Foods, Inc. v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-053-D-O, N.D. Miss., Rule 41(a)(1) Stipulation of Dismissal entered August 31, 1992; Gilbert Robinson Parent Co. v. Magnolia Processing, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-144-D-O, N.D. Miss., Rule 41(a)(1) Stipulation of Dismissal entered November 25, 1992.

The following cases are "tag along" actions which were late transfers to this district: Schwegmann Giant Super Market v. Delta Pride Catfish, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-175-D-O, transfer from E.D. La., Rule 41(a)(1) Order of Dismissal entered May 27, 1993; Copper Cellar Corp. v. Delta Pride Catfish, Inc., et al., 2:92-CV-028-D-O, transfer from E.D. Tenn. (originally filed in Tennessee state court; Rule 41(a)(1) Order of Dismissal entered May 17, 1993).

[3] In plaintiffs' memorandum brief, the court is informed that all of the defendants named in this civil suit were also identified as co-conspirators in various Informations which were filed by the United States Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, charging price fixing in the catfish industry. See U.S. v. Magnolia, Crim. No. 92-11-1 (E.D. Pa.); U.S. v. Hinote, Crim. No. 92-00430 (E.D. Pa.); U.S. v. Delta Pride, No. 92 CR 1090 (N.D. Ill.).

Catfish aquaculture experienced growth explosion in the 1980s. The consumer market for catfish expanded beyond its traditional base in the Deep South, and markets were cultivated in regions throughout the country, with particular success in the West. This growth was attributed to aggressive marketing along with a consumer preference for leaner, low-fat meat choices. During the 1980s, catfish sales by processors increased tenfold, and catfish is now a $ 400 million per year business. From 1986 through 1989 alone, ten new processing plants entered the business.

Catfish production begins with young fish, fingerlings, which [7] are raised in hatcheries to a size that can be transported to catfish ponds. Once transferred to the production ponds, the fingerlings may take up to two years to reach harvesting maturity. The defendants purchase farm-raised catfish which they process and then sell to wholesalers and retailers for distribution to final consumers. Once the processors purchase live fish from the producers, the fish go through various stages of processing at processing plants. Initially, the fish are beheaded, eviscerated and skinned. The processor may then sell the whole processed fish, or further processing could occur. For example, the whole fish could be cut into steaks, which are cross-section cuts; filets, which are the boned side of the fish; nuggets, which are small filets cut from below the rib; or strips, finger-size pieces of fish cut from the filets. Once the fish are processed and cut into the desired serving portion, the catfish are either packed in ice or frozen for shipment.

Catfish is a highly concentrated industry. Approximately 80% of the nation's catfish is produced and processed in the Mississippi Delta region, and neighboring Alabama is the second leading producer. Delta [8] Pride, Country Skillet, and Farm Fresh are considered the "big three," in catfish processing; and in 1988, these three processors accounted for more than 70% of the industry's processing capacity. In more recent years, it has been reported that Delta Pride and Farm Fresh have lost some of their market share to new entrants. However, Delta Pride, a farmer-owner cooperative, is, and has always been, the dominant force in the catfish production/processing business.

MOTIONS TO DISMISS

Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

HN1[] A Rule 12(b)(6) motion is disfavored, and it is rarely granted. Clark v. Amoco Production Co., 794 F.2d 967, 970 (5th Cir. 1986); Sosa v. Coleman, 646 F.2d 991, 993 (5th Cir. 1981). Dismissal is never warranted because the court believes the plaintiff is unlikely to prevail on the merits. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974). Even if it appears an almost certainty that the facts alleged cannot be proved to support the claim, the complaint cannot be dismissed so long as the complaint states a claim. Clark v. Amoco Production Co., 794 F.2d 967, 970 (5th Cir. 1986); [9] Boudeloche v. Grow Chemical Coatings Corp., 728 F.2d 759, 762 (5th Cir. 1984). "To qualify for dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6), a complaint must on its face show a bar to relief." Clark, 794 F.2d at 970; see also Mahone v. Addicks Utility Dist., 836 F.2d 921, 926 (5th Cir. 1988); United States v. Uvalde Consolidated Ind. School Dist., 625 F.2d 547, 549 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 1002, 68 L. Ed. 2d 858, 101 S. Ct. 2341.

The court accepts the facts alleged by plaintiffs in the complaint as true and views the material allegations of the complaint "as admitted," along with such reasonable inferences that might be drawn in plaintiffs' favor. Gargiul v. Tompkins, 704 F.2d 661, 663 (2d Cir. 1983), vacated on other grounds, 465 U.S. 1016, 104 S. Ct. 1263, 79 L. Ed. 2d 670 (1984); Murray v. City of Milford, 380 F.2d 468, 470 (2d Cir. 1967); In re Energy Systems Equipment Leasing Securities Litig., 642 F. Supp. 718, 723 (E.D. N.Y. 1985). [10] Dismissal is appropriate only when the court accepts as true all well-pled allegations of fact and, "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Thomas v. Smith, 897 F.2d 154, 156 (5th Cir. 1989), quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 100-02, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); see Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, [*1025] 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 65 (1984); Mahone v. Addicks Utility Dist., 836 F.2d 921, 926 (5th Cir. 1988); McLean v. International Harvester, 817 F.2d 1214, 1217 n.3 (5th Cir. 1987); Jones v. United States, 729 F.2d 326, 330 (5th Cir. 1984).

HN2[] When a defendant moves to dismiss a complaint, the court focuses solely on the legal sufficiency of the pleadings. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 96 (1974). The court is restricted to the [11] face of the pleadings and may look only within the four corners of the complaint in evaluating a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Goldman v. Belden, 754 F.2d 1059, 1065 (2d Cir. 1985); Ryder Energy Distribution Corp. v. Merrill Lynch Commodities, Inc., 748 F.2d 774, 779 (2d Cir. 1984); In re Energy Systems Litig., 642 F. Supp. 718, 723 (E.D. N.Y. 1986).

Motions to Dismiss by Defendants Country Skillet, ConAgra, Magnolia, Farm Fresh, Simmons and Delta Pride

Defendants Farm Fresh, [4] [12] Simmons, [5] and Delta Pride [6] submitted a consolidated memorandum in support of their motions to dismiss. Magnolia Processing [7] joins in the motion to dismiss but relies upon memorandum briefs submitted by other parties. Defendants Country Skillet and ConAgra [8] submitted a separate memorandum brief. In support of the motions to dismiss, all defendants rely upon the same legal arguments; therefore, collective consideration of the motions is possible. However, in the discussion which follows, facts and issues which are pertinent to specific defendants will be duly noted.

There are three issues which the defendants raise for the court's attention in support of [13] their motions to dismiss. The three issues are as follows. First, defendants assert that the plaintiffs' claims of conspiracy are merely conclusory allegations which fail to set forth sufficient details and are therefore insufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The second and third issues are interrelated. Defendants argue that the plaintiffs have failed to allege fraudulent concealment of the conspiracy with the particularity required by F.R.C.P. 9(b). The issue of fraudulent concealment has a direct impact upon the third argument in support of the motions. Defendants argue that since plaintiffs have not properly pled fraudulent concealment, then the Clayton Act's four year statute of limitations would bar plaintiffs' claims which are based on conduct that allegedly occurred more than four years prior to the filing of the complaint. In turn, the court now considers defendants' arguments in support of the motions to dismiss.

A. Insufficient Allegations of Conspiracy

The first component of defendants' argument is that plaintiffs' allegations of a conspiracy are insufficient to state a claim. Defendants argue that since concerted activity is an indispensable [14] element of a Sherman Act claim, [9] then the claims should be dismissed because the complaint includes insufficient factual allegations of concerted activity against each and every defendant. According [*1026] to defendants, "allegations of conspiracy must identify specific acts of each of the alleged conspirators which connect them with the conspiracy." [10]

Regarding the defendants' claim of insufficient allegations of a conspiracy, the plaintiffs' consolidated complaint sets forth the following:

VIII. OFFENSES CHARGED

---

[4] Farm Fresh Catfish Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota with its principal place of business in Hollandale, Mississippi. Farm Fresh is wholly-owned by George A. Hormel & Co.

[5] Sons Farm Raised Catfish, Inc., is a Mississippi corporation with its principal place of business in Yazoo City, Mississippi.

[6] Delta Pride Catfish, Inc., is a Mississippi corporation with its principal place of business located at Indianola, Mississippi. In the past, Delta Pride has transacted business under the trade names, "Fishland" and "Crystal Creek."

[7] Magnolia Processing, Inc., is a Mississippi corporation with its principal place of business located at Tunica, Mississippi. In the past, Magnolia Processing has transacted business under the name of "Pride of the Pond."

[8] In 1991, Country Skillet Catfish Co. was incorporated as a wholly-owned subsidiary of ConAgra, Inc. prior to 1991, ConAgra operated Country Skillet as a division. Both companies are Delaware corporations. Country Skillet's principal place of business is in Isola, Mississippi. ConAgra's principal place of business is in Omaha, Nebraska. Plaintiffs named both Conagra and Country Skillet as defendants.

[9] Citing Park v. El Paso Bd. of Realtors, 764 F.2d 1053, 1059 (5th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1102, 88 L. Ed. 2d 919, 106 S. Ct. 884 (1986); Pierce v. Ramsey Winch Co., 753 F.2d 416, 425 (5th Cir. 1985).

[10] Citing United States v. North Coast Transportation Co., 7 F.R.D. 491 (D. Wash. 1947).

30. Beginning at least as early as 1981, and continuing through at least 1990, the exact dates being [15] unknown to plaintiffs, defendants and their co-conspirators entered into and engaged in a combination, and conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition by fixing prices of catfish and catfish products directly sold throughout the United States.
31. The charged combination and conspiracy consisted of a continuing agreement, understanding, and concert of action among the defendants and co-conspirators, the substantial terms of which were to fix prices of catfish and catfish products, throughout the United States, by among other things:
(a) Agreeing to establish minimum prices for certain catfish products; and
(b) Agreeing to adhere to the established minimum prices.
32. For the purposes of forming and carrying out the charged combination and conspiracy, the defendants and co-conspirators did those things that they combined and conspired to do, including among other things:
(a) Participating in meetings and discussions about the prices of catfish and catfish products;
(b) Agreeing, in the course of those meetings and discussions, on minimum prices for catfish and catfish products;

(c) Agreeing, in the course of those meetings and discussions, that the agreed upon minimum [16] prices should go into effect on a certain date;
(d) Agreeing to adhere to established minimum prices for catfish and catfish products;
(e) Monitoring and enforcing compliance with the agreements to adhere to established minimum prices for catfish and catfish products;
(f) In 1983, defendant Magnolia met with certain other companies including Delta Pride. This meeting was held in Sunflower County, Mississippi. The parties in attendance at this meeting agreed to set minimum prices for future sales of catfish and catfish products and the date such prices would go into effect;

(g) In 1984, at least two additional meetings were held. At the first of these meetings, other processors in addition to Magnolia and Delta Pride were represented, including Simmons and Farm Fresh. At both meetings, the persons present reached an agreement on what prices they should be charging for catfish and catfish products. In addition, at either or both of these meetings, a representative of Delta Pride indicated that Country Skillet, another processor not represented at the meeting, would go along with any agreement reached regarding the prices to charge for various catfish and catfish products; [17]
(h) Thereafter, the President and General Manager of defendant Magnolia, William Gidden, continued to have discussions with a representative of Delta Pride who would inform Gidden of the price the processors had agreed to charge for catfish and catfish products and when those prices were to go into effect. Gidden would then agree to go along with the price changes and would implement those changes on behalf of defendant Magnolia;

(i) Early in 1987, Joseph Glover, Jr., the founder of Southern Pride, received a call from a competitor who said he had talked to a number of other catfish processors and that they had agreed to raise prices. Glover continued to have discussions with competitors during the 1987-1990 time period for the purpose of agreeing to and [*1027] fixing prices in the sale of catfish and catfish products;
(j) At least one additional meeting was held in early 1990 which was attended by Southern Pride and top officials of two competitors.

(k) In formulating and effectuating the aforesaid combination and conspiracy, defendants and their co-conspirators did those things which they combined and conspired to do, the substantive terms of which were to artificially raise and fix [18] and maintain prices by establishing minimum prices for various catfish and catfish products, setting the date such prices should go into effect, adhering to such minimum prices and monitoring and enforcing compliance with the agreed upon minimum prices.

Complaint, pgs. 7-10.

HN3[] The sufficiency of a complaint is governed foremost by Rule 8(a)(2) which requires a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief . . . ." It is well settled that the statement of the claim should provide the defendant with fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 85 (1957).

HN4[] In a Sherman Act claim, a blanket allegation of a conspiracy is deemed insufficient to place the defendant "on notice" of the claim in order for defendant to formulate an adequate responsive pleading. Mountain View Pharmacy v. Abbott Laboratories, 630 F.2d 1383, 1387 (10th Cir. 1980); Larry R. George Sales Co. v. Cool Attic Corp., 587 F.2d 266, 273 (5th Cir. 1979); California Dump Truck Owners Ass'n v. Associated General Contractors, 562 F.2d 607, 615 (9th Cir. 1977). [19] Yet, by the same token, there is no requirement of an "inordinate level of factual specificity." Mountain View Pharmacy, 630 F.2d at 1388. In the case sub judice, the defendants received much more than a generic allegation of conspiracy, and the complaint more than satisfies Rule 8(a)(2) standards. For example, defendants received notice that the plaintiffs allege; a conspiracy among them to establish minimum prices for catfish and catfish products; agreements to adhere to the established minimum prices; agreements to set dates in which minimum prices were to be implemented; and, monitoring and enforcing compliance with the agreed upon minimum prices. As a means to this end, plaintiffs allege that beginning in 1981 and continuing through 1990, company representatives from the defendant companies engaged in meetings and telephone conversations where discussions occurred and decisions were made as to the prices to be charged for catfish and the dates of implementation. In 1983, it is alleged that Magnolia Processing met with other companies, one of which was Delta Pride, in a meeting held in Sunflower County, Mississippi. The complaint alleges [20] that in 1984, at least two additional meetings were held. In addition to Magnolia and Delta Pride, Simmons and Farm Fresh were also represented. After agreeing at the meetings on the prices that should be charged for catfish and catfish products, it is asserted that a representative of Delta Pride indicated that Country Skillet would "go along" with any agreement that was made. Subparagraph "h" of the complaint asserts that William Gidden, President and General Manager of Magnolia, continued to have discussions with Delta Pride officials wherein Delta Pride would inform Gidden of price changes and the dates of implementation. Subparagraph "I" addresses an allegation that Joseph Glover, Jr., the founder of Southern Pride, engaged in discussions with competitors from 1987-1990, regarding an increase in the prices to be charged for catfish. Finally, the complaint alleges that in early 1990, at least one meeting was held between Southern Pride and top officials of two competitors.

Defendants argue that the class action complaint is lacking the "requisite" specificity in the following areas. First of all, the complaint does not identify all of the company representatives who attended [21] all of the alleged meetings, and there is no explanation of any company authority that the representatives might have possessed. Second, the dates and locations of the meetings are not listed, and "the Complaint also fails to identify any substantive facts concerning the alleged agreement such as the type of product [*1028] or products involved and the relevant geographic market affected."

The defendants do not cite the court to any authority which demands the rigid level of detail and specificity of antitrust pleading which defendants advance, or "propose," and none exists. To the contrary, a rigid rule of specificity and detail is disfavored in antitrust cases at the pleadings stage:

> We have held that HN5[] 'a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.' Conley v Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) (footnote omitted). And in antitrust cases, where 'the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' Poller v Columbia Broadcasting, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962), [22] dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.

Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of the Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 345 (1976).

ConAgra and Country Skillet take sharp issue with the fact that plaintiffs' complaint does not place a ConAgra/Country Skillet representative at any conspiracy meeting or telephone conversation where price-fixing was discussed, agreed upon, implemented, etc. However, plaintiffs have alleged that in at least one meeting held in 1984, a Delta Pride representative indicated that Country Skillet, not represented at the meeting, would "go along" with any agreement reached regarding the prices to charge for catfish and catfish products. ConAgra and Country Skillet wage an adamant argument that their alleged linkage to any conspiracy appears only in the form of a hearsay statement; and, plaintiffs' failure to identify anything more specific, which would indicate more active participation, is fatal to the claims against them.

The assertion in plaintiffs' complaint regarding Country Skillet's acquiescence to [23] the conspiracy is taken as true. See Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 65 (1984); Thomas v. Smith, 897 F.2d 154, 156 (5th Cir. 1989), quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 100-02, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); Mahone v. Addicks Utility Dist., 836 F.2d 921, 926 (5th Cir. 1988); McLean v. International Harvester, 817 F.2d 1214, 1217 n.3 (5th Cir. 1987); Jones v. United States, 729 F.2d 326, 330 (5th Cir. 1984). Accepting the allegation as true for present purposes on a motion to dismiss, the court finds that the argument advanced by ConAgra and Country Skillet is not well taken. Such acquiescence, or a "meeting of the minds," or "conscious commitment to a common scheme" to achieve an unlawful purpose is sufficient linkage to a claim of civil conspiracy. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764 n.9, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 786, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); [24] U.S. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 142, 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 1285 (1948); See 16 Am. Jur. 2d Conspiracy § 50 (1979) (elements of civil conspiracy). Obviously, whether or not plaintiffs will be able to prove Country Skillet's or any other defendant's involvement in the conspiracy is a separate issue to be saved for another day and time. [11]

In summary, the court observes that HN6[] in order to sustain a claim of a conspiracy in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, [25] 15 U.S.C. § 1, plaintiffs will be called upon to prove, (1) that a conspiracy, combination, or agreement (i.e., concerted action) existed, (2) with an aim to restrain trade by suppressing and eliminating competition by fixing prices of processed catfish and catfish products, and that (3) plaintiffs were injured by such concerted action. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761-62, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 783-84 (1984); Purity Products, Inc. v. Tropicana Products, Inc., 702 F. Supp. 564, 570 (D. Md 1988). Accepting the allegations of the complaint [*1029] as true, as the court is required, plaintiffs have stated a claim upon which relief could be granted if eventually successful in carrying their burden of proof.

B. Statute of Limitations Bar & Fraudulent Concealment

The defendants' second component to the motions to dismiss includes an assertion of the affirmative defense of a statute of limitations bar. Plaintiffs' claims are instituted under section 4 of the Clayton Act, codified at 15 U.S.C. § 15 [26] (Supp. 1993). Section 15b presents a four year statute of limitations. "Any action to enforce any cause of action under sections 15, 15a, or 15c of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." 15 U.S.C. § 15b (Supp. 1993). Since the first complaint was filed on February 7, 1992, defendants assert that claims which are based on conduct prior to February 1988 should be barred. However, HN7[] fraudulent concealment tolls the Clayton Act's statute of limitations. State of Texas v. Allan Construction Co., Inc., 851 F.2d 1526, 1528-29 (5th Cir. 1988); In re Beef Industry Antitrust Litig., 600 F.2d 1148, 1169 (5th Cir. 1979), reh'g denied, 616 F.2d 569 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 905 (1980); General Elec. Co. v. City of San Antonio, 334 F.2d 480, 483 (5th Cir. 1964); Rinzler v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 333 F.2d 719, 720 (5th Cir. 1964). In view of the tolling effect of the statute of limitations on the [27] Clayton Act, defendants argue that plaintiffs' class action complaint does not plead fraud with the particularity required by F.R.C.P. 9(b). [12] "Unless plaintiffs allege fraudulent concealment with the particularity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), they cannot avoid the statute of limitations as to those allegations occurring more than four years prior to the initiation of their actions." [13]

HN8[] In ruling upon a motion to dismiss under Rule 9(b), the court must apply Rule 9(b)'s requirement in harmony with the simplicity of notice pleading as allowed by Rule 8. Craighead v. E.F. Hutton & Co., Inc., 899 F.2d 485, 491 (6th Cir. 1990); Cayman Exploration Corp. v. United Gas Pipe Line, 873 F.2d 1357, 1362 (10th Cir. 1989);

[11] Country Skillet also argues that the claim against it does not allege that ConAgra/Country Skillet "went along" with the agreed upon prices, and the failure to allege adherence dooms the claim. The court does not read the complaint so narrowly. The complaint clearly alleges that all defendants adhered to the price fixing scheme. Furthermore, the court declines Country Skillet's "invitation" to engage in evidentiary rulings at this stage of the litigation.

[12] "In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." F.R.C.P. 9(b).

[13] Defendants' Consolidated Memorandum Brief at 8.

Michaels Bldg. Co. v. Ameritrust Co., N.A., 848 F.2d 674, 679 (6th Cir. 1988); [28] Credit & Finance Corp., Ltd. v. Warner & Swasey Co., 638 F.2d 563, 566 (2d Cir. 1981). Rule 9(b) does not negate the simplicity and flexibility contemplated by Rule 8, and it would be error to focus on Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement in a vacuum. Michaels Bldg. Co., 848 F.2d at 679; 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Fed. Prac. and Proc. Civil § 1298, at 617 (1990). "Rule 9(b) HN9[] requires that the circumstances of fraud be pled with enough particularity to put the party on notice as to the nature of the claim." J.C. Wyckoff & Assoc. v. Standard Fire Ins., Co., 936 F.2d 1474, 1489 (6th Cir. 1991). The reason for the rule of particularity is to provide fair notice of the substance of the claim so that the defendant may prepare a responsive pleading. Michaels Bldg. Co., 848 F.2d at 679; Ross v. A.H. Robins Co., Inc., 607 F.2d 545, 557 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 946, 100 S. Ct. 2175, 64 L. Ed. 2d 802 (1980); Denny v. Barber, 576 F.2d 465, 469 (2d Cir. 1978). [29] Furthermore, the court is guided by a well-reasoned approach which other jurisdictions have taken in similar cases. That is, in cases which implicate corporate or business fraud, plaintiffs cannot be expected to have knowledge of all the details which undergird the alleged fraudulent scheme. Therefore, some relaxation of Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement is appropriate in instances where such information is in the defendant's hands or control. Craftmatic Securities Litigation v. Kraftsow, 890 F.2d 628, 645 (3d Cir. 1989); Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 540 (9th Cir. 1989); Michaels Bldg. Co. v. Ameritrust Co., 848 F.2d 674, 680 (6th Cir. 1988); DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1248 (2d Cir. 1987); Wool v. Tandem Computers, Inc., 818 F.2d 1433, 1439 (9th Cir. 1987). Especially in the early stages of litigation where pleadings are filed before the commencement of discovery, [*1030] courts are counseled to exercise caution in granting a motion to dismiss based upon Rule 9(b) [30] where the facts underlying the claims are within the defendant's control. [14] Michaels Bldg. Co., 848 F.2d at 680; Chambers Development Company, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Industries, 590 F. Supp. 1528, 1539 (W.D. Pa. 1984); Eaby v. Richmond, 561 F. Supp. 131, 137 (E.D. Pa. 1983). However, notwithstanding the "relaxed pleading standard" as discussed above, this court finds that plaintiffs have alleged fraudulent concealment with sufficient particularity to meet the challenge posed by defendants' motions to dismiss under Rule 9(b).

[31] The court emphasizes that in this stage, the focus is on the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' allegations as a matter of pleading. Allegations concerning what the evidence might prove as a matter of law are premature at this juncture. Therefore, the court's discussion of the doctrine of fraudulent concealment at this point is specifically tailored for an evaluation of the pleadings.

HN10[] The doctrine of fraudulent concealment contains two elements which a plaintiff must prove. First, the defendant concealed the conduct complained of; and, second, despite the exercise of due diligence, plaintiff failed to discover the facts that form the basis of his claim. State of Texas v. Allan Construction Co. Inc., 851 F.2d 1526, 1528 (5th Cir. 1988); Jensen v. Snellings, 841 F.2d 600, 607 (5th Cir. 1988); In re Beef Industry Antitrust Litig., 600 F.2d 1148, 1169 (5th Cir. 1979). It is generally recognized that the statute of limitations is tolled only if the defendant has engaged in affirmative acts of concealment. Allan Construction Co. Inc., 851 F.2d at 1528; Hennegan v. Pacifico Creative Serv. Inc., 787 F.2d 1299, 1302 [32] (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 886, 107 S. Ct. 279, 93 L. Ed. 2d 254 (1986); Berkson v. Del Monte Corp., 743 F.2d 53, 55 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1056, 105 S. Ct. 1765, 84 L. Ed. 2d 826 (1985). However, courts dispense with the requirement of an affirmative act of concealment in instances where the underlying wrong is deemed "self-concealing." In the Fifth Circuit, a self-concealing wrong is one in which, "deception is an essential element for some purpose other than merely to cover up the act." Allan Construction Co., Inc., 851 F.2d at 1530. In Allan Construction, the court explained the self-concealment doctrine as follows:

> To steal an antique vase is not a self-concealing wrong; the true owner knows the vase is stolen even if the owner does not know the identity of the thief. On the other hand, to sell a fake vase as if it were an antique is not only fraud, it is a self-concealing wrong. Deception is an essential element of the wrong, and one that is not > intended merely to cover [33] up the wrong itself. By contrast, to steal a vase and to replace it with a worthless replica is not self-concealing. The wrong is theft of the vase; the replacement is an act separate from the wrong itself and aimed only at concealing the fact that the real vase has been stolen.

---

[14] Despite the "non-restrictive application" of Rule 9(b) in cases of corporate fraud, plaintiffs' allegations must include statements of fact upon which the allegations are based and an assertion that the necessary information lies within defendants' control. Craftmatic Securities Litigation v. Kraftsow, 890 F.2d 628, 645 (3d Cir. 1989); Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 540 (9th Cir. 1989); MaDonna v. United States, 878 F.2d 62, 66 (2d Cir. 1989); DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Industries, Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1248 (2d Cir. 1987).

Allan Construction Co., 851 F.2d at 1529-30.

In order for a price fixing scheme to be successful, it must be kept secret. It is an illegal endeavor, and public knowledge of its existence spoils the plan. Allan Construction Co., 851 F.2d at 1531. However, the sole purpose of the deception is to cover up the illegal act. Thus, the deception is not considered "an essential element of the wrong." [15] Id. If the deception is not an essential element of the wrong, then it follows that fraudulent concealment is not inherent in every price-fixing scheme. Consequently, the question comes full circle with the need to prove affirmative acts of concealment.

> [*1031] In short, we cannot conclude that Congress, in writing the Clayton Act's four-year statute of limitations, could have intended for the fraudulent concealment doctrine to apply to every [34] price-fixing case. Hence, we reject the State's contention that because the bid-rigging conspiracy was inherently selfconcealing, it need not prove affirmative acts of concealment.

State of Texas v. Allan Construction Co., Inc.,851 F.2d 1526, 1531 (5th Cir. 1988). Despite the need to prove affirmative acts where the wrong is not "self-concealing," such proof is no tall order in most price fixing cases. In pleading/proving affirmative acts of concealment in this circuit, it is not necessary for the fraudulent concealment to be wholly separate from the wrong itself. Stated differently, there is no requirement for the acts of concealment to be independent of the conspiracy. Allan Construction Co., 851 F.2d at 1532. HN11[] Fraudulent concealment can be shown where the acts of concealment are intertwined with the acts [35] of price fixing. Allan Construction Co., 851 F.2d at 1531; Greenhaw v. Lubbock County Beverage Ass'n, 721 F.2d 1019, 1030 (5th Cir. 1983). [16] Proof of fraudulent concealment is found with any evidence of efforts designed to keep price fixing activities secret. Allan Construction Co., 851 F.2d at 1532; Greenhaw, 721 F.2d at 1030; 2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law, para. 325d, at 124.

Returning now to the facts as alleged in the pleadings for the case sub judice, the court finds that the plaintiffs have alleged a pattern of conduct by the defendants which included face-to-face meetings and telephone calls--all conducted under the cloak of secrecy in furtherance [36] of the conspiracy to fix the price of catfish. Such conduct of clandestine meetings and telephone conversations, if proven, is sufficient to establish the requisite "affirmative acts" of fraudulent concealment.

The application of fraudulent concealment is not complete without a discussion of the "due diligence" requirement. HN12[] In order to avail the doctrine of fraudulent concealment and its equitable tolling of the statute of limitations, the plaintiffs must show that they failed, despite the exercise of due diligence on their part, to discover the facts that form the basis of their price fixing claim. "The statute of limitations is tolled only until such time as the plaintiff, exercising reasonable diligence, could have discovered the facts forming the basis for the claim." Allan Construction Co., 851 F.2d at 1533. The plaintiffs need not have actual knowledge of the facts before the duty of due diligence arises; rather, knowledge of certain facts which are "calculated to excite inquiry" give rise to the duty to inquire. Allan Construction Co., 851 F.2d at 1533; In re Beef Antitrust Litig., 600 F.2d 1148, 1171 (5th Cir. 1979); [37] Clement A. Evans & Co., Inc. v. McAlpine, 434 F.2d 100, 102 (5th Cir. 1970). cert. denied, 402 U.S. 988, 91 S. Ct. 1660, 29 L. Ed. 2d 153. The statute of limitations begins to run once plaintiffs are on inquiry that a potential claim exists. United Klans of America v. McGovern, 621 F.2d 152, 154 (5th Cir. 1980); Prather v. Neva Paperbacks, Inc., 446 F.2d 338, 341 (5th Cir. 1971).

---

15 For an opposite view, see New York v. Hendrickson Brothers, Inc., 840 F.2d 1065, 1084 (2d Cir. 1988).

16 Greenhaw was later overruled on an issue unrelated to its fraudulent concealment analysis. International Woodworkers v. Champion International Corp., 790 F.2d 1174, 1181 (5th Cir. 1986).

Plaintiffs assert that as soon as the duty of due diligence was triggered, they acted with deliberate speed. Specifically, plaintiffs allege that they learned of the conspiracy only after January 14, 1992, when the United States Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, filed an Information against Magnolia Processing alleging conspiracy to eliminate competition in the catfish industry by fixing prices. Hence, plaintiffs argue that prior to January of 1992, they had no knowledge of the combination and conspiracy; and, therefore, a due diligence duty did not arise until that time.

In any event, whether plaintiffs' duty was triggered before or immediately [38] after January 1992, is a question of fact that need not and should not be decided on a motion to dismiss. See Vanderboom v. Sexton, 422 F.2d 1233, 1241 (8th Cir. 1970). The court finds that the pleadings are more than sufficient in this regard. In paragraphs 38 and 39, the plaintiffs assert that because of the [*1032] secret, conspiratorial nature of defendants' conduct, plaintiffs and other potential members of the class did not know, and could not have known by the exercise of reasonable diligence, of the price fixing scheme prior to January, 1992. Furthermore, paragraph 40 alleges that when distributors inquired of the processors as to why the price of catfish and catfish products continued to rise in the 1980s, the processors attributed higher prices to increasing kill costs, price increases by farmers, shortages of large fish, and the "off flavor" problem.

In conclusion, the court denies defendants' motions to dismiss in their entirety for the reasons set forth above. The court finds no merit to the motions to dismiss which are based upon Rule 12(b)(6) and 9(b). Plaintiffs have made legally sufficient allegations of a conspiracy and have pled fraudulent [39] concealment with the requisite degree of particularity that the law requires. The undersigned now proceeds with a discussion of plaintiffs' motion to certify a class. An appropriate Order in regard to the motions to dismiss will accompany this memorandum opinion.

PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO CERTIFY CLASS

Pursuant to Rule 23(a), (b)(2) and (b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the named plaintiffs have filed a motion to certify a class action on the behalf of:

> All purchasers of processed catfish and catfish products in the United States who at any time during the period 1981 through at least 1990 directly purchased processed catfish and catfish products from one or more of the defendants (but excluding from the class defendants, their parents, subsidiaries, affiliates and governmental entities).

In support of the motion for class certification, the named plaintiffs have submitted a consolidated memorandum of law with accompanying affidavits and exhibits. Defendants Delta Pride, Farm Fresh, and ConAgra/Country Skillet have each submitted separate memorandums in opposition to plaintiffs' motion for class certification.

Rule 23(a) HN13[] establishes four requirements for class [40] certification which must be met before consideration of certification under Rule 23(b)(2) or (b)(3). Rule 23, in pertinent parts provides as follows:

> HN14[] (a) Prerequisites to a Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.
> (b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:
> * * *
> (2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or

(3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that [41] a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

HN15[] Plaintiffs' action may be certified as a class action only if the court finds that it meets all requirements of Rule 23(a)(1)-(4), "numerosity," "commonality," "typicality," and "adequacy;" and, Rule 23(b)(3)'s additional requirements [*1033] of "predominance" of common questions and "superiority" of the class method for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy are also satisfied. As a counterpart to plaintiffs' section 16 claim of the Clayton Act, certification is also sought under (b)(2)--certification for purposes of appropriate injunctive relief with respect to the class as a whole.

[42] HN16[] In ruling upon a motion for class certification, the substantive allegations contained in plaintiffs' complaint are accepted as true. Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 901 n.17 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 816, 97 S. Ct. 57, 50 L. Ed. 2d 75 (1976); In re Energy Systems Equipment Leasing Securities Litig., 642 F. Supp. 718, 724 (E.D. N.Y. 1986). However, the court does not delve into the merits of plaintiffs' substantive claims in ruling upon such a motion. Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732, 748 (1974); Transamerican Refining Corp. v. Dravo Corp., 130 F.R.D. 70, 76 (S.D. Tex. 1990); In re Energy Systems Litig., 642 F. Supp. at 724; In re Scientific Control Corp. Securities Litig., 71 F.R.D. 491, 505 (S.D. N.Y. 1976); Steinmetz v. Bache & Co., 71 F.R.D. 202, 204 (S.D. N.Y. 1976). Likewise, a predetermination of the merits [43] of the defense of the suit is also inappropriate. Philadelphia Elec. Co. v. Anaconda American Brass, Co., 43 F.R.D. 452, 458 (E.D. Pa. 1968); Siegel v. Chicken Delight Inc., 271 F. Supp. 722, 726 (N.D. Cal. 1967); 3B Moore's Fed. Prac. (Ma) para. 23.46. "The invitation to pre-try the case through the vehicle of this motion [class certification] must be respectfully declined . . . ." Siegel, 271 F. Supp. at 726. Rather, the court's focus on a class certification motion is strictly upon the requirements as articulated in Rule 23.

With the exception of the numerosity requirement of Rule 23(a)(1), the various defendants register some objection, in varying degrees, to the remaining elements of Rule 23(a); commonality, typicality, and adequacy. However, the force of defendants' opposition is found in Rule 23(b)(3)'s requirement that questions of law or fact common to members of the class predominate over questions which would be applicable to individual members (i.e., predominance). Additionally, defendants attack the asserted predominance of a common impact and injury that a price fixing [44] conspiracy in the catfish industry would cause. Beginning with the elements of Rule 23(a)(1-4), the court now examines plaintiffs' consolidated motion and defendants' objections.

Rule 23(a)

Numerosity

HN17[] The requirement of numerosity is fulfilled when the potential class is so numerous that joinder of all members is Impracticable. F.R.C.P. 23(a)(1). As noted above, numerosity is the only element of Rule 23(a) which is uncontested. In plaintiffs' memorandum brief, plaintiffs allege that the direct purchasers of processed catfish and catfish products from the defendants during the period 1981 through 1990, consist of "several thousand" purchasers. Country Skillet and Delta Pride acknowledge that a potential class could include "thousands" of members. Suffice it to say that the potential number of class members is more than sufficient to justify class treatment. [17]

[45] Commonality of Fact and Law

---

[17] See In re Plywood Anti-Trust Litigation, 76 F.R.D. 570, 578 (E.D. La. 1976) (numerosity satisfied when potential class size is "thousands").

The second step of Rule 23(a) application calls for an inquiry into whether there are questions of law or fact common to the class. The issue of "commonality" is the target of defendants' primary opposition to the class certification motion. However, the force of defendants' opposition is tailored on the "predominance" (or lack thereof) of common questions of fact and law--which is a consideration for 23(b)(3) application, assuming all elements of 23(a) are met. Out of necessity, the court recognizes that any discussion of 23(a) commonality is likely to involve considerable overlap with 23(b)(3). [18] [*1034] Nonetheless, the court perceives that the issues of "commonality" and "predominance" of common issues are separate considerations which play distinct roles in the class certification process.

[46] Plaintiffs' consolidated complaint alleges a conspiracy among the defendant catfish processors with the illegal object of fixing, implementing, and maintaining the prices of processed catfish and processed catfish products at artificial, supracompetitive levels. As a means to this end, it is alleged that defendants participated in various face-to-face, "clandestine" meetings and telephone conversations wherein decisions about price fixing were made, as well as discussions about implementation. Obviously, any proof regarding the existence of meetings, telephone conversations, or any other means of communication, regarding price fixing in the catfish industry would be applicable to the class as proposed by the plaintiffs. Other elements of common proof are a logical extension from the same set of facts, if proven. For example, any evidence which may be introduced concerning the content and substance of discussions and decisions which might have been made at these alleged meetings are of common interest and an important concern to the entire class. It naturally follows that the proof, if any, which might unfold at trial would impact the application of the elements of a section 1 [47] Sherman Act claim in the same manner as to all class members. Therefore, the presence of common questions of law are a direct and logical counterpart to the underlying set of facts in the alleged catfish price fixing scheme. Stated differently, all class members share a unity of interest in how the facts, as such will unfold at trial, will "fit" the law of a Sherman Act violation. Rule 23(a)(2) is satisfied since all the members of a class, as defined by named plaintiffs, have a potential interest in any proof of a concerted action, conspiracy, agreement, etc., with the aim of restraining trade in the catfish industry by fixing the prices of processed catfish and catfish products. Antitrust price fixing conspiracies, by their nature, raise common questions of fact and law about the existence, scope, and effect of the alleged conspiracy. Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 141 F.R.D. 516, 521 (M.D. Ala. 1992); Davis v. Northside Realty Associates, Inc., 95 F.R.D. 39, 43 (W.D. N.Y. 1982); In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 80 F.R.D. 244, 247 (S.D. Tex. 1978); In re Sugar Industry Antitrust Litig., 73 F.R.D. 322, 335 (E.D. Pa. 1976). [48] Plaintiffs in this case have alleged a single conspiracy spanning a period of approximately nine years by the major players in the catfish processing industry. If each class member proceeded individually, each would have to prove the existence and impact of the identical conspiracy to fix prices. Obviously, individual actions designed to prove identical elements would completely destroy any notions of judicial economy. Hence, there are common issues of fact and law which favor class certification.

Typicality

A class action may be maintained only if "the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class." F.R.C.P. 23(a)(3). The requirement of "typicality" lends itself to considerable overlap with 23(b)(3), commonality, and 23(a)(4), adequacy of the class representatives. 3B Moore's Fed. Prac. (MS) para. 23.06-2. However, there are some considerations which are exclusively generic to 23(a)(3) typicality. The most prominent consideration is that there is an absence of an adverse interest between the representative parties and other members of the class. Tidwell v. Schweiker, 677 F.2d 560, 566 (7th Cir. 1982), [49] cert.

[18] A leading treatise on the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure refers to Rule 23(a)(2)'s requirement of commonality as "unnecessary" in light of 23(b):

> "An action can be maintained as a class action under Rule 23 only if it also satisfies the requirements of at least one of the three types of class actions provided for by subdivision (b), and a finding that common questions exist is implicitly required by a finding under either subdivisions (b)(1), (fn omitted) (b)(2), (fn omitted) or (b)(3) (fn omitted)."

3B Moore's Fed. Prac. (MB) para. 23.06-1.

denied, 461 U.S. 905, 103 S. Ct. 1874, 76 L. Ed. 2d 806 (1983); Blake v. Arnett, 663 F.2d 906, 913 (9th Cir. 1981); Fowler v. Birmingham News Co., 608 F.2d 1055, 1058-59 (5th Cir. 1979); Scott v. University of Delaware, 601 F.2d 76, 85 (3d Cir. 1979); In re Arthur Treacher's Franchisee Litig., 92 F.R.D. 398, 425-26 (E.D. Pa. 1981). Certainly, typicality does not mean that the claims of class members must be [*1035] identical. Eisenberg v. Gagnon, 766 F.2d 770, 786 (3d Cir. 1985); Kornberg v. Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc., 741 F.2d 1332, 1337 (11th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1004, 105 S. Ct. 1357, 84 L. Ed. 2d 379 (1985); De La Fuente v. Stokely-Van Camp, Inc., 713 F.2d 225, 232 (7th Cir. 1983); Kennedy v. Tallant, 710 F.2d 711, 717 (11th Cir. 1983); Milonas v. Williams, 691 F.2d 931, 938 (10th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1069, 103 S. Ct. 1524, 75 L. Ed. 2d 947 (1983); [50] Phillips v. Joint Legislative Committee on Performance and Expenditure Review (PEER) of the State of Mississippi, 637 F.2d 1014, 1024 (5th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 960, 102 S. Ct. 2035, 72 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1982); Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 141 F.R.D. 516, 522 (M.D. Ala. 1992); Bishop v. New York City Dept. Of Hous. Pres. & Dev., 141 F.R.D. 229, 238 (S.D. N.Y. 1992). HN18[] Beyond the absence of an adverse interest between the representatives and the class members, a claim by a representative party may be deemed "typical" if it is one which should be "reasonably expected" to be raised by members of the proposed class. Technograph Printed Circuits, Ltd. v. Methode Electronics, Inc., 285 F. Supp. 714, 721 (N.D. Ill. 1968). Furthermore, in instances wherein it is alleged that the defendants engaged in a common scheme relative to all members of the class, there is a strong assumption that the claims of the representative parties will be typical of the absent class members. Eisenberg v. Gagnon, 766 F.2d 770, 786 (3d Cir. 1985); [51] Cumberland Farms Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc., 120 F.R.D. 642, 646 (E.D. Pa. 1988); In re U.S. Financial Securities Litig., 69 F.R.D. 24, 35 n.12 (S.D. Cal. 1975); Frankford Hospital v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 67 F.R.D. 643, 646 (E.D. Pa. 1975).

Defendant Country Skillet/ConAgra asserts that the representative plaintiffs are a diverse assortment of catfish purchasers who are not at all typical of a broad class of absent class members. In essence, Country Skillet asserts that named plaintiff diversity destroys typicality. As the following descriptions demonstrate, the named plaintiffs are a diverse group; however, the court does not accept defendants' claims that their diversity is a poor reflection of the typical claims of absent class members.

State Fish Distributors, Inc., is an Illinois corporation with its principal place of business in Chicago. During the 1980s, State Fish bought an average of 40,000 to 50,000 pounds of processed catfish per week. Purchases were made from ConAgra, Farm Fresh, Delta Pride and Southern Pride. State Fish also buys seafood, [52] but processed catfish filets, nuggets, and processed whole catfish comprise approximately 50%-75% of State Fish's purchase of fish. State Fish has approximately 10-12 employees, and its customers are primarily restaurants, wholesalers, and retailers in the Chicago area, along with some customers in Detroit. State Fish requires that the processors deliver whole processed catfish with a layer of paper between the fish and the packing ice in order to conserve freshness of the product.

American Seafood, Inc., is a New Orleans, Louisiana, food distributor that purchased approximately 1500 pounds of catfish per week, almost exclusively from Delta Pride. American Seafood is a small firm which services New Orleans restaurants, ships, and hotels. American Seafood primarily purchases catfish filets and catfish nuggets.

Randle Trout Distributors Inc., is a corporation that has its principal place of business in Renton, Washington. Randle Trout's customers are located in the Seattle area; and catfish filets, ice packed and frozen, comprise approximately 30%-40% of Randle Trout's purchases. Randle Trout has purchased almost exclusively from Delta Pride, although it did buy some [53] catfish from Farm Fresh for a brief time.

Robert Orr-Sysco Food Services Co., is a Tennessee corporation with its principal place of business in Nashville. Robert Orr-Sysco, a subsidiary of Sysco Corporation, is a large food service distributor. Robert Orr-Sysco employs approximately 700 employees and operates out of a 230,000 square foot distribution facility in Nashville. Robert Orr-Sysco markets in a six state area, and several of its customers are institutional purchasers, such as hospitals, hotels, and schools. Other customers include grocery stores, restaurants, and some retail outlets. The bulk of Robert Orr-Sysco's purchases [*1036] include frozen whole fish and catfish filets. On an average of twice per week, Robert Orr-Sysco purchased catfish from Delta Pride, ConAgra, and Country Skillet. Robert Orr-Sysco is a large volume purchaser, and it distributes catfish to its customers under some of its own private labels, such as Hermitage and Sysco. The defendant processors package the catfish for Robert Orr-Sysco under the company's private label brands, although some catfish products are sold under the processors' own label.

Farm House Food Distributors, Inc., is an [54] Ohio corporation with its principal place of business in Cleveland. Farm House has approximately 35 employees, and its sales are within the Cleveland area. Farm House has purchased frozen filets from Country Skillet, Delta Pride and Farm Fresh. In addition to a wide variety of fish, Farm House's retail sales also include paper goods, grocery items, poultry and meat. Farm House purchased catfish on a monthly basis, and a substantial volume of its catfish purchases were of "wild" catfish rather than farm raised catfish supplied by the defendants.

The court is not persuaded that the diversity which exists among the named plaintiffs should, in some way, diminish or destroy the typicality requirement of Rule 23(a)(3). Collectively, the plaintiffs are typical purchasers, and their diversity can only strengthen their ability to represent absent class members that vary in size, geographical location, and buying patterns. HN19[] The tailored focus on a typicality inquiry is whether other members of the class have the same or similar injury, whether the action is based on conduct which is not special or unique to the named plaintiffs, and whether other class members have been injured by the [55] same course of conduct. Dura-Bilt Corp. v. Chase Manhattan Corp., 89 F.R.D. 87, 99 (S.D. N.Y. 1981). The fact that some distributors bought more catfish than others, that some liked their catfish shipped on a layer of paper, that some catfish products arrived at the distributor under a private label, etc., is not the sort of diversity which destroys typicality. The claims of the named plaintiffs are typical since they are based upon an identical theory of an alleged conspiracy to fix prices in the catfish industry and injury as a consequence thereof. Further, nothing has been brought to the court's attention which would suggest an antagonistic interest between the named plaintiffs and other class members.

> There has been general agreement that the existence of varying fact patterns to support the claims of individual class members does not mandate a finding of a lack of typicality, as long as the claims arise out of the same legal or remedial theory. Christy v. Hammel, 87 F.R.D. 381 (M.D. Pa. 1980); In re South Central States Bakery Products, supra. Since the claims here are based [56] on what appears to be the identical theory and since there are no demonstrated antagonistic interests between the representative parties and the class members, the typicality requirement is satisfied.

In re Alcoholic Beverages Litig., 95 F.R.D. 321, 324 (E.D. N.Y. 1982). As noted above, there is nothing in Rule 23(a)(3) which requires named plaintiffs to be clones of each other or clones of other class members. The diversity of named plaintiffs who differ in their methods of operation and conduct is often cited by defendants as an impediment to class certification. However, as long as the substance of the claim is the same as it would be for other class members, then the claims of named plaintiffs are not atypical. See In re Domestic Air Transp., 137 F.R.D. 677, 699 (N.D. Ga. 1991) (named plaintiffs' claims stem from same legal theory as class claims notwithstanding that class members purchased tickets at different prices and according to varying conditions); In re Wirebound Boxes Antitrust Litig., 128 F.R.D. 268, 270 (D. Minn. 1989) (where representatives had to prove existence, scope, [57] and impact of alleged nationwide conspiracy, such claims were sufficiently typical of entire class); United Nat. Records, Inc. v. MCA, Inc., 99 F.R.D. 178, 181 (N.D. Ill. 1983) (while product diversity might impact amount of recoverable damages, it does not negate typicality since all class members share same claim resulting from alleged conspiracy); In re McDonnell Douglas Corp. Sec. Litig., 98 F.R.D. 613, 619 (E.D. Mo. 1982)(typicality is met if claim of named plaintiff arises from same act or course of conduct that comprises [*1037] basis of claims for other class members); In re Glassine & Greaseproof Paper Antitrust Litig., 88 F.R.D. 302, 304 (E.D. Pa. 1980)("Typicality is not destroyed because a representative's claim presents a somewhat different factual pattern."); In re South Central States Bakery Products, 86 F.R.D. 407, 415 (M.D. La. 1980) (factual variations do not destroy typicality where all purported class members must establish same elements of price fixing claim; existence, scope, efficacy); Hedges Enterprises, Inc. v. Continental Group, 81 F.R.D. 461, 467 (E.D. Pa. 1979) [58] (defendant's claim that small size of representative plaintiff's firm was atypical in comparison to other "Fortune 500" claimants was meritless); Minnesota v. United States Steel Corp., 44 F.R.D. 559, 566 (D. Minn. 1968) (claims of eight representative parties were typical since proof of conspiracy and price fixing were common to all notwithstanding defendants' argument that claims were atypical because of diverse methods of procuring and producing fabricated steel). Finding that the claims of the named plaintiffs are typical of other class members, the court now proceeds to 23(a)(4) which provides that the representative parties must fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Adequacy

HN20[] Adequate representation turns upon the qualifications and experience of plaintiffs' counsel to conduct the litigation and whether the plaintiffs have any interests antagonistic to the class. Wetzel in. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 508 F.2d 239, 247 (3d Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 1011, 95 S. Ct. 2415, 44 L. Ed. 2d 679; Scholes v. Stone, McGuire & Benjamin, 143 F.R.D. 181, 186 (N.D. Ill. 1992); [59] Equal Employment Opportunity Commission v. Printing Industry of Metropolitan Washington, D.C., Inc., 92 F.R.D. 51, 54 (D. D.C. 1981). In the case sub judice, there is no serious suggestion that plaintiffs' attorneys are anything other than very capable, experienced antitrust counsel. Hence, the defendants take aim at the representative parties and argue that the five named plaintiffs are inadequate, poor representatives for the class. Specifically, defendants attempt to demonstrate that the class representatives are "in the dark" about the scope and objectives of this litigation and are mere pawns in the hands of antitrust counsel. [19] In the absence of a full understanding of the litigation's purpose, defendants assert that the representative parties are poor choices to look out for the interests of their class member colleagues.

[60] The court has reviewed the considerable volume of deposition testimony of the named plaintiff representatives which was submitted with Country Skillet/ConAgra's brief in opposition to the class certification motion. Upon review of the deposition testimony, the court does not accept defendants' assertions that the named plaintiffs are poor representatives for the class. An antitrust litigant is not expected to appreciate the finer points of the Sherman Act, Clayton Act, or the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure governing class action certification. "To require the class representative to be sophisticated and knowledgeable enough to help counsel in this quest would reduce the class action device, especially in complicated antitrust cases, to an impotent tool." Chevalier v. Baird Sav. Ass'n., 72 F.R.D. 140, 146 (E.D. Pa. 1976). See Hoffman Elec. Inc. v. Emerson Elec. Co., 754 F. Supp. 1070, 1077 (W.D. Pa. 1991) (lack of personal knowledge about material facts of securities case is not indicative of inadequate representation); Zinberg v. Washington Bancorp, Inc., 138 F.R.D. 397, 408 (D. N.J. 1990) [61] (no requirement pursuant to Rule 23 that named plaintiffs be totally aware of all facts concerning claims in issue); Foltz v. U.S. News & World Report, Inc., 106 F.R.D. 338, 341 (D. D.C. 1984) (class representatives are not required to possess detailed knowledge of their lawsuit); Pellman v. Cinerama, Inc., 89 F.R.D. 386, 389 (S.D. N.Y. 1981) (plaintiff's unfamiliarity with securities fraud litigation considered "trivial").

[*1038] Despite defendants' suggestion to the contrary, the court perceives nothing remarkable about the representatives' knowledge and understanding of their undertaking as class action representatives in this antitrust suit. Having stated that, the court hastens to add that the undersigned will be monitoring the adequacy of party representation for absent class members as the litigation progress; and, the court will respond accordingly where it perceives instances where active judicial involvement is in the best interest of this litigation. The court is aware of the popular criticism and perception of class action litigation as being a lifeline for legal fees rather than a judicially feasible approach [62] to vindicate multiple wrongs. Regardless of whether such criticism is fact or myth, it goes without saying that the client's interest is first and foremost in the advocacy of this case and in every case. With that stated, the court finds that the class representatives in this litigation are quite adequate.

All four prerequisites of Rule 23(a) are satisfied in this case. Consequently, the court's attention turns to Rule 23(b) for an assessment of the criteria which is set forth on the maintainability of class actions. As noted above, the sum and substance of defendants' opposition to class certification is predicated on a assertion that the litigation in the case sub judice can not satisfy Rule 23(b)(3) standards.

Rule 23(b)

---

[19] For example, defendant Country Skillet/ConAgra alleges that one representative, an officer from Farm House, knew so little about the case that he appeared to believe that he was being deposed in conjunction with a criminal grand jury investigation. Based on this claim, the court reviewed this testimony with interest. Upon review of the testimony, the court disagrees that the witness was confused in any way or that he did not understand the purpose of the deposition.

Plaintiffs have moved for class certification under 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3). Rule 23(b)(2) certification is appropriate for equitable, injunctive relief, while 23(b)(3) certification sets forth another stage of class certification criteria.

> (b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:
>
> * * *
>
> (2) the party opposing the class has acted or [63] refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or
>
> (3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

F.R.C.P. 23(b).

The defendants launch a well armed defensive strategy with the aim of convincing the court that the catfish processing industry is a highly diverse, fragmented industry which is totally incapable of price fixing, or producing [64] any predominating result or consequence. In the effort to defeat (b)(3) certification, the defendants' arsenal includes the opinions of two expert economists [20] who have offered their opinions and statistical analysis on every A-Z consideration in the catfish processing and marketing industry. Likewise, plaintiffs are equipped with their own expert economist [21] who can refute every opinion, every chart, and every statistic served by the defendants. The court has carefully reviewed all of the affidavits, deposition testimony and exhibits submitted by all three economists. Some of it was helpful to [*1039] the court in the consideration of the class certification motion, but most of it was not. [22]

[65] In reviewing the motion for class certification under the guidelines of Rule 23(b)(3), [23] there appear to be four issues which would logically influence whether or not questions of law or fact common to the class predominate over individual questions and whether the class approach is superior to other methods of adjudication. Plaintiffs and defendants have also identified the following issues as crucial to the "predominance, superiority, manageability" questions: (a) whether evidence of the conspiracy is common to the class; (b) whether evidence of impact and damage is common to the class; (c) if liability is established, does an acceptable mechanism exist for the determination of damages; (4) does the fraudulent concealment issue present a common predominant question for the proposed class. The court's conclusions as to these four issues will, out of necessity, provide insight into the manageability of a class action and the other pertinent considerations of Rule 23(b)(3)(A-D).

[66] As a rule of thumb, a price fixing antitrust conspiracy model is generally regarded as well suited for class treatment. 3B Moore's Fed. Prac. (MB) para. 23.46. The guiding principle for b(3) certification is that the interests of

---

[20] Mr. Michael L. Glassman of Glassman-Oliver Economic Consultants, Inc., Washington, D.C.

Dr. Gordon Rausser, University of California at Berkeley; Law and Economics Consulting Group, Inc., Berkeley, California.

[21] Dr. John C. Beyer, Nathan Associates, Inc., Arlington, Virginia.

[22] Some of the research was organized into a useful format for the court's consumption, but much of it contained some rather bold assertions regarding the merits of plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim. As previously noted, the court takes great pains to caution that a peek into the merits at this stage is very premature and wholly inappropriate. The court is merely interested in the legal criteria for the motions to dismiss and motion for class certification, which are quite specific. It follows then that the court finds no purposeful use for the expert economist conclusions concerning the merits of the case.

[23] The court recognizes that 23(b)(3) factors for class certification will result in some overlap with 23(a) considerations.

the parties can best be served by settling their differences in one single action. 7A Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Fed. Prac. and Proc. § 1777 1986). However, a mere charge of conspiracy does not mean that common questions predominate, or that product or market diversity, or dissimilar treatment could render a class action unmanageable. The suitability for Rule 23 certification is, by design and necessity, a fact sensitive process for each case.

Evidence of A Conspiracy Common to The Class

In the case sub judice, the court first considers whether evidence of the conspiracy is common to the class. Evidence of a national conspiracy to fix the prices of catfish and processed catfish products would revolve around what the defendants did, and said, if anything, in pursuit of a price fixing scheme. While ownership of catfish processing facilities is geographically diverse in this country, the location and principal places of [67] catfish processing are not. For the most part, the facilities are located in Mississippi and Alabama. In support of their motion for class certification, plaintiffs have submitted the affidavits of Joseph Glover, Jr., President of Southern Pride, and William H. Gidden, President of Magnolia Processing. Mr. Gidden's affidavit refers to at least three meetings in Mississippi with competitors in the catfish processing business and a number of telephone conversations. Mr. Glover's affidavit refers to "numerous conversations with my competitors" about price fixing in the catfish industry. If proven, evidence of any meetings in Mississippi, telephone conversations, or other electronic communications in pursuit and furtherance of the alleged conspiracy would be the most relevant evidence that could be introduced in proving the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint of price fixing. They court does not perceive that evidence of this type would be particular or isolated as to any individual plaintiff. Rather, such evidence would be pertinent and common to all plaintiffs. See In re Domestic Air Transp., 137 F.R.D. 677, 689 (N.D. Ga. 1991) (evidence of conspiracy [68] resulted from "common nucleus of operative facts"); Transamerican Refining Corp. v. Dravo Corp., 130 F.R.D. 70, 75 (S.D. Tex. 1990) (proof of conspiracy susceptible to generalized proof since focus is on what defendants did and said); In re South Central States Bakery Products, 86 F.R.D. 407, 419 (M.D. La. 1980) (court rejected claim that wholesale bakery business was too complex for generalized proof of antitrust conspiracy). [*1040] Claims of geographical complexity and product diversity are often asserted as a bar to the predominance analysis of common questions in class certification efforts. See e.g., In re Domestic Air Transp., 137 F.R.D. 677 (N.D. Ga. 1991); In re Wirebound Boxes Antitrust Litig., 128 F.R.D. 268 (D. Minn. 1989); Fisher Bros. v. Mueller Brass Co., 102 F.R.D. 570 (E.D. Pa. 1984); In re Alcoholic Beverages Litig., 95 F.R.D. 321 (E.D. N.Y. 1982); In re Screws Antitrust Litig., 91 F.R.D. 52 (D. Mass. 1981); In re Glassine & Greaseproof Paper Antitrust Litig., 88 F.R.D. 302 (E.D. Pa. 1980); [69] Hedges Enterprises, Inc. v. Continental Group, 81 F.R.D. 461 (E.D. Pa. 1979); In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 80 F.R.D. 244 (S.D. Tex. 1978); Shelter Realty Corp. v. Allied Maintenance Corp., 75 F.R.D. 34 (S.D. N.Y. 1977); In re Folding Carton Antitrust Litig., 75 F.R.D. 727 (N.D. Ill. 1977); In re Sugar Industry Antitrust Litig., 1977-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 61,373 (N.D. Cal. 1976); In re Master Key Antitrust Litig., 70 F.R.D. 23 (D. Conn. 1975). Furthermore, the court is not persuaded that State of Alabama v. Blue Bird Body Co., Inc., 573 F.2d 309 (5th Cir. 1978), supports defendants' argument that complexity in the catfish processing industry defies the feasibility of class certification. Blue Bird concerned a price fixing scheme by the manufacturers and distributors of school bus bodies. The Fifth Circuit affirmed the district court's certification of a class of Alabama school bus purchasers; however, the trial court's certification of a national [70] class of school bus purchasers was premature since plaintiffs had failed to establish that, as to the proposed national class, common issues predominated over individual issues. Blue Bird, 573 F.2d at 321. "The district court's error in certifying this nationwide class for a determination of liability was in failing to take the steps necessary to determine the manner in which the plaintiffs proposed to prove the antitrust violation." Id. In Blue Bird, the evidence before the court in the class certification stage only presented the possibility of an Alabama conspiracy. There was nothing to suggest that the conspiracy touched and concerned school bus purchasers outside of Alabama, and the court was unable to determine if plaintiffs intended to proceed state-by-state to establish the existence of a conspiracy in each school bus market. [24] Id. This is not the situation in the case sub judice. Here, the allegations and proposed proof

---

[24] There are substantial differences in the way in which school districts purchase school buses. State product specifications and bidding procedures which are set by state law demand local, individualized inquiries into the various markets. Blue Bird, 573 F.2d at 313. However, the Fifth Circuit did not foreclose the possibility of certification of a national class. Instead, the case was address one national conspiracy by the processors which are localized in Mississippi and Alabama. The case does not entail a segmented approach, state-by-state or market-by-market, to establish whether or [71] not a conspiracy existed.

Additionally, the court is not convinced that regional taste preferences for catfish is the type of diversity which diminishes the predominance of common questions. While catfish is processed as the whole fish, fileted, halved, frozen, packed on ice, cut into steaks, strips, nuggets, shanked, breaded, or marinated in lemon, butter, barbecue, or mesquite, [72] etc., such product diversity does not exclude the sum and substance of plaintiffs' allegations--that the major players in the industry engaged in clandestine activities to fix and maintain prices at higher, artificial levels. Generalized proof of a conspiracy is common to all potential plaintiffs despite their individual tastes and preferences. An alleged conspiracy to fix the price which was charged is the unifying force and the predominant, overriding question.

Is Evidence of Impact and Damage Common to The Class?

The food distributors contend that as a result of agreements to establish and adhere to minimum prices for certain catfish products, the prices which the processors charged were artificially high and at noncompetitive levels. Therefore, each plaintiff experienced the impact of the same type of injury by paying more for catfish products than what would have existed in a truly competitive environment. Plaintiffs allege that a consequence [*1041] of the alleged conspiracy is that the artificial minimum price became the benchmark from which catfish prices were negotiated or discounted. See In re Domestic Air Transp., 137 F.R.D. 677, 689 (N.D. Ga. 1991) [73] (inflated fares resulted in artificial "base" price which became benchmark for discounted or negotiated fares); Hedges Enterprises, Inc. v. Continental Group, Inc., 81 F.R.D. 461, 475 (E.D. Pa. 1979) (despite negotiated or discounted prices, artificial minimum became "base" price). In an illegal price fixing scheme, there is a presumption that all purchasers will be impacted/injured by having to pay the higher price. In re Alcoholic Beverages Litig., 95 F.R.D. 321, 327 (E.D. N.Y. 1982); In re Cement and Concrete Antitrust Litig., 1979-1 Trade Cases para. 62,502 (D. Ariz. 1979); In re Plywood Antitrust Litig., 76 F.R.D. 570, 584 (E.D. La. 1976); In re Master Key Antitrust Litig., 528 F.2d 5, 12 n11 (2d Cir. 1975).

As a result of statistical analyses performed on computerized pride data furnished by the defendants, Dr. John C. Beyer, plaintiffs' expert economist, concluded that there is a structure to prices in the catfish processing industry. According to Dr. Beyer, catfish product prices are strongly related to one another [74] over time, and there is a strong correlation between product prices and the prices of live fish, sometimes referred to as the "bank price."

A correlation coefficient is a statistical measure of the degree of association between two variables. The closer the coefficient is to one (1), the variables are more strongly related and reflect a stronger systematic relationship. [25] In his second affidavit, Dr. Beyer responded to criticism from defendants' economists (Glassman and Rausser) and explained his findings with regard to stable, systematic relationships of catfish product prices to the prices of live fish:

> 22. The extensive body of computerized price data that defendants recently provided demonstrates that there is a structure to prices in the catfish processing industry, that catfish product prices are strongly related to one another over time, and that catfish product prices have strong, stable, and mutually consistent relationships to the price of live fish. There is similarity rather than diversity among the catfish prices analyzed by Mr. Glassman and Dr. Rausser.
>
> * * *
>
> 24. Chart A on the following page, utilizing Mr. Glassman's average monthly prices for Delta Pride, [75] portrays the very stable relationship between the price of live fish and the price of fresh shank fillet and fresh whole catfish. From the earliest currently available data (April 1985) to the most recent (May 1992), a span of remanded to the district court to allow plaintiffs an opportunity to establish the proper predicate of predominance of common questions over individual issues. Blue Bird, 573 F.2d at 323.

---

[25] Beyer Affidavit, para. 23 [fn 30].

over seven years, shank fillet has remained a stable $ 2.00 per pound above the price of live fish, and processed whole fish has remained a stable $ 1.00 per pound above the price of live fish. Of course, the margins are seldom exactly $ 2.00 and $ 1.00; the relationship in average monthly prices varies from month to month. However, this month-to-month variation does not obscure the true underlying relationship among the prices--a stable relationship for more than seven years. There is a strong correlation (.91) between the price of live fish and the price of fresh whole fish, and there is also a strong correlation (.90) between the price of live fish and the price of fresh shank fillet.
25. The same stable relationship between live fish and fresh whole catfish and fresh shank fillet is also reflected in Country Skillet prices, as shown in Chart B. These relationships hold true no matter what scale is used for these charts.

26. As shown in Chart C, [76] the correlation between live fish and frozen whole catfish is .91, and the correlation between live fish and frozen shank fillet is .88. The relationships between fresh and frozen whole and shank prices to one another and to live fish prices are thus mutually consistent and stable.

In the court's opinion, Dr. Beyer's expert conclusion is significantly buttressed by the non-expert statements of Mr. Gidden and Mr. Glover. In his affidavit, Mr. Glover, [*1042] President of Southern Pride, stated that the rule of thumb for pricing processed catfish is that whole fresh catfish is priced at $ 1.00 per pound over the bank price, and filets are priced at $ 2.00 per pound over the bank price. In the affidavit of William Gidden, President of Magnolia Processing, Mr. Gidden described some of the methods of the alleged price fixing scheme:

[. . .] The prices stated were per pound prices for different products, such as fillets, strips, steaks, nuggets and whole fish. The prices and [77] effective date were agreed upon by those present. I did not participate in any of the discussions about prices, but merely listened and observed. I don't remember specifically what prices were agreed upon, and I don't know how they were arrived at. I did hear later about a rule of thumb that prices for processed catfish should generally be the live bank price plus one dollar for whole fish and the live bank price plus two dollars for fillets.

Whether or not Dr. Beyer is correct in his assessment of common impact/injury is for the trier of fact to decide at the proper time. In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litig., 916 F.2d 829, 858 (3d Cir. 1990); In re Domestic Air Transp. Litig., 137 F.R.D. 677, 692 (N.D. Ga. 1991). For now, the court is persuaded that for the purposes of a class certification motion, plaintiffs have made a threshold showing that a price fixing conspiracy in the catfish processing industry, if proven, would have had a common impact for members of the proposed class. The court rejects the defendants' assertions that the catfish processing industry is too diverse, too complex, and too fragmented to effectively [78] devise and implement a price fixing scheme. [26] Such an assertion flies in the face of common sense and the empirical data and analysis presented by Dr. Beyer. The court reaches this conclusion after a meticulous review of the affidavits of the expert economists, their charts, explanations of economic behavior of catfish pricing, the non-expert affidavits of Glover and Gidden, and the arguments of counsel as submitted in their briefs.

[79] Measure of Damages

HN21[] The court's role at the class certification stage in assessing the proposed methods of proving damages is quite limited. The preliminary inquiry is whether or not the proposed methods are so insubstantial that they amount to no method at all. In re Industrial Gas Antitrust Litig., 100 F.R.D. 280, 306 (N.D. Ill. 1983). Furthermore, HN22[] it is generally recognized that some relaxation of the plaintiff's burden of proving damages is tolerated once an antitrust violation and resulting damages have been established. Graphic Products Distributors v. Itek Corp., 717 F.2d 1560, 1579 (11th Cir. 1983); In re Plywood Antitrust Litig., 655 F.2d 627, 635 (5th Cir. 1981); Malcolm v. Marathon Oil Co., 642 F.2d 845, 858 (5th Cir. 1981); Hobart Bros. Co. v. Malcolm T. Gilliland, Inc., 471 F.2d 894, 903 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 412 U.S. 923, 37 L. Ed. 2d 150, 93 S. Ct. 2736. The relaxation for the standard of proof in an antitrust case is a logical and natural result of a willingness to accept some measure of uncertainty due [80] to the difficulty of ascertaining business damages. J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 566-67, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969); Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 66 S. Ct. 574, 579, 90 L. Ed. 652 (1946). Obviously, certain knowledge of what plaintiff's position would have been in the absence of defendant's antitrust violation is never known. J. Truett Payne Co., 451 U.S. at 566-67, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981). Hence, the willingness to accept some uncertainty stems [*1043] from a simple, equitable notion that the wrongdoer should not be allowed to profit by an insistence upon an unattainable standard of proof.

[26] For one example, a number of theories are offered regarding the impact of a price fixing scheme wherein Delta Pride is allegedly a major participant. Since Delta Pride is a farmer-owned cooperative with a large share of the catfish market, Delta Pride is able to return profits from inflated prices to the member producers in the form of patronage rebates. Hence, defendants claim that Delta Pride's objectives in a price fixing scheme would be different from the remaining defendants which are corporations motivated by the profit margin. The obvious difference exists in who "shares the wealth" as a result of inflated, artificial price levels. In the court's view, this distinction is of no significant consequence. In the plaintiffs' consolidated complaint, it is alleged that the price fixing conspiracy in the catfish food chain existed in the processor-distributor link, not producer-processor.

In his first affidavit, Dr. Beyer explains that the measurement of damages involves a two step process. First, the amount of a percentage overcharge must be determined by which [81] prices were artificially inflated because of the anticompetitive behavior. The second step is merely an arithmetical process in which the overcharge is applied to the class member's purchases. In order to determine the percentage overcharge in the first step, a benchmark price must be identified. The benchmark price is an estimation of what the price would have been absent the price fixing scheme, and Dr. Beyer explains three methods which might be used in determining a benchmark price and percentage overcharge.

> 37. One such approach would involve identifying a base catfish price during a period after the time the alleged conspiracy was affecting defendants' prices (if such a non-conspiracy period is determined to exist). Such an approach would use this base price to estimate processed catfish prices over time by applying various measures of the rates of defendants' cost changes and indices of other changes affecting prices that actually occurred over the damage period. Statistical techniques can be used to isolate the effects of various influences on price, thereby allowing a determination of the impact of any one of the variables, including in this case, the impact of the [82] conspiracy. This approach was used successfully in a class-action antitrust matter involving corrugated containers.
> 38. A second approach would involve a study of individual catfish processing firm or industry profitability, and a determination of the rates of profit that would have existed absent the conspiracy, perhaps by way of comparison to similar industries. As noted above, however, care would have to be taken to ensure proper accounting of catfish profitability, allowing for the transfer of profits from processors to the catfish farmers via live fish prices.
> 39. A third approach would involve an econometric analysis of defendants' prices during the conspiracy--an analysis of how and why prices changed over time. Such insight may provide the ability to develop a benchmark of the price that would have existed for catfish products absent the alleged conspiracy. Some econometric studies of catfish pricing practices have already been conducted. . . .

Beyer Affidavit, No. 1.

The proposed methods for determining damages, in the event that liability is established and the determination of damages is necessary, is not so insubstantial and illusive as to amount to no method [83] at all. See In re Industrial Gas Antitrust Litig., 100 F.R.D. 280, 306 (N.D. Ill. 1983). As noted above, it is recognized that the calculation of business damages necessarily involves some acceptable retrospective estimations of what market behavior would have been, absent certain factors. While the calculation of damages may not be as simple as plaintiffs suggest, the court also doubts that the task would be as impossible as defendants assert. In any event, the approaches suggested by Dr. Beyer appear to be methods which were deemed acceptable in other antitrust litigation. See In re Wirebound Boxes Antitrust Litig., 128 F.R.D. 268, 272 (D. Minn. 1989); In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 80 F.R.D. 244, 251 (S.D. Tex. 1978).

While an appropriate method for calculating damages may exist, the court also recognizes the obvious. That is, damage amounts are individualized and will vary among plaintiffs. Nonetheless, individual questions of damages are often encountered in antitrust actions, and they are rarely a barrier to certification. In re Workers'

Compensation, 130 F.R.D. 99, 110 (D. Minn. 1990). [84] Separate mini-trials, the assistance of a special master, or some later stratification of the class may be utilized to help resolve the issue of damages. Id. The difficulties or challenges which may face the court in the damages phase of this litigation, should it proceed that far, are frail obstacles to certification when measured against the substantial benefits of judicial economy achieved by class treatment of the predominating, common issues. The [*1044] obstacle of individual damage assessments was placed in its proper perspective by the district court in Shelter Realty.

> Finally, defendants contend that the question of damages will require individualized proof by absent class members, and that this is in itself sufficient to preclude class treatment. This point proceeds from the familiar proposition that proof of damages is part of the private antitrust plaintiff's cause of action. See, e. g., Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 and n.9 (1969). But the conclusion outruns the premise. If defendants' argument were uncritically accepted, there would [85] be little if any place for the class action device in the adjudication of antitrust claims. Such a result should not be and has not been readily embraced by the various courts confronted with the same argument. See, e. g., In re Sugar Industry Antitrust Litigation, supra, at p. 70,559. Cf. Green v. Wolf Corporation, 406 F.2d 291, 301 (2d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 977, 89 S. Ct. 2131, 23 L. Ed. 2d 766 (1969). The predominance requirement calls only for predominance, not exclusivity, of common questions.

Shelter Realty Corp. v. Allied Maintenance Corp., 75 F.R.D. 34, 37 (S.D. N.Y. 1977). See In re Fine Paper Antitrust Litig., 82 F.R.D. 143, 154 (E.D. Pa. 1979) (issue of individual damages should not preclude class treatment where common issues of liability predominate).

Fraudulent Concealment

Finally, the defendants argue that the fraudulent concealment issue would require individual proof from various class members, particularly with regard to the due diligence efforts set forth by each. The undersigned does [86] not agree. Rather than demanding individualized proof of actions by various class members, the court perceives that questions common to the class would predominate the analysis of fraudulent concealment in determining the applicable statute of limitations. For example, any evidence of acts of concealment would be common to the class. Additionally, circumstances which would trigger the duty of due diligence would appear to be applicable to the class of food distributors who purchased catfish products from the processors. However, should events unfold to indicate that certain plaintiffs would fall subject to statutes of limitations not faced by other plaintiffs, then such differences can be ironed out in the separate proceedings to determine damages, if necessary. See In re Plywood Antitrust Litig., 76 F.R.D. 570, 586 (E.D. La. 1976) (individualized aspects of statute of limitations can be adjudicated in same fashion and same time as individual damages). The court's finding that common issues would predominate over any individual considerations of fraudulent concealment is in accord with the great weight of authority which has considered the same [87] question. Town of New Castle v. Yonkers Contracting Co., 131 F.R.D. 38, 43 (S.D. N.Y. 1990) (common questions pervade fraudulent concealment inquiry); In re Wirebound Box Antitrust Litig., 128 F.R.D. 262, 272 (D. Minn. 1989) (same); Fisher Bros. v. Mueller Brass Co., 102 F.R.D. 570, 579 (E.D. Pa. 1984)(same); In re Screws Antitrust Litig., 1981-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) para. 64,211 at p. 73,812 (D. Mass. 1981) (same); In re Glassine and Greaseproof Paper Antitrust Litig., 88 F.R.D. 302, 307 (E.D. Pa. 1980) (same); In re Fine Paper Antitrust Litig., 82 F.R.D. 143, 154-55 (E.D. Pa. 1979) (same); In re Independent Gasoline Antitrust Litig., 79 F.R.D. 552, 559 (D. MD. 1978) (same).

HN23[] In addition to the predominance of common questions, Rule 23(b)(3) certification calls upon the court to consider the manageability of a class action and whether or not the class action is superior to other methods of adjudication. F.R.C.P. 23(b)(3). Once it is determined that common issues predominate, [88] then considerations of class management and the advantages of class treatment should fall into their logical place. Nonetheless, all should be advised that the undersigned has considered the "superiority" and "manageability" of class treatment, and only a few additional comments should suffice in this regard.

In light of the large number of potential class members and the strong predominance of common issues, the court concludes, without reservation, that the class action is superior [*1045] to other methods of adjudication. [27] The court is convinced that individual actions by claimants would impose a strangling harness on the judiciary, as well as the parties. Separate actions would produce considerable duplication of effort, increase the cost of litigation, create the risk of inconsistent results for parties who are similarly situated, and consume judicial resources to wasteful levels (through duplication) throughout the country. Furthermore, the court is counseled by the possibility that potential claimants with small claims, which would not justify the cost of individual litigation, would simply abandon their claims altogether. The court perceives that the difficulties which may [89] be encountered in the manageability department will be--well--manageable. As noted above, if the litigation proceeds to the stage where individual damage assessment is necessary, then the court will employ reasonable means and methods to streamline individual interests so that notions of judicial economy are well served. In any event, the management of individual interests which may arise are an acceptable trade-off and are not particularly compelling when compared to the advantages of consolidated treatment of common issues of liability.

In conclusion, the court will issue an appropriate order certifying the class as proposed in the plaintiffs' consolidated motion for class certification. Should adjustments or modifications of the class prove necessary, [90] then the court will, in due course, issue such necessary orders as to best achieve the purposes of Rule 23. HN24[] "An order under this subdivision may be conditional, and may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits." F.R.C.P. 23(c)(1). [28] Initial certifications of class actions are not set in stone, and the rules fully contemplate that as discovery progresses and the parties exchange knowledge within their possession, some tailoring may be necessary. [29] 7B Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Fed. Prac. and Proc. § 1791 (1986). "The act of refining a class definition is a natural outcome of federal class action practice." In re Domestic Air Transp. Litig., 137 F.R.D. 677, 683 n.5 (N.D. Ga. 1991).

[91] Rule 23(b)(2) Certification

Plaintiffs have also moved for Rule 23(b)(2) certification which is designed to pave the way for class certification where equitable, injunctive relief is sought with respect to the class.

> (b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:
>
> * * *
>
> (2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or
>
> * * *

F.R.C.P. 23(b)(2).

In their prayer for relief, plaintiffs have included a demand for equitable relief in addition to their demand for treble damages; and, plaintiffs allege that the demand for equitable relief is an "integral part of the relief for the proposed class." Despite the asserted importance of the demand for injunctive relief, plaintiffs devote less than one page to 23(b)(2) certification in a fifty page brief which they have submitted to the court. Likewise, defendants spend only one paragraph in arguing against 23(b)(2) certification. Therefore, [92] the court cannot help but wonder how "integral" certification for injunctive relief might be in this litigation. In any event, the court will also certify the proposed class pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2) for final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to

---

[27] The court also considers that the majority of the individual actions as listed in footnote two were filed in this district, and it appears that key events which will be in issue are alleged to have taken place in this district. See F.R.C.P. 23(b)(3)(A-D).

[28] See F.R.C.P. 23(c)(4) & 23(d).

[29] For example, the exact dates of the alleged conspiracy are unknown. Plaintiffs allege that the conspiracy began "at least as early as 1981" and continued "through at least 1990, the exact dates being unknown to plaintiffs . . . ."

the class as a [*1046] whole. In doing so, the court recognizes that in the past, certification under 23(b)(2) was not deemed appropriate where treble money damages under the Clayton Act was the primary relief sought. See Wilcox Development Co. v. First Interstate Bank of Oregon, 97 F.R.D. 440, 446 (D. Or. 1983); Krehl v. Baskin Robbins Ice Cream Co., 78 F.R.D. 108, 117 (C.D. Cal. 1978). However, more recent trends in Rule 23(b)(2) utilization appear to favor a broader application of equitable relief certification; and, 23(b)(2) certification has been ordered where the primary relief sought was clearly money damages pursuant to 23(b)(3). See In re Domestic Air Transp. Litig., 137 F.R.D. 677, 696 (N.D. Ga. 1991); Northwestern Fruit Co. v. A. Levy & J. Zentner Co., 116 F.R.D. 384, 388 (E.D. Cal. 1986). [93]

Catfish processing is a relatively young industry in this country. The plaintiffs have alleged the existence of a price fixing conspiracy which, if true, began with the inception of this industry and has lasted until recently. To say the least, the existence of an illegal antitrust conspiracy in this new industry would be met with extreme disappointment. Hence, it is this fact which counsels the court that 23(b)(2) certification would present no harm or hardship on the industry.

Conclusion

In summary, the motions to dismiss which were filed by the individual defendants will be denied based on the reasons stated in this memorandum opinion. Furthermore, the plaintiffs' consolidated motion for class certification will be granted. The court, pursuant to F.R.C.P. 23(a) and 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3), finds that this litigation meets the requisites for class certification and class treatment. In accord with the spirit of Rule 23 and the necessity of effective class management, the court is available to the parties, of course, to review any proceedings and to issue appropriate orders which the court deems in the best interest of the litigation. Regarding the notice provisions of [94] Rule 23(c)(2) in light of 23(b)(3) certification, the parties will find an order from the court which accompanies this memorandum opinion. As explained in the order, the court expects recommendations from the parties regarding the content, timing, and method of providing effective notice to potential class members. Accompanying this memorandum opinion, the court will issue appropriate orders to address the pending motions which are consistent with this memorandum opinion and any other procedural matters that might need attention.

THIS 28th day of June, 1993.

Glen H. Davidson

United States District Judge

United States v. Rubin

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

March 31, 1993, Argued ; June 30, 1993, Decided

Nos. 93-1076, 93-1077

Reporter

999 F.2d 194 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 16080 ; 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,290

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. IRVING RUBIN, ROBERT BONCZYK, and JAMES HEFFERNAN, Defendants-Appellants.

Subsequent History: As Amended August 25, 1993.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 91 CR 44. George W. Lindberg, Judge.

Core Terms

Guideline, mail fraud, sentencing, price-fixing, counts, district court, drums, steel, conspiracy, Offenses, prices, conceal, price list, indictment, Antitrust, violations, convicted, aptly, defendants', analogy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Penalties

HN1[] Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

In sentencing a defendant, a district court must determine the offense guideline section in Chapter Two (Offense Conduct) most applicable to the offense of conviction (i.e., the offense conduct charged in the count of the indictment or information of which the defendant was convicted). U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 1B1.2(a) (1989).

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Penalties

HN2[] Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

A defendant convicted of mail fraud can be sentenced under a different U.S. Sentencing Guideline if the conduct comprising the mail fraud is "more aptly" punished under another U.S. Sentencing Guideline, even one not listed in the Statutory Index for the convicted offense.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Ranges

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > General Overview

HN3[] Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

U.S. Sentencing Guideline Manual commentary that interprets or explains a guideline is authoritative unless it violates the U.S. Const. or a federal statute, or is inconsistent with, or a plainly erroneous reading of, the guideline. In particular, Commentary which functions to interpret a guideline or explain how it is to be applied controls, and if failure to follow, or a misreading of, such commentary results in a sentence selected from the wrong guideline range, that sentence would constitute an incorrect application of the sentencing guidelines under 18 U.S.C.S. § 3742 (f)(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4[] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

It is true of any price-fixing conspiracy that it must remain concealed to be successful. Because price-fixing is illegal, public knowledge of the activity usually ends the agreement. This deceptive aspect of the conspiracy is intended solely to cover up the illegal act.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN5[] Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

See U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2C1.7(c)(4).

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Penalties

HN6[] Sentencing, Sentencing Guidelines

In the Statutory Index to the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual and to the current U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual (Manual), Manual §§ 2C1.7 and 2F1.1 are the only two Guideline sections noted under violations of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341 (Mail Fraud).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN7[] Fraud Against the Government, Mail Fraud

Where the alleged fraud consists solely of the concealment of a more specific crime--and where such concealment is inherent in the nature of the crime--then under either U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2C1.7(c)(4) or Application Note 13 the court should apply the guideline relating to the underlying offense.

Counsel: For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff-Appellee: Fred Foreman, USA, 312/353-5300, Room 1500, OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, Criminal Division, 219 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, IL 60604, USA. Barry R. Elden, AUSA, 312/353-3540, OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, Criminal Receiving, Appellate Division, 219 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago, IL 60604, USA. John J. Powers, III, FTS 633-2414, 202/633-2414, Room 3224, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Antitrust Division, Appellate Section, 9th & Pennsylvania Avenue N.W., Washington, DC 20530, USA. Nancy C. Garrison, FTS 368-1531, 202/514-1531, Room 3224, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Antitrust Division, Appellate Section, 10th & Pennsylvania Avenue N.W., Washington, DC 20530, USA.

For IRVING RUBIN, Defendant-Appellant: James R. Ferguson, 312/876-8000, SONNENSCHEIN, NATH & ROSENTHAL, 233 S. Wacker Drive, 8000 Sears Tower, Chicago, IL 60606, USA. Gregory C. Jones, 312/704-7700, Suite 3600, Jay R. Hoffman, 312/704-7700, [2] Suite 3600, GRIPPO & ELDEN, 227 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, IL 60606, USA. For ROBERT BONCZYK, Defendant-Appellant: Gregory C. Jones, 312/704-7700, Suite 3600, Jay R. Hoffman, 312/704-7700, Suite 3600, GRIPPO & ELDEN, 227 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, IL 60606, USA. For JAMES P. HEFFERNAN, Defendant-Appellant: James R. Ferguson, 312/876-8000, SONNENSCHEIN, NATH & ROSENTHAL, 233 S. Wacker Drive, 8000 Sears Tower, Chicago, IL 60606, USA. Robert M. Stephenson, 312/263-0345, Theodore T. Poulos, AUSA, 312/263-0345, COTSIRILOS, STEPHENSON, TIGHE & STREICKER, 33 N. Dearborn Street, Chicago, IL 60602, USA. George Murtaugh, Jr., 312/781-0940, 100 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, IL 60603, USA.

Judges: Before CUDAHY, MANION, and TIMBERS, [*] Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: MANION

Opinion

[*194] MANION, Circuit Judge.

The United States of America ("government") charged Irving Rubin, Robert Bonczyk, and James Heffernan ("defendants") with one count of criminal antitrust conspiracy under 15 U.S.C. § 1 for fixing the prices of new steel drums used to store liquid products and with two counts [3] of mail fraud under [*195] 18 U.S.C. § 1341 for concealing and making false statements to cover their collusion. The district court determined that Sentencing Guidelines section 2R1.1 ("Antitrust Offenses") applied to the price-fixing count and that section 2F1.1 ("Offenses Involving Fraud or Deceit") applied to the mail fraud counts. After grouping the offenses, the district court sentenced the defendants under section 2F1.1, which gave them a greater penalty than they would have received had the court applied section 2R1.1 to each of the three counts. On appeal, the defendants challenge only the court's application of section 2F1.1 to their mail fraud counts. We vacate the sentences and remand for further sentencing consistent with this opinion.

[*] Hon. William H. Timbers of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit is sitting by designation.

I. Background

The defendants worked in the steel drum manufacturing business. The drums the defendants manufactured were used mainly for the packaging of chemical and petroleum products. The drums ranged in size from thirteen to fifty-seven gallons. Rubin was Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Container Products, Inc., and Bonczyk was its Executive Vice President. Heffernan was Vice President [4] of Sales and Marketing of Astro Container Company.

In a superseding indictment, the government charged the defendants and others with one count of criminal price-fixing and with two counts of mail fraud. In count one, the government charged the defendants with entering into and engaging in "a combination and conspiracy . . . to suppress competition by fixing prices of new steel drums offered for sale to customers in Ohio, Michigan, western New York, western Pennsylvania, and West Virginia" (the "East Central Region"). This conspiracy to fix prices began in October 1988 and lasted through March 1990. To form and execute their conspiracy, the government charged that the defendants, among other things:

(a) agreed to increase prices of new steel drums;
(b) agreed to adopt published list prices for new steel drums;
(c) exchanged with one another price lists and other price information;
(d) issued price announcements, price lists, bids and quotations in accordance with agreements reached;

(e) met in a Holiday Inn in the Cleveland, Ohio area on or about December 21, 1988, at a Radisson Hotel in the Columbus, Ohio area on or about January 26, 1989, at the Union League Club [5] in Chicago, Illinois on or about February 10, 1989, and elsewhere and at other times, for the purpose of discussing and agreeing upon prices and price lists for new steel drums;
(f) telephoned or otherwise contacted one another to discuss, agree upon, and convey agreements regarding prices, price lists, bids and quotations for new steel drums, and to implement and police such agreements; and
(g) organized and maintained a trade association known as the Midwest Steel Drum Manufacturer's Association for the purpose of promoting, facilitating, policing, concealing, covering-up, and otherwise furthering, aiding and abetting the aforesaid combination and conspiracy.

In counts two and three, the government charged the defendants with devising, intending to devise, and participating "in a scheme and artifice to defraud purchasers of new steel drums offered for sale [in the East Central Region] and to obtain money and property from such purchasers, by means of false and fraudulent pretenses and representations." The government charged that part of the defendants' scheme and artifice to defraud was to engage in the same type of conduct, enumerated above as (a) through (g), that they [6] had engaged in their price-fixing scheme. The government further charged that the defendants and their co-schemers "made false statements and representations to purchasers of new steel drums in the East Central Region, and failed to inform such purchasers, about the noncompetitive and collusive nature of prices, price lists, bids and quotations for new steel drums." Lastly, the government charged that the defendants and their co-schemers knowingly caused to be mailed a price list to a customer and one to another co-schemer.

[*196] Rubin and Bonczyk pleaded guilty to all counts. Heffernan went to trial, and the jury found him guilty as charged. The defendants do not appeal their convictions or the application of section 2R1.1 to count one. They appeal only their sentences under the two counts for mail fraud.

At the sentencing hearing, the defendants argued that the district court should apply the Antitrust Offenses Guideline, section 2R1.1, to their mail fraud counts, rather than the Fraud or Deceit Guideline, section 2F1.1, because the conduct involved in the mail fraud counts was incidental to the price-fixing and designed to conceal their conspiracy. Relying on Application Note 13 to section [7] 2F1.1, the defendants argued that because the underlying conduct in the mail fraud counts essentially dealt with their anticompetitive scheme, section 2R1.1, and not section 2F1.1, "more aptly" applied to their underlying conduct. In contrast, the government argued chiefly that the Sentencing Guidelines as a whole and Application Note 13 required the district court to apply the Guideline section that covered the more serious offense committed. Because mail fraud is a more serious offense than price-fixing, the government asserted that the district court should apply section 2F1.1 because it yielded a higher offense level and a greater sentence. The district court agreed with the government's analysis of the issue. The court concluded that the defendants committed a price-fixing violation and two mail fraud violations. It applied section 2R1.1 to the price-fixing count and section 2F1.1 to the mail fraud counts. After grouping the counts, the court sentenced the defendants under section 2F1.1, not section 2R1.1. Section 2F1.1 provided a greater term of imprisonment than did section 2R1.1.

II. Analysis

On appeal, the government has abandoned for the most part the main argument it made [8] to the district court at sentencing that, in selecting the appropriate Guideline, the court should apply the Guideline that resulted in the "more onerous" sentence; the district court relied on that argument in reaching its sentencing decision. The government now agrees with the defendants that the sole issue on appeal is whether the district court erred in applying the Fraud and Deceit Guideline, section 2F1.1, instead of utilizing Application Note 13 and applying the Antitrust Offenses Guideline, section 2R1.1, to the conduct with which the government charged the defendants in counts two and three of the indictment. We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291 to consider this issue.

HN1[] In sentencing a defendant, a district court must "determine the offense guideline section in Chapter Two (Offense Conduct) most applicable to the offense of conviction (i.e., the offense conduct charged in the count of the indictment or information of which the defendant was convicted)." United States Sentencing Commission, Guidelines Manual, § 1B1.2(a) (Nov. 1989) ("U.S.S.G.") (emphasis added). In this case, the defendants were convicted of two counts [9] of violating 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (Mail Fraud). The Statutory Index to the 1989 Guidelines (the Guidelines under which the district court sentenced the defendants) listed only one Guideline provision as applicable to the offense of violating section 1341: section 2F1.1 for "Offenses Involving Fraud or Deceit." U.S.S.G. App. A at A.12 (Nov. 1989). Although the Guideline listed in the Statutory Index is ordinarily applied at sentencing, id. App. A, intro. (Nov. 1989), Application Note 13 to section 2F1.1 states that if the indictment "establishes an offense more aptly covered by another guideline, apply that guideline rather than § 2F1.1." Id. § 2F1.1, comment. (n.13) (Nov. 1989) (emphasis added). [1] Thus, according to Application [*197] Note 13, HN2[] a defendant convicted of mail fraud can be sentenced under a different Guideline if the conduct comprising the mail fraud is "more aptly" punished under another Guideline, even one not listed in the Statutory Index for the convicted offense. Cf. United States v. Carrillo-Hernandez, 963 F.2d 1316, 1317-18 (9th Cir. 1992) (applying Application Note 13); United States v. Castaneda-Gallardo, 951 F.2d 1451, 1452-53 [10] (5th Cir.) (same), cert. denied, 118 L. Ed. 2d 587, 112 S. Ct. 1990 (1992); United States v. Obiuwevbi, 962 F.2d 1236, 1242 (7th Cir. 1992) (same).

---

[1] Application Note 13 states in full:

> Sometimes, offenses involving fraudulent statements are prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. § 1001, or a similarly general statute, although the offense is also covered by a more specific statute. Examples include false entries regarding currency transactions, for which § 2S1.3 would be more apt, and false statements to a customs officer, for which § 2T3.1 likely would be more apt. In certain other cases, the mail or wire fraud statutes, or other relatively broad statutes, are used primarily as jurisdictional bases for the prosecution of other offenses. For example, a state arson offense where a fraudulent insurance claim was mailed might be prosecuted as mail fraud. Where the indictment or information setting forth the count of conviction (or a stipulation as described in § 1B1.2(a)) establishes an offense more aptly covered by another guideline, apply that guideline rather than § 2F1.1. Otherwise, in such cases, § 2F1.1 is to be applied, but a departure from the guidelines may be considered.

United States Sentencing Commission, Guidelines Manual, § 2F1.1, comment. (n.13) (Nov. 1989) ("U.S.S.G.") (emphasis added). Application Note 13 conveys the Sentencing Commission's recognition that the broad nature of such general fraud statutes as 18 U.S.C. § 1001 (False Statements) and 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (Mail Fraud) sometimes apply to offense conduct that "is also covered by a more specific statute." Id.

[11] Until recently, the authoritative weight a court needed to give the commentary to the Guidelines was disputed among the various courts of appeals. Unlike some other circuits, we recognized that "application notes are entitled to substantial weight and should be followed unless they conflict with the text" of the Guidelines. United States v. Woods, 976 F.2d 1096, 1102 (7th Cir. 1992) (citations omitted). The United States Supreme Court has now resolved the conflict among the circuits: HN3[] Guideline commentary "that interprets or explains a guideline is authoritative unless it violates the Constitution or a federal statute, or is inconsistent with, or a plainly erroneous reading of, the guideline." Stinson v. United States, 123 L. Ed. 2d 598, 113 S. Ct. 1913, 1915 (1993). In particular,

> Commentary which functions to "interpret [a] guideline or explain how it is to be applied" controls, and if failure to follow, or a misreading of, such commentary results in a sentence "selected . . . from the wrong guideline range," that sentence would constitute "an incorrect application of the sentencing guidelines" under 18 U.S.C. § 3742 [12] (f)(1).

Id. at 1917-18 (citations omitted). What has remained unchanged is that a "district court's determination of which Guideline section to apply is a question of law we review de novo." United States v. Johnson, 965 F.2d 460, 468 (7th Cir. 1992).

Based on the authoritative nature of Application Note 13, we determine that although the district court properly selected the Fraud and Deceit Guideline, section 2F1.1, from the Statutory Index, it erred in not applying the Antitrust Offenses Guideline, section 2R1.1, which more aptly covers the conduct with which the government charged the defendants in counts two and three of the indictment. Even though the defendants pleaded guilty, or were convicted, of mail fraud under counts two and three, the defendants' fraud in those two counts was designed to conceal and further their price-fixing scheme. The mail fraud was not separable from the price-fixing conspiracy as it would have been, for example, had the defendants made fraudulent statements in letters concerning the quality or capacity of the new steel drums. In this case, the line between price-fixing and mail fraud is blurred [13] because the government charged the defendants with almost the identical conduct in all three counts. Specifically, the government charged the defendants in the price-fixing count with, among other things, issuing price lists to customers, exchanging price lists with each other, and taking steps to cover-up and conceal their price-fixing scheme. These charges are reflected almost identically in the two mail fraud counts.

The intent of the defendants was to fix prices. The nature of their price-fixing scheme was to set a price for the new steel drums, to sell the new steel drums at that fixed price, and to keep secret their agreement to fix those prices. To achieve those ends, the defendants had to advertise their prices--hence the mailings--and had to conceal their collusion--hence the misrepresentations. As the Supreme Court has noted in [*198] the past: "For every conspiracy is by its very nature secret; a case can hardly be supposed where men concert together for crime and advertise their purpose to the world. And again, every conspiracy will inevitably be followed by actions taken to cover the conspirators' traces." Grunewald v. United States, 353 U.S. 391, 402, 1 L. Ed. 2d 931, 77 S. Ct. 963 (1957); [14] see also Texas v. Allan Constr. Co., 851 F.2d 1526, 1530-31 (5th Cir. 1988) ("HN4[] It is true of any price-fixing conspiracy that 'it must remain concealed to be successful.' Because price-fixing is illegal, public knowledge of the activity usually ends the agreement. This deceptive aspect of the conspiracy is . . . intended solely to 'cover up' the illegal act."); 2 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 325, at 124 (1978) (stating that the participants to most clear-cut pricefixing agreements make elaborate efforts to disguise their activity, which is started and continued outside of the public's view). As such, the mail fraud allegations in this case directly relate to the price-fixing allegations; they are a natural extension of the conspiracy to fix the prices of the new steel drums and are not a separate offense.

In their briefs on appeal and at oral argument, the defendants raised an analogy argument between Application Note 13 and Guidelines section 2C1.7 ("Fraud Involving Deprivation of the Intangible Right to the Honest Services of Public Officials; Conspiracy to Defraud by Interference with Governmental Functions"). U.S.S.G. § 2C1.7 [15] (Nov. 1991). Section 2C1.7 was added to the Guidelines in 1991 after the defendants' offense conduct and does not apply to their charged offenses; the defendants concede that, but raise the argument to further support their position that Application Note 13 should be applied in this case. The government never fully responded to this analogy argument.

HN5[] Section 2C1.7(c)(4) provides: "If the offense is covered more specifically under § 2C1.1 (Offering, Giving, Soliciting, or Receiving a Bribe; Extortion Under Color of Official Right), § 2C1.2 (Offering, Giving, Soliciting, or Receiving a Gratuity), or § 2C1.3 (Conflict of Interest) [than it is under section 2C1.7], apply the offense guideline that most specifically covers the offense." Id. § 2C1.7(c)(4) (Nov. 1991) (emphasis added). HN6[] In the Statutory Index to the 1991 Guidelines and to the current Guidelines, section 2C1.7 and section 2F1.1 are the only two Guideline sections noted under violations of 18 U.S.C. § 1341 (Mail Fraud). Id. App. A at 400 (Nov. 1992); id. App. A at 390 (Nov. 1991). According to the defendants, section 2C1.7(c)(4) adopts for "intangible rights" fraud the same principle that [16] Application Note 13 adopts for all other violations of section 1341.

In advancing their analogy argument, the defendants contend: "HN7[] where the alleged fraud consists solely of the concealment of a more specific crime--and where such concealment is inherent in the nature of the crime--then [under either section 2C1.7(c)(4) or Application Note 13] the court should apply the guideline relating to the underlying offense." We find merit to the analogy argument for two reasons. First, it helps resolve the contention the government makes on appeal that the Antitrust Offenses Guideline, section 2R1.1, cannot apply here because price-fixing and mail fraud have different elements. Under section 2C1.7(c)(4), a district court can apply a more specific Guideline to an "intangible rights" fraud charge, even though the applied Guideline addresses conduct involving elements different from the offense of conviction. Second, the analogy argument helps resolve the assertion the government made at sentencing that the district court should apply the Guideline that produces the "more onerous" sentence. Under section 2C1.7(c)(4), the application of a more specific Guideline may result in a lower sentence [17] than the one imposed for "intangible rights" fraud. Application Note 13 does not preclude a similar result in either of these two situations. [2]

[*199] In sum, we hold that the defendants' mail fraud was directly related to the price-fixing scheme and was not a separate course of conduct. It had no other purpose except to maintain and continue the price-fixing conspiracy. The nature of the conduct charged in counts two and three dealt with price-fixing rather than with mail fraud. Therefore, Application [18] Note 13 requires that the defendants be sentenced under the Antitrust Offenses Guideline, section 2R1.1, and not under the Fraud or Deceit Guideline, section 2F1.1, even though the Statutory Index lists section 2F1.1 as the ordinarily applicable Guideline for offenses under 18 U.S.C. § 1341. U.S.S.G. § 2F1.1, comment. (n.13) (Nov. 1989); see also id. App. A, intro., at A.1 (Nov. 1989) (noting that in atypical cases the Guideline listed in the Statutory Index will be inappropriate because of the particular conduct involved in the underlying offense; in such a case, the district court should "use the guideline section most applicable to the nature of the offense conduct charged in the count of which the defendant was convicted").

We stress that our holding in this case is not a bright-line ruling applicable to all indictments that charge price-fixing and mail fraud. Our focus here has been on this indictment and the acts with which the government charged the defendants. Under a different indictment charging price-fixing and mail fraud, a district court could conceivably consider Application Note 13 and properly determine that section 2F1.1 more aptly [19] covers the conduct charged as mail fraud.

III. Conclusion

The district court erred in applying section 2F1.1 to the mail fraud counts. Section 2R1.1 more aptly covers the type of conduct with which the government charged the defendants in those two counts. Consequently, the defendants' sentences are VACATED, and the matter is REMANDED for resentencing under section 2R1.1.

End of Document

---

[2] We also note the government's reliance on Application Note 5 to Guidelines section 1B1.1: "Where two or more guideline provisions appear equally applicable, but the guidelines authorize the application of only one such provision, use the provision that results in the greater offense level." U.S.S.G. § 1B1.1, comment. (n.5) (Nov. 1989). Application Note 5 does not apply here because § 2R1.1 and § 2F1.1 are not "equally applicable" to the mail fraud counts. In light of Application Note 13, § 2R1.1 applies and § 2F1.1 does not.

Genentech, Inc. v. Eli Lilly & Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit

July 1, 1993, Decided

91-1249

Reporter

998 F.2d 931 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 16127 ; 27 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1241 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,297; 93 Daily Journal DAR 8900

GENENTECH, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. ELI LILLY AND COMPANY, Defendant, and THE REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Defendant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: Petition for Rehearing Denied September 13, 1993, Reported at: 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 23532. Petition for Rehearing Denied and In Banc Suggestion Declined September 23, 1993, Reported at: 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 24768.

Prior History: [1] Appealed from: U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana. Judge McKinney

Disposition: AFFIRMED IN PART, VACATED IN PART, and REMANDED

Core Terms

patent, immunity, declaratory, abrogation, infringement, antitrust, counts, counterclaims, patent infringement, district court, federal court, state immunity, declaratory judgment, state law, recoupment, Public Law, violations, defenses, patent law, declaration, licensing, charges, argues, rights, cases, actual controversy, general rule, waived, state action, first-filed

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN1[] Judgments, Declaratory Judgments

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > Discretionary Jurisdiction

HN2[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The use of the word "may" in the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201, is interpreted as meaning both that the court is authorized to declare legal rights and relations, and that in appropriate circumstances the court may decline to do so. However, the declaratory action is not a permissive action that may be heard or dismissed in absolute judicial discretion. The exercise of discretion in a declaratory judgment must have a basis in sound reason.

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > Appellate Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > Discretionary Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN3[] Federal Declaratory Judgments, Appellate Review

An abuse of discretion under the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201, may occur when the trial court's decision to hear or dismiss an action is based on an incorrect conclusion of law or clearly erroneous findings of fact, is devoid of any evidence in the record upon which the court rationally could have based its decision, or is clearly unreasonable or arbitrary.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Actual Controversy

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Immediacy

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN4[] Case & Controversy Requirements, Actual Controversy

To meet the requirements of the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C.S § 2201, there must be a "case of actual controversy." The case must be of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant declaratory relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Actual Controversy

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

HN5[] Case & Controversy Requirements, Actual Controversy

Determination of whether there is an actual controversy in patent actions generally entails the two part inquiry of (1) whether the declaratory plaintiff has acted in a way that the patentee asserts infringes the patent, or is preparing to act in such a way; and (2) whether the patentee has created, in the declaratory plaintiff, a reasonable apprehension of suit for infringement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Actual Controversy

Patent Law > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN6[] Case & Controversy Requirements, Actual Controversy

When there is an actual controversy and a declaratory judgment would settle the legal relations in dispute and afford relief from uncertainty or insecurity, in the usual circumstance the declaratory action is not subject to dismissal.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN7[] Venue, Multidistrict Litigation

Although the federal circuit applies the procedural law of the regional circuit in matters that are not unique to patent law, and although matters of procedure do not always carry substantive weight, the regional circuit practice need not control when the question is important to national uniformity in patent practice.

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

HN8[] Declaratory Judgments, Federal Declaratory Judgments

When suits are filed in different federal forums, the general rule favors the forum of the first-filed action, whether or not it is a declaratory action. Exceptions, however, are not rare, and are made when justice or expediency requires, as in any issue of choice of forum.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

HN9[] Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

See U.S. Const. amend. XI.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN10[] Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

Without the state's consent a federal court is without power to entertain a suit by a private person against the state.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > Abrogation of Immunity

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN11[] Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

Abrogation of state immunity under U.S. Const. amend. XI must be explicit and unambiguous, and must show clearly that Congress intended to subject the states to suit in federal court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > State Immunity

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > Waiver > Consent

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > Waiver of Immunity

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > Waiver > General Overview

HN12[] State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

A state may waive its immunity under U.S. Const. amend. XI in its entirety or as to any specified agency, action, or event. Waiver by a state can be effected by state statute or state constitution or by clear state conduct.

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN13[] Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

When the purpose of a federal statute is to abrogate a state's immunity from suit, that abrogation must be explicit and unequivocal.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN14[] Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 271(h).

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

HN15[] Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 296.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN16[] Legislation, Interpretation

The words of a statute are deemed to have their plain meaning in the lexicon of the subject matter of the legislation. When the statutory text is clear, when the legislative intent is unmistakable, and when the legislative intent is implemented by the statute, that ends the inquiry.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN17[] Legislation, Interpretation

Only in the rare case, when the literal application of a statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intention of its drafters, should a statute be construed in departure from its plain language.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN18[] State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

A statute must be interpreted to give effect to each of its provisions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN19[] Declaratory Judgments, Federal Declaratory Judgments

A declaratory action neither confers nor constrains jurisdiction or immunity. The Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201, does not provide a substantive right; it provides a procedure whereby an aggrieved person may obtain a declaration of legal rights and relations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN20[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Choice of Law

A court is to apply the law in effect at the time it renders its decision, unless doing so would result in manifest injustice or there is statutory direction or legislative history to the contrary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN21[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN22[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

HN23[] Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

When a state maintains a claim in federal court it thereby consents to the exercise of federal judicial authority over that claim to the full extent required for its complete determination. The principles of federalism underlying U.S. Const. amend. XI do not prevent a person from defending against an action by a state.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Judicial Immunity

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN24[] Pleadings, Counterclaims

When a governmental entity has waived its immunity from federal judicial authority by taking legal action in federal court, the person charged can raise all counterclaims that arise from the same transaction or events.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN25[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Recoupment is an established remedy based on the principle that neither sovereign immunity nor the principles of federalism prevents a private person from raising, in defense and setoff, claims that arise from the same transaction or occurrence on which the state is seeking to recover damages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > Compulsory Counterclaims

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN26[] Counterclaims, Compulsory Counterclaims

A counterclaim must be "compulsory" in order to be raised as of right in an area of law in which the state is otherwise immune from suit. Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > Compulsory Counterclaims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN27[] Counterclaims, Compulsory Counterclaims

A compulsory counterclaim is one that arises out of the same transaction or occurrence as the opposing party's claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Ancillary Jurisdiction

Governments > Native Americans > Authority & Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > Compulsory Counterclaims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

HN28[] Supplemental Jurisdiction, Ancillary Jurisdiction

A compulsory counterclaim is usually within the court's ancillary jurisdiction and an independent basis for federal jurisdiction is not necessary. However, ancillary jurisdiction alone may not override the Eleventh Amendment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

HN29[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The State Action doctrine provides immunity or exemption from federal competition laws when the state is performing official acts, whether or not these acts are anticompetitive in effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Market Participant Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN30[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

To warrant State Action immunity, the anticompetitive acts must be taken in the state's sovereign capacity, and not as a market participant in competition with commercial enterprise. If the allegedly anticompetitive acts are not explicitly ordered by a legislative arm of state government, they must be conducted pursuant to legislative authorization that contemplates such acts.

Counsel: Salem M. Katsh, Weil, Gotshal & Manges, of New York, New York, argued for plaintiff-appellant. With him on the brief were Ira M. Millstein, Howard B. Comet, Edmund J. Fish and Patrick A. Fraioli, Jr. Also on the brief were Hugh E. Reynolds and David T. Kasper, Locke, Reynolds, Boyd & Weisell, of Indianapolis, Indiana.

Thomas D. Nevins, III, Broad, Schulz, Larson & Wineberg, of San Francisco, California, argued for defendant-appellee. With him on the brief was Paula L. Baca. Also on the brief were Allen B. Wagner, Office of the General Counsel to the Regents of the University of California, of Oakland, California and Susan B. Tabler, Ice Miller Donadio & Ryan, of Indianapolis, Indiana.

Judges: Before NEWMAN, Circuit Judge, SKELTON, Senior Circuit Judge, and LOURIE, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: NEWMAN

Opinion

[*1242] [*935] NEWMAN, Circuit Judge.

Genentech, Inc. appeals the judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana [1] dismissing, as to the Regents of the University of California ("the University"), the declaratory judgment action brought by Genentech against [2] the University and Eli Lilly and Company ("Lilly"). We affirm in part, vacate in part and remand for further proceedings.

---

[1] Genentech, Inc. v. Eli Lilly & Co., No. IP 90-1679-C (S.D. Ind. Mar. 7, 1991).

This is one of several lawsuits filed in the federal courts of Indiana and California involving these parties, [2] relating to recombinant DNA technology as used for the production of human growth hormone ("hGH"), a product having medicinal and therapeutic properties. The patent here involved is United States Patent No. 4,363,877 entitled "Recombinant DNA Transfer Vectors", granted December 14, 1982, inventors Howard M. Goodman, John Shine, and Peter H. Seeburg ("the '877 patent"). The patent is owned by the University.

[3] The legal issues raised in this declaratory action relate to the infringement, validity, and enforceability of the '877 patent, and include charges by Genentech of violation of federal antitrust laws and state tort and contract laws based on certain patent licensing arrangements between the University and Lilly. The activities of the University are relevant to a threshold question in this appeal: whether the University, viewed as an arm of the state, is entitled, as to some or all of the charges made by Genentech, to Eleventh Amendment immunity under the Constitution of the United States or to State Action immunity. The University's activities are also relevant to another threshold question: whether the district court properly exercised its discretion in dismissing this declaratory judgment action as to the University.

The district court decided these questions under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) (lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter) and 12(b)(6) (failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted), on motions made by the University following the filing of Genentech's complaint. Therefore the premises and allegations of Genentech's complaint are accepted [4] as true for the purpose of deciding these threshold questions.

Genentech filed this declaratory action against Lilly and the University in the Southern District of Indiana, requesting judicial declaration that the '877 patent is invalid and not infringed. Genentech also sought declaration that the '877 patent is unenforceable for inequitable conduct, Genentech alleging that a Certificate of Correction was obtained through false or misleading representations by the University to the Patent and Trademark Office. Genentech also alleged that a waiver from the Department of Health, Education & Welfare (herein "HEW", now the Department of Health and Human Services), that permitted the University to grant an exclusive license to Lilly, was obtained through false representations to HEW and omissions of fact. Genentech also asserted that certain contractual obligations estopped the University from enforcing [1243] the '877 patent against Genentech. In addition, Genentech raised antitrust and patent misuse counts and state law tort counts as grounds of patent invalidity, unenforceability, and other relief.

The day after Genentech filed this declaratory action the University filed a patent infringement [5] suit against Genentech in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. The University then moved in the Indiana district court to dismiss this declaratory action as to the University. The Indiana court granted the motion on the ground that the suit was barred by the University's immunity and, alternatively, on exercise of the court's discretion to decline to entertain this declaratory action. The suit as to Lilly was not dismissed.

As we shall discuss in Part I, the district court erred in declining to hear this action against the University under the Declaratory Judgment Act. As we shall discuss in Part II, the University is not immune from suit as [*936] to the patent counts and certain other counts of the complaint. Thus, the suit was improperly dismissed under Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6).

I

THE DECLARATORY ACTION

We review first the dismissal under the Declaratory Judgment Act, for if that ruling is sustainable the questions of constitutional and State Action immunity need not be addressed.

The Declaratory Judgment Act provides:

---

[2] Pending litigation, summarized in In re Regents of the University of California, 964 F.2d 1128, 1130-31, 22 USPQ2d 1748, 1750-51 (Fed. Cir. 1992), included five lawsuits.

> 28 U.S.C. § 2201. HN1[] In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, except with [6] respect to Federal taxes . . . , any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and shall be reviewable as such.

HN2[] The use of the word "may" in § 2201 has been interpreted as meaning both that the court is authorized to declare legal rights and relations, and that in appropriate circumstances the court may decline to do so. E.g., Minnesota Mining and Mfg. Co. v. Norton Co., 929 F.2d 670, 672, 18 USPQ2d 1302, 1304 (Fed. Cir. 1991). However, the declaratory action is not a permissive action that may be heard or dismissed in absolute judicial discretion. See 10A Charles A. Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2759, at 655-56 (2d ed. 1983 & Supp. 1992) ("The discretion of the trial court is not absolute and the court cannot refuse to entertain a declaratory judgment action on a whim"); Edwin Borchard, Declaratory Judgments, 293-94 (2d ed. 1941) (although [7] the court is granted discretion, it is "a judicial discretion, hardened by experience into rule, and its exercise is subject to appellate review"). The exercise of discretion in a declaratory judgment must have a basis in sound reason. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc. v. United Artists Corp., 113 F.2d 703, 709 (3d Cir. 1940).

HN3[] An abuse of discretion may occur when the trial court's decision was based on an incorrect conclusion of law or clearly erroneous findings of fact, was devoid of any evidence in the record upon which the court rationally could have based its decision, or was clearly unreasonable or arbitrary. Minnesota Mining, 929 F.2d at 672-73, 18 USPQ2d at 1304-05. See also Charter Financial Sav. Bank v. Office of Thrift Supervision., 976 F.2d 203, 208 n.8 (4th Cir. 1992) (noting that most circuits give plenary review to the question of exercise of jurisdiction in a declaratory action); 6A James W. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice P 57.08[2] at 57-36 (2d ed. 1993) ("The determination of the trial court may, therefore, be reversed where, though not arbitrary or capricious, [8] it was nevertheless erroneous"). Indeed, the district court in this case, although it declined to entertain the declaratory action, did not do so arbitrarily. However, we conclude that it did so incorrectly.

A

The Case of Actual Controversy

HN4[] To meet the requirements of the Declaratory Judgment Act there must be a "case of actual controversy", as the Constitution requires for any invocation of federal judicial authority. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 239-40, 81 L. Ed. 617, 57 S. Ct. 461 (1937). The case must be "of sufficient immediacy and reality" to warrant declaratory relief. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pacific Coal & Oil Co., 312 U.S. 270, 273, 85 L. Ed. 826, 61 S. Ct. 510 (1941).

HN5[] Determination of whether there is an actual controversy in patent actions generally entails the two part inquiry of (1) whether the declaratory plaintiff has acted in a way that the patentee asserts infringes the patent, or is preparing to act in such a way; and (2) whether the patentee has created, in the declaratory plaintiff, a reasonable apprehension of suit for infringement. Arrowhead Indus. Water, Inc. v. Ecolochem, Inc., 846 F.2d 731, [1244] 735-36, 6 USPQ2d 1685, 1688-89 (Fed. Cir. 1988). [9] When the patentee has explicitly charged that a current activity of the [*937] declaratory plaintiff is an infringement, "certainty has rendered apprehension irrelevant, and one need say no more." Id. at 736, 6 USPQ2d at 1689.

The University does not dispute that it charged Genentech with infringement of the '877 patent. Thus the case of actual controversy requirement was met.

B

The Tempco Electric Case

HN6[] When there is an actual controversy and a declaratory judgment would settle the legal relations in dispute and afford relief from uncertainty or insecurity, in the usual circumstance the declaratory action is not subject to dismissal. See Borchard, supra, at 299 (discussing criteria guiding policy in favor of rendering declaratory judgments). In this case the district court based its dismissal as to the University on the subsequent filing of a patent infringement suit by the University. The district court relied on Tempco Electric Heater Corp. v. Omega Engineering, Inc., 819 F.2d 746, 2 USPQ2d 1930 (7th Cir. 1987), which held that an action for declaration of noninfringement of a [10] trademark should give way to a later-filed suit for trademark infringement. The court in Tempco Electric, dismissing the declaratory action, reasoned that the action served no useful purpose because the declaratory defendant soon thereafter filed a trademark infringement suit.

The question of whether a properly brought declaratory action to determine patent rights should yield to a later-filed suit for patent infringement raises the issue of national uniformity in patent cases, and invokes the special obligation of the Federal Circuit to avoid creating opportunities for dispositive differences among the regional circuits. Thus, HN7[] although the Federal Circuit applies the procedural law of the regional circuit in matters that are not unique to patent law, Allen Organ Co. v. Kimball Int'l, Inc., 839 F.2d 1556, 1563, 5 USPQ2d 1769, 1774 (Fed. Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 850, 102 L. Ed. 2d 104, 109 S. Ct. 132 (1988), and although matters of procedure do not always carry substantive weight, the regional circuit practice need not control when the question is important to national uniformity in patent practice. We incidentally take note that the [11] rule of Tempco Electric is not followed for trademark cases in all circuits.

We decline to apply Tempco Electric to patent cases. Such a rule would automatically grant the patentee the choice of forum, whether the patentee had sought -- or sought to avoid -- judicial resolution of the controversy. This shift of relationship between litigants is contrary to the purpose of the Declaratory Judgment Act to enable a person caught in controversy to obtain resolution of the dispute, instead of being forced to await the initiative of the antagonist. See Borchard, supra, at 803-04; 6A Moore et al., supra, P 57.08[2] (discretion to render declaratory judgments should be exercised to effectuate the purposes of the Declaratory Judgment Act).

We prefer to apply in patent cases the general rule whereby the forum of the first-filed case is favored, unless considerations of judicial and litigant economy, and the just and effective disposition of disputes, require otherwise.

C

The General Rule

HN8[] The general rule favors the forum of the first-filed action, whether or not it is a declaratory action. See Borchard, supra, at 818-20. Exceptions, however, are not rare, [12] and are made when justice or expediency requires, as in any issue of choice of forum. See Kahn v. General Motors Corp., 889 F.2d 1078, 1081-83, 12 USPQ2d 1997, 1999-2001 (Fed. Cir. 1989) (discussing the general rule, the "customer suit" exception, and other factors that overcome "the presumptive right of the first litigant to choose the forum").

The general rule as applied to patent cases was discussed in Kerotest Manufacturing Co. v. C-O-Two Fire Equipment Co., 342 U.S. 180, 92 USPQ 1, 96 L. Ed. 200, 72 S. Ct. 219 (1952). "If [the alleged infringer] is forehanded, subsequent suits against him by the patentee can within the trial court's discretion be enjoined pending determination of the declaratory judgment suit . . . ." Id. at [*938] 185, 92 USPQ at 3. As the Court recognized, the trial court's discretion tempers the preference for the first-filed suit, when such preference should yield to the forum in which all interests are best served. Id. at 184, 92 USPQ at 2. There must, however, be sound reason that would make it unjust or inefficient [13] to continue the first-filed action. Such reason may be the convenience and availability of witnesses, or absence of jurisdiction over all necessary or desirable parties, or the possibility of consolidation with related litigation, or considerations relating to the real party in interest. Kahn, 889 F.2d at 1081-83, 12 USPQ2d at 1999-2001. [1245] [3] The Court cautioned against "rigid mechanical solutions" to questions of [3] Although there are other reasons, equitable and legal in nature, why a declaratory judgment action may not be entertained in the court's sound discretion, see, e.g., Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 460-62, 39 L. Ed. 2d 505, 94 S. Ct. 1209 (1974) (when a state proceeding is pending, considerations of equity, comity and federalism may counsel against exercise of federal jurisdiction), none is here raised.

---

forum, stressing the importance of conservation of judicial resources and the comprehensive disposition of litigation. Kerotest, 342 U.S. at 183, 92 USPQ at 2.

[14] The considerations affecting transfer to or dismissal in favor of another forum do not change simply because the first-filed action is a declaratory action. When the declaratory action can resolve the various legal relations in dispute and afford relief from the controversy that gave rise to the proceeding, and absent sound reason for a change of forum, a first-filed declaratory action is entitled to precedence as against a later-filed patent infringement action. In this case, the district court's dismissal of the University from the action in Indiana due to the filing of a subsequent suit by the University in California, while retaining the action in Indiana against Lilly, has led to a redundancy of litigation on some of the issues involving these three parties. The purpose of "preventing multiplicity of actions and to achieve resolution in a single lawsuit of all disputes arising out of common matters", Southern Construction Co. v. Pickard, 371 U.S. 57, 60, 83 S. Ct. 108, 9 L. Ed. 2d 31 (1962), is as valid for declaratory action as any other. The Court remarked that the compulsory counterclaim rule is particularly directed against the failure of a party to assert a counterclaim [15] in one action, followed by the institution of a second action wherein the counterclaim is the basis of the complaint. Id.; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a) (all issues between the parties arising from the same transaction or occurrence are required to be raised in the same suit). This is the pattern that here occurred.

The only stated reason for the district court's discretionary dismissal of the University from Genentech's declaratory action against the University and Lilly was that the University subsequently brought suit against Genentech elsewhere. That reason, as we have discussed, is insufficient to warrant refusal to entertain the action. We are not unmindful that this declaratory action was filed in Indiana only one day before the California infringement action. However, the rule favoring the right of the first litigant to choose the forum, absent countervailing interests of justice or convenience, is supported by "[reasons] just as valid when applied to the situation where one suit precedes the other by a day as they are in a case where a year intervenes between the suits." Martin v. Graybar Elec. Co., 266 F.2d 202, 205 (7th Cir. 1959) (quoting [16] Crosley Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co., 130 F.2d 474, 475 (3d Cir. 1942)).

The University points out that first-filed suits have sometimes been dismissed when forum shopping was the only motive for the filing. That exception was recognized in Kahn, 889 F.2d at 1081, 12 USPQ2d at 1999. In this case, however, there were sound reasons presented for Genentech's choice of the Indiana forum, for in its suit Genentech joined Lilly, an Indiana company, and sought consolidation with suits already pending in Indiana. We do take note that the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation has determined that there is considerable overlap among this declaratory action in Indiana, the action filed in California by the University, and three other actions involving various [*939] combinations of these parties in Indiana and California district courts. The Multidistrict Panel, hearing the arguments of all three parties on the choice of forum, ordered consolidation of these five actions for purposes of discovery and assigned coordination to the Indiana district court. That order was affirmed in In re Regents of the University of California, 964 F.2d 1128, 22 USPQ2d 1748 (Fed. Cir. 1992). [17] Although both sides now argue the merits of the Indiana versus the California forums, resolution of that question is not before us. Upon completion of the consolidated discovery, consideration should be given to further avoidance of duplicative litigation.

Conclusion

We conclude that it was incorrect to apply the Tempco Electric rationale to patent actions. Absent sound reason presented for dismissal of the University from the Indiana action in favor of a later-filed suit in California, dismissal as to the University was improper on discretionary grounds.

We thus reach the alternate grounds of dismissal, based on the Eleventh Amendment and the doctrine of State Action immunity.

II

STATE IMMUNITY FROM SUIT

The University is a public corporation of the State of California. The California Constitution [1246] established the University as "a branch of the state government equal and coordinate with the legislature, the judiciary, and the executive." 30 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 162, 166 (1957). See BV Engineering v. University of California, 858 F.2d 1394, 1395, 8 USPQ2d 1421, 1422 (9th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, [18] 489 U.S. 1090, 103 L. Ed. 2d 859, 109 S. Ct. 1557 (1989) (describing the University of California and the Board of Regents as instrumentalities of the state).

The district court treated the University as an arm of the state, with the same immunity as one of the United States. Although Genentech states that it does not concede this point, it was not placed at issue and for the purposes of this appeal the University position is accepted.

A

The Constitutional Plan

The district court held that this suit against the University is prohibited by the Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution:

> HN9[] The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

U.S. Const. amend. XI. Genentech argues that the Eleventh Amendment does not bar this action.

State immunity from suit in federal court is founded upon the fundamental relationship and constitutional balance between the federal government and the states. Pennhurst State School & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 98-99, 79 L. Ed. 2d 67, 104 S. Ct. 900 (1984). In [19] general, HN10[] without the state's consent a federal court is without power to entertain a suit by a private person against the state. Employees of Dep't of Public Health & Welfare v. Department of Public Health & Welfare, 411 U.S. 279, 284, 36 L. Ed. 2d 251, 93 S. Ct. 1614 (1973) (discussing the federal/state relationship). As it was explained in The Federalist No. 81, at 487-88 (Alexander Hamilton) (Clinton Rossiter ed., 1961): "It is inherent in the nature of sovereignty not to be amenable to the suit of an individual without its consent. . . . Unless, therefore, there is a surrender of this immunity in the plan of the convention, it will remain with the States . . . ." (Emphasis in original.)

There are qualifications to the reach of the Eleventh Amendment, again in implementation of the constitutional plan. Thus Congress has legislatively abrogated state immunity in specific circumstances, based variously on the enforcement provision of § 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment (granting Congress authority to enforce "by appropriate legislation" the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment), Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer, 427 U.S. 445, 456, 49 L. Ed. 2d 614, 96 S. Ct. 2666 (1976) (statute abrogated state [20] [*940] immunity from suit for employment discrimination); Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 693-94, 57 L. Ed. 2d 522, 98 S. Ct. 2565 (1978) (statute abrogated state immunity from award of attorney's fees), or on the authority of the Commerce Clause, wherein the states are deemed to have consented to suit on congressionally created causes of action against a state, Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co., 491 U.S. 1, 19-23, 105 L. Ed. 2d 1, 109 S. Ct. 2273 (1989) (plurality). HN11[] Such abrogation of immunity must be explicit and unambiguous, and must show clearly that Congress intended to subject the states to suit in federal court. Atascadero State Hosp. v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 240, 87 L. Ed. 2d 171, 105 S. Ct. 3142 (1985); Union Gas, 491 U.S. at 7-13.

HN12[] A state may waive its immunity, in its entirety or as to any specified agency, action, or event. "The Court consistently has held that a State may consent to suit against it in federal court." Pennhurst, 465 U.S. at 99. "The immunity from suit belonging to a State, which is respected and protected by the Constitution . . . is a personal privilege which it may waive at pleasure[.]" Clark v. Barnard, 108 U.S. 436, 447, 27 L. Ed. 780, 2 S. Ct. 878 (1883). [21] Waiver by a state can be effected by state statute or state constitution or by clear state conduct. A state statute may be construed to waive Eleventh Amendment immunity. Port Authority Trans-Hudson Corp. v. Feeney, 495 U.S. 299, 109 L. Ed. 2d 264, 110 S. Ct. 1868 (1990) (reference in state statute to "judicial district, established . . . by the United States" shows intent to include suit in federal court in statutory waiver). A state may by its actions be deemed to have waived its immunity as to a specific cause. Clark v. Barnard, 108 U.S. at 436 (state's filing of a claim in federal court waived Eleventh Amendment immunity as to the subject matter of that claim). The Court in Atascadero State Hospital, stressing the need for specificity in waiver by the state, held that Article III, § 5 of the California Constitution, which provides that "suits may be brought against the State in such manner and in such courts as shall be directed by law", is not a general waiver of immunity in federal court. 473 U.S. at 241.

The California Constitution also contains a specific waiver of immunity for the University. Through its Regents the [22] University is "vested with the legal title and the management and disposition of the property of the university", and is granted "all the powers necessary or convenient for the effective administration of its trust, including the power [1247] to sue and to be sued". Cal. Const. art. IX, § 9(f). However, an authorization to an arm of the state to sue and be sued is not presumed to include suit in federal court. Great Northern Life Ins. Co. v. Read, 322 U.S. 47, 54, 88 L. Ed. 1121, 64 S. Ct. 873 (1944); Atascadero State Hosp., 473 U.S. at 241.

In addition to abrogation and state waiver of immunity, state officials may be sued as individuals in certain circumstances. Ex Parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 52 L. Ed. 714, 28 S. Ct. 441 (1908). Genentech sought to amend its complaint to include the individual Regents of the University, upon the district court's holding of Eleventh Amendment immunity. Genentech appeals from the denial of that request. We need not reach this question for, as we next discuss, the University's immunity has been abrogated as to the major issues in suit.

B

Public Law 102-560

Genentech argues that since patent rights can be enforced only [23] in federal court, and the University has used its power to sue and be sued for the purpose of conducting and threatening patent litigation in federal court, the University has waived its immunity from suit in federal court. It has become unnecessary to decide this question broadly, for in legislation enacted October 28, 1992 Congress abrogated state immunity from suit for violation of patent law. Patent and Plant Variety protection Remedy Clarification Act, Pub. L. No. 102-560, 106 Stat. 4230 (1992). The Patent Clause, the Commerce Clause, and § 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment were mentioned as authority for this legislation. S. Rep. No. 280, 102d Cong., 2d Sess. 7-8 [*941] (1992) ("Senate Report").

HN13[] When the purpose of a federal statute is to abrogate a state's immunity from suit, that abrogation must be explicit and unequivocal. Atascadero State Hosp., 473 U.S. at 243; Union Gas, 491 U.S. at 7. Thus, the following provisions were added to Title 35 of the federal code:

> 35 U.S.C. § 271(h). HN14[] As used in this section, the term "whoever" includes any State, any instrumentality of a State, [24] and any officer or employee of a State or instrumentality of a State acting in his official capacity. Any State, and any such instrumentality, officer, or employee, shall be subject to the provisions of this title in the same manner and to the same extent as any nongovernmental entity.
>
> 35 U.S.C. § 296. Liability of States, instrumentalities of States, and State officials for infringement of patents.
>
> HN15[] (a) IN GENERAL.--Any State, any instrumentality of a State, and any officer or employee of a State or instrumentality of a State acting in his official capacity, shall not be immune, under the eleventh amendment of the Constitution of the United States or under any other doctrine of sovereign immunity, from suit in Federal court by any person, including any governmental or nongovernmental entity, for infringement of a patent under section 271, or for any other violation under this title.
>
> (b) REMEDIES.--In a suit described in subsection (a) for a violation described in that subsection, remedies (including remedies both at law and in equity) are available for the violation to the same extent as such remedies are available for such a violation in a [25] suit against any private entity. Such remedies include damages, interest, costs, and treble damages under section 284, attorney fees under section 285, and the additional remedy for infringement of design patents under section 289.

Pub. L. No. 102-560, §§ 2(a)(1) and 2(a)(2), 106 Stat. 4230 (1992).

The University does not seriously dispute that this enactment abrogated an area of state immunity. The University argues, however, that this enactment relates only to patent infringement by the state; that it does not encompass declaratory actions against the state; that it does not abrogate the University's immunity from Genentech's antitrust and state law tort and contract claims; and that the enactment does not apply to the action at bar.

1. Infringement and Other Violations Under the Patent Law.

The University argues that it is incorrect to apply Public Law 102-560 to any violation under Title 35 other than patent infringement by the state. Thus the University asserts that none of the issues of Genentech's declaratory complaint is subject to suit by virtue of this enactment.

The University states that the new 35 U.S.C. § 271(h) merely [26] addresses the definition of "whoever" for purposes of infringement actions under the existing § 271, and that the caption of 35 U.S.C. § 296 makes clear the intended limitation of that provision to infringement by the state. The University argues that Congress did no more than overrule Chew v. California, 893 F.2d 331, 13 USPQ2d 1393 (Fed. Cir.), cert. [1248] denied, 498 U.S. 810, 112 L. Ed. 2d 20, 111 S. Ct. 44 (1990) and Jacobs Wind Electric Co. v. Florida Department of Transportation, 919 F.2d 726, 16 USPQ2d 1972 (Fed. Cir. 1990), for in Chew and Jacobs Wind this court held that the Eleventh Amendment provides the states with absolute immunity from suit for patent infringement.

Genentech argues that Public Law 102-560 by its terms is not limited to infringement by the state, and that the words "or for any other violation under this title" in § 296(a) leave no doubt that the abrogation applies to all violations under Title 35 by the state. Genentech points to the plain language of the statute, its explicit statement of intent, and the absence of exceptions [27] in either the statute or the legislative history.

The starting point in interpreting any act of Congress is the text of the statute itself. HN16[] The words of a statute are deemed to have their plain meaning in the lexicon of the subject matter of the legislation. United [*942] States v. Rutherford, 442 U.S. 544, 551-52, 61 L. Ed. 2d 68, 99 S. Ct. 2470 (1979) (plain language of statute controls unless it leads to "'absurd results', or consequences obviously at variance with the policy of the enactment as a whole"). When the statutory text is clear, when the legislative intent is unmistakable, and when the legislative intent is implemented by the statute, that ends the inquiry.

Should the statutory text be afflicted by ambiguity in meaning or in application to a particular case, the legislative history can often provide useful guidance. HN17[] Only in the rare case, when "the literal application of a statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intention of its drafters", should a statute be construed in departure from its plain language. Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 571, 73 L. Ed. 2d 973, 102 S. Ct. 3245 (1982). This is not such a rare case.

Public Law 102-560 explicitly [28] abrogates state immunity from suit for all violations under Title 35, unlimited to the factual situation of Chew and Jacobs Wind where the only violation was infringement by the state. HN18[] A statute must be interpreted to give effect to each of its provisions. United States v. Nordic Village, Inc., 117 L. Ed. 2d 181, 112 S. Ct. 1011, 1015 (1992) ("settled rule that a statute must, if possible, be construed in such fashion that every word has some operative effect"); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 392, 58 L. Ed. 2d 596, 99 S. Ct. 675 (1979) (it is an "elementary canon of construction that a statute should be interpreted so as not to render one part inoperative"); United States v. Menasche, 348 U.S. 528, 538-39, 99 L. Ed. 615, 75 S. Ct. 513 (1955) ("The cardinal principle of statutory construction is to save and not to destroy. It is our duty to give effect, if possible, to every clause and word of a statute . . . rather than to emasculate an entire section.") (Citations and quotations omitted.) Thus the words "or for any other violation under this title" can be neither judicially excised nor judicially ignored. Indeed, the legislative history shows the intent of [29] Congress that states not be immune from the federal laws governing intellectual property. Senate Report at 11.

The University position is supported in the observation that the headings of 35 U.S.C. §§ 271 and 296 mention only infringement. Headings are often helpful in interpreting an ambiguous text. Immigration and Naturalization Serv. v. National Ctr. for Immigrants' Rights, 116 L. Ed. 2d 546, 112 S. Ct. 551, 556 (1991). However, there is > the wise rule that the title of a statute and the heading of a section cannot limit the plain meaning of the text. For interpretative purposes, they are of use only when they shed light on some ambiguous word or phrase. . . . But they cannot undo or limit that which the text makes plain.

Brotherhood of R.R. Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio R.R., 331 U.S. 519, 528-29, 91 L. Ed. 1646, 67 S. Ct. 1387 (1947) (citations omitted). The text of Public Law 102-560 is not ambiguous. The text does not contradict the section headings, although it is broader than the headings. Headings can not of themselves operate to take a significant portion of the textual subject matter out of the statute. It would [30] be incorrect to apply these headings to nullify the clause "or for any other violation under this title."

The conclusion that Public Law 102-560 is not limited to infringement by the state is reinforced by the explicit statement, in each section of the enactment, that its purpose is to place the states in the same position as nongovernmental entities as to the patent law. 35 U.S.C. §§ 271(h), 296(a) and (b). That purpose would not be achieved by the University's interpretation, for if the states were to continue to be immune from suit for violation of all provisions of Title 35 other than infringement, the states would not be coequal with nongovernmental entities. In introducing this legislation Senator DeConcini stressed that "States continue to take advantage of the sovereign immunity loophole that remains in the Patent Code". 137 Cong. Rec. S4046 (daily ed. Mar. 21, 1991). It would be incorrect to truncate the statute which as written achieves the legislative purpose, thereby to reopen the loophole that the statute was designed to close.

[*943] We conclude that Public Law 102-560 includes, in its abrogation of state immunity, all violations under [31] Title 35 with respect to a patent owned by the state. [1249]

2. The Declaratory Action.

The University points out that declaratory action against a state is not mentioned in Public Law 102-560, and argues that state immunity was not abrogated for suit by declaratory action. Genentech states that the University never had immunity from declaratory action when the University itself created the case of actual controversy, and in all events that since the University violated the Patent Act by obtaining and enforcing an invalid, unenforceable, and uninfringed patent, the statutory abrogation of immunity clearly includes this declaratory action.

HN19[] A declaratory action neither confers nor constrains jurisdiction or immunity. The Declaratory Judgment Act does not provide a substantive right; it provides a procedure whereby an aggrieved person may obtain a declaration of legal rights and relations. See Skelly Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 339 U.S. 667, 671-72, 94 L. Ed. 1194, 70 S. Ct. 876 (1950) (the declaratory judgment statute is not an independent basis for jurisdiction); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240, 81 L. Ed. 617, 57 S. Ct. 461 (1937) (the Declaratory Judgment [32] Act is procedural only); 6A Moore et al., supra, P 57.05 (the Declaratory Judgment Act is remedial and procedural in nature, creates no substantive rights, and neither augments nor diminishes federal jurisdiction). It is the Patent Act that states the law; the declaratory judgment procedure may be invoked when there is a controversy concerning an assertion of substantive rights under the Patent Act. To determine jurisdiction or immunity as to a particular cause of action it is necessary to look to the substantive violation and other relevant criteria, not to the procedure for obtaining relief.

An action seeking declaration of patent invalidity arises under the patent law, C.R. Bard, Inc. v. Schwartz, 716 F.2d 874, 879-80, 219 USPQ 197, 201-03 (Fed. Cir. 1983), as do actions seeking declaration of infringement, see Lang v. Pacific Marine & Supply Co., 895 F.2d 761, 763-64, 13 USPQ2d 1820, 1821 (Fed. Cir. 1990), and declaration of noninfringement, see Cordis Corp. v. Medtronic, Inc., 835 F.2d 859, 862-63, 5 USPQ2d 1118, 1120-21 (Fed. Cir. 1987). [33] See generally Borchard, supra, at 808 (declaratory actions on infringement or validity, initiated by a patentee or alleged infringer, arise under the patent law).

Title 35 contains a variety of provisions that are subject to violation. E.g., Chemcast Corp. v. Arco Indus. Corp., 913 F.2d 923, 930, 16 USPQ2d 1033, 1039 (Fed. Cir. 1990) (discussing violation of requirement of § 112 to disclose the best mode); J.A. LaPorte, Inc. v. Norfolk Dredging Co., 787 F.2d 1577, 1583, 229 USPQ 435, 439 (Fed. Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 884, 93 L. Ed. 2d 250, 107 S. Ct. 274 (1986) (discussing violation of § 102(b) based on on-sale activity); Brooktree Corp. v. Advanced Micro Devices, Inc., 977 F.2d 1555, 1571, 24 USPQ2d 1401, 1412 (Fed. Cir. 1992) (discussing violation of utility requirement of § 101).

Although claims of patent invalidity are not actionable absent an actual controversy, International Medical Prosthetics Research Assocs., Inc. v. Gore Enter. Holdings, Inc., 787 F.2d 572, 576, 229 USPQ 278, 281 (Fed. Cir. 1986), [34] in this case the actual controversy arose when the University accused Genentech of patent infringement. Arrowhead, 846 F.2d at 735-36, 6 USPQ2d at 1688-89; C.R. Bard, 716 F.2d at 881-82, 219 USPQ at 204. The issues of invalidity and noninfringement that were raised by Genentech in seeking resolution of that controversy are encompassed by the legislative abrogation of state immunity. Public Law 102-560, abrogating states' immunity from suit under the patent statute, necessarily includes permitting the states to be a defendant in a suit asserting that the patent is in violation of the law. There is no exception in Public Law 102-560 that preserves state immunity depending on the procedure by which issues are raised. Indeed, such an exception would contravene the legislative purpose of conferring equal status on states and nongovernmental entities under the patent law.

[*944] We conclude that Genentech's declaratory action against the University is within the statutory abrogation of state immunity, for the counts of the complaint that arise under the patent law.

3. The Effective Date.

The University [35] argues that even if its immunity were abrogated by Public Law 102-560, that abrogation does not apply to this case. The Act states:

Sec. 4. Effective Date.

> The amendments made by this Act shall take effect with respect to violations that occur on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Pub. L. No. 102-560, § 4, 106 Stat. 4230, 4232 (1992). Since the Act does not abrogate immunity for violations that occurred before October 28, 1992, the University asserts that it does not apply to cases filed before that date.

Genentech invokes the general rule that changes in law apply to cases that are pending before the courts, unless the interest of justice, or the law itself, requires otherwise. HN20[] "[A] court is to apply the law in effect at the [1250] time it renders its decision, unless doing so would result in manifest injustice or there is statutory direction or legislative history to the contrary." Bradley v. School Bd., 416 U.S. 696, 711, 40 L. Ed. 2d 476, 94 S. Ct. 2006 (1974); see Andrus v. Charlestone Stone Prods. Co., 436 U.S. 604, 607-08, 56 L. Ed. 2d 570, 98 S. Ct. 2002 n.6 (1978) (applying statute enacted while appeal was pending). This general rule has been applied to congressional [36] abrogations of state immunity. E.g., Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co., 491 U.S. 1, 105 L. Ed. 2d 1, 109 S. Ct. 2273 (1989) (Superfund amendments, enacted while petition for certiorari pending, applied to abrogate state's Eleventh Amendment immunity); United States v. Alabama, 362 U.S. 602, 604, 4 L. Ed. 2d 982, 80 S. Ct. 924 (1960) (Civil Rights Act of 1960, enacted shortly before the Supreme Court heard the case, applied to abrogate state immunity for past violations). Thus a suit that may have been subject to state immunity at the time it was filed can continue to be prosecuted when the immunity is legislatively lifted. Requiring dismissal "would be wasteful to both the parties and the courts . . . for [the case] could be at once refiled." Sandefur v. Cherry, 718 F.2d 682, 684-85 (5th Cir. 1983). In the absence of "manifest injustice", Bradley, 416 U.S. at 711, we apply Public Law 102-560 to this case.

Public Law 102-560 provides in effect that there shall be no recovery for violations that occurred before October 28, 1992. This accords with the general rule that "a retrospective operation will not be given to a statute . . [37] . unless such be the unequivocal and inflexible import of the terms, and the manifest intention of the legislature." Union Pac. R.R. v. Laramie Stock Yards Co., 231 U.S. 190, 199, 58 L. Ed. 179, 34 S. Ct. 101 (1913) (citations and quotations omitted). Since Genentech's suit is for a declaration of rights and relationships, and not for recovery of damages for past violations under Title 35, and since violations of patent rights are continuing events, it appears to be unnecessary to decide whether there was an earlier non-statutory waiver of University immunity with respect to the patent counts. We thus do not reach the question of whether the University by its conduct had waived any immunity it may have had from suit under the patent law. It is, however, necessary to consider the disposition of the antitrust and state law counts of Genentech's declaratory complaint, for these counts are not within the statutory abrogation, and all of the counts were dismissed on the basis of state immunity.

C

The Antitrust and State Law Counts

Genentech's complaint as amended included charges that various agreements between Lilly and the University, and certain actions taken by the University [38] at the behest of Lilly, constituted violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, as amended. [4] Genentech also charged that the [*945] University's agreements and actions violated state laws relating to unfair competition, fraud, breach of contract, breach of third party obligations, and tortious interference with contract. Genentech also claimed that its 1980 contract with the University estops the University from charging Genentech with infringement. Genentech states that these actions render the '877 patent unenforceable against it, and also serve to recoup any damages that Genentech might incur for infringement. Genentech thus argues that inclusion of the antitrust and state law counts in this litigation is necessary to avoid injustice, and to resolve all of the issues between the parties.

[39] The district court's dismissal of these counts was grounded on the University's asserted Eleventh Amendment and State Action immunities. Review of this dismissal, which was in terms of Federal Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6), requires that the factual premises and allegations of Genentech's complaint be deemed established. We outline some of the facts, undisputed for this purpose, that are relevant to the antitrust and state law counts:

Lilly provided funding for certain research at the University relating to the subject matter of the '877 patent, and had the option to acquire from the University the exclusive license to any patent that resulted from the Lilly-funded research. Certain other research was funded by HEW, and was subject to the requirement that any patent resulting from HEW-funded research would be made available to qualified applicants by non-exclusive license. The University had in 1980 entered into an agreement with Genentech that provided, inter alia, that the University would notify Genentech if Lilly exercised its option for an exclusive license, so that, according to Genentech, it could obtain a mandatory sublicense. Genentech states that at [1251] the behest of Lilly [40] the University obtained, through misrepresentations and omissions of fact, a waiver of HEW's licensing requirement, and the University and Lilly then entered into an exclusive license, with payment by Lilly of a royalty to the University. Among other terms, this license provided that the University would at Lilly's request enforce the '877 patent against infringers, and that if the University did not take such requested legal action it would forfeit the royalty payments.

Genentech premised its antitrust and state law tort and contract charges on these and related events. The district court dismissed the antitrust and state law counts as barred by the Eleventh Amendment, and the antitrust counts as barred by the State Action doctrine. In view of the abrogation of immunity for violation of patent law, Public Law 102-560, we first consider the relation of these counts to the patent counts.

1. Defenses.

Genentech points out that the University must plead its charge of patent infringement in response to Genentech's action for declaration of noninfringement, lest the University's charge be barred as res judicata. See Fed. R. Civ. P.

---

[4] 15 U.S.C. § 1 (in part). HN21[] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 2 (in part). HN22[] Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

13(a); Baker v. Gold Seal Liquors, Inc., 417 U.S. 467, 469, 41 L. Ed. 2d 243, 94 S. Ct. 2504 n.1 (1974); [41] Southern Constr. Co. v. Pickard, 371 U.S. 57, 60, 9 L. Ed. 2d 31, 83 S. Ct. 108 (1962). Genentech states that its antitrust and state law claims are an integral part of its defense to the University's charge of patent infringement, and therefore that these claims are appropriately raised in the declaratory judgment complaint. See Foster v. Hallco Mfg. Co., 947 F.2d 469, 479, 20 USPQ2d 1241, 1249 (Fed. Cir. 1991) (the "claim" of a declaratory judgment action is based on the patent owner's charge of infringement; the declaratory complaint raises anticipatory defenses to this charge). The University's position is that it is irrelevant whether any of the antitrust and state law claims are defenses or counterclaims to the charge of patent infringement, for they were not included in any abrogation or waiver of the University's immunity from [*946] suit in federal court. Thus the University asserts that these claims can not be raised against it in this action.

HN23[] When a state maintains a claim in federal court it thereby consents to the exercise of federal judicial authority over that claim "to the full extent required for its complete determination." [42] Clark v. Barnard, 108 U.S. at 448. The principles of federalism underlying the Eleventh Amendment do not prevent a person from defending against an action by a state. See In re Regents, 964 F.2d at 1134, 22 USPQ2d at 1754 (the Eleventh Amendment is not designed to give procedural advantage to state claimants); In re Greenstreet, Inc., 209 F.2d 660, 664 (7th Cir. 1954) (when the government initiates legal action it thereby "consents to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain any defensive plea").

The University's charge of patent infringement is the claim that creates the controversy which supports the declaratory judgment action. The Eleventh Amendment does not bar the raising by Genentech of its defenses to the University's charge of patent infringement, whether these defenses arise under federal or state law. Thus the counts that are defenses to the charge of patent infringement, such as the defense of contract-based estoppel and the defense of unenforceability based on antitrust violation, are as available to the accused infringer as are the defenses of patent invalidity [43] and noninfringement.

Although the University argues that it has not consented to the adjudication of any state law theories in federal court, consent is not required as to defenses to the University's charge of patent infringement. The University asserts that Pennhurst prohibits a private party from maintaining any state law claim against a state in federal court. See 465 U.S. at 106 ("it is difficult to think of a greater intrusion on state sovereignty than when a federal court instructs state officials on how to conform their conduct to state law"). In Pennhurst the petitioner sought to coerce state action. There was no issue of defending against state charges or threatened charges by invoking state law. The affront to principles of federalism addressed in Pennhurst is not present here.

Genentech also states that the University committed fraud in the patent office in obtaining a Certificate of Correction under conditions that Genentech alleges did not meet the requirements of 35 U.S.C. § 255. Such acts if proved would in any event violate the patent law, and to that extent state immunity was abrogated [44] by Public Law 102-560, which applies to "the eleventh amendment [or] any other doctrine of sovereign immunity". 35 U.S.C. § 296(a).

2. Counterclaims.

Nor is the University's consent required for those counterclaims that are properly raised in recoupment of the University's charges. The general rule, although not without debate, is that HN24[] when a governmental entity has waived its immunity from federal judicial authority by taking legal action in federal court, the person charged can raise [1252] all counterclaims that arise from the same transaction or events. E.g., Livera v. First Nat'l State Bank, 879 F.2d 1186, 1195-96 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, Livera v. Small Business Admin., 493 U.S. 937, 107 L. Ed. 2d 322, 110 S. Ct. 332 (1989) ("a defendant may assert by way of recoupment any claim arising out of the same transaction or occurrence . . . in order to reduce or defeat the government's recovery") (emphasis in original). The summary by Professor Wright with respect to the federal government is applicable to states:

> Despite the sovereign immunity doctrine and the language of Rule 13(d), when the United States institutes [45] an action, defendant may assert by way of recoupment any claim arising out of the same transaction or occurrence as the original claim in order to reduce or defeat the government's recovery.

> However, if defendant's claim arises from a different transaction or occurrence, then it is in effect an independent suit and it may be asserted as a setoff or counterclaim only if the government has waived its sovereign immunity.

6 Charles A. Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1427 (2d ed. 1990) (footnotes [*947] omitted). See also In re Monongahela Rye Liquors, Inc., 141 F.2d 864, 869 (3d. Cir. 1944) (recoupment rule applies to states); 3 James W. Moore & Richard D. Freer, Moore's Federal Practice P 13.19[2.-2] (2d ed. 1992) (recoupment by counterclaims against a state) (collecting cases).

Cases applying this rule are highly fact-dependent, as the courts have considered whether an issue that was raised by counterclaim is suitable for recoupment of damages assessed in favor of the state. E.g., United States v. Montrose Chem. Corp., 788 F. Supp. 1485, 1492-94 (C.D. Cal. 1992) (chemical company's state law counterclaims [46] arising out of the same events as state's CERCLA action in federal court, with recovery limited to recoupment, does not violate Eleventh Amendment or sovereign immunity); New York v. Johnstown, 701 F. Supp. 33, 37-38 (N.D.N.Y. 1988) (state law compulsory counterclaims seeking recoupment against state-brought CERCLA claim do not violate state immunity); Burgess v. M/V Tamano, 382 F. Supp. 351, 355-56 (D. Me. 1974) (requiring that state law counterclaims arise out of the event underlying state's claim for damages); Alaska v. O/S Lynn Kendall, 310 F. Supp. 433, 434 (D. Alaska 1970) (limiting to recoupment defendant's potential recovery on state law counterclaims).

Depending on the particular facts, precedent is mixed as to whether the cause of action raised by counterclaim must be of the same category as the state's claim. For example, a tort claim has been held effective to recoup damages against a contract claim.E.g., United States v. Irby, 618 F.2d 352, 356-57 (5th Cir. 1980). The controlling factor is whether the counterclaim arose out of the same transaction [47] or occurrence. E.g., In re Monongahela Rye Liquors, 141 F.2d at 869 (trustee's claim for money due for liquor sold to state manifestly unrelated to state's tax claim against the bankrupt estate).

Certain of Genentech's state law counts are properly viewed not as defenses but as counterclaims against the University's charge of infringement, such as the claims for tortious interference with contract and unfair competition. whether these counterclaims are deemed "compulsory" determines whether they may be pursued in this action for purposes of recoupment of the University's claims against Genentech. Absent consent to suit or waiver or abrogation of immunity, affirmative relief beyond recoupment is not available on such claims. See, e.g., United States v. Shaw, 309 U.S. 495, 501-02, 84 L. Ed. 888, 60 S. Ct. 659 (1940) (rejecting the contention that when the sovereign voluntarily seeks the aid of the courts it thereby takes the form of a private suitor and fully subjects itself to any claim). HN25[] Recoupment, however, is an established remedy based on the principle that neither sovereign immunity nor the principles of federalism prevents a private person from [48] raising, in defense and setoff, claims that arise from the same transaction or occurrence on which the state is seeking to recover damages.

HN26[] A counterclaim must be "compulsory" in order to be raised as of right in an area of law in which the state is otherwise immune from suit. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a) HN27[] (a compulsory counterclaim is one that arises out of the same transaction or occurrence as the opposing party's claim); see generally 3 Moore & Freer, supra, P 13.13 (discussing transaction or occurrence requirement of Rule 13(a)). HN28[] Such a counterclaim is usually "within the court's ancillary jurisdiction and an independent basis for federal jurisdiction is not necessary." 6 Wright et al., supra, § 1409 at 49. However, ancillary jurisdiction [5] alone may not override the Eleventh Amendment. County of Oneida v. Oneida Indian Nation, 470 U.S. 226, 251, 84 L. Ed. 2d 169, 105 S. Ct. 1245 (1985) (noting the Clark exception to Pennhurst); Chemehuevi Indian Tribe v. California State Bd. of Equalization, [1253] 757 F.2d 1047, 1053 (9th Cir.), rev'd on other grounds, 474 U.S. 9, 88 L. Ed. 2d 9, 106 S. Ct. 289 (1985). In this case the University must bring [49] its charges of patent infringement against Genentech or be forever barred from doing so. The University's immunity as to the patent counts having [*948] been abrogated, Genentech is now permitted to bring compulsory counterclaims that are suitable for recoupment of damages that may be assessed against it.

[5] The concepts of ancillary and pendent jurisdiction are now termed "supplemental jurisdiction". Judicial Improvements Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-650, § 310, 104 Stat. 5089, 5113-14 (codified at 28 U.S.C. § 1367).

Should the University choose to forego charging Genentech with infringement, these counterclaims would be subject to dismissal.

Although Genentech states that the University did not dispute that Genentech's antitrust and state law claims arose from the same transaction and events and thus are compulsory counterclaims, that is an overstatement. On the summary proceedings on which this case was decided, this question did not require decision by the district court. It is inappropriate [50] for us to decide the issue ab initio, for neither the particular facts, nor the application of law to those facts, was developed in the district court. We hold only that on the basis of the pleading the dismissal of all of Genentech's antitrust and state law defenses and counterclaims was unwarranted under Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6). When proceedings are reopened the district court may determine which of Genentech's antitrust and state law counts meet the criteria of defenses and compulsory counterclaims to the University's charge of patent infringement, and thus are properly raised in this proceeding.

3. Antitrust Claims.

The district court held that the State Action doctrine provides immunity from the asserted violations of federal antitrust law. The principal antitrust issue raised in Genentech's pleading relates to the University's licensing activities. Genentech's position is that the University conspired with Lilly to exclude Genentech from the hGH market, in violation of the Sherman Act.

The State Action doctrine, although grounded on general principles of federalism, relates specifically to state sovereignty in state legislatively authorized activity. HN29[] The doctrine [51] provides immunity, or "exemption" as it is sometimes called, from federal competition laws when the state is performing official acts, whether or not these acts are anticompetitive in effect. As explained in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943), a case where California state officials were administering a legislatively-mandated program that had the purpose of restricting competition among raisin producers in California:

> We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature.

Parker, 317 U.S. at 350-51. The district court, applying this principle, dismissed Genentech's antitrust claims against the University.

HN30[] To warrant Parker immunity the anticompetitive acts must be taken in the state's "sovereign capacity", and not as a market participant in competition with commercial enterprise. Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 52, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810, 102 S. Ct. 835 (1982). If the allegedly anticompetitive acts are not explicitly ordered by a legislative arm of state [52] government, they must be conducted pursuant to legislative authorization that contemplates such acts. Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 567-68, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, 104 S. Ct. 1989 (1984). As discussed in City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978), Parker immunity permits the state to impose anticompetitive restraints "as an act of government." 435 U.S. at 391 (quoting Parker).

However, the policies underlying Parker do not extend to circumstances where the state acts not in a legislative/regulatory capacity but as a "commercial participant in a given market." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1351 (1991). See South-Central Timber Dev., Inc. v. Wunnicke, 467 U.S. 82, 102, 81 L. Ed. 2d 71, 104 S. Ct. 2237 (1984) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting) ("the antitrust laws apply to a State only when it is acting as a market participant"); Jefferson County Pharmaceutical Ass'n, Inc. v. Abbott Lab., 460 U.S. 150, 154, 74 L. Ed. 2d 882, 103 S. Ct. 1011 (1983) (state university's participation in private retail markets renders it subject to Robinson-Patman [53] Act); Union Pacific R.R. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450, 85 [*949] L. Ed. 1453, 61 S. Ct. 1064 (1941) (rebates and concessions made by city-run produce market integrated with railroad facilities violated the Elkins Act). Cf. Reeves, Inc. v. Stake, 447 U.S. 429, 436, 65 L. Ed. 2d 244, 100 S. Ct. 2271 (1980) (the distinction between the state as a market participant and the state as a market regulator "makes good sense and sound law" in Commerce Clause cases); Employees of Dep't of Public Health & Welfare v. Department of Public Health and Welfare, 411 U.S. 279, 284, 36 L. Ed. 2d 251, 93 S. Ct. 1614 (1973) (state activity was not of a proprietary, commercial nature, and was protected by principles of state sovereignty).

Genentech alleges that the University was not acting under state legislative or regulatory authority when the University assertedly violated the Sherman Act. Genentech states that the University has neither regulatory [1254] interest nor sovereign authority in the national market for hGH, and simply engaged in profit-making commercial activity. The University responds that it was merely exercising its authority and obligation to manage the property of the University. The University states [54] that it does not participate in the hGH market; that it is not in competition with private enterprise; and that the licensing of a patent based on University research is not commercial activity but is part of a university's normal functions, serving the public purpose of aiding the movement of scientific research toward practical application.

We need not decide whether the University's licensing activities establish a market participant exception to State Action immunity, for Genentech has not pled facts which if proved constitute violation of the antitrust laws. The patenting and licensing of the results of University research is not a violation of antitrust principles, and the grant of an exclusive license is a lawful incident of the right to exclude provided by the Patent Act. The University's right to select its licensees, the decision to grant exclusive or non-exclusive licenses or to sue for infringement, and the pursuit of optimum royalty income, are not of themselves acts in restraint of trade. Although Genentech presses the position that the University and Lilly conspired to exclude Genentech from the hGH market, Genentech's pleading does not allege more substance than the [55] University's grant of an exclusive license to Lilly; thus it is unnecessary to consider the applicability of the statement in City of Columbia that there is no "conspiracy exception" to State Action immunity. 111 S. Ct. at 1351.

For these reasons, the charge of antitrust violation in the licensing arrangement was correctly dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6). Accordingly, we do not reach the question of whether State Action immunity protects the challenged activities. [6]

Summary

Dismissal of the declaratory action is vacated. Absent sound reason favoring a different forum, a first-filed suit is entitled to precedence against a subsequent suit.

The University is not immune from suit as to the patent counts, and as to those other counts that are defenses and compulsory [56] counterclaims to the charge of patent infringement. Dismissal on these grounds is vacated. On remand the district court may determine which counts are thus properly asserted.

The dismissal of the antitrust count is affirmed.

No costs.

AFFIRMED IN PART, VACATED IN PART, and REMANDED

End of Document

[6] We take note that in City of Columbia the Court expressly left open the question of whether antitrust action may be brought against a state when there is no Parker immunity. We too do not reach that question.

Osborn v. Bell Helicopter Textron

United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Fort Worth Division

July 3, 1993, Decided ; August 5, 1993, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 4:91-CV-118-Y

Reporter

828 F. Supp. 446 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10954 ; 27 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 408; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,345

WILLIAM O. OSBORN v. BELL HELICOPTER TEXTRON, INC.

Core Terms

Worldwide, summary judgment, antitrust, employees, infliction of emotional distress, amended complaint, antitrust claim, communications, allegations, helicopters, Customer, partial summary judgment, tortious interference, motion to dismiss, non-competition, depositions, termination, infliction, SANCTIONS, relations

Counsel: [1] Hal Keith Gillespie, David Kohlman Watsky, GILLESPIE, ROZEN & TANNER, Dallas, Texas 75247, for plaintiff.

Richard Matthew Kobodish, Jr., FULBRIGHT & JAWORSKI, Dallas, Texas 75201. Alan G. King, JOHNSON & GIBBS, Dallas, Texas 75202-4499, for defendant.

Judges: MEANS

Opinion by: TERRY R. MEANS

Opinion

[*448] ORDER GRANTING MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT, GRANTING MOTION FOR SANCTIONS, AND DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS

Pending before the Court is a Motion to Dismiss and Motion for Partial Summary Judgment filed by defendant Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc. ("BHT") on April 7, 1992, and a Motion for Sanctions filed by BHT on May 26, 1992. BHT seeks summary judgment or dismissal of Plaintiff's claims under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code §§ 15.01-.51 and various common law claims asserted in Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint. After careful consideration of said motions, responses, reply, surreply, and all evidence submitted in support thereof, this Court is of the opinion that the motion for partial summary judgment and motion for sanctions are meritorious and should be GRANTED, and that because the Court looks to matters outside the pleadings, the motion to dismiss should be [2] DENIED.

I. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, summary judgment is appropriate if the movant establishes, through the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). BHT has supported its motion for summary judgment with pleadings; the affidavit of K. Roger Williams; excerpts from the depositions of George Powell, Ray Kennedy, K.

Roger Williams, and William O. Osborn; portions of business records of Schick Shadel Hospital; and various documents of BHT.

When the moving party has carried its summary judgment burden, the respondent "must do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 89 L. ED. 2D 538, 106 S. CT. 1348, 475 U.S. 574, 586 (1986). The respondent must produce evidence, not merely argument, in response to a movant's properly supported motion for summary judgment. See Foval v. First Nat'l Bank of Commerce, 841 F.2d 126, 129 (5th Cir. 1988); [3] Martin v. John W. Stone Oil Distrib., Inc., 819 F.2d 547, 549 (5th Cir. 1987). The introduction of a mere scintilla of evidence is not sufficient to avoid summary judgment. Rather, the non-movant must come forward with sufficient evidence that, if admitted at trial, a verdict in his favor would be possible. See Spiller v. Ella Smithers Geriatric Ctr., 919 F.2d 339, 343 (5th Cir. 1990). Plaintiff, the non-moving party, has responded to Defendant's motion by presenting his pleadings on file; excerpts from the depositions of Osborn, George Powell, and K. Roger Williams; and the declaration of William O. Osborn.

[*449] II. SUMMARY OF THE FACTS

Because this Court set out a detailed description of the facts of this case in its June 24, 1993 memorandum opinion and order, only a summary of the facts is provided here. Defendant BHT, headquartered in Tarrant County, Texas, is in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and servicing helicopters worldwide. Its customers are both military and commercial users of helicopters. BHT employed plaintiff William O. Osborn in its Customer Service and Support Division. Osborn's job duties required [4] him to plan, budget, staff, train, and direct a worldwide staff of customer support representatives ("CSRs").

Prior to 1989, BHT employed as many as 46 CSRs throughout the world. In 1987, three persons, including Osborn, shared supervisory responsibility over the CSRs. By June 1989, BHT determined that it could function efficiently with only one supervisor over the CSRs. This decision was made for two reasons: 1) BHT's continuing efforts to streamline its operations, and 2) the number of CSRs had shrunk to just 23 or 24.

On June 2, 1989, BHT terminated Osborn and retained Vaughn Corneby as the sole supervisor of the CSRs. Shortly after Osborn's separation from BHT, he formed two businesses, Worldwide Helicopters, Inc. ("Worldwide") and Centralized Procurement Services. Each business was intended to market products and services to owners and prospective purchasers of helicopters. Osborn then contacted CSRs who were still employed by BHT and sought to enlist them as sales representatives on behalf of his own company.

Osborn's communications to the CSRs were sent without BHT's knowledge or approval and were transmitted via BHT's "Quik-Com" computer system. Quik-Com is a communications [5] network, established at Osborn's initiative while he was working at BHT, to transmit and access messages worldwide at BHT-established terminals. During August and September 1989, Osborn admits sending at least fifteen to twenty unauthorized communications to CSRs through the Quik-Com system in the Middle East, Far East, and elsewhere, for the purpose of inducing BHT employees to breach their duty of loyalty to BHT and represent Osborn's new business. In October 1990, BHT learned of Osborn's unauthorized communications and notified its CSRs that company policy prohibited them from representing other interests while dealing with BHT customers.

Osborn re-applied for a position with BHT in November 1990, but did not receive an offer of employment. This Court issued summary judgment against Plaintiff's age discrimination and retaliation claims in a June 24, 1993 opinion and order. Remaining are Plaintiff's antitrust and common law claims, as well as Defendant's counterclaims (only Plaintiff's claims are addressed in this opinion).

III. NO GENUINE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT IN DISPUTE

A. Antitrust Claim

Osborn purports to bring a claim against BHT under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust [6] Act of 1983, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 15.01-.51, apparently for damages suffered by the businesses in which he holds or held an ownership interest. Osborn alleges that BHT "entered into and attempted to enforce an agreement not to compete which is a restraint of trade." Osborn's claim, however, fails for several reasons. First, the law is clear that Osborn lacks standing to bring an antitrust claim on behalf of Worldwide. Solinger v. A & M Records, Inc., 718 F.2d 298, 299 (9th Cir. 1983). Even Assuming that Worldwide, a business in which Osborn has or held ownership interests, were in competition with BHT, this corporation, not Osborn personally, would be the party suffering any antitrust injury for which a suit might be brought. Shareholders, officers, and directors cannot personally assert antitrust claims against a corporation's competitors.

> The convenience and immunities that arise from doing business through corporate entities carry with them the cost of having these corporate entities seek their remedies in court for injuries to their business [*450] or property interests. A shareholder of a corporation injured by antitrust violations has no standing [7] to sue in his or her own name. . . .

Solinger, 718 F.2d at 299.

Moreover, Osborn's antitrust claim is without merit even if Osborn intended, as he now argues in his response, to assert the antitrust allegations on behalf of Centralized Procurement Services, which he owns as a sole proprietor. For several alternative reasons, the antitrust claim is invalid: the parties never had a contract not to compete; if they did have a contract, it was reasonable; if it was unreasonable, Plaintiff has not shown harm.

First, the BHT policy found in its personnel rules, denominated "Post-Employment Conflicts of Interest Applicable to Former BHTI Employees" ("the Policy"), is not a non-competition agreement; in fact, it is not even an agreement. It is not a non-competition agreement because the Policy does not relate in any way to competition with BHT; it states only a prohibition against former employee involvement with sales to BHT for a period of two years. The Policy has not been shown to be a binding legal agreement by evidence of either a signed contract or a verbal covenant. It appears to be no more than a statement of policy applicable to former employees. [8] In addition, an agreement not to compete, like any contract, must be supported by consideration. Under Tex. Bus. & Com. Code § 15.50(1), a covenant not to compete must be ancillary to an otherwise enforceable agreement, or if "executed on a date other than the date on which the underlying agreement is executed, such covenant must be supported by independent valuable consideration." Id. Thus, Plaintiff must present evidence of either an ancillary agreement or independent consideration. Neither has been presented, which leaves the Court to assume that the only agreement between Plaintiff and Defendant was that of at-will employment. At-will employment which includes a non-competition agreement does not constitute an "otherwise enforceable agreement" within the meaning of § 15.50. See Zep Mfg. Co. v. Harthcock, 824 S.W.2d 654, 659 (Tex. App.-Dallas 1992) ("employment-at-will contract is not otherwise enforceable agreement") (citations omitted) (dicta). The Court finds, therefore, that a non-competition contract did not exist between Plaintiff and Defendant.

In addition, even if the Court found a contract between the parties, Plaintiff must raise a genuine [9] issue of material fact as to the reasonableness of the agreement. Subsection (2) of § 15.50 provides that a non-competition agreement may be valid if it "contains reasonable limitations as to time, geographical area, and scope of activity to be restrained that do not impose a greater restraint than is necessary to protect the goodwill or other business interest of the promisee." Id. The business interest of Defendant's policy is to prevent former employees from capitalizing on personal contacts and inside information gained during BHT employment. The Court finds that this is a legitimate business interest, and that as a matter of law the Policy's two-year restriction on post-employment involvement with sales to BHT does not impose a greater restraint than is necessary to protect that interest.

Lastly, Plaintiff does not allege any harm resulting from the Policy. The pertinent provision of the Policy states that "for two years after ceasing employment with BHTI, [former employees are] prohibited from selling to BHTI." Several examples of "selling," both directly and indirectly, are provided, as well as examples of what is not considered selling. Nowhere does Plaintiff allege that [10] he sought to sell to BHTI, but was prevented from doing so because of the Policy.

B. Tortious Interference with Contractual & Business Relations

Osborn's claim of tortious interference with contractual and business relations also fails for lack of standing. Osborn admits that the business allegedly interfered with was that of Worldwide: "Defendant interfered with plaintiff's efforts to do business through the Worldwide Helicopter Support Inc. and attempted to enforce a no-competition [*451] agreement with plaintiff." This claim, like the antitrust claim, belongs to Worldwide and not Osborn. Accordingly, Osborn cannot sue upon it.

In addition, BHT did not owe Osborn a duty to permit him to solicit BHT employees to market products on his behalf or on behalf of his companies. In his complaint, Osborn alleges that he "communicated with Defendant's Customer Service Representatives at their field locations through the use of Defendant's private communication system, which he had helped set up." The undisputed facts reveal that Osborn's purpose in these communications was to solicit BHT employees to market, on his behalf, products sold by Osborn's companies. The CSRs would be compensated for marketing [11] products and services similar to BHT's. The facts also reveal that, in response to Osborn's unauthorized efforts, BHT reminded its employees that they owe exclusive loyalty to BHT and that company policy prohibits them from marketing on behalf of other companies while employed by BHT. This Court finds that BHT has no duty to permit another business to access its employees, through BHT's private communication system or otherwise. BHT's failure to promote such access by means of its own communications systems cannot be tortious.

C. Infliction of Emotional Distress

Finally, this Court finds that Osborn's allegations of intentional infliction of emotional distress and negligent infliction of emotional distress are without merit. One of the elements of the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress is the performance of an "outrageous act." As a matter of law, the mere discharge of an employee is not an outrageous act. Wilson v. Monarch Paper Co., 939 F.2d 1138, 1143 (5th Cir. 1991); Guthrie v. Tifco Indus., 941 F.2d 374, 378 (5th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 117 L. Ed. 2d 495, 112 S. Ct. 1267 (1992). As a [12] result, Plaintiff has no intentional infliction claim relating to his termination. Plaintiff's allegations that Defendant's conduct subsequent to his termination amounts to intentional infliction of emotional distress are also completely without merit. Those claims stem from Plaintiff's contention that Defendant "informed all customer service representatives not to conduct any business with Plaintiff." Plaintiff has produced no evidence to support this allegation. Defendant's October 26, 1989 letter to all CSRs, upon which Plaintiff's contention is presumably based, simply advises CSRs that to assist other companies in selling products and services related to BHT's is against company policy. This can hardly be considered outrageous conduct.

Osborn also alleges that BHT was negligent in terminating his employment and that such negligence caused him emotional distress. No cause of action exists in Texas for the negligent infliction of emotional distress. Valenzuela v. Aquino, 853 S.W.2d 512 (Tex. 1993); Boyles v. Kerr, No. D-0963, 1993 Tex. LEXIS 58 (Tex. May 5, 1993). Even prior to these recent cases clarifying an admittedly [13] volatile area of Texas law, it was clear that no cause of action existed for negligent infliction in the context of employer--employee relations. Conaway v. Control Data Corp., 955 F.2d 358, 361 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 131, 113 S. Ct. 186 (1992), citing Fiorenza v. First City Bank-Central, 710 F. Supp. 1104, 1105 (E.D. Tex. 1988); Williams v. Sealed Power Corp., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3629 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 8, 1990); accord Wood v. Usco Distribution Svcs. Inc, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8204 (N.D. Tex. January 23, 1992). The recent Texas Supreme Court cases hold that although there is no general duty not to negligently inflict emotional distress, mental anguish damages may be recovered in connection with the breach of some other legal duty. Because this Court finds, pursuant to this order as well as that issued June 24, 1993, that as a matter of law Defendant has not breached a legal duty owed to Plaintiff, the claim for negligent infliction must fail.

IV. RULE 11 SANCTIONS

Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 "places three duties on counsel: (1) counsel must [14] make a reasonable investigation into the factual basis of any pleading, motion, or other paper; (2) counsel must make a reasonable inquiry into the law; and (3) counsel must not sign a [*452] pleading, motion, or other paper intended to delay proceedings, harass another party, or increase the costs of litigation." St. Amant v. Bernard, 859 F.2d 379, 382 (5th Cir. 1988). All of the above obligations are independent duties of the signing attorney, so Rule 11 is violated if any one of them is breached. Thomas v. Capital Sec. Services, Inc., 812 F.2d 984, 988 (5th Cir. 1987), aff'd on reh'g, 836 F.2d 866 (5th Cir. 1988) (en banc).

On November 25, 1991, Osborn filed his motion for leave to file his first amended complaint and attached his proposed amended complaint as an exhibit to the motion. Included among the amendments to his complaint were alleged violations of Texas antitrust law and a common law claim for tortious interference with business relations. On December 12th, BHT responded to Osborn's motion and, with regard to the two counts noted above, pointed out that Osborn could not sue personally [15] for injuries to Worldwide, for such claims could only be asserted by the corporation itself. Worldwide was not, and currently is not, a party to this lawsuit. BHT cited two cases that clearly reference this well-settled principle. Notwithstanding these authorities, Osborn filed a reply brief insisting upon his right to file his amended complaint. BHT responded again, once more urging that Osborn lacked standing to sue for injuries to Worldwide. On February 17, 1992, Osborn filed his first amended complaint and jury demand which contained the identical antitrust and tortious interference claims referenced above. BHT argues that Osborn signed and filed his first amended complaint which improperly asserts claims belonging only to Worldwide in knowing violation of Rule 11 and 28 U.S.C. § 1927.

On April 7, 1992, BHT filed its motion to dismiss and motion for partial summary judgment, again attacking Osborn's lack of standing to assert claims on behalf of Worldwide. On April 28th, counsel for BHT traveled from Dallas to Austin at significant expense for the purpose of deposing George Morgan, a former vice president and treasurer of Worldwide, regarding [16] the claims asserted by Osborn on behalf of Worldwide. On May 11th, Osborn responded to BHT's motion to dismiss and motion for partial summary judgment and admitted that "plaintiff's complaint contains an error in the entity to which the damage has been inflicted upon." This Court finds that Plaintiff's attorney's continued assertion of frivolous claims rises to the level of a Rule 11 violation.

Notwithstanding BHT's repeated reference to legal authorities that Osborn lacked standing to assert Worldwide's claims, Osborn stubbornly filed his amended complaint and thereby knowingly advanced frivolous claims. Only after these motions became ripe, BHT had gone to the expense of deposing George Morgan, and the Court had expended resources considering the issues, did Osborn seek leave of Court to replead the causes of action on behalf of Centralized Procurement Services. Based on the foregoing, this Court can only infer that Osborn toyed with the Court and BHT for over a year, first knowingly asserting a frivolous claim belonging to a non-party and then, to avoid dismissal, repleading his case on behalf of a new entity in hopes of keeping his case alive. Such gamesmanship offends the Rules, [17] places in question the merit of Osborn's case, and demonstrates a cavalier lack of candor with this Court. Accordingly, Defendant is awarded expenses incurred in connection with the deposition of George Morgan in the amount of $ 3,010.87 plus postjudgment interest.

IV. CONCLUSION

It is, therefore, ORDERED that Defendant's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claims under the Texas Antitrust Act, tortious interference with business relations, intentional infliction of emotional distress and negligent infliction of emotional distress is GRANTED, and the motion to dismiss is DENIED.

It is further ORDERED that Defendant's motion for sanctions is GRANTED and that Osborn shall pay costs incurred by BHT in connection with the deposition of George Morgan on April 28, 1992 in the amount of $ 3,010.87 plus postjudgment interest of 3.58 percent per annum from the date of this judgment until paid.

SO ORDERED.

SIGNED this 3d day of July, 1993.

TERRY R. MEANS

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

PPG Indus. v. Pilkington PLC

United States District Court for the District of Arizona

July 9, 1993, Decided ; July 9, 1993, Filed

No. CIV 92-753-TUC-WDB

Reporter

825 F. Supp. 1465 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9524 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,368

PPG INDUSTRIES, INC., a Pennsylvania corporation, Plaintiff, v. PILKINGTON plc, an English corporation; LIBBEY-OWENS-FORD CO., a Delaware corporation, Defendants.

Core Terms

arbitration, monopolization, license agreement, asserts, glass, allegations, disputes, anti trust law, argues, float, monopoly power, provisions, flat, parties, License, choice-of-law, antitrust claim, markets, arbitration clause, technology, cases, antitrust, regional, courts, words, world market, terms, motion to dismiss, law of england, probability

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN1[] Sherman Act, Claims

One of the essential elements of a Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, monopolization claim is the existence of monopoly power in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN2[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

One of the essential elements of a Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, attempted monopolization claim is the existence of a dangerous probability of monopolization.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The purpose of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is to test the formal sufficiency of the pleadings. It is not a procedure for resolving a contest about the facts or the merits of the case. Thus, the pleadings are viewed in the light most favorable to the nomnovant, with every doubt resolved in his behalf, and his allegations taken as true. The rule is that a complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In an antitrust action, the complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws. Thus, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court can properly dismiss for failure to state a claim for relief only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with its allegations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Scope

Antitrust defendants may not be held liable for attempted monopolization under the Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a particular market and specific intent to monopolize. The dangerous probability of monopolization requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

A claimant must, as a minimum, sketch the outline of an antitrust violation with allegations of supporting factual detail. In an antitrust action, the complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN7[] Arbitration, Federal Arbitration Act

The Federal Arbitration Act, at 9 U.S.C.S. § 3, states in part that if any suit be brought in any of the courts of the United States upon any issue referable to arbitration under an agreement in writing for such arbitration, the court in which such suit is pending, upon being satisfied that the issue involved in such suit is referable to arbitration under such an agreement, shall upon application of one of the parties stay the trial of the action until such arbitration has been had in accordance with the terms of the agreement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Foreign Arbitral Awards

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > Arbitration Awards

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > Agreements

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration

HN8[] Arbitration, Foreign Arbitral Awards

The Federal Arbitration Act, at 9 U.S.C.S. § 206, requires courts to refer parties to arbitration outside of the United States if their agreement provides for arbitration in a foreign country. The United States has ratified The Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards and Congress, at 9 U.S.C.S. § 201, has provided for the enforcement of such awards in United States courts.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Foreign Arbitral Awards

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration

HN9[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

The Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-16, 201-208, leaves no place for the exercise of discretion by a district court, but instead mandates that the district court shall direct the parties to proceed to arbitration on issues as to which an arbitration agreement has been signed. Therefore, the district court can only determine whether a written arbitration agreement exists, and if it does, enforce it in accordance with its terms. Thus, the court's role is strictly limited to determining arbitrability and enforcing agreements to arbitrate, leaving the merits of the claim and any defenses to the arbitrator.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Arbitrability

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Arbitration > Federal Arbitration Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Foreign Arbitral Awards

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration

HN10[] Arbitration, Arbitrability

In making the above determinations under the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-16, 201-208, the court is to apply the federal substantive law of arbitrability, which is applicable to any arbitration agreement within the coverage of the Act. That body of law counsels that questions of arbitrability must be addressed with a healthy regard for the federal policy favoring arbitration. The Federal Arbitration Act establishes that, as a matter of federal law, any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration, whether the problem at hand is the construction of the contract language itself or an allegation of waiver, delay, or a like defense to arbitrability. Thus, as with any other contract, the parties' intentions control, but those intentions are generously construed as to issues of arbitrability.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > Arbitrability

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

HN11[] Arbitration, Arbitrability

The scope of the arbitration clause must be interpreted liberally.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

HN12[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

A dispute "involving" a contract is simply not as restrictive as one "arising under," "arising hereunder," or "arising out of." The word "involving" is the functional equivalent of the words "relating to." The phrase "arising out of or relating to" is construed as creating a broad arbitration clause. Further, the use of the words "meaning, interpretation, application or violation of" do not narrow the scope of the clause. Rather, these words, too, are expansive in nature.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Arbitration Clauses

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN13[] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Arbitration Clauses

The most minimal indication of the parties' intent to arbitrate must be given full effect, especially in international disputes.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

HN14[] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Mandatory ADR

Potential complexity should not suffice to ward off arbitration. In any event, adaptability and access to expertise are hallmarks of arbitration. The anticipated subject matter of the dispute may be taken into account when the arbitrators are appointed, and arbitral rules typically provide for the participation of experts either employed by the parties or appointed by the tribunal. Moreover, it is often a judgment that streamlined proceedings and expeditious results will best serve their needs that causes parties to agree to arbitrate their disputes; it is typically a desire to keep the effort and expense within manageable bounds that prompts them mutually to forgo access to judicial remedies.

Civil Procedure > ... > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Arbitration > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Arbitration & Mediation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > International Commercial Arbitration > Arbitration

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pretrial Matters > Alternative Dispute Resolution > Mandatory ADR

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN15[] Alternative Dispute Resolution, Arbitration

There is no reason to assume at the outset of a dispute that international arbitration will not provide an adequate forum.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiff: Lawrence G D Scarborough, Esq.,Jack E. Brown, Esq., Brown & Bain PA, PO Box 400, Phoenix, AZ 85001-0400. Thomas Barr, Esq., Paul Michael Dodyk, Esq., Cravath Swaine & Moore, 825 8th Ave, New York, NY 10019.

For Defendants: Jack Kaufmann, Esq., Dewey Ballantine, 1301 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019-6092. Donald C. Klawiter, Esq., Robert Schlossberg, Esq., John H Shenefield, Esq., Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, 1800 "M" Street, N W, Ste 600, Washington, DC 20036. David Alwin Paige, Esq., Snell & Wilmer, One S Church Ave, 1500 Citibank Tower, Tucson, AZ 85701-1612.

Judges: Browning

Opinion by: WILLIAM D. BROWNING

Opinion

[*1467] ORDER

Pending before the Court are: (1) the December 18, 1992 Motion of Defendant Pilkington plc ("Pilkington") to Dismiss Counts Four and Five; and (2) Pilkington's December 18, 1992 Motion to Stay Proceedings and Compel Arbitration or Dismiss.

ORDER AND OPINION

I. Factual and Procedural Background

Plaintiff, PPG Industries, Inc. ("PPG"), has filed a Complaint alleging antitrust violations by Defendants Pilkington and Libbey-Owens-Ford Company ("LOF"). The allegations describe "a wheel-like scheme in which Pilkington operates at the hub to monopolize the [2] markets for float process technology and for flat glass." PPG's November 4, 1992 Memorandum in Support of its Application for Temporary Restraining Order, at 2. See Complaint P 20.

In the late 1950s, Pilkington developed and patented the first commercially successful float process for manufacturing flat glass. In 1962, it licensed its technology to PPG among others. Plaintiff states that "Pilkington operates or has licensed more than ninety-five percent of the existing float glass manufacturing plants worldwide." Id. at 3. Pilkington states that it has entered into more than 50 separate agreements under which 150 float glass manufacturing plants operate in some 35 countries.

In the middle 1970s, PPG patented another float process technology known as the "LB process." Subsequently, PPG and Pilkington have had a number of disputes concerning PPG's efforts to license, develop, construct, and operate float glass manufacturing plants using the LB process. Pilkington has maintained that the LB process was derivative of its technology and, thus, fell under its 1962 licensing agreement with PPG. Thus, Pilkington has sought to prevent PPG from licensing its LB process except as authorized [3] by Pilkington by initiating the arbitration of its claims. [1]

In the middle 1980s, the most recent dispute arose. PPG attempted to participate in the construction and operation of a float glass manufacturing plant based on the LB process in the People's Republic of China. In 1985, Pilkington again responded by initiating arbitration proceedings in London. In July or August 1992, the arbitrators issued their decision. According to PPG, they found that most of the float process technology items claimed as confidential by Pilkington were public knowledge, [2] and that PPG would have developed its LB process, without using Pilkington's technology, by the time PPG attempted to participate in the Chinese venture. Nonetheless, the arbitrators [4] awarded Pilkington with a "notional" royalty on PPG's use of the LB process in China.

II. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Counts Four and Five

A. Pilkington's Argument

Count Four of PPG's Complaint is a monopolization claim. Count Five is an attempted monopolization claim. Pilkington argues that PPG's allegations supporting each count are defective and do not state a claim for relief under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1988).

HN1[] One of the essential elements of a Section 2 monopolization claim is the existence of monopoly power in the relevant market. According to Pilkington, "to state a claim for monopolization (Count Four), PPG must allege, inter alia, facts that, if true, establish that Pilkington currently possesses monopoly power in the production and sale of flat glass." Motion, at 2 (citing Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Resources Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 363 [5] (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149, 109 S. Ct. 180 (1988)).

[*1468] HN2[] One of the essential elements of a Section 2 attempted monopolization claim is the existence of a dangerous probability of monopolization. Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1491

[1] The 1962 license imposes an irrevocable, royalty-free grant-back license, which permits Pilkington to use or sub-license any technological improvements developed by the licensee, and requires that all disputes arising under the license to be arbitrated in London under English law.

[2] PPG concedes that the arbitrators also found that some of the items were covered by the 1962 license.

n. 8 (9th Cir. 1991) (citing McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988)). Thus, Pilkington argues that, "to state a claim for attempted monopolization (Count Five), PPG must allege, inter alia, facts that, if true, establish the presence of a dangerous probability of monopolization by Pilkington." Motion, at 2.

Pilkington notes that courts may not condemn unilateral conduct, such as that which PPG targets in Counts Four and Five, absent the existence or impending threat of monopoly power. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-68, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 541 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 118 L. Ed. 2d 316, 112 S. Ct. 1603 (1992).

According to Pilkington, "PPG's only cognizable [6] factual allegation relating to Pilkington's 'monopoly power' in the production and sale of flat glass is that Pilkington enjoys an 'approximately 20 percent' share of a 'worldwide' market for flat glass." Motion, at 3 (citing PPG's Complaint PP 1, 10). Pilkington asserts, in a footnote, that PPG's attempt to "preserve" claims of monopolization in smaller geographic markets fails because PPG did not allege facts supporting monopoly power in these markets. Id. at 3 n. 2. Thus, it argues that a 20 percent share of the world market "is insufficient, as a matter of law, to support PPG's claims either of monopolization or attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 3.

Pilkington states that, "in order to survive a motion to dismiss a monopolization claim when the only relevant fact that plaintiff has alleged is a specific market share, the alleged market share must be 'at least above some level . . . [such that] an inference [of monopoly power] is not implausible on its face.'" [3] Id. at 6 (quoting Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 925 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348, 101 S. Ct. 1369 (1981)). [7] Pilkington then contrasts PPG's allegation that Pilkington has a 20 percent world market share with Ragu's 65 percent share found to be sufficient to state a claim in Hunt-Wesson. Pilkington asserts that an allegation of a 20 percent share is "implausible on its face" and, thus, that PPG's allegation is not "sufficient, as a matter of pleading, to withstand a motion for dismissal." Id.

[8] As support for its attack on Count Four, Pilkington cites a "legion" of cases supporting the proposition that, as a matter of law, a market share of 20 percent is insufficient to support a monopolization claim. See United Air Lines, Inc. v. Austin Travel Corp., 867 F.2d 737, 742 (2nd Cir. 1989) (appeal of summary judgment); Dimmitt Agri Indus., Inc. v. CPC Int'l Inc., 679 F.2d 516, 529 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1082 (1983) (appeal of trial court's ruling on motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict); Yoder Bros. v. California-Florida Plant Corp., 537 F.2d 1347, 1367 (5th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1094, 51 L. Ed. 2d 540, 97 S. Ct. 1108 (1977) (appeal of directed verdicts); Twin Cities Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 512 F.2d 1264, 1274 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1009, 74 L. Ed. 2d 400, 103 S. Ct. 364 (1982) (appeal of trial court judgment); R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 566 F. Supp. 1104, 1111 (N.D. Cal. 1983) (entry of summary [9] judgment). See also Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of Am., 885 F.2d 683, 694 n. 18 (10th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 972, 112 L. Ed. 2d 424, 111 S. Ct. 441 [*1469] (1990) (appeal of denial of motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for new trial); Syufy Enterprises v. American Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 995 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1031, 93 L. Ed. 2d 830, 107 S. Ct. 876 and 479 U.S. 1034 (1987) (appeal of ruling on motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict).

Pilkington states that "PPG resorts to a tortured analysis to convert the 20 percent worldwide market share . . . into something more by referencing Pilkington's position in a different alleged market, . . . 'the development,

---

[3] The Ninth Circuit stated that:

> While market share is just the starting point for assessing market power, we think that market share, at least above some level, could support a finding of market power in the absence of contrary evidence. Where such an inference is not implausible on its face, an allegation of a specific market share is sufficient, as a matter of pleading, to withstand a motion for dismissal. With nothing but Hunt's complaint before us, we cannot say that allegations that Ragu had a 65 per cent market share, and that the share of the market was increasing, could not under any market conditions provide a basis for inferring the requisite market power.

Hunt-Wesson, 627 F.2d at 925.

construction, and licensing of float process plants.'" Motion, at 7 (quoting PPG's Complaint P 13). Pilkington asserts that PPG alleges that Pilkington uses its monopoly control of the float process technology through licensing agreements to dictate who may enter the market for the production and sale of flat glass. Pilkington argues that "the law does not permit [10] PPG to graft Pilkington's position in this second 'market' onto Pilkington's position in the alleged market for the production and sale of flat glass" thereby creating a Section 2 attempted monopolization claim. Id. at 7 (citing Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 547). According to Pilkington, the Ninth Circuit has rejected the use of this "monopoly leveraging" theory to create a Section 2 violation. Id.

Because market share is the "chief barometer" for assessing market power, Pilkington asserts that PPG's allegation that Pilkington possesses a 20 percent world market share is likewise insufficient to support its allegation that there exists a dangerous probability of success by Pilkington. See, e.g., Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Concrete Corp., 691 F.2d 818, 826 (6th Cir. 1982) (appeal of directed verdicts); Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255, 271 (7th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 921, 71 L. Ed. 2d 461, 102 S. Ct. 1277 (1982) (appeal of district court's findings after bench trial); Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 841 (2nd Cir. 1980); [11] United States v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296, 305 (8th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572, 97 S. Ct. 1158 (1977) (appeal of trial court judgment).

B. PPG's Opposition

PPG states that "rather than attempting to attack the actual allegations made in Counts Four and Five . . ., Pilkington has instead effectively rewritten Counts Four and Five and confines itself to an attack on this rewritten version of the complaint." Opposition, at 1. Contrary to Pilkington's alleged mischaracterization of its Complaint, PPG states that it actually alleged that Pilkington has established and maintained monopoly power in an interrelated regional set of markets. See Complaint PP 17, 18, 35, 38. It disputes Pilkington's assertion that it alleged that Pilkington has monopolized a world market for flat glass or relied on Pilkington's 20 percent market share as evidence of market power. PPG asserts that, given modern notice pleading, its Complaint could not be disposed of on a preliminary motion before discovery and the presentation of evidence.

PPG states that it did not allege that there is a single, world market for flat glass. Paragraph [12] 13 of the Complaint states that "Pilkington holds monopoly power over the worldwide market for the development, construction and licensing of float process plants and the related markets for the sale of flat glass." As to the particular, regional markets, PPG asserts that the precise geographical market boundaries, Pilkington's share of those markets, and consequent monopoly power can only be ascertained through discovery. It further states that:

> Pilkington's sales are not evenly distributed throughout the world. Pilkington adopted a strategy of licensing its technology in certain regions of the world, carefully delimiting the production, and in some cases the sale, of glass by these licensees to specific regions [see Complaint, para. 20], while expressly and intentionally reserving for itself other regions (e.g., Argentina and Australia). In those reserved regional markets, Pilkington has enjoyed as much as 100 percent of the region's glass production, and has excluded other competitors by a variety of exclusionary practices, some of which are described in paragraph 18 of the complaint.
>
> [*1470] Contrary to the assertions made in Pilkington's present motion, PPG's complaint [13] contains not only a general allegation of Pilkington's monopolization of regional markets, but, by way of example, allegations that Pilkington and its co-conspirators have monopolized flat glass sales in two of the interrelated markets for the sale of flat glass, Argentina and Australia.
> In Argentina, PPG has alleged that Pilkington's sole licensee and co-conspirator, Vidoieria Argentina S.A. ("Vasa"), of which Pilkington owns 65 percent, possesses monopoly power. [See Complaint, para. 18(a)]
> . . . .
> Similarly, PPG has alleged that, in Australia, Pilkington (Australia) Limited is the sole float manufacturer. [See Complain, para. 18(b)]

Opposition, at 6-7 (emphasis in original). [4] Thus, PPG argues that its allegations are sufficient to state a claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See Fox Chem. Co. v. Amsoil, Inc., 445 F. Supp. 1355, 1360 (D. Minn. 1978), cited with approval by Hunt-Wesson, 627 F.2d at 925.

[14] In regard to Pilkington's "monopoly leveraging" argument, PPG argues that the principles stated in Alaska Airlines do not support the dismissal of Counts Four and Five. It states that:

> The monopoly leveraging theory at issue in Alaska Airlines was first enunciated in Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980). In both cases, the relevant issue was whether a Section 2 violation could be made out under circumstances in which a defendant was using "monopoly power in one market to gain a competitive advantage in another." Id. at 275; accord Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 546. However, both courts expressly distinguished cases in which monopoly power in the first market is used to "attempt to monopolize the second market." Id. at 275 (emphasis added); accord Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 546.

Opposition, at 13. PPG asserts that it has alleged that Pilkington has used its monopoly power over the float process technology in an attempt to create or maintain [15] monopolies in regional markets for the production and sale of flat glass.

C. Pilkington's Reply

Pilkington cites a recent Supreme Court case, Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993), for the proposition that in an attempted monopolization case "the demands that Section 2 places on a plaintiff are 'plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics,' but 'require[] inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendants's economic power in that market.'" Reply, at 2 (quoting Spectrum Sports, 113 S. Ct. at 892). Pilkington characterizes this holding of the Supreme Court as creating a "monopoly power screen" for attempted monopolization cases. Reply, at 2.

D. Discussion

(1) Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

HN3[] The purpose of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is to test the formal sufficiency of the pleadings. 5A Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1356, at 294 (2d ed. 1990). It is not "a procedure for resolving a contest about the facts or the merits of the case." Id. Thus, the pleadings at issue are viewed [16] in the light most favorable to the nomnovant, with every doubt resolved in his behalf, and his allegations taken as true. Abramson v. Brownstein, 897 F.2d 389, 391 (9th Cir. 1990). The rule is that a complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Abramson, 897 F.2d at 391.

[*1471] "In HN4[] an antitrust action, the complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws." Newman v. Universal Pictures, 813 F.2d 1519, 1522 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1059, 100 L. Ed. 2d 931, 108 S. Ct. 2831 (1988). Thus, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the Court could properly dismiss Counts Four and Five for failure to state a claim for relief "'only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with [its] allegations.'" Id. at 1521-22 [17] (quoting Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984)).

---

[4] PPG also cites documentary evidence, such as Pilkington's 1992 Annual Report, and declarations of counsel to support its allegations. But because this a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court will simply take PPG's allegations as true and not look beyond the Complaint. Therefore, the Court will not consider this documentary evidence in reaching its decision.

(2) Analysis

The Court will deny Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. The Court finds that PPG's allegations regarding monopoly power and the existence of a dangerous probability thereof are sufficiently well pleaded to withstand a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. See Newman, 813 F.2d at 1522.

Most of the cases cited by Pilkington do not address Rule 12(b)(6) motions in antitrust cases. There is a distinct difference between the elements that must be satisfied to prove a defendant liable for a Section 2 violation and Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)'s requirement of "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Spectrum Sports is an example. Pilkington cites Spectrum Sports for the proposition that the Supreme Court has recently imposed a "monopoly power screen" in attempted monopolization cases. Although the case makes it clear that a defendant may not be held liable for attempted monopolization without proof of a dangerous probability of monopolization in a relevant market, see Spectrum Sports, 113 S. Ct. at 892, [18] the Court questions its utility on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

Spectrum Sports does not deal with the district court's ruling on a motion to dismiss. After a jury verdict finding that the defendants had violated Section 2, the issue in the Supreme Court was whether the district court correctly instructed the jury on the elements of attempted monopolization. Id. at 887. The district court defined the elements correctly under applicable Ninth Circuit precedent, but this precedent conflicted with the law announced in the other circuits. Id. at 889. The Supreme Court strongly disapproved of the prior Ninth Circuit precedent and defined the elements of an attempted monopolization claim in accordance with the rest of the circuits. Id. at 891 ("We are not at all inclined . . . to embrace Lessig's interpretation of § 2, for there is little if any support for it in the statute or the case law, and the notion that proof of unfair or predatory conduct alone is sufficient to make out the offense of attempted monopolization is contrary to the purpose and policy of the Sherman [19] Act."). [5] Thus, the Supreme Court held that HN5[] antitrust defendants "may not be held liable for attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act absent proof of a dangerous probability that they would monopolize a particular market and specific intent to monopolize." Id. at 892. The dangerous probability of monopolization "requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendant's economic power in that market." Id. Thus, although the Supreme Court may have imposed a "monopoly power screen" for liability, in terms of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, Spectrum Sports merely eliminates the possibility that allegations of "clearly exclusionary conduct" would suffice to state a claim for attempted monopolization in the absence of allegations of a dangerous probability of monopolization.

[20] With the exception of Hunt-Wesson, the "legion" of cases cited by Pilkington to support its argument that an allegation of a 20% world market share is insufficient to state a claim for monopolization and attempted monopolization concern determinations on summary judgment motions, motions for directed verdicts, and post-trial motions. As such, they are of little use to the Court. The Court, of course, does not question that an allegation of a 20% market share in a relevant [*1472] market would fail to state claim under Rule 12(b)(6). The Court finds, however, that PPG's allegations sufficiently allege that Pilkington possesses market power in several regional markets for the sale of flat glass. See PP 17, 18(a), 18(b), 35, 38. 39. PPG does allege that Pilkington has monopolized the world market for float glass technology. However, when describing Pilkington's conduct and power in regard to the production and sale of flat glass, PPG refers to regional markets. When the Court reads PPG's allegations describing Pilkington's market power in "world markets," it views the pleadings at issue in the light most favorable to PPG and with every doubt resolved in its behalf. Brownstein, 897 F.2d at 391. [21] See also Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1989). Thus, the Court finds that these allegations do not describe a single world market for the production and sale of flat glass.

---

[5] The Supreme Court was referring to Lessig v. Tidewater Oil Co., 327 F.2d 459 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 993 (1964), and its progeny.

The Court is mindful that "a HN6[] claimant must, as a minimum, sketch the outline of the antitrust violation with allegations of supporting factual detail." Les Shockley Racing, 884 F.2d at 508. However, the Court finds that PPG's allegations contained in paragraphs 18(a) and 18(b), describing the existence of monopoly power or the dangerous probability of monopolization in the Australian and Argentinean markets, fulfill this requirement. See Newman, 813 F.2d at 1522 ("In an antitrust action, the complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws."). Here, the Court cannot conclude that "it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Id. at 1521-22 (quoting Hishon, 467 U.S. at 73).

[22] III. Motion to Stay Proceedings and Compel Arbitration or Dismiss

The determinative questions are: (1) whether PPG's antitrust claims are arbitrable under the 1962 License Agreement; and (2) if so, whether the 1962 License Agreement's choice-of-forum and choice-of-law provisions operate as a prospective waiver of these claims by precluding the application of United States antitrust law.

A. Whether PPG's Claims Are Arbitrable Under the 1962 License Agreement

(1)Pilkington's Argument

Article XII of the 1962 License Agreement provides, in pertinent part, under the heading of "Arbitration" that:

> Any dispute involving the meaning, interpretation, application or violation of the provisions of this agreement which cannot be settled by discussion and mutual accord shall be settled by arbitration by three arbitrators of whom one shall be nominated by [Pilkington], one by [PPG], and a third by the two arbitrators to be nominated.
> . . . .
> The seat of the arbitration shall be in London, and the arbitration shall be in accordance with the laws of England.
> The decision of the arbitrators shall be final and binding on the parties.

1962 License Agreement, [23] Article XII (emphasis added). Article XIII of the 1962 License Agreement provides, under the heading of "Construction," that "the Agreement shall be governed by the laws of England."

Pilkington notes that it brings this Motion pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA"), 9 U.S.C. §§ 1-16, 201-208, and that the FAA embodies an "emphatic federal policy in favor of arbitral dispute resolution[,]" . . . which "applies with special force in the field of international commerce." Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 631, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, 105 S. Ct. 3346 (1985). HN7[] The FAA, in pertinent part, states that:

. . . .

> If any suit . . . be brought in any of the courts of the United States upon any issue referable to arbitration under an agreement in writing for such arbitration, the court in which such suit is pending, upon being satisfied that the issue involved in such suit . . . is referable to arbitration under such an agreement, shall upon application of one of the parties stay the [*1473] trial of the action until such arbitration has been had in accordance with the terms of the agreement. . . .

9 U.S.C. § 3 [24] (emphasis added). HN8[] The FAA also requires courts to refer parties to arbitration outside of the United States if their agreement provides for arbitration in a foreign country. See 9 U.S.C. § 206. The United States has ratified The Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards ("New York Convention") and Congress has provided for the enforcement of such awards in United States courts. See 9 U.S.C. § 201.

"The [HN9] FAA] leaves no place for the exercise of discretion by a district court, but instead mandates that the district court shall direct the parties to proceed to arbitration on issues as to which an arbitration agreement has been signed." Dean, Witter Reynolds v. Byrd, 470 U.S. 213, 218, 84 L. Ed. 2d 158, 105 S. Ct. 1238 (1985) (emphasis in original). "'Therefore, the district court can only determine whether a written arbitration agreement exists, and if it does, enforce it in accordance with its terms.'" Republic of Nicaragua v. Standard Fruit Co., 937 F.2d 469, 475 (9th Cir. 1991) (quoting Howard Elec. & Mech. Co., Inc. v. Frank Briscoe Co., 754 F.2d 847, 849 (9th Cir. 1985)), [25] cert. denied, 112 S. Ct. 1294 (1992) (emphasis in original). Thus, the Court's "role is strictly limited to determining arbitrability and enforcing agreements to arbitrate, leaving the merits of the claim and any defenses to the arbitrator." Standard Fruit, 937 F.2d at 478.

HN10[] In making the above determinations, the Court is to "apply the 'federal substantive law of arbitrability,'" which is "'applicable to any arbitration agreement within the Coverage of the Act.'" Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 626 (quoting Moses H. Cone Memorial Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 24, 74 L. Ed. 2d 765, 103 S. Ct. 927 (1983)). The Supreme Court further stated:

> That body of law counsels:
>
> > "that questions of arbitrability must be addressed with a healthy regard for the federal policy favoring arbitration. . . . The [FAA] establishes that, as a matter of federal law, any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration, whether the problem at hand is the construction of the contract language itself or an allegation of waiver, delay, or a like defense to arbitrability." [26] Moses H. Cone Memorial Hosp., 460 U.S. at 24-25, 103 S. Ct. at 941-942.
>
> See, e.g., Steelworkers v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 582-583, 80 S. Ct. 1347, 1352-1353, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1409 (1960). Thus, as with any other contract, the parties' intentions control, but those intentions are generously construed as to issues of arbitrability.

Id.

Pilkington, of course, argues that PPG's claims constitute a "dispute" that the parties agreed to arbitrate under Article XII. It characterizes the wording of Article XII as "quite broad." Pilkington's Memorandum, at 11. Pilkington states that:

> As an initial matter, the clause comprehends "any dispute," regardless how defined, if it involves the Agreement.
>
> The word "involving" is also expansive. As the arbitration panel stated in determining that the 1988 Draft Complaint [6] was arbitrable: "the word 'involving' is an ordinary word of the English language and it expresses a certain nexus between the dispute and the License Agreement, a nexus which is of a general nature. Thus, a dispute may 'involve' the License Agreement even [27] though it does not concern a contractual claim under the Agreement." Walsh Declaration Tab 2 at 3-4. The word "involving" carries the same meaning here as "relating to," which courts have found denotes a broad arbitration clause. See Todd Shipyards Corp. v. Cunard Line, Ltd., 943 F.2d 1056, 1060 (9th Cir. 1991) ("'Any and every dispute, difference or [*1474] question . . . relating to this Agreement" is an "expansive arbitration provision.")
>
> . . . .
>
> Moreover, courts have consistently held that arbitration clauses covering disputes that concern the "interpretation" of a contract, the "meaning and application" of contract clauses, and similar phrases are very broad in their coverage and should be broadly construed.

Id. at 11-12.

---

[6] During the arbitration proceedings begun in 1985, PPG submitted a draft federal court complaint alleging antitrust claims to the arbitrators for an advisory opinion concerning the arbitrability of the claims.

As support, Pilkington cites a number of [28] cases. Warrior and Gulf, 363 U.S. at 576, 584-85 (clause requiring arbitration of "differences . . . as to the meaning and application of the provisions of the Agreement" described as "quite broad"); United Steelworkers of Am. v. American Mfg. Co., 363 U.S. 564, 565, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1403, 80 S. Ct. 1343 n. 1 (1960); Challenger v. Local Union No. 1 of the Int'l Bridge, Structural, and Ornamental Ironworkers, AFL-CIO, 619 F.2d 645, 647 (7th Cir. 1980). According to Pilkington, the Ninth Circuit has construed equivalent language to Article XII. Mediterranean Enterprises, Inc. v. Ssangyong Corp., 708 F.2d 1458, 1464 (9th Cir. 1983) (contrasting the phrase "arising out of or relating to this agreement" with "arising hereunder" and finding that the former is more expansive than the latter). Finally, Pilkington compares Article XII with the Mitsubishi clause and characterizes the Mitsubishi clause as narrower because it referred only to portions of that agreement. Pilkington's Memorandum, at 14. The Supreme Court stated that:

. . . .

> insofar as the allegations [29] underlying the statutory claims touch matters covered by the enumerated articles, the Court of Appeals properly resolved any doubts in favor of arbitrability.

Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 624 n. 13.

Next, Pilkington specifies the reasons why it believes that PPG's claims "'touch matters' covered by the Agreement and therefore must be arbitrated." Pilkington's Memorandum, at 14 (quoting Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 624 n. 13). Pilkington makes the following assertions:

> (1) Because the Complaint alleges that Pilkington has used the 1962 License Agreement to keep PPG from using its LB process in specific world markets, Pilkington asserts that this claim involves the application of the Agreement, see Complaint PP 1, 19;
>
> (2) Because the Complaint alleges that Pilkington has misused the 1962 License Agreement to restrict the quantity of glass that licensees may manufacture, to create barriers to entry, and to establish monopolies, Pilkington asserts that these claims touch matters covered by the Agreement, see Complaint PP 7-14, 20;
>
> (3) Because the Complaint alleges that Pilkington has used the restrictive terms [30] of the 1962 License Agreement to suppress competition, Pilkington asserts that this claim involves the application of the Agreement, see Complaint P 17;
>
> (4) Because the Complaint alleges that one of Pilkington's anticompetitive acts was to use Article XII requiring PPG to submit to arbitration, Pilkington asserts that this claim calls into question the meaning, interpretation, application, or violation of the Agreement, see Complaint P 18(a); and
>
> (5) Because the Complaint's prayer for relief asks the Court to declare that the Agreement's restraints are "null, void and unenforceable," Pilkington asserts that this relief requires the Court to apply or interpret the Agreement.

Pilkington's Memorandum, at 15-18.

Pilkington argues that PPG has cosmetically reworked its 1988 draft complaint in an attempt to avoid the impact of Mitsubishi. Citing "PPG's efforts to clutter its current Complaint with allegations concerning exports to Argentina and other foreign locales and misconduct in the 'flat glass market,'" Pilkington states that these claims are likewise subject to arbitration because they are premised on the 1962 License Agreement. Id. at 19-20. As support, [31] it cites the First Circuit's decision in Mitsubishi. Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 723 F.2d 155, 160-61 (1st Cir. 1983), aff'd [*1475] in part, rev'd in part, Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. 614, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444, 105 S. Ct. 3346 (1987).

(2) PPG's Opposition

In reference to the terms of Article XII, PPG states that:

> The terms "meaning" and "interpretation" refer to the definition of the provisions of the Float License. The term "application" refers to the manner in which a provision of the Float License is supposed to operate in a given circumstance. The term "violation" refers to whether a party has breached a provision of the Float License. That is all the parties agreed to arbitrate under the Float License.
> Resolution of the issues raised in PPG's complaint does not require this Court to determine the meaning of any term in the Float License or whether Pilkington has violated any provision.

Opposition, at 2 (emphasis in original).

PPG disputes Pilkington's argument that Article XII is broader in scope than the Mitsubishi arbitration clause. The latter provision provides that:

> "All disputes, controversies or differences [32] which may arise between [the parties] out of or in relation to Articles I-B through V of this Agreement or for the breach thereof, shall be finally settled by arbitration."

Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 617. PPG argues that Article XII and the Mitsubishi clause differ because: (1) Article XII applies only to disputes "involving the meaning, interpretation, application or violation of the provisions of" the 1962 License Agreement; and (2) the term "involving" is narrower in scope than the clause "arising out of or in relation to" as the latter is used in the Mitsubishi provision. PPG asserts that Article XII, read as a whole, is "limited to disputes requiring a decision as to the 'meaning' of provisions in the agreement or the parties' 'violation' of those provisions." Opposition, at 5.

PPG argues that Pilkington's construction "ignores controlling Ninth Circuit precedent that makes clear that the omission of the phrase 'relating to' is 'significant' and indicates that the agreement is 'intended to cover a much narrower scope of disputes.'" Id. (quoting Mediterranean Enter., 708 F.2d at 1463-64). See also Swensen's Ice Cream Co. v. Corsair Corp., 942 F.2d 1307, 1309 (8th Cir. 1991); [33] In re Kinoshita & Co., 287 F.2d 951, 953 (2nd Cir. 1961); American President Lines, Ltd. v. S. Woolman, Inc., 239 F. Supp. 833, 836 (S.D.N.Y. 1964). PPG further argues that the terms "meaning, interpretation, application or violation" also limit the scope of disputes subject to arbitration. See Northern Cal. Newspaper Guild Local 52 v. Sacramento Union, 856 F.2d 1381, 1383 (9th Cir. 1988) (clause "limiting arbitrable disputes to those involving 'application of' the Agreement" limited arbitrable disputes to those "involving construction of the substantive provisions of the contract"). PPG states that:

> The absence of the phrase "relating to" and the presence of the other words of limitation, "meaning, interpretation, application or violation," make it obvious that this arbitration clause was designed to cover a much narrower class of disputes than the clauses on which Pilkington relies.

Opposition, at 6-7.

PPG also argues that its interpretation is supported by the fact that "several other agreements . . . between [the parties] provided for arbitration for 'any controversy or claim [34] arising out or relating to this agreement." Id. at 7 (citing Zoghby Declaration, Tabs 2-6). PPG notes that this language is similar to that in Mitsubishi and, thus, demonstrates that the parties could agree on a broader class of arbitrable disputes when they so desired.

PPG challenges Pilkington's assertion, based on language in Mitsubishi, that disputes that "touch matters covered by" the 1962 License Agreement are arbitrable. According to PPG, the fact that the Mitsubishi provision was much broader in scope than the one at issue here renders the "touch matters" standard inappropriate here. The question for the Court, as framed by PPG, is whether PPG's claims require the Court to decide a "dispute involving the meaning, interpretation, application or violation of the provisions of" the 1962 License Agreement. [*1476] PPG asserts that the following claims do not require that inquiry:

> (1) Pilkington's alleged imposition of exclusive dealing agreements on purchasers of glass;
> (2) Pilkington's alleged acquisition of independent flat glass wholesalers, distributors, and manufacturers thereby facilitating the imposition of exclusive dealing agreements;

(3) Pilkington's [35] use of litigation to allegedly coerce competitors into acceptance of restraints, to suppress competition from competitive technologies, and to create barriers to entry; and

(4) Pilkington's alleged economic and legal threats to potential customers, suppliers, and financial backers of companies that compete with it.

See Complaint PP 13-18. In reference to Pilkington's use of litigation, PPG asserts that:

> None of those allegations raises any dispute about the meaning or violation of any agreements underlying those suits. Whatever the meaning of the terms of those agreements and whether they were violated . . ., Pilkington has used that litigation as part of its scheme to monopolize the markets for float glass technology and flat glass and thereby violated the Sherman Act.

Opposition, at 11.

According to PPG, its prayer for relief does not demonstrate that its claims are arbitrable. PPG states that the 1962 License Agreement provides that "the arbitrators shall not have the power to alter, amend or add to the provisions of this Agreement." See 1962 License Agreement, Article XII. Thus, PPG argues that, because only this Court has the power to declare the Agreement [36] "null, void and unenforceable," its prayer for relief is a further demonstration that its claims are not arbitrable.

In an attempt to distinguish Mitsubishi, PPG asserts that its monopolization claims are unlike Mitsubishi's contract-related claims. According to PPG, the Mitsubishi claims directly implicated the parties' performance under their contract whereas "the dispute here centers around whether the agreement played a role in a much wider [anticompetitive] scheme." Washburn v. Societe Commerciale de Reassurance, 831 F.2d 149, 151 (7th Cir. 1987) (reinsurance agreement's arbitration provision did not cover RICO claims, which alleged a conspiracy to use various agreements and "several other devices . . . to drive [a company] further into insolvency and defraud entities and individuals who had interests in the continued viability of [the company]"). See also Swensen's, 942 F.2d at 1310.

PPG also challenges Pilkington's citation of the 1988 advisory opinion of the arbitrators. First, PPG asserts that the two complaints at issue differ markedly. According to PPG, "the 1988 draft complaint was based entirely [37] on PPG's allegation that Pilkington was 'wrongfully and wilfully asserting beyond any possible warrant that information licensed to PPG under the 1962 license remains protectible as trade secret information.'" Opposition, at 17. Thus, PPG argues that the 1988 arbitration and the 1988 draft complaint were both based on the narrow question of whether Pilkington "know-how" had become public information whereas the Complaint in this action does not involve that issue. Id. Second, PPG notes that the arbitrability of its claims is to be determined under federal law rather than the English law of arbitrability. Finally, PPG quibbles about the non-binding nature of the arbitrators' 1988 advisory opinion.

PPG states that it is proper for this Court to consider the state of the law at the time the parties entered into their agreement in order to ascertain their intentions. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. American Train Dispatchers Ass'n, 499 U.S. 117, __, 113 L. Ed. 2d 95, 111 S. Ct. 1156, 111 S. Ct. 1156, 1164 (1991) ("Laws which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract, and where it is to be performed, enter into and form a part of it, as fully as if they had [38] been expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms".). PPG notes that, until 1978, no court had held that antitrust claims were arbitrable. Thus, PPG argues that the fact that it never attempted to renegotiate the terms of Article XII to exclude antitrust claims does not support the conclusion that [*1477] the parties intended antitrust claims to be arbitrable.

(3) Pilkington's Reply

Pilkington attempts to distinguish Mediterranean, on which PPG relied for the proposition that "the omission of the phrase 'relating to' is 'significant' and indicates that the agreement is 'intended to cover a much narrower scope of disputes.'" Opposition, at 5 (quoting Mediterranean, 708 F.2d at 1463-64). Pilkington states that:

> The Ninth Circuit did not hold that an arbitration clause that lacks the phrase "relating to" must be read as narrowly as one containing the phrase "arising hereunder."

> PPG's argument also overlooks the fact that the words "involve" or "involving" are often described as synonymous to the words "relate" or "relating to." See Webster's New World Dictionary 742 (2d ed. 1986) (definition of "involve" includes "to relate to"); William [39] C. Burton, Legal Thesaurus 297 (1980) ("involve" defined to include the word "relate").

Reply, at 4-5.

Pilkington next argues that PPG's construction of the words "meaning, interpretation, application or violation" ignores PPG's own admonition that the clause should be "read as a whole." See Opposition, at 6. Additionally, Pilkington asserts that PPG has misconstrued the Ninth Circuit's holding in Newspaper Guild. Pilkington states that:

> The Newspaper Guild court held only that the arbitration clause . . . did not encompass the determination of whether the underlying contract was in effect at the time the cause of action arose. See 856 F.2d at 1383-84. Indeed, the court characterized the clause as "broad" and remanded the case for a determination of the status of the agreement with instructions to refer the case to arbitration if the underlying contract was . . . in effect. Id. at 1383.

Reply, at 6.

Pilkington disputes PPG's assertion that, until 1978, no court had held that antitrust claims were arbitrable. According to Pilkington, there was authority prior to 1962 that suggested that such [40] claims were arbitrable or that it was an open issue. See Greenstein v. National Skirt & Sportswear Ass'n, Inc., 178 F. Supp. 681 (S.D.N.Y. 1959), appeal dismissed, 274 F.2d 430 (2nd Cir. 1960).

Pilkington then uses PPG's own argument to demonstrate why its claims are arbitrable. According to Pilkington, PPG's allegation of Pilkington's "exclusionary conduct, including 'sham' litigation, to effect its anticompetitive scheme--undermines this point." Reply, at 9. Pilkington argues that the question of whether it misused the 1962 License Agreement to effect the alleged anticompetitive scheme or whether its use of the agreement was the legitimate protection of its intellectual property is a pivotal issue in the resolution of PPG's monopolization and attempted monopolization claims. Pilkington asserts that its "use or threatened use of litigation or regulatory proceedings necessarily touches upon issues involving the meaning, application, interpretation, or violation of the provisions of the Agreement." Id. at 9-10.

In rebuttal of PPG's argument that the arbitrators lack the authority to "alter, amend or add to the provisions [41] of" the Agreement, Pilkington states that PPG ignores Article IX F., which provides the panel with power to curtail and limit provisions that are illegal. It notes that this is exactly the remedy sought by PPG in the 1988 arbitration.

In reference to PPG's assertion that its claims do not involve the meaning, interpretation, application, or violation of the Agreement's provisions because Pilkington's use of the Agreement's restrictions is part of a wider anticompetitive scheme, Pilkington states that:

> In Washburn, . . . the court held that the plaintiff's RICO claim was not arbitrable because no analysis of the subject agreement's terms would have been relevant to the evaluation and ultimate resolution of the RICO claim. The court found that, "even if every word of the . . . agreement were interpreted, this case would be no closer to a resolution . . . .
>
> Interpreting the agreement itself would provide no assistance in resolving that issue." [Washburn,] 831 F.2d at 151. By contrast, the [*1478] meaning, interpretation, application and violation of the Agreement's provisions are central to the resolution of PPG's claims . . . .

Reply, at 14.

[42] (4) Discussion

According to PPG, the Article XII's words "any disputes involving the meaning, interpretation, application or violation of the provisions of this agreement" would be equivalent to narrow arbitration clauses such as "any dispute arising hereunder" or any dispute arising under." But Article XII's language, the Court concludes, cannot be read as narrowly as PPG suggests. The Supreme Court instructs that the parties' intentions are to be "generously construed in favor of arbitrability" and "any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues should be resolved in favor of arbitration." Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 626. See also Standard Fruit, 937 F.2d at 478 ("The HN11[] scope of the [arbitration] clause must. . . be interpreted liberally"). PPG's reading of the Agreement would violate these principles. Under the 1962 License Agreement, the arbitrable claims are not limited simply to those involving breaches of the Agreement as a contract.

The Court finds that Article XII's language is a broad arbitration clause. PPG ignores the import of Article XII's inclusion of the words "involving the meaning, interpretation, application [43] or violation of the provisions of this agreement." HN12[] A dispute "involving" a contract is simply not as restrictive as one "arising under," "arising hereunder," or "arising out of." The Court finds that the word "involving" is the functional equivalent of the words "relating to." The phrase "arising out of or relating to" has been construed as creating a broad arbitration clause. See Mediterranean Enter., 708 F.2d at 1464. Article XII's scope is similar in breadth. Further, the use of the words "meaning, interpretation, application or violation of" does not narrow the scope of the clause. Rather, these words, too, are expansive in nature. See Warrior and Gulf, 363 U.S. at 585 (the words "differences . . . as to the meaning and application of" described as creating an arbitration clause that is "quite broad").

PPG's factual allegations repeatedly accuse Pilkington of using its 1962 License Agreement as an anticompetitive tool. In regard to PPG's antitrust claims, Pilkington cannot be held liable for simply being a successful competitor. The resolution of PPG's claims will require the Court to [44] determine whether Pilkington's use of litigation and arbitration pursuant to the Agreement was simply the legitimate protection of its intellectual property rights, or anticompetitive and exclusionary acts. The Court will necessarily have to interpret or ascertain the meaning of the Agreement to determine if Pilkington has misused the Agreement's restraints in the manner alleged. "The clear weight of authority holds that HN13[] the most minimal indication of the parties' intent to arbitrate must be given full effect, especially in international disputes." Standard Fruit, 937 F.2d at 478 (citing Bauhinia Corp. v. China Nat'l Mach. & Equip. Import & Export Corp., 819 F.2d 247, 249-50 (9th Cir. 1987); Mediterranean, 708 F.2d at 1462-63). Based on this policy of liberal interpretation of the scope of arbitration clauses, therefore, PPG's claims are arbitrable under Article XII of the 1962 License Agreement.

B. Whether the 1962 License Agreement's choice-of-forum and choice-of-law provisions operate as a prospective waiver of these claims by precluding the application of United States antitrust law

[45] (1) Pilkington's Argument

Pilkington argues that the 1962 License Agreement's choice-of-forum and choice-of-law provisions will not preclude the application of U.S. antitrust law by the arbitral panel. First, it asserts that Article XII is simply a provision mandating a choice of procedural, rather than substantive, law. Valero Refining, Inc. v. M/T Lauberhorn, 813 F.2d 60, 64 n. 5, 65 (5th Cir. 1987). It states that Article XII's reference to the "laws of England" read in conjunction with [*1479] the provision specifying the "seat of arbitration," is "naturally read as a reference to the 'rules' of arbitration." Pilkington's Memorandum, at 24. Pilkington asserts that Article XII mirrors a clause in the Mitsubishi agreement specifying that "all disputes . . . shall be finally settled by arbitration in Japan in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Japan Commercial Arbitration Association." Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 617. According to Pilkington, both clauses' use of the phrase, "in accordance with," denotes the rules or laws governing the procedure to be used. Pilkington argues that its interpretation of the [46] Agreement is buttressed by Article XIII, which provides that the Agreement "shall be governed by the laws of England." Pilkington states that Article XIII would be redundant if Article XII was a complete choice of law provision.

Second, Pilkington asserts that Article XIII does not mandate the application of English law to every dispute that may "involve" the 1962 License Agreement. The correct reading of Article XIII, argues Pilkington, is that the provision requires the application of English law to the rights and obligations of the parties under the contract. According to Pilkington, Article XIII does not govern every dispute that may "involve" the Agreement under Article XII. See In re Hops Antitrust Litig., 655 F. Supp. 169, 170 (E.D. Mo.), appeal dismissed, 832 F.2d 470 (8th Cir.

1987). See also Gemco Latinoamerica, Inc. v. Seiko Time Corp., 671 F. Supp. 972, 975 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). Again, Pilkington cites Mitsubishi as controlling. Pilkington states that:

> There, in addition to the choice-of-forum clause (Japan) and a choice-of-procedural-rules clause (Japan Commercial Arbitration [47] Association), the agreement also contained a choice-of law clause: "This Agreement is made in, and will be governed by and construed in all respects according to the laws of the Swiss Confederation as if entirely performed therein." Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 637 n. 19. This clause is broader and more encompassing than the one at issue here and on its face would appear not to permit an examination of a claim under the U.S. antitrust laws. The Supreme Court, however, read the clause as reaching only issues concerning contract interpretation, stayed the antitrust action, and compelled the parties to arbitrate the antitrust claims in Japan under Japanese procedural rules. Similarly, the fact that Article XIII provides that the "Agreement shall be governed by the laws of England," should not act as a bar to this Court's staying these proceedings and ordering arbitration of PPG's Sherman Act claims.

Pilkington's Memorandum, at 25-26.

Pilkington then asserts that English law does not preclude the application of U.S. antitrust law in arbitration. See Crystal Declaration PP 6, 10. According to Pilkington, the testimony of PPG's English law expert, Mr. [48] Sydney Kentridge, does not rebut this assertion. Pilkington characterizes all of Kentridge's testimony as confusing the issue of the scope of the arbitration clause with the issue of the law applicable to arbitral disputes.

As sort of an alternative argument, Pilkington contends that the arbitral panel, rather than this Court, should decide the law applicable to PPG's claims. Standard Fruit, 937 F.2d at 478 (court's role limited to determining whether the claim falls within the scope of the arbitration clause). According to Pilkington, Atsa of Cal., Inc. v. Continental Ins. Co., 702 F.2d 172, 175 (9th Cir. 1983), amended, 754 F.2d 1394 (9th Cir. 1985), stands for the proposition that, in the absence of a choice-of-law provision, the Court has no authority to determine the applicable law. Instead, argues Pilkington, only "the arbitrator has the authority to determine the applicable law." Id. Thus, it states that the correct procedure mandated by Mitsubishi is for the Court to consider the law applicable to PPG's claims only at the enforcement stage after the arbitral panel has ruled. [49] The Supreme Court stated that:

> Nor need we consider now the effect of an arbitral tribunal's failure to take cognizance of the statutory cause of action on the claimant's capacity to reinstate suit in federal court. We merely note that in the event the choice-of-forum and choice-of-law [*1480] clauses operated in tandem as a prospective waiver of a party's right to pursue statutory remedies for antitrust violations, we would have little hesitation in condemning the agreement as against public policy.

Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 637 n. 19. The Supreme Court further stated that:

> Having permitted the arbitration to go forward, the national courts of the United States will have the opportunity at the award-enforcement stage to ensure that the legitimate interest in the enforcement of the antitrust laws has been addressed. The [New York] Convention reserves to each signatory country the right to refuse enforcement of an award where the "recognition or enforcement of the award would be contrary to the public policy of that country." Art. V(2)(b) . . . . While the efficacy of the arbitral process requires that substantive review at the award-enforcement [50] stage remain minimal, it would not require intrusive [federal court] inquiry to ascertain that the tribunal took cognizance of the antitrust claims and actually decided them.

Id. at 638.

(2) PPG's Opposition

Based on Mitsubishi's footnote 19, PPG argues that its claims are not subject to arbitration. Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 637 n. 19. According to PPG, Article XII, as applied to its antitrust claims, operates as a prospective waiver of its claims because: (1) Article XII does not permit the arbitrators to apply U.S. antitrust law to its claims; (2) English law does not permit recovery under the Sherman or Clayton Acts thereby precluding PPG from enforcing any judgment the arbitrators might issue in its favor; and (3) under Article XII, the arbitrators lack the power to alter or amend the provisions of the 1962 License Agreement.

PPG, of course, reads Articles XII and XIII as requiring the arbitrators to apply English law to all disputes "involving the meaning, interpretation, application or violation of the provisions of" the 1962 License Agreement. According to PPG, anything arbitrable under Article XII [51] is to be decided under English law. PPG asserts that courts construing identical or narrower choice-of-law provisions are contrary to Pilkington's position. See Armco Steel Co. v. CSX Corp., 790 F. Supp. 311, 318-19 (D.D.C. 1991). Accord Todd Shipyards, 943 F.2d at 1061 n. 2, 1063; Castelan v. M/V Mercantil Parati, Civ. A No. 91-1351, 1991 WL 83129 at *1, *3 (D.N.J. 1991).

Further, PPG disputes Pilkington's reliance on Mitsubishi. First, contrary to Pilkington's position, PPG asserts that the Mitsubishi choice-of-law provision is not broader than the one at issue here. Second, PPG states that Pilkington ignores language of the Mitsubishi provision that immediately follows the choice-of-law sentence quoted by Pilkington. See Mitsubishi, 723 F.2d at 158 n. 1. According to PPG, this subsequent language makes it clear that, despite the choice of Swiss law, the arbitrators could consider U.S. antitrust law. PPG states that the 1962 License Agreement "prohibits any such flexibility." Opposition, at 27. Finally, PPG notes that: (1) Mitsubishi "conceded that American law applied to [52] the antitrust claims and represented that the claims had been submitted to the panel in Japan on that basis; (2) Soler did not argue otherwise; and (3) the Supreme Court specifically refused to rule of the scope of the choice-of-law provision. Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 637 n. 19.

PPG argues that Mitsubishi supports the Court's prospective determination of whether the effect of Articles XII and XIII "warrant setting aside the forum-selection clause." Id. at 632. [7] PPG states that:

> [*1481] Pilkington's argument. . . that Mitsubishi held that consideration of this issue must await the enforcement of the award is misplaced. In Mitsubishi, the antitrust claims had been submitted to arbitration under U.S. law before the Court's condemnation of the case. This fact alone explains the Court's statement that, "having permitted the arbitration to go forward, the national courts of the United States will have the opportunity at the award-enforcement stage to ensure that the legitimate interest in the enforcement of the antitrust laws has been addressed." [Mitsubishi, 473 U.S.] at 638.
>
> Pilkington's argument ignores the [53] Court's reliance on cases holding that prospective waivers or releases of antitrust claims invalid. Id. The argument also overlooks the [FAA], which provides that a court may refuse to enforce an arbitration clause "upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract," and the [New York Convention], which provides that a court may refuse to enforce an arbitration clause if "it finds that said agreement is null and void, inoperative or incapable of being performed." See 9 U.S.C. § 2; New York Convention, Article II(3) (reprinted at 9 U.S.C.A. § 201 (Supp. 1992).

Opposition, at 29-30.

[54] According to PPG, even if the arbitrators could apply U.S. antitrust law to its claims, the panel would still be unable to afford PPG complete relief because Article XII prevents the arbitrators from "altering, amending or adding

---

[7] The full quote is as follows:

> The mere appearance of an antitrust dispute does not alone warrant invalidation of the selected forum on the undemonstrated assumption that the arbitration clause is tainted. A party resisting arbitration of course may attack directly the validity of the agreement to arbitrate. See Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 U.S. 395, 87 S. Ct. 1801, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1270 (1967). Moreover, the party may attempt to make a showing that would warrant setting aside the forum-selection clause--that the agreement was "affected by fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power"; that "enforcement would be unreasonable and unjust"; or that proceedings "in the contractual forum will be so gravely difficult and inconvenient that [the resisting party] will for all practical purposes be deprived of his day in court." The Bremen, 407 U.S. at 12, 15, 92 S. Ct. at 1914, 1916, 1917. But absent such a showing--and none was attempted here--there is no basis for assuming the forum inadequate or its selection unfair.

Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 632-33.

to the provisions of this Agreement." Thus, PPG asserts that the arbitrators would have to leave the illegal aspects of the 1962 License Agreement intact. Further, it states that no English court would enforce a judgment against Pilkington because of the English hostility to U.S. antitrust law and the United Kingdom's blocking statute.

(3) Pilkington's Reply

In reference to PPG's citation of language of the Mitsubishi provision that immediately follows the choice-of-law sentence quoted by Pilkington, see Mitsubishi, 723 F.2d at 158 n. 1, Pilkington states that there is no indication that the Supreme Court relied on this language in reaching its decision. It further asserts that the language stands for nothing more than "the unremarkable proposition that should a provision of the distribution agreement be found violative of any jurisdiction's laws, the remaining provisions would remain in effect." Reply, at 17. Finally, [55] Pilkington notes that Article IX F. of the 1962 License Agreement is similar.

Pilkington attempts to distinguish PPG's reliance on Armco Steel, 790 F. Supp. at 318-19, as follows:

> First, unlike the situation in Armco, there is evidence in the record that the parties did not intend the Agreement's choice-of-law clause to govern all the disputes that might arise between them. See Crystal Decl., P 21. Second, the application of English law to this question, unlike the application of Ohio law, would not bar the arbitration of PPG's antitrust claims because there is no basis in English law prohibiting an arbitration panel sitting in London from applying the U.S. antitrust laws. (Mem. at 26-29.) Indeed, Article IX F. requires it. In addition, PPG's own barrister does not dispute this point: "I agree with Mr. Crystal's statement (para. 9) that there is no reason in public policy (or, I would add, in English law) why parties could not agree to have an antitrust dispute arbitrated in accordance with United States law in an arbitration held in England." Kentridge Decl., P 4.

Reply, at 17-18.

In rebuttal of PPG's argument that it could not enforce [56] any judgment it obtained in [*1482] arbitration in England, Pilkington notes that this assertion is contrary to PPG's conduct in the 1988 arbitration. It further notes that PPG could seek enforcement of an arbitral award in "any court having jurisdiction under this chapter for an order confirming the award as against any other party to the Arbitration." 9 U.S.C. § 207. See also Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 638. Finally, citing Mr. Kentridge's testimony at the preliminary injunction hearing, Pilkington states that such an award would not be subject to the U.K. blocking statute.

(4) Discussion

Article XII provides, in pertinent part, that "the seat of the arbitration shall be in London, and the arbitration shall be in accordance with the laws of England." The Court finds that Article XII's choice-of-law provision merely provides for the application of English law to govern the procedural aspects of the arbitration. Article XII's inclusion of the words "in accordance with" support the Court's conclusion. See Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 617. More importantly, if Article XII's choice-of-law provision [57] was a substantive choice-of-law provision, Article XIII would be redundant. The harder question is whether Article XIII permits the arbitrators to apply U.S. antitrust law to claims in arbitration.

Article XIII of the 1962 License Agreement provides, under the heading of "Construction," that "the Agreement shall be governed by the laws of England." There is less support for Pilkington's position that Article XIII merely provides for the application of English law to contract-related claims thereby permitting the arbitrators to apply non-English law to claims that "involve" the Agreement but are not breach of contract claims. The plain language of Article XIII is quite broad.

The parties have provided conflicting expert testimony on the issue. According to the oral argument of Pilkington's counsel, which was not rebutted in any substantial fashion by PPG's counsel, the major point of disagreement between the experts is whether the English double actionability rule would preclude the application of U.S. antitrust law to the claims in arbitration independent of the question of whether Article XII or XIII would prevent it. The Court agrees with Pilkington's counsel that the resolution [58] of this question requires it to decide a question of English law, for which the Court is not equipped.

If Article XIII permits the arbitrators to apply U.S. antitrust law and the double actionability rule does not preclude it, however, the Supreme Court has seemingly closed the door to any thoughts that arbitrators cannot handle complex antitrust cases. In Mitsubishi, the Supreme Court stated that:

> HN14[] Potential complexity should not suffice to ward off arbitration . . . . In any event, adaptability and access to expertise are hallmarks of arbitration. The anticipated subject matter of the dispute may be taken into account when the arbitrators are appointed, and arbitral rules typically provide for the participation of experts either employed by the parties or appointed by the tribunal. Moreover, it is often a judgment that streamlined proceedings and expeditious results will best serve their needs that causes parties to agree to arbitrate their disputes; it is typically a desire to keep the effort and expense within manageable bounds that prompts them mutually to forgo access to judicial remedies.

Mitsubishi, 473 U.S. at 633.

The Supreme [59] Court has cautioned the lower courts that "there HN15[] is no reason to assume at the outset of the dispute that international arbitration will not provide an adequate forum." Id. at 636. Here, however, it is unnecessary to rely on a presumption that an English arbitration pursuant to Article XII will not operate as a waiver of PPG's statutory claims. At oral argument, Pilkington's counsel expressly represented that PPG's claims will be arbitrated pursuant to the substantive antitrust laws of the United States and that Pilkington consents to arbitration on that basis. Thus, as the district court stated in In re Hops Antitrust Litig.:

> Under the circumstances, the Court does not now find either (a) the [English] arbitration [*1483] proceedings will be so "gravely difficult or inconvenient," or (b) the operation of the choice of forum and choice-of-law provisions will prohibit pursuit of plaintiff's antitrust claims, as to support a court order not enforcing the parties' arbitration agreement.

In re Hops Antitrust Litig., 655 F. Supp. at 172. The Court expressly refers PPG's claims to arbitration under Article XII based on Pilkington's [60] representation and consent to the substantive arbitration of PPG's claims pursuant to U.S. antitrust law. As noted by Pilkington's counsel at oral argument, the Court may, and certainly will, withdraw the reference to arbitration if U.S. antitrust law does not govern the substantive resolution of PPG's claims. In addition, the Court directs that any damages determination, or arbitral award, made by the arbitrators shall be determined according to U.S. antitrust law irrespective of any conflict that may exist between those laws and the laws of England. Finally, the Court will retain jurisdiction over this matter in order to ensure that the arbitration directed by this Order is conducted in accordance with the Order.

CONCLUSION

The Court finds that PPG's allegations regarding monopoly power and the existence of a dangerous probability thereof are sufficiently well pleaded to withstand a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. See Newman, 813 F.2d at 1522. The Court will therefore deny Pilkington's Motion to Dismiss.

The Court finds that PPG's antitrust claims are arbitrable under the 1962 License Agreement. It further finds that arbitration under the Agreement's [61] choice-of-forum and choice-of-law provisions will not operate as a prospective waiver of PPG's statutory claims due to Pilkington's express representation and consent to the substantive arbitration of PPG's claims pursuant to U.S. antitrust law. The Court will therefore grant Pilkington's Motion to Stay Proceedings and Compel Arbitration.

Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that:

(1) Defendants' December 18, 1992 Motion to Dismiss Counts Four and Five is DENIED; and

(2) Defendants' December 18, 1992 Motion to Stay Proceedings and Compel Arbitration is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that any damages determination, or arbitral award, made by the arbitrators shall be determined according to U.S. antitrust law irrespective of any conflict that may exist between those laws and the laws of England.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Court retains jurisdiction over this matter in order to ensure that the arbitration directed by this Order is conducted in accordance with the Order.

Dated this 9th day of July 1993.

William D. Browning

U.S. District Judge

Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets v. Darling-Delaware Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

June 7, 1993, Argued ; July 13, 1993, Filed

No. 92-7481

Reporter

998 F.2d 1224 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 17424 ; 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,293; 39 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. (Callaghan) 234

PETRUZZI'S IGA SUPERMARKETS, INC. v. DARLING-DELAWARE COMPANY, INC; THE STANDARD TALLOW CORP.; MOYER PACKING COMPANY; HERMAN ISACS, INC. Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. and the class it represents, Appellant

Prior History: [1] On Appeal From the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 86-0386.

Core Terms

prices, district court, conspiracy, summary judgment, put forward, competitors, antitrust, defendants', expert testimony, customers, bid, conspired, retaliation, tapes, concerted action, new account, memorandum, soliciting, motive, raw material, conversations, economists, circumstantial evidence, factors, deposition, collusion, proffered, bother, cases, circumstances

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a product plaintiff must prove: (1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of the conduct pursuant to the concerted action were illegal; and (4) that it was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate courts review the district court's summary judgment determination de novo, applying the same standard as the district court. A non-movant's burden in defending against summary judgment in an antitrust case is no different than in any other case. Rather, in all cases summary judgment should be granted if, after drawing all reasonable inferences from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, the court concludes that there is no genuine issue of material fact to be resolved at trial and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Where the movant has produced evidence in support of its motion for summary judgment, the nonmovant cannot rest on the allegations of pleadings and must do more than create some metaphysical doubt.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

At the summary judgment stage, a court is not to weigh the evidence or make credibility determinations. Instead, these tasks are left for the fact-finder. To raise a genuine issue of material fact, therefore, the summary judgment opponent need not match, item for item, each piece of evidence proffered by the movant, but simply must exceed the mere scintilla standard. Additionally, a court should not tightly compartmentalize the evidence put forward by the nonmovant, but instead should analyze it as a whole to see if together it supports an inference of concerted action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

As in other cases, a nonmovant plaintiff in a § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, case does not have to submit direct evidence, i.e., the so-called smoking gun, but can rely solely on circumstantial evidence and the reasonable inferences drawn from such evidence. Furthermore, where the nonmovant has put forward evidence which it contends allows for an inference of a § 1 violation, the movant defendant bears the burden of proving that drawing an inference of unlawful behavior is unreasonable. Nonetheless, in drawing favorable inferences from underlying facts, a court must remember that often a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices. Thus, in antitrust cases, care must be taken to ensure that inferences of unlawful activity drawn from ambiguous evidence do not infringe upon the defendants' freedom.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Evidence which is equally consistent with legal and illegal conduct, standing alone, cannot support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN6[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

To survive summary judgment in an antitrust case in the absence of direct evidence or strong circumstantial evidence of an agreement, a plaintiff must assert a theory that is plausible. The inferences drawn from the proffered evidence must be reasonable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN7[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The acceptable inferences from circumstantial evidence which can be drawn by the court in deciding a summary judgment motion in an antitrust case vary with the plausibility of the plaintiffs' theory and the dangers associated with such inferences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Circumstantial & Direct Evidence

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In cases under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, it is unnecessary for a court to engage in the exercise of distinguishing strong circumstantial evidence of concerted action from direct evidence of concerted action for both are sufficiently unambiguous.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Proof of opportunity to conspire, in the context of antitrust, without more, will not sustain an inference that a conspiracy has taken place.

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

HN10[] Exclusion of Relevant Evidence, Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

For testimony to be excluded under Fed. R. Evid. 403, its probative value must be substantially outweighed by the listed dangers, rather than simply not more probative than prejudicial.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Evidence > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN11[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

While ordinarily the appellate courts review a district court's admissibility rulings under an abuse of discretion standard, when the court's ruling turns on an interpretation of a Federal Rule of Evidence the appropriate standard of review is plenary.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN12[] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

See Fed. R. Evid. 702.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN13[] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

There are three intertwined bases for excluding testimony under Fed. R. Evid. 702: (1) if the testimony will not assist the trier of fact; (2) if scientific evidence is not sufficiently reliable; and (3) if the particular expert does not have sufficient specialized knowledge to assist the jurors.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN14[] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

See Fed. R. Evid. 703.

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN15[] Exclusion of Relevant Evidence, Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

While Fed. R. Evid. 403 can be used to exclude expert testimony before trial, if expert testimony survives the rigors of Fed. R. Evid. 702 and 703, then Fed. R. Evid. 403 becomes an unlikely basis for exclusion, especially in the pretrial setting. Moreover, Fed. R. Evid. 702 incorporates the danger of unfair prejudice; therefore, if a court were to exclude expert testimony under Fed. R. Evid. 403 it seemingly would have to be on some other basis, such as confusion of the issues or waste of time.

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

HN16[] Exclusion of Relevant Evidence, Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

A court cannot fairly ascertain the potential relevance of evidence for Fed. R. Evid. 403 purposes until it has a full record relevant to the putatively objectionable evidence.

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Conferences > Pretrial Orders

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > General Overview

HN17[] Conferences, Pretrial Orders

Fed. R. Evid. 403 is a trial-oriented rule. Precipitous Fed. R. Evid. 403 determinations, before the challenging party has had an opportunity to develop the record, are therefore unfair and improper. In order to exclude evidence under Fed. R. Evid. 403 at the pretrial stage, a court must have a record complete enough on the point at issue to be considered a virtual surrogate for a trial record.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN18[] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

Unfair prejudice means an undue tendency to suggest decision on an improper basis, commonly, though not necessarily, an emotional one. Yet, vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

HN19[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In addition to proving concerted action through testimonial and economic evidence, an antitrust plaintiff can establish concerted action through the defendants' behavior standing alone. While mere consciously parallel behavior alone is insufficient to prove a conspiracy, it is circumstantial evidence from which, when supplemented by additional evidence, an illegal agreement can be inferred. In addition to establishing consciously parallel behavior by the defendants, a plaintiff also must show the existence of certain plus factors, including: (1) actions contrary to the defendants' economic interests, and (2) a motivation to enter into such an agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN20[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

To establish a conspiracy based on consciously parallel behavior, a plaintiff must show: (1) that the defendants' behavior was parallel; (2) that the defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and that this awareness was an element in their decision-making processes; and (3) certain plus factors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN21[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

In proving a conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff need not prove the defendants share the same motive. Rather, all that is required is that they each have a motive to conspire.

Counsel: Warren Rubin (argued), Law Offices of, Bernard M. Gross, P.C., 1500 Walnut Street, Sixth Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19102, Larry S. Keiser, Chariton & Keiser, 138 South Main Street, P.O. Box 22, Wilkes-Barre, PA 18703, Donald H. Brobst, Rosenn, Jenkins & Greewald, 15 South Franklin Street, Wilkes-Barre, PA 18711, Attorneys for Appellant.

David S. Acker (argued), 60 North Williams, P.O. Box 488, Williams Bay, WI 53191, Attorney for Darling-Delaware Company, Inc. Theodore V. Wells, Jr., Terry E. Thornton (argued), Lowenstein, Sandler, Kohl, Fisher & Boylan, 65 Livingston Avenue, Roseland, NJ 07068, Patrick M. Connolly, P.C., Station Center, 600 Lackawanna Avenue, Scranton, PA 18503, Attorneys for The Standard Tallow Corp. David H. Marion (argued), Gilbert F. Casellas, Stephen D. Ellis, Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads, Three Parkway, 20th Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19102, Philip Salkin, Pearlstine Salkin & Associates, 1250 South Broad Street, P.O. Box 431, Lansdale, PA 19446, Attorneys for Moyer Packing Company.

Judges: BEFORE: GREENBERG, NYGAARD, and LEWIS, [2] Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: GREENBERG

Opinion

[*1228] OPINION OF THE COURT

GREENBERG, Circuit Judge.

Petruzzi's IGA Supermarket, Inc. (Petruzzi's IGA), for itself and on behalf of the class it represents, appeals from the district court's July 31, 1992 order entering summary judgment in favor of defendants Darling-Delaware Company, Inc. (Darling), The Standard Tallow Corp. (Standard), and Moyer Packing Company (Moyer). Petruzzi's IGA does not appeal from an earlier order of the district court dismissing a fourth defendant, Herman Isacs, Inc., pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2) because of a lack of personal jurisdiction. See 677 F. Supp. 289 (M.D. Pa. 1987). [1] In its complaint, Petruzzi's IGA alleged that the defendants conspired to allocate customers in the fat and bone rendering industry in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. However, after considering the evidence put forward by Petruzzi's IGA in response to the defendants' motions for summary judgment, the district court concluded that Petruzzi's IGA failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact to controvert the defendants' denial that there was a conspiracy [3] among the remaining defendants. District Court's Opinion (Opin.) at 65. Because we disagree in part with the district court's view of the evidence and in part with its application of the appropriate legal standards, we will reverse its July 31, 1992 order insofar as it granted summary judgment to Darling and Moyer. However, because we agree that the evidence put forward does not tend to exclude the possibility that Standard acted independently, see Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1471, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment to Standard. [2]

[4] I.

BACKGROUND

This case involves an allegation of a restraint of trade in the fat and bone rendering industry. In this industry, rendering companies, such as the defendants, purchase inedible fats, bones, suet, and meat trimmings (raw materials) from suppliers, such as butcher shops, supermarkets, restaurants, hotels, and government agencies. These companies then process the raw materials into finished products such as tallow, grease, animal feed, and fertilizer.

On March 14, 1986, Petruzzi's IGA filed a class action in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania against Darling, Standard, Moyer, and Herman Isacs, Inc., alleging that from as early as January 1, 1977, to at least December 31, 1985, the defendants conspired to allocate existing raw material accounts in the fat and bone rendering industry in parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Connecticut. According to the complaint, the defendants violated section 1 of the Sherman Act by: (1) agreeing to refrain from soliciting accounts serviced by the other defendants; (2) submitting collusive and rigged bids to certain accounts; (3) settling "allocation disputes," where one competitor acquired an account [5] owned by a competitor, by requiring the former to return the account or transfer an account of equal tonnage to the wronged renderer; and (4) urging other renderers to join the conspiracy. Complaint PP 15-17, App. at 141-42. Petruzzi's IGA contends that those competitors of the defendants who refused to abide by these "rules" were targeted by other renderers in an effort to keep them in line. For example, if Rendering Company A offered a higher price for the raw materials from an account which was [*1229] being serviced by one of the defendants, then that defendant or perhaps another participant in the conspiracy would respond by offering higher, above-market prices on Company A's other accounts. According to Petruzzi's IGA, because of the defendants' superior financial resources, such predatory tactics ensured that competitors either complied with the rules, sold out to the defendants, or entered bankruptcy. Brief at 5. Petruzzi's IGA does not contend the defendants conspired with respect to new accounts, but only that once the account was won or "loaded," others stayed away or at most put forward sham bids.

---

[1] On July 31, 1992, the district court also issued a separate memorandum and order denying the defendants' motion to revoke the conditional class certification. The defendants have not cross-appealed from that order.

[2] We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. The district court had subject matter jurisdiction over this antitrust action for damages and injunctive relief pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337 and 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26.

On April 1, 1991, the three defendants remaining after the dismissal of Herman Isacs, [6] Inc., moved for summary judgment, citing an absence of evidence of concerted action. In response to these motions, Petruzzi's IGA submitted a large amount of evidence which it contended demonstrated the existence of an agreement among the remaining defendants. Of significance, Petruzzi's IGA submitted: (1) testimony from Howard Salisbury and Ralph Ebersole, two former employees of Moyer; (2) secretly taped recordings of conversations between principals of Ryder Rendering Company, a former competitor of the defendants, and principals of Moyer (the Ryder tapes); (3) testimony of two economists who concluded that the defendants conspired not to compete for existing raw material accounts; (4) deposition testimony of representatives of the defendants; (5) a memorandum prepared by Michele Ellerin, the former wife of Lee Ryder, a co-owner of Ryder Rendering (the Ellerin memorandum); (6) records of five past civil and criminal antitrust actions involving the defendants and/or their employees; (7) phone records of the defendants and their principals indicating numerous phone calls to each other over the years; and (8) evidence of socializing by principals of the defendants. Petruzzi's IGA's [7] evidence describes the limited nature of competition for existing accounts and several instances of retaliation against noncomplying rendering companies.

Despite this evidence, the district court granted the defendants summary judgment because it determined that Petruzzi's IGA had not put forward evidence which tended to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently. Opin. at 65. In addition, the court stated that summary judgment was appropriate because the defendants "have met plaintiff's evidence with plausible business reasons justifying the conduct called into question." Opin. at 66. Petruzzi's IGA then appealed.

II.

DISCUSSION

In this appeal, we once again consider what evidence an antitrust plaintiff alleging a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act [3] must put forward to defeat a motion for summary judgment. HN1[] To establish a section 1 violation, a product plaintiff must prove: (1) concerted action by the defendants; (2) that produced anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of the conduct pursuant to the concerted action were illegal; and (4) that it was injured as a proximate result of the concerted action. J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1541 (3d Cir. 1990), [8] cert. denied, 113 L. Ed. 2d 246, 111 S. Ct. 1313 (1991); Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 763 F.2d 1482, 1489 (3d Cir. 1985), vacated for further reconsideration, 475 U.S. 1105, 106 S. Ct. 1509 (1986). Without proof of all of these elements, a plaintiff cannot maintain a section 1 claim.

As was the case here, at the summary judgment stage antitrust defendants often maintain that the plaintiff has not offered sufficient proof that they acted in concert and accordingly did not satisfy the first element of a section 1 claim. See, e.g., Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1364 (3d Cir. 1992), [9] [*1230] cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1262, 122 L. Ed. 2d 659 (1993). And, as noted above, the district court agreed with the defendants. Petruzzi's IGA argues that the district court erred in this determination because it proffered evidence sufficient to allow a reasonable jury to conclude that the defendants acted in concert. Petruzzi's IGA asserts that the district court not only improperly discounted evidence that supported an inference of collusion, but also improperly compartmentalized the evidence Petruzzi's IGA put forth.

A. The Summary Judgment Standard

---

[3] Section 1 states in relevant part:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . . .

15 U.S.C. § 1.

HN2[] We review the district court's summary judgment determination de novo, applying the same standard as the district court. [4] As this court recently reiterated, "A non-movant's burden in defending against summary judgment in an antitrust case is no different than in any other case." Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1363. Rather, in all cases summary judgment should be granted if, after drawing all reasonable inferences from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, the court concludes that there is no genuine issue of material fact to be resolved at trial and [10] the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Where the movant has produced evidence in support of its motion for summary judgment, the nonmovant cannot rest on the allegations of pleadings and must do more than create some metaphysical doubt.

HN3[] However, at the summary judgment stage, a court is not to weigh the evidence or make credibility determinations. Id. at 1363. Instead, these tasks are left for the fact-finder. To raise a genuine [11] issue of material fact, therefore, "the [summary judgment] opponent need not match, item for item, each piece of evidence proffered by the movant," but simply must exceed the "mere scintilla" standard. Id. Additionally, a court should not tightly compartmentalize the evidence put forward by the nonmovant, but instead should analyze it as a whole to see if together it supports an inference of concerted action. Id. at 1364 (citing Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 1410, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962)); In re Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig., 723 F.2d 238, 305 (3d Cir. 1983), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

HN4[] As in other cases, a nonmovant plaintiff in a section 1 case does not have to submit direct evidence, i.e., the so-called smoking gun, but can rely solely on circumstantial evidence and the reasonable inferences drawn from such evidence. [5] Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d. at 1364; [12] In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 304. Furthermore, where the nonmovant has put forward evidence which it contends allows for an inference of a section 1 violation, the movant defendant bears the burden of proving that drawing an inference of unlawful behavior is unreasonable. Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1363-64 (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2083 (1992)). Nonetheless, in drawing favorable inferences from underlying facts, a court must remember that often a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices. Thus, we have noted that in antitrust cases, "care must be taken to ensure that inferences of unlawful activity drawn from ambiguous evidence do not infringe upon the defendants' freedom." Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1363.

[13] To understand exactly what inferences are circumscribed in a section 1 case, we must examine closely the Supreme Court's decision in Matsushita Electrical Industries Co. [*1231] v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). In Matsushita, the plaintiffs, American manufacturers of television sets, alleged that the defendants, Japanese manufacturers of consumer electronic products (CEP), conspired to fix prices below market level so as to drive the American manufacturers from the American CEP market. According to the plaintiffs, the defendants financed this strategy through monopoly profits earned in the Japanese market. Thus, the plaintiffs put forward evidence suggesting, inter alia, that the defendants earned monopoly profits in the Japanese market; that they agreed to distribute their products according to a "five company rule," whereby each competitor was allowed to sell to only five American distributors; that they reached agreements with Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry on minimum prices for CEP exported to the American market; and that they avoided these agreements through rebate schemes. Id. at 580-81, 106 S. Ct. at 1353. [14]

The district court granted the defendants summary judgment. See 513 F. Supp. 1100 (E.D. Pa. 1981). We then reversed in part, holding that the plaintiffs had put forward sufficient evidence from which a conspiracy reasonably

---

[4] The district court did not discuss whether Petruzzi's IGA established a genuine issue of material fact with respect to the other three elements of a section 1 claim. Likewise, the defendants have not argued to this court that Petruzzi's IGA's evidence falls short with respect to these other elements. Accordingly, we do not consider them in this appeal. Rather, we assess only whether Petruzzi's IGA has put forth enough evidence regarding the defendants' alleged concerted action to withstand the defendants' motions for summary judgment.

[5] Of course, contrary to popular thought a smoking gun might be mere circumstantial evidence unless the witness saw it fired.

could be inferred. See In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 303-16. On certiorari, the Supreme Court reversed our decision. The Court stated that because the plaintiffs' theory of conspiracy did not make sense from an economic standpoint, the ambiguous evidence of a conspiracy they put forward was insufficient to withstand summary judgment. Instead, in the circumstances, the plaintiffs needed to provide "more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary." 475 U.S. at 587, 106 S. Ct. at 1356. The Court emphasized that HN5[] evidence which is equally consistent with legal and illegal conduct, standing alone, cannot support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Id. at 588, 106 S. Ct. at 1356 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1470). [15]

In reaching its decision the Supreme Court first noted that the alleged predatory pricing conspiracy was speculative at best because it required the defendants to agree to forego profits that a free market would offer them. The Court then stated that the only way such a conspiracy would make any sense was if the defendants could recoup their losses in the future through monopoly profits. 475 U.S. at 588-89, 106 S. Ct. at 1357. The Court, however, looked at the market and determined that there was no evidence that the defendants could recoup such losses. Thus, the Court concluded that the defendants had no motive to engage in the alleged conspiracy. Id. at 592-93, 106 S. Ct. at 1359. The Court further recognized that the alleged unlawful behavior was equally consistent with lawful behavior because "cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition." Id. at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1360.

Importantly, however, in reaching its conclusion the Matsushita Court did not hold that an antitrust defendant is entitled to summary judgment [16] merely by providing an economic theory to justify its behavior. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2083 (1992) ("The [Matsushita] Court did not hold that if the moving party enunciates any economic theory supporting its behavior, regardless of its accuracy in reflecting the actual market, it is entitled to summary judgment." (emphasis in original)); In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 906 F.2d 432, 439 (9th Cir. 1990) ("Nor do we think that Matsushita and Monsanto can be read as authorizing a court to award summary judgment to antitrust defendants whenever the evidence is plausibly consistent with both inferences of conspiracy and inferences of innocent conduct."), cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 2274 (1991). Instead, the Court simply stressed that HN6[] to survive summary judgment in the absence of direct evidence or strong circumstantial evidence of an agreement, a plaintiff must assert a theory that is plausible. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 593-94, 106 S. Ct. at 1359-60. [17] In this respect, then, Matsushita did not invent a new requirement for an antitrust plaintiff to meet, but merely articulated an established one, i.e., the inferences drawn from the proffered evidence must be reasonable. See Eastman Kodak Co., [*1232] 112 S. Ct. at 2083. Therefore, contrary to the district court's reasoning in our case, the defendants were not entitled to summary judgment simply because they demonstrated a plausible rationale for their behavior. Rather, the focus must remain on the evidence proffered by the plaintiff and whether that evidence "tends to exclude the possibility that [the defendants] were acting independently." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471.

B. Applying The Lessons of Matsushita to This Case

As just indicated, two important circumstances underlying the Court's decision in Matsushita were (1) that the plaintiffs' theory of conspiracy was implausible and (2) that permitting an inference of antitrust conspiracy in the circumstances "would have the effect of deterring significant procompetitive conduct." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings, 906 F.2d at 439 [18] (emphasis added to reflect tenor of court's holding). In particular, the Matsushita Court worried that if it allowed mistaken inferences to be drawn from the defendants' price-cutting policies, it would chill procompetitive behavior. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1360. Thus, the Court stated that HN7[] the acceptable inferences which can be drawn from circumstantial evidence vary with the plausibility of the plaintiffs' theory and the dangers associated with such inferences. See id. at 587, 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1356, 1360; see also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings, 906 F.2d at 439-40 (noting that Court's concern in Matsushita about deterring procompetitive behavior led to limitations on inferences it was willing to make).

Here, in stark contrast with the circumstances in Matsushita, the plaintiff's theory of conspiracy is not implausible. In fact, it makes perfect economic sense. In particular, if Petruzzi's IGA is correct, the defendants' action would enable them to make profits that the free market would not allow them, in both the [19] short-run and the long-run. Because the defendants provided a homogeneous service, [6] the only true basis for competition among them was price. Therefore, the only way for the defendants to curtail competition was by agreement. Moreover, because the sellers were selling a by-product of their everyday operations that required disposition, they had an inelastic supply curve, i.e., the amount they were willing to sell was not highly dependent on the price they were offered, and they did not have much bargaining power absent competition from the renderers. See Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law 267-68 (3d ed. 1986) (discussing factors that make collusion likely).

[20] Also in direct contrast to Matsushita, the defendants' challenged activities are not procompetitive. After all, refusing to bid on accounts hardly can be labelled as the "very essence of competition." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1360. Therefore, given the circumstances of this case, more liberal inferences from the evidence should be permitted than in Matsushita because the attendant dangers from drawing inferences recognized in Matsushita are not present.

Nonetheless, the mere facts that a plaintiff alleges a plausible conspiracy and that that allegation does not threaten to chill procompetitive behavior do not mean that there are no restrictions on the inferences that can be drawn from the evidence it puts forward. For example, the cases indicate that a plaintiff cannot withstand a summary judgment motion by establishing only consciously parallel behavior on the part of the defendants. See Theatre Enters., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 541, 74 S. Ct. 257, 259-60, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954); In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 304. [21] Instead, in a conscious parallelism case, a plaintiff also must demonstrate the existence of certain "plus" factors, for only when these additional factors are present does the evidence tend to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently. [*1233] See In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 304.

C. The Lessons of Matsushita - Part Two

In its decision, the district court stated that if a plaintiff provided direct evidence of a conspiracy, then the strictures of Matsushita did not apply. Opin. at 12; see also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings, 906 F.2d at 440-41 (drawing this conclusion). This statement is undeniably true, for no inferences are required from direct evidence to establish a fact and thus a court need not be concerned about the reasonableness of the inferences to be drawn from such evidence. However, this conclusion does not mean that all circumstantial evidence should be treated alike. Rather, the focus in Matsushita was on ambiguous evidence, see Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, 106 S. Ct. at 1356 ("But antitrust law limits the [22] range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case."), and what inferences reasonably could be drawn from that type of evidence. The Supreme Court did not draw a distinction between direct evidence on the one hand and circumstantial evidence on the other. Rather, it stated that in the absence of a plausible theory of conspiracy, a court must consider whether the plaintiff put forward "sufficiently unambiguous" evidence that the defendants conspired. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 597, 106 S. Ct. at 1362. Therefore, HN8[] in section 1 cases, it is unnecessary for a court to engage in the exercise of distinguishing strong circumstantial evidence of concerted action from direct evidence of concerted action for both are "sufficiently unambiguous." [7] Moreover, in this case, such an exercise is doubly unnecessary because Petruzzi's IGA's theory is not implausible.

D. The Evidence

[23] Before detailing the evidence put forward by Petruzzi's IGA, we pause to stress the nature of its allegations because it is important to keep it in mind when considering the evidence. Although Petruzzi's IGA alleges that the defendants' actions had an impact on prices, it does not contend that the defendants conspired to fix prices per se.

---

[6] The service provided by the renderers was homogeneous in that they all did the same thing, pick up the materials. In this case, the materials sold by the suppliers was for the most part homogeneous as well. Accordingly, the renderers would have no reason to be concerned about who supplied them with raw materials. The only exception is that Standard did not pick up suet and meat trimmings, but only fat and bones, which the industry calls "ice cream."

[7] In fact circumstantial evidence could be quite compelling. See note 5 supra.

Also Petruzzi's IGA's ultimate goal is not to prove that the defendants priced predatorily. Rather, it seeks to show only that the defendants conspired to allocate customers so that once a renderer had won or "loaded" an account, competition for that account effectively ceased. Thus, with respect to the evidence relating to pricing, Petruzzi's IGA does not need to show that prices across the industry were suspiciously similar, or that the defendants priced predatorily. Rather, it need demonstrate only that the prices paid by the defendants differed significantly between new and existing accounts for such data would be consistent with its theory that competition was restrained unlawfully only on existing accounts.

In essence, Petruzzi's IGA contends that the defendants created a cartel to ensure that prices for raw materials would be artificially [24] low. Game theory teaches us that a cartel cannot survive absent some enforcement mechanism because otherwise the incentives to cheat are too great. See Posner, supra, at 265-66; George J. Stigler, A Theory of Oligopoly, in The Organization of Industry 39, 42-44 (1968). Here, Petruzzi's IGA contends that the defendants enforced their agreement by "targeting" the noncomplying companies, i.e., bidding on their accounts predatorily. Thus, to the extent that there is testimony regarding the defendants pricing above market, it is relevant not to establish a predatory pricing violation by a particular defendant, but to show the enforcement mechanism used by the defendants to enforce their agreement. Instances of predatory pricing, therefore, are circumstantial evidence that an unlawful agreement exists.

With this background, we now turn to the evidence put forward by Petruzzi's IGA. We consider this evidence as a whole and with the reasonable inferences that we can draw from it. Such a consideration reveals that while a reasonable jury could conclude that Darling and Moyer acted in concert, it could not find that Standard took part in this conspiracy.

1. Testimony [25] of an Agreement between Moyer and Darling

Howard Salisbury, a solicitor for Moyer during the early 1980s, testified that Moyer [*1234] followed a "code" in not soliciting the accounts of other renderers, particularly Darling. Likewise, Ralph Ebersole testified that representatives of Moyer and Darling discussed price-fixing and other customer problems while at National Renderers Association (NRA) meetings. The district court dismissed the significance of their testimony, however, stating that neither man knew whether this adherence to the "code" flowed from conversations between representatives of the defendants. Rather, the district court said that all that could be inferred from these statements was that Moyer adhered to a code of noninterference. Opin. at 23-24. Our reading of the record shows otherwise.

Salisbury signed a written statement stating, "I did not bother Darling accounts. Mr. Sage [a high-level Moyer solicitor] told me on at least two occasions that there was a mutual agreement and understanding with Darling, not to bother their accounts." App. at 2228 (emphasis added). When discussing this statement during his deposition, Salisbury stated that Sage told him: "there [26] was an understanding." App. at 2212. While Salisbury later testified that he was not told of any understanding or agreement that Moyer had with any other company, App. at 2216, he did not retract his statement as to Darling. [8] In fact, Salisbury testified:

> I told [Mr. Rubin and Mr. Keiser, lawyers for Petruzzi's [27] IGA] that there was an agreement or understanding. I also explained to Mr. Kaiser (sic) it has been going on ever since I have been in the business. Ever since 1969. It was something that everybody done (sic).

App. at 2224.

---

[8] Darling discounts the meaning of Salisbury's testimony by pointing out that Salisbury was not aware of any meeting with Darling. Darling's Brief at 9. However, this fact simply means that Salisbury could not supply direct evidence of an agreement. It does not diminish the value of his circumstantial evidence. Similarly, Darling asserts that the only reason that Salisbury was told this was because the stores were under contract. Id. at 9. However, this narrow construction of Salisbury's more general statements is not appropriate, at least at the summary judgment stage, especially considering that later in the deposition Salisbury reaffirmed his assertion that an agreement existed. See App. at 2224.

Like Salisbury, Ralph Ebersole also provided evidence of an agreement between Moyer and Darling. Ralph Ebersole was the Director of Marketing for Finished Products at Moyer from 1974 to 1979. He took this job after his company sold out to Moyer, but he left to start his own company once his five-year contract with Moyer was up. Because he was not involved directly with the purchase of raw materials, Ebesole's testimony relates mostly to the meetings between other renderers at the NRA meetings which he attended.

Ebersole testified at his deposition that he is not currently a member of the NRA because he did not agree with what went on in those meetings, e.g., discussions about "keeping prices down." App. at 843. He testified that while attending the NRA meetings for Moyer, he saw John Hendricks of Moyer and Earl Englemyer of Darling discussing customer problems. App. at 846-47, 899. He also testified that Sage of Moyer and Englemyer discussed inquiries that [28] Moyer was receiving from Darling's customers relating to the prices they were being paid. Sage apparently informed Englemyer that Moyer could not explain to Darling's customers why it would not pick up the raw materials from them. App. at 852. From this testimony, a reasonable jury could conclude that Moyer and Darling were acting in concert.

Moreover, Ebersole's testimony suggests that Moyer did not limit its attempts to conspire to Darling. Ebersole testified that a principal at Southern Tier, a renderer which is not a party to this action, informed him that Sage approached him about working out a relationship in which each company would stay away from the other's customers. App. at 860. [9] He further testified about [*1235] overhearing conversations between Sage and Ryder principals about not soliciting the accounts of others. App. at 866-67. While neither Ryder nor Southern Tier are defendants, this testimony does suggest that Moyer pursued a course of doing business through agreements with its competitors, thereby supporting a damaging interpretation of the other testimony put forward by Petruzzi's IGA.

[29] However, there is no reference to Standard in either Salisbury's or Ebersole's testimony. While Ebersole did testify that representatives from Moyer, Darling, and Standard socialized, App. at 849, he did not relate any instance where representatives from Standard participated in discussions regarding the allocation of accounts. Thus, at best, Ebersole's testimony establishes that Standard had the opportunity to conspire. Yet, as we previously have pointed out, "HN9[] Proof of opportunity to conspire, without more, will not sustain an inference that a conspiracy has taken place." Tose v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 648 F.2d 879, 894 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 893, 102 S. Ct. 390, 70 L. Ed. 2d 208 (1981). Here, there is nothing more to implicate Standard.

2. The Ryder Tapes

In March 1983, Lee Ryder and his cousin Kent Ryder secretly taped four of their conversations with John Hendricks and Curt Moyer of Moyer Packing. Lee and Kent Ryder were co-owners of Ryder Rendering Co. before it sold out to Darling. Ryder Rendering was having problems with Moyer and sought to obtain evidence to give to the Justice Department for [30] a possible antitrust action. Although the Ryders hoped to gain evidence to use against Moyer, Lee Ryder maintained in his deposition that he did not suspect collusion in the rendering industry. App. at 1887-89. Similarly, Kent Ryder testified that the tapes were made only with the intention of suing Moyer. App. at 1985. The Ryders insisted that they made the tapes only because they suspected Moyer of pricing predatorily. However, the Ryders' stated beliefs are not relevant for summary judgment purposes. Rather, the words on the tapes can speak for themselves. These words, like the testimony of Salisbury and Ebersole, suggest the existence of an agreement in the industry of which Moyer was a part.

The district court considered these tapes, but ruled that they were insufficient to establish the existence of a conspiracy. The district court dismissed the significance of this testimony for primarily two reasons. First, it noted that the Ryders were trying to trap the Moyer representatives into saying something incriminating. Second, the court found that most of the statements revolved around Ryder's solicitation of A&B Rendering of Allentown, with which [9] While this statement as it stands now is hearsay, in this circuit it can be considered on a motion for summary judgment because it is capable of being admissible at trial. See J.F. Feeser, Inc., 909 F.2d at 1542. Petruzzi's IGA simply has to produce the Southern Tier principal to give this testimony. In any event, our result would be the same even if we ignored Ebersole's testimony on this point.

---

Moyer may have had a five-year contract. [31] [10] Opin. at 33-40. However, as Petruzzi's IGA points out, while the conversations may have been inspired by problems associated with A&B, the statements on the tapes are not limited to problems with the A&B account.

For example, in a meeting on March 11, 1983, John Hendricks and Lee Ryder began by discussing the problems with A&B. However, during this conversation, Hendricks told Ryder:

> Well -- you know the feeling of everybody. This isn't the first conversation we've had, and it's not the first conversation you've had with anybody else about taking people's accounts.

App. at 300. From this statement, a rational jury could conclude that Moyer and other renderers had spoken to Ryder about taking existing accounts. In fact, this conclusion is supported by other comments made by Hendricks. In a meeting the next day, Hendricks told Lee Ryder:

> You're blatantly taking -- you're blatantly taking accounts that have been existing with Moyer [32] Packing. Now, that's what you are doing, you know that. And I'm [*1236] not the first one that ever talked to you about it. You're not playing.

App. at 305 (emphasis added).

Hendricks also told Lee Ryder: (1) "why don't you put your prices in line and make money on what you have?" App. at 299; (2) "why don't you just operate with what you have and not worry about what other people have," App. at 293; (3) "the only restrictions that you have on operating your business is; don't take other people's accounts," App. at 298; and (4) "yeah, but you're interfering with other people's business*es*, that's the problem -- that's the problem," App. at 298 (emphasis added). From all of these statements, a jury reasonably could conclude that Hendricks, acting on behalf of Moyer, was attempting to get the Ryders to play by the industry rules and that Moyer was part of an agreement among some renderers.

As noted, the district court discounted these statements because they related to a particular problem with A&B. However, even the comments pertaining directly to A&B suggest a more pervasive problem. For instance, in a March 9, 1983 conversation between Curt Moyer and Kent Ryder, Moyer told [33] Kent Ryder: "I certainly don't want to start anything; you know what I mean. . . . Pretty, pretty heavy. So I don't know, somebody, something got away from somebody or just what happened, but that's what it is." App. at 282. Similarly, Hendricks told Lee Ryder, "I put A&B out of the rendering business and I loaded it." App. at 291; "you shouldn't solicit [A&B], that's right. I mean, now, uh, you knew that for the last five years." App. at 292; and "it's not an auction. Is it?" App. at 306. Again, a reasonable inference is that Moyer was attempting to get Ryder to play by the rules.

However, like the testimony of Salisbury and Ebersole, none of the statements in the Ryder tapes implicates Standard. In fact, Hendricks made the only reference to Standard in the tapes when he asked Lee Ryder why he was bothering his accounts and not Darling's or Standard's accounts. App. at 293. This statement in no way implicates Standard, for one cannot infer reasonably that this statement indicates that Standard had an agreement with Moyer. Petruzzi's IGA has argued that this statement shows that Moyer was aware of what was going on at Standard. However, the record reveals that it was easy to determine [34] who had what account because the raw materials were placed in containers that bore the servicing renderer's name. App. at 805-06. Moreover, it is conceded that representatives from Moyer and Standard spoke. Thus, this information could have been communicated during those conversations without violating the Sherman Act.

3. The Expert Testimony

In addition to this testimonial evidence, Petruzzi's IGA proffered the expert economic testimony of Dr. F. Gerard Adams and Dr. Martin A. Asher. These two economists worked together on a report that concluded that there was collusive activity with respect to existing accounts. After reading some of the evidence that Petruzzi's IGA had gathered, the two experts hypothesized that there would be a difference in the prices paid to existing accounts and new accounts. However, according to the experts, there is no rational basis for such a difference because the service provided by the defendants was homogeneous and therefore the only true basis for competition is price. See also App. at 2121 (testimony of Robert Sage of Moyer) (noting that price is key factor).

---

[10] There seems to be a dispute as to whether there was a five-year contract.

The experts noted that the homogeneity of the industry made it different from [35] industries in which the service or the product was differentiated because in those industries it may make sense to offer a special introductory price so as to introduce the customer to the special virtues of the soliciting company. For example, a newspaper or magazine might offer a low introductory rate on its product to obtain the consumer. A newspaper would be willing to accept this initial, short-term loss because it realistically could expect to recoup the loss once it has developed brand loyalty. By contrast, a rational gasoline station would not offer customers discounts only on their initial purchases because once its prices went up beyond the prices of its competitors, the customers would go elsewhere. Cf. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 589-93, [*1237] 106 S. Ct. at 1357-59 (noting that it did not make sense for defendants to price below costs where there was no opportunity to recoup this investment in future). Instead, we would expect a particular gas station's prices to be constant no matter how many times the customer had been in before unless, of course, it had an agreement with its competitors not to service each other's cars. [11]

[36] Although the two experts based their hypothesis on the other evidence proffered by the plaintiff, they tested this hypothesis with multiple regression analysis using the pricing data that the defendants turned over to Petruzzi's IGA. From this study, they concluded that new accounts were paid roughly 39% more for raw materials than were existing accounts. App. at 730-31. Both experts testified that this pricing pattern alone is sufficient to suggest anticompetitive behavior for, as noted above, there is no logical reason for any disparity in price in this homogeneous industry.

The district court dismissed the significance of this evidence for two reasons. First, it ruled that the testimony could not be considered because it was inadmissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 403. Second, it summarily stated that even if the evidence were admissible, it was not sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact because of weaknesses in the study. We consider each of these rulings in turn, finding the evidence to be both admissible and suggestive that Darling and Moyer acted in concert. However, because the study did not contain a sufficient sample size from Standard, we conclude [37] that it is insufficient to implicate Standard.

a. Admissibility

The district court concluded that while the expert testimony could not be excluded under Federal Rules of Evidence 702 and 703 based on the record before it, the testimony should be excluded under Rule 403 because it was "not more probative than prejudicial." Opin. at 55 (emphasis in original). Before considering the admissibility of the expert testimony under each of these Rules, we note that the district court applied the wrong test under Rule 403. HN10[] For testimony to be excluded under Rule 403, its probative value must be "substantially outweighed" by the listed dangers, rather than simply "not more probative than prejudicial."

HN11[] While ordinarily we review a district court's admissibility rulings under an abuse of discretion standard, when the court's ruling turns on an interpretation of a Federal Rule of Evidence the appropriate standard of review is plenary. Lippay v. Christos, 996 F.2d 1490, 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 13020 (3d Cir. 1993); DeLuca by DeLuca v. Merrell Dow Pharm., Inc., 911 F.2d 941, 944 (3d Cir. 1990). Here, though we do discuss the interpretation of the Rules, at bottom [38] we are using the deferential standard of review because the district court exercised discretion under Rule 403 in excluding the expert testimony. [12]

---

[11] A gas station might give a discount to a frequent customer to promote customer loyalty. If the defendants wanted to promote customer loyalty through pricing they would, as purchasers, raise prices.

[12] Darling and Moyer obviously are not harmed by our use of the abuse of discretion standard inasmuch as we surely would have come to the same result regarding this evidence if we had exercised plenary review, i.e., the evidence should not have been excluded. While in theory Petruzzi's IGA could be prejudiced by the deferential review inasmuch as it is seeking to overturn the district court's Rule 403 determination, in fact it is not because we rule the evidence admissible as to all defendants, though as we shall explain, it is inadequate to support Petruzzi's IGA's case against Standard.

(i) Rule 702. Rule 702 states in its entirety:

> HN12[] If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, [39] or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise.

The district court found, and the defendants do not contend otherwise, that the proffered testimony passed the Rule 702 threshold. Thus, our discussion of Rule 702 is rather limited because this ruling is not in dispute. [*1238] Nevertheless, we do address the issue as it is useful to do so for purposes of placing our discussion of Rule 403 in context.

HN13[] There are three intertwined bases for excluding testimony under Rule 702: (1) if the testimony will not assist the trier of fact; (2) if scientific evidence is not sufficiently reliable; and (3) if the particular expert does not have sufficient specialized knowledge to assist the jurors. See 3 Jack B. Weinstein & Margaret A. Berger, Weinstein's Evidence P 702[01] (1992) [hereinafter Weinstein's Evidence]; see also Hines v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 926 F.2d 262, 272-73 (3d Cir. 1991) (noting two general reasons to exclude evidence under Rule 702: unqualified witness and unreliable scientific technique (citing In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litig., 916 F.2d 829, 855 (3d Cir. 1990), cert. denied [40] , 111 S. Ct. 1584 (1991))).

There is no basis in the record to challenge the qualifications of Drs. Adams and Asher. Thus, the only matters which we must consider are whether the testimony will assist the trier of fact and whether the methodology is scientifically acceptable. However, neither of these factors require the exclusion of the evidence.

First, we note that the scientific method used by the economists, multiple regression analysis, is reliable. Therefore, the results of such a study should be accepted, assuming that it was done properly. Here, the only possible problem is that the data set used by the experts was incomplete or inaccurate such that an economist would not rely on it. However, no showing was made to this effect by the defendants.

Second, and more importantly, the testimony clearly will assist the trier of fact because it makes sense out of pricing data through the use of multiple regression analysis. The data standing alone are meaningless to a lay person. In fact, they are meaningless to an economist until a statistical study is run.

Nonetheless, if the expert testimony is overly confusing or more prejudicial than probative, then [41] it also can be excluded under Rule 702. 3 Weinstein's Evidence P 702[02], at 702-19 to -20. Here, the main concern is that the testimony is more prejudicial than probative. This concern is similar to the concern under Rule 403 and should be decided on a case-by-case basis. Id. at 702-20 to -22.

In this case, such an analysis weighs in favor of admissibility. The experts conducted a pricing study based on data that they received from the defendants. Though there may be flaws in their study, no showing to this effect has been made by the defendants. Thus, while the defendants did try to poke holes in the value of the study during the depositions, they have not supplied any experts who testified that the study's methodology was fatally flawed. In fact, as in DeLuca, here the experts' qualifications were unchallenged, [13] the testimony went to a crucial issue, and the analysis purported to be based on reasoning accepted in the published literature. See DeLuca, 911 F.2d at 957. Therefore, given these facts, we are "unwilling in the absence of countervailing evidence or persuasive argument to conclude that [the expert] testimony would be unhelpful [42] under Rule 702." Id. Accordingly, the district court correctly concluded that the evidence satisfied Rule 702.

(ii) Rule 703. Rule 703 states in its entirety:

---

[13] Perhaps facetiously, Darling states that the plaintiff's experts had expertise only in economics, not as "cospiratologists [sic]." Darling's Brief at 25. But as we have noted, "Characterizing the expert as an 'oath-helper,' or a 'conspiracyologist,' is no substitute for recognition of the rule of law embodied in Rule 702." In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 280.

> HN14[] The facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to the expert at or before the hearing. If of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject, the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence.

The district court found that Rule 703 does not provide a basis to exclude the expert [*1239] testimony. [14] [43] Opin. at 55. While it is true that the experts based their opinion in part on evidence that otherwise was not admissible, they also concluded that the pricing data alone supported Petruzzi's IGA's allegations. App. at 582, 739-40. The extra evidence simply reinforced their conclusion. Therefore, even if the extra evidence was not the type reasonably relied upon by experts in their field, the testimony still satisfied Rule 703 because there can be no doubting that price data is of the type reasonably used by economists. See In re Japanese Elec. Prods, 723 F.2d at 280. Moreover, there has been no showing by the defendants that the other evidence upon which the economists used is not of a type reasonably relied upon by economists. Thus, the district court correctly found that the testimony would be admissible under Rule 703.

[44] (iii) Rule 403. HN15[] While Rule 403 can be used to exclude expert testimony before trial, we have stated that if expert testimony survives the rigors of Rules 702 and 703, then Rule 403 becomes an unlikely basis for exclusion, especially in the pretrial setting. See In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litig., 916 F.2d 829, 859 (3d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 1584 (1991); DeLuca, 911 F.2d at 957. Moreover, as we have noted, Rule 702 incorporates the danger of unfair prejudice, United States v. Downing, 753 F.2d 1224, 1242 (3d Cir. 1985); therefore, if a court were to exclude expert testimony under Rule 403 it seemingly would have to be on some other basis, such as confusion of the issues or waste of time. See id. at 1243. Nonetheless, the district court excluded the testimony because the court thought it was unfairly prejudicial and could mislead the jury.

As noted earlier, the court seemingly applied the wrong test under Rule 403, and thus never made a determination that the unfair prejudice that would result from the expert testimony [45] would substantially outweigh the probative value. For purposes of this discussion, however, we will assume that the court made such a determination. Yet, in doing so, the court abused its discretion.

In assessing the experts' testimony, the court correctly noted that the information regarding the pricing patterns was new. Opin. at 57. Nonetheless, it held that this testimony was more prejudicial than helpful because there was no factual basis for the experts' theory and because of problems in the data set. Opin. at 62-64. However, both these conclusions are mistaken. First, basic economic theory provides the linchpin for the experts' theory. As noted above, in a homogeneous industry it does not make sense for a company to differentiate in price between new and existing accounts.

Second, any problems with the underlying data should have been resolved under Federal Rules of Evidence 702 or 703. However, as already noted, the district court explicitly found that the study satisfied these requirements. In that context, the court properly recognized:

> Defendants have not produced any expert reports to counter the opinions of plaintiff's experts or challenge the data on which they [46] rely. This court is not, therefore, in a position, to undertake its own review of whether the data on which the two economists rely is of the type relied upon by others in their field. Nor are we in a position to challenge their methodology.

Opin. at 54-55. Thus, the court concluded that the exclusion of their testimony under either Rule 702 or 703 would be improper without opinions from experts for the defendants or an evidentiary hearing. But there were no such experts and there was no evidentiary hearing.

---

[14] While the defendants do not concede that this ruling was correct, they do not launch an all-out assault on it. See Darling's Brief at 25 n.24; Standard's Brief at 38 n.28.

However, a few pages later in its opinion, the court changed its approach, holding that the testimony was prejudicial because there are questions about its reliability and completeness. "An economic theory unsupported by factual data adds nothing to the analysis," the district court concluded, "and does not raise an issue of material fact where none existed." Opin. at 62. Thus, the court found unfair prejudice because:

> [*1240] imbued as such testimony would be, with the aura of economic expertise and couched in terms of economic theory and analysis there is great danger that a jury of laymen, unfamiliar with economic antitrust theory and analysis would accept unquestioningly [47] the theories espoused by Drs. Adams and Asher and defer to their opinions on the existence of a conspiracy, the ultimate issue of this case.

Opin. at 63.

Similarly, while discussing Rules 702 and 703 the court stated, "We do not question that their opinions are based on data of the type reasonably relied on by experts in the field." Opin. at 54. Yet, the court in considering Rule 403 then asserted that data which the experts used was unreliable: "we know nothing of what was supplied or how it was used in determining that prices paid to established accounts were lower than those paid to new accounts." Opin. at 59. The court further added, "The deposition testimony of Drs. Adams and Asher is equally vague and raises more questions about the reliability and completeness of the data considered that it answers." Opin. at 59-60.

However, if the court were concerned about the accuracy of the data, then it should have held an in limine hearing to assess the admissibility of the testimony. Cf. In Re Paoli, 916 F.2d at 859 ("[A] HN16[] court cannot fairly ascertain the potential relevance of evidence for Rule 403 purposes until it has a full record relevant [48] to the putatively objectionable evidence."). Instead, without any contrary expert testimony on which to rely and without holding an evidentiary hearing, the court chose to make its own assessment of the study's value. Clearly, this was inappropriate and reveals the court's error. See In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 281 ("In making these exclusionary rulings the trial judge made the same fundamental legal error which we noted earlier: he assumed that the determining factor under Rule 703 was his view of what data experts in a field ought to rely upon rather than making a factual inquiry and a finding as to what data experts, in this case economists, deem reliable."). As we have stated:

> Rule 403 HN17[] is a trial-oriented rule. Precipitous Rule 403 determinations, before the challenging party has had an opportunity to develop the record, are therefore unfair and improper.
>
> In sum, we hold that in order to exclude evidence under Rule 403 at the pretrial stage, a court must have a record complete enough on the point at issue to be considered a virtual surrogate for a trial record.

In re Paoli, 916 F.2d at 859-60 [49] (emphasis added) (footnote omitted). In this case, whatever else can be said about the completeness of the record, it is clear that the record on the experts' price study was not sufficiently complete to be a surrogate for trial.

In justifying its decision, the court also stated that because the evidence of prior civil and criminal actions against defendants is not admissible and yet was relied on by the experts, there would be a danger in allowing them to testify when the jury cannot hear one of the key bases for their opinion. However, the court ignored the experts' testimony that the pricing patterns alone provide sufficient basis for their conclusion. In doing so, the court employed a process similar to that which we criticized in In re Japanese Elec. Prods., regarding the district court's Rule 702 analysis:

> What the court in effect did was to eliminate all parts of the report in which the expert economist, after describing the conditions in the respective markets, the opportunities for collusion, the evidence pointing to collusion, the terms of certain undisputed agreements, and the market behavior, expressed the opinion that there was concert of action.

723 F.2d at 280. [50] Thus, there can be no doubt that the district court abused its discretion by excluding the proffered expert testimony under Rule 403.

We also note that the court excluded the expert testimony based on a concern about unfair prejudice. HN18[] Unfair prejudice "means an undue tendency to suggest decision on an improper basis, commonly, though not necessarily, an emotional one." Fed. R. Evid. 403 Advisory Committee's Note. Thus, it is likely that the court in using the term "unfair [*1241] prejudice" simply meant that the evidence would mislead the jury. Yet, "vigorous cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and careful instruction on the burden of proof are the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence." Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharm., Inc., 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 61 U.S.L.W. 4805, 4809 , 113 S. Ct. 2786 (U.S. June 28, 1993) (No. 92-102); see also In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 279 ("'The jury is intelligent enough, aided by counsel, to ignore what is unhelpful in its deliberations.'" (quoting 3 Weinstein's Evidence P 702[03])).

b. Is the economic evidence enough

As noted, the district court stated that even [51] if the expert economic testimony were admissible, it still would grant the defendants summary judgment. In particular, the court stated that based on the deficiencies in the underpinnings of the expert testimony, no genuine issue of material fact would be raised. But it is clear to us that in order to reach this decision, the court impermissibly weighed Petruzzi's IGA's evidence by commenting on its weakness. Moreover, it apparently did not consider this evidence in conjunction with the other evidence put forward by Petruzzi's IGA.

To support its conclusion, the court stated, "The [expert opinion] added nothing to the evidence." Opin. at 65. Yet, earlier the court itself recognized that the testimony regarding the pricing patterns was new. Opin. at 57. The results of the multiple regression analysis show a price differential between new and existing accounts. As discussed above, there is no rational way to explain this difference. To get around this study, the defendants and the district court stressed potential flaws in the experts' study. However, the fact remains that the defendants did not supply expert testimony undermining the validity of the study or ask for a hearing on the [52] study's validity. Thus, they have established no valid basis for challenging the study's reliability.

While the study alone may not be enough to raise a jury issue, it certainly goes a long way in helping Petruzzi's IGA to satisfy its burden of proof. More importantly, this study, in conjunction with the testimony of Salisbury and Ebersole and the Ryder tapes, "tends to exclude the possibility" that the market as it exists today came about a result of independent action.

However, as the study relates to Standard, the district court's reading of the testimony is correct. During his deposition, Dr. Asher testified that the study used only one year of Standard's data, even though the experts had access to more years. Instead, they extrapolated from the one year by using the same pattern that existed with respect to Moyer. According to Asher, they used this methodology because there were not sufficient new accounts for Standard to create an adequate sample. App. at 749. Thus, as Dr. Asher admits, the data set relating to Standard was insufficient to draw any definite conclusions. While this data problem is not enough to exclude the price study generally, it does serve to limit the inferences [53] that can be drawn from it as it relates to Standard. Therefore, because this is the only evidence implicating Standard, this evidence standing alone is not sufficient to defeat summary judgment. See Daubert, 61 U.S.L.W. at 4809-10 ("in the event the trial court concludes that the scintilla of evidence presented supporting a position is insufficient to allow a reasonable juror to conclude that the position more likely than not is true, the court remains free to . . . grant summary judgment"); Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange Nat'l Bank of Chicago, 877 F.2d 1333, 1339 (7th Cir. 1989) (noting that opinion not based on adequate facts supplies nothing to judicial process); Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motor Corp., 743 F. Supp. 353, 364 (E.D. Pa. 1990) (granting summary judgment where expert opinion did not add any evidence), aff'd, 959 F.2d 468 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139, 113 S. Ct. 196 (1992).

4. Few Account Turnovers

Finally, Petruzzi's IGA has put forward testimony that relatively few accounts transferred [54] among the defendants. This testimony also supports Petruzzi's IGA's allegations for it is anecdotal evidence of the effects of the conspiracy. For example, Salisbury testified that he did not lose any of his customers [*1242] to Standard or Darling. App. at 2223. Sage testified that during approximately 15 years at Moyer he lost less than 20 accounts for fat and bones to the other two defendants. App. at 2179-80. Uriahs Shelly of Moyer testified that in approximately 13 years he lost less than ten accounts to Darling out of roughly 1,500. App. at 2286. Finally, Earl Englemyer of Darling testified that during his ten years, he did not lose any accounts to the competition. See App. at 1046-50. While this anecdotal evidence by itself is certainly not enough to prove the existence of a conspiracy, when considered in conjunction with the other evidence, it makes an inference of concerted action more reasonable.

Yet, once again, this evidence does not implicate Standard. The record clearly shows that Standard had capacity problems during the time of the alleged conspiracy. Thus, its ability to process additional materials was limited severely. Indeed, as Petruzzi's IGA's own experts testified, [55] Standard had very few new accounts during this period. Thus, the fact that Moyer and/or Darling lost few accounts to Standard should be expected as for the most part Standard was not bidding on anyone's accounts during this time. [15]

E. Conscious Parallelism

HN19[] In addition to proving concerted [56] action through testimonial and economic evidence, an antitrust plaintiff can establish concerted action through the defendants' behavior standing alone. While, as noted above, mere consciously parallel behavior alone is insufficient to prove a conspiracy, it is circumstantial evidence from which, when supplemented by additional evidence, an illegal agreement can be inferred. See, e.g., Schoenkopf v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 637 F.2d 205, 208 (3d Cir. 1980). The need for additional evidence derives from the same concerns elaborated in Matsushita, namely the desire not to curb procompetitive behavior. [16] Therefore, in addition to establishing consciously parallel behavior by the defendants, a plaintiff also must show the existence of certain "plus" factors, including: (1) actions contrary to the defendants' economic interests, and (2) a motivation to enter into such an agreement. See Schoenkopf, 637 F.2d at 208; Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 446 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086, 98 S. Ct. 1280, 55 L. Ed. 2d 791 (1978); Venzie Corp. v. United States Mineral Prods. Co., 521 F.2d 1309, 1314 (3d Cir. 1975); [57] see also William C. Holmes, 1992 Antitrust Law Handbook § 1.03[3], at 154 (noting that wide range of circumstantial evidence can be used to establish needed plus factor, "for example, have they attended meetings or conducted discussions at which they had the opportunity to conspire; have they acted against their own economic best interests; have they engaged in parallel behavior that is economically irrational unless an agreement exists; has at least one participant expressly invited common action by the other . . . "). In this respect, then conscious parallelism cases "are merely illustrations of the more general proposition that there are legal limitations upon the inferences which may be drawn from circumstantial evidence." In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 304.

[58] HN20[] To establish a conspiracy based on consciously parallel behavior, a plaintiff [*1243] must show: (1) that the defendants' behavior was parallel; (2) that the defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and that this awareness was an element in their decision-making processes; and (3) certain "plus" factors. Schoenkopf, 637 F.2d at 208. In laying out this test, the district court misstated the appropriate legal standard, stating that Petruzzi's IGA had to prove the existence of "a shared common motive to coordinate behavior." Opin. at 11.

[15] Petruzzi's IGA submitted other evidence which it contends showed the existence of a conspiracy among the defendants. This information included social contacts and telephone calls among representatives of the defendants. In light of our conclusion that summary judgment should not have been granted based on the testimony of Salisbury, Ebersole, and the economic experts, we do not consider this evidence. We do note, however, that the evidence is insufficient to exclude the possibility that Standard acted independently. See Tose v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 648 F.2d at 894 ("Proof of opportunity to conspire, without more, will not sustain an inference that a conspiracy has taken place.").

[16] For instance, most major banks raise or lower their prime rates when the Federal Reserve lowers the rate it charges them. Banks are certainly aware of the other banks decisions and are motivated, at least in part, by their competitors' actions. Nonetheless, proof of only this behavior is not sufficient to establish a section 1 violation. See In re Japanese Elec. Prods., 723 F.2d at 304 ("While conscious parallel conduct has some tendency suggestive of concert of action, the tendency is so slight that we have held that circumstance, standing alone, to be legally insufficient.").

However, we have made it clear that the HN21[] defendants need not share the same motive. Rather, all that is required is that they each have a motive to conspire. Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 214-15 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993). While the defendants do not strenuously contest that their behavior, at least in some respects, was consciously parallel, we address these aspects of a conscious parallelism case to lay the proper framework.

1. Parallel Behavior

As Moyer and Darling implicitly have conceded, Petruzzi's IGA has put forward [59] evidence establishing that they acted similarly. While it may be true that the defendants did not use the same prices or run their internal business operations identically, the evidence shows that they acted similarly by refraining from competing on existing accounts, while at the same time competing actively for new accounts. See App. at 638-39, 641 (testimony of Warren Alcock of Darling); App. at 1263-65 (testimony of Edward Harrigan of Moyer); App. at 2088-89, 2124 (testimony of Robert Sage of Moyer); see also Moyer's Brief at 32 (admitting that expert testimony showed that defendants acted in parallel manner).

The record also shows that Moyer and Darling retaliated against those competitors that did bid on their accounts. As Warren Alcock of Darling proudly testified, justifying his conduct by reference to a famous American foreign policy: "I regarded Teddy Roosevelt's statement of 'Speak softly and carry a big stick' as -- renderers did not bother me. I did not bother them. If they bothered me, I hit them back hard." App. at 641-42. Likewise, Salisbury stated generally about Moyer:

> [Robert Sage] said that if any other rendering outfits was bothering our customers, [60] then it was fair game to go back and bother theirs. Other than that, just what customers was there, what was ours was ours.

App. at 2192.

In addition, Salisbury provided testimony regarding specific instances of Moyer's retaliation against noncomplying competitors. For instance, Salisbury discussed retaliation against Ryder:

Q: Why did you attempt to get Peck's Market?

A: At that time, Moyer was having problems with Ryder in different areas.

Q: Did anybody tell you to solicit Ryder's accounts?

A: Mr. Sage.

App. at 2195; see also App. at 2204 (Salisbury's testimony relating to Moyer's problems with Bear Creek) ("A: Yes, I did retaliate on a couple of their stops.; Q: Did anybody tell you to retaliate?; A: Mr. Scarborough."); App. at 1178-81 (testimony of Robert Fry) (discussing Sage's conversations with him about competitors who took his accounts); App. at 301 (Hendricks to Lee Ryder: "I'm going to go out and cost you money, and you're going to go out and cost me money, and if that's what you want, I guess that's what we're going to do. We'll see who's got the most money."). Likewise, Ebersole also testified about Sage's retaliatory efforts against Southern [61] Tier and Fry Rendering, two noncomplying competitors. See App. at 859-62. Moreover, Ebersole testified that Moyer approached other renderers to help in their retaliation efforts. According to Ebersole, Mr. Leidy, from Greencastle Products, was approached by Moyer to help it solicit Ebersole's customers to help retaliate against him. App. at 918-19. From this wealth of evidence, a reasonable jury could conclude that Moyer and Darling acted similarly both by refraining from competing on existing accounts and by retaliating against those renderers who went after their accounts.

[*1244] 2. Consciousness

Petruzzi's IGA also put forward evidence suggesting that the renderers were aware of each other's policies. For example, as Moyer admits in its brief, Hendricks's recorded statement "everybody does it [refrains from soliciting other renderers' accounts]" proves "parallel conduct," i.e., at least Moyer was aware that its behavior was consistent with its competitors. See App. at 294; Brief at 20 n.4. Similarly, Sage testified:

A: The main competition was always new openings with everybody. You are always competing hard on that.

. . .

Q: Was there less activity for existing [62] accounts as compared to new openings?
A: Yes.

App. at 2124; see also App. at 1192-93 (testimony of Robert Fry of Fry Rendering) (stating that Fry did not solicit existing accounts, but only went after them when he received calls from them and noting that this behavior was "a way of doing business. You stayed in your own area. That was it.").

Similarly, there was evidence indicating that Darling knew of Moyer's retaliatory efforts. For example, Lee Ryder testified that Mr. Schneider, a Darling representative, tried to intervene and settle the price war between Ryder and Moyer. App. at 1921-22. Darling may have taken this role because it saw itself as a maintainer of order in the industry. However, whatever its reasons, it shows that it was aware of the retaliatory behavior of Moyer.

3. "Plus" Factors

As noted above, mere consciously parallel behavior is not a sufficient basis from which to infer concerted action. Instead, courts require "plus" factors because otherwise the evidence is equally consistent with legal behavior. In his treatise, Professor Areeda suggests the easiest "plus" factor to explain is evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. See VI [63] Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law*: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application* P 1434b, at 214 (1986) [hereinafter Areeda, Antitrust Law]. The testimony of Ebersole and Salisbury, the Ryder tapes, and the economic data discussed above satisfies this requirement. [17]

However, even without this evidence purporting to show a traditional agreement, we have stated that a plaintiff can survive summary judgment if it shows that the defendants had a motive to conspire and acted contrary to their self-interest. Professor Areeda cautions against blindly applying these "plus" factors, lest they become meaningless. See VI Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1434c, at 214-15. For instance, it is quite likely that oligopolists acting independently might sell at the same above-marginal [64] cost price as their competitors because the firms are interdependent and competitors would match any price cut. Therefore, they quickly learn that price cuts do not increase market share and go back to their noncompetitive pricing. Accordingly, Areeda warns courts not to consider a failure to cut prices or an initiation of a price rise as an action against self-interest because it also reflects the interdependence of the industry. See id.

However, Areeda's concerns are not germane here because we are not dealing with parallel pricing. Rather, we are dealing with refusals to bid on existing accounts as aggressively as new accounts. See Donald F. Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655, 681 (1962) ("I have suggested that the kind of behavior found in parallel interdependent decisions as to basic price and similar price matters should not be deemed an unlawful conspiracy; but that parallel interdependent decisions to adopt rigid delivered-price systems, to indulge in practices patently exclusionary of competitors, and to impose resale price maintenance, may appropriately [65] be condemned on a conspiracy charge."). The defendants have justified their behavior by arguing that they did not want to induce a price war or retaliation. Thus, they argue that their behavior merely reflects their interdependence. [*1245] The district court accepted this argument. See Opin. at 27 ("Further, attempts to lure an account away from another renderer were likely to incur the wrath of that renderer and bring about a retaliatory strike against one of the aggressor's own accounts."). Yet, the defendants' argument makes no sense for there is no reason that bidding on each other's accounts should start a price war anymore than bidding on new accounts should trigger one. One logical explanation is that the defendants set up the rules this way.

It is clear that this behavior was against the defendants' self-interest. As the economic experts testified, such a refusal to bid is against their economic interest, especially when they could beat the price. See App. at 2229 (statement of Salisbury) ("If the account was with Darling I did not go after it even when I knew I could do better on the price."). Indeed, compare this behavior with the instances of retaliation when Moyer went [66] after an account even though the price was "over and above" what they were paying in their own areas. App. at 860 (testimony of Ebersole regarding Moyer's behavior). Leaving all other things the same, absent an agreement it does not make economic sense for defendants not to bid on an account, unless they have some problem like capacity or they know that the existing price is too high.

[17] Moreover, in this respect, the testimony relating to the defendants' opportunity to conspire and the solicitation of others to partake in common action is also relevant. See Holmes, supra, § 1.03[3], at 154; note 15 supra.

In fact, only Standard made claims of capacity problems. While it is true that Standard did bid on some new accounts, we are unwilling to draw the inference that it did so because of an agreement with Moyer and Darling. Rather, Irwin Frish of Standard has indicated that he bid only on new accounts that were brought to his attention. App. at 2658-59. The record clearly indicates that Standard did not employ a large sales force and that Petruzzi's IGA did not rebut Standard's contention that several of the new accounts it did acquire came from Moyer and Darling. While we recognize that an antitrust defendant should not be granted summary judgment merely because it asserted a plausible motive for its behavior, see Eastman Kodak Co., 112 S. Ct. at 2083, we emphasize that [67] Petruzzi's IGA in the first instance has failed to put forward enough evidence suggesting that Standard acted in concert with Darling and Moyer. In these circumstances, we are hesitant to declare that companies must bid on accounts that they cannot service to avoid possible antitrust liability.

Additionally, Moyer's and Darling's retaliatory behavior was against their economic interest for rational business people do not undertake above-market retaliatory strikes unless they feel that they can recoup the costs in the long run. Cf. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 589-93, 106 S. Ct. at 1357-59 (concluding sellers would not agree to lower prices unless losses could be recovered in long run). Here, however, Salisbury's testimony indicates that Moyer did it only to send a message. [18] Regarding Moyer's retaliatory efforts against Ryder, Salisbury stated that Moyer sought: "Not to drive them out of business. We just retaliated against stops that Ryder had taken away from Moyer." App. at 2217. Once this effort was successful, the retaliation stopped: "it lasted about a week. Then I was given word by Mr. Scarborough stay away from Ryder stops." App. [68] at 2223. The fact that Moyer and Darling both engaged in a practice that was otherwise against their self-interest certainly suggests that there was an understanding in the industry that required enforcement. This is the same understanding that Salisbury's and Ebersole's testimony suggested.

Petruzzi's IGA also has shown the defendants' [69] motivation to enter into such an agreement. Again, as the experts have testified, each defendant stood to make extra profits if it could keep the price of its raw materials [*1246] down. Moreover the defendants have not contradicted the experts' conclusion with evidence suggesting that any savings in the costs of production would be wiped out by competition in the market for finished goods.

It is one thing for competitors all to charge the same price, as a perfectly competitive market could lead them to do so. It is quite another for competitors all to refrain from soliciting each other's accounts. See VI Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1420d, at 123-24 (noting that refusal to bid in oligopoly situation is not inevitable, but cannot be sustained without some enforcement mechanism). It is still another for competitors to use the same enforcement mechanism. Therefore, we hold that Petruzzi's IGA has put forward enough evidence to take this case beyond the simple allegation of parallel behavior. It has supplied evidence which indicates that Moyer and Darling had an actual agreement, and it has provided evidence that Moyer and Darling acted against their self-interest in ways not attributable to [70] interdependence.

F. Evidence Properly Excluded

---

[18] This behavior is different than an oligopolist responding to a price cut by one competitor with an equal or lower price. In that case, presumably the price is still above the oligopolist's costs and thus makes sense. Moreover, that price typically is offered to all its customers, not just those who are customers of the price-reducer. Furthermore, as Professor Areeda states:

> One oligopolist may refrain from lowering his price because he fears, indeed knows that his rivals will match it. But that differs from the situation of the present subparagraph where the feared retaliation is something more coercive than matched behavior.

VI Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1415f, at 93 n.27.

While we conclude that based on the evidence so far discussed, summary judgment was improperly granted to Darling and Moyer, we nevertheless address two additional pieces of evidence that the district court excluded from consideration. We do so because one piece implicates Standard and because we recognize that on remand Petruzzi's IGA may want to introduce this evidence.

1. The Ellerin Memorandum

Petruzzi's IGA produced a memorandum created in 1983 by Michelle Ellerin, Lee Ryder's former wife, detailing Ryder's experiences in the rendering industry. With hopes of getting the government to indict Moyer, Ellerin prepared a memorandum providing a brief history of the rendering industry and Ryder's experiences in it. The memorandum states, among other things, that John Hendricks of Moyer Packing told Lee Ryder about the industry "rules"; i.e., no soliciting each other's existing accounts, new business is fair game, and if there is a "mix up," then material must be traded to adjust for any inequities. This memorandum also states that Darling and Standard worked together. Thus, if admissible, the information contained in [71] this memorandum might be sufficient to defeat summary judgment as to all defendants. However, the district court found that the information contained in this memorandum could not be considered because it was based entirely on inadmissible hearsay that could not be reduced to admissible form at trial. Opin. at 28-33; see J.F. Feeser, Inc., 909 F.2d at 1542; Williams v. Borough of West Chester, Pa., 891 F.2d 458, 466 n.12 (3d Cir. 1989) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324-27, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2553-55, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)).

Petruzzi's IGA argues that the district court erred in reaching this conclusion because the information is capable of being admitted at trial. In particular, it argues that Ellerin had personal knowledge of the events listed in the memorandum. However, our review of her deposition reveals that the district court correctly concluded that Ellerin derived her knowledge solely from information from her husband or Kent Ryder. See, e.g., App. at 985 ("Everything I knew about the industry and what the document speaks about came primarily from Lee and from [72] some degree from Kent."); App. at 998 ("My direct knowledge comes only from Lee and Kent Ryder."). Moreover, because Lee and Kent Ryder both testified during their depositions that they had no reason to believe that there was any collusion in the industry, we agree with the district court that the relevant information contained in the memorandum could not be reduced to admissible form.

Petruzzi's IGA also argues that there are numerous exceptions to the hearsay rule under which it could introduce the documents produced by Ellerin. Yet, it does not suggest any particular rule under which we can conclude that the information could be admitted. In the circumstances, we hold that for purposes of this summary judgment motion this memorandum cannot be reduced to admissible form. [19]

[73] 2. The Prior Antitrust Actions

Petruzzi's IGA also offered evidence of five prior antitrust actions brought against [*1247] the defendants and/or employees of the defendants. Petruzzi's IGA claims that this evidence is admissible to prove the defendants' motive and economic incentive to participate in the conspiracy. See Bogosian, 561 F.2d at 446 (requiring proof of these "plus" factors in conscious parallelism case). The district court, however, refused to consider this evidence because none of the five prior actions qualified for admissions under section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16(a), and their admissibility was barred by Federal Rules of Evidence 408 and 410. Opin. at 44-45. After a careful review of this evidence we have concluded that the district court's ruling was correct and that further discussion regarding the bases for its conclusion is not necessary.

---

[19] Petruzzi's IGA also argues that the documents were admissible because Lee Ryder asserted the attorney-client privilege over them in his deposition. However, our reading of the record does not reveal any such assertion by Lee Ryder and the reference to the record in Petruzzi's IGA's Reply Brief at 13 to support its argument is not to his deposition. Furthermore, Ellerin testified in her deposition that she prepared the document in her capacity as a spouse, not as a lawyer. App. at 978. Moreover, Ellerin testified that she and Lee Ryder showed the document to the government, thereby removing any possibility of a claim of privilege. App. at 980. In any event, even if Lee Ryder asserted a claim of privilege over the document, he did not vouch, as Petruzzi's IGA suggests, that he was the source of the information nor did he vouch for the accuracy of the statements in the document.

We do point out, however, that these prior actions are not relevant to the defendants' motive. As noted above, the defendants' motive to enter into the conspiracy is clear, and the existence of these earlier cases has no relevance to proving that [74] fact. Simply because the defendants were named in past antitrust cases involving similar allegations does not make it more probable that the defendants had a motive to carry out their conspiracy. See Fed. R. Evid. 401. Petruzzi's IGA's argument is at best an attempt to end run the restrictions on using past settlements and nolo pleas against defendants. [20]

III.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we will reverse the district court's July 31, 1992 order inasmuch as [75] it grants summary judgment to Darling and Moyer. However, we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment to Standard.

---

[20] Petruzzi's IGA also has suggested that the fact that the defendants' discussed the prices of finished goods indicates that they acted in concert. The district court rejected this conclusion, noting that the prices for finished goods were reported in the trade reports and that any inference relating to the raw materials market would be too speculative. Opin. at 47-48. We agree with the district court that evidence of these discussions among the defendants in one context is insufficient to draw an inference of conspiracy in another market.

Tri-State Rubbish v. Waste Management

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

July 13, 1993, Decided

No. 92-2218

Reporter

998 F.2d 1073 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 17409 ; 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,295

TRI-STATE RUBBISH, INC., ET AL., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. WASTE MANAGEMENT, INC., ET AL., Defendants, Appellees.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MAINE [Hon. Gene Carter, U.S. District Judge].

Core Terms

municipalities, customers, prices, district court, contracts, disposal, tipping, supervision, recyclable, predation, counts, solid waste, ordinances, predatory, antitrust claim, waste disposal, trash, waste collection, collection, transfer station, state action, per ton, electricity, immunity, monopoly, haulers, failure to state a claim, state action doctrine, anti trust law, flow control

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Municipalities enjoy the protection of the Parker doctrine if, but only if, the conduct in question is of a kind authorized or directed by state law.

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN2[] Local Governments, Claims By & Against

Immunity from antitrust claims is not defeated by claims that the municipality "conspired" with a private party or that the municipality made some error under local law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN3[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

State action immunity will extend to private actors only where they are subject to adequate official supervision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Exclusive dealing contracts may also benefit customers and are unlawful only upon a particularized showing of unreasonableness.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN5[] Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices, Predatory Pricing

A company that rationally prices its own product or service at or above its own costs does not violate the Sherman Act merely because its costs, and thus its prices, are lower than a rival's costs; and this is true even though its lower costs may be due to the generosity, or foolishness, of another supplier who has charged the company too little for an input.

Counsel: Ralph A. Dyer for appellants.

Michael A. Nelson with whom Emily A. Bloch, Nicholas S. Nadzo and Jensen Baird Gardner & Henry were on brief for appellee Mid-Maine Waste Action Corp.

Robert S. Frank with whom Carl E. Kandutsch and Verrill & Dana were on brief for appellees Waste Management, Inc., Waste Management of Maine, Inc., Consolidated Waste Services, Inc. and Consolidated Waste Transport, Inc.

John J. Wall, III with whom Thomas F. Monaghan and Monaghan, Leahy, Hochadel & Libby were on brief for appellee City of Auburn.

Judges: Before Breyer, Chief Judge, Torruella and Boudin, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: BOUDIN

Opinion

[*1074] BOUDIN, Circuit Judge. The complaint in this case charged that a number of entities, public and private, were seeking to monopolize the waste disposal business and otherwise acting in violation of federal and state law. The district court [*1075] dismissed the complaint for failure to state a claim. We affirm the district court with one exception: as to the predation claims against the private defendants, we do not think that state action [2] immunity has been made out on this record, and therefore remand those claims for further proceedings.

I. THE BACKGROUND

This case is one of several in which state and local communities have taken measures to cope with their waste collection responsibilities, and private haulers have been adversely affected and responded with antitrust suits. The cases vary, and in this one the history is tangled and the claims numerous. In describing the facts, we take the allegations of the complaint as true, as is customary in reviewing dismissals for failure to state a claim. See Watterson v. Page, 987 F.2d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 1993).

Maine has in force statutes that give local communities substantial authority over local waste collection and disposal. Under this legislative umbrella, the City of Auburn and eleven other municipalities formed in 1986 a non-profit, non-stock corporation to assist in waste disposal. The entity--Mid-Maine Waste Action Corporation ("MMWAC")--was then mandated to construct a facility to burn municipal waste and derive electricity from the process. Maine law expressly authorizes municipalities to cooperate in waste disposal projects, Me. Rev. [3] Stat. Ann. tit. 38, § 2201, and provides for interlocal agreements to organize public waste disposal corporations to own or operate facilities. Id. § 1304-B(5).

MMWAC issued over $ 42 million in bonds to construct a waste-to-energy facility. The bonds were to be funded through so-called "tipping fees," customarily charged to those who dispose of waste at a landfill or other disposal facility, and through the revenues from the sale of the electricity. To secure the quantity of waste needed to operate the facility economically--that is, at a high percentage of its capacity--the MMWAC municipalities enacted flow control ordinances. These local laws, authorized by Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 38, § 1304-B(2), required the delivery of all solid waste generated within each municipality to MMWAC. Each municipality also contracted with MMWAC to deliver to it the solid waste generated in the community, paying MMWAC whatever tipping fee was required to produce revenues to service its debt.

Because the MMWAC incinerator-generator facility would not be ready before 1992, MMWAC provided in the meantime for an alternative method of disposing of the waste it received. For this interim period, MMWAC [4] contracted with two related entities, Consolidated Waste Services and Consolidated Waste Transportation (collectively, "the Consolidated companies") to operate a transfer station near the MMWAC construction site. A transfer station is a collection point at which waste may be processed or repackaged before being sent to its final destination. MMWAC agreed to pay the Consolidated companies $ 66 per ton to receive the waste delivered and to dispose of the waste until the MMWAC incinerator was ready to operate.

MMWAC's initial tipping fee was set at $ 75 per ton. It is common in waste collection for municipalities to collect residential trash themselves or to contract out this function but to require commercial businesses to contract directly with private haulers for their trash removal facilities. Under the municipalities' agreements with MMWAC and under the local flow control ordinances, private trash haulers in the twelve municipalities and the municipalities themselves were effectively required to deliver their trash to the transfer station and pay the $ 75 per ton tipping fee to MMWAC.

Waste Management of Maine, Inc. is an operating subsidiary of Waste Management, Inc., one of the [5] largest waste collection and disposal firms in the nation. The operating subsidiary provides trash collection in various Maine towns. In July 1990, after the transfer station agreement between MMWAC and the two Consolidated companies, Waste Management, Inc. acquired the two Consolidated companies; and one of the two may thereafter have been merged into Waste Management of Maine. We refer to [*1076] all four companies, collectively, as "Waste Management."

Tri-State Rubbish, Inc., a competitor of Waste Management of Maine, is also in the business of collecting and disposing of commercial trash, including waste generated by various customers in Auburn. Its affiliate, Recycling Unlimited Services Corp., Inc., processes waste and recovers from it recyclable commodities. Gary Hart is the principal in both businesses. In 1990, Tri-State Rubbish declined to deliver to the Consolidated transfer station all of the waste collected by Tri-State Rubbish in Auburn. Tri-State Rubbish's position was that waste capable of having recycled commodities extracted from it was not covered by the local flow control ordinance.

Auburn brought suit against Tri-State Rubbish in a Maine state trial court in December [6] 1990 to enjoin it from refusing to deliver all of its Auburn waste to the transfer station. In July 1992, the court rejected Tri-State Rubbish's interpretation of Maine law and granted an injunction in favor of Auburn. City of Auburn v. Tri-State Rubbish, Inc., No. CV-90-561 (Me. Sup. Ct., Androscoggin County, July 20, 1992). That case, we are told, is now on appeal to the Maine Supreme Judicial Court.

MMWAC's incinerator-generator began operating in early 1992 and almost at once MMWAC found that the waste produced in the twelve municipalities was not enough to keep the new facility operating at an optimal level. This led MMWAC to seek additional waste from outside the member towns; it did so by offering a reduced tipping fee, allegedly $ 45 to municipalities who were not members of MMWAC and as low as $ 28 to Waste Management of Maine for its delivery to MMWAC of waste collected outside the twelve communities. These reduced fees were not made available to Tri-State Rubbish.

In September 1992, Tri-State Rubbish, Recycling Unlimited, and Hart (collectively "Tri-State") began the present suit in federal district court. The defendants were Auburn, MMWAC, and the four Waste Management [7] companies: Waste Management, Inc., Waste Management of Maine, and the two Consolidated companies. Based on the events described above, the complaint asserted federal and state antitrust claims, a claim of tortious interference (by Waste Management) with Tri-State's contractual relations, and claimed violations (by Auburn) of 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and provisions of the U.S. Constitution.

The defendants in this federal action moved to dismiss the complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. The district court granted the motions, concluding that the antitrust claims were barred by so-called "state action" immunity; the bases for dismissing the other claims are more conveniently described below as the separate claims are discussed. Tri-State Rubbish, Inc. v. Waste Management, Inc., 803 F. Supp. 451 (D. Me. 1992). This appeal followed. [1]

[8] II. THE FEDERAL ANTITRUST CLAIMS

A half century ago the Supreme Court determined, in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943), that Congress had not intended the federal antitrust laws to apply to trade restraints or monopolies imposed by state governments. Although the antitrust laws aim at competitive markets, the Court in Parker recognized that governments often restrict competition for public purposes. The actions of state governments, no less than those of the federal government itself, were deemed not to fall within the constraints of the antitrust laws.

After a certain amount of wobbling, it has become settled that HN1[] municipalities enjoy the protection of the Parker doctrine if, but only if, the conduct in question is of a kind authorized or directed by state law. Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985); Fisichelli v. Town of Methuen, 956 F.2d 12 (1st Cir. [*1077] 1992). In general this HN2[] immunity is not defeated by claims that the municipality "conspired" with a private party, City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991), [9] or that the municipality made some error under local law. Fisichelli, 956 F.2d at 14.

Count I. In count I of its complaint, Tri-State contends that in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, Auburn and MMWAC have sought to monopolize and restrain trade in the waste disposal business in Auburn and the other eleven municipalities. The gist of the claim, as elaborated in Tri-State's brief, is simple: under the local ordinances, all solid waste generated in the twelve municipalities must be turned over to MMWAC or its designee. Thus the waste disposal business in these locations, including recyclable materials, is within the sway of one entity, MMWAC.

---

[1] Although both sides have captioned their briefs to show "Tri-State Rubbish, Inc., et al." as the plaintiffs-appellants, the notice of appeal names only Tri-State Rubbish, Inc. as the appellant. Our caption and other references to Hart and Recycling Unlimited are without prejudice to any consequences that may flow on remand from the way the notice of appeal was framed.

With a couple of caveats, Tri-State concedes that state action immunity is available as to count I if the Maine legislature empowered municipalities to engross all solid waste including waste that might be recycled. But it argues that Maine's policy is to promote the recovery of recyclable commodities from waste before the residue is burned for electricity. It derives this priority from a declaration of policy in the Maine statute preceding the specific grants of [10] authority. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 38, § 1302, para. 2. It urges us to read the Maine legislation to exclude such recyclable waste from the authorization that allows municipalities to control the disposition of solid waste.

The Maine statute explicitly permits a municipality to require that "solid waste" generated within its boundaries be delivered to "a designated disposal or reclamation facility," id. § 1304-B(2), reclamation includes the generation of electricity, id., and solid waste is defined to include "useless, unwanted or discarded solid material." Id. § 1303-C(29). The statutory definition of solid waste goes on to say that "the fact that a solid waste or constituent of the waste may have value or other use or may be sold or exchanged does not exclude it from this definition." Id. This final clause pretty much disposes of Tri-State's argument.

Statutes or ordinances similar to those involved in this case exist elsewhere. Tri-State cites us to several that have been construed not to reach waste from which recyclable commodities could be extracted. Yet the case on which it principally relies concerned an authorizing statute that excluded recyclables. [2] [11] By contrast, the definitional phrase in the Maine statute (quoted at the end of the last paragraph) explicitly includes recyclables in the waste that is subject to municipal control. The district court's reading of the Maine statute follows its plain language, 803 F. Supp. at 456, and comports with the reading of the Maine state court in the injunction action against Tri-State. City of Auburn, supra. We see no error in the district court's interpretation.

[12] Tri-State also objects to the district court's ruling that MMWAC should be treated as a municipality for state action purposes. As a private actor, Tri-State argues, MMWAC must show that it is subject to state supervision pursuant to California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980). Midcal, building upon statements in Parker and later cases, made clear that HN3[] state action immunity will extend to private actors only where they are subject to adequate official supervision. The state, in other words, may take anticompetitive measures itself or authorize its municipalities to do so; but it may not license private restraints unless the private parties are themselves regulated.

Passing the question whether the conduct challenged in count I is that of MMWAC (as opposed to the municipalities), we think that MMWAC's status is that of the municipalities. MMWAC's mission, waste disposal, is a [*1078] traditional local-government function. By statute MMWAC's directors must be elected by municipal officers and are themselves municipal officers. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 38, § 1304-B(5). The full faith and credit of the municipalities [13] may be pledged in aid of its operations. Id. Patently MMWAC is the creature of its member municipalities and enjoys their status. See Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Authority, 816 F.2d 9, 13 (1st Cir. 1987). [3]

Counts II, III and III-A. These counts, which include Tri-State's remaining federal antitrust claims, present a different set of issues. In count II Tri-State first challenged as a restraint of trade and attempted monopolization the agreement between MMWAC and the Consolidated companies. As a consequence of the interim arrangements, Tri-State argues that Waste [14] Management of Maine was able to offer "predatory" prices to customers in Auburn and other MMWAC municipalities. In Tri-State's view, the $ 66 per ton payment by MMWAC to the

---

[2] In Waste Management of the Desert, Inc. v. Palm Springs Recycling Center, Inc., 9 Cal. App. 4th 239, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 676 (Cal. App.), petition for review granted, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 850, 840 F.2d 955 (1992), the California statute reserved the right of anyone "to donate, sell or otherwise dispose of his or her recyclable materials" and of any private company to contract with a private waste hauler to remove segregated recyclable materials. 11 Cal. Rptr. at 683-84.

[3] The only participants named in count I are the municipalities and MMWAC. Since their conduct is authorized by statute, the state action doctrine applies. Contrary to Tri-State's claim, municipalities (or their instrumentalities) engaged in state-authorized conduct are not themselves required to be further supervised by the state. See Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 47.

Consolidated companies for disposing of the waste allowed their affiliate Waste Management of Maine effectively to reduce its $ 75 per ton tipping fee to $ 9 ($ 75 less $ 66) and thus steal away Tri-State's customers. [4]

Counts III and III-A concern the activities of Waste Management of Maine in other non-MMWAC communities. This competitor, says Tri-State, has been favored by MMWAC with a low tipping fee ($ 24 per ton), not available to Tri-State, for "foreign" waste delivered from outside the MMWAC municipalities to the [15] new incinerator-generator. [5] As a result, Tri-State has lost customers outside the twelve municipalities to "low ball" prices. Further, the customers are "locked up" by exclusive dealing contracts and supplied with trash containers that can be used only for Waste Management trash.

In analyzing these claims, the district court distinguished between MMWAC and the Waste Management companies. As to the former, the court pointed out that the participating municipalities were empowered by the Maine statute to control completely the collection and disposition of waste generated within their communities, dealing if they chose to do so with a single entity. 803 F. Supp. at 458; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 38, [16] § 1304-B(4). Thus, assuming that MMWAC's interim arrangements with the Consolidated companies favored the Waste Management companies over Tri-State, MMWAC was protected by the state action doctrine.

As to the conduct in Counts III and III-A, the district court noted that the Maine legislature clearly contemplated that municipalities could buy waste from other municipalities to make up any shortfall. 803 F. Supp. at 459; Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 38, § 1304-B(4-A)(B). A reduced tipping fee is merely one way of "buying" such waste. Nothing in the authorizing statute says that the same price must be offered to everyone; on the contrary the need for long-term fuel commitments, recognized elsewhere in the statute, see Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 38, § 1304-B(4), suggests that arrangements with one or a few suppliers were entirely foreseeable. We agree with the district court that MMWAC's alleged exclusive offer of the $ 24 tipping fee to Waste Management of Maine for foreign waste was authorized by statute and is protected by the state action doctrine.

A different, and more difficult, issue is presented by Waste Management's claim that it too is protected by [17] the state action [*1079] doctrine. Tri-State objects that Waste Management, at least, is fully subject to the Midcal requirement that it be supervised before any of its actions can be protected. The district court agreed that supervision is required. But it found that municipal, as opposed to state, supervision is sufficient. It further held that this obligation was satisfied by MMWAC's obligation, undertaken in its contracts with its municipality members, to comply with all pertinent laws. 803 F. Supp. at 461.

We agree with the district court's view, supported by the greater weight of authority, that municipal supervision of private actors is adequate where authorized by or implicit in the state legislation. Although there is some precedent to the contrary, [6] [18] we share the view of the Eighth and Ninth Circuits, endorsed by the leading antitrust treatise, that municipal supervision is adequate. [7] As Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp note, "it would be implausible to rule that a city may regulate, say, taxi rates but only if a state agency also supervises the private taxi operators." Antitrust Law, supra n.7, at 197.

---

[4] Tri-State's assertion of a $ 9 per ton "net" tipping fee appears to be faulty economics. The $ 66 per ton payment to the Consolidated companies was to cover the cost of receiving and disposing of the waste. Whether or not the cost to the Consolidated companies was actually $ 66 per ton, it is not likely to have been zero.

[5] The record does not explain why, given MMWAC's need for fuel, it would make sense for MMWAC to offer the $ 24 tipping fee exclusively to Waste Management of Maine. While we accept the allegation as true for purposes of this appeal, we note that MMWAC's brief denies that this is what happened.

[6] See, e.g., Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Community Improvement Corp., 774 F.2d 162 (6th Cir. 1985).

[7] Gold Cross Ambulance & Transfer v. City of Kansas City, 705 F.2d 1005 (8th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1003, 85 L. Ed. 2d 158, 105 S. Ct. 1864 (1985); Tom Hudson & Assocs. v. City of Chula Vista, 746 F.2d 1370 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1028, 87 L. Ed. 2d 634, 105 S. Ct. 3503 (1985); Savage v. Waste Management, Inc., 623 F. Supp. 1505 (D.S.C. 1985); see also P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 212.7c at 196-97 (Supp. 1992).

At this point, our analysis of Waste Management's position diverges somewhat from that of the district court. As to any claim that Waste Management received favorable tipping fees--whether through MMWAC payments to the Consolidated companies or outright as to foreign waste--we think "supervision" is not a requirement at all: the choice to make such payments was that of MMWAC and its actions are protected as state action. To treat the mere receipt of such authorized payments as wrongful would undermine the Parker protection afforded MMWAC [19] and mistake the purpose of the supervision requirement, which is to prevent the unregulated licensing of private anticompetitive conduct.

This analysis disposes of the claims under counts II and III against all parties including the Waste Management defendants, so far as those claims attack the official actions of MMWAC: the contract between MMWAC and the Consolidated companies, the payments to the Consolidated companies by MMWAC, and the tipping fees set by MMWAC for Waste Management of Maine, whether for local or foreign waste. It does not, however, resolve the attacks, scattered throughout counts II, III, and III-A against the conduct of Waste Management of Maine vis-a-vis its own customers. These attacks charge Waste Management of Maine with predatory pricing of its waste collection services, wrongful exclusive dealing by long-term contracts, and unreasonably restricting the use of the containers it furnished. [8]

[20] The Predation Claims. The district court held that the Waste Management defendants were protected as to their customer-related conduct under the state action doctrine. The court reasoned that by its agreements with the municipalities, MMWAC had committed itself to obey the law; that Waste Management of Maine had contractual arrangements with MMWAC; and that this contractual authority provided sufficient municipal supervision to cast the garment of Parker protection over Waste Management of Maine's own conduct. 803 F. Supp. at 461. The district court noted, however, that the contracts had not been made available to it for inspection. Id. We are not persuaded that the rates and contract terms Waste Management set for its own customers have been brought within Parker.

[*1080] There is simply nothing to which we have been pointed to show that MMWAC has claimed or exercised any control whatever over the rates that Waste Management of Maine charges to its customers or the other terms (such as length of contract) on which it deals. While it is conceivable (but not proved) that MMWAC claims such authority with respect to customer contracts in the MMWAC communities, [21] it is certainly less likely that it does so in the non-MMWAC communities which are the locales for the predation alleged in counts III and III-A. Absent a showing of control, questions of state authorization and the adequacy of official supervision need not even be reached.

It is a close question whether the judgment of dismissal should nevertheless be affirmed on an alternative ground, namely, that the allegations of the complaint fail to state a predation claim even if the state action doctrine is ignored. This alternative course is urged by Waste Management, and we have given it serious consideration. The requisites for proving predatory pricing are demanding, because the conditions under which it is plausible are not common, and because it can easily be confused with merely low prices which benefit customers. See Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227 (1st Cir. 1983). HN4[] Exclusive dealing contracts may also benefit customers and are unlawful only upon a particularized showing of unreasonableness. Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961).

Thus a complaint that did no more than [22] allege predatory pricing or exclusive dealing contracts with nothing more specific might well be susceptible to dismissal for failure to state a claim. The present complaint is, in a sense, both better and worse. It is somewhat more specific, asserting at one point that the prices offered by Waste Management of Maine were as much as 50 percent below market rates, at other places that the rates were sometimes below variable cost, and that the exclusive dealing contracts were for three years.

[8] MMWAC is also charged in these counts but, apart from bare references to conspiracy, there is nothing in the complaint to connect MMWAC with Waste Management's actions vis-a-vis its own customers except the favorable tipping fees. Since the fee payments are state action, we do not think that any claim has been stated against MMWAC based on Waste Management's alleged predation.

At the same time, the complaint goes some distance toward undermining its own predatory pricing claim. Tri-State implies that the low prices offered by Waste Management of Maine were, in some instances at least, the result of the favorable tipping fees that MMWAC made available to it. If this is the whole of the charge, then there is no predatory pricing claim at all. HN5[] A company that rationally prices its own product or service at or above its own costs does not violate the Sherman Act merely because its costs, and thus its prices, are lower than a rival's costs; and this is true even though its lower costs may be due to the generosity, or foolishness, of another supplier who has charged the [23] company too little for an input. See generally Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 1993 U.S. LEXIS 4245, 61 U.S.L.W. 4699, 4702-03, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (June 21, 1993).

Even apart from this possible explanation for lower prices, Tri-State's predatory pricing claim is on the edge of inadequacy. Although the complaint asserts that Waste Management is pricing below variable cost--the normal test of predation, see Barry Wright--it is not clear what basis if any Tri-State has for this assertion. The reference to prices 50 percent below customary prices might invite some suspicion, but in an industry like waste collection, in which customers are scattered along routes, the variable cost of serving additional customers to piece out a route may be extremely low.

The claim that the duration of the exclusive contracts is unlawful is, if anything, an even thinner case on the face of the complaint. That some of the contracts are three years, the only specific in the complaint, might invite curiosity, but it does not even begin to establish illegality. Under Tampa Electric Co., it is the totality of reasons for such a term, and its actual impact on competition, that are decisive. [24] Here, we know nothing about the number of customers affected, the size of any cancellation penalty, the practice in the industry, or anything else that might help to paint a picture of the competitive scene. Of course, a plaintiff is required only to plead a claim, not to recite evidence, but the essence of a claim like this one lies in the details.

A final concern is that predatory pricing is a section 2 claim and is condemned [*1081] only where it is part of an attempt to monopolize or is used to secure or retain an actual monopoly. E.g., C.A.T. Industrial Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Industries, 884 F.2d 209 (5th Cir. 1989). [9] Tri-State certainly does allege both the aim of monopoly and the actuality, but its complaint supplies very little information (e.g., market shares in a properly defined market) from which one can frame a judgment whether this claim is plausible. The complaint does say that Waste Management, Inc. and its subsidiaries are the largest waste handling and disposal business in Maine and in the nation; but the primary issue is dominance or prospective dominance in a properly defined economic market.

[25] One's first instinct is that monopoly would be hard to sustain in a business in which the basic equipment is a truck and entry is apparently easy. See generally United States v. Waste Management, Inc., 743 F.2d 976 (2d Cir. 1984). But waste collection might in theory be subject to local monopoly in some circumstances. Thus, the efficiencies of collecting from a number of closely located customer sites could make new entry difficult, especially if the community were small and many customers were tied to an existing dominant hauler by long-term contracts; and environmental restrictions on new landfills in some areas could give a decisive advantage to a hauler that controlled the only available facility. There are some hints, but only hints, in the complaint that Waste Management of Maine may enjoy an advantage of this latter sort.

Taking everything together, we think it wiser not to affirm the dismissal of the predation claims on the alternative ground. Thin and doubtful though they may be, we cannot say at this stage that these claims are hopelessly inadequate if Parker's shield is removed. The district court did not rest its decision on that [26] ground, and it has been the subject of only a small portion of the briefs on this appeal. The old prejudice against summary disposition of antitrust claims has diminished, First National Bank v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968), but the grant of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion on the predation claims would, at least at this time, be a shade too summary.

---

[9] Exclusive dealing, which can be attacked inter alia under section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, can be condemned without a showing that monopoly power is present or within reach. But the impact on competition is part of the equation and, absent a potential monopoly or oligopoly, the competitive impact may be hard to establish.

We underscore the limited nature of our remand. These claims can be stated, if at all, only against the Waste Management defendants. The district court is fully entitled to demand more specific explanations from Tri-State as to the gray areas in its predation claims, including the basis for the charge of pricing below variable cost, the basis for the market definitions urged, and the basis for any claim that monopoly power exists or could plausibly be secured in a properly defined economic market. Nothing in this opinion is intended to preclude summary disposition at a later stage, and this need not mean much later if these claims prove to have little substance. [10]

[27] III. TRI-STATE'S REMAINING CLAIMS

Count IV of the complaint reasserts, under the Maine antitrust statute, the federal antitrust claims made in the earlier counts. The Maine antitrust statutes parallel the Sherman Act, see Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, §§ 1101 et seq., and Tri-State offers no separate argument for liability under state law. In point of fact, the Maine statute under which MMWAC is organized also has an explicit exemption from state antitrust laws for specified municipal contracts or ordinances. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 38, § 1304-B(6). Accordingly, the dismissal of the state antitrust claim is sustained except as to the predation claims against the Waste Management defendants.

[*1082] In count V, Tri-State claims that the solicitation of Tri-State customers by Waste Management of Maine was a violation of Maine law against interference with advantageous contractual relations. The gravamen is that this solicitation was unlawful because achieved through discriminatory tipping fees, predatory pricing, and other wrongs. The district court dismissed the count on the ground that the actions in question were within the ambit of the state legislation and therefore could not be [28] "wrongful interference." 803 F. Supp. at 463-64. In this court, Tri-State does not argue the claim at length, asserting instead that its tortious interference claim is "contingent" upon our finding that the alleged anticompetitive conduct enjoys no immunity.

We think the fixing of tipping fees by the municipalities and MMWAC is embraced by the Maine statute--Tri-State makes no effort to show the contrary--but, as earlier stated, we cannot find on this record that the terms on which Waste Management of Maine dealt with its own customers has been the subject of regulation. Accordingly, count V, so far as it makes allegations against the private defendants based on Waste Management of Maine's dealings with its own customers, is remanded for consideration together with the predation claims. Nothing in the complaint explains why MMWAC is responsible for such contracts, however, and as to it the dismissal of count V is sustained for failure to state a claim.

Count VI of the complaint asserts a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Auburn. In part, this count says that the City of Auburn injunction action against Tri-State [29] represented discriminatory prosecution in violation of due process principles. Count VII makes the same complaint based on equal protection principles. Count VIII, the final count of the complaint, re-asserts the allegations of counts VI and VII as violations of Maine's own civil rights statutes. Me. Rev. Stat. Ann., tit. 5, §§ 4682-83. On appeal, Tri-State advises that it elects not to press the selective prosecution issue in this court, reserving it for its state court appeal.

This leaves only Tri-State's final contention--the other subject of its count VI claim--that the Auburn flow control ordinance is "an unconstitutional taking of [Tri-State's] property without compensation." Tri-State's theory seems to be that the Auburn flow control ordinance has crippled Tri-State's waste disposal business. This, says Tri-State, is a business in which it has engaged for many years and its interests in continuing without undue interference deserve protection as "investment-backed expectations." Penn Central Transp. Co. v. New York City, 438 U.S. 104, 124, 57 L. Ed. 2d 631, 98 S. Ct. 2646 (1978).

While the Supreme Court did use the quoted phrase to describe a pertinent consideration in takings [30] cases, the Penn Central opinion actually reaffirms that government for public purposes can, without compensation, impose

[10] The Waste Management defendants are also free to pursue their Parker defense as to the predation claims. Our holding is that on this record there is an insufficient basis for determining that Parker immunity exists as to the terms on which Waste Management of Maine deals with its customers.

general regulations that may severely limit the value of an ongoing business. The Supreme Court has in fact twice upheld municipal ordinances granting one waste collector the exclusive right to collect and dispose of waste within the community, putting existing haulers out of business. [11] Despite Tri-State's claims that these cases are outdated, nothing in the Supreme Court's more recent decisions raises serious doubts about their validity. The Sixth Circuit has rejected an argument almost identical to Tri-State's. Hybud Equipment Corp. v. City of Akron, 654 F.2d 1187 (1981), vacated on other grounds, 455 U.S. 931, 71 L. Ed. 2d 640, 102 S. Ct. 1416 (1982).

* * *

In this [31] case, we have concluded that, with the possible exception of its predation claims against the private defendants, none of Tri-State's claims has any merit. This does not mean that there is no basis for Tri-State's concerns about the competitive impact of the MMWAC arrangements, or for its assertion that the plan is unfair to it or bad for recycling. But government action may be anticompetitive, unfair or unwise without being illegal. Absent illegality, the solution lies with the legislature and not in the courts.

[*1083] The judgment of the district court is affirmed except for the dismissal of the federal and state antitrust claims in counts II-V and the tort claim in count VI insofar as those counts charge the Waste Management defendants with predation or related anticompetitive conduct toward customers. Those claims are remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion. No costs.

It is so ordered.

End of Document

[11] See California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 199 U.S. 306, 50 L. Ed. 204, 26 S. Ct. 100 (1905); Gardner v. Michigan, 199 U.S. 325, 50 L. Ed. 212, 26 S. Ct. 106 (1905).

Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. FTC

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

February 24, 1993, Argued on Remand from the Supreme Court ; July 15, 1993, Filed

No. 89-3787

Reporter
998 F.2d 1129 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 17621 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,296

TICOR TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, CHICAGO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY, SAFECO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY (now known as Security Union Title Insurance Company), LAWYERS TITLE INSURANCE CORPORATION and STEWART TITLE GUARANTY COMPANY, Petitioners v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Respondent

Prior History: [1] On Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC Docket No. 9190). Certiorari Granted October 7, 1991. On Remand From The Supreme Court of the United States June 12, 1992 insurance business, rates, title search, insurer, supervision, regulated, McCarran-Ferguson Act, exemption, rating bureau, insurance company, immunity, anti trust law, title insurance, policyholders, insurance department, insurance contract, title insurance policy, state action doctrine, rate setting, antitrust, entities, title insurance company, insurance industry, state law, Bureau, state statute, issuance, argues, spread, prong

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Judicial Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes agreements among competitors to influence legislative, judicial, or administrative action from antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Judicial Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN2[] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Judicial Review

The Federal Trade Commission's (FTC) legal conclusions are subject to plenary review. Its factual findings are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(c). Under the "substantial evidence" standard, a reviewing court must accept the FTC's findings of fact if they are supported by such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN3[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, provides a statutory antitrust exemption for activities that constitute the "business of insurance," are regulated pursuant to state law, and do not constitute acts of boycott, coercion or intimidation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, exempts from antitrust regulation only "business of insurance," not all activities of insurance companies.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN5[] Industry Practices, Federal Regulations

Under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, three criteria are relevant in determining whether a given practice constitutes the "business of insurance": whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. None of the three is independently determinative.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN6[] Industry Practices, Federal Regulations

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b).

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

Insurance Law > Types of Insurance > Property Insurance > Title Insurance

HN7[] Industry Practices, Federal Regulations

For purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, a title search and examination has nothing to do with the actual performance of a title insurance contract. Instead, the title search and examination is a matter of indifference to the policyholder, whose only concern is whether his claim is paid, not why it is paid.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

For purposes of determining the scope of the antitrust immunity provided in the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, the second clause of § 1012(b) makes "the business of insurance" itself exempt from the antitrust laws to the extent that it is regulated by state law. The first clause of § 1012(b) exempts state laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance from all other federal statutes. The United States Supreme Court held that to equate the scope of the first clause with that of the second clause would be to read words out of the statute. The plain text of § 1012(b) compels the conclusion that the first clause necessarily covers more than the second clause, which limits its exemption to the business of insurance regulated by state law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Insurer Insolvency > Priority of Claims

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Claims Made Policies > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN9[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

For purposes of determining the scope of the antitrust immunity provided in the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, the United States Supreme Court reasons that the more limited reading of the second clause of § 1012(b) better advances the legislative purpose of § 1012(b): The first clause of § 1012(b) was intended to further Congress' primary objective of granting the states broad regulatory authority over the business of insurance, while the second clause accomplishes Congress' secondary goal of carving out only a narrow exemption for "the business of insurance" from the federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Types of Insurance > Property Insurance > Title Insurance

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN10[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The court rejects the notion that the indirect effects of the title search and examination process on the business of title insurance are sufficient to merit protection from antitrust liability under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b), the relevant question is whether a particular practice is part of the "business of insurance" exempted from the antitrust laws by § 2(b), not whether a particular entity is entitled to antitrust immunity by virtue of its status as an insurance company. The McCarran-Ferguson Act immunizes activities rather than entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Insurance Company Operations > Conducting Business > Foreign Insurers

HN12[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

For purposes of determining the scope of the antitrust immunity provided in the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, agreements that insurance companies make with parties wholly outside the insurance industry are unlikely to be about anything that could be called "the business of insurance" under § 1012(b), as distinct from the broader "business of insurance companies."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Judicial Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN13[] Exemptions & Immunities, Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

With respect to antitrust law, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes agreements to influence legislative, judicial, or administrative action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN14[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

There is a two-prong test for determining when private parties who take part in an agreement to fix prices are entitled to immunity from the antitrust laws under the state action doctrine. First, the state regulation must be "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy." Second, the policy must be "actively supervised" by the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN15[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In analyzing when private parties who take part in an agreement to fix prices are entitled to immunity from the antitrust laws under the state action doctrine, the purpose of the active supervision inquiry is not to determine whether the state has met some normative standard, such as efficiency, in its regulatory practices. Its purpose is to determine whether the state has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among private parties. Much as in causation inquiries, the analysis asks whether the state has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy. The question is not how well state regulation works but whether the anticompetitive scheme is the state's own.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > De Novo Review > Jury Instructions

HN16[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The United States Supreme Court expressly declares that when prices are initially set by private parties, the person claiming antitrust immunity must show that the state undertook steps to evaluate the rate setting scheme. The mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the state. This declaration significantly narrowed the reach of the active supervision prong of the state action exemption. The Supreme Court plainly instructed lower courts that a state's rubber stamp is not enough. Active supervision requires the state regulatory authorities' independent review and approval.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN17[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Under the "negative option" method of approving rates, sometimes called the "file and use" approach, filed rates are deemed approved if the director of the State Department of Insurance took no action on them within 15 days of their filing. The United States Supreme Court criticized this method in Montana and Wisconsin, and flatly states that the active supervision standard is not met where the potential for state supervision was not realized in fact.

Counsel: John C. Christie, Jr., Esquire (Argued), Patrick J. Roach, Esquire, Bell, Boyd & Lloyd, Suite 1200, 1615 L Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20036, Attorneys for Petitioners Ticor Title Insurance Company, Chicago Title Insurance Company and SAFECO Title Insurance Company (now known as Security Union Title Insurance Company).

John F. Graybeal, Esquire, Parker, Poe, Adams & Bernstein, One Exchange Plaza, P.O. Box 389, Raleigh, NC 27602-0389, Attorneys for Petitioner Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation.

David M. Foster, Esquire, Michael P. Goggin, Esquire, Fulbright & Jaworski, 801 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20004, Attorneys for Petitioner Stewart Title Guaranty Company

James M. Spears, Esquire, General Counsel, Jay C. Shaffer, Esquire, Deputy General Counsel, Ernest J. Isenstadt, Esquire, Assistant General Counsel, Michael E. Antalics, Esquire, Assistant Director, Bureau of Competition, Leslie Rice Melman, Esquire (Argued), Jill Coleman, Esquire, Federal Trade Commission, Sixth [2] and Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, DC 20580, Attorneys for Respondent.

Heidi B. Hamman Shakely, Esquire, Assistant Counsel, Zella M. Smith, Esquire, Assistant Counsel, Victoria A. Reider, Esquire, Deputy Chief Counsel, Linda J. Wells, Esquire, Chief Counsel, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Insurance Department, 1341 Strawberry Square, Harrisburg, PA 17120, Attorneys for Amicus Curiae Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Insurance Department.

Judges: BEFORE: HUTCHINSON, NYGAARD and ALITO, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: HUTCHINSON

Opinion

[*1130] OPINION OF THE COURT

HUTCHINSON, Circuit Judge.

This case concerning petitioners' assertions of immunity from the antitrust laws is again before this Court on cross-petitions for review and enforcement of a Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") order after remand by the United States Supreme Court. See FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992). The FTC exercised subject matter jurisdiction under 15 U.S.C.A. § 45 (West Supp. 1992). This Court exercises appellate jurisdiction under 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(c) (West 1973). On the merits, we will affirm the final order of the FTC holding [3] that the petitioners are subject to antitrust regulation.

I. Procedural History

A detailed statement of the case appears in the Supreme Court's opinion on certiorari, see Ticor, 112 S. Ct. at 2173-76, and in this Court's earlier opinion, see Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. FTC, 922 F.2d 1122, 1125-27 (3d Cir. 1991) ("Ticor I"). Therefore, we will give only a brief summary of the case's procedural history.

Petitioners are five of the nation's largest title insurance companies (collectively "Ticor"). [1] [4] On January 7, 1985, the FTC issued an administrative complaint alleging that Ticor [2] [*1131] had engaged in "unfair methods of competition" in violation of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTC Act"), 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(a)(1) (West Supp. 1992), by agreeing collectively to set uniform rates for title search and examination services. Ticor accomplished this rate setting through state-licensed "rating bureaus" in thirteen states.

The administrative law judge ("ALJ") before whom the case was brought issued an initial decision and proposed order on December 25, 1986. The ALJ found Ticor's claim that the collective formulation of rates for title search and examination services is part of the "business of insurance" exempt from the FTC Act under sections 2(b) and 3(a) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1012(b), 1013(a) (West 1976), was without merit. The ALJ also rejected Ticor's claim that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine [3] protected the challenged conduct from antitrust liability as joint efforts by petitioners to influence state regulators in matters of state policy. The ALJ also rejected Ticor's claim that the state action doctrine exempted them from antitrust liability in Connecticut and Wisconsin, but held that Ticor's rate setting actions in Arizona, Idaho, [5] Montana, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania satisfied both prongs of the state action doctrine and were thus immune from antitrust regulation. Finally, the ALJ ruled that the FTC had failed to prove that Ticor used its rating bureau to establish uniform rates for title search and examination services in Ohio.

Ticor appealed the ALJ's initial decision. The FTC cross-appealed. On September 19, 1989, the FTC affirmed in part and reversed in part the ALJ's decision. The FTC affirmed the ALJ's holding on the McCarran-Ferguson Act and Noerr-Pennington issues, as well as its holding that the state action doctrine did not apply to Ticor's rate setting actions in [6] Connecticut and Wisconsin. It rejected Ticor's state action defense with respect to its rate setting actions in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Montana, and Arizona, and reversed the ALJ to that extent. The FTC dismissed the complaint insofar as it concerned Ticor's rate setting actions in Idaho and Ohio.

The FTC's final order prohibited Ticor from fixing prices for title search and examination services in the six states where it had held Ticor violated the antitrust laws. The order nevertheless contained a proviso that permits collective establishment of rates for title services in any of these states if undertaken "pursuant to clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy and where such collective activity is actively supervised by a state regulatory body." [4] Joint Appendix (Jt. App.) at 125.

In this Court, Ticor filed a timely petition to review the FTC's final order. The FTC filed a cross-petition [7] for enforcement. See 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(c) ("To the extent that the order of the Commission is affirmed, the court shall thereupon issue its own order commanding obedience to the terms of such order of the Commission.")

---

[1] Specifically, petitioners include Ticor Title Insurance Company, Chicago Title Insurance Company, SAFECO Title Insurance Company (now known as Security Union Title Insurance Company), Lawyers Title Insurance Corporation, and Stewart Title Guaranty Company.

[2] The complaint made charges against a sixth title insurance company which have been settled. Thus, the FTC's final order affected only the five title insurance companies who have joined as petitioners before this Court.

[3] HN1[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes agreements among competitors to influence legislative, judicial, or administrative action from antitrust liability. See United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 , 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965); Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 , 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961).

[4] This proviso merely restates the requirements of the state action doctrine. See infra typescript at 18-19.

This Court reversed the FTC's final order on the ground that Ticor was entitled to immunity because the active supervision requirement of the state action doctrine was met in each state. Ticor I, 922 F.2d at 1140. In reaching this conclusion, we followed the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit's reasoning that the active supervision prong of the state action doctrine would be satisfied if the state regulatory program was staffed, funded and empowered by law. Id. at 1137 (citing New England Motor Rate Bureau, Inc. v. FTC, 908 F.2d 1064, 1071 (1st Cir. 1990)).

[*1132] The Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider (1) whether this Court was correct in its statement of the law concerning the "active supervision" prong of the state action doctrine, and in its application of that law to the facts of the case, and (2) whether this Court [8] exceeded its authority by departing from the factual findings entered by the ALJ and adopted by the FTC. Ticor, 112 S. Ct. at 2176. [5] On the first issue, the Supreme Court reversed. It held that although the criteria set forth in the First Circuit test of active supervision were relevant to the active supervision prong of the state action doctrine, they were not the exclusive measure of whether that prong was met. Id. at 2179. The Court reasoned:

> Where prices or rates are set as an initial [9] matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if the State chooses to exercise it, the party claiming the immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price-fixing or ratesetting scheme. The mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the State. Under these standards, we must conclude that there was no active supervision in either Wisconsin or Montana.

Id. Having concluded that Ticor's acts in Montana and Wisconsin were not immune from antitrust liability because there was no active supervision, the Supreme Court remanded the case to this Court to determine whether the regulatory schemes of Connecticut and Arizona met the active supervision prong under the above standard. Id. at 2180.

II. Statement of Facts

We again refer the reader to the opinion of the Supreme Court and our earlier opinion for a detailed statement of facts. See id. at 2173-76; Ticor I, 922 F.2d at 1127-29. A relatively concise factual history is presented here.

The purpose of title insurance is to indemnify [10] buyers and lenders for loss resulting from non-record defects in the title of a parcel of real estate. Such defects include those not discoverable from a search of the public records on the parcel, as well as losses caused by errors or mistakes in the search and examination. Negligence need not be proved in order to recover. Title insurance policies generally except matters that a search and examination of public records have identified, as well as any discrepancies that a survey has actually revealed or would have revealed if performed.

Originally, title insurance companies relied upon independent examiners to perform title search and examination services. As the business evolved, title insurance companies expanded and began to provide these services themselves. Today, a title insurance company may still issue a policy of title insurance after an abstractor or attorney unaffiliated with the insurance company performs the search and examination, but in many cases either an attorney-agent of the insurance company or a trained title insurance company employee performs the service. Some insurance companies, however, still use a list of approved attorneys whom a buyer or lender may then [11]

---

[5] Before the Supreme Court, the parties confined their briefing on the first issue to the regulatory schemes of Wisconsin and Montana, and on the second issue to Connecticut and Arizona. Ticor, 112 S. Ct. at 2176. The FTC did not challenge this Court's ruling in Ticor I that the New Jersey and Pennsylvania schemes satisfied the "clearly established policy" requirement of the state action doctrine. See infra typescript at 18-19.

hire to perform the search and examination on which the title insurer bases its list of record exceptions to the insuring covenant.

An attorney may act as an attorney-agent for hypothetical insurance company A and at the same time act as an approved attorney for insurance company B. If company A hires the attorney to perform a search and examination as an attorney-agent, he will receive as compensation from the insurance company the price fixed by the insurance companies through the rating bureau in the state in which the property is located. In contrast, if a buyer or lender hires the attorney either directly or by reference to company B's list of approved attorneys, the attorney bills the buyer or lender at whatever rate they negotiate.

[*1133] In many states, title insurance companies file only their rates for indemnification services (the "risk rate"). In some states a rate is also filed for search and examination services. In the latter case, the search and examination rate is identified separately from the rate charged for underwriting the risk insured against liability.

III. Issues on Appeal

On remand, Ticor presents three issues. First, it argues that under the McCarran-Ferguson [12] Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1011-15 (West 1976), its collective establishment of rates for title search and examination services falls within that Act's "business of insurance" exemption from federal antitrust laws. Second, Ticor asserts that the collective establishment of rates for title search and examination services was an agreement to influence legislative, judicial, or administrative action, and is therefore immune from the antitrust laws under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Finally, Ticor asserts that its filing of title insurance rates through state-chartered rating bureaus in Connecticut and Arizona was actively supervised by those states and thus not subject to the antitrust laws under the standards governing state action that the Supreme Court set out in the opinion that ordered this remand.

HN2[] The FTC's legal conclusions are subject to plenary review. Its factual findings are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. 15 U.S.C.A. § 45(c). Under the "substantial evidence" standard, a reviewing court "must accept the [FTC's] findings of fact if they are supported by such relevant evidence as a reasonable [13] mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion." FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 454, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 , 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986) (quoting Universal Camera Corp. v. NLRB, 340 U.S. 474, 477, 95 L. Ed. 456 , 71 S. Ct. 456 (1951)).

IV. Discussion

A. The McCarran-Ferguson Act

Ticor argues that the collective filing of proposed rates for the search and examination activities of title insurers is exempt from antitrust liability under HN3[] the McCarran-Ferguson Act (the "Act"). That Act provides a statutory antitrust exemption for activities that (1) constitute the "business of insurance," (2) are regulated pursuant to state law, and (3) do not constitute acts of "boycott, coercion or intimidation." Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 219-20, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261 , 99 S. Ct. 1067 (1979). The only one of these three requirements at issue here is whether the challenged rate setting activities constitute the business of insurance. See id. at 211 (HN4[] McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts from antitrust regulation only "business of insurance," not all activities of insurance companies).

Under Union Labor Life Insurance Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 , 102 S. Ct. 3002 (1982), [14] HN5[] three criteria are relevant in determining whether a given practice constitutes the "business of insurance": (1) Whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; (2) whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and (3) whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry. Id. at 129 (citing Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 211-21). None of the three is independently determinative. Id.

Ticor argues that search and examination services satisfy the first Pireno factor because of their logical and temporal relationship to the risk underwritten in the title insurance policy. In support, Ticor cites several pre-Pireno cases in which courts held that search and examination services are conditions precedent to the issuance of a title insurance policy, rather than a wholly separate endeavor. See Brief for Petitioners on Remand at 5-7 (citing McIlhenny v. American Title Ins. Co., 418 F. Supp. 364, 369 (E.D. Pa. 1976); Schwartz v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., 374 F. Supp. 564, 574 (E.D. Pa. 1974); [15] Commander Leasing Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., Civil Action No. C-3295 (D. Col. 1972), aff'd, 477 F.2d 77 (10th Cir. 1973); In re Equifax Inc., 96 F.T.C. 844, 1101 (1980)). Ticor contends that the determination [*1134] of what risks will be insured is at the heart of the business of insurance, and that title searchers and examiners decide what risks are underwritten by eliminating from coverage recorded defects of title.

Ticor ignores a critical fact: The title search and examination does not itself spread or transfer risk. At most, title searchers identify defects of title. Title searchers themselves have no power to insure against any risk they identify. The search and examination are like many other arrangements title companies make for services in an effort to reduce costs. Ticor cannot claim that its title searchers determine the risk it agrees to underwrite any more than it could make a similar claim regarding the services provided, for example, by its secretarial staff or by a physician employed to report on the health of applicants for health or life insurance. When a title insurance policy is issued, it is the [16] insurer's decision to cover or refuse to cover the risks posed by the title searcher that triggers Ticor's obligation to indemnify the policyholder against the risks of title defect covered by the policy, whether from non-record defects or human error in the search. The title search and examination do not come under the first Pireno requirement of transferring or spreading the risk.

The second Pireno factor is whether the challenged practice is integrated into or encompassed within the relationship between the insurer and insured that flows from the policy. Historically, title search and examination services were provided by persons or entities separate from the issuer of the title insurance policy itself. Even today, entities other than title insurance companies provide title search and examination services. Thus, the second Pireno factor is not satisfied. The fact that title search and examination services, in many cases, still are not provided or performed by the title insurance companies themselves also indicates that the third Pireno criterion, whether the challenged practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry, is not satisfied either.

Ticor [17] argues that court decisions and "other judicial developments" since the filing of the briefs in Ticor I confirm its belief that the collective filing of proposed rates for search and examination activities of title insurers is the "business of insurance" within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act and Pireno. Brief for Petitioners on Remand at 4. Ticor first points to the case of Gahn v. Allstate Life Insurance Co., 926 F.2d 1449 (5th Cir. 1991). In that case, the court of appeals applied Pireno to determine whether ERISA preempted a state statute. ERISA itself contains a provision exempting from preemption state laws that regulate the business of insurance. The issue before the Gahn court was whether a state statute, which precluded medical insurers from discontinuing coverage after a policyholder was diagnosed with a terminal illness, regulated the business of insurance. Id. at 1454. The Fifth Circuit held that the statute satisfied all three of the Pireno criteria: "It can transfer the risk of non-coverage from an insured to the insurer; it is 'an integral part of the policy relationship between [18] the insurer and the insured'; and it only applies to the insurance industry." Id. (quoting Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129). Accordingly, ERISA did not preempt the statute because the statute regulated insurance. Id.

Ticor argues Gahn's holding that the state statute regulated the business of insurance even though it was directed at a practice "clearly intended to exclude risks from the insurer's coverage[,]" Brief for Petitioners on Remand at 9, is analogous to the practice of title insurers with respect to title searches. We disagree. The state statute the court considered in Gahn established certain conditions precedent to an insurer's power to cancel a pre-existing insurance contract. As such, the statute affected the substantive terms of the insurance contract, and thus squarely regulated insurance under ERISA's exemption of state insurance law from preemption. Gahn, 926 F.2d at 1454 (citing Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 471 U.S. 724, 742-43, 85 L. Ed. 2d 728 , 105 S. Ct. 2380 (1985)). An insurer's unilateral cancellation of a pre-existing health insurance policy would transfer risk from the insurer [19] to the insured. The promise to indemnify against an unforeseen event is integral, i.e. encompassed within, to the insurer-insured relationship. Finally, because the [*1135] statute considered in Gahn affects only those aleatory contracts that are embodied in insurance policies issued by state regulated insurers, it is peculiar to the insurance industry. See id. Gahn does not persuade us that Ticor's action in setting rates for title searches and examinations is the business of insurance.

Ticor also cites Mutual Reinsurance Bureau v. Great Plains Mutual Insurance Co., 969 F.2d 931 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 540, 113 S. Ct. 604 (1992). Like Gahn, this case involved ERISA's preemption of a state statute making arbitration provisions in insurance contracts unenforceable. The court of appeals held that the statute was a law regulating the business of insurance within the meaning of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, which ERISA excepted from preemption. Id. at 933. Ticor contends it is significant that the Ninth Circuit reached this result "even though arbitration clauses are not unique to insurance [20] contracts." Brief for Petitioners on Remand at 9. The challenged statute in Mutual Reinsurance, however, as in Gahn, directly regulated a term of the insurance contract, unlike the regulatory schemes at issue here. Although arbitration clauses are not unique to insurance contracts, Ticor fails to recognize that the state statute in question in Mutual Reinsurance did not generally prohibit arbitration clauses. Rather, the statute at issue made such clauses unenforceable only when contained in insurance contracts. See Mutual Reinsurance, 969 F.2d at 933 ("Simply put, the Kansas legislature has placed limits on the enforceability of an agreement to spread risk . . . ."). Mutual Reinsurance therefore does not support Ticor's position.

Finally, Ticor points to material in a brief the Solicitor General filed before the United States Supreme Court in United States Department of Treasury v. Fabe, previously pending at No. 91-1513 (U.S., cert. granted, 118 L. Ed. 2d 541, 112 S. Ct. 1934 (May 18, 1992), Brief for Petitioners filed July 23, 1992). In that case, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit had held that [21] an Ohio statute establishing priority among claims made by various debtors in the course of liquidation of an insolvent insurer was a statute regulating the business of insurance under the McCarran-Ferguson Act. Fabe v. United States Dept. of Treasury, 939 F.2d 341, 351-52 (6th Cir. 1991). In effect, this holding trumped a conflicting federal law giving priority to claims of the federal government. See id. at 343. Ticor points to the Solicitor General's argument that the state statute at issue in Fabe does not regulate the business of insurance because, inter alia, it "'does not regulate the terms of insurance policies'" and under fundamental principles of insurance, the policy defines the scope of the risk that the insurer assumed. Brief for Petitioners on Remand at 10 (quoting Brief for Fabe Petitioners at 14, 19). According to Ticor, the Solicitor General's rationale implicitly confirms its contention that title search and examination directly shape the terms of the title insurance policy because they determine what is excluded from the policy.

In the title insurance business, as we stated above, the proposition [22] that the insurance policy defines the scope of the risk assumed by the insurer does not logically imply that the person conducting the title search and examination has defined the risk. The two are separate. We reject Ticor's effort, in reliance on the Solicitor General's brief in Fabe, to coax us into an analogy that is not compelled and seems to us unwarranted.

Fabe has now been decided, in a decision affirming in part and reversing in part the Sixth Circuit's decision, and does not compel a different result. See United States Dept. of Treasury v. Fabe, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449, 61 U.S.L.W. 4579, 113 S. Ct. 2202 (U.S. June 11, 1993) (to be reported at 113 S. Ct. 2202). The precise issue in Fabe was whether the Ohio statute establishing the priority of creditors' claims in a proceeding to liquidate an insolvent insurance company was a law enacted "for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance" within the meaning of section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act. [6] 61 U.S.L.W. at 4579. [*1136] In deciding this issue, the United

---

[6] This section provides,

> HN6[] No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair, or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, or which imposes a fee or tax upon such business, unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance: Provided, That after June 30, 1948, the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, known as the Sherman Act, and the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, known as the Clayton Act, and the Act of September 26, 1914, known as the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law.

15 U.S.C.A. § 1012(b) (West 1976).

States Supreme Court expressly distinguished precedent holding that "'ancillary activities' that do not affect performance of the insurance [23] contract or enforcement of contractual obligations do not enjoy the antitrust exemption for laws regulating the 'business of insurance.'" Id. at 4582 (quoting Pireno, 458 U.S. at 134 n.8). Pireno, for example, held that use of a peer review committee to advise the insurer whether charges for chiropractic services were reasonable and necessary was not part of the business of insurance because the committee "had nothing to do with whether the insurance contract was performed; it dealt only with calculating what fell within the scope of the contract's coverage." Id. (citing Pireno, 458 U.S. at 130). Likewise, Royal Drug held that an insurer's agreements with participating pharmacies to provide benefits to policyholders was not part of the business of insurance: "'The benefit promised to Blue Shield policyholders is that their premiums will cover the cost of prescription drugs except for a $ 2 charge for each prescription. So long as that promise is kept, policyholders are basically unconcerned with arrangements made between Blue Shield and participating pharmacies.'" Id. (quoting Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 213-14 [24] (footnote omitted)).

We think the title search and examination at issue in the present case is analogous to the peer review process in Pireno and the insurer-pharmacy reimbursement process in Royal Drug. Like those processes, HN7[] the title search and examination has [25] nothing to do with the actual performance of the title insurance contract. Instead, the title search and examination is "'a matter of indifference to the policyholder, whose only concern is whether his claim is paid, not why it is paid.'" Id. (quoting Pireno, 458 U.S. at 132) (emphasis omitted).

In contrast, Fabe held that "the Ohio priority statute is designed to carry out the enforcement of insurance contracts by ensuring the payment of policyholders' claims despite the insurance company's intervening bankruptcy." Id. As such, the statute was integral to the performance of insurance contracts and therefore was enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance. Id.

In addition to pointing out that the focus in Pireno and Royal Drug was on the absence of any effect on the performance of the contract, Fabe drew another distinction between those cases and the Ohio priority statute that is material to the title search and examination issue before us. Pireno and Royal Drug, HN8[] like this case, involved the scope of the antitrust immunity provided in the second clause of section 2(b), which makes "the business [26] of insurance" itself exempt from the antitrust laws to the extent that it is regulated by state law. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1012(b). Fabe, on the other hand, involved the first clause of section 2(b), which exempts state laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance from all other federal statutes. Fabe, 61 U.S.L.W. at 4582. The Supreme Court held that to equate the scope of the first clause with that of the second clause "would be to read words out of the statute." Id. The plain text of section 2(b) compels the conclusion that the first clause necessarily covers more than the second clause, which limits its exemption to the business of insurance regulated by state law. See id.

HN9[] The Supreme Court reasoned that the more limited reading of the second clause better advances the legislative purpose of section 2(b): The first clause was intended to further Congress' primary objective of granting the states broad regulatory authority over the business of insurance, while the second clause accomplishes Congress' secondary goal of carving out only a narrow [*1137] exemption for "the business of insurance" [27] from the federal antitrust laws. Id. at 4583 (citing Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 218 n.18). Because the Ohio priority statute distributed the insolvent insurer's assets to policyholders in preference to other creditors, its purpose was identical to the insurance company's primary purpose of paying claims made against policies. Id. Accordingly, Fabe affirmed the Sixth Circuit's holding that the Ohio priority statute was a law enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance and thus exempt from the federal antitrust laws under the first clause of section 2(b) insofar as it established the priority of policyholders' claims against an insolvent insurer. Id. at 4583.

The Supreme Court nevertheless reversed the Sixth Circuit's holding that the priority statute was entirely immune under section 2(b) and held that to the extent that the statute was designed to further the interest of other creditors, it was not a law enacted for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance. Id. In reaching this holding, the Court recognized,

> Of course, every preference accorded to the creditors of an insolvent [28] insurer ultimately may redound to the benefit of policyholders by enhancing the reliability of the insurance company. This argument, however, goes too far: "But in that sense, every business decision made by an insurance company has some impact on its reliability . . . and its status as a reliable insurer." Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 216-17.

Id. at 4583-84. Following the lead of Royal Drug, we too HN10[] reject the notion that the indirect effects of the title search and examination process on the business of title insurance are sufficient to merit protection from antitrust liability under section 2(b). See id. at 4584 (citing Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 217).

The Supreme Court's recent decision in Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. California, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 (U.S. 1993), bolsters this conclusion. The Supreme Court there reaffirmed that under Royal Drug and Pireno "'the business of insurance' should be read to single out one activity from others, not to distinguish one entity from another." Id. at * 8. In Royal Drug, for example, the Court recognized that the insurance [29] companies' agreement to fix prescription drug prices sold to Blue Shield policyholders "'would be exempt from the antitrust laws if Congress had extended the coverage of the McCarran-Ferguson Act to the 'business of insurance companies.' But that is precisely what Congress did not do'" Id. (quoting Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 233 (footnote omitted)). Likewise, Pireno considered HN11[] whether "'a particular practice is part of the 'business of insurance' exempted from the antitrust laws by § 2(b),'" id. (quoting Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129) (emphasis omitted), not whether a particular entity was entitled to antitrust immunity by virtue of its status as an insurance company. See id. at * 9 ("McCarran-Ferguson Act immunizes activities rather than entities") (citing Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 232-33). The HN12[] agreements that insurance companies make with parties wholly outside the insurance industry, like the retail pharmacists in Royal Drug, "are unlikely to be about anything that could be called 'the business of insurance,' as distinct from the broader 'business of insurance companies.'" Id. [30] (quoting Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 233). The Supreme Court ultimately held that the domestic insurance companies in Hartford Fire did not lose the antitrust immunity to which they were otherwise entitled under section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act simply because they agreed or acted with foreign reinsurers that the Court assumed were not regulated by state law. Id.; see id. ("The alleged agreements at issue in the instant case, of course, are entirely different [from Royal Drug]; the foreign reinsurers are hardly 'wholly outside the insurance industry[]'").

Like the agreements in Pireno and Royal Drug, the title insurance companies in the present case entered agreements setting fees for a practice that is historically independent of the business of insurance: Title search [*1138] and examination. Although some insurance companies today themselves provide title search and examination services, such services can be described, at most, as the "business of insurance companies" instead of the actual "business of insurance" as determined by application of the Pireno factors.

In short, the three "judicial developments" that Ticor has [31] cited do not affect our conclusion that the title search and examination procedures at issue do not constitute the "business of insurance" under the standards for application of the McCarran-Ferguson Act that Pireno sets forth. Ticor's actions in setting rates for these services is therefore not entitled to immunity from the antitrust laws under the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

B. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Ticor also argues that its collective rate setting is immune from antitrust liability under HN13[] the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which immunizes agreements to influence legislative, judicial, or administrative action. See Pennington, 381 U.S. at 657; Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. at 127. Specifically, Ticor contends that its activities are a protected form of "joint petitioning" because it did not agree to charge proposed rates without approval from each state's insurance department. See Brief for Petitioners on Remand at 12.

Ticor's argument is unavailing. The conduct which it refers to as "joint petitioning" of the government is in fact nothing more than action in a private marketplace. We agree with the FTC [32] that Ticor's "collective rate setting efforts can 'more aptly be characterized as commercial activity with a political impact' . . . than as political activity with a commercial impact." Jt. App. at 170 (quoting Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 507, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 , 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988)).

C. "Active Supervision" Under the State Action Doctrine

The FTC found no active state supervision of Ticor's filings for title search and examination fees in Arizona or Connecticut. It found Arizona's supervision deficient because state regulators accepted rate filings simply on Ticor's representation that they were based upon rates historically produced by market competition. The Insurance Department conducted no examination of the Rating Bureau despite a statutory requirement of examination every five years. In Connecticut, the FTC concluded that regulators could not meaningfully supervise a critical component of the rate-making process because they could not directly regulate insurer expenses. In both states, the FTC concluded that regulatory scrutiny of certain miscellaneous filings was inadequate. Ticor argues that these conclusions must be reversed under [33] the standards the Supreme Court articulated for determining what constitutes "active supervision" in its opinion on certiorari from our earlier decision in this case.

California Retail Liquor Dealers Association v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 , 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980) articulated HN14[] a two-prong test for determining when private parties who take part in an agreement to fix prices are entitled to immunity from the antitrust laws under the state action doctrine. First, the state regulation must be "'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy'"; second, the policy must be "'actively supervised'" by the state. [7] Id. at 105 (quoting City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 410, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 , 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978)).

In Ticor the Supreme Court attempted to clarify the meaning [34] of the active supervision principle:

> HN15[] The purpose of the active supervision inquiry is not to determine whether the State has met some normative standard, such as efficiency, in its regulatory practices. Its purpose is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among private parties. Much as in causation [*1139] inquiries, the analysis asks whether the State has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy. The question is not how well state regulation works but whether the anticompetitive scheme is the State's own.

112 S. Ct. at 2177. The HN16[] Supreme Court, however, expressly declared that when prices are initially set by private parties, the person claiming immunity must show that the state undertook steps to evaluate the rate setting scheme. "The mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the State." Id. at 2179. This declaration significantly narrowed the reach of the active [35] supervision prong of the state action exemption. The Supreme Court plainly instructed us that a state's rubber stamp is not enough. Active supervision requires the state regulatory authorities' independent review and approval. Bearing this in mind, we turn to the regulatory schemes of Arizona and Connecticut.

1. Arizona

The director of the State Department of Insurance licensed the Title Insurance Rating Bureau of Arizona in 1968. The Rating Bureau was statutorily authorized to establish joint rates for its members, including Ticor. The Rating Bureau, in theory, was subject to a wide range of latent powers possessed by the state insurance director. They included the power to audit the Rating Bureau's records and revoke its license, as well as broad authority to hold public hearings, promulgate rules, and issue orders discontinuing bureau practices found to be inconsistent with the insurance statute. The ALJ found that > actual use of these powers, however, is more hypothetical than real as shown by the fact that during the entire period 1968 to 1981 the Insurance Department conducted no examination of the Arizona Rating Bureau although there is a statutory requirement for [36] such an examination at least once every five years.

Jt. App. at 79-80 (footnote omitted). Moreover, no public hearing was ever held in Arizona on joint rates that the Rating Bureau filed. No rate filing was ever disapproved. No hearings on title insurance rates filed by the Rating

---

[7] For a detailed history and explanation of the rationale behind the state action doctrine, see Ticor, 112 S. Ct. at 2176-78.

Bureau were ever held. The only hearings that were held involved allegations that insurers or their agents had given illegal inducements to realtors in order to obtain business. Arizona law did not require that insurance rate filings be subjected to public notice, comment and hearings, nor did it require that a written decision, reviewable by the state courts, be issued for each rate filing.

Instead, Arizona employed HN17[] the "negative option" method of approving rates. Under this method, sometimes called the "file and use" approach, filed rates were deemed approved if the director took no action on them within fifteen days of their filing. [8] The Supreme Court criticized this method in Montana and Wisconsin and flatly stated that the active supervision standard is not met where, as here, "the potential for state supervision was not realized in fact." Ticor, 112 S. Ct. at 2179. [37]

We recognize that this record contains some evidence of supervision by Arizona. Arizona's Insurance Department appears to have inquired into the Rating Bureau's 1968 general rate filing before letting it take effect. The FTC, however, found that in reality the Insurance Department approved the filing without undertaking any substantive review. Although the Department of Insurance inquired how the risk component of the 1968 filed inclusive rate was derived, there was no convincing evidence that either the Rating Bureau justified the rate increase or the State reviewed it.

Against this backdrop, the FTC found a lack of active supervision in Arizona. It did so after finding that the original 1968 filing went into effect essentially unreviewed, and that the Insurance Department failed to undertake the requisite formal examination of the Rating Bureau [38] at least once every five years, even though an Arizona statute required [*1140] such an examination. It does appear that the Insurance Department, in 1980, announced a comprehensive investigation of the Rating Bureau, but apparently it was not actually conducted and the Rating Bureau went out of business in 1981. Id. at 2175. Evidence in the record supports these findings. When this evidence of inaction is coupled with Arizona's persistent failure to exercise its statutorily established regulatory powers with any degree of consistency, we are unable to hold under the standard the Supreme Court enunciated in Ticor that the FTC's finding that Arizona did not actively supervise the rate filings was not supported by substantial evidence.

2. Connecticut

Connecticut adopted a hands-off policy of minimum state involvement in regulation of title insurance rates on the principle that the rates are best determined by a competitive market. [9] The Connecticut Rating Bureau, officially known as the Connecticut Board of Title Underwriters, was authorized to establish joint rates for its members after receiving a license from the state's insurance commissioner in [39] 1965. The Connecticut Rating Bureau, like Arizona's, was theoretically subject to a wide array of latent powers possessed by the State Insurance Department under the applicable state regulatory statutes. Among the Department's powers were the authority to conduct audits and hold hearings on rates set by the Bureau. It did not do either. Id. at 2174.

Prior to 1982, Connecticut allowed insurers to use rates as soon as they were filed. It discontinued this practice in 1982 and implemented a "file and use" approach that was tantamount to the negative option method we described [40] in our analysis of Arizona's practice. Connecticut's "file and use" approach required insurers operating through rating bureaus to wait thirty days after filing rates before using them. If the Insurance Commissioner did not disapprove the rates during the thirty days, they were deemed approved and became effective.

---

[8] Notwithstanding this statutory system, in practice the Arizona Rating Bureau's rate submissions were not put into effect until actually stamped "approved" by the director.

[9] Connecticut law did not require that insurance rate filings be subject to public notice, comment, and hearings, or that a written decision, appealable to state courts, be issued with respect to each rate filing. State insurance regulators were opposed to any such strict procedural requirements on the grounds of cost and the inevitable delay in responding to market forces that such regulatory procedures would entail.

The Connecticut Bureau filed only two major rate increases, one in 1966 and one in 1981. The Insurance Department wrote to the Bureau after its 1966 filing requesting additional justification for the proposed increases. It was concerned with whether the 1966 rate was for risk only or should also include search and examination costs. The Department later approved the increases. There is, however, no evidence in the record that the additional justification the Department requested was satisfactorily provided before approval.

In 1981 the Connecticut Rating Bureau filed for a 20% rate increase. A state insurance official testified that he reviewed the rate increase with care and discussed various components of the increase with the rating bureau. This official, however, did not have authority to act with respect to the cost data that were, in his opinion, excessive. See id. at 2175.

[41] Whether the supervisory scheme in Connecticut met the Ticor active supervision standard is a closer question than in Arizona. There is at least some evidence that the State Insurance Department took an interest in the rates the Bureau proposed. See Jt. App. 71 n.192 (ALJ's recognition that rate increases and reductions filed between 1966 and 1983 sometimes were carefully reviewed but at other times approved with minimal review). There is also evidence, however, that Connecticut could not meaningfully examine the rates proposed because it never obtained the information necessary for a proper evaluation. See Jt. App. at 139 (FTC adopted ALJ's findings that State Insurance Department suffered from "dearth of information" that would have enabled it to assess [*1141] appropriateness of filed rates). On balance, we are again unable to hold, from the circumstances this record shows concerning operation of the statutory scheme and the degree of supervision Connecticut exercised over the two primary rate increases the Bureau proposed, that the FTC's finding that Connecticut's involvement with title insurance rates fell short of active supervision is not supported by substantial evidence.

[42] V. Conclusion

Ticor's collective establishment of rates for title search and examination services is not immune from the federal antitrust laws under either the "business of insurance" exception to the McCarran-Ferguson Act or the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Ticor also has not shown that officials in either Arizona or Connecticut actively supervised the rate setting schemes by undertaking the necessary steps to evaluate the merits of the rates set. Therefore, Ticor may not claim immunity under the state action doctrine. For these reasons, the FTC's final order will be affirmed.

Dissent by: ALITO

Dissent

ALITO, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

I believe that the setting of uniform rates for title search and examination services is part of the "business of insurance" within the meaning of Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1012(b). I therefore dissent.

I.

Section 2(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act makes the federal antitrust laws inapplicable to the "business of insurance" to the extent that such business is regulated by state law and is not subject to the "boycott" exception contained in Section 3(b), 15 U.S.C. § 1013 [43] (b). In this case, as the majority notes (maj. typescript at 11), the petitioners' challenged activities are regulated by state law and do not fall within the "boycott" exception, and therefore the applicability of the McCarran-Ferguson Act turns on whether those activities constitute the "business of insurance."

In interpreting this statutory term, the majority properly looks to the Supreme Court's opinion in Union Labor Life Insurance Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 , 102 S. Ct. 3002 (1982). There, the Court, relying on its prior decision in Group Life & Health Insurance Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261 , 99 S. Ct.

1067 (1979), wrote that three criteria are "relevant in determining whether a particular practice is part of the 'business of insurance' exempted from the antitrust laws by § 2(b) . . . ." 458 U.S. at 129. These criteria, none of which is "necessarily determinative in itself," are (id.):

> [F]irst, whether the practice has the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk; second, whether the practice is an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured; and [44] third, whether the practice is limited to entities within the insurance industry.

In the present case, the outcome produced by applying these criteria depends on the way in which the "practice" at issue is defined. The majority views the practice as "the title search and examination . . . itself" (maj. typescript at 12), divorced from the issuance of the title insurance policy. The Commission took a similar approach, stating that it drew "a sharp distinction" between these two activities. Commission Opinion at 33; J.A. at 160.

Once the pertinent practice is defined in this way, it can be argued with considerable force, as the majority and the Commission have done, that most if not all of the Royal Drug-Pireno criteria cannot be met. Indeed, with respect to the first criterion, I fully agree with the majority that "the title search and examination does not itself spread or transfer risk." Maj. typescript at 12. Likewise, as to the third criterion, I cannot quarrel with the majority's conclusion that the practice of conducting title searches and examinations is not and has not historically been limited to entities within the insurance industry. Maj. typescript at 13.

[*1142] If, [45] however, the practice at issue is defined differently -- as the process of issuing title insurance, an indispensable component of which is the title and search examination -- then the Royal Drug-Pireno criteria point to an entirely different result. The practice of issuing title insurance clearly transfers and spreads risk, is "an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured," and is "limited to entities within the insurance industry." Pireno, 458 U.S. at 129.

Thus, the decisions reached by the majority and the Commission are correct only if they have correctly defined the "practice" that must be tested against the Royal Drug-Pireno criteria. And neither Royal Drug nor Pireno explains how a court should go about defining the scope of the "practice" to which their criteria should be applied.

II.

While Royal Drug and Pireno do not address this issue, earlier decisions of the lower courts take the sensible view that a title search and examination performed as part of the process of issuing title insurance cannot be dissected from the rest of the policy-issuing process for the purpose of applying the [46] McCarran-Ferguson Act.

In Commander Leasing Co. v. Transamerica Title Insurance Co., 477 F.2d 77 (10th Cir. 1973), the court of appeals upheld the district court's determination that title search and examination was not a "separate business" but rather a "condition precedent" to the issuance of title insurance and a part of the "business of insurance." Id. at 81. Similarly, in Schwartz v. Commonwealth Land Title Insurance Co., 374 F. Supp. 564, 574 (E.D. Pa. 1974), Judge Becker aptly wrote:

> The investigation of the risk of loss prior to deciding whether to insure that risk is clearly part of the business of insurance. . . . It would be in our view unrealistic, indeed ostrich-like, to separate the title search process from the pure insurance aspect of the title companies' activities and . . . to call only the latter "the business of insurance."

See also McIlhenny v. American Title Ins. Co., 418 F. Supp. 364, 368-69 (E.D. Pa. 1976).

I agree with this analysis. The Commission and the majority do not dispute that conducting a title search and examination [47] is an indispensable element of the process of issuing a title insurance policy. They do not claim that any insurer issues title insurance without first performing such a search and examination, and in fact the statutes of many states expressly require title insurers to perform a title search and examination before issuing a policy. See, e.g., N.J. Stat. Ann. 17:46B-9* (West 1985); 40 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 910-7 (1992). As a result, I believe that it is indeed "unrealistic" and "ostrich-like" to pretend that a title search and examination performed as part of the title insurance policy issuance process is a separate "practice" from the rest of that process. [10]

[48] We must not forget that "the starting point in a case involving construction of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, like the starting point in any case involving the meaning of a statute, is the language of the statute itself." Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. at 210. See also Department of the Treasury v. Fabe, 113 S. Ct. 2202, 2207, [*1143] 124 L. Ed. 2d 449, 61 U.S.L.W. 4579, 4581 (June 11, 1993). By its terms, Section 2(b) applies, without any qualification relevant here, to the "business of insurance," and the "ordinary understanding of that phrase" (Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. at 211) certainly includes those preparatory and administrative activities that are an indispensable part of the issuance of insurance policies.

Moreover, I see nothing in "the structure of the [McCarran-Ferguson] Act and its legislative history" (id.) that is sufficient to undermine this interpretation. I recognize that Congress's "primary concern" in enacting Section 2(b) was to ensure that "cooperative ratemaking efforts be exempt from the antitrust laws" (id. at 221), but I do not think that the Act's structure or legislative history demonstrate [49] that Congress intended to limit Section 2(b)'s reach strictly to this area of "primary concern." On the contrary, the precursor bill proposed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) contained a specific exemption that seems applicable to the activities challenged in this case. This exemption applied to "any cooperative or joint . . . investigation [] or inspection agreement relating to insurance." 90 Cong. Rec. A4406 (1944). The Supreme Court has found that "the views of the NAIC are particularly significant, because the Act ultimately passed was based in large part on the NAIC bill." Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 221 (footnote omitted). Moreover, the Court has long recognized that Section 2(b) is not confined to the fixing of rates. As it stated in SEC v. National Securities, Inc., 393 U.S. 453, 460, 21 L. Ed. 2d 668 , 89 S. Ct. 564 (1969):

> The selling and advertising of policies, FTC v. National Casualty Co., 357 U.S. 560, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1540 , 78 S. Ct. 1260 (1958), and the licensing of companies and their agents, cf. Robertson v. California, 328 U.S. 440, 90 L. Ed. 1366 , 66 S. Ct. 1160 (1946), are also within the scope of the statute. [50] . . . Undoubtedly, other activities of insurance companies relate so closely to their status as reliable insurers that they too must be placed in the same class.

To be sure, the Court has held that Section 2(b) does not extend to certain insurance company activities that are not indispensable parts of the policy issuance process. See Pireno, supra (use of peer chiropractic review committee to determine whether charges were reasonable and necessary); Royal Drug Co., supra (price-fixing agreements between health benefit insurer and pharmacies); SEC v. National Securities, Inc., supra (misrepresentations and omissions in insurers' communications to stockholders); SEC v. Variable Annuity Life Ins. Co. of America, 359 U.S. 65, 3 L. Ed. 2d 640 , 79 S. Ct. 618 (1959) (issuance of annuities involving no true underwriting of risks). See also Fabe, 61 U.S.L.W. at 4582 ("Pireno and Royal Drug held only that 'ancillary activities' that do not affect performance of the insurance contract or enforcement of contractual obligations" are not entitled to antitrust exemption). But the majority in this case [51] goes much further and holds that a central and indispensable element of the process of issuing title insurance does not constitute part of "the business of [10] I am not persuaded by the Commission's reliance on footnote nine of Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. at 213-14 n.9. In that case, the Court held that the "business of insurance" did not encompass agreements between Blue Shield and participating pharmacies regarding the prices that Blue Shield would pay the pharmacies for prescription drugs furnished to Blue Shield policyholders. While I find footnote nine somewhat unclear, I think it is best understood to mean only that the "business of insurance" under Section 2(b) does not necessarily encompass everything that an insurance company must do, following issuance of policies, in order to ensure that promised policy benefits are provided to its insureds. See Pireno, 458 U.S. at 130 ("business of insurance" does not include arrangements that come into play only after the insurance contract is entered). By contrast, title searches and examinations occur before the title insurance contract is entered and play an essential role in defining the risk that is transferred. Thus, I do not think that footnote nine is controlling here.

---

insurance." Whether the majority's decision represents sound antitrust policy, I do not believe that it is supported by the language, structure, or legislative history of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, and I therefore respectfully dissent. [11]

[11] Because I would reverse the Commission's order based on Section 2(b), I do not address the alternative grounds for reversal advanced by the petitioners.

LexisNexis®

Ehredt Underground v. Commonwealth Edison Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

July 16, 1993, Decided ; July 19, 1993, Docketed

Case No. 91 C 2361

Reporter

830 F. Supp. 1083 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9874 ; 145 L.R.R.M. 2176; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,513

EHREDT UNDERGROUND, INC., Plaintiff, v. COMMONWEALTH EDISON COMPANY and INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS, LOCAL NO. 196, Defendants.

Prior History: [1] Adopting Magistrate's Document of May 27, 1992, Reported at: 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7360.

Core Terms

employees, collective bargaining agreement, exemption, bid, conspiracy, contractor, allegations, campaign, anti trust law, recommended, job site, excavation, cable, wage scale, wages, defense motion, non-statutory, bargaining, terminated, installation, parties, statutory exemption, restraint of trade, state claims, labor union, Sherman Act, preempted, believes, favoring, unfair labor practice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

Governments > Courts > Judges

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

A district court reviewing the report and recommendation of a magistrate judge makes a de novo determination of the record of any portion of the magistrate's disposition to which specific written objection has been made in accordance with this rule. The district judge may accept, reject, or modify the recommended decision, receive further evidence, or recommit the matter to the magistrate with instructions. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b); 28 U.S.C.S. § 636(b)(1). Therefore, the court will review the objections of both parties and shall only dismiss a count for failure to state a claim if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief. The court accepts all well pleaded facts in the complaint as true and views allegations in a light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When deciding a motion to dismiss, the court should take the allegations in the complaint to be true and view them, along with the reasonable inferences to be drawn from them, in the fight most favorable to the plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN3[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

The labor exemption to the antitrust laws reflects the accommodation between the congressional policies favoring free competition in the marketplace as reflected by federal antitrust laws, and the labor policies favoring collective bargaining and other union activities reflected by the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 151 et seq. There is an inherent tension between national antitrust policy, which seeks to maximize competition, and national labor policy, which encourages cooperation among workers to improve the conditions of employment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states: every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade is illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Sections 6, 20 of the Clayton Act specifically exempt labor union activity from antitrust liability. Section 6 states that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce nor shall such labor organizations, or the members thereof, be held to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C.S. § 17. Section 20 limits the power of federal courts to issue injunctions in cases arising out of a labor dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment. 29 U.S.C.S. § 52.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN5[] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

The Norris LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 101 et seq., expands the protection for labor unions from antitrust liability. The act prohibits injunctions against employees engaged in various activities during a labor dispute, even where a claim is made of an unlawful combination or conspiracy. The Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts combine to provide a comprehensive exemption from antitrust liability for union activity. Even though the language of the act does not explicitly exempt union activity from antitrust liability, it is interpreted broadly as a statement of congressional policy that the courts must not use the antitrust laws as a vehicle to interfere in labor disputes. Labor unions, however, do not have absolute immunity from liability under the antitrust laws; they remain accountable for certain anticompetitive activities. Two distinct exemptions to the antitrust laws exist. The first is a statutory exemption based on various sections of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts, and the second is a nonstatutory exemption based on an accommodation between the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the National Labor Relations Act and the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Scope, Exemptions

Whether a labor union has violated the antitrust laws can be determined only by reading the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and the Norris LaGuardia Act together, as a harmonizing text of outlawry of labor conduct. Pursuant to this reading, there is a broad rule for the statutory exemption to the antitrust laws: So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit under § 20 are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means. So long as a union acts unilaterally and in its own interest, therefore, it will not be liable for resulting restraints on trade. However, once a union conspires with employers to restrain trade, that union forfeits its statutory exemption because the purpose of the exemption is not to immunize labor unions who aid and abet businessmen in violating the Sherman Act. Furthermore, a plaintiff's complaint alleges conduct outside this exemption where the complaint shows the union did not act in its own self-interest or when a conspiracy between the union and a non-labor entity was properly pled.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

HN7[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

While a union is free to unilaterally impose the same wage scale on every employer with whom it bargains, and it need not be concerned that the wages it is imposing will be too high for certain employers to pay, the union loses the antitrust labor exemption when it is clearly shown that it has agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units. However, when such a collective bargaining agreement is part of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, the plaintiff must show that the union conspired with a non-labor entity to impose the wage scale on the plaintiff; that the non-labor entity is in a position to directly benefit from the resulting restraint on trade; and that the union and non-labor groups share an anti-competitive purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Football

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In order to accommodate the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets with the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 151 et seq., certain union-employer agreements are accorded a limited nonstatutory exemption from antitrust sanctions. The non-statutory exemption is designed to allow unions and employers freedom in the collective bargaining process. The exemption applies to those terms or conditions of a collective bargaining agreement which are intended to eliminate competition over wages or working conditions, and only indirectly restrain trade in the business market. Those agreements that are intended to restrain competition in the business market are not exempt. The non-statutory exemption protects the parties to a collective bargaining agreement from antitrust liability when they bargain for terms or conditions which indirectly restrain trade.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption > Primacy of Labor Policy

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN9[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

When a state law or remedy interferes with federal labor policy or specific provisions of the National Labor Relations Act (Act), any state claims brought pursuant to that state law are preempted. When it is clear or may fairly be assumed that the activities which a state purports to regulate are protected by § 7 of the Act or constitute an unfair labor practice under § 8, or when an activity is arguably subject to § 7 or § 8 of the Act, the states as well as the federal courts must defer to the exclusive competence of the National Labor Relations Board (Board). The first question must, therefore, be whether the actions complained of are subject to Board regulation. If they are, then the state claim is preempted by federal labor law. Thus, the court turns first to whether plaintiff's allegations are directed at conduct that is arguably prohibited by § 8 of the Act.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN10[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

In deciding whether the basis of a state law claim is arguably prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act (Act), the critical question is whether the controversy presented to the state court is identical to or different from that which could have been, but was not, presented to the National Labor Relations Board.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN11[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Unfair Labor Practices

Section 8(b)(4)(C) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(b)(4)(C), states that it is an unfair labor practice to: threaten, coerce, or restrain any person where an object thereof is: forcing or requiring any employer to recognize or bargain with a particular labor organization as the representative of his employees if another labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of § 159 of this title. In comparison, a claim for tortious interference with contract and prospective economic advantage must establish: a valid business relationship (not necessarily evidenced by an enforceable contract) or expectancy; knowledge of the relationship or expectancy on the part of the interferer; an intentional interference inducing or causing a breach or termination of the relationship or expectancy; and resultant damage to the party whose relationship or expectancy has been disrupted. The interest protected is the reasonable expectation of economic advantage.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Right to Organize

HN12[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Unfair Labor Practices

Organizing campaigns are protected activity under § 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

HN13[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

Preemption may be inappropriate in cases involving conduct that touches interests so deeply rooted in local feeling and responsibility that it cannot be inferred that Congress deprived the states of the power to act. However, these instances are limited to cases involving violence and imminent threats to the public order.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Property Damages > General Overview

HN14[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

The interest protected by the tort of interference with the right of contract and prospective advantage is the reasonable expectation of economic advantage. The state does not have an overriding concern in regulating economic loss caused by labor disputes.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Torts > Procedural Matters > Preemption > General Overview

HN15[] Damages, Monetary Damages

The very fact that the remedies provided by the state and federal law are different demands, rather than prohibits, preemption. The conflict between state and federal law lies not only in the conduct to be regulated but also in the remedies provided. The plaintiff may not circumvent the federal remedy established by Congress by seeking adjudication of a claim under the guise of a state tort claim.

Judges: ALESIA

Opinion by: JAMES H. ALESIA

Opinion

[*1086] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Court on the parties' objections to Magistrate Judge W. Thomas Rosemond's Report and Recommendation ("Report") on Defendant Local 196's Motion to Dismiss Counts II and III of Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint. Plaintiff Ehredt Underground, Inc. ("Ehredt") filed a four-count complaint against Commonwealth Edison Company ("Com Ed") and International Brotherhood Of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Local No. 196 ("Local 196"). Count II is directed at both defendants and alleges that they engaged in unlawful combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.

§§ 1, 2. Count III is directed solely at Local 196 and is a state law claim of tortious interference with the right of contract and prospective advantage. Magistrate Judge Rosemond recommended denying the defendant's motion to dismiss Count II and granting defendant's motion to dismiss Count III. For the reasons stated below the Court accepts [2] the recommendations of the Magistrate Judge and accordingly denies defendant's motion to dismiss count II and grants defendant's motion to dismiss count III.

I. FACTS [1]

Plaintiff Ehredt is a corporation engaged in the business of underground excavation and installation of electrical cables. Ken Ehredt is its President.

Defendant Local 196 is a labor organization affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO ("the International"). Harold Eastwood and Dave Lindsey are business managers for Local 196.

Commonwealth Edison Co. ("Com Ed") and Illinois Bell Telephone Company ("Illinois Bell") divide responsibility for installation of electrical and telephone cable. Contractors laying cable for Com Ed also act as agents for Illinois Bell and lay telephone cables at the same site and at the same time. Geographic areas are divided and either [3] Com Ed or Illinois Bell accepts sole responsibility for installation.

In 1988, a construction foreman for Com Ed invited Ehredt to submit a bid for a contract to install cables. Ken Ehredt was told that his company must be a union contractor if he wanted to submit a contract proposal and do business with Com Ed. Ehredt received a packet of materials from Com Ed describing the bid proposal procedure and outlining the specifications of the project. Com Ed's bid proposal form requires bidding [*1087] parties to identify the union with which the bidding party has a labor contract.

Ehredt began discussions with several unions and finally entered into a collective bargaining agreement with International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Local 336 ("Local 336"). Local 336 is a labor organization affiliated with the International and represents many employees working for Illinois Bell and various cable television companies doing trenching and excavation work. An agreement between Ehredt and Local 336 was approved by the International.

On October 14, 1988, Ehredt submitted a bid to Com Ed on an excavation project. Shortly thereafter, on October 17, Ken Ehredt had a conversation with the [4] president of Com Ed's Northbrook-area, in-house union. The union president told Enredt that Com Ed had an agreement with its union to sub-contract only with union subcontractors. Ehredt was awarded a contract with the agreement that Ehredt was to perform the work as a union contractor.

Beginning in November 1988, various representatives of Com Ed advised Ehredt that it should provide kickbacks for the award of work. Each and every time, plaintiff refused to do so. A Com Ed representative also told plaintiff that Trench-it had provided kickbacks to Com Ed supervisors. Trench-it is a union contractor in the excavation and cable installation industry and has a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196.

Sometime after Ehredt began working for Com Ed, Local 196 and the International began a campaign to pressure Ehredt to abandon Local 336 and sign a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196. Starting in late 1988, Ehredt's workers began noticing that they were being followed from job site to job site.

In April 1989, the union campaign escalated to physical violence when Ehredt's manager, Terry Counley, and one other worker were excavating at a remote, Com Ed job site. While [5] the other employee was away getting equipment, two individuals approached Counley. Plaintiff believes they traced the crews' activities through routing information improperly furnished by Com Ed. They asked to see Counley's union card, which he produced for them. After inspecting the card, the two men picked up some of Counley's equipment and dropped it in the trench. When [1] As the parties do not object to the factual allegations as set out in the Report, the Court restates them here as they appeared in the Report.

---

Counley bent over to pick up the equipment, the two men began to beat Counley. They told Counley that is what he could expect if he ever worked at that site again. After leaving Counley lying in the trench, the two men released the brake on Ehredt's earth-moving equipment and departed.

Moments later Local 196's business agent, Dave Lindsey, arrived at the job site and questioned Counley about whether Ehredt's employees would switch from Local 336 to Local 196. Counley told Lindsey that he could not give him an answer and asked for Lindsey's card. Lindsey then handed him Harold Eastwood's business card. As noted above, Harold Eastwood was a business manager for Local 196.

On another occasion, Eastwood told Ken Ehredt and Counley that Ehredt's workers were in the wrong union and that they should switch to Local [6] 196 because the work they were performing was within Local 196's jurisdiction. He said Local 196 was determined to get all the work it felt was within its jurisdiction. Eastwood told Ehredt that Local 196 had only one more contractor (Illinois Hydraulic) to get and then the union could claim all of Com Ed's excavation and cable installation contractors as members. Eastwood also told Ehredt that there was a Com Ed Board member who assisted him in either getting rid of non-union excavation and cable installation contractors or in getting them into Local 196.

Throughout the contract period with Ehredt, Com Ed expressed its satisfaction with Ehredt's work. In fact, between October 1988 and March 1990, plaintiff's contract was extended three times by Com Ed. During this same period, Com Ed entered into an agreement with Trench-it to perform identical work in the same geographic area. The work was allocated by Com Ed between the contractors on a work order basis.

Meanwhile, Doug Hill, a supervisor in the underground construction department of Com Ed's Crystal Lake District, repeatedly [*1088] threatened to terminate Ehredt and replace it with Trench-it. Hill and other Com Ed supervisors also repeatedly [7] gave away plaintiff's contracted work to Trench-it. In addition, Hill often falsely blamed Ehredt for falling behind in its work and threatened to give the work to Trench-it.

On one occasion, plaintiff was blamed for misconduct attributable to Trench-it. When Hill discovered that a contractor had left open a television cable trench, Hill blamed Ehredt and threatened to terminate Ehredt's contract. Later, however, when Hill discovered that Trench-it was responsible, he took no action.

Ehredt believes that a Com Ed foreman, who assigned work, had a financial investment in excavating equipment used by Trench-it and assigned favored work to Trench-it to protect his investment. Also, Com Ed made equipment and facilities available to Trench-it at very favorable terms which were not available to plaintiff.

In January 1990, Com Ed began to solicit bids for a second contract. In connection with this bid, Hill told Ehredt that once Trench-it won the contract, most of Ehredt's employees would probably quit to work for Trench-it. Since the contract had not yet been awarded, Ehredt understood this to mean that Trench-it would receive special consideration in the bidding process.

Ken Ehredt [8] took his concern to Forrest Stahmer, Com Ed's Contract Coordinator. Stahmer assured Ehredt that the bidding procedure was kept as apolitical as possible and invited Ehredt to submit a bid on the contract. Prior to the award, another Com Ed representative contacted Ken Ehredt to request that he lower some of his contract prices. Since this was necessary to win the contract, Ehredt agreed to do so.

On March 23, 1990, Ehredt was awarded a second contract to perform work in the same territory - the Crystal Lake District - for a two-year period running from April 1, 1990 to March 31, 1992 with the understanding that the work would be performed as a union contractor. Approximately three days after the contract was awarded, Hill called Ehredt's manager, Terry Counley, into his office. Hill told Counley that he did not think Ehredt Underground could handle the work they had contracted to do and that he would keep an eye on them. Hill threatened that, if Ehredt did not meet his standards, he would pull them off the job and give the work to Trench-it.

Trench-it had bid unsuccessfully for the Crystal Lake District work. Plaintiff believes Trench-it was unhappy to have lost this work and attributed [9] the loss to lesser wages paid by plaintiff. Ehredt further believes that Trench-it communicated its concerns to Local 196 and to Com Ed. Subsequently, agents of Local 196 and laid-off employees of Trench-it communicated threats of property damage and other harm to plaintiff through various Com Ed supervisors.

In conjunction with Local 196's campaign to recruit Ehredt, Local 336 began a parallel campaign to oust Ehredt, presumably under pressure from the International. By letter dated July 17, 1990, Local 336's president and business manager, Albert Franzen, advised Ehredt that the work being performed by Ehredt's workers pursuant to the Com Ed contract was out of Local 336's jurisdiction, even through similar work was performed by employees of Illinois Bell who were represented by Local 336. Franzen recommended that Ehredt cease doing such work. Ehredt refused to breach its contract with Com Ed and Local 336 terminated it collective bargaining agreement with Ehredt on August 21, 1990.

Ehredt then began discussions with other unions to replace Local 336. Ehredt considered the Congress of Independent Unions ("CIU"). The CIU is a labor organization which is not affiliated with the [10] AFL-CIO. The wage scale which would have been implemented under a collective bargaining agreement with the CIU was roughly comparable to the wages plaintiff paid under the Local 336 contract.

Ehredt informed James Harper, purchasing agent for Com Ed, that his company was being put out of Local 336. When Ehredt offered to work as a non-union contractor, Harper refused. Consequently, plaintiff told Harper he was going to negotiate a contract with the CIU. At first, Harper accepted the [*1089] idea, however, he said he would have to clear it though the legal department. About three weeks later, Harper replied that Com Ed refused to do business with any contractor whose employees were represented by a union that was not an AFL-CIO affiliate.

As a result of the conduct of Local 336 and the restrictions placed on Ehredt by its contract with Com Ed (to-wit, that the company must be an AFL-CIO affiliated union contractor), Ehredt was forced to seek another AFL-CIO union to represent its employees if it wanted to keep its contract with Com Ed. Consequently, Ehredt began discussions with several AFL-CIO affiliated unions, including Local 196, International Union of Operating Engineers Local 150, and [11] IBEW Local 117. At one point Com Ed representative Hill told Ehredt, "We don't want 150. Why don't you go with 196 and make everybody happy?

On September 26, 1990, the president of CIU filed a petition to represent Ehredt workers for purposes of collective bargaining. Consequently, the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB") scheduled an election for Ehredt's employees on November 19, 1990. Approximately one week prior to the election, Local 196 redoubled its efforts to pressure Ehredt and its employees to join Local 196. Specifically, agents of Local 196 now attempted to get the local on the election ballot. Agents from the International contacted Ehredt's employees at their homes in an effort to rally enough employee support.

Having tried previously but failing to solicit support from Ehredt's employees, agents of Local 196 contacted Ken Ehredt and arranged a meeting with him on November 10, 1990. At that meeting, Ehredt was told that if Local 196 was given a collective bargaining agreement with Ehredt, the Local would assist in obtaining Com Ed's consent to the contract price changes which would be necessary given Local 196's significantly higher wage structure. Ehredt was also [12] promised that the union would allow him to continue running the company with his current employees as he had under Local 336. On the basis of these oral agreements, he agreed that he would not oppose Local 196's appearance on the NLRB election ballot and he so notified his employees.

On November 19, 1990, the employees of Ehredt elected Local 196 as their exclusive collective bargaining representative and the union later was certified as such by the NLRB. Ehredt signed a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196 on December 17, 1990. Ehredt had previously been shown the agreement during the November 10 meeting. Ehredt claims there was and could be no negotiation over terms. The agreement became effective January 1, 1991 and provided for a wage scale that was nearly ninety percent (90%) higher than wages under the agreement with Local 336.

As a result of the termination of the collective bargaining agreement with Local 336 and the new agreement with Local 196, plaintiff determined that an equitable adjustment in its contract with Com Ed was necessary. Plaintiff was led to believe by Com Ed and Local 196 that a contract adjustment would be made. Ehredt sent Com Ed a letter on [13] November 9, 1990 to notify them that it needed to revise its contract rates because the original bid for the project was based on Local 336's lower wage structure.

Ken Ehredt requested a meeting to discuss the renegotiation of the contract. He was asked to send a new proposal in preparation for that meeting. On November 28, 1990, Ehredt and his accountant met with Com Ed's representatives. At the meeting, they were told that the revised proposal was generally acceptable except for approximately eight items. Ehredt offered to cut the revised bid for those items by fifty percent (50%).

On December 13, 1990 (after Local 196 was certified as the collective bargaining union, but four days before an agreement was signed between Ehredt and Local 196), Com Ed advised Ehredt that his revised bid was rejected. Ehredt was further told that unless he could stick to his original bid, he would lose the contract to Trench-it. On January 14, Com Ed terminated plaintiff's contract and awarded it to Trench-it. Trench-it hired eighty percent (80%) of plaintiff's employees -- many of whom were ultimately replaced by children of Com Ed employees.

[*1090] Plaintiff filed its original Complaint against Com Ed [14] and Local 196 on April 19, 1991. Plaintiff subsequently filed an Amended Complaint ("the Complaint") on December 20, 1991. Plaintiff alleges that Local 196 and Com Ed (a non-labor party) engaged in a conspiracy to eliminate open-shop contracting. Plaintiff claims Local 196, Com Ed, Trench-it, the International, and Local 336 all conspired to eliminate open-shop contractors from performing trenching services in the relevant marketplace in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. Plaintiff also asserts that Local 196's actions amount to tortious interference with contract and prospective advantage.

Defendant Local 196 moved to dismiss Counts II and III of Plaintiff's Amended Complaint. Local 196 contends it is entitled to the labor exemption to the antitrust laws and therefore Count II of the Complaint should be dismissed. Defendant also argues that Count III of the Complaint should be dismissed because this state law claim of tortious interference with the right of contract is preempted by federal labor law.

Magistrate Judge Rosemond recommended that defendant's motion to dismiss Count II be denied and the motion to dismiss [15] Count III be granted. Defendant objects to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation to deny its motion to dismiss Count II, while Plaintiff objects to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation to dismiss Count III.

II. DISCUSSION

HN1[] A district court reviewing the Report and Recommendation of a Magistrate Judge makes a de novo determination of the record "of any portion of the magistrate's disposition to which specific written objection has been made in accordance with this rule. The district judge may accept, reject, or modify the recommended decision, receive further evidence, or recommit the matter to the magistrate with instructions." FED. R. CIV. P. 72(b); 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1). Therefore, the court will review the objections of both parties and shall only dismiss a count for failure to state a claim if it appears "beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of [its] claim which would entitle [it] to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). The court accepts all well pleaded facts in the complaint as true and views allegations in a light most favorable to the plaintiff. [16] Gomez v. Illinois State Bd. of Educ., 811 F.2d 1030, 1039 (7th Cir. 1987).

A. Count II - Antitrust Claims

Defendant makes four objections to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that defendant's motion to dismiss Count II be denied. First, the Defendant objects to the factual finding that agents of Local 196 engaged in physical violence or threats of physical violence against employees of plaintiff. Specifically, defendant argues the Complaint alleges only that two unknown men beat plaintiff's employee and that "even the most generous reading of the Amended Complaint does not allege that the two unnamed persons were Agents of Local 196." (Defendant's Objections to the Magistrate Judge's Report, at p. 2). The court disagrees.

HN2[] When deciding a motion to dismiss, the court should "take the allegations in the complaint to be true and view them, along with the reasonable inferences to be drawn from them, in the fight most favorable to the plaintiffs." Ellsworth v. City of Racine, 774 F.2d 182, 184 (7th Cir. 1985). It is reasonable to conclude from the Complaint that the men who came to Ehredt's job site in April [17] of 1989 and destroyed equipment and beat one of Ehredt's employees were acting as agents of Local 196.

Several allegations in the Complaint make this a reasonable inference. First, plaintiff alleges that two unknown men showed up at an Ehredt job site in April 1989. (Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, at p. 14, P 39). These men allegedly had traced Ehredt to this remote job site (this site was not visible to general traffic and was not a matter of public knowledge) through information improperly provided by Commonwealth Edison. Id. Once they arrived at the job site, they beat Terry Counley, an employee of Ehredt, and destroyed much of the equipment at the job site. Id. They told Counley that these attacks would continue if Ehredt worked in Cary, Illinois again. Id. Just moments after [*1091] these men left, Dave Lindsey, the business agent for Local 196, arrived at the Ehredt job site to convince Counley and his employer Ehredt to switch from Local 336 to Local 196. Id.

The short period of time that passed between Lindsey's arrival at the job site and the attack by the two unnamed men, combined with the ability of both Lindsey and the two unknown men to find plaintiff's [18] worksite location, information that was not a matter of general knowledge and which allegedly was provided improperly by Com Ed, leads the court to the reasonable inference that the two unknown men were agents of defendant Local 196. Accordingly, the defendant's objection is overruled.

Defendant's second, third and fourth objections are made to the Magistrate Judge's legal conclusion that the defendants are not entitled to an exemption from the antitrust laws. Specifically, defendant Local 196 objects to the "legal conclusion that a conspiracy was properly pled, . . . that the statutory exemption to Anti-Trust Law does not apply [and] the legal conclusion that the non-statutory exemption [does] not apply." (Defendant's Objections to the Magistrate Judge's Report, at p. 1). The Court disagrees for the reasons that follow.

1. History of the Labor Exemption

HN3[] The labor exemption to the antitrust laws reflects the accommodation between the congressional policies favoring free competition in the marketplace as reflected by federal antitrust laws, and the labor policies favoring collective bargaining and other union activities reflected by the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA"), [19] 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq. "There is an inherent tension between national antitrust policy, which seeks to maximize competition, and national labor policy, which encourages cooperation among workers to improve the conditions of employment." H.A. Artists & Associates, Inc. v. Actors' Equity Ass'n, 451 U.S. 704, 713, 68 L. Ed. 2d 558, 101 S. Ct. 2102 (1981). The obvious tension between these two policies became apparent shortly after the passage of the first antitrust law in 1890.

HN4[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy in restraint of trade . . . is illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1992). Immediately after its passage a sharp controversy arose as to whether this act applied to labor union activities, especially collective bargaining agreements. Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 325 U.S. 797, 801, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939 (1945). Soon after the Sherman Act was passed, courts adopted the view that "a combination of laborers to obtain a raise in wages was itself a prohibited monopoly," and began to hold labor unions liable for violations of the [20] antitrust laws. Id. at 802. Congress responded by passing sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act. With the passage of these provisions, "Congress sought to specifically exempt labor union activity" from antitrust liability. Mid-America Regional Bargaining Ass'n v. Will County Carpenters Dist. Council, 675 F.2d 881, 884 (7th Cir. 1982). Section 6 states that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce . . . nor shall such [labor] organizations, or the members thereof, be held . . . to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 17 (1988). Section 20 limited the power of federal courts to issue injunctions in cases arising out of a labor "dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment." 29 U.S.C. § 52 (1988).

Sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, however, failed to promote the national labor policies due to courts' continued application of the Sherman Act to union activities. Specifically, the courts defined a labor dispute very narrowly and limited the application of the Clayton Act to union [21] activities directed at an employer by its own employees. See Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Ass'n, 274 U.S. 37, 71 L. Ed. 916, 47 S. Ct. 522 (1927); Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 65 L. Ed. 349, 41 S. Ct. 172 (1921).

Congress then enacted HN5[] the Norris LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C. § 101 et seq., to expand the protection for labor unions from antitrust liability. The act prohibits injunctions against employees engaged in various [*1092] activities during a labor dispute, even where a claim is made of an unlawful combination or conspiracy. "The Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts combined to provide a comprehensive exemption from antitrust liability for union activity." Mid-America, 675 F.2d at 884. Even though the language of the Act does not explicitly exempt union activity from antitrust liability "it has been interpreted broadly as a statement of congressional policy that the courts must not use the antitrust laws as a vehicle to interfere in labor disputes." Id.

Labor unions, however, do not have absolute immunity from liability under the antitrust laws; they remain accountable [22] for certain anticompetitive activities. Two distinct exemptions to the antitrust laws exist. Mid-America, 675 F.2d at 884. The first is a statutory exemption based on various sections of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts, and the second is a nonstatutory exemption based on an "accommodation between the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the NLRA and the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets." Connell Constr. Co. v. Plumbers & Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 622, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1975).

We turn, therefore, to an examination of each of these exemptions to demonstrate that neither applies to activity allegedly engaged in by defendant Local 196.

(a) The Statutory Labor Exemption

The defendant objects to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the defendant, Local 196, is not entitled the statutory exemption to the antitrust law. Because the Court finds that the Complaint adequately pleads conduct outside the statutory exemption we overrule the objections and adopt the findings of the Magistrate Judge.

The Supreme Court, in United States v. Hutcheson, held [23] that HN6[] whether a labor union has violated the antitrust laws can be determined only by reading the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act and the Norris LaGuardia Act together, "as a harmonizing text of outlawry of labor conduct." 312 U.S. 219, 231, 61 S. Ct. 463, 85 L. Ed. 788 (1941). Pursuant to this reading the court announced a broad rule for what has come to be known as the statutory exemption to the antitrust laws:

> So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit under § 20 are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.

Id. at 232. So long as a union acts unilaterally and in its own interest, therefore, it will not be liable for resulting restraints on trade. Connell, 421 U.S. at 623. However, once a union conspires with employers to restrain trade, that union forfeits its statutory exemption because the purpose of the exemption is not to "immunize labor unions who aid and abet [businessmen] in violating [24] the Sherman Act." Allen Bradley, 325 U.S. at 810-11. Furthermore, a plaintiff's complaint alleges conduct outside this exemption where the complaint shows the union did not act in its own self-interest or when "a conspiracy between the union and a non-labor entity was properly pled." Mid-America, 675 F.2d at 886.

Defendant Local 196 here contends that the Complaint is inadequate on two grounds. First, defendant argues that the Complaint fails to properly plead a conspiracy, and objects to the Magistrate Judge's finding that a conspiracy did exist. As to this objection, the court believes that plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts to show a conspiracy, and accordingly sustains the conclusions of the Magistrate Judge.

First, all the parties to this alleged conspiracy had a motive to force plaintiff out of the market. Trench-it was a competitor of the plaintiff, and had been losing Com Ed bids to Ehredt. (Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, at p. 12, P 33.) If the campaign to eliminate Ehredt from the marketplace was successful, Trench-it would receive more jobs.

Com Ed also had a financial interest in putting Ehredt [25] out of business. When [*1093] Trench-it received bids from Com Ed, it allegedly gave kickbacks to Com Ed employees. Id. at P 34. Ehredt had refused to pay these kickbacks. Additionally, a Com Ed foreman had a financial investment in excavation equipment used by Trench-it. Id. at p. 10, P 27. Ehredt's elimination from the marketplace served to protect his investment.

Similarly, Local 196 wanted to corner the market on Com Ed business in the far north region. They could only do so by forcing Ehredt to adopt a collective bargaining agreement with 196 or force them out of business.

Furthermore, several facts show that the parties acted on their motivations and formed a conspiracy to eliminate Ehredt from the market place. When Ehredt first began to receive Com Ed jobs, Trench-it expressed concern to Local 196 and to Com Ed. It complained that Ehredt was able to bid lower because it paid their employees lower wages. Shortly after Trench-it spoke to Local 196, the union began to pressure Ehredt to abandon Local 336 and sign a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196.

During the campaign to force plaintiff to sign with Local 196, agents of the defendant union were able to follow [26] plaintiff's employees from jobsite to jobsite. These men were apparently able to follow plaintiff only with the help of Com Ed. The location of these jobsites was available through a routing sheet prepared by Com Ed, which Com Ed allegedly improperly disclosed to the Union. Id. at p. 14, P 39.

Plaintiff was also told by the business representative of Local 196 that "there was a Board member of Com Ed who assisted him in getting rid of non-union excavation and cable installation contractors or get them into Local 196." Id. at p. 15, P 40. Laid-off employees of Trench-it and agents of Local 196 also allegedly communicated threats of property damage and other harm to the plaintiff through Com Ed supervisors.

Finally, plaintiff agreed to not oppose Local 196 as the collective bargaining agent of its employees. Plaintiff placed Local 196 on the ballot during elections. In exchange, Local 196 agreed to help Ehredt renegotiate its contract with Com Ed to compensate for the significantly higher wage scale Local 196 would impose. Com Ed also led plaintiff to believe renegotiation was possible. However, once Local 196 was certified as the collective bargaining agent of Ehredt's employees, [27] Com Ed refused to make any changes to the original contract price. The court believes these allegations suffice to show that plaintiff can prove a claim which would entitle it to relief based on a conspiracy between Local 196, Trench-it and Com Ed.

Defendant also contends that it is entitled to the statutory exemption because the conduct in which it engaged was part of an organizing campaign and collective bargaining agreement. Defendant argues that no conspiracy exists because it was simply imposing its areawide wage scale. The court disagrees. HN7[] While a union is free to unilaterally impose the same wage scale on every employer with whom it bargains, and it need not be concerned that the wages it is imposing will be too high for certain employers to pay, "the union loses the antitrust labor exemption . . . when it is clearly shown that it has agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units." Mid-America, 675 F.2d at 887. However, when such a collective bargaining agreement is part of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, the plaintiff must show that the union conspired with a non-labor entity to impose the wage [28] scale on the plaintiff; that the non-labor entity is in a position to directly benefit from the resulting restraint on trade; and that the union and non-labor groups share an anti-competitive purpose. 675 F.2d at 889.

Plaintiff's Amended Complaint has met these requirements. As was stated above, the Complaint contains sufficient factual allegations that Local 196, Trench-it and Com Ed conspired to force the plaintiff into a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196 at Local 196's standard wage scale. This coercion was designed to lock plaintiff into a wage scale significantly higher than the wages plaintiff was paying at the time, and ultimately causing Ehredt to breach its contract [*1094] with Com Ed due to an unplanned increase in employee wages. Local 196 benefited because they were able to take over all the Com Ed trenching and excavation business on the north side. Trench-it and employees of Com Ed both were in a position to benefit financially from Ehredt's elimination from the market place, as stated above. Finally, all three parties shared the anticompetitive purpose of eliminating Ehredt from the market place.

(b) The Non-Statutory Exemption

[29] The court also agrees with the Magistrate Judge's finding that Local 196's actions do not fall within the non-statutory exemption. HN8[] In order to "accommodate the congressional policy favoring free competition in business markets with the congressional policy favoring collective bargaining under the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq., certain union-employer agreements [are] accorded a limited nonstatutory exemption from antitrust sanctions." Mackey v. National Football League, 543 F.2d 606, 611-12 (8th Cir. 1976). The non-statutory exemption is designed to allow unions and employers freedom in the collective bargaining process. The exemption applies to those terms or conditions of a collective bargaining agreement which are intended to eliminate competition over wages or working conditions, and only indirectly restrain trade in the business market. Connell, 421 U.S. at 623; Mid-America, 675 F.2d at 892. Those agreements that are intended to restrain competition in the business market are not exempt. Mid-America, 675 F.2d at 892. [30]

The non-statutory exemption was not intended to protect the type of conspiracy allegedly entered into by Local 196, Trench-it, and Com Ed. This exemption was designed to protect the parties to a collective bargaining agreement from antitrust liability when they bargain for terms or conditions which indirectly restrain trade. In the case at bar the parties to the collective bargaining agreement are not the same parties to the conspiracy. Rather, Local 196, Trench-it and Com Ed have allegedly acted in concert to force a collective bargaining agreement upon Ehredt so that it could not compete with Trench-it. Far from trying to impose a better wage scale, Local 196 has sought to directly restrain the business market by eliminating a participant. Therefore, they are not entitled to the non-statutory exemption.

Thus, plaintiff has properly pled the elements of an antitrust action. Based on the allegations in the Complaint, defendant is not entitled to either the statutory or non-statutory exemption to the antitrust laws. We therefore sustain the finding of the Magistrate Judge that Count II of Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted. Defendant's [31] motion to dismiss Count II is denied.

B. Count III - Preemption of State Claims

Count III of plaintiff's First Amended Complaint alleges that defendant Local 196, together with Local 336, the International and Trench-it, tortiously interfered with plaintiff's right of contract and prospective advantage. This claim is based upon state tort law. In his Report the Magistrate Judge concluded that this state law claim was preempted by federal labor law and recommended that the claim be dismissed. The court agrees with this conclusion.

HN9[] When a state law or remedy interferes with federal labor policy or specific provisions of the NLRA, any state claims brought pursuant to that state law are preempted. The leading case on federal preemption of state claims involving labor-management disputes is San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775, 79 S. Ct. 773 (1959). In Garmon the court defined the situations when a state claim is preempted:

> When it is clear or may fairly be assumed that the activities which a State purports to regulate are protected by § 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, or constitute an unfair labor practice under § 8, . . . [or] [32] when an activity is arguably subject to § 7 or § 8 of the Act, the States as well as the federal courts must defer to the exclusive competence of the National Labor Relations Board. . . .

[*1095] 359 U.S. at 245. The first question must therefore be whether the actions complained of are subject to Board regulation. United Ass'n of Journeymen & Apprentices v. Borden, 373 U.S. 690, 694, 10 L. Ed. 2d 638, 83 S. Ct. 1423 (1963). If they are, then the state claim is preempted by federal labor law. Thus, we turn first to whether plaintiff's allegations are directed at conduct that is arguably prohibited by § 8 of the NLRA.

HN10[] In deciding whether the basis of a state law claim is arguably prohibited by the NLRA "the critical . . . is . . . whether the controversy presented to the state court is identical to . . . or different from . . . that which could have been, but was not, presented to the Labor Board." Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. San Diego County Dist. Council of Carpenters, 436 U.S. 180, 197, 56 L. Ed. 2d 209, 98 S. Ct. 1745 (1978). We think the allegations presented to this court in plaintiff's state tort claim are the same as an unfair labor practice claim brought pursuant [33] § 8(b)(4)(C) of the NLRA, 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4)(C). HN11[] That section states that it is an unfair labor practice to:

> threaten, coerce, or restrain any person . . . where . . . an object thereof is -
>
> > (C) forcing or requiring any employer to recognize or bargain with a particular labor organization as the representative of his employees if another labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 159 of this title;

In comparison, a claim for tortious interference with contract and prospective economic advantage must establish:

> a valid business relationship (not necessarily evidenced by an enforceable contract) or expectancy; knowledge of the relationship or expectancy on the part of the interferer; an intentional interference inducing or causing a breach or termination of the relationship or expectancy; and resultant damage to the party whose relationship or expectancy has been disrupted. The interest protected is the reasonable expectation of economic advantage.

Rock Falls v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 300 N.E.2d 331, 333, 13 Ill. App. 3d 359, (3d Dist. 1973); [34] See also Heying v. Simonaitis, 466 N.E.2d 1137, 1141-42, 126 Ill. App. 3d 157, , 81 Ill. Dec. 335 (1st Dist. 1984).

Plaintiff, thus, must prove the same set of facts to recover under the federal and state claims. Recovery under plaintiff's state claim is premised upon a finding by this court that Local 196 intentionally interfered with plaintiff's contract with Com Ed and that such interference caused plaintiff to breach its contract. In this regard, plaintiff points to several factors to show interference. Plaintiff alleges defendant Local 196 engaged in a "heavy-handed effort to convince the International president to force IBEW Local 336 to cancel Ehredt's contract with knowledge that Edison required Ehredt to be a union contractor and knowing that IBEW Local 196 was the only acceptable alternative union." (Plaintiff's Objection to the Magistrate Judge's Report, at p. 6). The essence of plaintiff's claim of interference is that Local 196 forced Ehredt, who already had a collective bargaining agreement with Local 336, to enter into a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196. The change from Local 336 to Local 196 resulted in a substantial [35] increase in wages that plaintiff was unable to pay due to a previous contractual agreement with Com Ed. Plaintiff was thereby forced to breach its contract with Com Ed.

An unfair labor practice claim brought pursuant to § 8(b)(4)(C) would also inquire into whether Local 196 actually engaged in conduct that forced Ehredt to enter into a collective bargaining agreement with defendant, despite an already existing agreement with Local 336. Although Local 336 had refused to bargain with Ehredt before Ehredt had entered into a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196, the defendant had waged its campaign to organize Ehredt long before the collective bargaining agreement between plaintiff and Local 336 was terminated. This campaign began in the early part of 1988, and escalated to violence in April of 1989. (Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, PP 38, 39.) Plaintiff's agreement with Local 336, however, was not terminated [*1096] until October 31, 1990 -- nearly two years after Local 196's coercive campaign had begun.

Under both federal labor and state tort law, it is essential for plaintiff to show that Local 196 improperly forced the termination of plaintiff's collective bargaining agreement [36] with local 336 and forced plaintiff to sign an agreement with local 196. Thus, the crucial issue to be litigated under either claim is the same. Therefore, jurisdiction must first lie with the NLRB.

Defendant's conduct is also arguably protected by § 7 of the NLRA. Defendant Local 196's actions were part of an organizing campaign. HN12[] Organizing campaigns are protected activity under § 7. The NLRB could determine that the action defendant took did not amount to an unfair labor practice, but rather was part of a legitimate organizational campaign and as such is protected activity under § 7.

Plaintiff's state law claim is based on alleged conduct that is arguably concerted activity protected by § 7 and unfair labor practices prohibited by § 8. The proper tribunal to address these complaints is the National Labor Relations Board. Count III of plaintiff's Complaint is, therefore, preempted.

Plaintiff argues that it should be allowed to pursue this claim here because the tort of interference with the right of contract expresses an overriding state interest. The Supreme Court has recognized that HN13[] preemption may be inappropriate in cases involving conduct that "touches interests so deeply rooted [37] in local feeling and responsibility that . . . [it] could not infer that Congress had deprived the States of the power to act." Garmon, 359 U.S. at 244. However, these instances have been limited to cases involving "violence and imminent threats to the public order." 359 U.S. at 247. No such issue is involved in plaintiff's Complaint.

Although the Complaint does allege that acts of violence were part of defendant's campaign to force Ehredt to switch local unions, they do not seek recovery for any injuries or property damage as a result of those attacks. Rather, plaintiff's Complaint seeks compensation for economic loss caused by coercion into a collective bargaining agreement with Local 196. HN14[] "The interest protected by the tort of interference with the right of contract and prospective advantage] is the reasonable expectation of economic advantage." Rock Falls, 300 N.E.2d at 333, 13 Ill. App. 3d at __. The state does not have an overriding concern in regulating economic loss caused by labor disputes. Preemption is appropriate in this matter.

Finally, plaintiff argues that its [38] tort claim should not be preempted because it requests money damages for economic harm -- a remedy the NLRB is unable to provide. On the contrary, however, HN15[] the very fact that the remedies provided by the state and federal law are different demands, rather than prohibits, preemption. The conflict between state and federal law lies not only in the conduct to be regulated but also in the remedies provided. Garmon, 359 U.S. at 247. Congress has already determined what it believes to be the appropriate remedy for defendant's conduct. The plaintiff may not circumvent that remedy by seeking adjudication of its claim under the guise of a state tort claim. [2] Plaintiff's Objection to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation to dismiss Count III is overruled and the conclusion of the Report is adopted.

[39] III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the findings of the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation are accepted. The defendant's motion to dismiss Count II of Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint is denied. The Defendant's motion to dismiss Count III of Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint is granted.

Date: JUL 16 1993

JAMES H. ALESIA

United States District Judge

End of Document

[2] It should also be noted that pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 187 plaintiff may bring a claim for damages in the United States District Court against Local 196 for any violations of 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4) (1988).

Forsyth v. Humana, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Nevada

July 21, 1993, Decided ; July 21, 1993, Filed

CV-S-89-249-PMP (LRL)

Reporter

827 F. Supp. 1498 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10406 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,379; 17 Employee Benefits Cas. (BNA) 1439

MARY FORSYTH, MARRIETTA CADE; WILLIE ANDREWS; MARY LOU BUEHLER; HELEN STAVES; RANDOLPH BRATTON; and SEARLE AUTO GLASS, INC., doing business as BEST GLASS COMPANY, Plaintiffs, v. HUMANA, INC., a Delaware corporation; HUMANA HEALTH INSURANCE OF NEVADA, INC., a Nevada corporation; and DOES I through X, inclusive, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Partial summary judgment granted by, Motion denied by Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20148 (D. Nev., Jan. 28, 1994)

Partial summary judgment granted by, Motion granted by Cade v. Humana, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20147 (D. Nev., June 1, 1994)

Affirmed by, in part, Reversed by, in part, Remanded by Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 99 F.3d 1504, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 28869 (9th Cir. Nev., 1996)

Motion granted by Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12324 (D. Nev., Jan. 31, 2014)

Core Terms

Premium, discount, insureds, co-payments, damages, Payor, fiduciary duty, summary judgment motion, profits, antitrust, fiduciary, monopolization, acute care hospital, patients, breach of fiduciary duty, calculated, defraud, claim for breach, summary judgment, claim for relief, market power, insurance business, relevant market, competitors, mail, relevant time period, hospital service, plans, individual beneficiaries, insurance policy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Once the movant's burden is met by presenting evidence which, if uncontroverted, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden then shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Hearings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Hearings > Oral Arguments

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Memoranda of Law

HN3[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

If the party seeking summary judgment meets its burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, then summary judgment will be granted unless there is significant probative evidence tending to support the opponent's legal theory. Parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient. Likewise, legal memoranda and oral argument are not evidence and do not create issues of fact capable of defeating an otherwise valid motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

For purposes of summary judgment, a material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing versions of the truth.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes. After drawing inferences favorable to the respondent, summary judgment will be granted only if all reasonable inferences defeat the respondent's claims.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN6[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Extracontractual Damages

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation > General Overview

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Fiduciaries > General Overview

HN7*[] Governments, Fiduciaries

The substantive remedies afforded by the Employment Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109, are limited, and 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109 does not allow for the recovery of extra-contractual damages by individual beneficiaries. Even though ERISA requires plan fiduciaries to serve the interests of participants and beneficiaries, 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109 provides remedies for breach of fiduciary duties only on behalf of the plan, and not the individual beneficiary.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

HN8*[] ERISA, Civil Litigation

The remedies allowed under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(3) are limited, and 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(3) emphasizes the protection of the plan, not the direct protection of the beneficiaries.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

HN9*[] ERISA, Civil Litigation

A fair contextual reading of 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109 makes it abundantly clear that its draftsmen were primarily concerned with the possible misuse of plan assets, and with remedies that would protect the entire plan, rather than with the rights of an individual beneficiary. The entire text of 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109 demonstrates that Congress did not intend to authorize any relief except for the plan itself.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Fiduciaries > General Overview

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation > General Overview

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > General Overview

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN10*[] Governments, Fiduciaries

Under the Employment Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C.S. § 1001 et seq., an individual beneficiary may bring a fiduciary breach claim, but must do so for the benefit of the plan. An individual beneficiary may not pursue a fiduciary breach claim to recover benefits or remedies beyond those provided by a plan. Any recovery for a violation of 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 1109 and 1132(a)(2) must be on behalf of the plan as a whole, rather than inuring to individual beneficiaries. The fiduciary duty provisions in ERISA are primarily concerned with protecting the integrity of the plan, which in turn protects all beneficiaries, rather than remedying each wrong suffered by individual beneficiaries.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN11[] Governments, Fiduciaries

The United States Supreme Court has held that equitable relief under the Employment Retirement Income Security Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 1001 et seq., is limited to relief protecting the integrity of the plan as a whole and does not extend to individual plan participants.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

HN12[] Governments, Fiduciaries

The Employment Retirement Income Security Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 1001 et seq., grants no private right of action by a beneficiary qua beneficiary; rather it accords beneficiaries the right to sue on behalf of the entire plan if a fiduciary breaches the plan's terms.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Fiduciaries > General Overview

HN13[] Governments, Fiduciaries

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109(a).

Governments > Fiduciaries

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > Remedies

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Fiduciaries > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

HN14[] Governments, Fiduciaries

Under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(3), a beneficiary may seek other appropriate equitable relief to redress breaches of fiduciary duty or to enforce the provisions or terms of the plan.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Fiduciaries > General Overview

HN15[] Governments, Fiduciaries

Where there has been a breach of fiduciary duty, the Employment Retirement Income Security Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 1001 et seq., grants to the courts broad authority to fashion remedies for redressing the interests of participants and beneficiaries. Notwithstanding this, any loss or profit that is disgorged as a result of a breach of fiduciary duty must have a causal connection with the breach. Uncertainties in the determination of damages, however, should be resolved against the wrongdoer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to prevail on a claim of monopolization under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. To establish a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim for an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Both market definition and market power are essentially questions of fact, whereas questions of whether specific conduct is anti-competitive or whether a party has standing to assert a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, are questions of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Although prior Ninth Circuit law has held that a detailed market analysis is not uniformly fatal to a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., in order to avoid such an analysis a plaintiff must be able to demonstrate that the anti-competitive acts alleged actually resulted in detrimental effects on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN18[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The United States Supreme Court has held that an inquiry into market definition and market power is a prerequisite for a claim of attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Even though courts have allowed proof of excessive profits to be used as evidence of market power, such proof may be misleading and subject to various interpretations. As such, citing excessive profits without a more detailed analysis of the meaning of such profits is unsatisfactory proof of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN20[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, defining the relevant market is indispensable to a monopolization claim. A market is typically defined as the pool of goods or services that qualify as economic substitutes because they enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand. The determination of a market usually requires an inquiry into the nature of the product and the geographic areas of effective competition. For antitrust purposes, defining the product market involves the identification of the field of competition; the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business, while a geographic market is an area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply. Finally, the plaintiff has the burden of proving the scope of the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN21[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

For antitrust purposes, the scope of the relevant market is not governed by the presence of a price differential between competing products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN22[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

For purposes of a monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, once a relevant market is established, the inquiry shifts to whether the alleged monopolist exercised or had the potential to exercise market power. Although no single factor has been held determinative, the evaluation of market power usually depends on an evaluation of market share and barriers to entry. A helpful framework for evaluating market share that has been used repeatedly by courts dictates that a 90 percent market share is enough to constitute a monopoly, a 60 percent market share is doubtful, and certainly 33 percent is not. In addition, declining market share may reflect the absence of market power. Output as opposed to capacity is a more accurate measure of market share, and excess capacity, if it can be reasonably be determined, may limit the exercise of market power.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN23[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Liability pursuant to 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) requires a plaintiff to demonstrate (1) the conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. "Racketeering activity" is any act indictable under various provisions of Title 18 of the United States Code, see 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961, and includes the predicate acts of mail fraud and wire fraud pursuant to 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1341, 1343.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN24[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

For purposes of the predicate acts required for a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, in order to commit mail fraud under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341, plaintiffs must demonstrate that: (1) the defendants formed a scheme or artifice to defraud: (2) the defendants used the United States mails or caused a use of the United States mails in furtherance of the scheme; and (3) the defendants did so with the specific intent to deceive or defraud. Similarly, in order to commit wire fraud pursuant to 18 U.S.C.S. § 1343, plaintiffs must show: (1) the formation of a scheme or artifice to defraud; (2) the use of the United States wires or causing a use of the United States wires in furtherance of the scheme; and (3) specific intent to deceive or defraud.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Elements

Governments > Fiduciaries

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN25[] Wire Fraud, Elements

Under 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1341, 1343, fraud refers to (1) a false representation (2) in reference to a material fact (3) made with knowledge of its falsity (4) and with the intent to deceive. A failure to disclose or concealment may also serve a basis for a fraudulent scheme under mail and wire fraud statutes; however, such nondisclosure must arise from a failure to comply with an independent statutory or fiduciary duty.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN26[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

In determining whether defendants satisfy the intent requirement of the mail and wire fraud statutes (18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1341, 1343), as predicate acts for a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, plaintiffs must demonstrate that the fraud was active and not merely constructive. Specific intent may be shown by examining the scheme to determine whether it was reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN27[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

In order to maintain a cause under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, the plaintiff must show not only that the defendant's violation was a but for cause of his injury, but that it was the proximate cause as well. This requires that there must be a direct relationship between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. One principle underlying this requirement is that the less direct the injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to the violation, as distinct from other, independent factors.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN28[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Not all injuries are compensable under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, but rather only those which are proven by a concrete financial loss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN29[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN30[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

In order to determine if the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b), precludes application of a particular federal statute, a court must apply the following four part test: (1) is the federal statute one which specifically relates to the business of insurance; (2) does the complained of activity constitute the business of insurance; (3) has the state enacted laws for the purpose of regulating the complained of activity; and (4) would the application of the federal statute invalidate, impair, or supersede the state legislation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN31[] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

For purposes of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1012(b), it is not necessary that a state have a specific statute banning a particular practice. The inquiry is whether the state involved has adopted a regulatory scheme which possesses jurisdiction over the challenged activity.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiffs: J. Randall Jones, John Field, JONES, JONES, CLOSE & BROWN, 700 Valley Bank Plaza, 300 S. 4th St., Las Vegas, NV 89101-6026. Will Kemp, HARRISON KEMP, CHARTERED, 600 Bank of America Plaza, 300 S. 4th Street, Las Vegas, NV 89101-6026. Stanley M. Chesley, WAITE, SCHNEIDER, BAYLESS & chelley, L.P.A., 1513 Central Trust Tower, Fourth & Vine Streets, Cincinnati, Ohio 45202. John J. Cummings, Richard M. Martin, Jr., W.B. Markovitis, CUMMINGS, CUMMINGS & DUDENHEFER, 416 Gravier St., New Orleans, LA 70130. Wendell H. Gauthier, GAUTHIER & MURPHY, 3500 N. Hullen St., Metairie, Louisiana, 70002. B. Robert Blakey, Notre Dame Law School, Notre Dame, Indiana 46556.

For Defendants: Dennis Kennedy, Louis Garfinkel, LIONEL SAWYER & COLLINS, 300 S. 4th St., Ste. 1700, Las Vegas, NV 89101. Mark Biros, Joseph E. Casson, Michael F. Moses, Thomas H. Brock, Burton J. Fishman, Lisolette Mitz, PROSKAUER ROSE GOETZ & MENDELSON, 1233 20th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036-2396. Robert Eccles, O'NELVENY & MYERS, 555 13th St., N.W., Ste. 500 West, Washington, D.C. 20004.

Judges: PRO

Opinion by: PHILIP M. PRO

Opinion

[*1501] MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs are employers and employees who contracted for health insurance, [2] through employee benefit plans, with Defendant Humana Health Insurance of Nevada, Inc. ("Humana Insurance"), during the period 1985 to 1988. One group of Plaintiffs used the health care services of Humana Hospital-Sunrise ("Sunrise Hospital"), an acute care facility located in Las Vegas, Nevada, which is owned and operated by Defendant Humana, Inc. ("Humana"), and a Participating Hospital under the insurance agreements. The insurance agreements required those insured with Humana Insurance to pay all expenses up to the designated deductible amount, and 20% of the expenses beyond that, with the insurance company to pay the other 80%. The liability of an insured had a cap called a "personal expense limit" which was the maximum the insured would have to pay in any given year, regardless of the total health care expenses.

In 1984, Humana Insurance and Sunrise Hospital entered into an agreement whereby Humana Insurance would pay Sunrise Hospital a discounted amount for that portion of the hospital charges for which it was responsible. However, the portion of the charges paid by the insureds was not discounted but was still based on the usual and customary rates. Plaintiffs assert that [3] Humana Insurance failed to pass along the discounts it had arranged for itself to its insureds either in the form of reduced premiums or reduced co-payments.

Previous Orders of this Court have granted Plaintiffs' Motions for Class Certification, thereby permitting both a Premium Payor Class and a Co-Payor Class to maintain this action. By their Second Amended Complaint (#370), filed August 12, 1991, Plaintiffs assert three claims for relief. Plaintiffs' First Claim for Relief is brought by the Co-Payor Class which consists of employees who obtained health insurance benefits under an employee benefit plan as defined under the Employment Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), 29 U.S.C. § 1001, et seq. There Plaintiffs allege that Defendants breached fiduciary duties owed to the Co-Payor Class under ERISA; engaged in transactions prohibited by ERISA; and retained excessive compensation. Plaintiffs' Second Claim for Relief alleges a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 and is brought on behalf of the Co-Payor Class and Premium Payor Class, which consists of individuals or entities paying all [4] or a portion of the Humana-Insurance premiums during the period 1985 to 1988. Plaintiffs' Third Claim for Relief, brought on behalf of both the Co-Payor Class and Premium Payor Class, alleges that Defendants engaged in a scheme to defraud in violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968.

Before the Court is a Motion for Summary Judgment (#804), filed on June 22, 1993, by [*1502] Defendants Humana and Humana Insurance. On July 7, 1992, Defendants filed a Correction (#808). Plaintiffs filed their Opposition (#820) on August 7, 1992, which was followed by an Errata (#822) filed on August 12, 1992. Defendants filed their Reply (#841) accompanied by a Supplemental Affidavit (#842) on October 19, 1992.

Additionally, the parties have filed the following supplementary motions:

(1) supplement to Plaintiffs' Opposition (#834), filed on September 30, 1992.

(2) Second supplement to Plaintiffs' Opposition (#849), filed on November 16, 1992.

(3) Defendants' Supplemental Memorandum (#868), filed on February 22, 1993. Plaintiffs filed a Third Supplement and Opposition (#890) on May 17, 1993. On June 2, 1993, Defendants [5] filed a Supplemental Memorandum (#895) in response.
(4) Defendants' Second Supplemental Memorandum (#891), filed on May 21, 1993.
(5) Plaintiffs' Fourth Supplement to Opposition (#896), filed on June 8, 1993. Defendants filed a Response (#909), on July 1, 1993.
(6) Defendants' Third Supplemental Memorandum (#901), filed on June 23, 1993. Plaintiffs filed a Response to Defendants' Second and Third Supplemental Memoranda (#908) on July 1, 1993.
(7) Plaintiffs' Response to (#895) and Fifth Supplement to Opposition (#902), filed on June 25, 1993.
(8) Defendants' Supplemental Memorandum of Points and Authorities (#903), filed on June 29, 1993.
(9) Defendants' Fourth Supplemental Memorandum (#910), filed on July 2, 1993.

On July 7, 1993, this Court heard oral argument on Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment and its progeny.

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter [6] of law.

HN2[] The party moving for summary judgment has the initial burden of showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 (1970); Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 883 (9th Cir. 1982). Once the movant's burden is met by presenting evidence which, if uncontroverted, would entitle the movant to a directed verdict at trial, the burden then shifts to the respondent to set forth specific facts demonstrating that there is a genuine issue for trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). If the factual context makes the respondent's claim implausible, that party must come forward with more persuasive evidence than would otherwise be necessary to show that there is a genuine issue for trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); California Arch. Bldg. Prods. v. Franciscan Ceramics, 818 F.2d 1466, 1468 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. [7] denied, 484 U.S. 1006, 98 L. Ed. 2d 650, 108 S. Ct. 698 (1988).

HN3[] If the party seeking summary judgment meets this burden, then summary judgment will be granted unless there is significant probative evidence tending to support the opponent's legal theory. First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 290, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 1593, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968); Commodity Futures Trading Commission v. Savage, 611 F.2d 270 (9th Cir. 1979). Parties seeking to defeat summary judgment cannot stand on their pleadings once the movant has submitted affidavits or other similar materials. Affidavits that do not affirmatively demonstrate personal knowledge are insufficient. British Airways Bd. v. Boeing Co., 585 F.2d 946, 952 (9th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 981, 60 L. Ed. 2d 241, 99 S. Ct. 1790 (1979). Likewise, "legal memoranda and oral argument are not evidence and do not create issues of fact [*1503] capable of defeating an otherwise valid motion for summary judgment." Id.

HN4[] A material issue of fact is one that affects the outcome of the litigation and requires a trial to resolve the differing [8] versions of the truth. See Admiralty Fund v. Hugh Johnson & Co., 677 F.2d 1301, 1305-06 (9th Cir. 1982); Admiralty Fund v. Jones, 677 F.2d 1289, 1293 (9th Cir. 1982).

HN5[] All facts and inferences drawn must be viewed in the light most favorable to the responding party when determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists for summary judgment purposes. Poller v. CBS, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962). After drawing inferences favorable to the respondent, summary judgment will be granted only if all reasonable inferences defeat the respondent's claims. SEC v. Seaboard Corp., 677 F.2d 1297, 1298 (9th Cir. 1982).

The trilogy of Supreme Court cases cited above establishes that HN6[] "summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed 'to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.'" Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 327, quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1). See also Avia Group Int'l, Inc. v. L.A. Gear Cal., 853 F.2d 1557, 1560 (Fed. Cir. 1988). [9]

II. ERISA

A. Facts & Procedural History

In their First Claim for Relief, Plaintiffs' Co-Payor Class seeks approximately $ 85 million in damages against Defendant Humana Insurance for violation of its fiduciary duties under ERISA.

At the heart of this entire case is a provision within the Humana Care Plus Policy under which members of the Co-Payor Class were insured. This provision states that the employee insured would pay 20% of all covered charges incurred while in a hospital up to a certain amount (usually $ 5,000), and that Humana Insurance would be responsible for the remaining 80%. See Opposition (#820), Exhibit 85 at 7-1 (Humana Insurance master group health insurance policy HCP-84-NV-1). [1] From 1984 to 1988, Humana Insurance obtained substantial discounts, allegedly between 40% and 96%, from Sunrise for services rendered to the insureds in the Co-Payor Class. Errata (#822) at 49-50, Exhibit #39; Opposition (#820), Exhibits 38, 40. Instead of sharing these discounts with the insureds by reducing the amount of co-payments due, Humana Insurance only applied the discount to the amount for which they would have been responsible under the policy. Motion for Summary [10] Judgment (#804) at 10-12.

Based on these actions, the Co-Payor Class asserts that Humana Insurance breached several of its fiduciary duties under ERISA including:

> (1) Humana Insurance engaged in a transaction involving the plan on behalf of a party, Sunrise, whose interests were adverse to those of the health benefits plans and/or its participants or beneficiaries in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 1106(b)(2);
>
> (2) Humana Insurance dealt with plan assets in its own interest or for its own account by erroneously interpreting the individual insurance contracts as requiring co-payments based on gross charges and effectuating the co-payment billings through contract administration in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 1106 [11] (b)(1);
>
> (3) Humana Insurance received consideration (e.g. the discounts) from Sunrise involving the assets of the plan in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 1106(b)(3);
> (4) Humana Insurance did not act in the sole interest of the insureds in interpreting the insurance contracts in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 1104(1)(A)(i);
>
> (5) Humana Insurance failed to discharge its duties with respect to the plan in accordance with the documents and instruments [*1504] governing the plan in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 1104(1)(D).

See Errata (#822) at 173-193.

On September 26, 1989, this Court denied Defendant Humana Insurance's Motion to Dismiss (#13) the Co-Payor Class' claim for breach of fiduciary duty. In denying Humana Insurance's Motion, this Court held, citing Sixty-Five Security Plan v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield, 583 F. Supp. 380, 387 (S.D.N.Y. 1984), aff'd on reh'g, 588 F. Supp. 119 (1984), that given the discretion of Humana Insurance to negotiate reimbursement rates on behalf of the health benefit plans, Humana Insurance should [12] be considered a fiduciary under ERISA. Order (#79) at 9. This Court further held that the plain meaning of the contract language indicated that the insureds should have paid 20% of the net hospital charge and not the gross charge, and consequently, by failing to distribute the negotiated discount among the Co-Payor Class, Humana Insurance may have violated its fiduciary duties. Id. at 10. Finally, this Court found that Humana Insurance's failure to reduce its insurance premiums did not constitute a breach of fiduciary duty and that the establishment of co-payment rates was distinguishable from the fiduciary duties imposed in the approval or denial of insurance claims. Id. at 6-9, 10.

---

[1] Accordingly, in addition to any premiums which were paid to Humana Insurance by the employer or employee, the employee insured would ultimately be responsible for up to $ 1,000 (20% of $ 5,000) before Humana would absorb 100% of covered hospital charges. Errata (#822) at 123-125.

On July 9, 1991, this Court entered a second Order (#364) which again refused to dismiss the Co-Payor Class' claim for breach of fiduciary duties under ERISA. In the Order, this Court reaffirmed its holding that Humana Insurance was a fiduciary under Sixty-Five Security Plan and acknowledged that the Co-Payor Class was also asserting that Humana Insurance engaged in prohibited transactions in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 1106(b). Order (#364) at 4. [13] This Court went on to hold that Plaintiffs were not asserting a claim for benefits [2], but instead were "seeking recovery for having overpaid hospital stays, because Humana Insurance as fiduciary should have acted in their interest and assured that Plaintiffs were not paying based on a 'fraudulent' rate." Id. at 6. In addition, in rejecting Humana Insurance's argument that Plaintiffs could not assert a claim for breach of fiduciary relief in their individual capacity, this Court found that:

> This case presents a unique situation in that the whole plan was affected by the alleged breach by Humana Insurance, but there was only monetary harm to individual participants and beneficiaries if and when they were required to pay copayments. The only meaningful remedy is recovery by these individual Plaintiffs, and the provisions of § 1132(a)(3) permit such recovery.

Id. at 14. [3]

[14] In support of the instant Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiffs' ERISA claim, Defendant Humana Insurance advances three alternative arguments: (1) Plaintiffs are precluded from bringing a claim for breach of fiduciary duty since they are seeking relief to benefit only themselves (e.g., the Co-Payor Class) and not the plan as a whole [4]; (2) Humana Insurance did not act as a fiduciary in entering into the discount arrangement with Sunrise; and (3) if a claim for breach of fiduciary duty is allowed, monetary relief should be limited to recovery of the allegedly excessive coinsurance payments. [*1505] Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 14-35.

[15] Plaintiffs respond that: (1) this Court has already correctly ruled that regardless of the fact that only the Co-Payor Class was financially injured by Humana Insurance's discounting scheme, since all the insureds were "affected" by the scheme, the Co-Payor Class may properly pursue a constructive trust for Humana Insurance's alleged violations of fiduciary duty; (2) this Court correctly ruled that Humana Insurance was rendered a fiduciary by negotiating a discount with Humana Hospital Sunrise since such an act constituted discretion in the administration of a plan; and (3) under ERISA, damages for Humana Insurance's alleged breach of fiduciary duty should be measured by the sum of the total discount received by Humana Insurance from Sunrise and not simply the percentage of the discount that Humana Insurance should have shared under the terms of the insurance contract.

B. Discussion

1. May the Co-Payor Class Assert a Claim for Breach of Fiduciary Duty?

---

[2] In the Order, this Court defined a "claim for benefits" as a situation where "an insured puts in a claim and the insurance company denies it." Order (#364) at 6.

[3] In so doing this Court primarily relied upon a broad interpretation of Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Union v. Murdock, 861 F.2d 1406 (9th Cir. 1988) and distinguished the holdings of Massachusetts Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Russell, 473 U.S. 134, 87 L. Ed. 2d 96, 105 S. Ct. 3085 (1985) and Sokol v. Bernstein, 803 F.2d 532 (9th Cir. 1986).

[4] Defendant Humana Insurance claims that the total number of insureds who had a co-payment obligation to Humana Hospital Sunrise as a percentage of the number of total insureds was 11.68% (16,412/140,487), whereas the total number of insureds whose co-payment obligation would have declined if their coinsurance was calculated on the discounted amount as a percentage of the number of total insureds was 9.54% (13,049/140,487). Plaintiffs state that the 9.54% is not supported by the evidence, but do concede that not all employees covered under the various health plans were hospitalized at Humana Hospital Sunrise. Opposition (#820), Exhibit 93; Errata (#822) at 207, n. 404.

Notwithstanding this Court's Order (#364) of July 9, 1991, Humana Insurance once again asserts that the Co-Payor Class may not pursue its claims for breach of fiduciary duty, as the class seeks monetary relief on behalf [16] of themselves as individuals and not on behalf of their respective employee benefit plans. In support of its position, Humana Insurance cites two recent Ninth circuit cases, Horan v. Kaiser Steel Retirement Plan, 947 F.2d 1412 (9th Cir. 1991) and Williams v. Caterpillar, Inc., 944 F.2d 658 (9th Cir 1991), as new authority upon which this Court should rely to reverse its earlier decision. Although it does not appear that either of these cases charts new waters in the rough seas of ERISA interpretation, these decisions do present a forceful argument for reconsidering this Court's earlier interpretation of Russell, Sokol, and Murdock. See Order (#364) at 7-14.

To begin, this Court reaffirms its earlier interpretation of Russell to the effect that HN7[] the substantive remedies afforded by 29 U.S.C. § 1109 are limited, and that § 1109 does not allow for the recovery of extra-contractual damages by individual beneficiaries. See Order (#364) at 8-9; Russell, 473 U.S. at 142-144. In coming to this conclusion, the Supreme Court in Russell specifically [17] found that even though ERISA requires plan fiduciaries to serve the interests of participants and beneficiaries, § 1109 provides remedies for breach of fiduciary duties only on behalf of the plan, and not the individual beneficiary. [5] [18] Id. Subsequently, the Ninth Circuit adopted the reasoning used in Russell to foreclose the availability of extra-contractual damages under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(3). See Sokol, 803 F.2d at 534-537. In doing so, the Ninth Circuit emphasized, just as the Supreme Court did in Russell, that HN8[] the remedies allowed under § 1132(a)(3) are limited and that § 1132(a)(3) "emphasizes the protection of the plan, not the direct protection of the beneficiaries." Id. at 536-537. [6]

The two recent cases cited by Defendant Humana Insurance, Horan and Williams, restate the interpretation of Russell and Sokol summarized above. For example, in holding that Plaintiffs in Horan could not bring a claim for breach of fiduciary duty under § 1132(a)(3), the Ninth Circuit stated:

> HN10[] An individual beneficiary may bring a fiduciary breach claim, but must do so for the benefit of the plan. An individual beneficiary may not pursue a fiduciary breach [*1506] claim to recover benefits or remedies beyond those provided by a plan. Any recovery for a violation of sections 1109 and 1132(a)(2) must be on behalf of the plan as a whole, rather than inuring to individual beneficiaries. The Supreme Court reasoned the fiduciary duty provisions [19] in ERISA are primarily concerned with protecting the integrity of the plan, which in turn protects all beneficiaries, rather than remedying each wrong suffered by individual beneficiaries.
>
> We have extended the reasoning in Russell to section 1132(a)(3) which allows recovery of 'other appropriate equitable relief.' Section 1132(a)(3) also does not provide an action for an individual beneficiary to recover extra-contractual remedies. Under Russell and Sokol, the plaintiffs fail to present a fiduciary breach claim if the only remedy sought is for their own benefit, rather than for the benefit of the Plan as a whole.

---

[5] More specifically, the Supreme Court stated:

> HN9[] A fair contextual reading of (§ 1109) makes it abundantly clear that its draftsmen were primarily concerned with the possible misuse of plan assets, and with remedies that would protect the entire plan, rather than with the rights of an individual beneficiary. . . . The entire text of (§ 1109) persuades us that Congress did not intend to authorize any relief except for the plan itself.
>
> Russell, 473 U.S. at 142, 144 (emphasis added).

[6] This Court also recognizes that the position adopted by the Ninth Circuit in Sokol directly contradicts Justice William Brennan's interpretation of § 1132(a)(3) found in his concurring opinion in Russell. See Order (#364) at 9; Russell (Brennan, J., concurring) at 153-155; Sokol, 803 F.2d at 534-538.

Horan 947 F.2d at 1417-18 (citations omitted). Similarly, in Williams the Ninth Circuit recognized that HN11[] "the Supreme Court has held that equitable relief under ERISA is limited to relief protecting the integrity of the plan as a whole and does not extend to individual plan participants." Williams, 944 F.2d at 665.

In this Court's previous Order (#364) of July 9, 1991, it found that, based on Murdock and § 1132(a)(3), the only "meaningful remedy" in this case would be to allow the Co-Payor [20] Class to sue Humana Insurance for breach of fiduciary duty. See Order (#364) at 14. In light of the additional clarification yielded by the Horan and Williams, this Court now recognizes that this conclusion was incorrect.

First, it is undisputed that the members of the Co-Payor Class are seeking approximately $ 85 million in damages in their individual capacity for various breaches of fiduciary duty pursuant to § 1132(a)(3). As set forth in Sokol, Horan, and Williams, however, § 1132(a)(3) does not allow individual beneficiaries to sue for a breach of fiduciary duty on their own behalf. See Horan 947 F.2d at 1417-18; Williams, 944 F.2d at 665; Sokol, 803 F.2d at 536-537.

Second, this Court's previous reliance on Murdock as authority for allowing the Co-Payor Class to seek damages under § 1132(a)(3) must be acknowledged as tenuous. Although the Court in Murdock did allow plan beneficiaries (and not the plan itself) to benefit from a constructive trust funded with the ill-gotten profits of the plan administrator, the Court in Murdock also limited its ruling to [21] the "circumstances of this case." Murdock, 861 F.2d at 1417. These circumstances included the fact that (1) the ERISA plan which had been defrauded no longer existed, (2) under the terms of the plan (which were altered by the errant fiduciary) any damages paid to the plan would have simply reverted to the wrongdoer, and (3) the damages to be received for the breach of fiduciary duty were to be put into a constructive trust in favor of all plan participants. Id. at 1408-09, 1417.

Here, although Defendants' conduct as alleged by Plaintiffs is clearly questionable, the level of impropriety alleged is less severe than that which occurred in Murdock. [7] The injury in Murdock was directed primarily against the plan and not against particular beneficiaries, the various benefit plans purportedly affected by Humana Insurance's breach of fiduciary duty still exist, and, most importantly, this Court's prior Order (#364) would afford relief only to a select group of beneficiaries. Upon reconsideration and based on these distinctions, this Court finds that Murdock does not provide persuasive authority to support this [22] Court's earlier interpretation of § 1132(a)(3). [8]

[23] [*1507] Finally, this court also recognizes that a claim for breach of fiduciary duty is neither the only nor the most appropriate remedy for the wrongs asserted by the Co-Payor Class. After careful consideration of the facts and the injury alleged by the Co-Payor Class in this case, it is clear that the crux of the current dispute rests on the reasonableness of Humana Insurance's interpretation of the co-payment provision in the insurance contract. Such a claim is more appropriately brought pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B) which allows a beneficiary to seek benefits due under the terms of the plan. See e.g., Eaton v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Alabama, 681 F. Supp. 759, 760-62 (S.D. Ala. 1988). Accordingly, this Court finds that the cause of action provided by ERISA to

---

[7] In Murdock, the fiduciary used plan assets to further a "greenmail" scheme to benefit his own individual assets. After the scheme was successful (with both the plan and the fiduciary making substantial profits as a result), the fiduciary then amended the plan so that any excess funds would revert to the administrator. With the plan so changed, the fiduciary then paid all beneficiaries the value of their vested interests under the plan and retained all excess monies for himself (e.g. the profits made by the plan based on the use of its assets in the greenmail scheme). Murdock, 861 F.2d at 1408-1409.

[8] In the July 9, 1991 Order (#364), this Court also cited Call v. Sumitomo Bank, 881 F.2d 626, 631-32 (9th Cir. 1989) for the proposition that the Russell decision should not be narrowly construed. This Court now concludes that the language used for this proposition was dicta, and furthermore, that the Court in Call itself recognized that HN12[] "'ERISA grants no private right of action by a beneficiary qua beneficiary; rather it accords beneficiaries the right to sue on behalf of the entire plan if a fiduciary breaches the plan's terms.'" Id. at 632, n. 13 (citing Sokol). See also Murdock, 861 F.2d at 1417.

compensate the Co-Payor Class for the questionable conduct of Humana Insurance is a claim for benefits pursuant to § 1132(a)(1)(B) and not a claim for breach of fiduciary duty under § 1109 or § 1132(a)(3). [9]

[24] In sum, based on the holdings in Horan, Williams and Sokol, the limited precedential value of Murdock, and the availability of a more appropriate remedy pursuant to § 1132(a)(1)(B), this Court finds that the Co-Payor Class should not be allowed to pursue claims against Humana Insurance for breach of fiduciary duty. Accordingly, this Court hereby modifies its earlier Order (#364) of July 8, 1991, and will grant Humana Insurance's Motion for Summary Judgment as to the first claim for relief set forth in Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint (#370). Plaintiffs' Co-Payor Class will be permitted, however, to file a Third Amended Complaint seeking appropriate relief under § 1132(a)(1)(B).

2. Damages

This Court also finds that even if it were to allow Plaintiffs' Co-Payor Class to seek a claim for breach of fiduciary duty, Humana Insurance would still be entitled to partial summary judgment on the issue of damages.

Plaintiffs argue that "equity and poetic justice" require that Humana Insurance pay to the beneficiaries the entire discount it obtained from Sunrise. [10] Errata (#822) at 126. In contrast, Humana Insurance asserts that Plaintiffs' calculations are incorrect, [25] and that the appropriate measure of damages in this case would be simply a refund of the overcharged co-payment. See Reply (#841) at 22-27.

[26] Section 1109(a) provides that:

> [*1508] HN13[] Any person who is a fiduciary with respect to the plan who breaches any of the responsibilities, obligations, or duties imposed upon fiduciaries by this subchapter shall be personally liable to make good to such plan any losses to the plan resulting from such breach, and to restore to such plan any profits of such fiduciary which have been made through use of assets of the plan by the fiduciary, and shall be subject to such other equitable or remedial relief as the court may deem appropriate, including the removal of such fiduciary.

---

[9] This Court also recognizes that in its Motion for Summary Judgment (#804), Humana Insurance concedes that such a claim is proper, and has stipulated that to the extent the Co-Payor Class would be required to exhaust their administrative remedies prior to bringing a claim for benefits, such a requirement would be waived. See Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 22. In addition, this Court finds that to avoid any unjust enrichment on the part of Humana Insurance, Plaintiffs would be entitled individually to obtain prejudgment interest for any relief provided under § 1132(a)(1)(B). Rivera v. Benefit Trust Life Ins. Co., 921 F.2d 692 (7th Cir. 1991); Short v. Central States, S.E. & S.W. Areas Pension Fund, 729 F.2d 567, 576 (8th Cir. 1984); see also Blanton v. Anzalone, 760 F.2d 989, 992-93 (9th Cir. 1985).

[10] The following discussion regarding the proper manner in which to calculate damages is applicable to a theory of liability predicated upon both § 1132(a)(1)(B) and breach of fiduciary duty. Thus, although this Court has disallowed Plaintiffs' fiduciary duty claim, this ruling does not affect the measure of damages to be awarded to Plaintiffs. Using the example provided by Plaintiffs, assume the following:

> (1) Gross hospital charge = $ 5,000.
>
> (2) Amount paid by insured = $ 1,000 (.20 X $ 5,000).
>
> (3) Amount paid by Humana Insurance after taking an 89% discount = $ 550 (.89 X $ 5,000).
>
> (4) Total amount paid to Sunrise = $ 1,550 ($ 1,000 + $ 550).

Plaintiffs argue that appropriate damages for Humana Insurance's breach of fiduciary duty would be to require it to "disgorge the entire 'secret' discount" obtained by Humana Insurance from Sunrise. Based on their statement that "disgorgement of the unilateral discounts actually requires Humana Insurance to pay 80% of the gross charges," this amount would presumably be $ 3,450 ($ 4,000 (.80 X $ 5,000) - $ 550). See Errata (#822) at 123-26.

Similarly, HN14[] under § 1132(a)(3), a "beneficiary" may seek "other appropriate equitable relief" to redress breaches of fiduciary duty or to enforce the provisions or terms of the plan.

HN15[] "Where there has been a breach of fiduciary duty, ERISA grants to the Courts broad authority to fashion remedies for redressing the interests of participants and beneficiaries." Donovan v. Mazzola, 716 F.2d 1226, 1235 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1040, 79 L. Ed. 2d 169, 104 S. Ct. 704 (1984). Notwithstanding this, any loss or profit which is disgorged as a result of a breach of fiduciary duty [27] must have a causal connection with the breach. Leigh v. Engle, 727 F.2d 113, 137 (7th Cir. 1984). Uncertainties in the determination of damages, however, should be resolved against the wrongdoer. Kim v. Fujikawa, 871 F.2d 1427, 1431 (9th Cir. 1989); Leigh, 727 F.2d at 138-39.

Plaintiffs argue that they are entitled to the entire discount yielded by Sunrise as this amount constitutes the ill-gotten profits Humana Insurance obtained as a result of its breach. The difficulty with Plaintiffs' position, however, is that their calculation ignores the facts of the case and has no "causal connection" to the breach.

To illustrate this, assume, as Plaintiffs do, that on a gross hospital charge of $ 5,000, the insured beneficiary paid $ 1,000 in co-payments and Humana Insurance paid $ 550 on its obligation. The net amount received by Sunrise equals $ 1,550, and the net discount given by the hospital amounts to $ 3,450. [11] Assuming Plaintiffs are correct in their interpretation of the co-payment provision that the insureds were responsible for 20% of the net charges and not the gross charges, [12] [28] the amount which should have been paid by the insureds is $ 310 (.20 X $ 1,550). Therefore, since the insured paid $ 1,000 rather than the $ 310 which was required under the contract, the insured overpaid, and Humana Insurance profited, $ 690.

As illustrated above, it is clear that the amount asserted by Plaintiffs, or $ 3,450, is not a true measure of Humana Insurance's "ill-gotten profit." To adopt this figure would ignore the reality that the gross hospital charge ($ 5,000) was never in fact paid and would contradict Plaintiffs' interpretation of the co-pay provision that the 20/80 split should apply only on the net [29] hospital charge ($ 1,550). Accordingly, since Plaintiffs' measure of damages fails to establish a "causal connection" between the actual profits obtained by Humana Insurance and its breach of fiduciary duty, their calculation of damages must be rejected.

The proper measure of damages would be to restore the trust beneficiaries to the position they would have occupied but for the breach of trust. Donovan v. Bierwirth, 754 F.2d 1049, 1056 (2nd Cir. 1985). Applying this remedy to the facts of the present situation, Humana Insurance would be required to disgorge the amount of the discount which it should have paid under the proper interpretation of the co-pay provision. Using the hypothetical insured described by Plaintiffs, this would amount to $ 690. In so doing, the primary purpose of § 1109(a) to "undo" the harm caused by the breach of fiduciary duty would be realized. The interests of the beneficiaries would be furthered by removing the fiduciary's ill-gotten profits, and consistent with the holding in Leigh, only those profits which are "causally connected" with Humana Insurance's breach of fiduciary duty would [*1509] be disgorged. See Leigh, 727 F.2d at 138-139; [30] Bierwirth, 754 F.2d at 1056. [13]

---

[11] Note that the net discount given on the hospital bill is 69% ($ 3,450/$ 5,000) and the net discount given on the portion of the bill for which Humana Insurance was responsible is 86.25% ($ 3,450/$ 4,000) Accordingly, Plaintiffs' assertion that Humana Insurance received an 89% discount is inaccurate. See supra, n. 10; Errata (#822) at 124-125.

[12] See Second Amended Complaint (#370) at 8.

[13] In their Fourth Supplemental Opposition (#896) Plaintiffs argue that the recent United States Supreme Court case Mertens v. Hewitt Assocs., 124 L. Ed. 2d 161, 113 S. Ct. 2063, 61 U.S.L.W. 4510 (1993), stands for the proposition that this Court has the ability to create a trust composed of all discounts yielded by Sunrise to Humana Insurance as a remedy for Humana Insurance's alleged breach of fiduciary duty. This Court disagrees. The primary holding of Mertens is that "appropriate equitable relief" under § 1132(a)(3) does not permit compensatory losses for breaches of fiduciary duty, but rather only traditional forms of equitable relief such as injunction, mandamus, and restitution of ill-gotten profits. 61 U.S.L.W. at 4513-14. Such a holding does not aid Plaintiffs because, as discussed above, Plaintiffs' argument that the entire discount yielded by Sunrise to Humana Insurance are Humana Insurance's "ill-gotten profits" is erroneous.

[31] Accordingly, even if the Co-Payor Class could assert a claim for breach of fiduciary duty under the present facts, partial summary judgment would still be appropriate in this case with respect to Plaintiffs' excessively broad view of "ill-gotten profits." [14]

Leave to Amend Plaintiffs' Complaint

In their Opposition, Plaintiffs argue that in the "unlikely event that this Court completely reverses itself and rules that ERISA offers no remedy to Plaintiffs," this Court should allow Plaintiffs to reinstate their state law claims. Errata (#822) at 95, n.2. This Court disagrees.

First, under this Order, Plaintiffs are not without an ERISA remedy. The Co-Payor Class properly may file an Amended Complaint to state a claim under § 1132(a)(1)(B). See [32] supra at 17. Moreover, Plaintiffs' state law claims (which would apply to Plaintiffs' recent proposed claim under Nevada's RICO statute, N.R.S. § 207.470) are preempted by ERISA. See Order (#79) at 14-15; Olson v. General Dynamics Corp., 960 F.2d 1418, 1420-23 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 119 L. Ed. 2d 588, 112 S. Ct 2968 (1992); Kanne v. Connecticut General Life Ins. Co., 867 F.2d 489, 493-494 (9th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 492 U.S. 906, 106 L. Ed. 2d 566, 109 S. Ct. 3216 (1980).

Finally, as this Court has indicated previously, given the procedural history of this case which has seen three extensive rounds of dispositive motions, to allow the parties to address new theories of liability would strain the letter and spirit of Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

Accordingly, Plaintiffs' request to reinstate their prior state law claims was properly denied in this Court's October 13, 1992 Order (#840), and will not be reconsidered here.

III. ANTITRUST

A. Facts

Plaintiffs' Second Claim for Relief seeks approximately $ 181 million in damages against Defendants Humana and Humana Insurance for monopolization or attempted [33] monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. The "Antitrust Class" consists of individual employees and employers who allegedly paid excessive policy premiums and co-payments to Humana and Humana Insurance between 1985 and 1988. See Second Amended Complaint (#370) at 11, P 41; 17, P 51.

In their opposition, Plaintiffs argue that Humana and Humana Insurance monopolized or attempted to monopolize two independent submarkets including: (1) Clark County for-profit acute care hospitals; and (2) those hospitals used by Humana Insurance's insureds. Errata (#822) at 290-292.

As proof of this actual or attempted monopolization, the Antitrust Class alleges that during the relevant time period, Humana made "supracompetitive" or "monopoly" profits. [15] Plaintiffs maintain that with regard [*1510] to the for-profit acute care hospital submarket, Sunrise had "60% of the licensed beds" and derived "58.6% of the total gross patient revenues excluding medicare and medicaid patients" during the relevant time period. Id. at 305. Also, with [14] In light of this Court's findings regarding the Co-Payor Class' inability to pursue a claim for breach of fiduciary duty, this Court need not address Defendants' second argument that Humana Insurance was not a fiduciary when it negotiated the discount with Sunrise.

---

[15] In support of the assertion that Humana made "supracompetitive" profits, Plaintiffs allege that: (1) Nevada hospitals have the highest profit margins in the country and that Sunrise was the most profitable hospital in Nevada; (2) Sunrise was the most profitable hospital in the Humana organization; (3) Notwithstanding the fact that Sunrise's market share decreased during the relevant time period, its net operating revenue during this period increased; and (4) During 1988 when Nevada's cost containment statute was in place, Sunrise's operating margin was excessive compared to other hospitals nationally.

Errata (#822) at 278-81.

respect to the submarket of hospitals used by Humana Insurance's insureds, Plaintiffs allege that Sunrise enjoyed [34] an 80% share within this market. Id. [16]

Plaintiffs claim that in order to maintain or enhance its monopolistic position, Defendants acted anti-competitively [35] in several ways, including: (1) Humana refused to unbundle level III neonatal care to other health care plans; (2) Humana improperly diverted critical care patients to other hospitals; (3) Humana threatened to revoke physician office space if they did not admit patients to Sunrise; (4) the discount arrangement between Humana and Humana Insurance allowed Sunrise to understate hospital profits and avoid regulatory cost containment while misleading its insureds; (5) Humana threatened physicians and lawmakers who challenged its practices; and (6) Humana Insurance improperly tied use of its insurance policy with treatment at Sunrise. Errata (#822) at 283-290.

Finally, with regard to the antitrust injury suffered by the Antitrust Class, Plaintiffs allege that, as a result of Defendants' monopolistic activity, its members were forced to pay excessive co-payments and insurance premiums. Errata (#822) at 276-77, 308-311.

B. Discussion

1. Elements of a Section 2 Claim

HN16[] In order to prevail on a claim of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of [36] that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 363 (9th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149, 109 S. Ct. 180 (1988).

To establish a Section 2 claim for an attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must demonstrate four elements: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed toward accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury. McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988).

Both market definition and market power are essentially questions of fact, whereas questions of whether specific conduct is anti-competitive or whether a party has standing to assert a violation of the Sherman Act are questions of law. Austin v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Alabama, 903 F.2d 1385, 1387 (11th Cir. 1990); Oahu, 838 F.2d at 363, 368.

2. The Need for Market Analysis

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs argue that they need not formally define a "relevant market," [37] as Humana and Humana Insurance made "supracompetitive profits" during the relevant time period, and that this alone adequately demonstrates market power. Errata (#822) at 278-283. Such an argument is without merit.

First, by definition, any allegation that Defendants made "excessive" profits necessarily requires that Plaintiffs compare the profit performance of Humana with that of its competitors. See Kinter, Federal Antitrust Law, § 12.10, at 361 (1980). To argue, as Plaintiffs do, that Defendants' profits were "excessive" without knowing what the relevant market was or who its competitors were renders any antitrust analysis vacuous.

Second, HN17[] although prior Ninth Circuit law has held that a detailed market analysis is not uniformly fatal to a claim under the Sherman Act, in order to avoid such an analysis a plaintiff must be able to demonstrate that the anti-competitive acts alleged actually resulted in detrimental effects on competition. [*1511] Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991); Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1489 n.3 (9th Cir. 1991); [38] Thurman Industries, Inc. v. Pay

---

[16] The only evidence that Plaintiffs submit in support of this allegation of market share is a December 7, 1984 memo which states that "non-Humana usage was 19%" for Humana insurance insureds. Errata (#822) at 305; Exhibit 132.

' N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1373 (9th Cir. 1989); Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hospital, 861 F.2d 1440, 1448 (9th Cir. 1988) (no need for detailed market analysis where evidence clearly demonstrated competitive harm to patient market in Helena through increase of price and decrease in competition for anesthesiological services). In the present case, Plaintiffs rely on conclusory allegations that Defendants made excessive profits and do not explain how these profits have resulted from anti-competitive conduct. See Errata (#822) at 278-83. Such allegations clearly do not demonstrate a definable market or demonstrate market power which would obviate the need of a proper market analysis. [17]

[39] Finally, HN19[] even though courts have allowed proof of excessive profits to be used as evidence of market power, such proof may be misleading and subject to various interpretations. See Kinter, § 12.10; Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law,* § 507-516 (1978). As such, citing excessive profits without a more detailed analysis of the meaning of such profits is unsatisfactory proof of market power. Telerate Systems, Inc. v. Caro, 689 F. Supp. 221, 238 (S.D.N.Y. 1988).

Accordingly, since allegations of Defendants' "excessive" profits do not clearly demonstrate market power or detrimental effects on competition, Plaintiffs still have the burden of proving that Defendants exercised monopoly power within the boundaries of a properly defined competitive market.

3. Defining the Relevant Market

HN20[] Under Section 2, "defining the relevant market is indispensable to a monopolization claim." Thurman Industries, Inc., 875 F.2d at 1373. A market is typically defined as the pool of goods or services that qualify as economic substitutes because they enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand. Morgan, 924 F.2d at 1489; [40] Thurman, 875 F.2d at 1373. The determination of a market usually requires an inquiry into the nature of the product and the geographic areas of effective competition. Oahu, 838 F.2d at 364. "For antitrust purposes, defining the product market involves the identification of the field of competition; the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business," while "a geographic market is an area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply." Morgan, 924 F.2d at 1489-90; see also Bhan, 669 F. Supp. 998, 1018-19 (E.D.Cal. 1987), affirmed, 929 F.2d 1404 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991) (another consideration in defining product market may be production dimension which is the ability of competing firms to easily supply a good or service if one firm limits its output). Finally, the plaintiff has the burden of proving the scope of the relevant market. Id. at 1019. [41]

4. Plaintiffs' Relevant Markets

Plaintiffs offer two distinct markets which they contend Defendants monopolized or attempted to monopolize. These include: (1) those hospitals used by Humana Insurance insureds; and (2) all major for-profit acute care hospitals in Clark County, Nevada. Errata (#822) at 290-292. Plaintiffs, however, fail to present sufficient evidence to support these market definitions.

a. Hospitals Used by Humana Insurance Insureds

With regard to those hospitals used by Humana Insurance insureds, Plaintiffs offer no facts to support such a market definition other than to refer to a recent United [*1512] States Supreme Court decision Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992), and conclude that the hospitals used by Humana Insurance insureds should be considered a relevant submarket. Errata (#822) at 291-292; 304-305. Providing no factual or legal basis for such a submarket, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on this

---

[17] This Court also recognizes that the Ninth Circuit's decisions on this point have been called into doubt by the United States Supreme Court's recent decision, Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993). Spectrum Sports HN18[] held that an inquiry into market definition and market power is a prerequisite for a claim of attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 891-92. Even without regard to Spectrum Sports, however, it is clear that Plaintiffs have not satisfied Ninth Circuit precedent which limits the necessity of a market analysis.

aspect of Plaintiffs' Section 2 claims. See Seidenstein v. National Medical Enterprises, Inc., 769 F.2d 1100, 1106 (5th Cir. 1985); Drs. Steuer & Latham v. Nat. Med. Enterprises, 672 F. Supp. 1489, 1514 (D.S.C. 1987). [42] [18]

[43] b. Major For-Profit Acute Care Hospitals

The second market which Plaintiffs maintain Defendants monopolized or attempted to monopolize is that of major for-profit acute care hospitals in Clark County. This market allegedly consists of three hospitals, including Sunrise, valley Hospital ("Valley"), and Desert Springs Hospital ("Desert Springs"), and excludes Clark County's five remaining acute care hospitals, Boulder City Hospital ("Boulder City"), Community Hospital of North Las Vegas ("Community"), St. Rose De Lima Hospital ("St. Rose"), University Medical Center ("UMC"), and Women's Hospital ("Women's"). Errata (#822) at 291. In support of this market definition, Plaintiffs assert the following facts:

(1) Only Sunrise, Valley, Desert Springs, and University Medical Center ("UMC") have a comparable range of hospital services;

(2) Humana Insurance contracted with Boulder City, Community, and St. Rose to be preferred providers in its insurance program;

(3) Donald Stewart, Executive Director of Sunrise, when testifying before the Nevada Senate, stated that the smaller primary care hospitals in Clark County do not compete against the large hospitals; [19] [45]

(4) UMC did [44] not compete in the same market since it charged lower prices for its services and, being a non-profit county hospital, was perceived to be the "indigent" hospital in Clark County; [20]

Errata (#822) at 290-305.

In analyzing Plaintiffs' second alleged market, the primary issue to be decided is [*1513] whether Plaintiffs have presented sufficient evidence to support their allegation that the relevant service market for antitrust purposes

---

[18] Even if this Court were to accept the argument that the hospitals used by Humana Insurance insureds could constitute a relevant submarket, Plaintiffs fail to address: (1) the fact that Humana insureds were able to (and did) easily switch health insurance policies; (2) the fact that under the Humana policy, Plaintiffs were not precluded from choosing hospitals other than Sunrise; and (3) what other hospitals were competing within this market. See Reply (#841) at 72-75. Failure to address these facts clearly precludes finding the existence of Plaintiffs' proposed submarket.

Further, to the extent Plaintiffs rely on the Kodak decision to support a claim for an illegal tying arrangement between Humana and Humana Insurance, such a claim is without merit as the undisputed facts indicate that Humana Insurance never possessed sufficient market share to exercise market power within the group health insurance market. See Reply (#841), Exhibit N, Supplemental Affidavit of Barry C. Harris at 16-22 (Humana Insurance's share of Clark County residents covered by commercial health insurance was the following - 1984/4%, 1985/18%, 1986/24%, 1987/17%, 1988/15%); Barry v. Blue Cross of California, 805 F.2d 866, 870-74 (9th Cir. 1986); Ezpeleta v. Sisters of Mercy Hospital Corp., 800 F.2d 119, 121-122 (7th Cir. 1986).

[19] More specifically, on May 20, 1987, Donald Stewart testified:

> Large, full service hospitals with the latest in medical technology compete vigorously against each other for market share. However, smaller primary care hospitals, charging less and not providing as specialized or technical care have found a niche in the market. For the most part, the larger hospitals do not compete against them.
>
> That will change with this bill. By forcing a rollback of our billed charges and a deep reduction in revenue per admission, the state will prevent us from being the kind of hospital we want to be, and force us and other large hospitals into markets we currently avoid.
>
> If you limit our prices and our revenue per admission, the only response left to us in the market is to increase our volume. This will require expanding into markets we don't currently pursue and competing directly for the segments of the market that are the mainstay of smaller hospitals. . . . The marketplace is dynamic and changing. You cannot change that by legislation.

See Errata (#822), Exhibit 125, at 7-8.

[20] Plaintiffs also allege that physicians who practiced at Valley often did not admit its patients to UMC. See Errata (#822) at 299. Even if this fact is true, this Court fails to see how it helps to establish that UMC and Sunrise were not competitors.

consists of Clark County's major for-profit acute care hospitals. [21] This Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to do so.

[46] Plaintiffs' assertion that Boulder City, Community, St. Rose, and Women's are not competitors of Sunrise because they do not offer a comparable range of hospital services misconstrues the alleged injury in this case. Although this Court would agree with the proposition that certain hospital services under certain facts may constitute a relevant submarket, n22 throughout this litigation Plaintiffs have not claimed or offered any evidence regarding the monopolization of specific hospital services such as open heart surgery or renal dialysis, etc. See Errata (#822) at 297. The antitrust injury alleged by Plaintiffs in this case is the actual or attempted monopolization of the general acute care hospital market in Clark County. See Errata (#822) at 313-315. Given that Boulder City, Community, St. Rose, and Women's all offer a variety of hospital services within this market, these hospitals have the ability to deprive Sunrise of significant levels of business and therefore, must be considered to be competitors of Sunrise. See Reply (#841) at 99-105; Errata (#822) at 296-97; Morgan, 924 F.2d at 1489 (competitors are "the group or groups of sellers or producers [47] who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business"); Thurman, 875 F.2d at 1374-1377 (specialty stores selling same products as more comprehensive home centers within same competitive market); see also United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1284 (7th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 111 S. Ct. 295, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1990); Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 826 (3rd. Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985); United States v. Carilion Health Service, 707 F. Supp. 840, 847 (W.D. Va. 1989), aff'd, 892 F.2d 1042 (4th Cir. 1990). [21]

[48] Plaintiffs further allege that Boulder City, Community, and St. Rose are not competitors of Sunrise because these three hospitals are also preferred providers under the Humana insurance policy. Although it is true that to Humana Insurance insureds, having preferred provider status at Boulder City, Community, and St. Rose made these hospitals more competitive with Sunrise and with each other, the simple fact remains that the acute care hospital service market in Clark County does not serve only Humana Insurance insureds. See supra at n. 18 (Humana Insurance's percentage of Clark County residents with medical insurance was 15% to 24% during relevant time period). Accordingly, because these institutions competed for patients independent of any relationship which they might have had with Humana Insurance, any argument raised by Plaintiffs that these hospitals did not compete in the same market as Sunrise must be rejected. [23]

---

[21] There is really no dispute as to the geographic market in this case. As established by Defendants' experts, the consumers in the market in which Sunrise competes regularly seek care at hospitals throughout Clark County. See Motion for Summary Judgement (#804) at 64-72; Reply (#841) Exhibit N, Supplemental Affidavit of Barry Harris, at 6-8, 13-14; Exhibit Z, Supplemental Affidavit of Harold M. Ting, at 21. Although Plaintiffs raise the point that UMC may be in a different geographic area than Sunrise, such an assertion is easily refuted by the analysis presented by Defendants' experts, the fact that UMC is only 3 miles away from Sunrise, and the fact that Valley Hospital, which Plaintiffs assert is a competitor of Sunrise, is in the same "western" location and is further from Sunrise than UMC. See id.; Reply (#841), Exhibit N, Supplemental Affidavit of Harold M. Ting, at Exhibit 4.

[21] See, e.g., Morgan, 924 F.2d at 1488-89 (radiology services constitute relevant market); Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446-48 (patient anesthesiological services constitute relevant market.).

[23] Plaintiffs also rely on the affidavit of Victor Brewer and the testimony of Donald Stewart to support their argument that the smaller hospitals did not compete in the same market as Sunrise. With regard to Victor Brewer's affidavit, except for his statement regarding physician overlap between Community and Sunrise, the statements contained therein are conclusory allegations insufficient to raise a question of material fact. See Errata (#822), Exhibit 112. As to Donald Stewart's testimony, apart from being in the context of trying to sway the Nevada legislature from further regulating the hospital industry, the clear gravamen of these statements was that even though the larger hospitals in Clark County participated in the same marketplace as the smaller hospitals, they chose not to focus their marketing resources on pursuing this share of the market. See supra at n.19. Furthermore, to the extent that Stewart's statements could be inferred to support Plaintiffs' conclusion that Sunrise did not seek to compete vigorously against the smaller hospitals in Clark County, this statement alone does not raise a material question of fact with regard to whether these smaller hospitals acted as a competitive constraint on the same general acute care hospital services offered by the larger hospitals.

[49] [*1514] Finally, Plaintiffs argue that UMC should not be considered a competitor of Sunrise because UMC charged lower prices than other hospitals, and because it is a non-profit county hospital, UMC was perceived to be the "indigent" hospital. This Court finds such arguments unpersuasive.

First, the facts in this case reveal that during the relevant time period UMC offered a wide range of acute care hospital services and had contracts for these services with nearly all managed care plans in Nevada. See Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 74-76; Exhibit #120; Exhibit #122; Exhibit #123; Exhibit #125 at 51-60. In addition, UMC competed with Sunrise for beds under Certificate of Need applications, attempted to recruit doctors from other Las Vegas hospitals, upgraded its facilities and equipment, and advertised to improve its public image. Id. at 77-78; Exhibit #122; Exhibit #125 at 60-62; Exhibit #129; Exhibit #131; Exhibit #133; see also Supplemental Affidavit of Harold M. Ting (#842), Exhibit 8 (UMC's 1989-1990 marketing plan which identifies Sunrise as a competitor). Such factors clearly demonstrate that UMC was a significant competitor for patients in Clark County's acute care [50] hospital market.

With regard to Plaintiffs' pricing argument, as the Ninth Circuit has recognized before, HN21[] "the scope of the relevant market is not governed by the presence of a price differential between competing products." Twin City Sportserv., Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 512 F.2d 1264, 1274 (9th Cir. 1975). This is particularly so where, as here, the pricing for hospital services commonly is subject to discounting through third-party payors, and where other factors such as location, physician affiliation, and the perceived quality of the institution are more likely to affect competition than price. See Motion for Summary Judgment (#804), Exhibit #8, Affidavit of Harold M. Ting at 9; Exhibit #120, at 17. Although it is no doubt true that being perceived as an "indigent hospital" negatively affected UMC's ability to attract commercially-insured patients, the facts also clearly demonstrate that this did not deter UMC from actively pursuing and providing services to them. See supra at 34-35; Reply (#841), Supplemental Affidavit of Barry C. Harris, Exhibit N, at 14-16; Supplemental Affidavit of Harold M. Ting, Exhibit Z, at 17-21; see also [51] Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. at 1284-85 (N.D. Ill. 1990); Nonprofit Hospital Mergers: Proceed With Caution, 20 Cumb. L. Rev. 719, 720-28 (1989-90) (describing generally the market forces which cause nonprofit hospitals to compete with for-profit hospitals). To argue that UMC, the second largest acute care hospital in Clark County, was entirely removed from the competitive market for hospital services because it was perceived by some as a "county hospital" which also served indigent patients simply ignores the competitive reality of the Clark County hospital market.

This Court concludes that, based on the record in this case, the Antitrust Class has failed to properly establish either of its proposed submarkets. To the extent a relevant competitive market is defined by the parties, this market would be the general acute care hospital service market in Clark County consisting of Boulder City, Community, Desert Springs, St. Rose, Sunrise, UMC, Valley, and Women's hospitals.

5. Monopoly Power Within the Relevant Market

HN22[] Once a relevant market is established, the inquiry shifts to whether the alleged monopolist [52] exercised or had the potential to exercise market power. Although no single factor has been held determinative, the evaluation of market power usually depends on an evaluation of market share and barriers to entry. See Oahu, 838 F.2d at 366. A helpful framework for evaluating market share which has been used repeatedly by courts was articulated by Judge Learned Hand in United States v. Alum. Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945), where he found that a ninety percent market [*1515] share is enough to constitute a monopoly, a sixty percent market share is doubtful, and "certainly thirty-three percent is not." Id.; Syufy Enterprises v. American Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 995 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1031, 93 L. Ed. 2d 830, 107 S. Ct. 876 (1987); Rebel Oil Co., v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 808 F. Supp. 1464, 1468 (D. Nev. 1992); see also Barry, 805 F.2d at 874; Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law,* § 518.3 at 522-523 (1991 Supp.). In addition, declining market share may reflect the absence of market power. Output [53] as opposed to capacity is a more accurate measure of market share, and excess capacity, if it can be reasonably be determined, may limit the exercise of market power. Oahu, 838 F.2d at 366; Carilion, 707 F. Supp. at 848-49; Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law,* §§ 520(a), 521(e) (1991 Supp.).

In determining the market share of hospitals, facts that need to be examined include the percentage shares of patient days and admissions of the various competitors. Facts which are relevant to hospital capacity include the number of licensed beds within the hospitals as well as their respective occupancy percentages. An examination of these facts in the present case reveal the following:

(1) Patient Days - Sunrise's market share of Clark County hospital patients in terms of patient days was 35% in 1985, 33% in 1986, 32% in 1987, and 32% 37 in 1988; [24]

(2) Admissions - Sunrise's market share of Clark County hospital patients in terms of admissions was 34% in 1985, 32% in 1986, 30% in 1987, and 30% in 1988; [25]

(3) Number of Licensed Beds - Sunrise's percentage of licensed beds in Clark County was 36% in 1985, 35% in 1986, [54] 35% in 1987, and 35% in 1988; [26]

(4) Occupancy Percentage - Sunrise's capacity utilization of all beds was 52% in 1985, 48% in 1986, 52% in 1987, and 53% in 1988 compared to a Clark County average utilization rate of 53% in 1985, 44% in 1986, 56% in 1987, and 58% in 1988. [27]

As can be seen from the above figures, throughout the relevant time period, Sunrise had approximately one third of the Clark County market for acute care hospital services. Although [55] it is true that at the time in question, Nevada's Certificate of Need requirements acted as a potential entry barrier to new participants, the evidence also demonstrates that during the relevant time period there was substantial excess bed capacity at existing hospitals. This excess capacity would temper any competitive advantage Sunrise might have realized from such regulations. [28]

Accordingly, this Court further finds that Plaintiffs have failed to establish that Defendants had the ability to exercise monopoly power within Clark County's acute care hospital market during the relevant time period. See Thurman, 875 F.2d, at 1377-80; Barry, 805 F.2d at 874; [56] Bhan, 669 F. Supp. at 1022-23. [29]

[*1516] 6. Antitrust Injury

Finally, even if this Court could find that Plaintiffs have adequately defined a relevant competitive market and have shown Defendants monopolized or attempted to monopolize that market, this Court would nevertheless [57] have to conclude that Plaintiffs have not adequately demonstrated antitrust injury. Although Plaintiffs claim that they have suffered antitrust injury as a result of paying excessive premiums and/or co-payments, such monetary losses relate, if at all, to Defendant Humana Insurance's allegedly erroneous interpretation of the health insurance contract, and not the alleged anti-competitive acts of Sunrise (e.g. the diversion of critical care patients and refusal to unbundle level III neonatal services). This, coupled with the fact that Plaintiffs were only indirect purchasers of hospital services whose premiums and co-payments were undoubtedly subject to a number of other influences (e.g.

---

[24] See Motion for Summary Judgement (#804), Exhibit 7, Affidavit of Barry C. Harris at Exhibit 2a; Reply (#841), Supplemental Affidavit of Barry C. Harris at Exhibit 1.

[25] Id.

[26] Reply (#841), Supplemental Affidavit of Barry C. Harris at Exhibit 1.

[27] See Motion for Summary Judgment (#804), Exhibit 7, Affidavit of Barry C. Harris at Exhibit 4. Also included in his exhibit are the individual utilization rates of the various individual hospitals in Clark County. These rates are approximately 40% to 60% during the relevant time period.

[28] In fact, an argument could be made that the Nevada's Certificate of Need requirements actually injured Sunrise's competitive position since of the 245 additional beds which were licensed between 1979 and 1988, only 16 of these were given to Sunrise. See Reply (#242), Supplemental Affidavit of Harold M. Ting, Exhibit Z, at Exhibit 5.

[29] Even if this Court were to assume that the smaller hospitals in Clark County were not within the same competitive market as Sunrise, such a fact does not alter the conclusion that Sunrise did not have sufficient market share within Clark County to exercise market power during the relevant time period. Using only Desert Springs, Sunrise, Valley, and UMC as the competitive market, in total patient days Humana had market shares of 40% in 1985, 38% in 1986, 36% in 1987, and 36% in 1988 and in admissions Humana had market shares of 38% in 1985, 39% in 1986, 36% in 1987, and 35% in 1988. See Opposition (#820), Exhibit 107 (data relating to inpatient days and admissions for Desert Springs, Sunrise, Valley, and UMC).

competition in the health insurance market, state regulation, etc.) external to the cost of hospital services, clearly demonstrates that Plaintiffs' Antitrust Class has not suffered "antitrust injury." Cf. Austin, 903 F.2d at 1390-93.

C. Conclusion

In light of Plaintiffs' failure to adequately demonstrate the alleged submarkets, the fact that Defendants could not exercise market power, and the failure of Plaintiffs to demonstrate antitrust injury, Defendants are [58] entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiffs' Second Claim for Relief.

IV. RICO

A. Overview

The Third and final Claim for Relief alleged by Plaintiffs in their Second Amended Complaint is a violation of RICO pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) brought by Plaintiffs Co-Payor Class and Premium Payor Class. In support of this claim, both classes of Plaintiffs assert that during 1985 to 1988: (1) Humana and Humana Insurance acted as members of an "association in fact" enterprise or, alternatively, that Humana, a person within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1964(3), associated with Humana Insurance, an enterprise within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4); (2) that Humana and Humana insurance entered into a secret agreement to discount amounts owed by Humana Insurance for hospital charges incurred by Humana Insurance insureds; (3) Humana and Humana Insurance concealed and/or misrepresented this agreement to Plaintiffs in the numerous mailings, telephone calls, and television/radio advertisements; and (4) that such acts (a) were intended to and did induce the Premium Payor Class [59] into buying policies they would not have otherwise purchased, and (b) defrauded the Co-Payor Class into paying excessive co-payments. Second Amended Complaint (#370) at 18, 22-23; Errata (#822) at 103-109, 221-223, 251-253.

In support of their Motion for Summary Judgment (#804), Defendants Humana and Humana Insurance assert the following arguments:

(1) Plaintiffs cannot prove that the alleged misrepresentations and/or omissions of Defendants were intended to defraud them since (a) it is undisputed that the Humana Insurance policy mirrored other health plans in place during the relevant time period and, (b) the discount arrangement was disclosed to Nevada regulators. Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 98-116;

(2) New precedent requires this Court to reverse its prior ruling that Humana is a "person" distinct from Humana Insurance, the "enterprise," under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 131-136;

(3) The Premium Payor Class cannot show that they suffered RICO injuries, or even assuming they could, that these injuries were proximately caused by Defendants' actions. Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 116-126; [60]

(4) Under RICO, the only damages which the Co-Payor Class is entitled to recover is the amount of excess co-payments which the class paid as a result of Defendants' allegedly improper interpretation of the policy. Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 126-131;

[*1517] (5) The McCarran-Ferguson Act Precludes Plaintiffs' RICO cause of action. Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 136-146.

B. Requirements of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)

HN23[] Liability pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) requires a Plaintiff to demonstrate (1) the conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. Sun Savings and Loan Assoc. v. Dierdorff, 825 F.2d 187, 191 (9th Cir. 1987). "Racketeering activity" is any act indictable under various provisions of Title 18 of the United States Code, see 18 U.S.C. § 1961, and includes the predicate acts alleged in this case of mail fraud and wire fraud pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341, 1343. Id.

HN24[] In order to commit mail fraud under § 1341, Plaintiffs must demonstrate [61] that: "(1) the defendants formed a scheme or artifice to defraud: (2) the defendants used the United States mails or caused a use of the United States mails in furtherance of the scheme; and (3) the defendants did so with the specific intent to deceive or defraud." Schreiber Distributing v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 806 F.2d 1393, 1400 (9th Cir. 1986). Similarly, in order to commit wire fraud pursuant to § 1343, Plaintiffs must show: "(1) the formation of a scheme or artifice to defraud; (2) the use of the United States wires or causing a use of the United States wires in furtherance of the scheme; and (3) specific intent to deceive or defraud." Id.

HN25[] Under these provisions, fraud refers to "'(1) a false representation (2) in reference to a material fact (3) made with knowledge of its falsity (4) and with the intent to deceive.'" United States v. Bonallo, 858 F.2d 1427, 1433 (9th Cir. 1988). A failure to disclose or concealment may also serve a basis for a fraudulent scheme under mail and wire fraud statutes; however, such nondisclosure must arise from a failure to comply with an independent statutory or fiduciary duty. [62] California Arch. Bldg. Prods. v. Franciscan Ceramics, 818 F.2d 1466, 1472 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1006, 98 L. Ed. 2d 650, 108 S. Ct. 698 (1988); United States v. Dowling, 739 F.2d 1445, 1449 (9th Cir. 1984), rev'd on other grounds, 473 U.S. 207, 87 L. Ed. 2d 152, 105 S. Ct. 3127 (1985).

C. Plaintiffs' Failure to Demonstrate Intent to Defraud

The first argument raised by Defendants in support of their Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) on Plaintiffs' RICO claims is that there is no evidence to suggest that Defendants had "specific intent to deceive or defraud" the Plaintiffs. More specifically, Defendants contend that insofar as the development of the policy in question is concerned:

> (1) during the period in question, the health care industry was just beginning to experiment with preferred provider arrangements, and no industry standards were in place governing how co-payment discounts should be administered; (2) that the policy in question was simply modeled after one developed and already in place in Florida; (3) Medicare employs an analogous system for the payment of co-payments; (4) confidentiality [63] clauses were common in the industry for such discount arrangements to ensure the protection of proprietary information; and (5) that only 9.54% of all Humana Insurance insureds resulted in paying higher co-payments if the discount given Humana Insurance would have been shared.

Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 99-108.

Defendants further assert that various parties other than Defendants were aware of the co-payment arrangement, that Defendants disclosed the discount arrangement to Nevada regulators at various times between 1984 and 1986, and that on June 6, 1986, while at hearings before the Nevada Department of Insurance ("DOI"), Defendants directly informed DOI officials that bills issued to insureds did not reflect any discounts received by Humana Insurance from Humana. Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) at 110-116.

Plaintiffs respond that notwithstanding any disclosures made by Defendants to third parties, Defendants failed to disclose the co-payment scheme to Plaintiffs directly, and [*1518] even had attempted to conceal it. According to Plaintiffs, Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) raises a material question of fact regarding whether Defendants had the requisite [64] "intent" required under the mail and wire fraud statutes. See Errata (#822) at 146, 219-221.

HN26[] In determining whether Defendants satisfy the "intent" requirement of the mail and wire fraud statutes, Plaintiffs must demonstrate that the fraud was active and not merely constructive. United States v. Bohonus, 628 F.2d 1167, 1172 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 928, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1122, 100 S. Ct. 3026 (1980). Specific intent may be shown by examining the scheme to determine whether it "was reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and comprehension." Sun Savings, 825 F.2d at 196; Schreiber, 806 F.2d at 1400; Bohonus, 628 F.2d at 1172; see also United States v. Green, 745 F.2d 1205, 1209 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 925, 88 L. Ed. 2d 266, 106 S. Ct. 259 (1985) (specific intent to defraud means to deceive or mislead, and does not include situations where act involved was the result of ignorance, mistake, or accident).

Notwithstanding the facts asserted by Defendants, viewing all inferences in favor of Plaintiffs [65] as this Court must do, it is clear that a material question of fact exists as to whether Defendants' interpretation of the co-payment provision, which was furthered through the use of United States mails or wires, was specifically intended to mislead or deceive Plaintiffs or whether it was the result of ignorance, mistake, or accident. Accordingly, Defendants Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) on this ground must be denied.

D. Person/Enterprise Distinction

Plaintiffs next allege that Humana and Humana Insurance acted as members of an "association in fact" enterprise or, alternatively, that Humana, a person within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1964(3), associated with Humana Insurance, an enterprise within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4), to defraud Plaintiffs. As this Court recognized in its July 9, 1991 Order (#364), such allegations satisfy the "person/enterprise" requirements of U.S.C. § 1962(c). See River City Markets v. Fleming Foods West, 960 F.2d 1458, 1460-62 (9th Cir. 1992); U.S. v. Feldman, 853 F.2d 648, 656-59 (9th Cir. 1988), cert. [66] denied, 489 U.S. 1030, 103 L. Ed. 2d 222, 109 S. Ct. 1164 (1989); cf. Glessner v. Kenny, 952 F.2d 702, 710-14 (3rd Cir. 1991). Accordingly, Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on this ground.

E. RICO Damages for the Premium Payor Class

The third argument asserted by Defendants in support of summary judgment is that the Premium Payor Class has not demonstrated the requisite causal nexus between the RICO damages they seek and the fraud alleged as a predicate act. This Court agrees.

At the outset, the Premium Payor Class notes that the nondisclosure of the discounting arrangement between Humana and Humana Insurance induced its members into obtaining Humana Insurance policies. Errata (#822) at 221-222. The Premium Payor Class then asserts that numerous television and direct mail advertisements promised that employers and employees would "share in reduced hospital costs through premium reductions." Errata (#822) at 104, 222, 235. [30] The damages which the Premium Payor Class contend they have suffered as a result of these actions is "the difference in the actual price of the insurance product that they purchased (the premiums actually paid) [67] and what the premiums should have been if premiums were calculated to include the discounts that Humana Insurance was receiving." Errata (#822) at 222.

[*1519] In Imagineering, Inc. v. Kiewit Pacific Co., 976 F.2d 1303 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 123 L. Ed. 2d 266, 113 S. Ct. 1644 (1993), the Ninth Circuit clarified the requirements of proximate causation and recoverable damages under RICO. With respect to the issue of proximate causation, the Court in Imagineering stated: [68]

> HN27[] In order to maintain a cause under RICO then, the plaintiff must show not only that the defendant's violation was a "but for" cause of his injury, but that it was the proximate cause as well. This requires that there must be a direct relationship between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. . . . One principle underlying this requirement is that the less direct the injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to the violation, as distinct from other, independent factors.

---

[30] The language from the advertisements to which the Premium Payor Class refer is as follows:

> (1) "Tap Dance" commercial: "Because we can control costs, both you and your company can save a great deal of money without the song and dance;"
>
> (2) "Mumbo Jumbo" commercial: "We can save you and your company money without insurance mumbo jumbo;"
>
> (3) "Cuts" commercial: "Humana is a hospital company, so we can control costs, saving employers and employees money."

Errata (#822) at 33; Reply (#841) at 35.

Id. at 1311, citing Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 1317-18 (1992). Consistent with this view of proximate cause, the Court in Imagineering held that HN28[] not all injuries are compensable under RICO, but rather only those which are proven by a "concrete financial loss." Id. at 1310; see also Oscar v. University Students Co-operative Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783, 785 (9th Cir. 1992) (en banc), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 581, 113 S. Ct. 655 (1992).

The claim by the Premium Payor [69] Class that Humana Insurance's advertising campaign misrepresented that its members would "share in reduced hospital costs through premium reductions," is without merit. The advertisements to which Plaintiffs refer are nothing more than puffery and plainly do not contain any representations which would indicate how insurance premiums would be calculated. As such, this alleged predicate act cannot be viewed as the proximate cause of the Premium Payor Class' asserted RICO injury. See, e.g., Berent v. Kemper Corp., 973 F.2d 1291, 1295-96 (6th Cir. 1992).

The Premium Payor Class also argues that had its members known how Humana Insurance would calculate co-payments under its policy, they would not have purchased Humana polices. This argument is problematic for several reasons.

First, as stated by Defendants, the logical injury which would follow from a "fraudulent inducement" would be that the Premium Payor Class could have obtained comparable policies elsewhere for less and instead chose Humana as their insurance carrier. See Reply (#841) at 36-37. Plaintiffs do not present any evidence in this regard. See Errata (#822) at 227-236.

Plaintiffs argue instead [70] that they did not get the benefit of what they bargained for: an insurance policy under which co-payments would be calculated with consideration of any hospital discounts received. See Errata (#822) at 224. Plaintiffs may be correct, although there is no evidence in the record to demonstrate that they are. Unlike the Co-Payor Class, however, the members of the Premium Payor Class never incurred a hospital bill or made a co-payment. Its members simply paid the premiums they had previously agreed to pay assuming that any hospital discounts obtained by Humana Insurance would be reflected in their co-payment determinations. Accordingly, even though it is clear that the members of the Premium Payor class could have potentially been defrauded by Defendants' calculation of co-payments, under the undisputed facts, no such injury actually occurred.

Plaintiffs' additional argument that their "injury" arose from the fact that Sunrise's discount to Humana Insurance should have been included in calculating their initial premiums must be rejected for two reasons. First, although this argument enables Plaintiffs to state a more direct injury, it completely ignores the fact that the fraud [71] which supposedly induced Plaintiffs to purchase the Humana policy involved representations about how co-payments were to be determined. Nothing in the record suggests that the Defendants fraudulently represented how [*1520] they would calculate premiums. [31] Even if Humana Insurance did err in its calculation of the initial premiums, this error was independent of the predicate acts which Plaintiffs have alleged throughout this litigation.

Second, Plaintiffs' argument ignores other factors, such as the price of competing insurance products, that were used to determine the price of premiums paid by the Premium Payor Class. See Errata (#822) at 228. Assuming that simply deducting the cost of the discounts in Defendants' actuarial formula would lead to a fair market price that the Premium Payor Class would have [72] paid for the Humana policy ignores the competitive realities of the group health insurance market.

Accordingly, given the failure of the Premium Payor Class to adequately demonstrate a "direct relationship between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged" or a "concrete financial injury" for purposes of RICO, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment. Imagineering, 976 F.2d at 1311.

F. RICO Damages for the Co-Payor Class

---

[31] Indeed, Plaintiffs indirectly acknowledge this point in their Opposition when they admit that their argument is not that "Defendants' fraud 'caused' Defendants to charge improper premiums." See Errata (#822) at 224.

This Court previously has analyzed how to calculate the damages incurred by the Co-Payor Class which would be causally connected to Defendants' alleged breach of fiduciary duties under ERISA. See 827 F. Supp. at 1507-09. This Court finds that the reasoning of the Ninth Circuit in Imagineering and Oscar regarding the requirements of proximate cause and concrete financial injury applies with equal force in the context of damages available under RICO. Accordingly, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the Co-Payor Class' RICO claim to the extent that the Co-Payor Class seeks damages in excess of the amount that they could have recovered under a proper interpretation of the co-payment provision.

G. [73] McCarran-Ferguson Act Exception

Finally, Defendants argue that the McCarran-Ferguson Act precludes Plaintiffs from pursuing their RICO claim. This Court agrees.

Section § 1012(b) of the McCarran-Ferguson Act provides:

> HN29[] No Act of Congress shall be construed to invalidate, impair or supersede any law enacted by any State for the purpose of regulating the business of insurance, . . . unless such Act specifically relates to the business of insurance. . . .

15 U.S.C. § 1012(b).

The purpose of this provision is to impose a clear-statement rule "that state laws enacted 'for the purpose of regulating the business' do not yield to conflicting federal statutes unless a federal statute specifically requires otherwise." United States Dept. of the Treasury v. Fabe, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449, 113 S. Ct. 2202, 61 U.S.L.W. 4579, 4583 (1993) (citation omitted).

HN30[] In order to determine if Section 2(b) precludes application of a particular federal statute, a court must apply the following four part test: (1) is the federal statute one which specifically relates to the business of insurance; (2) does the complained of activity constitute [74] the business of insurance; (3) has the state enacted laws for the purpose of regulating the complained of activity; and (4) would the application of the federal statute invalidate, impair, or supersede the state legislation. See LeDuc v. Kentucky Central Life Ins. Co., 814 F. Supp. 820, 826-27 (N.D. Cal. 1992); Thacker v. New York Life Ins. Co., 796 F. Supp. 1338, 1341 (E.D. Cal. 1992).

There can be no dispute that RICO does not specifically relate to the business of insurance. See LeDuc, 814 F. Supp. at 827; Thacker, 796 F. Supp. at 1341.

It is equally clear that Plaintiffs' complained of activities constitute the "business of insurance." The crux of the RICO claim brought by the Premium Payor Class is that nondisclosure of the discount arrangement between Humana and Humana Insurance in advertisements and other communications fraudulently induced its members into purchasing the Humana Insurance policies. See Second Amended Complaint (#370) at 18-23. [*1521] The gravamen of the RICO claim brought by the Co-Payor Class is that nondisclosure of the discount arrangement [75] between Humana and Humana Insurance fraudulently induced its members into paying excessive co-payments. Id. Since these alleged acts directly relate to the purchase and execution of Humana Insurance policies, they fall squarely within the meaning of the "business of insurance." See Fabe, 61 U.S.L.W. at 4582 ("the actual performance of an insurance contract falls within 'the business of insurance'. . . to hold otherwise would be mere formalism."); WEXCO, Inc. v. IMC, Inc., No. CV-92-758, 1993 WL 121227 at *3-*5 (M.D. Pa. April 16, 1993) to be reported at 820 F. Supp. 194; LeDuc, 814 F. Supp. at 828; but see, Thacker, 796 F. Supp. at 1342. Accordingly, Defendants also satisfy the second prong of the McCarran-Ferguson test.

In evaluating whether Nevada has enacted laws governing the activities complained of in Plaintiffs' RICO claims, HN31[] it is not necessary that a state have a specific statute banning a particular practice. The inquiry is whether the state involved has adopted a regulatory scheme which possesses jurisdiction over the challenged [76] activity. See Feinstein v. Nettleship Co. of Los Angeles, 714 F.2d 928, 933 (9th Cir. 1983), cert denied, 466 U.S. 972, 80 L. Ed. 2d 820, 104 S. Ct. 2346 (1984); WEXCO, 820 F. Supp. at 197.

In 1971, Nevada adopted the Trade Practices and Frauds; Financing of Premiums Act ("Act"), N.R.S. § 686A.010, et seq. This Act was designed to regulate the business of insurance as recognized in the McCarran-Ferguson Act "by defining, or providing for the determination of, all such practices in this state which constitute unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices and by prohibiting the trade practices so defined and determined." N.R.S. § 686A.010. Under this Act, Nevada recognized that the Commissioner of Insurance "has exclusive jurisdiction" in regulating the trade practices of the business of insurance. N.R.S. § 686A.015. Furthermore, the Act specifically prohibits the dissemination of false or misleading information relating to the sale of policies or the benefits obtained thereto, N.R.S. §§ 686A.030, 686A.040, and those violating the Act are subject to enforcement of its provisions by the Commissioner. N.R.S. §§ 680A.200, 686A.160, [77] 686A.170, and 686A.310. These statutes and others requiring the approval of forms used by insurers, N.R.S. §§ 687B.120, 687B.130, clearly demonstrate an attempt by Nevada to regulate the conduct complained of in this case through the adoption of a comprehensive regulatory scheme. [32] Accordingly, this Court finds that the third prong of McCarran-Ferguson test is also satisfied. See also WEXCO, 820 F. Supp at 197; LeDuc, 814 F. Supp. at 829; Thacker, 796 F. Supp at 1341-42.

Finally, under the McCarran-Ferguson test, this Court must consider whether the application of RICO would [78] invalidate, impair, or otherwise supersede Nevada legislation. As acknowledged by Plaintiffs in their Opposition (#822), the Nevada Commissioner of Insurance, in enforcing the Act, can prohibit unfair trades practices, impose fines, and withdraw approval of insurance plans. See Opposition (#822) at 270-274; N.R.S. §§ 686A.160, 686A.170, 686A.187, and 687B.130. As Plaintiffs contend, the State of Nevada does not proscribe the same harsh penalties which would be available under RICO (e.g. treble damages and attorney's fees) for Defendants' violation of unfair trade practices. See Errata (#822) at 270-274. As recognized by the courts in WEXCO and LeDuc, however, this is the very reason why the fourth prong of the McCarran-Ferguson test is met. See WEXCO 1993 WL 121227 at *6-*7; LeDuc, 814 F. Supp at 829; but see Thacker, 796 F. Supp at 1343. For this Court to allow Plaintiffs to pursue the harsher RICO penalties for behavior which the Nevada Legislature apparently did not deem worthy of such penalties, would be tantamount to allowing Congress to intercede in an area expressly left to the states under the McCarran-Ferguson [79] [*1522] Act. Accordingly, this Court also finds that the fourth prong of the McCarran-Ferguson analysis is satisfied. [33]

[80] This Court, therefore, concludes that the RICO claims alleged by the Premium Payor Class and the Co-Payor Class are barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act. In doing so, the Court recognizes that Plaintiffs may view the interplay between the McCarran-Ferguson Act and ERISA as posing a preemptive "Catch-22," with McCarran-Ferguson precluding Plaintiffs' federal RICO claim and ERISA barring Plaintiffs' state RICO claim. The result is not

---

[32] In fact, Plaintiffs tacitly admit that Humana Insurance's fraudulent activity was covered by the existing Nevada statutory scheme when they argue that Humana Insurance "cavalierly ignored" these "general legal requirements," thus requiring the Nevada legislature to pass in 1987 the more rigorous requirements of sharing discounts under AB 289. See Opposition (#822) at 271.

[33] At oral argument, Plaintiffs for the first time argued that since Defendants' conduct could arguably be sanctioned under Nevada's RICO statute, N.R.S. § 207.470, the harsh remedies afforded by the federal RICO statute cannot be seen to displace or supersede existing Nevada law. This Court disagrees.

As recognized earlier in this Order, Plaintiffs could not pursue a Nevada RICO claim in this case given the fact that ERISA preempts such a claim. See supra at 22. Beyond this, it is clear that in adopting the Act, the Nevada legislature intended the Insurance Commissioner to have "exclusive jurisdiction" over fraudulent insurance practices. See N.R.S. § 686A.015. This, combined with the fact that the Nevada legislature specifically identified fraud on the part of the insured and not by the insurer as a possible predicate act under N.R.S. § 207.470, demonstrates an intent of the Nevada legislature to limit the amount of damages recoverable against an insurer for fraud. See N.R.S. §§ 207.360(30), 680A.200, 686A.160, 686A.170, 686A.290, 686A.291, and 686A.310.

entirely anomalous, however, given that Congress has occupied the field through ERISA by which certain well-defined remedies have been provided and others excluded.

V. ORDERS

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (#804) is Granted to the extent that Judgment is hereby entered in favor of Defendants and against Plaintiffs as to Plaintiffs' First, Second, and Third Claims for Relief.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiffs' Co-Payor Class only shall have to and including August 24, 1993, within which to file a Third Amended Complaint seeking relief on Plaintiffs' First Claim for Relief pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B), consistent with Part II of this Memorandum Decision.

DATED: [81] July 21, 1993

PHILIP M. PRO

United States District Judge

Sullivan v. Tagliabue

United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts

July 29, 1993, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO.: 92-10915-H

Reporter

828 F. Supp. 114 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10508 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,411

CHARLES W. SULLIVAN, Plaintiff v. PAUL TAGLIABUE, ET AL., Defendants.

Core Terms

stadium, antitrust, anti trust law, refinancing, damages, stadia, stock, professional football, antitrust violation, injuries, factors, renovations, restrained, contends, indirect, lease, teams, antitrust action, alleged injury, franchise, Football, shares

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The question of antitrust standing is one of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 15 provides: Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN3[] Clayton Act, Claims

Factors that are to be considered in the determination to confer antitrust standing and which narrow the class of persons entitled to recover private damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, include: (1) a causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws; (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicate recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN4[] Clayton Act, Remedies

The availability of the remedy under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, to some person who claims its benefit is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The fact that a plaintiff is not a participant in the relevant market is not in itself dispositive of the standing issue, but such a fact must be weighed heavily against a grant of standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

An "inextricably intertwined" injury exists where the plaintiff's injury was a necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy and the very means by which it is alleged that the defendants sought to achieve their illegal ends.

Counsel: [1] For WILLIAM H. SULLIVAN, JR., Plaintiff: Alan R. Hoffman, Lynch, Brewer, Hoffman & Sands, 101 Federal Street Boston, MA 02110, 617-951-0800. Joseph V. Cavanagh, Jr., Blish & Cavanagh, 30 Exchange Terrace, Providence, RI 02903, 401-831-8900. Joseph L. Alioto, Alioto & Alioto, 650 California Street, 23rd Floor, San Francisco, CA 94108, 415-434-2100. Bruce J. Wecker, Furth, Fahrner and Mason, 201 Sansome Street, Suite 1000, San Francisco, CA 94104, 617-951-0800.

For PAUL TAGLIABUE, Defendant: Robert M. Buchanan, Jr., Sarah C. Columbia, Jeremiah T. O'Sullivan, Choate, Hall & Stewart, Exchange Place, 53 State Street, Boston, MA 02109, 617-227-5020. Matthew F. Medeiros, Flanders & Medeiros, One Turks Head Place, Suite 700, Providence, RI 02903, 401-831-0700. John Vanderstar, Ethan M. Posner, Covington & Burling, PO Box 7566, 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20044. Sonya D. Winner, Covington & Burling, 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., P.O. Box 7566, Washington, DC 20044, 202-662-6000. Joseph W. Cotchett, Frank M. Pitre, Susan Illston, John L. Fitzgerald, Cotchett, Illston & Pitro, Suite 200, 840 Malcolm Road, Burlingame, CA 94010, 415-697-6000. For PETE ROZELLE, NATIONAL FOOTBALL [2] LEAGUE, FIVE SMITHS, INC., THE, INDIANAPOLIS COLTS, INC., BUFFALO BILLS, INC., CHICAGO BEARS FOOTBALL CLUB, LTD., CLEVELAND BROWNS, INC., CINCINNATI BENGALS, INC., DALLAS COWBOYS FOOTBALL CLUB, LTD., PDB SPORTS, LTD., DETROIT LIONS, INC., THE, GREEN BAY PACKERS, INC., HOUSTON OILERS, INC., LOS ANGELES RAMS FOOTBALL COMPANY, MINNESOTA VIKINGS FOOTBALL COMPANY, NEW ORLEANS SAINTS, LTD., CHARGERS FOOTBALL COMPANY, NEW YORK JETS FOOTBALL CLUB, INC., B & B HOLDINGS INC., PITTSBURGH STEELERS SPORTS, INC., TAMPA BAY AREA NFL FOOTBALL, INC., PRO-FOOTBALL, INC., SEATTLE PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL CLUB, INC., Defendants: Robert M. Buchanan, Jr., Sarah C. Columbia, Jeremiah T. O'Sullivan, Choate, Hall & Stewart, Exchange Place, 53 State Street, Boston, MA 02109, 617-227-5020. John Vanderstar, Ethan M. Posner, Covington & Burling, PO Box 7566, 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20044. Sonya D. Winner, Covington & Burling, 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., P.O. Box 7566, Washington, DC 20044, 202-662-6000. Joseph W. Cotchett, Frank M. Pitre, Susan Illston, John L. Fitzgerald, Cotchett, Illston & Pitro, Suite 200, 840 Malcolm Road, Burlingame, CA 94010, 415-697-6000.

Judges: HARRINGTON

Opinion by: EDWARD F. HARRINGTON

Opinion

[3] [*115] MEMORANDUM

July 29, 1993

HARRINGTON, D.J.

In conjunction with an action brought by his father, William J. Sullivan, Jr., the Plaintiff Charles W. Sullivan has brought this action for damages against the Defendants, [1] [4] alleging that their enforcement of a National Football League (NFL) rule constituted a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. The Plaintiff presses this suit both individually and as the assignee of the antitrust claim belonging to Stadium Management Corporation (SMC). In addition, the Plaintiff has alleged state law claims of breach of fiduciary obligations, interference with a prospective advantageous contract, unfair trade practices, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The Defendants have moved for Summary Judgment on the Plaintiff's antitrust action, arguing that he lacks standing to bring such an action. [2]

[1] The Defendants named in this action are the NFL, current NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue, his predecessor Pete Rozelle, and the following 21 organizations owning NFL franchises: The Five Smiths, Inc.; Indianapolis Colts, Inc.; Buffalo Bills, Inc., Chicago Bears Football Club, Inc.; Cincinnati Bengals, Inc.; Cleveland Browns, Inc.; Dallas Cowboys Football Club, Ltd.; PDB Sports, Ltd.; The Detroit Lions, Inc.; Green Bay Packers, Inc.; Houston Oilers, Inc.; Los Angeles Rams Football Co.; Minnesota Vikings Football Club, Inc.; New Orleans Saints, Ltd.; Chargers Football Co.; New York Jets Football Club, Inc.; B & B Holdings, Inc.; Pittsburgh Steelers Sports, Inc.; Tampa Bay Area NFL Football, Inc.; Pro-Football, Inc.; and Seattle Professional Football Club, Inc.

William Sullivan was the founder and sole or managing owner of the New England Patriots Football franchise ("Patriots") from 1960 to 1988. In 1987, his son, the Plaintiff, was the sole stockholder of SMC, which owned the stadium at Foxborough, Massachusetts, then called Sullivan Stadium, where the Patriots played and continue to play their [*116] home games. That same year, William Sullivan sought to sell a 49 percent interest [5] in the Patriots to an investment banking firm, which was not in the business of football, which, in turn, was to sell the shares of stock to the public. Through this transaction, the Plaintiff, through SMC, concurrently sought refinancing for the stadium. The Plaintiff alleges that SMC would have received a $ 40 million loan from the investment banking firm pursuant to the public offering of the Patriots' stock.

The Plaintiff contends that the Defendants combined to prevent the sale of Patriots stock by enforcing a league rule that prohibited the sale of the shares of interest of an NFL franchise to any company not engaged in the business of professional football (the "Rule"). This Rule could only have been changed or waived by a vote of three quarters of the NFL owners, a requirement that the Plaintiff argues was itself a restrictive rule of procedure. The Plaintiff alleges that by preventing the sale of stock, the Defendants also effectively blocked the refinancing of the stadium. He further contends that the Defendants intended this result, or, at the very least, were well aware that the stadium refinancing was being sought concurrently with the sale of Patriots' stock to the [6] public and that their actions in prohibiting the sale would necessarily adversely affect SMC. Subsequent to William Sullivan's failed attempt to sell the shares to the public, SMC was forced into bankruptcy. During the bankruptcy proceedings, the Plaintiff received an assignment of all SMC's causes of action, including the antitrust claim he presses here, in consideration of the release of claims against SMC by the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff claims that, if the sale of the Patriots' stock had gone through, negotiations for the refinancing would have been successfully completed, allowing him to pay off his debts, as well as those of the stadium, and to subsequently make renovations to the stadium. He contends that, consequently, he would still own the stadium, and would have reaped the benefits of the enhanced market value of the stadium as a result of the renovations he intended to make. The Plaintiff also alleges that, in 1987, SMC held a lease from the Patriots which extended until the year 2002, and that, if the sale of stock to the public through the investment banking company had been successful and the renovations completed, the Patriots would have extended the lease for another [7] twenty years.

The Plaintiff has brought his action under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, which confers standing upon private parties to sue for damages under the Sherman Act. Section 4 provides for a private cause of action to enforce a public antitrust law to advance the public interest. This section provides:

> HN2[] Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

15 U.S.C. § 15. Although Section 4 appears on its face to provide a cause of action to anyone claiming an injury causally related to an antitrust violation, the Supreme Court has rejected such a literal interpretation of the statute.

[2] HN1[] The question of antitrust standing is one of law. Midwest Communications v. Minnesota Twins, Inc., 779 F.2d 444, 449 (8th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1163, 90 L. Ed. 2d 730, 106 S. Ct. 2289 (1986). In previously denying the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss in the instant case, this Court indicated that the Plaintiff's Complaint sufficiently alleged antitrust standing. 796 F. Supp. 56, 58 (D. Mass. 1992). On this Motion for Summary Judgment, this Court shall now examine the evidence presented by the Plaintiff to support this allegation. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

See Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 534-535, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983); [8] Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 476-477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982). As the Supreme Court has stated:

> An antitrust violation may be expected to cause ripples of harm to flow through the Nation's economy; but "despite the broad wording of § 4 there is a point beyond which the wrongdoer should not be held liable." It is reasonable to assume that Congress did not intend to allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property.

McCready, 457 U.S. at 476-77 (citation omitted). The Supreme Court has consequently enunciated HN3[] factors that are to be considered in the determination to confer [*117] antitrust standing and which narrow the class of persons entitled to recover private damages under Section 4. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535-545. These factors include: (1) a causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress [9] sought to redress with the antitrust laws; (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicate recovery or complex apportionment of damages. See id.; see also Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 975 F.2d 518, 520 (8th Cir. 1992) (listing factors).

First evaluating these factors as they apply to the Plaintiff's claims brought on behalf of SMC, the Court notes that the Plaintiff has alleged, and presented evidence of, a causal connection between the application of the Rule and SMC's inability to refinance the stadium because the sale of Patriots' stock to the public was prohibited. The Plaintiff has also alleged an improper motive on the part of the Defendants in that they sought "to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce in professional football" and took the actions they did against SMC in furtherance of that goal. In addition, the Plaintiff has indicated that the Defendants intended to block the refinancing of the stadium by their actions, or at the very least, that such a harm was a foreseeable consequence of the application of the Rule [10] as to the Patriots. The Court consequently finds that the Plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence to raise an issue as to improper motive. [3] The Court also notes that there appears to be no significant risk of duplicate recoveries or danger of complex apportionment in this case, in-that the injuries on which the Plaintiff sues are sufficiently distinct from those alleged by William Sullivan, the only other plausible litigant in this matter. [4] William Sullivan has initiated a separate antitrust action against the Defendants.

[11] While the above factors arguably militate toward a ruling of standing, the remaining considerations, which are of far more controlling importance under these circumstances, counsel against such a ruling. The first such consideration concerns the nature of the Plaintiff's alleged injury and whether it is of the type that the antitrust laws sought to forestall. Id. at 538. As the Supreme Court has emphasized, the central interest of the antitrust laws is "in protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Id. at 538. HN5[] The fact that a plaintiff is not a participant in the relevant market is not in itself dispositive of the standing issue, but such a fact "must be weighed heavily against a grant of standing." South Dakota v. Kansas City S. Indus., 880 F.2d 40, 46 n.16 (8th Cir. 1989), cert. denied sub nom. South Dakota v. Kansas City S. Ry. Co., 493 U.S. 1023, 107 L. Ed. 2d 745, 110 S. Ct. 726 (1990). The Plaintiff has alleged that the application of the Rule operated to restrain trade in the market of professional football. In the present case, however, SMC was "neither [12] a consumer nor a competitor" in the market of professional football, nor can it be said that it was "a direct victim of the defendants' coercive practices." Id. at 539, 540 n.44. Moreover, there is no indication that the Defendants' actions had any palpable effect on overall competition in the stadia market, in which SMC was a participant. The Plaintiff nonetheless argues that the application of the Rule as to William Sullivan restrained SMC individually, interfering with its ability to compete with other stadia by [*118] denying it a means of refinancing. In that the alleged violation had therefore, at most, an indirect and incidental effect upon competition in the stadia market by virtue of its impact on SMC, it cannot be said to be actionable under the antitrust laws, which "were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat., Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (quoting Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (emphasis in original)). In sum, SMC's alleged injury was not of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. [5]

---

[3] The Court stresses that the improper motive inquiry is not, in and of itself, determinative of antitrust standing. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537 & n.37. As the Supreme Court has stated, HN4[] "the availability of the § 4 remedy to some person who claims its benefit is not a question of the specific intent of the conspirators." Id. at 537 (quoting McCready, 457 U.S. at 479).

[4] While there would exist a risk of duplicate recoveries and a danger of complex apportionment in this case as between the Plaintiff and SMC in light of their seemingly overlapping injuries, the Court will assume that such a problematic consideration can be avoided here, given that the Plaintiff brings his single action for the damages suffered by both.

[13] Related to the inquiry concerning the nature of the injury are factors of comparable significance, namely the directness of the injury and the speculative nature of the Plaintiff's damages claim. Here, the Defendants allegedly conspired to create and apply a Rule that prohibited William Sullivan from selling 49 percent of the Patriots to an investment banking firm which would have, in turn, sold shares to the public. As a result, SMC was ostensibly denied the refinancing for Foxborough Stadium that it was negotiating as part of that sale. This refinancing, the Plaintiff contends, would have enabled SMC to pay off its debts, which, in turn, would have allowed the Plaintiff to continue ownership of the stadium, make renovations to it, and get an extension on the lease from the Patriots. It is obvious that any injury suffered by the SMC was only an indirect result of the alleged injury inflicted upon William Sullivan in preventing him from selling Patriots' shares to the public.

Further, the fact that William Sullivan, the party most directly harmed, is pursuing his own antitrust action here diminishes one possible rationale for allowing the Plaintiff to press SMC's separate antitrust [14] claim. As the Supreme Court has stated,

> The existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party . . . to perform the office of a private attorney general. Denying the [plaintiff] a remedy on the basis of its allegations in [such a] case is not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied.

Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542. Here, the SMC's injuries were only a consequence of those injuries suffered by William Sullivan, whose own antitrust action ensures that the alleged violation will be properly remedied.

The indirectness of the SMC's injuries informs the speculative nature of the Plaintiff's damages claim, which he contends is measurable in terms of the enhanced market value of the stadium that would have resulted from the renovation of the stadium. Given that an extended chain of independent events would have had to have occurred to give credence to the Plaintiff's damages claim on behalf of SMC, the Court finds the damages to be, at best, [15] highly speculative. After an evaluation of the Plaintiff's case on behalf of SMC in light of the above factors set forth by the [*119] Supreme Court in Associated Gen. Contractors, the Court therefore concludes that the Plaintiff lacks standing to bring this suit on behalf of SMC.

---

[5] The Court also finds that SMC's injury was not so "inextricably intertwined" with the injury that the Defendants sought to inflict upon William Sullivan and the professional football market as to confer standing upon him. In general, as the Supreme Court has indicated, HN6[] an "inextricably intertwined" injury exists where the plaintiff's injury was "a necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy" and "the very means by which it is alleged that [the defendants] sought to achieve their illegal ends." See McCready, 457 U.S. at 479-81; see also Bodie-Rickett and Assocs. v. Mars, Inc., 957 F.2d 287, 291 (6th Cir. 1992) (to show that injury is "inextricably intertwined," plaintiff must show that defendants actively manipulated or utilized him in order to harm competitors or participants in the relevant market); Lovett, 975 F.2d at 521 (same); Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., Inc., 740 F.2d 739, 745-46 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 469 U.S. 1200 (1985) ("inextricably intertwined" injury exists where Plaintiff's injury was necessary step or means employed by defendants to achieve anticompetitive ends); Crimpers Promotions Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290, 292, 294 (2d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1252, 82 L. Ed. 2d 841, 104 S. Ct. 3536 (1984) ("inextricably intertwined" injury found where boycott of plaintiff was alleged means of eliminating competition in relevant cable market and where plaintiff was most directly injured party). In the present case, however, the denial of stadium refinancing was not a necessary step in effecting and continuing a monopoly on professional football, nor was it the very means by which the Defendants sought to do so. It was merely a secondary consequence of the Defendants' alleged antitrust actions against William Sullivan.

Notwithstanding the above analysis, the Plaintiff contends that the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has already addressed the very issue of standing presented in this case, holding, in Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Commission v. NFL, that an NFL stadium had standing to challenge an NFL rule on antitrust grounds. See 791 F.2d 1356, 1364 (9th Cir. 1986). In that case, the Los Angeles Coliseum had been left without a major tenant after the Los Angeles Rams football franchise had moved to a new stadium in Anaheim, California. The L.A. Coliseum was consequently looking for a new NFL occupant. Soon thereafter, upon the expiration of his lease with the Oakland Coliseum, Al Davis, the Managing General Partner of the Oakland Raiders franchise, sought to relocate his team to the L.A. Coliseum. The NFL, however, invoked a league rule that prohibited teams from relocating to [16] the home territory of another team without the approval of three-quarters of the 28 NFL member franchises. Insofar as the L.A. Coliseum was within a 75-mile radius of Anaheim, it was still in the Rams' home territory under the league's definition of that term. Over Davis' objection that the rule violated antitrust laws, the NFL member teams voted overwhelmingly against the move, denying Davis the requisite approval and blocking the move.

In holding that the L.A. Coliseum had standing to bring its subsequent antitrust suit in conjunction with the Oakland Raiders against the NFL and its member clubs, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit emphasized that "the NFL's territorial restraints in this case . . . restrained competition in the 'stadia market' between rival stadia (such as the Oakland Coliseum and the L.A. Coliseum) that seek to secure NFL tenants." Id. at 1365 (emphasis added). Because the L.A. Coliseum was "a competitor in a market in which competition was restrained directly and foreseeably, if not also intentionally," the court held that the stadium was directly harmed. Id. The court was nonetheless careful to limit the reach [17] of its decision:

> We are confident that our ruling will not be misinterpreted as being a broad endorsement of antitrust standing for all parties who might have contracted with the Raiders had they not been restrained in their relocation plans. Football stadia constitute a special market distinguished from those comprised by, say, hotels, laundering establishments, or limousine services, by their indispensable and intimate connection with professional football teams. An injury such as that suffered by the Coliseum in the present case cannot be characterized fairly as an indirect "ripple effect."

Id.

In spite of the Plaintiff's arguments to the contrary, this Court declines to interpret L.A. Coliseum Commission so broadly as to hold that stadiums always have standing to bring antitrust suits against the NFL by virtue of their relationship to professional football clubs. In commenting on the special connection between the stadia market and professional football, the Ninth Circuit was merely emphasizing the directness with which that particular rule, which necessarily affected the ability of stadiums to attract NFL occupants, impacted the stadia market as compared to various [18] other markets, on which the rule had, at most, a tangential effect. The Rule in the present case has no similarly direct effect upon competition between rival stadia seeking to secure NFL tenants. In fact, in 1987, the year of the attempted sale, SMC had a lease with the Patriots that extended until the year 2002, regardless of the team's ownership, demonstrating that the stadium's ability to lease to the Patriots was not directly impacted by enforcement of the Rule. Instead, the Plaintiff argues that SMC would have received better financing then it had previously enjoyed if the NFL had allowed William Sullivan to sell shares of the Patriots to the public, and that this refinancing would have freed up enough money to pay off debts and make renovations that would have allowed SMC to be more competitive in the market. Such an antitrust injury is far too tangential [*120] and conjectural to be actionable under the antitrust laws.

For the above reasons, the Court accordingly finds that the Plaintiff lacks standing to bring an antitrust suit for damages on behalf of SMC. The Court also notes that the above analysis applies with even greater force to the Plaintiff's individual antitrust claims. [19] The personal damages that the Plaintiff attributes to the NFL's alleged antitrust violation, which include payment of unnecessary interest and the inability to purchase debt at a discounted rate, merely flow from the alleged injuries to SMC. In that the Plaintiff himself was one step further removed from the alleged antitrust violation than was SMC, the injuries he claims personally are that much more indirect than those claimed on behalf of SMC. Consistent with the above ruling that SMC's injuries were too consequential to support standing, the Court finds that the Plaintiff's personal antitrust injuries, which are merely derivative of SMC's injuries, are too indirect and tangential to support his individual action. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 545-46.

In conclusion, the Court finds that the Plaintiff Charles Sullivan lacks standing to bring this antitrust action, either individually or on behalf of SMC. The Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment is therefore granted on that claim. The Court also declines supplemental jurisdiction over his remaining state law claims, and they are therefore dismissed. [6]

[20] EDWARD F. HARRINGTON

United States District Judge

---

[6] The Court issued an Order granting Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment on the federal antitrust claim and declining to exercise supplemental jurisdiction on July 15, 1993, with this Memorandum to follow.

Hertz Corp. v. City of N.Y.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

May 6, 1992, Argued ; August 2, 1993, Decided

Docket No. 92-7369

Reporter

1 F.3d 121 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 19773 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,343

THE HERTZ CORPORATION, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. THE CITY OF NEW YORK, O. PETER SHERWOOD, in his official capacity as Corporation Counsel of the City of New York, and MARK GREEN, in his official capacity as Commissioner of Consumer Affairs of the City of New York, Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Whitman Knapp, Judge. Plaintiff sought injunctive and declaratory relief that would bar enforcement of defendant city's local law that forbids rental-car companies doing business in New York City from considering their customers' residences in making rental and pricing decisions. The district court dismissed the complaint, but enjoined enforcement of the local law pending this appeal.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

local law, municipal, anticompetitive, immunity, regulation, rental, antitrust, district court, conspiracy, interstate commerce, restraint of trade, Sherman Act, residents, cases, state-action, rental-car, pricing, rent, antitrust liability, unilateral, rates, local government, state policy, rule-of-reason, articulated, contracts, rule of reason, boroughs, renter's, substantive due process

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

HN1[] Local Governments, Ordinances & Regulations

See New York City, N.Y., Admin. Code tit. 20, ch. 4.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Review of a grant of a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is de novo, and factual allegations in the complaint are construed in favor of the nonmoving party. Consideration is limited to facts stated on the face of the complaint and in documents appended to the complaint or incorporated in the complaint by reference, as well as to matters of which judicial notice may be taken. Dismissal of the complaint is proper only where it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, is illegal. 15 U.S.C. S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The broad language of the Sherman Act precludes only those restraints of trade that are unreasonable. Unreasonable contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade enacted by state and local governments are unconstitutional as preempted by federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Certain restraints may be characterized as "hybrid," in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions. Where private actors are thus granted "a degree of private regulatory power," the regulatory scheme may be attacked under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Antitrust Immunity

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not apply when anticompetitive restraints are imposed by the states as an act of government. Under principles of federalism and state sovereignty, a state actor is accorded absolute immunity from antitrust liability. Local governments may be entitled to state-action immunity. While state action immunity does not apply directly to local governments, a municipality's restriction of competition may sometimes be an authorized implementation of state policy; if it is, then the municipality may share in the immunity accorded to state actions. A two-part test is applied to instances where private parties participate in a local government's price fixing regime. First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN7[] Interstate Commerce, Prohibition of Commerce

The United States Constitution's affirmative grant to Congress of powers over interstate commerce means that states have limited authority to erect barriers against interstate trade, a limitation that applies equally to municipal legislation.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN8[] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

Economic regulation need only be rationally related to a legitimate governmental purpose.

Counsel: PAUL C. SAUNDERS, New York, NY, (Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, NY, of Counsel), for Plaintiff-Appellant.

ALAN G. KRAMS, New York, NY (O. Peter Sherwood, Corporation Counsel of the City of New York, Leonard Koerner, Lawrence S. Kahn, Barry P. Schwartz, June R. Buch, Julie Mertus, of Counsel), for Defendants-Appellees.

Timothy Dyk, Washington, D.C. (Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Washington, D.C., of Counsel), for Amicus Curiae Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America.

Judges: BEFORE: FEINBERG, PRATT, and McLAUGHLIN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: PRATT

Opinion

[*123] PRATT, Circuit Judge:

Hertz Corporation appeals from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District [2] of New York, Whitman Knapp, Judge, that dismissed its complaint which sought to enjoin enforcement of Local Law No. 21 of 1992 of the City of New York, referred to informally as the "Hertz law".

FACTS AND BACKGROUND

On January 2, 1992, Hertz announced that it would increase the daily car-rental rates it charges by $ 56.00 for residents of the Bronx, $ 34.00 for residents of Brooklyn, $ 3.00 for residents of Manhattan, and $ 15.00 for residents [*124] of Queens. The increased rates were to be charged to persons residing in those four boroughs whenever they rented a car at a Hertz outlet in the New York metropolitan area, New Jersey, Southern Connecticut, or Eastern Pennsylvania. Out-of-city Hertz customers who rented a vehicle in one of these four boroughs would have no increased rates.

Hertz claims that renting cars to residents of these boroughs had resulted in extremely high liability expenses for the company. Specifically, Hertz alleges that although only about seven percent of Hertz's nationwide rentals occur in the New York area, more than 25 percent of its liability losses have occurred there. As one of the reasons, the company points to a state statute that holds car owners [3] vicariously liable for any monetary damages caused by the operation of their vehicles. See N.Y. Veh. & Traf. § 388 (McKinney 1986). Another cause, says Hertz, is that juries in some of the affected boroughs have a history of awarding high damages to plaintiffs in personal injury cases. Hertz avers that its residency surcharges correspond directly to the average excess liability losses incurred per rental in the affected boroughs.

Hertz excludes several groups of renters from the increases: (1) those holding contracts with Hertz, such as federal and corporate accounts, and (2) certain other categories of renters -- those possessing airline tickets, members of the Manhattan Preferred Renters Club, and Platinum Service customers -- felt to be low-risk groups. In addition, members of the "Hertz Gold Club" are excluded, since they do not check in at a rental-car outlet and therefore could not practicably be notified of the increased rate. Hertz also has announced a "Responsible Renter Qualification Program", which permits those otherwise subject to the increased rates to apply for and receive an exemption upon meeting certain qualifications, including a safe driving record.

In response [4] to Hertz's proposed surcharges for residents of four of its boroughs, the City of New York passed Local Law No. 21 of 1992 which amended chapter four of title 20 of the city's administrative code to provide that:

HN1[] No rental vehicle company shall refuse to rent a motor vehicle to any person otherwise qualified based on that person's residence, nor impose fees or charges based on that person's residence. Through this local law, the city contends, that it was "exercising its reasoned legislative judgment that the social costs of the [Hertz pricing] practice are too high, given its potential for polarization and the fact that the burden falls hardest on minorities and the working poor."

In addition to enacting Local Law No. 21, the city commenced an action in Supreme Court, New York County, claiming that Hertz's rate increases violated (1) state and local law because of their disparate impact on minorities, and (2) section 396-z(10) of New York's General Business Law. That action is pending.

On March 27, 1992, Hertz commenced this action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. It sought a declaratory judgment that the Hertz law is invalid and an injunction [5] against its enforcement. The complaint alleged that Local Law No. 21 (1) is preempted by state law regulating the rental-car industry, and (2) violates several provisions of the United States Constitution: (a) the contract clause, (b) the commerce clause, and (c) the fourteenth amendment's protection for substantive due process and its prohibition against uncompensated takings. Finally, Hertz charged that Local Law No. 21 compels a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1988), and therefore is preempted and invalid under the supremacy clause of the United States Constitution.

Four days after it was filed, Hon. Whitman Knapp, ordered Hertz's complaint dismissed, but he enjoined the city from taking any action to effectuate the law pending the outcome of any appeal by Hertz. Hertz appealed the dismissal; the city did not cross-appeal.

Because the determination of Hertz's state-law preemption claim involved issues that were important to the continuing development [*125] of state law and potentially dispositive of this appeal, on June 10, 1992, we certified to the New York State Court of Appeals the question of "whether New York State legislation [6] addressing car rental practices sets forth a sufficiently comprehensive scheme of regulations to preempt further legislation in the field by the municipalities of the state." Hertz v. City of New York, 967 F.2d 54, 57 (2d Cir. 1992). On December 22, 1992, the Court of Appeals answered this question in the negative. See Hertz v. City of New York, 80 N.Y.2d 565, 607 N.E.2d 784, 592 N.Y.S.2d 637 (N.Y. 1992).

The case is now before us to review the district court's resolution of the remaining issues: (1) the city's antitrust liability under the Sherman Act, (2) the impact of Local Law No. 21 on interstate commerce, and (3) Hertz's claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1988) based on takings law, the contract clause, and substantive due process.

DISCUSSION

HN2[] Review of the grant of a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is de novo, and we must construe in Hertz's favor factual allegations in the complaint. Allen v. Westpoint-Pepperell, Inc., 945 F.2d 40, 44 (2d Cir. 1991). Our consideration, like the district court's, is limited to facts stated on the face of the complaint and in documents appended [7] to the complaint or incorporated in the complaint by reference, as well as to matters of which judicial notice may be taken. Id. Dismissal of the complaint is proper only where "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) (footnote omitted).

A. The Sherman Act.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act HN3[] provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States * * * is declared to be illegal."

15 U.S.C. § 1.

Initially we note that by controlling one aspect of the pricing process for rental cars, the Hertz law on its face restrained trade within the meaning of § 1 of the Sherman act. See National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978) ("Price is the 'central nervous system of the economy,' and an agreement that 'interferes with the setting of price by free market forces' is illegal on its face."). In National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs [8] , the Supreme Court concluded that an agreement among competitors to refuse to discuss prices with potential customers until after negotiations had resulted in the selection of an engineer restrains trade within the meaning of § 1 of the Sherman Act. The Court aptly noted, "while this is not price fixing as such, no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement." Id. at 692. The agreement impeded the ordinary give and take of the market place. Id.

The fact that Local Law No. 21 does impose a restraint on trade only marks the beginning of our analytical journey, however, because HN4[] the broad language of the Sherman Act precludes only those restraints of trade that are unreasonable. Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988); Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); see generally Earl W. Kintner, 2 Federal Antitrust Law § 9.20, at 56 (1980). Unreasonable contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade enacted by state and local governments are unconstitutional [9] as preempted by federal antitrust laws. See generally Phillip E. Areeda and Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 209, at 60 (Supp. 1992).

The threshold requirement of the statute is that there be a "contract, combination, * * * or conspiracy" to restrain trade or commerce. This element of the statute is usually clear when the conduct at issue is that of private parties; however, when the actor is a local governmental unit, two additional questions must be answered. The first arises from the Supreme Court's holding in [*126] Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, 106 S. Ct. 1045 (1986), that in some circumstances, discussion of which follows, action by a city may not be a contract, combination, or conspiracy at all. Id. at 266-68. The second additional question addresses the extent to which the local governmental unit may be entitled to share in the immunity from antitrust liability that is accorded state actors, a topic that need be addressed only if we conclude that the challenged action conflicts with antitrust laws. Id. at 264. Finally, although courts have deemed some restraints so anticompetitive that [10] they are held per se invalid, the presumption is that restraints are examined in light of the rule of reason -- a more flexible standard that demands consideration of a variety of factors. Thus, we must also consider the appropriate standard by which to measure the reasonableness of the city's action.

The antitrust issues we must address, therefore, can be summarized as follows: (1) whether there is a contract, combination or conspiracy, (2) whether the city enjoys state-action immunity from antitrust liability, (3) the possible applicability of per se analysis to the city's law, and finally, (4) whether the rule of reason is the appropriate measure of Sherman Act liability for this municipal defendant. We will discuss each issue as applied to Local Law No. 21.

1. Contract, Combination, or Conspiracy.

The Supreme Court addressed the issue of municipal antitrust liability in Fisher, where the City of Berkeley had promulgated a rent-control ordinance that was administered by an independent, quasi-judicial board. The board calculated the annual, general rent adjustments and processed individual claims for variances. Opponents of the ordinance argued that it required [11] price-fixing that, under the traditional standards, was a per se unreasonable restraint of trade. The Supreme Co urt rejected this proposed analysis, and instead held that, on the facts before it, the city's action was not "concerted" -- it did not meet the threshold requirement of being a contract, combination, or conspiracy. This was so because "the rent ceilings imposed by the [city] Ordinance and maintained by the Rent Stabilization Board have been unilaterally imposed by government upon landlords to the exclusion of private control." Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266. Thus, the Court held the Berkeley ordinance to be a "unilateral action outside the purview of § 1." Id. at 266-67.

The Court then re-examined its two earlier cases that had addressed governmental antitrust liability. California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980); Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 71 S. Ct. 745 (1951). Despite the lack of an agreement between any of the regulated parties, the Supreme Court found in both Midcal and Schwegmann Bros [12] . that the pertinent state statute called for private industry to engage in price-fixing, which the court held to be per se illegal. The Fisher Court explained that the factor distinguishing Midcal and Schwegmann Bros. was the role played by the governmental body in implementing the legislation. In both cases, the state had dictated price-setting that was to be performed not by the state, but by wholesalers and producers in the liquor industry.

The Fisher Court explained:

> HN5[] Not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1. Certain restraints may be characterized as "hybrid," in that nonmarket mechanisms merely enforce private marketing decisions. Where private actors are thus granted "a degree of private regulatory power," the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1.

475 U.S. at 267-68 (citations omitted).

Fisher can be read to require us to examine first whether Local Law No. 21 qualifies as a "unilateral" restraint; if it does it falls outside § 1 of the Sherman Act, because it is not a "contract, combination * * * or conspiracy." In [13] dismissing Hertz's Sherman Act claim, the district court adopted the city's view that the local law was a unilateral municipal action.

[*127] The Hertz law, however, lacks several features of the "unilateral" Berkeley ordinance. First, the law is not a "pure regulatory scheme", Fisher, 475 U.S. at 269, because it is not a "scheme" at all; the law is simply a directive for all rental-car companies doing business in New York City to remove one factor from their competitive-pricing structures. Second, the law lacks the independent, quasi-judicial board that in Berkeley could adjust rates and provide relief in individual circumstances. Finally, the City of Berkeley was operating in an area vital to its municipal authority -- housing; less vital is the rental-car industry in New York City.

Nor does the Hertz law easily fit the fact pattern of the cases held to involve "hybrid" restraints -- those that restrain trade through some combination of governmental and private conduct. The three Supreme Court cases in this category involved the pricing of liquor. 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, 107 S. Ct. 720 (1987); Midcal, 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937; [14] Schwegmann Bros., 341 U.S. 384, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 71 S. Ct. 745. Each involved classic price-setting that was delegated by statute or regulation to private industry but was left unsupervised by the state legislature. The Hertz law, in contrast, does not purport to authorize price-setting by private industry; it simply eliminates an element of price competition among industry members.

We reject the city's suggestion to apply Fisher expansively so as to view Local Law No. 21 as a unilateral action that lacks the degree of private-governmental agreement required to be a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade. To do so would remove from the reach of the antitrust laws all local governmental actions not fitting the precise fact pattern of the liquor cases, and would preclude examination of their anticompetitive effects. At the same time, we also reject Hertz's contention that this case, like the "hybrid" liquor cases, presents a straight-forward example of price-fixing that is per se invalid. Present here are several anticompetitive risks, gleaned from the Supreme Court's antitrust jurisprudence, that might warrant antitrust scrutiny for this municipal entity. [15] The Hertz law may permit the city to impose on an industry unnecessary monetary costs that will have an extraterritorial impact. See, e.g., City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 405, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978) (plurality). The law may also obstruct regional efficiency and trigger economic Balkanization, because of the possibility that many independent local governments may follow suit and consequently distort the national market economy. Id. at 404, 408.

In short, while we have found no case dealing with a governmental act having attributes similar to the Hertz law, we conclude that the Hertz law is not a "unilateral" restraint. It is closer to, although not identical with, those actions categorized as "hybrid", because it removes one element of competition in car-rental pricing, but does not further regulate or review the prices set by rental companies. In addition, some of the risks of anticompetitive behavior enunciated in City of Lafayette and relied on in 324 Liquor Corp. are present in Local Law No. 21.

Accordingly, we disagree with the district court's conclusion that the Hertz law is a unilateral [16] restraint that lacks the requisite contract, combination, or conspiracy to warrant antitrust review. Local Law No. 21 calls for anticompetitive private conduct in setting rental rates and making rental decisions. The law thus merits hybrid treatment; however, we must first determine whether the city has pointed to sufficient state involvement in the enactment of Local Law No. 21 to entitle it to state-action immunity.

2. State-Action Immunity from Antitrust Liability for Municipality.

Having determined that the Hertz law is a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, we now turn to the issue of whether New York State has cloaked the City of New York with immunity for any antitrust violations created by the Hertz law. Fisher, 475 U.S. at 264 (consideration of state-action immunity unnecessary [*128] unless actual conflict with antitrust laws is established).

The Supreme Court in Parker v. Brown held that HN6[] the Sherman Act does not apply when anticompetitive restraints are imposed by the states "as an act of government". 317 U.S. 341, 352 (1943). Under principles of federalism and state sovereignty, a state actor [17] is accorded absolute immunity from antitrust liability. See City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991).

Local governments may be entitled to state-action immunity. While Parker state-action immunity does not apply directly to local governments, a municipality's restriction of competition may sometimes be an authorized implementation of state policy; if it is, then the municipality may share in the immunity accorded to state actions.

City of Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 413 (municipal government shares in Parker immunity if its activity was pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service).

The Supreme Court in FTC v. Ticor Title Insurance Co. reiterated the "two-part test applicable to instances where private parties participate in a [local government's] price fixing regime. 'First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself.'" 112 S. Ct. 2169, 2176 (1992) (quoting Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105). [18]

Thus, a municipality may benefit from the "state action" exemption only if it has acted pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 52, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810, 102 S. Ct. 835 (1982) (plurality); 324 Liquor Corp., 479 U.S. at 343-45. As we held in an analogous Clayton Act context:

> The clarity of such [articulated state] policy is often a function of how broadly the legislation is drawn, with the existence of such policy being more readily discernible in narrowly drawn legislation. The legislation must contain an affirmative showing of intent, though it need do no more than authorize the challenged conduct. So long as the resulting anticompetitive activities are a foreseeable consequence of the state delegation, the "clear articulation" standard has been met. To meet this requirement the party claiming the state action defense must show that the "legislature contemplated the action complained of." "Active state supervision" -- is no longer required in the case of a municipality.

Cine 42nd St. Theater Corp. v. Nederlander Org., 790 F.2d 1032, 1043 (2d Cir. 1986) (citations omitted).

The [19] State of New York has not granted New York City any particular authority over the car-rental field; instead the Hertz law represents an exercise of the city's home-rule powers granted by the state constitution and statutes. See N.Y. Const. art. IX, § 2(c)(i) (McKinney 1987) ("Every local government shall have power to adopt and amend local laws not inconsistent with the provisions of this constitution or any general law relating to its property, affairs or government"); Municipal Home Rule Law § 10 (McKinney 1969). The Supreme Court has held that a similar home-rule provision in the Colorado state constitution reflected the state's position of "mere neutrality" regarding local activities undertaken pursuant to that provision. Community Communications Co., 455 U.S. at 55 ("A State that allows its municipalities to do as they please can hardly be said to have 'contemplated' the specific anticompetitive actions for which municipal liability is sought.").

Thus, local government actions that are grounded in home-rule authority are not carried out pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. See also Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985); [20] Cine 42nd St., 790 F.2d 1032. In adopting Local Law No. 21 the City of New York did not operate from any clearly articulated state policy that encourages or foresees anti-competitive activity in the rental-car field. Cf. Cine 42nd St., 790 F.2d at 1043-44; see also Montauk-Caribbean Airways, Inc. v. Hope, 784 F.2d 91, 95 (2d [*129] Cir.) (citing Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 38), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 872, 93 L. Ed. 2d 172, 107 S. Ct. 248 (1986).

We conclude, therefore, that in this challenge to Local Law No. 21, New York City is not protected by state-action immunity from antitrust liability. We recognize that when a state or local governmental action compels private anticompetitive behavior, state-action immunity would additionally require a showing that the state actively supervised that private conduct. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105. However, because we have determined that the lack of a clear state policy directing the city's legislative efforts prevents the city from enjoying state-action immunity here, we need not further address [21] the active-supervision question.

Having determined, based on the allegations of the complaint, that the Hertz law comes closest to being a "hybrid" restraint, i.e., a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, involving the city and the car-rental industry, and that the city has no state-action immunity, we must reverse the district court's dismissal of the complaint and remand for further analysis of the remaining antitrust issues. To assist the parties and the district court on the remand, we set forth some guidance for some of the problems that remain in this difficult case.

3. Per Se Analysis.

A per se rule is used in the relatively narrow circumstance where courts have sufficient experience with the activity to recognize that it is plainly anticompetitive and lacks any redeeming virtue. Broadcast Music Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys. Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 8, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979); see also Business Elecs., 485 U.S. at 723 (per se rule appropriate only for manifestly anticompetitive conduct that would almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output); National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 107-08, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984) [22] (court reluctant to extend per se analysis where economic impact of challenged practice not immediately obvious). For example, an agreement to fix prices is invalid regardless of any offer of proof to establish that the resulting price is reasonable. Northern Pac. Ry. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958); see also Schwegmann Bros., 341 U.S. at 385-86; Catalano Inc. v. Target Sales Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 648, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, 100 S. Ct. 1925 (1980) (per curiam) (agreements between private competitors to eliminate discounts is per se an illegal price fixing scheme).

Hertz argues that this case is sufficiently akin to horizontal price fixing to warrant per se treatment. We disagree. The setting is inappropriate for per se analysis. Not only have courts had little exposure to issues surrounding efforts by local governments to restrain trade through regulation, but this particular effort involves the novel claim by the city that the local law promotes a non-economic objective: the virtue of anti-discrimination.

Moreover, this case cannot be easily grouped with previous cases: it is not a rate-setting case, see [23] , e.g., Ticor Title Ins. Co., 112 S. Ct. at 2169 and Fisher, 475 U.S. at 260, as the law does not set a maximum or minimum price for rental cars in New York City; nor is it a zoning case, see, e.g., Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991); a licensing case, see, e.g., Broadcast Music, Inc., 441 U.S. at 1 and United States Gypsum Co. v. National Gypsum Co., 352 U.S. 457, 1 L. Ed. 2d 465, 77 S. Ct. 490 (1957); or a franchise-granting case, see, e.g., Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Finally, and most significantly, the Supreme Court has specifically suggested that per se treatment may not be well tailored to assessing municipal antitrust liability, noting that "certain activities which might appear anticompetitive when engaged in by private parties, take on a different complexion when adopted by a local government." Community Communications Co., 455 U.S. at 56 n.20 (quoting City of Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 417 n.48). [24]

[*130] In short, we do not think it wise to adopt in this case, a restrictive per se rule that would require automatic invalidation of a local government's duly-passed legislation, without regard to the circumstances prompting its enactment.

4. Rule-of-Reason.

We next consider the applicability of the rule of reason to the Hertz law.

> Ordinarily, whether particular concerted action violates § 1 of the Sherman Act is determined through case-by-case application of the so-called rule of reason -- that is, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition."

Business Elecs., 485 U.S. at 723 (citation omitted).

The traditional rule-of-reason approach requires the defendant to demonstrate that the procompetitive aspects of the agreement outweigh its anticompetitive aspects.

> [The Rule of Reason] has been used to give the [Sherman] Act both flexibility and definition, and its central principle of antitrust analysis has remained constant. Contrary to its name, the Rule does not open the field of antitrust inquiry to any [25] argument in favor of a challenged restraint that may fall within the realm of reason. Instead, it focuses directly on the challenged restraint's impact on competitive conditions.

National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 688.

Agreements subject to a rule-of-reason analysis have traditionally been evaluated for their competitive effect by > analyzing the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed. * * * . The purpose of the analysis is to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint; it is not to decide whether a policy favoring competition is in the public interest, or in the interest of the members of an industry. Subject to exceptions defined by statute, that policy decision has been made by the Congress.

Id. at 692 (footnote omitted).

"'The factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.'" Business Elecs., 485 U.S. at 723 (quoting Continental T.V., Inc., 433 U.S. at 49). [26]

Significantly, none of these rule-of-reason cases has involved a challenge to restraints on competition imposed by municipal activity. Application of the rule to this emerging legal field will require considerable tailoring to achieve even an approximate fit.

Under the rule-of-reason approach, the district court must balance the city's articulated justifications for promulgating the anticompetitive regulation against the antitrust harm caused by the regulation. National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 688; accord National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 468 U.S. at 104 (under Sherman Act, one must judge validity of restraint on trade according to its impact on competition). The legality of the city's restraint on trade must be determined by weighing all the relevant factors -- including the history of the restraint, and the evil to be prevented, see, e.g., Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) (rule of reason requires weighing of relevant circu mstances of case); United States v. National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs, 404 F. Supp. 457, 460-61 (D.D.C. 1975) [27] (same); the history and practices of the relevant industry, see, e.g., Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) (inquiry into market power and market structure necessary to gauge combination under rule-of-reason approach); Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 343-44, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982) (same); the local government's reasons for adopting the particular restraint; and the end sought to be attained, see Affiliated Capital Corp. v. City of Houston, 735 F.2d 1555, 1571 (5th Cir. 1984) (en [*131] banc) (Higginbotham, J., concurring) (adaptation of rule of reason to anticompetitive local governmental conduct requires courts to consider factors not traditionally within rule, including above listed factors). Accordingly, the district court may consider the city's articulated concern of avoiding nondiscrimination by ensuring that Hertz's pricing and rental decisions do not burden minorities and the working poor. This places into the economic scale of traditional antitrust analysis noneconomic federal values embodied in the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments [28] as well as in many of the federal statutes. We think consideration of such a federal policy is appropriate within the rule-of-reason analysis as it is applied to a municipality.

Hertz, of course, is entitled on remand to present evidence disputing the validity and strength of the city's justifications for this anticompetitive regulation. The city's justifications must be assessed in light of its stated end; this makes relevant Hertz's explanation for its price increase -- specifically, its claim to have experienced exceedingly high liability losses in certain boroughs. The city's history of negotiating with Hertz concerning what it felt to be an objectionable pricing policy is relevant, as is Hertz's consideration of less burdensome pricing methods. For example, the court may find relevant the city's contention that Hertz could recoup its losses by raising each renter's fee by $ 3.29 in the New York region.

In conclusion, on the antitrust issue, we remand to the district court for further proceedings.

B. Commerce Clause.

Hertz also contends that Local Law No. 21 impermissibly burdens interstate commerce. See U.S. Const. art. I § 8 cl. 3. HN7[] The constitution's affirmative grant [29] to congress of powers over interstate commerce means that states have limited authority to erect barriers against interstate trade, see Lewis v. BT Inv. Managers, Inc., 447 U.S. 27, 35, 64 L. Ed. 2d 702, 100 S. Ct. 2009 (1980), a limitation that applies equally to municipal legislation. Dean Milk v. City of Madison, 340 U.S. 349, 356, 95 L. Ed. 329, 71 S. Ct. 295 (1951). Hertz alleged that the city's local law violates the commerce clause "to the extent that the Hertz Law effectively forces Hertz to raise its rental rates to residents of other states * * * ." Hertz outlines in its complaint and other papers several means by which it might comply with Local Law No. 21 and still avoid being overwhelmed by the increased costs of renting to city residents. The corporation could (1) cease entirely its operations in New York City; (2) raise its rates for out-of-state residents who rent in the New York area; or (3) raise rental rates in other states.

The district court rejected this commerce-clause claim. Judge Knapp found that Hertz has the additional option of raising its rates evenly throughout all of New York City, or "finding other ways of dealing with the problem". These options, said [30] t he district court, take the sting out of the alleged injury to interstate commerce.

To make out a claim that this regulation impermissibly burdens the commerce clause, Hertz must sufficiently plead that the local law discriminates against interstate commerce either on its face, or in its effect. Hughes v. Oklahoma, 441 U.S. 322, 336, 60 L. Ed. 2d 250, 99 S. Ct. 1727 (1979). Local Law No. 21 does not burden out-of-state customers expressly; it states only that rental-car companies may not "impose fees or charges based on [a] person's residence." Since the law does not facially burden interstate commerce, it must be upheld unless the actual burden it "imposes on interstate trade [is] 'clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits'". Maine v. Taylor, 477 U.S. 131, 138, 91 L. Ed. 2d 110, 106 S. Ct. 2440 (1986) (quoting Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174, 90 S. Ct. 844 (1970)).

In its complaint, Hertz has not sufficiently alleged that Local Law No. 21 has a discriminatory impact on interstate commerce. First, Hertz does not allege that an *inter*state effect must flow from this *intra*state municipal regulation. Second, Hertz does not define what [31] significant burden on interstate commerce is posed by Local Law No. 21. Hertz itself tells us that it can comply with the local law and maintain its profit level in New York City through a range of [*132] options, not all of which impact interstate commerce. Thus, Hertz has yet to explain how the city's car-pricing ordinance compels action that discriminates against interstate commerce.

Of course, there was little time available in the district court proceedings to fully explore the implications of Hertz's commerce-clause argument. Only four days elapsed between the filing of the complaint and the district court's order dismissing the complaint. Since this case must be remanded for the district judge to apply a rule-of-reason analysis to Hertz's Sherman Act claim, Hertz should have the opportunity, if it so desires, to develop further its contentions with respect to the law's impact on interstate commerce.

C. Remaining Claims.

Judge Knapp also dismissed Hertz's remaining contentions that Local Law No. 21 violates 42 U.S.C. § 1983 because it (1) is an unconstitutional regulatory taking, (2) impermissibly impairs existing contracts, and (3) offends [32] principles of substantive due process.

1. Regulatory Taking.

Hertz has failed to state a claim that Local Law No. 21 imposes a regulatory taking in violation of the fourteenth amendment. See, e.g., Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co., 467 U.S. 986, 1005, 81 L. Ed. 2d 815, 104 S. Ct. 2862 (1984); Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U.S. 393, 415, 67 L. Ed. 322, 43 S. Ct. 158 (1922) (regulation of property which goes too far may amount to taking). Even assuming that takings cases connected with the diminution of real estate values apply in this business setting, the local law does not effect a taking because Hertz and other rental-car companies retain the right to set rates in New York City at any level they desire. See, e.g., Sun Oil Co. v. United States, 215 Ct. Cl. 716, 572 F.2d 786, 818 (Ct. Cl. 1978) (per curiam) (not every deprivation of use, possession, or control is "taking"; character and extent of interference must be examined). Hertz unquestionably retains an "economically viable" use of its property, see, e.g., Penn Cent. Transp. Co. v. New York

City, 438 U.S. 104, 127, 138, n.36 57 L. Ed. 2d 631, 98 S. Ct. 2646 (1978), and finally, the taking [33] cases offered by Hertz relating to the public-utility industry do not apply here. See Duquesne Light Co. v. Barasch, 488 U.S. 299, 306-08, 102 L. Ed. 2d 646, 109 S. Ct. 609 (1989) (defining constraints posed by takings clause on state-rate regulation of public utility).

2. Impairment of Contract.

Hertz alleged that application of Local Law No. 21 to car-rental contracts in place before it takes effect would unconstitutionally impair those contracts by forbidding Hertz to collect fees for rental cars that it had already contracted to receive. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10. The city, however, has removed the Hertz law from any collision with the dictates of the contract clause, having assured us that the law does not apply to these outstanding contracts.

3. Substantive Due Process.

HN8[] Economic regulation need only be rationally related to a legitimate governmental purpose. New Motor Vehicle Bd. v. Orrin W. Fox Co., 439 U.S. 96, 106-07, 58 L. Ed. 2d 361, 99 S. Ct. 403 (1978) (since demise of substantive due process in economic area, due process provides legislative bodies broad scope to experiment with economic problems); Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland, 437 U.S. 117, 124, 57 L. Ed. 2d 91, 98 S. Ct. 2207 (1978) [34] (citing Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 730-31, 10 L. Ed. 2d 93, 83 S. Ct. 1028 (1963) (searching scrutiny of economic legislation has long been abandoned; "vague contours" of due process clause do not permit courts to sit as superlegislature to weigh wisdom of legislation).

The city contends that the Hertz Law will help prevent discriminatory business practices in the rental-car industry, by requiring rental-car companies to refrain from using a renter's residence in pricing and renting decisions. The city's rationale is that rental-car companies must find other means of determining and dealing with the customers who are likely to cause them high liability expenses; thus, individual customers would enjoy rates more closely related to [*133] their own particular risk. Since it is not irrational to conclude that the city's regulation may cut down on incidents of discrimination in car rentals based on the renter's residence, the Hertz law passes this substantive due process challenge.

4. Section 1983.

42 U.S.C. § 1983 creates civil liability for deprivations of certain federal rights under color of state law. It is a procedural vehicle which permits [35] suit for violations of constitutional and federal statutory provisions. See generally 1 Martin A. Schwartz & John E. Kirklin, Section 1983 Litigation: Claims, Defenses, and Fees (2d ed. 1991). The district court dismissed Hertz's § 1983 claim because it rejected all of the underlying constitutional and antitrust claims. While we affirm the district court's dismissal of Hertz's claims of a regulatory taking, impairment of contracts, and violation of substantive due process, we are remanding for further consideration of its antitrust and commerce-clause claims, and leave it for the district court to determine what role, if any, § 1983 may have on the resolution of those claims.

CONCLUSION

Reversed and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

End of Document

Piazza v. Major League Baseball

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

August 4, 1993, Decided ; August 4, 1993, Filed, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. 92-7173

Reporter

831 F. Supp. 420 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10552 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,315

VINCENT M. PIAZZA, et al. v. MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL, et al.

Core Terms

Baseball, exemption, team, plaintiffs', Partnership, anti trust law, exhibition, Sherman Act, antitrust, League, players, major league baseball, baseball game, ownership, rights, interstate commerce, stare decisis, Investors, relocate, professional baseball, decisions, federal government, cases, franchise, redress, entity, defendants', deprivation, color of state law, motion to dismiss

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > General Overview

HN1[ ] Elements, Color of State Law

See 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[ ] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Sherman Anti-trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 provides, in pertinent part, that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States is declared to be illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Anti-trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, provides that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN4[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Dismissal is proper under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) only when the claim clearly appears to be immaterial and made solely for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction or is wholly insubstantial and frivolous.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN5[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), even if not wholly insubstantial, a claim may be dismissed if no facts have been alleged upon which relief may be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN6[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) motion places the burden of persuasion on the plaintiff to show that his claims are not wholly insubstantial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN7[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the defendant bears the burden of showing that no claim has been stated.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN8[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A claim dismissed as legally insufficient under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) should properly be treated as having been dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) where the plaintiff has approached the defendant's motion as having been made under Rule 12(b)(6).

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Constitutional Sources

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN9[] Jurisdictional Sources, Constitutional Sources

A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) requires the court to view all factual allegations in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn from them as true. Every doubt is to be resolved in favor of the plaintiff, and the complaint can be dismissed only if the plaintiff has alleged no set of facts upon which relief can be granted.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN10[] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

In most instances, the limitations of the First and Fifth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution restrict only federal government action, not the action of private entities. When governmental authority dominates the activities of a private entity to such an extent that the entity is deemed to act with the authority of the government, however, the entity will be subject to constitutional restraints.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

HN11[] Elements, Color of State Law

Determining whether the conduct of a private entity should be attributed to the federal government requires employment of the two-part "state action" analysis asking first whether the claimed constitutional deprivation resulted from the exercise of a right or privilege having its source in federal authority, and second, whether the private party charged with the deprivation could be described in all fairness as a federal actor.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

HN12[] Elements, Color of State Law

A government normally can be held responsible for a private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice of the defendant must in law be deemed to be that of the government.

Constitutional Law > Privileges & Immunities

Constitutional Law > Relations Among Governments > Privileges & Immunities

HN13[] Constitutional Law, Privileges & Immunities

See U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Joint Ventures

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Participation as State Action

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > State Agents

HN14[] Color of State Law, Joint Ventures

A private defendant's joint participation with a state official in a conspiracy to deprive another of constitutionally protected rights constitutes both state action essential to show a direct violation of a plaintiff's rights and action "under color of state law" for purposes of 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Public Records

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > General Overview

HN15[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A court may take judicial notice of matters of public record, without converting a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN16[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires that pleadings contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Under this Rule, the complaint must provide the defendant with fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN17[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

A federal court may not apply a pleading requirement more stringent than that provided for in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, even in 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 litigation. Unless the Federal Rules provide for heightened specificity, federal courts and litigants must rely on summary judgment and control of discovery to weed out unmeritorious claims sooner rather than later.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > State-Authorized Actions

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

HN18[] Color of State Law, State-Authorized Actions

The "close nexus" test requires a determination of whether the state in 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 litigation has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice of a private entity must in law be deemed to be that of the government. And where the challenged conduct constitutes "state action," that conduct is deemed to be conduct under color of state law and will support a suit under § 1983.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

HN19[] Shareholder Actions, Actions Against Corporations

A shareholder has standing to sue individually when he or she has been injured directly and independently of the corporation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN20[] Regulated Industries, Sports

Absent a per se violation, a cause of action under the Sherman Anti-trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, requires, inter alia, an allegation of injury to competition in relevant product and geographic markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN21[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A relevant product market may be defined as a market for which the parties compete, as opposed to one in which they compete.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN22[] Private Actions, Standing

To determine standing under the Sherman Anti-trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, courts balance the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN23[] Private Actions, Standing

The directness of injury and causation for antitrust standing purposes depends upon whether the plaintiff has alleged a direct causal connection between the defendant's purported antitrust activity and the plaintiff's alleged harm.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN24[] Sports, Baseball

Exemptions from the antitrust laws are to be narrowly construed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN25[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A "market" may be defined as any grouping of sales whose sellers, if unified by a hypothetical cartel or merger, could raise prices significantly above the competitive level.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN26[] Sports, Baseball

Baseball's exempted market from antitrust laws includes the reserve system and matters of league structure.

Counsel: [1] For VINCENT M. PIAZZA, VINCENT N. TIRENDI, PT BASEBALL, INC., PLAINTIFFS: BRUCE W. KAUFMANN, DILWORTH, PAXSON, KALISH & KAUFFMAN, 1735 MARKET STREET, 3200 THE MELLON BANK CENTER, PHILA, PA 19103, USA.

For MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL, AMERICAN LEAGUE OF PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL CLUBS, NATIONAL LEAGUE OF PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL CLUBS, OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL, FRED KUHLMANN, THE ORIOLES, THE BOSTON RED SOX BASEBALL CLUB, GOLDEN WEST BASEBALL CO., CHICAGO WHITE SOX, LTD., CLEVELAND INDIANS CO., JOHN E. FETZER, INC., KANSAS CITY ROYALS BASEBALL CORP., MILWAUKEE BREWERS BASEBALL CLUB, MINNESOTA TWINS, NEW YORK YANKEES PARTNERSHIP, THE OAKLAND ATHLETICS BASEBALL CO., SEATTLE BASEBALL, L.P., B.R. RANGERS ASSOCIATES, LTD., TORONTO BLUE JAYS BASEBALL CLUB, ATLANTA NATIONAL BASEBALL CLUB, INC., CHICAGO NATIONAL LEAGUE BALL CLUB, INC., THE CINCINNATI REDS, HOUSTON SPORTS ASSOCIATION, INC., LOS ANGELES DODGERS, INC., MONTREAL BASEBALL CLUB, LTD., STERLING DOUBLEDAY ENTERPRISES, L.P., THE PHILLIES, PITTSBURGH ASSOCIATES, ST. LOUIS NATIONAL BASEBALL CLUB, INC., SAN DIEGO PADRES BASEBALL PARTNERSHIP, SAN FRANCISCO GIANTS, FLORIDA MARLINS, INC., COLORADO ROCKIES BASEBALL PARTNERSHIP, [2] 1993, LTD., DEFENDANTS: ARTHUR MAKADON, 30 S. 17TH ST., PHILA, PA 19103, USA.

Judges: Padova

Opinion by: JOHN R. PADOVA

Opinion

[*421] OPINION

Padova, J.

August 4, 1993

Plaintiffs allege that the organizations of professional major league baseball and an affiliated individual frustrated their efforts to purchase the San Francisco Giants baseball club (the "Giants") and relocate it to Tampa Bay, Florida. Plaintiffs charge these defendants with infringing upon their rights under the United States Constitution and violating federal antitrust laws and several state laws in the process.

Asserting that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over plaintiffs' federal and state claims and that plaintiffs' federal claims fail to state a cause of action, defendants move to dismiss this suit. With regard to plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims, defendants also claim exemption from antitrust liability under Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore, Inc. v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, 259 U.S. 200 (1922), and its progeny. For the following reasons, I will grant defendants' motion as to plaintiffs' direct claims under the Constitution; but I will deny defendants' motion in all other respects. [3] As to defendants' assertion of exemption from antitrust liability, I hold that the exemption created by Federal Baseball is inapplicable here because it is limited to baseball's "reserve system."

[*422] I. BACKGROUND

A. The Allegations [1]

Plaintiffs are Vincent M. Piazza and Vincent N. Tirendi, both Pennsylvania residents, and PT Baseball, Inc. ("PTB"), a Pennsylvania corporation wholly owned by Piazza and Tirendi. Pursuant to a written Memorandum of Understanding ("Memorandum") dated August 18, 1992, Piazza and Tirendi agreed with four other individuals, all Florida residents, to organize a limited partnership for the purpose of acquiring the Giants. (The parties to the Memorandum will be referred to collectively as the "Investors".)

The Investors anticipated that they would form individual corporations to serve as general partners of the partnership. Accordingly, on August 26, 1992, PTB entered into a [4] Limited Partnership Agreement (the "Partnership Agreement") with corporations owned by the other Investors. This Partnership Agreement implemented the intent of the Memorandum and created a partnership entity known as Tampa Bay Baseball Club, Ltd. (the "Partnership"). PTB agreed to contribute $ 27 million to the Partnership, making it the single largest contributor of Partnership capital.

Earlier, on August 6, 1992, the Investors had executed a Letter of Intent with Robert Lurie, the owner of the Giants, to purchase the Giants for $ 115 million. Pursuant to this Letter of Intent, Lurie agreed not to negotiate with other potential buyers of the Giants and to use his best efforts to secure from defendant Major League Baseball [2] [5] approval of the sale of the Giants to the Partnership and transfer of the team to the Suncoast Dome, located in St. Petersburg, Florida. [3]

As required by the rules of Major League Baseball, the Partnership submitted an application to that organization on September 4, 1992 to purchase the Giants and move the team to St. Petersburg. In connection with this application, Major League Baseball and its "Ownership Committee" undertook or purported to undertake a personal background check on the Investors. On September 10, 1992, defendant Ed Kuhlmann, Chairman of the Ownership Committee, stated at a press conference that, among other things, the personal background check on the Investors had raised a "serious question in terms of some of the people who were part of that group" and that "a couple of investors will not be in the group." Complaint at P 53. Kuhlmann elaborated that there was a "background" question about two of the investors rather than a question of financial capability and that something had shown up on a "security check." Id. Kuhlmann also stated that the "money" [6] of the two investors "would not have been accepted." Id. Immediately following Kuhlmann at the news conference, Jerry Reinsdorf, a member of the Ownership Committee, added that the Ownership Committee's concern related to the "out-of-state" money and that the "Pennsylvania People" had "dropped out." Complaint at P 56.

As the only principals of the Partnership who reside in Pennsylvania, Piazza and Tirendi [*423] aver that the clear implication of Kuhlmann's and Reinsdorf's comments, combined with the fact that Piazza and Tirendi are of Italian

---

[1] The following relevant facts were taken either directly or inferentially from plaintiffs' complaint.

[2] Plaintiffs describe defendant Major League Baseball as an unincorporated association comprised of two professional leagues, the American League and the National League, and their 28 professional baseball teams.

In addition to Major League Baseball, plaintiffs have named the following as defendants: American League of Professional Baseball Clubs; National League of Professional Baseball Clubs; Office of the Commissioner of Major League Baseball; Ed Kuhlmann; The Orioles, Inc.; The Boston Red Sox Baseball Club; Golden West Baseball Co.; Chicago White Sox, Ltd.; Cleveland Indians Co.; John E. Fetzer, Inc.; Kansas City Royals Baseball Corp.; Milwaukee Brewers Baseball Club; Minnesota Twins; New York Yankees Partnership; The Oakland Athletics Baseball Co.; Seattle Baseball, L.P.; B.R. Rangers Associates, Ltd.; Toronto Blue Jays Baseball Club; Atlanta National Baseball Club, Inc.; Chicago National League Ball Club, Inc.; The Cincinnati Reds; Houston Sports Association, Inc.; Los Angles Dodgers, Inc.; Montreal Baseball, Ltd.; Sterling Doubleday Enterprises, L.P.; The Phillies; Pittsburgh Associates; St. Louis National Baseball Club, Inc.; San Diego Padres Baseball Partnership; San Francisco Giants; Florida Marlins, Inc.; and Colorado Rockies Baseball.

All defendants will be referred to collectively as "Baseball".

[3] On August 28, 1992, the Partnership entered into an agreement with the City of St. Petersburg, Florida for management and use of the Florida Suncoast Dome.

descent, was that the personal background check had associated them with the Mafia and/or other criminal or organized criminal activity. Piazza and Tirendi further allege that they have never been involved in such activity; nor had they "dropped out" of the Partnership. They also allege that they were never apprised by Baseball or anyone else of the charges against them nor given an opportunity to be heard.

On September 11, 1992, plaintiffs' counsel sent letters to Major League Baseball, Kuhlmann, and Reinsdorf requesting immediate correction of these statements and their implications. Plaintiffs' counsel never received a response to these letters, [7] but on September 12, 1992, defendant Kuhlmann admitted to some members of the media that "there was no problem with the security check." Complaint at P 63.

On the same day that the Partnership submitted its application to purchase and relocate the franchise, Kuhlmann directed Lurie to consider other offers to purchase the Giants, in knowing violation of Lurie's exclusive agreement with the Partnership. On September 9, 1992, Bill White, President of the National League, invited George Shinn, a North Carolina resident, to make an alternative bid to purchase the Giants in order to keep the team in San Francisco. An alternative offer was ultimately made by other investors to keep the Giants in San Francisco. Even though this offer was $ 15 million less than the $ 115 million offer made by the Partnership, Major League Baseball formally rejected the proposal to relocate the Giants to the Tampa Bay area on November 10, 1992.

Plaintiffs allege that Baseball never intended to permit the Giants to relocate to Florida and failed to evaluate fairly and in good faith their application to do so. They claim that to avoid relocation of the Giants, Baseball set out to "destroy the financial capability [8] of the Partnership by vilifying plaintiffs." Complaint at P 65. And in addition to preventing plaintiffs' purchase and relocation of the Giants, plaintiffs allege that Baseball's allegedly defamatory statements cost them the loss of a significant contract in connection with one of their other businesses, which depends upon "impeccable personal reputations." Complaint at P 69.

B. The Claims

1. Federal claims

Plaintiffs first claim that the above actions of Baseball violated the First and Fifth Amendments to the United States Constitution by (1) depriving them of their liberty and property interests and privileges without due process of law, (2) denying them equal protection of the laws, and (3) impairing their freedom of contract and association. In this connection, plaintiffs claim that Baseball's actions should be attributed to the federal government, to which the constraints of the U.S. Constitution apply, because the federal government has granted Baseball a unique exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

Plaintiffs next assert a claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 (West 1981), [4] alleging that Baseball acted under color of state [9] law in unlawfully depriving them of the rights, privileges, immunities, freedoms, and liberties secured by Article IV, Section 2 of the U.S. Constitution, as well as the First, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. Plaintiffs claim that Baseball's actions took place under color of state law because (a) Baseball is exempt from liability under state antitrust laws; (b) there is a close nexus and symbiotic relationship between Baseball and state and local governments; and (c) Baseball acted in concert with the City of San Francisco to prevent the Giants from being relocated.

4

> HN1[] Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory . . . subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress. . . .

42 U.S.C.A. § 1983.

[10] Plaintiffs' final federal claim asserts violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman [*424] Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1 and 2 (West 1973 & Supp. 1993). [5] Plaintiffs claim that Baseball has monopolized the market for Major League Baseball teams and that Baseball has placed direct and indirect restraints on the purchase, sale, transfer, relocation of, and competition for such teams. Plaintiffs allege that these actions have unlawfully restrained and impeded plaintiffs' opportunities to engage in the business of Major League Baseball.

[11] 2. State claims

Plaintiffs also assert claims against Baseball under Pennsylvania law for slander, libel, invasion of the right of privacy, false light, tortious interference with existing and prospective contractual business relations, unlawful restraint of trade, and civil conspiracy.

II. DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs aver that this Court has jurisdiction over their federal claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337, and 1343, and supplemental jurisdiction over their state law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367. Defendants move under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, for an order dismissing plaintiffs' federal claims and, in the event the federal claims are dismissed, for an order directing dismissal of plaintiffs' state claims for lack of supplemental jurisdiction.

A. Standard of Review

The standards for dismissal of a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) are different. HN4[] Dismissal is proper under Rule 12(b)(1) "only when the claim 'clearly appears to be immaterial and [12] made solely for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction or . . . is wholly insubstantial and frivolous.'" Kehr Packages, Inc. v. Fidelcor, Inc., 926 F.2d 1406, 1409 (3d Cir.)(quoting Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682 (1946)), cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 2839 (1991). HN5[] Under Rule 12(b)(6), however, the standard is lower; even if not wholly insubstantial, a claim may be dismissed if no facts have been alleged upon which relief may be granted. See id. at 1409-10; Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957). The respective burdens upon the parties differ as well. HN6[] A Rule 12(b)(1) motion places the burden of persuasion on the plaintiff to show that his claims are not wholly insubstantial; HN7[] under Rule 12(b)(6), the defendant bears the burden of showing that no claim has been stated. See Kehr Packages, 926 F.2d at 1409-10.

Challenges for failure to state a cause of action "ordinarily should be made under Rule 12(b)(6)." Id. at 1409. The Third Circuit has held that HN8[] a claim dismissed as legally insufficient under Rule [13] 12(b)(1) should properly be treated as having been dismissed pursuant to 12(b)(6) where the plaintiff has approached the defendant's motion as having been made under Rule 12(b)(6). See id. Until very recently, both plaintiffs and defendants have treated defendants' motion as having been made solely under Rule 12(b)(6) -- defendants informed plaintiffs and the Court that they were proceeding under Rule 12(b)(1) only after the Court raised the point during oral argument and after nearly all of the issues had been fully briefed by both parties. Even at this late stage, however, defendants have not called into question, as required by Kehr Packages, the authority of this Court to exercise jurisdiction over plaintiffs' claims under the federal Constitution, federal civil rights act, and federal antitrust laws. Thus, like Kehr Packages, plaintiffs' complaint here is more appropriately evaluated for legal sufficiency HN9[] under Rule 12(b)(6), which requires that this Court view all factual allegations in the complaint and all [*425] reasonable inferences that can be drawn from them as true. See id. at 1410. Every doubt is to be resolved in [5] Section 1 of the Sherman Act HN2[] provides, in pertinent part, that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is declared to be illegal . . . ." 15 U.S.C.A. § 1.

---

In pertinent part, section 2 of the Sherman Act HN3[] provides that "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states . . . shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . ." 15 U.S.C.A. § 2.

favor [14] of the plaintiff, and the complaint can be dismissed only if the plaintiff has alleged no set of facts upon which relief can be granted. Id.; Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. at 45-46.

B. Direct Constitutional Claims

HN10[] In most instances, the limitations of the First and Fifth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution restrict only federal government action, not the action of private entities. See Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 936 (1982); Nguyen v. United States Catholic Conference, 719 F.2d 52, 54 (3d Cir. 1983). When governmental authority dominates the activities of a private entity to such an extent that the entity is deemed to act with the authority of the government, however, the entity will be subject to constitutional restraints. See Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., Inc., U.S. , 111 S. Ct. 2077, 2082 (1991).

HN11[] Determining whether the conduct of a private entity should be attributed to the federal government requires employment of the two-part "state action" analysis set forth by the Supreme Court in Lugar v. Edmondson Oil, 457 U.S. at 937-42. [15] See Leesville Concrete, 111 S. Ct. at 2082-83. The Lugar framework requires that this Court ask "first whether the claimed constitutional deprivation resulted from the exercise of a right or privilege having its source in [federal] . . . authority; and second, whether the private party charged with the deprivation could be described in all fairness as a [federal] . . . actor." Leesville Concrete, 111 S. Ct. at 2082-83 (applying Lugar)(citations omitted).

As to the first part of this analysis, plaintiffs claim that defendants, admittedly private entities, should be held subject to the restraints of the federal Constitution because their alleged activities have been countenanced by the federal government through (1) the unique exemption of Baseball from liability under the federal antitrust laws -- an exemption first conferred upon Baseball by the U.S. Supreme Court in Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore, Inc. v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, 259 U.S. 200 (1922), and later reaffirmed by the Court in Toolson v. New York Yankees, 346 U.S. 356 (1953), [16] and Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258 (1972); [6] and (2) congressional desire, expressed by its "positive inaction," Flood, 407 U.S. at 283-84, not to disapprove of these cases legislatively. With respect to the second prong of the Lugar analysis, plaintiffs assert in circuitous fashion that it would be "eminently fair" to describe Baseball as a federal actor because Baseball would not have committed the acts alleged were it not for the Federal Baseball antitrust exemption. See Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Complaint at 27.

Baseball does not dispute that plaintiffs plead adequately that its alleged actions resulted, in part, from the perceived comfort afforded by the Federal Baseball antitrust exemption. But Baseball contends that there must be more than a mere allegation that a private entity acted pursuant to [17] federal law or a federal judicial decision before the entity's actions can be attributed to the federal government. I agree.

The Supreme Court decisions in this area have held uniformly that HN12[] "a government 'normally can be held responsible for a private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice [of the defendant] must in law be deemed to be that of the [government].'" San Francisco Arts & Athletics, Inc. v. United States Olympic Comm., 483 U.S. 522, 546 (1987)(quoting Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1004 (1982)). Baseball's alleged efforts to defame plaintiffs and otherwise prevent them from acquiring and relocating the Giants simply cannot be attributed to the federal government [*426] under this standard. Plaintiffs do not plead that the federal government coerced Baseball into behaving in this manner; nor do they plead that either Federal Baseball and its progeny or "positive inaction" by Congress has in any way provided significant encouragement to Baseball to do so.

The closest plaintiffs come to pleading significant governmental [18] encouragement appears in the following paragraph of their complaint: "The federal antitrust exemption has permitted Major League Baseball to operate free of the legal restraints applicable to other interstate businesses and has thus enabled, encouraged and created the framework for the conduct of defendants complained of herein." Complaint at P 74 (emphasis added). Simply uttering the word "encouraged," however, is not enough to equate Baseball's actions with those of the federal government. The so-called encouragement alluded to in this paragraph is explained by plaintiffs themselves in the preceding clause as flowing solely from a judicially-created antitrust exemption, "which has permitted Baseball to operate free of the legal restraints applicable to other interstate businesses." Id. (emphasis added). Thus the governmental involvement alleged here can, at best, be viewed as mere acquiescence, as opposed to the "significant," active encouragement required to adequately link defendants' actions to the federal government. See United States Olympic Comm., 483 U.S. at 547 (mere governmental approval of or acquiescence in conduct of private [19] entity insufficient to equate private entity's actions with those of the federal government).

---

[6] The scope and nature of this exemption are discussed at Section D.3., infra.

In essence, plaintiffs claim that Baseball's actions should be attributed to the federal government solely because the federal government allegedly has exempted Baseball from the antitrust laws. But such reasoning was flatly rejected by the Supreme Court in Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345 (1974). There, the Court affirmed dismissal of a civil rights complaint proceeding under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 because the defendant private utility could not be viewed as a state actor. In so doing, the Court expressly rejected the plaintiff's contention that the private utility was a state actor because it enjoyed state-created monopoly status under the antitrust laws. Jackson, 419 U.S. at 351-52. The Court's analysis in Jackson is equally applicable here, where plaintiffs charge Baseball as a federal actor solely because it enjoys an alleged exemption from federal antitrust laws. Cf. United States Olympic Comm., 483 U.S. at 547 (Congress's conferral upon [20] private entity of exclusive right under trademark laws to use of term "Olympic" not enough to make private entity's choice of how to enforce that right a governmental decision). Compare Leesville Concrete, 111 S. Ct. at 2085 (private party using preemptory challenges to exclude jurors on basis of race found to be a governmental actor because of, inter alia, "direct and indispensable participation of the judge" (emphasis added)). I will therefore dismiss plaintiffs' direct constitutional claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a cause of action.

C. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983

To state a civil rights claim under 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983, plaintiffs must plead that Baseball (1) deprived them of a right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States while (2) acting under color of state law. See, e.g., Flagg Bros., Inc. v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149, 155 (1978); Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 150 (1970). With regard to the first element, plaintiffs plead that Baseball deprived [21] them of rights secured by Article IV, Section 2 [7] of the U.S. Constitution and the First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments. In particular, plaintiffs claim that Baseball (a) denied them the right to participate in the purchase of a Major League Baseball team from an owner who contracted to sell the team to plaintiffs; (b) impaired their liberty interest in their reputations by [*427] impugning their good names, honor, and integrity and foreclosing their personal, business, and occupational opportunities; and (c) discriminated against them on the basis of their state residence and ethnic heritage and denied them equal protection of the laws.

As to the second element of § 1983, plaintiffs aver that Baseball acted under color of state law because (a) Baseball is exempt from liability under state antitrust laws; (b) there is a symbiotic relationship and close nexus between Baseball [22] and state and local governments; and (c) Baseball acted in concert with the City of San Francisco to prevent the Giants from being relocated.

Baseball focuses its motion to dismiss solely upon the second element of § 1983, arguing that plaintiffs have not sufficiently pled that Baseball acted under color of state law. Because I conclude that plaintiffs have sufficiently pled that Baseball acted in concert with the City of San Francisco to deprive them of their constitutionally protected rights, I will address at length only that portion of plaintiffs' complaint, and deny Baseball's motion as to plaintiffs' § 1983 claims.

---

[7] HN13[] "The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States." U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1.

HN14[] A private defendant's joint participation with a state official in a conspiracy to deprive another of constitutionally protected rights constitutes both state action essential to show a direct violation of a plaintiff's rights and action "under color of state law" for purposes of § 1983. See Lugar v. Edmonson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 931 (1982)(explaining Adickes, 398 U.S. 144). In their complaint, plaintiffs plead the following facts:

> On information and belief, the City of San Francisco through its officials [23] and Major League Baseball have colluded to keep the Giants in San Francisco by, inter alia:
>
> . . .
>
> (c) The City of San Francisco has sought to induce the Giants not to relocate by agreeing to indemnify both (i) the team's present owner in connection with any actions filed against him relating to the sale of the team and (ii) potential investors competing with the Partnership to purchase the Giants. In turn, potential investors have agreed to indemnify Major League Baseball against legal liability relating to purchase of the Giants. San Francisco, therefore, in effect agreed to indemnify Major League Baseball in connection with the sale of the Giants.

Complaint at P 97.

In addition to these averments, plaintiffs direct the Court to the following public testimony of San Francisco Mayor Frank M. Jordan before a December 10, 1992 hearing of the United States Senate Subcommittee on Antitrust, Monopolies and Business Rights:

> In early September [1992], I [Mayor Jordan] went to New York to meet with Bill White, the President of the National League. I told Mr. White that the City [of San Francisco] had a vital economic interest in the Giants franchise and had [24] important contractual rights under the Stadium Lease. Without giving us any assurance of success, Mr. White told me that the League would consider a competing offer from San Francisco. Under the agreement to sell the Giants to Florida interests, the Giants owner allegedly promised to refuse to deal with all other [sic] who wanted to buy the team, even with those from San Francisco. Without the League's intervention, we would not have been permitted to submit a competing offer and the voices of Giants fans in San Francisco would not have been heard or considered.
>
> I cannot begin to tell you the amount of time and work that my staff and other officials of our city government devoted to this effort. I can tell you, however, that it was and continues to be worth every minute. . . . [8]

[25] [*428] Hearings on "Baseball's Antitrust Immunity" Before the Subcomm. on Antitrust, Monopolies and Business Rights of the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 102d Cong., 2d Sess. (Dec. 10, 1992)(prepared statement of Hon. Frank M. Jordan, Mayor, City and County of San Francisco)(emphasis added).

Baseball argues that the above allegations and testimony are insufficient to allege a conspiracy between Baseball and the City of San Francisco for purposes of § 1983's "under color of state law" element because plaintiffs do not plead with "sufficient particularity" that an agreement between Baseball and the City of San Francisco had been reached. I disagree.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) HN16[] requires that pleadings contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Under this Rule, the complaint must [8] Although this testimony is not included with plaintiffs' complaint, the parties agreed at oral argument that it may be treated by the Court as being part of the complaint for purposes of this motion, thus avoiding the need to convert Baseball's motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) into a motion for summary judgment. I note, however, that even without such an agreement, HN15[] the Court may take judicial notice of matters of public record, such as Mayor Jordan's testimony, without converting a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. See, e.g., Mack v. South Bay Beer Distrib., Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 (9th Cir. 1986); 5A Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure, § 1364 (1990).

---

provide the defendant with "fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47 (1957). Despite Baseball's citation of lower court decisions to the contrary, the Supreme Court has reiterated recently that HN17[] a federal court may [26] not apply a pleading requirement more stringent than that provided for in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, even in § 1983 litigation. See Leatherman v. Tarrant Cty. Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1163 (1993). The Court explained in Leatherman that unless the Federal Rules provide for heightened specificity, [9] "federal courts and litigants must rely on summary judgment and control of discovery to weed out unmeritorious claims sooner rather than later." Id.

Plaintiffs in this case have gone far beyond merely providing Baseball with fair notice of their claim and the grounds upon which it rests. Not only do they allege that the City of San Francisco colluded with Baseball in deprivation of their rights, but they also plead specifically that the City went so far as to indemnify Baseball from liability for [27] its actions in connection with the sale of the Giants. And plaintiffs offer testimony from San Francisco's Mayor of that city's direct pleas to Baseball to interfere with the sale and transfer, as well as testimony that Baseball ultimately did interfere. I find such allegations, which must be accepted as true on a motion to dismiss, more than adequate to create at least a reasonable inference that Baseball and the City of San Francisco "reached an understanding," Adickes, 398 U.S. at 152, to interfere with plaintiffs' constitutionally protected rights. [10] [28] Plaintiffs plead sufficient facts from which to conclude that Baseball may have acted "under color of state law," [11] [29] and I will therefore [*429] deny Baseball's motion to dismiss plaintiffs' § 1983 claim. [12]

---

[9] Rule 9(b), for example, requires that averments of fraud or mistake be pled with particularity. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

[10] As stated above, Baseball's motion to dismiss focuses solely upon the second element of § 1983 -- whether plaintiffs adequately plead that Baseball acted under color of state law by conspiring with the City of San Francisco. It challenges neither plaintiffs' averments that the alleged object of the conspiracy was in deprivation of plaintiffs' constitutionally protected rights, nor whether plaintiffs have adequately stated a cause of action for deprivation of such rights. Accordingly, I have no occasion to address the substantive constitutional allegations of plaintiffs' complaint.

[11] I also conclude that plaintiffs adequately plead that Baseball acted "under color of state law" under the so-called "close nexus" test, which examines a government's link to the challenged action and asks whether the actions of a private entity may be attributed to the state. See Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 351 (1974). Discussed above with respect to plaintiffs' direct constitutional claims, HN18[] the "close nexus" test requires a determination of whether the government -- the state in § 1983 litigation -- "'has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice [of a private entity] must in law be deemed to be that of the [government].'" San Francisco Arts & Athletics, Inc. v. United States Olympic Committee, 483 U.S. 522, 546 (1987)(quoting Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1004 (1982))(emphasis added).

Plaintiffs allege that the City of San Francisco sought to induce the Giants not to relocate by agreeing to, in effect, indemnify Baseball against legal liability relating to the purchase of the Giants. Additionally, the Mayor of San Francisco has testified in public that he pleaded with Baseball to intervene in the sale and transfer. It certainly would be reasonable to infer from these allegations, which I must accept as true on a motion to dismiss, that the City of San Francisco sought to actively encourage at least some of the allegedly unlawful actions taken by Baseball in this case. I find such encouragement, particularly the alleged financial indemnification of legal liability for these actions, to be just the sort of "significant encouragement" necessary to deem the actions of Baseball to be those of the City of San Francisco. And where the challenged conduct constitutes "state action," as it may here, that conduct is deemed to be conduct "under color of state law and will support a suit under § 1983." Lugar, 457 U.S. at 934.

Having based my decision to deny Baseball's motions on two alternative grounds, I do not address whether Baseball and the various political subdivisions where the game is played are so intertwined as to create a "symbiotic relationship" sufficient to deem Baseball's actions to have been taken under color of state law. Nor do I address whether Baseball's alleged exemption from state antitrust laws, in itself, makes Baseball's actions similarly attributable to the state.

[12] I reject Baseball's eleventh hour assertion that plaintiffs have no standing to sue under § 1983 because plaintiffs were "merely potential investors" in an allegedly injured partnership, giving only the Partnership entity standing to maintain such an action. As sole support for this argument Baseball cites Erlich v. Glasner, 418 F.2d 226 (9th Cir. 1969), which held that a shareholder lacks

[30] D. Antitrust

Baseball next moves to dismiss plaintiffs' claims under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1 and 2 (West 1973 & Supp. 1993), [13] and offers the following three reasons why these claims should be dismissed: (1) plaintiffs have failed to allege that Baseball's actions restrained competition in a relevant market; (2) plaintiffs have no standing to assert a Sherman Act claim; and (3) Baseball is exempt from liability under the Sherman Act. I will address each argument in turn.

[31] 1. Relevant Market

HN20[] Absent a per se violation, which neither party argues has been alleged here, a cause of action under the Sherman Act requires, inter alia, an allegation of injury to competition in relevant product and geographic markets. See Mid-South Grizzlies v. National Football League, 720 F.2d 772, 785-88 (3d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1215 (1984); Fleer Corp. v. Topps Chewing Gum, Inc., 658 F.2d 139, 147 (3d Cir. 1981). [14] Baseball argues [*430] that plaintiffs have not alleged an injury to competition in a relevant product market because plaintiffs were seeking to join Baseball, rather than compete with it.

[32] In support of this proposition, Baseball relies heavily upon the Third Circuit's holding in Mid-South Grizzlies. Plaintiffs in that case, the Mid-South Grizzlies (the "Grizzlies"), were a joint venture located in Memphis, Tennessee that owned a team in the World Football League ("WFL"). Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 775-76. After the WFL's demise, the Grizzlies applied for admission to the National Football League ("NFL"). Id. The NFL rejected the Grizzlies' application, and the Grizzlies subsequently brought suit against the NFL under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. The Third Circuit affirmed the district court's entry of summary judgment in favor of the NFL because, inter alia, "the Grizzlies [had] shown no actual or potential injury to competition resulting from the rejection of their application for an NFL franchise." Id. at 787.

---

standing to bring a § 1983 action on behalf of a corporation in which he holds shares. There are two difficulties with Baseball's argument. First, plaintiffs here are partners in a partnership, not shareholders of a corporation. Second, and perhaps more important, the Ninth Circuit after Glasner held that HN19[] "a shareholder does have standing when he or she has been injured directly and independently of the corporation." Soranno's Gasco, Inc. v. Morgan, 874 F.2d 1310, 1318 (9th Cir. 1989). Plaintiffs Piazza, Tirendi, and PTB plead repeatedly throughout their complaint that their own constitutional rights have been infringed and that they seek redress under § 1983 only for those infringements.

[13] In particular, plaintiffs allege the following: (1) Baseball's actions "have placed direct and indirect restraints on the purchase, sale, transfer and relocation of Major League Baseball teams and on competition in the purchase, sale, transfer and relocation of such teams, all of which directly and indirectly affect interstate commerce," Complaint at P 104; (2) "Major League Baseball is an unreasonable and unlawful monopoly created, intended and maintained by defendants for the purpose of permitting defendant team owners, an intentionally select and limited group, to reap enormous profits," id. at P 110; and (3) Baseball has achieved these restraints on trade and its monopoly status by engaging in "an unlawful combination and conspiracy . . . the substantial terms of which have been to eliminate all competition in the relevant market [defined as the market for American League and National League baseball teams], to exclude plaintiffs from participating in the relevant market, to establish monopoly control of the relevant market and to unreasonably restrain trade by denying the sale, transfer and relocation of the Giants to the Tampa Bay area," id. at P 111.

The effect of Baseball's actions, plaintiffs allege, has been, among other things, to restrain their right to engage in the business of Major League Baseball, restrain their right to competitively bid on Major League Baseball teams, and cause plaintiffs to lose contract rights and profits. Id. at P 112.

[14] For a concise discussion of the distinction between a per se violation of the Sherman Act and the so-called rule of reason analysis applicable to resolution of most Sherman Act cases, see Business Electric Corp. v. Sharp Electric Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723-24 (1988). Aside from determining whether plaintiffs must allege a loss of competition in relevant markets, which plaintiffs readily concede they must do, the distinction is not relevant to Baseball's motion to dismiss.

The Grizzlies had identified the relevant product market for Sherman Act purposes as "major-league professional football." Id. at 783. The NFL argued that denial of the Grizzlies' franchise application could not have injured competition [33] in this product market because there was no economic competition among league members capable of injury. Id. at 786. The Third Circuit agreed in part, finding on the record before it no evidence of economic competition between a potential NFL franchise located in Memphis, Tennessee and the nearest team geographically (280 miles away in St. Louis, Missouri). The court expressly declined, however, to hold that there could never be intra-league competition, noting that it was conceivable that "within certain geographic submarkets two league members [could] compete with one another for ticket buyers, for local broadcast revenue, and for sale of the concession items like food and beverages and team paraphernalia." Id. at 787 (footnote omitted). Baseball argues on the basis of this decision that it could not have injured competition in a relevant product market. I disagree.

There are two important distinctions between Mid-South Grizzlies and the instant case. First, unlike the Grizzlies, plaintiffs here were not seeking to join Major League Baseball through creation of a franchise but were attempting to purchase an [34] existing team. The import of this distinction turns upon the second distinction, which is that also unlike the Grizzlies, who identified the relevant product market as major-league professional football generally, plaintiffs here have identified the relevant product market as the market for existing American League and National League baseball teams. In other words, plaintiffs allege injury to competition in the team franchise market (the market for ownership of professional baseball teams, and the market for ownership of the Giants in particular). They do not seek to redress injury to an intra-league market comprised of Major League Baseball generally, which plaintiffs sought to join through the purchase of a franchise, and which may or may not include competition among present franchise owners. Plaintiffs aver that they were competing in the team franchise market with other potential investors located primarily outside of Major League Baseball for ownership of the Giants, and that Baseball interfered directly and substantially with competition in that market. I therefore reject Baseball's contention that plaintiffs have failed to allege a restraint on competition in a [35] relevant product market. See Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 532 n.9 (7th Cir. 1986) (stating in antitrust action brought by jilted suitors of the Chicago Bulls basketball team that the "national sports franchise market could be a relevant market" for Sherman Act purposes) (dictum)). [15] [36] Mid-South [*431] Grizzlies is therefore entirely distinguishable from the instant case. [16] [15] Wirtz also stands for the proposition that HN21[] a relevant product market may be defined as a market for which the parties compete, as opposed to one in which they compete. Wirtz, 870 F.2d at 531 (citing Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 369 (1973)). Thus a party may prevail under the Sherman Act if it was unlawfully excluded from a market, such as the market identified in Wirtz as the market for presentation of live basketball in Chicago, even if that party never met, nor intended to meet, the defendants in direct competition within that market. Plaintiffs argue here that they were competing with others outside Major League Baseball to join Major League Baseball and that Wirtz requires recognition that Baseball's alleged interference with that competition could be actionable under the Sherman Act. I agree.

---

Plaintiffs also argue that this case may fall into the exception noted by the Third Circuit in Mid-South Grizzlies (that intra-league competition between certain teams for ticket-purchasers, concessions, etc. conceivably may exist). Plaintiffs assert that if their antitrust claim survives Baseball's motion to dismiss, they will elicit evidence during discovery that defendant Florida Marlins, Inc. (the "Marlins") -- owner of a National League expansion team located in Miami, Florida -- colluded unlawfully with unnamed others to keep the Giants out of Florida in an effort to preserve the Marlins' alleged monopoly in that state over Major League Baseball television rights, fans, and concessions. To buttress this assertion, which does not appear in their complaint, plaintiffs have submitted several copies of newspaper articles that speculate or charge that the owner of the Marlins, Wayne Huizenga, engaged in such collusion. Although I am persuaded conceptually by plaintiffs' theory, I cannot base my holding upon it because their complaint does not even allude to such a scheme, nor do plaintiffs define as a relevant product market the market for baseball fans, television rights and concessions in the State of Florida. I note in this regard that plaintiffs have not filed for leave to amend their complaint to pursue such a theory.

[16] Similarly distinguishable are Seattle Totems Hockey Club, Inc. v. National Hockey League, 783 F.2d 1347 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 932 (1986), and Levin v. National Basketball Ass'n, 385 F. Supp. 149 (S.D.N.Y. 1974). Unlike the instant case but similar to Mid-South Grizzlies, Seattle Totems was an antitrust action arising from an unsuccessful attempt by the plaintiff in that case to join the National Hockey League ("NHL") through the creation of a franchise. The Ninth Circuit affirmed the district

[37] 2. Standing

The principles of standing applicable to alleged violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act are the same as those applicable to questions of standing under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 15 (West Supp. 1993). See Bogus v. American Speech & Hearing Ass'n, 582 F.2d 277, 288 n.13 (3d Cir. 1978). "In addressing the 'standing' of parties to bring a claim under § 4 of the Clayton Act, the Supreme Court has focused on the nexus between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's harm and on whether the harm alleged is of the type for which Congress provides a remedy." In re: Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., Nos. 91-1526/1586-1595/1627-1634, slip op. at 37, F.2d , 1993 WL 209530 (3d Cir. May 27, 1993, as corrected June 15, 1993). In Associated Gen. Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 545 (1983)("AGC"), the Supreme Court outlined a multi-factor inquiry to analyze nexus questions for purposes of standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act. As characterized recently by the Third Circuit, the AGC [38] standing factors are as follows:

> HN22[] (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiff's alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

[*432] Lower Lake Erie, slip op. at 41-42. These factors must be considered and balanced in light of the unique circumstances of each case. See Merican, Inc. v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., 713 F.2d 958, 965 (3d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1024 (1984).

Without directly addressing the AGC factors, Baseball posits two reasons why plaintiffs lack Sherman Act standing. First, Baseball contends that plaintiffs' antitrust claim can be boiled down to Baseball's rejection of the Partnership's [39] application to acquire and transfer the Giants. Thus, Baseball argues, any claim arising out of an alleged restraint on competition belongs only to the Partnership entity, not plaintiffs individually. Second, Baseball asserts that the only direct harm allegedly suffered by plaintiffs independent of their interest in the Partnership was the alleged injury to their reputation, a harm not actionable under the Sherman Act. I view the first of Baseball's arguments as focusing upon the first, third and fourth AGC factors, and the second of Baseball's arguments as focusing upon the second AGC factor.

a. Directness of injury, causation and other victims

HN23[] The directness of injury and causation for antitrust standing purposes depends upon whether the plaintiff has alleged a direct causal connection between the defendant's purported antitrust activity and the plaintiff's alleged harm. See AGC, 459 U.S. at 540-42; Lower Lake Erie, slip op. at 45-46. Plaintiffs identify the antitrust activity here as Baseball's alleged conspiracy to intentionally monopolize and restrain competition in the market for ownership of Major League Baseball teams, the Giants [40] in particular. Plaintiffs allege that these unlawful activities have resulted in (1) the elimination of plaintiffs and organizations in which plaintiffs owned majority interests from court's dismissal of the plaintiff's Sherman Act claim in part because the plaintiffs sought to join the NHL rather than compete with it. Seattle Totems is thus distinguishable because competition in the markets for ownership of existing franchises or participation in the NHL was not at issue.

---

Closer to the facts in this case, Levin involved an antitrust action filed by plaintiffs who sought to purchase an existing professional sports franchise -- the Boston Celtics basketball team. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants in that case because, inter alia, the plaintiffs wanted to join the National Basketball Association rather than compete with it. The district court's opinion, however, gives no indication that either the plaintiffs asserted or that the court considered a claim that competition had been restrained in the markets for professional basketball teams or for participation in professional basketball. (I also note in passing that the Third Circuit in Mid-South Grizzlies called into question the suggestion in Levin that there could never be competition among league members. See Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 787 n.9.)

competition in this market; (2) the exclusion of plaintiffs and their organizations from engaging in the business of Major League Baseball; and (3) loss of plaintiffs' contractual and property rights.

Baseball argues that plaintiffs' alleged injury is, at best, indirect because only the Partnership, not plaintiffs, could have been affected. Although this contention may prove factually correct after the case has developed, I cannot find sufficient support in plaintiffs' complaint to agree. Plaintiffs plead that they were individually excluded by Baseball from the relevant product market and suffered damages as a result. For example, plaintiffs Piazza and Tirendi allege that Baseball schemed to prevent the transfer of the Giants to Florida by unlawfully excluding them first individually, as the financial backbone of the Partnership, from the market for the Giants (and other Major League Baseball teams), only later to target the financially weakened Partnership and the remaining Investors. Thus the plaintiffs, [41] not just the Partnership, sustained the injuries for which they seek redress.

In support of its position that the Partnership is a more direct victim, Baseball relies upon several decisions that stand for the familiar proposition that > [a] stockholder of a corporation does not acquire standing to maintain an [antitrust] action in his own right, as a shareholder, when the alleged injury is inflicted upon the corporation and the only injury to the shareholder is the indirect harm which consists in the diminution in value of his corporate shares resulting from the impairment of corporate assets.

Kauffman v. Dreyfus Fund, Inc., 434 F.2d 727, 732 (3d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 974 (1971). See also, e.g., Rand v. Anaconda-Ericsson, Inc., 794 F.2d 843, 849 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 987 (1986). But such decisions, even if they apply with equal force to partners and partnership entities, [17] are inapposite. It is true that [*433] plaintiffs cite injury to the Partnership as a consequence of Baseball's antitrust behavior; but they also identify [42] unique, particularized injury to themselves. As I read their complaint, plaintiffs do not seek to redress a diminution in the value of their interest in the Partnership or any other wrong that befell the Partnership per se. They seek to redress Baseball's allegedly unlawful exclusion of Vincent Piazza, Vincent Tirendi, and PTB from competing in a relevant market. I therefore find that the first, third, and fourth AGC factors weigh strongly in plaintiffs' favor.

[43] b. Goal of antitrust laws

Baseball next contends that the only harm plaintiffs allege independent of the Partnership is harm to their reputations. Again, I must disagree. As discussed above, plaintiffs seek to redress damages sustained as a result of Baseball's alleged exclusion of them from a relevant market. Such injuries are clearly of the type that Congress sought to redress through the antitrust laws. The Supreme Court has repeatedly stated that a central purpose of the Sherman Act is to protect "the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." AGC, 459 U.S. at 538. Thus, the second AGC factor favors plaintiffs.

c. Duplicative Recovery and Complex Apportionment

Although the parties do not address the fifth AGC factor -- the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages -- I conclude that this factor, too, weighs in favor of plaintiffs. Were plaintiffs suing on behalf of the Partnership, I can conceive of a situation where multiple recoveries would be possible to the extent that the other Investors are not parties to this litigation. As noted above, however, that is not the case. Plaintiffs [44] seek to redress their own particular injuries; thus there appears no risk of duplicative recoveries or complex apportionment of damages. Finding that each of the AGC factors weighs in favor of plaintiffs, I therefore reject Baseball's contention that plaintiffs lack standing to press a Sherman Act claim.

---

[17] Compare Klebanow v. New York Produce Exchange, 344 F.2d 294 (2d Cir. 1965)("When business is conducted by a partnership, the [Clayton Act] views the partnership rather than a partner as the person injured.") with Kauffman, 434 F.2d at 733 ("Nowhere . . . do we find authority for the proposition that [a shareholder is vested in a share of his corporation's right to sue]. To accept this would be to convert an orthodox corporate structure to a general partnership or joint venture with each participant a principal and agent for the others.")

3. Exemption from Antitrust Liability

I now turn to the heart of Baseball's motion to dismiss plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim -- that in Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore, Inc. v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, Inc., 259 U.S. 200 (1922); Toolson v. New York Yankees, 346 U.S. 356 (1953); and Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258 (1972), the United States Supreme Court exempted Baseball from liability under the federal antitrust laws. Plaintiffs do not deny that these cases recognize some form of exemption from antitrust liability related to the game of baseball, but argue alternatively that the exemption either does not apply in this case, cannot be applied as a matter of law to the facts of this case, or should no longer be recognized at all.

a. Evolution of the exemption

[45] Writing for a unanimous Supreme Court over seventy years ago, Justice Holmes affirmed a judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and held that the business of giving exhibitions of baseball games for profit does not constitute trade or commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Act, and thus the Act does not apply to that business. See Federal Baseball, 259 U.S. at 208-09, and the underlying decision of the Court of Appeals, National League of Professional Baseball Clubs v. Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore, Inc., 269 F. 681 (C.C.D.C. 1920)("D.C. Opinion"). The plaintiff in that case, Federal Baseball of Baltimore, Inc. ("Federal Baseball"), owned a franchise in the Federal League of Professional Baseball Clubs until dissolution of that league in 1915 pursuant to an agreement with the National League and American League of Professional Baseball Clubs. D.C. Opinion, 269 F. at 682. With the demise of the Federal League, Federal Baseball was left without an organization within which to compete, and subsequently brought suit against the National and American Leagues, [46] among others, for violation of the Sherman Act. Id. A jury found in favor of Federal Baseball, awarding it $ 240,000 in treble damages, costs, and attorneys fees.

[*434] The gravamen of Federal Baseball's case was the alleged anticompetitive impact of what is known as the "reserve clause" in the yearly contracts of players in the National and American Leagues. Id. at 687-88. The reserve clause bound a player to either enter a new contract with the same team in the succeeding year of the player's contract or be considered ineligible by the National and American Leagues to serve any baseball club. Id. at 687. Because of this restrictive provision, the Federal League and its constituent clubs were unable to obtain players who had contracts with the National and American Leagues, the effect of which, as found by the jury, was to damage Federal Baseball. Id. at 682, 687.

The Court of Appeals reversed the jury's verdict and remanded, making four significant findings. First, and quite simply, the court found that the business in which the defendants were engaged was the business of giving exhibitions [47] of the game of baseball. Id. at 684.

Second, the court found that "[a] game of baseball is not susceptible of being transferred, . . . [and] the transportation in interstate commerce of the players and the paraphernalia used . . . was but an incident to the main purpose of the [defendants], namely, the production of the game." Id. at 684-85. Thus, the court reasoned, a baseball exhibition could not be considered interstate commerce, and the business of giving such an exhibition could not be subject to the Sherman Act. Id.

The third finding of the Court of Appeals was that, despite the fact that the giving of an exhibition was not interstate commerce, there were interstate components of Federal Baseball's business, the direct interference with which was redressable under the Sherman Act. Id. at 686. These interstate features included such things as the movement of players and their paraphernalia from place to place across state lines. Id. The court found that if unlawful anticompetitive activity directly interfered with the business of moving the players or their equipment, as opposed [48] to the exhibition of the game itself, the Sherman Act would apply. Id.

Finally, the Court of Appeals found that the reserve clause only indirectly, if at all, affected the interstate aspects of Federal Baseball's business (the business of moving players and their equipment), which was not sufficient to give rise to a Sherman act violation. Id. at 687-88.

These four findings can be condensed into two reasons why the Court of Appeals found that the reserve clause did not offend the Sherman Act. First, the anticompetitive impact of the reserve clause on the business of giving a baseball exhibition was not redressable as a matter of law under the Sherman Act, such business found not to be interstate commerce. Second, the reserve clause had, at best, only an incidental impact on the portion of Federal Baseball's business that was considered interstate commerce.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court agreed that the defendants' exhibitions of baseball games "are purely state affairs," lacking the character of interstate commerce. Federal Baseball, 259 U.S. at 208. From this, the Court reasoned, "if we are right the plaintiff's [49] business is to be described the same way and the restrictions by contract that prevented the plaintiff from getting players to break their bargains [the reserve clause] and the other conduct charged against the defendants [buying up Federal League clubs] were not an interference with commerce among the States." Id. at 209.

The Supreme Court next addressed the exemption in Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 346 U.S. 356 (1953), a per curiam opinion affirming decisions of the Sixth and Ninth Circuits. [18] The plaintiffs in the underlying cases were professional baseball players who brought suit under the federal antitrust laws alleging harm by virtue, again, of the reserve clause. Id. at 362 (Burton, J. dissenting). Seeking to avoid Federal Baseball, the plaintiffs stressed, among other things, the [*435] obsolescence of that decision in light of the increased revenue generated by baseball due to interstate radio and television broadcasts. See Toolson v. New York Yankees, 101 F. Supp. 93. Unpersuaded by this position, the district courts dismissed the claims [50] and the Courts of Appeals affirmed. The plaintiffs then petitioned the Supreme Court to overturn Federal Baseball. In a terse opinion, the Court refused, upholding Federal Baseball "so far as that decision determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws." Toolson, 347 U.S. at 357 (per curiam).

Following Toolson, several attempts were made to extend its reasoning and that of Federal Baseball beyond the context of baseball. See, e.g., United States v. Shubert, 348 U.S. 222 (1955)(theater); United States v. International Boxing Club, 348 U.S. 236 (1955) [51] (boxing); Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445 (1957)(football). In each of these cases, however, the Court declined the invitation. Moreover, to head off any further attempted extensions of those decisions, the Court stated in Radovich with crystal clarity that "we now specifically limit the rule . . . established [in Federal Baseball and Toolson] to the facts there involved, i.e., the business of organized professional baseball." Radovich, 352 U.S. at 451.

The next and most recent time the Supreme Court directly considered the exemption was in Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258 (1972). Like Toolson, the plaintiff in Flood was a professional baseball player dissatisfied with the reserve clause in his contract and the "reserve system" generally. [19] After an extensive analysis of the history of the exemption, Justice Blackmun, who delivered the opinion of the Court, produced a list of statements that can be made regarding the exemption and its circumstances:

[52]

1. Professional baseball is a business and it is engaged in interstate commerce.

---

[18] See Toolson v. New York Yankees, Inc., 101 F. Supp. 93 (S.D. Cal. 1951), aff'd without opinion, 200 F.2d 198 (9th Cir. 1952); Kowalski v. Chandler, 202 F.2d 413 (6th Cir. 1953); Corbett v. Chandler, 202 F.2d 428 (6th Cir. 1953).

[19] The "reserve system" includes the reserve clause and Major League Baseball rules designed to complement the clause in confining the player to the club that has him under contract and otherwise providing contract uniformity. See Flood, 407 U.S. at 259 n.1.

> 2. With its reserve system enjoying exemption from the federal antitrust laws, baseball is, in a very distinct sense, an exception and an anomaly. Federal Baseball and Toolson have become an aberration confined to baseball.
>
> 3. Even though others might regard this as "unrealistic, inconsistent, or illogical," the aberration is an established one . . ., heretofore deemed fully entitled to the benefit of stare decisis, and one that has survived the Court's expanding concept of interstate commerce. . . .
> 4. Other professional sports operating interstate -- football, boxing, basketball, and, presumably, hockey and golf -- are not so exempt.
> 5. The Court has emphasized that since 1922 baseball, with full and continuing congressional awareness, has been allowed to develop and to expand unhindered by federal legislative action. . . . The Court accordingly has concluded that Congress as yet has had no intention to subject baseball's reserve system to the reach of the antitrust statutes. . . .

Id. at 282-84 (footnotes and citations [53] omitted).

b. Discussion

(i) Scope of the exemption

In each of the three cases in which the Supreme Court directly addressed the exemption, the factual context involved the reserve clause. Plaintiffs argue that the exemption is confined to that circumstance, which is not presented here. Baseball, on the other hand, argues that the exemption applies to the "business of baseball" generally, not to one particular facet of the game.

Between 1922 and 1972, Baseball's expansive view may have been correct. Although Federal Baseball involved the reserve clause, that decision was based upon the proposition that the business of exhibiting baseball games, as opposed to the business of moving [*436] players and their equipment, was not interstate commerce and thus not subject to the Sherman Act. Toolson, also a reserve clause case, spoke in terms of the "business of baseball" enjoying the exemption. Toolson, 346 U.S. at 357. Likewise, Radovich, a 1957 decision concerning football, recognized the exemption as extending to the "business of organized professional baseball." Radovich, 352 U.S. 450-53.

In 1972, however, [54] the Court in Flood v. Kuhn stripped from Federal Baseball and Toolson any precedential value those cases may have had beyond the particular facts there involved, i.e., the reserve clause. The Flood Court employed a two-prong approach in doing so. First, the Court examined the analytical underpinnings of Federal Baseball -- that the business of exhibiting baseball games is not interstate commerce. In the clearest possible terms, the Court rejected this reasoning, removing any doubt that "professional baseball is a business . . . engaged in interstate commerce." Flood, 407 U.S. at 282.

Having entirely undercut the precedential value of the reasoning of Federal Baseball, the Court next set out to justify the continued precedential value of the result of that decision. To do this, the Court first looked back to Toolson and uncovered the following four reasons why the Court there had followed Federal Baseball:

> (a) Congressional awareness for three decades of the Court's ruling in Federal Baseball, coupled with congressional inaction. (b) The fact that baseball was left alone to develop for that period [55] upon the understanding that the reserve system was not subject to existing antitrust laws. (c) A reluctance to overrule Federal Baseball with consequent retroactive effect. (d) A professed desire that any needed remedy be provided by legislation rather than court decree.

Id. at 273-74 (emphasis added). The emphasized text indicates that the Flood Court viewed the disposition in Federal Baseball and Toolson as being limited to the reserve system, for baseball developed between 1922 and 1953 with the understanding that its reserve system, not the game generally, was exempt from the antitrust laws. This reading of Flood is buttressed by (1) the reaffirmation in Flood of a prior statement of the Court that "'Toolson was a narrow application of the doctrine of stare decisis,'" id. at 276 (quoting Shubert, 348 U.S. at 228-30); and (2) the Flood Court's own characterization, in the first sentence of its opinion, of the Federal Baseball, Toolson, and Flood decisions: "For the third time in 50 years the Court is asked specifically [56] to rule that professional baseball's reserve system is within the reach of the antitrust laws." Id. at 259 (emphasis added) (footnote omitted).

Viewing the dispositions in Federal Baseball and Toolson as limited to the reserve clause, the Flood Court then turned to the reasons why, even though analytically vitiated, the precise results in Federal Baseball and Toolson were to be accorded the continuing benefit of stare decisis. Like Toolson, the Flood Court laid its emphasis on continued positive congressional inaction and concerns over retroactivity. Id. at 283-84. In particular, the Flood Court "concluded that Congress as yet has had no intention to subject baseball's reserve system to the reach of the antitrust statutes." Id. at 283 (emphasis added). Finally, the Court acknowledged that "with its reserve system enjoying exemption from the federal antitrust laws, baseball is, in a very distinct sense, an exception and an anomaly. Federal Baseball and Toolson have become an aberration confined to baseball." Id. at 282 [57] (emphasis added). Thus in 1972, the Supreme Court made clear that the Federal Baseball exemption is limited to the reserve clause.

Relying primarily upon Charles O. Finley & Co. v. Kuhn, 569 F.2d 527 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 876 (1978), defendant Baseball offers a different reading of Flood. The plaintiff in that case, Charles O. Finley & Co. ("Finley"), owned the Oakland Athletics ("Oakland") baseball club. Finley, 569 F.2d at 530. In June of 1976, Oakland negotiated tentative agreements to sell Oakland's contract rights [*437] in three players to other teams. Id. at 531. Defendant Commissioner of Baseball Bowie Kuhn disapproved of the sale, and Finley subsequently brought suit, claiming, among other things, that the Commissioner conspired with others in violation of the antitrust laws. Id. Finding the Commissioner exempt from the antitrust laws under Federal Baseball, the district court granted summary judgment in favor of the Commissioner, and Finley appealed.

Like plaintiffs here, Finley argued on appeal that the exemption applies [58] only to the reserve system. The Seventh Circuit disagreed, finding that "despite the two references in the Flood case to the reserve system, it appears clear from the entire opinions in the three baseball cases, as well as from Radovich, that the Supreme Court intended to exempt the business of baseball, not any particular facet of that business, from the federal antitrust laws." Id. at 541 (emphasis added) (footnotes omitted).

In reaching this conclusion, the Seventh Circuit looked back to Federal Baseball, Toolson, and Radovich, as I have done here, and concluded that the Court had focused in those cases upon the business of baseball, not just the reserve clause. Then the court discussed Flood:

> In Flood v. Kuhn, the Court said that "Professional baseball is engaged in interstate commerce" and "we adhere once again to Federal Baseball and Toolson and to their application to professional baseball."

Id. (citation omitted). This single paragraph represents the Seventh Circuit's entire substantive discussion of Flood -- the Supreme Court's most recent and most thorough explanation of the Federal [59] Baseball exemption. The court discounted two references in Flood to the reserve clause [20] and made no mention of the fact that Flood refers to the reserve clause at least four times, the two not discussed by the court indicating that (1) the Supreme Court reads Federal Baseball and Toolson as reserve clause cases, Flood, 407 U.S. at 273-74; and (2) the Court

---

[20] The Finley court identified the following two references to the reserve clause in Flood:

> For the third time in 50 years the Court is asked specifically to rule that professional baseball's reserve system is within the reach of the federal antitrust laws.

Finley, 569 F.2d at 540 n.48 (quoting Flood, 407 U.S. at 259).

> With its reserve system enjoying exemption from the federal antitrust laws, baseball is, in a very distinct sense, an exception and an anomaly.

Id. (quoting Flood, 407 U.S. at 282).

continues to follow the precise disposition of those decisions because Congress continues to express no intention of subjecting the reserve clause to the antitrust laws, id. at 283.

[60] But there is an even more significant flaw in the Seventh Circuit's analysis of Flood than in failing to note the extent to which that decision turned upon the reserve clause: Application of the doctrine of stare decisis simply permits no other way to read Flood than as confining the precedential value of Federal Baseball and Toolson to the precise facts there involved. To understand why this is so, one must fully understand the doctrine of stare decisis and its application by lower courts to Supreme Court decisions. The Third Circuit recently offered the following explanation:

> [Supreme Court] . . . opinions usually include two major aspects. First, the Court provides the legal standard or test that is applicable to laws implicating a particular . . . provision. This is part of the reasoning of the decision, the ratio decidendi. Second, the Court applies that standard or test to the particular facts of the case that the Court is confronting -- in other words, it reaches a specific result using the standard or test.
>
> As a lower court, we are bound by both the Supreme Court's choice of legal standard or test and by the result it reaches under the [61] standard or test. As Justice Kennedy has stated, courts are bound to adhere not only to results of cases, but also "to their explications of the governing rules of law." Our system of precedent or stare decisis is thus based on adherence to both the reasoning and result of a case, and not simply to the result alone. This [*438] distinguishes the American system of precedent, sometimes called "rule stare decisis," from the English system, which historically has been limited to following the results or disposition based on the facts of a case and thus referred to as "result stare decisis."
>
> Like lower courts, the Supreme Court applies principles of stare decisis and recognizes an obligation to respect both the standard announced and the result reached in its prior cases. Unlike lower courts, the Supreme Court is free to change the standard or result from one of its earlier cases when it finds it to be "unsound in principle [or] unworkable in practice."

Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pa. v. Casey, 947 F.2d 682, 691-92 (3d Cir. 1991)(citations omitted), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, __ U.S. __, 112 S. Ct. 2791 (1992). [62]

Applying these principles of stare decisis here, it becomes clear that, before Flood, lower courts were bound by both the rule of Federal Baseball and Toolson (that the business of baseball is not interstate commerce and thus not within the Sherman Act) [21] and the result of those decisions (that baseball's reserve system is exempt from the antitrust laws). The Court's decision in Flood, however, effectively created the circumstance referred to by the Third Circuit as "result stare decisis," from the English system. In Flood, the Supreme Court exercised its discretion to invalidate the rule of Federal Baseball and Toolson. Thus no rule from those cases binds the lower courts as a matter of stare decisis. The only aspect of Federal Baseball and Toolson that remains to be followed is the result or disposition based upon the facts there involved, which the Court in Flood determined to be the exemption of the reserve system from the antitrust laws.

[63] Neither Finley nor any other case cited by Baseball in support of its view of the exemption has undertaken such an analysis of the Supreme Court's baseball trilogy. [22] [64] And as none of these decisions is binding upon this Court, I will not follow them. [23] It is well settled that HN24[] exemptions from the antitrust laws are to be narrowly construed. See Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 231 (1979). Application of this principle is particularly appropriate, if not absolutely critical, in this case because the exemption at issue has been characterized by its own creator as an "anomaly" and an "aberration." Flood, 407 U.S. at 282; see also id. at 286 (Federal Baseball is a "derelict in the stream of the law." (Douglas, J. dissenting)). For these reasons, I conclude that the antitrust exemption created by Federal Baseball is limited to baseball's reserve system, and because the parties agree that the reserve system is not at issue in this case, I reject Baseball's argument that it is exempt from antitrust liability in this case.

---

[21] Radovich later made clear that this rule applied only to the business of organized baseball, prohibiting its application to other professional sports. See Radovich, 352 U.S. at 450.

[22] Baseball cites the following decisions, among others, in support of its view: Professional Baseball Schools & Clubs, Inc. v. Kuhn, 693 F.2d 1085 (11th Cir. 1982); Triple-A Baseball Club Associates v. Northeastern Baseball, Inc., 832 F.2d 214 (1st Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 935 (1988); Portland Baseball Club, Inc. v. Kuhn, 491 F.2d 1101 (9th Cir. 1974); Salerno v. American League of Professional Baseball Clubs, 429 F.2d 1003 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1007 (1971).

(ii) Nature of the exemption

Although it would be appropriate to end here my discussion of the Federal Baseball exemption, for the purpose of providing a complete record of decision in the event of certification for immediate appeal under 28 U.S.C.A. § 1292(b) (West Supp. 1993), I will press on to consider the implications of applying "rule stare decisis" to Federal Baseball and plaintiffs' complaint.

[*439] Assuming, as Baseball would have it, that Finley is correct and the exemption extends beyond the reserve system, I must determine exactly how far the exemption reaches. I find that stating, as did the Finley court, that the exemption covers the "business of baseball" does little to delineate the contours of the exemption.

As mentioned above, to state a claim under the Sherman Act, plaintiffs [65] must allege injury to competition in a relevant product market. See Mid-South Grizzlies, 720 F.2d at 785. Although the Supreme Court has not couched its explanation of the exemption in these terms, I believe that the only arguably surviving rule to be gleaned from the Court's baseball trilogy is that if the relevant product market involved is the market defined as the "business of baseball," injury to competition in that market may not be redressed under the Sherman Act.

[24] Cf. Henderson Broadcasting Corp. v. Houston Sports Ass'n, 541 F. Supp. 263 (S.D. Tx. 1982)(exemption does not apply to market for broadcast of baseball games). Federal Baseball itself made this clear. The focus in that case was upon competition in two different businesses or markets. The first was defined as the business of "giving exhibitions of base ball [sic]." Federal Baseball, 259 U.S. at 208. The second was defined as the business of "moving players and their paraphernalia from place to place." D.C. Opinion, 269 F. at 686. The Sherman Act was held not to apply to restraints [66] in the first market because that market did not implicate interstate commerce. Federal Baseball, 259 U.S. at 208-09. Restraints in the second market, however, were redressable under the Sherman Act because that market did implicate interstate commerce. D.C. Opinion, 269 F. at 687-88. Thus, assuming the validity of Finley, the Federal Baseball exemption is one related to a particular market -- the market comprised of the exhibition of baseball games -- not a particular type of restraint (such as the reserve clause) or a particular entity (such as Major League Baseball).

It follows from having expressed the exemption as relating to a particular market that the next question is whether the plaintiffs in this case seek relief for restraints in that market or some other market. If Baseball's allegedly [67] unlawful conduct merely restrained competition in the market comprised of baseball exhibitions, Baseball is immune from liability under the Act. If some other market was involved, however, even the expansive version of the Federal Baseball exemption would not apply.

HN25[] A "market" may be defined as "any grouping of sales whose sellers, if unified by a hypothetical cartel or merger, could raise prices significantly above the competitive level." Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 518.1b (Supp. 1991)(footnote omitted). As stated above, plaintiffs allege that the relevant product market in this case is the market for ownership of existing major league professional baseball teams. Reduced to its essentials, one can infer at this stage of the proceedings that this market has the following components: (1) the [23] I note that the Third Circuit has neither analyzed Flood nor construed the contours of the Federal Baseball exemption. I am bound, however, to follow the approach to stare decisis set forth by the Third Circuit in Planned Parenthood.

---

[24] In light of Flood, I do not believe, nor do I understand Baseball to argue, that Federal Baseball's interstate commerce reasoning remains vital.

product being sold is an ownership interest in professional baseball teams; (2) the sellers are team owners; and (3) the buyers are those who would like to become team owners. Viewing the complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, it would not be unreasonable also to infer that if the team owners combined, they could increase the price of teams considerably [68] and control the conditions of sale. [25]

The market to which the expansive version of the Federal Baseball exemption applies, on the other hand, has the following components: (1) the product is the exhibition of baseball games; (2) the sellers, as with the market defined by plaintiffs, are team owners; and (3) the buyers are fans and, perhaps, [*440] the broadcast industry. Thus the two markets have different products -- baseball teams versus baseball games -- and different consumers.

Although not expressed in market terms, the Court of Appeals in Federal Baseball attributed great weight to such differences. [69] The court distinguished for Sherman Act purposes between the business that encompassed the exhibition of baseball games (the "game exhibition market") and the business that involved the movement of players and their paraphernalia (the "player transportation market"). D.C. Opinion, 269 F. at 686. The focus of the exemption was on the exhibition of games only, which Justice Holmes characterized in affirming the Court of Appeals as "purely state affairs." Federal Baseball, 259 U.S. at 208. Other aspects of a baseball team's business -- interstate aspects distinguishable from but nonetheless related to the games such as the movement of players and equipment -- were not part of the exemption. Thus the anticompetitive nature of the reserve clause in the game exhibition market was found not to violate the Sherman Act, but could have given rise to a claim under the Act had it directly affected other markets. A similar distinction may be made here. The plaintiffs in this case target not anticompetitive activity in the market for the exhibition of baseball games; but anticompetitive activity in market for the sale of ownership [70] interests in baseball teams -- a market seemingly as distinguishable from the game exhibition market as the player transportation market.

Recent courts construing the expansive version of the exemption, although not focusing upon the distinction made by the Court of Appeals in Federal Baseball, have defined the exempted market (characterized as the "business of baseball") as that which is central to the "'unique characteristics and needs'" of baseball. Postema v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, 799 F. Supp. 1475, 1488 (S.D.N.Y. 1992)(quoting Flood, 407 U.S. at 282), rev'd on other grounds, F.2d , 1993 WL 240824 (2d Cir. July 6, 1993); [26] Henderson, 541 F. Supp. at 268-69, 271 (Federal Baseball exemption not applicable to market for broadcast of baseball games). There seems to be agreement among these courts and others that, defined in this way, HN26[] the exempted market includes (1) the reserve system and (2) matters of league structure. See, e.g., Professional Baseball Schools and Clubs, Inc. v. Kuhn, 693 F.2d 1085 (11th Cir. 1982); [71] Postema, 799 F. Supp. at 1489; Henderson, 541 F. Supp. at 269; State v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc., 31 Wis.2d 699, 144 N.W.2d 1, 15 (1966), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 990 (1966).

[72] I do not view these decisions as conflicting with the analysis of the Court of Appeals in Federal Baseball. Applying their logic, the Court of Appeals can be understood as essentially viewing the movement of players and their equipment from game to game as a market activity not central to the unique characteristics and needs of exhibiting baseball games. Thus, when these decisions are considered together, the following list of activities or markets that are not within the exempted market can be generated: (1) the movement of players and their equipment from game to game; (2) the broadcast of baseball games; and, perhaps, (3) employment relations between organized professional baseball and non-players.

[25] One might also view the relevant market more narrowly as the market for the purchase and transfer of the Giants only, where there was but one seller, Robert Lurie, constituting a monopoly, with the buyer group including only those interested in the Giants, as opposed to other professional baseball teams. On a motion to dismiss, I must view the relevant market in the manner most favorable to plaintiffs.

[26] Postema held that the Federal Baseball exemption does not apply to baseball's employment relationships with non-players such as umpires because such relationships "are not a unique characteristic or need of the game." Id. at 1489. But see Salerno v. American League of Professional Baseball Clubs, 429 F.2d 1003 (2d Cir. 1970)(holding that employment relations with umpires are within the exemption), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1001 (1971). Postema chose not to follow Salerno because it was decided before "Flood's apparent endorsement of a limited view of the exemption." Postema, 799 F. Supp. at 1475.

No court, however, has analyzed or applied the expansive view of the Federal Baseball exemption to the market for ownership interests in existing baseball teams. Thus I must determine whether this market is central to the unique characteristics and needs of baseball exhibitions. I conclude that such a determination is not possible without a factual record, and that, viewing plaintiffs' complaint in their favor, plaintiffs may be able to demonstrate [*441] that team ownership [73] is not central to baseball's unique characteristics.

Plaintiffs plead that they were attempting to acquire an interest in a business owned by Robert Lurie engaged in the exhibition of baseball games -- the San Francisco Giants. As stated above, the products being sold in this market (teams) are different from those being sold in the exempted market (games). And acquiring an ownership interest in a team may very well be no more unique to the exhibition of baseball games than is moving players and their equipment from game to game. Although players and their equipment are, beyond doubt, uniquely necessary to a baseball game, the Court of Appeals in Federal Baseball found, on a trial record, that their movement -- which essentially involves the transportation of men and equipment -- was not. Likewise, although teams, as business entities engaged in exhibiting baseball games, are undoubtedly a unique necessity to the game, the transfer of ownership interests in such entities may not be so unique. Moreover, anticompetitive conduct toward those who seek to purchase existing teams has never been considered by any court to be an essential part of the exhibition of baseball games.

On [74] the other hand, it is conceivable that, although the precise products in plaintiffs' market and the exempted market are different, these markets nonetheless overlap to such an extent that they should be treated identically for purposes of the expansive view of Federal Baseball. In other words, the acquisition of a business that is engaged in baseball exhibitions may be central in some way not apparent on the face of the complaint to the unique characteristics of baseball exhibitions. Without a factual record, I would be engaged in mere speculation in deciding now whether it is or is not.

Accordingly, I conclude that if "rule stare decisis" and the Finley expansive view were applied, this case would not be ripe for determination of whether the Federal Baseball exemption applies. Thus, even under this analysis, Baseball's motion would be denied. One additional observation bears mentioning. I have considered plaintiffs' complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiffs and have accepted their definition of the relevant market as the market for team ownership. But the gravamen of plaintiffs' case may be Baseball's interference with plaintiffs' efforts to acquire and [75] relocate the Giants to Florida. As stated earlier, matters of league structure have been viewed by other courts as being unique to baseball. The physical relocation of a team and Baseball's decisions regarding such a relocation could implicate matters of league structure, and thus be covered by the exemption. If, therefore, the expansive view of Federal Baseball were applied and a factual record were developed showing that this case concerns only restraints on the market for ownership and relocation of the Giants as inseparable activities, "rule stare decisis" could require application of the exemption.

III. CONCLUSION

Baseball's motion to dismiss is granted in part and denied in part. Plaintiffs' direct claims under the U.S. Constitution are dismissed. In all other respects the motion is denied. Because I have not dismissed all of plaintiffs' claims over which this Court has original jurisdiction, I will continue to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiffs' state law claims. See 28 U.S.C.A. § 1367 (West Supp. 1993).

An appropriate order follows.

ORDER - August 4, 1993, Filed

AND NOW, this 4th day of August, 1993, [76] upon consideration of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Complaint (Docket Entry No. 3) and all papers filed in support thereof and in response thereto, and after oral argument, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that said motion is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART for the reasons stated in the accompanying Opinion, as follows:

1. Plaintiffs' direct claims under the U.S. Constitution (Count I) are DISMISSED.

2. In all other respects, defendants' motion is DENIED.

John R. Padova, J.

Tacker v. Wilson

United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division

August 4, 1993, Decided ; August 4, 1993, Filed; August 5, 1993, Entered

No. 92-2586-4/BRE

Reporter

830 F. Supp. 422 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11410 ; 27 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 106; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,356

ALFRED T. TACKER, d/b/a FAMILY HERITAGE CASKET GALLERY, INC., Plaintiff, v. ELMER WILSON, individually, and WILSON METAL CASKET COMPANY, INC.; BATESVILLE CASKET COMPANY, INC.; DELTA CASKET COMPANY, INC.; MEMPHIS CASKET COMPANY, INC; WILBERT BURIAL VAULT COMPANY, INC.; DORIC OF MEMPHIS, INC.; MEMORIAL PARK, INC.; MEMORIAL GUARDIAN PLANS, INC.; WESTPOINT CASKET COMPANY, INC.; HENRY SPIKES, individually, and as a Director of THE TENNESSEE BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS & EMBALMERS; LEON RIDGEWAY, individually, and as a Director of THE TENNESSEE BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS; THOMAS STRICKLAND, individually, and as a Director of THE TENNESSEE BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS; ROBERT P. SHACKELFORD, JR., individually, and as a Director of THE TENNESSEE BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS; ARTHUR PICKLE, individually, and as a Director of THE TENNESSEE BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS; SERVICE CORPORATION INTERNATIONAL; MEMORIAL PARK, INC.; and MEMORIAL GUARDIAN PLANS, INC., d/b/a MEMPHIS FUNERAL HOME, Defendants.

Core Terms

Casket, alleges, motion to dismiss, Sherman Act, conspiracy, second amended complaint, antitrust, supplemental jurisdiction, distributors, regulations, license, official capacity, district court, legally-cognizable, defendants', concerted refusal, service provider, fail to state, Embalmers, argues, immune, member of the board, funeral director, tort claim, conspired, licensure, concert, grounds

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to state a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the plaintiff must usually indicate (1) that the defendants contracted, combined, or conspired, (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets, (3) that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to the conspiracy were illegal, and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An act harmless when done by one may become a public wrong when done by many acting in concert, for it then takes on the form of a conspiracy, and may be prohibited or punished, if the result be hurtful to the individual against whom the concerted action is directed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

In determining the sufficiency of a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act, a court must look to the nature of the alleged behavior to decide between how to analyze the allegations--either under a per se analysis or by the rule of reason. A naked restraint of trade with no purpose other than to stifle competition is a violation per se of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The apparent rule now is that concerted refusals to deal are violations per se of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, where there is no plausible argument that the refusal to deal accentuates efficiency and where it is impossible to prove that the conspirators possess market power. Otherwise, the concerted refusal to deal resulted in no anti-competitive effect.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN6[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN7[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint need not be overly fact-specific. The function of the complaint is to give the opposing party fair notice of the nature and basis or grounds of the claim and a general indication of the type of litigation involved; however, pleadings filled with nothing but conclusory allegations that do not afford notice to the court or to the opposing parties violate Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. Such a violation calls for dismissal of the complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a legally-cognizable claim. The claim should not be dismissed, however, unless it appears that beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, and the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The framers of the Sherman Act did not intend for antitrust laws to interfere with the market-regulation activities of the states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Real Property Law > Subdivisions > State Regulations

HN10[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action doctrine exempts only anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the state as sovereign, or by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN11[] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 41 et seq., was created for the purpose of creating and lodging administrative functions in a body specially competent to deal with threats and dangers to trade and competition. 15 U.S.C.S. § 45 is the enforcement statute declaring unlawful unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(a)(1). Courts have traditionally held that the basic purpose of the statute is to protect the public, and that remedial power rests exclusively in the FTC.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

The Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 41 et seq., may be enforced only by the Federal Trade Commission. Nowhere does the Act bestow upon either competitors or consumers standing to enforce its provisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN13[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 (1988).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN14[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106 (1988).

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Same Case & Controversy

HN15[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1367.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Same Case & Controversy

Constitutional Law > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

HN16[] Supplemental Jurisdiction, Same Case & Controversy

The court formulated a two-step analysis to determine whether the exercise of pendent jurisdiction was proper: (1) Did the state claim and the federal claim share a common nucleus of operative fact? and, if so, (2) With respect to doctrines of judicial economy, convenience, and fairness, should the power to hear the claim be exercised? 28 U.S.C.S. § 1367 envelops the common nucleus of operative fact test in the requirement that the two claims be so related that they form part of the same case or controversy under the U.S. Const. art. III.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

HN17[] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

Exercise of supplemental jurisdiction is appropriate when both claims arise out of the same alleged conspiracy, the district court has exclusive jurisdiction over the federal claim, and the supplemental claim would not predominate over the federal claim.

Counsel: [1] Mr. Robert G. Gilder, Esq., Southhaven, MS, Attorney for Alfred T. Tacker.

Mr. James R. Garts, Jr., Harris, Shelton, Dunlap & Cobb, Memphis, TN, Attorney for Elmer Wilson, Individually and Wilson Metal Casket Company, Inc.

Paul B. Plant, Harwell & Plant, Lawrenceberg, TN, Attorney for Elmer Wilson, Individually and Wilson Metal Casket Company, Inc.

Mr. Donald E. Knebel, Barnes & Thornburg, Indianapolis, IN, Attorney for Batesville Casket Company, Inc., and Doris of Memphis, Inc.

Mr. William W. Dunlap, Jr., Harris, Shelton, Dunlap & Cobb, Memphis, TN, Attorney for Batesville Casket Company, Inc.

Mr. Alan R. Wolfe, Mr. Joseph M. Crout, Williams, McDaniel & Wolfe, P.C., Memphis, TN, Attorneys for Memphis Casket Company, Inc.

Mr. Michael Richards, Heiskell, Donelson, Bearman, Adams, Williams & Kirsch, Memphis, TN, Attorney for Memphis Wilbert Vault Company, Inc., Memorial Guardian Plans, Inc., Henry Spikes, Leon Ridgeway, Thomas Strickland, Robert P. Shackelford, Jr., and Arthur Pickle.

Mr. Frank Carney and Mr. Alan E. Glenn, Evans & Petree, Memphis, TN, Attorneys for Memorial Park, Inc.

Mr. B. Storey, Edwards, Storey, Marshall & Helveston, West Point, Mississippi, Attorney [2] for Westpoint Casket Company, Inc.

Mr. Myron L. Dale, Friest & Jacobs, Cincinnati, OH, Attorney for Aurora Casket Company, Inc.

Mr. William W. Grubbs, Jr., Memphis, TN, Statutory Agent for Delta Casket Company, Inc.

Mr. Hulon O. Warlick, Warlick, Myhr, and Brown, Memphis, TN.

Mr. Steven E. Winn, Office of the State Attorney General, Nashville, TN.

Judges: McRAE

Opinion by: ROBERT M. McRAE

Opinion

[*425] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTIONS TO DISMISS FILED BY WILSON METAL CASKET COMPANY, INC.; DORIC OF MEMPHIS, INC.; BATESVILLE CASKET COMPANY, INC.; MEMPHIS CASKET COMPANY, INC.; WESTPOINT CASKET COMPANY, INC.

and

DISMISSING FROM THE ACTION HENRY SPIKES, LEON RIDGEWAY, THOMAS STRICKLAND, ROBERT P. SHACKELFORD, JR., and ARTHUR PICKLE, INDIVIDUALLY AND AS DIRECTORS OF THE TENNESSEE BOARD OF FUNERAL DIRECTORS AND EMBALMERS.

and

DENYING ELMER WILSON'S MOTION TO DISMISS THE STATE LAW TORT CLAIM

This is a federal antitrust action which plaintiff seeks to supplement with a state antitrust claim and a state tort claim. Now before the Court are several motions to dismiss on various grounds, filed by various defendants.

As to plaintiff's allegations under § 1 of the Sherman Act, this Court (1) DENIES the [3] motions to dismiss filed by Wilson Metal Casket Company; Batesville Casket Company; Memphis Casket Company; Doric of Memphis; and Westpoint Casket Company and (2) GRANTS the motion to dismiss filed by Henry Spikes, Leon Ridgeway, Thomas Strickland, Robert P. Shackelford, Jr., and Arthur Pickle in those defendants' official capacities as directors of the Tennessee Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers.

As to plaintiff's allegations under 15 U.S.C. § 45 and FTC regulations promulgated thereunder, this Court DISMISSES the action as to all named defendants for failure to state a legally-cognizable claim.

As to plaintiff's allegations under Tennessee antitrust law, this Court DISMISSES the action as to all named defendants for failure to state a legally-cognizable claim.

As to plaintiff's common-law intentional tort allegations against defendant Elmer Wilson, this Court DENIES Elmer Wilson's motion to dismiss for lack of supplemental jurisdiction.

DISCUSSION

I. THE ANTITRUST CLAIMS

Plaintiff ("Tacker") owns and operates the Family Heritage Casket Gallery in Memphis, Tennessee. Tacker alleges that in order to continue the practice of fixing artificially [4] high prices for funeral goods and services, the defendants conspired to prevent Tacker from engaging in the business of selling caskets directly to the public at a relatively reduced price. The list of defendants can be broken down into two groups: (1) Casket distributors and (2) Corporations providing funeral services ("service providers"), many of whose officers belong to a governing board of funeral directors and embalmers. That board and its directors are also named defendants.

Tacker alleges that defendants were participants in a sort of oligopoly/cartel that engaged in price-fixing and tie-ins to preserve their market power. When Tacker threatened this practice by independently offering caskets to the public at a relative discount, defendants conspired to refuse to deal with Tacker.

In the second amended complaint, Tacker alleges that the refusals to deal were apparently dictated by the defendant corporate service providers and their officers, some of whom served on the Tennessee Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers ("the Board"). The second amended complaint states that in 1990 and 1991, when plaintiff applied for his license to sell caskets, the Board arbitrarily delayed [5] plaintiff's receipt of a license. After plaintiff finally received the license, a director of the Board indicated that since the Board had failed to prevent Tacker from getting a license, they would make sure that Tacker's business failed.

A pattern emerged. Tacker and a distributor would communicate as to Tacker's purchasing [*426] inventory from the distributor. Initially, the distributor would agree to supply Tacker with caskets, but would ultimately withdraw from the arrangement, ostensibly after having been pressured by other distributors and service providers to become part of the conspiracy.

The second amended complaint asserts that all defendants committed wrongs under § 1 of the Sherman Act, under FTC regulations, and under the Tennessee antitrust statutes. There is an additional allegation of common-law assault and battery against one of the individual defendants, Elmer Wilson.

According to defendants, Tacker's complaint, amended complaint, and second amended complaint must be dismissed because of their failures to indicate specifically how the refusals to deal were anything other than a series of unilateral decisions and for the complaint's failure to state claims for which relief [6] can be granted under FTC regulations and Tennessee anti-trust law. In addition, Elmer Wilson argues that the tort allegations against him should not be subject to this Court's supplemental jurisdiction.

(1) The Sherman Act Claim (as it affects Wilson Metal Casket Company, Batesville Casket Company, Memphis Casket Company, Doric of Memphis, and Westpoint Casket Company)

§ 1 of the Sherman Act states, HN1[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in the restraint of trade or commerce among the several states . . . is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Supp. 1993). Defendants advocate dismissal of Tacker's claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act because of faulty pleading. HN2[] In order to state a claim under § 1, the plaintiff must usually indicate (1) that the defendants contracted, combined, or conspired, (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within relevant product and geographic markets, (3) that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to the conspiracy were illegal, and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy. Greene County Memorial Park v. Behm Funeral Homes, Inc., 797 F. Supp. 1276, 1284 (W.D. Pa. 1992), [7] aff'd without op., 993 F.2d 876 (1993).

Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Asso. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951 (1914) involved a group of lumber dealers engaged in price fixing. As the lumber cartel's prices increased, lumber wholesalers suffered decreased sales and began dealing directly with the public. In response, the retail cartel agreed among themselves not to deal with lumber wholesalers who dealt directly with the public. Eastern States was one of the Supreme Court's earlier acknowledgments of a concerted refusal to deal's inherent economic harm. According to the Court, one dealer has the unquestioned right to refuse to deal with another "for reasons sufficient to himself," but:

> HN3[] An act harmless when done by one may become a public wrong when done by many acting in concert, for it then takes on the form of a conspiracy, and may be prohibited or punished, if the result be hurtful . . . to the individual against whom the concerted action is directed.

Eastern States, 234 U.S. at 614.

HN4[] In determining the sufficiency of a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a Court must look [8] to the nature of the alleged behavior to decide between how to analyze the allegations--either under a per se analysis or by the rule of reason. A naked restraint of trade with no purpose other than to stifle competition is a violation per se of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802, 805-806 (6th Cir. 1988).

For many years, the U.S. Supreme Court consistently held that concerted refusals to deal were violations per se of § 1. Business and economic justifications for such conduct were thus deemed irrelevant, and a showing of adverse effect on competition was considered unnecessary.See also, United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 210-19, 84 L. Ed. 1421, 60 S. Ct. 703 (1940); Fashion Originators' Guild, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703 (1941); Northern P. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. [*427] 514 (1958); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); [9] Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961).

Later, however, in Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985), the Supreme Court carved out an exception to the long-standing per se rule for concerted refusals to deal, deciding that such conspiracies or combinations can potentially increase efficiency in a given market and thus have a purpose other than to be blatant and unreasonable restraints of trade, especially if those acting in concert do not have effective market power. HN5[] The apparent rule now is that concerted refusals to deal are violations per se of § 1 where there is no plausible argument that the refusal to deal accentuates efficiency and where it is impossible to prove that the conspirators possess market power. Otherwise, the concerted refusal to deal resulted in no anti-competitive effect. Northwest Wholesale, 472 U.S. at 289-98.

Defendants [10] in the current action argue that the § 1 claim cannot withstand a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a legally-cognizable claim, because plaintiff offers nothing more than conclusory allegations to support the claim. In addition, defendants argue that the claim must fail because it does not allege each essential element of a § 1 violation.

Rule 8(a) of the Federal Rule of Civil Procedure states that a complaint is adequate when it contains:

> HN6[] (1) a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends . . .
> (2) a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and > (3) a demand for judgment for the relief the pleader seeks.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8.

HN7[] A complaint need not be overly fact-specific. The function of the complaint is to give the opposing party fair notice of the nature and basis or grounds of the claim and a general indication of the type of litigation involved; however, pleadings filled with nothing but conclusory allegations that do not afford notice to the court or to the opposing parties violate Rule 8. Ames v. North American Reinsurance Corp., 815 F.2d 75 (6th Cir. 1987). [11] Such a violation of Rule calls for dismissal of the complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a legally-cognizable claim. The claim should not be dismissed, however, unless it appears that beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Windsor v. The Tennessean, 719 F.2d 155 (1983), reh'g denied, 726 F.2d 277 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 826, 83 L. Ed. 2d 50, 105 S. Ct. 105 (1984).

Defendants argue that the claim under the Sherman Act is replete with conclusory allegations and should be dismissed for that reason. However, a conspiracy is, by its very nature, cloaked in secrecy. A complaint ought not to be dismissed for plaintiff's failure to state facts that defendants might meticulously have hidden from plaintiff and that only a discovery process might reveal. As the Supreme Court stated in a factually-similar case, HN8[] "summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, [and] the proof is largely in the hands of the [12] alleged conspirators. . . ." Norfolk Monument Co. v. Woodlawn Memorial Gardens, 394 U.S. 700, 704, 22 L. Ed. 2d 658, 89 S. Ct. 1391 (1969). Additionally, because Tacker alleges a concerted refusal to deal, he is relieved from pleading with as much specificity as might be necessary under a rule of reason analysis.

In the second amended complaint, Tacker alleges numerous incidents in which casket distributors refused to sell caskets to him, either refusing at the outset or ultimately withdrawing from prior agreements. In paragraph 44 of the amended complaint, Tacker alleges that the manager of one of the distributors informed Tacker outright that one of the service providers "would not allow" that distributor to sell to Tacker. Tacker alleges that all of these distributors supplied caskets to the service providers. In [*428] paragraph 47, there is a description of how one salesperson informed plaintiff that he had been told "not to come near" plaintiff's company. Elsewhere in the second amended complaint, Tacker describes incidents of coercion and intimidation among the parties allegedly in concert, threats against plaintiff's livelihood, [13] and habits of price-fixing and tying-in.

This Court agrees with defendants that the complaints contain many pages of surplusage and that the useful allegations in plaintiff's complaints are relatively few. Defendants are also correct that plaintiff's allegations do not employ antitrust terminology or theory that might make for more specific descriptions of the wrongs alleged.

Tacker does allege facts that indicate more than a series of coincidences. Further, he has alleged facts that, if proven, could indicate defendants' market power in concert and their conspiracy's anti-competitive results of artificially increased prices and squeezing out independent competition. The nature of any effective conspiracy is an important reason that the § 1 claim survives these motions to dismiss. Tacker cannot be expected, pre-discovery, to allege facts that have allegedly been painstakingly and systematically withheld from him.

Tacker's complaint is not so conclusory as to deprive defendants of notice of the nature and basis of the claim under the Sherman Act. The Court will not dispose of that claim before discovery is had. Wilson Metal Casket Company's, Bastesville Casket Company's, Memphis Casket [14] Company's Doric of Memphis's, and Westpoint Casket Company's Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss plaintiff's claim under 15 U.S.C. § 1 are DENIED.

(2) THE SHERMAN ACT CLAIM (as it affects Henry Spikes, Leon Ridgeway, Thomas Strickland, Robert P. Shackelford, Jr., and Arthur Pickle ("the Board") in their individual capacities and official capacities as directors of the Tennessee Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers ("the TBFD&E")

Plaintiff alleges in the second amended complaint that the Board, in their individual and official capacities, violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by intentionally delaying plaintiff's licensure to engage in selling caskets retail. In addition, plaintiff alleges that the Board comprises an oligopoly "controlling the entire funeral industry in the Memphis a monopoly (sic), against the interest of the consuming public as well as that of anyone attempting to compete in the area of casket and/or vault sales." Para. 54, Second Amended Complaint.

As a state body, the TBFD&E is immune from antitrust scrutiny for actions that would be unlawful restraints if carried out by private parties. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). [15] In Parker, the Supreme Court decided that HN9[] the framers of the Sherman Act did not intend for antitrust laws to interfere with the market-regulation activities of the states, such as the creation of regulating bodies like the TBFD&E.

This is not to say that the Board is immune from liability for all actions. HN10[] The "state action" doctrine exempts only anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the State as sovereign, or by its subdivisions, pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly. To invoke immunity, which the Board does in its motion to dismiss, the conduct complained of must have occurred pursuant to state compulsion.

Plaintiff alleges that the Board intentionally delayed plaintiff's licensure. One Board member, Leon Ridgeway, is alleged to have threatened to put plaintiff out of business. Plaintiff also cites, as further misconduct by the Board, correspondence to plaintiff from the Board threatening to revoke plaintiff's license if plaintiff did not provide embalming services.

The Board argues that all of the alleged conduct either is shielded by state action immunity or is not legally actionable. This Court agrees. Licensure [16] certainly falls squarely within state action, as does the warning that plaintiff's license would be revoked if plaintiff did not follow licensing policy. Any delay in plaintiff's licensure still falls under the Board's immunity, especially [*429] since plaintiff did get the license he sought. Plaintiff alleges no facts in relation to the licensure or in relation to the threat of revocation that, if proven, would divest the Board of its immunity from liability for those acts.

As to the alleged threat made by Leon Ridgeway, plaintiff states no legally-cognizable claim. Even assuming the truth of the allegation for purpose of the motion to dismiss, a unilateral threat cannot stand as the sole basis for a claim under the Sherman Act's requirement that plaintiff prove a conspiracy.

Plaintiff argues that even if the Board members are immune in their official capacities, they could still be individually liable for the conduct alleged. However, that argument works only if plaintiff has stated facts amounting to a legally-cognizable claim. At a minimum, a legally-cognizable claim gives an opposing party fair notice of the nature and basis or grounds of the claim and a general indication of the type [17] of litigation involved. Ames v. North American Reinsurance Corp., 815 F.2d 75 (6th Cir. 1987).

Plaintiff argues that each member of the Board is also personally affiliated with various corporate service providers. Because of these affiliations, argues plaintiff, the members of the Board had personal reasons to wield their administrative powers in ways that would coerce other members of the industry into not doing business with plaintiff. Although plaintiff constructs perfectly plausible motives, plaintiff alleges no facts that, if proven, would impose liability individually upon members of the Board. The motion to dismiss filed by the Board in their individual and official capacities is GRANTED.

(3) THE CLAIM UNDER 15 U.S.C. § 45 and FTC REGULATIONS

Plaintiff alleges that defendants' behavior violated 15 U.S.C. § 45 and regulations promulgated pursuant to that statute. Defendants assert that plaintiff fails to state a claim under 15 U.S.C. § 45 because the statute does not provide for private claims. Plaintiff argues that (1) defendants cite nothing [18] but non-binding authority for their argument, and (2) even if this Court agrees that there currently exists no private right to a claim under the statute, this Court should take the opportunity to make a change in the law.

HN11[] The Federal Trade Commission Act ("the FTC Act"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 41, et seq., was created for the purpose of creating and lodging administrative functions in a body specially competent to deal with threats and dangers to trade and competition. See, Hastings Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 153 F.2d 253 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 328 U.S. 853, 90 L. Ed. 1626, 66 S. Ct. 1344 (1946); New Jersey Wood Finishing Co. v. Minnesota Mining and Mfg. Co., 332 F.2d 346 (3d Cir. 1964), aff'd, 381 U.S. 311, 14 L. Ed. 2d 405, 85 S. Ct. 1473 (1965). 15 U.S.C. § 45 is the enforcement statute declaring unlawful "unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 45(a)(1). Courts have traditionally held that the basic purpose of the statute is to protect the public, and that remedial [19] power rests exclusively in the FTC.

Plaintiff is correct that defendants cite other Circuits' law [1] to argue that there exists no private right of action under 15 U.S.C. § 45; however, the Sixth Circuit has also addressed the issue. FTC v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 853 F.2d 458 (6th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1015, 103 L. Ed. 2d 190, 109 S. Ct. 1128 (1989), involved the rights of an intervenor under the FTC Act. In Owens-Corning, the intervenor, whose rights of intervention were sharply circumscribed, sought to appeal certain findings of fact made by the District Court. Id. at 463. In addressing that situation, the Sixth Circuit stated:

> [The intervenor] may not, as a private party invoke the jurisdiction of the federal courts to enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act. Congress has clearly limited [*430] the invocation of jurisdiction under the FTC Act to the Commission itself.

Id. at 464. The Owens-Corning Court then adopted language set forth in Alfred Dunhill, Ltd. v. Interstate Cigar Co., 499 F.2d 232 (2d Cir. 1974): [20]

> HN12[] The Federal Trade Commission Act may be enforced only by the Federal Trade Commission. Nowhere does the Act bestow upon either competitors or consumers standing to enforce its provisions.

499 F.2d at 237.

This Court is persuaded by the Owens-Corning language and also by several decisions in other circuits. Defendants' motions to dismiss plaintiff's allegations under § 45 and regulations [21] promulgated thereunder are hereby GRANTED. Those allegations are hereby DISMISSED.

(4) THE TENNESSEE ANTITRUST ALLEGATIONS

Plaintiff alleges that defendants conduct, described in earlier portions of this order, violated Tennessee Code Annotated § 47-25-101 which states, in pertinent part:

---

[1] See, Baum v. Great Western Cities, Inc., 703 F.2d 1197 (10th Cir. 1983); Dreisbach v. Murphy, 658 F.2d 720 (9th Cir. 1981); Fulton v. Hecht, 580 F.2d 1243, reh'g denied, 585 F.2d 520 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 981, 60 L. Ed. 2d 241, 99 S. Ct. 1789 (1979). Alfred Dunhill Ltd. v. Interstate Cigar Co., 499 F.2d 232 (2d Cir. 1974); Holloway v. Bristol-Myers Corp., 158 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 485 F.2d 986 (D.C. Cir. 1973).

> HN13[] All arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend, to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any . . . product or article, are declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

TENN. CODE ANN. § 47-25-101 (1988).

§§ 47-25-103 - 106 outline the remedies available for violation of § 47-25-101. Such remedies include criminal penalties, enforcement of which would be the Attorney General's duty, and charter forfeiture, enforcement of which also rests exclusively with the Attorney General. The only provision which vests standing to enforce in private parties is § 47-25-106, which states:

> HN14[] Any person who may be injured or damaged by any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination described in this part may sue for and recover, in any court of competent jurisdiction, [22] of any person operating such trust or combination, the full consideration or sum paid by him for any goods, wares, merchandise, or articles, the sale of which is controlled by such combination or trust.

TENN. CODE ANN. § 47-25-106 (1988). [2]

Plaintiff has alleged no facts that would indicate that plaintiff transacted business with any of the defendants. As a private party, plaintiff's remedy for a violation of § 47-25-101 would be found in § 47-25-106, but plaintiff has stated no claim for which such relief could be granted.

Plaintiff's allegations under Tennessee Code Annotated § 47-25-101 are hereby DISMISSED for failure to state a claim for which relief can be granted.

II. THE INTENTIONAL TORT CLAIM: WHETHER SUPPLEMENTAL JURISDICTION IS PROPER OVER THE CLAIM AGAINST ELMER WILSON

In the second [23] amended complaint, plaintiff alleges that plaintiff and his wife, on Elmer Wilson's invitation, went to St. Joseph, Tennessee to visit the Wilson Metal Casket Company. Plaintiff and Wilson agreed that plaintiff would buy some caskets from Wilson, and Wilson left the room momentarily. When Wilson came back, he told plaintiff that he had changed his mind and would not be selling any caskets to plaintiff. When plaintiff pressed Wilson for an explanation, Wilson, > without provocation and without warning . . . struck plaintiff in the right eye and face with his fist knocking plaintiff to the ground. Mr. Wilson then called out for his son by name and said "come get him." At this moment a young man came from a side door and tackled plaintiff knocking him to the ground. The young man and Mr. Wilson then hit plaintiff several times. . . . Mr. Wilson and the young man then took plaintiff and literally threw him out of the door and onto the gravel parking lot. Mr. Wilson then instructed the young man to "get my gun, I'm going to kill them." Mrs. Tacker, by this time, had gotten the car and pulled the automobile [*431] up to plaintiff; as he got in the car Mr. Wilson charged the car threatening to [24] bash in the window. Mrs. Tacker accelerated the car and escaped.

Second Amended Complaint, Paragraph 66. Plaintiff seeks to invoke this court's supplemental jurisdiction, conferred by 28 U.S.C. § 1367, over state-law claims arising from the altercation with Wilson.

28 U.S.C. § 1367 states:

> HN15[] (a) Except as otherwise provided . . . in any civil action of which the district courts have original jurisdiction, the district courts shall have supplemental jurisdiction over all other claims that are so related to

---

[2] "Person", as used in § 47-25-106, refers to both natural and non-natural persons. Metropolitan Government of Nashville & Davidson County v. Ashland Oil, 535 F. Supp. 328 (M.D. Tenn. 1982).

> claims in the action within such original jurisdiction that they form part of the same case or controversy under Article III of the United States Constitution. . . .
> . . . .
> (c) The district courts may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim under subsection (a) if--
> (1) the claim raises a novel or complex issue of state law,
> (2) the claim substantially predominates over the claim or claims over which the district court has original jurisdiction,
> (3) the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction, or
>
> (4) in exceptional circumstances, there [25] are other compelling reasons for declining jurisdiction.

The policy underlying supplemental jurisdiction is that conduct which forms the basis of a federal claim may also form the basis of a state claim:

> They may be separate claims, or they may merely be different "counts" or "grounds" or "theories"' in support of what is essentially a single claim. Each can be sued on in its own court system, of course, but that creates duplication and waste. . . . The doctrine of pendent permits the plaintiff to bring both claims in the federal court.

28 U.S.C.A. § 1367 (Practice Commentary, Supp. 1993).

Almost twenty-five years before the enactment of § 1367, the Supreme Court addressed supplemental or "pendent" jurisdiction in United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966). HN16[] The Court formulated a two-step analysis to determine whether the exercise of pendent jurisdiction was proper: (1) Did the state claim and the federal claim share a "common nucleus of operative fact"? and, if so, (2) With respect to doctrines of judicial economy, convenience, [26] and fairness, should the power to hear the claim be exercised? 383 U.S. at 725-27. § 1367's boundaries are at least coextensive with Gibb's broad conferral of jurisdiction. § 1367 envelops the "common nucleus of operative fact" test in the requirement that the two claims be "so related . . . that they form part of the same case or controversy under Article III of the United States Constitution."

HN17[] Exercise of supplemental jurisdiction is appropriate when, as is true in the current case, both claims arise out of the same alleged conspiracy, the District Court has exclusive jurisdiction over the federal claim, and the supplemental claim would not predominate over the federal claim. See United States v. Tazzioli Constr. Co., 796 F. Supp. 1130 (N.D. Ill. 1992). It also stands to reason that where a federal court has jurisdiction over plaintiff's Sherman Act claim, it should exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiff's tort claim, when the tort claim is an outgrowth of the alleged conspiracy, and the alleged conspiracy forms the basis of the Sherman Act claim. See Bazal v. Belford Trucking Co., Inc., 442 F. Supp. 1089 (S.D. Fla. 1977). [27] Plaintiff alleges in the Second Amended Complaint that Wilson's tortious behavior was carried out "in furtherance of the plan to prevent plaintiff or scare plaintiff from the business of retail casket sales." Taking as true the allegations of the Second Amended Complaint, plaintiff's tort claim against Wilson is an outgrowth of the Sherman Act conspiracy and is thus sufficiently related to the antitrust claim as to form part of the same case or controversy as the Sherman Act claim, over which this Court has exclusive jurisdiction. General Invest. Co. v. Lake Shore & M.S.R. Co., 260 U.S. 261, 286-88, 67 L. Ed. 244, 43 S. Ct. 106 (1922).

Defendant Elmer Wilson's motion to dismiss the intentional tort claim is DENIED.

[*432] SUMMARY

(1) The motions of Wilson Metal Casket Company, Batesville Casket Company, Memphis Casket Company, Doric of Memphis, and Westpoint Casket Company to dismiss the Sherman Act claim are DENIED.

(2) Defendants Henry Spikes, Leon Ridgeway, Thomas Strickland, Robert P. Shackelford, Jr., and Arthur Pickle are hereby DISMISSED in their individual and official capacities, and the Clerk of Court is directed to restyle [28] the case to reflect the dismissal of Henry Spikes, Leon Ridgeway, Thomas Strickland, Robert P. Shackelford, Jr., and Arthur Pickle, in those defendants' individual and official capacities.

(3) Defendants' motions to dismiss the claim under the FTC Act and regulations promulgated thereunder are GRANTED and the claim is DISMISSED.

(4) Defendants' motions to dismiss the claim under Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 is GRANTED and the claim is DISMISSED.

(5) Defendant Elmer Wilson's motion to dismiss the tort claim is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ENTER: This 4th day of August, 1993.

ROBERT M. McRAE

SENIOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

March 17, 1993, Argued ; August 5, 1993, Filed

No. 92-1762

Reporter
1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 20329 *; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,322

ALVORD-POLK, INC.; AMERICAN BLIND FACTORY, INC.; DELTA PAINT AND WALLPAPER SUPPLY CO., INC.; FAIRMAN WALLPAPER AND PAINT COMPANY; FRANK R. YOCUM, t/a FRANK R. YOCUM & SONS WALLPAPER CO.; HARRY'S WALLPAPER, INC.; LANCASTER CARPET MARKET, INC.; MARVIN KOLSKY, t/a HEADQUARTERS WINDOWS & WALLS; SILVER WALLPAPER & PAINT CO., INC.; YANKEE WALLCOVERINGS, INC., Appellants, v. F. SCHUMACHER & CO.; THE NATIONAL DECORATING PRODUCTS ASSOCIATION, INC. Appellees.

Subsequent History: Vacated by Order of the Court September 15, 1993. Certiorari Denied April 17, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. LEXIS 2628.

Prior History: [*1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA. (D.C. Civil No. 90-03617).

Core Terms

dealers, retailers, manufacturers, conspiracy, wallcovering, concerted action, apparent authority, complaints, surcharge, conventional, anticompetitive, plaintiffs', antitrust, trade association, summary judgment, competitors, Sherman Act, anti trust law, Decorating, Counts, tends, horizontal, vertical, piracy, drop shipment, consumers, executive committee, cloaked, letters, costs

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court's review of a grant of summary judgment is plenary; the court evaluates the evidence using the same standard the district court applies in reaching its decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The very essence of a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is the existence of an agreement. Indeed, § 1 liability is predicated upon some form of concerted action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The term "concerted action" is often used as shorthand for any form of activity meeting the contract, combination, or conspiracy requirement of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Activity which is alleged to have been in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, may be subject to a per se standard and engender liability without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused. Alternatively, § 1 liability may- be imposed for concerted action which violates the rule of reason standard without proof that it threatened monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Powers > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Neither internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and its unincorporated division, nor activity undertaken jointly by a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary, can form the bases of violations under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

An agreement need not be explicit to result in liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, and may instead be inferred from circumstantial evidence. Therefore, direct evidence of concerted action is not required.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN8[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

A district court may enter summary judgment if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The substantive law determines which facts are material.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN9[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

A party moving for summary judgment need not produce evidence to disprove its opponent's claim, but it does bear the burden of demonstrating the absence of any genuine issues of material fact. When the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, the moving party may meet its burden by showing that the nonmoving party has failed to produce evidence sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to its case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN10[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In reviewing the evidence, facts and inferences must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN11[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

When the moving party has pointed to material facts tending to show there is no genuine issue for trial, however, the nonmoving party must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN12[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The traditional summary judgment standard applies with equal force in antitrust cases; however, the meaning ascribed to circumstantial evidence varies depending upon the challenged conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Evidence of conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy, without more, does not support an inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Circumstantial & Direct Evidence

HN14[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Plaintiffs in antitrust cases are required to submit evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action, i.e., direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the alleged conspirators had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Conversely, if the alleged conduct is facially anticompetitive and exactly the harm the antitrust laws aim to prevent, no special care need be taken in assigning inferences to circumstantial evidence.

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Party Opponents > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Rule Components > Statements

HN15[] Exemptions, Statements by Party Opponents

Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) provides that statements are not hearsay if they are offered against a party and are statements of which the party has manifested his adoption or belief in its truth.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Dismissal of Appeals > General Overview

HN16[] Appellate Jurisdiction, Final Judgment Rule

If, by error, a separate judgment is not filed before a party appeals, nothing but delay would flow from requiring the court of appeals to dismiss the appeal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN17[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust policy requires the courts to seek the economic substance of an arrangement, not merely its form. The actions of a group of competitors taken in one name present the same potential evils as do the actions of a group of competitors who have not created a formal organization within which to operate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Where individual actors take actions as a group, they are a combination for the purposes of those actions. Where no group action is taken, no such combination can exist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN19[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Concerted action does not exist every time a trade association member speaks or acts. Instead, in assessing whether a trade association, or any other group of competitors, has taken concerted action, a court must examine all the facts and circumstances to determine whether the action taken was the result of some agreement, tacit or otherwise, among members of the association.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN20[] Intentional Interference, Elements

To establish a claim of tortious interference with existing contracts, plaintiffs must prove that the defendants intentionally and improperly interfered with their performance of contracts with third persons. To prove their claims of tortious interference with prospective contractual relations, plaintiffs likewise must prove, inter alia, the existence of prospective contracts. A prospective contract is something less than a contractual right, something more than a mere hope; it exists if there is a reasonable probability that a contract will arise from the parties' current dealings.

Counsel: Steven A. Asher, Esquire (ARGUED), Kohn, Nast & Graf, 1101 Market Street, 24th Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19107, Attorney for Appellants Alvord-Polk, Inc. American Blind Factory, Inc.; Delta Paint and Wallpaper Supply Co. Inc; Frank R. Yocum, t/a Frank R. Yocum & Sons Wallpaper Co.; Harry's Wallpaper, Inc.; Lancaster Carpet Market, Inc.; Marvin Kolsky, t/a Headquarters Windows & Walls; Silver Wallpaper & Paint Co. Inc.; Yankee Wallcoverings, Inc.

Michael S. Lando, Esquire (ARGUED), 1411 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, PA 15219, Attorney for Appellant Fairman Wallpaper and Paint Company.

Margaret M. Zwisler, Esquire (ARGUED), Howrey & Simon, 1730 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20006-4793, Attorney for Appellee F. Schumacher & Co..

Richard D. Lageson, Esquire (ARGUED), Gino F. Battisti, Esquire, Suelthaus & Kaplan, P.C. 7733 Forsyth Boulevard, 12th Floor, St. Louis, MO 63105, Attorneys for Appellee The National Decorating Products Association, Inc..

Judges: BEFORE: STAPLETON, ROTH and LEWIS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: LEWIS

Opinion

OPINION OF THE COURT

LEWIS, Circuit Judge.

[*2] For over a decade, retailers who market wallpaper by providing sample books and showroom displays have feuded with dealers who sell at a discount through toll-free "1-800" telephone numbers. In this case, ten 800-number dealers have accused the retailers' trade association and one of the leading wallpaper manufacturers of violating antitrust laws in an attempt to force them out of business. The district court granted summary judgment to the defendants on these and certain state-law claims. We will affirm.

I.

HN1[] Our review of a grant of summary judgment is plenary; we evaluate the evidence using the same standard the district court was to have applied in reaching its decision. Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1362 (3d Cir. 1992); J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1530 (3d Cir. 1990); Erie Telecommunications, Inc. v. City of Erie, 853 F.2d 1084, 1093 (3d Cir. 1988). Plaintiffs have alleged three theories of antitrust liability under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (the "Act"). A brief review of the Act and [*3] its purposes informs our determination of the standard to be applied on summary judgment.

A.

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal[.]

15 U.S.C. § 1. HN3[] The very essence of a section 1 claim, of course, is the existence of an agreement. Indeed, section 1 liability is predicated upon some form of concerted action. [1] Fisher v. Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, 106 S. Ct. 1045 (1986); Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-69, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919); Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1364. See also Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 812 (3d Cir. 1984) (section 1 claim requires proof of three elements, the first of which is "a contract, combination or conspiracy"); Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 110 (3d Cir. 1980) [*4] ("unilateral action, no matter what its motivation, cannot violate [section] 1"). A "'unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement[,]'" must exist to trigger section 1 liability. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 771, quoting American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946). See also Fisher, 475 U.S. at 267; Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 111.

The requirement is an important one, for it emphasizes the distinction between section 1 liability, which is imposed for concerted action in restraint of trade, and liability imposed under section 2 of the Sherman Act for monopolization. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767. [*5] HN5[] Activity which is alleged to have been in violation of section 1 may be subject to a per se standard and engender liability without inquiry into the harm it has actually caused. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 768. See generally Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988). Alternatively, section 1 liability might be imposed for concerted action which violates the "rule of reason" standard without proof that it threatened monopolization. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 768.

Congress treated concerted action more strictly than unilateral behavior because,

> Concerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk. It deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands. In any conspiracy, two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately are combining to act as one for their common benefit. This not only reduces the diverse directions in which economic power is aimed but suddenly increases the economic power moving in one particular direction. Of course, such mergings of resources [*6] may well lead to efficiencies that benefit consumers, but their anticompetitive potential is sufficient to warrant scrutiny even in the absence of incipient monopoly.

Id. at 768-69. For this reason, when we examine an alleged violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, we look for an agreement that "brings together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals." Id. at 769. A lack of such divergent goals precludes officers of a single company from conspiring. HN6[] Neither internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and its unincorporated division, nor activity undertaken jointly by a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary, can form the bases of section 1 violations. Id. at 769-71.

HN7[] An agreement need not be explicit to result in section 1 liability, Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 59-60, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911), quoted in Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 785 (Stevens, J., dissenting), and may instead be inferred from circumstantial evidence. Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540-41, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954); [*7] Sweeney, 673 F.2d at 111; Milgram v. Loew's, Inc., 192 F.2d 579, 583 (3d Cir. 1951). Therefore, direct evidence of concerted action is not required.

1

HN4[] The term "concerted action" is often used as shorthand for any form of activity meeting the section 1 "contract, combination or conspiracy" requirement. Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434, 445-46 (3d Cir. 1977).

In this case, the parties contest the propriety of summary judgment on the issue of concerted action in each of three different alleged fact patterns. Before addressing each fact pattern, we turn to a review of the summary judgment standard applicable to antitrust cases.

B.

HN8[] A district court may enter summary judgment "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The substantive law determines which facts are material. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

HN9[] A party moving for summary judgment need not produce evidence to disprove its opponent's claim, Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986), but it does bear the burden of demonstrating the absence of any genuine [*8] issues of material fact. Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1362. As in this case, when the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, the moving party may meet its burden by showing that the nonmoving party has failed to produce evidence sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to its case. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322.

HN10[] In reviewing the evidence, facts and inferences must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). HN11[] When the moving party has pointed to material facts tending to show there is no genuine issue for trial, however, the nonmoving party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. . . . Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586-87.

HN12[] This traditional summary judgment standard applies with equal force in antitrust cases, Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 285, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992); [*9] Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1362-63; however, the meaning we ascribe to circumstantial evidence will vary depending upon the challenged conduct.

For example, HN13[] evidence of conduct which is "as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy," without more, does not support an inference of conspiracy. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 597 n.21, citing Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763-64, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1363. See generally Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries, Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 186-87 (3d Cir. 1992). This is because mistaken inferences in such a context "are especially costly[;] they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594; Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. In such cases, the Supreme Court has HN14[] required plaintiffs to submit "evidence tending to exclude the possibility" of independent action, i.e., "direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that [*10] [the alleged conspirators] 'had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, quoting Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 111.

Conversely, if the alleged conduct is "facially anticompetitive and exactly the harm the antitrust laws aim to prevent," no special care need be taken in assigning inferences to circumstantial evidence. Eastman Kodak, 119 L. Ed. 2d at 291; Arnold Pontiac-GMC, Inc. v. Budd Baer, Inc., 826 F.2d 1335, 1339 (3d Cir. 1987) (Monsanto and Matsushita do not apply when challenged action is overtly anticompetitive); Tunis Brothers Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., Inc., 823 F.2d 49, 50 (3d Cir. 1987) (implying that Matsushita requires evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action only when the challenged conduct is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy). See also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432, 438-39 (9th Cir. 1990) [*11] ("the key to proper interpretation of Matsushita lies in the danger of permitting inferences from certain types of ambiguous evidence"). [2]

II.

With these standards in mind, we will review the evidence, granting reasonable inferences to the plaintiffs. [3]

[*12] Persons interested in decorating or redecorating their homes or offices typically view samples of wallpaper before purchasing. Recognizing this, retailers traditionally have made available to consumers the wallpaper sample books they purchase from manufacturers. They have also provided consumers with information through the use of promotional materials and showroom displays. The purchase of sample books, establishment of a showroom and hiring of knowledgeable sales personnel are costly endeavors and, as one might expect, these costs are reflected in higher prices to consumers. Manufacturers have encouraged retailers to incur these costs, however, because of a prevailing notion that their products sell better when marketed thus.

In recent years, a new breed of retailer has emerged. Some companies now accept orders from consumers all over the United States who call toll-free telephone numbers to order wallpaper after having availed themselves of the sample books, displays and assistance offered by conventional retailers. Today, purchasers may visit a conventional retailer's showroom, peruse the sample books, note the brands and product numbers of the patterns they like, and then go [*13] home and order wallpaper at a discount from an 800-number dealer. This informed decision has, of course, been funded in part by retailers who will realize no return on their investment. The 800-number dealer will arrange a "drop shipment" directly from the manufacturer to the purchasers' homes. [4]

Both conventional retailers and 800-number dealers are members of the National Decorating Products Association (the "NDPA"), a trade association comprised of independent retailers who sell a [*14] variety of decorating products. The NDPA has about 3,300 members who operate approximately 8,500 retail locations. Its policy is established and its business conducted by an 18-member board of directors. It sponsors a number of trade shows and educational programs for its members each year. It also publishes a monthly industry news journal titled Decorating Retailer, and it formerly published a similar newsletter called Wallcovering Industry News.

A.

In the late 1970's and early 1980's, conventional retailers in the NDPA threatened to cease purchasing products from manufacturers who continued to do business with the 800-number dealers, whom they referred to as "pirates." The NDPA itself actively campaigned against 800-number dealers by lobbying manufacturers to recognize the advantages of conventional retailing and by encouraging them to "level the playing field" between 800-number dealers and conventional retailers.

2

Similarly, the analyses set forth in Monsanto and Matsushita do not apply when a plaintiff has offered direct evidence of concerted action. Arnold Pontiac-GMC, Inc. v. Budd Baer, Inc., 826 F.2d 1335, 1338 (3d Cir. 1987). See also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432, 441 (9th Cir. 1990).

3

Our review does not include consideration of evidence which was the subject of the three pending motions to supplement the record. Nor will we consider citations to evidence in F. Schumacher & Co.'s brief which was not of record before the district court.

4

In the nomenclature of the marketplace, these 800-number dealers are "free-riders," who reduce or eliminate service to create price competition but who benefit from services such as wallpaper sample books, salesperson advice and showroom displays paid for and provided by other, full-service retailers. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 55, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977); Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1376-77 (3d Cir. 1992).

For example, Robert Petit, NDPA's executive vice president and chief executive officer, spoke to manufacturers, including Michael Landau, president of F. Schumacher & Co. ("FSC") on this subject. Appendix ("App.") at 190-97, 202. In February, 1983, Petit sent [*15] a letter on NDPA letterhead urging retailers to request from manufacturers sample books that did not reveal retail prices. Depriving consumers of this information, Petit argued, would make it more difficult for them to avail themselves of an 800-number dealer's discount. App. at 523. The NDPA also marketed a "sales piracy kit" for conventional retailers to use in disguising or concealing pattern numbers and price information on sample books so that consumers could not so easily acquire the information and then order elsewhere. App. at 271-73, 407.

In 1985, the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") issued a complaint against NDPA because of these activities. In 1986, the parties entered into a consent decree which provided in part:

> NDPA . . . shall cease and desist from:
>
> A. Conduct having the purpose or effect of:

* * *

> Expressly or impliedly advocating, suggesting, advising, or recommending that any of NDPA's . . . members refuse to deal with any seller of wallcoverings on account of, or that any of NDPA's . . . members engage in any other act to affect, or to attempt to affect, the prices, terms or conditions of sale, or distribution methods or choice of customers of any [*16] seller of wallcoverings.

App. at 412. The consent decree also provided:

> IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that this Order shall not be construed to prevent NDPA . . . from publishing written materials or sponsoring seminars, or otherwise providing information or its members' views on topics including but not limited to cost accounting principles, and suggested prices and product identification numbers in wallcovering sample books to other sellers of wallcoverings, provided, however, that the information or views are not presented in a manner constituting a violation of any provision contained in Part II of this Order.

Id. [5]

[*17] In the aftermath of this settlement, as required by the consent decree, NDPA circulated a summary of the consent order in which it informed members that NDPA, as a group of competitors, was "already considered to be an 'agreement.'" App. at 430. The NDPA guidelines for conducting meetings, drafted shortly before entry of the consent decree, also acknowledge that "a trade association is, by definition, a combination of competitors." App. at 740. The guidelines further provide that before a chapter officer delivers a speech or makes a presentation at a meeting, he or she should state that the views expressed are his or her own and not those of the NDPA or any chapter. App. at 743.

Since the entry of the consent decree, NDPA has informed its members that it may no longer assist them in urging manufacturers to act against 800-number dealers. One poll showed that some members have resigned because the NDPA is "not doing anything in regard to the sales piracy issue." App. at 200. Petit, however, has continued to impart to manufacturers, including Landau, his view of the advantages of conventional retailing over other methods of marketing wallcovering, such as 800-number sales. App. at 198.

[*18] B.

The sentiment against 800-number dealers continued to escalate even after the consent decree was entered. Decorating Retailer published several letters from NDPA members, including some retailers who were former or current NDPA officers, urging action against the 800-number dealers. Its editor, John Rogers, often solicited

---

5

> We may, of course, consider evidence of activity necessitating the entry of the consent decree, as well as the terms of the consent decree itself, as part of the overall picture, or potential evidence of a pattern of conduct. See Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1361; cf. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962).

comment for the letters column by sending a variety of articles from a forthcoming issue to a number of people in the industry. In each issue of Decorating Retailer, a standard statement appeared in the letters column apprising the reader that: "The editor reserves the right to edit to fit space limitations or publishing policies. Opinions expressed are those of the writer and not necessarily those of the editor." E.g., app. at 496.

Decorating Retailer and Wallcovering Industry News also printed several news articles about 800-number dealers, most of which used the term "pirates" among other characterizations to describe them. In May, 1988, one editorial -- a Perspective column in Decorating Retailer -- stated that "there are increasing signs that the retailer's voice crying in the wallcovering wilderness is being heard," and cited [*19] many developments in the industry, such as "a sudden advent of bar coding kits for retailer protection of sample book pattern numbers," as signs that wallpaper suppliers were responding to retailers' needs. App. at 758.

C.

Undoubtedly, FSC, a leading manufacturer which had always promoted the traditional method of marketing wallcoverings, heard the complaints. In July, 1988, it announced a drop shipment surcharge on wallcovering deliveries directly to consumers, to take effect in September, 1988. App. at 298-99. Under this new policy, FSC would impose a 7 percent surcharge on every order requesting drop shipment. Obviously, this would have the effect of increasing the 800-number dealers' costs while decreasing their ability to compete on the basis of price with conventional retailers.

The minutes from FSC's management committee meeting in April, 1988, state that it considered the policy to be a signal to conventional retailers that FSC was trying to help them. App. at 290. A draft press release, later revised, identified the protection of dealers from piracy as one reason for the surcharge. Compare app. at 298-99 with app. at 1364-65. Minutes from September, 1989, reveal that [*20] the management committee viewed the drop shipment surcharge as "a good first step" against 800-number dealers. App. at 304.

Beyond merely responding to dealer complaints, FSC also claimed that the surcharge was, in part, intended to recoup increased costs of drop shipments. It did not, however, employ any particular formula or calculations to arrive at its surcharge figure or to determine its basis for recoupment. Nor did it consult any source regarding or otherwise study such costs, although the record contains statements by another manufacturer indicating that his costs for drop shipments were no higher than for shipments to stores. App. at 148-49, 622.

Predictably, retailers responded favorably to the imposition of the surcharge. For example, in September, 1988, a Decorating Retailer editor's note responding to a letter about 800-number dealers' advertisements stated that "there are signs that telling your troubles to suppliers eventually will be heard and some remedy may result." App. at 485.

Yet the retailers were not entirely satisfied. In January, 1989, at a convention in Halifax, Nova Scotia, Petit revisited the issue of 800-number dealers and the problems they posed for [*21] the industry. An August, 1989 memo shows that Petit spoke to at least one manufacturer about "the anger felt by the retailers in lack of support from the wallcovering industry." App. at 185-86. During this period, NDPA officer Clyde Morgan also expressed "concern about the 800-number and the effect it was having on me" at a meeting of industry leaders. App. at 183.

The fall 1989 planning session at FSC also reflected continuing concerns about 800-number dealers. In September, 1989, soon after an NDPA meeting, Landau stated at a management committee meeting that the surcharge was a good first step but that other measures were necessary. App. at 304. An October, 1989 memo asked whether "we [should] make another anti-pirate move? If so, what?" App. at 793. In November, 1989, Landau reported to the management committee what he had learned at an NDPA trade show: "retailers squeezed by mass market & 800 #'s." App. at 307. The minutes from that committee's meeting also include the following entry: "800 #s: Meeting with attorneys next week to formulate new strategy." App. at 309.

D.

In January, 1990, FSC announced a local trading policy to be implemented in March, 1990. App. at 694-97. FSC [*22] dealers would be prohibited from selling FSC products outside of their "local trading area," thus effectively prohibiting 800-number dealers from selling FSC's products nationwide through their toll-free telephone numbers. Immediately after this policy was announced, Petit circulated a copy of it to the NDPA board of directors, saying, "This is a major step forward in our battle against the 800-number operators." App. at 693. He also sent a letter to Landau on NDPA letterhead stating, "On behalf of the members of our decorating products associations, I want to express our appreciation of your actions." App. at 700.

Five FSC executives testified that the purpose of the local trading area policy was to ensure that FSC dealers would realize a return on their investments in sample books and other FSC overhead. App. at 1215, 1218-19, 1222-23, 1238-40, 1249-50, 1340-43, 1520-22, 1550-52. FSC's vice president of sales testified that if FSC had not taken action against the 800-number dealers, it "would continue to have resistance to purchasing sample books with the piracy issue." App. at 691. Indeed, there were several references in planning meetings to safeguarding against free riders and [*23] supporting conventional retailers.

Shortly thereafter, according to Decorating Retailer and Wallcovering Industry News articles, NDPA president John Wells spoke at a trade show in Anaheim, California. The articles describe Wells as urging that "insisting on supplier support rather than coding books is the answer to piracy problems besetting wallcovering retailers." App. at 440. At the same show Petit, according to one of the articles, applauded manufacturers' efforts to fight 800-number dealers. Id. In accordance with NDPA guidelines, Wells specifically stated that his views were his own as an independent retailer, but the articles refer both to him and to Petit in their NDPA capacities. [6]

[*24] In May, 1990, Rogers wrote a Perspective column in which he discussed the retailers' opposition to 800-number dealers, reviewed some of the methods retailers had adopted to guard against 800-number dealers' taking their business, and stated, "ultimately, the answer for the individual dealer is that given by Wells: 'I will support those who support me.'" App. at 167. Rogers testified that while the Perspective column does not represent the policy of the NDPA, to his knowledge there has not been an occasion when a comment published in it has contravened NDPA's policies.

Both before and after it instituted the policies in question, FSC received letters from retailers urging it to take action against the 800-number dealers. Meanwhile, during this period the FTC repeatedly responded to inquiries from plaintiffs with the assurance that, in its view, NDPA was in compliance with the consent decree entered into in 1986.

E.

Anti-800 number dealer sentiment was not confined to retailers' ranks; manufacturers were also discussing 800-number dealers among themselves. Between 1988 and 1990, wallpaper manufacturers discussed 800-number dealers at meetings of the Wallcovering Manufacturers [*25] Association ("WMA"), an organization in which Landau served as a member of the board of directors.

In April, 1988, for example, Landau reported to the FSC management committee that there had been "extensive discussion pirate situation" at the WMA meeting in Hilton Head. App. at 292. Manufacturers also discussed bar-coding, in the context of either "pirate-proofing" sample books or standardizing labels and shipping containers. FSC discussed with other manufacturers steps they were taking to combat 800-number dealers, such as engaging in cooperative advertising, imposing state sales taxes and imposing local trading policies.

6

FSC and NDPA argue that these articles constitute inadmissible hearsay. Plaintiffs respond that the articles are admissible as statements of NDPA, having been published in its own publications. See HN15[] Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) (statements are not hearsay if they are offered against a party and are statements of which the party has "manifested his adoption or belief in its truth"). We agree: an employee of NDPA had to have written these articles, which were adopted by NDPA when it published them in Decorating Retailer and Wallcovering Industry News. Wells' statements as reflected in the articles are, therefore, admissible.

800-number dealers were also discussed at conventions sponsored by a chain of wallcovering stores called Wallpaper-To-Go. App. at 313, 315. FSC officials and other wallcovering manufacturers deny that they agreed with other manufacturers to take action against the 800-number dealers, however. See FSC's brief at 42.

Other manufacturers reacted against the 800-number dealers in much the same fashion as FSC did. In April 1988, the owner of one company wrote an open letter to manufacturers about 800-number dealers. In it, he suggested that a task force be formed [*26] to establish an "effective, standard and universal method of 'pirate-proofing' sample books." App. at 884. At least one manufacturer took a step in that direction and coded its sample books so that style and price information could not easily be discerned. App. at 139-41. Another imposed a local trading policy, app. at 130-38, 151, and another tried, but discontinued, a cooperative advertising program with conventional retailers. App. at 127-28. By August, 1989, two more manufacturers had imposed a drop shipment surcharge. App. at 160, 789.

III.

In May, 1990, plaintiffs filed suit against NDPA and FSC. Their amended complaint, filed in January, 1991, contained twelve counts, the first four of which provide the central focus for this appeal. In Count I, they alleged that "the individual retail wallcovering dealers, acting through the NDPA" violated section 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into a horizontal conspiracy to eliminate the competition posed by 800-number dealers. In Count II, the plaintiffs alleged that in response to the pressure exerted by the NDPA, FSC joined NDPA in a vertical conspiracy similarly designed to thwart competition. In Counts III and IV, the plaintiffs alleged [*27] that FSC entered into a conspiracy with other, unnamed, wallcovering manufacturers aimed at eliminating 800-number dealers. Specifically, plaintiffs challenged FSC's imposition of the drop shipment surcharge and its adoption of a local trading policy as being directed at them. [7]

Plaintiffs also alleged a claim under section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(d); state-law antitrust and restraint of trade violations; tortious interference with contracts and prospective contractual relations; fraud and misrepresentation; defamation and commercial disparagement and breach of contract. In turn, FSC asserted various counterclaims [*28] against the 800-number dealers.

The district court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment on Counts I through IV and granted both plaintiffs and defendants summary judgment on various other claims and counterclaims. Thereafter, the parties settled those claims which had not been disposed of, and plaintiffs filed this appeal challenging the district court's decision on Counts I through IV, the state-law antitrust claims, the tortious interference claim and the defamation claim against NDPA.

The district court had jurisdiction over this case pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and we exercise jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. [8] In our analysis of each of the plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims, which allege three distinct

---

7

Their amended complaint indicates that plaintiffs originally were concerned about two additional FSC policies: FSC's failure to discuss cooperative advertising possibilities with 800-number dealers though it did so with conventional retailers, and FSC's charging state sales tax on drop shipments. These policies, however, are not subjects of this appeal.

8

NDPA and FSC argue that we lack jurisdiction over this appeal because the district court failed to enter a judgment on a separate document in accordance with Rule 58 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and had not yet awarded costs in accordance with Rule 54(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

antitrust theories of liability, we proceed from the premise that "plaintiffs should be given the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962).

[*29] IV.

At Count I, in which plaintiffs named only NDPA as a defendant, they alleged that conventional retailers, acting through the NDPA, conspired to pressure manufacturers to eliminate them from the marketplace. The district court examined the record for evidence of "officially sanctioned NDPA activity," found none, and ruled that plaintiffs could not meet the "concerted action" requirement because "the NDPA can only act pursuant to a resolution from its board and no such resolution has been identified." App. at 37. We will affirm, although on different grounds. Erie Telecommunications, 853 F.2d at 1089 n.10; Johnson v. Orr, 776 F.2d 75, 83 n.7 (3d Cir. 1985) (an appellate court may affirm a result reached by the district court for any reason in the record supporting the judgment).

It is both uncontested and uncontestable that NDPA is an association of competing wallpaper dealers. As such, when NDPA takes action it has engaged in concerted action so as to trigger potential section 1 liability. Weiss, 745 F.2d at 816 (hospital executive committee's actions are concerted action within the meaning [*30] on section 1). "HN17[] Antitrust policy requires the courts to seek the economic substance of an arrangement, not merely its form." Weiss, 745 F.2d at 815. The actions of a group of competitors taken in one name present the same potential evils as do the actions of a group of competitors who have not created a formal organization within which to operate. See id. at 816 ("where such associations exist, their actions are subject to scrutiny under section 1 . . . in order to insure that their members do not abuse otherwise legitimate organizations to secure an unfair advantage over their competitors"). See also Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389, 83 S. Ct. 1246 (1963); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1945).

We agree with NDPA's contention, however, that NDPA can only be held liable for concerted action if it acted as an entity. See Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Memorial Hospital, 857 F.2d 96, 117-18 (3d Cir. 1988) (Weiss holds that when a group of competitors "acts as a body, it constitutes a 'combination'"). In Nanavati [*31] , we held that although the actions of a hospital executive committee might constitute concerted action, the committee does not engage in concerted action when it does not "act[] as an entity in furtherance of the conspiracy." Id. at 119. As we explained there:

> Our conclusion in Weiss was premised on the concept that HN18[] where individual actors take actions as a group, they are a combination for the purposes of those actions. Where no group action is taken, no such combination can exist. In short, we did not hold in Weiss that because the actions of the medical staff constitute the actions of a combination, even where there is no allegation that the staff acted as a group, the 'contract, combination or conspiracy' requirement has been met. Such a group is a combination as a matter of law only for the actions it takes as a group.

In Bankers Trust Co. v. Mallis, 435 U.S. 381, 55 L. Ed. 2d 357, 98 S. Ct. 1117 (1978) (per curiam), however, the Supreme Court recognized that the rules of civil procedure requiring entry of judgment on a separate document should be interpreted in a common-sense fashion. "HN16[] If, by error, a separate judgment is not filed before a party appeals, nothing but delay would flow from requiring the court of appeals to dismiss the appeal." Mallis, 435 U.S. at 385-86. See also International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Western Pennsylvania Motor Carriers Assoc., 660 F.2d 76, 80 (3d Cir. 1981). The district court's failure to enter judgment in accordance with the dictates of Rule 58 appears to stem from oversight. No other plausible suggestion has been advanced. Thus, we reject this jurisdictional argument.

As to costs, we note that the parties' stipulation of settlement, which disposed of those counts as to which the district court had not granted summary judgment and which was entered as an order by the district court, provided that each party was to bear its own costs, thus implicitly if not actually resolving any Rule 54(d) issue.

Id.

In Nanavati, the plaintiff did not maintain that the executive committee took any action as a group. Id. Instead, he pointed to the actions of medical staff members who were not on the executive committee as the basis for his claim. He argued that the record contained evidence of a boycott against him [*32] by members of the medical staff, so the jury had not erred in finding that the executive committee had participated in the boycott. Our search for evidence that members of the executive committee had acted in furtherance of the boycott yielded none; thus, we affirmed the district court's grant of judgment n.o.v. to the executive committee.

Nanavati teaches that HN19[] concerted action does not exist every time a trade association member speaks or acts. Instead, in assessing whether a trade association (or any other group of competitors) has taken concerted action, a court must examine all the facts and circumstances to determine whether the action taken was the result of some agreement, tacit or otherwise, [9] among members of the association. See generally Nanavati, 857 F.2d at 119-20.

[*33] Judicial scrutiny of alleged concerted action, undertaken to determine whether it was the result of an agreement, is an intricate endeavor. In the straightforward case, such as when a stock exchange requires disconnection of a nonmember's private telephone wire, or a hospital executive committee votes to deny staff privileges to a member, the action is obviously a result of an agreement which is stamped with the imprimatur of the association by a vote or passage of a resolution. See, e.g., Silver, 373 U.S. at 347; Weiss, 745 F.2d at 816. We can hardly say, however, that this case falls within that genre.

Here, plaintiffs rely on American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 (1982), to argue that NDPA took concerted action when its officers spoke out in protest against the 800-number dealers' business methods and when NDPA publications included letters complaining about 800-number dealers. In Hydrolevel, the Supreme Court, relying on general principles of agency law, determined that the American Society of Mechanical Engineers ("ASME") could be [*34] held liable for the actions of its officers and agents taken with apparent authority. Writing for the majority, Justice Blackmun held that imposing liability based upon apparent authority comported with the intent of the antitrust laws because ASME possessed great power and the codes and standards it issued influenced policies and affected entities' abilities to do business. Hydrolevel, 456 U.S. at 570. "When it cloaks its subcommittee officials with the authority of its reputation, ASME permits those agents to affect the destinies of businesses and thus gives them the power to frustrate competition in the marketplace." Id. at 570-71. Imposing antitrust liability on the association for the actions of its agents would encourage ASME to police its ranks and prevent the use of associations by one or more competitors to injure another. See generally id. at 571-73. See also M. Boudin, Antitrust Doctrine and the Sway of Metaphor, 75 Geo. L. J. 395, 417-18 (1986). [10]

9

It would be incorrect to require an official board resolution, or other officially sanctioned activity, to impose liability on NDPA. Recognizing that perpetrators of antitrust violations are often sophisticated businessmen, courts regularly permit agreements to be shown by circumstantial evidence. See Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1364; Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540-41, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954).

10

Judge Boudin notes that the Supreme Court in Hydrolevel viewed ASME as an "extra-governmental agency" regulating its own industry. American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 570, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 (1982). See M. Boudin, Antitrust Doctrine and the Sway of Metaphor, 75 Geo. L. J. 395, 417 (1986). Indeed, Hydrolevel and many other trade association cases have focused on this role and on associations' standard-setting or industry-regulating activities. See e.g. Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985); Moore v. Boating Industry Assoc., 819 F.2d 693 (7th Cir. 1987). See generally ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments 86-91 (3d ed. 1992). Notably, the case before us does not involve standard-setting or industry-regulating activity on NDPA's part.

[*35] In deciding Hydrolevel, the Court rejected ASME's argument that it should not be held liable unless its agents had acted with an intent to benefit it. This argument was irrelevant, the Court held, in part because "whether they intend to benefit ASME or not, ASME's agents exercise economic power because they act with the force of the Society's reputation behind them." Hydrolevel, 456 U.S. at 574. The Court viewed the imposition of liability regardless of the agents' intent as more consistent with the purposes of antitrust law, since this would encourage ASME to police its agents so as to prevent the anticompetitive effects of their using its name and power even in individual efforts at restraining trade. Id.

The issue presented here, however, is markedly different. In Hydrolevel, the plaintiff had named three defendants in its conspiracy claim. Although it is difficult to discern the exact contours of the alleged conspiracy from the Hydrolevel opinion, it is quite clear that the plaintiff there was not seeking to hold ASME liable for concerted action solely on the basis of actions taken by one official with apparent authority. The conspiracy [*36] alleged apparently was between the chairman of an ASME standards committee and the plaintiff's primary competitor; the question before the Court was whether ASME could be held liable for its agent's anticompetitive activity in participating in the conspiracy even though no one else at ASME had authorized the violation. Because a conspiracy was alleged to have taken place between the ASME official and another conspirator, the Court did not address the question of whether two or more members of ASME were utilizing that organization as a vehicle for concerted anticompetitive activity.

We believe that the Hydrolevel rule that an association's economic power may justify its being held liable for the actions of its agents cannot be extended to defeat the "concerted action" requirement of section 1. Imposing liability on an association, as we did in Weiss, does not abolish or diminish the first element of section 1 liability; it merely recognizes that a group of competitors with a unity of purpose are engaged in concerted action, whether or not they act under one name. As we explained in Nanavati, in the absence of a co-conspirator, an association's actions satisfy the concerted [*37] action requirement only when taken in a group capacity. For this reason, even actions taken by a person with apparent authority to act on behalf of an association should not result in section 1 liability in the absence of a co-conspirator, unless the actions in question represent an attempt by the association, rather than the actor, to restrain trade. Thus, we cannot agree that Hydrolevel requires imposition of section 1 liability upon NDPA, in the absence of a co-conspirator, without some indication that two or more members of NDPA were utilizing it as a vehicle for concerted anticompetitive action.

Having narrowed our inquiry to whether the actions taken and statements made by NDPA officials were proscribed by Weiss and Nanavati, we agree with the district court's determination that the evidence was insufficient to proceed beyond summary judgment. On the record before us, to adopt the suggestion that NDPA's members either agreed that it should threaten manufacturers with a boycott unless they took steps to injure the 800-number dealers, or believed that NDPA was doing so on their behalf and acquiesced in its effort, would require an exercise in conjecture. Cf. Moore v. Boating Industry Assoc., 754 F.2d 698, 711 (7th Cir. 1985), [*38] vacated on other grounds 474 U.S. 895 (1985), on remand 819 F.2d 693 (7th Cir. 1987) (combination of threat of denial of certification to members using a certain product, made by association officer acting with apparent authority, plus "subsequent action on the part of the Association members in refusing to purchase" the product constituted concerted action).

For example, plaintiffs point to evidence of conversations about 800-number dealers which Petit had with a number of wallcovering manufacturers as indicating that NDPA acted to injure them. See app. at 185, 190-98, 201-07, 212-29, 407, 416-19, 693-99, 700. Neither complaints by dealers nor complaints on behalf of many dealers communicated by the president of their trade association constitute antitrust violations, however. Absent indications that Petit, while representing the NDPA, coerced (or attempted to coerce) manufacturers into cooperating in eliminating 800-number dealers, Petit's conversations, even if undertaken while representing the NDPA, show nothing more than the legitimate voicing of complaints to manufacturers. Nothing in either the antitrust laws [*39] or the FTC consent decree prohibits the NDPA from voicing complaints.

Plaintiffs also point to the statements regarding 800-number dealers which Wells, Petit and Morgan made at NDPA conventions as evidencing NDPA's campaign against them. See app. at 167, 182-84, 440. It is undisputed, however, that NDPA officials were instructed, and their general practice was, to preface their remarks with the explicit disclaimer that they were speaking in their individual rather than official capacities. Indeed, Wells and Morgan specifically testified that they had done so. See app. at 183-84, 2245-46. In the face of such uncontradicted evidence, it would be unreasonable for a jury to infer that these officials were speaking as representatives of NDPA. Moreover, even if it were reasonable to infer that they were speaking in their official capacities, the statements constituted nothing more than further complaints about 800-number dealers and a suggestion that retailers should support the manufacturers who supported them in their sales efforts. Nothing in the record before us indicates that dealers cooperated in this effort by doing so, or that they refused to support those manufacturers [*40] who did not support them.

Finally, plaintiffs refer to letters from NDPA members and editorials and articles about 800-number dealers which were published in Decorating Retailer and Wallcovering Industry News. See app. at 468, 479, 485, 490-92, 495, 756-59, 784, 837-38. Letters revealing members' views, and articles and editorials expressing frustration and anger with the 800-number dealers, however, do not evidence an agreement among the members of NDPA who read these publications to pressure manufacturers into treating 800-number dealers less favorably than traditional retailers.

In sum, while an occasional letter or article may imply a call for action from fellow retailers, and while NDPA officers were hardly reticent in voicing members' complaints about 800-numbers dealers, even considering all of the evidence in context, there is insufficient evidence to support a reasonable inference that NDPA members agreed to act through the NDPA to pressure manufacturers to take steps against 800-number dealers.

For these reasons, we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment at Count I.

V.

At Count II, plaintiffs alleged that FSC responded to pressure from the [*41] NDPA by conspiring with it to eliminate 800-number wallpaper dealers from the marketplace. Their allegations flow directly from evidence of conventional retailers complaining to FSC and other manufacturers about plaintiffs' "free-riding." This type of evidence is as consistent with procompetitive activity as with allegedly illegal activity. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763. In Monsanto, a case which also involved an alleged conspiracy to terminate a dealership relationship because of other dealers' complaints, the Supreme Court noted:

> Permitting an agreement to be inferred merely from the existence of complaints, or even from the fact that termination came about 'in response to' complaints, could deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct. Complaints about price cutters 'are natural -- and from the manufacturer's perspective, unavoidable -- reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals.' Such complaints . . . 'arise in the normal course of business and do not indicate illegal concerted action.' . . . Moreover, distributors are an important source of information for manufacturers. In order to assure an efficient distribution system, [*42] manufacturers and distributors constantly must coordinate their activities to assure that their product will reach the consumer persuasively and efficiently. To bar a manufacturer from acting solely because the information upon which it acts originated as a price complaint would create an irrational dislocation in the market.

Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64. Thus, we exercise a measure of caution when drawing inferences from such facts; "a fine line demarcates concerted action that violates antitrust law from legitimate business practices." Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1363, citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762-64. [11]

11

> Citing Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988), the dissent contends that the teachings of Monsanto do not apply to a so-called "hybrid case," in which joint coercive action by dealers allegedly results in a manufacturer's acting to injure other dealers. See Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 730 n.4. Such a case (of which the one before us is an example) combines elements of horizontal and vertical conspiracies; this may affect the decision of whether a per se or a rule of reason standard will apply when judging liability, cf. Pennsylvania Dental Assoc. v. Medical Service Assoc. of Pennsylvania, 745 F.2d 248, 259 (3d Cir. 1984), but it does not necessarily [*43] In Big Apple BMW, plaintiffs alleged that BMW of North America, Inc. ("BMW") had refused to grant automobile dealerships to them because other dealers had complained about plaintiffs' high-volume, deep-discount business methods. BMW asserted a variety of legitimate business reasons for its actions, including a concern about plaintiffs being "free-rider" dealers. Plaintiffs, however, presented evidence that they would not have posed the "free-rider" problem BMW feared, see Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1377, and that a person with the same advertising tactics as theirs (high-volume, deep-discount "sellathons") had been granted a BMW franchise. Id. at 1378. They also presented evidence tending to discredit the other reasons BMW proffered to support its refusal to grant them a franchise. Id. at 1377-80.

We reversed the district court's grant of summary judgment because plaintiffs had advanced evidence tending to exclude the possibility of BMW's having acted independently from the complaining dealers. They had "countered each alleged reason with evidence that both discredits BMW NA's witnesses [*44] and provides independent support for the [plaintiffs'] claim that BMW NA and its dealers acted in concert to repel" plaintiffs' competition. Id. at 1380.

Similarly, in Arnold Pontiac-GMC, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 786 F.2d 564 (3d Cir. 1986), we reversed a grant of summary judgment because defendant General Motors Corporation ("GMC") first favorably viewed plaintiff's franchise application, then heard its dealers' disapproval and threatened non-cooperation, and then denied the application. GMC had not expressed concern about the plaintiff's franchise application until it heard its dealers' complaints. We held that "we must infer that [the dealers'] conduct contributed to GMC's decision not to award [the plaintiff] the Buick franchise." Arnold Pontiac, 786 F.2d at 573.

In marked contrast to Big Apple BMW and Arnold Pontiac, here it is conceded that the 800-number dealers are free riders. It is also undisputed that FSC has for years sold sample books and promotional materials and has encouraged its dealers to invest in these and other overhead costs in order to provide better service [*45] to their customers. Plaintiffs cannot, and do not, argue that FSC imposed the two policies at issue for any reason other than it simply believed its products were best sold through conventional retailers rather than 800-number dealers. Thus, unlike the scenarios in Big Apple BMW and Arnold Pontiac, there was no abrupt turnaround in this case. FSC had for years recognized the importance of selling service; indeed, part of its business is selling sample books and promotional materials to provide that service. When it became convinced that the conventional retailers who provided such services were being adversely affected by the 800-number dealers, its actions were entirely consistent with its previously held view of its own self-interest.

Big Apple BMW, in fact, bears little resemblance to this case. In that case, plaintiffs applied for a dealership at three locations. They produced evidence that BMW had encouraged them to apply; that as to each location, competing dealers complained to BMW about anticipated price-cutting, and that BMW abruptly reversed its position on the plaintiffs' applications. Plaintiffs' evidence further revealed that a BMW vice president informed [*46] the holder of one of the franchises plaintiffs sought that the plaintiffs' application would fail because they were price cutters. An agent of BMW admitted that "it was the dealers who did not want [plaintiffs] to get the [Philadelphia] franchise, it wasn't BMW who rejected them." Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1372.

Plaintiffs also presented evidence that the reasons given by BMW for denying the franchises, while purporting to be justifications from BMW's point of view, were pretexts, thus permitting an inference that self-interest did not motivate its actions. In 1981, for example, BMW said the plaintiffs were not accepted as franchisees because they had tried to bribe a BMW employee. We took note of and were impressed with the fact that, despite this alleged bribery, in 1982 BMW urged the plaintiffs to reapply. Id. at 1368. The concern expressed about the alleged bribe apparently did not surface until BMW needed a reason to refuse plaintiffs' application. Id. at 1369.

Despite any indication to the contrary which might result from a broad reading of these decisions, Supreme Court authority makes [*47] clear that antitrust liability cannot result from the fact that termination came about in response to dealer complaints. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763. Monsanto teaches that the ultimate inquiry is not whether retailers' complaints caused FSC to respond with its drop shipment surcharge and local trading area policy, but whether FSC agreed, tacitly or otherwise, with retailers to try to injure 800-number dealers as a result of NDPA's coercion.

follow that the Monsanto teachings do not apply. We believe that the Court's footnote in Business Electronics merely states that a restraint is termed horizontal or vertical based upon the type of agreement reached, rather than its effects.

Plaintiffs emphasize a number of items in attempting to support their claim at Count II. Each of these, however, tends to demonstrate no more than that FSC adopted and implemented its drop shipment surcharge and local trading policy in response to its retailers' complaints. Such activity does not violate section 1. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763 ("permitting an agreement to be inferred . . . from the fact that termination came about 'in response to' complaints could deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct"); Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc., 878 F.2d 801, 805 (4th Cir. 1989).

For example, plaintiffs place [*48] great stock in FSC's management committee minutes, which indicate that FSC was attempting through its new policies to tell retailers that it was trying to help them. The minutes also reveal that Landau learned at an NDPA meeting that FSC's drop shipment surcharge was a "good first step," but it had to take further steps to help its traditional retailers. See app. at 290, 304. These statements reflect no more than a recognition by FSC that its retailers were being injured by the 800-number dealers and an attempt to respond to their concerns in that regard, actions which are entirely legitimate in the aftermath of Monsanto.

Plaintiffs also focus on letters which many retailers sent to manufacturers, including FSC, urging that they "do something" about 800-number dealers. See app. at 517, 519, 521-22, 526, 545, 550-75. These letters similarly reveal nothing more than that retailers complained to FSC. They do not tend to show that FSC went beyond responding to the complaints and actually agreed with retailers to attempt to eliminate the competition posed by the 800-number dealers.

To support an inference that FSC crossed the line between proper and improper action, plaintiffs [*49] highlight two examples of what they claim to be FSC's assertion of pretextual reasons for its actions. (If FSC had, in fact, advanced reasons for its actions which were pretextual, this would tend to support an inference that it had indeed acted as part of a conspiracy with conventional retailers. See Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1374-80.)

First, plaintiffs point to evidence in FSC's management committee minutes which contrast the "objective" of its drop shipment surcharge ("To make statement to industry that we are trying to help them") with the "rationale" for this surcharge ("To protect legitimate customers, to increase margins in this area"). App. at 290. They also point to a parallel distinction between FSC's original and published press releases announcing the surcharge. The original press release stated:

> In direct response to retailer requests, we at F. Schumacher & Company are proud to announce that we will assertively support our dealers in their local trading areas and protect them from sales piracy by adding a seven percent surcharge onto all drop shipments . . . While bar coding is a breakthrough for the industry in terms of product identification [*50] we feel that it alone is not an entirely effective deterrent against sales piracy . . . . Our approach attacks the problem at its root and makes the accounts who drop ship feel the effects, rather than leaving the responsibility of policing to the retailers.

App. at 298-99. The final press release stated that the policy was not designed to combat "piracy" but rather to > help insure that our consumers receive the best possible service and that our wallcovering brands are supported in the most effective and appropriate manner at retail . . . This policy seeks to encourage all dealers to concentrate their selling efforts exclusively within their own trading areas where they can provide service directly to the consumers to whom they sell the product.

App. at 486.

Plaintiffs argue that these inconsistencies in and contrasts between the internal and the public explanations of the drop shipment policy reveal that FSC was attempting to disguise the true reason for its actions. We disagree; even granting plaintiffs reasonable inferences, the two statements and the two press releases instead seem in harmony with FSC's explanation, which it has consistently maintained, that it took [*51] the action it did to protect the investments made by traditional retailers. That FSC felt a need to use more genteel language when explaining to the public what it could internally refer to as efforts to combat "piracy" does not imply a sinister motive. FSC is permitted to respond to dealer complaints, and it did just that.

Second, plaintiffs argue that although FSC acknowledges that dealer complaints were part of the reason for its surcharge, at one time it also stated that the surcharge was intended in part to recoup increased costs associated with drop shipments. FSC did not, however, use mathematical calculations to arrive at its surcharge figure; it neither consulted anyone regarding nor studied such costs, and the record contains statements by another manufacturer indicating that his costs for drop shipments were no higher than for shipments to stores. This, plaintiffs argue, underscores the arbitrariness of the surcharge and evinces FSC's true, sinister motive.

A lack of market research, while perhaps adding luster to plaintiffs' contention that the surcharge was arbitrarily determined, does not necessarily invite an inference that FSC's statement was an attempt to conceal [*52] a conspiracy. It is true that the seven percent figure did not reflect an analysis of FSC's costs; however, this does not indicate that FSC was not pursuing its self interests in imposing it. The record affirmatively indicates that the seven percent figure was arrived at as one which would provide sufficient incentive for traditional retailers to continue to invest in service -- a reason entirely consistent with FSC's explanation for its actions and rendering unreasonable any inference of sinister motive. See app. at 149-50; H.L. Hayden Co. of New York, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1014 (2d Cir. 1989) (mere fact that a business reason advanced to explain actions is undermined does not alone justify inferring that the actions resulted from a conspiracy). Plaintiffs' attempt to portray as disingenuous FSC's assertion of an economic basis in support of its decision to implement the surcharge is unavailing.

Plaintiffs note a further piece of evidence which they claim tends to support their theory of liability at Count II: the memorandum Petit circulated among the NDPA board of directors after FSC imposed its local trading area [*53] policy in January, 1990. In it, Petit stated: "Enclosed is a copy of FSC's new marketing and advertising policy. This is a major step forward in our battle against the 800 number operators. Enumerated point 12 in effect means that FSC will no longer be selling [to] the 'sales pirate.'" App. at 693.

Subsequent ratification of a manufacturer's actions may sometimes tend to indicate that an agreement existed between the ratifier and the manufacturer, but nothing in this memorandum does so. Instead, at most, the memorandum reveals that Petit recognized that FSC's new policy would be beneficial to traditional retailers and wanted to share both the policy and that information with the board.

While separate enumeration and discussion of the evidence upon which plaintiffs rely in support of Count II has been necessary to make clear what we believe its significance to be, we have also considered the evidence as a whole in accordance with Continental Ore. We nonetheless conclude, however, that the plaintiffs have simply failed to present evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action, as they must to survive summary judgment under Monsanto. They have not countered [*54] FSC's alleged reasons for its actions with evidence that both discredits the reasons and provides independent support for their conspiracy claim. See Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1380. Accordingly, we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment at Count II.

VI.

At Counts III and IV, plaintiffs allege that FSC conspired with other wallcovering manufacturers to injure the 800-number dealers. We will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment as to these counts because plaintiffs' evidence tends to show only an opportunity to conspire, not an agreement to do so.

Certainly, direct evidence (or a direct inference) of an agreement between FSC and other manufacturers regarding 800-number dealers could enable plaintiffs to show concerted action. The evidence of an agreement, however, amounts to nothing more than communications on the 800-number subject. Communications alone, although more suspicious among competitors than between a manufacturer and its distributors, do not necessarily result in liability. Tose v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 648 F.2d 879, 894 (3d Cir. 1981). As we have observed, it is [*55] only when those communications rise to the level of an agreement, tacit or otherwise, that they become an antitrust violation.

Thus, plaintiffs are left to argue that FSC and other manufacturers conspired based upon their parallel conduct. "Proof of consciously parallel business behavior is circumstantial evidence from which an agreement, tacit or express, can be inferred but . . . such evidence, without more, is insufficient unless the circumstances under which it occurred make the inference of rational, independent choice less attractive than that of concerted action." Bogosian v. United States, 561 F.2d 434, 446 (3d Cir. 1977). The circumstances necessary to support such an inference are: (a) a showing that the defendants acted contrary to their own economic interests; and (b) satisfactory demonstration of a motivation to enter an agreement. Id., citing Venzie Corp. v. United States Mineral Products Co., Inc., 521 F.2d 1309, 1314 (3d Cir. 1975). See also Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling Delaware Co., Inc., 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 17424 (3d Cir. July 13, 1993); Schoenkopf v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 637 F.2d 205, 208 (3d Cir. 1980). [*56]

In particular, when evidence shows communications which provided an opportunity for agreement, a plaintiff must still produce evidence permitting an inference that an agreement in fact existed. Venzie, 521 F.2d at 1313. The evidence must give rise to more than speculation. Id.

In Venzie, for example, plaintiffs contended that two defendant corporations had agreed to refuse to sell fireproofing material to them. The record contained evidence that defendants had made numerous telephone calls, at least one of which concerned the plaintiffs, to each other and had met for lunch. We held that it was for the jury to assess the credibility of the defendants' assertions that they had not discussed or agreed upon the alleged refusal to deal, but, even disregarding statements to that effect, all that plaintiff's evidence proved was an opportunity for an agreement, which would not suffice to support a verdict. Plaintiff had failed to highlight evidence supporting an inference that an agreement in fact existed and thus could not support a verdict. Venzie, 521 F.2d at 1312. See also Tose, 648 F.2d at 895. [*57]

In contrast, a particularly detailed memorandum of a telephone call can give rise to a reasonable inference of agreement. In Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 254 (2d Cir 1987), for example, the plaintiff survived a summary judgment motion by advancing evidence in the form of detailed memoranda indicating the existence of an agreement.

In this case, it is conceded that manufacturers discussed 800-number dealers, and actions they were taking concerning them, at conventions. The evidence of communications thus falls somewhere between Venzie, in which there were no notations of the subject matter of the conversations, and Apex Oil, in which the notations implied an agreement. Plaintiffs, however, seek to infer an agreement from those communications despite a lack of independent evidence tending to show an agreement and in the face of uncontradicted testimony that only informational exchanges took place. Without more, they cannot do so. Cf. Tose, 648 F.2d at 894 (mere disbelief of contrary testimony does not prove agreement).

We emphasize that unlike actions such as price-cutting, which provide the classic [*58] example of conscious parallelism, FSC's action was in its economic interests. It is simple syllogistic reasoning that if FSC was aware that most of its dealers were conventional retailers, and believed that its products sold better in the conventional setting, it would conclude that it was in its economic interests to keep the conventional retailers satisfied. That FSC may have foregone some short-term opportunity for sales to 800-number dealers does not suffice to show it acted contrary to its self-interests when it indisputably believed it was acting to benefit itself economically in the long term. Tose, 648 F.2d at 895; see P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1415e (1986). FSC's listening to retailers' complaints in no way implies that there was an agreement among manufacturers to do the same. See Venzie, 521 F.2d at 1314 ("the absence of action contrary to one's economic interest renders consciously parallel business behavior 'meaningless, and in no way indicates agreement,'" quoting Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655, 681 (1962)); [*59] see also Houser v. Fox Theatres Management Corp, 845 F.2d 1225, 1232-33 (3d Cir. 1988) (requiring both actions contrary to economic interests and motive to conspire).

VII.

Remaining for disposition are the plaintiffs' state-law antitrust and tort claims. Although no federal claims remain at this juncture, considerations of judicial economy and fairness militate in favor of our retaining jurisdiction over and deciding the merits of these state-law claims. Graf v. Elgin, Joliet and Eastern Ry. Co., 790 F.2d 1341, 1347-48 (7th Cir. 1986); Ingram Corp. v. J. Ray McDermott & Co., Inc., 698 F.2d 1295, 1317-20 (5th Cir. 1983). See generally Enercomp, Inc. v. McCorhill Publishing, Inc., 873 F.2d 536, 545-46 (2d Cir. 1989). We will affirm the district court's disposition of these claims.

A.

In Count VI, plaintiffs alleged that the defendants violated Pennsylvania antitrust law by engaging in the activity alleged as the basis of Counts I through IV. This allegation rises or falls with plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims. See Collins v. Main Line Board of Realtors, 452 Pa. 342, 304 A.2d 493 (Pa. 1973); [*60] Schwartz v. Laundry and Linen Supply Drivers' Union, 339 Pa. 353, 14 A.2d 438 (Pa. Super. 1940); plaintiffs' brief at 45; FSC's brief at 47-48. Therefore, our decision with respect to Counts I through IV disposes of Count VI as well.

B.

In Count VII, plaintiffs alleged that FSC and NDPA tortiously interfered with their existing and prospective contracts. Like Count VI, Count VII rises or falls with plaintiffs' antitrust claims. See Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1381-82 ("factual underpinnings of these tort claims are intertwined with the antitrust claims"; antitrust violations or other actions in restraint of trade are examples of improper conduct). Moreover, plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they would be able to present evidence tending to prove each element of their tortious interference claims at trial.

HN20[] To establish a claim of tortious interference with existing contracts, plaintiffs must prove that the defendants intentionally and improperly interfered with their performance of contracts with third persons. Nathanson v. Medical College of Pennsylvania, 926 F.2d 1368, 1388 (3d Cir. 1991); Adler, Barish, Daniels, Levin and Creskoff v. Epstein, 482 Pa. 416, 393 A.2d 1175, 1183 (Pa. 1978). [*61] To prove their claims of tortious interference with prospective contractual relations, plaintiffs likewise must prove, inter alia, the existence of prospective contracts. Thompson Coal Co. v. Pike Coal Co., 488 Pa. 198, 412 A.2d 466, 471 (Pa. 1979). A prospective contract "is something less than a contractual right, something more than a mere hope[]" id.; it exists if there is a reasonable probability that a contract will arise from the parties' current dealings. Glenn v. Point Park College, 441 Pa. 474, 272 A.2d 895, 898-99 (Pa. 1971).

Plaintiffs have failed to identify with sufficient precision contracts and prospective contracts which were interfered with by the defendants. They have likewise failed to identify an existing contract which was terminated because of the defendants' actions. Nor have they demonstrated a reasonable probability that they would have entered into prospective contracts with third parties but for defendants' alleged interference. See General Sound Telephone Co., Inc. v. AT&T Communications, Inc., 654 F. Supp. 1562, 1565-66 (E.D. Pa. 1987). In sum, plaintiffs have failed to advance [*62] more than speculation to support their claim of tortious interference; therefore, we will affirm the district court as to this count.

C.

Finally, in Count X, plaintiffs alleged that the NDPA defamed them by publishing articles and editorials referring to 800-number dealers as "pirates." Under Pennsylvania law, a statement is defamatory if it "'tends to so harm the reputation of another as to lower him in the estimation of the community or to deter third persons from associating or dealing with him.'" U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Blue Cross of Greater Philadelphia, 898 F.2d 914, 923 (3d Cir. 1990), quoting Birl v. Philadelphia Electric Co., 402 Pa. 297, 167 A.2d 472, 475 (Pa. 1960). To prove their claim, plaintiffs must show: (1) the defamatory character of the statements; (2) publication by NDPA; (3) the statements' application to the plaintiffs; (4) an understanding by readers of the statements' defamatory meaning; and (5) an understanding by readers of an intent on the part of NDPA to refer to the plaintiffs. 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 8343(a) (1982); U.S. Healthcare, 898 F.2d at 923. The law does not require [*63] that a plaintiff be specifically named in an allegedly defamatory statement, for a statement might be defamatory if, by description or circumstances, it tends to identify the plaintiff as its object. Redco Corp. v. CBS, Inc., 758 F.2d 970, 972 (3d Cir. 1985).

Plaintiffs base their defamation claim upon statements referring to 800-number dealers in general as "pirates." Individual group members may sue based upon statements about a group when the statements were directed toward a "comparatively small class or group all of whose constituent members may be readily identified and the recipients of the [statements] are likely to identify some, if not all, of them as intended objects of the defamation." Farrell v. Triangle Publications, Inc., 399 Pa. 102, 159 A.2d 734, 736-37 (Pa. 1960). But no claim arises from a defamatory remark directed toward a group whose membership is so numerous that no individual member can reasonably be deemed its intended object. Id. at 736. Similarly, no claim exists if, for any other reason, a reader could not reasonably conclude that the statements at issue referred to the particular [*64] person or persons alleging defamation. Id. at 737.

Relying upon record evidence indicating that in 1990 there were only 20 to 25 800-number dealers in the industry (app. at 1123-24), plaintiffs argue that they may base their claim on statements directed at 800-number dealers in general. Cf. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 564A, comment c. As noted above, however, a group's size is not the sole consideration in determining whether individual members may assert defamation claims based upon statements about the group. A group may be relatively small, but statements which disparage it may not serve as a basis for an individual defamation claim unless a reader could reasonably connect them to the complaining individual.

In Farrell, for example, one of 13 township commissioners asserted a defamation claim against a newspaper which had published a story implicating "a number of township commissioners and others" in corrupt activity. Farrell, 159 A.2d at 736. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court held that the plaintiff had stated a claim for defamation. In so holding, however, the court concentrated not on the size of the group [*65] discussed but on whether readers "knew that the plaintiff was one of the thirteen commissioners." Id. at 738. We similarly do not end our inquiry upon being apprised that there were between 20 and 25 800-number dealers in 1990; we examine whether the plaintiffs were "sufficiently identified as [objects of NDPA's statements] to justifiably warrant a conclusion that [their] individual reputation[s have] been substantially injured." Id. at 736.

Here, there is nothing in the record other than the number of 800-dealers which could support a conclusion that any of the plaintiffs' individual reputations were injured by NDPA's statements about 800-number dealers in general. Indeed, the individual identities of this group's members are, by the very nature of their business, less meaningful than the telephone numbers they promote to facilitate discount purchases. This group appears amorphous and ill-defined when compared to the well-defined group of township commissioners at issue in Farrell. Plaintiffs have not produced evidence tending to prove that they belong to such an easily identifiable, cohesive group that a reader would [*66] ascribe statements referring to 800-number dealers in general as "pirates" to any of them individually. Thus, we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment on Count X.

VIII.

For the foregoing reasons, we will affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment as to Counts I through IV, VI, VII and X of the plaintiffs' amended complaint.

Concur by: ROTH (In Part)

Dissent by: ROTH (In Part)

Dissent

ROTH, Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part:

Because I believe the majority has misapplied the precedent relevant to the antitrust claims involved in the present case and misanalyzed the evidence present in the record, I respectfully dissent from the conclusion that the majority reaches in Parts IV and V with regard to Counts I and II of the complaint. Because I believe that Counts VI and VII are intimately linked with Counts I and II, I also dissent from the conclusion the majority reaches in Part VII A and B. I concur with the majority's conclusions in Parts VI and VII C with regard to the remaining counts.

Initially, I would like to emphasize that this case was disposed of by summary judgment; no trial by a factfinder has been held. A court may grant summary judgment only when [*67] the submissions in the record "show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The inquiry is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

In antitrust cases, to establish a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must prove the existence of a "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To survive a defendant's motion for summary judgment in a Section 1 antitrust case, a plaintiff "must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether [the defendant] entered into an illegal conspiracy [or combination] that caused [the plaintiff] to suffer a cognizable injury." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). [*68] The plaintiff must introduce evidence that tends to demonstrate "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds." Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of N. Am., Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1364 (3d Cir. 1992) (quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 111 (3d Cir. 1980)). "Concerted action may be inferred from circumstantial evidence. That evidence should be analyzed as a whole, rather than compartmentalized, to determine whether it supports an inference of concerted action." Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1364 (citing Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 698, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962)).

In evaluating a record for purposes of deciding a summary judgment motion, "it is inappropriate for a court to resolve factual disputes and to make credibility determinations. . . . Inferences should be drawn in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, and where the non-moving party's evidence contradicts the movant's, then the non-movant's must be taken as true." Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1363 [*69] (citing Country Floors, Inc. v. A Partnership Composed of Gepner and Ford, 930 F.2d 1056, 1061 (3d Cir. 1991)).

> To raise a genuine issue of material fact, . . ., the opponent need not match, item for item, each piece of evidence proffered by the movant. In practical terms, if the opponent has exceeded the 'mere scintilla' threshold and has offered a genuine issue of material fact, then the court cannot credit the movant's version of events against the opponent, even if the quantity of the movant's evidence far outweighs that of its opponent. It thus remains the province of the factfinder to ascertain the believability and weight of the evidence.

Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1363.

As the majority at least implicitly recognizes, there is evidence present in the record in this case that supports appellants' claims. See majority opinion at [typescript at 10-21]. As I will explain, I believe that this evidence, taken as a whole, exceeds a "mere scintilla" threshold. I fear that the majority has crossed the delicate line between the inference drawing proper for summary judgment analysis and the substantive evaluation [*70] of evidence that must be left to a jury.

In reviewing the evidence, we must also keep in mind that the NDPA has been campaigning for years against the 800 number dealers. The NDPA was previously prosecuted by the FTC for exactly the activity complained of here, attempting to drive 800 number dealers out of the wallcovering business. See app. at 412; majority opinion at [typescript at 12-14]. I find that this history is significant to an evaluation of the evidence present in the record. It is uncontested that the NDPA is both highly sophisticated and possesses significant market power. It is unrealistic to think that such a sophisticated trade association, wary of the antitrust laws, would produce the same kinds of damaging evidence as would a less artful group.

I.

Turning first to Count I, the claim of a horizontal conspiracy between the individual retail wallcovering dealers, acting through the NDPA, I believe that the majority has misapplied relevant precedent to its consideration of an intellectually challenging issue of first impression in this Court. [12] The threshold legal question that must be answered is: Can the actions and statements of an agent of a trade association, [*71] if that agent is cloaked with the apparent authority to act on behalf of the association, serve to hold the trade association liable as a "combination" under section 1 of the Sherman Act. The majority has answered this question in the negative unless a court finds either that a co-conspirator exists or that "the actions in question represent an attempt by the association, rather than the actor, to restrain trade[]" so that section 1 liability cannot be imposed on the NDPA "absent some indication that two or more members of NDPA were utilizing it as a vehicle for concerted anticompetitive action." Majority opinion at [typescript at 30]. In arriving at this conclusion, however, the majority misconstrues the concept of apparent authority to arrive at a result which is inconsistent both with relevant Supreme Court precedent and with the dictates of logic.

Let me begin by discussing [*72] the basics of "apparent authority." The issue of apparent authority arises when there is a question of the existence or of the scope of the agency. If it is clear that the principal itself is acting or that the principal has expressly authorized the action of the agent, the question of "apparent authority" never surfaces. The issue in the present case is whether the officers of the NDPA were authorized to make certain statements on behalf of the association. If these officers had the express authorization of the association, we would not need to determine whether they were speaking with its "apparent authority." We get to this question only when the situation is more clouded.

As a general rule, apparent authority may be created by any conduct, or acquiescence in conduct, by the principal which causes a third person to believe that the principal consents to the actions or statements of the person who is allegedly acting for the principal. See Restatement (Second) of Agency § 27 (1984) ("apparent authority to do an act may be created by written or spoken words or any conduct of the principal which, reasonably interpreted, causes a third person to believe that the principal consents [*73] to have the act done on his behalf by the person purporting to act for him.") Cf. NLRB v. L & J Equipment Co., Inc., 745 F.2d 224, 232-235 (3d Cir. 1984) (discussing "apparent agency" in considering whether certain actions and statements of in-house organizing committee members during labor union representation election were done as agents of the union).

This issue of the apparent authority of the NDPA officers to speak on behalf of the association is one which I conclude, on the basis of the facts of record which I will discuss later, should go to the jury.

With apparent authority in mind, I will return to plaintiffs' allegations in Count I, the horizontal conspiracy. "In order to establish a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act . . ., a plaintiff must establish three elements: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) restraint of trade; and (3) an effect on interstate commerce." Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 812 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985). The issue here is whether the actions of a trade association's agent can create liability on the part of the [*74] trade association as a section 1 "combination." A proper analysis of the requirements for a section 1 "combination" focuses not upon concepts such as official authorization of action but upon "the economic substance of . . . [an] arrangement." Weiss, 745 F.2d at 815. In Weiss, this Court found that a hospital's medical staff was a section 1 combination because "each staff member . . . has an economic interest separate from and in many cases in competition with the interests of the other medical staff members." Id. Additionally, the Court found the medical staff similar to the Associated Press and the New York Stock Exchange, "a combination of otherwise competing entities," which the Supreme Court has previously found to be section 1 combinations. Id. (citing Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389, 83 S. Ct. 1246 (1963); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1945)).

The NDPA is similarly a combination of otherwise competing entities. A trade association is a group of competitors who unite for a common purpose and is a unit of joint action sufficient to constitute a section 1 [*75] combination [12] Neither the parties, the majority, nor my own research has uncovered any case that has dealt with the specific issue involved here.

See G.D. Webster, The Law of Associations § 9a.01[1], 9A3-4 (1991) ("There is no question that an association is a 'combination' within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Although a conspiracy requires more than one person, an association, by its very nature a group, satisfies the requirement of joint action. Thus, any association activity which restrains interstate commerce can be violative of Section 1 even if no one acts in concert with the association."); Stephanie W. Kanwit, FTC Enforcement Efforts Involving Trade and Professional Associations, 46 Antitrust L.J. 640, 640 (1977) ("Because trade associations are, by definition, organizations of competitors, they automatically satisfy the combination requirements of § 1 of the Sherman Act."). Indeed, NDPA's summary of the FTC consent order notes that anticompetitive activities will violate the "antitrust laws," and explains that "an agreement between one or more competitors is necessary for the law or the consent order to be violated, but remember that: 1 NDPA is a group of competitors and is therefore already considered to be an 'agreement.'" App. at 429-40. This statement [*76] indicates both that NDPA believed that it was a section 1 combination with group status and power and that it conveyed that impression to the wallcovering industry.

I conclude that NDPA's status as a section 1 combination does not change when it acts through its agents cloaked with apparent authority. I believe that this conclusion is compelled by the Supreme Court's opinion in American Soc'y of Mechanical Eng'rs v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 570-71, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 (1982), where the Court held a trade association liable under section 1 of the Sherman Act for the statements of a subcommittee chairman. The Court stated that "when it cloaks its subcommittee officials with the authority of its reputation, ASME permits those agents to affect the destinies of businesses and thus gives them the power to frustrate competition in the marketplace." Id. The response at issue was merely an "'unofficial' response authored by a single ASME subcommittee chairman. Yet the force of ASME's reputation is so great that M & M was able to use that one 'unofficial' response to injure seriously the business of a competitor." Id. at 971.

As the majority emphasizes, in Hydrolevel [*77] ASME was found liable as a co-conspirator rather than as a combination. I find this factual distinction with the present case of little relevance. The Supreme Court's analysis in Hydrolevel was neither explicitly nor implicitly limited to situations where a trade association was one of many co-conspirators. Instead, it was grounded upon the economic power that a trade association may possess. See 456 U.S. at 570-71. The Court reasoned:

> Only ASME can take systematic steps to make improper conduct on the part of all its agents unlikely, and the possibility of civil liability will inevitably be a powerful incentive for ASME to take those steps. Thus, a rule that imposes liability on the . . . [trade association]--which is best situated to prevent antitrust violations through abuse of its reputation--is most faithful to the congressional intent that the private right of action deter antitrust violations.

Id. at 572-73. Indeed, the Supreme Court has explained that it is the economic power of concerted action that requires section 1 antitrust scrutiny. "Concerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive [*78] risk. It deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768-69, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); see also Terrence C. Sheehy & William J. Hunter, Jr., Antitrust Principles Applicable to Trade Association Activities, 362 PLA/Comm 19 (1985) ("[A] trade association may be found liable for treble damages based upon the activities of its members, when they act with the apparent authority of the association. . . . It is not necessary that co-conspirators be named parties."). [13]

---

[13] One commentator has argued that the Court's decision in Hydrolevel is properly characterized as a metaphor for protecting due process. When a trade association, a group that functions privately to regulate an industry, has power substantially to affect its market, actions of its agents that tend to exclude and harm competitors essentially deprive those competitors of any rights to fair representation in industry regulation. See Michael Boudin, Antitrust Doctrine and the Sway of Metaphor, 75 Geo. L.J. 395, 417-18 (1986) ("The failure of a powerful trade association or other organization to protect competitors should be remedied, by analogy to representation in government, by giving those excluded a right to participate in the group or, in the alternative, a right fairly to be represented by those in charge of the group."). The application of such a due process metaphor to the present case suggests that the actions of NDPA's officers and officials may be aimed at improperly ostracizing and excluding 800 number dealers from decisions that will control the wallcovering industry. Because of this capacity of a trade association to impose exclusionary standards on engaging in a particular business or industry, it is perhaps more critical, when there has been a

[*79] The majority relies upon Nanavati v. Burdette-Tomlin Memorial Hosp., 857 F.2d 96 (3d Cir. 1988), to support its position that the actions of a trade association's agent cloaked with apparent authority can render the trade association liable only if there has been some group decision by members of the association to pursue anticompetitive activity. Such reliance is misplaced. In Nanavati there was no allegation of group or concerted action by the hospital's Executive Committee in connection with the allegations of a boycott of the referral of patients to Dr. Nanavati. See 857 F.2d at 119. We held that the Executive Committee could not be considered a combination because it did not act as a body with regard to the boycott. "Instead of group action by the Executive Committee, Nanavati points to the actions and motivations of medical staff members who were not on the Committee." See id.

There is no inconsistency between Nanavati and a proper application of Hydrolevel to the present case. Here, group action on the part of NDPA has been alleged. The "individuals" whose actions are under scrutiny are officials [*80] of NDPA who are allegedly cloaked with apparent authority. Just as the actions of ASME's subcommittee chairman could hold that association liable under section 1 of the Sherman Act, the statements and actions of NDPA's officers and agents can hold it similarly liable. The appropriate analog to the present case in Nanavati would have been an allegation that an Executive Committee officer cloaked with apparent authority had engaged in a boycott against the plaintiff. In such a situation, as in the present case, sufficient allegations of "group action" would exist to find a section 1 combination.

The majority's conclusion that an association could be liable for the actions of its agents cloaked with apparent authority only if "the actions in question represent an attempt by the association, rather than the actor, to restrain trade" would eviscerate the doctrine of apparent authority delineated in Hydrolevel. The point of Hydrolevel is that actions of an association's agent, cloaked with apparent authority, are actions of the association. Indeed, the majority's interpretation is contradicted by the conclusion in Hydrolevel that there need be no ratification of the actions [*81] of an association's agents for it to be held liable. "[A] ratification rule would have anticompetitive effects, directly contrary to the proposes of the antitrust laws. ASME could avoid liability by ensuring that it remained ignorant of its agent's conduct, and the antitrust laws would therefore encourage ASME to do as little as possible to oversee its agents." Hydrolevel, 456 U.S. at 573-574. As long as the association has clothed the agent with apparent authority to act on its behalf, it is liable for the anticompetitive actions taken by that agent. Moreover, acquiescence by the association in one of its officers acting as its spokesman can be a confirmation of apparent authority. See Restatement (Second) of Agency § 27 (1984).

An examination of the evidence present in the record demonstrates that there is sufficient evidence to submit this case to a jury for a determination whether NDPA's agents were cloaked with the apparent authority to act on behalf of the association and whether they engaged in anticompetitive activity. Particularly relevant is the speech given by NDPA president John Wells at a trade show. According to reports of this speech [*82] in Decorating Retailer and the Wallcovering Industry News, this speech was characterized as "Retailer Spokesman Urges Supplier Support," App. at 440, and included statements to solve the "piracy problem" by "urging retailers to say 'No' to some collections and suppliers." App. at 167, 440. Regardless of Wells' insistence that he had stated that he was speaking in his individual rather than official capacity, see app. at 183-84, the fact that those who heard him and who reported on what he said characterized his remarks in NDPA's publications as those of the "retailer spokesman" may persuade a jury to find that he was speaking in his official capacity with the acquiescence of the NDPA.

Furthermore, there is evidence of conversations between NDPA Chief Executive Officer Robert Petit and other NDPA officers and wallcovering manufacturers allegedly to urge that the manufacturers take steps to eliminate the 800 number dealers. See app. at 185, 190-98, 201-207, 212-229, 407, 416-419, 693-99, 700. One such conversation occurred between Petit and John Fitzgerald, president of Collins and Aikman, parent corporation of manufacturer Kinney Wallcoverings. In a memorandum recording [*83] this meeting, Petit stated that he told Fitzgerald of the "anger felt by the retailers in lack of support from the wallcovering industry" and "that the piracy showing that attempted regulation by the association may have this propensity to eliminate non-participating competitors, that the court permit a full consideration of those allegations by the finder of fact.

---

issue seems to have intensified." App. at 185. In response, "Fitzgerald indicated that he recognized the problems the retailer faces and wanted to know what I felt would be the chances of success if they in effect started a new company and actually franchised dealers to handle two or three lines. These lines would be guaranteed not to be available to 800 number operators or to chains." Id. Petit added that "I think it's a very important step forward and told them we would like to cooperate where possible. If [Kinney] does something of this nature, it could break the logjam that now exists in regard to piracy." Id. Petit admitted that he made similar statements to other manufacturers including FSC. See app. at 204. Again, considering the implications of this conversation, in view of Petit's position as CEO of the NDPA, the question of whether Petit was speaking with the authority or the apparent authority of the NDPA should be considered by the jury, and not dismissed by the judge.

Finally, the evidence of other speeches, [*84] numerous letters, and editorials in Decorating Retailer add to the reservoir of evidence of anticompetitive activity from which a jury could draw. I conclude that on the whole there is sufficient evidence to survive summary judgment because, viewed in a light favorable to plaintiffs, this evidence creates a material issue of fact whether NDPA officials, cloaked with apparent authority to act on behalf of the association, engaged in anticompetitive activity. [14] I would reverse the district court's disposition of Count I and remand for trial.

II.

Turning now to Count II, I conclude that there is enough evidence of a conspiracy between [*85] NDPA and FSC to go to a jury in light of my determination in Part I that there is sufficient evidence to go to a jury regarding NDPA's alleged anticompetitive activities. Generally, in order to survive summary judgment on a vertical conspiracy claim, the non-movant must produce evidence which "tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and [involved] distributors were acting independently." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764. When dealer complaints are introduced as such evidence, "an antitrust plaintiff must be prepared to demonstrate a causal relationship between alleged dealer complaints and a distributor's action in order to show that the concerted action in violation of the Sherman Act is distinguishable from 'perfectly legitimate' independent conduct." Big Apple BMW, 974 F.2d at 1364. This causal relationship appears to require evidence that supplements dealer complaints. "Complaints by competitors, standing alone, are not sufficient to show a conspiracy." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764.

The present case, however, does not represent a garden variety vertical conspiracy case. Rather, [*86] it involves allegations of a hybrid horizontal/vertical conspiracy where a manufacturer entered the scheme only as a result of substantial dealer coercion to do so. In Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988), the Court appeared to say that vertical restraints forced by a horizontal conspiracy which involves manufacturers coerced by retailers is really a horizontal antitrust violation and should be treated as a horizontal conspiracy. The Court interpreted Judge Bork's antitrust treatise as follows: "[Bork says] that a facially vertical restraint imposed by a manufacturer only because it has been coerced by a 'horizontal cartel' agreement among his distributors is in reality a horizontal restraint. That says precisely what we say: that a restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement." 485 U.S. at 730 n.4 (interpreting Robert Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 288 (1978)). Judge Bork emphasized that such a scheme includes restraints which are "vertical in form only." Bork at 288.

The implication of treating the conspiracy alleged in this [*87] case as such a hybrid is that the assumptions underlying Monsanto's requirements for evidence that excludes the possibility of independent manufacturer action apply with much less force. The case contains allegations that the manufacturer's decision process has been tainted by coercion. Indeed, the principles grounding post-Monsanto antitrust theory and jurisprudence demonstrate that it is evidence of dealer coercion of a manufacturer or of the pretextual naature of a manufacturer's purported justification for imposing a vertical restraint which tends to show that the vertical restraint violates the antitrust laws.

[14] I also note that, as will be discussed in my analysis of Count II, there is evidence of a conspiracy between the NDPA and FSC. See infra at [typescript at 18-20]. This evidence provides a basis for characterizing FSC as a co-conspirator of the NDPA sufficient to survive summary judgment on Count I, even under the majority's analysis of section I combination liability.

See Jean Wegman Burns, Rethinking the "Agreement" Element in Vertical Antitrust Restraints, 51 Ohio St. L.J. 1, 31-32 (1990); Frank H. Easterbrook, Vertical Arrangements and the Rule of Reason, 53 Antitrust L.J. 135 (1984).

Normally, vertical restraints may enhance interbrand competition and provide consumers with the optimal level of dealer services. See Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 724-25; Easterbrook, 53 Antitrust L.J. at 135. Indeed, [*88] elimination of "free riders" may create long-run efficiencies by protecting the viability of dealers who provide the efficient level of services. See Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 725; Burns, 51 Ohio St. L.J. at 12-14. However, a retailers' scheme to coerce manufacturers into imposing vertical restraints is more likely to eliminate competition from discounters who tend to drive the prices of goods down to an efficient equilibrium. For example, in the personal computer market, computers originally were sold only by showroom retailers. Eventually, 800 number discounters entered the market and drove prices substantially down. At present, the market contains both showroom retailers and 800 number discounters. But the price gap between them is much smaller than when 800 number discounters first entered the market. Previously the gap often exceeded $ 1000 per computer. Now, that gap is often as small as $ 100 per computer. The Monsanto theory of efficient service level was validated in the personal computer market; but the price of those services dropped to a long-term efficient equilibrium only because of the presence of [*89] "free riders" who drove the price of those services down from an inefficiently high level. See, e.g., Stewart Alsop, Bewitched, Bedraggled: PC Industry Dances to Customers' Beat, InfoWord, July 5, 1993, at 4; Stratford Sherman, How to Prosper in the Value Decade, Fortune, November 30, 1992, at 90; Peter Burrows & Stephanie Anderson Forest, Dell Computer Goes into the Shop, Business Week, July 12, 1993, at 138. The wisdom that has undergirded our traditional antitrust jurisprudence also carries forward to the present.

> The protection of price competition from conspirational restraint is an object of special solicitude under the antitrust laws. We cannot respect that solicitude by closing our eyes to the effect upon price competition of the removal from the market, by combination or conspiracy, of a class of traders. Nor do we propose to construe the Sherman Act to prohibit conspiracies to fix prices at which competitors may sell, but to allow conspiracies or combinations, to put competitors out of business entirely.

United States v. General Motors, 384 U.S. 127, 148, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966).

In the present case, I believe that there is evidence [*90] both of dealer coercion and of pretext sufficient to present Count II to a jury. Plaintiffs allege a hybrid horizontal/vertical conspiracy that involves dealer coercion. Petit's activities regarding Fitzgerald, see app. at 185-86, and Landau of FSC, see app. at 304, 309 indicate that NDPA was pressuring FSC and other manufacturers to adopt measures to restrain 800 number dealers. The Decorating Retailer, through both editorials and letters to the editor, was also used as a mechanism to pressure manufacturers. As members of the wallcovering industry who received this publication, FSC and other manufacturers must have known about the strong anti-800 number dealer sentiments that dominated the industry. Moreover, affirmative requests by the trade association of retailers that included implicit threats to boycott uncooperative manufacturers support plaintiffs' claim.

Furthermore, I find that there is evidence of pretext present in the record. First, the two FSC press releases demonstrate that FSC was concerned about eliminating its references to "sales piracy" and its linkage to its drop shipment surcharge. See app. at 289-99, 486. The majority explains away the possibility [*91] that this evidence demonstrates FSC's complicity in an anticompetitive conspiracy: "That FSC felt a need to use more genteel language when explaining to the public what it could internally refer to as efforts to combat 'piracy' does not imply a sinister motive." Majority opinion at [typescript at 41]. I believe that the proper body to make such determinations about the implications of FSC's "genteel language" is a jury. I find it difficult to believe that no reasonable jury could find that the changes from the draft to the final press release constitute evidence of pretext.

Second, I find that FSC's failure to engage in any economic or mathematical analysis regarding its surcharge provides additional evidence of pretext. Again the majority explains this away: "A lack of market research, while perhaps adding luster to plaintiff's contention that the surcharge was arbitrarily determined, does not necessarily invite an inference that FSC's statement was an attempt to conceal a conspiracy." Maybe so; but I believe it could invite such an inference. Since we must draw all possible inferences in the non-movant's favor, I find that this issue also is capable of resolution only by [*92] a jury. I would reverse the district court's disposition of Count II and remand for trial.

In summation, I conclude that counts I and II are inextricably linked. The anticompetitive activity alleged in the present case properly may be characterized as an effort by the NDPA, acting through its officers, to coerce manufacturers such as FSC into adopting restraints upon 800 number wallcovering dealers. In essence, plaintiffs have alleged a "horizontal" conspiracy involving both the NDPA and FSC. Even under the majority's analysis of section 1 combination liability, the evidence of FSC's complicity in NDPA's campaign against 800 number dealers should prove sufficient for Count 1 to survive summary judgment. Similarly, the majority's conclusion that FSC's actions are as likely to be the result of independent action as of an illicit conspiracy is undercut when one accounts for the evidence that NDPA's officers actively solicited manufacturer restraints upon 800 number dealers. Both Counts I and II should be resolved by a jury.

Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am.

United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island

August 5, 1993, Decided ; August 5, 1993, Entered

C.A. No. 92-0058 P

Reporter

829 F. Supp. 529 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11329 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,366

TONY LEE, RAMACHANDRAN PALISSERY, AND RALPH TALARICO, for themselves and all those similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. THE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA, THE UNIVERSITY OF RHODE ISLAND, MR. EDWARD EDDY, MR. ROBERT CAROTHERS, MR. BLAISE MORRISSEY, THE STATE OF RHODE ISLAND AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS BOARD OF GOVERNORS FOR HIGHER EDUCATION, AND ONE OR MORE JOHN DOES, individually, jointly and severally, in both their corporate capacities, and in their personal and official capacities, Defendants.

Core Terms

amended complaint, Plaintiffs', health clinic, coverage, Sherman Act, monopolize, conspiracy, comparable, antitrust, conspired, clinic, relevant market, plans, health insurance, allegations, mandatory, enroll, costs, rule of reason, tying product, market power, tied product, anticompetitive, equal protection claim, sufficient facts, carriers, commerce, products, restraint of trade, tying arrangement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

It is not proper to dismiss a complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) unless it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. In making this determination, a court should accept the well-pleaded complaint as true and indulge every reasonable inference in favor of the plaintiff. This standard of review does not mean, however, that a court must accept every allegation made by the complainant, no matter how conclusory or generalized.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Said act prohibits only unreasonable restraints of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

To determine unreasonable restraint of trade, courts generally evaluate the alleged anticompetitive actions through case-by-case application of the so-called rule of reason test -that is, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The "rule of reason" limits the Sherman Act's literal words by forbidding only those arrangements the anticompetitive consequences of which outweigh their legitimate business justifications. In this special context, the term "anticompetitive" refers not to actions that merely injure individual competitors, but rather to actions that harm the competitive process. And, the law assesses both harms and benefits in light of the Act's basic objectives, the protection of a competitive process that brings to consumers the benefits of lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN5[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

In limited circumstances, courts will apply a per se standard to antitrust allegations under § 1 of the Sherman Act. The per se approach is appropriate where the challenged conduct is "manifestly anticompetitive" and thus no in-depth analysis of the market effect is necessary. Examples of per se violations include price-fixing schemes and concerted refusals to deal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a valid claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must allege three elements: (1) the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under the per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Insurers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Simply because certain insurance plans are not deemed "comparable" is not enough evidence, standing alone, to suggest significant anticompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8[] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

A tying arrangement is an agreement by one party to sell a product only on the condition that the buyer purchases a second product, or at a minimum, that the buyer agrees that it will not purchase the second product from any other seller.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Certain tying arrangements pose an unacceptable risk of stifling competition and therefore are unreasonable per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A per se tying violation occurs where: (1) there is a tie of two separate products; (2) the seller has "appreciable" or "sufficient" economic power in the tying product market; and (3) the tie affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items. A tying arrangement must link two distinct markets where there is "sufficient demand" for each product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market. The existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market. Market power may also be shown where a seller offers a unique product that competitors cannot offer -such as a patented product or a special tract of land.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 2 of the Sherman Act states that every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Monopoly power is the power to control market prices or exclude competition. In simple terms, the relevant market is composed of (1) the product market and (2) the geographic area involved. The relevant product market generally consists of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced, taking into consideration price, use and quality. This determination often involves an evaluation of the cross-elasticity of demand between products, or the degree that buyers of one product switch to the other in response to price changes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN16[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Courts articulate three elements of a conspiracy to monopolize: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and (3) specific intent to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

In certain circumstances a single brand of product or service can constitute the relevant market under the Sherman Act.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

HN18[] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

The equal protection clause of U.S. Const. amend. XIV declares that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. This constitutional command is essentially a direction that all persons similarly situated should be treated alike.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

HN19[] Constitutional Law, Equal Protection

To prove an equal protection claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate that a defendant has acted with discriminatory intent or purpose.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

HN20[] Constitutional Law, Equal Protection

Discriminatory purposes implies more than intent as volition or intent as awareness of consequences. It implies that the decisionmaker selects or reaffirms a particular course of action at least in part "because of," not merely "in spite of," its adverse effects upon an identifiable group.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

HN21[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

To survive a motion to dismiss, an equal protection claim must outline facts sufficient to convey specific instances of unlawful discrimination. A plaintiff may not prevail simply by asserting an inequity and tacking on the self-serving conclusion that the defendant was motivated by a discriminatory animus.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Deprivation of Economic Interests

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN22[] Substantive Due Process, Deprivation of Economic Interests

The due process clause of U.S. Const. amend. XIV provides that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN23[] Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

Legislative acts adjusting the burdens and benefits of economic life come to a court with a presumption of constitutionality. The burden is on one complaining of a due process violation to establish that the legislature has acted in an arbitrary and irrational way.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN24[] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

In the absence of any federal claims, a federal court lacks original jurisdiction and has the discretion to respectfully decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over remaining state claims. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1367(c)(3).

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiffs: Keven A. McKenna, Esq., Pawtucket, RI. Sinclair T. Banks, Esq., W. Kingston, RI.

For Life Insurance Co. of North America, Defendant: Michele A. Theroux, Esq., Charles J. McGovern, Esq., William P. Devereaux, Esq., McGovern, Noel & Benik, Providence, RI. For URI, Eddy, Carothers, Morrissey & Board of Governors, Defendants: Jay S. Goodman, Esq., Mandell, Goodman, DeLuca & Schwartz, Providence, RI.

Judges: Pettine

Opinion by: RAYMOND J. PETTINE

Opinion

[*532] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

PETTINE, RAYMOND J., Senior U.S. District Judge

This is a class action lawsuit on behalf of current and former students at the University of Rhode Island ("URI" or "the university").[1] [*533] Plaintiffs allege a multitude of federal and state claims attacking the university's mandatory health clinic fee and health insurance requirement. Jurisdiction is premised on 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question); 28 U.S.C. § 1337(a) (antitrust); 28 U.S.C. § 1343(a) (civil rights); and 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a) (supplemental).

[2] Defendants have moved to dismiss this suit under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. For the reasons stated below, I grant defendants' motion with respect to all federal claims. In addition, I decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the pendent state claims, and dismiss those claims without prejudice.

I. Standard of Review

---

[1] No plaintiff class is currently certified. All parties have agreed to a stay of plaintiffs' motion for class certification pending resolution of defendants' motion to dismiss.

HN1[] It is not proper to dismiss a complaint under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) unless "it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984) (citing Conley v. Gibson, 335 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957)). In making this determination, a court should accept the well-pleaded complaint as true and indulge every reasonable inference in favor of the plaintiff. Correa-Martinez v. Arrillaga-Belendez, 903 F.2d 49, 52 (1st Cir. 1990). This standard of review "does not mean, however, that a court must (or should) accept every allegation made by the complainant, no matter how conclusory or generalized." U.S. v. Avx Corp., 962 F.2d 108, 115 (1st Cir. 1992).

[3]

II. Background

URI operates a University Health Services ("UHS" or "health clinic") on its Kingston, Rhode Island campus. UHS offers ambulatory services and health education to URI undergraduate and graduate students by walk-in or by appointment. It is open 24 hours per day, seven days per week during the academic year.

URI imposes a mandatory health clinic fee for full-time undergraduate and graduate students. Full-time graduate students may only waive the health clinic fee if they are a member of a health maintenance organization, or a member or dependent of the military. Undergraduate students may only waive the fee if they enroll in fewer than 12 hours per semester. In 1991-92, the health clinic fee was $ 124.00 per semester.

URI also requires full-time students to carry health insurance to supplement the medical coverage provided through UHS. Students may satisfy this requirement in two ways. They may (1) purchase a private health insurance policy offered through URI or (2) demonstrate that they have "comparable coverage" through some other health insurance plan. In 1990-91 and 1991-92, the URI-sponsored policy was available through defendant The Life Insurance Company of [4] North American ("LINA"). The cost of the LINA policy (12 month coverage) was $ 282.00 for 1990-91 and $ 330.00 for 1991-92.

The LINA plan was designed to "dovetail" with medical services provided at UHS. Thus, a student enrolled in the LINA plan would only pay for coverage of health services not provided through the student's mandatory health clinic fee. Additionally, under the LINA plan, insurance coverage was only available if students first sought medical assistance from UHS. If necessary, a student was then referred to an outside health care provider by UHS. If UHS was closed (e.g., during official university holidays and the summer), students were required to notify UHS of any medical actions taken.

Students opting for "comparable" plans in 1990-91 and 1991-92 were required to submit a waiver card to the university by a date certain. Failure to submit the waiver card resulted in automatic enrollment in, and billing for, the LINA plan. If the LINA bill was not paid, URI prohibited future registration of that student. URI warned its students in writing that comparable coverage plans must pay for laboratory tests, x-rays, orthopedic supplies and selected gynecological procedures [5] performed at UHS. URI also cautioned its students that Rhode Island Blue Cross and health maintenance organizations [*534] in Rhode Island were not deemed "comparable" plans.

In 1990-91 and 1991-92, approximately 40% of the more than 10,000 URI students acquired health insurance through LINA. The remaining 60% obtained coverage from other carriers. While the university claims that it makes no profit on the insurance requirement, it does collect a $ 10.00 administrative fee for processing each student. In addition, UHS is supported, in part, by the laboratory, x-ray, orthopedics and gynecological fees that are paid by student insurance carriers.

On January 31, 1992, plaintiffs filed the present action. Unfortunately, there is no simple way to summarize plaintiffs' legal theories. They have adopted an everything-but-the-kitchen-sink approach to this case. Plaintiffs' amended complaint is a 45 page single-spaced document crammed full of federal and state claims. On the federal side, there are numerous antitrust allegations, as well as claims under the Equal Protection and Due Process clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. On the state side, plaintiffs' claims [6] include Money Had and Received, Breach of Contract, Duress, Undue Influence, Negligent Misrepresentation, Innocent Misrepresentation, Breach of Insurer's Duty to Deal Fairly and in Good Faith, Negligence, Breach of Implied Contract, Breach of Fiduciary Duty and Ultra Vires. Plaintiffs also assert equal protection and due process claims under the Rhode Island Constitution, and claims under Rhode Island antitrust statutes. [2] At its core, this suit seeks to recoup health clinic fees and LINA insurance premiums paid by plaintiff URI students, plus treble damages for antitrust violations.

[7] III. Discussion

A. Federal Antitrust Claims

I begin my scrutiny of the amended complaint with the federal antitrust allegations (Counts VII, XVI). Plaintiffs advance three sets of antitrust claims: (1) conspiracy claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act; (2) per se tying claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act; and (3) conspiracy to monopolize claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Defendants' primary argument in support of their motion to dismiss is that plaintiffs have failed to adequately allege the essential elements of any antitrust violations. [3]

[8] 1. Conspiracy Claims Under § 1 of the Sherman Act

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Despite this sweeping language, the U.S. Supreme Court has long recognized that the Act prohibits only unreasonable restraints of trade. Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988).

HN3[] To determine unreasonable restraint of trade, courts generally evaluate the alleged anticompetitive actions "through case-by-case [*535] application of the so-called rule of reason test -- that is, 'the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition.'" Id. (quoting Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977)). In the First Circuit's words, HN4[] "the 'rule of reason' limits the Act's literal words by forbidding only those arrangements the [9] anticompetitive consequences of which outweigh their legitimate business justifications . . ." Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Institute, 851 F.2d 478, 486 (1st Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1007, 102 L. Ed. 2d 780, 109 S. Ct. 789 (1989). In this special context, the term "'anticompetitive' . . . refers not to actions that merely injure individual competitors, but rather to actions that harm the competitive process. And, the law assesses both harms and benefits in light of the Act's basic objectives, the protection of a competitive process that brings to consumers the benefits of lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods." Id. (citations omitted).

[2] Plaintiffs' sweeping litigation strategy is not confined to their complaint. Plaintiffs originally filed with this Court a two volume, 357 page single-spaced Memorandum In Support Of Their Objection To Defendants' 12(b)(6) Motion To Dismiss. This Court then directed plaintiffs to re-submit a memorandum of law not more than 60 double-spaced pages. Plaintiffs only superficially complied with the Court's instructions. While they did file a 60 page abbreviated memorandum, plaintiffs repeatedly cross-reference crucial material in the abbreviated memorandum to voluminous passages contained in the original 357 page brief. In the interests of judicial economy, this Court has overlooked plaintiffs' mishandling of this motion and considered arguments contained in both the original and abbreviated filings.

[3] Defendants also contend that they have antitrust immunity from suit based upon three separate grounds: (1) the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1011-15, which provides an antitrust exemption for the "business of insurance"; (2) the so-called "state-action" doctrine, which offers immunity for actions taken by state government and certain private actors; and (3) the Local Government Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 34-36, which bars antitrust damage actions against local governments, including "special function governmental units established by State law in one or more States." Because I hold that plaintiffs have failed to state a valid claim under either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, there is no need to address these defenses.

HN5[] In limited circumstances, courts will apply a per se standard to antitrust allegations under § 1. The per se approach is appropriate where the challenged conduct is "manifestly anticompetitive" and thus no in-depth analysis of the market effect is necessary. Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 723-24. Examples of per se violations include price-fixing schemes and concerted refusals to deal. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 9 and n.10 , 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984); [10] U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 593 (1st Cir. 1993).

Thus, HN6[] to state a valid claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege three elements: (1) the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under the per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce. See Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1410 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, U.S. , 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991). See also ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments 2 (3d ed. 1992).

In the present case, plaintiffs allege a litany of interconnected claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act that relate to some type of conspiracy or exclusionary arrangement between URI and LINA:

(1) URI and LINA conspired in imposing the mandatory clinic fee and insurance requirement. Amended Complaint at PP 97, 112, 152, 255, 256.

(2) URI and LINA conspired in requiring students covered by LINA to first seek treatment at the URI clinic to obtain insurance coverage. Amended Complaint at PP 113, 114.

[11]

(3) URI and LINA conspired to dictate alternative insurance coverage (i.e., non-LINA) in terms of the health clinic's revenue raising procedures. Amended Complaint at P 127.

(4) URI and LINA conspired to automatically charge some students for the full annual amount of the LINA plan, even though LINA coverage did not actually begin until students paid their bill. Amended Complaint at P 106.

(5) URI and LINA conspired to require "more of a non-LINA policy than is furnished by the LINA policy. Amended Complaint at P 120.

(6) URI and LINA conspired in "carrying out URI's requirement that male students have health insurance that includes coverage for gynecological services . . ." Amended Complaint at P 134.

(7) URI and LINA conspired in "the URI clinic fee's inclusion of a female coverage component for men . . ." Amended Complaint at P 138.

Plaintiffs appear to concede that these allegations should be viewed through the rule of reason lens. But they argue that the anticompetitive nature of the mandatory health clinic fee and insurance requirement is "self-evident." Plaintiffs' Abbreviated Memorandum at 23. I believe that the rule of reason approach is proper in this case. Plaintiffs [12] do not cite any cases to support a per se violation, and this Court's research has not unearthed any such precedent. Given [*536] this finding, plaintiffs' conspiracy claims must be dismissed.

Plaintiffs' amended complaint does not present sufficient facts to indicate how these challenged actions unreasonably restrained trade in any relevant market, or had significant adverse effects on competition. Only two facts in the amended complaint shed any light on anticompetitive effects. The first is that Rhode Island Blue Cross and health maintenance organizations in Rhode Island were not considered "comparable" insurance plans. The second is that the LINA plan was intentionally "dovetailed" with UHS to provide an insurance package less expensive than that available from other carriers.

These facts are not sufficient to show how the clinic fee or insurance mandate unreasonably restrained trade or harmed the competitive process. Plaintiffs have not pled any facts suggesting that URI or LINA coerced students into buying the LINA plan, or that they sought to unfairly exclude competitors from insuring URI students. Rather, URI allowed students to choose between LINA or "comparable" coverage plans. [13] This policy, plaintiffs acknowledge, resulted in a majority of URI students opting for non-LINA policies. Amended Complaint at P 144 ("Thousands of URI students have non LINA/URI health insurance"); Plaintiffs' Abbreviated Memorandum at 28 n.74, 32-33 (approximately 40% of URI students bought LINA insurance).

Moreover, HN7[] simply because certain insurance plans were not deemed "comparable" is not enough evidence, standing alone, to suggest significant anticompetitive effects. See, e.g., Reazin v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield, 899 F.2d 951, 960 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 497 U.S. 1005, 111 L. Ed. 2d 752, 110 S. Ct. 3241 (1990) (with rule of reason claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, "the adverse impact must be on competition, not on any individual competitor or on plaintiff's business") (emphasis in original); Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 508 (9th Cir. 1989) ("removal of one or a few competitors need not equate with injury to competition" under rule of reason § 1 claim).

In short, plaintiffs have failed to adequately allege in their amended complaint how URI and LINA conspired to unreasonably [14] restrain trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act. There is no need for this Court to determine the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy, or whether the challenged actions affected interstate commerce.

2. Tying Claims Under § 1 of the Sherman Act

Plaintiffs' second cluster of antitrust claims are per se tying allegations under § 1 of the Sherman Act. HN8[] A tying arrangement is an agreement by one party to sell a product (the tying product) only on the condition that the buyer purchases a second product (the tied product), or at a minimum, that the buyer agrees that it will not purchase the second product from any other seller. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, U.S. , 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2079 (1992); Northern Pacific Railway Company v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). The Supreme Court has long recognized that HN9[] "certain tying arrangements pose an unacceptable risk of stifling competition and therefore are unreasonable 'per se'." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 9. The caselaw indicates that HN10[] a per se tying violation occurs where: (1) there is a tie [15] of two separate products; (2) the seller has "appreciable" or "sufficient" economic power in the tying product market; and (3) the tie affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. See Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2079; Jefferson, 466 U.S. at 16-22; Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 498-503, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969). See also Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 794 (1st Cir. 1988). [4]

[16] [*537] Plaintiffs allege three separate tying arrangements. The first arrangement is between a URI education (tying product) and URI's health clinic (tied product). Amended Complaint at PP 109, 253. The second is between URI's health clinic (tying product) and the LINA insurance (tied product). Amended Complaint at P 149. The third is between a URI education (tying product) and the LINA insurance (tied product). Amended Complaint at P 98.

With all due respect to plaintiffs' efforts in this area, I believe their amended complaint fails to state a viable tying claim. To begin, for two of the three alleged tying arrangements -- the health clinic and LINA insurance, and URI education and LINA insurance -- plaintiffs have simply not alleged sufficient facts to show that an actual tie existed. Plaintiffs do not indicate that URI conditioned a university education or health clinic services on the purchase of LINA insurance. As noted above, students were given a choice of subscribing to the LINA plan or choosing a "comparable" plan. [5]

---

[4] In theory, it is also possible to prove that a tying arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act under the rule of reason. Under the rule of reason -- unlike the per se test -- a plaintiff bringing a tying claim "has the burden of proving that the [challenged action] violated the Sherman Act because it unreasonably restrained competition." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29. The First Circuit has interpreted this requirement to mean that a plaintiff cannot show a tying violation in the absence of the per se rules unless the tie's anticompetitive effects outweigh its legitimate business justifications. Grappone, 858 F.2d at 799.

In the current action, plaintiffs do not articulate a rule of reason challenge. Nor do they allege sufficient facts in the amended complaint that point to significant anticompetitive effects in any tied product market. Thus, I conclude that plaintiffs have failed to state a rule of reason tying claim.

[5] Plaintiffs argue that the health insurance requirement precludes some students from employing "self-insurance." Abbreviated Memorandum at 24. If students do not wish to purchase any insurance, however, the university's mandate lacks anticompetitive consequences. "When a purchaser is 'forced' to buy a product he would not have otherwise bought even from another seller in [17] With respect to the remaining alleged arrangement -- URI education and the mandatory health clinic fee -- most students were obliged to pay the health clinic fee. Nevertheless, I do not believe plaintiffs have adequately alleged that this arrangement involved two separate products. In Jefferson Parish, supra, the U.S. Supreme Court stated "that HN11[] the answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." 466 U.S. at 19. Stated another way, a tying arrangement must "link two distinct markets" where there is "sufficient demand" for each product. Id. at 19-22. See also Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2080.

In the case at hand, plaintiffs have not legitimately alleged that the URI health clinic is part of product market separate from a URI education. They merely argue in their briefs that students go to URI for its academic offerings, not for mandatory clinic coverage. But this conclusory statement does not indicate the existence of a separate market for student [18] clinic services available to URI students.

An additional fatal flaw in all three purported tying schemes is plaintiffs' failure to adequately allege significant economic power in a relevant tying market. HN12[] "Market power is the power 'to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.'" Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2080 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14). "The existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market." Id. at 2081. Market power may also be shown where a seller offers a unique product that competitors cannot offer -- such as a patented product or a special tract of land. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16-17; Grappone, 858 F.2d at 796.

Plaintiffs argue that there is sufficient proof of economic power in both of the relevant tying product markets. With respect to the URI education, plaintiffs declare that "URI easily enjoys 'a significant market share' of the higher education business of URI students." Plaintiffs' Abbreviated [*538] Memorandum at 20. Plaintiffs' market [19] power arguments concerning URI's mandatory health clinic fee are inextricably linked to their URI education market assertions. They state: "Given URI's market power in URI students' education, and that clinic fee risk coverage is tied by it, URI also has market power in said risk coverage." Plaintiffs' Abbreviated Memorandum at 20.

Plaintiffs assert that this market definition is justified because the vast majority of students do not transfer to other schools once they enroll at URI. Several reasons for this low transfer rate, according to plaintiffs, are the trouble and expense for a URI student to transfer to another school, problems transferring URI academic credits to another university, a student's aversion to leaving family or friends, and the higher tuition and costs at other universities. Plaintiff's Original Memorandum at 160-61. In essence, plaintiffs assert that students become "locked-in" to a URI education once they enroll, even if the university does not possess significant economic power over prospective students before they first matriculate. [6] Plaintiffs' Original Memorandum at 161-63. This "lock-in" provides URI with market power over the continued education of [20] its students.

Last year, the U.S. Supreme Court provided support for this line of argument in Eastman Kodak, supra. In Kodak, independent service organizations brought an antitrust action under § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act challenging Eastman Kodak's policy of restricting the availability of spare parts for its photocopier and micrographic equipment to only those customers who serviced their own machines or hired Kodak service. 112 S. Ct. at 2076-77. The Ninth Circuit [21] determined that Kodak was not entitled to summary judgment on the § 1 tying claims because there was an issue of material fact whether Kodak's economic power in the tying product market (spare parts) restrained competition in the tied product market (service). The Court of Appeals also concluded that summary judgment was inappropriate on the § 2 claims. Id. at 2078-79.

---

the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed. " Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16. See also Grappone, 858 F.2d at 799.

[6] Plaintiffs do suggest in passing, however, that "before the prospective student enrolls at any university, URI has market power regarding that prospective student if s/he is not admitted anywhere else or cannot afford to go anywhere else, or, lacks a non-URI option for any other reason." Plaintiff's Original Memorandum at 161 (emphasis in original). Plaintiffs do not expand upon this highly speculative theory of market power, and thus I believe it merits no attention from the Court.

Kodak argued in the Supreme Court "that even if it concedes monopoly share of the relevant parts market, it cannot actually exercise the necessary market power for a Sherman Act violation . . . because competition exists in the equipment market [i.e., Kodak and other equipment brands]." Id. at 2081 (emphasis in original). Kodak asked the Court to adopt a legal presumption that equipment competition precludes a finding of monopoly power in the service or parts "aftermarkets." Id. at 2082. The Court rejected this argument in affirming the Ninth Circuit's ruling. In addressing the § 1 tying claims, it held that there was a question of fact over: (1) whether there was sufficient information in the marketplace about the "lifecycle" costs of maintaining this type of equipment at the time of purchase; and [22] (2) the costs of switching from Kodak to another product after purchasing the equipment -- that is, whether high switching costs will "lock-in" consumers to Kodak machines. [7] Id. at 2086-87.

Turning back to our case, I do not believe plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts in their amended complaint to support a market restricted to the higher education business of solely URI students. For one thing, no facts are alleged that the health insurance requirement was a hidden cost. The university has apparently required health insurance since 1968. Thus, the premiums at issue in this case were required beginning in the first semester of a student's enrollment at URI. [*539] Presumably, students who did not want to buy health [23] insurance had enough information at that stage to decide whether to matriculate at URI or choose another school. This easily discoverable information helps distinguish this case from the facts in Kodak, where there was a factual question concerning the availability of information about future repair costs when the Kodak equipment was originally purchased.

In addition, plaintiffs do not present any facts in the amended complaint that point to the inability of students to transfer to other schools. There are no facts on the costs of switching schools. There are no facts on transferring URI credits. Nor are there any facts on the comparative costs of public and private schools inside and outside of Rhode Island. Plaintiffs simply rely on conclusory statements in their supporting memoranda to carry the day.

No further analysis of the tying claims is necessary. I need not determine whether plaintiffs have alleged facts sufficient to demonstrate that a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market was affected.

3. Monopolization Claims Under § 2 of the Sherman Act

Plaintiffs' final grouping of antitrust claims fall under HN13[] § 2 of the Sherman Act, which states that "every [24] person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. HN14[] "'The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.'" Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2089 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). HN15[] "Monopoly power is the power to control market prices or exclude competition." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956). See also Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2090. In simple terms, the relevant market is composed of (1) the product market and (2) the geographic area involved. See du Pont 351 U.S. at 404; [25] Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). The relevant product market generally consists "of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced," taking into consideration price, use and quality. du Pont, 351 U.S. at 404. This determination often involves an evaluation of the "cross-elasticity" of demand between products -- or "the degree that buyers of one product switch to the other in response to price changes." H.J., Inc. v. ITT, 867 F.2d 1531, 1538 (8th Cir. 1989).

[7] Also critical to the Supreme Court's denial of summary judgement on the § 1 tying claims was evidence "that Kodak's control over the parts market has excluded service competition, boosted service prices and forced unwilling consumption of Kodak service." 112 S. Ct. at 2081.

Plaintiffs' claims here can best be characterized as alleging a conspiracy to monopolize. [8] First, they allege that LINA and URI conspired to monopolize for the URI health clinic "the health care business" of URI students enrolled in the LINA plan. Amended Complaint at P 128. Second, they allege that LINA and URI conspired to monopolize the "health risk coverage of those URI students whose health was not already insured elsewhere . . . [*540] " Amended Complaint at PP 155 and 254 (emphasis in original). In other words, URI and LINA targeted their marketing efforts at [26] those students who were not already covered by an "automatic" source of insurance (e.g., a parent's or spouse's policy) and thus "had to go shopping in order to become insured." Plaintiffs' Abbreviated Memorandum at 30.

[27] HN16[]

Courts have articulated three elements of a conspiracy to monopolize: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and (3) specific intent to monopolize. See Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1576 (11th Cir. 1991); Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's Int'l Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 74 (2nd Cir. 1988); Dreiling v. Peugeot Motors of America, Inc., 850 F.2d 1373, 1382 (10th Cir. 1988). See also ABA, Antitrust Law Developments at 270 (collecting cases). Assuming plaintiffs have properly alleged the existence of a combination or conspiracy and an overt act, the amended complaint does not allege sufficient facts to show a specific intent to monopolize for either of the § 2 claims. More precisely, neither claim alleges a specific intent to monopolize in a relevant market.

With respect to the first claim, plaintiffs appear to assert that the relevant market is the type of medical services available at the URI health clinic for LINA-insured students. In support of this market definition, plaintiffs [28] make an incomprehensible declaration: "Obviously there is nothing reasonably interchangeable with the health care available at the URI clinic, as, by their nature, medical services and techniques are highly specialized. For instance, there are no reasonable substitutes for any of the following: x-rays, laboratory tests, gynecological tests, or orthopedic services." Plaintiffs' Original Memorandum at 195.

I recognize that HN17[] in certain circumstances a single brand of product or service can constitute the relevant market under the Sherman Act. Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2090. In the case at bar, however, plaintiffs do not present any facts to show why the relevant market for this § 2 monopolization claim should be limited to URI health clinic services for students enrolled in the LINA plan. Under the facts alleged, students voluntarily chose to subscribe to the LINA-URI health care arrangement -- a set-up that provided insurance coverage only if students first visited the URI health clinic. If the LINA-URI option did not appeal to them, they could subscribe to a "comparable" plan with an alternative health care scheme. While the LINA plan was designed to "dovetail" [29] with the URI health clinic services, the amended complaint does not allege sufficient facts to indicate that these "comparable" plans were not "reasonably interchangeable" with LINA either in cost or in quality of health care coverage. Equally significant in light of Kodak, students were not "locked-in" to the LINA plan -- they could easily switch carriers at the end of the year.

---

[8] Both plaintiffs and defendants have characterized these § 2 claims as "attempted monopolization" rather than conspiracy to monopolize. In my view, conspiracy to monopolize is a better label because the claims allege a conspiracy between two entities -- URI and LINA. In any case, the choice of category is not critical to the outcome. As discussed below, plaintiffs have failed to allege a specific intent to monopolize in the relevant market -- an essential element for both attempted monopolization and conspiracy to monopolize. Compare Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, __ U.S. __, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-892 (1993) (elements of attempted monopolization) with Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1576 (11th Cir. 1991) (elements of conspiracy to monopolize) and Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's Int'l Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 74 (2nd Cir. 1988) (same). Moreover, conspiracy to monopolize might be viewed as an easier claim to plead than attempted monopolization because the plaintiff need not address the element of a "dangerous probability of success" in the market. ABA, Antitrust Law Developments at 272.

Thus, based upon amended complaint, the relevant market for plaintiffs' first § 2 claim must, at a minimum, include LINA and other "comparable" health care plans available to URI students. [9] In this broader market, plaintiffs have not alleged any facts to indicate [*541] a specific intent to monopolize. Indeed, as noted, URI's program enabled the majority of URI students to enroll in non-LINA plans.

[30] Focusing on the second monopolization allegation, plaintiffs suggest that the relevant market is limited to health insurance available to those students "whose health was not already insured elsewhere." This is another attempt by plaintiffs to bootstrap an antitrust claim to a narrowly drawn market. But this market definition makes no sense. This subset of students -- if this group can be delineated at all -- was equally free to choose or reject LINA. Plaintiffs have not proffered any facts to indicate that these students were somehow forced into buying the LINA plan, or that they faced different options than other URI students choosing among insurance carriers. Thus, the relevant market for this claim must also be broader than defined by plaintiffs -- encompassing at least LINA and "comparable" insurance plans. And, once again, there are no facts alleged to show a specific intent to monopolize this type of market.

In sum, none of the federal antitrust allegations state a valid claim. All of these claims are dismissed.

B. Equal Protection Claims

I now examine plaintiffs' federal equal protection claims under the Fourteenth Amendment (Count IX). The gravamen of these claims is [31] that URI and LINA intentionally charged male students the same amount in health clinic fees and insurance premiums as female students, even though a portion of these costs were exclusively spent on medical services for women (e.g., gynecological care). This structure, plaintiffs assert, discriminated against male students on the basis of sex and denied them the equal protection of the law.

HN18[] The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment declares that no State shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." This constitutional command "is essentially a direction that all persons similarly situated should be treated alike." Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center, 473 U.S. 432, 439, 87 L. Ed. 2d 313, 105 S. Ct. 3249 (1985). Even assuming the operations of URI and LINA constituted state-action for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, plaintiffs' equal protection claims are meritless.

It is now a bedrock principle that HN19[] to prove an equal protection claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant acted with discriminatory intent or purpose. See Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 239-42, 48 L. Ed. 2d 597, 96 S. Ct. 2040 (1976); Lipsett v. University of Puerto Rico, 864 F.2d 881, 896 (1st Cir. 1988). [32] And HN20[] "'discriminatory purposes' . . . implies more than intent as volition or intent as awareness of consequences. It implies that the decisionmaker . . . selected or reaffirmed a particular course of action at least in part 'because of,' not merely 'in spite of,' its adverse effects upon an identifiable group." Personnel Administrator of Massachusetts v. Feeney, 442 U.S. 256, 279, 60 L. Ed. 2d 870, 99 S. Ct. 2282 (1979) (citation omitted). See also McCleskey v. Kemp, 481 U.S. 279, 298, 95 L. Ed. 2d 262, 107 S. Ct. 1756 (1987).

---

[9] This position is supported by one pre-Kodak U.S. District Court case from New York, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Adler, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1146, 1988-1 Trade Cases P 67,907 (S.D.N.Y. 1988). In that case, the defendant, Dr. Adler, brought a § 2 antitrust counterclaim alleging that Metropolitan Life Insurance Company sought to limit any competition that could affect its alleged monopoly of group medical insurance for New York State employees. Specifically, Adler charged that Metropolitan Life attempted to deprive members of the insurance plan of the physician of their choice solely to enhance profits and lower costs. 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1146, at *10. Adler contended that the relevant market for this monopolization allegation was limited to the employees of New York State covered by the plaintiffs' health insurance plans. *Id. at 11-12.

The Court dismissed the counterclaim. It found, among other things, that Adler had failed to plead an appropriate market definition. The Court wrote: ". . . Dr. Adler attempts to allege a monopoly simply by definition of the market. Surely the relevant market cannot be those New York State employees who have opted to subscribe to Metropolitan's health insurance. In such a case, there could be no finding other than one of monopoly." *Id. at 12.

In this case, plaintiffs have not pled any facts to indicate that URI or LINA intentionally discriminated against male students in the imposition of the clinic fees or insurance premiums. Plaintiffs simply complain that URI and LINA were cognizant that a portion of these costs were funneled into women's health services. Indulging all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiffs, I do not see how this naked allegation states a claim under the Equal Protection clause. As the First Circuit has recently stated:

> HN21[] To survive a motion to dismiss, an equal protection claim "must 'outline facts sufficient to convey specific instances of unlawful discrimination.'" A plaintiff [33] "may not prevail simply by asserting an inequity and tacking on the self-serving conclusion that the defendant was motivated by a discriminatory animus." Coyne v. City of Somerville, 972 F.2d 440, 444 (1st Cir. 1992) (citations omitted).

In conclusion, without sufficient facts to indicate discriminatory intent or purpose, [*542] plaintiffs' federal equal protection claims must be dismissed.

C. Due Process Claims

Plaintiffs also plead separate claims under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment (Count XII). They assert that URI's mandatory clinic fee and insurance requirement deprive students of liberty "to contract" and "of property." Plaintiffs are particularly troubled by URI's policy of automatically billing for LINA if a student did not pick another insurance carrier, and of URI's policy of prohibiting registration if students did not pay their LINA bill.

HN22[] The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment provides that no State shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." Plaintiffs appear to allege a substantive due process violation based upon the right or liberty to contract. They ground this [34] argument on language contained in the 1923 Supreme Court case, Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 67 L. Ed. 1042, 43 S. Ct. 625 (1923):

> While this court has not attempted to define with exactness the liberty . . . guaranteed [by the Fourteenth Amendment], the term has received much consideration and some of the included things have been definitely stated. Without doubt, it denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also the right of the individual to contract, to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, establish a home and bring up children, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men. (emphasis added).

While these are majestic words, since the 1930s the Supreme Court has severely curtailed substantive due process theories based on economic assertions and the right to contract. See Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 10 L. Ed. 2d 93, 83 S. Ct. 1028 (1963) (upholding Kansas statute making it a misdemeanor to engage in business of debt adjustment except as incident to [35] practice of law); West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379, 81 L. Ed. 703, 57 S. Ct. 578 (1937) (upholding Washington State statute establishing minimum wages for women); Nebbia v. New York, 291 U.S. 502, 78 L. Ed. 940, 54 S. Ct. 505 (1934) (upholding New York Milk Board's order fixing milk prices for distributors and storekeepers). See also Tenoco Oil Co. v. Department of Consumer Affairs, 876 F.2d 1013, 1021 (1st Cir. 1989) ("Since 1937, when 'substantive' due process lost favor, courts have reviewed economic legislation with great deference to the legislature's policies . . ."). "It is by now well established that HN23[] legislative Acts adjusting the burdens and benefits of economic life come to the Court with a presumption of constitutionality, and that the burden is on one complaining of a due process violation to establish that the legislature has acted in an arbitrary and irrational way." Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 15, 49 L. Ed. 2d 752, 96 S. Ct. 2882 (1976). See also Concrete Pipe and Products of California, Inc. v. Construction Laborers Pension Trust For Southern California, 124 L. Ed. 2d 539, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2264, 2287 (1993). [36]

Even assuming URI is a state actor, and assuming further that the factual setting in this case implicates the right to contract, plaintiffs' amended complaint still fails to state a valid substantive due process claim. Plaintiffs fail to allege any facts that URI or LINA acted in an arbitrary or irrational manner. Nor do they cite any specific authority to support their broad assertions of constitutional harm. Simply put, under the broadest reading of the amended complaint, plaintiffs' disfavored economic due process allegations must be dismissed.

IV. Conclusion

In sum, I dismiss with prejudice plaintiffs' federal antitrust, equal protection and due process claims. HN24[] In the absence of any federal claims, this case lacks original jurisdiction in this Court. Within my discretion, I respectfully decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). I wish to emphasize that this ruling in no way reflects on the [*543] merits of those state claims. All state law claims are dismissed without prejudice.

[37] SO ORDERED:

Raymond J. Pettine

Senior U.S. District Judge

August 5, 1993

End of Document

Rosen v. Hyundai Group (Korea)

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

August 10, 1993, Decided

CV 90-3674

Reporter

829 F. Supp. 41 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11169 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,415

JOSEPH ROSEN and SANDRA McNEIL, Plaintiffs, v. HYUNDAI GROUP (KOREA), HYUNDAI CORPORATION and HYUNDAI PIANO; SAMICK (KOREA), SAMICK (AMERICA) and SAMICK MUSIC CORP., Defendants.

Core Terms

pianos, terminate, plaintiffs', customers, price-fixing, defendants', boycott, promissory estoppel, manufacturer, distributor, antitrust, summary judgment motion, enrichment, promise, prices, breach of warranty, joint venture, speculation, middleman, brand, summary judgment, relevant market, rule of reason, unambiguous, vertical

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Vertical price-fixing schemes are considered per se illegal under the antitrust laws. In order to succeed on the merits of their claim, a plaintiff need only prove that the defendants entered into an agreement to fix prices. Because vertical price-fixing is a per se violation of the antitrust laws, a plaintiff does not have to allege or show how the agreement adversely affected interbrand competition in the relevant product and geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

In order to survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff must come forward with unambiguous evidence that defendants entered into an agreement to terminate the plaintiff and to sell their products thereafter at specific price levels. Further, that evidence must tend to exclude the possibility that defendants acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3[] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

A plaintiff can avoid summary judgment with respect to their claim of vertical price-fixing only if they can show unambiguous evidence of an agreement among the defendants to fix prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Boycotts traditionally fell into a category of per se unlawful conduct requiring proof only of an agreement between defendants. In recent years, however, the Supreme Court has required a plaintiff alleging a non-horizontal boycott to show, in addition to such an agreement, that the defendants have market power in the relevant market. Absent market power, the plaintiff must proceed under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

The product market must be plausibly defined according to the traditional methodology courts prescribe to define a market for antitrust purposes an analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand for potential substitute products. Simply put, goods are in the same relevant product market if they are reasonably interchangeable for the purposes for which they were produced.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In order to survive summary judgment under the rule of reason, a plaintiff would have to show, in addition to an agreement between defendants not to deal, an adverse affect of the agreement on interbrand competition in the relevant market.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Detrimental Reliance

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN7[] Consideration, Detrimental Reliance

Under New York law, in order to recover for promissory estoppel, a plaintiff must show that there was an unambiguous promise, that plaintiff reasonably relied on that promise and that plaintiff was injured as a result of that reliance. Additionally, the claim of promissory estoppel, even if established, is further subject to the defense of the Statute of Frauds.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Detrimental Reliance

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

Contracts Law > Defenses > Unconscionability > General Overview

HN8[] Consideration, Detrimental Reliance

Under New York law, the Statute of Frauds is a proper defense to a claim of promissory estoppel as long as its application is not unconscionable. Under settled principles of New York law, there is no unconscionability in invoking the Statute of Frauds in a situation where a distributor who has been terminated already has received substantial benefits from the distributorship.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Libel

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Statute of Limitations

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN9[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Under New York law, a claim that is bottomed on libel has a one-year statute of limitation.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN10[] Remedies, Restitution

In order to recover for unjust enrichment in New York, a plaintiff must show that the defendant was enriched, that the enrichment was at plaintiff's expense and that circumstances are such that in equity and good conscience defendant should return money or property to plaintiff.

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Partners > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

HN11[] Joint Ventures, Formation

In order to successfully make out a joint venture claim, a plaintiff must show: (1) a specific agreement to engage in a joint venture; (2) which manifests the intent of the parties to join together in a joint venture; (3) that each principal made a contribution; (4) some degree of joint proprietorship and control of the enterprise; (5) some provision for sharing of profits and losses.

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Standards of Performance & Liability > Breach, Excuse & Repudiation > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Provisions > Warranties > General Overview

HN12[] Standards of Performance & Liability, Breach, Excuse & Repudiation

Only "sellers" are liable for breach of warranty under the New York Uniform Commercial Code.

Counsel: [1] YANNACONE & YANNACONE, ESQS., BY: VICTOR JOHN YANNACONE, JR., ESQ., Attorneys for Plaintiffs, 39 Baker Street, P.O. Drawer 109, Patchogue, New York 11772-0109. THOMAS V. DANA, ESQ., Co-Counsel for Plaintiff, 11 Park Place, Suite 606, New York, New York 10007.

REID & PRIEST, ESQS., BY: LAURA LONGOBARDI, ESQ., Attorneys for Defendants HYUNDAI, 233 Broadway, Suite 1075, New York, New York 10279. PAUL A. BATISTA, ESQ., Attorney for Defendant SAMICK MUSIC CORP., 950 Third Avenue, New York, New York 10022.

Judges: WEXLER

Opinion by: LEONARD D. WEXLER

Opinion

[*43] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

(Wexler, J.)

Joseph Rosen, Sandra McNeil, Family Melody Center of Patchogue, Inc. and Schumann International Inc., (collectively "plaintiffs") distributed the Schumann brand piano manufactured by defendant Samick Musical Instruments Corporation ("SMIC") and sold to them by defendant Hyundai Corporation ("Hyundai") who acted as a middleman for plaintiffs and SMIC. Plaintiffs brought a slew of antitrust and state law claims stemming from their termination as a distributor of SMIC-manufactured pianos. Presently before the Court is defendants' motion for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For the reasons [2] stated below, defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to plaintiffs' antitrust claims is granted. Additionally, summary judgment is also granted with respect to all state claims except plaintiffs' breach of warranty claim.

I. BACKGROUND

This is one of the many cases in which a terminated distributor of goods alleges a [*44] myriad of antitrust claims and state law based tort claims flowing from its termination. Unfortunately, plaintiffs' amended complaint and memorandum of law are rambling and disjointed, making it exceedingly difficult to decipher plaintiffs' claims.

Plaintiffs were involved in the wholesale distribution of pianos to dealers located in the United States. SMIC is a Korean Corporation that manufactures pianos. [1] [3] Defendant Samick (USA) is a California corporation whose principal business is the wholesale distribution of SMIC-manufactured pianos under the trade name Samick. SMIC owns 80% of the shares of Samick (USA). The remaining 20% is owned by Kyo Chu, who is the president of Samick (USA) and one of the managing directors of SMIC. [2]

Hyundai is a large-scale Korean trading company. Defendant Hyundai (USA) is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Hyundai Corporation that accepts orders from Hyundai's customers in the United States as well as parts of Latin and South America. [3] From approximately 1979 until 1990, Hyundai acted as a middleman for plaintiffs and SMIC, purchasing SMIC-manufactured pianos under the trade name Schumann and reselling them to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs never entered into a written contract with Hyundai nor did plaintiffs have any contract with SMIC for a continuous supply of Schumann pianos. Indeed, plaintiffs had no direct dealings with SMIC whatsoever. In addition to its role as a middleman, Hyundai also purchased pianos from SMIC under the trade name Hyundai and distributed these pianos directly in the United States wholesale market.

[4] The relationship between SMIC and plaintiffs was rocky from the outset. SMIC constantly threatened to terminate plaintiffs' supply of Schumann brand pianos and towards the end of the relationship broadcast its intent to terminate plaintiffs to dealers in the trade. It also appears that Hyundai attempted to convince SMIC on many occasions not to terminate plaintiffs, apparently because it was in Hyundai's economic interest to continue acting as a middleman for SMIC and plaintiffs. [4] Additionally, plaintiffs also allege that large quantities of pianos were purposefully delivered in defective condition and that defendants failed to cure the defects.

[5] In their complaint, plaintiffs allege that SMIC, Samick (USA), Hyundai and Hyundai (USA) entered into an agreement to terminate plaintiffs as distributors of the SMIC-manufactured Schumann brand piano because plaintiffs refused to lower their prices. SMIC contends that it unilaterally decided to terminate plaintiffs as part of its

---

[1] It should be noted that SMIC has not been served in this case.

[2] SMIC and Samick (USA) will collectively be referred to as the "Samick defendants".

[3] Hyundai and Hyundai (USA) will collectively be referred to as the "Hyundai defendants".

[4] Although all the documentary evidence is to the contrary, plaintiffs suggest that the Hyundai defendants did not really attempt to convince the Samick defendants to continue supplying plaintiffs. Rather, plaintiffs speculate that the two groups of defendants engaged in a "good cop/bad cop" charade, whereby the Hyundai defendants only pretended to try to convince SMIC to continue supplying plaintiffs.

overall sales strategy. It claims that plaintiffs sold the Schumann pianos cheaply and as a result failed to provide its customers with any after-sales services. According to SMIC, people in the trade were aware that SMIC manufactured the Schumann brand pianos and SMIC was concerned that the reputation of its pianos would be injured as a result of plaintiffs' discounting.

Plaintiffs, on the other hand, claim that SMIC terminated them as distributors because of pressure placed upon it by Hyundai. Plaintiffs speculate that Hyundai, who competed against plaintiffs at the distributor level, pressured SMIC to terminate plaintiffs because plaintiffs refused to lower their prices. Plaintiffs suggest that Hyundai exercised control over SMIC because of its position as one of SMIC's largest customers. Plaintiffs further contend that Samick (USA) was also in favor [6] of their termination because it too competed against plaintiffs at the distributor level.

In addition to the alleged price-fixing scheme, plaintiffs also allege that defendants [*45] unlawfully agreed to boycott plaintiffs, so that they could take over plaintiffs' customers and thereby increase their own profit. Plaintiffs also alleged a Robinson-Patman Act violation and monopoly claim which they withdrew at oral argument. Finally, in their complaint, plaintiffs allege a variety of state-law based torts. At oral argument they withdrew their common law monopoly claim, their prima facie tort claim, their refusal to deal claim, and their restraint on alienation claim. The remaining state claims are for unjust enrichment, joint venture, promissory estoppel, tortious interference with business relations and breach of warranty.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Federal Antitrust Claims

1. Section 1 Claims Vertical Price-Fixing Claim

Plaintiffs allege that the Hyundai defendants entered into an illicit price-fixing agreement with the Samick defendants in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. [5] HN1[] Vertical price-fixing schemes are considered per se illegal under the antitrust laws. [7] See Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 724, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988). In order to succeed on the merits of their claim, plaintiffs need only prove that the Hyundai defendants on the one hand and the Samick defendants on the other hand entered into an agreement to fix prices. [6] [8] Because vertical price-fixing is a per se violation of the antitrust laws, plaintiffs do not have to allege or show how the agreement adversely affected interbrand competition in the relevant product and geographic market. [7]

---

[5] § 1 of the Sherman Act makes illegal "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce. . ."

[6] The only actionable agreement that plaintiffs could assert involving the Hyundai defendants would be between the Hyundai defendants collectively and the Samick defendants. As Hyundai (USA) is a wholly owned subsidiary of Hyundai, the Hyundai defendants are legally incapable of conspiring with each other for the purposes of § 1. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771-77, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) (because corporate parents and their wholly owned subsidiaries have "a complete unity of interest. . . . the very notion of an 'agreement' in Sherman Act terms between a parent and wholly owned subsidiary lacks meaning").

Moreover, the same rationale that prevents a parent and wholly owned subsidiary from conspiring with each other for the purposes of the antitrust laws, also prevents Samick (USA) from conspiring with SMIC. Although SMIC only owns 80% of Samick (USA), the remaining 20% is controlled by one of its managing directors. Under these facts, this Court concludes that there is "a complete unity of interest" between SMIC and Samick USA making an agreement between them meaningless in Sherman Act terms.

[7] The Samick defendants argue that because the complaint alleges a vertical restriction on trade, the rule of reason is the proper analysis to be applied to this case. Although the recent trend in antitrust law favors rule of reason analysis over the per se approach, the Supreme Court has not adopted the rule of reason in the context of vertical price-fixing schemes. Rather, the Supreme Court continues to hold that vertical price-fixing is per se illegal.

[9] According to plaintiffs, Hyundai (USA) and Samick (USA) competed with them at the distributor level and were unhappy with plaintiffs' discounting. Thus, plaintiffs allege that Hyundai, who exercised economic power over Samick by virtue of its position as one of Samick's largest customers, coerced SMIC into terminating plaintiffs. Hyundai strenuously denies plaintiffs' assertion and suggests that contrary to plaintiffs' allegation, it attempted to convince SMIC to continue supplying pianos to plaintiffs. Indeed, Hyundai argues that it was to its economic benefit to continue acting as middleman for plaintiffs. [8] [*46] Moreover, SMIC claims that it unilaterally decided to terminate plaintiffs. SMIC argues that plaintiffs' discounting was having a deleterious effect on its reputation in the industry. By failing to provide any after-sales services to its customers, SMIC argues that plaintiffs were undermining its sales plan of providing a top-notch product.

[10] The Supreme Court has enunciated clear and stringent evidentiary standards for plaintiffs to show the required agreement under the antitrust laws. HN2[] In order to survive a motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs must come forward with unambiguous evidence that the Samick defendants and the Hyundai defendants entered into an agreement to terminate plaintiffs and to sell their products thereafter at specific price levels. See Business Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. at 726 (1988); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Further, that evidence must tend to exclude the possibility that the Samick defendants and Hyundai defendants acted independently. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588; Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). Plaintiffs have simply failed to meet this standard. The record in the present case is bereft of any evidence that tends to show any agreement on prices or price levels among defendants.

Defendants have met their initial burden of showing a lack of agreement between the defendants. The affirmative [11] evidence indicates that there was clear disagreement between the Hyundai defendants and SMIC concerning plaintiffs. Indeed, the uncontroverted evidence in this case suggests that Hyundai opposed, not supported SMIC's decision to terminate plaintiffs. See Lim Dec. PP 11-16, 21-22, 24-25, 34, 36, 38, and Exhs. 2-3, 8-10, 14-15, 25, 28-29; Joo Dec. PP 17, 26. Plaintiffs have offered only sheer speculation to meet their burden to present evidence that shows an agreement or "that tends to exclude the possibility that the [defendants] acted independently." Thus, Rosen summarized his "evidence" that the Hyundai defendants agreed to fix prices with SMIC as follows:

> I was threatened that, if I did not raise my prices, that Samick would discontinue my supply. This is what Hyundai told me. I have no way of knowing whether Hyundai -- I have to assume at this point that Hyundai was involved in that also. . . .

Rosen Dep. at 774 (emphasis added).

The apparent basis for plaintiffs' assumption that SMIC and Hyundai must have conspired is Rosen's speculation that Hyundai had sufficient economic power to force SMIC to adhere to its wishes. See Rosen Dep. at 84, 99, 188, 309-310, [12] 550, 559-60, 607, 731 and 744. Such speculative evidence of conspiracy, however, is insufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment in a dealer termination case.

In Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 639 F.2d 75 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1083, 70 L. Ed. 2d 618, 102 S. Ct. 639 (1981), the plaintiff put forth evidence that a competing distributor was a major customer of the manufacturer. Id. at 79-80. The plaintiff urged that the competitor, by virtue of being an "important customer" of the manufacturer, has some economic power" to compel the manufacturer to terminate the plaintiff's distributorship. Id. at 80. The Second Circuit found that this "evidence" rested on "sheer speculation insufficient to support a

---

Moreover, Samick's reliance on cases that suggest that vertical non-price-fixing restraints should be analyzed under the rule of reason is misplaced. See Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Here, plaintiffs allege a price-fixing scheme. In Sylvania, the plaintiffs claimed that Sylvania violated § 1 "by entering into and enforcing franchise agreements that prohibited the sale of Sylvania products other than from specified locations." Id. at 40. Thus, the plaintiffs in Sylvania did not allege, as plaintiffs do here, that the defendants entered into price-fixing agreements.

[8] This Court is uncertain whether it was to Hyundai's economic benefit to continue supplying pianos to plaintiffs. Because Hyundai competed against plaintiffs at the wholesale level, plaintiffs' termination as a distributor may have benefited Hyundai.

conclusion that [the defendants] engaged in an illegal [agreement]." Id. See also H.L. Hayden Co. of New York, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Sys., Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1016 (2d Cir. 1989); Burlington Coat Factory Warehouse Corp. v. Esprit de Corp., 769 F.2d 919, 923-25 (2d Cir. 1985).

In sum, under the controlling Supreme [13] Court and Second Circuit precedents, HN3[] plaintiffs can avoid summary judgment with respect to their claim of vertical price-fixing only if they can show unambiguous evidence of an agreement among the defendants to fix prices. Since plaintiffs rely on only speculation that such an agreement exists, their vertical price-fixing claim cannot survive and is hereby dismissed.

[*47] 2. Group Boycott Claim

In addition to the price-fixing claim, plaintiffs also raise a second § 1 claim based on an alleged agreement between the Hyundai defendants and the Samick defendants not to deal with plaintiffs in an effort to drive them out of business and take over their customers. HN4[] Boycotts traditionally fell into a category of per se unlawful conduct requiring proof only of an agreement between defendants. See United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 140, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959). In recent years, however, the Supreme Court has required a plaintiff alleging a non-horizontal boycott to show, in addition to such an agreement, that the defendants have market power in the relevant [14] market. [9] See Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 290-98, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985). Absent market power, the plaintiff must proceed under the rule of reason.

[15] Plaintiffs' claim of an unlawful boycott by the defendants, whether analyzed under a per se or rule of reason approach, fails for the same reason that their price-fixing claim fails. Plaintiffs have no more evidence to show that the defendants agreed to refuse to deal with plaintiffs than they have to show that defendants entered into a price-fixing agreement. On this ground alone, defendants' motion for summary judgment must be granted.

Moreover, although attempting to allege a per se violation, plaintiffs have failed to show that defendants have sufficient market powers to warrant per se treatment. Plaintiffs do not identify a relevant market in which competition was harmed. See Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 268 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980). Both plaintiffs and defendants agree that the relevant geographic market in this case is the United States. The parties disagree, however, over the proper definition of the relevant product market. HN5[] The product market must be plausibly defined according to the traditional "methodology courts prescribe to define a market for [16] antitrust purposes an analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand for potential substitute products." Gianna Enters. v. Miss World (Jersey) Ltd., 551 F. Supp. 1348, 1354 (S.D.N.Y. 1982). Simply put, goods are in the same relevant product market if they are reasonably interchangeable for the purposes for which they were produced.

Plaintiffs' proposed product market, which defines the market as that for the sale of SMIC-manufactured pianos, is patently unreasonable. Plaintiffs offer no rational explanation to support such a definition. If such a definition was [9] Plaintiffs argue that any agreement between the Hyundai defendants and the Samick defendants to boycott plaintiffs should be viewed as horizontal. Plaintiffs' theory evidently is that goods made by the same manufacturer compete "horizontally" if they bear different trade names and are sold by different distributors. Plaintiffs offer no case law to support this characterization.

---

In Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 946, 58 L. Ed. 2d 338, 99 S. Ct. 340 (1978), the defendant whirlpool manufactured vacuum cleaners that were sold by the plaintiff under the brand name "whirlpool" and sold by Sears, another distributor, under the brand name "Kenmore." The plaintiff argued that this market structure rendered the competition between Sears and the plaintiff "horizontal," because as a result of the plaintiff's termination, "competition of both an interbrand and intrabrand nature was eliminated." Id. at 131 n.6. The Second Circuit, however, rejected this argument, holding that the existence of multiple brands sold by different distributors "does not ipso facto, convert this case into a horizontal conspiracy warranting per se treatment." Id. at 131. Likewise, the existence of multiple trade names here does not transform the vertical nature of this case. This is especially so where the purported agreement is between the manufacturer of goods and another distributor.

allowed to stand, all manufacturers would have absolute monopoly power in the relevant product market, since by definition they control the total output of their own products. The case law is clear that such a market definition is untenable. See Shaw v. Rolex Watch, U.S.A., Inc., 673 F. Supp. 674, 678 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); Gianna Enters., 531 F. Supp. at 1354; Morse V. [*48] Swank, Inc., 493 F. Supp. 110, 115 (S.D.N.Y. 1980).

Defendants' definition of the relevant product market, all [17] pianos (except high quality professional models) manufactured for sale in the United States, is more plausible. Under this definition, the Hyundai defendants' market share for sales of pianos in the United States in less than 2%, while the Samick defendants' market share has never been more than 11%. Because defendants clearly do not have market power in the relevant market, plaintiffs' boycott claim must be analyzed under the rule of reason.

HN6[] In order to survive summary judgment under the rule of reason, plaintiffs would have to show, in addition to an agreement between defendants not to deal, an adverse affect of the agreement on interbrand competition in the relevant market. See Schwartz v. Jamesway Corp., 660 F. Supp. 138, 141 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). Plaintiffs do not attempt to explain how defendants' purported boycott agreement could in any way affect interbrand competition in the United States piano market. Indeed, none of the defendants have sufficient power in this market to sustain a boycott claim under the rule of reason. See Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 791 F. Supp. 956, 965-67 (N.D.N.Y. 1992) [18] (In order to show an adverse affect on interbrand competition, plaintiffs must demonstrate that defendants have market power in the relevant market.). Thus, even if there were evidence of an agreement between the defendants to boycott plaintiffs, plaintiffs boycott claim would still have to be dismissed.

B. State Law Claims

1. Promissory Estoppel

Although plaintiffs did not have a written contract with any of the defendants for a continuous supply of Schumann brand pianos, they seek to recover for their termination under a promissory estoppel theory. HN7[] Under New York law, in order to recover for promissory estoppel, a plaintiff must show that there was an unambiguous promise, that plaintiff reasonably relied on that promise and that plaintiff was injured as a result of that reliance. See R.G. Group, Inc. v. Horn & Hardart Co., 751 F.2d 69, 78 (2d Cir. 1984). Additionally, the claim of promissory estoppel, even if established, is further subject to the defense of the Statute of Frauds. See D&N Boening, Inc. v. Kirsch Beverages, Inc., 99 A.D.2d 522, 471 N.Y.S.2d 299, 302 (2d Dep't 1984).

According to plaintiffs, even though SMIC [19] repeatedly threatened to terminate their supply of Schumann pianos and even though plaintiffs requested and were denied a written contract for a continuous supply of pianos, defendants are liable to them for their termination under a promissory estoppel theory. Plaintiffs appear to rely on a series of correspondence between Hyundai and themselves wherein Hyundai stated that they would do everything possible to assure the continuous supply of Schumann pianos. This correspondence, however, cannot be viewed as an unambiguous promise for the continuous supply of pianos. At the most, the letters suggest merely that the Hyundai defendants would attempt to do what they could to convince SMIC to supply pianos. Such an undertaking is hardly an unambiguous promise to plaintiffs assuring an indefinite supply of SMIC-made pianos. See R. G. Group, Inc., 751 F.2d at 79.

In any event, even if Hyundai had promised plaintiffs an unending supply of pianos, given that plaintiffs were well aware of SMIC's stated intention to terminate them, it is difficult to see how plaintiffs could have reasonably relied on such a promise. Moreover, because Hyundai was only a middleman [20] and not the manufacturer reliance on Hyundai's promise would have been unreasonable. Furthermore, and equally fatal to plaintiffs' claim, they have not shown any reliance injury. Plaintiffs suggest that they opened up certain letters of credit in anticipation of receiving pianos. However, the opening of letters of credit concededly did not injure plaintiffs, for as Rosen stated at his deposition, plaintiffs received every piano for which they opened a letter of credit. See Rosen Dep. at 676-78. Plaintiffs also point to the sale of their business as some indication that they were harmed by their termination. However, nowhere in their voluminous [*49] papers do plaintiffs suggest that the sale was for anything other than fair market value.

Finally, even if plaintiffs could establish the elements of promissory estoppel, they still have set forth no facts to avoid the application of the Statute of Frauds. HN8[] Under New York law, the Statute of Frauds is a proper defense to a claim of promissory estoppel as long as its application is not unconscionable. See D & N Boening, Inc., 471 N.Y.S.2d at 302. Under settled principles of New York law, there is no unconscionability [21] in invoking the Statute of Frauds in a situation where a distributor who has been terminated already has received substantial benefits from the distributorship. See Id. Here, plaintiffs admittedly received substantial benefits from their distributorship. Thus, application of the Statute of Frauds cannot be avoided. Accordingly, plaintiffs claim for promissory estoppel must be dismissed.

2. Business Disparagement, Product Disparagement and Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

Plaintiffs bring a welter of state claims all based on the allegation that defendants spread false rumors about the quality of the Schumann piano in order to steal away plaintiffs' customers. When pressed at oral argument to support these claims, plaintiffs relied on the testimony of a single customer who stated that sometime in 1983 an unidentified Samick (USA) employee made untrue disparaging remarks about the Schumann brand piano. It is clear that HN9[] under New York law, a claim that is bottomed on libel has a one year statute of limitation. See N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. § 215 (McKinney 1990). Because this case was commenced way beyond the one year statute of limitation, all state [22] claims based on this alleged libel must be dismissed.

3. Unjust Enrichment

Plaintiffs claim that defendants' alleged agreements in restraint of trade are of a type that should cause this Court to demand that defendants turn over to plaintiffs any enrichment plaintiffs may have garnered as a consequence of those agreements. HN10[] In order to recover for unjust enrichment in New York, a plaintiff must show that the defendant was enriched, that the enrichment was at plaintiff's expense and that circumstances are such that in equity and good conscience defendant should return money or property to plaintiff. See South Shore Bank v. Int'l Jet Interiors, Inc., 721 F. Supp. 29, 32 (E.D.N.Y. 1989).

This Court has already determined that there is insufficient evidence supporting the existence of any illicit agreements amongst the defendants. Accordingly, plaintiffs' claim for unjust enrichment is dismissed.

4. Joint Venture

Plaintiffs also bring a claim against defendants under a joint venture theory. HN11[] In order to successfully make out a joint venture claim, plaintiffs must show: (1) a specific agreement to engage in a joint venture; (2) which manifests the [23] intent of the parties to join together in a joint venture; (3) that each principal made a contribution; (4) some degree of joint proprietorship and control of the enterprise; (5) some provision for sharing of profits and losses. See Itel Containers Inter. Corp. v. Atlanttrafik Exp. Serv. Ltd., 725 F. Supp. 1303, 1310 (S.D.N.Y. 1989), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds. 909 F.2d 628 (2d Cir. 1990). Because Rosen admitted that the parties never entered into a joint venture agreement, or agreed on any profit sharing or joint control over plaintiffs' business, this claim must be dismissed. See Rosen Dep. at 108-09.

5. Breach of Warranty

Finally, plaintiffs also bring a claim against defendants for breach of warranty. Recognizing that issues of facts exist, the Hyundai defendants do not move this Court to grant summary judgment on this claim. The Samick defendants, however, do move for summary judgment. They claim that because they never sold pianos to plaintiffs, they may not be sued for any economic loss suffered by plaintiffs under a breach of warranty theory. HN12[] Because only "sellers" are liable for breach [24] of warranty under the New [*50] York Uniform Commercial Code and it is undisputed that the Samick defendants never sold any pianos to plaintiffs, the Samick defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted. [10] See County of Westchester v. General Motors Corp., 555 F. Supp. 290 (1983).

III. CONCLUSION

For the above-stated reasons, defendants' motion for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is granted [25] in part and denied in part.

SO ORDERED.

LEONARD D. WEXLER

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Dated: Hauppauge, New York

August 10, 1993

[10] Plaintiffs' argument that the Samick defendants should be held liable for breach of warranty because they had at some point agreed to correct certain defects as a courtesy is unavailing. Plaintiffs do not represent that the Samick defendants in any way communicated to them their intention to be held liable for the defects. Moreover, plaintiffs have not provided this Court with any authority that New York would impose liability on a non-seller manufacturer solely because that manufacturer agreed as a courtesy to correct defects in its products.

Butterworth v. Nat'l League of Prof'l Baseball Clubs

Court of Appeal of Florida, Fifth District

August 13, 1993, Filed

Case No. 93-69

Reporter

622 So. 2d 177 *; 1993 Fla. App. LEXIS 8448 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,341; 18 Fla. L. Weekly D 1796

ROBERT A. BUTTERWORTH, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA, Appellant, v. NATIONAL LEAGUE OF PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL CLUBS and WILLIAM D. WHITE, Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] Released for Publication September 1, 1993.

Prior History: Appeal from the Circuit Court for Osceola County, R. James Stroker, Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED; QUESTION CERTIFIED.

Core Terms

demands

Counsel: Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney General, and Jerome W. Hoffman, Assistant Attorney General, Department of Legal Affairs, Antitrust Section, Tallahassee, for Appellant.

Gregory A. Presnell and Kathryn B. Nixon of Akerman, Senterfitt & Eidson, P.A., Orlando, for Appellees.

Judges: GOSHORN, HARRIS, PETERSON

Opinion by: GOSHORN

Opinion

[*178] GOSHORN, J.

The appellant, Robert A. Butterworth, as Attorney General of the State of Florida, appeals from a final order of the circuit court granting the appellees' petition to set aside the appellant's civil investigative demands and denying the appellant's cross-motion to compel the appellees to comply with those demands.

We affirm, but pursuant to Florida Rule of Appellate Procedure 9.030(a)(2)(A)(v), we certify the following question to the Florida Supreme Court as a question of great public importance:

> DOES THE ANTITRUST EXEMPTION FOR BASEBALL RECOGNIZED BY THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT IN FEDERAL BASE BALL CLUBS OF BALTIMORE, INC. v. NATIONAL LEAGUE OF PROFESSIONAL BASE BALL CLUBS, 259 U.S. 200, 42 S. CT. 465, 66 L. Ed. 898 (1922) [2] AND ITS PROGENY EXEMPT ALL DECISIONS INVOLVING THE SALE AND LOCATION OF BASEBALL FRANCHISES FROM FEDERAL AND FLORIDA ANTITRUST LAW?

AFFIRMED; QUESTION CERTIFIED.

HARRIS, C.J. and PETERSON, JJ., concur.

Appraisers Coalition v. Appraisal Inst.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

August 18, 1993, Decided

No. 93 C 913

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11770 *; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,364

The APPRAISERS COALITION, ALAN B. BLAU, ALAN BLAU & ASSOCIATES, W.S. BUCKLEY, BUCKLEY APPRAISAL SERVICES, INC., VINCENT A. SOLANO, and V.A. SOLANO & ASSOCIATES, Plaintiffs, v. APPRAISAL INSTITUTE, an Illinois corporation, THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF REAL ESTATE APPRAISERS, an Illinois corporation, and PATRICIA MARSHALL, BERNARD FOUNTAIN, DOUGLAS BROWN, C. DAVID MATTHEWS, CLIFFORD E. FISHER, JR., JOHN R. UNDERWOOD, JR., BRUCE R. WILLMETTE, BONNIE D. ROERIG, DAVID F. PEATFIELD, DONALD L. BURKE, NANCY M. MUELLER, GERALD A. TEEL, NORMAN E. HALL, and JOE R. PRICE, Defendants.

Core Terms

allegations, enterprise, antitrust, predicate act, violations, pattern of racketeering activity, counts, motion to dismiss, defamatory, designation, Appraisal, requisite, antitrust claim, real estate, continuity, real estate appraiser, fail to satisfy, legal theory, notice, mail, wire

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

To survive a motion to dismiss based on Fed. R. Civ. P. 12, a complaint must allege sufficient facts to outline a cause of action. The court must accept as true all facts alleged in the complaint and reasonable inferences based on those facts, but the court need not accept as true conclusory legal allegations. A defendant's motion to dismiss may be granted only if it is indisputably clear that a plaintiff is not entitled to relief based on the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint. However, the court may grant a motion to dismiss based on Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 or 9(b) if the complaint alleges potentially actionable facts but fails to sufficiently notify a defendant of the plaintiff's claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 requires only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. How much factual detail is required of an antitrust claim has been an issue of diverging opinion in the past. Some courts required complaints to contain detailed factual allegations while other courts permitted complaints to proceed so long as they provided minimal facts sufficient to provide fair notice to defendants. The current approach permits the more liberal of these requirements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The current status of antitrust pleading requires a plaintiff to specify the theory upon which he expects to recover and to make enough factual allegations to identify each of the elements required by that theory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Derivative Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN4[] Private Actions, Remedies

Derivative injuries sustained by employees, officers, shareholders, and creditors of an injured company do not constitute "antitrust injury" sufficient to confer antitrust standing. Associations lack standing to assert damage claims on behalf of their members.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN5[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

To state a RICO claim for any subsection of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962, a plaintiff must allege a "person", an "enterprise", and a "pattern of racketeering activity." To allege a pattern of racketeering activity, a plaintiff must properly allege (1) the commission of two or more of the predicate acts listed in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(1); (2) relationship among those predicate acts; and (3) "continuity" among the predicate acts.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Travel Act > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Travel Act > General Overview

HN6[] Travel Act, Elements

Because 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1341, 1343 require allegations of fraud, an alleged predicate act under either of those sections is governed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The rule provides: In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally. This "particularity requirement" contrasts with the "short and plain statement" requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 which governs allegations that 18 U.S.C.S. § 1952 has been violated.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN7[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

A plaintiff may satisfy the particularity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) with regard to a particular fraudulent communication by pleading the time of the communication, the place or manner of the communication, the specific content of the communication, the identities of the parties to the communication and who initiated the it, and how the communication furthered the scheme to defraud.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN8[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

An enterprise under RICO is any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individual associated in fact although not a legal entity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(4).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The court requires that the involvement of an enterprise in a RICO allegation be alleged with enough specificity such that the defendants are put on notice of the plaintiffs theory or theories of RICO violations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN10[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

An Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act violation must be plead within the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). To satisfy these requirements, a plaintiff must plead the time, place, and contents of the representations made, along with the identity of the party making the representation and what resulted from the representation.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Defamation Per Se

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN11[] Defamation, Defamation Per Se

A statement may be defamatory per se or per quod. A statement is per se defamatory when the words used are so obviously and materially harmful to the plaintiff that injury to his reputation is may be presumed. A statement is pur quod defamatory if extrinsic facts demonstrate the harmfulness to the plaintiffs reputation of the statement or statements in question. Initially, to plead a defamation claim, a plaintiff must specifically state the words considered actionable. A statement is per se defamatory in Illinois if it imputes the commission of a crime, if it imputes infection with a loathsome communicable disease, if it imputes inability to perform or want of integrity in the discharge of one's employment or business, or if it prejudices a party in his or her business. Even, if a statement falls within one of these categories, however, it is not per se defamatory if it is reasonably capable of an innocent construction. The publication of an employee's termination is not defamatory per se. To allege a per quod defamation, a plaintiff must allege facts demonstrating the defamatory meaning of the statement or statements in question.

Judges: [*1] NORDBERG

Opinion by: JOHN A. NORDBERG

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

The Appraisers Coalition (the "Coalition") and six other Plaintiffs have sued the Appraisal Institute (the "Institute"); the Institute's wholly-owned subsidiary, the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers ("AIREA"); and several individuals. The Plaintiffs claim relief based upon five counts in their First Amended Complaint. The five counts allege violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. (West 1973 & Supp. 1993), violations of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12 et seq. (West 1973 & Supp. 1993), violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq. (West 1984 & Supp. 1993), violations of Illinois state antitrust laws, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, paras. 60-3(1) to -3(4) (Smith-Hurd Supp. 1992), [1] violations of the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 121 1/2, paras. 261 et seq. (Smith-Hurd Supp. 1992), [2] and, in Count Five, state law libel and slander. The Defendants currently [*2] have two motions to dismiss before the Court: a motion to dismiss based on asserted inadequacies in the First Amended Complaint's and a motion to dismiss based on Plaintiffs' initial failure to file a memorandum in opposition to the first motion.

[1] Currently codified at 740 ILCS 10/3(1)-10/3(4) (Smith-Hurd 1993).

The Plaintiffs have now responded to the original motion to dismiss and the Defendants have replied to that responsive memorandum. Accordingly, Defendants' second Motion to Dismiss is DENIED as moot. The Court now turns to the original Motion to Dismiss.

HN1[] To survive a motion to dismiss based on Rule 12, a complaint must allege sufficient facts to outline a cause of action. Davis v. Frapolly, 747 F. Supp. 451 (N.D. Ill. 1989). The court must accept as true all facts alleged in the complaint and reasonable inferences based on those facts, Bane v. Ferguson, 890 F.2d 11 (7th Cir. 1989), but [*3] the court need not accept as true conclusory legal allegations. Coronet Ins. Co. v. Seyfarth, 665 F. Supp. 661, 665 (N.D. Ill. 1987). A defendant's motion to dismiss may be granted only if it is indisputably clear that a plaintiff is not entitled to relief based on the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Skinner v. Shirley of Hollywood, 723 F. Supp. 50, 52 (N.D. Ill. 1989). However, the Court may grant a Motion to Dismiss based on Rules 8 or 9(b) if the complaint alleges potentially actionable facts but fails to sufficiently notify a defendant of the plaintiff's claims.

I. ALLEGED FACTS

Defendant Appraisal Institute is an Illinois not-for-profit corporation having its principal place of business in Illinois. The Institute started doing business in January of 1991, serving as the parent and controlling corporation of the Society of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc. (the "Society") and of AIREA. The Society and AIREA are organizations of independent real estate appraisers having similar functions and providing similar services to real estate [*4] appraisers and their clients. Before its control by the Institute, the Society members competed with AIREA's members.

Founded in the 1930s, the Society qualifies and promotes its member independent real estate appraisers for real estate appraisement opportunities in both the residential and nonresidential ("commercial") real estate markets. Based on their ability and experience, members of the Society might attain one or more of three possible "pinnacle designations" or highest organizational appraisal qualifications. These possible qualifications differed by member practice area. The highest designation attainable by a commercial real estate appraiser was the "Senior Real Property Appraiser", or "SRPA." The highest designation attainable by a residential real estate appraiser was the "Senior Residential Appraiser", or "SRA." And, the highest possible designation in the field of real estate advisory analysis was the "Senior Real Estate Analyst", or "SREA."

Similarly, since the 1930s, AIREA has qualified and promoted its member appraisers. However, AIREA's activities have been primarily limited to the commercial real estate appraisal field. The highest appraiser designation of an AIREA [*5] member was the "Member Appraisal Institute", commonly referred to as "MAI Member" or "MAI."

Each of the Plaintiffs in this case, and the members of the coalition, was a member of the Society having attained the SRPA designation, the highest possible in the commercial real estate field for members of the Society. The Plaintiffs now generally claim that, through various anticompetitive means, AIREA, several of its members, and the Institute have wrongly monopolized or attempted to monopolize several of the commercial real estate appraisal markets in favor of MIA members at the cost of SRPA members and have wrongly taken control of the Society in order to devalue the SRPA designation.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Counts One and Three

In Counts One and Three respectively, the Plaintiffs allege federal and state antitrust violations. The Court treats these two counts together because the language of the Illinois Antitrust Act tracks the language of the Sherman Act.

---

[2] Currently codified at 815 ILCS 505/1-505/12 (1993).

Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 676 F. Supp. 1388, 1405 (C.D. Ill. 1987), aff'd, 844 F.2d 473 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852, 102 L. Ed. 2d 110, 109 S. Ct. 137 (1988). [*6]

Defendants object to Plaintiffs' antitrust claims on three grounds: (1) the claims fail to satisfy the requirements of Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; (2) they do not state a claim and should be dismissed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12; and (3) several of the Plaintiffs lack standing to sue as antitrust plaintiffs.

HN2[] Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires only a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). How much factual detail is required of an antitrust claim has been an issue of diverging opinion in the past. 5 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure § 1228 (Civil 2d ed. 1990). Some courts required complaints to contain detailed factual allegations while other courts permitted complaints to proceed so long as they provided minimal facts sufficient to provide fair notice to defendants. See id. at 216-20 nn.2-3 (listing case examples). The current approach permits the more liberal of these requirements. See id. at 217, 222 (stating that "it is now reasonably clear" that pleading standards for complex cases is the same as that for simpler cases [*7] and that the "modern trend is toward greater liberality" in permitting antitrust pleadings).

Despite the more recent convergence of opinion regarding the detail of factual allegations necessary to support an antitrust claim, disagreement remains over the elements of antitrust actions must be plead. Id. at 220. In particular, one element at issue is whether a plaintiff must plead some public injury or detrimental effect on a specific market. Id. at 221. Generally, this issue has come to turn on whether a plaintiff's theory of relief is based on an antitrust violation that is per se illegal or one that is based on the "rule of reason". See id. at 221-22 (stating that this issue currently turns on whether a violation is per se). [3]

HN3[]

The current status [*8] of antitrust pleading requires a plaintiff to specify the theory upon which he expects to recover and to make enough factual allegations to identify each of the elements required by that theory. See Seglin v. Esau, 769 F.2d 1274, 1279 (7th Cir. 1985) (citing and quoting cases that support the conclusion that an antitrust complaint "must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the materials elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory."); Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985); Sutliff, Inc. v. Donovan Cos., Inc., 727 F.2d 648, 654 (7th Cir. 1984) (same); see also Wright & Miller, supra, at 222 (stating that "Enough data should be pleaded from which the elements of the claim for relief can be identified."). There are several bases for this rule. Among these are the following: first, given that the public policy allegation turns on whether or not an alleged violation is per se illegal, the plaintiff must specify a theory so that [*9] the defendant and the court can determine if an allegation of public injury is necessary; second, while public policy may suggest that a plaintiff not be required to plead facts not within its knowledge, no such justification exists with respect to the theory upon which the plaintiff expects to recover. See 2 Phillip E. Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 317(e) (1978). And, third, by requiring a plaintiff to specify a theory and the elements of that theory, courts may evaluate more easily the substantive merits of such claims. See id.

In the opinion of the Court, the Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the requirements of both Rule 8 and Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In an apparent effort to be complete in their forty-one page First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs have obfuscated their antitrust theory or theories such that their complaint cannot be said to have made a short and plain statement of their claim or to have properly notified the Defendants of the claims against them. At least three difficulties exist.

First, Plaintiffs do not state a specific theory upon which they expect to recover. Instead, Plaintiffs use language throughout their [*10] complaint that indicates that more than one theory might be contemplated. Some of this language is inappropriately vague. Plaintiffs accuse or appear to accuse the Defendants of monopolization; attempted monopolization; "a course of anticompetitive activities"; boycotting, creating barriers to entry; violations of sections one and two of the Sherman Act; 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2; violations of sections fourteen, fifteen, and twenty-six of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 14, 15, & 26; "various contracts, combinations and conspiracies"; and violations of Illinois State Antitrust claims. All of these "theories", save the Illinois State law violations, are crammed into Count One, thus obfuscating any reasoned inquiry into the actual theory or theories to be relied upon.

---

[3] The "rule of reason" requires analysis of the market said to be harmed by the violation and the effects of the competitive restriction on that market. Consequently, such harm is a necessary element of an antitrust claim based on the "rule of reason".

Second, by lumping several theories into one count, Plaintiffs confuse inquiry into whether they are entitled to recovery on multiple or alternate antitrust theories. From the facts alleged and the legal theories mentioned in the complaint, Plaintiffs may be entitled to proceed with multiple federal and state antitrust counts that potentially could allow for multiple [*11] or alternate recoveries. As written, Plaintiffs' complaint does not provide Defendants with sufficient notice to prepare a defense regarding these issues.

Third, Plaintiffs' complaint does not provide Defendants sufficient notice or opportunity to challenge the per se elements of Plaintiffs' claim. Plaintiffs allege that:

> The actions of defendants and those in concert with them were intended to, did and continue to restrain trade and commerce. Certain of those restraints have been and are per se illegal; to the extent not per se illegal, the actions complained of did and continue to unreasonably restrain trade.

(Compl. P 55.) Given that Plaintiffs fail to state the legal theories on which they rely, this paragraph requires Defendants to speculate about which theories upon which the Plaintiffs in tend to rely on per se liability. In this regard, Plaintiffs accurately plead that the boycotts charged are per se illegal. (Compl. P 50.) No such specificity is accorded the other theories contained in the complaint.

In addition to Plaintiffs' difficulties specifying a legal theory for their antitrust claims, several Plaintiffs appear to lack standing to assert [*12] an antitrust claim. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals has stated that: HN4[] "Derivative injuries sustained by employees, officers, shareholders, and creditors of an injured company do not constitute 'antitrust injury' sufficient to confer antitrust standing. Southwest Suburban Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Beverly Area Planning Ass'n, 830 F.2d 1374, 1378 (7th Cir. 1987). From the complaint, it appears that individual Plaintiffs Blau, Buckley, and Solano lack standing to sue, assuming they are seeking damages for derivative injuries suffered by their businesses. Additionally, it is unclear from the Complaint what capacity the Coalition is suing in. Associations lack standing to assert damage claims on behalf of their members. See id. at 1380 n.3.

Accordingly, with respect to Plaintiffs' Antitrust Counts, Counts One and Three, Defendants' Motion to Strike and Dismiss is GRANTED. In the opinion of the Court, Plaintiffs have alleged facts which may support more specifically pleaded antitrust theories. Thus, the Court dismisses Counts One and Three without prejudice to Plaintiffs' filing another amended complaint within twenty-one [*13] days. Any such complaint must comply with the above discussion by specifying the legal theories relied upon in distinct counts, and by specifying the individuals suing on each count.

B. Count Two

In Count Two, Plaintiffs allege four violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § § 1961-1968. Specifically, Plaintiffs claim the defendants (1) used or invested money from a pattern of racketeering activity in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a); (2) used a pattern of racketeering activity to acquire an interest in an interstate enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(b); (3) conducted a pattern of racketeering activity in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c); and (4) conspired to violate §§ 1962(a)-1962(c) in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d).

HN5[] To state a RICO claim for any subsection of section 1962, a plaintiff must allege a "person", an "enterprise", and a "pattern of racketeering activity. " See R.E. Davis Chem. Corp. v. Nalco Chem. Co., 757 F. Supp. 1499, 1507 (N.D. Ill. 1990) [*14] (stating that all section 1962 claims have these three common fundamental elements). Here, Plaintiff has failed to adequately plead a pattern of racketeering activity and the enterprise or enterprises associated with that activity.

To allege a pattern of racketeering activity, a plaintiff must properly allege (1) the commission of two or more of the predicate acts listed in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1); (2) relationship among those predicate acts; and (3) "continuity" among the predicate acts. See H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 237-39, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 (1989) (explaining that a pattern of racketeering activity is established by at least two or more predicate acts and "continuity plus relationship"). Here, Plaintiff has failed to adequately plead the requisite acts necessary to establish a pattern of RICO activity.

Plaintiffs' attempts to allege the requisite predicate acts by stating that the Defendants violated the federal mail fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1341; the federal wire fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1343; and, the federal interstate travel [*15] in aid of racketeering statute, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1952(a)(1) and (3). A violation of each of these statutes qualifies as a predicate act underRICO. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). While Plaintiffs claim that Defendants violated these statutes, conclusory allegations, without the requisite factual support, are insufficient to satisfy the pleading requirements of RICO. See Jennings v. Emry, 910 F.2d 1434, 1438 (7th Cir. 1990) (stating that conclusory allegations are "of no consequence if unsupported by proper factual allegations).

The requisite factual support for a given allegation of a predicate act is governed by the pleading requirements for the statute itself. HN6[] Because sections 1341 and 1343 require allegations of fraud, an alleged predicate act under either of those sections is governed by Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The rule provides:

> In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally.

This "particularity [*16] requirement" contrasts with the "short and plain statement" requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 which governs allegations that section 1952 has been violated.

HN7[] A plaintiff may satisfy the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b) with regard to a particular fraudulent communication by pleading the time of the communication, the place or manner of the communication, the specific content of the communication, the identities of the parties to the communication and who initiated the it, and how the communication furthered the scheme to defraud. See Midwest Grinding Co., Inc. v. Spitz, 976 F.2d 1016, 1020 (7th Cir. 1992); Graue Mill Dev. Corp. v. Colonial Bank & Trust Co., 927 F.2d 988, 992-93 (7th Cir. 1991); R.E. Davis Chem. Corp. v. Nalco Chem. Co., 757 F. Supp. at 1516.

Here, Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b) with respect to their allegations of mail and wire fraud. Plaintiffs have alleged, throughout their complaint, various misrepresentations made by defendants. They do not, however, specify the particular communications, truthful or not, upon which they rely. In an [*17] attempt to remedy this default Plaintiffs argue that they need not indicate that any given communication was itself fraudulent. While this is an accurate statement of the law, it fails to correct for the fact that they do not identify individual communications said to promote fraud. Given this failure, the Court finds that Plaintiffs cannot base their RICO allegations on any predicate acts of mail or wire fraud.

In an attempt to allege predicate acts other than mail and wire fraud, Plaintiffs state:

> In executing and furthering the illegal schemes described herein, the defendants and others have repeatedly made use and conspired and agreed to make use of the United States mails and of electronic wire communications systems, including telephones, and have engaged in interstate travel in furtherance thereof in violations of 18 U.S.C. Secs. 1341, 1343 and 1952(a)(1) and (3) and have repeatedly caused and conspired and agreed to cause fraudulently-obtained money and property to be transported across State lines and in interstate commerce, in violation of 18 U.S.C. Secs. 2314 and 2315, on many more than two occasions in the four year next preceding the filing of this Complaint.

[*18] (Compl. P 74.) Plaintiffs argue that their complaint alleges offenses committed under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1952(a)(1), 1952(a)(3), 2314, and 2315. Despite this claim, those sections, or any one of them, are mentioned in a total of two paragraphs in the complaint. Neither paragraph makes any allegation other than the naked assertion that the statutes were violated. Such conclusory allegations cannot support a complaint. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to properly allege any predicate acts under Rule 8.

Plaintiffs' failure to properly allege the requisite predicate acts to establish a pattern of racketeering activity, makes inquiring into the relationship and continuity elements difficult. Given that the Court is willing to dismiss Count Two without prejudice, as indicated below, the Plaintiff should pay particular attention to Seventh Circuit case law regarding continuity in attempting to replead any RICO claims.

Having failed to plead the requisite predicate acts within the requirements of Rule 9(b) and Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Plaintiffs have failed to adequately notify any of the Defendants of their individual roles [*19] in the purported schemes or to demonstrate the requisite relationship and continuity of the claimed predicate acts. These conclusions alone warrant a dismissal of the Count Two. In addition, Plaintiffs fail to adequately allege a relationship between any predicate acts and a given enterprise.

HN8[] An enterprise is "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individual associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4). Plaintiffs have alleged that Defendant AIREA is an enterprise, that Defendant Institute is an enterprise, and that the association in-fact of the Individual Defendants with other unnamed individuals was an enterprise. (Compl. PP 58-59). While each of these purported enterprises, as described in the complaint might constitute an "enterprise", Plaintiffs have failed to identify which enterprises are considered to have conducted which predicate acts.

Plaintiffs has generally pleaded the existence of three enterprises but has left the Defendants and the Court to speculate as to how the enterprises were responsible for the section 1962 violations alleged in the complaint. [*20] It is not enough for a plaintiff to allege the existence of an enterprise or to explain its structure. Plaintiffs have vaguely made separate reference to one or more of the enterprises in each of the subparagraphs of paragraph 75 of the complaint. These allegations fail to satisfy the requirement that a plaintiff identify "a single enterprise" that is related to a specific pattern of racketeering activity. See Bastian v. Petren Resources Corp., 681 F. Supp. 530, 538 (N.D. Ill. 1988) (stating that to state a section 1962(c) claim, a plaintiff must "identify a single enterprise, the affairs of which the defendants conducted through a pattern of [racketeering] activity."). This is not to say that a RICO complaint may not contain allegations of more than one enterprise. Rather, HN9[] the Court requires that the involvement of an enterprise in a RICO allegation be alleged with enough specificity such that the Defendants be put on notice of Plaintiffs theory or theories of RICO violations. [4]

[*21] In the opinion of the Court, Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for RICO violations in Count Two. Accordingly, with respect to that Count, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED. As the Plaintiffs have made allegations sufficient to permit further exploration of a RICO claim, the Court is willing to permit the Plaintiffs one more opportunity to plead a RICO claim. Thus, the Court grants the motion to dismiss without prejudice. This being stated, however, the Court cautions Plaintiffs against "trying to fit a square peg into a round hole by squeezing garden-variety business disputes into civil RICO actions." Midwest Grinding Co., Inc. v. Spitz, 976 F.2d 1016, 1025 (7th Cir. 1992). Since the H.J. decision, very few civil RICO claims have succeeded in establishing a pattern of [4] Defendants also complain that Plaintiffs have named the Appraisal Institute as both a person and an enterprise with respect to their section 1962(c) claim. Such is prohibited in Haroco v. American Nat'l Bank & Trust of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 400 (7th Cir. 1984), aff'd, 473 U.S. 606, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437, 105 S. Ct. 3291 (1985). Plaintiffs correctly point out that they do not claim that the Institute violated section 1962(c) in their complaint. While this fact requires the rejection of this element of Defendants argument, it also demonstrates the confusion nature of the manner in which Plaintiffs have made their RICO claims.

---

Plaintiffs' complaint contains at least two other infirmities. First, it fails to make allegations regarding the management of any enterprise as required by Reves v. Ernst & Young, __ U.S. __, 113 S. Ct. 1163 (1993). Second, it fails to describe the "continuity of structure and personality" or "structure, purpose, function and course of conduct" of the alleged association-in-fact. See O'Rear v. American Family Life Assurance Co., 139 F.R.D. 418, 422 (M.D. Fla. 1991) (demonstrating means of pleading the existence of an enterprise).

racketeering activity. See Shields Enters., Inc. v. First Chicago Corp., 975 F.2d 1290 (7th Cir. 1992) (discussing the Seventh Circuit's post-H.J. decisions on the issue of continuity of racketeering activity in civil cases).

C. Count Four

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim under the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive [*22] Business Practices Act ("Illinois Act") because they fail to plead that claim with the particularity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The Court agrees.

HN10[] An Illinois Act violation must be plead within the requirements of Rule 9(b). Ramson v. Layne, 668 F. Supp. 1162, 1170 (N.D. Ill. 1987). To satisfy these requirements, a plaintiff must plead the time, place, and contents of the representations made, along with the identity of the party making the representation and what resulted from the representation. Wislow v. Wong, 713 F. Supp. 1103, 1105 (N.D. Ill. 1989); Frank E. Basil, Inc. v. Leidesdorf, 713 F. Supp. 1194, 1198 (N.D. Ill. 1989).

In Count IV, Plaintiffs make no allegations with particularity. They make their Count IV allegation by referring "the foregoing schemes" and "the foregoing conduct." (Compl. PP 82, 83.) These allegations are insufficient to satisfy the requirements of Rule 9(b). Accordingly, with respect to Count IV, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED.

D. Count Five

In Count Five, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants defamed them by removing them from buyer's lists and from [*23] positions inside and outside the Defendant organizations. HN11[] A statement may be defamatory per se or per quod. Kolegas v. Heftel Broadcasting Corp., 154 Ill. 2d 1, 607 N.E.2d 201, 206, 180 Ill. Dec. 307 (Ill. 1992). A statement is per se defamatory when the words used are "so obviously and materially harmful to the plaintiff that injury to his reputation is may be presumed." Id. A statement is pur quod defamatory if extrinsic facts demonstrate the harmfulness to the plaintiffs reputation of the statement or statements in question. Id.

Initially, to plead a defamation claim, a plaintiff must "specifically state the words considered actionable." Derson Group, Ltd. v. Right Management Consultants, Inc., 683 F. Supp. 1224, 1227 (N.D. Ill. 1988). Here, Plaintiffs make no allegations regarding any statement made by Defendants. This failure alone warrants dismissal as it fails to satisfy the requirements of notice pleading. Id. Additionally, Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts from which one could infer they were defamed.

A statement is per se defamatory in Illinois if it imputes the Commission of a crime, if it imputes infection with [*24] a "loathsome communicable disease, if it imputes "inability to perform or want of integrity in the discharge" of one's employment or business, or if it prejudices a party in his or her business. Id. Even, if a statement falls within one of these categories, however, it is not per se defamatory if "it is reasonably capable of an innocent construction." Id. The publication of an employee's termination is not defamatory per se. See Zechman v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 742 F. Supp. 1359, 1371 n.12 (N.D. Ill. 1990). Defendants' alleged removal of Plaintiffs' names from several lists is no worse and cannot be considered defamatory per se.

To allege a per quod defamation, a plaintiff must allege facts demonstrating the defamatory meaning of the statement or statements in question. Heerey v. Berke, 188 Ill. App. 3d 527, 544 N.E.2d 1037, 1041, 136 Ill. Dec. 262 (Ill. App. Ct. 1989). Plaintiffs fail to plead any such facts.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED with respect to Count Five. [5]

[*25] III. CONCLUSION

---

[5] Defendants' also claim that Plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the pleading requirements of Rule 9(g) relating to special damages. Since Plaintiffs do not specify their defamation theory and specify their damages, the Court does not further discuss this issue.

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' original Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED with respect to each Count of Plaintiffs' complaint. As each of the dismissed counts might satisfy the pleading requirements of Rules 8 and 9 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure if more properly alleged, the Court's decision is made without prejudice to Plaintiffs' filing an amended complaint within twenty-one days of the date of this Memorandum Opinion and Order. If no such complaint is filed within that time period, then this dismissal shall be considered to have been made with prejudice. Defendants' second Motion to Dismiss is DENIED as moot.

ENTER:

JOAN A. NORDBERG

United States District Judge

DATED: August 18, 1993

El Cajon Cinemas v. American Multi-Cinema

United States District Court for the Southern District of California

August 19, 1993, Decided ; August 20, 1993, Filed

CASE NO. 90-0710 IEG (P)

Reporter

832 F. Supp. 1395 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18213 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,367

EL CAJON CINEMAS, INC., a California corporation, Plaintiff, v. AMERICAN MULTI-CINEMA, INC., a Missouri corporation, COLUMBIA PICTURES INDUSTRIES, INC., a Delaware corporation; MGM/UA ENTERTAINMENT, INC., a Delaware corporation; ORION PICTURES CORPORATION, a California corporation; PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation; TRI-STAR PICTURES, INC., a Delaware corporation, Defendants. AMERICAN MULTI-CINEMA, INC., a Missouri corporation, Counterclaimant, v. EL CAJON CINEMAS, INC., a California corporation; GEORGE KRIKORIAN, Counterdefendants. EL CAJON CINEMAS, INC., a California corporation, Plaintiff, v. PACIFIC THEATRES CORPORATION, and VISTA THEATRES CORPORATION, Defendants. PACIFIC THEATRES CORPORATION, a California corporation, and VISTA THEATRES CORPORATION, Counterclaimants, v. EL CAJON CINEMAS, INC., a California corporation, and GEORGE KRIKORIAN, an individual, Counterdefendants.

Core Terms

clearances, distributors, sham, summary judgment motion, COUNTERCLAIMS, antitrust, baseless, lawsuit

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN1[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the filing of a lawsuit is immune from the application of the antitrust laws unless the suit is a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN2[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

There is a two-part definition of sham litigation. Under the first part of this test, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant can realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant can conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail.

Counsel: [1] GEORGE A. FOSTER (C.S.B. #065824), SHALL, BOUDREAU & GORE, INC., 501 W. Broadway, Suite 900, San Diego, California 92101, Telephone: (619) 230-7200 and ROBERT C. HACKETT, DAVID W. DOW, MOHR, HACKETT, PEDERSON, BLAKLEY, RANDOLPH & HAGA, P.C., 3807 North Seventh Street, Phoenix, Arizona 85014, Telephone: (602) 277-7600, Attorneys for Defendant/Counter-Claimant AMERICAN MULTI-CINEMA, INC.

SOLOMON, WARD, SEIDENWURM & SMITH, James E. King, Suite 1200, 401 "B" Street, San Diego, California 92101, One of the attorneys for El Cajon Cinemas, Inc.

FERRIS & BRITTON, Allan J. Reniche, Suite 300, 1855 First Avenue, San Diego, California 92101, One of the attorneys for Pacific Theatres Corporation and Vista Theatres Corporation.

Judges: GONZALEZ

Opinion by: IRMA E. GONZALEZ

Opinion

[*1397] ORDER ON PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF ORDER GRANTING SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON HORIZONTAL CONSPIRACY ISSUES AND ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON DEFENDANTS' SECTION ONE COUNTERCLAIMS

Plaintiff El Cajon Cinemas, Inc. ("El Cajon") has requested that this Court reconsider and vacate its October 23, 1992 ruling, El Cajon Cinemas, Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 1992-2 Trade Cas. P 70,038 (S.D. Cal. 1992), [2] made as part of the summary judgment proceedings, with regard to the existence of an alleged horizontal conspiracy in violation of Section One of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1) between motion picture exhibitor defendants (a) American Multi-Cinema, Inc. ("AMC") and (b) Pacific Theatres Corporation and/or Vista Theatres Corporation (collectively "Pacific"). El Cajon has also requested that this Court grant it summary judgment on the counterclaims of AMC and Pacific that El Cajon conspired with motion picture distributors to violate Section One of the Sherman Act.

The Court, having thoroughly reviewed the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, and having heard arguments and comments of counsel, finds as follows:

MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF EL CAJON'S HORIZONTAL CONSPIRACY CLAIM

The motion is untimely in that it fails to comply with Local Rule 7.1 and Rules 59 and 60 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Although the motion is untimely, the Court has, nevertheless, elected to hear the request to reconsider its earlier ruling.

First, El Cajon contends that the holding by the Court was at odds with a rule that was set out [3] in a particular Ninth Circuit case, In Re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, U.S. , 114 L. Ed. 2d 725, 111 S. Ct. 2274 (1991), and as echoed by the Supreme Court in Eastman Kodak Company v. Image Technical Services, Incorporated, U.S. , 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992).

In particular, El Cajon focuses on one statement that was made in the Court's oral ruling when the Court said that, "El Cajon cannot prevail on a motion for summary judgment by presenting the Court with facts that are just as susceptible to an interpretation of proper conduct as improper conduct." El Cajon contends that this statement is at odds with the Ninth Circuit's interpretation in Petroleum Products of the Supreme Court's decision in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). The Court believes that El Cajon is correct that this statement is facially at odds with the Ninth Circuit's view in Petroleum Products. But a review of the evidence presented reveals that this statement [4] really is not correct, so the Court will go behind the statement and look at the evidence. The Court inadvertently said something that it did not mean to say.

El Cajon presented evidence that, number one, both AMC and Pacific have similar alleged clearances over El Cajon and both declined to lift the alleged clearances; and two, after the commencement of the suit, an employee of Pacific inquired of an employee of AMC whether AMC was going to continue to request clearances over El Cajon in light of the pending lawsuit and the alleged requests by various distributors to discontinue clearances. The AMC employee replied only that Pacific would have to speak to the distributor about AMC's position on the alleged clearances. Three, that after the commencement of this suit, a Pacific executive and an AMC executive ran into one another at some kind of industry gathering and the Pacific executive inquired as to AMC's position regarding the alleged clearances and was told that he would, "hear about it," if AMC decided to lift the alleged clearances.

El Cajon, as the Court understands it, does not contest the finding that the parallel [*1398] conduct is insufficient to suggest conspiratorial objectives. [5] Rather, El Cajon contends that the conversations, and the Court's mistaken comment that they are susceptible to an interpretation of improper conduct, requires reversal of the Court's ruling.

The real finding of the Court is found in the sentences preceding the offending sentence. The Court specifically found that the instances of contact between AMC and Pacific that were cited by El Cajon belie the sinister import that El Cajon would imply. Moreover, the Court specifically found that when Pacific attempted to initiate the conversations with AMC, that AMC declined to speak with Pacific on the issues, saying only either that Pacific would have to talk to the distributors about AMC's position on clearances, or that Pacific would probably hear about it if AMC decided to change its course regarding the clearances.

When AMC declined to speak to Pacific, the potential for a conspiracy, the Court finds, was wholly negated. To the extent that the word "conversation" implies an exchange of information between two parties, the Court finds that in this case there were no conversations using that definition. One party inquired and the other declined to comment, and that is the way the Court sees [6] the evidence.

El Cajon's inference that this is conspiratorial conduct is not reasonable. To the extent that this Court suggested otherwise, it was mistaken, and any such finding is specifically stricken from the record. This Court never found, or at least never intended to find, that the evidence presented by El Cajon was susceptible to a conspiratorial interpretation. This Court believes that the ruling reflected in its order of October 23, 1992, El Cajon Cinemas, Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 1992-2 Trade Cas. P 70,038 (S.D. Cal. 1992), is correct, and reaffirms that order.

DEFENDANTS' SECTION ONE COUNTERCLAIMS

AMC and Pacific have counterclaimed against El Cajon based upon allegations that the lawsuit instituted by El Cajon against the distributors AMC and Pacific constituted "sham" litigation. HN1[] Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the filing of a lawsuit is immune from the application of the antitrust laws unless the suit is a sham. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); United Mineworkers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1969). [7]

In Professional Real Estate Investors, Incorporated v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 1993 Trade Cas. P 70,207 (U.S. S. Ct.), HN2[] the Supreme Court outlined a two-part definition of sham litigation. Under the first part of this test, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Under this test AMC and Pacific must prove that the litigation against the distributors constituted the pursuit of a baseless claim so that a reasonable litigant could not realistically expect to secure favorable relief.

El Cajon has not cited, nor has the Court found, any case which holds that the mere fact that an action manages to survive a summary judgment motion automatically renders it immune under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Whether a claim is baseless is a question of law. Because the parties have not briefed this issue, this Court defers ruling on the questions whether [8] the underlying litigation against the distributors was baseless. Therefore, for purposes of this motion for summary judgment, the Court will assume that AMC and Pacific survived this prong of the test for sham litigation.

Next, the Court must examine the litigant's subjective motive of bringing the action. Under the second prong of the Supreme Court's test for sham litigation, the focus is whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the courts as anti-competitive weapons. Here, AMC and Pacific allege that [*1399] El Cajon instituted the proceedings against the distributors to force them into giving a certain percentage of their films to El Cajon even though it was not in their best interest to do so. The argument assumes that those films would have gone to one or the other of AMC and Pacific had they not been given to El Cajon. Thus, there is some evidence in the record from which a reasonable juror could determine that there had been interference with a business relationship through the use of this court and that the interference was anti-competitive.

El Cajon and AMC and Pacific at this point are [9] in disagreement as to whether the conduct in question is a per se violation of antitrust law or is subject to the rule of reason. The operational difference between these two positions is whether AMC and Pacific are required to show relevant product and geographic markets. The Court finds that sham litigation is a per se violation of the antitrust laws, for there is no redeeming value to the practice. Therefore, there is no requirement that AMC and Pacific prove an anticompetitive effect upon a defined relevant market.

If AMC and Pacific establish the first two prongs, they are only required to show a causal antitrust injury and damages. AMC and Pacific are not required at this stage to make a detailed revelation of the actual amount of damages suffered. It is sufficient for the Court to determine that, should the theory of AMC and Pacific be accepted, a reasonable jury could find that damages were sustained. If the theory of AMC and Pacific is correct, they are damaged to the extent that a film was given to El Cajon when it might otherwise have been given to either or both AMC and Pacific.

For these reasons, El Cajon's motion for summary judgment on the counterclaims of AMC [10] and Pacific is denied.

. . .

IT IS SO ORDERED.

IRMA E. GONZALEZ

United States District Judge

Dated: August 19, 1993.

End of Document

Helder v. Hitachi Power Tools

United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, Southern Division

August 20, 1993, Decided

File No. 1:91-CV-515

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13220 *; 63 Empl. Prac. Dec. (CCH) P42,793; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,422

ROBERT J. HELDER and BARBARA I. HELDER, Husband and Wife, Plaintiffs, v. HITACHI POWER TOOLS, USA LTD., a Georgia corporation; BANK OF TOKYO, a California Bank; NORMAN JAEGER; FASTENERS INC., and BETTYE MARCIOCH, Defendants.

Core Terms

plaintiffs', terminated, pricing, benefits, vertical, employees, competitors, antitrust, anticompetitive, retail, relevant market, consumers, summary judgment, present case, discount, indirect, dealers, anticompetitive conduct, discriminatory, manufacturer, conspiracy, products, damages, fixing, hiring, sales representative, similarly situated, antitrust claim, distributorship, monopolize

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN1[] Standing, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 4 of the Clayton Act provides in part: Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefore in any district court of the United States without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost suit, including reasonable attorney fees.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN2[] Private Actions, Standing

The courts apply a five-factor analysis to determine antitrust standing. No single factor is dispositive, and all must be balanced. The factors include: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation. Whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing is a question of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN3[ ] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

An action under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, requires proof: (1) that the antitrust defendant contracted, combined, or conspired; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse anticompetitive effects; (3) within relevant product and geographical markets; (4) that the objects and conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (5) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy. In cases where the rule of reason applies, a court determines the existence of adverse effects on competition. This requires inquiry into market definition and market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > Output, Exclusive & Requirements Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

HN4[ ] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Even if facts in a case alleging violation of the Sherman Act support the claim of an exclusive dealership agreement, a plaintiff still must prove, under the rule of reason, that the agreement had an adverse impact on competition in a relevant market. The mere existence of an exclusive agreement is insufficient. A manufacturer of a product other and equivalent brands of which are readily available in the market may select his customers, and for this purpose he may "franchise" certain dealers to whom, alone, he will sell his goods. Vertical confinement of the manufacturer's own sales of the merchandise to selected dealers, and if competitive products are readily available to others would not violate the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN5[] Clayton Act, Claims

The elements of a vertical price fixing action are: (1) defendant intended to fix prices of resellers down the distributive chain; (2) defendant coerced plaintiff into charging higher or lower prices; (3) defendant's conduct resulted in antitrust injury; and (4) entitlement to relief exists. Only dealers or customers of a seller in a vertical price fixing scheme could suffer the requisite antitrust injury to satisfy the standing requirements under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 4. Even competitors who allege antitrust injury in a vertical price fixing scheme must present evidence of predatory pricing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Differential pricing does not violate §§ 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act unless the pricing is predatory, that is, below the manufacturer's cost, and resulted in a radical and anticompetitive restructuring of the dealer's market. If suppliers must cut prices to all competing dealers or to none, they cannot decide to factor a single dealer. They may as well decide not to cut prices at all, perhaps to the benefit of the dealers, but certainly to the detriment of the Sherman Act's ultimate beneficiary, the consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires proof that defendants: (1) possess monopolistic power or acquired such power willfully and unfairly; or (2) engaged in anticompetitive conduct designed to destroy competition while intending to monopolize a relevant market, or possessing sufficient market power to present a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing; or (3) have conspired or committed an overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy specifically intending to monopolize a relevant market.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Discrimination > Public Contracts > Scope & Definitions

Civil Rights Law > ... > Contractual Relations & Housing > Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981) > Proof of Discrimination

Civil Rights Law > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > ... > Contractual Relations & Housing > Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981) > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > ... > Contractual Relations & Housing > Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981) > Protected Classes

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

Labor & Employment Law > Discrimination > Public Contracts > General Overview

HN8[] Public Contracts, Scope & Definitions

42 U.S.C.S. § 1981 provides in part: All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every state and territory to make and enforce contracts as is enjoyed by white citizens.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Discrimination > National Origin Discrimination > Federal & State Interrelationships

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Disparate Treatment > Evidence > Burdens of Proof

Labor & Employment Law > Discrimination > Actionable Discrimination

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Practices > Adverse Employment Actions > Discharges & Failures to Hire

HN9[] National Origin Discrimination, Federal & State Interrelationships

Title VII actions are assessed under a three-step process. The three-step analysis requires plaintiffs to establish a prima facie case of discrimination, which the defendants can rebut by articulating a legitimate nondiscriminatory business reason for its action, which in turn the plaintiffs then can attempt to dismiss as pretextual. A claim of disparate treatment under Title VII requires plaintiff to show that the defendant acted with discriminatory intent or motive. Further, a similarly situated employee must be similarly situated in all relevant respects.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Penalties

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Failures to Respond

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > General Overview

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation > General Overview

HN10[] Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), Civil Penalties

Section 502(c) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(c), requires an administrator of a plan to provide any information required by ERISA, such as specified in § 104(b)(4), to a plan participant or beneficiary within 30 days of a request. Failure to do so subjects the plan administrator, in the discretion of the court, to a penalty up to $ 100 a day. A demand for payment of benefits is not a "request for information" for purposes of § 1132(c). If a claim is denied and the participant or beneficiary requests in writing an explanation of the denial, then the penalty provision applies.

Judges: [*1] Gibson

Opinion by: BENJAMIN F. GIBSON

Opinion

Hon. Benjamin F. Gibson

OPINION

Defendants move for summary judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 on plaintiffs' complaint. Plaintiffs complained that defendants violated antitrust law, ERISA, and Title 28 United States Code Section 1981, after Robert Helder claims that he was fired for refusing to engage in anticompetitive conduct by limiting his development of new accounts for HPT to those approved by Fasteners.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs are Robert J. Helder, a former sales representative for defendant Hitachi Power Tools, Inc., and his wife Barbara I. Helder. Hitachi Power Tools, Inc. ("HPT") is a distributor for Hitachi Koki Co., Ltd., with its headquarters in Norcross, Georgia. HPT employs sales representatives to sell its products to wholesalers and retailers. Defendant Norman Jaeger is a regional sales manager for HPT. Defendant Bettye Marcioch was a personnel and benefit administrator for HPT when Helder worked for HPT.

HPT hired Robert Helder as a salesman on January 24, 1989, to develop and service accounts in Michigan and northern Indiana. Helder's employment agreement provided for at-will employment governed by Georgia law.

According [*2] to plaintiffs, Helder "performed very well" by increasing total sales in his territory and received a commendatory letter from the president of HPT, Mr. Nidaira.

Shortly after Helder started working for HPT, he met with Fred Klaty, president of Fasteners, Inc., HPT's largest account in Michigan. Klaty advised Helder that if HPT wanted to maintain Fasteners' volume of business that Helder would have to inform Klaty of the status of his accounts and obtain Fasteners' permission to open any new wholesale accounts. Klaty also informed Helder that Helder's position with HPT depended upon his compliance with Klaty's request. HPT was not technically a wholesaler as defined in HPT's marketing materials, but HPT did receive discount rates of a wholesaler. Initially Helder did not protest this arrangement. However, Helder did open new accounts without advising Klaty or requesting his approval.

HPT terminated Helder's employment on February 19, 1990. As reflected in a separation notice, HPT purportedly terminated Helder for not making customer calls and his failing to file weekly client contact reports. Helder asserts that HPT's proffered reason is pretextual and that HPT actually terminated [*3] him in retaliation for not cooperating with Fasteners.

After his termination, Helder telephoned defendant Marcioch and requested immediate payment of his vested benefits under HPT's benefit plan. On May 24, 1990, Marcioch wrote Helder that his money would be sent to him and also provided Helder with a plan summary. HPT paid Helder his benefits on May 7, 1991.

Helder maintains that HPT only terminated "American citizens and/or caucasians" in the United States but never terminated a Japanese employee in the United States.

On December 7, 1990, plaintiffs filed their complaint in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan and alleged seven counts: restraint of trade and monopoly (Count I); breach of contract (Count II); wrongful discharge (Count III); infliction of emotional distress (Count IV); negligent administration of personnel policies (Count V); ERISA (Count VI); and civil rights under Title 43 United States Code Section 1981 (Count VII).

Defendants answered the complaint on January 21, 1991, and moved to dismiss defendant Hitachi Koki Co., Ltd., and change venue to the Western District of Michigan. On February 5, 1991, the court sua sponte dismissed [*4] all pendent state claims. On June 5, 1991, the court transferred this action to the Western District of Michigan. On September 10, 1991, this Court dismissed defendant Hitachi Koki because plaintiffs failed to serve process on it. Defendant Fasteners then moved to dismiss Count I, restraint of trade and monopoly, arguing that plaintiffs lacked standing. On February 25, 1993, this Court denied Fasteners' motion in part because discovery was still open.

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Defendants move for summary judgment on all of plaintiffs' remaining counts arguing that no genuine issues of material fact exist and that they are entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Defendants maintain that plaintiffs cannot establish violations of the antitrust laws, or ERISA, or a prima facie case under Title 42 United States Code Section 1981.

A. Antitrust

1. Standing

Defendants argue that plaintiffs lack standing to sue under the antitrust laws. HN1[↑] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, Title 15 United States Code Section 15(a), provides in part:

> Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefore in any district court [*5] of the United States . . . without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost suit, including reasonable attorney fees.

In Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983), the Court recommended HN2[↑] a five-factor analysis to determine antitrust standing. No single factor is dispositive, and all must be balanced. Bodie-Rickett & Assoc. v. Mars, Inc., 957 F.2d 287, 290 (6th Cir. 1992). The factors include:

> (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation.
>
> Examination of these factors facilitates identification [*6] of "who is entitled to prosecute an action under § 4."

Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079, 1085 (6th Cir. 1983) (quoting Associated General Contractors, supra, at 544 n.51). Whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing is a question of law. Bodie-Rickett, 957 F.2d at 289.

Under the five-factor analysis, plaintiff lacks antitrust standing in this action. In the marketplace, parties may be vertically related at different levels in a distributive chain or horizontally related as competitors in the same level. By their nature, agreements between vertically related parties typically do not adversely affect competition as readily as agreements between horizontally related parties. Accordingly, vertical agreements are scrutinized under a "rule of reason" analysis, rather than a per se analysis, to assess their anticompetitive effects within relevant geographic and product markets. Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802 (6th Cir. 1988). In Crane, the Sixth Circuit noted in dicta that vertical restraints are "generally found to be potentially [*7] beneficial to interbrand competition." Id. at 808.

Defendants claim that two Sixth Circuit cases control this dispute. In Fallis v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., 866 F.2d 209 (6th Cir. 1989), the court dismissed for lack of standing the claims of a regional sales representative who claimed that he was terminated because he refused to participate in a price fixing scheme in which the defendant boycotted discount retailers who sold at less than the defendant's "keystone price." The court reasoned that vertical agreements are typically aimed at either consumers by maintaining or raising retail prices or at other distributors through exclusive sales territories or preferential privileges and practices. The court determined that reduction of plaintiff's commissions was not the target of the defendant's vertical agreements. The court held that the causal connection between the plaintiff's injury and the defendant's conduct was too attenuated to confer standing.

In Bodie-Rickett, the Sixth Circuit relied on Fellows and affirmed a summary judgment dismissing the antitrust claim of a commissioned sales broker who was replaced [*8] by another broker. In Bodie-Rickett, the court determined that a manufacturer's sales representative lacked standing to challenge an allegedly anticompetitive exclusive dealing and full line representation requirement imposed by the manufacturer on distributors. The court held that the plaintiff's injury was indirect and speculative and more direct victims existed in a better position to challenge the conduct.

Plaintiffs attempt to distinguish Fellows from the present case. Plaintiffs observe that in Fellows the vertical price fixing scheme existed independently of plaintiff because the defendant simply boycotted certain discount retailers. Plaintiffs argue that Helder integrally participated in the allegedly anticompetitive conduct so that he was the "actual instrument of the prohibited conduct." Plaintiffs conclude that Helder was the target of the anticompetitive conduct and, therefore, a causal nexus existed between his injury and the defendants' anticompetitive conduct.

Plaintiffs' argument fails for at least two reasons. First, Helder's deposition testimony plainly indicates that he was not involved in setting the pricing structure of any of his accounts for Hitachi [*9] products and that the agreements between HPT and Fasteners existed before he was hired. Second, even if Helder did integrally participate in and control the identity of wholesalers for HPT, this did not make him a target or object of the allegedly anticompetitive agreements between HPT and Fasteners. Plaintiffs admit that HPT's interest was to retain Fasteners' business and that Fasteners' target was to control its profit margin and obtain the best discount that it could. Accordingly plaintiffs failed to demonstrate that Helder was the target of the agreements between HPT and Fasteners.

The second factor in the Associated General/Southaven analysis deals with the nature of a plaintiff's alleged injury including the plaintiff's status as consumer or competitor in the relevant market. As a sales representative for HPT power hand tool products, Helder was neither a consumer of HPT products nor a competitor in the power hand tool market. However, the Fellows, court also observed that a plaintiff's standing is increased under this analysis where the plaintiff's "injury is 'inextricably intertwined' with the antitrust violation." Fellows, 866 F.2d at 211. [*10] An inextricably intertwined injury may exist where a defendant "manipulated or utilized" plaintiff as a "fulcrum, conduit or market force to injure competitors." Id.

In their complaint, plaintiffs did not allege that Helder was a "fulcrum" or "conduit" in a conspiracy between HPT and Fasteners. Although Helder claims that he initially complied with Fasteners' request to review and approve Helder's new accounts, Helder soon opened new distributorships that competed with Fasteners. Furthermore, Helder testified in a deposition that he was not involved in any of the pricing decisions between HPT and Fasteners. Even accepting Helder's representations as true, Helder simply was not "inextricably intertwined" and did not function as a significant "fulcrum" or "conduit" in the alleged illegal anticompetitive agreement between HPT and Fasteners.

The third factor in the Associated General/Southaven analysis deals with the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative. In Fellows, the court reasoned that a potential plaintiff who suffers only indirect injury may not have standing. The Fellows court stated "the 'wrongful [*11] result' [defendant] allegedly sought was vertical price maintenance, 'not termination of the plaintiff's employment' . . . or the diminution of his commissions." 866 F.2d at 211.

In the present case, the object of the alleged illegal anticompetitive agreement between HPT and Fasteners may have been an exclusive dealing arrangement, low price preferences, and possibly retail price maintenance. However, no evidence suggests that the object was the diminution of Helder's commissions and termination of his employment. The parties directly injured were Fasteners' competitors and retail consumers, not Helder. Helder even admits as much in his answers to interrogatories. Thus, the indirectness of Helder's injury undercuts plaintiffs' standing.

The fourth factor in the Associated General/Southaven analysis deals with the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. Plaintiffs' injury is indirect and derivative of Fasteners' competitors and retail consumers. An award of damages to plaintiffs under these circumstances for the alleged anticompetitive conduct of HPT and Fasteners is not germane in the absence of any other antitrust actions [*12] against defendants. However, it increases the potential for duplicative damages should other potential plaintiffs sue. That situation, in turn, would require an apportionment of damages.

The fifth factor in the Associated General/Southaven analysis deals with the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation. Victims with direct injury of antitrust violations have more incentive to sue. In the present case, plaintiffs have only indirect and derivative injuries. Other potential plaintiffs, such as competitors of Fasteners and retail consumers, have more direct injuries and, therefore, would be in a better position to challenge the anticompetitive conduct.

After balancing the five factors, it simply appears that plaintiffs simply do not have antitrust standing. Plaintiffs were not the object of the alleged anticompetitive agreement; they were not consumers or competitors in any relevant market; their injury was indirect and derivative of more direct victims.

2. Antitrust Claims

In addition to plaintiffs' lack of standing, defendants argue that summary judgment is appropriate because plaintiffs' antitrust claims are unsupported by the law or facts.

HN3[] An action [*13] under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Title 15 United States Code Section 1, requires proof:

> (1) that the antitrust defendant contracted, combined, or conspired; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse anticompetitive effects; (3) within relevant product and geographical markets; (4) that the objects and conduct pursuant to that contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (5) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

International Logistics Group, Ltd. v. Chrysler Corp., 884 F.2d 904, 907 (6th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1066, 108 L. Ed. 2d 784, 110 S. Ct. 1783 (1990). In cases where the rule of reason applies, a court determines the existence of adverse effects on competition. This requires inquiry "into market definition and market power." Lie v. St. Joseph Hosp. of Mount Clemens, 964 F.2d 567, 569 (6th Cir. 1992) (quoting F.T.C. v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 [1986]).

Defendants assert that plaintiffs cannot factually support their claims. Plaintiffs claim that HPT and Fasteners conspired in an exclusive dealership [*14] agreement to prevent Helder from opening new dealerships and decrease his sales commissions. However, plaintiffs never produced a copy of an exclusive written agreement and did not know whether one even existed. Moreover, Helder admitted in his deposition that five other HPT distributorships existed in Michigan when he took over the territory and that he opened nine more. Helder admits that neither Fasteners nor HPT prevented him from opening a distributorship with any company other than Bee Line, Inc. Thus, plaintiffs have presented little factual support for their claim that an exclusive distributorship agreement existed between Fasteners and HPT.

HN4[] Even if facts supported the claim of an exclusive dealership agreement, plaintiffs still must prove, under the rule of reason, that the agreement had an adverse impact on competition in a relevant market. Continental T.V. Inc. v. G.T.E. Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). The mere existence of an exclusive agreement is insufficient. In United States v. Arnold Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 376, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967), the Court recognized the legality of exclusive arrangements:

> [A] manufacturer [*15] of a product other and equivalent brands of which are readily available in the market may select his customers, and for this purpose he may 'franchise' certain dealers to whom, alone, he will sell his goods. . . . Vertical 'confinement' of the manufacturer's own sales of the merchandise to selected dealers, and if competitive products are readily available to others, . . . would not violate the Sherman Act.

See also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); Fray Chevrolet Sales, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 536 F.2d 683 (6th Cir. 1976); Elder-Beerman Stores Corp. v. Federated Dept. Stores, Inc., 459 F.2d 138, 145-46 (6th Cir. 1972).

Plaintiffs have shown no evidence of an adverse impact on competition in a relevant market. Plaintiffs identified the relevant market as Helder's sales territory in Michigan. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants' allegedly unlawful agreement "destroyed" the business of Fasteners' competitors. However, plaintiffs have not presented any evidence to the Court that defendants' agreement had an adverse effect on the relevant market. In General Aviation, Inc. v. Garrett Corp., 743 F. Supp. 515, 521 (W.D. Mich. 1990), [*16] an engine manufacturer agreed with an airplane manufacturer not to appoint any dealer as a service center for its engines without the latter's approval. The court held that substitution of one distributor for another does not violate any antitrust laws, absent a showing of "anti-competitive purpose or effect at the interbrand level." 743 F. Supp. at 521. Plaintiffs identified only one of Fasteners' competitors, Bee Line, Inc., who may have been injured. However, they failed to present documentary evidence of Bee Line's injury or other adverse effect in the interbrand market. Consequently this claim should be dismissed.

Defendants also assert that plaintiffs cannot support their claim of vertical price fixing in which HPT fixed the prices at which Fasteners had to sell HPT's products. HN5[] The elements of a vertical price fixing action are: (1) defendant intended to fix prices of resellers down the distributive chain; (2) defendant coerced plaintiff into charging higher or lower prices; (3) defendant's conduct resulted in antitrust injury; and (4) entitlement to relief exists. Bender v. Southland Corp., 749 F.2d 1205, 1212 (6th Cir. 1984). [*17] In Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990), the court held that only dealers or customers of a seller in a vertical price fixing scheme could suffer the requisite antitrust injury to satisfy the standing requirements under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, Title 15 United States Code Section 15(a). Even competitors who allege antitrust injury in a vertical price fixing scheme must present evidence of predatory pricing. Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler, Inc., 866 F.2d 525 (1st Cir. 1989).

Plaintiffs have presented no documentary evidence that: (1) defendants intended to fix prices; (2) defendants coerced Helder or any other person into setting a particular price; or (3) that any antitrust injury resulted. Rather, it appears on the uncontroverted affidavits of both Helder and Klaty that HPT unilaterally developed its own suggested retail pricing list. It also appears that Fasteners was free to use or not use the retail price list. Further, plaintiffs simply have not indicated how they were injured by the alleged vertical price fixing. Plaintiffs did not allege or present evidence of predatory pricing [*18] in the present case. Consequently this claim should be dismissed.

Defendants also contend that plaintiffs' claim of unlawful preferential pricing cannot be factually and legally supported. Plaintiffs allege that HPT agreed with Fasteners not to sell their products to any other distributorship at a lower discount. HN6[] Differential pricing does not violate Sections 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act unless the pricing is predatory, i.e., below the manufacturer's cost, and resulted in a "radical and anticompetitive restructuring of the dealer's market." Monahan's Marine, 866 F.2d at 527. In Monahan, the court stated:

> If suppliers must cut prices to all competing dealers or to none, they cannot decide to factor a single dealer, . . . they may as well decide not to cut prices at all, perhaps to the benefit of the dealers, but certainly to the detriment of the Sherman Act's ultimate beneficiary, the consumer.

Id. at 527-28. See also Davis-Watkins Co. v. Service Merchandise, 686 F.2d 1190, 1196 (6th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 931 (1984).

Plaintiffs have not supported [*19] their claim with any documentary evidence that HPT's alleged discount to Fasteners was predatory or that it had a radical and anticompetitive effect in the market. Plaintiffs also have not presented any evidence that HPT and Fasteners actually conspired to set discounts. In his deposition, Helder admitted that HPT unilaterally established the discounts for each distributor. Further, in spite of the alleged agreement Helder opened nine distributorships. Consequently this claim should be dismissed.

Defendants also contend that plaintiffs cannot legally or factually support their claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, Title 15 United States Code Section 2, which prohibits monopolization or attempts or conspiracies to monopolize any part of interstate commerce. HN7[] A claim under Section 2 requires proof that defendants: (1) possess monopolistic power or acquired such power willfully and unfairly; or (2) engaged in anticompetitive conduct designed to destroy competition while intending to monopolize a relevant market, or possessing sufficient market power to present a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing; or (3) have conspired or committed an overt act in furtherance of a [*20] conspiracy specifically intending to monopolize a relevant market.

In Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802, 805 (6th Cir. 1988), the court required the elements of a private antitrust claim to be alleged in more than vague and conclusory terms. Plaintiffs have failed to specify the character of their monopolization claim as monopoly, attempt, or conspiracy. Moreover, they also failed to support their claim by adequate documentary evidence. Consequently, this claim also should be dismissed.

B. Discrimination Under 42 U.S.C. § 1981

Plaintiffs allege that HPT discrimination against Helder and white employees in favor of its Japanese employees. Plaintiffs claim that: (1) HPT, a wholly owned subsidiary of the now dismissed defendant Hitachi Koki Co., Ltd., did not terminate its Japanese employees; (2) Japanese employees did not have a waiting period for medical insurance; (3) only American employees were laid off when HPT's office in California was reorganized; and (4) all of HPT's management positions were staffed by Japanese. Defendants argue that plaintiffs failed to state a claim under Title [*21] 42 United States Code Section 1981.

HN8[] Section 1981 provides in part:

> All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts . . . as is enjoyed by white citizens.

Prior to its 1991 amendments, Section 1981 did not prohibit discrimination generally. Rather, it prohibited only discrimination in the making and enforcing of contracts. In Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, 491 U.S. 164, 109 S. Ct. 2363, 105 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1989), the court construed the pre-amendment language "to make and enforce contracts" in the context of employment to apply only to hiring practices and not to breaches of employment contracts or discriminatory working conditions. Id. at 2373-74. The Sixth Circuit similarly limited application of Section 1981 to discriminatory practices and conditions in hiring practices. Ang v. Proctor & Gamble Co., 932 F.2d 540, 544-45 (6th Cir. 1991); Hull v. Cuyahoga Valley Joint Vocational Sch. Dist. Bd. of Educ., 926 F.2d 505, 508 (6th Cir.) cert. denied, 111 S. Ct. 2917 (1991); [*22] Prather v. Dayton Power & Light Co., 918 F.2d 1255, 1258 (6th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1054, 111 S. Ct. 2889 (1991).

In 1991, Congress enacted the Civil Rights Act of 1991, 42 U.S.C. § 1981, effective November 21, 1991, which specifically overruled Patterson, to include claims based on the "performance, modification and termination of contracts . . . ." 42 U.S.C. § 1981(b). In Vogel v. City of Cincinnati, 959 F.2d 594 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 49, 113 S. Ct. 86 (1992), the court determined that the amended act could not be applied retroactively to pre-amendment conduct.

In the present case, plaintiffs filed their action prior to the effective date of the amendment, therefore, plaintiffs must prove that HPT discriminated against Helder during the hiring stage of his employment. Under Patterson, HPT's subsequent discriminatory conduct is not actionable. Plaintiffs allege post hiring discriminatory conduct as to benefits and termination. Plaintiffs failed to state and support their claim under [*23] Section 1981. Further, plaintiffs have not provided any documentary evidence of discriminatory conduct by HPT in hiring Helder.

Defendants additionally argue that even if the Patterson limitation did not apply, foreign corporations are permitted by treaties to favor their nationals in employment in this country. Defendants argue that pursuant to treaties such preferential treatment, as a matter of law, will not support claims of disparate treatment or impact under either federal or state statutes. Case law supports this proposition. Fortino v. Quasar, 950 F.2d 389 (7th Cir. 1991) (treaty with Japan); Wickes v. Olympic Airways, 745 F.2d 363, 366 (6th Cir. 1984) (treaty with Greece). In Fortino, plaintiffs filed a national origin claim under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e et seq., alleging that American executives of defendant were treated less favorably in terminations than were the Japanese expatriate executives temporarily transferred from the Japanese parent corporation. The district court found in favor of the plaintiffs but the circuit [*24] court reversed. The Seventh Circuit distinguished claims of discrimination based on national origin from discrimination based on citizenship. Id. at 392-93. The court reasoned that evidence of discrimination based on citizenship could not be used to infer national origin discrimination because defendant's preferential treatment of employees who were Japanese citizens was lawful under the treaty.

In the present case, plaintiffs claim that HPT treated its executive who were Japanese nationals more favorably than its employees who were American nationals. Only three of HPT's employees are Japanese nationals. HPT also admits that its parent corporation, Hitachi Koki, Co., Ltd., relocates certain executives in the United States and that these executives can retain their own pension plans. These plans may differ from plans available to employees who are American citizens.

In the present case, plaintiffs alleged that HPT preferentially favored Japanese nationals. However, plaintiffs neither alleged nor supported any claim that HPT discriminated against Helder or other white employees because of their national origin. Consequently plaintiffs' claim should be [*25] dismissed.

Defendants also argue that plaintiffs cannot state a prima facie case of intentional discrimination under Title VII. HN9[] Title VII actions are assessed under a three-step process. McDonnell Douglas v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 36 L. Ed. 2d 668, 93 S. Ct. 1817 (1973); Trans World Orleans, Inc. v. Thurston, 469 U.S. 111, 83 L. Ed. 2d 523, 105 S. Ct. 613 (1985); Mitchell v. Toledo Hospital, 964 F.2d 577, 582 (6th Cir. 1992); and Daniels v. Board of Educ. of Ravenna City Sch. Dist., 805 F.2d 203, 207 (6th Cir. 1986). The three-step analysis requires plaintiffs to establish a prima facie case of discrimination, which the defendants can rebut by articulating a legitimate nondiscriminatory business reason for its action, which in turn the plaintiffs then can attempt to dismiss as pretextual.

A claim of disparate treatment under Title VII requires plaintiff to show that the defendant acted with discriminatory intent or motive. Texas Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 253, 101 S. Ct. 1089, 67 L. Ed. 2d 207 (1981); Beauford v. Sisters of Mercy-Province of Detroit, Inc., 816 F.2d 1104, 1107 [*26] (6th Cir.), cert.

denied, 484 U.S. 913, 98 L. Ed. 2d 217, 108 S. Ct. 259 (1987). Further, a similarly situated employee must be similarly situated in all relevant respects. Mitchell, 964 F.2d at 583.

Plaintiffs have not demonstrated a prima facie case of intentional or disparate discrimination. Plaintiffs have not presented any evidence of HPT's discriminatory intent or motive. Furthermore, plaintiffs have not identified any similarly situated employees who were Japanese. HPT employed Helder as a sales representative. HPT did not employ any Japanese or even Americans of Japanese descent as sales representatives. HPT only employed three Japanese nationals who were management executives. Plaintiffs have not demonstrated that Helder was treated differently than any similarly situated employees who were Japanese nationals, because there were no similarly situated employees who were Japanese nationals. Therefore, plaintiffs failed to establish a prima facie case of discrimination.

C. ERISA Claims

Defendants also move for summary judgment on plaintiffs' claim under Section 502(c) of ERISA, Title 29 United States Code Section 1132(c). Plaintiffs [*27] claim that they are entitled to penalties because HPT made Helder wait fourteen months for payment of his benefits under a 401(k) plan administered by HPT.

HN10[] Section 502(c) requires an administrator of a plan to provide any information required by ERISA, such as specified in Section 104(b)(4), to a plan participant or beneficiary within thirty days of a request. Failure to do so subjects the plan administrator, in the discretion of the court, to a penalty up to $ 100 a day. Kleinhans v. Lisle Savings Profit Sharing Trust, 810 F.2d 618, 623 (7th Cir. 1987). The Kleinhans court held that a demand for payment of benefits is not a "request for information" for purposes of Section 1132(c). Id. at 623. However, the court further reasoned that if a claim is denied and the participant or beneficiary requests in writing an explanation of the denial, then the penalty provision applies. Id. at 623-24.

Plaintiffs also claim that defendants breached a fiduciary duty under Section 409(a) of ERISA, Title 29 United States Code Section 1109(a), by paying to Helder his ERISA benefits fourteen months after he requested [*28] them.

Section 409(a) does not describe any particular fiduciary duties, but simply provides that any fiduciary who breaches any duties that ERISA imposes upon fiduciaries shall compensate the plan for any loss resulting to the plan from a breach and be subject to any other equitable remedy that the court deems appropriate. Section 404(a)(1)(D) requires an administrator to act in accord with the terms of the plan.

In the present case Helder was terminated on February 19, 1990, and requested by telephone immediate payment of his benefits. In Article 7, Section 7.02(a) HPT's benefit plan provides that upon termination benefits totalling less that $ 3,500 will commence not later than sixty days after the next December 31, or if the value of the benefits cannot be determined, then sixty days after the valuation process. The value of Helder's benefit was not calculated until after HPT's consultant completed the year-end valuation process. The year-end valuation process for calendar year 1990 was completed on March 15, 1991. Helder's benefit totalled $ 263.91. On March 25, 1991, defendant Bettye Marcioch sent Helder a benefit election form, which he completed on April 9, 1991, and then apparently [*29] gave to his counsel who mailed it to HPT on April 29, 1991. HPT issued a benefit check to Helder on May 7, 1991, which was within 60 days of the valuation date of March 15, 1991.

Under Section 502(c) and Kleinhans, Helder's request for benefits is not a request for information that must be answered within thirty days. Consequently, HPT's failure to pay Helder his benefits within thirty days does not violate Section 502(c) and does not trigger any potential penalties. Moreover, it appears that HPT complied with the sixty-day requirement for payment of benefits under the 401(k) plan and, therefore, did not breach any fiduciary duty, even though Helder did not receive his benefits until fourteen months after he requested them. Therefore, plaintiffs' ERISA claim should be dismissed.

III. CONCLUSION

This court determines that plaintiffs' antitrust claims should be dismissed because they lack standing to bring these claims, have failed to adequately state their claims, and also failed to demonstrate that any genuine issue of material fact exists, so that as a matter of law, defendants are entitled to summary judgment on plaintiffs' antitrust claims. Plaintiffs' claim under Title *42 [30] United States Code Section 1981 should be dismissed because they failed to adequately state a claim and failed to demonstrate any genuine issue of material fact supporting their claim that defendants discriminated against Helder as a minority employee in favor of any similarly situated nonminority employee. Similarly, plaintiffs' claims under §§ 409 and 502 of ERISA should be dismissed because Helder did not request any information under Section 502 to trigger its penalties and paid to Helder his benefits within sixty days of the valuation date under the plan.

BENJAMIN F. GIBSON

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

DATED: August 20, 1993.

JUDGMENT

At a session of the Court held in and for said District and Division, in the City of Grand Rapids, Michigan, this 20th day of August, 1993.

PRESENT: HON. BENJAMIN F. GIBSON, U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

In accordance with the opinion of this date, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that defendants' motion for summary judgment (pleading no. 114) is GRANTED and plaintiffs' complaint (pleading no. 1) is DISMISSED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

BENJAMIN F. GIBSON

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Computer Assocs. Int'l v. American Fundware

United States District Court for the District of Colorado

August 26, 1993, Decided ; August 26, 1993, Filed

Civil Action No. 86-K-2562

Reporter

831 F. Supp. 1516 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11974 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,477

COMPUTER ASSOCIATES INTERNATIONAL, INC., Plaintiff, v. AMERICAN FUNDWARE, INC., Defendant.

Core Terms

programs, trade secret, software, damages, royalty, unfair competition, argues, counterclaim, cases, pretrial order, antitrust, sham, predecessor, discovery, financial condition, injunctive relief, motion in limine, equitable, lawsuit, documents, courts, misappropriation, negotiations, Deposition, frivolous, baseless, estopped, summary judgment motion, independent contractor, grant a motion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability. The right to petition government includes within its scope litigating activity. In the adjudicatory setting, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects a litigant from antitrust liability unless his opponent can establish that the litigant's case is a sham. To do this, the opponent must first show that the lawsuit is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could reasonably expect success on the merits. If the opponent succeeds in this first step, then and only then may the court examine the litigant's subjective motivation to determine whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Whether applying the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as an antitrust doctrine or invoking it in other contexts, evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transform otherwise legitimate activity into a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN3[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington immunity is a constitutional, not an antitrust, doctrine.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Frivolous Appeals

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN4[] Appeals, Frivolous Appeals

Under Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-17-101 to -103 (1987), a court may award attorney fees against a litigant whose claims are frivolous or groundless. It applies in diversity cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Frivolous Appeals

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

An award of attorney fees is contingent on proof that a claim/defense is, indeed, substantially frivolous and/or groundless. This assessment depends on whether there is any credible evidence to support the claim at trial. Because an award of attorney fees under the Colorado statute, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-17-101 to -103 (1987), is contingent on there being no evidence at trial, it does not infringe on the right to petition government protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

To establish that plaintiff's litigation is a sham, defendant must first show that plaintiff's claims are objectively baseless. Only then is evidence of plaintiff's subjective intent in suing the defendant relevant.

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Independent Contractors

Torts > ... > General Premises Liability > Defenses > Independent Contractors

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Common Law

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Works Made for Hire

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Employee Inventions

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > General Overview

HN7[] Employment Relationships, Independent Contractors

Although status as an employee or an independent contractor is relevant to the ownership of a copyright, it is irrelevant to the ownership of a trade secret. These concepts of intellectual property are different. Copyright protection extends to the particular expression used by the author; trade secrets are the very ideas of the author.

Labor & Employment Law > Wage & Hour Laws > Scope & Definitions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Definition Under Common Law

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Works Made for Hire

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Employee Inventions

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Independent Contractors

HN8[] Wage & Hour Laws, Scope & Definitions

If an employer pays you to design, the employer owns the fruit of your labor. This common law ownership rule clearly applies to employee ideas and developments which meet the definition of a trade secret, even in the absence of a written contract. The rule is now even extended to nonemployment situations, such as when an independent contractor is hired to design or develop a process or machine. Such a contractor is equivalent to an employee hired to develop an idea, so that the results of this work are owned by the hiring company.

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Joint Authors & Works

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > Reasonable Measures > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Works Made for Hire

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Business Considerations > Labor Laws

HN9[] Ownership Interests, Joint Authors & Works

An employer of independent contractor owns copyright in specially commissioned work and joint copyright in work merged into inseparable parts of a unitary whole.

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > Reasonable Measures > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Contract > Licensing Agreements

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > General Overview

HN10[] Protection of Secrecy, Reasonable Measures

Whether programs containing trade secrets are marked confidential is only one factor to be considered when determining whether a party took reasonable measures to protect against unauthorized disclosure of trade secrets.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Frivolous Appeals

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN11[] Appeals, Frivolous Appeals

Under the subjective prong of a "sham" analysis, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon.

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Conferences > Pretrial Orders

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Conferences > General Overview

HN12[] Conferences, Pretrial Orders

Whether to allow amendment of the pretrial order is a matter in the district court's discretion. Modification should be permitted when the danger of surprise is small and a failure to amend might result in an injustice to the moving party.

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Royalties

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > Use

HN13[] Remedies, Damages

The proper measure of damages for misappropriation of trade secrets case can be elusive, and courts are encouraged to be "flexible" and "imaginative." Because the primary concern in most cases is to measure the value to the defendant of what he actually obtained from the plaintiff, the proper measure is to calculate what the parties would have agreed to as a fair price for licensing the defendant to put the trade secret to the use the defendant intended at the time the misappropriation took place. This is, in essence, the reasonable royalty rule, which most courts now apply in trade secret cases. Trade secret cases typically embrace some form of royalty.

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > General Overview

HN14[] Remedies, Damages

Determination of a reasonable royalty is simplified in cases where there is already a royalty agreement in place. Hence, the first inquiry of the courts generally has been whether there is any factual basis, such as a royalty agreement from which one might legitimately determine the value which the parties themselves actually assigned to the misappropriated information. If there is, the contractually established royalty will be the best measure of the parties' intent.

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Patentholder Losses > Reasonable Royalties

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > Reasonable Measures > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Patent Law > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > Measure of Damages

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Remedies

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

HN15[] Patentholder Losses, Reasonable Royalties

Plaintiff in a misappropriation of trade secrets case is entitled to full measure of his loss, an amount no less than all profits the defendant realized from his tortious conduct.

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > Disclosures

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Royalties

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

HN16[] Remedies, Damages

In lieu of damages measured by any other methods, the damages caused by a misappropriation of a trade secret may be measured by imposition of liability for a reasonable royalty for a misappropriator's unauthorized disclosure or use of a trade secret.

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > Reasonable Measures > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN17[] Remedies, Damages

Under the reasonable royalty rule, the amount of royalties is determined on the basis of the volume of the defendant's actual sales of trade secret product. The defendant need not have actually turned a profit on that product.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages > General Overview

HN18[] Damages, Punitive Damages

Under Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-21-102 (Supp. 1986), in any civil action in which exemplary damages may be awarded, evidence of the income or net worth of a party shall not be considered in determining the appropriateness or amount of such damages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Discovery Rule

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling > Discovery Rule

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN19[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Discovery Rule

Under the common law "discovery rule" and Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-80-108(6), -108(8) (1987), contract and tort claims accrue when the plaintiff discovers or should have discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence the breach of contract or tortious conduct giving rise to its claims.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Injunctions > Duration

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Right to Jury Trial > Actions in Equity

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Evidence

Trade Secrets Law > ... > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN20[] Injunctions, Permanent Injunctions

A claim for injunctive relief is a matter for the district court's determination, not the jury's. Any financial data relevant to this claim will be presented to the court after the jury reaches a verdict, not during trial. Factors relevant to permanent injunction for trade secret misappropriation include the relative hardship likely to result to the defendant if injunction is granted. The fact that a defendant might be put out of business if an injunction is issued would be due to defendant's unlawful actions, not the court's legitimate exercise of its discretion in awarding equitable relief.

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

HN21[] Formalities, Deposit & Registration Requirements

Copyrighting intellectual property does not automatically vitiate its trade secret status. Under the procedure in 37 C.F.R. § 202.20(c)(vii)(A)(2), only a portion of the copyrighted code is actually on file with the Copyright Office.

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Federal Preemption

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > General Overview

HN22[] Formalities, Deposit & Registration Requirements

To prove that a plaintiff could no longer claim that certain programs were trade secrets, the defendant would have to show that it or someone in the industry actually learned of plaintiff's trade secrets by reviewing the limited information on file with the Copyright Office.

Copyright Law > Constitutional Copyright Protections > Federal & State Law Interrelationships > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Federal Preemption

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > General Overview

HN23[] Constitutional Copyright Protections, Federal & State Law Interrelationships

Question of preemption of state trade secret law under Copyright Act (Act) is moot after passage of 1980 revisions to Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN24[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

While inconsistent allegations in different lawsuits are admissible, such as where the plaintiff files separate lawsuits alleging different defendants were responsible for the same injuries, this rule does not apply to amended pleadings in the same lawsuit, as it interferes with the right to plead claims alternatively under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(e).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

HN25[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Under Colorado law, the doctrine of equitable estoppel is employed to prevent manifest injustice. In order for the doctrine to apply, the party to be estopped must know the true facts and intend that its conduct be acted upon by the party asserting the defense. Thus, it focuses on one party's conduct or representations which induce another party, who does not know the true facts, to rely on the conduct or misrepresentations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Statements as Evidence > Compromise & Settlement Negotiations

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Relevance of Discoverable Information

HN26[] Discovery, Privileged Communications

Fed. R. Evid. (Rule) 408 limits the introduction of evidence regarding offers or acceptance of compromises or settlements and conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations. It does not, however, require the exclusion of any evidence otherwise discoverable merely because it is presented in the course of compromise negotiations. Rule 408 is a preclusionary rule, not a discovery rule. It is meant to limit the introduction of evidence of settlement negotiations at trial and is not a broad discovery privilege. Information that may not be admissible at trial under the rule is still discoverable so long as that information may lead to the discovery of other admissible evidence.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiff: Douglas Bragg, Bragg, Baker & Cederberg, 600 17th St., #1700 N, Denver, CO 80202.

For Defendant: Jane Michaels, Steven Choquette, Holland & Hart, 555 17th St. Suite 2900, Denver, CO 80202.

Judges: KANE, JR.

Opinion by: JOHN L. KANE, JR.

Opinion

[*1519] ORDER ON PENDING MOTIONS

KANE, J.

This is a diversity action based on the alleged plagiarism of computer software. It is set for a ten-day jury trial commencing September 13, 1993. Four motions are pending in this case: (1) Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on Defendant's counterclaims, (2) Defendant's second motion for reconsideration of my ruling permitting amendment of the pretrial order, (3) Plaintiff's motion in limine, and (4) Defendant's motion in limine. I first review the facts and procedural history of this case.

I. Facts and Procedural History.

On May 25, 1979, Stuart P. Orr & Associates, Inc. ("SPO") and Steamboat Computer Services ("SCS"), predecessors in interest to the parties in this case, entered into a Computer Software Agreement (the "1979 Agreement"), whereby SPO agreed to provide SCS with certain accounting software. The 1979 Agreement placed several limitations on SCS' use of the software. All materials provided under the [2] 1979 Agreement were designated as trade secrets that could not be reproduced without SPO's written consent, SCS was prohibited from using the software to go into the software business (i.e., to sell to entities other than end-users), SCS was to obtain SPO's consent before converting the software to a different computer type, SCS was to pay SPO royalties on sales of the software after the first ten installations, and SPO retained exclusive rights to market the software in Southern California. (See Am. Compl., Ex. A.)

Under the 1979 Agreement, SCS paid $ 21,671.75 for the six programs that SPO delivered (the "SPO programs"). In the next few years, SPO also provided SCS with updates of the SPO programs. No royalties were ever paid to SPO under the 1979 Agreement. Plaintiff Computer Associates International, [*1520] Inc. ("CA") acquired SPO in 1983. Defendant American Fundware, Inc. ("AFW") became successor-in-interest to SCS.

In August 1986, AFW notified CA that it was terminating the 1979 Agreement because it was no longer using the SPO programs. After examining the software that AFW was then marketing, known as PC-Fund, CA came to believe that AFW had usurped its code in developing this [3] software. (Later, CA reached the same conclusion as to software known as Fundware). On December 19, 1986, CA filed this lawsuit, alleging claims for breach of contract and misappropriation of trade secrets and seeking injunctive relief and punitive damages. [1] AFW answered on February 2, 1987, asserting counterclaims for unfair competition and for "groundless and frivolous claims." On March 31, 1987, CA was permitted to supplement its complaint to assert a claim for copyright infringement. It withdrew this claim in an amended complaint filed on August 26, 1991.

On July 10, 1987 the court entered a protective order limiting disclosure of trade secrets and other information revealed through discovery. [2] On October 26, 1987, CA moved for entry of a default judgment against AFW because AFW had destroyed the original source code [4] used to develop the PC-Fund and Fundware software after this action was filed, making it nearly impossible for CA to prove that AFW had plagiarized its software. Judge Carrigan granted the motion and entered a default judgment against AFW as to liability only on December 6, 1990. He found that AFW had > intentionally destroyed portions of the source code not only after being served in this action and thus put on notice that the source code was irreplaceable evidence, but even after the request for production and motion to compel had dramatically and specifically emphasized the significance of the code versions being destroyed as evidence.

(Mem. Op. & Order at 6.)

[5] On November 26, 1991, AFW moved for sanctions against CA, claiming that CA had lost or destroyed all versions of the SPO programs provided to AFW's predecessor in 1979. On December 6, 1991, the court entered an order setting aside the default judgment against AFW on the grounds that CA had concealed that it, too, had lost or destroyed critical evidence and thereby misled the court into granting the default judgment. The matter was then set for jury trial on November 9, 1992.

On October 25 and 26, respectively, AFW and CA each filed motions in limine. Before these motions were heard, CA moved to disqualify Judge Carrigan, and he transferred the case to me. After the transfer, CA moved to amend the pretrial order to delete any reference to it having lost the SPO programs, since it discovered the original version of the programs in a mis-labeled storage box and provided it to AFW in February, 1993. I granted the motion, and AFW moved to reconsider. On April 22, 1993, I granted the motion to reconsider, reaffirmed my ruling permitting amendment of the pretrial order and granted AFW additional discovery until July 1, 1993. AFW again moved to reconsider.

Finally, on July 23, 1993, CA moved [6] for summary judgment on AFW's counterclaims for unfair competition and groundless and frivolous claims, arguing they were barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as recently clarified in the Supreme Court's decision in Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993).

[*1521] II. Pending Motions.

A. Plaintiff CA's Motion for Summary Judgment.

1. Does the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine Apply?

I first consider CA's motion for summary judgment on AFW's counterclaims for unfair competition and frivolous and groundless claims because it is dispositive of other issues. CA argues that both of these claims are barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965); Eastman R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S.

---

[1] In addition to AFW, CA named as defendants Richard Yeager, AFW's president, and Jerome C. Dayton, AFW's vice-president. CA dismissed its claims against these individuals in December, 1991.

[2] At various times, both sides to this dispute moved for the entry of sanctions. AFW also moved to add a counterclaim based on CA's alleged violation of the protective order. Judge Carrigan deferred these motions until after trial but apparently advised the parties they could file independent suits for violation of the protective order. They did. See Computer Assocs. Int'l, Inc. v. Flagship Group, No. 92-K-1660; American Fundware, Inc. v. Computer Assocs, Int'l, Inc., No. 92-K-1185. On April 28, 1993, the parties stipulated to the dismissal of these suits and the withdrawal of any motions for sanctions pending in this case.

Ct. 523 (1961). HN1[] Under this doctrine, "[those who petition government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability." Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 113 S. Ct. at 1926; see also [7] Oberndorf v. City & County of Denver, 900 F.2d 1434, 1440 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 845, 112 L. Ed. 2d 97, 111 S. Ct. 129 (1990).

The right to petition government includes within its scope litigating activity. See California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972). In the adjudicatory setting, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects a litigant from antitrust liability unless his opponent can establish that the litigant's case is a sham. To do this, the opponent must first show that the lawsuit is "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could reasonably expect success on the merits." Professional Real Estate Investors, 113 S. Ct. at 1928. If opponent succeeds in this first step, then and only then may the court examine the litigant's subjective motivation to determine whether the "baseless lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.'" Id. (citing Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144.

As AFW notes in its response, CA glosses over an important threshold question: [8] whether the Noerr-Pennington doctrine bars not only federal antitrust claims under the Sherman Act, but also tort claims under state law, such as the unfair competition and frivolous lawsuit claims at issue here. CA cites one case in its opening brief, Aydin Corporation v. Loral Corporation, in which the Ninth Circuit affirmed the dismissal of a federal antitrust claim and two pendent state law claims, including one for unfair competition. See 718 F.2d 897 (9th Cir. 1983). A close reading of that case, however, does not indicate whether the dismissal of the unfair competition claim was under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine or by application of state law. The court simply stated: "As we concluded in connection with Aydin's Noerr-Pennington claim, see part IV, supra, whether the state actions were a sham or a genuine effort by Loral and Conic to obtain redress is a factual issue and, based upon the record before us, Aydin failed to raise an issue of material fact." See id. at 905.

AFW, on the other hand, relies on a decision from this district, Ball Corporation v. Xidex Corporation, 705 F. Supp. 1470 (D. Colo. 1988). [9] AFW argues that the court in Ball refused to apply the doctrine to bar a claim based on the tort of unfair competition. This is not a correct statement. In fact, the court, while skeptical that the doctrine applied, eschewed the issue in Ball because the parties had not adequately briefed it. See id. at 1472. Nevertheless, the court assumed for the purpose of argument that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine did apply, but held that the plaintiff had satisfied the requirements for the sham litigation exception to the doctrine. Id. Therefore, Ball provides little authority for the proposition that Noerr-Pennington immunity cannot be extended to a defendant in an unfair competition claim.

Alternatively, AFW posits a fairly elaborate argument that the principles underlying the doctrine are rooted in antitrust law and cannot be extended to other contexts. AFW relies on reasoning in the California Motor Transport and Noerr cases balancing First Amendment principles against the interests protected by federal antitrust law. See California Motor Transp., 404 U.S. at 510; Noerr, 365 U.S. at 137. [10] It goes on to argue that, because the tort of unfair competition is fundamentally [*1522] different from a federal antitrust violation, "the Noerr-Pennington doctrine cannot be automatically applicable to the common law tort of unfair competition." (Br. Opp'n Pl.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 11.) I disagree with this conclusion.

First, in fairness to AFW, few courts have carefully analyzed this issue. As the court observed in Salomon S.A. v. Alpina Sports Corporation:

> It is not settled that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides immunity from unfair competition claims. The Noerr-Pennington trilogy--Noerr Motor Freight, Pennington, and California Motor Transport-- apply the doctrine only in the context of antitrust claims asserted under authority of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq. Alpina does not invoke the Sherman Act, but instead predicates its claim on a common-law unfair competition theory.
>
> Some courts have applied Noerr-Pennington to dismiss common-law claims related to unfair competition. But none of these courts grappled with the issue; each assumed that Noerr-Pennington applied to common-law claims as well as statutory antitrust [11] claims.

737 F. Supp. 720, 724 (D.N.H. 1990). Rather than analyzing the issue itself, however, the court in Salomon followed the same approach as Ball, assuming for the sake of argument that the doctrine applied to Alpina's counterclaim for unfair competition but holding it had presented sufficient evidence that Salomon's action was a sham. See id. at 724-25.

Despite the lack of reasoned authority on this question, there are numerous federal, district and state court cases in which the Noerr-Pennington doctrine has been applied to non-antitrust claims. See, e.g., South Dakota v. Kansas City S. Indus., Inc., 880 F.2d 40, 50-53 (8th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1023, 107 L. Ed. 2d 745, 110 S. Ct. 726 (1990); Sierra Club v. Butz, 349 F. Supp. 934, 938-39 (N.D. Cal. 1972); Pacific Gas & Elec. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 791 P.2d 587, 595-97, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1 (Cal. 1990) (citing cases). These courts recognize that, while the doctrine arose in connection with antitrust cases, it is fundamentally based on First Amendment principles. More than one [12] court has held that the doctrine "is a principal of constitutional law that bars litigation arising from injuries received as a consequence of First Amendment petitioning activity, regardless of the underlying cause of action asserted by the Plaintiffs." Azzar v. Primebank, FSB, 198 Mich. App. 512, 499 N.W.2d 793, 796 (Mich. App. 1993) (citing Webb v. Fury, 167 W.Va. 434, 282 S.E.2d 28, 36-37 (W. Va. 1981)). While criticized as overbroad, see, e.g., Robert A. Zauzmer, Note, The Misapplication of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine in Non-Antitrust Right to Petition Cases, 36 Stan. L. Rev. 1243, 1258 (1984), recent Supreme Court guidance lends credence to this view. [3]

[13] In Professional Real Estate Investors, the Supreme Court established the requirements for the sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. In its analysis, the Court wrote: HN2[] "Whether applying Noerr as an antitrust doctrine or invoking it in other contexts, we have repeatedly reaffirmed that evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transform otherwise legitimate activity into a sham." 113 S. Ct. at 1927 (emphasis added). This statement indicates the Court's view that Noerr-Pennington is not limited to the antitrust arena. In support, the court cited, among other cases, NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Company, 458 U.S. 886, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215, 102 S. Ct. 3409 (1982).

In Claiborne Hardware, the NAACP organized a boycott of white-owned businesses in Claiborne County, Mississippi when their demands for racial equality fell on the deaf ears of white elected officials. The business owners successfully sued the NAACP and other individuals for damages and injunctive relief on three state law conspiracy theories, including one based on the tort of malicious [*1523] interference with business interests. Id. at 891. [14] The tort judgment was upheld by the Mississippi Supreme Court. The United States Supreme Court reversed, holding that the defendant's nonviolent boycott activities--"speech, assembly, association and petition"--were protected by the First Amendment. Id. at 911. It relied heavily on Noerr:

> It is not disputed that a major purpose of the boycott in this case was to influence governmental action. Like the railroads in Noerr, the petitioners certainly foresaw--and directly intended--that the merchants would sustain economic injury as a result of their campaign. Unlike the railroads in that case, however, the purpose of petitioners' campaign was not to destroy legitimate competition. Petitioners sought to vindicate rights of equality and freedom that lie at the heart of the Fourteenth Amendment itself. The right of the States to regulate economic activity could not justify a complete prohibition against a nonviolent, politically motivated boycott designed to force governmental and economic change and to effectuate rights guaranteed by the Constitution itself.

Id. at 914.

Thus Professional Real Estate Investors [15] and Claiborne Hardware support the proposition that HN3[] Noerr-Pennington immunity is a constitutional, not an antitrust, doctrine. Moreover, ignoring principles of federalism

[3] On the other hand, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine has been advocated as a first-line defense to "SLAPP" suits, an acronym coined by University of Denver Professors Penelope Canan and George Pring for Strategic Lawsuits Against Public Participation. See generally Thomas A. Waldman, Comment, SLAPP Suits: Weaknesses in First Amendment Law and in the Court's Responses to Frivolous Litigation, 39 UCLA L. Rev. 979 (April 1992).

and taking the questionable approach of one court, which viewed this as an issue of state law, see Florida Farm Growers Association v. Concerned Citizens, 616 So. 2d 562, 568 (Fla. App. 1993), the result is the same. Colorado courts have twice applied the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to bar state law claims. See Protect Our Mountain Env't, Inc. v. District Court, 677 P.2d 1361, 1365-66 (Colo. 1984) (applying doctrine to abuse of process and civil conspiracy claims); Anchorage Joint Venture v. Anchorage Condominium Ass'n, 670 P.2d 1249 (Colo. App. 1983) (upholding dismissal of negligence, abuse of process and tortious interference with business expectancy claims). Consequently, I hold that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is applicable to AFW's counterclaim for unfair competition.

The same result does not hold as to AFW's counterclaim for "groundless and frivolous" litigation under Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-17-101 to [16] -103 (1987). HN4[] Under this statute, a court may award attorney fees against a litigant whose claims are frivolous or groundless. Apparently, it applies in diversity cases. See Seismic Int'l Research Corp. v. South Ranch Oil Co., 793 F.2d 227, 232 (10th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1089, 94 L. Ed. 2d 153, 107 S. Ct. 1297 (1987); Harrison v. Luse, 760 F. Supp. 1394, 1401 (D. Colo.), aff'd, 951 F.2d 1259 (10th Cir. 1991).

CA offers no explanation why the Noerr-Pennington doctrine bars this counterclaim. In fact, although denominated as a separate counterclaim, it is, in effect, only a request that the court consider whether to impose sanctions against CA for asserting claims lacking substantial justification, which the court may do on its own motion or at the request of a party. Township Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. Arapahoe Roofing & Sheet Metal Co., 844 P.2d 1316, 1318 (Colo. App. 1992). HN5[] "An award is contingent on proof that a claim/defense was, indeed, substantially frivolous and/or groundless." Id. This assessment depends on whether there was any credible [17] evidence to support the claim at trial. Colorado Supply Co. v. Stewart, 797 P.2d 1303, 1307 (Colo. App. 1990). Because an award of attorney fees under the Colorado statute is contingent on there being no evidence at trial, it does not infringe on the right to petition government protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Thus, while CA may obtain the dismissal of AFW's counterclaim under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, it cannot preclude scrutiny of its own claim under the standards of Colorado's attorney fee statute. Therefore, I find that AFW's request for attorney fees is not barred.

2. Application of the "Sham" Exception.

CA is entitled to immunity on AFW's counterclaim for unfair competition unless AFW can demonstrate that CA's litigation is a sham. To do this, HN6[] AFW must first show that CA's claims are "objectively baseless." Professional Real Estate Investors, [*1524] 113 S. Ct. at 1928. Only then is evidence of CA's subjective intent in suing AFW relevant. Id. In Professional Real Estate Investors, this determination was more simple because the predicate facts of the underlying lawsuit were not disputed [18] and summary judgment had been entered against the plaintiff. See id. at 1930. Here, however, the predicate facts of CA's claims are hotly disputed. Nevertheless, applying the standards on summary judgment, AFW has failed to show that CA's litigation is a sham.

Under the first prong of the Noerr-Pennington analysis, AFW puts forth two reasons CA's claims are objectively baseless. First, it argues that CA does not own the SPO programs; instead, it claims they are owned by the independent contractors hired to produce them. Second, AFW argues that because CA's predecessor did not label the SPO programs as trade secrets when providing them to AFW or other licensees, it cannot claim them as proprietary. It cites the deposition of two of CA's witnesses to establish that the SPO programs were developed by independent contractors and that SPO did not label the programs as trade secrets.

AFW's first argument is a red herring. To support its contention, AFW relies on Community for Creative Non-Violence v. Reid, 490 U.S. 730, 104 L. Ed. 2d 811, 109 S. Ct. 2166 (1989). In that case, the Supreme Court held that an independent contractor who produced certain artwork [19] was its author and could claim copyright ownership. Id. at 753. HN7[] Although status as an employee or an independent contractor is relevant to the ownership of a copyright, it is irrelevant to the ownership of a trade secret. These concepts of intellectual property are different. See Southern Miss. Planning & Dev. Dist., Inc. v. Robertson, 660 F. Supp. 1057, 1061 (S.D. Miss. 1986) (copyright protection extends to the particular expression used by the author; trade secrets are the very ideas of the author.) Under the common law of trade secrets,

> HN8[] If an employer pays you to design, the employer owns the fruit of your labor. This common law ownership rule clearly applies to employee ideas and developments which meet the definition of a trade secret, even in the absence of a written contract. . . .
> The rule is now even extended to nonemployment situations, such as when an independent contractor is hired to design or develop a process or machine. Such a contractor is equivalent to an employee hired to develop an idea, so that the results of this work are owned by the hiring company.

2 Melvin F. Jager, Trade Secrets Law [20] § 8.01[1] at 8-2 to -3 (1993); see, e.g., Lamb-Weston, Inc. v. McCain Foods, Ltd., 941 F.2d 970, 972-73 (9th Cir. 1991) (affirming grant of preliminary injunction to potato processor holding trade secret in blade system developed by independent contractor). [4]

[21] Likewise, AFW's contention that CA lost its trade secrets because its predecessor did not label the materials it delivered to AFW and other licensees as such is not dispositive. The issue is whether CA and its predecessor took reasonable measures under the circumstances to protect against unauthorized disclosure of the secrets. Colorado Supply Co., 797 P.2d at 1306. HN10[] Whether the programs themselves were marked confidential is only one factor to be considered. Distribution of software under other confidential restraints may also suffice. See, e.g., Continental Data Sys. v. Exxon Corp., No. 84-2538, 1986 WL 20432, at *2 (E.D. Pa. June 30, 1986) (agreement requiring customers to treat software manual as confidential and practice of distributing software by license [*1525] sufficient to safeguard trade secrets); Management Science of Am., Inc. v. Cyborg, 6 Comp. L. Serv. Rep. 921, 924-25 (Callaghan) (N.D. Ill. 1978) (distribution of software to six hundred licensees does not as a matter of law establish public dissemination of trade secrets). Furthermore, the 1979 Agreement provided that "all materials supplied by SPO are proprietary and trade secrets and [22] are of considerable value. They cannot be reproduced without express written consent of SPO." (Am. Compl., Ex. A at 1.) In addition, AFW and its predecessor were to exercise control over their employees and sublicensees to protect the integrity of the 1979 Agreement, and CA and its predecessor were given certain rights to ensure compliance with the license. [5] Thus, there is evidence that CA and its predecessor took significant steps to protect these trade secrets. For these reasons, AFW has failed to show that CA's claims are objectively baseless, and it has failed to satisfy the first prong of the Noerr-Pennington sham exception.

Even assuming for the purpose of argument that AFW has shown that CA's litigation is objectively baseless, AFW has [23] failed to produce any evidence, under the subjective prong of the sham exception, that CA intended to prejudice AFW's financial interests through this lawsuit. Anticipating AFW's attack, CA supports its motion for summary judgment with reference to the depositions of three officers or former employees of AFW. In their depositions, these witnesses fail to identify any factual basis for AFW's belief that CA is using this litigation for improper purposes, such as to extort a settlement, put AFW out of business or to usurp its market. AFW, in turn, relies on the affidavit of Richard Yeager, the former president of AFW, who relates only that the Chairman of CA told him that CA intended to sue so that CA's attorney, Steven Kahn, could build a new house.

AFW's evidence of CA's subjective intent is irrelevant. Yeager's affidavit goes to CA's intent to benefit from a favorable result of the litigation. HN11[] Under the subjective prong of "sham" analysis, "the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor,' through the 'use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as [24] an anticompetitive weapon.'" Professional Real Estate Investors, 113 S. Ct. at 1928. Thus, AFW has failed to bring

---

[4] Moreover, even if the "work for hire" concept applies in trade secret misappropriation cases, these deposition excerpts do not conclusively establish whether the persons that SPO hired to do "grunt coding" and other programming were employees or independent contractors. See Community for Creative Non-Violence, 490 U.S. at 751-52 (listing factors court must consider to determine whether a hired party is an employee). Assuming they were independent contractors, SPO does not necessarily lose all ownership in the SPO programs. See id. at 738, 753 HN9[] (employer of independent contractor owns copyright in specially commissioned work and joint copyright in work merged into inseparable parts of a unitary whole.)

[5] CA argues that the same provisions were contained in all of its agreements with other licensees, and that the licensees were required to treat the SPO programs as proprietary and confidential. CA fails to support this contention with reference to any facts of record.

forth any relevant evidence to satisfy the second, subjective prong of the "sham" exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity. Accordingly, CA's motion for summary judgment on AFW's unfair competition counterclaim is granted.

B. Defendant AFW's Motion to Reconsider Minute Order Modifying Pretrial Order.

On April 5, 1993, I granted CA's motion to amend the pretrial order to reflect that CA had located the SPO programs it had provided to SCS under the 1979 Agreement. AFW moved for reconsideration of this order on April 21, 1993, or in the alternative, for the reopening of discovery, since up to this point it had proceeded on the assumption that the SPO programs were not available. I granted the motion to reconsider, reaffirmed my order permitting amendment of the pretrial order and reopened discovery until July 1, 1993.

On July 15, 1993, AFW filed the instant motion, again requesting reconsideration of my order amending the pretrial order. AFW argues that CA still has not produced a copy of the original programs provided under the 1979 [25] Agreement, only a tape produced three months after the delivery would have taken place. It contends that "CA has never been able to produce a copy of the computer programs licensed to AFW in 1979, or an exact copy of any updated programs, despite its allegations that it was these programs that AFW allegedly copied, an allegation AFW vigorously denies." (Mot. Recons. at 4.) Therefore, it argues that the pretrial order should not be amended because the SPO programs are still lost.

[*1526] CA's response to AFW's latest motion to reconsider is more precise. CA states that its predecessor, SPO, delivered the first version of the SPO programs, Version 1.0, in mid-1979. Thereafter, it delivered Versions 1.5, 2.0, 2.1 and 2.2, which were "bug fixes" and enhancements to the original software. CA acknowledges that it was unable to locate Version 1.0 during the original period of discovery in this case. It finally located this software in February 1993 and provided a copy to AFW. After AFW's expert analyzed the tape, he concluded that 79 of the 306 programs on the tape were in come way modified in October, 1979, after the original tape would have been supplied. CA argues that this fact should have no [26] bearing on the case. CA seeks to put the blame on AFW, arguing that it did not save the original copies of the SPO programs either.

HN12[] Whether to allow amendment of the pretrial order is a matter in my discretion. See Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Olympic Fire Corp., 986 F.2d 416, 418 (10th Cir. 1993). Modification should be permitted "when the danger of surprise is small and a failure to amend might result in an injustice to the moving party." 6A Charles A. Wright, et. al., Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1527 at 287 (1990); see also Hull v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc., 812 F.2d 584, 588 (10th Cir. 1987).

In my mind, the dispute over CA's alleged loss of the SPO programs has grown out of proportion to its significance. To prove either of its claims, CA must show that AFW copied its software. It must make some comparison of its code and the code produced by AFW. If later versions of the SPO programs would indicate that copying took place, then CA has made out a prima facie case, regardless of Version 1.0. In fact, in the hearing on these motions, CA indicated this to be its strategy. To the extent CA may rely on Version 1.0 for some other [27] purpose at trial, AFW has not been prejudiced. It has had an adequate opportunity to examine and conduct additional discovery on Version 1.0. Therefore, I deny AFW's most recent motion to reconsider.

C. Plaintiff CA's Motion in Limine.

1. Evidence of the Parties' Financial Condition.

CA's first contention in this motion in limine is that AFW should not be permitted to introduce evidence regarding either party's financial condition. Specifically, CA seeks disallowance of any reference to CA's size, wealth, or financial condition, including its Annual Report and Form 10-K. Likewise, with respect to AFW, CA argues that AFW should be prevented from introducing any evidence of its size, wealth or financial condition, including its income and financial statements. CA argues that this evidence would unfairly prejudice the jury under Fed. R. Evid. 403. AFW, not surprisingly, argues that evidence of both companies' financial condition is relevant to its counterclaim for unfair competition, CA's damages for breach of contract and misappropriation of trade secrets, its entitlement to punitive damages and its request for injunctive relief.

Since I grant summary judgment against AFW [28] on its counterclaim for unfair competition, evidence of the parties' relative financial strength is no longer relevant to show CA's allegedly improper motives in bringing this litigation. Whether evidence of AFW's profits is relevant to the issue of CA's damages depends on the proper measure of damages in this case. AFW contends that CA's damages are measured by the profits AFW made in selling the PC-Fund and Fundware software allegedly containing CA's trade secrets. CA, on the other hand, asserts that AFW must be held responsible for the royalties provided for in the 1979 Agreement. CA has the better position.

HN13[] The proper measure of damages for misappropriation of trade secrets case can be elusive, and courts are encouraged to be "flexible" and "imaginative." University Computing Co. v. Lykes-Youngstown Corp., 504 F.2d 518, 530 (5th Cir. 1974).

> Because the primary concern in most cases is to measure the value to the defendant of what he actually obtained from the plaintiff, the proper measure is to calculate what the parties would have agreed to as a fair price for licensing the defendant to put [*1527] the trade secret to the use the defendant intended at [29] the time the misappropriation took place.

Id. at 539; see also Vitro Corp. of Am. v. Hall Chem. Co., 292 F.2d 678, 683 (6th Cir. 1961). This is, in essence, the "reasonable royalty" rule, which most courts now apply in trade secret cases. See Taco Cabana Int'l, Inc. v. Two Pesos, Inc., 932 F.2d 1113, 1128 (5th Cir. 1991) ("trade secret cases typically embrace some form of royalty"), aff'd, 120 L. Ed. 2d 615, 112 S. Ct. 2753 (1992); Metallurgical Indus., Inc. v. Fourtek, Inc., 790 F.2d 1195, 1208 (5th Cir. 1986).

HN14[] Determination of a reasonable royalty is simplified in cases where there is already a royalty agreement in place. Hence, "the first inquiry of the courts generally has been whether there is any factual basis, such as a royalty agreement . . . from which one might legitimately determine the value which the parties themselves actually assigned to the misappropriated information." Michael A. Rosenhouse, Annotation, Proper Measure of Damages and Elements of Damages for Misappropriation of Trade Secrets, 11 A.L.R.4th 12, [30] § 2 at 20 (1982). If there is, the contractually established royalty will be the best measure of the parties' intent. See University Computing, 504 F.2d at 538 (damages subject to exact measurement where parties have agreed on licensing price); Biodynamic Technologies, Inc. v. Chattanooga Corp., 658 F. Supp. 266, 269-70 (S.D. Fla. 1987) (royalty in agreement served as exact measure of damages in trade secret case); cf. Water Technologies V. Calco, Ltd., 714 F. Supp. 899, 904 n. 2 (N.D. Ill. 1989) (in patent case, established royalty best measure of reasonable royalty). At minimum, it provides the baseline for a damages award. See Mineral Deposits, Ltd. v. Zigan, 773 P.2d 606, 608 (Colo. App. 1988) HN15[] (plaintiff in misappropriation of trade secrets case entitled to full measure of his loss, an amount no less than all profits the defendant realized from his tortious conduct); cf. Nickson Indus., Inc. v. Rol Mfg. Co., 847 F.2d 795, 789 (Fed. Cir. 1988) (reasonable royalty for patented equipment may be greater than an established royalty [31] where widespread infringement makes established royalty artificially low).

Although there is no case law directly on point, two authorities support the application of the reasonable royalty rate under Colorado law. First, in Management Recruiters of Boulder, Inc. v. Miller, the court awarded damages in a trade secret claim based on a contractual liquidated damages provision, indicating Colorado courts would similarly enforce a contractual royalty provision governing trade secrets. See 762 P.2d 763, 766 (Colo. App. 1988). Second, under current Colorado law, HN16[] "in lieu of damages measured by any other methods, the damages caused by a misappropriation may be measured by imposition of liability for a reasonable royalty for a misappropriator's unauthorized disclosure or use of a trade secret." Colo. Rev. Stat. § 7-74-104(1) (1986). While this statute, Colorado's adoption of the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, does not apply because the misappropriation in this case occurred before the effective date of the Act, see id. § 7-74-101 editor's note, the Act nevertheless reflects "basic principles of common law trade secret protection" and "better reasoned cases [32] concerning the remedies for trade secret misappropriation," and is persuasive evidence of the common law rule on damages in trade secret cases. See Uniform Trade Secrets Act, 14 U.L.A. 433, 434, 435 (1990) (prefatory note).

For these reasons, I agree with CA that the "reasonable royalty" measure of damages applies in this case. HN17[] Under this rule, the amount of royalties is determined on the basis of the volume of the defendant's actual sales of trade secret product. Michael A. Rosenhouse, supra, § 34. The defendant need not have actually turned a profit on that product. See Structural Dynamics Research Corp. v. Engineering Mechanics Research Corp., 401 F. Supp. 1102, 1119 (E.D. Mich. 1985); 1 Melvin F. Jager, supra, § 7.03[2][a] at 7-59 ("The concept of 'use' of a trade secret by the misappropriator does not necessarily depend upon the generation of a dollar profit.") Here, if CA prevails on liability, it would be entitled to its contractual royalties measured by AFW's actual sales of the PC-Fund and Fundware software. Evidence of AFW's profits is therefore not relevant [*1528] to the calculation of CA's damages unless the contractual royalty is not [33] a reasonable royalty because AFW's profits on these products were unusually high. CA does not claim this to be the case.

AFW further argues that Colorado law permits it to introduce evidence of its financial strength to aid the jury in assessing punitive damages, if any, relying on Leidholt v. District Court, 619 P.2d 768, 770 (Colo. 1980). CA disputes this contention, arguing that the case law upon which AFW relies was abrogated by Colorado law adopted several months before this case was filed. CA refers to § 13-21-102, which went into effect as to actions accruing on or after July 1, 1986. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-21-102 editor's note (1986 Supp.). HN18[] Under this statute, "in any civil action in which exemplary damages may be awarded, evidence of the income or net worth of a party shall not be considered in determining the appropriateness or amount of such damages." [6] Id. Accordingly, evidence of AFW's financial condition is not relevant to the issue of punitive damages either.

[34] Finally, AFW asserts that evidence of its financial condition is relevant to CA's claim for injunctive relief because this claim "must be evaluated on the economic consequence to AFW." (Def.'s Resp. Pl.'s Mot. Limine at 5.) Nevertheless, CA's HN20[] claim for injunctive relief is a matter for my determination, not the jury's. Any financial data relevant to this claim will be presented to me after the jury reaches a verdict, not during trial. Compare Nelson v. National Fund Raising Consultants, Inc., 64 Wash. App. 184, 823 P.2d 1165, 1169 (Wash. App.) (factors relevant to permanent injunction for trade secret misappropriation include the relative hardship likely to result to the defendant if injunction is granted), aff'd in relevant part, 842 P.2d 473 (Wash. 1992) with Rockwell Graphic Sys., Inc. v. DEV Indus., Inc., No. 84 C 6746, 1993 WL 286484 at *6 (N.D. Ill. July 29, 1993) (result that defendant might be put out of business if injunction issued would be due to defendant's unlawful actions, not the court's legitimate exercise of its discretion in awarding equitable relief). For these reasons, CA's request for the preclusion of evidence [35] of either party's financial condition is granted.

2. Evidence that CA Lost the SPO Programs.

CA next requests that I limit AFW from presenting any evidence at trial regarding CA's alleged "loss" of the earliest version of the SPO programs, Version 1.0. As noted before, CA has recovered a copy of Version 1.0, but 79 of the 306 programs therein were dated October 1979, indicating that these programs were in some way modified after SPO would have provided the SPO programs to AFW's predecessor in the summer of 1979.

AFW responds that evidence that CA lost the original version of the SPO programs is central to its case. It explains that, since CA copyrighted Version 1.0 of the SPO programs, they "have been publicly disclosed and contain no trade secrets." (Def.'s Resp. Pl.'s Mot. in Limine at 7.) On this assumption, if the later versions of the SPO programs contain much of the same code, these versions would likewise not be protected as trade secrets. Therefore, AFW argues, it must be able to compare Version 1.0 with the later versions and should be able to note the fact that it is unable to do so. Additionally, it argues that it should be entitled to a presumption that the lost version [36] of the SPO programs would have been favorable to its case.

---

[6] AFW argues that this statute does not apply because CA's cause of action accrued before its effective date. HN19[] Under the common law "discovery rule" and the statute codifying it, see Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 13-80-108(6), -108(8) (1987), CA's contract and tort claims accrued when it discovered or should have discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence the breach of contract or tortious conduct giving rise to its claims. Applying the rule to this case, CA's cause of action accrued in the fall of 1986, when it was able to make an actual comparison of its and AFW's code, leading it to believe that plagiarism had occurred. AFW's contention that this rule was not adopted as to contract or tort cases until July 1, 1987, after this case was filed, is simply incorrect. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-80-108 (1986 Supp.).

First, in the hearing on this motion, counsel for CA represented on the record that the [*1529] tape used to copyright Version 1.0 was the same one provided to AFW for its inspection which contained the 79 updated programs. Therefore, AFW is simply not prejudiced by the alleged loss of earlier versions of these programs.

Second, because this issue is recurring, I note that CA's assertion that the SPO programs are trade secrets is not necessarily inconsistent with their registration under the copyright laws. HN21[] Copyrighting intellectual property does not automatically vitiate its trade secret status. See generally, 2 Melvin F. Jager, supra, § 10.02. CA copyrighted the SPO programs under a procedure permitting the registration of a copyright by limited deposit to protect trade secrets. See 37 C.F.R. § 202.20(c)(vii)(A)(2). Under this procedure, only a portion of the copyrighted code is actually on file with the Copyright Office. Id.; see, e.g., Fonar Corp. v. Deccaid Servs., Inc., 983 F.2d 427, 428 (2d Cir. 1993); Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Group, No. 88-0033- S, 1993 WL 153739, [37] at *15 (D. Mass. May 11, 1993)

HN22[] To prove that CA could no longer claim that the SPO programs were trade secrets, AFW would have to show that it or someone in the industry actually learned of CA's trade secrets by reviewing the limited information on file with the Copyright Office. See Murray v. Bank One Columbus, N.A., 64 Ohio App. 3d 784, 582 N.E.2d 1124, 1130 (Ohio App. 1990). AFW has not preserved this issue in the pretrial order. It has argued only that CA's trade secret claim is preempted by the Copyright Act. (See Pretrial Order at 5.) That proposition fails as a matter of law. See 2 Melvin F. Jager, supra, § 10.02 at 10-12 HN23[] (question of preemption of state trade secret law under Copyright Act moot after passage of 1980 revisions to Act); cf. Gates Rubber Co. v. Bando Am., Inc., 798 F. Supp. 1499, 1520-22 (D. Colo. 1992) (finding no preemption based on comparison of trade secret claims with copyright protection). Therefore, I grant CA's request that AFW be precluded from referring to CA's "loss" of Version 1.0. AFW shall be permitted, however, to note that 79 programs of Version 1.0 were updated in October 1987 to the extent [38] this issue is otherwise relevant to AFW's defense.

3. CA's Waiver of Copyright Claim.

CA argues that AFW should be precluded from mentioning CA's waiver of its copyright claim, as it would only confuse the jury about the remaining claims in this case. CA waived its copyright claim because at that time it was unable to locate the original tape of Version 1.0 which it copyrighted. AFW argues evidence of CA's waiver of its copyright claim is relevant because CA may not seek trade secret protection of copyrighted programs. As I note above, this is a dubious proposition. For other reasons, however, AFW's reliance on CA's withdrawal of its copyright claim is misfocused.

Here, CA seeks to preclude evidence that it withdrew its copyright infringement claim, not evidence that it actually copyrighted the SPO programs. The two issues are distinct. Nothing prevents AFW from introducing evidence to show that CA copyrighted Version 1.0 of the SPO programs, so long as it is relevant to AFW's defense. Reference to CA's earlier complaint is unnecessary for this purpose and is improper. HN24[] While inconsistent allegations in different lawsuits are admissible, such as where the plaintiff files separate [39] lawsuits alleging different defendants were responsible for the same injuries, this rule does not apply to amended pleadings in the same lawsuit, as it interferes with the right to plead claims alternatively under Rule 8(e). See Dugan v. EMS Helicopters, Inc., 915 F.2d 1428, 1431-34 (10th Cir. 1990); Garman v. Griffin, 666 F.2d 1156, 1158-59 (8th Cir. 1981). Accordingly, CA's motion is granted as to evidence that it waived its copyright claim.

4. AFW Equitably Estopped from Contesting that SPO Programs are CA's Trade Secrets.

CA argues that AFW should be equitably estopped from contesting CA's claim that the SPO programs are trade secrets because AFW's predecessor acknowledged this in the 1979 Agreement. AFW responds that CA did not affirmatively plead equitable estoppel and has waived this defense. CA replies that [*1530] it was not required to plead this issue, since it arises in response to a defense raised by AFW. Disregarding CA's alleged failure to properly plead equitable estoppel, I find that the doctrine does not apply on these facts.

HN25[] Under Colorado law, the doctrine of equitable estoppel is employed to prevent manifest [40] injustice. Committee for Better Health Care v. Meyer, 830 P.2d 884, 891 (Colo. 1992). In order for the doctrine to apply, the party to be estopped must know the true facts and intend that its conduct be acted upon by the party asserting the defense. Dove v. Delgado, 808 P.2d 1270, 1275 (Colo. 1991). Thus, it focuses on one party's conduct or representations which induce another party, who does not know the true facts, to rely on the conduct or misrepresentations. Id.; In re Marriage of Dennin, 811 P.2d 449, 450 (Colo. App. 1991).

Here, AFW signed a contract containing CA's representation that the SPO programs were trade secrets. CA is the party in possession of the true facts regarding its trade secrets, not AFW. It may not estop AFW. Nevertheless, CA argues that "numerous cases" have invoked the doctrine in these circumstances to bar a party from denying the existence of trade secrets. But see Gary Van Zeeland Talent, Inc. v. Sandas, 84 Wis. 2d 202, 267 N.W.2d 242, 249 (Wis. 1978) (estoppel based on contractual acknowledgement of trade secret status not appropriate in restraint [41] of trade case for public policy reasons). These cases are distinguishable. In two, the party estopped had actually developed the trade secrets sought to be protected. See Ultra-Life Laboratories, Inc. v. Eames, 240 Mo. App. 851, 221 S.W.2d 224 (Mo. App. 1949) (defendant's poultry culling method); Germo Mfg. Co. v. Combs, 240 S.W.2d 872 (Mo. App. 1922) (defendant's poultry tonic). Furthermore, in most of the cases upon which CA relies, see also In re Uniservices, Inc., 517 F.2d 492 (7th Cir. 1975), the court focused primarily on the defendant's conduct over several years in acknowledging the proprietary nature of the product or process. CA is not in a similar position here. Therefore, I deny CA's motion that AFW be equitably estopped from contesting the trade secret status of the SPO programs based on language in the 1979 Agreement.

5. Reference to Injunctive Relief.

CA's final request in this motion in limine is that AFW be precluded from mentioning CA's claim for injunctive relief since it is an equitable one for the court's determination. AFW responds that the jury must determine what, if any, portion of [42] AFW's software contains CA's proprietary information so that the court can fashion the scope of the injunction. Therefore, AFW posits, the jury must be told that CA desires injunctive relief.

I disagree with AFW's position. To assess damages, the jury will no doubt be required to decide whether either the PC-Fund or Fundware programs, or both, were copied from CA's code. Then I will determine, if necessary, whether to enjoin AFW's distribution of PC-Fund or Fundware based on the jury's conclusions. The jury need not be advised of CA's equitable claim. Therefore, I grant the motion in limine as to reference to CA's claim for injunctive relief. [7]

[43] [*1531] D. Defendant AFW's Motion in Limine.

1. Dayton Deposition Exhibit 231.

AFW's first contention in this motion in limine is that CA should be precluded from introducing Exhibit 231 to the deposition of Jerome Dayton, AFW's managing agent. [8] Exhibit 231 is a letter dated August 18, 1998 from Dayton to attorney Gary Peterson containing allegedly privileged communications. AFW claims that it inadvertently provided Exhibit 231 to CA and that, as soon as this was discovered, AFW promptly asserted the privilege.

---

[7] CA raised four additional issues in its motion for limine. First, CA requested that evidence of either party's violation of the protective order be disallowed. This request is moot in light of the stipulation regarding alleged violations of the protective order filed April 20, 1993.

Second, CA requested I limit AFW from asserting at trial that CA is not the owner of all right, title and interest of any assets transferred to it from SPO. At the hearing on these motions, AFW agreed that it will not challenge the "chain of title" of these assets. In other words, AFW concedes that CA received whatever assets SPO had.

Third, CA sought an order limiting evidence of its settlement with the individual defendants in this case. The parties indicated in their briefs and at the hearing that there is no disagreement that the terms of CA's settlement are not admissible.

Fourth, CA has withdrawn its request that it be entitled to a presumption that the versions of the PC-Fund and Fundware programs that AFW destroyed would have demonstrated that AFW copied CA's code and concedes that issue should be addressed at the jury instruction conference.

[8] AFW also sought to preclude CA's introduction of any charts prepared by its witness, James Schenck, included as Exhibits 292-295 to the deposition of John O'Brien. At the hearing on these motions, AFW withdrew this request.

While these contentions are true, CA promptly moved to compel production of this letter. In an order dated November 21, 1991, Magistrate Judge Borchers granted the motion to compel, concluding that AFW had waived the privilege by allowing its expert, Ronald Mums, to see the letter. [44] See Boring v. Keller, 97 F.R.D. 404, 406 (D. Colo. 1983). AFW putatively appealed this ruling in a motion in limine filed on December 3, 1991. That motion was mooted by Judge Carrigan's entry of the pretrial order on September 25, 1992, which lists Exhibit 231 as one of CA's trial exhibits. (See Pretrial Order, Ex. A at 18.) Accordingly, Judge Carrigan's ruling is the law of the case and the pretrial order is controlling. Therefore, I deny the motion in limine as to Exhibit 231.

2. Financial or Other Evidence Provided During Settlement Negotiations.

AFW's second request in this motion in limine is that CA not be allowed to introduce certain financial information provided by AFW during settlement negotiations, relying on Fed. R. Evid. 408. These negotiations took place after CA had obtained a default judgment against AFW on the issue of liability. AFW provided CA with documents containing revenue and related statistics for certain types of software. The titles on some of these documents (indicating figures for software incorporating "SPO code") could be construed as an admission that AFW copied CA's software. AFW requests that these documents, [45] or at least their titles, be precluded from evidence. CA responds that AFW produced the same documents with the same titles during discovery (see Pl.'s Exs. 95-106), and therefore cannot claim the protection of Rule 408.

Rule 408 of the Federal Rules of Evidence HN26[] limits the introduction of evidence regarding offers or acceptance of compromises or settlements and conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations. It does not, however, "require the exclusion of any evidence otherwise discoverable merely because it is presented in the course of compromise negotiations." Fed. R. Evid. 408. Rule 408 is a preclusionary rule, not a discovery rule. It is meant to limit the introduction of evidence of settlement negotiations at trial and is not a broad discovery privilege. NAACP Legal Defense Fund v. United States Dept. of Justice, 612 F. Supp. 1143, 1146 (D.D.C. 1985). Information which may not be admissible at trial under the rule is still discoverable so long as that information may lead to the discovery of other admissible evidence. See Manufacturing Sys., Inc. v. Computer Technology, Inc., 99 F.R.D. 335, 336 (E.D. Wis. 1983). [46]

Here, AFW has not waived the protection of Rule 408 by producing the same documents it used in the parties' settlement negotiations during discovery. The titles of the documents could be construed as an admission of liability and are protected under Rule 408. The tabular information contained in the documents, however, is evidence that is otherwise discoverable. Therefore, AFW's request for the exclusion of the documents containing prejudicial titles is granted in part and denied in part. CA shall be permitted to introduce these documents into evidence subject to the requirement that all prejudicial titles be redacted. The parties shall attempt to reach agreement on the redaction before trial. Any dispute shall be promptly submitted to me for a ruling. Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED THAT Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment as to Defendant's [*1532] counterclaims is GRANTED as to the counterclaim for unfair competition and DENIED as to the request for the imposition of attorney fees under Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 13-17-101 to -103; and

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT Defendant's most recent motion to reconsider my order granting Plaintiff's motion to amend pretrial order is DENIED; and

IT IS FURTHER [47] ORDERED THAT Plaintiff's motion in limine is GRANTED as to (1) evidence of CA's size, wealth and financial condition, (2) evidence of AFW's size, wealth and financial condition, (3) evidence as to CA's loss of the SPO programs, except as to evidence that Version 1.0 contains 79 programs altered in October, 1979, (4) evidence of CA's waiver of its copyright claim, (5) reference to CA's claim for injunctive relief;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT Plaintiff's motion in limine is DENIED as to (1) CA's request that AFW be equitably estopped from contesting the trade secret status of the SPO programs; and

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT Defendant's motion is limine is GRANTED in part as to Plaintiff's Exhibits 95-106 as further explained herein and DENIED as to Dayton Deposition Exhibit 231.

Dated this 26th day of August, 1993 at Denver, Colorado.

JOHN L. KANE, JR., U.S. SENIOR DISTRICT COURT JUDGE

Field v. First Nat'l Bank

Appellate Court of Illinois, Fifth District

August 26, 1993, Filed

NO. 5-91-0706

Reporter

249 Ill. App. 3d 822 *; 619 N.E.2d 1296 ; 1993 Ill. App. LEXIS 1305 ; 189 Ill. Dec. 247 ****

ROBERT FIELD, Administrator of the Estate of Raymond Ewell Field, Deceased, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF HARRISBURG, a National Banking Corporation, and PATSY FIELD WASSON, Defendants-Appellees

Subsequent History: [1] Rehearing denied September 30, 1993.

Prior History: Appeal from the Circuit Court of Saline County. No. 88-L-21. Honorable Arlie O. Boswell, Judge Presiding.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

statute of limitations, checks, deposited, conversion, partial summary judgment, course of conduct, five-year, certified question, trial court, commencement, transactions, questions, cashed

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Property Damages > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Defenses

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > ... > Statute of Limitations > Begins to Run > Continuing Violations

HN1[] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

Ill. Code Civ. P. § 13-205 provides for a five-year statute of limitations to recover the possession of personal property or damages for the detention or conversion thereof. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 110, para. 13-205 (1987). Where a tort involves a continued repeated injury, the limitation period does not begin until the date of the last injury or when the tortious act ceased.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Where a continuing "conspiracy" is involved the statute of limitations under the appropriate antitrust law begins to run from the date of the last overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy which allegedly causes damage to the plaintiff.

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN3[] Courts, Authority to Adjudicate

The court should not resolve a question merely for the sake of setting a precedent to govern subsequent cases.

Counsel: Ronald R. Eckiss, of Harris and Lambert, of Marion, for appellant.

Thomas J. Wolf, Jr., P.C., of Harrisburg, for appellee First National Bank of Harrisburg.

Judges: GOLDENHERSH, CHAPMAN, RARICK

Opinion by: GOLDENHERSH

Opinion

[*823] [1297] [*248] JUSTICE GOLDENHERSH delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, Robert Field, administrator of the estate of Raymond Ewell Field, deceased, appeals from an order of the circuit court of Saline County entering partial summary judgments in favor of defendants, The First National Bank of Harrisburg (hereinafter Bank) and Patsy Field Wasson (hereinafter Wasson). Plaintiff requested that the trial court certify three questions for interlocutory appeal, pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 308 (134 Ill. 2d R. 308). The trial court granted plaintiff's motion, and the following three questions were certified for review by this court: (1) whether the alleged course of conduct was one transaction or numerous separate transactions for purposes of the commencement of the running of the applicable statute of limitations; (2) in respect to [2] when the statute of limitations commenced running as to the alleged transactions, did the commencement of the running of the statute of limitations occur on the date of the alleged conversions or on the date of the actual discovery of the alleged conversions by the personal representative of the estate of Robert Ewell Field, deceased; and (3) is the appropriate determination of the issue of the statute of limitations in this case to bar the prosecution of any and all claims for alleged acts of conversion that occurred prior to March 23, 1983. We reverse and remand.

I

This is a family dispute involving plaintiff, son of Raymond Ewell Field, and Wasson, daughter of Raymond Ewell Field. Plaintiff filed a two-count complaint against defendants on March 23, 1988, seeking to recover funds that were allegedly improperly obtained by Wasson. Both counts allege that from January 1, 1980, until March 14, 1984, the date of the death of Raymond Ewell Field, Wasson deposited checks endorsed by her father which were restricted by the words "For Deposit Only" into her own account at the Bank. Raymond Ewell Field's name did not appear on the account. Field resided in a nursing home from the late 1970's [3] until his death in 1984. Count I alleged that the actions on the part of defendants amounted to wilful and wanton misconduct, and count II alleged that the actions of defendants constituted conversion.

[1298] [*249] The evidence deposition of Linda Watson, a vice president at the Bank, is included in the record. According to Watson, Wasson opened [*824] two accounts at the Bank. The first was account No. 67-2351, opened on July 5, 1974. Originally, account No. 67-2351 was in Wasson's name only. By January 27, 1981, the account was held in the names of Patsy Field Wasson, John F. Wasson, and John F. Wasson II. A second account, No. 67-2300, was also held in the name of Wasson at the Bank. Numerous checks made payable to Raymond E. Field were deposited into both accounts by Wasson. Most of Raymond E. Field's checks went into account No. 67-2351. Linda Watson testified about checks that were drawn on the account. For example, a check for $ 125 made payable to "Cash" was cashed by the Bank. Wasson also made payments out of that account on notes on her car and on a note held by her son. Linda Watson further testified that cancelled checks and deposit slips went to Wasson. None would have been sent to Raymond [4] E. Field, as his name did not appear on the accounts. As far as Watson knew, Raymond E. Field never did any banking through her employer.

Plaintiff knew that his sister, Wasson, took care of their father's business affairs and had been doing so since his father entered a nursing home in the late 1970's. Between January 1, 1980, and March 14, 1984, plaintiff's father received monthly pension checks from the Veterans' Administration, the Social Security Administration, and the Black Lung Fund. These checks were delivered in his father's name to Wasson's mail box. Raymond E. Field did not have a post office box. Prior to his father's death, plaintiff did not know about the accounts at the defendant Bank and did not know that his father's name was not on the accounts to which his checks were deposited. Plaintiff agreed that his father was mentally sharp up until his death. Plaintiff and his father did not discuss financial affairs. Plaintiff did receive gifts out of the accounts in question from his father, which were signed by Wasson. Plaintiff never questioned why such checks were signed by Wasson but just accepted that this was the way it was done.

Both defendants filed motions for [5] partial summary judgment, arguing that all alleged acts of conversion that arose prior to March 23, 1983, are barred pursuant to the applicable five-year statute of limitations. (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1987, ch. 110, par. 13-205.) The trial court agreed and granted partial summary judgments for both the Bank and Wasson. Plaintiff appeals from those orders of the trial court granting partial summary judgments for defendants, and we are asked to consider the three questions previously set forth.

II

The first question we are asked to address is whether the alleged [*825] course of conduct was one transaction or numerous separate transactions for purposes of commencement of the running of the applicable statute of limitations.

Plaintiff argues that the complaint filed herein clearly alleges a four-year course of conduct in which both defendants allowed restrictively endorsed pension checks for Raymond E. Field to be deposited into accounts that did not bear his name. According to plaintiff, the deposits were made on a monthly basis, in the same manner, to the same accounts over a four-year period, thus establishing an ongoing "scheme, plan, conspiracy or the like." Plaintiff discovered this course [6] of conduct after his father's death on March 14, 1984. Plaintiff commenced this action on March 23, 1988, within five years of his father's death, thus within the applicable five-year statute of limitations.

(See Ill. Rev. Stat. 1987, ch. 110, par. 13-205.) Defendants respond that each allegedly converted check constituted a separate cause of action and no facts were alleged or shown which would transform the deposits into anything more than a series of isolated transactions. We agree with plaintiff that the alleged course of conduct was one continuous transaction or scheme for purposes of the commencement of the statute of limitations.

HN1[] Section 13-205 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for a five-year statute of [1299] [*250] limitations to recover the possession of personal property or damages for the detention or conversion thereof. (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1987, ch. 110, par. 13-205.) While we are unable to find any cases in which a series of checks cashed is said to constitute a single transaction for purposes of the running of the statute of limitations, we have found some cases to give us guidance in this area. For example, the law is clear that where a tort involves a continued repeated injury, [7] the limitation period does not begin until the date of the last injury or when the tortious act ceased. (Gass v. Metro-East Sanitary District (1989), 186 Ill. App. 3d 1077, 1084, 542 N.E.2d 1229, 1234, 134 Ill. Dec. 722; Anderson v. Sutter (1983), 119 Ill. App. 3d 1070, 458 N.E.2d 39, 75 Ill. Dec. 871; City of Rock Falls v. Chicago Title & Trust Co. (1973), 13 Ill. App. 3d 359, 300 N.E.2d 331.) Moreover, a somewhat similar situation to the one presented here is found in Sommer v. United Savings Life Insurance Co. (1984), 128 Ill. App. 3d 808, 471 N.E.2d 606, 84 Ill. Dec. 77. In that case, the plaintiffs in count I of their complaint alleged a scheme by their insurance company to defraud. The scheme consisted of a series of misrepresentations which occurred from September 1974, when the first policy was issued, to at least November 1975. The plaintiffs' complaint alleged misrepresentations which induced reliance and injury as late as December 1975. (Sommer, 128 Ill. App. 3d at 817, 471 N.E.2d at [*826] 613.) The Sommer [8] court determined that under this alleged scheme, the applicable five-year statute of limitations did not begin to run until December 1975, and thus the complaint filed in October 1979 was not barred. (Sommer, 128 Ill. App. 3d at 817, 471 N.E.2d at 613-14.) Likewise, under Federal antitrust laws it is well settled that HN2[] where a continuing "conspiracy" is involved the statute of limitations under the appropriate antitrust law begins to run from the date of the last overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy which allegedly causes damage to the plaintiff. See, e.g., Garelick v. Goerlich's, Inc. (6th Cir. 1963), 323 F.2d 854; Saunders v. National Basketball Association (N.D. Ill. 1972), 348 F. Supp. 649.

We have reviewed plaintiff's two-count complaint herein. Contrary to the trial court's determination, we believe plaintiff alleged facts sufficient to show an ongoing "scheme, plan, conspiracy, or the like" which would transform the deposits into what could be considered a single transaction. The checks were cashed by Wasson over a continuous four-year period, but every one was made [9] payable to her father, Raymond E. Field. Furthermore, all the checks were restrictively endorsed with the words "For Deposit Only." Nevertheless, the accounts into which these checks were deposited did not bear Raymond E. Field's name, and he received no information concerning the accounts from the defendant Bank. Therefore, in answer to the first certified question, we hold that the alleged course of conduct is one transaction and that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the date on which the last pension check was cashed by Wasson.

III

Our determination of the first certified question also determines our answer to the third certified question, namely, that it is not appropriate to bar any and all claims for alleged acts of conversion that occurred prior to March 23, 1983. The trial court ruled that because plaintiff's complaint was not filed until March 23, 1988, all banking transactions that occurred prior to March 23, 1983, were barred by the five-year statute of limitations. (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1987, ch. 110, par. 13-205.) Because we have determined that defendants' actions constituted one ongoing transaction, we believe the statute of limitations did not commence [10] running until the last of Raymond E. Field's pension checks was cashed by Wasson. Plaintiff, therefore, filed his complaint well within the five-year statute of limitations, and none of it should be barred. Accordingly, the trial court erred in granting partial summary judgments for defendants.

[*827] [1300] [*251] IV

Because of our determination as to certified questions (1) and (3), we need not answer the second certified question. When it becomes apparent that an opinion on a question of law cannot affect the result as to the parties or controversy in the case before it, HN3[] the court should not resolve the question merely for the sake of setting a precedent to govern subsequent cases. (Bluthardt v. Breslin (1979), 74 Ill. 2d 246, 251, 384 N.E.2d 1309, 1311, 24 Ill. Dec. 151.) Here, it does not matter when the alleged wrong was discovered by plaintiff because we do not believe there is a statute of limitations problem. We therefore decline to answer certified question number (2).

For the foregoing reasons, the order of the circuit court of Saline County granting partial summary judgments for defendants is reversed, and the cause is remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with [11] this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

CHAPMAN, P.J., and RARICK, J., concur.

Houston Mercantile Exch. Corp. v. Dailey Petroleum Servs. Corp.

Court of Appeals of Texas, Fourteenth District, Houston

August 26, 1993, Rendered ; August 26, 1993, Filed

No. B14-92-00818-CV

Reporter

1993 Tex. App. LEXIS 2358 *; 1993 WL 322901

HOUSTON MERCANTILE EXCHANGE CORPORATION, D/B/A HOUMEX OILFIELD SUPPLY, GARY A. BOYD, STEVE GREEN, LEONARD WOOD, JOSEPH . BOND AND P & T SERVICIOS PETROLEROS, S.A., Appellants V. DAILEY PETROLEUM SERVICES CORP., Appellee

Notice: [*1] PURSUANT TO RULE 90(i) OF THE TEXAS RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE, UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS SHALL NOT BE CITED AS AUTHORITY BY COUNSEL OR BY A COURT.

Prior History: On Appeal from the 334th District Court. Harris County, Texas. Trial Court Cause No. 90-21130-C.

Disposition: Affirmed

Core Terms

summary judgment, unfair competition, antitrust, appellants', trade secret, counterclaims, drilling, lawsuit, antitrust claim, cause of action, jars, malicious prosecution, matter of law, trial court, sham, probable cause, drawing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN1[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

The standard to be followed in review of a summary judgment is well established: 1) the movant for summary judgment has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law; 2) in deciding whether or not there is a disputed material fact issue precluding summary judgment, evidence favorable to the non-movant will be taken as true; 3) every reasonable inference must be indulged in favor of the non-movants and any doubts resolved in their favor. The movant must establish its entitlement to summary judgment on the issues expressly presented to the trial court by conclusively proving all essential elements of its cause of action or defense as a matter of law. When a non-movant has pled a counterclaim, the movant has the burden to show that no material fact issues exists to at least one element of the counterclaim and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.01-15.51 (1987) (the Texas Antitrust Act), creates a cause of action for any person whose business or property has been injured by conduct declared unlawful by the Act. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.21(a) (1987). The Texas Antitrust Act is modeled on both the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act. The Texas Antitrust Act provides that it is to be interpreted in harmony with federal judicial decisions of comparable laws. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.04 (1987).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Bad Faith

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

Antitrust injury is a necessary requirement to show standing. Legal fees may constitute an antitrust injury if a plaintiff brings a claim in bad faith, i.e., knowing it did not possess trade secrets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN4[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Those who petition the government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability, under the right of petition guaranteed by U.S. Const. amend. I; Tex. Const. art. I, § 27. However, this immunity does not apply to a "sham" activity. This principle, known as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, has been extended to apply to the right of access to the courts, and is protected as one aspect of the right to petition. To base an antitrust claim upon litigation, a party must show that the lawsuit is not protected petitioning, but instead is sham litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The "sham" exception to antitrust immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine has been defined as follows. First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect to succeed on the merits. Then, only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. In this subjective review, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the process rather than the outcome of that process. Thus, if a plaintiff has probable cause to institute legal proceedings, then a finding of sham litigation is precluded. Probable cause to institute civil proceedings requires no more than a reasonable belief that there is a chance that a claim may be held valid upon adjudication.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Search Warrants > Probable Cause > Personal Knowledge

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN6[] Supporting Materials, Affidavits

Conclusory affidavits are insufficient to raise a fact issue for the purposes of summary judgment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Remedies > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

HN7[] Sales of Goods, Remedies

Unfair competition is a form of unlawful business injury which consists essentially, in the passing off or attempting to pass off on the public, the goods or business of one person as and for the business of another. In Texas, unfair competition has been defined as consisting of the simulation by one person, for the purpose of deceiving the public, of the names, symbols, labels or devices employed by a business rival in order to induce the purchasing public to buy his products in the belief that they are those of his rival. Texas courts have generally recognized two elements which must be established to sustain a cause of action for unfair competition: (1) plaintiff's use of its trade name has acquired a secondary meaning; and (2) the similarity of the name used by the defendant's place of business, or product, would be likely to confuse the public.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN8[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Generally, pleading deficiencies will not be grounds for summary judgment unless the defect could not be cured by amendment.

Torts > ... > Malicious Prosecution > Elements > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN9[] Malicious Prosecution, Elements

To maintain an action for malicious prosecution, an appellant must prove: (1) a civil judicial proceeding was previously filed; (2) appellee caused the original suit to be filed; (3) the commencement of the original proceeding was malicious; (4) no probable cause existed for the filing of the original proceeding; (5) the original suit terminated in favor of appellants; and (6) appellants incurred damages conforming to the legal standards under Texas law.

Judges: Panel consists of Justices Murphy, Sears and Draughn.

Opinion by: PAUL C. MURPHY

Opinion

OPINION

Appellants, Houston Mercantile Exchange Corp., d/b/a Houmex Oilfield Supply, Gary A. Bond, Steve Green, Leonard Wood, Joseph A. Bond, and P & T Servicios Petroleros, S.A., each filed substantially the same counterclaims against appellee, Dailey Petroleum Services Corporation. Appellee claims appellants participated in activities that assisted in misappropriation of its trade secrets. Appellants' counterclaims assert antitrust violations, unfair competition, malicious prosecution and abuse of process. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of appellee on all the counterclaims, except abuse of process. Appellants bring four points of error, and we affirm.

In an earlier suit, appellee sought relief from Kenjer, Inc., Kenneth R. Mills and Jerry A. Coker for theft of appellee's trade secrets in connection with the [*2] design and sale of drilling jars, a type of equipment used in drilling oil wells. This suit (the "overseas drawing suit") was based upon the claimed use of appellee's engineering drawings for its drilling jar. Mills and Coker are former employees of appellee who executed an agreement not to use or disclose appellee's trade secrets, and appellee claimed these contracts were breached. Kenjer, Inc. is a corporation which manufactures a drilling jar called the Sup-R-Jar, and was formed by Mills and Coker after they left appellee's employ. Appellee obtained a preliminary injunction against Mills, Coker and Kenjer prohibiting them from in any way using certain drawings and documents related to appellee's drilling jars. The parties then entered a settlement agreement where Mills, Coker and Kenjer acknowledged that the design of appellee's drilling jars was a trade secret and agreed to cease marketing drilling jars incorporating appellee's trade secrets. During discovery conducted during the overseas drawing suit and later during the suit on which this appeal is based, appellee learned of other parties who participated in marketing and other activities that appellee believes involve misappropriation [*3] of their trade secrets.

On April 26, 1990, appellee filed this action against appellants, who appellee claims are agents and employees of Kenjer. Appellee alleges that appellants conspired to participate, and did participate, in the misappropriation of their trade secrets by providing facilities, capital, markets, and other encouragement and assistance in their sales of Kenjer's drilling jar. Appellee has also filed suit in federal court asserting federal Lanham Act claims and claims of unfair competition and trademark infringement against Kenjer and others based on Kenjer's use of advertising brochures and manuals that allegedly copy appellee's materials.

In this action, appellants filed counterclaims alleging: (1) antitrust claims of monopolization and attempt to monopolize; (2) unfair competition; (3) malicious prosecution; and (4) abuse of process. Appellee moved for summary judgment on appellants' counterclaims. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of appellee on the counterclaims alleging antitrust violations, unfair competition and malicious prosecution. The court then severed those claims, making the summary judgment final, and appellants now bring this [*4] appeal.

HN1[] The standard to be followed in review of a summary judgment is well established:

1. The movant for summary judgment has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

2. In deciding whether or not there is a disputed material fact issue precluding summary judgment, evidence favorable to the non-movant will be taken as true.

3. Every reasonable inference must be indulged in favor of the non-movants and any doubts resolved in their favor.

Nixon v. Mr. Property Management Co., 690 S.W.2d 546, 548-49 (Tex. 1985).

The movant must establish its entitlement to summary judgment on the issues expressly presented to the trial court by conclusively proving all essential elements of its cause of action or defense as a matter of law. City of Houston v. Clear Creek Basin Auth., 589 S.W.2d 671, 678 (Tex. 1979). When a non-movant has pled a counterclaim, the movant has the burden to show that no material fact issues exists to at least one element of the counterclaim and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Adams v. Tri-Continental Leasing Corp., 713 S.W.2d 152, 153 [*5] (Tex. App.--Dallas 1986, no writ).

In appellants' first point of error, they allege that summary judgment was in error because they have standing to raise antitrust claims under Texas' antitrust laws, and that appellee's lawsuit constitutes an antitrust violation. HN2[] The Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. 15.01-15.51 (the Texas Antitrust Act), creates a cause of action for any person whose business or property has been injured by conduct declared unlawful by the act. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. 15.21(a) (Vernon 1987). The Texas Antitrust Act is modeled on both the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act. Caller-Times Publishing Co. v. Triad Communications, Inc., 826 S.W.2d 576, 580 (Tex. 1992). The act provides that it is to be interpreted in harmony with federal judicial decisions of comparable laws. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. 15.04 (Vernon 1987); Caller-Times, 826 S.W.2d at 580; DeSantis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 687 (Tex. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1048, 111 S. Ct. 755, 112 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1991).

Appellee responds that appellants have not suffered an antitrust violation. Appellee contends, and we agree, that appellants [*6] must first prove an antitrust injury to have standing to bring their antitrust claims. HN3[] Antitrust injury is a necessary requirement to show standing. Bell v. Dow Chemical Co., 847 F.2d 1179, 1182 (5th Cir. 1988). Appellants' antitrust claim is based upon being sued and incurring legal expenses. Legal fees may constitute an antitrust injury if a plaintiff brings a claim in bad faith, i.e., knowing it did not possess trade secrets. CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 858 (1st Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1016, 89 L. Ed. 2d 312, 106 S. Ct. 1198 (1986). However, we note that the cases cited by appellants concern a claim for attorney's fees among several allegations of restraint of trade, and not a claim for attorney's fees alone. See CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842; Colorado Petroleum Marketers Ass'n v. Southland Corp., 476 F. Supp. 373 (D. Colo. 1979); Technicon Medical Information Systems Corp. v. Green Bay Packaging, Inc., 480 F. Supp. 124 (E.D. Wisc. 1979).

HN4[] Those who petition the government for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability, under the right of petition guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and the Texas constitution. U.S. Const. amend. [*7] I; Tex. Const. art. I, 27. However, this immunity does not apply to a "sham" activity. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 144, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); see also United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-671, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 1592-94, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). This principle, known as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, has been extended to apply to the right of access to the courts, and is protected as one aspect of the right to petition. California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 612, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972).

To base an antitrust claim upon litigation, a party must show that the lawsuit is not protected petitioning, but instead is sham litigation. In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 533 (5th Cir. 1987). Appellants contend in their fourth point of error that there is a fact issue as to whether the lawsuit in this case is a sham. Recently, the United States Supreme Court defined HN5[] the "sham" exception to antitrust immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine in Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, [*8] 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect to succeed on the merits. Id. at 1928. Then, only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Id. In this subjective review, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the process rather than the outcome of that process. Id. Thus, if a plaintiff has "probable cause" to institute legal proceedings, then a finding of sham litigation is precluded. Id. at 1929. Probable cause to institute civil proceedings requires no more than a reasonable belief that there is a chance that a claim may be held valid upon adjudication. Id.

We find that appellee's suit is not baseless. Viewed objectively, it is reasonable to conclude that appellee has a chance to receive a favorable outcome based upon its success thus far in this suit and the related litigation. Appellee obtained a temporary injunction in the original suit and obtained settlement agreements with several defendants [*9] in the federal suit, where the parties agreed to cease acts of unfair competition. Appellee has also settled with two defendants in this suit. Authenticated copies of the judgment in the overseas drawing suit, the injunction, and the settlement agreements are attached to appellee's summary judgment motion. In addition to deposition testimony and interrogatories, appellee also supported its summary judgment motion with affidavits from James Farr, appellee's president, and Stephen H. Cagle, appellee's attorney. Farr's affidavit recites the success appellee has achieved thus far in the various litigation, including prevailing on motions for summary judgment by Mills, Coker, and Kenjer in the federal suit. Appellants' only proof in response is an affidavit furnished by Kenneth Mills contending that appellee had no probable cause to institute suit. While his affidavit does contain facts of which he claims to have personal knowledge, in our opinion, these facts do not support his conclusion that appellee had no probable cause to sue. HN6[] Conclusory affidavits are insufficient to raise a fact issue. Brownlee v. Brownlee, 665 S.W.2d 111, 112 (Tex. 1984). We find that appellee established it [*10] had probable cause to institute its suit.

Finding appellee could realistically expect success on the merits, we must conclude that the litigation is not a sham. Thus, it is protected from antitrust claims by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Appellants therefore have no viable antitrust claim. [1] The existence of probable cause eliminates any genuine issue as to any material fact, and appellee is entitled to summary judgment on this cause of action as a matter of law. See Professional Real Estate Investors, 113 S. Ct. at 1931. We overrule appellants' first and fourth points of error.

In their second point of error, appellants claim the trial court erred in granting summary judgment against [*11] them on their unfair competition claim. Appellee contends that appellants failed to raise a claim of unfair competition. HN7[] Unfair competition is "a form of unlawful business injury which consists essentially, in the passing off or attempting to pass off on the public, the goods or business of one person as and for the business of another." King-Size, Inc. v. Frank's King Size Clothes, Inc., 547 F. Supp. 1138, 1165 (S.D. Tex. 1982).

In Texas, unfair competition has been defined as "consist[ing of] the simulation by one person, for the purpose of deceiving the public, of the names, symbols, labels or devices employed by a business rival in order to induce [the] purchasing public to buy his products in the belief that they are those of his rival." Avnet v. Texas Centennial Central Exposition, 96 S.W.2d 685, 687 (Tex. Civ. App.--Dallas 1936, writ dism'd w.o.j.). Texas courts have generally recognized two elements which must be established to sustain a cause of action for unfair competition: (1) plaintiff's use of its trade name has acquired a secondary meaning; and (2) the similarity of the name used by the defendant's place of business, or product, would be likely to confuse [*12] the public. Hudgens v. Goen, 673 S.W.2d 420, 423 (Tex. App.--Fort Worth 1984, writ ref'd n.r.e.); Harrelson v. Wright, 339 S.W.2d 712, 714 (Tex. Civ. App.--Eastland 1960, writ ref'd).

Appellants alleged no facts constituting unfair competition. They contend that appellee attempted to harass and intimidate them and their potential customers by filing these lawsuits and threatening further litigation. Appellants assert that the lawsuits constitute a form of unfair competition. We disagree and find no support for appellants' position. We find that appellants have failed to plead a cause of action for unfair competition. HN8[] Generally, pleading deficiencies will not be grounds for summary judgment unless the defect could not be cured by amendment. Trunkline LNG Co. v. Trane Thermal Co., 722 S.W.2d 722, 724 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1986, writ ref'd n.r.e.). Under the facts presented here, appellants could not cure their pleadings by amendment. The trial court correctly determined that appellee is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law on appellants' claim of unfair competition. We overrule appellants' second point of error.

In their third point of error, appellants [*13] contend that summary judgment on their malicious prosecution claim was erroneous. HN9[] To maintain an action for malicious prosecution, appellants must prove:

(1) a civil judicial proceeding was previously filed;

(2) appellee caused the original suit to be filed;

(3) the commencement of the original proceeding was malicious;

---

[1] Thus, because appellee has immunity from the antitrust cause of action alleged by appellants, we need not address the other factors which determine antitrust standing. See Associated Gen. Contractors, Inc. v. California State Counsel of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529, 103 S. Ct. 897, 903, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983).

(4) no probable cause existed for the filing of the original proceeding;

(5) the original suit terminated in favor of appellants; and

(6) appellants incurred damages conforming to the legal standards under Texas law.

Oak Crest Civic Club v. Lowe, 678 S.W.2d 93, 94, (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1984, writ dism'd); Martin v. Trevino, 578 S.W.2d 763, 766 (Tex. Civ. App.--Corpus Christi 1978, writ ref'd n.r.e.). Clearly, appellants have not met these elements. The original suit was not filed before this case; appellants' malicious prosecution claim is based upon this case, which obviously has not terminated in favor of appellants. Appellants ask this court, in the interest of judicial economy, to extend the cause of action for malicious prosecution to allow it to be alleged as part of the underlying lawsuit on which the claim is [*14] based. This we decline to do. We hold that a cause of action for malicious prosecution may not be brought until the underlying suit on which the claim is based has terminated. See Oak Crest Civic Club, 678 S.W.2d at 94. We agree with the court below that appellee is entitled to summary judgment on the malicious prosecution claim as a matter of law.

We overrule appellants' third point of error and affirm the judgment of the trial court.

Paul C. Murphy

Justice

Judgment rendered and Opinion filed August 26, 1993.

Panel consists of Justices Murphy, Sears and Draughn.

Gilbert's Ethan Allen Gallery v. Ethan Allen, Inc.

Appellate Court of Illinois, Fifth District

September 3, 1993, Filed

NO. 5-91-0746

Reporter

251 Ill. App. 3d 17 *; 620 N.E.2d 1349 ; 1993 Ill. App. LEXIS 1356 ; 190 Ill. Dec. 88 *; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,429

GILBERT'S ETHAN ALLEN GALLERY, Plaintiff-Appellee and Cross-Appellant, v. ETHAN ALLEN, INC., Defendant-Appellant and Cross-Appellee, and BLY & SONS, INC., Defendant-Cross-Appellee.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the Circuit Court of Madison County. No. 85-L-868. Honorable Paul E. Riley, Judge Presiding.

Disposition: Affirmed in part; reversed and remanded in part.

Core Terms

Illinois Act, commerce, Sherman Act, trial court, monopoly, monopolize, construing, cases, furniture, substantial part, words, manufacturer, antitrust, dealer, prices, monopoly power, federal law, violation of section, competitors, conspiracy, attorney's fees, relevant market, trial judge, conspire, products, termination, excluding, acquire, damages, fix prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN1[] Attempts to Monopolize, State Regulation

See Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, para. 60-3(3) (1985).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, para. 60-11 (1985).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 (1993).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Per se rules are appropriate only for conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive, that is, conduct that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. Agreements are per se illegal only if their nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

The Federal antitrust experience under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is applicable to questions arising under the Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, para. 60-1 et seq. (1985), and can serve as a useful guide.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

To say that Illinois courts should be guided by the federal cases does not mean that they are bound to strictly apply the federal courts' interpretation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 (1993). The Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, para. 60-1 et seq. (1985), requires more proof than section 2 of the Sherman Act for a court to find that a defendant violated section 3(3) of the Illinois Antitrust Act. Not only must the plaintiff prove that defendant established, maintained, used, or attempted to acquire monopoly power over any substantial part of trade or commerce but, in addition, plaintiff must prove that defendant did so for the purpose of excluding competition or controlling, fixing, or maintaining prices in that trade or market. Proof of purpose is not required for a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

There is no question that when competitors conspire to fix prices, production, or services, a violation of section 3(1) of the Illinois Antitrust Act, Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, para. 60-3(1) (1985), occurs and it is a per se violation requiring only proof that the competitors conspired. No market analysis is needed for a section 3(1) violation, because the agreement in and of itself is a violation. There is also no question that when persons contract, combine, or conspire to unreasonably restrain trade or commerce such can be a violation of section 3(2) of the Illinois Antitrust Act. However, violations of sections 3(2) and 3(4) of the Illinois Antitrust Act require, in addition to proof of the conspiracy, a determination of a geographic market that corresponds to commercial realities and is economically significant. The fact that section 3(3) requires the proof of a monopoly over any substantial part of trade or commerce indicates even more specifically than sections 3(2) and 3(4) do that a market analysis is a necessity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

"Trade or commerce" is defined as including all economic activity involving or relating to any commodity or service, and "commodity" means any kind of real or personal property. Ill. Rev. Stat. ch. 38, para. 60-4 (1985). "Commodity" is not limited to a specific brand, nor is "trade and commerce" limited to a specific brand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

When a product is controlled by one interest, without substitutes available in the market, there is monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN10[] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course has the right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. The manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Bench Trials

HN11[] Trials, Bench Trials

In reviewing a bench trial, an appellate court will not disturb the trial court's finding unless the trial court's holding is manifestly against the weight of the evidence. Where testimony is contradictory, the trial judge as the trier of fact is in a superior position to observe the conduct of testifying witnesses, to determine their credibility, and to weigh the evidence.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

HN12[] Relief From Judgments, Motions for New Trials

Normally when a case is tried under an incorrect theory of law, the appropriate action is to reverse and remand for a new trial.

Judges: LEWIS, RARICK, GOLDENHERSH

Opinion by: LEWIS

Opinion

[*19] [1350] [*89] JUSTICE LEWIS delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant Ethan Allen, Inc. (Ethan Allen), appeals from a judgment of the circuit court of Madison County in favor of plaintiff, Gilbert's Ethan Allen Gallery, on plaintiff's claim that Ethan Allen violated the Illinois Antitrust Act (the Illinois Act) (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-1 et seq.). Plaintiff cross-appeals a judgment in favor of defendant Bly & Sons, Inc. (Bly), on plaintiff's claim that Bly violated the Illinois Act. The issues on appeal are: (1) whether the trial court applied the correct legal test in finding that Ethan Allen violated section 3(3) of the Illinois Act (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-3(3)); (2) whether the trial court erred in computing damages for plaintiff; (3) whether the trial court erred in finding that [2] Bly did not violate the Illinois Act; and (4) whether the trial court erred in refusing to order attorney fees to plaintiff. We reverse on issue (1) and affirm on issue (3). Issues (2) and (4) need not be discussed.

I

Ethan Allen is a manufacturer and distributor of furniture whose products are distributed to the consumer through a network of authorized dealers. Plaintiff was an Ethan Allen dealer from 1956 to 1972 and an exclusive Ethan Allen dealer from 1972 to 1985. Plaintiff's store was located in Alton, but plaintiff advertised throughout the metropolitan St. Louis area and made most of its sales to residents from Missouri. Ethan Allen's share of the metropolitan St. Louis furniture market was more than 1% but less than 2%. In 1985, Ethan Allen terminated its relationship with plaintiff and informed plaintiff that it would no longer recognize plaintiff as an authorized dealer. As a result of that termination, Bly became the sole authorized dealer of Ethan Allen furniture in the St. Louis metropolitan area. Bly has one store located in Fairview Heights, Illinois, and one in Chesterfield, Missouri. Plaintiff, meanwhile, became a competitor of Bly and Ethan Allen by becoming a Drexel [3] furniture dealer.

Plaintiff brought this action alleging its termination was a result of a conspiracy between Ethan Allen and Bly to fix prices in violation of the Illinois Act. (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, pars. 60-3(2), (3).) At a bench trial, the court heard evidence that it is Ethan Allen's practice to publish suggested retail prices, and it prefers its dealers to set their resale prices accordingly. [1351] [*90] Former Ethan Allen sales representative Jack Tripp testified that he serviced plaintiff's account with Ethan Allen. Tripp further stated that an Ethan Allen executive told him in 1984 that plaintiff would not be an Ethan Allen dealer much [*20] longer because it was a discounter and sold furniture for less than the suggested price.

Lewis Gilbert testified that Nathan Ancell, chairman of the board of Ethan Allen, informed him that Ethan Allen strongly disapproved of plaintiff's discounting policy. Gilbert further testified that he lost $ 126,000 as a result of the termination by Ethan Allen. After Ethan Allen's termination, plaintiff became a Drexel furniture dealer. The $ 126,000 sum represented the cost to change the furniture displays Ethan Allen required him to maintain. He stated [4] that the changeover required him to close down the store for a period of time and operate at a reduced level for an additional period of time, resulting in additional losses of $ 226,000 in 1987 and $ 140,000 in 1988.

At the close of evidence, the court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff on its claim against Ethan Allen and against plaintiff on its claim against Bly. The court concluded that Ethan Allen's actions forcing plaintiff from the marketplace constituted a violation of section 3(3) of the Illinois Act (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-3(3)). The court awarded plaintiff $ 492,000 in damages plus costs of suit, but not attorney fees.

Ethan Allen appeals the judgment against it, and plaintiff cross-appeals the judgment in favor of Bly. Plaintiff does not argue or contend on appeal that Ethan Allen violated section 3(2) of the Illinois Act, which section prohibits conspiracies to restrain trade or commerce. We reverse as to the judgment against Ethan Allen in favor of plaintiff and affirm as to the judgment against plaintiff in favor of Bly.

II

The first issue we are asked to address by Ethan Allen is whether the trial court correctly applied the law in finding that Ethan [5] Allen violated section 3(3) of the Illinois Act, which provides that every person shall be deemed to have committed a violation of the Illinois Act if they:

> HN1[] "(3) Establish, maintain, use, or attempt to acquire monopoly power over any substantial part of trade or commerce of this State for the purpose of excluding competition or of controlling, fixing, or maintaining prices in such trade or commerce." (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-3(3).)

Section 11 of the Illinois Act provides, in pertinent HN2[] part:

> "When the wording of this Act is identical or similar to that of a federal antitrust law, the courts of this State shall use the construction of the federal law by the federal courts as a guide [*21] in construing this Act." (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-11.)

Ethan Allen argues that the wording of section 3(3) of the Illinois Act is similar to that of section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (Sherman Act) (15 U.S.C.A. sec. 2 (West Supp. 1993)) and that the trial court should have followed Federal precedent in this case. The Federal case law addressing section 2 of the Sherman Act requires that a market-share analysis be made to determine [6] if competition is sufficiently injured so that the monopolizing activities constitute a violation of the Illinois Act. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc. (1992), 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072; Wigod v. Chicago Mercantile Exchange (7th Cir. 1992), 981 F.2d 1510.

In the case before us, the trial court found that while there was a dearth of Illinois cases construing section 3(3) of the Illinois Act, MBL (USA) Corp. v. Diekman (1985), 137 Ill. App. 3d 238, 484 N.E.2d 371, 91 Ill. Dec. 812, indicated that violation of section 3(3) of the Illinois Act is a "per se" violation which makes a market-share analysis or a rule-of-reason analysis unnecessary. The trial court further noted that section 3(3) of the Illinois Act and section 2 of the Sherman Act are different. Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides:

> HN3[] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or [1352] [*91] conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty [7] of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." (15 U.S.C.A. sec. 2 (West Supp. 1993).)

Comparing the two statutes, the trial court reasoned that section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolizing, attempts to monopolize, and conspiracy to monopolize trade or commerce, while section 3(3) of the Illinois Act prohibits monopolizing only when it is done for the purpose of excluding competition or of controlling, fixing, or maintaining prices. After concluding that section 3(3) of the Illinois Act differs from the Federal antitrust statute because the Illinois Act is narrower in scope, the trial court stated that it had "to determine [from the evidence] whether or not a monopoly existed and whether the monopoly existed for the purpose of excluding competition or fixing prices.".

As we will attempt to make clear, the trial judge correctly stated the issues in the case but he did not set the issue out completely. The trial court had to determine [8] from the evidence whether Ethan Allen [*22] had monopoly power over any substantial part of trade or commerce. It may have been that the failure to add the underlined words caused the trial judge to overlook the necessity of proof that Ethan Allen had monopoly power over a substantial part of trade or commerce in furniture. The trial judge did state in his order:

> "Where there are two viable entities doing the same thing in the same general area, and the supplier to the two entities runs one of the entities out of business and turns it all over to the other attempting to control the prices in the marketplace---that is the abuse referred to by the drafters of the statutes."

This statement and the disregarding of the deficiency in evidence as to relevant market and market share by the trial judge lead us to the conclusion that the trial judge was considering Ethan Allen furniture, a single brand, to be the relevant market. The court's reasoning does have a certain logic in that it follows that Ethan Allen would have a monopoly power over a substantial part of trade or commerce in Ethan Allen products. Similarly, Ethan Allen ceased doing business with plaintiff, one of two outlets [9] for Ethan Allen products was eliminated, and thus, competition was eliminated as to Ethan Allen products.

It is not clear from the trial court's ruling as to whether the trial court applied the construction of Federal law by the Federal courts as a guide in construing the Illinois Act. The trial judge seemed to have used the "per se" violation concept developed by the Federal courts in reaching his decision. HN4[] "Per se rules are appropriate only for 'conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive,' [citation], that is, conduct 'that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output,' [citations]. See also * * * National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1365, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978) (agreements are per se illegal only if their 'nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality')." Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp. (1988), 485 U.S. 717, 723-24, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 816, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 1519. [10]

Plaintiff argues, however, that the wording of the Illinois Act is different from the wording of the Sherman Act and, therefore, the trial judge was correct in not using the principles developed by the Federal courts in construing section 2 of the Sherman Act as a guide in construing the Illinois Act. It is ironic that plaintiff then spends the remainder of his argument maintaining that the Federal courts' concept of the "per se" rule should apply to this case.

[*23] It is quite clear that the Federal law should be used as a guide in construing section 3(3) of the Illinois Act. Our colleagues in the first and second district appellate [1353] [*92] courts have specifically ruled that section 2 of the Sherman Act is analogous to section 3(3) of the Illinois Act. (See Maywood Sportservice, Inc. v. Maywood Park Trotting Association, Inc. (1973), 14 Ill. App. 3d 141, 302 N.E.2d 79; Ray Dancer, Inc. v. D M C

Corp. (1992), 230 Ill. App. 3d 40, 594 N.E.2d 1344, 171 Ill. Dec. 824.) The "Bar Committee Comments-1967" to section 3(3) (740 ILCS 10/3, Bar Committee Comments-1967, at 18 (Smith-Hurd 1992)) have indicated for years that while [11] section 3(3) is narrower in scope than section 2 of the Sherman Act, section 2 of the Sherman Act should be used in construing section 3(3). The "Historical and Practice Notes-1970" by Phillip W. Tone and John G. Stiffler in Smith-Hurd Illinois Annotated Statutes also indicate that the scope of section 3(3) is essentially that of section 2 of the Sherman Act, but somewhat more restricted. (Ill. Ann. Stat., ch. 38, par. 60-3, Historical and Practice Notes-1970, at 463 (Smith-Hurd 1977).) In People v. Crawford Distributing Co. (1972), 53 Ill. 2d 332, 291 N.E.2d 648, our supreme court stated that HN5[] "the Federal antitrust experience under the Sherman Act is applicable to questions arising under the Illinois Antitrust Act and can serve as a useful guide." (Crawford Distributing Co., 53 Ill. 2d at 339, 291 N.E.2d at 652.) In People ex rel. Scott v. College Hills Corp. (1982), 91 Ill. 2d 138, 435 N.E.2d 463, 61 Ill. Dec. 766, our supreme court once again stated that in construing the Illinois Act, they were guided by analogous provisions of Federal legislation. The Federal [12] district and appellate courts used section 2 of the Sherman Act in construing the Illinois Act. See State of Illinois ex rel. Hartigan v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co. (C.D. Ill. 1990), 730 F. Supp. 826, aff'd (7th Cir. 1991), 935 F.2d 1469.

The point to this short and admittedly incomplete history of the Illinois Act is that our legislature, the supreme court, the first and second district appellate courts, the Federal district and appellate courts, and legal scholars all believe that Federal court cases construing the Sherman Act should be used as a guide in construing the Illinois Act. Thus, in determining what proof is needed in order to establish the presence of a "monopoly" or what is "trade or commerce," we should be guided by section 2 of the Sherman Act and the Federal cases construing such. We cannot simply say the words are not similar or identical when in fact the words and concepts are similar and identical. Both Acts deal with monopolies, unfair trade practices, and the attempt to monopolize trade or commerce.

[*24] Admittedly, section 3(3) of the Illinois Act does not pertain to interstate commerce or a conspiracy [13] to monopolize. There are also a growing number of Illinois cases construing section 3 of the Illinois Act, so that reference to Federal cases are not as necessary as they were in the past. Saying we should be guided by the Federal cases does not mean that we are bound to strictly apply the Federal court's interpretation of the Sherman Act to the Illinois Act. We recognize that HN6[] the Illinois Act requires more proof than section 2 of the Sherman Act for a court to find that a defendant violated section 3(3) of the Illinois Act, in that not only must the plaintiff prove that defendant established, maintained, used, or attempted to acquire monopoly power over any substantial part of trade or commerce but, in addition, plaintiff must prove that defendant did so for the purpose of excluding competition or controlling, fixing, or maintaining prices in that trade or market. Whereas, under the Sherman Act, proof of the purpose is not required for a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. The fact that the Illinois Act requires more proof against a defendant in most instances does not mean that we should totally ignore the Federal law as a guide.

The trial court cited MBL (USA) Corp. v. Diekman (1985), 137 Ill. App. 3d 238, 484 N.E.2d 371, 91 Ill. Dec. 812, [14] for the proposition that a violation of section 3(3) is a per se violation, thereby making a market-share analysis unnecessary. It is not clear from the reading of Diekman that Diekman holds such. In Diekman, the parties were at the pleading stage when the trial court dismissed Diekman's amended counterclaim as not stating a cause of action [1354] [*93] under the Illinois Act. The counterclaim used the words of section 3(3) in alleging a monopoly power over a substantial part of trade or commerce in the sale and distribution of urethane timing belts. But the counterclaim also used the words contained in section 3(2) of the Illinois Act by alleging that counterdefendants conspired and combined to establish this monopoly over the sale or distribution of urethane timing belts by MBL (USA), a counterdefendant, purchasing from Meeder, a counterdefendant (who appears to have been a former competitor of MBL (USA)), covenants not to compete that were given by counterplaintiff and agreeing between themselves to threaten and file baseless litigation against counterplaintiff, a potential competitor. Diekman cited, as its authority for reversing the dismissal of the counterclaim and in [15] saying that the allegations were "per se" violations of the Illinois Antitrust Act, People ex rel. Fahner v. Carriage Way West, Inc. (1981), 88 Ill. 2d 300, 430 N.E.2d 1005, 58 Ill. Dec. 754, which case concerned the dismissal of a complaint [*25] that alleged a conspiracy by competitors to fix prices as prohibited by section 3(1) of the Illinois Act.

HN7[] There is no question that when competitors conspire to fix prices, production, or services, a violation of section 3(1) of the Illinois Act occurs and it is a "per se" violation requiring only proof that the competitors conspired. (See Carriage Way West, Inc., 88 Ill. 2d at 309, 430 N.E.2d at (for a discussion of such).) Keep in mind that "per se" violations are normally agreements between competitors or agreements that would restrict competition and decrease output. No market analysis is needed for a section 3(1) violation, because the agreement in and of itself is a violation. There is also no question that when persons contract, combine, or conspire to unreasonably restrain trade or commerce such can be a violation of section 3(2) of the Illinois Act. [16] However, the supreme court pointed out in People ex rel. Scott v. College Hills Corp. (1982), 91 Ill. 2d 138, 435 N.E.2d 463, 61 Ill. Dec. 766, that violations of sections 3(2) and 3(4) require, in addition to proof of the conspiracy, a determination of a geographic market that corresponds to commercial realities and is economically significant. The reason the market analysis is needed to prove a violation of sections 3(2) and 3(4) is that section 3(2) requires a showing that defendant's acts unreasonably restrained trade or commerce and section 3(4) requires a showing that competition was substantially lessened or a monopoly was created in any line of commerce. The fact that section 3(3) requires the proof of a monopoly over any substantial part of trade or commerce indicates even more specifically than sections 3(2) and 3(4) do that a market analysis is a necessity.

Diekman, therefore, does not stand for the proposition that proof of a violation of section 3(3) is a "per se" violation so that no further proof is required under section 3(3) as to a monopoly by a defendant over a substantial part of trade or commerce. Diekman stands [17] for the proposition that, if a complaint alleges a monopoly by defendants and a conspiracy by defendants to exclude another competitor from competition, such a complaint will withstand a motion to dismiss, as all pleaded facts are presumed to be true for purposes of the motion to dismiss. Diekman does not relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving the allegations contained in the complaint at the trial.

The plaintiff did not present any proof of a relevant market for furniture or a market analysis showing the percent of the furniture market held by defendant. Ethan Allen presented uncontradicted testimony that the relevant market was the metropolitan St. Louis area and that it held not more than 2% of the relevant market. The trial judge, even though he stated in his order that he had to determine [*26] from the evidence whether a monopoly existed, did not make a determination of the relevant market or the market share held by defendant. Nor did he ever find that Ethan Allen had a monopoly over a substantial part of the furniture trade or commerce. It is difficult to conceive, nor does plaintiff suggest, how one could prove a "monopoly power over a substantial part of trade [18] or commerce" without some showing as to what the trade [1355] [*94] and commerce was in the merchandise in question and what part of the trade or commerce that Ethan Allen controlled. We cannot presume that a defendant has monopoly powers simply because plaintiff alleges such. We cannot presume that Ethan Allen violated the criminal laws of this State merely because it did business in Illinois. We cannot presume that Ethan Allen furniture is the only furniture sold in the trade or commerce of Illinois or the metropolitan St. Louis area.

Turning now to plaintiff's argument, and the trial judge's apparent interpretation of section 3(3), that since Ethan Allen is the sole manufacturer and supplier in Ethan Allen products to retailers, there was a monopoly over a substantial part of trade and commerce in Ethan Allen products. If we were to adopt plaintiff's argument, all one would have to do in order to prove a violation of the criminal law (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1989, ch. 38, par. 60-3(3)) by a defendant would be to show that defendant manufactured a product or sold franchises for a copyrighted name, talked and disagreed with plaintiff about prices for its product, and caused plaintiff a loss by discharging [19] or terminating plaintiff's relationship with defendant. Plaintiff is arguing that all attempts by a manufacturer or franchisor to control, maintain, or fix prices the dealer or franchisee charges the consumers are illegal under section 3(3). Therefore, if plaintiff were correct, the hamburger franchisor, whose franchisee may have 15 fast food competitors within three blocks and who did not want to cooperate in a national campaign for 99-cent hamburgers, could not terminate the franchise of a franchisee for fear of being held to have violated the antitrust laws of Illinois. It may even be that under the plaintiff's theory a car dealer, who had the only agency in the town or county, could not fire his employee who sold a car at less than what the dealer set as a minimum price for fear that he would be violating the restraint of trade laws. We would be upsetting business practices developed over the centuries, even though they do not substantially affect or restrain trade or commerce.

HN8[] "Trade or commerce" is defined as including "all economic activity involving or relating to any commodity or service," and "commodity" means "any kind of real or personal property." (Ill. Rev. Stat. [*27] 1985, [20] ch. 38, par. 60-4.) "Commodity" is not limited to a specific brand, nor is "trade and commerce" limited to a specific brand.

If we were to construe section 3(3) of the Illinois Act to mean monopoly over a specific brand of merchandise, then the word "monopoly" would be superfluous as every manufacturer has a monopoly over its product or brand name. Even in those cases where the manufacturer had a 100% share of a relevant market, the plaintiff would not pay for an expensive market analysis to prove such, as such analysis would be unnecessary and apparently irrelevant. The words "establish, maintain, use, or attempt to acquire" would be superfluous, because every manufacturer establishes, maintains, uses, and attempts to acquire complete control over its product. In fact, some manufacturers attempt to obtain patents and copyrights over products and names. Surely, they are not violating Illinois law. The words "over a substantial part" would be even more superfluous, because every manufacturer has a monopoly over 100% of its product. The words "trade or commerce" would be superfluous, because the only trade or commerce we would be discussing would be trade and commerce in the manufacturer's [21] product. Applying the plaintiff's construction to section 3(3) without the superfluous language, it would read: "Every person shall be deemed to have committed a violation of this Act who shall: control, fix, or maintain prices of that person's product." Such a law would make every businessperson in Illinois, no matter if the business has only 1/100th of 1% of the market and has 100 competitors, guilty of restraint of trade.

When we review the Federal cases as to whether there can be a monopoly in a particular commodity, the leading case of United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1956), 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994, sets out:

> [1356] [*95] "The ultimate consideration in such a determination is whether the defendants control the price and competition in the market for such trade or commerce as they are charged with monopolizing. Every manufacturer is the sole producer of the particular commodity it makes but its control in the above sense of the relevant market depends upon the availability of alternative commodities for buyers: i. e., whether there is a cross-elasticity of demand between cellophane and the other [22] wrappings. This interchangeability is largely gauged by the purchase of competing products for similar uses considering the price, characteristics and adaptability of the competing commodities." (E. I. Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 380-381, 100 L. Ed. at 1272-73, 76 S. Ct. at 999.)

[*28] We must ask whether there were competing products to Ethan Allen furniture? HN9[] "'When a product is controlled by one interest, without substitutes available in the market, there is monopoly power.'" (National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Board of Regents (1984), 468 U.S. 85, 112, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 91, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 2966 (quoting E. I. Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 394, 100 L. Ed. 2d at , 76 S. Ct. 1006).) The burden was on plaintiff to prove that there were no substitutes available in the market for Ethan Allen furniture. Ethan Allen maintains that not only were there substitutes available for its furniture, but those substitutes controlled 98% of the relevant market. Plaintiff never denied or disputed this claim.

Plaintiff, and apparently [23] the trial court, used the concepts in Federal cases involving vertical price fixing. (See Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp. (1988), 485 U.S. 717, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515; Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp. (1984), 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464.) Vertical price fixing in those cases was in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. (15 U.S.C.A. sec. 1 (West Supp. 1993).) Plaintiff argues that Federal law should not apply at all as a guide to interpreting section 3(3) of the Illinois Act, but plaintiff is really being inconsistent if he wishes now to use the concepts under section 1 of the Sherman Act to interpret section 3(3) of the Illinois Act. There is no authority anywhere to support this argument. Suffice it to say that those cases and the authorities cited therein discuss the illegality of conspiracies and agreements to fix prices. There is no evidence of an agreement or conspiracy to vertically fix prices in this case, as we will discuss later in relation to the denial of the [24] claim against Bly. HN10[] "Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course has the right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. [Citations.] Under Colgate, the manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d at 775, 104 S. Ct. at 1467.

Even assuming arguendo that there was an attempted vertical price agreement or restraint in this case, the threshold requirement under section 3(3), that plaintiff prove that defendant established, maintained, used, or attempted to acquire a monopoly over any substantial part of trade or commerce, was not met. The lowest percentage of the market share that we could find in cases before the Supreme Court of the United States that constituted a monopoly by a defendant or defendants was 66.6%. (American Tobacco Co. v. United States (1946), 328 U.S. 781, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125.) Ethan [*29] Allen with its 2% or less of the market in the metropolitan St. Louis area did not even [25] begin to approach the market control or power necessary to constitute a substantial part of trade or commerce. The law need not concern itself with nonmonopolists raising prices, as the free market will regulate and punish those who needlessly raise prices. Thus, the trial court erred in applying the law and in presuming that Ethan Allen had a monopoly power which constituted a violation of the Illinois Act.

In plaintiff's cross-appeal, it first argues that the court erred in finding that Bly did not conspire to force it out of the market place. Plaintiff submits that the trial court's judgment in favor of Bly was [1357] [*96] against the manifest weight of the evidence. HN11[] In reviewing a bench trial, we will not disturb the trial court's finding unless the trial court's holding is manifestly against the weight of the evidence. (Schulenburg v. Signatrol, Inc. (1967), 37 Ill. 2d 352, 226 N.E.2d 624; Orchard Shopping Center, Inc. v. Campo (1985), 138 Ill. App. 3d 656, 485 N.E.2d 1248, 93 Ill. Dec. 38.) Where testimony is contradictory, the trial judge as the trier of fact is in a superior position to observe the conduct of testifying [26] witnesses, to determine their credibility, and to weigh the evidence. (Schulenburg, 37 Ill. 2d at 356, 226 N.E.2d at 626.) A careful review of the record shows that the trial court's judgment in favor of Bly was not against the manifest weight of the evidence. There was testimony by Jack Tripp, the former Ethan Allen employee, that he knew of no agreements between Ethan Allen and Bly to terminate plaintiff. Moreover, plaintiff does not present any conflicting evidence that there was, in fact, such an agreement between Bly and Ethan Allen or that Bly conspired with Ethan Allen. Although plaintiff cites the trial court's statement that Bly would probably benefit from plaintiff's demise as an Ethan Allen dealer, plaintiff does not offer any proof that Bly conspired to achieve that status. Clearly, the fact that Bly benefits from plaintiff's loss does not, in and of itself, constitute an antitrust violation. The circumstantial evidence that plaintiff would have us scrutinize simply does not warrant a reversal of the trial court's judgment.

For all of the foregoing reasons, we reverse the judgment against Ethan Allen and affirm the judgment [27] in favor of Bly.

Defendant Ethan Allen requested in its prayer for relief that the judgment be reversed and a judgment be entered in Ethan Allen's favor. In the alternative, Ethan Allen requested that this case be remanded for a new trial. The parties did not discuss or brief what a proper disposition should be if this court reversed the judgment. HN12[] Normally, the appropriate action, when a case is tried under an incorrect [*30] theory of law, is to reverse and remand for a new trial (Sparling v. Peabody Coal Co. (1974), 59 Ill. 2d 491, 322 N.E.2d 5.) We accordingly are granting Ethan Allen's alternative request by remanding this cause for a new trial.

Affirmed in part; reversed and remanded in part.

RARICK, J., concurs.

Dissent by: GOLDENHERSH

Dissent

JUSTICE GOLDENHERSH, dissenting:

I respectfully dissent from the majority's reversal on issue (1). In affirming the judgment concerning Bly, I concur.

In my belief the majority mistakenly construes, and assumes, that section 3-3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act (the Illinois Act) (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-3(3)) is sufficiently similar to section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (Sherman Act) (15 U.S.C.A. sec. 2 [28] (West Supp. 1993)) so that Federal precedents are controlling in the interpretation of the Illinois Act. A closer examination of the language of the two statutes shows they are not sufficiently similar, as the trial court correctly found. The historical notes and bar committee comments also support this.

The trial court correctly applied the law in finding that Ethan Allen violated section 3(3) of the Illinois Act, which provides that every person shall be deemed to have committed a violation of the Illinois Act if they:

> "(3) Establish, maintain, use, or attempt to acquire monopoly power over any substantial part of trade or commerce of this State for the purpose of excluding competition or of controlling, fixing, or maintaining prices in such trade or commerce." (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-3(3).)

Section 11 of the Illinois Act provides, in pertinent part:

> "When the wording of this Act is identical or similar to that of a federal antitrust law, the courts of this State shall use the construction of the federal law by the federal courts as a guide in construing this Act." Ill. Rev. Stat. 1985, ch. 38, par. 60-11.

[1358] [*97] In the case before us, the trial court found that [29] section 3(3) of the Illinois Act is worded differently than section 2 of the Sherman Act, which reads:

> "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty [*31] of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." 15 U.S.C.A. sec. 2 (West Supp. 1993).

Upon comparing the two statutes, the trial court correctly reasoned that section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolizing, attempts to monopolize, and conspiracy to monopolize trade or commerce, while section 3(3) of the Illinois Act prohibits monopolizing only when it is done for the purpose of excluding competition or of controlling, fixing, or maintaining prices. After concluding that section 3(3) of the Illinois Act differs significantly from the Sherman Act, the trial court found little value in Federal precedent [30] and declined to use the construction of the Federal law by Federal courts in resolving this case.

Ethan Allen argues that the trial court erred in declining to apply Federal law to the case at bar. In support of this argument, Ethan Allen cites Maywood Sportservice, Inc. v. Maywood Park Trotting Association (1973), 14 Ill. App. 3d 141, 302 N.E.2d 79, where our colleagues on the first district appellate court held that section 2 of the Sherman Act is substantially the same as that of section 3(3) of the Illinois Act. (Maywood Sportservice, Inc., 14 Ill. App. 3d at 151, 302 N.E.2d at 86; see also Ray Dancer, Inc. v. D M C Corp. (1992), 230 Ill. App. 3d 40, 594 N.E.2d 1344, 171 Ill. Dec. 824.) I would decline to adopt that position, and I agree with the trial court that the two statutes are not identical or similar. The language of the two statutes, as well as the comments to the Illinois Act, stand contrary to the position of both cases. The lack of analysis in depth of the two statutes in Maywood and Ray Dancer suggests that this was not at issue in either [31] case. We are free, however, to conduct a more extensive statutory analysis, which I think leads to a conclusion contrary to the majority's position. Further, the General Assembly's enactment of section 11 indicates an intent that Illinois antitrust law not be in total lockstep with the Federal Acts; the majority's position renders section 11 useless. Both the language and the intent of the State and Federal Acts are different. Therefore, section 11 of the Illinois Act does not apply, and we should not consider Federal precedent as binding.

The comments to the statute further support this conclusion. As noted in the historical and practice notes concerning subsection 3(3):

> "Subsection (3) prohibits establishing, maintaining, acquiring, or attempting to acquire monopoly power in order to exclude competition or fix prices. Its scope, essentially that of Section 2 [*32] of the Sherman Act, is somewhat more restricted than the federal law.
> * * *
>
> Subsection 3(3) of the Illinois Act is narrower than its federal counterpart. It not only adopts the 'abuse' theory, but it covers only two types of abuses, albeit the two which are important from a practical standpoint. It prohibits monopolizing only [32] when it is done for the purpose of excluding competition or fixing prices." Ill. Ann. Stat., ch. 38, par. 60-3, Historical and Practice Notes - 1970, at 463 (Smith-Hurd 1977).

Similarly, the bar committee comments to subsection 3(3) state:

> "This section would penalize the monopolist only when he acted for the forbidden purposes of excluding competition or of fixing prices. It is, therefore, directed only to abuses and attempted abuses of monopoly power rather than to its mere existence. To that extent the prohibition is somewhat narrower than that applied to Section 2 of the Sherman [1359] [*98] Act and is also somewhat more specific." (Ill. Ann. Stat., ch. 38, par. 60-3(3), Bar Committee Comments - 1967, at 454 (Smith-Hurd 1977).)

Again, the cases cited by the majority for the proposition that section 3(3) and the Federal Act are identical do not go into any appreciable depth of analysis of the two Acts. When we analyze the comments as well as the statutory language, we must conclude that the Acts are different and therefore, pursuant to legislative intent, should be construed differently as section 11 allows.

Similarly, the trial court was not inconsistent in using Federal per se [33] violation cases for guidance in determining that issue while stating that Federal cases are not binding on the court, as noted by the majority. As noted by the majority, our supreme court has indicated that the Federal precedents can be useful guidance; they do not, however, necessarily fall under section 11 and become binding precedent.

As the trial court correctly points out, there is a dearth of Illinois cases addressing section 3(3) of the Illinois Act. MBL (USA) Corp. v. Diekman (1985), 137 Ill. App. 3d 238, 484 N.E.2d 371, 91 Ill. Dec. 812, holds that a violation of section 3(3) of the Illinois Act is a "per se" violation of the Act, which makes a market-share analysis or rule-of-reason analysis unnecessary. Accordingly, we should hold that the trial court applied the correct principles of law in finding that Ethan Allen violated section 3(3) of the Illinois Act.

Although Ethan Allen does not dispute the existence or amount of plaintiff's actual damages, Ethan Allen claims that the damages are not recoverable as a matter of law. In support of this argument, [*33] Ethan Allen asserts that Federal law precludes the type of damages plaintiff received in [34] this case. We should properly hold that Federal law is not controlling on this case, however. Section 7(2) of the Illinois Act provides, in pertinent part:

> "(2) Any person who has been injured in his business or property, or is threatened with such injury, by a violation of Section 3 of this Act may maintain an action in the Circuit Court for damages, or for an injunction, or both, against any person who has committed such violation. * * * In an action for damages, if injury is found to be due to a violation of * * * subsections (2) or (3) of Section 3 of this Act, the person injured shall recover the actual damages caused by the violation, together with costs and reasonable attorney's fees * * *." (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1991, ch. 38, par. 60-7(2).)

Ethan Allen's argument and supporting cases are inapplicable to the case at bar, and the language of the Illinois Act clearly allows for actual damages and attorney fees. Since Ethan Allen did not dispute plaintiff's evidence at trial on the issue of damages and does not claim on appeal that plaintiff did not sustain actual damages, we need not further discuss this issue.

As stated earlier, section 7(2) of the Illinois Act provides that [35] persons injured by violations of section 3(3) "shall recover the actual damages caused by this violation, together with costs and reasonable attorney's fees." (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1991, ch. 38, par. 60-7(2).) In Fumarolo v. Chicago Board of Education (1990), 142 Ill. 2d 54, 566 N.E.2d 1283, 153 Ill. Dec. 177, our supreme court held:

> "The fundamental of statutory construction is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the legislature. [Citation.] In construing statutory provisions as being mandatory or directory, the word 'shall' is regarded as > indicative of a mandatory legislative intent. [Citations.] This court has recognized, however, that, while 'shall' ordinarily indicates a mandatory legislative intention, it may be construed as permissive if the context so indicates. [Citations.]

>
> Legislative intent can be ascertained from a consideration of the entire Act, its nature, its object and the consequences that would result from construing it one way or the other." Fumarolo, 142 Ill. 2d at 96, 566 N.E.2d at 1301-02.

Here, the language of section 7(2) indicates a mandatory construction. In that [1360] [*99] same section, [36] the statute directs the court to use discretion in awarding treble damages. An examination of the General Assembly's omission of that directive to use discretion with regard to [*34] attorney fees and its use of the word "shall" indicates that the General Assembly intended that the award of attorney fees be mandatory in a case such as this. I would therefore reverse the trial court's order denying plaintiff attorney fees and remand the case for determination of plaintiff's reasonable attorney fees.

For the foregoing reasons, I respectfully dissent.

Harris Custom Builders v. Hoffmeyer

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 7, 1993, Decided ; September 8, 1993, Docketed

No. 90 C 0741

Reporter

834 F. Supp. 256 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12432 ; Copy. L. Rep. (CCH) P27,164; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,376

HARRIS CUSTOM BUILDERS, INC., Plaintiff, v. RICHARD HOFFMEYER, Defendant and Third-Party Plaintiff, v. EVAN A. HARRIS, Third-Party Defendant.

Core Terms

third-party, allegations, drawings, monopolization, sham, counterclaim, antitrust, discovery, lawsuit, copyright infringement, unfair competition, counter, hire, infringement, racketeering, registration, continuity, predicate act, sanctions, default, invalid, parties, courts, independent contractor, malicious prosecution, antitrust claim, anti-competitive, proceedings, immunity, motions

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Criminal Offenses > Application Fraud

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Criminal Offenses > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Criminal Offenses > Criminal Infringement > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Formalities > Deposit & Registration Requirements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Deposit & Registration Requirements > Registration > Application Requirements

HN1[] Criminal Offenses, Application Fraud

See 17 U.S.C.S. § 506(e).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Coercion & Harassment > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN2[] Crimes Against Persons, Coercion & Harassment

In order to succeed on a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., claim, a plaintiff must prove that defendant conducted the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. The RICO statute defines pattern as consisting of at least two predicate acts of racketeering activity committed within a ten-year period. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(5). The alleged predicate acts must be related to one another and pose a threat of continued criminal activity. The required "continuity" is both a closed and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that, by its nature, projects into the future with a threat of repetition.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN3[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

To establish continued criminal activity requisite to a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., claim, the predicate acts themselves can involve the threat of ongoing criminal conduct. Alternatively, continuity appears where the racketeering activity is shown to be part of a legitimate or illegitimate entity's regular way doing business.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN4[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The United States Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals applies a multi-factor test to determine the existence of continued criminal activity requisite to a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., claim. Factors relevant to the continuity inquiry are: (1) the duration of time over which the predicate acts were committed; (2) the number and variety of the predicate acts; (3) the number of victims; (4) the presence of separate schemes; and (5) the occurrence of distinct injuries.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN5[] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

A single scheme directed at a single victim to inflict one injury does not threaten the type of continued criminal activity that is the focus of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, parties that use the court system are generally immune from antitrust liability for any anti-competitive effects their litigation efforts might have. An exception to this principle exists if the antitrust defendant has engaged in "sham" litigation--litigation that is ostensibly directed at the legitimate goal of vindicating legal rights, but is actually a mere "sham" to cover an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

HN7[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

In order to qualify as a sham for purposes of falling within the exception to antitrust immunity under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, a lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. Additionally, the baseless lawsuit must conceal an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process-as an anti-competitive weapon.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN8[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When evaluating a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court focuses on the complaint, but may also take into account matters of public record, orders, and items appearing in the record of the case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Copyright Law > ... > Statutory Copyright & Fixation > Protected Subject Matter > Architectural Works

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

An action that is well enough grounded, factually and legally, to survive a motion for summary judgment is sufficiently meritorious to lead a reasonable litigant to conclude that they had some chance of success on the merits. Such an action is not considered a "sham" lawsuit for purposes of determining whether an action should be accorded immunity from antitrust action under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To establish an attempt to monopolize under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show: (1) specific intent to achieve monopoly power; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at achieving this unlawful end; and (3) a dangerous probability that the attempt to monopolize will be successful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A successful attempt to monopolize results in the acquisition of monopoly power in a given market. Monopoly power is defined as "power over price" in the sense that a monopolist possesses the ability to cut back the market's total output and so raise price. In certain cases, market share is an indicator of this market power. The ultimate inquiry in an attempted monopolization case is whether the defendant has or reasonably might come close to having the ability to control market output and prices.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN12[] Intentional Torts, Malicious Prosecution

Courts applying Illinois law conclude that the only causes of action that can arise from the wrongful filing of a lawsuit are malicious prosecution and abuse of process.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

Torts > ... > Malicious Prosecution > Elements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Malicious Prosecution > Elements > Favorable Termination

HN13[] Abuse of Process, Elements

In order to state a claim for malicious prosecution, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant brought judicial proceedings against the plaintiff; (2) that there was a lack of probable cause for those proceedings; (3) that the defendant demonstrated malice in instituting the proceedings; (4) that the cause of action was terminated in the plaintiff's favor; and (5) that the plaintiff was injured.

Copyright Law > Copyright Infringement Actions > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN14[] Copyright Infringement Actions, Civil Infringement Actions

To state a claim for abuse of process, a plaintiff must allege an ulterior purpose and an act in the use of legal process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceedings.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN15[] Sanctions, Baseless Filings

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, an award of an amount less than full attorney fees can be appropriately imposed for deterrence purposes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Default & Default Judgments > Default Judgments

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Misconduct During Discovery

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Default & Default Judgments > General Overview

HN16[] Default & Default Judgments, Default Judgments

A default judgment can be an appropriate sanction for the loss or destruction of relevant evidence. Because default is a "drastic" sanction, the United States Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals recommends that courts consider lesser sanctions before imposing default judgments as punishment for improper behavior during discovery.

Judges: [1] HOLDERMAN

Opinion by: JAMES F. HOLDERMAN

Opinion

[*258] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

JAMES F. HOLDERMAN, District Judge:

Plaintiff Harris Custom Builders, Inc. ("Harris Builders") initially filed this action against defendant Richard Hoffmeyer, claiming copyright infringement. Defendant Hoffmeyer then brought a counterclaim against defendant Harris Builders and a third-party complaint against third-party defendant Evan A. Harris, Harris Builders' president, alleging violations of federal antitrust and racketeering laws and asserting a claim for unfair competition.

Harris and Harris Builders (collectively "Harris") have filed a motion, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), to dismiss Hoffmeyer's counterclaim and third-party complaint. Harris has also filed a motion for sanctions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. Additionally, the parties have advanced a number of motions relating to discovery disputes. For the reasons stated in this memorandum opinion and order, Harris' motion to dismiss and motion for sanctions are granted. The motions relating to discovery are granted in part and denied in part.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Harris Builders' underlying copyright infringement claim is based on allegations that Hoffmeyer copied [2] Harris Builders' copyrighted architectural drawings for use in the construction of a residence. This claim has been the subject of two motions for summary judgment filed by defendant Hoffmeyer, both of which this court has denied. (See Minute Orders of February 27, 1992 and October 9, 1992.)

In his counterclaim and third-party complaint, Hoffmeyer alleges that Harris committed racketeering and antitrust violations and engaged in unfair competition by seeking, in this lawsuit, to enforce a copyright which Harris allegedly knew was invalid. According to Hoffmeyer, the reason for the copyright's invalidity is the fact that Harris Builders committed fraud on the copyright office when it procured the copyright. The fraud allegedly occurred when Harris Builders, on the application for registration for a copyright, listed itself as the author of the drawings without mentioning Maxwin Heimann, who for the most part created the drawings "except for minor revisions." (See Third Party Complaint, P 29.) Hoffmeyer characterizes as fraud: 1) Harris Builders' failure to name Heimann as author; and/or 2) Harris Builders' failure to identify Heimann's original drawings, of which the copyrighted drawings [3] were a slightly altered version, as preexisting works upon which the copyrighted drawings were based.

DISCUSSION

I. MOTION TO STRIKE AND DISMISS

Harris argues that Hoffmeyer's counterclaim and third-party complaint should be dismissed. The court agrees. Hoffmeyer has not pleaded facts sufficient to support its claim that Harris fraudulently obtained the copyright. Further, Hoffmeyer has not adequately stated claims under federal racketeering and antitrust law, or under state [*259] unfair competition law. The reasons underlying these conclusions are discussed below.

A. Fraud on the Copyright Office

Hoffmeyer alleges that Harris engaged in a criminal violation of the Copyright Act under 17 U.S.C. § 506(e) for failure to comply with 17 U.S.C. § 409. 17 U.S.C. § 506(e) provides:

> HN1[] Any person who knowingly makes a false representation of a material fact in the application for copyright registration provided for by section 409, or in any written statement filed in connection with the application, shall be fined not more than $ 2,500.

The claim that Harris knowingly misrepresented [4] facts on the copyright application is the linchpin of Hoffmeyer's counterclaim and third-party complaint. According to Hoffmeyer, Harris, knowing that the copyright had been obtained through misrepresentation and was therefore invalid, used this infringement action based on the copyright to illegally harass its competitor Hoffmeyer.

This key link of Hoffmeyer's theory must, however, fail. Hoffmeyer's factual allegations do not support his assertion that Harris materially misrepresented facts on the copyright application or that Harris intended to deceive the Copyright Office. The facts averred by counter/third party plaintiff show only that Harris failed to correctly anticipate the evolution of copyright law.

Hoffmeyer alleges that Heimann was "an independent contractor" at the time he prepared the drawings. (See Third Party Complaint at P 7.) According to Hoffmeyer, Harris Builders' designation of itself as author of the drawing as a "work made for hire" under 17 U.S.C. § 101 was fraudulent because, as the Supreme Court held in Community for Creative Non-Violence v. Reid, 490 U.S. 730, 104 L. Ed. 2d 811, 109 S. Ct. 2166 (1989), the work made for hire [5] provision generally applies only to works produced by employees of an entity, not to those created by independent contractors such as Heimann.

The Reid case was issued, however, in June 1989, more than four months after Harris Builders completed the copyright registration. Before the Reid case, the case law was unclear and conflicting as to whether a work produced by an independent contractor could be claimed and copyrighted by the hiring party as "a work made for hire." For example, in Evans Newton, Inc. v. Chicago Systems Software, 793 F.2d 889 (7th Cir. 1986), the Seventh Circuit ruled that an independent contractor could produce a "work made for hire" as to which the hiring party would be the author, if the hiring party exercised a sufficient degree of control or supervision over the independent contractor's creation of the work. Id. at 894.

In representing itself as the author of a "work made for hire" on the basis that the drawings had been done for it by an independent contractor, Harris Builders took a position that several courts of appeal had endorsed as, at least, potentially viable. See Reid, 490 U.S. at 736 n. 2 [6] (detailing holdings of various courts of appeal). The fact that the Supreme Court's interpretation of the law later undercut Harris' stance does not convert Harris' conduct, which was supported by the law as it existed at the time, into fraud.

Hoffmeyer's allegations relative to Harris' failure to identify "preexisting works" on the copyright registration also do not support a claim of fraud. Counter/third-party plaintiff Hoffmeyer faults Harris for leaving blank Space 6 of the Form VA (visual arts) copyright registration, which calls for the identification of preexisting work upon which the work sought to be copyrighted is based. The Copyright Office's instructions for filing out Space 6 of the Form VA state:

> General Instructions: Complete space 6 if this work is a "changed version," "compilation" or "derivative work" and if it incorporates one or more earlier works that have already been published or registered for copyright or that have fallen into the public domain. (Emphasis added.)

See Nimmer on Copyright § 21.04.

Under these instructions, Harris had no duty to report unpublished works. Hoffmeyer does not allege that the "preexisting" Heimann drawings were [7] ever published or entered the public domain. Consequently, the alleged facts do not support the claim [*260] that Harris misled the Copyright Office on the application. In this respect, the facts of this case differ from the situation in Qad., Inc. v. ALN Assoc., Inc., 770 F. Supp. 1261 (N.D. Ill. 1991), which Hoffmeyer has cited. In Qad., the prior work which was not disclosed on the copyright application was a computer program which had been marketed by a company other than the copyright claimant and which therefore was in the public domain. Id. at 1263-66.

The conclusion that Hoffmeyer has not sufficiently stated a claim of fraud is further supported by Hoffmeyer's failure to allege any facts indicating that Harris intended to mislead the Copyright Office in any way. Hoffmeyer has not alleged that Heimann did not expect Harris to own the copyright on the drawings he made. Thus, there is no indication that Harris "stole" the work or committed a truly material misrepresentation of fact, as opposed to a possibly erroneous application of law, on the copyright registration.

B. RICO Claim

Hoffmeyer alleges that Harris' [8] procurement of the allegedly invalid copyright and the subsequent infringement action against Hoffmeyer violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. Counter/third-party defendants argue that Hoffmeyer has not pleaded facts sufficient to support the "pattern" element of this RICO claim.

HN2[] In order to succeed on a RICO claim, a plaintiff must prove that defendant conducted the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. See Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 491-93, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985). The RICO statute defines pattern as consisting of at least two predicate acts of racketeering activity committed within a ten year period. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5).

Courts have elaborated on what must be pleaded and proved in order to establish the existence of a RICO pattern. The alleged predicate acts must be related to one another and pose a threat of continued criminal activity. Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n. 14. The required "continuity" is both "a closed and open ended concept, referring either to [9] a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition." See H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 241, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 (1989).

In H.J. Inc., the Supreme Court enumerated a number of ways in which continuity could be shown. Id. at 242-43. HN3[] The predicate acts themselves could involve the threat of ongoing criminal conduct. Id. Alternatively, continuity appears where the racketeering activity is shown to be part of a legitimate or illegitimate entity's regular way doing business. Id.

Additionally, HN4[] the Seventh Circuit has articulated a multi-factor test for evaluating continuity. See Morgan v. Bank of Waukegan, 804 F.2d 970, 975 (7th Cir. 1986). Under Morgan, factors relevant to the continuity inquiry are; 1) the duration of time over which the predicate acts were committed; 2) the number and variety of the predicate acts; 3) the number of victims; 4) the presence of separate schemes; 5) the occurrence of distinct injuries. Id.

Applying these standards, the court must conclude that counter/third-party [10] plaintiff Hoffmeyer has not adequately alleged facts supporting the continuity element of the pattern requirement. Hoffmeyer's allegations as to the number, nature and timing of the predicate acts are vague and do not significantly bolster his showing on the first two Morgan factors. Moreover, application of the other factors point to a lack of continuity. Hoffmeyer has alleged only a single scheme (the pursuit of the lawsuit based on the allegedly invalid patent); a single victim (Hoffmeyer); and a single injury (the damage done to Hoffmeyer's competitive position).

The existence of only one scheme, one victim and one injury shows that Hoffmeyer has attempted to base a RICO claim on a "one-shot" episode of alleged criminal activity. As explained in Sutherland v. O'Malley, 882 F.2d 1196, 1204-05 (7th Cir. 1989), such a [*261] claim will not support RICO liability. HN5[] A single scheme directed at a single victim to inflict one injury simply does not threaten the type of continued criminal activity that is the focus of the RICO statute. The RICO claim must consequently be dismissed.

C. Antitrust Claim

In asserting his antitrust claim, apparently under the [11] anti-monopoly provision of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, Hoffmeyer focuses on the alleged anti-competitive intent behind and effect of the filing of Harris' copyright infringement lawsuit. Since Hoffmeyer's claim is based upon Harris' litigation activity, it implicates the Noerr-Pennington doctrine of immunity for activities, including access to the courts, that are aspects of the first amendment right to petition the government for redress of grievances. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1926 (1993) discussing Eastern R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961) and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965).

HN6[] Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, those that resort to the courts are generally immune from antitrust liability for any anti-competitive effects their litigation efforts might have. An exception to this principle exists if the antitrust defendant has engaged in "sham" litigation--litigation that is ostensibly directed [12] at the legitimate goal of vindicating legal rights, but is actually a mere "sham" to cover an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. See Professional Real Estate Investors, 113 S. Ct. at 1926.

The Supreme Court has recently addressed the issue of what an antitrust plaintiff must show in order to demonstrate that a defendant has engaged in "sham" litigation and is therefore not entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity. In Professional Real Estate Investors, 113 S. Ct. at 1928, the Court stated that, HN7[] in order to qualify as a sham, a lawsuit must be "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Secondly, the baseless lawsuit must conceal an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of governmental process-as opposed to the outcome of that process-as an anti-competitive weapon. Id.

Before the Supreme Court's decision in Professional Real Estate Investors, the courts of appeals had differed on the question of whether litigation which was objectively reasonable [13] but was motivated by anti-competitive considerations could constitute a sham. Professional Real Estate Investors, which like this case involved the evaluation of a copyright infringement suit as a "sham," answered the question in the negative. Professional Real Estate Investors, 113 S. Ct. at 1926. Consequently, Hoffmeyer, in order to prevail on his antitrust claim, must establish that Harris Builders' copyright infringement suit is a sham in the sense that no reasonable litigant could expect success on the merits. Id., 113 S. Ct. at 1928.

HN8[] When evaluating a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court focuses on the complaint, but may also take into account matters of public record, orders and items appearing in the record of the case. See Wright and Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 2d § 1357 (citing cases). Pursuant to this principle, the court, in determining whether Hoffmeyer is entitled to proceed on its claim that Harris Builders' infringement suit is a sham, may consider the evidence submitted on the two prior summary judgment motions that have been decided in this case.

This [14] inquiry leads to the conclusion that, according to the objective standard endorsed in Professional Real Estate Investors, the infringement suit is not a sham. As the court stated in its February 27, 1992 order, plaintiff Harris Builders has presented sufficient evidence to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant Hoffmeyer copied its copyrighted architectural plans. HN9[] An action that is well enough grounded, factually and legally, to survive a motion for summary judgment is sufficiently meritorious [*262] to lead a reasonable litigant to conclude that they had some chance of success on the merits. Consequently, plaintiffs' infringement action is not a sham and, under Noerr-Pennington, cannot subject Harris to antitrust liability.

Additionally, even if Noerr-Pennington immunity were not available, Hoffmeyer's antitrust claim would have to be dismissed because he has not satisfactorily alleged a claim of attempted monopolization. HN10[] To establish an attempt to monopolize under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show 1) specific intent to achieve monopoly power; 2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at achieving this unlawful end; and 3) a dangerous [15] probability that the attempt to monopolize will be successful. See Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1413 (7th Cir. 1989).

HN11[] A successful attempt to monopolize would result in the acquisition of monopoly power in a given market. Monopoly power has been defined as "power over price" in the sense that a monopolist possesses the ability to "cut back the market's total output and so raise price." Id. at 1414. In certain cases, market share is an indicator of this market power. Id. The ultimate inquiry in an attempted monopolization case is whether the defendant has or reasonably might come close to having the ability to control market output and prices. Id.

Viewed in the light of these principles, Hoffmeyer's attempted monopolization claim is markedly lacking. Hoffmeyer has alleged no facts indicating that Harris Builders possesses or could potentially possess monopoly power in any relevant market. The counterclaim and third-party complaint contain no allegations as to Harris' ability to control prices or its market share. No real attempt is made to identify or describe the relevant market. [16] Since counter/third-party plaintiff's pleading contains no facts that would support a claim that Harris Builders has monopolized or might potentially monopolize the relevant market, the claim must be dismissed.

D. Unfair Competition

Hoffmeyer has asserted a claim of "unfair competition" which is based on the same allegations as his other claims, i.e., that Harris has wrongfully pursued an infringement action to enforce an invalid copyright. It is unclear under what law Hoffmeyer brings this claim. The only case which his brief cites in support of the claim, Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery and Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965) is a federal antitrust case. As previously discussed, Hoffmeyer has failed to state a claim for antitrust violations. Hoffmeyer has not suggested, nor can the court identify, any other federal statute that would give rise to a cause of action on these facts.

Hoffmeyer's unfair competition claim fares little better under Illinois law. Hoffmeyer has not cited an Illinois case in which an unfair competition claim was successfully asserted on the basis that the defendant had improperly used litigation as [17] a means of competition. In fact, HN12[] courts applying Illinois law have concluded that the only causes of action that can arise from the wrongful filing of a lawsuit (a category that encompasses Hoffmeyer's claim) are malicious prosecution and abuse of process. See Havoco of America, Ltd. v. Hollobow, 702 F.2d 643, 647 (7th Cir. 1983), citing Lyddon v. Shaw, 56 Ill. App. 3d 815, 372 N.E.2d 685, 14 Ill. Dec. 489 (2d Dist. 1978).

Hoffmeyer's allegations, however, cannot sustain claims of either malicious prosecution or abuse of process. HN13[] The elements of malicious prosecution are 1) that the defendant brought judicial proceedings against the plaintiff; 2) that there was a lack of probable cause for those proceedings; 3) that the defendant demonstrated malice in instituting the proceedings; 4) that the cause of action was terminated in the plaintiff's favor; 5) that the plaintiff was injured. See e.g., Korbelik v. Staschke, 232 Ill. App. 3d 114, 596 N.E.2d 805, 807, 173 Ill. Dec. 181 (1st Dist. 1992). In this case, counter/third-party plaintiff cannot allege an action for malicious prosecution because the [18] underlying lawsuit has not yet terminated in his favor. Moreover, as discussed in the context of Noerr-Pennington [*263] immunity, Harris has already presented significant evidence in support of his claim. This evidence adequately demonstrates that plaintiff had probable cause to file its lawsuit.

HN14[] To state a claim for abuse of process, a plaintiff must allege an ulterior purpose and an act in the use of legal process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceedings. See Erlich v. Lopin-Erlich, 195 Ill. App. 3d 537, 553 N.E.2d 21, 22, 142 Ill. Dec. 671 (1st Dist. 1990). Although Hoffmeyer has asserted the existence of an ulterior motivation for Harris' copyright infringement action, he has not alleged any act in the use of the legal process that was not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceedings. Since Hoffmeyer has not alleged a claim for either abuse of process or malicious prosecution, any state law claim based on the Harris' maintenance of the copyright infringement lawsuit must fail.

E. Rule 11

Contending that Hoffmeyer's counter and third-party claims were not warranted by existing law and were interposed for an improper purpose, [19] Harris has requested sanctions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. An unsuccessful claim is not necessarily sanctionable under Rule 11 and, in this case, some factors militate against the imposition of sanctions. Hoffmeyer's claims touched on somewhat unsettled areas of law. The Professional Real Estate Investors case relied upon by this court was decided by the Supreme Court after the motions before the court were fully briefed, and the pattern requirement of the RICO statute has historically presented interpretative difficulties for both courts and parties. See generally N.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 236. Further, the Harris Builders copyright registration which is the focus of the claim, while not fraudulent, is not a model of legal propriety; Hoffmeyer was justified in devoting attention to it and questioning its validity.

Nevertheless, having reviewed Hoffmeyer's submissions, the court must conclude that Rule 11 sanctions are appropriate. In bringing RICO and Sherman Act claims, both of which involve a possible award of treble damages, Hoffmeyer asserted very serious allegations. The papers filed by Hoffmeyer do not, however, evidence the type of reasonable [20] legal inquiry that should provide the foundation for claims of this gravity.

In his response brief to Harris' motion, Hoffmeyer made no effort to define his antitrust claim in relation to the established legal standards for monopolization or attempted monopolization. Likewise, in defending his RICO claim, Hoffmeyer did not attempt to establish the existence of a pattern by reference to N.J. Inc., Sedima, Morgan or any other authority. The unfair competition claim was similarly vaguely defined and ill-supported. Further, the context in which the claims were brought points to an intention to harass and delay Harris in the prosecution of its copyright infringement suit. In light of these circumstances, the court must conclude that, in violation of Rule 11, Hoffmeyer's claims were not advanced after a reasonable inquiry into whether they were warranted by existing law and were interposed for an improper purpose. As a sanction, Attorney Summer, who signed the counterclaim and the third-party complaint, is directed to pay $ 500 to Harris Builders and $ 500 to Evan Harris. This sanction is commensurate with the magnitude of the violation and is imposed for the purpose of deterrence. [21] See Brown v. Federation of State Medical Boards of the U.S., 830 F.2d 1429, 1439 (7th Cir. 1987) HN15[] (Rule 11 award of amount less than full attorney fees can be appropriately imposed for deterrence purposes).

II. DISCOVERY DISPUTES

The parties have brought a number of discovery disputes to the attention of the court. Harris' Motion for an Order Compelling Discovery and Award of Appropriate Sanction relates to evidentiary materials requested in connection with Hoffmeyer's counterclaim and third-party complaint. Since these claims have been dismissed, Harris' motion is moot. Likewise, to the extent that Hoffmeyer's Combined Motion Under Rule 37 To Compel Harris to Comply With Discovery Requests is directed at information [*264] allegedly relevant to the counter and third-party claims, it is also moot.

Hoffmeyer's "Combined Motion Under Rule 37" also requests production of the tax returns of Evan Harris and businesses with which he is affiliated. The court determines that the purposes advanced by Hoffmeyer for disclosure of the tax returns should be satisfied by production of returns from 1988 to 1992. Harris is directed to disclose tax returns from that period [22] for himself and his associated businesses. Since Harris' opposition to this motion was partially successful and was substantially justified, the parties are to bear their own expenses. Fed. R. Civ. P 37(a)(4). The parties are also to bear their own expenses as to the mooted motions, because neither side prevailed on the merits.

Additionally, plaintiff Harris has filed a Motion to Enter a Default Judgment or Appropriate Sanction Based on the Destruction of Evidence. The "destroyed evidence" consists of documents relating to the design and construction of the house which is the subject of the allegedly infringing drawings. These documents were in the control of Hoffmeyer, who subsequently lost or destroyed them. Some, but apparently not all, of the allegedly "lost or destroyed" documents were subsequently found and provided to plaintiff.

HN16[] A default judgment can be an appropriate sanction for the loss or destruction of relevant evidence. See Marrocco v. General Motors Corp., 966 F.2d 220, 225 (7th Cir. 1992). Because default is a "drastic" sanction, the Seventh Circuit has recommended that courts consider lesser sanctions before imposing default judgments [23] as punishment for improper behavior during discovery. Poulos v. Naas Foods, Inc., 959 F.2d 69, 75 (7th Cir. 1992).

The circumstances presented in this case may not warrant the extreme sanction of default. The court, however, leaves open the possibility of such a sanction or a lesser sanction. The issue of an appropriate sanction is held in abeyance until the question of Hoffmeyer's destruction or loss of the documents which have not been provided during discovery, and the prejudice caused thereby, can be evaluated in the context of the preparation and presentation of evidence at trial, if this case is not settled.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated in this memorandum opinion and order, Evan Harris and Harris Builders' motion to dismiss the counterclaim and third-party complaint is GRANTED. Their motion for an order compelling discovery is DENIED as moot and their motion for a default judgment is DENIED. Hoffmeyer's Combined Motion Under Rule 37 is DENIED in part as moot and is GRANTED in part.

The parties are again strongly urged to discuss the settlement of this case. The case is set for status on September 21, 1993 at 10:00 a.m.

ENTER:

JAMES F. [24] HOLDERMAN

United States District Judge

DATED: September 7, 1993

Howerton v. Grace Hosp.

United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina, Shelby Division

September 13, 1993, Decided ; September 13, 1993, FILED

4:90cv187

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21042 *

PHILIP T. HOWERTON, M.D.; RAY M. ANTLEY, M.D.; and BLUE RIDGE RADIOLOGY ASSOCIATES, P.A., Plaintiffs, Vs. GRACE HOSPITAL, INC.; and PIEDMONT MEDICAL IMAGING, P.C., Defendants.

Subsequent History: [*1] Adopting Order of July 7, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21123.

Disposition: Defendants' motions for summary judgment ALLOWED.

Core Terms

radiology, outpatient, plaintiffs', inpatient, radiologists, patients, monopolization, antitrust, technical service, market share, opening, exclusive contract, no evidence, referring physician, summary judgment, monopoly power, terminate, causal, summary judgment motion, percent, staff, leveraging, referrals, charges, RECOMMENDATION, disparagement, free-standing, defendants', facilities, predatory

Counsel: For PHILIP HOWERTON, M.D., plaintiff: Wayne W. Martin, Morganton, NC USA. Robert N. Meals, Culp, Guterson & Grader, Seattle, WA USA. Michael D. Helgren, Culp Guterson & Grader, Seattle, WA USA. For RAY M. ANTLEY, M.D., BLUE RIDGE RADIOLOGY ASSOCIATES, P.A., plaintiffs: Wayne W. Martin, Morganton, NC USA. Robert N. Meals, Culp, Guterson & Grader, Seattle, WA USA.

For GRACE HOSPITAL, INC., defendant: James H. Sneed, Washington, DC USA. Thomas M. Starnes, Patton, Starnes, Thompson, Aycock & Teele, Morganton, NC USA. For PIEDMONT MEDICAL IMAGING, P.C., defendant: Thomas C. Morphis, Tate, Young, Morphis, Bach & Farthing, Hickory, NC USA.

Judges: J. TOLIVER DAVIS, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Opinion by: J. TOLIVER DAVIS

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND RECOMMENDATION

PURSUANT TO 28, UNITED STATES CODE, SECTION 636(b) and the standing orders of designation entered by the district court, the undersigned magistrate judge has reviewed defendants' motions for summary judgment. Having carefully considered such motions, reviewed the pleadings, and conducted a hearing, the court enters [*2] the following findings, conclusions, and recommendation.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

I. Introduction

The underlying lawsuit raises antitrust challenges to an April 4, 1990, contract between defendants Grace Hospital, Inc. ("Grace" or the "Hospital") and Piedmont Medical Imaging, P.C. ("PMI"), under which PMI became the exclusive provider of professional radiology services at Grace. The implementation of the PMI contract ended the longstanding tenure of plaintiffs Dr. Howerton, Dr. Antley, and their professional association, Blue Ridge Radiology Associates, P.A. (collectively "Blue Ridge"), as the sole radiologists at Grace.

In this lawsuit, which was filed October 1, 1990, and which seeks monetary and injunctive relief, plaintiffs contend that by entering into and implementing the PMI contract, the defendants have violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. 1, 2. plaintiffs allege (1) that Grace violated Section 2 by monopolizing and attempting to monopolize the market for outpatient technical radiology services; (2) that Grace has violated Section 2 by using its monopoly power in the market for inpatient technical radiology services to gain an unwarranted advantage [*3] in the outpatient technical services market ("monopoly leveraging"); (3) that Grace and PMI have violated Section 2 by conspiring to monopolize the market for outpatient radiology services; (4) that Grace has violated Section 1 by illegally tying the provision of inpatient technical radiology services to the purchase of inpatient and outpatient professional radiology services; (5) that Grace and PMI have violated Section 1 by entering into an illegal exclusive dealing arrangement; and (6) that Grace and PMI violated Section 1 by unreasonably restraining trade in the inpatient and outpatient radiology markets. See generally, Plaintiff's Memorandum In Opposition to defendants Grace Hospital, Inc.'s and Piedmont Medical Imaging, P.C.'s Motions for Summary Judgment (hereinafter "Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition"). [1]

[*4] On October 15, 1990, the district court denied plaintiffs' Motion for Temporary Restraining Order, and, on March 14, 1991, the district court denied plaintiffs' Motion for preliminary Injunction, finding that plaintiffs had "only a minimal likelihood of success on the merits." Memorandum of Opinion and Order at 6. At that same time, the district court denied defendants' Motion to Dismiss. Since that time, the parties have engaged in extensive and protracted discovery, following which the defendants filed the summary judgment motions currently before the court. For the reasons discussed below, the undersigned will recommend that defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment be granted.

II. Findings of Fact [2]

[*5] 1. Plaintiff Dr. Philip T. Howerton, M.D. ("Dr. Howerton") and Dr. Ray M. Antley, M.D. ("Dr. Antley") are physicians engaged in the practice of radiology in the City of Morganton, Burke County, North Carolina (hereinafter "Morganton") through a North Carolina professional association, Blue Ridge Radiology Associates, P.A., in which Drs. Howerton and Antley are the sole shareholders (collectively "Blue Ridge"). Complaint 7; Howerton Aff. 1; Antley Decl 1.

2. Grace Hospital, Inc. is a North Carolina private non-profit corporation, formed in 1908. Grace Hospital, Inc. owns Grace Hospital, a 204-bed acute care hospital (currently using 149 beds) located in Morganton. Wilson Aff. 2.

3. Defendant Piedmont Medical Imaging, P.C. ("PMI") is a professional corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of North Carolina, through which Dr. Richard Theodore Mull, M.D. ("Dr. Mull") and four other physicians provide radiology services in Morganton and neighboring communities. Mull Aff. 1-3; Mull Depo. (8/20/92) at 4; Mull Depo. (11/10/92) at 57. During the time relevant to this case, Dr. Mull has been the president and sole shareholder of PMI. Mull Depo. (11/20/92) at 75; Mull [*6] Aff. 1.

---

[1] Plaintiffs originally alleged pendent state law claims alleging due process violations, breach of contract, and, in their First Amendment to Complaint, tortious interference with business relationships. Plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed these claims in a Stipulation of Voluntary Dismissal, dated January 25, 1993.

[2] Defendants implicitly concede that a dispute of fact exists with respect to a number of issues, such as the relevant geographic and product markets and the connection of the challenged conduct with interstate commerce. Therefore, for purposes of the instant motion, and viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the Court accepts as correct Plaintiffs' assertions with respect to these issues. Nevertheless, because of the lack of any dispute of material fact on the dispositive issues discussed below, Defendants are entitled to summary judgment.

4. Among its departments, the Hospital operates a Radiology Department in which inpatients, outpatients, and emergency room patients may receive various radiology services twenty-four (24) hours per day, seven (7) days per week. Wilson Aff. 3; Howerton Aff. 2; Shull Depo. (11/19/92) at 35; Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 48-49. The Hospital owns or leases the radiology equipment, employs technicians and non-medical personnel to staff the Department, and charges radiology patients a "technical fee" associated with the operation of the Department's equipment. Wilson Aff. 3; Antley Decl. 5. The Hospital is the only provider of inpatient technical radiology procedures in Morganton. Wilson Aff. 3. [3]

[*7] 5. Patients receiving radiology services at the Hospital receive professional services from physician radiologists who perform or interpret the radiology procedures. Wilson Aff. 4. These physicians charge radiology patients a "professional fee" associated with their services. Id.; Antley Decl. 5.

6. Dr. Howerton has been in the practice of radiology in Morganton, and a member of the Grace Hospital medical staff, since 1966. Howerton Aff. 1. In 1966, Dr. Howerton joined the predecessor group to Blue Ridge, which, at that time, was already providing the professional radiology services at Grace Hospital, Valdese General Hospital, and Caldwell Memorial Hospitals, and which included three other radiologists. Howerton Depo. (7/15/92) at 5-8. Blue Ridge was formed from this group in 1970, after one of the radiologists had withdrawn, and has been providing radiology services in Morganton continuously since that time. Id. at 6, 13; Howerton Aff. 1.

7. Dr. Antley was admitted to the medical staff of Grace Hospital in February 1985, at which time he began practicing radiology with Blue Ridge. Antley Decl. 1. At that time, Blue Ridge included Dr. Howerton and one other radiologist [*8] who later retired in early 1986. Id.

8. Although several physicians had limited radiology privileges during this time, Howerton Aff. 6, plaintiffs state that they had no competition from any other radiologists at the time they were practicing in the Grace Hospital Radiology Department. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 281-82. With respect to referring physicians, Dr. Antley testified that "they … more or less had to do business with us for inpatients." Antley Depo. (7/13/92) at 91. [4]

9. Effective September 1, 1984, Blue Ridge's professional radiology services were provided pursuant to a written Agreement for Radiology Services with the Hospital ("Blue Ridge contract" or "1984 contract"). Meals Aff., Ex. 24; Howerton Depo. (7/15/92) [*9] at 28-29. This contract was renewed annually, until the Hospital terminated the contract with 90 days notice by letter dated June 29, 1990. Meals Aff., Ex. 39; Wilson Aff. 5. The contract did not require Blue Ridge to pay the Hospital at any time for the use of the Hospital's equipment, facilities, or personnel. Antley Depo. (7/13/92) at 223.

10. The Hospital treated the Blue Ridge contract as effectively exclusive. When Dr. Mull inquired about obtaining radiology privileges prior to 1989, he was told that the radiology department was effectively closed because of the contract with Blue Ridge and that he could not come to the Hospital and compete with Blue Ridge. Mull Depo. (8/20/92) at 130-31.

11. At all times when Blue Ridge was providing radiology services at Grace Hospital, Blue Ridge billed separately for its professional services. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 28, 38. When setting professional fees, Blue Ridge never considered the possibility that other radiologists might be brought into the hospital to compete. Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 30-31. Blue Ridge did not share in the revenue from Grace Hospital's technical services, for which Grace billed. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) [*10] at 42. Likewise, Grace Hospital did not share in the revenue from professional charges billed by Blue Ridge. Wilson Aff. 5.

---

[3] Plaintiff's allege that the relevant geographic market is the three zip code area encompassing Morganton, Glen Alpine, and Drexel. Because the parties have not suggested any changes in the radiology market in Glen Alpine and Drexel, the remainder of this opinion generally refers only to Morganton for the sake of simplicity.

[4] During the tenures of both Blue Ridge and PMI, other radiologists occasionally provided radiology services at the Hospital on a temporary "locum tenens" basis when necessary to cover for the full-time radiologists. Antley Depo. (7/13/92) at 221; Mull Depo. (8/20/92) at 79.

12. Sometime in 1984, Dr. Howerton suggested to Grace for the first time that a free-standing outpatient radiology facility was needed in Morganton. Howerton Aff. 8.

13. In a letter dated October 27, 1986, Dr. Howerton informed the Executive Committee of the Grace Hospital Board of Directors, the Hospital Administrator, and the Medical Staff Director, of Blue Ridge's intention to establish an outpatient radiology practice. Meals Aff., Ex. 28.

14. Dr. Howerton presented Blue Ridge's plans to the Hospital Board at the Board's October 30, 1986, meeting. Meals Aff., Ex. 29. As part of his presentation, Dr. Howerton distributed copies of his October 27, 1986, letter, as well as copies of a March 4, 1986, letter to a member of the Hospital Board, in which he suggested that Blue Ridge provide the Hospital Radiology Department with administrative services not provided under the 1984 contract. Id. Following the presentation, and after Dr. Howerton's departure from the meeting, the Hospital Board adopted resolutions (1) expressing its willingness to consider a joint [*11] venture in a free-standing diagnostic imaging clinic, (2) expressing its willingness to meet with Blue Ridge in an effort to renegotiate a mutually more satisfactory contract, subject to Blue Ridge's willingness to postpone its plans to open a free-standing radiology facility, (3) directing that an ad-hoc committee be appointed to meet with Dr. Howerton to discuss these issues, and (4) stating that if Blue Ridge proceeded to establish a free-standing diagnostic imaging clinic, the Hospital would terminate the 1984 Blue Ridge contract by serving 90-day written notice, as provided in the 1984 contract. Id. Blue Ridge was later informed of the passage of these resolutions. Howerton Aff. 10; Meals Aff., Ex. 2 at 102.

15. During the next year-and-a-half, Dr. Howerton and the Hospital exchanged numerous drafts of a new radiology contract proposal. Howerton Aff. 12.

16. In May 1988, believing the Hospital was unwilling to enter into a joint venture, and believing contract negotiations to be at an end, Dr. Howerton asked personnel with the American College of Radiology's Center for Economics and Quality Assurance to study and determine whether an outpatient facility established by Blue [*12] Ridge would be feasible in the Morganton area. Howerton Aff. 13. In August 1988, Mr. Richard Dorson of the American College of Radiology prepared a written report concluding that the outpatient facility would appear to be financially viable. Id.; Meals Aff., Ex. at 7. Although noting that changes over the past four years had made predictions more difficult, Mr. Dorson estimated that a Blue Ridge free-standing imaging facility would capture 60% of the referred outpatient procedures then performed at the Hospital (a predicted loss to the Hospital of 10,500 procedures a year). Meals Aff., Ex. 35 at 1, 2, 7; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 68; Dorson Depo. (5/28/92) at 46. Mr. Dorson also noted that interviewed physicians had made "many comments … that one [Blue Ridge] radiologist was difficult to deal with and that his reports should be more specific," and that "the relationship between the administration and the members of the [Blue Ridge] group is poor." Meals Aff., Ex. 35 at 6. Mr. Dorson concluded that there was no way to predict how the hospital would react to the opening of the facility, and that he thought it "best to assume that [the Hospital] will not be pleased and [*13] will attempt to take some action to show their concern." Id.

17. In early 1989, in reliance on Mr. Dorson's report, Blue Ridge proceeded with its plans to establish a freestanding radiology facility. Howerton Aff. 14; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 68. In addition to relying on Mr. Dorson's report, plaintiffs also were concerned that if they did not proceed, others would open a facility before them resulting in a loss of all of their hospital-based outpatient business. Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 20-28; Antley Depo. (7/13/92) at 172.

18. In proceeding with its plans, Blue Ridge assumed that it would continue to have access to or the right of use of the facilities, equipment, personnel and records utilized in the operation and function of the Radiology Department at Grace. Howerton Aff. 15.

19. In July 1989, the Hospital learned of Blue Ridge's plans to proceed with construction of the outpatient radiology facility. Keir Depo. (2/10/92) at 3-8. Dr. Antley, when approached by Douglas C. Keir, then the Assistant Administrator of the Hospital, confirmed that Blue Ridge was proceeding with its plans and indicated that Blue Ridge was no longer discussing the issue with the Hospital. [*14] Id.

20. Blue Ridge's plans concerned Grace Hospital because of the inherent problems and conflict of interest it perceived in allowing access to business records and facilities to an entity concerned entirely with its own center. Keir Depo. (10/25-26/91) at 165, 264. Other concerns included hours and days of coverage, on-call time, quality of care, and administrative responsibility. Keir Depo. (10/25/91) at 62-63, 165.

21. Based upon the authority of the October 30, 1986, resolution of the Hospital Board, the Hospital began a search, in July 1989, for other radiologists to provide coverage in the Hospital Radiology Department. Keir Depo. (2/10/92) at 9-10. Mr. Keir conducted the search on behalf of the Hospital in order to present alternative coverage options before the next meeting of the Executive Committee. Id. Mr. Keir contacted the Chief Executive Officers and radiologists at Valdese General Hospital, in Valdese, North Carolina, Catawba Memorial Hospital in Hickory, North Carolina, and Caldwell Memorial Hospital, in Lenoir, North Carolina. Id. at 10-20.

22. In late July or early August 1989, Mr. Keir contacted and met with Dr. Mull, who was then practicing alone, [*15] under the PMI name, at Catawba Memorial Hospital. Keir Depo. (2/10/92) at 16-20; Keir Depo. (10/25/91) at 90-94; Mull Aff. 3. At this meeting, and in subsequent contacts with Dr. Mull and his attorney, it was Mr. Keir who proposed that any contract with PMI provide that PMI be the exclusive provider of radiology services at the Hospital. Keir Depo. (10/25/91) at 94; Mull Aff. 5; plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition at 93.

23. At the August 18, 1989, meeting of the Hospital Board's Executive Committee, Mr. Keir reported on his search for alternative providers of radiology services. Meals Aff., Ex. 2, at 104-07. Mr. Keir reported that of the radiologists whom he had contacted, Dr. Mull had expressed the most interest and a willingness to sign an exclusive contract. Id. at 106.

24. Blue Ridge began construction of the facility at a site less than one mile from Grace Hospital, in March 1990. Howerton Aff. 16.

25. On April 4, 1990, the Hospital and PMI executed an Agreement For Radiology Services, with an effective date of October 9, 1990 (the "PMI contract"). Meals Aff., Ex. 23. Because of Hospital concern that Blue Ridge might withdraw from the Hospital prior to the expiration [*16] of the ninety (90) day notice period, the Hospital and PMI also executed an Interim Services Agreement on April 4, 1990, under which PMI committed itself to providing radiologist services to the Hospital on short notice between July 9, 1990, and October 9, 1990. Id.

26. Exclusive contracts for professional radiology services are common; as of 1989, approximately sixty (60) percent of all radiologists across the country had an exclusive contract with their hospitals, and only approximately ten (10) percent of hospitals had open radiology staffs. Dorson Aff. 7.

27. By letter dated June 22, 1990, the Hospital notified Blue Ridge that it was invoking the ninety (90) day termination clause in the Blue Ridge contract. Meals Aff., Ex. 39; Wilson Aff. 5.

28. In August 1, 1990, Blue Ridge opened its free-standing outpatient radiology facility. Howerton Aff. 18. Until this date, the Hospital and Blue Ridge had never been in competition with each other in any market; since then, the Hospital and Blue Ridge have competed only in the market for outpatient technical services. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 283; Leffler Decl. 11, 15.

29. At its opening, the Blue Ridge facility had eight employees, [*17] offered state-of-the art x-ray, fluoroscopy, mammography, computerized axial tomography ("CAT scans"), color vascular, and ultrasound equipment (including color doppler ultrasound which Grace Hospital did not have), and provided convenient parking, modern examining rooms, and easy registration for patients. Howerton Aff. 18; Antley Depo. (5/4/92), Ex. 55. [5] The facility did not offer Magnetic Resonance Imaging ("MRI") and Nuclear Medicine services which are available at Grace Hospital.

[5] When Blue Ridge opened its outpatient radiology center, it employed at least one technologist who had previously been employed by Grace Hospital. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 236-37.

Howerton Decl. 27. [6] The Blue Ridge facility is open Monday through Friday, and closes each day at 5:30 P.M. Antley Depo. (12/12/92) at 3-4.

[*18] 30. For a transition period of several weeks or a month before the September 27, 1990, effective termination date of the Blue Ridge contract, both Blue Ridge and PMI simultaneously provided professional radiology services at the Hospital. Hord Depo. (10/8/92) at 91; Howerton Aff. 21.

31. Several physicians on the Grace Hospital medical staff met with PMI, in September 1990, in an unsuccessful attempt to have PMI agree to modify the exclusive provision to allow Drs. Howerton and Antley to continue to provide radiology services in the Hospital. Dellinger Decl. 3.

32. On September 28, 1990, PMI replaced Blue Ridge as the sole provider of professional radiology services at Grace Hospital pursuant to its exclusive contract. Wilson Aff. 6; Mull Aff. 8.

33. In accordance with the PMI contract, and as was the case when Blue Ridge provided radiology services at the Hospital, PMI bills separately for its professional services and does not share in the revenue from Hospital technical services. Mull Depo. (8/20/92) at 6; Wilson Aff. 6; Meals Aff., Ex. 23. [7] similarly, the Hospital does not share in the revenue from PMI's professional services. Mull Depo. (8/20/92) at 6; Wilson Aff.

[*19] 6. The PMI contract does, however, list as "cause" for termination, PMI's charging of excessive professional radiology fees. Meals Aff., Ex. 23 11, 17.

34. Previous to the arrival of PMI and the opening of the Blue Ridge facility, Grace Hospital was the only significant supplier of outpatient technical services and Blue Ridge was the only significant supplier of outpatient professional radiology services in Morganton. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 281-82; Leffler Decl. at 11. Since then, patients have been able to obtain such radiology services at either Grace Hospital or the Blue Ridge facility, and from either PMI or Blue Ridge physicians. Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 89, 109; Leffler Depo. (12/2-4/92) at 255, 278. [8]

[*20] 35. The average outpatient technical radiology charges at Grace Hospital are approximately 47% higher than those at Blue Ridge. Kennedy Aff. 3. The higher charges at Grace Hospital reflect the fact that Grace Hospital has significantly higher overhead costs -- principally attributable to the fact that it is open 7 days per week, 24 hours per day and handles emergency room patients. Shull Depo. (11/19/92) at 35.

36. The Blue Ridge facility has significantly and steadily increased its business since plaintiffs lost access to the Hospital. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 247, 254-55; Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 11-24; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 234-43.

37. Since the facility opened in August 1990, Dr. Howerton has made several efforts to market the facility's radiology services, including the sending of promotional letters to at least one physician in January 1991, and to a number of physicians in the summer of 1992. Howerton Aff. 33; Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 11-17.

---

[6] Beginning in late February 1993, the Blue Ridge facility began to offer MRI on a one-day-per-week basis to patients in Morganton pursuant to an arrangement with a mobile MRI company. Howerton Decl. 27.

[7] Until January 1992, patients receiving mammography screens were charged one fee which was divided between the Hospital and the physicians. Hord Depo. (10/8/91) at 37. Since that time, the Hospital and PMI have billed separately for their respective services. Wilson Aff. at 6.

[8] There are also a number of other providers of outpatient technical and professional radiology services in Burke County, specifically: Morganton Family Practice, Dr. Anderson, two orthopedists (Drs. Glugover and Saunders), Dr. Shah-Khan, and the radiology group at Valdese General Hospital. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 263-64; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 202-06. Two years after the opening of the Blue Ridge outpatient facility, all of these providers still supplied outpatient radiology services. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 264. In addition, after the opening of the Blue Ridge outpatient facility, two other physicians have obtained radiology equipment and now provide technical radiology services. Id.

38. After initiating those marketing efforts, the Blue Ridge facility has steadily increased its business and competitive standing, drawing patients away from Hospital's outpatient department. Howerton Depo. [*21] (12/18/92 P.M.) at 11-24; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 234-43.

39. Grace Hospital staff physicians have increased their referrals to the Blue Ridge outpatient facility since it opened, including many who initially made no referrals there. Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 11-25; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 234-43.

40. Initially, the plaintiffs performed approximately 25 procedures per day at the facility. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 247. By May 1992, the plaintiffs were performing approximately 30 to 35 procedures per day at the facility. Id. at 254-55. The total number of procedures performed at the Blue Ridge facility have continuously increased since its opening, from 7,553 in 1991 to 9,156 in 1992. Antley Decl. 12-13.

41. In 1991, Blue Ridge had total charges of $ 1,237,210 for procedures performed at the outpatient facility, and Blue Ridge collected $ 913,857 of these charges. Antley Decl. 12. In 1992, Blue Ridge had total charges of $ 1,432,695 for procedures performed at the outpatient facility, and Blue Ridge collected $ 954,731 of these charges. Id. 13.

42. Blue Ridge has had revenue in excess of expenses each year since the outpatient facility was opened. Antley [*22] Decl. 12-13. Blue Ridge has not missed any scheduled payment for rent, mortgage, salaries or other expenses since opening its outpatient facility in August, 1990. Antley Depo. (12/12/92) at 22.

43. Calculating market share as a percent of the total number of radiology procedures performed, Blue Ridge's market share in the outpatient technical services market has steadily increased -- from 0% prior to the opening of the Blue Ridge facility, to 49% in October of 1992. Eisenstadt Depo., Ex. 1, Ex. IV. Grace Hospital's market share has correspondingly decreased from 100% to 51%. Id. [9]

44. Calculating market shares as a percent of total revenue, Blue Ridge's market share in the outpatient technical services market has increased from 0% prior to the opening of the Blue Ridge facility to 30% in 1991 and 27% in 1992. Kennedy Decl. at [*23] 4.

45. Numerous physicians attribute various improvements in the Hospital radiology department to competition from Blue Ridge. Croft Decl. 7; Salisbury Decl. 6; Seagle Decl. 6; Smith Decl. 6; Melton Decl. 8; Lindquist Decl. 6.

46. There is no plausible evidence of any causal link between Blue Ridge's lack of access to the Grace Hospital inpatient department and any harm to Blue Ridge in the outpatient technical services market.

47. There is no evidence that Grace Hospital required or directed staff physicians to refer outpatients to the Hospital's radiology department, rather than to Blue Ridge. Physicians are free to choose to use the Blue Ridge facility rather than the Hospital's outpatient department. Leffler Depo. at 215; Leffler Decl. 25; Giles Decl. 6; Howerton Depo. (12/18/92) at 11-25. Dr. Giles for example, states that: "Despite the fact that I have been forced to use one of the various PMI radiologists for all inpatient and some outpatient examinations performed at the hospital … I have referred a number of my outpatients to Blue Ridge." Giles Decl. 6.

48. Blue Ridge has received referrals from physicians who have joined the medical staff since 1990 and had no previous [*24] experience with the plaintiffs at Grace Hospital. See Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 21-26. In addition, no physicians remaining in practice in Morganton (including new physicians) have decreased their referrals to Blue Ridge. Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 25.

49. Although Drs. Howerton and Antley "used to have almost daily contact with the referring physicians," and although they "seldom see them at all these days," Antley Decl. 9, Drs. Howerton and Antley have the opportunity to make such contacts, as is evidenced by their promotional visits to approximately a dozen physicians' offices. Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 261.

[9] This calculation does not include the procedures performed by the office-based providers of radiology services, which, if included, would further reduce Grace's market share.

50. In December 1992, a total of thirty-two physicians, who constitute a majority of the physicians on the medical staff at Grace Hospital, and who also collectively account for over fifty percent the radiology business referred in Morganton, signed a declaration stating that, if Drs. Howerton and Antley were permitted access to the Grace Hospital Radiology Department, they would refer at least some of their patients to Drs. Howerton and Antley for radiology services. Howerton Aff. 31 & Ex. A; Antley Decl. 7.

51. In support of their Opposition to defendants' [*25] Motions for Summary Judgment, Plaintiffs attach declarations of nineteen physicians on the staff of Grace Hospital which express varying degrees of support for Drs. Howerton's and Antley's access to the Grace Hospital Radiology Department.

52. As evidenced by the above, plaintiffs have established a good working relationship with referring physicians.

53. None of the physician declarations supports the proposition that physician choice of outpatient radiologists has been influenced by the exclusion of Blue Ridge from the Hospital radiology department. Two physicians mention the Hospital's outpatient services, but they state only that if there were no exclusive contract, "I would have an alternative from which to choose a radiologist … with respect to … outpatient examinations, which I sometimes prefer to have done at the hospital." Dellinger Decl. 8 (emphasis added); Deekens Decl. 6.

54. There is no evidence that any referring physicians at Grace feel pressure to refer their patients to the Hospital despite the advantages offered by Blue Ridge. Dr. Ellison, one of the two physicians upon whose testimony plaintiffs rely in support of this proposition, stated in his deposition [*26] testimony that he has never felt any express or implied pressure from Grace Hospital or anybody connected with Grace Hospital to use Blue Ridge Radiology less and use Grace Hospital radiology more for outpatient radiology services. Ellison Depo. at 40. Rather, Dr. Ellison's patients make the choice. Id. The other physician, Dr. Madison, who, contrary to plaintiffs' characterization, was not one of the "physicians at Grace," testified "there is really nothing that anyone from Grace has said that would lead me to believe that" Grace pressured Western Carolina Center to refer patients to Grace. Madison Depo. at 20. Any efforts by the Hospital to solicit business from Western Carolina Center merely amounted to a willingness to compete with Blue Ridge. Id. at 33-34.

55. There is evidence in one physician declaration that the Hospital's Administrator and attorney justified the exclusion of plaintiffs from the Hospital Radiology Department by disparaging plaintiffs' skills and provision of services to Hospital patients. Melton Aff. 7. There is no evidence that the alleged disparagement of Blue Ridge by the Hospital caused injury to Blue Ridge in the outpatient technical radiology [*27] services market, or that any physician has, as a result, referred fewer outpatients to Blue Ridge.

56. There is some evidence suggesting that Grace may have been aware that the Blue Ridge facility might have "a difficult time" without access to the inpatient facilities and plaintiffs have submitted evidence which they believe show that defendants, in terminating their contract with plaintiffs, intended to destroy competition or build monopoly. See "Evidence Regarding Causation" and "Evidence Showing Concerted Action of Mull/PMI and Grace" (and citations to affidavits and depositions contained therein); c.f. Keir Depo. (2/10/92), at 108. See also Note 31, infra.

57. No patient or referring physician is forced to purchase outpatient professional radiology services from PMI as a condition of obtaining inpatient technical radiology services. Leffler Depo. at 215.

58. There is no evidence of record that access to the inpatient facilities of Grace Hospital is essential to the maintenance of plaintiffs' practices or their outpatient radiology facility. Plaintiffs state not only that they have been able to duplicate the equipment and service of the Hospital (with the exception [*28] of nuclear medicine), but also that they have been able to provide superior quality equipment and service than the Hospital. Howerton Decl. 18; Antley Decl. 6.

59. The employment market for radiologists is nationwide, as evidenced by Blue Ridge's national advertising for a radiologist in the placement service of the American College of Radiology, by Dr. Antley's receipt of employment inquiries from radiologists from around the country, by Dr. Antley recruitment from out-of-state, and by the concessions of Plaintiff's economic expert. Antley Depo. (7/13/92) at 31-32, 39; Antley Depo. Ex. 1; Leffler Depo. (12/2-4/92) at 302.

III. Summary Judgment

A. Plaintiffs' Claims and Defendants' Motions

Plaintiffs claim that Defendant Grace Hospital, by terminating its radiology contract with Blue Ridge, and by entering into an exclusive radiology contract with PMI, attempted to eliminate competition from Blue Ridge's free-standing radiology facility in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. 1, 2. Plaintiffs further claim that Defendant PMI violated these antitrust laws by cooperating with Grace Hospital in these alleged efforts. However, as noted in detail below, [*29] defendants' summary judgment motions must be granted because the evidence raises no genuine issue of material fact which could give rise to any such antitrust liability.

B. Standard For Summary Judgment

Under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil procedure, summary judgment must be entered "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). In opposing summary judgment, "an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but … must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e).

As the nonmoving party which will bear the burden of proof at trial, Blue Ridge is entitled to have its "evidence … believed, and all reasonable inferences … drawn in its favor." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). However, a motion for summary judgment may not be defeated by evidence that is "merely colorable" or "is [*30] not sufficiently probative." Id. at 249-50.

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has recognized that "summary judgment is an important tool for dealing with antitrust cases." Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 708 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 112 S. Ct. 973, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137 (1992). Although noting that antitrust plaintiffs do not face any "special burden" in facing summary judgment, the Supreme Court recently reiterated that summary judgment is appropriate where plaintiffs' antitrust theories are "speculative," "not 'reasonable,'" "economically senseless," or "make[] no practical sense." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 284-85 (1992) (discussing and quoting Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986)). In Matsushita, the Court noted that "if the factual context renders [plaintiffs' antitrust] claim implausible -- if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense -- [plaintiffs] must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary." [*31] 475 U.S. at 587.

C. Federal Antitrust Claims

Plaintiffs' antitrust claims cannot survive summary judgment both because there is no evidence of any causal antitrust injury, and because, even if there were such evidence of antitrust injury, there is no evidence to support plaintiffs' substantive claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. These issues will be addressed in order.

1. Antitrust Injury

The existence of causal antitrust injury is a threshold question in any antitrust suit. Drs. Steuer & Latham, P.A. v. National Medical Enterprises, Inc., 672 F. Supp. 1489, 1501 (D.S.C. 1987), aff'd, 846 F.2d 70 (4th Cir. 1988) (table) (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)). [10]

---

[10] "Antitrust standing to sue is at the center of all antitrust law and policy. It is not a mere technicality." HyPoint Technology, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 949 F.2d 874, 877 (6th Cir. 1991).

In order to state a viable antitrust claim, "a plaintiff must show a reasonably probable causal link between the antitrust violation and a business loss of the sort the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." Advanced Health-Care Services, Inc. v. Radford Community Hosp., 910 F.2d 139, 149 (4th Cir. 1990). In order to meet this burden, a plaintiff must produce sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the alleged violation [*32] is a "material cause" of the alleged injury. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969) (emphasis added).

Thus, in order to demonstrate antitrust injury, a plaintiff must make two showings -- first, that the defendant's conduct caused an injury to the plaintiff, and second, that the resulting injury was of the sort that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. In the instant case, plaintiffs have failed to make these showings in any market.

a. Injury in the Inpatient Radiology Market

In the inpatient market, plaintiffs have shown no injury of the type intended to be prevented by the antitrust laws, which were enacted "for the protection of competition, not competitors." *Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, [33] 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). Although Plaintiffs can arguably show causal injury to themselves as competitors, given that they are no longer able to generate revenue from inpatient professional radiology services, this injury is insufficient to constitute antitrust injury. In cases involving physicians displaced from hospitals -- whether because of a loss of privileges or because of the hospitals' entry into exclusive contracts with other physicians -- the courts in the Fourth Circuit and elsewhere have consistently held that "the fact that a hospital's decision caused a disappointed physician to practice elsewhere does not of itself constitute an antitrust injury." Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 709 (loss of privileges); Harron v. United Hosp. Ctr., Inc., 522 F.2d 1133, 1134 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 916, 47 L. Ed. 2d 321, 96 S. Ct. 1116 (1976) ("it is frivolous to urge that the employment of a single doctor to operate the radiology department of a hospital invokes the Sherman Act"); Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1502 (table) ("merely changing exclusive contractors … cannot constitute a violation of the antitrust laws"); *Shafi v. St. Francis Hosp., 1991-1 [34] Trade Cas. (CCH) 69,500, at 66,135 (4th Cir. 1991) (citing Steuer for same proposition in exclusive anesthesiology contract case).

b. Injury in the Outpatient Technical Services Market

In the outpatient market, plaintiffs have failed to produce any plausible evidence of any causal injury to their business, let alone injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Since opening their outpatient facility in August 1990, and since their exclusion from the Grace Hospital Radiology Department, plaintiffs have performed a continuously increasing number of outpatient radiology procedures at their facility. Antley Decl. at 12-13. After plaintiffs initiated marketing efforts, Grace Hospital staff physicians, including many who did not previously refer to the facility, have increased their referrals to the Blue Ridge outpatient facility, thereby drawing patients away from the Hospital's outpatient department. Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 11-25; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 234-43. No physicians remaining in practice in Morganton, including physicians who have arrived since the exclusion of plaintiffs from the Hospital, have decreased their referrals to Blue Ridge. [*35] Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 25.

As a result, plaintiffs' share of the outpatient technical services market, measured as a percent of the total number of procedures performed, has increased from 0% immediately prior to the opening of the facility, to 49% in October of 1992. Eisenstadt Depo., Ex. 1, Ex. IV. When market share is measured as a percent of total revenue, plaintiffs' market share has increased from 0% immediately before the opening of the facility to 27% in 1992. Kennedy Decl. at 4.

Nevertheless, plaintiffs offer evidence that the Blue Ridge facility's market share, when measured as a percent of total revenue, has declined from 30% in 1991 to 27% in 1992, and expert testimony that Blue Ridge's revenues are such that the facility is not likely to survive. Kennedy Decl. 4; Andrews Decl. at 4-11. Plaintiffs have failed, however, to produce any plausible evidence that any such injury was caused by the conduct of defendants. As noted above, an antitrust claim must fail where plaintiffs, although able to prove injury, cannot offer plausible evidence that the injury was caused by the defendants. *Associated Gen. Contractors, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, [36] 459 U.S. 519, 532 n.26, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983) ("even if the injury was easily provable, there would be no recovery if the plaintiff could not sufficiently establish the causal connection."); Abcor Corp. v. AM Int'l, Inc., 916 F.2d 924, 931 (4th Cir. 1990) (upholding summary judgment for the defendant under Section 2 because, inter alia, "while [plaintiffs'] profit margin may have declined, the plaintiffs have failed to show a causal link to anti-competitive activity.").

It is undisputed that Grace Hospital has not required or directed staff physicians to refer outpatients to the Hospital Radiology Department, and staff physicians are free to choose to use the Blue Ridge facility instead. Leffler Depo. at 215; Leffler Decl. 25; Giles Decl. 6. Plaintiffs assert, however, that the Hospital has caused injury to Blue Ridge's outpatient business by pressuring referring physicians to refer outpatients to the Hospital rather than Blue Ridge, and by disparaging the skills of plaintiffs. The record does not support these contentions. The two allegedly pressured physicians have testified in depositions that no such pressure was imposed. Ellison Depo. at 40; Madison [*37] Depo. at 20, 33-34.

The only other evidence of such pressure offered by plaintiffs is Dr. Howerton's Affidavit statement that he has been told by unnamed referring physicians that they are "afraid" to refer outpatients to Blue Ridge because of the supposed threat of Hospital retaliation. Howerton Aff. 32. This statement is insufficient to raise a plausible inference of causation. Ottensmeyer v. Chesapeake & Potomac Tel. Co., 756 F.2d 986, 992 (4th Cir. 1985) (unsupported conclusory assertions by plaintiff are insufficient to defeat summary judgment on an antitrust claim). Not only is the statement hearsay, it says nothing to suggest that this supposed fear is based upon actual threats communicated to physicians by the Hospital or has any other rational basis. No physician corroborates Dr. Howerton's claim. Moreover, it is contradicted by the record evidence cited above which shows that large numbers of the medical staff do refer outpatients to Blue Ridge, and that numerous physicians obviously had no fear of the Hospital when they submitted declarations on behalf of plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs' allegation of causal injury from the alleged disparagement is similarly defective. Although [*38] one physician's affidavit states that the Hospital's Administrator and attorney justified plaintiffs' exclusion from the Hospital Radiology Department by disparaging plaintiffs' skills and services, there is no evidence that the alleged disparagement caused any physician to refer fewer outpatients to Blue Ridge. Without such proof of causation, plaintiffs disparagement allegations are insufficiently speculative and cannot form the basis of an antitrust action. [11]

[*39] The only other evidence of causation presented by plaintiffs is the opinion testimony of their economic expert, Dr. Keith B. Leffler. Dr. Leffler opines that, as a result of the exclusive contract between Grace and PMI, (1) plaintiffs' outpatient revenues will continue to decline, (2) defendants have increased their shares of the outpatient markets, (3) outpatients in Morganton pay higher prices, (4) the quality of radiology services received by outpatients in Morganton has been adversely affected, and (5) there has been anti-competitive impact in the outpatient market. Leffler Decl. 22, 25, 26, 27, 28. This opinion testimony, however, is based on "facts" which are unsupported and contradicted by the record, and, as such, is insufficient to defeat summary judgment. Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) ("When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict"); Military Services Realty, Inc. v. Realty Consultants of Virginia, Ltd., 823 [*40] F.2d 829, 832 (4th Cir. 1987) (an expert affidavit must provide a "factual predicate for its theoretical conclusion…. [A party] cannot thwart the purposes of Rule 56 by creating issues of fact through affidavits that contradict its own depositions").

Dr. Leffler's opinions concerning causation are based upon two types of factual assertions, each of which is unsupported by the record. First, Leffler relies upon a number of assertions suggesting that physicians are [11] See generally III P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law 738a, 738c (1978) (because "the effects upon a rival would usually be very speculative," disparagement claims should "presumptively be ignored," and should be recognized only where there exists "cumulative proof that the representations were clearly false, clearly material, clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter, continued for prolonged periods, and not readily susceptible of neutralization or other offset by rivals"); Abcor, 916 F.2d at 931 (to allow federal antitrust claims based upon allegations of disparagement and other similar allegations of "unfair competition," would be contrary to the intent of the antitrust laws).

---

"required," or are "influenced" by the Hospital, to refer outpatients to the Hospital rather than to Blue Ridge. [12] [*41] However, even Dr. Leffler himself concedes that referring physicians are free to choose to refer outpatients to either provider. Leffler Decl. at 25; Leffler Depo. at 215. Moreover, as noted above, there is no evidence that any physicians, even those identified by plaintiffs and by Dr. Leffler, have been pressured or influenced to refer outpatients to the Grace Hospital Radiology Department. [13]

Second, Dr. Leffler's opinions rely upon the unsupported factual assertions that the Plaintiffs' inability to practice at the Hospital has indirectly injured Blue Ridge in the outpatient market. Specifically, Dr. Leffler opines that Blue Ridge has lost, and will continue to lose market share (as measured by percent of total [*42] revenue) because plaintiffs' exclusion from the Hospital has precluded them from establishing a good working relationship with referring physicians, particularly those arriving in Morganton subsequent to plaintiffs' exclusion. [14]

[*43] The record evidence shows, however, that plaintiffs have established a good working relationship with both long-established and newly arrived referring physicians. Plaintiffs have maintained contact with referring physicians not only by performing outpatient procedures, but also through promotional visits to approximately 12 physicians' offices. Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) at 261. Moreover, this continued good working relationship is evidenced by the fact that a majority of the Grace Hospital staff signed the petition in support of plaintiffs, and by the numerous physician affidavits attached to their Memo in Opposition. Howerton Aff. 31 Ex. A; Antley Decl. at 7. Accordingly, as noted above, not only is there no evidence of injury, but the evidence also shows (1) that the number of referrals from Grace physicians to Blue Ridge (and Blue Ridge revenues) have steadily increased, (2) that new physicians with no previous experience with plaintiffs at Grace have referred patients to Blue Ridge, and (3) that no Grace physician, whether long-established or newly arrived, has decreased referrals to Blue Ridge. Antley Aff. 12-13; Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 21-26. [15]

---

[12] See Leffler Decl. 26 (stating that a number of physician declarations "indicate that these doctors' choice of radiologist to read their outpatient films and their choice of outpatient center have been influenced by the exclusion of Blue Ridge from Grace"); Leffler Decl. 27 (stating that "the referring physicians' choice of outpatient radiology supplier has been influenced by the exclusionary contract"); Leffler Decl. 28 (stating that "where a consumer in a market, contrary to his preference is required to pay a higher price for a lower quality product, the presence of anti-competitive impact in the market is beyond doubt").

[13] Ellison Depo. at 40; Madison Depo. at 20, 33-34. With respect to the physician declarations cited in support of this proposition in paragraph 26 of Dr. Leffler's Declaration, only two even mention the Hospital's outpatient services, and these two merely state that if there were no exclusive contract, "I would have an alternative from which to choose a radiologist … with respect to … outpatient examinations, which I sometimes prefer to have done at the hospital." Dellinger Decl. 8 (emphasis added); Deekens Decl. 6. The declarations do not state that their choice to have occasional outpatient radiology work done at the Hospital has been influenced in any way by the exclusive contract for inpatient radiology services, or by any other conduct by the Hospital.

[14] See Leffler Decl. 22 ("According to Dr. Howerton, a differentially large portion of the clinic's referrals come from hospital colleagues with whom Blue Ridge has developed an ongoing relationship during Dr. Howerton's 27 year tenure at Grace…. Therefore, as physicians retire from the Grace staff and are replaced by new physicians who have no historical relationship with Blue Ridge, the revenues at the clinic will continue their decline"); Leffler Decl. 25 ("According to Richard Dorson of the American College of Radiology, referrals to freestanding outpatient center such as Blue Ridge will be reduced when the radiologists staffing the outpatient center 'are unable to establish a regular, full service relationship with referring doctors'"); Leffler Decl. 25 ("the ability to establish a working relationship and demonstrate one's skill by performing the complex radiology procedures frequently required of inpatients generates outpatient referrals").

[15] Dr. Howerton states that Blue Ridge "does not receive very many referrals from the newer members of the medical staff who have joined since 1990." Howerton Aff. 30. This statement, however, simply reflects the fact that 52 non-radiologist physicians were on the active staff prior to the termination of Plaintiffs' contract, and that only 9 non-radiologist physicians have since joined the active staff. Eisenstadt Depo., Ex. 5. Dr. Howerton does not state that he receives a higher percentage of the patients of long-established physicians than he does from newer physicians, and therefore, this testimony does not support Dr. Leffler's conclusion that Blue Ridge's revenues will "continue" to decline.

Mr. Dorson's affidavit, upon which Dr. Leffler also relies, states that where radiologists are unable to serve inpatients, he "would expect the number of referrals to the outpatient facility [operated by the radiologists] to decrease significantly because these radiologists would be unable to establish a regular, full service relationship with the referring physicians." Dorson Aff. at 5. As [*44] All of Dr. Leffler's opinions addressing the alleged causal link between inpatient access and success in the outpatient technical services market are factually baseless. Military Services Realty, 823 F.2d at 832. As a result, plaintiffs' claims are indistinguishable from those of the above-cited cases which have consistently held that physicians' displacement from a hospital as a result of an exclusive contract does not constitute antitrust injury.

2. Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization

Even if plaintiffs had produced sufficient plausible evidence of antitrust injury, their claims would nevertheless not survive summary judgment because of their failure to meet their burden of proof with respect to their substantive claims. As noted above, plaintiffs have the burden of proving each element of each cause of action, and cannot defeat summary judgment with evidence that is "merely colorable" or "not sufficiently probative." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249-50; M & M Medical Supplies & Service, Inc. v. Pleasant Valley Hosp., 981 F.2d 160, 163 (4th Cir. 1992); Advanced Health-Care, 910 F.2d at 147. With respect to their monopolization claim, plaintiffs must demonstrate: [*45]

> (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 292-93 (1992). In order to succeed on their attempted monopolization claim, plaintiffs must prove:

> [1] a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market, [2] predatory or anti-competitive acts, and [3] a dangerous probability of successful monopolization.

Advanced Health-Care, 910 F.2d at 147; M & M Medical Supplies, 981 F.2d at 160. As plaintiffs recognize in their Memorandum in Opposition, both theories require plaintiffs to prove that defendants have engaged in conduct deemed to be "exclusionary," "anti-competitive," or "predatory." See Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 602, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985); ABA Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments 261 (3d ed. 1992). Before reaching this issue, however, the undersigned will examine the [*46] evidence concerning the Hospital's market power in the relevant markets.

a. Monopoly Power

Plaintiffs have failed to show that Grace Hospital possesses monopoly power in the allegedly monopolized market for outpatient technical radiology services. Despite finding that the Hospital possesses monopoly power in the market for inpatient technical radiology services, plaintiffs' economic expert apparently did not find sufficient evidence to justify a similar conclusion with respect to the outpatient technical radiology services. Leffler Decl. 6.d. Dr. Leffler merely concludes that "Grace has maintained market power in the outpatient technical radiology services market." Leffler Decl. 6.i (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs are not entitled to a presumption of monopoly power based upon their assertion that Grace Hospital possessed 70% of the outpatient technical services market in 1991 and 73% in 1992. Kennedy Aff. 4. [16] As noted above, there are significant price differences of approximately 47% between the technical services offered at Grace and Blue Ridge, and therefore the use of market shares calculated as a percentage of total revenue is inappropriate. See Brown Shoe Co., [*47] 370 U.S. at 341 n.69. [17] Calculating market share as a percent of the noted above, however, Dr. Dorson's expectations are contradicted by the record evidence that referrals have increased, and therefore, his testimony, like that of Dr. Leffler's, is insufficient to demonstrate causal antitrust injury.

---

[16] Throughout discovery, the experts of both Plaintiffs and Defendants experts calculated market shares based on the number of procedures performed at Blue Ridge. See, e.g., Kennedy Depo., Ex. 5, Ex. 32; Eisenstadt Depo. Ex. 1, Ex. IV. Only in his affidavit submitted with Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition did Plaintiffs' expert change the basis of his calculations to total revenues.

[17] As noted in the Findings of Fact, the higher charges at Grace Hospital reflect the fact that Grace Hospital has significantly higher overhead costs -- principally attributable to the fact that it is open 7 days per week, 24 hours per day and handles number of procedures performed, Grace Hospital's market share has steadily declined to 51% in October of 1992 -- a percentage which does not give rise to a presumption of monopoly power. Eisenstadt Depo., Ex. 1, Ex. IV.

[*48] Finally, plaintiffs have failed to produce sufficient evidence to support their assertion that Grace's monopoly power is evidenced by Grace's maintenance of market share despite its higher-priced and lower-quality outpatient radiology services. As noted above, the evidence actually shows that the proportion of outpatients seeking services at Blue Ridge has steadily increased, as would be expected if Grace's outpatient services were more expensive and of lesser quality. Eisenstadt Depo., Ex. 1, Ex. IV; Antley Decl. 12-13. The undersigned concludes that summary judgment should be granted for defendants on the monopolization claim, because there is no evidence to suggest that Grace Hospital has monopoly power in the market for outpatient technical radiology services.

b. Anti-competitive, Exclusionary or Predatory Acts

Even if plaintiffs had produced sufficient evidence to raise an inference of monopoly power, plaintiffs' monopolization claim would fail as a matter of law because of the lack of evidence of predatory or exclusionary acts. For this same reason, plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claims also cannot survive summary judgment.

Plaintiffs' assertion that the Hospital's [*49] exclusion of Blue Ridge from the Radiology Department constitutes predatory conduct under Section 2 is incorrect as a matter of law. As the Fourth Circuit recently recognized, "'[a] firm with lawful monopoly power has no general duty to help its competitors.'" North Carolina Electric Membership Corp. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 1993 Trade Cas. (CCH) 70,264, at 70,320 (4th Cir. 1993) (quoting Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 375 (7th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 934, 94 L. Ed. 2d 765, 107 S. Ct. 1574 (1987)); Abcor Corp., 916 F.2d at 929 (quoting Olympia Equip. for the same proposition). [18]

[*50] "The lone exception to this 'no-duty-to-help-competitors' rule is the 'essential facilities doctrine.'" North Carolina Electric, at 70,320 (emphasis added). However, plaintiffs have stated that they are "not pursuing [an essential facilities claim] in this case." Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition at 63, 82 n.92. Moreover, even if plaintiffs had asserted such a claim, the claim could not survive summary judgment simply because plaintiffs have been able to duplicate (and actually improve upon) the Hospital's radiology equipment and facilities. Howerton Aff. 18. [19] As a matter of law, therefore, Grace Hospital's refusal to assist its outpatient competitor by allowing inpatient access cannot constitute predatory conduct.

Plaintiffs' reliance on the Fourth Circuit's [*51] decisions Advanced Health-Care and M & M Medical Supplies for any different proposition is misplaced. Both cases involved allegations that the defendant hospitals had monopolized or attempted to monopolize the downstream market for durable medical equipment (DME) by directing or steering discharged hospital patients to DME suppliers either owned by, or affiliated with, the defendant hospitals. Advanced Health-Care, 910 F.2d at 142; M & M Medical Supplies, 981 F.2d at 167. In both cases, the plaintiffs were already established and successful DME suppliers at the time of the hospitals' alleged predatory conduct, and, again in both cases, the plaintiffs clearly suffered precipitous declines in market share as a direct emergency room patients. See Shull Depo. (11/19/92) at 35. Blue Ridge is open five days per week and closes at 5:30 p.m. See Antley Depo. (12/12/92) at 3-4.

---

[18] See also Olympia Equip., 797 F.2d at 375 ("A monopolist has … no duty to extend a helping hand to new entrants;" "the lawful monopolist should be free to compete like everyone else; otherwise the antitrust laws would be holding an umbrella over inefficient competitors"); McKenzie v. Mercy Hosp. of Independence Kansas, 854 F.2d 365, 368 (10th Cir. 1988) (holding that hospital not liable under Section 2 for denying access to plaintiff physician because "a competitor in a market is free to choose the parties to whom it will offer its products or services"); Twin Labs., Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 568 (2d Cir. 1990) (the antitrust laws do "not require one competitor to give another a break just because failing to do so offends notions of fair play").

[19] As one of the necessary elements of an essential facilities claim, a plaintiff must prove an "inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility." Advanced Health-Care, 910 F.2d at 150 (citation omitted).

result of the hospitals' conduct. In Advanced Health-Care, the defendant hospitals began requiring that all of their patients receive discharge services and DME exclusively from the hospitals' affiliated DME companies. 910 F.2d at 142-43. As a direct result of that conduct, the plaintiffs' sales were absolutely "prohibited" in one market and "diminished to virtually nothing" in another. Id. [20] Similarly, in M & M Medical Supplies, the defendant [*52] hospital opened a wholly owned DME subsidiary and proceeded to engage in a variety of objectionable conduct, including the direct ordering of DME from the subsidiary without even consulting with the discharged patients for whom the equipment was being ordered. 981 F.2d at 162, 167. Subsequently, the plaintiff's gross revenues fell by 75%. Id. at 162.

Unlike the plaintiffs in Advanced Health-Care and M & M Medical Supplies, plaintiffs were new entrants in the market for outpatient technical radiology services, who were able, despite the alleged predatory conduct of the defendants, to steadily increase their physician referrals, their procedures performed, and their total market share from 0% to 49%. Howerton (12/18/92 P.M.) at 11-25; Howerton Depo. (8/17-19/92) [*53] at 234-43; Antley Decl. 12-13; Eisenstadt Depo., Ex. 1, Ex. IV. Even using plaintiffs somewhat misleading calculation of market share, Blue Ridge's share of total outpatient technical radiology revenue has increased from 0% to at least 27% during the relevant time period. Kennedy Aff. 4.

Moreover, unlike the defendant hospitals in the DME cases, Grace Hospital has never required or directed staff physicians or patients to use the Hospital's outpatient radiology services rather than those of Blue Ridge. Leffler Depo. at 215. Rather, physicians are free to choose where to refer their outpatients, and they frequently and increasingly have been choosing to refer to Blue Ridge. Leffler Decl. 25; Giles Decl. 6; Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 11-25. As noted above, plaintiffs' assertions that the Hospital has pressured physicians to refer to the Hospital, and that the Hospital has harmed Blue Ridge by disparaging plaintiffs' skills, are not supported by the record. [21] Thus, Advanced Health-Care and M & M Medical are inapposite not only because plaintiffs have shown no exclusionary effect, but also because plaintiffs have shown no analogous evidence that defendants directed -- [*54] or even attempted indirectly to influence or direct -- outpatients away from Blue Ridge. [22]

3. Monopoly Leveraging Claim

The Fourth Circuit has not yet expressly recognized monopoly leveraging as [*55] an independent Section 2 claim. M & M Medical Supplies, 981 F.2d at 160 (reserving question until factual record more fully developed; Advanced Health-Care, 910 F.2d at 149 n.17 (same). Because the theory would allow a plaintiff to recover under Section 2 without a showing of monopolization or a dangerous probability of monopolization in the leveraged market, an increasing number of other circuits have explicitly concluded that monopoly leveraging is not a cognizable Section 2 claim. [23]

---

[20] In Advanced Health-Care, the court was ruling on the propriety of the District Court's dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), and therefore, the court accepted the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint as true. 910 F.2d at 143.

[21] As noted in the discussion of antitrust injury, there is not even any evidence that lack of access to the Hospital has adversely affected Blue Ridge in the outpatient market.

[22] Likewise inapposite is the decision in Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S. at 585, in which the defendant terminated a 16-year-old cooperative venture with plaintiff, a competing ski area operator, which was indispensable to competition. In the present case, there is no evidence that access to the Hospital is indispensable to outpatient competition. Moreover, the Hospital and Blue Ridge were not competitors prior to the opening of the Blue Ridge outpatient facility when plaintiffs had access to the Hospital, and therefore there was never any such longstanding cooperative agreement between competitors. Antley Depo. (5/4/92) at 283.

[23] See, e.g., Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 61 U.S.L.W. 3523 (1993); Alaska Airlines Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 547, cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 814 (1992); see also Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 541 n.18 (7th Cir. 1986); Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 236 U.S. App. D.C. 311, 735 F.2d 577, 586 n.14 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

However, even if the Fourth Circuit [*56] were to recognize monopoly leveraging, the plaintiffs' claims under this theory would nevertheless not survive summary judgment. In order to recover under a monopoly leveraging claim, plaintiffs would have to prove:

> [1] that the defendant possessed monopoly power, [2] that it used that power to gain an unwarranted competitive advantage in a second district market, and [3] that there was causal antitrust injury to the leveraged market.

Advanced Health-Care, 910 F.2d at 149 (citation omitted). Plaintiffs allege that by excluding them from the only facility in which inpatient radiology services may be provided, Grace Hospital has leveraged its inpatient monopoly to gain an unwarranted advantage in the market for outpatient technical services. However, there is no evidence of any causal injury to Blue Ridge in that outpatient market. Moreover, as noted above, there is no duty under Section 2, absent evidence of an essential facility, for Grace Hospital to help its competitor by providing plaintiffs with access to the Radiology Department. North Carolina Electric, supra, at 70,320.

4. Conspiracy to Monopolize

Because the evidence establishes that Grace Hospital [*57] acted unilaterally in deciding to terminate the Blue Ridge contract and to enter into an exclusive contract with PMI, plaintiffs' conspiracy to monopolize claim cannot survive summary judgment. White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98, 103 (4th Cir. 1987) (where "the evidence conclusively establishes that the hospital's board acted unilaterally" in deciding that radiologists alone could provide official interpretations of CT scans); Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1517, 1521 ("the record … unequivocally supports defendants' claim that they acted unilaterally in deciding not to renew the [plaintiffs'] Agreement, and in deciding to enter into the [defendant pathologist's] Contract").

As in these cases, the evidence shows that Grace Hospital acted unilaterally in deciding to terminate the Blue Ridge contract, and in deciding to contract with other radiologists. Keir Depo. (2/10/92) at 9-10. Indeed, the Board resolution stating that the Blue Ridge contract would be terminated if Blue Ridge proceeded with its plans for the outpatient facility was passed in 1986. Meals Aff., Ex. 29. Moreover, in the meetings with Dr. Mull which followed the decision to terminate the Blue [*58] Ridge contract, it was the Hospital which proposed that any contract with PMI would be exclusive. Keir Depo. (10/25/91) at 94; Mull Aff. 5; plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition at 93. The evidence that PMI refused to relinquish the exclusivity provision in its contract after several physicians so requested is insufficient to demonstrate conspiracy. White, 820 F.2d at 101.

5. Tying Arrangement

Neither of plaintiffs' tying claims is viable under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. In the first tying claim, plaintiffs assert that the Hospital has tied the provision of inpatient technical services to the purchase of inpatient professional radiology services. This claim fails as a matter of law because the Hospital neither competes in the market for inpatient professional radiology services, nor receives any portion of the fee from the provision of these professional radiology services. Wilson Aff. 6; Mull Depo. (8/20/92) at 6; White, 820 F.2d at 104 (tying claim failed where hospital did not compete in market for professional CT scan services, the allegedly tied product).

The second tying claim, in which plaintiffs allege Hospital tying of inpatient technical radiology services to [*59] outpatient professional services, similarly fails because the hospital does not compete in the market for the tied product. Moreover, this second claim also fails because no patient or referring physician is forced to purchase outpatient professional radiology services from PMI as a condition of obtaining inpatient technical radiology services. Leffler Depo. at 215; Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 n.17. ("where the buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem").

6. Exclusive Dealing

Plaintiffs' assertion that the PMI contract constitutes an illegal exclusive dealing arrangement under Section 1 fails because plaintiffs have not made the required showing, under the rule of reason, that the arrangement substantially and unreasonably foreclosed competition among producers or suppliers in the relevant market. Jefferson Parish

Hosp. District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 44-45, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)(O'Connor, J., concurring); Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961); Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1515.

In the market in which radiologists compete for employment or hospital contracts, [*60] plaintiffs can show no harm to competition because the evidence suggests that this market is nationwide, [24] and therefore incapable of being affected by a single exclusive contract. Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 479 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 852, 102 L. Ed. 2d 110, 109 S. Ct. 137 (1988); Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1516.

In the inpatient professional and outpatient technical radiology services markets, there is similarly no evidence of unreasonable harm to competition. First, in the inpatient professional services market, the mere switching of exclusive physician providers cannot constitute harm to competition -- even where the displaced physicians, like plaintiffs, did not technically have an exclusive contract, but effectively faced no competition in the hospital. Steuer, 672 F. Supp. at 1502 & n.7, aff'd, No. 87-3753, slip op. at 3 n.5 ("Although the prior contracts [*61] between Steuer & Latham and the hospital included no exclusivity provisions, the doctors received all of the pathology work that the hospital generated"). [25]

Second, in the outpatient technical services market, as discussed above, plaintiffs have presented no plausible evidence that competition in this outpatient market has been adversely affected by the PMI contract. [26] There is no evidence [*62] that the exclusive contract has caused any physicians or patients to seek outpatient services from the Hospital rather than from Blue Ridge. [27] [*63] Patients and physicians are free to use either the Hospital or Blue Ridge for outpatient procedures, where before their only choice was the Hospital. See Coffey v. Healthtrust, Inc., No. CIV-89-840-A, slip op. at 15-16 (W.D. Okla. Sept. 4, 1990), aff'd, 955 F.2d 1388 (10th Cir. 1992) (where plaintiff radiologist's exclusive hospital contract was terminated after he expanded his competing outpatient center, there was no rule of reason violation, because "the public now has the advantage of choosing between two providers"). [28]

As the Fourth Circuit unequivocally stated in rejecting a similar claim, "it is frivolous to urge that the employment of a single doctor to operate the radiology department of a hospital invokes the Sherman Act." Harron, 522 F.2d at 1134. To hold otherwise "would be a sudden departure from a long established custom that has never [*64] been

---

[24] Antley Depo. (7/13/92) at 31-32, 39; Antley Depo. Ex. 1; Leffler Depo. (12/2-4/92) at 302.

[25] The mere fact that the PMI contract has a four-year term with no terminable-at-will clause does not constitute evidence of a new insulation from competitive pressures, where, as here, it is clear that Plaintiffs were similarly insulated while at the Hospital. Howerton Depo. (12/18/92 P.M.) at 30-31. (when setting prices, Dr. Howerton never considered the possibility that other radiologists might be brought into the hospital to compete); Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31 ("without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition, respondent cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws") (emphasis added).

[26] Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Auth., 816 F.2d 9, 11 (1st Cir. 1987) ("when there is no plausible connection between exclusive dealing and antitrust harm, courts have not hesitated to hold that dealing lawful").

[27] In addition, as also noted above, even if there were evidence that the PMI contract alone indirectly caused a decrease in referrals to Plaintiffs' facility, that evidence would not suffice to show injury to competition rather than to a competitor. As Dr. Leffler recognized, where no provider has monopoly power in a market, and when patients and physicians have a choice of provider, there can be no harm to competition. Leffler Decl. 30.

[28] Although Plaintiffs allege that the Blue Ridge facility is not viable without access to the Hospital, the Plaintiffs have offered no plausible evidence that this purported lack of viability is the result of Plaintiffs' exclusion from the Hospital. If Plaintiffs are simply asserting that the facility is not viable because the Hospital has effectively prevented Plaintiffs from cross-subsidizing with inpatient professional service revenues, this assertion is clearly not cognizable under the antitrust laws. Olympia Equip., 797 F.2d at 376 ("if a firm went to a monopolist and said, 'Please -- for the sake of competition -- give me a loan so I can compete with you and make this a competitive market,' and it was turned down, it could not invoke the Sherman Act").

found illegal.... Exclusive contracts between hospitals and physicians, (especially radiologists), are standard fare and violate no law." Coffey, slip op. at 24. [29]

7. Unreasonable Restraint of Trade

For the same reasons, defendants must also prevail with respect to plaintiffs' unreasonable restraint of trade claim, which, like the exclusive dealing claim, must be analyzed under the rule of reason. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29 (plaintiff has the burden of proving an unreasonable restraint on competition). [30] To the extent plaintiffs are alleging that the Hospital and PMI engaged in a conspiracy to restrain trade, plaintiffs' claim is deficient for the same reasons discussed with respect [*65] to the conspiracy to monopolize claim. [31]

[*66] RECOMMENDATION

IT IS, THEREFORE, RESPECTFULLY RECOMMENDED that defendants' motions for summary judgment be ALLOWED.

The parties are hereby advised that, pursuant to 28, United States Code, Section 636(b)(1)(C), written objections to the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendation contained herein must be filed within 30 days of service of same. Due to the complexity of this case, and with the concurrence of the district court, the time for filing objections provided by the statute has been enlarged sua sponte.

Failure to file objections to this Memorandum and Recommendation with the district court will preclude the parties from raising such objections on appeal. Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 88 L. Ed. 2d 435, 106 S. Ct. 466 (1985), reh'g denied, 474 U.S. 1111, 88 L. Ed. 2d 933, 106 S. Ct. 899 (1986); United States v. Schronce, 727 F.2d 91 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1208, 81 L. Ed. 2d 352, 104 S. Ct. 2395 (1984).

This Memorandum and Recommendation is entered in response to Piedmont Medical Imaging, P.C.'s Motion for Summary Judgment (#__) and Grace Hospital, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment (#__).

This 13th day of September, [*67] 1993.

J. TOLIVER DAVIS

UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

End of Document

---

[29] The sole case cited by Plaintiffs in which an exclusive physician contract was held to violate Section 1 is inapposite because it involved a clear elimination of professional anesthesia competition orchestrated by anesthesiologists. Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440 (9th ed. 1988).

[30] Plaintiffs are mistaken in suggesting that Defendants have the burden of demonstrating the pro-competitive effects of the agreement. Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition at 105. As noted above, the initial burden to prove adverse competitive effects is on the plaintiff, and the existence of pro-competitive justifications is relevant only after such a showing has been made. Areeda and Turner, Antitrust Law, 1502 at 371-72.

[31] As briefly discussed in finding 56 supra, plaintiffs have offered a summary of their "Evidence Regarding Causation," which they contend cites specific evidence of anti-competitive and monopolistic intent on the part of defendants. For the limited purpose of the pending motions, the undersigned has drawn the suggested inference from plaintiffs' proffer. While plaintiffs have cited Supreme Court dicta to suggest that some unspecified antitrust liability may result from evidence of intent alone, the Supreme Court has clearly held, when actually applying the rule of reason, that "without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition, respondent cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31; see also Steuer, 672 F.2d at 1504 (rule of reason requires showing of "substantially adverse" effect). As noted above, plaintiffs have made no such showing.

Flegel v. Christian Hosp. Northeast-Northwest

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

June 16, 1993, Submitted ; September 14, 1993, Filed

No. 92-3773

Reporter

4 F.3d 682 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 23354 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,355

Gerhard Flegel, D.O.; Richard Still, D.O., Appellants, v. Christian Hospital, Northeast- Northwest; Michael R. Richmond; Robert P. Margolis; Richard A. Blath; Donald A. Blum; Wilfrido C. Feliciano; Richard J. Kloecker; Stephen N. Bell; Clarence M. Benage; Leon Bialecki; Alan C. Craig; Godofredo M. Herzog; James Debnam; Barbara Ellzey; Joshua Jensen; Loretta May Roberts; Arturo C. Montes; David M. Near; Edward A. Puro; Sanford E. Rabushka; John L. Rollo; William P. Svancarek; Alan F. Tess; Thomas J. Banton, Jr.; Mariano N. Floro, Jr.; Robert H. Halley; William F. Hoffman; Gerald W. Moritz; Gerald Newport; Sharad P. Parikh; Ebello T. Pasia; Thomas E. Shine; George T. Shuert; Mardonio J. R. Yap; Yoram Hahn; Carl S. Ingber; David Landau; Michael Matar; Thomas E. Ryan; Ivan W. Sletten; Mark L. Travis; Gloria Wattler; William E. Dreyer; Paul J. McKee; Ned Taddeucci; Arthur J. Seewoester; Leo I. Mirowitz; Arnold J. Millner; David M. Margolis; Mary J. Lee; Leonard R. Kostecki; Paul Kohnen; Gerry Kamenko; Paul F. Detrick; Fred L. Brown; Peter W. Callow, Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] Rehearing Denied October 14, 1993, Reported at: 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 26757.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri. District No. 90-1290-C(5). Honorable Stephen Limbaugh, District Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed

Core Terms

patients, market power, privileges, rule of reason, district court, urologists, boycott, summary judgment, relevant market, anticompetitive, detrimental effect, urological, providers, training, staff privileges, Sherman Act, anesthesiologist, osteopathic, geographic, decisions, referrals, cases, no evidence, consumers, staff, violation of section, reasonably find, antitrust, possesses, effects

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

In reviewing a grant of summary judgment, the reviewing court applies the same standard as does the district court, and views the evidence most favorably to the nonmovant, granting all reasonable inferences in the nonmovant's favor as well.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In complex antitrust cases, no different or heightened standard for the grant of summary judgment applies.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN3[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

When neither motive nor intent are determinative, summary judgment may be particularly useful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A restraint may be adjudged unreasonable either because it fits within a class of restraints that has been held to be "per se" unreasonable, or because it violates what has come to be known as the "Rule of Reason," under which the test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. If an alleged restraint falls within the category of restraints subject to per se analysis, a plaintiff need not prove its anticompetitive effects. The courts of appeals have generally examined the denial or revocation of hospital privileges under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

The category of restraints classed as group boycotts is not to be expanded indiscriminately, and the per se approach has generally been limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor. Moreover, the court has been slow to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Only certain boycotts are unlawful per se. Nonetheless, the distinction between boycotts that are and those that must be tested under the rule of reason is less than crystal clear. The line can best be drawn, however, by following the analysis used to separate per se and rule of reason cases in general. Thus, the per se rule should be invoked for a group boycott when the challenged activity would almost always tend to be predominantly anti-competitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

To determine the legality of a restraint of trade under the rule of reason, one must focus on the detrimental effects to competition, often by defining the relevant market and considering evidence of the defendant's power within that market. This is not always necessary, however. Since the purpose of the inquiries into market definition and market power is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, proof of actual detrimental effects, such as a reduction of output, can obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a surrogate for detrimental effects. Either showing -- market power or actual detrimental effects -- shifts the burden to the defendant to demonstrate pro-competitive effects. The plaintiff, driven to this point, must then try to show that any legitimate objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner, and the court then weighs the harms and benefits to determine if the behavior is reasonable on balance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Relevant markets are defined in terms of both geography and product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Like any other issue, market definition is subject to summary judgment if the plaintiffs fail to provide sufficient evidence from which a jury could reasonably find in their favor.

Counsel: Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellant was Steven M. Hamburg of St. Louis, MO. Theresa Counts Burke appeared on the brief.

Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellee was Glenn E. Davis of St. Louis, MO. Richard Scherrer and Ann E. Buckley appeared on the brief.

Judges: Before BOWMAN, Circuit Judge, HEANEY, Senior Circuit Judge, and BEAM, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: HEANEY

Opinion

[*684] HEANEY, Senior Circuit Judge.

Gerhard Flegel and Richard Still, doctors of osteopathy (D.O.s) who were denied privileges at Christian Hospital Northeast-Northwest, sued the hospital and a number of its board members, employees, and staff physicians for antitrust violations in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri. Flegel and Still alleged that the hospital and its staff had conspired to prevent them from having access to the market of patients who would otherwise have been referred to them had they been granted privileges. The defendants moved for summary judgment, arguing, inter alia, that Christian lacked sufficient market power within a properly defined relevant market for an antitrust violation to have occurred. The district court granted the defendants' motion in an order from which Flegel and Still have appealed. We affirm.

I

Christian is a private, not-for-profit hospital that operates from two locations in North St. Louis County, Missouri. [1] The hospital has [2] 565 physicians on staff, fifty of whom are D.O.s. Flegel and Still sought to add to those numbers by becoming the first osteopathic urologists on the hospital's staff. They filed applications for privileges at Christian in the fall of 1988. Both applications underwent numerous levels of review and both were eventually denied. Although the stated reasons for those decisions have changed somewhat before and during the course of this litigation, Christian now claims that both decisions rested on inadequate specialty and subspecialty training, and some contemporaneous evidence supports that assertion.

At the time of their applications, both Flegel and Still were certified in urologic surgery by the American Osteopathic [3] Association (AOA). Certification by the AOA required completion of a four-year training program, which could be comprised of two years in general surgery and two years in urologic surgery, as was the case with both Flegel and Still. The hospital found their training inadequate in that certification by the American Board of

---

[1] The recitation of facts relies heavily (often verbatim) on the district court's somewhat more detailed factual description, to which Flegel and Still have offered no relevant objection. See Flegel v. Christian Hosp. Northeast-Northwest, 804 F. Supp. 1165, 1168-71 (E.D. Mo. 1992).

Medical Specialties (ABMS), the allopathic equivalent to the AOA, required three years of training specifically in urologic surgery.

Shortly after Flegel and Still filed their applications, the hospital's department of surgery revised its guidelines to require that applicants either be certified or eligible to be certified by the ABMS. Previously, applicants could receive privileges if they were certified either by the ABMS or by the AOA. The hospital asserts that it took this action to increase the quality of care within the department, to improve the department's reputation, and to respond to recommendations [*685] made by hospital accrediting organizations such as the Joint Commission for Accreditation of Hospital Organizations. In addition to receiving three years of subspecialty training, the ABMS requires that such training take place in a program accredited by [4] the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education (ACGME). The district court found that positions in such programs can be extremely difficult to attain for D.O.s. Neither Flegel nor Still attended an ACGME-accredited training program.

II

Flegel and Still alleged three separate violations of the federal antitrust laws:

> (1) the defendants combined and conspired with one another to illegally boycott the plaintiffs from obtaining hospital staff privileges in violation of section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1;
>
> (2) the defendants entered into a combination and conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce in violation of section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; and
>
> (3) the defendants entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy to unlawfully prevent plaintiffs from obtaining active staff privileges at the hospital in violation of section two of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

See Flegel, 804 F. Supp. at 1167. [2] By alleging an illegal boycott, the plaintiffs sought to prove a per se violation, [5] but the district court found the per se analysis inapplicable and instead applied the so-called "rule of reason" to the remaining claims.

Our discussion proceeds as follows: after concluding that the alleged restraint is subject to the rule of reason rather than per se analysis, we consider whether the plaintiffs have provided sufficient evidence of actual detrimental effects on competition to obviate the need for a more detailed market analysis. Finding that they have not, we then consider the relevant geographic market definitions proposed by Flegel and Still, and the evidence of Christian's power within the appropriate market. Because plaintiffs have produced little evidence to support their assertion that Christian possesses dominant market power, we affirm the district court's [6] grant of summary judgment to the defendants on that ground. [3]

---

[2] Flegel and Still also alleged several pendent state law violations over which the district court refused to exercise jurisdiction. Given our disposition of the federal antitrust claims, we likewise need not reach the state law claims.

[3] Our resolution of the issues presented in this case has made it unnecessary for us to reach all of the issues presented on appeal. Defendants argue that they are immune from antitrust liability under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986. The district court failed to reach this issue, and it is likewise unnecessary for us to address it. Although cognizant of a split between the courts of appeals on the question whether, as a matter of law, a conspiracy can be proven in a hospital privileges case, we decline to address that issue as well. See generally Julian O. von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation § 52.03[1][b][ii] (1993). Even were we to rule in the plaintiffs' favor on this issue, both as to the legal possibility and the sufficiency of their evidence, the defendants would still be entitled to summary judgment. We consequently leave resolution of this issue for an appropriate case.

HN1[] In reviewing a grant of summary judgment, [7] we apply the same standard as does the district court, and we view the evidence most favorably to the nonmovant, granting all reasonable inferences in the nonmovant's favor as well. See Amerinet, Inc. v. Xerox Corp., 972 F.2d 1483, 1489-90 (8th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 356, 113 S. Ct. 1048 (1993). "HN2[] In complex antitrust cases, no different or heightened standard for the grant of summary judgment applies." Id. at 1490. HN3[] When neither motive nor intent are determinative, summary judgment may be particularly useful. See id.

In this case, neither motive nor intent are determinative. Although the district court found that the hospital treated M.D.s and D.O.s alike, applying the same standards to each, our analysis rests on no such assumption. Rather, we assume for the purposes of our decision that a jury could reasonably find that the hospital discriminated against Flegel and Still because they were osteopaths. We nonetheless hold that a jury could not reasonably [*686] find that the hospital's conduct amounted to an antitrust violation.

A

Flegel and Still first assert that the actions of the defendants [8] that led the hospital to deny privileges to both of them amounted to a group boycott subject to per se analysis under section one of the Sherman Act.

> HN4[] [A] restraint may be adjudged unreasonable either because it fits within a class of restraints that has been held to be "per se" unreasonable, or because it violates what has come to be known as the "Rule of Reason," under which the "test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition."

FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 457-58, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986) (quoting Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918)) (IFD). If an alleged restraint falls within the category of restraints subject to per se analysis, a plaintiff need not prove its anticompetitive effects.

The courts of appeals have generally examined the denial or revocation of hospital privileges under the rule of reason, see, e.g., Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696, 708-09 (4th Cir. 1991) (en banc), cert. denied, [9] 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992); Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1411-12 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991); Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1445 n.1 (9th Cir. 1988); Goss v. Memorial Hosp. Sys., 789 F.2d 353, 354-55 (5th Cir. 1986), but Flegel and Still argue that these cases have involved individual determinations of incompetence or unprofessional conduct rather than exclusion of a class of medical service providers such as D.O.s. The plaintiffs direct our attention to Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060 (1985), in which York Hospital was alleged to have engaged in "strict scrutiny" of all applications by D.O.s for privileges, a practice that often resulted in decisions to deny privileges, while essentially rubber-stamping applications by M.D.s. See id. at 795. The district court had instructed the jury that this practice was subject to a per se analysis, and the Third [10] Circuit agreed:

> The Medical Staff is . . . entitled to exclude individual doctors, including osteopaths, on the basis of their lack of professional competence or unprofessional conduct. If York's policy toward D.O.'s could be viewed as a form of industry self-regulation of this type, the rule of reason, rather than a per se rule, would be applicable. We recognize, therefore, that in many cases involving exclusion from staff privilege, courts will . . . have to utilize a rule of reason balancing approach. This case is different, however, because York has not contended that osteopaths as a group are less qualified than M.D.s. In the absence of such a contention, or another legitimate explanation for the discrimination, we conclude that a per se rule should be applied, since the effect of the practice is identical to that of the traditional boycott, and plainly anticompetitive.

Id. at 820 (citations and footnote omitted).

Christian counters that the Weiss decision is unpersuasive because it precedes the Supreme Court's decisions in Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985), [11] and IFD, in which the Court indicated a reluctance to expand the category of group boycotts to which per se analysis should be applied:

> HN5[] The category of restraints classed as group boycotts is not to be expanded indiscriminately, and the per se approach has generally been limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor . . . . Moreover, we have been slow . . . to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the > context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.
>

[*687] IFD, 476 U.S. at 458-59 (citation omitted). In both cases the Court held per se analysis inapplicable, and the defendants urge us to do likewise in this case.

The plaintiffs' arguments fail in two respects: first, their assertion that all relevant decisions other than Weiss have involved individualized determinations of incompetence or unprofessional conduct is incorrect; and second, even under the Weiss court's reasoning, the rule of reason should be applied to this case.

Although several of the relevant [12] decisions by the courts of appeals have involved individualized denial or revocation of privileges, that cannot be said of all such cases. Two relevant decisions by the Ninth Circuit, Bhan and Oltz, involved the exclusion of registered nurse anesthetists in favor of M.D. anesthesiologists. The Bhan court's analysis applies with equal force to this case:

> HN6[] Only certain boycotts are unlawful per se. Nonethe-less, the distinction between boycotts that are and those that must be tested under the rule of reason is less than crystal clear. See Northwest Stationers, 472 U.S. at 294. The line can best be drawn, however, by following the analysis used to separate per se and rule of reason cases in general. Thus, the per se rule should be invoked for a group boycott when the challenged activity would almost always tend to be predominantly anti-competitive. See [id.] at 298.
>
> The practice of which Bhan complains can be cast in the following general terms: physicians conspiring with a hospital to allow only physician, rather than nonphysician, providers to offer services in a particular area. As a result, the hospital eliminates a class [13] of providers.
>
> This activity does not appear to be one that is always anti-competitive. On the one hand, hospitals must make choices about the types of qualifications a practitioner must have to apply for staff privileges in various fields of practice. See [Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 30, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)] (commenting that hospitals have an unquestioned right to exercise control over staff privileges). These restrictions help it provide more efficient, higher quality services in order to compete against other hospitals. 6 J. von Kalikowski, Antitrust Laws & Trade Regulation § 52.03[1], at 52-45 (1990). This also reduces its malpractice exposure. Thus, the choice of physician over nonphysician providers may actually sharpen competition by making [the hospital] a more attractive competitor in the patient market.
>
> On the other hand, a plaintiff may be able to establish in a certain situation that the physicians are conspiring to drive the nurses out of business because their services are just as good but cheaper. The hospital may be shown to be acceding to the doctors' wishes because of its wish to retain certain of the [14] doctors' services. In that case, the practice of excluding nonphysician providers as a class would appear to be anti-competitive.
>
> In sum, the practice of excluding nonphysicians in favor of physicians is not one that always would have an anti-competitive effect. Given that the effect of the practice is unclear, it is appropriate to apply the rule of reason.

Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1412 (citation, footnotes, and parallel citations omitted).

Even under the reasoning of Weiss, the restraint alleged in this case is properly subject to the rule of reason. The Weiss court relied in part on York's failure to argue that D.O.s were in any way less qualified than M.D.s. Although Christian has not argued that D.O.s as a class are less qualified, they do argue that those whose subspecialty training is inadequate (not equivalent to that required by the ABMS) are less qualified. The exclusion from staff privilege in this case arguably falls within the category the Weiss court labeled "industry self-regulation" and is consequently not appropriate for per se analysis. Having found per se analysis inapplicable to the alleged restraint, we now turn to a [15] more detailed inquiry under the rule of reason.

[*688] B

HN7[] To determine the legality of a restraint of trade under the rule of reason, one must focus on the detrimental effects to competition, often by defining the relevant market and considering evidence of the defendant's power within that market. See Capital Imaging Assoc., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 546 (2d Cir. 1993). This is not always necessary, however.

> Since the purpose of the inquiries into market definition and market power is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition, "proof of actual detrimental effects, such as a reduction of output," can obviate the need for an inquiry into market power, which is but a "surrogate for detrimental effects."

IFD, 476 U.S. at 460-61 (quoting 7 Phillip Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1511, at 429 (1986)). Either showing -- market power or actual detrimental effects -- shifts the burden to the defendant to demonstrate pro-competitive effects. [4] "The plaintiff, driven to this point, must then try to show that any legitimate objectives can be achieved [16] in a substantially less restrictive manner," and the court then weighs "the harms and benefits to determine if the behavior is reasonable on balance." Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1413.

[17] 1

Flegel and Still allege a reduction in the quality of care at Christian as proof of actual detrimental effects on competition that have resulted from the hospital's refusal to grant them privileges. They rely on affidavits of D.O.s in general practice (GPDOs) at Christian who assert that their patients would receive better care if treated by Flegel and Still rather than by M.D. urologists. The gist of these assertions is that the quality of communication between the GPDOs and the M.D. urologists is lower than it would be between the GPDOs and Flegel and Still. [5] Although

---

[4] Such a showing could be made in a variety of ways, but it must consist of more than simple assertions. For example, > if a group of practitioners such as D.O.'s or family practitioners is excluded, the institution must demonstrate the procompetitive justification, persuading the factfinder that, from the totality of circumstances, the articulated procompetitive rationale is consistent with the overall conduct of the hospital. For example, a facility might be able to justify personnel restrictions as a marketing, image-building strategy -- "our hospital only allows board-certified practitioners to use our facilities." But the institution, to prevail, would have to show active promotion of that policy in other areas (for example, through aggressive quality-monitoring programs) and active pursuit of an image-building campaign (for example, through advertising or other marketing initiatives). It would have to prove, to the satisfaction of the factfinder, that it was in fact pursuing its goals as a rational economic actor and that it could justify its conduct by reference to rational, procompetitive economic principles.

James F. Blumstein & Frank A. Sloan, Antitrust and Hospital Peer Review, 51 Law & Contemp. Probs. 7, 61 (1988) (footnotes omitted).

[5] Typical of the GPDOs' assertions on this point is Dr. Martin J. Roitman's:

> The denial of Plaintiffs Gerhard Flegel and Richard Still to the surgical staff at [Christian] has resulted in a lower quality of care being available for my patients, as the urologists to whom I must make referrals for patients admitted to the hospital or for patients who seek hospitalization for urologic treatment at [Christian] do not generally provide me an opportunity to continue my participation at a preferred level in that patient's care, and Plaintiffs Flegel and Still provide a higher quality of urological services.

7 R. at 1667-68; see also 7 R. at 1672-73, 1675-76, 1678-79, 1681, 1684-85, 1690-91, 1693-94. Some of the osteopaths' assertions in this regard were struck by the district court after their deposition testimony revealed that they had never referred patients to the M.D. urologists on staff at Christian. See 1 R. at 301-04. The plaintiffs have not appealed this decision by the district court. Consequently, we grant their motion to strike the appendices filed by defendants because the documents they contain either repeat material in the record or do not bear on any issue on appeal.

the proper perspective on the quality of competition is that of the consumers (in this case, the patients), Flegel and Still argue that the GPDOs are "agents" of the patients in their decisions regarding providers of urological services and consequently the GPDOs' perspectives represent those of the affected patients.

[18] Regardless of the merit of the GPDOs' assertions, the plaintiffs have presented insufficient [*689] evidence of actual detrimental effects on competition to avoid the need to prove market power. We find too little evidence in this case, just as the Supreme Court found insufficient evidence that the exclusive contract for anesthesiologists' services in Jefferson Parish was predominantly anticompetitive:

> There is . . . insufficient evidence in this record to provide a basis for finding that the [exclusive anesthesiologists'] contract, as it actually operates in the market, has unreasonably restrained competition. The record sheds little light on how this arrangement affected consumer demand for separate arrangements with a specific anesthesiologist. The evidence indicates that some surgeons and patients preferred respondent's services to those of [the exclusive providers], but there is no evidence that any patient who was sophisticated enough to know the difference between two anesthesiologists was not also able to go to a hospital that would provide him with the anesthesiologist of his choice.

Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29-30 (footnotes omitted). [19] The Court anticipated the plaintiffs' arguments that patients rely on the GPDOs to select their urologists, and responded that "if, as is likely, it is the patient's doctor and not the patient who selects an anesthesiologist, the doctor can simply take the patient elsewhere if he is dissatisfied with [the exclusive providers]," adding that the district court in that case had "found that most doctors in the area have staff privileges at more than one hospital." Id. at 30 n.50.

Similarly in this case, there has been no showing that those patients sophisticated enough to distinguish between M.D. urologists and D.O. urologists could not go to a hospital that would provide him or her with the urologist of choice. Plaintiffs assert that a number of patients are locked in to Christian but provide no evidence of this beyond mere assertion. Although they provide evidence that patients who live near the hospital tend to buy their care at Christian, we are unwilling to infer from this that these patients are somehow "locked in." Also as in Jefferson Parish, the affiant GPDOs generally have privileges at more than one hospital, and, according to the record, [20] over ninety percent of the D.O.s at Christian share privileges with the plaintiffs at one or more hospitals. See 2 R. at 440-41 (37 of 41 non-hospital-based D.O.s share privileges with Flegel and Still at another hospital). No evidence was presented, however, that any of the GPDO affiants was so moved by the lower quality of care now available at Christian that he or she took a patient elsewhere in order to have that patient receive the services of Flegel or Still. In short, the evidence of reduction in quality is insufficient. [6] "Therefore, [the plaintiffs have] not made an adequate showing of detrimental effects to obviate the need to show that appellees possess market power sufficient to stifle competition." Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546.

[21] 2

To establish that the defendants have market power, Flegel and Still must show that the defendants have "a dominant market share in a well-defined relevant market." Assam Drug Co. v. Miller Brewing Co., 798 F.2d 311, 318 (8th Cir. 1986). HN8[] Relevant markets are defined in terms of both geography and product. See Baxley-

---

[6] Flegel and Still argue that the presence of expert testimony by two economists suffices to survive summary judgment. That is only true if the experts' testimony would allow a finding of actual detrimental effects to competition. The testimony of neither of the proffered experts, Professor Lee K. Benham and John H. Preston, would support such a finding. Preston simply relies on the assertions of the GPDOs to find a reduction in quality, and Benham's testimony addresses only the possibility that the hospital services market in St. Louis is not competitive. A jury could not reasonably find based on these affidavits that the denial of privileges to Flegel and Still by Christian has caused actual detrimental effects to competition (to Flegel and Still, perhaps, but not to competition).

DeLamar Monuments, Inc. v. American Cemetery Ass'n, 938 F.2d 846, 850 (8th Cir. 1991). The product in this case is agreed to be urologists' services, but there is no agreement on the geographic market. Flegel and Still propose a market of targeted patients of osteopathic physicians at Christian, while the defendants [*690] assert that the St. Louis metropolitan area is the relevant geographic market. The question before us, then, is whether the plaintiffs have provided sufficient evidence from which a jury could reasonably find that Christian possesses market power within the relevant market. The plaintiffs argue that market determination is necessarily a question for the jury, but we disagree. HN9[] Like any other issue, market definition is subject to summary judgment if the plaintiffs fail to provide sufficient evidence [22] from which a jury could reasonably find in their favor. See Assam Drug, 798 F.2d at 317; see also Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1413 n.9.

Flegel and Still provide virtually no evidence to support their market definition. Market power is, as indicated earlier, simply a surrogate for actual anticompetitive effects, which are themselves determined from the viewpoint of the consumer. Yet in their arguments about the proper market definition, Flegel and Still provide no evidence that patients view Christian as a market separate from the much larger market for urologists' services. Rather, it is only the urologists seeking referrals from the GPDOs who might so define a market. [7]

[23] Perhaps anticipating difficulties with the Ninth Circuit decision in Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484 (9th Cir. 1991), the plaintiffs assert that they do not seek to define the market simply as "referrals," but rather from the consumers' viewpoint. In Morgan, Strand, the court indicated that although the plaintiffs proposed a market in "referrals," the actual market was in radiologists' services because "nothing in the record suggested that the referrals as such are ever sold." Id. at 1489. The court then held that the evidence presented by plaintiffs was insufficient to allow a jury reasonably to conclude that the defendants possessed market power: "Referral pattern evidence ignores the possibility that even if referral patterns are quite fixed, or exclusive among osteopathic physicians, or University physicians, there may still be competition for the patients, who are the product's ultimate consumers." Id.

Flegel and Still make quite clear, at least on appeal, [8] that their proposed geographic market does not consist of referrals from the GPDOs at Christian, but of those patients [24] who would be available to them as customers at Christian. We find the distinction unavailing. "The proper market definition in this case can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the 'commercial realities' faced by consumers." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 293-94 (1992) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 572, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). We acknowledge that the Supreme Court's holding in Kodak that a single manufacturer's aftermarket products may constitute a relevant market supports the possibility that a single hospital may constitute the relevant market. See also Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 995 F.2d 1324, 1328-30 (6th Cir. 1993) (holding that market defined by the demands of Ford Motor Company can constitute relevant market). Despite this legal possibility, a plaintiff is nonetheless required to present evidence from which a reasonable jury could find the existence of the proposed market, i.e., urological services needed by GPDOs' patients in a single hospital. In this, Flegel and Still have failed, leaving us to [25] consider which market definition finds support in the record and Christian's role within such a market.

[*691] The alternative market definitions to be considered are either the St. Louis metropolitan area or St. Louis County -- in either of which Christian possesses no more than fifteen percent of the market under any measurement, see Flegel, 804 F. Supp. at 1170-71 -- or North St. Louis County, defined as the area within the twelve zipcodes surrounding Christian. Forty-one percent of the residents of the latter market buy their care at Christian. See 2 R. at 442-43.

---

[7] The plaintiffs' perspective on the market has no bearing. Whether their business has suffered due to the absence of the potential referrals at Christian is of as little consequence as any evidence that their business is booming. See Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Servs., 823 F.2d 1215, 1234 (8th Cir. 1987) ("the concern of antitrust law is the protection of competition, not individual competitors"), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1026 (1988); Janich Bros., Inc. v. American Distilling Co., 570 F.2d 848, 855 (9th Cir. 1977) ("Antitrust legislation is concerned primarily with the health of the competitive process, not with the individual competitor who must sink or swim in competitive enterprise." (citations omitted)), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 829, 58 L. Ed. 2d 122, 99 S. Ct. 103 (1978).

[8] Compare the plaintiffs' description of the relevant market in their memorandum to the district court in opposition to summary judgment: "The relevant product market is the market for referrals of Target Patients from osteopathic physicians at [Christian]." 1 R. at 201.

Plaintiffs did not present North St. Louis County to the district court as a proposed geographic market, choosing to concentrate instead on restricting the [26] market to Christian. See Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment at 51-54 (1 R. at 198-201). Even if they had, there appears to be no evidence in the record regarding Christian's share of the product (urological services) within the proposed geographic market. Plaintiffs do not even present us with evidence of Christian's share of surgical services within North St. Louis County. Nor is there evidence that patients view this as a market, though there is evidence that Christian views it as its primary service area. The possibility of such a market definition seems to have only occurred to plaintiffs upon reading the affidavit of the defendants' economics expert, in which he indicates that even within this small (and in his view unrealistic) market, Christian does not possess market power, for none of the evidence they presented supports this market definition.

Were there further evidence of this geographic market and of Christian's share of urological (or even surgical) services within the market, summary judgment on the issue of market power might well be precluded. No such evidence has been presented, however, and no reasonable jury [27] could find that Christian hospital possesses market power in urological services on the scant evidence that has been presented.

C

In addition to the alleged restraint of trade in violation of section one of the Sherman Act, Flegel and Still asserted that the defendants had violated section two as well. To establish such a violation plaintiffs must first prove defendants' "possession of monopoly power in the relevant market." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570. Because plaintiffs' section one claim failed due to lack of evidence of market power, it follows that their section two claim is similarly deficient.

III

In denying staff privileges to Flegel and Still, the hospital allegedly restrained trade in violation of section one of the Sherman Act. We hold that this restraint does not fall within the category of restraints subject to per se analysis, and that its actual effects have not been shown to be sufficiently anticompetitive to obviate the need for a showing that the defendants possess market power. We further hold that the plaintiffs have failed to provide evidence from which a jury could reasonably find that the defendants possess the market power necessary [28] to commit violations of either section one or section two of the Sherman Act. Consequently, we affirm the order of the district court granting summary judgment to the defendants.

End of Document

Auto. Prods. v. Tilton Eng'g, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

September 16, 1993, Decided ; September 16, 1993, FILED

CV 90-5500 KN

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20813 *; 33 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1065 **

AUTOMOTIVE PRODUCTS, plc, Plaintiff, v. TILTON ENGINEERING, INC., Defendant.

Core Terms

patent, infringement, costs, antitrust, clutches, attorney's fees, damages, monopolization, invoices, inducing, parties, revised, agrees, inequitable conduct, unfair competition, distributors, carbon, double, punitive damages, post-judgment, willful, DENIES, phase, treble damages, asserts, sales, tortious interference, jury instructions, relevant market, pre-judgment

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

A judgment as a matter of law should only be granted if the evidence construed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party permits only one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict and that conclusion is contrary to the jury's; it is improper if reasonable minds could differ over the verdict.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN2[] Relief From Judgments, Motions for New Trials

A new trial may be ordered by the district court if, in its opinion, the jury's verdict was clearly contrary to the weight of the evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, to prove that a defendant has monopoly power, plaintiff must show that defendant possesses (1) a high market share; and (2) that there are barriers to entry in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides that any person who shall be injured by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust law may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN5[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides that a prevailing plaintiff in an antitrust case shall recover a reasonable attorney's fee award.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Time devoted to work which is duplicative or related solely to claims or activities unrelated to the successful recovery of the antitrust damages may be excluded from the computation of fees.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > Prejudgment Interest

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > General Overview

HN7[] Remedies, Damages

Under section 4 of the Clayton Act, the court may award simple prejudgment interest beginning on the date of service of such person's pleading setting forth a claim under the antitrust laws and ending on the date of judgment, or for any shorter period therein, if the court finds that the award of such interest for such period is just in the circumstances, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

In considering whether an award of interest under the Clayton Act for any period is just in the circumstances, the court must consider only the following factors: (1) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, made motions or asserted claims or defenses so lacking in merit as to show that such party of representative acted intentionally for delay, or otherwise acted in bad faith; (2) whether, in the course of the action involved, such person or the opposing representative, violated any applicable rule, statute, or court order providing for sanction for dilatory behavior or otherwise providing for expeditious proceedings; and (3) whether such person or the opposing party engaged in conduct primarily for the purpose of delaying the litigation or increasing the cost thereof, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > Increased Damages

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > General Overview

HN9[] Damages, Increased Damages

Under 35 U.S.C.S. § 284, a court has the discretion to enhance the patent damages awarded by the jury by a multiplier of up to three if the infringer acted willfully or in bad faith. Although a finding of willfulness does not mandate an award of treble damages, it does authorize them.

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > Attorney Fees

HN10[] Basis of Recovery, Statutory Awards

35 U.S.C.S. § 285 authorizes the court to grant reasonable attorney's fees to the prevailing party in exceptional cases.

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > Attorney Fees

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Costs & Attorney Fees > Statutory Availability

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN11[] Collateral Assessments, Attorney Fees

Under the 35 U.S.C.S. § 285, a prevailing party who has brought both patent and non-patent causes of action can only recover for the patent side of his case, unless the patent and non-patent issues were so closely intermingled that the bulk of the evidence presented at trial was material to both kinds of issues.

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > Attorney Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > Costs

HN12[] Basis of Recovery, Statutory Awards

35 U.S.C.S. § 285 authorizes the court to award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party in exceptional circumstances. Although § 285 does not explicitly authorize the award of costs as opposed to attorney's fees, the Federal Circuit has upheld the award of costs under § 285 in several circumstances.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN13[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(b) motions should normally be brought after the entry of judgment. Rule 50(b) only authorizes a party to bring a judgment notwithstanding the verdict (J.N.O.V.) motion if that party submitted a Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a) motion after the close of evidence which was denied, or for any reason was not granted.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN14[] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

A motion for a new trial should be served not later than ten days after the entry of judgment, Fed. R. Civ. P. 59.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > Indirect Infringement

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

HN15[] Infringing Acts, Indirect Infringement

Direct infringement requires sales within the bounds of this country. Sales activity outside of the United States' borders which is intended to lead to use of patented devices inside the United States is only actionable as inducing or contributory infringement.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN16[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 proscribes unfair competition, defined broadly as any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice. Unlawful business activity proscribed under § 17200 includes anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law. In essence, an action based on § 17200 to redress an unlawful business practice borrows violations of other laws and treats these violations, when committed pursuant to business activity, as unlawful practices independently actionable under § 17200 et seq. and subject to the distinct remedies thereunder.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN17[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203 clearly provides that courts may grant injunctive relief and restitution for unjust enrichment only for unfair competition which occurs within the state.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN18[] Legislation, Interpretation

In the absence of any ambiguity in the language or contrary indications in the legislative history, a court should defer to the statute's plain language.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN19[] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

The Commerce Clause precludes the application of a state statute to commerce that takes place wholly outside of the state's borders, whether or not the commerce has effects within the state.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN20[] Equitable Relief, Injunctions

Although an injunction may be enforced against third parties who are in active concert or participation with the defendant if the third parties receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(d).

Counsel: [*1] For AUTOMOTIVE PRODUCTS PLC, plaintiff: Wayne M Smith, Graham & James, Los Angeles, CA. Michael K Brown, Crosby Heafey Roach & May, Los Angeles, CA. Michael M De Angeli, Shlesinger & Myers, Bethesda, MD. Laurence Z Shiekman, Helen R Haynes, Pepper Hamilton & Scheetz, Philadelphia, PA. Richard A Rossman, Pepper Hamilton & Scheetz, Detroit, MI.

For TILTON ENGINEERING INC, defendant: Bernard R Gans, Poms Smith Lande & Rose, Los Angeles, CA.

For TILTON ENGINEERING INC, counter-claimant: Jan P Weir, Edward F O'Connor, Alan P Block, Steven W Smyrski, Poms Smith Lande & Rose, Los Angeles, CA.

For AUTOMOTIVE PRODUCTS PLC, counter-defendant: Michael K Brown, Thomas P Seltz, Crosby Heafey Roach & May, Los Angeles, CA. Laurence Z Shiekman, Helen R Haynes, Pepper Hamilton & Scheetz, Philadelphia, PA. Richard A Rossman, Pepper Hamilton & Scheetz, Detroit, MI.

Judges: DAVID V. KENYON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: DAVID V. KENYON

Opinion

[1066] ORDER RE: AP AND TILTON'S POST-TRIAL MOTIONS

I. Introduction:

This case comes before the Court on a series of important post-trial motions filed by [1067] both plaintiff/counterdefendant Automotive Products, plc and defendant/counterclaimant Tilton Engineering. The trial in this case was conducted in two phases: the basic issues of patent infringement and patent validity were tried in the first phase; while the issues of damages and willfulness, as well as Tilton's remaining counterclaims for antitrust, unfair competition, intentional interference with prospective business advantage, and inducing infringement ware saved for the second phase.

On June 14, 1993, after the conclusion of the second phase of trial, the jury issued a verdict against AP for (1) inducing infringement of Tilton's patent; (2) attempted monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act; and (3) intentional interference with Tilton's prospective business advantage. The jury awarded Tilton damages of $ 545,000; $ 5,145,000; and $ 1,275,000, respectively. The jury also found that AP had willfully infringed Tilton's patent, but [*2] it rejected Tilton's counterclaims for monopolization under the Sherman Act; for violation of the California Cartwright Act; and for negligent interference with Tilton's prospective business advantage. The jurors deadlocked and were ultimately unable to reach a verdict on whether Tilton should be granted punitive damages for Tilton's tortious interference claim. See Special Verdict Form for Phase II of the Trial.

Three days after the verdict was issued, AP filed a "Motion to Defer Entry of Judgment", requesting that the Court defer entering Tilton's "Proposed" Judgment until the parties were given the opportunity to file a number of post-verdict motions. Among other things, AP's motion requested an opportunity to "mould" the verdict to avoid double counting by the jury and to provide briefing setting forth why Tilton's patent damages should not be enhanced. The Court granted AP's motion and set a briefing schedule which culminated in the hearing before this Court on August 6, 1993. After thorough consideration of the briefs, declarations, and exhibits filed by both parties and the oral arguments of counsel at the hearing, the court makes the following rulings.

I. AP'S MOTIONS

[*3] 1. Motion to Mold the Verdict

In this motion, AP asserts that the jury awarded duplicative damages to Tilton on its inducing infringement, intentional interference with prospective business advantage, and attempted monopolization counts and that the Court should therefore reduce the jury's monetary verdict to insure that Tilton only recovers once for each harm it has suffered. AP claims, in essence, that the damages sought in Tilton's tortious interference and patent infringement claims are subsets of the larger damages sought in Tilton's attempted monopolization claim and that awarding damages for both would allow Tilton a double recovery. In addition, AP claims that the jury's award of lost profits on Tilton's induced infringement claim is no supported by the evidence and therefore must be reduced from $ 545,00 to $ 206,890. The Court rejects both of these arguments and therefore DENIES AP's Motion.

A. Is the Inducing Infringement Award Supported by the Evidence?

AP's argument here is simply this: (1) AP claims that AP's actual invoices establish that there were at the most 36 sales of the infringing clutch made by AP to U.S. customers after Tilton's patent issued; [*4] (2) that Mr. Barker testified that only 49 Formula one cars raced in Phoenix, Arizona in 1990 and 1991 using the clutch at issue; and (3) that Tilton's expert witness testified that Tilton's profits would have been, at most, $ 2,434 per clutch. Adding the 49 clutches to the 36 clutches, produces 85 clutches; if the 85 clutches are then multiplied by $ 2,434 per clutch it equals $ 206,890 in lost profits. AP claims that $ 206,890 is the maximum in damages to which Tilton is entitled for its inducing infringement claim and that the $ 545,000 awarded by the jury is thus unsupported by the evidence.

Tilton asserts, however, that according to Mr. Tyrell's testimony, his teams used four clutches per event, thus bringing the total used in Phoenix in 1990 and 1991 to 196 rather than 49. Moreover, Tilton claims that in addition to the 36 clutches sold to AP's distributors in 1989-90, Mr. Nolte's workpapers (Exh. 4182) and the invoices show that the total sales to U.S. customers from January 1, 1991 through August 31, 1992 was 60 clutches, bringing the total number of clutches sold in the U.S. to 96. Adding the 96 to the 196 from the Phoenix races produces 292 sales, [*5] which would create a lost profit of $ 710,728 if multiplied by $ 2,434. That is considerably more than the $ 545,000 awarded by the jury.

Given that the Court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to Tilton, the Court cannot find that no reasonable jury could have granted Tilton damages of $ 545,000. The Court thus denies AP's request to reduce the damages awarded by the jury on Tilton's inducing infringement counterclaim. [1068]

B. AP's Request to Reduce Antitrust Damages To Avoid A Double Recovery

AP claims in this part of its motion that the court erred by failing to give the jury adequate instructions not avoid double counting of plaintiff's damages and by rejecting AP's proposed special verdict form. The issues which this Court must decide are whether the Court's instructions were clear enough in their admonition to the jury not to double count and whether AP made timely and sufficient objections to the Court's jury instructions and special Verdict form.

After carefully considering the record and the arguments presented by AP, the Court finds that AP made timely objections about the dangers of double counting in general, but AP has not demonstrated that it objected [*6] to specific Jury Instructions for failing to instruct the jury not to double count. AP also made a timely objection to the Court's Special Verdict Form and requested the Court to use AP's Proposed Special Jury Interrogatories in its place. The Court found that AP's Special Interrogatory form was far too complex and was repetitive of the jury instructions, however, and therefore denied AP's request. There is no indication that AP tried "cure" this problem by eliminating the repetitious elements of its Interrogatories in order to preserve the parts which AP considered vital to prevent double counting. It is therefore difficult to determine whether AP preserved its right to object to the lack of adequate warnings about double counting in the jury instructions and Special Verdict Form.

The Court does not need to reach that issue, however, because the Court's jury instructions clearly and sufficiently warned the jury against awarding damages twice for the same injury. The Court's jury instructions provided, in pertinent part, that > the computation of damages differs depending on which claim is involved, and you will be instructed concerning the damages for each of Tilton's and AP's [*7] claims. Remember that Tilton is only entitled to recover each loss once, even if it is possible to recover for that lost [sic] under two or more of Tilton's claims.

RT at 1589-1590, June 4, 1993 (emphasis added). The Court finds that this instruction was sufficient to warn the jury against the danger of double counting. While AP's Proposed Special Interrogatory may have provided more specific instructions to avoid double counting, the Court feels that that form was far too duplicative of the jury instructions and was properly rejected by the Court. AP's Motion to Mould the verdict to avoid double counting on the antitrust, tortious interference, and patent claims is therefore DENIED in its entirety.

2. AP's Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law on the Issue of Inequitable Conduct

AP contends in this motion that Mr. Tilton violated his duty of candor and good faith to the Patent Office by failing to disclose in his application for a patent that (1) Tilton's carbon to carbon clutch had been displayed at the SEMA show; and (2) that it had been used in races more than one year prior to the date of Tilton's application. Because of this alleged violation, AP [*8] claims that the court should find that Tilton is guilty of inequitable conduct and that Tilton's patent is thus unenforceable. In order to prove inequitable conduct, AP must show by clear and convincing evidence that (1) the information about the SEMA show and the alleged experimental uses in race cars was "material"; (2) that Tilton and/or its patent agents were aware of this materiality when they made the application to the patent office, and (3) that Tilton's failure to disclose this information to the Patent and Trademark Office (the "PTO") was intended to mislead the PTO. Although the Court already granted a directed verdict for Tilton that the SEMA show was not a "public use" and the jury rendered an "advisory" verdict that Tilton was not liable for inequitable conduct, AP asserts that the court should find that Tilton's conduct amounted to inequitable conduct because "close cases must be resolved by disclosure, not unilaterally by the applicant." Labounty Mrg. Inc. v. U.S. Int'l Trade Commission, 958 F.2d 1066, 1076 (Fed. Cir. 1992).

Tilton argues in response that (1) although inequitable conduct is an equitable issue which should ordinarily be tried by the court, AP waived [*9] its right to submit this to a judge and the jury's verdict against AP is therefore binding; and (2) even if the court considers the jury's verdict to be merely advisory, the court should reject AP's claim because AP has not shown by clear and convincing evidence that Mr. Tilton's failure to disclose certain information about the SEMA show and the "experimental uses" of the clutch was intended to defraud the PTO.

A. Did AP Waive its Right to Have the Court Decide Inequitable Conduct?

The parties agree that inequitable conduct should normally be tried by the court, but [1069] Tilton claims that AP waived the right to have the court decide this issue by submitting a special verdict form and jury instructions and arguing to the jury on inequitable conduct. AP claims, however, that it explicitly reserved the right to have the court decide inequitable conduct in its Pre-Trial Conference Order of January 5, 1993 and its Amended Request for A Special Verdict. See AP's Reply Brief at p. 2. AP claims that it only argued inequitable conduct to the jury (and submitted jury instructions on the issue) to preserve its case in the event the Court ultimately decided this was an issue for the jury.

[*10] The court agrees with AP and finds that it did not waive its right to have this issue decided by the Court.

B. Has AP Shown Inequitable Conduct by Clear and Convincing Evidence?

The Court finds that AP has failed to show by clear and convincing evidence that Mr. Tilton intentionally withheld information about the SEMA show and the "experimental testing" of his clutches in order defraud or mislead the Patent office. AP's Motion is therefore DENIED.

II. TILTON'S MOTIONS

1. Emergency Ex Parte Motion to Preclude Consideration of Jury Affidavits and Declarations

Tilton filed this ex parte application on August 4 seeking to prevent AP from introducing any affidavits or declarations from jurors regarding their deliberations. Tilton claims that it has reason to believe that AP has obtained such affidavits and will try to submit them to the court for review. Tilton asserts that the Court's review of such affidavits would be a violation of Federal Rule of Evidence 606(b). AP has not yet tried to file such affidavits or declarations, however, so the Court feels that Tilton's motion is premature. The Court will revisit this issue if AP later files such declarations; for [*11] the time being, however, Tilton's Ex Parte Motion is DENIED.

2. Renewed Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law or, in the Alternative, Motion for New Trial on Tilton's Monopolization Claim Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, Pursuant to Rule 50(b)

In this motion, Tilton moves for a J.N.O.V. or, in the alternative, a new trial on Tilton's monopolization claim. The jury returned a verdict for Tilton on its attempted monopolization claim (for $ 5,145 million), but ruled against Tilton on its claim for monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Tilton correctly asserts that the jury verdict on its attempted monopolization claim established all the essential elements for its monopolization claim except for a finding that AP possessed "monopoly power" in the relevant market. Tilton now contends that no reasonable jury could find that AP failed to possess monopoly power in the market and that the Court should thus grant judgment as a matter of law on Tilton's monopolization claim. Alternatively, Tilton argues that the jury's verdict was clearly contrary to the weight of evidence and that the Court should, at the very least, grant Tilton a new trial on this issue.

A. Standards [*12] for Granting a Rule 50(b) Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law or for Motion for New Trial under Rule 59

HN1[] A judgment as a matter of law should only be granted if the evidence "construed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party permits only one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict and that conclusion is contrary to the jury's; it is improper if reasonable minds could differ over the verdict." Fleming v. Dept of Pub. Safety, 837 F.2d 401, 408 (9th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 889, 102 L. Ed. 2d 212, 109 S. Ct. 222 (1988). HN2[] "[A] new trial may be ordered by the district court if, in its opinion, the jury's verdict was clearly contrary to the weight of the evidence." William Inglis & Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Continental Baking Company, Inc., 668 F.2d 1014, 1027 (9th Cir. 1981).

B. Did AP Possess Market Power in the Relevant Market?

In order to prove monopolization, Tilton must prove that AP possessed monopoly power in the relevant market. HN3[] Under the Sherman Act, to prove that a defendant has monopoly power, plaintiff must show that defendant possesses (1) a high market share; and (2) that there are barriers to entry in the market. Tilton claims [*13] that it presented uncontroverted evidence that, from 1987 through August 1992, AP increased its market share from 56% to 81 % of the market for carbon to carbon racing clutches. This left Tilton and Fitchel & Sachs to divide the remaining 19% share of the market. Tilton also presented significant evidence showing AP's ability to exclude other competitors and demonstrating the barriers to entry in the market. To support its argument, Tilton relies on cases which have held that [1070] maintaining a market share of over 80% of the relevant market is presumptive evidence of market power. See e.g., American Tobacco Co. v. U.S. 328 U.S. 781, 797, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946).

AP counters Tilton's argument by asserting that it is not clear what the jury decided the relevant market to be. In contrast to Tilton, which claims the relevant market was the market for carbon to carbon clutches, AP claims that the relevant market is the market for all racing clutches, including metallic and carbon/carbon clutches, in which AP appears to have a significantly smaller market share. Since the Court can not determine from the verdict which market the jury ultimately decided was the relevant [*14] one, AP claims that Tilton's 81% figure is speculative. Moreover, AP claims that there were not significant barriers to entry in the market, as evidenced by the entry of Fitchel & Sachs, Quartermaster, and Ram into the carbon to carbon market. Tilton contends, however, that Ram and Quartermaster have never really entered the market.

The Court DENIES Tilton's motion because it is unable to determine what the jury decided the relevant market to be and thus cannot determine what the jury found AP's market share in the relevant market to have been. Moreover, there was sufficient dispute concerning the barriers to entry to support the jury's verdict. Therefore, the Court Can not find that the jury's conclusion to reject Tilton's monopolization claim against AP was inherently unreasonable or that the jury's verdict was "clearly contrary to the weight of the evidence." William Inglis & Sons, 668 F.2d at 1027. Tilton's motion for a new trial or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, pursuant to Rule 50(b), is accordingly DENIED. [1]

---

[1] The Court notes, moreover, that Rule 50(b) motions should generally be filed after the entry of judgment, not before as in this case.

[*15] 3. Motion for Recovery of Treble Damages, Reasonable Attorney Fees and Costs, and Pre- and Post-Judgement Interest Pursuant to § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 USC § 15 (Antitrust)

In this motion, Tilton seeks the following: (1) Treble Damages on its attempted monopolization claim; (2) mandatory attorney's fees incurred in prosecuting the anti-trust action in the amount of $ 2.7 million; (3) costs of prosecuting the antitrust action in the amount of $ 724,377; (4) pre-judgment interest on the $ 5,145,000 attempted monopolization award; and (5) post-judgment interest, compounded annually. The Court discusses its ruling on each of these issues below.

A. Treble Damages for Attempted Monopolization

HN4[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that:

> any person who shall be injured. . . by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust law may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained.

The Court, accordingly, GRANTS Tilton's request to treble the damages awarded on Tilton's attempted monopolization claim from $ 5,145,000 to $ 15,435,000.

B. Attorney's Fees for Attempted Monopolization Claim

Tilton also claims that it is entitled [*16] to attorney's fees under the antitrust law in the amount of $ 2,750,503. AP argues in response that Tilton's request is premature; that Tilton has not shown adequate evidence to justify its request for attorney's fees; and that Tilton can only recover for fees which were directly incurred in pursuing its antitrust, as opposed to its patent or willful infringement, claims. The Court agrees in large measure with AP's arguments, as explained below.

HN5[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, provides that a prevailing plaintiff in an antitrust case "shall recover . . . a reasonable attorney's fee" award. 15 U.S.C. § 15. However, the Ninth Circuit held in Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676 F.2d 1291, 1316 (9th Cir. 1982), that "HN6[] time devoted to work which is duplicative or related solely to claims or activities unrelated to the successful recovery of the antitrust damages may be excluded" from the computation of fees. AP therefore argues that Tilton should not be granted fees under the antitrust statutes' fee provision for: (1) fees incurred before the antitrust counterclaim was filed in October 1991; (2) fees incurred during the first phase of trial, [*17] which was exclusively patent related; (3) fees incurred during the second phase that were patent-related; and, (4) any fees clearly attributable to prosecution of Tilton's state law claims. Tilton claims, however, that the fees it incurred in the patent litigation are recoverable under the anti-trust statute's fee provision because its patent and anti-trust claims were "interrelated" in that AP's willful patent infringement was an integral part or AP's anticompetitive scheme. [1071]

The Court agrees with Tilton that AP's act of willfully infringing the patent was part and parcel of the anti-competitive scheme found by the jury. However, the Court finds that the fees incurred in prosecuting Tilton's patent and willful infringement claims are, for the most part, separate from and independent from Tilton's antitrust claims. More specifically, the Court finds that Tilton can not recover fees for either (1) the time period prior to the investigation of and filing of Tilton's antitrust counterclaims; or (2) for the first phase of the trial which was purely directed towards the patent issues. Tilton is also prohibited from obtaining attorney's fees under the antitrust statute for (3) the fees purely [*18] attributable to the prosecution of its state law claims or (4) for the fees it incurred in the second phase of the trial, and the preparation therefore, which were purely attributable to proving its inducing infringement claims. Tilton may recover half of the fees incurred in the prosecution and preparation of the willful infringement issue, however, as the Court finds that this claim was an underlying aspect of the anticompetitive scheme found by the jury to have been perpetrated by AP.

The Court agrees with AP, however, that it would be premature to grant fees to Tilton until this Court has entered its judgment pursuant to the jury verdict. Moreover, the summary of fees provided in the declaration of Alan Block, filed on July 12, 1993, does not provide sufficient detail to justify the award of fees requested. "In determining reasonable hours, counsel has the burden of submitting detailed time records justifying the hours claimed to have been expended." Chalmers v. City of Los Angeles, 67 F. Supp. 1515, 1517 (C.D. Cal. 1987). Tilton has failed to meet that burden. Tilton should therefore file a more detailed summary of its reasonable fees, in accordance with the guidelines set [*19] forth above, within ten days after the issuance of this Order. [2] As the Court indicates below, in its ruling on Tilton's Motion for Leave to File Attorney's Fees invoices In Camera, Tilton must turn over its unredacted invoices unless it can show the Court specifically how providing these invoices will impermissibly infringe on the attorney-client privilege.

Tilton's request for reasonable attorney's fees is therefore stayed, pending Tilton's resubmission of a more detailed billing summary in accordance with the guidelines set forth above.

C. Costs Associated with Prosecution of Antitrust Action

Tilton next claims that it is entitled to $ 724,377 in costs incurred in bringing its antitrust claims. While AP acknowledges that Tilton may recover "the cost of suit" under 15 U.S.C. § 15, it claims that Tilton is seeking reimbursement for several kinds of costs which are not reimbursable [*20] under the antitrust laws. [3] In particular, AP claims that Tilton may not recover (1) its expert witness fees; (2) its deposition and transcript costs because it has not properly documented them; (3) its duplicating costs because it has not properly documented them; or (4) any other expenses except for its filing fees. The Court discusses these issues briefly below.

(1) Expert Witness Fees

AP claims that under the Supreme Court's holding in Crawford Fitting Co. v. J.T. Gibbons, Inc., 482 U.S. 437, 442, 96 L. Ed. 2d 385, 107 S. Ct. 2494 (1987), Tilton is not entitled to recover its expert witness fees because they do not fall within any statutory cost category. In Crawford, the Court held that the district court could not award the defendant's expert witness more than the $ 30-per-day limit set forth in § 1821(b) [4] unless the expert was court appointed. A [*21] close reading of the case reveals that AP reads far too much into it, however. Crawford merely holds that "absent explicit statutory or contractual authorization" to the contrary, federal courts are bound by the limitations set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1821 and § 1920. Crawford, supra at 445. Since the Clayton Act does not authorize the award of costs to a prevailing defendant, the Court held that Crawford was only entitled to $ 30 a day for his witnesses' testimony. In this case, by contrast, the prevailing party on the antitrust claim was the plaintiff, Tilton. Section 4 of the Clayton Act specifically provides for the "costs of suit" to be awarded to the plaintiff if he prevails. The Court thus requests additional briefing from the parties as to whether a prevailing plaintiff in an antitrust case should be allowed to recover expert witness fees and, if so, under [1072] what circumstances. The parties should submit simultaneous briefing on this issue within ten days from the issuance of this order.

[*22] (2) Deposition and Transcript Costs

The Court finds that Tilton's request for deposition costs, transcript costs, and court reporter fees is insufficient in that Exhibit D to Mr. Block's declaration fails to show that these costs were primarily incurred in prosecuting the anti-trust aspect of Tilton's case. Moreover, Tilton fails to provide evidence as to whether the deposition costs include travel and lodging for deposition purposes. Tilton should therefore submit a more detailed statement of costs in accordance with these provision within ten days from the issuance of this order. AP may then reply within 7 days after Tilton's filing.

(3) Duplicating Costs

The Court finds that Tilton's request for $ 133,042.13 in duplicating costs is insufficient in that it fails to show that these costs were primarily incurred in prosecuting and researching the anti-trust aspect of Tilton's case. Tilton

---

[2] AP may then file objections to Tilton's fee statement within 10 days after Tilton files and serves its statement on AP.

[3] AP claims that the costs that can be awarded under the antitrust statutes are limited to those enumerated in 28 U.S.C. §§ 1920 and 1821.

[4] Section 1821(b) was subsequently amended to allow witness statements of up to $ 40 per day.

should therefore submit a more detailed statement of costs in accordance with these provisions within ten days from the issuance of this order. AP may then reply within 7 days after Tilton's filing.

(4) Other Expenses

The Court believes that Tilton may be awarded costs for all the [*23] expenses listed in AP's motion except for Poms, Smith's air conditioning costs of $ 10,685, which are part of Poms, Smith's regular overhead that would presumably have to be paid whether the firm was working on this case or not. AP has presented no authority for its claim that the other costs sought by Tilton are not awardable. AP merely states that "none of the other categories of expenses" are awardable because they "do not fall within the categories enumerated by the cost statute." AP's Opposition at 18. However, the antitrust statute explicitly provides that other "costs" are awardable to a prevailing plaintiff in an antitrust suit. The Court therefore awards Tilton all these expenses except for the costs of air conditioning.

D. Prejudgment Interest for Antitrust Claims

Tilton also claims that it is entitled to simple interest on its actual damages for the period beginning on the date of its pleading to the date when the judgment is finally paid HN7[] Under section 4 of the Clayton Act, the court may award simple prejudgment interest "beginning on the date of service of such person's pleading setting forth a claim under the antitrust laws and ending on the date of judgment, or [*24] for any shorter period therein, if the court finds that the award of such interest for such period is just in the circumstances." 15 U.S.C. § 15. HN8[] In considering whether an award of such interest under this section for any period is just in the circumstances, the court shall consider only the following factors:

> (1) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, made motions or asserted claims or defenses so lacking in merit as to show that such party of representative acted intentionally for delay, or otherwise acted in bad faith;
> (2) whether, in the course of the action involved, such person or the opposing representative, violated any applicable rule, statute, or court order providing for sanction for dilatory behavior or otherwise providing for expeditious proceedings; and
> (3) whether such person or the opposing party . . . engaged in conduct primarily for the purpose of delaying the litigation or increasing the cost thereof.

15 U.S.C. § 15.

Tilton claims that AP should be subject to pre-judgment interest because of its alleged discovery abuses including withholding the Llewelyn letter; failing to turn over evidence of the [*25] involute hub during discovery; and not producing its distributorship agreements. Tilton claims that these maneuvers were part of an intentional conspiracy to delay trial and drive Tilton into the ground.

AP denies any bad faith, however, and points out that, in any event, most of these actions alleged by Tilton took place before Tilton even filed its anti-trust claim and thus are irrelevant to the determination of whether to impose pre-judgment interest (which begins accruing "on the date of service of such persons' pleading setting forth a claim under the anti-trust laws.") AP also points out that, although § 15 permits the imposition of pre-judgment interest, neither AP nor Tilton has been able to find a case that actually awards them, suggesting that they can only be awarded in cases of extreme bad faith. See Zapata Gulf Marine v. P.R. Maritime Shipping Auth, 133 F.R.D. 481, 487 n. 4 (E.D. La. 1990) ("neither the court nor the parties found any case where the court imposed prejudgment interest under 15 U.S.C. § 15(a)." [1073]

Although the Court thinks that Tilton has presented strong circumstantial evidence that AP was less than forthcoming in responding to Tilton's discovery requests, [*26] the Court DENIES Tilton's request for pre-judgment interest because (1) most of AP's alleged behavior occurred prior to the filing of Tilton's antitrust claims and (2) because Tilton has failed to demonstrate that AP's behavior was in such bad faith that the Court should make the rare exception of granting pre-judgment interest.

E. Post-Judgment Interest for Anti-Trust Claims

Tilton originally requested an order that its post-judgment interest should be compounded quarterly, but both parties now agree that under 28 U.S.C. § 1961, Tilton's post-judgment interest should only be compounded annually.

4. Request for Award of Treble Damages, Attorney Fees and Prejudgment Interest (Patent)

In this motion, Tilton requests the court to award treble damages, attorneys fees, costs, and pre-judgment interest under 35 U.S.C. § 284 on Tilton's patent claim for inducing infringement.

A. Treble Damages

HN9[] Under § 284, the court has the discretion to enhance the patent damages awarded by the jury by a multiplier of up to three if the infringer acted willfully or in bad faith. Although a finding of wilfulness does not mandate an award of treble damages, it does authorize them. Tilton [*27] claims that the court should treble damages for several reasons, including: (1) because AP willfully infringed and copied Tilton's patent/design; and (2) because of AP's bad faith and dilatory tactics during the litigation, including withholding the distributorship agreements, the Llewelyn letter, the design of the involute hub, and the Willoughby logbook and race reports during discovery. Tilton also cites case law suggesting that, since enhanced damages are meant at least partly as a deterrent, they are especially appropriate in situations like this when a Goliath like AP (with $ 380 million in assets) tries to crush, through willful infringement and questionable litigation tactics, a David like Tilton (with $ 1.7 million in assets.)

AP, on the other hand, asserts that the court should exercise its discretion to deny enhancing Tilton's patent damages for several reasons, including that the jury's finding of willfulness was incorrect; and that, even if it was correct, several factors militate against enhancing the damages. Among these latter factors cited by AP is that (1) the case was closely litigated (the jury deliberated for two weeks on the first patent phase and the court dismissed [*28] Tilton's claim that AP's declaratory relief action was a "sham litigation"); (2) AP had a good faith belief that the Tilton patent was invalid; (3) AP's infringement was minimal in terms of sheer numbers of items; (4) AP took remedial acts to alleviate the on-going infringement (it claims that it instructed its U.S distributors to stop selling infringing clutches); and (5) AP's Ian Nash allegedly began designing AP's clutch before Tilton even applied for his patent. See Deere & Co., 658 F.2d at 1147 (award of enhanced damages reversed as an abuse Of discretion where alleged copying occurred before patent issued and infringer consulted counsel upon learning of the patent grant.)

The Court has weighed the evidence before it and finds that AP's infringement was both willful and in bad faith. The Court therefore awards Tilton treble damages on its inducing infringement claim. Since the jury awarded Tilton $ 545,000, the judgment for Tilton should be entered in the amount of $ 1,635,000.

B. Attorneys Fees

HN10[] 35 USC § 285 authorizes the court to grant reasonable attorney's fees to the "prevailing party" in "exceptional cases". In this case, Tilton is clearly the prevailing [*29] party and this is an exceptional case due to the jury's finding -- and this Court's belief on reviewing the evidence -- that AP willfully copied and infringed Tilton's patent. See S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc. v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 781 F.2d 198, 200 (Fed. Cir. 1986)("District Courts have tended to award attorney's fees when willful infringement has been proved, and this Court has uniformly upheld such awards.") The Court's finding of "exceptional circumstances" is also supported by the circumstantial evidence presented by Tilton of AP's evasive and dilatory tactics during the prosecution of this case -- including its apparent withholding of certain key documents from Tilton during discovery. The only remaining question is whether Tilton's request for $ 2,750,503 in attorney's fees under the patent statute is reasonable.

As in its motion for attorney's fees under the antitrust statute, Tilton claims that its patent, antitrust, and tortious interference [1074] claims are so closely intertwined that it is entitled to recover all of its attorneys fees, incurred during the entire course of this litigation, under the patent statute. [5] [*31] This Court disagrees. HN11[] Under the § 285, a prevailing [*30] party who has brought both patent and non-patent causes of action can only recover for the patent side of his case, unless the patent and nonpatent issues were so closely intermingled that "the bulk of the evidence presented at trial was material to both kinds of issues." Monolith Portland Midwest Co. v. Kaiser Aluminum & C. Corp., 407 F.2d 288, 297-298 (9th Cir. 1969). See also Machinery Corp of America v. Gullfiber AB, 774 F.2d 467, 475 (Fed Cir. 1985) ("when an action embraces both patent and non-patent claims, no fees under § 285 can be awarded for time incurred in the litigation of the non-patent issues.") Although the Court finds that AP's willful infringement of Tilton's patent was part of the anti-competitive scheme found by the jury, the Court thinks that the patent and non-patent claims in this litigation are otherwise separate and distinct. Thus Tilton may only recover attorneys' fees under the patent statute for fees incurred in the prosecution of its patent claims. [6]

[*32] Tilton should therefore present a revised statement of its fees within ten days from the issuance of this order setting forth in more detail those fees that it reasonably incurred in the patent phase of this litigation. AP may then file a responsive brief one week after Tilton files and serves its revised statement.

C. Reasonable Costs

Tilton also asserts that it is entitled to recover $ 724,377 in costs under § 285 of the patent statute. HN12[] Section § 285 authorizes the court to "award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party" in "exceptional circumstances." Although § 285 does not explicitly authorize the award of "costs" as opposed to attorney's fees, the Federal Circuit has upheld the award of costs under § 285 in several circumstances See e.g., Central Soya Co. Inc. v. Geo. A. Hormel & Company, 723 F.2d 1573 (Fed. Cir. 1983); Mathis v. Spears, 857 F.2d 749 (Fed. Cir. 1988). The Federal Circuit has been less clear, however, in setting forth whether costs should be awarded in any "exceptional circumstance" or only in cases, like Mathis, where the losing party has exhibited such extreme bad faith during the course of the litigation that failure [*33] to award costs in excess of those normally allowed (under Rule 54 and 28 U.S.C. §§ 1821 and 1920) would amount to a "gross injustice." The Court finds, however, that given the jury's finding of willfulness and the apparent failure of AP to produce certain documents during discovery, Tilton should be awarded its reasonable costs.

The Court agrees with AP, however, that Tilton is not entitled to reimbursement for its air conditioning. Nor can Tilton recover for the nearly $ 50,000 in fees allegedly paid to Mr. Burroughs, since Tilton had to dismiss Burroughs at the last minute for his alleged misrepresentations about his education and work experience. Finally, the Court agrees that Tilton's $ 133,000.00 bill for photocopying seems excessive and is thus inclined to reduce it by 33% unless Tilton can show In more detail why it is reasonable. Tilton may file a revised statement on this issue within ten days from the issuance of this order.

D. Prejudgment Interest

Tilton has also asked for pre-judgment interest on its patent claims. The Court GRANTS Tilton's request, but holds that the interest should be compounded annually; should be determined according to the Treasury Bill rate [*34] as

---

[5] Tilton acknowledges in a footnote, however, that if the Court grants the full amount of Tilton's requested attorneys' fees under both the antitrust and patent statutes, the Court could then decide to award the fee only once to avoid a double recovery for Tilton's lawyers.

[6] The Court agrees with AP that most of the motion practice and discovery that occurred between October 1991 and the eve of the first phase of the trial involved Tilton's antitrust and state law claims, not its patent claims. To the extent this is true, Tilton may not recover attorneys' fees under § 285 for this work. Moreover, Tilton should only be able to recover fees under § 285 for those aspects of the second phase of the trial that directly involved Tilton's willful infringement and induced infringement claims. Tilton's billing statement must therefore present a rather detailed breakdown in the subjects on which its attorneys were working during any given time period. While the Court realizes that Tilton can not reconstruct the breakdown in hours with 100% accuracy, the Court expects a detailed showing of the breakdown in work hours expended on the patent versus the antitrust claims. The only overlap between the fees awarded to Tilton under the antitrust and patent laws should be in the time expended working on the willful infringement claim after the filing of Tilton's antitrust claims.

set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1961; and that the interest may only begin to accrue after July 1989, the month when Tilton was awarded its patent. Moreover, [1075] Tilton may not recover prejudgment interest on its attorney's fees.

E. Postjudgment Interest

The Court grants Tilton's request for postjudgment interest on its patent damages, attorney fees and costs, and prejudgment interest from the date of the entry of judgment until payment of the money judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1961. The postjudgment interest shall be awarded at the treasury bill rate and compounded annually.

5. Motion and Renewed Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law or, in the Alternative, Motion for New Trial on the Issue of Direct Infringement Pursuant to Rule 50(b)

In this motion, Tilton seeks a Judgment as a matter of law that no reasonable jury could have found that AP was not a direct infringer of Tilton's patent by its sales to AP's U.S. distributors. In the alternative, Tilton seeks a new trial on the direct infringement issue on the grounds that the Court incorrectly took the direct infringement issue away from the jury. The Court finds that Tilton's Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law [*35] is flawed both procedurally and on the merits and thus DENIES Tilton's Rule 50(b) Motion and it Motion for a new Trial.

The Court finds that Tilton's Rule 50(b) Motion is procedurally improper for several reasons. First, HN13[] Rule 50(b) motions should normally be brought after the entry of judgment. [7] Second, and more importantly, Rule 50(b) only authorizes a party to bring a J.N.O.V. motion if that party submitted a Rule 50(a) after the close of evidence which was denied, or for any reason was not granted. In this case, by contrast, Tilton never filed a Rule 50(a) motion and the issue of direct infringement was never even presented to the jury. Thus Tilton's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or as a matter of law is procedurally improper.

Tilton's Motion for a New Trial is the more appropriate means to achieve relief, but again, Tilton technically [*36] should have waited until judgment was entered to bring this motion. "HN14[] A motion for a new trial shall be served not later than 10 days after the entry of judgment." Fed.R.Civ.Pro. 59. (emphasis added.)

The Court rejects Tilton's Motion for a New Trial on the merits, however. Tilton essentially presents two arguments. First, Tilton contends that this Court erred in finding that AP's "EX WORKS" sales to its U.S. distributors could only constitute inducing or contributory infringement, but not direct infringement. Secondly, Tilton contends that AP misled Tilton and the Court into believing that all of AP's sales to its U.S. distributors were "EX WORKS". Tilton contends that while the two invoices produced by AP as exhibits had "EX WORKS" printed on the their face, Tilton later found invoices that did not have this EX WORKS provision on their face. The Court rejects both of these arguments.

With regard to Tilton's "factual" argument, the Court reminds Tilton, that as the plaintiff, Tilton not AP had the burden of showing that some of AP's sales to its U.S. distributors were not EX WORKS. Mr. Rossman explained at the August 6, 1993 hearing that AP's distributorship agreements [*37] clearly provide that all sales to its distributors are to be made EX WORKS and that the invoices held by the distributors all had EX WORKS stamped on their back. According to Rossman, Tilton could have obtained these original invoices by discovering them from the distributors, but instead chose to seek discovery only from AP Racing. The confusion arose, claims Rossman because the copies of the invoices kept by AP do not have the EX WORKS stamp on the back. While the Court does not have sufficient evidence to make a finding on the veracity of Mr. Rossman's claim, it is clear that Tilton had the burden of proving that some of AP's sales were not made EX WORKS and Tilton failed to meet that burden.

The Court also rejects Tilton's legal argument. Tilton asserts that the mere fact that AP's title to the clutches passed to its U.S. distributors in England, by virtue of the EX WORKS designation, does not prohibit the Court from finding [7] Rule 50(b) reads in part: "Such a motion may be renewed by service and filing not later than 10 days after entry of judgment". (emphasis added).

that the clutches were sold "within" the United States, as required under 35 U.S.C. § 271(a). To support this argument, Tilton relies on Fausett v. Pansy Ellen, Inc., 19 U.S.P.Q.2d 1228, 1230 (N.D.Ga. 1990), in which the court stated that "it is not appropriate [*38] for application of the patent laws to depend on whether the goods are designated F.O.B. shipping point or destination."

The Court rejected this argument in its earlier ruling and repeats its reasoning again. Upon reviewing the patent law, the Court holds that HN15[] direct infringement requires sales "within the bounds of this country." Deepsouth Packing Co. v. Laitram [1076] Corp., 406 U.S. 518, 527, 32 L. Ed. 2d 273, 92 S. Ct. 1700 (1971). Sales activity outside of the United States' borders which is "intended to lead to use of patented [devices] inside the United States" is only actionable as inducing or contributory infringement. Deepsouth, at 526. Thus, assuming the clutches were sold on an EX WORKS basis, the Court correctly ruled that AP was liable only for contributory or inducing infringement. See Engineered Sports Products v. Brunswick Corp., 362 F. Supp. 722, 727 (D.Utah 1970) (sale of patented device "outside the United States is not proscribed unless it induces or contributes to a domestic infringement"); G.D. Searle & Co. v. Byron Chem. Co., 233 F. Supp. 172, 173 (S.D.N.Y. 1963) (infringing act of sale occurs where title passes); Dr. Beck & Co v. General Electric [*39] Co., 210 F. Supp. 86, 92 (S.D.N.Y. 1962) (infringement cannot be predicated on acts consummated in a foreign country").

Tilton's Rule 50(b) and Rule 59 Motions on the issue of direct infringement are accordingly DENIED.

6. Motion for Judgment and Accounting on Tilton's Unfair Competition Claim

Tilton also moves for a Judgment from this Court that AP has violated California's Unfair Competition Act, Business and Professions Code § 17200, and for an Accounting under § 17203 of that Act. The Court DENIES Tilton's Motion for the reasons discussed below.

HN16[] Section 17200 proscribes unfair competition, defined broadly as any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice." "Unlawful business activity proscribed under section 17200 includes anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law." Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 377, 383, 826 P.2d 730 (1992). "In essence, an action based on . . . section 17200 to redress an unlawful business practice borrows violations of other laws and treats these violations, when committed pursuant to business activity, as unlawful practices independently actionable under [*40] section 17200 et seq. and subject to the distinct remedies thereunder." Id.

Tilton's claim under this statute is quite simple. Tilton asks the Court to borrow the jury's finding that AP violated the Sherman Act (by attempting to monopolize) and intentionally interfered with Tilton's prospective economic advantage, construe the jury's verdict as a finding of one or more unfair or unlawful business practices, and grant Tilton's request for judgment under 17200 and for an accounting under § 17203.

AP contends that Tilton's motion should be DENIED for several reasons, including that: (1) Tilton has failed to show AP'S behavior amounted to a "business practice"; (2) Tilton's complaint was filed after the applicable four year statute of limitations expired [8]; (3) Tilton's request for unjust enrichment is preempted by the federal patent statute; and (4) the application of the Unfair Competition Act against AP violates the federal Commerce Clause.

[*41] The Court's decision to deny Tilton's motion is based on a separate ground, although one which is clearly related to AP's arguments about the absence of a "business practice" and the violation of the Commerce Clause. The Court denies Tilton's motion because the section pursuant to which Tilton seeks an accounting, § 17203, only provides for relief in cases where the defendant has performed or is proposing to perform "an act of unfair competition within this state". Cal. Bus. and Profess. Code § 17203. In this case, however, the only act which AP is alleged to have committed "within the state" of California is the act of terminating Tilton's distributorship. While the Court agrees with Tilton that its termination was part of a larger scheme by AP to injure Tilton, the only aspect of this on-going conduct, or "practice", which occurred within California was the termination itself. Thus, Tilton has not show that AP engaged in an unlawful "business practice" within the state of California in violation of California's Unfair Competition Act.

---

[8] The Court has already ruled in connection with the antitrust claims that because this case involves a "continuing violation," Tilton may recover damages caused by the initial termination which occurred outside the four year limitations period, but only to the extent such damages were incurred within the four year period preceding the filing of the claim. Order of February 12, 1993, at 5-6; LaSalvia v. United Dairymen of Arizona, 804 F.2d 1113, 1118-19 (9th Cir. 1986).

The Court's reading of section 17203 is supported by several factors beginning, of course, with the plain language of the statute. HN17[] Section [*42] 17203 clearly provides that courts may grant injunctive relief and restitution for unjust enrichment only for unfair competition which occurs "within this state". HN18[] In the absence of any ambiguity In the language or contrary indications in the legislative history, the Court should defer to the statute's plain language. The Court's [1077] research of the relevant case law supports this reading. The Court has yet to find a case in which the Unfair Competition Act has been applied against a "business practice" which occurs wholly, or even primarily, outside of the state's borders. Although the Court can only surmise about the reasons that the legislature limited the reach of section 17203 to acts which occur "within the state," the desire to avoid violating the Commerce Clause was probably the paramount concern. As the Supreme Court has held, "HN19[] the Commerce Clause . . . precludes the application of a state statute to commerce that takes place wholly outside of the State's borders, whether or not the commerce has effects within the State." Edgar v. Mite Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 642-43, 73 L. Ed. 2d 269, 102 S. Ct. 2629 (1982).

Tilton's motion for a judgment and accounting on its Unfair Competition [*43] Claim against AP is therefore DENIED. The Court also REJECTS both AP's and Tilton's "Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law" on Tilton's Unfair Competition Claims.

7. Motion for Recovery of Post-Judgment Interest on the Jury's Tortious Interference Award (Tortious Interference)

The Court GRANTS Tilton's Motion for Post-Judgment Interest on the damages awarded under its tortious interference claims, but holds that the interest should only be compounded annually.

8. Request for Injunctive Relief

Tilton has also submitted a detailed request for injunctive relief. See Tilton's "Proposed" Judgment at P 7. AP objects to several aspects of the form and scope of Tilton's requested judgment/injunction. The Court briefly discusses AP's objections and the Court's rulings below.

(A) The Patent Injunction

AP objects to four elements of Tilton's proposed injunction on its patent claims. First, AP claims that the injunction improperly names AP's U.S. distributors -- Carl Hass, B.R.I.T.S., Essex Racing, and True Sports -- even though they are not parties to this litigation. The Court agrees. HN20[] Although an injunction may be enforced against third parties who "are in active [*44] concert or participation with [the defendant]" if the third parties "receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise", Federal Rule 65(d), the Court feels that it would be inappropriate to name AP's distributors in the judgment since they are not parties to this suit and therefore have not had the opportunity to be heard [9]; nor has the Court made a specific finding that they were acting "in active concert" with AP. The Court therefore orders Tilton to revise P7(A) of its Proposed Order as follows: redact from "including but not limited to . . ." on line 1, page 3 through "True Sports" on line 3 of that judgment.

Secondly, AP objects to the language of P 7(A) in that it appears to impose a worldwide ban on the manufacturing , selling or using of AP's infringing clutches. The Court holds that P7(A) should thus be revised as follows: after the words "carbon/carbon clutch on line 7, page 3, [*45] add the words "within the United States."

Third, AP objects to the labelling requirement imposed by P7(B) of Tilton's Proposed Injunction as being overly burdensome given that "less than 2%" of AP's infringing clutches were ever used in the United States. The Court agrees that it would be overly burdensome to have to include the message drafted by Tilton in all advertisements and promotional brochures, but AP should be forced to include a notice with every "infringing" clutch that it should not be used or sold in the United States. Tilton should thus revise P 7(B) as follows: Redact from "AP shall" on line 8 of page 3 to "clutch component is" on line 12. Then add the following lead-in before the warning in all capitals which begins on line 13: "AP shall include a prominent notice with every 'infringing' clutch that is sold that the Clutch is NOT AVAILABLE . . ." The Court feels that this requirement will only place a minimal burden on AP is justified to help insure that no infringing clutches make their way into the United States.

[9] Tilton can achieve the same result, however, by Serving AP's distributors with the injunction.

Finally, AP objects to the recordkeeping provisions of P7(C) because they are overly burdensome and would force AP to turn over confidential competitive [*46] information to Tilton. The Court agrees in part and thus modifies Tilton's Proposed P7(C) as follows: AP should be forced to file an annual sworn statement with the Court for the next four years certifying that it is complying with this Court's orders. AP must also comply with the record keeping requirements set forth in PP 7(C)(1-4), but It need not file these records with the Court or serve them on [1078] Tilton. If Tilton is able to show at some time in the future that AP has violated the Court's injunction, it may then seek to obtain AP's records through discovery. The Court finds that this record keeping requirement is justified given the difficulties incurred during litigation by AP'S apparent inability to trace its infringing clutches.

(B) Tilton's Other Requests for Injunctive Relief

AP also objects to Tilton's requests for prospective injunctive relief on its anti-trust and unfair competition causes of action because Tilton has not proved that it faces an imminent threat of injury or that its remedies at law are inadequate. Moreover, AP contends that the Court has not provided it with an adequate opportunity to present the consequence that Tilton's proposed relief would have [*47] on the market in the future. [10] The Court agrees In large measure with AP's objections and thus ORDERS Tilton to revise its Proposed Judgment as follows: (1) delete PP 7(D), 7(E), and P7(G). In addition, Tilton is ORDERED to delete P7(F) as being unduly vague and ambiguous in the use of the words "threats" and "acts of coercion". Finally, the Court deletes P7(H) because Tilton has failed to show that there is any imminent danger that AP will try to "dispose, sell, distribute, transfer," encumber or in any way secret away the assets of AP in order to avoid having to pay a judgment.

Tilton should revise its "Proposed" Judgment in accordance [*48] with these directions and those provided in paragraph 11 below and file a revised Judgment within 7 days from the issuance of this Order.

9. Motion for Trial Setting on the Issue of Punitive Damages for Intentional Interference With Prospective Business Advantage

In this motion, Tilton requests the Court to set a trial date in the near future to retry whether Tilton is entitled to punitive damages -- and if so, the amount of such damages -- on its claim for intentional interference with its prospective business advantage. Although the jury awarded Tilton compensatory damages on this claim, the jury was unable to reach a unanimous verdict on whether Tilton was entitled to punitive damages. AP contends, however, that if Tilton wishes to retry the issue of punitive damages, the Court must also retry the issue of whether AP is liable for tortious interference in the first place since the issues of liability and punitive damages are so closely intertwined.

The Court disagrees with AP. Although the Court agrees that AP and Tilton must present the evidence of liability to the new jury, the jury does not need to retry that issue. The jury should be instructed that a previous jury has [*49] already found that AP is liable, but was unable to reach a verdict on punitive damages.

Then, the jury should be instructed that they must independently find that AP was liable before they can decide on whether Tilton is entitled to punitive damages. If the jury finds that AP is liable for both compensatory damages and punitive damages, the jury should then be asked to decide on the proper amount of punitive damages to be [10] The Court notes, for example, that while the jury apparently found that AP's exclusive distributorship agreements have caused Tilton anti-trust injury, there has been no showing about the effect that these agreements would have on Tilton, or the market, in the future Tilton has apparently set up some of its own distribution networks, so injunctive relief may not be necessary.

---

awarded, keeping in mind that the amount of punitive damages must bear a reasonable relation to the injury, harm or damages actually suffered by Tilton.

The Pre-Trial Conference in this case is set for November 18, 1993, and the trial is scheduled for December 14, 1993. The parties should try to reach an agreement on exactly how and what information should be presented to the jury about the first trial. In the event that the parties are unable to reach a consensus, they should file separate briefs on this issue on November 1, 1993. Reply briefs will be due on November 8, 1993.

10. Motion Seeking an Order Compelling AP to Produce its Attorney's Fee and Cost Invoices

In this motion, Tilton seeks an Order compelling AP to produce its attorney's fees and cost [*50] invoices so that Tilton can compare its costs and attorney's fees to those incurred by AP. Tilton claims that this information is necessary to demonstrate that Its own fee and cost requests are reasonable.

In response, AP asserts that the amount of fees and costs it incurred in this lawsuit have little or nor relevance to the fees and costs incurred by Tilton. In support of this argument, AP cites a number of cases from other circuits which have denied plaintiffs the right to discover their opponents' fees and [1079] costs. See e.g., Ohio-Sealy Mattress Mfg Co. v. Sealy Inc., 776 F.2d 646 (7th Cir. 1985)(affirming district court's denial of plaintiff's request to discover its opponent's attorneys fees records to justify an upward adjustment of its fees for "quality".); Chambless v. Masters, Mates & Pilots Pension Plan, 885 F.2d 1053 (2d Cir. 1989). One of the central themes that runs through these cases is that the reasonable amount of fees and costs that opponents should be expected to spend on a particular case may differ dramatically depending on their relative stakes in the litigation. In an antitrust case, for instance, where a defendant must pay treble damages if it loses, [*51] the Court "would normally expect a defendant to invest more in defending [the suit] than a Plaintiff," who only has to pay its costs and attorney's fees if he loses, "would invest in prosecuting it." Ohio-Sealy, 776 F.2d at 659.

The Court agrees in large measure with these arguments and therefore DENIES Tilton's motion. The Court notes, moreover, that AP had yet to challenge the size of Tilton's request for attorney fees, as opposed to the legal basis for granting the fees. If AP should challenge the reasonableness of the size of Tilton's fee request at a later date, the Court would consider examining AP's fees and costs as a point of comparison. The Court does not anticipate that being necessary, however, so the Court DENIES Tilton's Motion.

11. Motion for Leave to File Attorneys' Fees Invoices in Camera

In this motion, Tilton seeks permission to file its attorney's fees invoices in camera and serve AP with a redacted version of those invoices. Tilton claims that this procedure is necessary to maintain the secrecy of the confidential attorney work product contained in its detailed billing summaries. The Court disagrees and therefore DENIES Tilton's motion. Given that [*52] the major trial Work has been completed, the Court finds it hard to imagine how Tilton could be harmed by revealing the amount of time which its attorneys spent researching and preparing for different issues While such information may be useful to an opponent prior to a trial -- in that it would help the opponent anticipate his adversary's trial strategy -- it would appear to have little value now, after the trial is complete. The Court believes, moreover, that AP must have access to a detailed breakdown and summary of Tilton's fee request in order to meaningfully challenge the propriety and reasonableness of Tilton's request.

In the event that the billing summaries prepared by Tilton's attorneys discuss matters which are of a more Confidential nature than those alluded to above, and the attorneys believe that the revelation of these matters would seriously harm their client, Tilton may selectively file certain items in camera. Routine billing summaries, Involving issues that have already been litigated before this Court, may not be filed in camera, however.

12. Motion for Entry of Judgment Pursuant to Jury Verdict

The Court finds Tilton's Proposed Judgment, lodged on [*53] June 21, 1993 to be largely acceptable, but requests that Tilton revise P7 in accordance with the suggestions in paragraph 8 above. Tilton should also remove all references to the amount of fees, costs, and interest to be awarded and should modify the Proposed Judgment so that it merely indicates that the Court has decided to grant Tilton's request for reasonable attorneys fees and costs on its antitrust and patent claims; pre-judgment interest on its patent claims; and post-judgment interest on its patent, antitrust, and tortious interference claims. Tilton should file a revised "Proposed" Judgment in accordance with these guidelines Within 7 days from the issuance of this Order. AP may then file any new objections [11] to Tilton's revised Judgment 5 days after that. The Court will then issue a separate order setting forth the amount of costs, fees, and interest to be awarded to Tilton after it has examined Tilton's revised statements of fees and costs and AP's (anticipated) objections to the amount of those requests. The Court thinks that this approach is preferable to Tilton's suggestion that the Court should first issue and enter its judgment and then later fill in the amount of [*54] costs and fees to be awarded on the same document.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: September 16, 1993

DAVID V. KENYON

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

[11] That is, any objections that Tilton's revised "Proposed" Order does not accurately reflect the holdings of this Order.

United States v. Brown Univ.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

June 22, 1993, Argued ; September 17, 1993, Filed

No. 92-1911

Reporter

5 F.3d 658 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 23895 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,358

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA v. BROWN UNIVERSITY IN PROVIDENCE IN THE STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS; THE TRUSTEES OF COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK; CORNELL UNIVERSITY; THE TRUSTEES OF DARTMOUTH COLLEGE; PRESIDENT AND FELLOWS OF HARVARD COLLEGE, MASSACHUSETTS; MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY; THE TRUSTEES OF PRINCETON UNIVERSITY; THE TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA; YALE UNIVERSITY Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Appellant

Subsequent History: As Corrected October 1, 1993.

Prior History: [1] On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania (D.C. Civil No. 91-03274)

Core Terms

district court, financial aid, Sherman Act, schools, rule of reason, commerce, tuition, needy, antitrust, anticompetitive, institutions, anti trust law, consumer, procompetitive, Methodology, Dentists, charitable, effects, attend, professional engineer, higher education, enhanced, social welfare, abbreviated, discount, practices, benefits, cases, nonprofit, promoted

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Education Law > Administration & Operation > Student Financial Aid > Eligibility for Financial Aid

HN1[] Student Financial Aid, Eligibility for Financial Aid

Under the Congressional Methodology, schools may increase or decrease the family contribution determination for financial aid, using their professional judgment. 20 U.S.C.S. § 1087tt. Professional judgment may be used only on a case-by-case basis when special circumstances exist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, by its terms, does not apply to all conspiracies, but only to those which restrain trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Business & Corporate Law > Nonprofit Corporations & Organizations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, regulates only transactions that are commercial in nature. Congress, however, intended this statute to embrace the widest array of conduct possible. Section 1's scope thus reaches the activities of nonprofit organizations, including institutions of higher learning. The sweeping language of § 1 applies to nonprofit entities. Nonprofit organizations can be held liable under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN4[] Scope, Exemptions

Although nonprofit organizations are not entitled to a class exemption from the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., when they perform acts that are the antithesis of commercial activity, they are immune from antitrust regulation. This immunity, however, is narrowly circumscribed. It does not extend to commercial transactions with a public-service aspect. Courts classify a transaction as commercial or noncommercial based on the nature of the conduct in light of the totality of surrounding circumstances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

HN5[] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

The exchange of money for services, even by a nonprofit organization, is a quintessential commercial transaction. The exchange of a service for money is "commerce" in the most common usage of that word. The payment of tuition in return for educational services constitutes commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., does not apply to the noncommercial aspects of the liberal arts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In determining whether a business combination unreasonably restrains trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the traditional rule of reason requires a fact-finder to weigh all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. The plaintiff bears an initial burden of showing that the alleged combination or agreement produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets, and satisfy this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects. Such proof is often impossible to make, however, due to the difficulty of isolating the market effects of challenged conduct. Accordingly, courts typically allow proof of a defendant's market power instead--with market power being a surrogate for detrimental effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The true test of legality, under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is whether a restraint of trade imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Sherman Act, Defenses

In an action under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, if a plaintiff meets his initial burden of adducing adequate evidence of market power or actual anti-competitive effects, the burden shifts to the defendant to show that the challenged conduct promotes a sufficiently pro-competitive objective. A restraint on competition cannot be justified solely on the basis of social welfare concerns. To rebut, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the restraint is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > Enforcement

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

While the rule of reason typically mandates an elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice. There are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable. Such plainly anticompetitive agreements or practices are deemed to be illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In addition to the traditional rule of reason and the per se rule commonly applied in federal antitrust litigation, courts sometimes apply an abbreviated rule of reason analysis. The abbreviated rule of reason is an intermediate standard. It applies in cases where per se condemnation is inappropriate, but where no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of an inherently suspect restraint. Because competitive harm is presumed, the defendant must promulgate some competitive justification for the restraint, even in the absence of detailed market analysis indicating actual profit maximization or increased costs to the consumer resulting from the restraint. If no legitimate justifications are set forth, the presumption of adverse competitive impact prevails and the court condemns the practice without ado. If the defendant offers sound procompetitive justifications, the court must proceed to weigh the overall reasonableness of the restraint using a full-scale rule of reason analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Horizontal price-fixing, where competitors at the same market level agree to fix or control the prices they will charge for their respective goods or services, is among the activities that is illegal per se. The test for determining what constitutes per se unlawful price-fixing is one of substance, not semantics. Per se rules of illegality are judicial constructs. The fact that overlap may be said to involve price-fixing in a literal sense, therefore, does not mean that it automatically qualifies as per se illegal price-fixing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., so far as price-fixing agreements are concerned, establishes one uniform rule applicable to all industries alike, and the elimination of so-called competitive evils in an industry is no legal justification for price-fixing agreements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The rule of reason ordinarily requires a detailed inquiry into the market impact of a restraint.

Counsel: Robert B. Nicholson, United States Department of Justice, 9th & Pennsylvania Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20530. David Seidman (argued), Room 3224, United States Department of Justice, 10th & Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20530. Robert E. Bloch, Room 9903, United States Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, 555 4th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001, Counsel for United States of America, Appellee.

Andre L. Dennis, Stradley, Ronon, Stevens & Young, 2600 One Commerce Square, Philadelphia, PA 19103. Thane D. Scott (argued), Palmer & Dodge, One Beacon Street, Boston, MA 02108, Counsel for Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Appellant.

Donald K. Joseph, Wolf, Block, Schoor & Solis-Cohen, S.E. Corner 15th & Chestnut Streets, Packard Building, 12th Floor, Philadelphia, PA 19102, ASSOCIATION OF ALUMNI AND ALUMNAE OF THE MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY, Counsel for Amicus-appellant. A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr. (argued pro bono publico), Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, 1285 Avenue of the Americas, New York, New York 10019-6064, SCHOOL DISTRICT [2] OF PHILADELPHIA, URBAN LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA, GREATER PHILADELPHIA URBAN AFFAIRS COALITION, HISPANIC BAR ASSOCIATION OF PENNSYLVANIA, BARRISTERS ASSOCIATION OF PHILADELPHIA, INC., ASIAN AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION OF THE DELAWARE VALLEY, NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION, National Bar Association Women Lawyers Division, Philadelphia Chapter, Counsel for Amicus-appellants. Melvin A. Schwarz, Dechert, Price & Rhoads, 1717 Arch Street, 4000 Bell Atlantic Tower, Philadelphia, PA 19103, ROCKEFELLER BROTHERS FUND, INC., Counsel for Amicus-appellant. Eugene D. Gulland, Covington & Burling, 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., P.O. Box 7566, Washington, D.C. 20044, THE AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION, THE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN MEDICAL COLLEGES, THE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES, THE ASSOCIATION OF CATHOLIC COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES, THE ASSOCIATION OF JESUIT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES, THE COLLEGE BOARD, THE COUNCIL OF INDEPENDENT COLLEGES, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INDEPENDENT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE UNIVERSITIES AND LAND-GRANT COLLEGES, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STUDENT FINANCIAL AID ADMINISTRATORS, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STUDENT PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATORS, [3] THE UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND, Counsel for Amicus-appellants.

Judges: Before: Mansmann, Cowen and Weis Circuit Judges

Opinion by: COWEN

Opinion

[*661] OPINION OF THE COURT

Cowen, Circuit Judge.

The Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice ("Division") brought this civil antitrust action against appellant Massachusetts Institute of Technology ("MIT") and eight Ivy League colleges and universities. The Division alleged that MIT violated section one of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by agreeing with the Ivy League schools to distribute financial aid exclusively on the basis of need and to collectively determine the amount of financial assistance commonly admitted students would be awarded.

The district court entered judgment in favor of the Division. United States v. Brown University, et al., 805 F. Supp. 288 (E.D. Pa. 1992). We agree with the district court that the challenged practices implicate "trade or commerce" within the meaning of section one, and should be accorded more inquiry than a conclusory rejection under the per se rule, given the institutional context. However, we hold that the district court [4] erred by failing to adequately consider the procompetitive and social welfare justifications proffered by MIT and by deciding the case on the basis of an abbreviated rule of reason analysis. We therefore will reverse the judgment of the district court and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

MIT, founded in 1861, is a private nonprofit institution of higher education offering undergraduate and graduate programs. According to MIT's charter, it exists to maintain a school of industrial science and to advance the practical application of science. Its governing body, the MIT Corporation, is comprised of distinguished leaders in science, engineering, industry, education and public service. By virtue of its educational mission, MIT qualifies as a charitable, tax-exempt corporation under the Internal Revenue Code. See 26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3).

MIT has vast resources. It has an operating budget of $ 1.1 billion and an endowment of $ 1.5 billion, among the ten largest in the nation. It receives in excess of $ 200 million annually in tuition and room and board payments. Although the annual student [5] budget (tuition, room and board, books and incidental expenses) is approximately $ 25,000, MIT still operates its undergraduate educational program at a significant loss. Alumni contributions and investment income from the endowment heavily subsidize the cost of MIT's educational services.

Each year, MIT receives between six and seven thousand applications for admission to its undergraduate program. MIT then evaluates applicants' grades, class rank, standardized test scores and personal accomplishments, and admits approximately 2,000 students. Approximately 1,100 of the accepted students ultimately matriculate at MIT. MIT accepts only exceptionally talented students. In the 1991-92 academic year, eighty-three percent of the first-year class were in the top five percent of their high school class and eighty percent had math SAT scores over 700. MIT's principal competitors for these high quality undergraduate students are Harvard, Princeton, Yale and Stanford. In 1988, eighty-two percent of all students admitted to MIT chose to attend either MIT, an Ivy League school or Stanford.

Although MIT could fill its entire entering class with students able to pay the full tuition, it utilizes [6] a need-blind admissions system under which all admission decisions are based entirely on merit without consideration of an applicant's ability to pay tuition. Because financial status is irrelevant, very intelligent but needy students are preferred over [*662] less accomplished but more affluent ones. To provide admitted needy students with a realistic opportunity to enroll, MIT also is committed to satisfying the full financial aid needs of its student body. This commitment is expensive. In the 1991-92 academic year, fifty-seven percent of the entering class received some financial aid. The combination of need-blind admissions and full need-based aid allows many students to attend MIT who otherwise could not afford to attend. For the 1991-92 academic year, minorities comprised forty-four percent of the entering class, while thirty years earlier minorities represented only three to four percent of the undergraduate class.

Before explaining how MIT calculates financial assistance packages, we provide an overview of the financial aid process. Under the federal financial aid program, students and their families must use their combined assets to pay for the students' college education. See [7] 20 U.S.C. §§ 1087kk, 1087mm. When family assets are insufficient to meet expenses, the student is eligible for federal loans and loan guarantees. See id. To qualify for federal financial aid, students and their parents must disclose financial information to the College Scholarship Service ("CSS"). CSS processes this information and distributes the results to the United States Department of Education, which calculates each aid applicant's expected family contribution using the "Congressional Methodology" formula. The family contribution is the amount the student and his or her family may reasonably be expected to contribute annually toward educational expenses. See id. § 1087mm. CSS then forwards these results to participating institutions.

HN1[] Under the Congressional Methodology, schools may increase or decrease the family contribution determination using their professional judgment. See id. § 1087tt(a). Professional judgment may be used only on a case-by-case basis when special circumstances exist. See id. Through the exercise of professional judgment, schools may have differing family contribution determinations for the same applicant. [8] If a student receives any federal aid, however, he or she may not receive supplemental aid from an institution that would exceed his or her need as computed under the Congressional Methodology.

In 1958, MIT and the eight Ivy League schools [1] [9] formed the "Ivy Overlap Group" to collectively determine the amount of financial assistance to award to commonly admitted students. The facts concerning this Agreement are

[1] The eight Ivy League schools include Brown University, Columbia University, Cornell University, Dartmouth College, Harvard University, Princeton University, the University of Pennsylvania, and Yale University. These schools were also named as defendants in this case, but each signed a consent decree with the United States immediately after the complaint was filed.

essentially undisputed. The Ivy Overlap Group expressly agreed that they would award financial aid only on the basis of demonstrated need. Thus, merit-based aid was prohibited. To ensure that aid packages would be comparable, the participants agreed to share financial information concerning admitted candidates and to jointly develop and apply a uniform needs analysis for assessing family contributions. [2]

[10] [*663] The Ivy Overlap Group conducted their needs analysis pursuant to the "Ivy Methodology," which differed from the Congressional Methodology in several significant respects. For example, when a family has two or more children simultaneously attending college, the Congressional Methodology evenly apportions the parental contribution while the Ivy Methodology apportions the contribution based on the relative cost of the colleges. When a student's parents are divorced, the Congressional Methodology expects a parental contribution only from the custodial parent while the Ivy Methodology expects a contribution from both the custodial and noncustodial parents. Each deviation resulted in less generous aid packages than under the Congressional Methodology.

Although each Ivy Overlap institution employed the same analysis to compute family contributions, discrepancies in the contribution figures still arose. To eliminate these discrepancies, the Overlap members agreed to meet in early April each year to jointly determine the amount of the family contribution for each commonly admitted student. Prior to this conference, the Overlap schools independently determined the family contribution of each [11] student they admitted, and transmitted this data to Student Aid Services. Student Aid Services then compiled rosters. A bilateral roster listed aid applicants who were admitted to two Ivy Overlap Group schools, and a multilateral roster compiled applicants admitted to more than two participating schools. For each student, the rosters showed each school's student budget, proposed student and parent contributions, self-help levels, and grant awards.

At the two-day spring Overlap conference, the schools compared their family contribution figures for each commonly admitted student. Family contribution differences of less than $ 500 were ignored. When there was a disparity in excess of $ 500, the schools would either agree to use one school's figure or meet somewhere in the middle. Due to time constraints, the schools spent only a few minutes discussing an individual and the agreed upon

---

[2] The Manual of the Council of Ivy League Presidents states:

> 1. Member institutions agree that the primary purpose of a college financial aid program for all students is to provide financial assistance to students who without such aid would be unable to attend that institution. Financial aid should only be awarded after it is determined that family resources are inadequate to meet the student's educational expenses, and such aid should not exceed the difference between educational expenses and family resources. MIT is considered a member of the Ivy Group for purposes of these rules.
>
> 2. Ivy Group institutions follow the common policy that any financial aid shall be awarded solely on the basis of demonstrated need. Moreover, in order to insure that financial awards to commonly admitted candidates are reasonably comparable, all Ivy Group institutions will share financial information concerning admitted candidates in an annual "Ivy Overlap" meeting just prior to the mid-April common notification date. The purpose of the overlap agreement is to neutralize the effect of financial aid so that a student may choose among Ivy Group institutions for non-financial reasons.
>
> a. Family contributions shall be compared and adjusted if necessary so that, as a general rule, families will be asked to pay approximately the same amount regardless of the Ivy Group institution they choose to attend. As a result, total financial need should differ by the approximate amount that costs at the respective institutions differ. Also, subject to variations in individual institutional financial aid policy, there is a further goal of establishing a balance between scholarship and self-help that is roughly comparable.
>
> b. Member institutions shall continue to compare late awards and adjustments to awards after the formal overlap session until the student decides which college he or she will attend.
>
> 3. So that the process of comparing financial aid awards among member institutions can be facilitated, Ivy Group financial aid directors shall meet as necessary to agree on the basic principles of a financial needs analysis system. In particular they shall agree on a common system for measuring parental ability to pay and also seek to reduce differences in the other elements of needs analysis such as: contributions from student assets and benefits, summer savings expectations, travel allowances, and adjustments for use of outside scholarships.

App. at 1211-12.

figures were more a result of compromise than of a genuine effort to accurately assess the student's financial circumstances.

All Ivy Overlap Group institutions understood that failing to comply with the Overlap Agreement would result in retaliatory sanctions. Consequently, noncompliance was rare and quickly [12] remedied. For example, in 1986, Princeton began awarding $ 1,000 research grants to undergraduates based on academic merit. After a series of complaints from other Overlap institutions who viewed these grants as a form of scholarship, Princeton terminated this program.

Stanford represented the Overlap schools' only meaningful competition for students. The Ivy Overlap Group, fearful that Stanford would lure a disproportionate number of the highest caliber students with merit scholarships, attempted to recruit Stanford into the group. Stanford declined this invitation.

In 1991, the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department brought this civil suit alleging that the Ivy Overlap Group unlawfully conspired to restrain trade in violation of section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by (1) agreeing to award financial aid exclusively on the basis of need; (2) agreeing to utilize a common formula to calculate need; and (3) collectively setting, with only insignificant discrepancies, each commonly admitted students' family contribution toward [*664] the price of tuition. [3] The Division sought only injunctive relief. All of the Ivy League institutions signed [13] a consent decree with the United States, and only MIT proceeded to trial. After a ten-day bench trial, the district court held that the Ivy Overlap Group's conduct constituted "trade or commerce" under section one of the Sherman Act. Rejecting MIT's argument that financial aid is pure charity and thus exempt from the dictates of the Sherman Act, the district court characterized the Overlap Agreement as setting a selective discount off the price of educational services.

The district court found that the Overlap Agreement constituted price fixing. Due to the nonprofit status and educational mission of the alleged conspirators, however, the court declined to apply the per se rule of illegality that summarily [14] invalidates most horizontal price fixing agreements. Because the conflicting and complex expert testimony left the court unsure that the economic effect of Overlap could be accurately measured, it assumed without deciding MIT's premise that the Overlap Agreement was revenue neutral, i.e., did not increase or decrease the average tuition payment made by students. Nevertheless, the court was quick to point out that assuming the fact of revenue neutrality, without more, offers no insight into any alleged procompetitive virtue of a restraint. Hence, despite this assumption of revenue neutrality, the court found the Agreement plainly anticompetitive because it eliminated price competition for outstanding students among the participating schools. Because the harm was tampering with free market forces, the court deemed it irrelevant whether the total amount of tuition payments collected from all students increased, decreased or remained the same.

Faced with what it believed was a plainly anticompetitive agreement, the district court applied an abbreviated version of the rule of reason and took only a "quick look" to determine if MIT presented any plausible procompetitive affirmative [15] defenses that justified the Overlap Agreement. MIT argued that Overlap widened the pool of applicants to Overlap institutions by providing needy students with the ability to enroll if accepted. This, MIT asserted, increased consumer choice and enhanced the quality of the education provided to all students by opening the doors of the most elite colleges in the nation to diversely gifted students of varied socio-economic backgrounds. The district court deemed these explanations to be social welfare justifications and flatly rejected the contention that the elimination of competition may be justified by non-economic considerations. The court based its reasoning on the unambiguous pronouncements of the Supreme Court in landmark Sherman Act cases, which preclude substituting Congress' view of the social benefits of competition for that of a defendant. In two cases which the district court deemed closely analogous to the present case, the Supreme Court had rejected social welfare

---

[3] Section one of the Sherman Act provides in pertinent part:

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1 (1988).

justifications for the anti-competitive designs of certain professional associations. National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 695, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1367, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978); [16] FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 463, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2020, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986). This holding with respect to social welfare justifications led the district court to find insufficient MIT's proffered justification that Overlap promoted equality of educational access and opportunity.

The district court also discredited MIT's prediction that without Overlap, bidding for the highest achieving students would partially if not totally displace need-based aid. Absent Overlap, the district court found, each institution acting independently would be free to dedicate the necessary resources to ensure the continuation of need-blind admissions and full need-based aid. The district court apparently believed that even if eliminating merit scholarships and distributing student financial aid exclusively according to need promoted cognizable social objectives, Overlap was not a necessary means to effectuate [*665] these goals. The district court therefore entered a broad permanent injunction prohibiting MIT from:

> entering into, being a party to, maintaining or participating in -- directly or indirectly, on a case-by-case-basis or otherwise -- any combination [17] or conspiracy which has the effect, or the tendency to affect, the determination of the price, or any adjustment thereof, expected to be paid by, or on behalf of, a prospective student, whether identified as tuition, family contribution, financial aid awards, or some other component of the cost of providing the student's education by the institutions to which the student has been admitted.

App. at 499-500.

MIT appealed the order of the district court. We granted leave for several amicus curiae briefs to be filed in support of MIT. [4]

[18] II. TRADE OR COMMERCE

As a threshold matter, we must decide whether section one of the Sherman Act applies to the challenged conduct -- MIT's agreement with the other Overlap institutions to award financial aid only to needy students and to set the amount of family contribution from commonly admitted students. Section one, HN2[] by its terms, does not apply to all conspiracies, but only to those which restrain "trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. MIT characterizes its conduct as disbursing charitable funds to achieve the twin objectives of advancing equality of access to higher education and promoting socio-economic and racial diversity within the nation's most elite universities. This alleged pure charity, MIT argues, does not implicate trade or commerce, and is thus exempt from antitrust scrutiny.

It is axiomatic that section one of the Sherman Act HN3[] regulates only transactions that are commercial in nature. See Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213 n.7, 79 S. Ct. 705, 710, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). Congress, however, intended this statute to embrace the widest array of conduct possible. Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 787-88, 95 S. Ct. 2004, 2013-14, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1975). [19] Section one's scope thus reaches the activities of nonprofit organizations, including institutions of higher learning. NCAA v. Board of Regents of the Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 100 n.22, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 2960, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, n.22 (1984) ("There is no doubt that the sweeping language of § 1 applies to nonprofit entities."); American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 576, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 1948, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982)

---

[4] Amici curiae include the American Council on Education, the Association of American Medical Colleges, The Association of American Universities, The Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities, the College Board, the Council of Independent Colleges, The National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, the United Negro College Fund, the School District of Philadelphia, the Urban League of Philadelphia, the Greater Philadelphia Urban Affairs Coalition, the Hispanic Bar Association of Pennsylvania, the Barristers' Association of Philadelphia, Inc., the Asian American Bar Association of the Delaware Valley, the National Bar Association Women Lawyers Division, Philadelphia Chapter, the Association of Alumni and Alumnae of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc.

("It is beyond debate that nonprofit organizations can be held liable under the antitrust laws."); see also Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 781-88, 95 S. Ct. at 2010-14 (finding nonprofit professional association violated Sherman Act). Nonprofit organizations are not beyond the purview of the Sherman Act, because the absence of profit is no guarantee that an entity will act in the best interest of consumers. See P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 232.2, at 275 (Supp. 1991); see also United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1285 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 920, 111 S. Ct. 295, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1990). [20]

HN4[] Although nonprofit organizations are not entitled to a class exemption from the Sherman Act, when they perform acts that are the antithesis of commercial activity, they are immune from antitrust regulation. Cf. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 (1940) (labor union strike does not implicate commerce under [*666] Sherman Act); National Org. For Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 968 F.2d 612 (7th Cir. 1992) (violent pro-life protests that successfully closed abortion clinics do not implicate commerce), cert. granted in part, 113 S. Ct. 2958, 61 U.S.L.W. 3834 (June 14, 1993). This immunity, however, is narrowly circumscribed. It does not extend to commercial transactions with a "public-service aspect." Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 787-88, 95 S. Ct. at 2013-14. Courts classify a transaction as commercial or noncommercial based on the nature of the conduct in light of the totality of surrounding circumstances.

HN5[] The exchange of money for services, even by a nonprofit organization, is a quintessential commercial transaction. [21] See id. at 787-88, 95 S. Ct. at 2013 ("the exchange of . . . a service for money is 'commerce' in the most common usage of that word"). Therefore, the payment of tuition in return for educational services constitutes commerce. MIT concedes as much by acknowledging that its determination of the full tuition amount is a commercial decision.

We thus come to the crux of the issue -- is providing financial assistance solely to needy students a selective reduction or 'discount' from the full tuition amount, or a charitable gift? If this financial aid is a component of the process of setting tuition prices, it is commerce. See Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 648, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 1928, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1980) (agreement to eliminate discounts violates section one). If it is pure charity, it is not. [5]

[22] When MIT admits an affluent student, that student must pay approximately $ 25,000 annually (tuition plus room, board and incidental expenses) if he or she wishes to enroll at MIT. If MIT accepts a needy student and calculates that it will extend $ 10,000 in financial aid to that student, the student must pay approximately $ 15,000 to attend MIT. The student certainly is not free to take the $ 10,000 and apply it toward attendance at a different college. The assistance package is only available in conjunction with a complementary payment of approximately $ 15,000 to MIT. The amount of financial aid not only impacts, but directly determines the amount that a needy student must pay to receive an education at MIT. The financial aid therefore is part of the commercial process of setting tuition. [6]

[23] MIT suggests that providing aid exclusively to needy students and setting the amount of that aid is not commercial because the price needy students are charged is substantially below the marginal cost of supplying a year of education to an undergraduate student. Because profit maximizing companies would not engage in such economically abnormal behavior, MIT concludes that such activity must be noncommercial. MIT's concession, however, that setting the full tuition amount is a commercial decision subject to antitrust scrutiny undermines this argument. The full tuition figure, like the varying amounts charged to needy students, is significantly below MIT's marginal cost. Therefore, whether the price charged for educational services is below marginal cost is not probative of the commercial or noncommercial nature of the methodology utilized to determine financial aid packages.

---

[5] The district court commenced its analysis by noting that MIT is a significant economic entity, controlling substantial assets and operating a billion dollar budget. We agree with MIT that the extent of its resources is not probative of whether its financial aid is commerce.

[6] At least one Overlap member apparently agrees with this conclusion. In a paper entitled "Tuition Income," Yale explains that "tuition, modified by student aid expenditures, is in essence the price that the University charges for its educational programs." App. at 1315.

The fact that MIT is not obligated to provide any financial aid does not transform that aid into charity. Similarly, discounting the price of educational services for needy students is not charity when a university receives tangible benefits in exchange. Regardless of whether MIT's motive is altruism, self-enhancement [24] or a combination of the two, [7] MIT benefits from providing financial [*667] aid. MIT admits that it competes with other Overlap members for outstanding students. By distributing aid, MIT enables exceptional students to attend its school who otherwise could not afford to attend. The resulting expansion in MIT's pool of exceptional applicants increases the quality of MIT's student body. MIT then enjoys enhanced prestige by virtue of its ability to attract a greater portion of the "cream of the crop." The Supreme Court has recognized that nonprofit organizations derive significant benefit from increased prestige and influence. See American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc., v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 576, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 1948, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982). Although MIT could fill its class with students able to pay the full tuition, the caliber of its student body, and consequently the institution's reputation, obviously would suffer. Overlap affords MIT the benefit of an overrepresentation of high caliber students, with the concomitant institutional prestige, without forcing MIT to be responsive to market forces in terms of its tuition costs. By immunizing [25] itself through the Overlap from competition for students based on a price/quality ratio, MIT achieves certain institutional benefits at a bargain.

[26] Our holding that the Overlap Agreement clearly implicates trade or commerce is consistent with Marjorie Webster Junior College, Inc. v. Middle States Ass'n of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Inc., 139 U.S. App. D.C. 217, 432 F.2d 650 (D.C. Cir. 1970), upon which MIT heavily relies. In that case, the Middle States Association ("MSA"), a nonprofit corporation dedicated to improving quality in institutions of higher learning, was responsible for, among other things, accrediting qualified colleges. One of the prerequisites to accreditation was that institutions be nonprofit organizations. Following this longstanding policy, the MSA declined to accredit Marjorie Webster because it was a proprietary junior college. The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit held that the MSA's refusal to accredit Marjorie Webster was not commercial activity under section one of the Sherman Act. Marjorie Webster, 432 F.2d at 654. The Sherman Act's proscriptions, the court stated, do not extend to "the noncommercial aspects of the liberal arts." Id. Therefore, the refusal to accredit an institution "absent an intent or purpose to affect the commercial [27] aspects of the profession" did not constitute commerce. Id.

The Marjorie Webster court focused primarily on intent because the nature of the conduct in that case was distinctly noncommercial. The MSA received no payment or other benefit for evaluating institutions and deciding whether to accredit them. In contrast to the Overlap Agreement, there was no exchange of money for services or the setting of a price. We agree that HN6[] the Sherman Act does not apply to "the noncommercial aspects of the liberal arts." Id. MIT's conduct, however, presents the opposite side of the coin -- the commercial aspects of the liberal arts. Like the district court, we "can conceive of few aspects of higher education that are more commercial than the price

[7] The district court did not make a factual finding with respect to MIT's motivation for joining the Overlap Agreement. There is ample evidence that MIT's indirect objective was to promote equal access to higher education and diversity within the student body. We cannot overlook, however, that MIT also desired to attract the most talented students at the least expense to itself, a result which would also flow directly from the elimination of price competition among the Ivy Overlap member institutions. In fact, we could conjecture a number of self-serving reasons why MIT might have entered the Overlap Agreement, not the least of which might have been the market power which typically accompanies combinations. The higher than competitive tuition prices which MIT and the other Overlap members were able to charge, absent tuition competition, enhances "revenues", if not "profits", which can be allocated to any conceivable internal institutional purpose.

In any event, to determine whether trade or commerce is implicated, motive plays a much less important role when the nature of the activity, as here, is plainly commercial. An anticompetitive motive may trigger antitrust scrutiny of otherwise noncommercial conduct. See Marjorie Webster Junior College, Inc. v. Middle States Ass'n of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Inc., 139 U.S. App. D.C. 217, 432 F.2d 650, 654-55 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 965, 91 S. Ct. 367, 27 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1970). The opposite, however, is not also true. A beneficent objective does not excuse commercial activities from compliance with the Sherman Act. In Goldfarb, the Supreme Court held that a minimum fee schedule for attorneys published by a county bar association violated section one of the Sherman Act. 421 U.S. at 781-87, 95 S. Ct. at 2010-13. The bar association argued that the goal of professions, in contrast to businesses, "is to provide services necessary to the community." Id. at 786, 95 S. Ct. at 2013. The Supreme Court discounted the significance of this purported motive, finding that motive arguments lose force when used to justify an obviously commercial endeavor. Id.

charged to students." *United States v. [668] Brown University, 805 F. Supp. 288, 298 (E.D. Pa. 1992). The Marjorie Webster court even acknowledged that if the MSA engaged in commercial activity, "antitrust policy would presumably be applicable." 432 F.2d at 654-55.

We hold that financial assistance to students is part and parcel of the process of setting tuition and thus a commercial transaction. [28] Although MIT's status as a nonprofit educational organization and its advancement of congressionally-recognized and important social welfare goals does not remove its conduct from the realm of trade or commerce, these factors will influence whether this conduct violates the Sherman Act. See Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 788 n.17, 95 S. Ct. at 2013 n.17.

III. RESTRAINT OF TRADE

Section one of the Sherman Act provides that HN7[] "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states . . . is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Courts long ago realized that literal application of section one would render virtually every business arrangement unlawful. "Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence." Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 244, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918). Because even beneficial business contracts or combinations restrain trade to some degree, section one has been interpreted to prohibit [29] only those contracts or combinations that are "unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58, 31 S. Ct. 502, 515, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911).

Three general standards have emerged for HN8[] determining whether a business combination unreasonably restrains trade under section one. Most restraints are analyzed under the traditional "rule of reason." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 2557, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977). The rule of reason requires the fact-finder to "weigh[] all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Id. [8] The plaintiff bears an initial burden under the rule of reason of showing that the alleged combination or agreement produced adverse, anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets. Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 722 (3d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, U.S. , 112 S. Ct. 3034 (1992); Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 166 (3d Cir. 1979). [30] The plaintiff may satisfy this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects, such as reduction of output, see FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2019, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986), increase in price, or deterioration in quality of goods or services, see Tunis Bros., 952 F.2d at 728. Such proof is often impossible to make, however, due to the difficulty of isolating the market effects of challenged conduct. 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1503, at 376 (1986). Accordingly, courts typically allow proof of the defendant's "market power" instead. Tunis Bros., 952 F.2d at 727; see NCAA v. Board of Regents of the Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 110, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 2965, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). Market power, the ability to raise prices above those that would prevail in a competitive market, Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 27 n.46, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1566, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984), is essentially a "surrogate for detrimental effects." *Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 460-61, [669] 106 S. Ct. at 2019 [31] (quoting 7 P. Areeda, supra, P 1511, at 429).

HN10[] If a plaintiff meets his initial burden of adducing adequate evidence of market power or actual [32] anti-competitive effects, the burden shifts to the defendant to show that the challenged conduct promotes a sufficiently

---

[8] The contours of the traditional rule of reason inquiry have remained largely unchanged since they were first defined in Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 244, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918):

> HN9[] The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts.

pro-competitive objective. A restraint on competition cannot be justified solely on the basis of social welfare concerns. See, e.g., Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 695, 98 S. Ct. at 1367; Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 463, 106 S. Ct. at 2020. To rebut, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the restraint is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective. 7 P. Areeda, supra P 1507, at 397; Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. , 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991).

HN11[] While the rule of reason typically mandates "an elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice," Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 343, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 2472, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982), "there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue [33] are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable," Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 518, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). Such "plainly anticompetitive" agreements or practices are deemed to be "illegal per se." National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1365, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978). "Business certainty and litigation efficiency" are the principal salutary effects of per se rules. Maricopa, 457 U.S. at 344, 102 S. Ct. at 2473. Such rules "tend to provide guidance to the business community and to minimize the burdens on litigants and the judicial system of the more complex rule-of-reason trials." Continental T.V., 433 U.S. at 50 n.16, 97 S. Ct. at 2557 n.16.

HN12[] In addition to the traditional rule of reason and the per se rule, courts sometimes apply what amounts to an abbreviated or "quick look" rule of reason analysis. The abbreviated rule of reason is an intermediate standard. It applies in cases where per se condemnation is inappropriate, but [34] where "no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character" of an inherently suspect restraint. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109, 104 S. Ct. at 2964 (quoting Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 692, 98 S. Ct. at 1365); Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 459, 106 S. Ct. at 2018 (same). Because competitive harm is presumed, the defendant must promulgate "some competitive justification" for the restraint, "even in the absence of detailed market analysis" indicating actual profit maximization or increased costs to the consumer resulting from the restraint. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 110, 104 S. Ct. at 2965; accord Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 459, 106 S. Ct. at 2018. If no legitimate justifications are set forth, the presumption of adverse competitive impact prevails and "the court condemns the practice without ado." Chicago Prof'l Sports Limited Partnership v. National Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667, 674 (7th Cir.), [35] cert. denied, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 409 (1992). If the defendant offers sound procompetitive justifications, however, the court must proceed to weigh the overall reasonableness of the restraint using a full-scale rule of reason analysis.

In the present case, the district court applied the abbreviated rule of reason analysis. Emphasizing that its decision to apply this analysis did "not stem from a reluctance to characterize the Ivy Overlap process as the type of price fixing which is ordinarily per se unreasonable," Brown University, 805 F. Supp. at 301 (footnote omitted), the court nevertheless adopted the more cautious approach in deference to Supreme Court precedents counseling special scrutiny of restraints involving professional association. Id. Accordingly, rather than immediately condemning the Overlap because of its apparent quintessentially anti-competitive nature, the court afforded MIT an opportunity to proffer a procompetitive affirmative defense -- an acknowledged "heavy burden." Id. at 304.

MIT first claims that the district court erred by applying an abbreviated [36] rather than a full-scale rule of reason analysis. The Division, on the other hand, argues that the [*670] district court erred by failing to declare Overlap illegal per se. In the alternative, the Division argues that if the per se rule is inapplicable, the district court correctly applied the abbreviated rule of reason.

A. Is Overlap Illegal Per Se?

The district court found that the "Ivy Overlap Group members, which are horizontal competitors, agreed upon the price which aid applicants and their families would have to pay to attend a member institution to which that student had been accepted." Brown University, 805 F. Supp. at 301. Based on this finding, the Division argues that MIT's conduct was per se unlawful price fixing. We disagree.

HN13[] Horizontal price-fixing, where competitors at the same market level agree to fix or control the prices they will charge for their respective goods or services, is among the activities that the Supreme Court has consistently held to be illegal per se. See, e.g., FTC. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 435-36, 110 S. Ct. 768, 781-82, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990); [37] Maricopa, 457 U.S. at 344-47, 102 S. Ct. at 2472-74; Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 646-47, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 1927-28, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1980); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940); United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 397-98, 47 S. Ct. 377, 379, 71 L. Ed. 700 (1927). The Court has made clear, however, that the test for determining what constitutes per se unlawful price-fixing is one of substance, not semantics. Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 8-9, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 1556-57, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979). Per se rules of illegality are judicial constructs, Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. at 432-33, 110 S. Ct. at 780, and are based in large part on economic predictions that certain types of activity will more often than not unreasonably restrain competition, Maricopa, 457 U.S. at 344, 102 S. Ct. at 2473 [38] ("Once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it, it has applied a conclusive presumption that the restraint is unreasonable."); Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 2617, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985) ("The per se approach permits categorical judgments with respect to certain business practices that have proved to be predominantly anticompetitive."); NCAA, 468 U.S. at 103-04, 104 S. Ct. at 2961 ("Per se rules are invoked when the surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct."); Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 19-20, 99 S. Ct. at 1562 (In determining whether to characterize conduct as per se unlawful, the Court considers "whether the practice facially appears to be one that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output."). The economic models of behavior that spawn [39] these predictions are not equally applicable in all situations. The fact that Overlap may be said to involve price-fixing in "a literal sense," therefore, does not mean that it automatically qualifies as per se illegal price-fixing. Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 8, 99 S. Ct. at 1556; see also NCAA, 468 U.S. at 102, 104 S. Ct. at 2960 (the Court declined to apply per se rule to agreement that raised price and restricted output because some regulation needed to make product available); Northwest Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. 284, 295-97, 105 S. Ct. at 2620-21 (cooperative buying arrangement was not automatically subject to per se treatment accorded other concerted refusals to deal).

The Court in Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 95 S. Ct. 2004, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1975), counseled against applying traditional antitrust rules outside of conventional business contexts. At issue in Goldfarb was the legality under section one of a minimum-fee schedule published by the Fairfax County Bar Association. [40] The County Bar argued that the conduct of the "learned professions" was not "trade or commerce" and therefore not regulated under section one. The Court dismissed this argument and invalidated the fee schedule, but added the following, often-quoted caveat:

> The fact that a restraint operates upon a profession as distinguished from a business [*671] is, of course, relevant in determining whether that particular restraint violates the Sherman Act. It would be unrealistic to view the practice of professions as interchangeable with other business activities, and automatically to apply to the professions antitrust concepts which originated in other areas. The public service aspect, and other features of the professions, may require that a particular practice, which could properly be viewed as a violation of the Sherman Act in another context, be treated differently.

Id. at 788 n.17, 95 S. Ct. at 2013 n.17.

Since Goldfarb, the Supreme Court has been avowedly reluctant "to condemn rules adopted by professional associations as unreasonable per se." Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 458, 106 S. Ct. at 2018 [41] (citations omitted). In Professional Engineers, a group of professional engineers agreed, through an ethics rule issued by their non-profit trade association, to refuse to negotiate or discuss fees until after a potential client selected an engineer. 435 U.S. at 682-83, 98 S. Ct. at 1361. Although the acknowledged intent was to restrain price decreases, the Court analyzed the agreement under an abbreviated rule of reason analysis and invalidated it only after fully considering its ostensible redeeming virtues. Id. at 693-96, 98 S. Ct. at 1366-68.

In Maricopa, the Court reached the opposite outcome but affirmed in a qualified way the distinction between professional organizations and ordinary commercial businesses drawn in earlier cases. 457 U.S. 332, 102 S. Ct.

2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 . The Court in Maricopa struck down as illegal per se an agreement among competing physicians setting the maximum fees that could be submitted to specified health insurers. Citing Goldfarb, the Court explained that > the price-fixing agreements in this case . . . are not [42] premised on public service or ethical norms. The respondents do not argue, as did the defendants in Goldfarb or Professional Engineers, that the quality of the professional services their members provide is enhanced by the price restraint.

Id. at 349, 102 S. Ct. at 2475. The court further stated that

In unequivocal terms . . . ". . . HN14[] the Sherman Act, so far as price-fixing agreements are concerned, establishes one uniform rule applicable to all industries alike." [citing United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 222, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940)]

. . . "the elimination of so-called competitive evils [in an industry] is no legal justification" for price-fixing agreements . . . .

Id., 102 S. Ct. at 2476. Thus the Court held that price-fixing agreements among medical professionals can sometimes be per se illegal, as it was found to be in that case, despite the claim that the health care industry was far removed from the competitive model. Maricopa, 457 U.S. 332, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 .

In other cases [43] the Court has been more hesitant to condemn agreements by professional associations as unreasonable per se, or to apply a per se rejection to competitive restraints imposed in contexts where the economic impact of such practices is neither one with which the Court has dealt previously, nor immediately apparent. In Indiana Dentists, the Court once again reaffirmed Goldfarb and Professional Engineers, this time by refusing to apply the per se label to a rule adopted by an association of dentists. 476 U.S. at 458-59, 106 S. Ct. at 2018. Pursuant to the rule, the dentists agreed to withhold x-rays from patients' insurers, who used the x-rays to evaluate benefit claims. Although the Court noted that the dentists' policy with respect to insurers "resembled practices that have been labeled [per se illegal] 'group boycotts,'" the Court expressly declined to resolve the case "by forcing the . . . policy into the 'boycott' pigeonhole and invoking the per se rule." Id. at 458, 106 S. Ct. at 2017-18.

Antitrust analysis is based largely on price theory, which "assures us that [44] economic behavior . . . is primarily directed toward the maximization of profits." R. Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 116 (1978) (emphasis in original). The rationale for treating professional organizations differently is that they tend to vary somewhat from this economic model. See Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 696, [*672] 98 S. Ct. at 1367 ("by their nature, professional services may differ significantly from other business services, and, accordingly, the nature of the competition in such services may vary"). Specifically, while professional organizations aim to enhance the profits of their members, they and the professionals they represent may have greater incentives to pursue ethical, charitable, or other non-economic objectives that conflict with the goal of pure profit maximization. While it is well settled that good motives themselves "will not validate an otherwise anticompetitive practice," NCAA, 468 U.S. at 101 n.23, 104 S. Ct. at 2960 n.23, courts often look at a party's intent to help it judge the likely effects of challenged conduct. See, e.g., Broadcast Music, 441 U.S. at 19-20, 99 S. Ct. at 1562 [45] ("our inquiry must focus on whether the effect and, here because it tends to show effect, . . . the purpose of the practice are to threaten the proper operation of our predominantly free-market economy"); Chicago Board of Trade, 246 U.S. at 238, 38 S. Ct. at 244 ("knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences"). Thus, when bona fide, non-profit professional associations adopt a restraint which they claim is motivated by "public service or ethical norms," Maricopa, 457 U.S. at 349, 102 S. Ct. at 2475, economic harm to consumers may be viewed as less predictable and certain. In such circumstances, it is proper to entertain and weigh procompetitive justifications proffered in defense of an alleged restraint before declaring it to be unreasonable.

The same rationale counsels against declaring Overlap per se unreasonable. As a qualified charitable organization under 26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3), MIT deviates even further from the profit-maximizing prototype than do professional associations. While non-profit professional associations [46] advance the commercial interests of their for-profit constituents, MIT is, as its 501(c)(3) status suggests, an organization "operated exclusively for . . . educational purposes . . . no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual." 26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3). This does not mean, of course, that MIT and other bona fide charitable organizations lack incentives to increase revenues. Nor does it necessarily mean that commercially motivated conduct of such organizations should be immune from per se treatment. Like the defendant associations in Indiana Dentists and Professional Engineers, however, MIT vigorously maintains that Overlap was the product of a concern for the public interest, here the undisputed public interest in equality of educational access and opportunity, and alleges the absence of any revenue maximizing purpose.

This alleged pure altruistic motive and alleged absence of a revenue maximizing purpose contribute to our uncertainty with regard to Overlap's anti-competitiveness, and thus prompts us to give careful scrutiny to the nature of Overlap, and to refrain from declaring [47] Overlap per se unreasonable. [9] We thus agree with the district court that Overlap must be judged under the rule of reason.

B. The Rule of Reason

Although HN15[] the rule of reason ordinarily requires a detailed inquiry into the market impact of a restraint, the district court held that no elaborate industry analysis [48] was required to demonstrate Overlap's anticompetitive character. See Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 459, 106 S. Ct. at 2018; NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109, 104 S. Ct. at 2964; Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 692, 98 S. Ct. at 1366. The district court found that colleges and universities traditionally use financial aid to recruit desirable students and that students and their families are heavily influenced by [*673] the amount of financial aid schools offer. The district court further found that:

> as a result of the Ivy Overlap Agreements, the member schools created a horizontal restraint which interfered with the natural functioning of the marketplace by eliminating students' ability to consider price differences when choosing a school and by depriving students of the ability to receive financial incentives which competition between those schools may have generated.

Brown University, 805 F. Supp. at 302. Because Overlap interfered with free market price structures and created a market unresponsive to consumer preferences, [49] the district court concluded that no additional evidence of actual or likely economic repercussions was required to establish Overlap's anticompetitive character. The district court imposed upon MIT "a heavy burden of establishing an affirmative defense which competitively justifies this apparent deviation from the operations of a free market." Brown University, id. at 304 (quoting NCAA, 468 U.S. at 113, 104 S. Ct. at 2966).

MIT does not dispute that the stated purpose of Overlap is to eliminate price competition for talented students among member institutions. Indeed, the intent to eliminate price competition among the Overlap schools for commonly admitted students appears on the face of the Agreement itself. In addition to agreeing to offer financial aid solely on the basis of need and to develop a common system of needs analysis, the Overlap members agreed to meet each spring to compare data and to conform one another's aid packages to the greatest possible extent. Because the Overlap Agreement aims to restrain "competitive bidding" and deprive prospective students of "the ability to utilize and compare [50] prices" in selecting among schools, it is anticompetitive "on its face." Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 693, 98 S. Ct. at 1366. Price is "the central nervous system of the economy,"

[9] MIT's alleged pure social benefit motivation is arguably, but not necessarily, corroborated by the fact that MIT sets tuition considerably below its cost to begin with, and could fill its class each year with affluent students who do not need financial assistance. Even assuming the social benefit motivation of Overlap, however, the absence of a revenue maximizing purpose is neither corroborated nor obvious, notwithstanding the absence of a strictly "profit" maximizing purpose. Nevertheless, given the alleged centrality of Overlap to extending certain educational benefits to needy students, we believe that a rule of reason inquiry is required here to fairly assess the applicability of the Sherman Act.

Socony-Vacuum Oil, 310 U.S. at 224 n.59, 60 S. Ct. at 845 n.59, and "the heart of our national economic policy long has been faith in the value of competition," Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 248, 71 S. Ct. 240, 249, 95 L. Ed. 239 (1951). We therefore agree that Overlap initially "requires some competitive justification even in the absence of a detailed market analysis." Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 460, 106 S. Ct. at 2019 (quoting NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109-10, 104 S. Ct. at 2965); see Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 695, 98 S. Ct. at 1367.

MIT's principal counterargument is that an abbreviated rule of reason analysis is appropriate only where economic harm to consumers may fairly be presumed; and such harm may be presumed only when [51] evidence establishes that "the challenged practice, unlike Overlap, manifestly has an adverse effect on price, output, or quality." MIT Opening Brief, at 41. As the Division aptly points out, however, if an abbreviated rule of reason analysis always required a clear evidentiary showing of a detrimental effect on price, output, or quality, it would no longer be abbreviated. See Tunis Bros., 952 F.2d at 728 (under the traditional rule of reason, "an antitrust plaintiff must prove that challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality 'of goods or services.'"). This is because proof of actual adverse effects generally will require the elaborate, threshold industry analysis that an abbreviated inquiry is designed to obviate.

MIT's position also is contradicted by Supreme Court precedent. Without any mention of actual effects on price, output, or quality, the Court in Professional Engineers required the association of engineers to affirmatively defend an ethics rule prohibiting members from discussing fees with prospective customers prior to being selected for a project. 435 U.S. at 692-96, 98 S. Ct. at 1365-68. [52] The Court reasoned that the "anticompetitive character" of the agreement could be presumed because the ban on competitive bidding, like price fixing, "impeded the ordinary give and take of the market place." Id. at 692, 98 S. Ct. at 1366. Similarly, the Court in Indiana Dentists held that collectively withholding x-rays from patients' insurers was "likely enough to disrupt the proper functioning of the price-setting mechanism of the market that it may be condemned even absent proof that it resulted in higher prices or . . . the purchase of higher priced services, than would occur in its absence." [*674] 476 U.S. at 461-62, 106 S. Ct. at 2019.

Since the Overlap Agreement is a price fixing mechanism impeding the ordinary functioning of the free market, MIT is obliged to provide justification for the arrangement. In NCAA, the Supreme Court credited the district court's findings that the NCAA's television agreements actually increased prices and restricted output. "Price is higher and output lower than they would otherwise be, and both are unresponsive to consumer preference." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 107, 104 S. Ct. at 2963. [53] According to the Court, "these hallmarks of anticompetitive behavior placed upon [the NCAA] a heavy burden of establishing an affirmative defense." Id. at 113, 104 S. Ct. at 2966 (emphasis added).

The district court did not make any conclusive findings with regard to these "hallmark" consequences of price fixing in the present case. First, the district court did not find, and we do not understand the Division to suggest, that Overlap has caused or is even likely to cause any reduction of output. Second, while the parties sharply dispute the effect of Overlap on the price of education at the member colleges, the district court expressed doubt as to whether price effects could be determined to a reasonable degree of economic certainty. The court therefore assumed without deciding that the cooperation among the schools had no aggregate effect on the price of an MIT education. Thus, while MIT bears the burden of establishing an affirmative justification for Overlap, see Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 460, 106 S. Ct. at 2019; Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 695, 98 S. Ct. at 1367, [54] the absence of any finding of adverse effects such as higher price or lower output is relevant, albeit not dispositive, when the district court considers whether MIT has met this burden. Nevertheless, the absence or inconclusivity of a finding of actual adverse effects does not mitigate MIT's burden to justify price fixing with some procompetitive virtue, or with a showing of Overlap's reasonable necessity to its institutional purpose, because actual dollar amount effects do not necessarily reflect the harm to competition which Congress intended to eliminate in enacting the Sherman Act.

MIT claims that even if the district court properly decided to apply an abbreviated rule of reason analysis, the court applied it incorrectly by failing to adequately consider the economic and social welfare justifications proffered by MIT. We will address MIT's claims with respect to economic and social welfare justifications separately.

At trial, MIT maintained that Overlap had the following procompetitive effects: (1) it improved the quality of the educational program at the Overlap schools; (2) it increased consumer choice by making an Overlap education more accessible to a greater number of students; [55] and (3) it promoted competition for students among Overlap schools in areas other than price. The district court rejected each of these alleged competitive virtues, summarily concluding that they amounted to no more than non-economic social welfare justifications.

On appeal, MIT first contends that by promoting socio-economic diversity at member institutions, Overlap improved the quality of the education offered by the schools and therefore enhanced the consumer appeal of an Overlap education. The Supreme Court has recognized improvement in the quality of a product or service that enhances the public's desire for that product or service as one possible procompetitive virtue. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 114-15, 104 S. Ct. at 2967. The district court itself noted that it cannot be denied "that cultural and economic diversity contributes to the quality of education and enhances the vitality of student life." Brown University, 805 F. Supp. at 306. Albeit in a different context, the Supreme Court also has recognized that "the atmosphere of 'speculation, experiment and creation' -- so essential to the quality of higher [56] education -- is widely believed to be promoted by a diverse student body." Regents of the Univ. of California v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265, 312, 98 S. Ct. 2733, 2760, 57 L. Ed. 2d 750 (1978) (opinion of Powell, J.) (use of race as a factor in medical school admissions survives equal protection challenge).

MIT also contends that by increasing the financial aid available to needy students, Overlap [*675] provided some students who otherwise would not have been able to afford an Overlap education the opportunity to have one. In this respect, MIT argues, Overlap enhanced consumer choice. The policy of allocating financial aid solely on the basis of demonstrated need has two obvious consequences. First, available resources are spread among more needy students than would be the case if some students received aid in excess of their need. Second, as a consequence of the fact that more students receive the aid they require, the number of students able to afford an Overlap education is maximized. In short, removing financial obstacles for the greatest number of talented but needy students increases educational access, thereby widening consumer choice. Enhancement of consumer [57] choice is a traditional objective of the antitrust laws and has also been acknowledged as a procompetitive benefit. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 102, 104 S. Ct. at 2960-61. [10]

Finally, MIT argues that by eliminating price competition among participating schools, Overlap channelled competition into areas such as curriculum, campus activities, and student-faculty interaction. As the Division correctly notes, however, any competition that survives a horizontal price restraint naturally will focus on attributes other than price. This is not the kind of procompetitive virtue contemplated under the Act, but rather one mere consequence of limiting price competition.

[58] MIT next claims that beyond ignoring the procompetitive effects of Overlap, the district court erroneously refused to consider compelling social welfare justifications. MIT argues that by enabling member schools to maintain a steadfast policy of need-blind admissions and full need-based aid, Overlap promoted the social ideal of equality of educational access and opportunity.

Congress has sought to promote the same ideal of equality of educational access and opportunity for more than twenty-five years. Testimony at trial established that a primary objective of federal financial aid policy is to promote "horizontal equity" and "vertical equity." App. at 511-12, 916. In other words, > federal financial aid policy aims to ensure that similarly situated students are treated the same regardless of which institution, or aid officer within that institution, reviews their applications, and that students with less financial need do not receive more aid than those students with more financial need.

Brown University, 805 F. Supp. at 291. The federal government seeks to effectuate these goals through programs that distribute financial aid exclusively on the [59] basis of need.

---

[10] To the extent that increasing consumer choice and promoting socioeconomic diversity in the context of higher education reflect social as well as procompetitive values, the district court should have considered the degree to which Overlap furthered these social objectives. See discussion infra, typescript at 45-51.

As the evidence attested, MIT has sought to promote similar social and educational policy objectives by limiting financial aid to those with demonstrated need, although the district court found that the Ivy Needs Analysis Methodology differed significantly from the Congressional Methodology. The Overlap Agreement states:

> Member institutions agree that the primary purpose of a college financial aid program for all students is to provide financial assistance to students who without such aid would be unable to attend that institution. Financial aid should only be awarded after it is determined that family resources are inadequate to meet the student's educational expenses, and such aid should not exceed the difference between educational expenses and family resources. . . .

Brown University, 805 F. Supp. at 292-93. Although the percentage of American minorities comprising MIT's student body has dramatically risen over the last three decades, [11] which MIT attributes to the Overlap policy, the Ivy Methodology for performing a student needs analysis was ironically less generous to needy students in certain key ways [*676] than the Congressional [60] Methodology. The district court noted three main areas in which the Ivy Methodology departed from the Congressional Methodology, including the way in which the Overlap apportions family income when multiple siblings attend college simultaneously, [12] [61] the requirements of separate payment from non-custodial parents where there is a divorce or separation, [13] and the way Overlap treats capital losses, depreciation losses, and losses from secondary business which are reported on the parents' tax returns. [14] Despite these discrepancies, the facts certainly attest that MIT has widened the access of certain minorities to its educational institution, whether or not the Overlap was mainly responsible for or necessary to that result. MIT maintains Overlap's virtual necessity to its continuing commitment to widening its access to needy minority students.

The district court was not persuaded by the alleged social welfare values proffered for Overlap because it believed the Supreme Court's decisions in Professional Engineers and Indiana Dentists required a persuasive procompetitive justification, or a showing of necessity, neither of which it believed that MIT demonstrated. In Professional Engineers, the engineers maintained that an ethics rule banning competitive bidding was reasonable because price competition for projects would [62] induce engineers to offer their services at unsustainably low prices and compensate by cutting corners on the quality of their work. 435 U.S. at 684-85, 98 S. Ct. at 1361-62. Because consumers in most instances award contracts to the lowest bidder, regardless of quality, competitive bidding "would be dangerous to the public health, safety and welfare." Id. at 685, 98 S. Ct. at 1362. The Court flatly rejected the engineers' "public safety" argument, viewing it as nothing more than an attempt to impose "[their own] views of the costs and benefits of competition on the entire marketplace." Id. at 695, 98 S. Ct. at 1367. The Court explained that "the Rule of Reason does not support a defense based on the assumption that competition itself is unreasonable." Id. at 696, 98 S. Ct. at 1368.

---

11 In the 1991-1992 academic year, American minorities comprised 44% of MIT's undergraduate enrollment, up from 3% to 4% just three decades earlier.

12 The district court found that:

When more than one child in a family is attending college, the Congressional Methodology evenly apportions the parental contribution; for example, if two children in one family are attending college, half the parental contribution would be attributed to each child. By contrast, the Ivy methodology apportioned the family contribution for multiple siblings based on the cost of the colleges the children were attending. The more a college costs, the greater part of the family contribution would be attributed to the student attending that college.

805 F. Supp. at 293-94.

13 The district court found that "in the event a student's parents were divorced or separated, the Congressional Methodology expects a contribution from the custodial parent only. The Ivy Overlap Group schools considered the income of the non-custodial parent." 805 F. Supp. at 294.

14 The district court found that "the Congressional Methodology subtracts from income the losses reported on parents' tax returns. The Ivy Overlap Group schools did not subtract these losses in calculating income to determine family contribution." 805 F. Supp. at 294.

In Indiana Dentists, where a group of dentists agreed to withhold x-rays from patients' insurers, the dentists association argued that certain noncompetitive "quality of care" effects of the agreement were relevant to the [63] Court's analysis under the rule of reason. 476 U.S. at 462, 106 S. Ct. at 2020. According to the Court, > the gist of the claim is that x rays, standing alone, are not adequate bases for diagnosis of dental problems or for the formulation of an acceptable course of treatment. Accordingly . . . there is a danger that [insurers] will erroneously decline to pay for treatment that is in fact in the interest of the patient, and that the patient will as a result be deprived of fully adequate care.

Id. at 462-63, 106 S. Ct. at 2020. Unconvinced, the Court explained that "precisely such a justification for withholding information from customers was rejected as illegitimate in the [Professional Engineers] case." Id. at 463, 106 S. Ct. at 2020. The Court continued:

> The argument is, in essence, that an unrestrained market in which consumers are given access to the information they believe to be relevant to their choices will lead them to make unwise and even dangerous choices. Such an argument [*677] amounts to "nothing less than a frontal assault on the [64] basic policy of the Sherman Act."

Id. (quoting Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 695, 98 S. Ct. at 1367).

Both the public safety justification rejected by the Supreme Court in Professional Engineers and the public health justification rejected by the Court in Indiana Dentists were based on the defendants' faulty premise that consumer choices made under competitive market conditions are "unwise" or "dangerous." Here MIT argues that participation in the Overlap arrangement provided some consumers, the needy, with additional choices which an entirely free market would deny them. The facts and arguments before us may suggest some significant areas of distinction from those in Professional Engineers and Indiana Dentists in that MIT is asserting that Overlap not only serves a social benefit, but actually enhances consumer choice. Overlap is not an attempt to withhold a particular desirable service from customers, as was the professional combination in Indiana Dentists, but rather it purports only to seek to extend a service to qualified students who are financially "needy" and would not otherwise be able to afford [65] the high cost of education at MIT. Further, while Overlap resembles the ban on competitive bidding at issue in Professional Engineers, MIT alleges that Overlap enhances competition by broadening the socio-economic sphere of its potential student body. Thus, rather than suppress competition, Overlap may in fact merely regulate competition in order to enhance it, while also deriving certain social benefits. If the rule of reason analysis leads to this conclusion, then indeed Overlap will be beyond the scope of the prohibitions of the Sherman Act.

We note the unfortunate fact that financial aid resources are limited even at the Ivy League schools. A trade-off may need to be made between providing some financial aid to a large number of the most needy students or allowing the free market to bestow the limited financial aid on the very few most talented who may not need financial aid to attain their academic goals. Under such circumstances, if this trade-off is proven to be worthy in terms of obtaining a more diverse student body (or other legitimate institutional goals), the limitation on the choices of the most talented students might not be so egregious as to trigger the obvious [66] concerns which led the Court to reject the "public interest" justifications in Professional Engineers and Indiana Dentists. However, we leave it for the district court to decide whether full funding of need may be continued on an individual institutional basis, absent Overlap, whether tuition could be lowered as a way to compete for qualified "needy" students, or whether there are other imaginable creative alternatives to implement MIT's professed social welfare goal.

We note too, however, that another aspect of the agreements condemned in Professional Engineers and Indiana Dentists was that those agreements embodied a strong economic self-interest of the parties to them. In Professional Engineers, the undisputed objective of the ban on competitive bidding was to maintain higher prices for engineering services than a free competitive market would sustain. 435 U.S. at 18-19, 98 S. Ct. at 1366. The engineers' public safety justification "rested on the assumption that the agreement [would] tend to maintain price level; if it had no such effect, it would not serve its intended purpose." Id. Likewise, the Court in Indiana Dentists [67] characterized the dentists' agreement to withhold x-rays as an "attempt to thwart" the goal of "choosing the least expensive adequate course of dental treatment." Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 461, 106 S. Ct. at 2019.

Though not singled out by the Court in these two cases, the nature of the agreements made any public interest argument greatly suspect. To the extent that economic self-interest or revenue maximization is operative in Overlap, it too renders MIT's public interest justification suspect.

The role that economic self-interest plays in evaluating affirmative defenses to a Sherman Act claim was made clear by the Court in FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 110 S. Ct. 768, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990), where the Court condemned as per se illegal the trial lawyers' concerted refusal to accept further assignments [*678] to defend indigents until they receive an increase in compensation. The Trial Lawyers Association asserted a justification based on the exercise of First Amendment rights, citing N.A.A.C.P. v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 102 S. Ct. 3409, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215 (1982). [68] The Supreme Court rejected Trial Lawyers Association's argument because the participants' undenied objective was to reap the economic advantage resulting from the boycott. The Court distinguished Claiborne Hardware, where a boycott was aimed at promoting equal respect and equal treatment instead of naked economic self-interest. The justification based on the First Amendment rights as in Claiborne Hardware does not apply, the Court emphasized, to a boycott conducted by business competitors who "stand to profit financially from a lessening of competition in the boycotted market." Trial Lawyers, 493 U.S. at 427, 110 S. Ct. at 777. In the case sub judice, the quest for economic self-interest is professed to be absent, as it is alleged that the Overlap agreement was intended, not to obtain an economic profit in the form of greater revenue for the participating schools, but rather to benefit talented but needy prospective students who otherwise could not attend the school of their choice.

The nature of higher education, and the asserted procompetitive and pro-consumer features of the Overlap, convince us that a full rule of reason [69] analysis is in order here. It may be that institutions of higher education "require that a particular practice, which could properly be viewed as a violation of the Sherman Act in another context, be treated differently." Goldfarb v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 773, 788 n.17, 95 S. Ct. 2004, 2013, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1975). See also Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213 n.7, 79 S. Ct. 705, 710 n.7, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959) ("the Act is aimed primarily at combinations having commercial objectives and is applied only to a very limited extent to organizations . . . which normally have other objectives").

It is most desirable that schools achieve equality of educational access and opportunity in order that more people enjoy the benefits of a worthy higher education. There is no doubt, too, that enhancing the quality of our educational system redounds to the general good. To the extent that higher education endeavors to foster vitality of the mind, to promote free exchange between bodies of thought and truths, and better communication among a broad spectrum of individuals, as well as prepares individuals for the intellectual [70] demands of responsible citizenship, it is a common good that should be extended to as wide a range of individuals from as broad a range of socio-economic backgrounds as possible. It is with this in mind that the Overlap Agreement should be submitted to the rule of reason scrutiny under the Sherman Act.

We conclude that the district court was obliged to more fully investigate the procompetitive and noneconomic justifications proffered by MIT than it did when it performed the truncated rule of reason analysis. Accordingly, we will remand this case to the district court with instructions to evaluate Overlap using the full-scale rule of reason analysis outlined above. [15]

[71] The final step of the rule of reason involves determining whether the challenged agreement is necessary to achieve its purported goals. The district court alternatively rejected MIT's social welfare justifications because it

---

[15] We reject the argument raised by an amicus curiae that MIT's conduct is protected by the First Amendment. The Supreme Court has characterized academic freedom as "a special concern of the First Amendment." Regents of the Univ. of California v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265, 312, 98 S. Ct. 2733, 2759, 57 L. Ed. 2d 750 (1978) (opinion of Powell, J.) (upholding the use of race as a factor in admission decisions of a medical school). The freedom of a university to make its own judgments includes four elements: a university may "determine for itself on academic grounds who may teach, what may be taught, how it shall be taught, and who may be admitted to study." Id. (quoting Sweezy v. New Hampshire, 354 U.S. 234, 263, 77 S. Ct. 1203, 1218, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1311 (1957)). This constitutionally protected sphere of activity does not extend to determining how much to charge students for educational services.

"questioned" whether Overlap was necessary to achieve egalitarian educational access. Even if an anticompetitive restraint is intended to achieve a legitimate objective, the restraint only survives a rule of [*679] reason analysis if it is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate objectives proffered by the defendant. See Fleer Corp. v. Topps Chewing Gum, Inc., 658 F.2d 139, 151-52 n.18 (3d Cir. 1981) (quoting American Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 521 F.2d 1230, 1248-49 (3d Cir. 1975)), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1019, 102 S. Ct. 1715 (1982); 7 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1505, at 383-4 (1986). To determine if a restraint is reasonably necessary, courts must examine first whether the restraint furthers the legitimate objectives, and then whether comparable benefits could be achieved through a substantially less restrictive alternative. 7 P. Areeda, [72] supra

P 1505, at 388. Once a defendant demonstrates that its conduct promotes a legitimate goal, the plaintiff, in order to prevail, bears the burden of proving that there exists a viable less restrictive alternative. 7 P. Areeda, supra P 1507, at 397; Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. , 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991).

The district court "questioned" whether the Overlap Agreement was "a necessary ingredient" to achieve the social welfare objectives offered by MIT. Brown University, 805 F. Supp. at 306. The district court implicitly concluded, and we agree, that to some extent the Overlap Agreement promoted equality of access to higher education and economic and cultural diversity. It thus turned directly to the second inquiry -- whether a substantially less restrictive alternative, the free market coupled with MIT's institutional resolve, could achieve the same benefits. In a conclusory statement, the court found "no evidence supporting MIT's fatalistic prediction that the end of the Ivy Overlap Group necessarily would sound the death [73] knell of need-blind admissions or need-based aid." Id. Although the district court acknowledged that the end of Overlap could herald the end of full need-based aid at MIT, it also observed that this was not an inevitability if indeed MIT counted full need-based aid among its priority institutional goals.

On remand if the district court, under a full scale rule of reason analysis, finds that MIT has proffered a persuasive justification for the Overlap Agreement, then the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department, the plaintiff in this case, must prove that a reasonable less restrictive alternative exists. See, e.g., 7 P. Areeda, supra P 1507, at 397. The district court should consider, if and when the issue arises, whether the Antitrust Division has shown, by a preponderance of the evidence, that another viable option, perhaps the free market, can achieve the same benefits as Overlap.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we will reverse the judgment of the district court and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Dissent by: WEIS

Dissent

Weis, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

Although the century that has passed since the enactment of the Sherman [74] Act may make reliance upon legislative history somewhat hazardous, it is a fair assumption that the drafters of the statute would have been quite astounded at the government's contention that the student aid program at issue here is covered by the antitrust laws. In response to a motion on the Senate floor to amend the legislation by exempting temperance societies, Senator Sherman remarked:

> "I do not see any reason for putting in temperance societies any more than churches or school-houses or any other kind of moral or educational associations that may be organized. Such an association is not in any sense a combination or arrangement made to interfere with interstate commerce . . . .
>
> You might as well include churches and Sunday schools."

21 Cong. Rec. 2658-59 (1890) (statement of Sen. Sherman), reprinted in 1 The Legislative History of the Federal Antitrust Laws and Related Statutes 252 (Earl W. Kintner ed., 1978), and reprinted in Missouri v. National Org. for Women, Inc., 620 F.2d 1301, 1309 (8th Cir. 1980). [16]

[75] [*680] Glossing over the policy articulated in this bit of legislative history, the government has rushed into discussions of economic theory using pejorative terms such as "price fixing" and illegal "discounts." But before such considerations have any relevance, a formidable threshold must be crossed in this case -- the applicability of the Sherman Act to agreements on need-blind admission policies and student aid. It is premature to analyze activities in the business world that violate antitrust law until it has been established that the Sherman Act does, in fact, govern the conduct in the circumstances present here.

The challenged practices, designed to provide high quality education to those who have demonstrated academic talent without regard to their financial status, do not instinctively conjure up images of reprehensible business dealings. Quite to the contrary, the initial reaction is to question why the heavy artillery of antitrust has been wheeled into position to shoot down practices that so obviously advance the public interest.

Practices that might be illegal in the commercial area do not transform a charitable activity into a business one. To the extent that the government [76] pursues that course, its argument is simply a non sequitur.

In his treatise on antitrust, Professor Areeda observes:

> "It would seem strange, for example, to bring the antitrust laws to bear on two philanthropists who 'divided the market' by agreeing that one would care for the homeless on the east side of town while the other did so on the west side. They would say -- perhaps correctly in that particular situation -- that they are not part of the 'trade or commerce' to which the antitrust laws apply."

Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law*: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application* § 232.2, at 286-87 (Supp. 1992).

The hypothetical can be moved a bit closer to the situation at hand by assuming that the two philanthropists chose to provide food for needy persons not only by "dividing the territory," but also by agreeing to allocate their aid on the basis of a formula that includes factors such as income and the number of family members. This, too, would be a purely charitable enterprise that the Sherman Act was never intended to cover. It would make no difference that the two philanthropists were business competitors, and that similar agreements [77] between them with respect to their companies would run afoul of the antitrust laws. Similarly here, the issue is not whether MIT is a nonprofit entity, but rather whether the challenged activity is commercial or not.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Because section 1 could outlaw the entire body of private contract law, courts have not read the statute literally, National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 687-88, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978), but have drawn upon its language to fashion appropriate limits. The unique circumstances of this case require a careful examination of the statute, particularly the words "trade or commerce."

The Supreme Court has defined "trade or commerce" to be commercial competition in the marketing of goods or services. In that light, the aim of the statute was "to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended to restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers [78] of goods and services." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 493, 84 L. Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982 (1940). As the Court pointed out, "restraint of trade" had a well-understood meaning at common law. The addition of "commerce among the several states" was not a further restraint, but was the constitutional basis on which federal action was founded. Id. at 495. Thus, the Sherman Act was directed at "the public wrongs which flow from restraints of trade in the common law sense of restriction or suppression of commercial competition." Id. at 500.

[16] "The unanimity with which foes and supporters of the bill spoke of its aims as the protection of free competition, permit use of the debates in interpreting the purpose of the act." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 495, n.15, 84 L. Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982 (1940).

When considering the scope of "trade or commerce," courts must be cautious in examining the entities and activities that are the [*681] intended objects of the statute. The Sherman Act applies to organizations that sell services as well as commodities. See, e.g., FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 459-64, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986); Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 348-49, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982); Professional Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 693-96; [79] Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 787-88, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 (1975). Moreover, the Act applies to nonprofit corporations as well as business entities. See, e.g., NCAA v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 100-01, & n.22, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984); Maricopa County, 457 U.S. at 348-49; Professional Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 693-96; Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 787-88. But it is significant that in each of the cases brought against nonprofit organizations, the practice condemned was the setting of, or affecting, fees for services -- activity that fell within the ambit of commerce even though conducted by professionals.

Those cases focused on the nature of the challenged activity rather than on the institution that performed the service. Thus, Goldfarb cautioned: "The public service aspect, and other features of the professions, may require that a particular practice, which could properly be viewed as a violation of the Sherman Act in another context, be treated differently." 421 U.S. at 788-89 n.17 [80] (emphasis added). In NCAA, 468 U.S. at 100-103, the Court observed that some restraints might be necessary to make a product pro-competitive, but concluded, nevertheless, that the practice of limiting the number of college football games that could be shown on television violated the antitrust laws. It is unremarkable that marketing of football games, an outright profit-making activity, was found to be subject to review under commercial, rather than educational, standards.

In considering the challenged practices here, the question is whether agreeing to give financial aid only on the basis of need and cooperating in determining the amount of support offered to applicants are activities in trade or commerce. [17] If they are not, then an exchange of information or an agreement on the appropriate allowances in individual cases does not come within the scope of the Sherman Act.

[81] The district court concluded that the price charged to students by the universities was an exchange of money for services and was, thus, commerce. As the majority explains, the government objected to the school's agreement on the amount of the family contribution expected from each student, a factor that is used in determining the total amount of aid that the universities extend. The district court characterized student aid as a "discount" from the price students would otherwise pay. Determining the amount of aid is not always a simple calculation, but often involves several categories of assistance. Government grants or loans are one type of financial support. Another, termed self-help, includes amounts earned by a student during the school year (often while participating in government-funded work-study programs), and loans the student secures directly from a bank. As the district court found, each university sets its own levels for self-help.

Thus, although the participating institutions in Overlap might agree on a family contribution figure, the type of aid an individual student receives could vary substantially. For example, in weighing self-help bank loans, government grants, [82] and work-study earnings, one school might conclude that there is no need for university-funded grants. Another school, however, might decide to offer a grant to a student in lieu of all or part of a bank loan. Thus, although the family contribution would be identical for both schools, the first school would not expend any of its own funds, whereas the second would be more generous.

The government's description of financial aid as a "discount" is a semantic attempt to [*682] bring the process within the Sherman Act and puts the rabbit into the hat. "Discount" is a term used in commercial transactions when a reduction in price is used to increase sales volume or enhance revenues. See, e.g., Catalano, Inc. v. Target

---

[17] The government has not demonstrated that the Overlap Group conspired to set base tuition levels, and the district court's findings do not discuss that issue.

Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 645-50, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, 100 S. Ct. 1925 (1980). A discount, which is intended to improve profits from a business, is not a gift, and is not intended as such. The record demonstrates that MIT receives over three times as many applications as it can accept and that it could fill its classrooms with students who are able to pay the full base tuition. In the business world, that would eliminate any need for a "discount."

It is true enough [83] that the effect of financial aid is to reduce the amount of money that students are required to expend for their education. However, that result follows regardless of the source of the aid. Students who receive university-funded aid are in the same position as those who receive federal grants or gifts from philanthropic organizations that provide scholarships for needy students.

To pinpoint the issue here, it is necessary to separate the functions of calculating base tuition and awarding financial aid. The granting of aid is the gravamen of the government's complaint, not the setting of base tuition.

Although Goldfarb emphasized the need to focus on the "particular practice" under scrutiny, 421 U.S. at 788-89 n.17, there is little decisional authority on this point in the antitrust field as it might affect educational institutions. Grove City College v. Bell, 465 U.S. 555, 79 L. Ed. 2d 516, 104 S. Ct. 1211 (1984), however, provides a helpful analogy. In that case, brought under Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the Court was required to decide whether the statutory language, "any education program or activity receiving Federal [84] financial assistance," applied to the college as a whole. Id. at 558-59. The Court rejected the notion that the "education program" embodied the entire school, but held instead that it was limited to the student financial aid program. Id. at 571.

> "Student financial aid programs, we believe, are sui generis. . . . The [government grant] program was designed, not merely to increase the total resources available to educational institutions, but to enable them to offer their services to students who had previously been unable to afford higher education. . . . The economic effect of student aid is far different from the effect of nonearmarked grants to institutions themselves since the former, unlike the latter, increases both an institution's resources and its obligations." [18]

[85] Id. at 573.

The same reasoning is applicable to the financial aid programs here. A university sets its base tuition after calculating the expense of operating the institution, including such mundane matters as utility charges, building maintenance expenses, and salaries. Universities must also consider the ratio of faculty to students, the number of students reasonably expected to attend, and the services to be offered to those students. When the costs of administering the institution have been compiled, all or a portion of the expense is calculated to be met by base tuition, applicable to all students.

As part of their perceived responsibility to society, MIT and the other Ivy League schools adopted a policy of admitting students based on academic, and not financial, ability. Those universities further decided that all students who were admitted would receive financial aid to the full extent of their needs. As a result of these policies, the record demonstrates that the number of students from minority groups and non-affluent families who attend MIT has increased dramatically in recent years. The government does not challenge the societal good that [86] flows from these need-blind admission and need-based aid policies. Indeed, financial aid [*683] made available by the government is aimed at the very same objective. See Higher Education Act of 1965, 20 U.S.C. §§ 1001-1146a.

---

[18] In response to the Grove City decision, Congress amended Title IX by providing a more expansive definition of "program or activity." Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1987, Pub. L. No. 100-259, § 908 102 Stat. 28, 28-29 (1988) (codified at 20 U.S.C. § 1687). That amendment, designed to broaden the scope of Title IX, in no way detracts from the value of using Goldfarb's "particular practice" analysis for determining the application of antitrust laws.

As the district court conceded, the nation profits in immeasurable ways

> "when our many great institutions of higher education open their doors to those who for too long were denied the privilege of attending college . . . . These policies send an important signal to a large segment of our society that persons need not presume they are unable to attend college for fear of not being able to afford what has become the extraordinary cost of higher education."

To meet its societal obligations as it sees them, MIT takes some of the funds it could otherwise use to augment salaries, modernize buildings, increase laboratory resources, or otherwise invest in the school, and donates them to worthy, but needy, students in the form of grants. This decision is not compelled nor advised by business considerations, but only serves commendable social objectives. Such university-provided aid is charity, just as would be a gift from an independent [87] fund established to pay the tuition of needy students. If that fund conditioned the size of awards on considerations of family contributions, as does the MIT program, the gift would be charitable nonetheless.

Under an analysis commonly used by courts in the tax field, university-funded aid is undoubtedly charitable. In Hernandez v. Commissioner, 490 U.S. 680, 104 L. Ed. 2d 766, 109 S. Ct. 2136 (1989), the Court cited Congressional reports defining "'gifts' as payments 'made with no expectation of a financial return commensurate with the amount of the gift.'" Id. at 690 (quoting S. Rep. No. 1622, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. 196 (1954); H. R. Rep. No. 1337, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. A44 (1954)). The question is whether the payment is made with the "expectation of any quid pro quo." Id. In United States v. American Bar Endowment, 477 U.S. 105, 91 L. Ed. 2d 89, 106 S. Ct. 2426 (1986), the Court said: "The sine qua non of a charitable contribution is a transfer of money or property without adequate consideration. The taxpayer, therefore, must at a minimum demonstrate that he purposely contributed money or property in excess of the value of any benefit he received in return." [88] Id. at 18.

Singer Co. v. United States, 196 Ct. Cl. 90, 449 F.2d 413 (Ct. Cl. 1971), discusses specific transfers that both satisfy and fail to meet this definition. The Singer Company had granted substantial discounts on its sewing machines to schools, in order to encourage training of young women, and charitable institutions. Because the company expected the reductions granted to schools to result in future increases in sales, those discounts were not deemed charitable under the tax code. Id. at 423-24.

In contrast, because the primary purpose of the discounts to charitable institutions was to assist the recipients in the performance of their religious, charitable, or public services, a tax deduction was allowed. Id. at 424. The Court noted that "the incidental effect of this policy was the development and maintenance of a favorable public image for [the donor] in the eyes of those organizations and their members." Id. Nevertheless, that was not a benefit of such substance as to deny a deduction. Id. I see no need in the antitrust context to interpret charity less liberally than the Internal [89] Revenue Code.

It is an unfortunate trait of human nature that if increased respect in the community as a result of philanthropy would be a sufficient quid pro quo under the tax code to deny a deduction, charitable contributions would diminish significantly. Substantial anonymous contributions are not unknown, but they are rare as demonstrated by the paucity of nameless buildings on university campuses.

The tax cases generally eschew reliance on motivation largely because of difficulties of proof. Motivation need not be put aside here, however, where the record convincingly demonstrates the benefits to the public and the absence of financial return to the university. The government does not dispute the facts that MIT provides over $ 20 million in aid annually, that 57% of the student population receives such help, nor that, as a result of this assistance, the percentage of minorities at MIT has increased from 3% to 44% over the last thirty years.

[*684] The government argues that, in addition to social approbation, MIT could expect an increase in reputation by admitting a higher caliber of student. This contention is highly speculative and has no record support. The students are the recipients [90] of largesse, and any contribution they make in return has not been substantiated. No quid pro quo of substance exists.

Although it may be that, through the need-blind admission policy, MIT and the other Ivy league schools enhance their institutional prestige, such a legacy is a breed apart from naked economic benefits.

The funds that are earmarked for student aid could instead be used to increase salaries as a means of attracting the very finest faculty. Thus, an allocation for financial aid could have a negative effect on a school's reputation for excellence because students are generally attracted to a university because of the standing of its faculty rather than that of its students.

The antitrust laws have their limits. They are not all-encompassing statutes that regulate every facet of human conduct. In a case involving unsavory business practices, we remarked that "the Sherman Act may not be extended beyond its intended scope and used to police the morals of the marketplace." Sitkin Smelting & Ref. Co. v. FMC Corp., 575 F.2d 440, 448 (3d Cir. 1978). The Act is not "a panacea for all business affronts which seem to fit nowhere else." Id. (internal [91] quotation omitted). That general concern is equally appropriate in determining whether a particular activity arises in a commercial or non-commercial setting. The need for restraint in marking out the perimeters of the Sherman Act is demonstrated by cases holding that certain practices are foreign to the purposes of the antitrust laws.

In National Org. for Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 968 F.2d 612, 620-23 (7th Cir. 1992), the Court refused to find that otherwise illegal conduct having an economic effect on abortion clinics was within the scope of the antitrust laws. The Court remarked: "We are convinced by the economic and legislative history of the Sherman Act that it was intended to prevent business competitors from making restraining arrangements for their own economic advantage . . . . Defendants are not involved in business, and have no ability to concentrate economic power." Id. at 621.

In Missouri v. National Org. for Women, Inc., 620 F.2d 1301, 1312-17 (8th Cir. 1980), the Court found that a boycott organized by the National Organization for Women because of Missouri's failure to ratify [92] the Equal Rights Amendment was not subject to the Sherman Act. The Court pointed out that the ERA was not a "'financial,' 'economic,' or 'commercial' piece of legislation." Id. at 1311. Despite the fact that the boycott had an adverse economic effect, the Court concluded that "using a boycott in a non-competitive political arena for the purpose of influencing legislation is not proscribed by the Sherman Act." Id. at 1315. [19]

In a case closer to the one at hand, Marjorie Webster Junior College, Inc. v. Middle States Ass'n of Colleges & Secondary Schools, Inc., 139 U.S. App. D.C. 217, 432 F.2d 650 (D.C. Cir. 1970), the Court found that an accrediting institution's refusal to recognize a proprietary [93] school did not come within the Sherman Act. "Absent [commercial motives] . . . the process of accreditation is an activity distinct from the sphere of commerce; it goes rather to the heart of the concept of education itself." Id. at 655; see also Donnelly v. Boston College, 558 F.2d 634, 635 (1st Cir. 1977) (law school admissions not within antitrust); Selman v. Harvard Medical Sch., 494 F. Supp. 603, 621 (S.D.N.Y.) ("Academic admissions criteria may well have a purely incidental effect on the commercial aspects of the medical profession. They are, however, non-commercial in nature."), aff'd, 636 F.2d 1204 (2d Cir. 1980).

My view that the antitrust laws do not apply to student aid activities in the circumstances of this case is not meant to convey any opinion on the desirability or necessity of all of the Overlap procedures. That is more properly the prerogative of Congress. In that connection, it is interesting that, in an [*685] interim measure enacted during the pendency of this case, Congress approved the concept of need-blind admissions and agreement among schools [94] on general principles for determining student aid, but prohibited discussion of individual cases. Higher Education Amendments of 1992, Pub. L. No. 102-325, § 1544, 106 Stat. 448, 837 (codified at 20 U.S.C. § 1088 note). [20] Perhaps it is of some significance that this statute was an amendment to the Higher Education Act, rather than to the Sherman Act.

---

[19] In contrast to the NOW cases, the Supreme Court found that a boycott motivated by economic considerations violated the Sherman Act. FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 426-27, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 (1990).

[20] Section 1544 provides in full:

[95] Although Senator Sherman did not envision the application of the antitrust laws to schools in any circumstances, such a blanket exemption for educational institutions is not required to decide this case. [21] It does seem ironic, however, that the Sherman Act, intended to prevent plundering by the "robber barons," is being advanced as a means to punish, not predations, but philanthropy. The result that the government seeks would divert funds that otherwise could be used for student aid to cover the expenses generated by treble damage suits. [22] This is hardly the public good that Congress intended.

[96] On the record in this case, I would grant judgment in favor of defendant MIT.

SEC. 1544. AUTHORITY TO AWARD NEED-BASED AID.

(a) Effect on Pending Cases Prohibited. -- Nothing in this section shall in any way be construed to affect any antitrust litigation pending on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) In General. -- Except as provided in subsections

(a), (c), and (e), institutions of higher education may --

(1) voluntarily agree with any other institution of higher education to award financial aid not awarded under the Higher Education Act of 1965 to students attending those institutions only on the basis of demonstrated financial need for such aid; and

(2) discuss and voluntarily adopt defined principles of professional judgment for determining student financial need for aid not awarded under the Higher Education Act of 1965.

(c) Exception. -- Institutions of higher education shall not discuss or agree with each other on the prospective financial aid award to a specific common applicant for financial aid.

(d) Related Matters. -- No inference of unlawful contract, combination, or conspiracy shall be drawn from the fact that institutions of higher education engage in conduct authorized by this section.

(e) Sunset Provision. -- This section shall expire on September 30, 1994.

Higher Education Amendments of 1992, Pub. L. No. 102-325, § 1544, 106 Stat. 448, 837 (codified at 20 U.S.C. § 1088 note).

[21] In Sunshine Books, Ltd. v. Temple Univ., 697 F.2d 90, 92 (3d Cir. 1982), we applied the Sherman Act in a suit between a competing retailer and the University book store.

[22] At least one private suit has been filed seeking damages for this alleged violation of the Sherman Act. See Kingsepp v. Wesleyan Univ., No. 89 Civ. 6121 (S.D.N.Y. filed 1990) (motions to dismiss were denied in 1991, 763 F. Supp. 22, as was a motion to certify a class in 1992, 142 F.R.D. 597).

Brookeside Ambulance Serv. v. Walker Ambulance Serv.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division

September 18, 1993, Filed

Case No. 3:92CV7463

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16886 *; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,394

Brookeside Ambulance Service, Inc., Plaintiff v. Walker Ambulance Service, Inc., Defendant

Core Terms

monopoly power, competitors, summary judgment, stations, rivals, genuine issue of material fact, relevant market, anti trust law, Sherman Act, anticompetitive, customers, regulated, monopoly, anticompetitive conduct, summary judgment motion, monopolist, ambulance, nonmoving, meetings, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment is proper only where there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The inquiry is whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law. In reviewing a motion for summary judgment, however, all inferences must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.The nonmoving party's inferences must be reasonable in order to reach the jury, a requirement that was not invented, but merely articulated in that decision. If the nonmoving party's theory is senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

The party moving for summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits if any which he believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The substantive law of the case identifies which facts are material. Therefore, only disputes of facts affecting the outcome of the suit under the applicable substantive law will preclude the entry of summary judgment. A moving party may discharge its burden by "showing" - that is, pointing out to the district court - that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. Where the moving party has met its initial burden, the adverse party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN3[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Where the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial on a dispositive issue, a summary judgment motion may properly be made in reliance solely on the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) therefore requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings and by her own affidavits, or by the depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN5[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The offense of attempt to monopolize (Sherman Act § 2) is composed of the following elements: 1. Specific intent to monopolize; 2. Anti-competitive conduct; 3. A dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Monopoly power is defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The existence of monopoly power has been inferred from a predominate share of the relevant market, but predominate market share is a less reliable indicia of monopoly power in the case of a regulated industry.Reliance on statistical market share is a questionable approach in cases involving regulated industries, however. A predominate market share may merely be the result of regulation, and regulatory control may preclude the exercise of monopoly power. Ultimately, a court should focus directly upon the ability of the regulated firm to control prices or exclude competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

A finding that an industry is regulated does not confer immunity from antitrust liability. Repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored, and have only been found in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

The second element of a § 2 Sherman Antitrust Act claim is the use of monopoly power to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor. If there evidence of exclusionary action to maintain a monopoly and use of control to strengthen its monopoly share of the relevant market, liability will turn whether valid business reasons can explain the business' actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Sherman Act, Scope

Whether or not a monopolist has grown and developed as a consequence of willful acts directed at maintaining its monopoly or, in the alternative, as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident is not always an easy question to answer. It is made more difficult by the fact that the acts or practices upon which a monopolization claim may rest need not be in themselves illegal. Nor is it necessary that in commission of those acts, a monopolist have had the specific intent to eliminate competition. Nevertheless, not every act by a monopolist which has lawfully acquired its monopoly power violates § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The otherwise lawful conduct forbidden by § 2 is a monopolist's use of monopoly power in order to maintain or improve its position in the market. Generally speaking, a monopolist uses its monopoly power in a manner prohibited by § 2 when it acts in an unreasonably exclusionary or anticompetitive manner towards its rivals.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN11[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is properly granted where the plaintiff fails to rebut the defendant's legitimate explanations for the alleged anticompetitive conduct with significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act protects competition, not competitors, and does not reach conduct that is only unfair, impolite, or unethical. Competition is a ruthless process. A firm that reduces costs and expands sales injures rivals-sometimes fatally. The firm that slashes costs the most captures the greatest sales and inflicts the greatest injury. The deeper the injury to rivals, the greater the potential benefit. These injuries to rivals are by-products of vigorous competition, and the antitrust laws are not balm for rivals' wounds.

Judges: [*1] Potter

Opinion by: JOHN W. POTTER

Opinion

OPINION AND ORDER

POTTER, J.:

This matter is before the Court on defendant's motion for partial summary judgment as to Count 1, plaintiff's opposition, defendant's reply, and plaintiff's surreply. The Court has also received defendant's supplemental motion for summary judgment as to Count 1, plaintiff's opposition and defendant's reply. Also pending is defendant's motion to preclude expert testimony, to which the Court has received plaintiff's opposition and defendant's reply. This is an antitrust action alleging, inter alia, that defendant unlawfully acquired and exercised or attempted to acquire and exercise monopoly power in the relevant product market consisting of the owning, maintaining and providing of basic life support (BLS) transport services in the City of Toledo, Ohio in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

> HN1[] Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment is proper only where there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The Supreme Court has recently stated that the inquiry [*2] is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2512, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). . . . In reviewing a motion for summary judgment, however, all inferences "'must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.'" See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356-57, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (quoting United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 (1962)).

Ralph Shrader, Inc. v. Diamond International Corp., 833 F.2d 1210, 1213 (6th Cir. 1987).

> Matsushita demands only that the nonmoving party's inferences be reasonable in order to reach the jury, a requirement that was not invented, but merely articulated in that decision. If the [nonmoving party's] theory is . . . senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted.

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2083 (1992) [*3] (footnote omitted).

HN2[] The party moving for summary judgment "always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of 'the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits if any' which [he] believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). The substantive law of the case identifies which facts are material. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). Therefore, only disputes of facts affecting the outcome of the suit under the applicable substantive law will preclude the entry of summary judgment. Id. A moving party may discharge its burden "by 'showing' - that is, pointing out to the district court - that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324-325. Where the moving party has met its initial burden, the adverse party "must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250. [*4]

> HN3[] Where the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial on a dispositive issue, a summary judgment motion may properly be made in reliance solely on the "pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file." . . . Rule 56(e) therefore requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings and by her own affidavits, or by the "depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file," designate "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial."

Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324.

The Court begins with an examination of the law applicable to this case. As the Supreme Court explained:

> HN4[] The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966).

HN5[] "The offense of attempt to monopolize (Sherman Act § 2) is composed of the following elements:

> 1. Specific [*5] intent to monopolize;
>
> 2. Anti-competitive conduct;
>
> 3. A dangerous probability of success."

Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S. E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d 1413, 1431 (6th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 116 L. Ed. 2d 29, 112 S. Ct. 51 and 112 S. Ct. 274 (1991).

HN6[] Monopoly power is defined as "the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956); Continental Cablevision of Ohio, Inc. v. American Electric Power Co., 715 F.2d 1115, 1120 (6th Cir. 1983). Defendant asserts that the City of Toledo, through a review process, regulates and controls the price ceiling for the relevant product in the market and thus it is the City, by regulation, rather than defendant who controls the price of the service provided. Defendant therefore suggests that by definition, it cannot be vested with the power to control prices. Plaintiff asserts that price competition takes place below the regulated ceiling and that, at least to some extent, defendant might be able to control prices. There is, however, no evidence [*6] of anticompetitive pricing on the part of defendant.

Plaintiff cites the lack of new competitors in the market and the decreasing number of competitors in support of its proposition that defendant is vested with the ability to exclude competition. In opposition to that position, defendant cites what it asserts are low barriers to entry.

HN7[] The existence of monopoly power has been inferred from a predominate share of the relevant market. Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571 (87% of the market is a monopoly); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946) (over 2/3 of the market is a monopoly).

It is not controverted for purposes of this motion that defendant enjoys a dominant position in the relevant market. Defendant directs the Court to Southern Pacific Communications v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 238 U.S. App. D.C. 309, 740 F.2d 980 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1005, 84 L. Ed. 2d 380, 105 S. Ct. 1359 (1985), for the proposition that predominate market share is a less reliable indicia of monopoly power in the case of a regulated industry.

> Reliance on statistical market share is a questionable approach [*7] in cases involving regulated industries, however. A predominate market share may merely be the result of regulation, and regulatory control may preclude the exercise of monopoly power. Ultimately, a court should focus directly upon the ability of the regulated firm to control prices or exclude competition.

Id. at 1000.

It is clear that HN8[] a finding that an industry is regulated does not confer immunity from antitrust liability. "Repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored, and have only been found in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions. Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 372, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973), (quoting United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350-351, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915 (1963)).

While the Court finds persuasive defendant's position as to the non-existence of monopoly power, it is not clear whether such a determination could be made at this juncture. Therefore, without determining whether or not defendant possesses monopoly power, the Court turns to the second prong of Grinnell.

> HN9[] The second element [*8] of a § 2 claim is the use of monopoly power "to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor." United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 68 S. Ct. 941, 945, 92 L. Ed. 1236 (1948). . . .
>
> As recounted at length above, respondents have presented evidence that Kodak took exclusionary action to maintain its parts monopoly and used its control over parts to strengthen its monopoly share of the [relevant] market. Liability turns, then, on whether "valid business reasons" can explain Kodak's actions. Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S., at 605, 105 S. Ct., at 2859; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d, at 432. . . . Factual questions exist, however, about the validity and sufficiency of each claimed justification, making summary judgment inappropriate.

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2090-91 (1992) (footnote omitted).

The Court will address the alleged anticompetitive conduct of defendant. In opposition to the motion for summary judgment, plaintiff submits [*9] the affidavit of Donald J. Kish, its President. By way of background, the uncontroverted facts reflect that both parties provide BLS ambulance service within the City of Toledo and that emergency calls for private ambulance service are dispatched by Lucas County Emergency Medical Services (LCEMS) to the company with the nearest "in service" station to the scene.

The Kish affidavit first states that defendant has taken LCEMS dispatched runs which should have gone to one of its competitors by providing false information to the LCEMS dispatchers as to the availability of ambulances and by sending ambulances from stations other than the one closest to the scene. Considering the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, this conduct, whether or not in violation of LCEMS protocol, simply does not rise to the level of being anticompetitive in nature.

More troubling is plaintiff's allegation that defendant opened new stations in order to block its competitors.

> Walker has engaged in a scheme to open temporary new stations in close proximity to its competitors for the sole purpose of blocking its competitors from receiving EMS runs. In so doing it has entered into short term [*10] leases and month to month leases for these locations. The effect of this blocking scheme is to deny its competitors access to EMS dispatched runs by cutting off their responding area.

Kish Affidavit at P 9 C.

Based upon the summary judgment evidence, defendant argues that plaintiff admits that plaintiff located its stations in high volume areas of the City, but then claims a Sherman Act violation when defendant did the same thing. Defendant asserts that the charge that the opening of new stations hurt plaintiff's business is an allegation of injury to plaintiff as a competitor and is not an injury to competition.

> HN10[] Whether or not a monopolist has grown and developed as a consequence of willful acts directed at maintaining its monopoly or, in the alternative, as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident is not always an easy question to answer. It is made more difficult by the fact that the acts or practices upon which a monopolization claim may rest need not be in themselves illegal. Borden, 674 F.2d at 513; California Computer Products v. International Business Machines, 613 F.2d 727, 735 (9th Cir.1979). [*11] Nor is it necessary that in commission of those acts, a monopolist have had the specific intent to eliminate competition. Id.; Dimmitt Agri Industries, Inc. v. CPC International, Inc., 679 F.2d 516, 531 (5th Cir.1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1082, 103 S. Ct. 1770, 76 L. Ed. 2d 344 (1983). Nevertheless, not every act by a monopolist > which has lawfully acquired its monopoly power violates section 2. California Computer Products, 613 F.2d at 736 n. 7. "The otherwise lawful conduct forbidden by section 2 . . . is a monopolist's use of monopoly power in order to maintain or improve its position in the market." Borden, 674 F.2d at 518 (emphasis in original). See United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 68 S. Ct. 941, 945, 92 L. Ed. 1236 (1948); Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 274 (2d Cir.1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 100 S. Ct. 1061, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783 (1980). Generally [*12] speaking, a monopolist uses its monopoly power in a manner prohibited by section 2 when it acts "in an unreasonably exclusionary," Byars v. Bluff City News Co., Inc., 609 F.2d 843 at 853, or "anticompetitive," Borden, 674 F.2d at 518, manner towards its rivals. See California Computer Products, 613 F.2d at 735 ("plaintiff must show that the defendant's acts 'unnecessarily excluded competition' from the relevant market").

D. E. Rogers Assocs., Inc. v. Gardner-Denver Co., 718 F.2d 1431, 1438 (6th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1242, 82 L. Ed. 2d 822, 104 S. Ct. 3513 (1984).

Defendant sets forth reasons for each of its station openings and closings. In support of this assertion, defendant offers the deposition testimony of Gary Walker, its President. Plaintiff has failed to provide any evidence which contradicts what otherwise appear to be valid and legitimate business purposes for opening the additional stations. HN11[] Summary judgment is properly granted where the plaintiff fails to "rebut the defendant's legitimate explanations for the alleged anticompetitive conduct [*13] with 'significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint.'" Smith v. Burns Clinic Medical Center, 779 F.2d 1173, 1176 (6th Cir. 1985) (quoting First Nat'l Bank of Arizona v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 290, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968)); see also, Beard v. Parkview Hosp., 912 F.2d 138, 145 (6th Cir. 1990).

Plaintiff further complains that defendant violated the antitrust laws when it purchased two ambulance companies in 1988 and 1989. Defendant properly observes that plaintiff did not begin competing in the relevant market until 1991 and, therefore, could not have been injured by the acquisition. The Court agrees.

Plaintiff alleges that defendant made defamatory remarks about plaintiff to LCEMS officials, hospitals, and plaintiff's customers. The only evidence in support of this allegation is the Kish affidavit which states:

> D. Walker has engaged in defamatory remarks to EMS officials and customers of Brookeside for BLS services. Walker's use of defamatory remarks were[sic] directed to EMS officials, hospitals and customers of Brookeside for BLS services.
>
> E. Walker has also tortiously interfered [*14] with Brookeside's contracts and business relationships. Walker told Golden Haven Nursing Home, a customer of Brookeside that Brookeside was out of business and Golden Haven stopped doing business with Brookeside until they were advised that they were not in fact out of business. Regardless, Walker brought pressure to bear at Golden Haven and Brookeside lost the account to Walker.

Kish Affidavit at P 9. These statements are both hearsay and conclusory in nature and plaintiff has therefore failed to meet its burden of coming forward with any evidence sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact with regard to this allegation.

Plaintiff contends that defendant refuses service to customers who are unable to pay. In support of this contention, plaintiff offers a general and conclusory allegation and a reference to one particular incident in which a non-paying client was refused service by defendant. Even if plaintiff had carried its burden and raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant refused service to non-paying clients, this conduct would not rise to the level of being anti-competitive. Plaintiff's reliance on Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985), [*15] and Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 (1951), for its proposition that this conduct on the part of defendant violates antitrust law is misplaced.

Plaintiff alleges that defendant failed to notify it of various meetings attended by the private ambulance companies in Toledo. The affidavit of Gary Walker states that he was not responsible for setting up any of the meetings complained of or for determining who was to be invited to the meetings. Additionally, the affidavit states that the participants in the meetings were companies which provided advanced life support (ALS) ambulance service and that, at the time they were held, plaintiff did not provide ALS service. The Court finds that as a matter of law plaintiff has not carried its burden with regard to establishing that a genuine issue of material fact exists as to anticompetitive conduct in the form of meetings among private ambulance companies.

Construing all of the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and giving it every reasonable inference, the Court finds that there is no material factual question which survives defendant's supplemental motion. Plaintiff has failed [*16] to come forward with evidence raising a genuine issue of fact as to whether defendant engaged in any prohibited anticompetitive conduct. The Sixth Circuit has quoted extensively from an opinion by the Seventh Circuit with regard to what constitutes prohibited anticompetitive conduct:

> HN12[] The Sherman Act protects competition, not competitors, and does not reach conduct that is only unfair, impolite, or unethical. United States v. American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114, 1119 (5th Cir.1984), cert. dismissed, 474 U.S. 1001, 106 S. Ct. 420, 88 L. Ed. 2d 370 (1985). As we recently emphasized in Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Insurance, Inc., 784 F.2d 1325 (7th Cir.1986),
>
> "competition is a ruthless process. A firm that reduces costs and expands sales injures rivals-sometimes fatally. The firm that slashes costs the most captures the greatest sales and inflicts the greatest injury. The deeper the injury to rivals, the greater the potential benefit. These injuries to rivals are by-products of vigorous competition, and the antitrust laws are not balm for [*17] rivals' wounds."
>
> Id. at 1338.
>
> This is not to say that injury to rival firms cannot ever lead to injury to consumers and that section 2 of the Sherman Act cannot be used to prevent such injury. But section 2
>
> "must be used with the greatest caution. Action that injures rivals may ultimately injure consumers, but it is also perfectly consistent with competition, and to deter aggressive conduct is to deter competition. Thus, the plaintiff faces a stiff burden in any section 2 litigation. 'It is not enough that a single firm appears to restrain trade unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression. For instance, an efficient firm may capture unsatisfied customers from an inefficient rival, whose own ability to compete may suffer as a result. This is the rule of the marketplace and is precisely the sort of competition that promotes the consumer interests that the Sherman Act aims to foster. In part because it is sometimes difficult to distinguish robust competition from conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects, Congress authorized Sherman Act scrutiny of single firms only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral [*18] conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur.'"
>
> Id. (quoting Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Cob, [sic] 467 U.S. 752, 767-68, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2739-40, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)).
>
> Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1413-14 (7th Cir.1989) (footnotes omitted).

Langenderfer, 917 F.2d at 1422-23.

The Court finds that plaintiff has failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact with regard to whether any of its claims in Count One set forth any violation of the antitrust laws. Defendant is therefore entitled to judgment as a matter of law with regard to Count One.

Since Count Two of the complaint alleges a violation of state law and jurisdiction of this count is based upon the Court's pendent jurisdiction, the federal claims having been dismissed, the Court will sua sponte dismiss the remaining count without prejudice. Wolotsky v. Huhn, 960 F.2d 1331, 1338 (6th Cir. 1992).

THEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons, [*19] good cause appearing, it is ORDERED that defendant's supplemental motion for summary judgment be, and hereby is, GRANTED; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that the remainder of this action be, and hereby is, DISMISSED.

John W. Potter

Sr. United States District Judge

DR PEPPER/SEVEN-UP COS. v. FTC

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

September 30, 1993, Decided ; September 30, 1993, Filed

Civil Action No. 92-2760 (JLG)

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15984 *; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,374

DR PEPPER/SEVEN-UP COMPANIES, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Defendant.

Core Terms

Bottling, consent order, rights, prior approval, license, distribute, acquisition, soft drink, proposed acquisition, staff, metropolitan, proposed transaction, coverage, parties, ceased, entity, terms, agency's action, supermarkets, plaintiffs', negotiated, franchise, vertical, brand, sells, summary judgment motion, civil penalty, Memorandum, formerly, acquire

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Informal Agency Action

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > General Overview

Administrative Law > ... > Formal Adjudicatory Procedure > Hearings > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Reviewable Agency Action

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Environmental Law > Administrative Proceedings & Litigation > Judicial Review

HN1[] Agency Adjudication, Informal Agency Action

Prior approval provisions in Federal Trade Commission (FTC) consent orders have been held to give the commission a veto over proposed acquisitions or divestitures. The FTC's exercise of that veto with respect to a prior approval application is an adjudication within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), falling within the residual category of "informal adjudication," to which apply the minimal procedural requirements of the APA § 555, and as such, is reviewable as final agency action. A predicate for the lawful exercise of that veto power is that the prior approval provisions of a consent order govern the proposed transaction in the first place; if they do not govern, then the exercise of that veto in the denial of an application is arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law. 5 U.S.C.S. § 706(2)(A).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN2[] Settlements, Consent Judgments

A consent decree should be read as a contract. Thus, while the meaning of a decree's terms must be discerned within its four corners, an inquiry should be guided by conventional aids to construction, including 'the circumstances surrounding the formation of the consent order and any technical meaning words used may have had to the parties.

Counsel: [*1] For Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc.: Philip D. Bartz, Leslie J. Cloutier, Morrison & Foerster, 2000 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 5500, Washington, D.C. 20006.

For Harold A. Honickman: Peter E. Greene, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, 919 Third Avenue, New York, New York 10022. Gary A. MacDonald, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, 1440 New York Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005.

Jeffrey T. Sprung, Assistant United States Attorney, 555 4th Street, N.W., Fourth Floor, Washington, D.C. 20001.

For The Federal Trade Commission: Melvin H. Orlans, Office of General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, 6th & Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20580.

Judges: GREEN

Opinion by: JUNE L. GREEN

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION

This case concerns the bottling and distribution of Seven-Up brand soft drinks in the metropolitan New York City area. It is the second of two related lawsuits brought by plaintiffs Harold A. Honickman ("Mr. Honickman") and Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc. ("DPSU") against the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC" or "the Commission"), challenging the Commission's refusal to approve proposed acquisitions by Mr. Honickman of certain soft drink bottling assets pursuant to a 1991 [*2] Consent Order. The earlier case, referred to here as DPSU I and presently on partial remand to the FTC, concerned Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of assets of the now defunct Brooklyn Bottling Company ("Seven-Up Brooklyn"). Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 798 F. Supp. 762 (D.D.C. 1992), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 991 F.2d 859 (D.C. Cir. 1993). This case concerns distribution rights formerly held by the also defunct New York Seven-Up Bottling Company ("New York Bottling") and is now before this Court on cross-motions for summary judgment. [1] For the reasons set forth below, the Court will grant plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and deny defendant's cross-motion.

[*3] THE PARTIES

Mr. Honickman owns interests in and controls all voting rights of the Canada Dry Bottling Company of New York and the Pepsi Cola Bottling Company of New York, Inc., which are bottlers and distributors of soft drinks in New York State. AR 4. [2] DPSU is a manufacturer of soft drink concentrate, in particular of "Seven-Up," a leading lemon-lime flavored soft drink brand. Like other major concentrate manufacturers, DPSU does not distribute Seven-Up directly to consumers, but rather grants exclusive territorial marketing rights to bottlers to do so. New York Bottling was one such franchisee, with rights to bottle and distribute Seven-Up and other soft drinks in a portion of the lucrative New York metropolitan market before it ceased operations in October 1991. AR 6000. [3] DPSU and Mr. Honickman now want the latter to obtain the licensing rights that would enable him to bottle and distribute Seven-Up brand carbonated soft drinks ("CSDs") in territory formerly served by New York Bottling.

[*4] In the case at bar, plaintiffs seek judicial review of the FTC's decision to deny prior approval in part to Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of these rights. In an opinion letter dated November 16, 1992, the Commission determined, first, that this proposed acquisition was subject to a 1991 Consent Order settling other litigation between Mr. Honickman and the FTC and, second, that the acquisition would likely have an anticompetitive impact on the market for CSDs in parts of Manhattan, the Bronx, and Westchester Counties, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTC Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 45. AR 6044-6065. Accordingly, the FTC denied his request for prior approval with respect to those areas. [4] Plaintiffs contend that these decisions are arbitrary and capricious, and that the FTC's rejection of Mr. Honickman's application for prior approval also violates his due process rights and substantive antitrust law.

[*5] BACKGROUND

Mr. Honickman's previous efforts to acquire rights to distribute Seven-Up in the metropolitan New York area and his involvement with the FTC in that connection are recounted in detail in Judge Revercomb's Memorandum Opinion in DPSU I and need not be repeated at length here. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 764-68. It suffices to say that Mr. Honickman's acquisition of the franchise rights and assets of Seven-Up Brooklyn was the subject of an administrative complaint brought by the FTC on November 2, 1989. See id. at 765. [5] Subsequently, Mr. Honickman and the FTC entered into an "Agreement Containing Consent Order" ("the Settlement Agreement") in January,

---

1 DPSU I was heard and decided by the late Judge George H. Revercomb. The case at bar was also originally assigned to Judge Revercomb, who heard oral argument on the instant cross-motions on June 7, 1993. The case was reassigned to this Court after Judge Revercomb's death. In addition to reviewing the extensive Administrative Record ("AR") and the briefs, the Court has also reviewed the transcript of the June 7 hearing.

2 Citations to the administrative record in this case are given herein as "AR ."

3 Prior to its demise in October, 1991, New York Bottling's franchise territory covered Manhattan, the Bronx, and Westchester counties in New York, nine counties New Jersey, and parts of Connecticut. AR 6827. Apart from Seven-Up, New York Bottling also held distribution franchises for RC Cola (Royal Crown), Barq's, Perrier, Hawaiian Punch, and Crush (Cadbury-Schweppes). Id.; AR 5288.

4 The Commission approved Mr Honickman's application for the following New Jersey counties: Morris, Union, Somerset, Middlesex, Sussex, Hudson, Essex, Bergen, and Passaic. AR 6044.

5 Mr. Honickman first acquired Seven-Up Brooklyn in 1987. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 764. After the FTC commenced its investigation of that acquisition, but before it filed its administrative complaint, Mr. Honickman sold most of his interests in the company. See id. at 765.

1991, to settle this litigation. See id.; AR 1442-1462. The Settlement Agreement became final on July 25, 1991. See 798 F. Supp. at 765.

[*6] The Consent Order portion of the Settlement Agreement contained the following provision in Paragraph II:

> that for a period of ten (10) years after the date this order becomes final, respondents shall not, without prior approval of the Commission, acquire directly or indirectly all or any part of the stock of, share capital of, equity interest in, assets of or rights relating to any Bottling Operation in any county in the New York Metropolitan Area where at the time of such acquisition any Existing Honickman Bottling Operation distributes CSDs directly using company-owned or equity distributors to supermarkets.

AR 1444. The Consent Order defined the term "Bottling Operation" as follows:

> "Bottling Operation" means any business, person, or other entity that distributes and sells CSDs directly using company-owned or equity distribution to supermarkets pursuant to a franchise, license, distribution contract, or other similar agreement; provided, however, a Bottling Operation shall not include any business, person or other entity that distributes and sells CSDs only by warehouse delivery or through a beer distributor that does not hold a CSD franchise, license or similar distribution [*7] agreement.

AR 1443. Thus, according to this definition, Seven-Up Brooklyn -- the assets of which were at issue in DPSU I -- was a Bottling Operation and subject to the prior approval provisions of the Consent Order. Under the terms of Paragraph II of that Order, therefore, Mr. Honickman was required to make an application for and obtain the Commission's approval before he could proceed to reacquire Seven-Up Brooklyn's assets and franchise rights. The FTC's denial of that application constituted the agency action reviewed by the court in DPSU I. See 798 F. Supp. at 764, 765-66.

Having been in financial difficulty for some time, New York Bottling ceased operations -- including all bottling and selling of soft drinks -- in October 1991. AR 6000. [6] On October 24, 1991, Mr. Honickman filed with the FTC a "Request For a Declaration Or in the Alternative For Approval to Obtain Certain Assets of New York Seven-Up" ("the Application"). AR 6000-6009. The Application informed the Commission that New York Bottling had ceased its operations and that Mr. Honickman wished to acquire "certain licensing rights, currently held by New York Seven-Up Bottling Company." [*8] AR 6000. The Application also sought FTC permission for Honickman to distribute Seven-Up in the former New York Bottling territory on an interim basis. AR 6001. [7]

[*9] With regard to the acquisition of these licensing rights, Mr. Honickman's Application made three arguments which are reasserted in plaintiffs' instant summary judgment motion. First, Mr. Honickman argued that the prior approval provisions of the Consent Order did not apply to the proposed transaction, which involved the acquisition of licensing rights directly from DPSU rather than from New York Bottling. AR 6003. DPSU -- a concentrate manufacturer -- was and is not a Bottling Operation within the meaning of Paragraph II of the Consent Order. Moreover, because New York Bottling had ceased operations entirely, DPSU planned to terminate the license of New York Bottling, thereby extinguishing its legal right to bottle and distribute Seven-Up brand products. AR 6004. In other words, according to the Application, "the transaction does not involve an acquisition of the assets of a

---

[6] The precise date on which operations ceased is unclear from the record. Mr. Honickman's Application and various Commission memoranda give October 24, 1991 as the date. See AR 6000, 5164, 5288. An article from New York Newsday, attached to Mr. Honickman's Application, indicates that New York Bottling shut its doors on October 21, 1991. See AR 6010. A memorandum in aid of FTC consideration of Mr. Honickman's Application, submitted by plaintiffs and dated June 24, 1992, gives October 18, 1991 as the date on which New York Bottling "abruptly closed its doors." AR 6514. Virtually all of plaintiffs' filings in this case refer to the October 18 date. Whatever the precise date, however, it is undisputed that Mr. Honickman's Application was filed after New York Bottling ceased operations.

[7] On December 16, 1991, the Commission partially approved and partially denied Mr. Honickman's request for interim distribution, permitting interim distribution in the nine New Jersey counties, but not in the three New York counties. AR 6239-6246. Plaintiffs thereafter applied for emergency injunctive relief to compel the FTC to grant interim distribution in Manhattan, the Bronx, and Westchester County, which Judge Revercomb denied by Order dated December 19, 1991. See Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, Civ. A. No. 91-2712-GHR (D.D.C. Dec. 19, 1991).

'Bottling Operation,' as that term is defined in the Consent Order." Id. Thus, Mr. Honickman asked in the first instance for a declaration that the Consent Order's prior approval provision did not apply to "a vertical assignment of a new license from the franchisor, DPSU." Id.

Second, Mr. Honickman argued [*10] -- as he had in DPSU I -- that the proposed acquisition would be procompetitive because economies in distribution and marketing could be achieved by linking Seven-Up brands to a large scale distribution system. AR 6005; DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 765-66. Such economies of scale were necessary to compete effectively in a major metropolitan area such as New York. AR 6005-6006. Finally, Mr. Honickman argued -- again, as he had in DPSU I -- that, even if the proposed transaction were not considered procompetitive, it would nevertheless satisfy the requirements of the "failing company defense." AR 6006; DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 766. Indeed, as the Application pointed out, New York Bottling was not merely a failing firm, but a failed firm, with no prospects for reorganizing and with Mr. Honickman as the only available and viable purchaser. AR 6007-6008.

By the time Mr. Honickman submitted the Application to the FTC, he and DPSU were involved in the Brooklyn Seven-Up litigation before Judge Revercomb. Plaintiffs attempted to wrap the New York Bottling transaction together with the Brooklyn case by seeking leave to amend their [*11] complaint, which Judge Revercomb denied by Order dated January 13, 1992. See Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, Civ. A. No. 91-2712-GHR (D.D.C. Jan. 13, 1992). This same Order dismissed all New York Bottling claims from the Brooklyn case on ripeness grounds, in view of the fact that the FTC had yet to rule on Mr. Honickman's October 24, 1991 Application. Id. The Seven-Up Brooklyn and New York Bottling cases henceforth proceeded on separate tracks.

The Commission placed the Application on the public record for comment, as is required by Section 2.41(f) of its Rules of Practice. See 16 C.F.R. § 2.41(f); AR 6083. Numerous public comments were submitted, see AR 6083-6235, including many submissions from Mr. Honickman and DPSU. AR 6134-6149, 6321-6322, 6323-6348, 6351-6478, 6508-6509, 6510-6558B, 6571-6572, 6591-6598, 6601-6604, 6606-6607, 6613-6614, 7108-7115. Mr. Honickman and representatives from DPSU also met on numerous occasions with FTC staff, see AR 6672-6673, 6674-6675, 6676-6679, 6680-6681, 6724-6730, 6735-6736, 6748-6749, 6750-6752, 6756-6758, 6770-6773, 6775-6826, 7451-7452, 7453-7455, and individually with each FTC Commissioner. [*12] AR 6584-6590, 6653-6662, 6663-6666.

On November 16, 1992, the Commission issued its opinion letter granting in part and denying in part Mr. Honickman's request for prior approval. AR 6044-6065. This lawsuit followed.

ANALYSTS

The threshold issue, and the issue that most differentiates this case from DPSU I, is whether the prior approval provision of the Consent Order applies at all to the proposed transaction. As a preliminary matter, the FTC contends that this Court lacks jurisdiction to consider the question of Consent Order coverage. According to the Commission, the scope of the Consent Order would not be ripe for judicial review until the FTC actually sought to enforce it in a civil penalty action pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 45(1). In support of this contention, the FTC relies heavily on Flowers Industries, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, and two other cases. See 849 F.2d 551, 553 (11th Cir. 1988) (citing Floersheim v. Engman, 161 U.S. App. D.C. 30, 494 F.2d 949, 952 (D.C. Cir. 1973); see also Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Engman, 527 F.2d 1115 (2d Cir. 1975). [*13] Thus, says the Commission, Mr. Honickman would have to acquire New York Bottling's assets, await FTC enforcement of the Consent Order in a civil penalty action, and then assert non-coverage as a defense. Only then could a district court review the coverage issue. The implication of this argument is that the Court should assume that coverage is proper and proceed to analyze the merits of the FTC's decision. See Def.'s Mem. in Supp. of Summ. J. at 17-19.

This argument would have some force were the FTC's opinion letter of November 16, 1992 merely advisory or otherwise not a final agency action under the APA. See 5 U.S.C. § 704. A careful reading discloses that to have been the case in each of the cases relied upon by the Commission. In Flowers Industries, for example, what was at issue was an FTC letter approving the sale of two bakeries to a third party under the terms of a modified consent order. See 849 F.2d at 552-53. The letter in question was not self-implementing and the FTC had taken no action to enforce it at the time the plaintiff sought declaratory and injunctive relief. See id. at 552. [*14] Brown & Williamson Tobacco concerned the reviewability of FTC letters to tobacco companies stating that the Commissioners agreed with staff conclusions that the plaintiffs had violated consent orders pertaining to the Surgeon General's warning concerning the hazards of smoking and that the Commission intended to commence an action for civil penalties. See 527 F.2d at 1117. At the time the plaintiffs filed their complaints, however, the FTC had not commenced civil penalty actions against them. See id. at 1117-18. Similarly, Floersheim v. Engman involved an FTC determination that certain "skip-tracer" forms sold by the plaintiff to creditors and debt-collection agencies did not comply with the terms of a cease-and-desist order. See 494 F.2d at 951. Plaintiff thereupon filed suit seeking a declaration that the forms did comply and to stop the FTC from bringing a civil penalty action. See id. Each of these cases, in other words, involved an attempt to review an FTC determination concerning the scope of consent or cease-and-desist orders before the Commission undertook the agency [*15] action made reviewable under 15 U.S.C. § 45(1) and 5 U.S.C. § 704.

This case is different, because the FTC determination as to the scope of the Consent Order was made in conjunction with agency action that is most assuredly reviewable by this Court. That agency action was the FTC'S decision to deny Mr. Honickman's application for prior approval made pursuant to the terms of the Consent Order and the FTC's regulations. See AR 6044-6065; 15 U.S.C. § 2.41(f). HN1[] Prior approval provisions in FTC consent orders such as the one at bar have been held to give the Commission a veto over proposed acquisitions or divestitures. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 771 (citing United States v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 569 F. Supp. 1141, 1147 (D. Or. 1983); and West Texas Transmission L.P. v. Enron Corp., 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 68,424, at 60,333-34 (W.D. Tex. 1988), aff'd, 907 F.2d 1554 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. den'd, 111 S. Ct. 1105 (1991)). As both [*16] the district court and the court of appeals made clear in DPSU I, the FTC's exercise of that veto with respect to a prior approval application is an adjudication within the meaning of the APA, falling within "the residual category of 'informal adjudication,' to which apply the minimal procedural requirements of Section 555 of the APA," and as such is reviewable as final agency action. DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 773, 776, aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 991 F.2d at 862-63. A predicate for the lawful exercise of that veto power is that the prior approval provisions of the Consent Order govern the proposed transaction in the first place; if they do not govern, as plaintiffs persuasively argue, then the exercise of that veto in the denial of an application is "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

Having determined that consideration of the coverage issue is now proper, the Court will turn to the interpretation of the Consent Order with regard to Mr. Honickman's proposed transaction. Our court of appeals has provided [*17] the following succinct guidance on the interpretation of consent decrees:

> HN2[] "We read [a] Decree essentially as we would a contract. See United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 236-37, 43 L. Ed. 2d 148, 95 S. Ct. 926 . . . (1975); United States v. Western Elec. Co., 797 F.2d 1082, 1089 (D.C.Cir. 1986) . . ., cert. denied, 480 U.S. 922 . . . (1987). Thus, while the meaning of [a] Decree's terms 'must be discerned within its four corners,' United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673, 682, 29 L. Ed. 2d 256, 91 S. Ct. 1752 . . . (1971), our inquiry is guided by conventional 'aids to construction,' including 'the circumstances surrounding the formation of the consent order [and] any technical meaning words used may have had to the parties . . .' ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. at 238 United States v. Western Elec. Co., 894 F.2d at 1390.

United States v. Western Elec. Co., 283 U.S. App. D.C. 299, 900 F.2d 283, 293 (D.C. Cir. 1990). This principle -- that a consent order should be interpreted as a contract would be -- is particularly [*18] appropriate here, when the issue involves the interpretation of terms contained in the Consent Order itself, as opposed to procedural questions implicating the Consent Order but on which the Order itself is silent (as was the case in DPSU I). See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 769-70.

Plaintiffs argue that New York Bottling's cessation of all bottling and distribution activities prior to the filing of Mr. Honickman's Application with the FTC had two practical consequences that rendered the Consent Order's prior approval clause inapplicable. First, they contend that New York Bottling's shut-down in October, 1991 meant that it was no longer a "Bottling Operation" as defined in the Consent Order, because that definition limits the term "Bottling Operation" only to a "business, person, or other entity" that presently distributes and sells CSDs directly to supermarkets. AR 6003-6004. The term, plaintiffs argue, does not apply to entities that formerly distributed CSDs but ceased doing so prior to Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of licensing rights. AR 6584, 6592, 6593-6594, 6654-6655. Moreover, they contend, "by ceasing to distribute soft drinks, New [*19] York [Bottling] breached its license agreements to distribute 7-Up and other beverages." AR 6654-6655. The Seven-Up licenses were then suspended by DPSU pursuant to a Termination Agreement dated November 9, 1991, and effectively terminated by the bankruptcy court on November 6, 1991. AR 6274; Pls.' Mem. at 17 n.14. [8] Thus, although New York Bottling's Seven-Up license may have remained "vested" in the defunct firm during the pendency of Mr. Honickman's Application, the suspension of the licenses effectively terminated New York Bottling's ability legally to bottle and distribute Seven-Up. See Pls.' Op. at 11. In short, not only had New York Bottling ceased to be a Bottling Operation, it "had" nothing for Mr. Honickman to acquire.

Second, and following from the preceding analysis, plaintiffs contend [*20] that Mr. Honickman sought to acquire the Seven-Up licenses not from New York Bottling but directly from DPSU, the parent company. Because DPSU does not sell its products to supermarkets, it is not a Bottling Operation within the meaning of the Consent Order. They contend, moreover, that acquisition of licensing rights directly from the franchisor and owner of the Seven-Up trademark is a "vertical" transaction that is beyond the scope of the Consent Order, which applies only to "horizontal" transactions, or acquisitions by Mr. Honickman of the rights or assets of other bottlers. For these reasons, plaintiffs' argue, the Consent Order's prior approval clause simply does not apply to the direct acquisition of rights by vertical assignment.

Although the question is a close one, the Court on balance finds plaintiffs' arguments to be persuasive for the following reasons. First, the FTC's contentions as to the breadth of the "directly or indirectly . . . rights relating to" language in Paragraph II of the Consent Order are undermined by other language in the Order and by extrinsic evidence from the Order's negotiating history. While it may be true the "related to" language in Paragraph II [*21] is not limited by a verb with either a present or past tense -- as in "rights that are related to" or "rights that were related to" -- the term "Bottling Operation," which modifies the references to assets or rights, is unambiguously defined as an entity that presently distributes and sells CSDs to supermarkets, and does not include entities that formerly did so. The negotiating history of the Consent Order clearly shows, moreover, that FTC staff first proposed, and Mr. Honickman rejected, language requiring prior approval for the acquisition of "assets located in the New York metropolitan area used in or previously used in (and still suitable for use in) the soft drink products business." AR 7690-7691 (emphasis added). The language finally agreed to by Mr. Honickman and the FTC limited prior approval to the acquisition of assets or rights related to a Bottling Operation, which is defined solely in the present tense as "any business, person, or other entity that distributes and sells CSDs directly using company-owned or equity distribution to supermarkets pursuant to a franchise, license, distribution contract, or other similar agreement." AR 11 (emphasis added). To [*22] accept the FTC's interpretation of "rights related to," in other words, would not only contravene the plain meaning of the Consent Order but also expand that phrase to encompass meanings clearly rejected by the parties during negotiations.

The record also clearly shows that, prior to the Commission's final acceptance of the Consent Order, FTC staff members who had participated in negotiations with Mr. Honickman believed that the final language of Paragraph II did not apply to the vertical assignment of licensing rights directly from DPSU and so advised the Commission. AR 1413, 1418, 1427. Indeed, the Commission was advised by the Assistant Director of the Bureau of Competition that when FTC staff had "suggested to Honickman that we cover the vertical franchise award explicitly, he turned us down." AR 1427. FTC staff appear to have changed their view of the expansive application of the prior approval provision only after Mr. Honickman submitted the Application on October 24, 1991. AR 6892 (memorandum to the Commission from Bureau of Competition staff, dated June 15, 1992, interpreting the "rights related to" language to cover the proposed transaction). While the views of FTC staff [*23] do not necessarily reflect the understanding of

---

[8] The record shows that New York Bottling's licenses to distribute Barq's and Crush brand soft drinks were terminated and reverted to their respective franchisors when New York Bottling closed its doors. AR 6898, 6900.

Commission members themselves, the Court believes that the opinions expressed in staff memoranda prior to final acceptance of the Consent Order are probative of the parties' intent as regards the coverage issue at the time the Order was negotiated.

Finally, as was explained by Judge Revercomb in his Memorandum Opinion in DPSU I and as the FTC argued in that case, the parties expressly agreed that the Commission's 1989 administrative complaint against Mr. Honickman could be used to construe the terms of the Consent Order. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 772. Examination of that complaint shows that it was premised on the theory that Mr. Honickman's acquisition of the assets of another Bottling Operation (Seven-Up Brooklyn) would likely reduce competition by, among other things, eliminating direct competition from a competitor. AR 6 (P 22). The facts alleged in that complaint describe potential harm to competition from horizontal transactions. AR 0-9 (PP 2-16, 21, 22). As such, it reinforces the impression given by the staff memoranda discussed above that the Consent Order as negotiated and agreed to by the [*24] parties gave the FTC a veto over future Honickman acquisitions of the assets or rights of other bottlers, such as those of Seven-Up Brooklyn, but not over vertical acquisitions of rights directly from concentrate manufacturers. The Court is convinced in this case that the more expansive interpretation of the Consent Order urged by the FTC is thus inconsistent with record evidence of the intentions of the parties and "'the circumstances surrounding the formation of the consent order [and] any technical meaning words used may have had to the parties . . .'" United States v. Western Elec. Co., 900 F.2d at 293 (quoting ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. at 238).

The Court concludes, therefore, that Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition from DPSU of a license to bottle, distribute and sell Seven-Up in parts of the territory formerly covered by the now defunct New York Bottling Company is not subject to the Consent Order he entered into with the FTC in 1991. It follows that the Commission's decision to the contrary, and its denial of prior approval of the transaction necessarily based on that decision, are arbitrary and capricious [*25] under the APA. Because the coverage question is dispositive, it is unnecessary to address the parties' arguments regarding the substantive merits of the FTC's decision or the procedures it employed in reviewing Mr. Honickman's Application.

Accordingly, the Court will this day enter an Order granting plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment, denying defendant FTC's motion for summary judgment, declaring that Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of a new soft drink license from DPSU is not a transaction covered by or subject to the prior approval provision of the 1991 Consent Order, and enjoining the FTC from taking a position to the contrary. This Order, of course, is strictly limited to the question of Consent Order coverage and in no way affects any other actions that the FTC may deem appropriate in the lawful exercise of its discretion vis-a-vis the proposed transaction or the soft drink market in metropolitan New York.

September 30, 1993,

DATE

JUNE L. GREEN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion issued this day, it is ORDERED, that plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED; and, it is

FURTHER ORDERED, that [*26] defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment is DENIED; and, it is FURTHER ORDERED, that the proposed acquisition by plaintiff Harold A. Honickman of a new license to bottle, distribute and sell Seven-Up brand carbonated soft drinks in Manhattan, the Bronx and Westchester Counties from plaintiff Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc. is declared not to be subject to the prior approval provision contained in the 1991 Consent Order otherwise regulating Mr. Honickman's acquisition of soft drink bottling assets in the metropolitan New York market; and, it is FURTHER ORDERED, that defendant Federal Trade Commission is herein permanently enjoined from enforcing the Consent Order's prior approval provision with regard to plaintiff Harold A. Honickman's proposed acquisition of such a license directly from Dr. Pepper/Seven Companies, Inc.

Sept 30, 1993

DATE

JUNE L. GREEN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

KLM Royal Dutch Airlines v. Amber Air Int'l, Ltd.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 30, 1993, Decided ; October 1, 1993, Docketed

No. 89 C 4953

Reporter
1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13878 *; 1993 WL 390371

KLM ROYAL DUTCH AIRLINES, a Dutch Corporation, Plaintiff and Counter-defendant v. AMBER AIR INTERNATIONAL, LTD., an Illinois Corporation, Defendant, Counter-plaintiff, and Third party plaintiff, v. PRI-POSTE RESTANT INTERNATIONAL, Ltd., et al., Third Party Defendants.

Core Terms

remail, monopolize, reconsideration motion, Memorandum, conspiracy, pricing, Postal

Judges: [*1] GUZMAN

Opinion by: RONALD A. GUZMAN

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

BACKGROUND FACTS

KLM Royal Dutch Airlines ("KLM") filed suit against Amber Air International, Ltd. (Amber Air) in March of 1989, seeking payment from Amber Air for postage, handling and other charges related to KLM's provision of certain remail services to Amber Air in Chicago, as well as divisions of Amber Air located in Boston and Los Angeles.

In response to KLM's complaint, Amber filed its initial counterclaim against KLM on August 8, 1989, alleging numerous violations of Federal and State of Illinois Antitrust laws. Count I of the Second Amended Counterclaim charges KLM with engaging in a contract combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. Specifically, Amber charged KLM with engaging in a predatory pricing conspiracy with remail competitors of Amber for the purpose of excluding Amber as a competitor in the Midwest remail market. In Count II, Amber alleges that KLM actually monopolized the Midwest remail market; in Count III KLM is alleged to have attempted to monopolize this same market and in Count IV, KLM is alleged to have entered into an unlawful contract, combination or conspiracy to maintain this [*2] alleged monopoly. Counts V-VII are based upon claimed violations of the Illinois antitrust laws.

On October 2, 1992, this Court granted KLM's motion for summary judgment on Counts I-VII of Amber Air's Second Amended Complaint. Amber Air now moves the court to reconsider its October 2, 1992 Memorandum Opinion and Order.

DISCUSSION

Motions for reconsideration are not a matter of routine practice in this jurisdiction. Settino v. City of Chicago, 642 F. Supp. 755, 759 (N.D.Ill. 1986). Nor are they authorized under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh v. Continental Ill. Corp., 116 F.R.D. 252, 253 (N.D. Ill. 1987). However, this district has consistently held that such motions are appropriate under rare circumstances such as "a controlling or significant change in the law or facts since the submissions of the issue to the Court. Quaker Alloy Casting Co. v. Gulfco Indus. Inc., 123 F.R.D. 282, 288 (N.D.Ill. 1988). A motion to reconsider may also be appropriate where "the Court has patently misunderstood a party, or has made a decision outside the [*3] adversarial issues presented to the Court by the parties, or has made an error not of reasoning, but of apprehension." Above the Belt, Inc. v. Mel Bohannan Roofing, Inc., 99 F.R.D. at 101. In short, a motion to reconsider will not be granted where "counsel's memorandum has simply rehashed the same arguments advanced in the original briefing and found inadequate by the Court. " Settino, 642 F. Supp. at 760.

Amber insists that the Court has misidentified the relevant product market by stating that the market is "the retail market for providers/consumers of corporate and printed matter international remail services." Amber still claims that the correct market is the "wholesale market".

As previously stated it is undisputed that the market Amber sought access to was the retail market rather than the wholesale market, and the case law consistently provides that it is not error to define the relevant market as the market to which access was sought. See e.g. Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 369, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973); City of Mishawaka v. American Electric Power Co., 465 F. Supp. 1320, 1325-26 (N.D. Ind. 1979), [*4] aff'd in relevant part, 616 F.2d 976 (7th Cir. 1980) cert. denied 449 U.S. 1096, rehearing denied by 450 U.S. 960 (1981) and Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101 (7th Cir. 1984) cert. denied 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758 (1985). (In the all of the above cases the relevant market was that to which access had allegedly been foreclosed by the challenged conduct, not the market for similar business opportunities.) Further, even if this court were to adopt Amber's argument that the relevant market was the wholesale market Amber is still not capable of overcoming KLM's Motion for Summary Judgment on the Section 2 claim. As previously concluded on pages 34-36 of the Memorandum Opinion consumers who needed to ship mail internationally had the option of dealing directly with the United States Postal Service, KLM's PDS Service, TNT (from mid 1985 forward) or using consolidators such as Amber, Advance Presort Service or Telerad. If the consumer was a consolidator it would have the option of using KLM's PDS Service, the United States Postal [*5] Service, TNT or independent airlines, i.e. United Airlines and placing the product in the hands of an independent sort house for further handling and dissemination to the appropriate postal authorities.

The fact that KLM had an existing relationship with Dutch PTT and the Dutch Customs Department for the clearing of magazines and remail does not automatically as a matter of law establish that KLM provided an essential service for the period of January of 1984 through the third quarter of 1985. American Academic Suppliers v. Beckley-Cardy, 922 F.2d 1317, 1320 (7th Cir. 1991). As both parties agree the international remail market was a completely new market due to the fact that the United States had relaxed its definition of what constituted remail. As soon as this occurred companies both domestically and intentionally attempted to establish market share. Thus, the true barrier that initially restricted access was the United States Postal Authority and its regulations. To be sure, it appears that initially KLM enjoyed a substantial market share in 1984 and early 1985 but this does not as a matter of law establish that KLM had a monopoly on the international [*6] remail market. As KLM has argued "to have a monopoly and to monopolize are two separate things. The offense of monopolization is the acquisition of monopoly by improper methods". American Suppliers v. Beckley-Cardy, 922 F.2d 1317, 1320 (7th Cir. 1990).

Further, it is also undisputed that others such as Advance Presort, Curtis, Hassett, Yellow Stone, DHL and TNT easily gained access and market share thus bolstering this conclusion that KLM was not engaging in monopolistic type activity. In fact according to Amber's own statistics on page two of its Memorandum In Support of its Motion to Reconsider we see that in one year's time TNT had earned revenues which equalled 56% of the market. Even if, for the sake of reconsideration Amber's is correct that this court erred when it concluded that competitors of KLM could use independent airlines and sort houses Amber has still failed to raise a genuine issue of fact because they clearly neglect the substantial share of the market that the United States Postal Service possessed. Likewise, Amber's assertion that the testimony of James Reckert confirms its theory that there were no competitive options available to [*7] KLM's wholesale services in the midwest geographic market is not supported by the record. Mr. Reckert's own testimony makes clear that he had minimal knowledge of the market outside the east coast. Further, the deposition testimony of Irv Rosenberg reflects that Aeromail was not using KLM's overseas sorting facility subsequent to late 1984, although it did use KLM to carry the mail overseas. Finally, as explained in this Court's opinion at page 26, the essential facility cases, "also seems to contemplate a second condition that must be satisfied to be considered essential in addition to the power to eliminate competition. The power to eliminate competition must not be momentary, but must be at least relatively permanent." MCI Communications Co. v. AT&T, 708 F 2d 1081, 1133 (7th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 934 (1987). By Amber's own admission competitors were quickly entering the market and gaining market share and the practice complained of took place for the period January of 1984 through the third quarter of 1985. This certainly cannot be considered monopolistic behavior of a relatively permanent nature. Thus, [*8] it is impossible to conclude that KLM was a monopolist or was attempting to engage in monopolistic type activity. Therefore, Amber has presented no new facts or law which would provide a basis for reconsideration as to KLM's Motion for Summary Judgment on Counts, II, III & IV.

As to Amber's Section 1 predatory price conspiracy claim for the period of 1987 to 1989, Amber complains that the court in reaching it conclusion inadvertently mis-identified KLM's expert as Amber's. Amber contends that the court erred in concluding that the predatory pricing took place only for three months rather than a year and a quarter. Amber points out that Professor Tollison based his opinion on undisputed evidence comprised of a 100% sample of KLM's own revenues/expenses covering fifteen months, in two periods, the first being the six month from April to September 1988 and the second month being the six months from January to June of 1989. Amber claims that these statistics are sufficient under any Section 1 standard.

As indicated in this Court's opinion today predatory pricing is generally analyzed under the antitrust laws as illegal monopolization or an attempt to monopolize under Section 2 of the Sherman [*9] Act, or sometimes as a violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act. See Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law, § 6.7, page 172 (2d Ed. 1985) and this court is confused as to why Amber insists that this is a Section 1 claim. In fact, as KLM points out Amber has failed to cite any law supporting its position that the per se Section 1 standard is the correct standard to be applied. In general, the per se offense will apply when "the practice facially appears to be the one that would always tend to restrict competition and decrease output . . ." Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 ; see also National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 104, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984) ("Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anti-competitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct.") Obviously, the facts of this case certainly do not support the standard that the alleged practice KLM engaged in appears to be one that would always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. As KLM has argued there [*10] is no evidence in the record that there was an agreement between KLM and Interex to set retail prices. Further, a pricing conspiracy does not make sense in light of the overall development of the market. In fact by October, 1987, TNT, DHL and IPA and ISAL all substantially exceeded the volume of the remail product provided by KLM and/or Interex in the midwest market. Thus, the behavior complained of on KLM's part could not be concluded to be one that should be analyzed under a per se standard because it is obviously not behavior that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition. Therefore, even if the court did mis-identify Amber's expert this was solely with respect to the Section 1 per se standard which this court clearly concluded was not the correct standard for purposes of this case. Further this court is not going to reanalyze this case from an illegal tying perspective because this theory was not raised during the summary judgment stage. Thus, summary judgment was appropriate as to Counts I and V.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Amber's Motion to Reconsider is denied.

Respectfully submitted,

RONALD A. GUZMAN

United States Magistrate Judge

[*11] DATE: SEPTEMBER 30, 1993

GMC v. N.Y. State Elec. & Gas Corp.

United States District Court for the Western District of New York

October 1, 1993, Decided ; October 1, 1993, Filed

91-CV-716A

Reporter
1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21444 *

GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION, Plaintiff, vs. NEW YORK STATE ELECTRIC AND GAS CORPORATION, Defendant, and NEW YORK POWER AUTHORITY, Nominal Defendant.

Subsequent History: Adopted by, Summary judgment granted by, Complaint dismissed at GMC v. N.Y. State Elec. & Gas Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21656 (W.D.N.Y., July 11, 1994)

Disposition: Magistrate recommended that defendant's motion for summary judgment dismissing complaint be granted.

Core Terms

electricity, load, splitter, antitrust, customers, argues, cogeneration, Resale, commodity, contracts, metering, anticompetitive, parties, immune, Recommendation, allotment, billing, state policy, Donnelly Act, monopolization, transmission, industrial, alleges, utilize, anti trust law, Clayton Act, supervision, state action, territory, tied product

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A defendant will succeed on a motion to dismiss, only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Summary judgment is appropriate where there are no issues of material fact in dispute, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The non-moving party must demonstrate to the court the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. In fact, the non-moving party must come forward with enough evidence to support a jury verdict, and the motion will not be defeated merely on the basis of conjecture or surmise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Private parties may be immune from antitrust attack for anti-competitive actions that result from state action where a challenged restraint is clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy and the state supervises actively any private anticompetitive conduct.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN7[] Electric Power Industry, State Regulation

See N.Y. Pub. Auth. Law § 1005(13).

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN8[] Electric Power Industry, State Regulation

See N.Y. Pub. Auth. Law § 1009.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN9[] Utility Companies, Rates

See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 16A, § 455.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN10[] Utility Companies, Rates

See N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 16A, § 455.2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN11[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The law does not require that the state compel the complained-of conduct to immunize it from antitrust attack under the state action doctrine. The focal point is the source of the anticompetitive policy, rather than whether the challenged conduct was compelled. Moreover, a state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct, may be "clearly articulated." Thus, compulsion is not a prerequisite to a finding of state action immunity. It is clear that anticompetitive conduct permitted, but not required, by the state can be immune from antitrust attack.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

To prove the offense of monopolization under §2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must prove: the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and … the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen or historic accident. A relevant market must comprise both a product and geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

In the context of claims of monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, courts frequently employ the concept of cross elasticity of demand between products to assess the proper market for consideration. At base this idea asks the question how easy is it to find a substitute in the event there is a price rise in one product. It is a function of one product's ability to substitute, and thus fill the purpose, of another.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > General Overview

HN14[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To succeed on a claim of attempted monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must prove: (1) anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct.; (2) specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a "dangerous probability" that the attempt would have succeeded.

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Electricity Transmission

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN15[] Pipelines & Transportation, Electricity Transmission

Electricity is a commodity for the purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act. The antitrust laws should not be given a restrictive interpretation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN16[] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different, or tied, product. A plaintiff must prove five specific elements: first, a tying and a tied product; second, evidence of actual coercion by the seller that in fact forced the buyer to accept the tied product; third, sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; fourth, anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and fifth, a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied product market. There can be no tying arrangement unless two separate product markets have been linked.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Claims under the Donnelly Act and the Sherman Act are analyzed similarly. It is apparent that New York's Donnelly Act proscribes the same kind of conduct prohibited by the federal Sherman Act, and it has been so held.

Counsel: [*1] For General Motors Corporation, PLAINTIFF: Algird F White, Jr. Esq, Couch, White, Brenner, Howard & Feigenbaum, Albany, NY USA. Kevin A Ricotta, Esq, Connors & Vilardo, Buffalo, NY USA.

For New York State Electric & Gas Corp, DEFENDANT: John D Draghi, Esq, Huber, Lawrence & Abell, New York, NY USA. Morgan Jones, Esq, Earl, Delange, May, Jones & Ottaviano, Lockport, NY USA.

For The Power Authority of the State of New York, DEFENDANT: Jacqueline J Kmiotek, Esq, Charles M Pratt New York Power Authority, New York, NY USA. Sharon M Porcellio, Esq, Lippes, Silverstein, Mathias & Wexler, Buffalo, NY USA.

Judges: Edmund F. Maxwell, United States Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: Edmund F. Maxwell

Opinion

REPORT and RECOMMENDATION

This matter was referred to the undersigned by the Hon. Richard J. Arcara to hear and report on all dispositive motions pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 636(b). Presently before me is the motion to dismiss by defendant New York State Electric and Gas, or in the alternative, to grant summary judgment. [1]

[*2] BACKGROUND AND FACTS

The plaintiff, General Motors ("GM"), has filed this complaint alleging that the defendant New York State Electric and Gas ("NYSEG") has violated the antitrust laws of the United States and the State of New York. It also claims breach of a 1989 Expansion Power Agreement signed by all three parties to this action.

NYSEG is a New York corporation which transmits and receives electric power to and from other utilities in New York State, other states and from Canada. Pursuant to New York State statute, NYSEG provides retail electric service to all applicants in its exclusive franchise area. (Complaint, P4). In this capacity, the New York State Public Service Commission supervises the operations of NYSEG.

---

[1] The New York Power Authority has been named a defendant in this action and has filed an answer. Dismissal of the action as against NYSEG would result in the dismissal against NYPA. NYPA has taken no action in this lawsuit and no position on this motion.

The New York Power Authority (NYPA) is a public benefit corporation which generates hydroelectric power at its Niagara Power Project in Niagara Falls, New York. Under New York Public Authorities Law § 1005(13), NYPA is authorized to provide inexpensive hydroelectric power to industrial customers in the Niagara Falls region. This power is referred to as "Expansion Power". Since 1961 NYPA has entered into contracts with NYSEG [*3] in which NYPA has agreed to supply expansion power to eligible industrial customers utilizing the transmission facilities owned by NYSEG. [2] NYSEG resells that expansion power to those eligible industrial customers at a rate lower than NYSEG is able to charge other customers. In 1961, NYSEG began providing NYPA expansion power to GM's Lockport facility.

[*4] GM owns and operates the Harrison Radiator Division in Lockport, New York. This manufacturing plant is located in NYSEG's exclusive franchise territory. As indicated above, GM began receiving an allotment of expansion power in 1961, and receives that cheaper power through NYSEG's transmission lines. From 1961 to 1989, the arrangement for the delivery of the expansion power between NYPA, NYSEG and GM was governed by contracts colloquially known as the "old wheeling agreements". Complaint, P16. [3]

When GM first became eligible for the expansion power in 1961, it was allotted by contract 10,000 kilowatts of power. In 1973 its allocation was increased to 14,300 kilowatts of power.

Apparently, because of the difficulty in measuring exactly where the expansion power was destined and used at GM's Lockport facility, NYPA, NYSEG and GM agreed, in an Expansion Power Billing Arrangement [*5] (Separate Metering Agreement) in January 1973, to utilize a surrogate for the measurement of expansion power. Thus:

> The Power Authority of the State of New York has made available to (NYSEG) 14,300 kilowatts of Expansion power to be resold to Harrison Radiator Division, General Motors Corporation. (NYSEG) has elected to bill (GM) for such power on the basis of separate metering. Since separate metering of all such Expansion Power would be impracticable, it is agreed that for billing purposes only, such loads will be deemed to be equal to the following loads…

(Exhibit 2 to Affidavit I of Dennis Wickham, submitted in support of Defendant's Motion for Dismissal, or for Summary Judgment, Docket Entry 6). [4] The agreement specified certain electrical breakers that would act as the de facto measure of expansion power. This agreement remained in effect at least until 1989, when the parties entered into further agreements governing the sale, transmission and billing of the Expansion power.

[*6] In February 1989, NYPA and NYSEG entered into a Contract for Sale and Resale of Expansion Power (Resale Agreement) [5] controlling the wheeling of expansion power to eligible industries in NYSEG's exclusive franchise territory. (Complaint, P21-A). The contract read:

---

[2] NYPA generates electric power in Niagara Falls. New York Public Authorities Law § 1005(13) authorizes NYPA to allocate a portion of that power to "businesses within the state located within thirty miles of the Niagara project switchyard…" Eligibility for the "expansion power" is based in part, through contracts negotiated by NYPA, on the businesses consuming expansion power to maintain certain levels of employment. See, e.g., Expansion Power Allocation and Service Agreement, Schedule B, Appendix A, executed by GM, NYSEG and NYPA, wherein GM agreed to a base employment level of 8000. (Attached to complaint as Exhibit B). § 1005(13)(a) spells out thirteen separate criteria governing eligibility for expansion power

§ 1005(13) also provides for the allocation by NYPA of expansion power for "Revitalization". § 1005(13)(b) sets forth five separate criteria. Basically, such cheap power is intended to keep businesses operating that would otherwise close or curtail operations.

[3] For convenience, I have attached an appendix listing each contract between the parties and a brief description of its subject matter.

[4] Mr. Wickham also submitted a further affidavit, Docket Entry 15. The first Wickham affidavit will be referred to as Wickham I, the second Wickham affidavit will be referred to as Wickham II.

> Metering. Where practical Expansion Power shall be separately metered for each Expansion Power Customer. Where such separate metering is not practical, the methodology to determine the Expansion Power portion of the total measured demand and energy through one set of meters will be as set forth in Service Tariff No. 46, Exhibit 1, Schedule B. Such a procedure shall not preclude the Expansion Power Customer from requesting separate metering either initially or subsequently.

(Complaint, Exhibit A, p. 12). That Service tariff is referred to by all the parties as the "load splitter". The load splitter sets forth one method for billing the "Expansion Power Customer" (GM) based on a ratio of its expansion power allocation and its overall electricity usage. The Resale agreement also provided that:

> The (New York Power) Authority shall not allocate Expansion Power to displace existing electric load of the [*7] Company (NYSEG) unless (i) the allocation of Expansion Power is made for revitalization purposes in accordance with the criteria set forth in subdivision 13 of Section 1005 of the Public Authority's (sic) Law, or (ii) the Company consents in writing to such allocation. The term "existing electric load" in the preceding sentence shall mean the average of the peak demands of the Company's customer, recorded during the twelve (12) months preceding a proposed allocation to such customer…

(Id. p. 5).

In April 1989, GM, NYPA, and NYSEG entered into a contract governing the availability of expansion power to GM. This "Expansion Power Allocation and Service Agreement" provided:

> This agreement supersedes all previous contracts providing for, among other things, resale of Expansion Power by the Company (NYSEG) to the Customer (GM), [*8] but only to the extent such contracts concern Expansion Power service and including but not limited to the contract(s) dated January 1, 1973. [6]

(Complaint, Exhibit B, p. 6). The Expansion Power Agreement expressly adopted and incorporated the Resale Agreement entered into by NYPA and NYSEG, including the agreement between NYPA and NYSEG regarding metering. (Complaint, P25; Complaint, Exhibit B, Schedule A). The contract also provided that:

> The amount of firm power which the customer (GM) requests, which the Authority (NYPA) agrees to make available to the Company (NYSEG) at (NYPA)'s Niagara Project switchyard and which (NYSEG) agrees to accept for resale to (GM) pursuant to the Resale Agreement is 14,300 kilowatts.

(Complaint, P22; Complaint, Exhibit B, Article 1.1).

[*9] In the interim, GM has constructed a cogeneration qualifying facility (QF), to supplant its previous demand for NYSEG power. This facility, which was scheduled to begin operation in October 1992, would produce power cheaper than NYSEG power, but more expensive than NYPA Expansion power. (Complaint, P31). According to GM, after this cogeneration facility begins operation, all of GM's demand for electricity would be satisfied by the expansion power and the cogeneration facility. Only in the event of some unspecified emergency would GM purchase NYSEG power. (Complaint, P32).

ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES

GM filed this complaint alleging various antitrust violations: the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7; the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 12-14, 21-22and 27; and, New York State's antitrust law, the Donnelly Act, New York General Business Law § 340. GM also alleged a breach of the 1989 Expansion Power Agreement.

GM alleges first that NYSEG's use of the above-described load splitter forecloses competition in the market of providing electricity to industrial customers in NYSEG franchise territory, [*10] in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. [7] GM's theory is twofold. First, the use of the load splitter forces GM to purchase a combination of

---

[5] The Agreement has a front page date of December 13, 1988, but was signed February 22, 1989 after being approved by Governor Mario M. Cuomo. See discussion at p. 16, infra.

[6] There is some dispute between the parties as to what contract this language supersedes. GM argues that it supersedes the Separate Metering Agreement, dated January 17, 1973. NYSEG argues that the Separate Metering Agreement was not superseded.

NYPA and NYSEG power such that GM is not able to take its full allotment of expansion power under the Resale and Expansion Power Agreements. This, GM alleges, forecloses NYPA from competing with NYSEG, and has harmed GM. Second, NYSEG's actions foreclose competition from GM's cogeneration facility, and thus monopolize in the same market. GM claims that because the relative cost of the cogeneration power is less than the average cost of NYSEG and NYPA power billed through the load splitter, GM will "purchase" all its requirements from the cogeneration facility. And, since NYSEG is required by law to purchase excess energy generated by facilities such as GM's cogeneration facility, as GM will then use only cogeneration power, leaving less for resale to NYSEG, NYSEG forecloses competition by GM. Under the same factual allegations, GM alleges that NYSEG is attempting to monopolize the same market, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. And, regarding both Sherman Act claims, GM asserts that NYSEG has the market power to enforce or [*11] achieve its monopoly.

Third, GM alleges that NYSEG's installation of the load splitter illegally ties the sale of two products, thereby violating § 3 of the Clayton Antitrust Act. [8] Specifically, GM alleges that the use of the load splitter compels GM to purchase NYSEG power as a condition of obtaining the less expensive expansion power. In GM's view, NYSEG system power and NYPA Expansion power are distinct commodities. GM alleges that these actions illegally tie the sale of one to the purchase of the other, in violation of the Clayton Act.

[*12] Fourth, GM argues that all of the facts alleged constitute a violation of New York's Antitrust law, the Donnelly Act. [9]

Lastly, GM argues that NYSEG's conduct violates the 1989 Expansion [*13] Power Agreement. GM thus asserts a pendent breach of contract claim.

In response, NYSEG filed a motion to dismiss the complaint, or in the alternative, for summary judgment. First, NYSEG argues that all that it has done in utilizing the load splitter is take lawful action pursuant to a properly negotiated and presently enforceable contract. NYSEG recognizes that the 1989 Expansion Power Agreement between the GM, NYPA and NYSEG contains language that supersedes all previous agreements. See discussion

---

[7] § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, set out at 15 U.S.C. § 2 reads as follows:

> HN1[] Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony…

[8] § 3 of the Clayton Antitrust Act is set out at 15 U.S.C. § 14, and reads, in part, as follows:

> HN2[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to … make a sale or contract for sale of … commodities … on the condition, agreement or understanding that the … purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the … commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

[9] The Donnelly Act is set forth at New York General Business Law § 340 and reads as follows:

> 1. HN3[] Every contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby
>
> A monopoly in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state, is or may be established or maintained, or whereby
>
> Competition or the free exercise of any activity in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or in the furnishing of any service in this state is or may be restrained or whereby
>
> For the purpose or maintaining any such monopoly or unlawfully interfering with the free exercise of any activity in the conduct of any business, trade or commerce or the furnishing of any service is or may be restrained, is hereby declared to be against the public policy, illegal and void.

at p. 5, supra. But, NYSEG argues, the 1989 agreement did not supersede the Separate Metering Agreement because the 1989 agreement did not alter GM's allotment of NYPA power.

It claims that any dispute between the parties arose because each interprets the relevant contracts differently, and this case should be, if anything, an action for breach of contract. It contends that if GM has any problem with NYSEG's actions, it is one actionable under the contracts, but not cognizable in an antitrust action.

Moreover, NYSEG argues, the contracts are the result of state action, and thus immune from attack under the antitrust laws. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). [*14] The defendant has also claimed that its actions are protected by the Noerr - Pennington doctrine, immunizing it from antitrust attack because NYSEG was petitioning the government for relief and advantage. [10]

NYSEG argues that even if NYSEG's conduct was not protected by the government action defense, GM has failed to allege a relevant geographic and product market as required under the Sherman Antitrust Act. And, as an additional line of defense to the Sherman Act claims, NYSEG asserts that GM has failed to allege injuries of any type actionable [*15] under antitrust law.

NYSEG argues that GM's Clayton Act claim alleging an illegal tying of two products, should be dismissed. It claims initially that electricity is not a commodity within the meaning of § 3 of the Clayton Act. See footnote 8, supra. Even if it were a commodity, NYSEG claims it is not tying two separate products or commodities. NYSEG argues that it is impossible to be liable under antitrust law for tying the sale of electricity to the sale of electricity. Additionally, it contends that GM has not alleged a sufficient amount or type of commerce affected to be cognizable under the Clayton Act.

NYSEG argues that GM's Donnelly Act claim should be dismissed because Donnelly Act claims are analyzed similarly to Sherman Act claims. Once the Sherman Act claims are dismissed, the Donnelly Act claim should likewise follow. And, even if the Court were to proceed on the Donnelly Act claims, it should be dismissed on its own because the Donnelly Act requires a conspiracy. GM has alleged only unilateral conduct.

Finally, NYSEG argues generally that it has not breached the relevant contracts, and thus the Court should dismiss GM's final claim for relief.

Simply stated, GM claims [*16] that NYSEG's application of the load-splitter violates § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act in that it is a monopolization and attempted monopolization of the generation and transmission of electricity in NYSEG's franchise territory. The same events allegedly constitute an unlawful tie-in of two separate products or commodities in violation of § 3 of the Clayton Antitrust Act. Again, the same events constitute an antitrust violation of New York's Antitrust law, the Donnelly Act. Finally, GM argues that NYSEG violated various contracts to which both are a party. For antitrust purposes, then, GM complains only of the application of the load splitter.

DISCUSSION

HN4[] A defendant will succeed on a motion to dismiss, "only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief". Citibank, N.A. v. K-H Corp., 968 F.2d 1489, 1494 (2nd Cir. 1992), citing, Austern v. Chicago Bd. Options Exch., Inc., 898 F.2d 882, 885 (2nd Cir. 1990).

HN5[] Summary judgment is appropriate where there are no issues of material fact in dispute, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as [*17] a matter of law. See Trans Sport, Inc. v. Starter Sportswear, Inc., 964 F.2d

[10] Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965). The Noerr - Pennington doctrine basically immunizes from antitrust attack the actions of a party engaged in petitioning the government for relief which would have anticompetitive effects.

186, 188 (2nd Cir. 1992) citing Bryant v. Maffucci, 923 F.2d 979, 982 (2nd Cir. 1991). The non-moving party must, "demonstrate to the court the existence of a genuine issue of material fact". Lendino v. Trans Union Credit Information, Co., 970 F.2d 1110, 1112 (2nd Cir. 1992), citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 324, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). In fact, "the non-moving party must come forward with enough evidence to support a jury verdict … and the … motion will not be defeated merely … on the basis of conjecture or surmise". Trans Sport, supra, 964 F.2d at 188, quoting Bryant v. Maffucci, supra.

NYSEG's Defense of State Action

NYSEG argues at the outset that it is immune from antitrust attack because its usage of the load splitter is the result of state action. See Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985)*; [18] See also Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). As a corollary, it argues that it cannot be attacked on antitrust grounds because its actions are a variety of petitions to the state for relief under the Noerr - Pennington doctrine. [11]

In Southern Motor Carriers, the Supreme Court set forth the standards in which HN6[] private parties may be immune from antitrust attack for anti-competitive actions. Thus:

> First, the challenged restraint must be "one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy". Second, the State must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct.

Southern Motor Carriers, supra, 471 U.S. at 57*, quoting California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 104, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1984)* (opinion of BRENNAN, J.).

NYSEG argues that both prongs of [*19] the Southern Motor Carriers test are satisfied by the facts presented in this case. First, NYSEG asserts that the Resale Agreement was adopted pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy. While the relevant New York State statutes do not specifically require or authorize the use of a load splitter, NYSEG argues that the load splitter, as embodied in the Resale Agreement, is the logical outgrowth of a clearly expressed state policy.

NYSEG argues that there is an express state policy to allot expansion power so eligible industrial customers will expand or retain their operations in the Niagara region, thereby employing more people. NYSEG looks to New York Public Authorities Law § 1005(13) as evidence of this policy. [12] That section, while allotting expansion power to encourage job creation, also allows for the allotment of expansion power, in certain circumstances, for the retention of existing jobs.

[*20] NYSEG argues in addition that the prior contract (designated NS 11) between NYPA and NYSEG, which governed expansion power in NYSEG's exclusive franchise territory, also incorporated that state policy and included the load splitter. Contract NS 11 created a ratio of expansion power and normal system power to bill expansion power customers. See NYSEG Reply Memorandum, pp. 18 - 19. And, that contract contemplates different methods of billing. Id. Finally, in contract NS 11:

> The Authority (NYPA) reserves the right to withdraw … any allotment of expansion power …

---

[11] See footnote 10, supra.

[12] Public Authorities Law § 1005(13) reads, in part:

> HN7[] Contracts entered into pursuant to this subdivision shall be long term and shall contain reasonable provisions providing for the partial or complete withdrawal of the power in the event the recipient fails to maintain mutually agreed levels of employment…

See also Expansion Power Agreement wherein GM agreed to a base employment level of 8000. (Exhibit B, attached to complaint).

(b) if the customer fails to expand its operations pursuant to arrangements made by it and the Authority (NYPA).

Id. I believe that there is a sufficient expression of a state policy, in Contract NS 11, Public Authorities Law § 1005(13) and in the agreements themselves, to satisfy the first half of the test enunciated in*Southern Motor Carriers.* It is apparent that expansion power was to be utilized to encourage "expansion". NYPA understood it to be so when it entered into NS 11 in 1961. This policy was expressly adopted by the New York State legislature in 1987. Moreover, the original [*21] NS 11 included provisions pertaining to billing customers not dissimilar from the load splitter at issue here. It is apparent that the load splitter incorporated into the agreements is an expression of state policy. It is clearly intended to aid in carrying out the mandate of PAL § 1005(13) to create and preserve industrial jobs in the Niagara region. NYPA and NYSEG clearly contemplated the application of the load splitter in their Resale Agreement. Finally, GM, in executing the Expansion Power Agreement agreed to the possible usage of the load splitter.

Under the second half of the*Southern Motor Carriers* test the state must "actively supervise" the anticompetitive restraint. NYSEG argues that New York State actively supervises the load splitter for a number of reasons. It cites to Public Authorities Law § 1009. [13] The Resale Agreement survived all the hurdles PAL § 1009 requires of it. For example, Mario M. Cuomo, Governor of the State of New York, apparently adopted the Resale Agreement in a letter dated February 17, 1989. In it, the Governor stated:

> I have also received the proposed contracts between the [New York] Power Authority and the … New York [*22] State Electric and Gas Corporation … for the sale of 250 MW (megawatts) of expansion power.
> … Accordingly, each of these contracts is approved.

Wickham II, P6 and Exhibit C. Included in the Resale Agreement, and thus subject to scrutiny under PAL § 1009, was the load splitter of NYPA Tariff No. 46.

[*23] Moreover, the adoption of the load splitter in Tariff No. 46 was subject to similar administrative proceedings. [14] Such notice, comment and hearing proceedings before adoption of a regulation -- in this instance, the Service

---

[13] That section reads:

1. HN8[] After agreement upon the terms of any such contracts shall have been reached by the authority (NYPA) and its co-party or co-parties, the authority shall promptly transmit a copy of such proposed contract to the governor, the speaker of the assembly, the minority leader of the assembly, the chairman of the assembly committee on ways and means, the temporary president of the senate, and the minority leader of the senate and the chairman of the senate finance committee and shall hold a public hearing or hearing upon the terms thereof. Copies of proposed contracts shall be available for public inspection … at the office or offices of the authority and at such other places throughout the state as it may designate…

2. When such contract or contracts are finally agreed upon in terms satisfactory to the authority and its co-party or co-parties, and which the authority believes to be in the public interest, the authority shall thereupon report the proposed contract or contracts, together with its recommendations and the record of the public hearings thereon, to the speaker of the assembly, the chairman of the assembly committee on ways and means, the temporary president of the senate, the chairman of the senate finance committee and the governor. The governor shall, within sixty days thereafter, indicate his approval and give his reasons there for.

[14] See 16A NYCRR § 455:

Section 455.1 … (a) … HN9[] Whenever the authority (NYPA) proposes to undertake any of the following actions, notice shall be given as provided in subsections (b) and (c) of this section:

(1) amendment of any rate schedule or tariff for the sale of power and/or energy …

(b) At least 45 days prior to adoption of any action included in subdivision (a) of this section, or prior to any hearing thereon, the secretary shall:

Tariff -- is enough to say that New York State actively supervised the load splitter. The Supreme Court does not require active supervision where the actor is a municipality. But:

> In cases in which the actor is a state agency, it is likely that active state supervision would also not be required, although we do not here decide that issue. Where state or municipal regulation by a private party is involved, however, active state supervision must be shown, even where a clearly articulated state policy exists.

Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 46, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1984), n. 10 (citations omitted). Though GM complains of actions taken by NYSEG, the load splitter is attributable to NYPA, a state agency. GM's argument that no evidence of state supervision is evident (GM memorandum of law, pp. 15-16) is wrong as a matter of law.

[*24] Further, HN11[] the law does not require that the state compel the complained-of conduct to immunize it from antitrust attack. Though GM cites Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 (1975) for that proposition, Goldfarb has not been interpreted that way. "The focal point of the Goldfarb opinion was the source of the anticompetitive policy, rather than whether the challenged conduct was compelled." Southern Motor Carriers, supra, 471 U.S. at 60 (emphasis original). "Moreover, a state policy that expressly permits, but does not compel, anticompetitive conduct, may be 'clearly articulated.'" Id., at 61 (emphasis original, citation omitted). Thus, "compulsion (is not) a prerequisite to a finding of state action immunity". Id. It is clear that anticompetitive conduct permitted, but not required, by the state can be immune from antitrust attack.

I therefore conclude that the NYSEG is immune from antitrust attack and is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The NYPA load splitter is clearly an outgrowth of state action. As one court stated: [*25]

> In exercising its power to construct and maintain projects and distribute the resulting electrical power, the (New York Power) Authority is exercising delegated governmental power for the performance of a state function, albeit the Authority operates independently from the state itself…"

In Re White, 222 N.Y.S.2d 208, 213, 31 Misc. 2d 644, 649 (1961). In my estimation, there are no material facts in dispute that question the state action pursuant to which NYSEG was acting. See Southern Motor Carriers, supra.

NYSEG has also argued that its actions are immune from antitrust attack under the Noerr - Pennington doctrine. [15] Because I believe its actions are immune from antitrust liability under the state action doctrine, there is no need to address this claimed defense.

---

(1) cause to have published notice of the proposed action or hearing in the State Register in accordance with subdivision (c) of this section and, when appropriate in the judgment of the authority, publish notice of the proposed action in such newspaper or newspapers or general circulation as the authority may select;

(2) provide notification to any person or agency which has filed a written request … for notice of proposed action or hearing which may affect that person or agency …

(3) make available to the public a copy of the complete text of the proposed action …

(c) Notice to be published in the State Register shall:

(1) cite the statutory authority under which the authority proposes to take action;

(2) give the date, time and place of any public hearing …

(4) either state the express terms of the proposed action, or describe the subject, purpose and substance of the proposed action…

455.2 Notice of Adoption. HN10[] Upon completion of any action listed in subdivision (a) of section 455.1 of this Part, the secretary shall file a copy of such action with the Secretary of State … and submit a notice of adoption to be published in the State Register.

[15] Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965).

[*26] However, even were I to conclude that the application of the load splitter was not the result of state action, and thus immune from antitrust attack, I would rule that NYSEG has violated neither the Sherman nor Clayton Antitrust Acts.

Sherman Act Claims

As outlined earlier, GM has alleged that NYSEG has monopolized some relevant market. In its complaint, GM asserted that the load splitter has excluded both NYPA and GM, through its cogeneration facility, from competing in the market for "generation and transmission of electricity in the Western District".

HN12[] To prove the offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 2; see footnote 7, supra), the plaintiff must prove:

> the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and … the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen or historic accident.

Nat. Ass'n of Pharmaceutical Mfrs. v. Averest Lab., 850 F.2d 904, 914 (2nd Cir. 1988); citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 596, n. 19, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985). [*27] A relevant market must comprise both a product and geographic market. See Seattle Totems Hockey Club, Inc. v. National Hockey League, 783 F.2d 1347 (9th Cir. 1986).

GM has amended its allegations of the appropriate product market from the generation and transmission of electricity to the sale of electricity to industrial customers. Compare Complaint, P44 with GM memorandum of law, p. 36. GM alleges essentially that NYSEG and NYPA are in competition against each other to provide electricity to industrial customers and that NYSEG's use of the load splitter, by limiting the amount of expansion power GM could purchase, prevented NYPA from "competing" in that relevant market. I find nothing in the record to support this contention.

HN13[] Courts frequently employ the concept of cross elasticity of demand between products to assess the proper market for consideration. At base this idea asks the question how easy is it to find a substitute in the event there is a price rise in one product. It is a function of one product's ability to substitute, and thus fill the purpose, of another. See United States v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956). [*28] Thus, to the extent that electricity produced by NYPA and electricity produced by NYSEG serve the same purpose, and are interchangeable, they are both in the same market. While I can accept the assertion that electricity, regardless of the source, performs the same function, I fail to see how NYSEG and NYPA compete in the sale of electricity to industrial customers in the NYSEG franchise territory.

NYSEG has a exclusive franchise to retail electricity to customers in its franchise area. By statute, and as a natural monopoly by economics, it cannot compete with anyone in that franchise. And while NYPA supplies electricity to industrial customers within the exclusive franchise, it does not compete with NYSEG. By statute, the legislature directed that NYPA make available 250 megawatts of power to customers meeting specific criteria. See New York Public Authorities § 1005(13). But that does not place the two in competition. GM's entitlement to NYPA expansion power arises from NYPA's application of express state policy. The fact that NYPA and NYSEG supply power to GM, and others, does not automatically mean they compete for business. Moreover, there is nothing in the record, other than [*29] the plaintiff's assertions, that NYPA has been harmed. Nor has NYPA claimed any harm.

GM also asserted in its original complaint that the NYSEG's use of the load splitter would foreclose competition from the co-generation facility (QF, as a "qualifying facility within the meaning of PURPA") it was then constructing. Upon completion of the cogeneration facility, NYSEG would be compelled by federal law to purchase electricity therein produced in excess of the on-site demand. See 16 U.S.C. § 824. However, that facility would produce electricity cheaper than the cost of electricity billed by the load splitter (a combination of expansion power and more expensive NYSEG system power). GM claims it would not then be able to sell as much cogeneration electricity because it would consume the cogeneration electricity first, rather than use the combined NYSEG system and NYPA power. This would prevent the cogeneration facility from competing. GM's preference would be to utilize the expansion power first, then resort to the cogeneration facility, and utilize only NYSEG system power in the event of some unspecified emergency. See Complaint, P32.

NYSEG has assured GM that [*30] upon completion of the cogeneration facility, GM can "purchase all of its power requirements from the QF and NYPA. GM will not have to purchase any power from NYSEG, except for back-up power requested in the event the QF is unable to supply GM's load." Wickham II, P7. This statement indicates to me that, at least after the QF begins operations, GM is entitled to the NYPA power before it utilizes any other. To the extent this entire dispute is whether GM can utilize the NYPA power first, before NYSEG system power, this statement by NYSEG would seem to moot the entire controversy. Ultimately, though, this question is one of contract interpretation, and one best left, as set forth infra, to the New York courts.

I would note also that there is no real competition between the cogeneration facility and NYSEG. Federal law requires that NYSEG purchase the cogeneration facility's surplus power. NYSEG has already indicated that it had every intention of abiding by that obligation.

The second element of a monopolization claim -- that the possession of monopoly power be maintained by some willful or intentional act -- is not present either. See Nat. Ass'n of Pharmaceutical Mfrs., supra; [*31] see also Apollo Air Passenger Computer Reservation System, 720 F. Supp. 1068 (S.D.N.Y. 1989). NYSEG's complained-of conduct consisted simply of taking action pursuant to a duly executed contract, one signed by the plaintiff. Such actions can hardly be categorized as willful. And, even if taken pursuant to an erroneous interpretation of the agreement, they would not constitute the basis for an antitrust violation.

GM also complains that the actions of NYSEG constitute the offense of attempted monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. To HN14[] succeed on such a claim, the plaintiff must prove:

> (1) anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct.; (2) specific intent to monopolize; and (3) a "dangerous probability" that the attempt would have succeeded.

Nat. Ass'n of Pharmaceutical Mfrs. supra, 850 F.2d at 914, quoting International Distrib. Centers v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 790 (2nd Cir. 1987). As discussed above, in my view neither NYPA nor GM, through its cogeneration facility, are in competition with NYSEG, in any market that GM has alleged. As such, any conduct of which GM complains could [*32] not be either anticompetitive or exclusionary. Additionally, NYSEG's acts do not evidence the requisite specific intent, as they were taken pursuant to duly executed contracts. GM's claims of attempted monopolization must fail as well.

Clayton Act Claims

As I indicated above, the degree of state involvement in the complained-of anticompetitive actions warrants dismissal of the antitrust claims. See Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985). However, even if I were to rule that the state action here did not immunize the complained-of acts from antitrust attack, I would still dismiss plaintiff's Clayton Act claim.

As outlined above, GM argues that the use of the load splitter is an unlawful tie-in under § 3 of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15. U.S.C. § 14. See footnote 8, supra. It claims that NYSEG, by using the load splitter, has conditioned the sale of expansion power on the purchase of NYSEG system power. In GM's view, expansion power and NYSEG system power are separate commodities within the meaning of the Clayton Act. NYSEG responds that electricity [*33] is not a commodity under the Clayton Act, that GM has not alleged two tied products, and that the complaint alleges an insubstantial amount of commerce.

Before turning to the elements of a tying claim, I must address NYSEG's argument that electricity is not a commodity within the meaning of the Clayton Act. The Clayton Act proscribes tying arrangements in the "sale of goods, wares, or merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities…" 15 U.S.C. § 14. Both parties cite a series of cases that have addressed the question of whether electricity is a commodity within the meaning of the antitrust laws. I am satisfied that the better view is expressed by those cases determining that it is a commodity. The cases cited by the parties address the meaning of the term "commodity" in the context of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13a. None rules squarely on Clayton Act grounds. NYSEG relies primarily on City of Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 497 F. Supp. 1040 (D.Conn. 1980). There, the Court ruled that, "electricity is not a commodity for purposes of the Act." Id., 497 F. Supp. at 1052, fn. 14, [*34] citing City of Newark v. Delmarva Power & Light Co., 467 F. Supp. 763, 774 (D.Del. 1979). The Newark court reached its conclusion based on its interpretation that the Robinson-Patman Act was concerned with "manufactured products and consumer goods". Id., 467 F. Supp. at 774.

I believe the better view is that expressed by those courts that have determined that electricity is a commodity. The Eighth Circuit stated:

> Though the*Robinson-Patman Act* does not cover sales of real property, intangibles, or services, electricity does not fall into any of these categories. Electric power can be felt, if not touched. It is produced, sold, stored in small quantities, transmitted, and distributed in discrete quantities. We hold that HN15[] electricity is a commodity for purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act. The antitrust laws should not be given a restrictive interpretation.

City of Kirkwood v. Union Elec. Co., 671 F.2d 1173, 1181-82 (8th Cir. 1982) (citations omitted) (emphasis added). Other courts have ruled that electricity is a commodity because of the similarity in the distribution of it, to the similarity [*35] of the distribution system, 'which prompted legislative concern over price discrimination". Town of Concord, Mass. v. Boston Edison Co., 676 F. Supp. 396, 398 (D.Mass. 1988). Cf. City of Gainesville v. Florida Power & Light Co., 488 F. Supp. 1258, 1281 (S.D.Fla. 1980) ("The amendments to Section 2 were designed to eliminate the anticompetitive price discrimination encouraged by abuses in the manufacturer-wholesaler-retailer system of marketing.").

As to the merits of GM's Clayton Act claim, HN16[] a tying arrangement is an, "agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product". Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 56 (2nd Cir. 1980), quoting Northern P. R. Co. v. United States, 365 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). The plaintiff must prove five specific elements:

> first, a tying and a tied product … second, evidence of actual coercion by the seller that in fact forced the buyer to accept the tied product … third, sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product [*36] … fourth, anticompetitive effects in the tied market … and fifth, a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the tied product market…

Yentsch, supra, 630 F.2d at 56-57 (citations omitted). GM argues that NYSEG has tied the sale of expansion power (tying product) to the purchase of NYSEG system power (tied product).

There can be no tying arrangement, "unless two separate product markets have been linked." Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 21, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). As NYSEG and NYPA power both perform the same function, and are utilized for the same purpose, there is little to distinguish them. GM apparently rests its assertion that there are two separate markets simply on the difference in price. That is not enough. As the Eighth Circuit stated:

> The City argues that the relevant product is "economical electric energy," i.e. that produced with the aid of a government subsidy, rather than electric power generally. But it showed nothing to indicate that the industry or consumers consider this "product" distinct from all other electric energy … except, that is, [*37] to the extent that "economical energy" may be cheaper than other electricity.
>
> It would be a strange antitrust doctrine indeed that would place a product in its own market or submarket simply because, though indistinguishable in any other way, it cost less.

City of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa v. Assoc. Elec. Co-op, 838 F.2d 268, 279 (8th Cir. 1988). I simply do not see separate and distinct markets for Expansion and NYSEG system power.

GM may be able to demonstrate the second and third elements of a tying claim. The evidence of actual coercion by the seller (NYSEG) to accept the tied product (NYSEG system power) would be provided by the load splitter. NYSEG would have sufficient market power in the tying power (NYPA power) by virtue of its control over transmission lines to GM. However, "the anticompetitive effects in the tied market," Yentsch, supra, 630 F.2d at 57, are not apparent to me. The tied market, NYSEG system power, is a monopoly in NYSEG's franchise territory by state law. NYSEG has absolute market power regardless of any presumed tying arrangement.

There is a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce affected by the restraint. [*38] NYSEG relies on Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 504, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969): "Accordingly, the proper focus of concern is whether the seller has the power to raise prices, or impose other burdensome terms such as a tie-in, with respect to any appreciable number of buyers within the market." NYSEG wheels expansion power to other customers within its franchise territory. See Wickham II, P13. And the amount of commerce at stake is enough. NYSEG's contends that a simple allegation of $ 1,000,000 damages is not enough. But, "the volume of commerce must be 'substantial enough in terms of dollar-volume so as not to be merely de minimis'". Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co. of Georgia, 815 F.2d 1407, 1419 (11th Cir. 1987), quoting Fortner, supra, 394 U.S. at 501. $ 10,091.07 satisfied the court in Tic-X-Press, and the amount alleged by GM does so here.

However, in light of GM'S failure to allege any facts from which a jury could find separate and distinct product markets, or anticompetitive effect in a tied market, I do not believe that the Clayton Act claim [*39] is viable.

Donnelly Act claims

Because I am recommending dismissal of plaintiff's federal antitrust claims, dismissal of the Donnelly Act claims is appropriate also. HN17[] Claims under the Donnelly Act and the Sherman Act are analyzed similarly. See Uniroyal Inc. v. Jetco Auto Serv., Inc, 461 F. Supp. 350, 357 (S.D.N.Y. 1978): "It is apparent that New York's Donnelly Act proscribes the same kind of conduct prohibited by the federal Sherman Act, and it has been so held." Citing State v. Mobil Oil Corp., 38 N.Y.2d 460, 464, 381 N.Y.S.2d 426, 428, 344 N.E.2d 357, 359 (1976). See also Empire Volkswagen, Inc. v. World Wide Volkswagen Corp., 814 F.2d 90, 98, n. 4 (2nd Cir. 1987); and Volmar Distributors, Inc. v. The New York Post Co., Inc., 825 F. Supp. 1153 (S.D.N.Y. 1993).

Contract claims

The parties both agree that there are contracts governing at least part of this dispute. GM has asserted that NYSEG violated the 1989 Expansion Power Agreement by failing to make available its full allotment of expansion power. NYSEG asserts that it was in fact GM that violated an earlier agreement, [*40] the Separate Metering Agreement, by increasing the equipment hooked to the meter measuring an agreed-to surrogate for expansion power. In NYSEG's view it must bill GM for all power provided to it, and the contracts provide only two options: separate metering or the load splitter. In addition, there is some dispute over whether GM could, or did, (or both), displace NYSEG system power in favor of its expansion power allotment.

There is pending a declaratory judgment action in New York State Supreme Court, New York County, seeking to declare the parties rights under these agreements. See Wickham I, P14, Exhibit 5. To my knowledge, that action remains undecided. I think it proper to allow the New York Supreme Court to resolve those issues in view of my recommendation that the antitrust causes of action be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing it is recommended that summary judgment be entered in favor of the defendant NYSEG and that the plaintiff's complaint be dismissed against both parties.

Respectfully submitted,

Edmund F. Maxwell

United States Magistrate Judge

DATED: Buffalo, New York

October 1st, 1993

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636 [*41] (b)(1), it is hereby ORDERED that this Report and Recommendation be filed with the Clerk of this Court.

ANY OBJECTIONS to this Report and Recommendation must be filed with the Clerk of the Court within (10) days of receipt of this Report and Recommendation in accordance with the above statute, Rule 72(b) Fed.R.Civ.P. and Local Rule 30.

Failure to file objections within the specified time or to request an extension of such time waives the right to appeal the District Court's Order. Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 106 S. Ct. 466, 88 L. Ed. 2d 435 (1985); Wesolek, et al v. Canadair Limited, et al, 838 F.2d 55 (2nd Cir.1988).

Let the Clerk send a copy of this order and a copy of the Report and Recommendation to the attorneys for the plaintiff and the defendants.

So ordered.

Edmund F. Maxwell

United States Magistrate Judge

DATED: Buffalo, New York

October 1st, 1993

APPENDIX

As noted in the body of the decision, this is a list and short description of the contracts that are either at issue, or are referred to by the parties.

1. CONTRACT [*42] NS 11, between NYPA and NYSEG, effective from 1961 through 1988.
This contract governed the relations between NYPA and NYSEG with regards to the transmission of Expansion Power from both the Niagara Project, and NYPA's St. Lawrence River operations. [16] (Complaint, P16-A).
Neither party has provided a copy of this contract to the court. NYSEG has referred to it in their memoranda of law.

2. Various unidentified agreements among NYPA, NYSEG and GM. (Complaint, P16-B).

3. EXPANSION POWER BILLING ARRANGEMENT, between NYPA, NYSEG and GM, dated January 17, 1973. Referred to in my Report and Recommendation as the SEPARATE [*43] METERING AGREEMENT.
This agreement sets out that GM is entitled to 14,300 kilowatts of expansion power, but that separate metering would be impracticable. The parties then agreed to utilize a surrogate as a measure for expansion load.

[16] For a partial discussion of NS 11, see N.Y. State Elec. Gas Corp. v. Fed. Energy Reg., 638 F.2d 388 (2nd. Cir. 1980). For a history of the Niagara Power Project and NYPA's involvement, see Occidental Chemical Corp. v. Power Authority, 786 F. Supp. 316 (W.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd. 990 F.2d 726 (2nd Cir. 1993).

It is attached as Exhibit B to Defendant NYSEG's Motion to Dismiss, or in the Alternative, for Summary Judgment, Docket Entry 6.
4. CONTRACT FOR THE SALE AND RESALE OF EXPANSION POWER between NYPA and NYSEG, dated December 13, 1988, but signed February 22, 1989. Referred to in my Report and Recommendation as the RESALE AGREEMENT. The parties have referred to this in their papers by its complete title.

This contract basically replaced NS 11, and provided for the transmission of NYPA power and dealt with other factors such as billing.

It is attached as Exhibit A to the Complaint, Docket Entry 1.

5. 1989 EXPANSION POWER ALLOCATION AND SERVICE AGREEMENT, between NYPA, NYSEG and GM. Referred to in my Report and Recommendation as the EXPANSION POWER AGREEMENT.
This contract allotted GM 14,300 kilowatts of expansion power and addressed other matters such as transmission and billing.

It is attached as Exhibit B [*44] to the Complaint, Docket Entry 1.

Documents 1, 2 and 3, identified above, have been referred to as the "old wheeling agreements". Documents 4 and 5, identified above, have been referred to as the "new wheeling agreements".

Transphase Sys. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

October 7, 1993, Decided ; October 7, 1993, Filed; October 12, 1993, Entered

CV 93-2552 KN (Ex)

Reporter

839 F. Supp. 711 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19350 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,392

TRANSPHASE SYSTEMS, INC., Plaintiff, v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON COMPANY and SAN DIEGO GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY, Defendants.

Core Terms

alleges, electricity, rebate, ratepayers, bidding, defendants', monopolization, customers, anticompetitive, competitor, motion to dismiss, antitrust claim, Sherman Act, resources, energy, monopoly power, technologies, monopolies, antitrust, resisting, savings, costs, funds, sham

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action doctrine places state sponsored restraints on competition beyond the reach of the Sherman Act in order to promote the principles of federalism and state sovereignty. The United States Supreme Court has set forth a two-pronged test for determining when actions taken by private parties, pursuant to a state regulatory regime, are immunized by the state action doctrine. First, the court must determine whether the challenged restraint is one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy. Second, the state must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct. This supervision requirement is only satisfied if state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects the right of parties to petition the government even if the impact of their petition is likely to have an anti-competitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN3[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A complaint must include allegations of the specific activities, not protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which plaintiffs contend have barred their access to a governmental body.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A defendant may not be found liable under the Sherman Act for monopolizing or attempting or conspiring to monopolize a market unless that defendant is a competitor in the relevant market and his conduct creates a dangerous probability that he will gain a dominant share of the market.

Judges: [1] KENYON

Opinion by: DAVID V. KENYON

Opinion

[*713] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS

This case comes before the Court on defendants Southern California Edison Company's ("SCE") and San Diego Gas and Electric Company's ("SDG&E") Motions to Dismiss Transphase System Inc's federal antitrust claims for failure to state a cause of action pursuant to Federal Rule 12(b)(6). Defendants allege, among other things, that Transphase's antitrust claims are barred by the "state action" doctrine and that SCE and SDG&E's participation in proceedings before the California Public Utilities Commission ("CPUC") is protected conduct under the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine. Defendant SDG&E also asserts that Transphase has failed to allege a claim under the antitrust laws because it has failed to adequately allege that the defendants were significant competitors in the relevant product market and that their conduct created a dangerous probability that they would monopolize that market. [1] The Court agrees with all of these contentions and therefore GRANTS SCE's and SDG&E's Motions to Dismiss Transphase's antitrust claims with prejudice. The Court also dismisses Transphase's pendent state law claims under the California [2] Unfair Practices Act and the California Cartwright Act. The Court explains its reasoning briefly in the Discussion section below.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Transphase Systems, Inc. ("Transphase") sells thermal energy storage ("TES") systems designed to shift electricity use from high demand periods (such as hot summer days) when electricity is more expensive to provide to lower demand times, typically at night. Transphase's particular TES system uses cooling tanks containing salt water that is frozen at night. Water is cooled as the tanks defrost during the day and is then circulated through a building's air conditioning system to provide cool [3] air. Transphase's TES system is one of a variety of technologies in "demand-side management" ("DSM") which are designed to promote energy conservation and reduce the need for new power generation by shifting electricity use from high to low demand periods. DSM

---

[1] Defendants' motions present several other arguments in favor of dismissing Transphase's complaint, including that Transphase has failed to allege any anticompetitive conduct or antitrust injury suffered by Transphase. Although these arguments are closely related to SDG&E's argument concerning the relevant product market, the Court does not directly address them.

resources like Transphase's TES system are supposed to benefit ratepayers by offsetting the need for utilities to build power plants or buy additional electric capacity from independent power producers at a higher unit cost than the ratepayers would need to pay for the DSM system.

Commercial electricity customers can reduce their electric bills by using Transphase's product to take advantage of lower nighttime off peak electricity rates. The drawback is that Transphase's TES technology is too expensive to make it commercially attractive; the typical commercial electric customer would find the "payback period" needed to recoup his initial capital investment to be too long to justify the initial expense of buying one of Transphase's systems. In order to remedy this problem and promote the use of energy conserving/load management technologies, the CPUC authorizes utility companies like SCE and SDG&E to provide rebates for electricity [4] customers [*714] who utilize DSM technology. Both SCE [2] and SDG&E [3] provide such rebates for customers who decide to utilize DSM systems like that marketed by Transphase. The gist of Transphase's complaint is that SCE and SDG&E have conspired with one another and independently used their monopoly power over the energy supply in their respective service areas to hold down the rebate levels awarded to customers who utilize or desire to utilize DSM systems like that designed by Transphase. Plaintiffs allege that if the defendants had awarded consumers with the appropriate sized rebates, more customers would decide to buy TES systems and the value of Transphase's business would have increased by more than $ 50 million above its present value.

[5] Transphase alleges two violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act: Actual Monopolization (Comp. at PP 19-27) and Attempted Monopolization, including a conspiracy to attempt monopolization. In addition, Transphase also alleges a combination by SCE and SDG&E to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. (Comp. at PP 40-43).

Transphase's actual monopolization claim alleges that the defendants enjoy monopoly power by "virtue of their ability to determine the prices of thermal energy storage systems and the electricity savings provided thereby to both the host customer and the DSM ratepayers." (Comp. at P 20). Transphase contends that the defendants have willfully acquired and maintained their monopoly power over the "TES retrofit and DSM resources" by (1) "arbitrarily establishing" rebates by refusing to consider new power plant costs when determining "avoided costs" and "manipulating" avoided costs; (2) controlling the amount of DSM funds to be budgeted for TES; and (3) controlling the "measuring and verifying" of whether the projected DSM savings are actually acquired. (Comp. at PP 20-22). In addition, the defendants are also accused of "actively resisting" competitive [6] bidding between DSM and supply side options and thus preventing Transphase from competing directly against proposals to build additional generating facilities. Id. at P 22.

Transphase's Section 1 conspiracy claim alleges that the defendants have "conspired to restrain trade by establishing artificially low rebate levels for TES" and by establishing different measurement standards for themselves than those to be applied to independent DSM suppliers. In particular, Transphase alleges that the defendant utilities have "combined and conspired to restrain commerce among the various states by deliberately adjusting their avoided costs" and "appearing together before regulatory and other bodies" to oppose joint bidding between suppliers of supply-side management (SSM) and suppliers of DSM services like Transphase. (Comp. at PP 40-43.)

II. DISCUSSION

A. State Action Doctrine

Defendants contend that Transphase's antitrust claims are totally barred by the "state action" doctrine enunciated in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). HN1[] The state action doctrine places state sponsored restraints [7] on competition beyond the reach of the Sherman Act in order to promote the principles

---

[2] Southern California Edison is one of the largest electric utilities in the United States and distributes and sells electricity to customers within a large segment of Los Angeles County and adjacent counties.

[3] SDG&E is an electric utility based in San Diego which distributes and sells electricity within a large area of Southern California, including San Diego County and portions of Orange County.

of federalism and state sovereignty. City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1349, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). The Supreme Court has set forth a two-pronged test for determining when actions taken by private parties, pursuant to a state regulatory regime, are immunized by the state action doctrine. First, the Court must determine whether the challenged restraint is "one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy." Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conf. v. U.S., 471 U.S. 48, 57, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 (1985) (quoting Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 410 [*715] (1978). Secondly, "the State must supervise actively any private anticompetitive conduct." Southern Motor Carriers, at 57 (citing California Retail Liquor Dealers Assn v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980)). [8] [4] This supervision requirement is only satisfied "if state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy." Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 101, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 (1988).

After a thorough analysis of the complaint, the parties' briefs and documentary exhibits, the relevant sections of the California Public Utility Code, and the published opinions of the CPUC, the Court finds that both prongs of the Midcal test have been satisfied and, accordingly, holds that the defendants' [9] allegedly anticompetitive actions are immunized by the state action doctrine.

Transphase's complaint alleges that defendants engaged in two basic anticompetitive acts: (1) failing to directly compare TES cost savings with the cost of supplying more electricity; and (2) suppressing both the total funds available for rebate subsidies and the rebate levels themselves. The CPUC decisions [5] cited by SCE and SDG&E clearly establish, however, that the form and extent of ratepayer funding for all DSM programs, including SCE's and SDG&E's, has been closely scrutinized, repeatedly modified, and ultimately approved by the CPUC.

[10]

1. California Has a "Clearly Articulated and Affirmatively Expressed" Policy to Displace Competition with Respect to DSM Bidding and the Ratemaking Process

The Court's review of the California Public Utilities Code reveals that the California legislature has clearly articulated and expressed its desire to displace competition with respect to DSM bidding and the ratesetting process. Section 747 of the Public Utilities Code sets up a legislatively mandated bidding system for demand side services and mandates that the CPUC should establish a pilot program of "competitive bidding auctions for demand side services." Other sections of the code, see e.g., § 701.1(c), set forth the criteria for determining the proper rebate for DSM services and prohibit the CPUC from changing any rate or altering "any classification, contract, practice, or rule as to result in a new rate, except upon a showing before the Commission and a finding by the Commission that [4] This second prong of the Midcal test prevents the State from frustrating the national policy in favor of competition by casting a 'gauzy cloak of state involvement' over what is essentially private anticompetitive conduct." Southern Motor Carriers, at 57 (citing Midcal, 445 U.S. at 106).

---

[5] Transphase objects to the defendants' submission of and citations to these reported CPUC decision and asserts that, if the Court decides to consider these decisions, defendants' motions would be transformed into motions for summary judgment, pursuant to Rule 56. The Court disagrees. The Court may take judicial notice of these decision under Federal Rule of Evidence 201(e) since their existence is a fact "capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Fed.R.Evid. 201(e). The Ninth Circuit held in Nugget Hydroelectric v. Pacific Gas and Electric, 981 F.2d 429, 435 (9th Cir. 1992), that a district court could take published decisions of the CPUC into account on a motion to dismiss in order to determine whether the state had "actively supervised" a defendant's allegedly anticompetitive conduct. The Nugget court ultimately found that the CPUC decision at issue, together with the applicable Guidelines, were sufficient to prove that the state actively supervised the defendant's conduct, thus satisfying the second prong of the Midcal test.

The Court therefore finds that it may properly consider the reported decisions of the CPUC in the context of the defendants' motion to dismiss. Since the Court's consideration of these decisions does not transform this into a motion for summary judgment under Rule 56, the Court DENIES Transphase's request to submit evidence on the second, "active supervision" prong of the Midcal test.

the new rate is justified." Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 454(a). Taken as a whole, the Public Utility Code clearly articulates the state's policy of displacing competition in favor of a highly regulated system of ratesetting and bidding [11] on alternative DSM systems.

2. The CPUC Has "Actively Supervised" SCE's and SDG&E's DSM Activities

Transphase's complaint alleges that defendants SCE and SDG&E control almost [*716] every aspect of the DSM ratesetting and bidding processes in their respective geographic markets. Transphase alleges, for example, that the defendants (1) have the power to decide whether DSM vendors like Transphase should be permitted to bid directly against supply side alternatives that can generate their own electric power (Comp. at P 20); (2) determine the amount of DSM funds to be budgeted for TES systems like Transphase's (Comp. at P 20); and (3) decide the ways in which "electricity savings projected from DSM technologies are measured and verified." Id. Finally, Transphase alleges that the defendant utilities "choose to conduct" the rebate programs and that "ratepayers cannot negotiate directly with Transphase, which must deal with the ratepayers through the utilities." (Comp. at P 15).

The reported decisions of the CPUC and the relevant sections of the California Utilities Code clearly establish that all of these allegations are false and unsupportable as a matter of law. In fact, the [12] CPUC, not the defendant utilities, have the sole authority to (1) decide whether DSM vendors should be permitted to bid directly against supply side alternatives: [6] (2) establish the amount of DSM funds to be budgeted for TES systems; [7] and (3) decide the way in which electricity savings derived from DSM systems are measured and verified. [8] Moreover, the rebates provided to Transphase's customers are derived from ratepayer funds and cannot be collected or disbursed without the CPUC's explicit approval. Cal. Pub. Util. Code §§ 451, 454. Transphase's sweeping allegations about the control exercised by the defendants are thus totally unfounded. Rather, a careful review of the CPUC's published opinions clearly establishes that the Commission actively supervises every aspect of SCE and SDG&E's DSM activities attacked by Transphase's complaint.

[13] For the preceding reasons, the Court finds that the anticompetitive actions alleged to have been committed by defendants SCE and SDG&E in Transphase's complaint are immunized from federal antitrust liability by the "state action" doctrine.

B. Defendants' Actions Are Immunized by the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The defendants also assert that the "anticompetitive acts" which they are alleged to have committed in Transphase's complaint are protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. HN2[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects the right of parties to petition the government even if the impact of their petition is likely to have an anti-competitive effect. Franchise Realty Interstate Corp. v. San Francisco Local Joint Exec. Bd., 542 F.2d 1076, 1080-81 (9th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 940, at 1080, 51 L. Ed. 2d 787, 97 S. Ct. 1571 (1977) ("Joint efforts to influence public officials do not violate the antitrust laws even though intended to eliminate competition.")

As noted above, Transphase has alleged that the defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by (1) appearing together [14] before the CPUC to take positions that would disadvantage Transphase; (2) filing joint briefs before the CPUC; and (3) speaking "in unison before [the CPUC] to demand the fruits of their monopolies." These actions are clearly protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and therefore cannot form the basis for a conspiracy claim under Section 1.

Transphase's claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act are also protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Transphase alleges that the defendants have maintained their monopoly power by "resisting meaningful changes" to their rebate programs and resisting competitive bidding

---

[6] Indeed, the CPUC recently decided, after Transphase filed this complaint, to set up direct bidding between demand and supply side alternatives.

[7] See 1988 GRC at 475-477; 1992 GRC at 144.

[8] See Interim DSM Bidding Pilots at 22.

between DSM and supply side options. Although the complaint does not explicitly describe how defendants resisted these changes, it is clear from the context of the allegations, that the defendants' alleged resistance was exercised by the defendants [*717] through the public positions they took in the CPUC proceedings. Thus, Transphase's claims under section 2 of the Sherman act are also barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Transphase alleges in its Opposition to both SCE and SDG&E's Motions that it is relying on the [15] "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, but Transphase has failed to plead anywhere in its complaint that the defendants' conduct before the CPUC was a "sham". Thus, Transphase's complaint must be dismissed. The Ninth Circuit has held that HN3[] "a complaint must include allegations of the specific activities, not protected by Noerr, which plaintiffs contend have barred their access to a governmental body." Franchise Realty, supra, 542 F.2d at 1082. Transphase has failed to meet this demanding pleading standard.

Transphase asserts in its Opposition, however, that it should be provided an opportunity to amend its complaint to allege that the defendants' actions before the CPUC were a "sham". The "sham exception" does not appear to extend to direct lobbying efforts seeking action by an administrative body (like the CPUC), however. Franchise Realty, at 1080. Therefore, Transphase's request to amend its complaint by alleging that defendants' conduct was a "sham" would be futile.

The Court thus finds that Transphase's antitrust claims against the defendants are barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

C. Defendants SCE and SDG&E are [16] Not Significant Competitors in the Relevant Product Market

It is axiomatic in antitrust law that HN4[] a defendant may not be found liable under the Sherman act for monopolizing or attempting or conspiring to monopolize a market unless that defendant is a competitor in the relevant market and his conduct creates a dangerous probability that he will gain a dominant share of the market. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-91 (1993); Mercy-Peninsula Ambulance, Inc. v. County of San Mateo, 791 F.2d 755, 759 (9th Cir. 1986) (county government, which performed no health care services, could not be charged with having used its market power to exclude competition when it refused to license an ambulance service because it was not a competitor in the relevant product market). Defendant SDG&E contends that it cannot be found to have violated the Sherman Act because it is not a competitor in the relevant product market and Transphase's complaint neither alleges that SDG&E is a competitor in the relevant market nor that it's conduct creates a dangerous probability that it will monopolize [17] that market. [9]

Transphase claims that the relevant product market "over which" the utilities exercise their monopoly power are "broadly speaking, DSM resources, and with specific respect to Transphase, retrofit thermal energy storage (TES) goods and services" like those supplied by plaintiff. (Comp. at P 17). SDG&E asserts, however, that Transphase acknowledges in its complaint that SDG&E and SCE are not really competitors in this product market; they merely exercise control over the DSM goods and services provided by others by virtue of their alleged power to control the bidding programs and rebate levels for those services. The Court agrees with SDG&E's argument and therefore GRANTS its Motion to Dismiss on these grounds.

Transphase's [18] complaint clearly states that while SDG&E and SCE "have a monopoly over the furnishing of [DSM systems and, specifically, Transphase's TES services] to the ratepayers. . . [they] are not themselves capable of supplying those goods and services to the ratepayers, only of preventing Transphase from so doing." (Comp. at P 19)(emphasis added). In another paragraph, Transphase again alleges in a conclusory fashion that the defendants have monopolies over the provision of DSM services and have "willfully maintained" these monopolies; [*718] Transphase concedes in the very next phrase, however, that the utilities "basically do nothing to supply such DSM resources to the ratepayers of California but hire others and charge large administrative costs and profits" to do so. (Comp. at P 25). Transphase has also failed to allege that either SDG&E or SCE has significant market share in either the provision of DSM systems or in the TES systems marketed by Transphase.

[9] Although SCE does not present this argument in its own motion to dismiss, the Court finds that this argument is applicable to SCE as well as SDG&E and thus dismisses Transphase's antitrust claims against SDG&E and SCE on the grounds presented in SDG&E's motion and Section C above.

Although the Court must assume that the allegations in a plaintiff's complaint are true when considering defendants' motion to dismiss, N.L. Industries, Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986), [19] the Court does not "need to accept as true conclusory allegations . . . or unreasonable inferences." Schwarzer, Tashima, and Wagstaffe, Federal Civil Procedure Before Trial, § 9:221 at page 9-41. The Court thus rejects Transphase's conclusory allegations of the defendants' market power within the relevant product market (as opposed to geographic market) since these allegations are directly contradicted by Transphase's unambiguous admission that the utilities "do nothing to supply such DSM resources to the ratepayers of California but hire others" to supply these systems. (Comp. at P 25) (emphasis added). Although Transphase alleges in its Opposition that "currently, SDG&E directly provides DSM resources to its ratepayers" and that Transphase "would never intimate that the defendant utilities are incapable of hiring someone to install" TES systems (Opposition at pages 14-15), the complaint itself clearly fails to allege either that (1) SDG&E or SCE competes with Transphase in the supply of DSM or TES systems; or (2) that the defendants' current activities create a dangerous probability that they will obtain a monopoly over, or even a dominant position, in the relevant product [20] market. Transphase's complaint therefore fails to plead an actionable claim under the federal antitrust statutes. [10]

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Transphase's federal antitrust claims. The Court also dismisses Transphase's pendent state law claims since all of plaintiff's federal claims have been dismissed. See Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 509 (9th Cir. 1989).

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: October 7, 1993

DAVID V. KENYON

[21] UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

[10] If there were no independent basis for dismissing Transphase's complaint, the Court would allow plaintiff leave to amend its complaint in the event that it could, in good faith, plead that the defendants are competitors in the supply or distribution of DSM or TES systems. Given that the Court has also decided to dismiss Transphase's antitrust claims on two independent grounds, however, the Court does not grant Transphase leave to amend at this time.

Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

July 12, 1993, Argued, Submitted, Pasadena, California ; October 13, 1993, Filed

No. 92-55134

Reporter
6 F.3d 1422 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 26608 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,381; 93 Cal. Daily Op. Service 7595; 93 Daily Journal DAR 129711

LOS ANGELES LAND CO.; SIERRA PALM PARTNERS; WEST LANES INC., Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. BRUNSWICK CORPORATION, Defendant-Appellant.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied March 21, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. LEXIS 2322.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California. D.C. No. CV-88-5285-MRP. Mariana R. Pfaelzer, District Judge, Presiding.

Core Terms

bowling, competitors, monopoly power, prices, financing, barrier, power to exclude, relevant market, anti trust law, monopoly, centers, district court, anticompetitive, lenders, antitrust claim, incumbent, possessed, contends, entrants, argues, build, economic advantage, economic relations, directed verdict, power to control, tort claim, Sherman Act, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Standards of Review, Substantial Evidence

The standard for determining the propriety of a directed verdict or a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is the same for district and appellate courts: whether, viewing the evidence as a whole, there is substantial evidence present that could support a finding for the nonmoving party. Substantial evidence is such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

In deciding an appeal from the denial of motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the reviewing court reviews the evidence on the factual issues in the light most favorable to appellee and draw all reasonable inferences in its favor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

The question whether a party possesses monopoly power is essentially one of fact. However, the question whether specific conduct is anticompetitive in violation of the Sherman Act is one of law which the reviewing court reviews de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The definition of monopoly power is clearly established in the case law. Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A plaintiff can not establish a monopolization offense by a firm without market power solely on the basis of undesirable or even significantly anticompetitive behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Evidence of threatened competition can not rationally support an inference of power to exclude competition, particularly where a court has already determined that the acts in question were not exclusionary.

Counsel: Stephen M. Shapiro, Mayer, Brown & Platt, Washington, D.C., for the defendant-appellant.

Eliot G. Disner, Shapiro, Posell & Close, Los Angeles, California, for the plaintiff-appellee.

Judges: Before: Floyd R. Gibson, * Cynthia Holcomb Hall and Andrew J. Kleinfeld, Circuit Judges.Opinion by Judge Hall.

Opinion by: HALL

---

* The Honorable Floyd R. Gibson, Senior Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit, sitting by designation.

Opinion

[*1423] OPINION

HALL, Circuit Judge:

Brunswick Corporation ("Brunswick") appeals from the district court's judgment following a jury verdict awarding to Los Angeles Land Company ("L.A. Land") $ 15,168,000 under section 2 of the Sherman Act, and, alternatively, one-third that amount under California common law governing tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. Brunswick contends that the district court should have granted its motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict because L.A. Land failed to prove violations of federal antitrust law or state tort law. This case centers on the competing [2] efforts of the two parties to build a bowling center in Palmdale in the Antelope Valley (a portion of Los Angeles County) at a time when Brunswick owned the only existing center in the Valley.

The district court had jurisdiction over the federal antitrust claims under 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26, and pendent jurisdiction over the state law claims. We have jurisdiction to review the district court's final judgment under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. We reverse.

[*1424] I. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS BELOW

Brunswick wholly owns two subsidiaries - one which manufactures and sells bowling equipment, and another which owns and operates bowling centers in the United States and abroad. One of the centers under the control of the latter subsidiary is the Sands Bowl in the Antelope Valley. In spring of 1988, the Sands Bowl was the only bowling center in the Antelope Valley, an area with a rapidly expanding population.

L.A. Land is a real estate development company which, among various other enterprises, owns and operates three bowling centers in Southern California. In 1987, L.A. Land set in motion a plan to build a bowling center in the Antelope Valley. [3] In April 1988, it sent an order for equipment to Brunswick, with specified conditions. About that time, Brunswick itself developed an interest in opening a new bowling center in the Antelope Valley.

In 1986, Brunswick had formed an agreement with Deutsche Credit Corporation ("DCC") under which Brunswick helped its customers to obtain equipment financing from DCC by guaranteeing through a contingent repurchase arrangement that Brunswick rather than DCC would bear most of the risk of borrower default. The agreement required Brunswick to assume contingent liability for the loan, gather information for the loan application package and transmit the package to DCC, and prepare a market survey to help DCC assess the viability of any new bowling center. When L.A. Land sought to purchase equipment from Brunswick for its proposed Antelope Valley center, it also sought equipment financing from DCC. However, DCC refused to accept a loan application directly from L.A. Land and instead directed it to process the application through Brunswick. L.A. Land began attempting to arrange the financing through Brunswick sometime about April 1988.

Previous to the key events at issue in this case, L.A. Land [4] opened a bowling center in San Dimas, California. It purchased the equipment for that center from Brunswick, financed the purchase through DCC, and contracted with Timberlake Construction Company ("Timberlake") to build the center. L.A. Land asked Timberlake to build its proposed center in the Antelope Valley, but Timberlake declined, citing a policy of not building in Brunswick market areas (i.e., areas where Brunswick owned and operated bowling centers.) As of 1988, Timberlake had for some time built all of Brunswick's new U.S. bowling centers.

By August of 1988 (and possibly earlier), Brunswick decided to go ahead with plans to build a new bowling center in the Antelope Valley. Brunswick had forwarded L.A. Land's equipment financing application to DCC at the end of July 1988. L.A. Land alleges that Brunswick delayed transmittal of the application so that Brunswick could get a head start on the construction of its own new bowling center in the Antelope Valley. Ultimately, DCC turned down

L.A. Land's financing application, Brunswick built a new bowling center in the Antelope Valley, and L.A. Land did not.

L.A. Land commenced this action on August 30, 1988, and immediately requested [5] a temporary restraining order to enjoin Brunswick's construction of its new center arguing that "the market can adequately bear just one more bowling center"; the district court denied the request. At trial, L.A. Land contended that Brunswick committed three acts which violated federal antitrust law and constituted torts under California law: (1) Brunswick delayed transmission of L.A. Land's financial information to DCC; (2) Brunswick submitted to DCC an inaccurate market survey; and (3) Brunswick restricted Timberlake from building a bowling center in the Antelope Valley for L.A. Land.

Brunswick moved for a directed verdict after L.A. Land presented its case in chief and at the end of trial. The district court denied those motions and sent the case to the jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of L.A. Land. The court also denied Brunswick's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and entered a judgment awarding [*1425] L.A. Land the trebled sum of $ 15,168,000 on the antitrust claim or, alternatively, $ 5,056,000 on the tort claim, and $ 1,435,974.80 in attorneys' fees and costs. This appeal of that judgment followed.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] The standard for determining the propriety [6] of a directed verdict or a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is the same for district and appellate courts: "whether, viewing the evidence as a whole, there is substantial evidence present that could support a finding . . . for the nonmoving party." Syufy Enters. v. American Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 992 (9th Cir. 1986) (internal quotation omitted), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1031, 93 L. Ed. 2d 830, 107 S. Ct. 876 (1987). "Substantial evidence is such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion." Id. (internal quotation omitted).

HN2[] In deciding this appeal from the denial of motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict, we "review the evidence on [the] factual issues in the light most favorable to [L.A. Land] and draw all reasonable inferences in its favor." Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 364 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149, 109 S. Ct. 180 (1988). HN3[] The question whether a party possesses monopoly power is essentially one of fact. Id. at 363. However, the question whether [7] specific conduct is anticompetitive in violation of the Sherman Act is one of law which we therefore review de novo. Id. at 368. Likewise, we review de novo the question whether specific conduct constitutes a tort under California law. Salve Regina College v. Russell, 499 U.S. 225, 111 S. Ct. 1217, 1221, 113 L. Ed. 2d 190 (1991) (a court of appeals should review de novo a district court's determination of state law).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Antitrust Claim

In a nutshell, L.A. Land's antitrust theory is that Brunswick monopolized the market for retail bowling services in Palmdale, and committed three specific acts in order to exclude L.A. Land from that market and thereby maintain its monopoly. At trial, L.A. Land had to prove three elements in order to establish a Sherman Act § 2 violation on its theory: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (3) causal antitrust injury. Pacific Express, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 959 F.2d 814, 817 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 686, 113 S. Ct. 814 (1992); Universal Analytics v. MacNeal-Schwendler Corp., 914 F.2d 1256, 1257 (9th Cir. 1990). [8] The relevant product and geographic markets were conclusively defined before trial as retail bowling services in the Antelope Valley and are not contested; otherwise, all three elements are disputed in this appeal.

We begin and end our inquiry with the question whether the record supports the jury's finding on the first element, i.e., that Brunswick possessed monopoly power in the relevant market. [1] We believe L.A. Land's whole antitrust claim founders on this issue. HN4[] The definition of monopoly power is clearly established in the case law: "Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956). Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to L.A. Land, the record simply does not support a finding that Brunswick had power to control prices or exclude competition.

[9] Brunswick contends that, in order to prove monopoly power, L.A. Land relied solely on the fact that Brunswick owned the only existing retail bowling center in the Antelope Valley during the relevant time period. Brunswick argues that proof of its 100% market share does not demonstrate that it had the power to control prices or exclude competition in the absence of any evidence that it could prevent entry of other market participants. Case law supports this argument. [*1426] See Oahu, 838 F.2d at 366 ("A high market share, though it may ordinarily raise an inference of monopoly power, will not do so in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendant's inability to control prices or exclude competitors.") (internal citation omitted); United States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 664 & n. 6, 671 (9th Cir. 1990).

L.A. Land responds with several arguments. First, L.A. Land points out that the evidence presented to the jury showed that Brunswick's share of the relevant market increased over time until it reached 100%. Brunswick's market share increased because two competitors withdrew from the market. One bowling center [10] closed in 1979 after a fire, and the other, a 10-lane bowling center in Lancaster, closed in Spring 1988. Neither case which L.A. Land cites supports its assertion that the jury could properly rely on this evidence of withdrawals from the market to infer that Brunswick possessed monopoly power. [2] One, Oahu, 838 F.2d at 366, does not discuss withdrawal; the other, Greyhound Computer Corp. v. International Business Machines, 559 F.2d 488, 497 (9th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1040, 54 L. Ed. 2d 790, 98 S. Ct. 782 (1978), states that the fact that "two substantial competitors who met IBM in the marketplace . . . bowed out after sustaining heavy losses" helped support an inference of IBM's market dominance." In this case, however, L.A. Land does not suggest (and directs the court to no evidence which suggests) that the withdrawal of Brunswick's two competitors was in any way attributable to Brunswick's competitive conduct or any market conditions. Indeed, the evidence does not reveal any reason for their departures from the market, other than that one of the competitors chose not to reopen after a fire. Thus, we do not [11] see how this evidence could support a finding of monopoly power.

Second, L.A. Land contends that the evidence showed that Brunswick charged monopoly prices. However, it points to no actual evidence of supracompetitive pricing, and the record reveals none. L.A. Land does point out that the prices Brunswick charged at the Sands Bowl (the single bowling center in the market before L.A. Land sought to enter) were "comparable" to prices Brunswick charged at bowling centers which [12] were in better condition and which had automatic scorers. But L.A. Land cites no authority, and we are aware of none, which supports the notion that "comparable" prices may be considered supracompetitive, even considering some difference in quality.

---

[1] L.A. Land contends that Brunswick failed to dispute the sufficiency of the evidence to support a finding of monopoly power in its motion for directed verdict, and therefore waived the right to raise this challenge on appeal. This contention is clearly spurious, as L.A. Land itself noted in court that Brunswick raised the question of market power in its argument on the directed verdict motion. R.T. at 1843.

[2] The jury instruction concerning monopoly power, to which Brunswick apparently did not object, did permit the jury to consider the departure of companies from the market as an indication of Brunswick's monopoly power. However, on review of a denial of a JNOV motion, this court applies the law truly controlling the case, regardless of the jury instructions. Air-Sea Forwarders, Inc. v. Air Asia Co., Ltd., 880 F.2d 176, 182-83 & n. 5 (9th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1058, 107 L. Ed. 2d 952, 110 S. Ct. 868 (1990).

The only other pricing evidence to which L.A. Land points concerns the fact that the average price [3] Brunswick charged at Vista Lanes (the bowling center it built in Palmdale after L.A. Land failed to enter the market) during its first 11 months of operation was higher than the prices it charged at any other center during that time. However, considering the record as a whole, this evidence does not support an inference of monopoly pricing. Testimony at trial, apparently uncontradicted, established that at least by the time of trial Vista's prices were lower than some and higher than others in the greater Los Angeles area, and indeed lower than the prices L.A. Land charged at its bowling center in San Dimas. Thus, the record does not support a conclusion that Brunswick had the power to control prices in the relevant market.

[13] Third, L.A. Land asserts that the evidence established that Brunswick successfully excluded all competitors from the relevant market. We note that in order to prove Brunswick's possession of monopoly power, it was incumbent on L.A. Land to show that Brunswick had the power to exclude competition from the relevant market generally, [*1427] not just to exclude a particular competitor. Courts have consistently confirmed that the goal of the antitrust laws is to protect competition rather than competitors. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 892 (1993) (the Sherman Act "directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself"); Syufy, 903 F.2d at 668 ("It can't be said often enough that the antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors.") (emphasis in original); Oahu, 838 F.2d at 370 ("The goal of the antitrust laws . . . unlike that of business tort or unfair competition laws, is to safeguard general competitive conditions, rather than to protect specific competitors."); Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 927 (9th Cir. 1980) [14] ("Of course, it is free and open competition that the Sherman Act protects, and not any right of one competitor to be free of rough treatment at the hands of another."), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348, 101 S. Ct. 1369 (1981). A key problem in this case is that rather than adducing evidence of Brunswick's ability to impair competition generally (such as evidence that Brunswick could prevent competitor access to necessary supplies from any provider), L.A. Land focussed primarily on proving particular anticompetitive acts. But HN5[] a plaintiff can not establish a monopolization offense by a firm without market power solely on the basis of undesirable or even significantly anticompetitive behavior. 3 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law Par. 810 at 296 (1978).

The only evidence of power to exclude competition to which L.A. Land directs our attention concerns particular anticompetitive acts aimed at Harold Gelber in 1985, and others aimed at L.A. Land itself. The latter acts are the subject of this litigation; though these acts may arguably have been unjustifiable, it is not possible to ascertain whether they are related to the maintenance of monopoly power and therefore "exclusionary" [15] in the antitrust sense without proof of market power. See id. Par. 813 at 301. In other words, evidence of these acts does not prove power to exclude competition. Assuming without deciding that the record fully supports findings that, as L.A. Land sought to prove at trial, Brunswick prepared a false or misleading market survey, delayed transmittal to DCC of L.A. Land's financing application, and prevailed upon Timberlake not to contract with L.A. Land, these findings only support the conclusion that Brunswick committed anticompetitive acts. Whether those acts maintained a Brunswick monopoly is a question which logically requires some other proof of monopoly power. If this assessment were not correct then "possession of monopoly power" and "willful acquisition or maintenance of that power," Pacific Express, 959 F.2d at 817, would not be separate elements of a section 2 claim; rather, the latter would prove the former.

As to the Gelber evidence, even accepting L.A. Land's description of the evidence as accurate, it establishes no more than that Brunswick dissuaded Gelber from entering the market by threatening to compete (that is, by indicating that [16] it intended to open a second bowling center in the market.) L.A. Land does not suggest that Brunswick set up any actual barriers to Gelber's entry into the market. See Syufy, 903 F.2d at 668 (a strong competitor's ability to deter entry by others is not a "structural barrier to entry"). HN6[] Evidence of threatened competition can not rationally support an inference of power to exclude competition, particularly where a court has already determined that the acts in question were not exclusionary - Gelber brought an antitrust suit based on these events and lost. Thus, this evidence does not support a finding of monopoly power.

---

[3] Average price is a composite of all the different prices charged in a bowling center and does not represent the actual price paid by any consumer.

Finally, L.A. Land contends it proved that substantial barriers to entry existed in the relevant market. It argues that evidence of "Brunswick's systematic campaign to exclude competitors, such as L.A. Land and Gelber" readily supports a jury finding of high barriers to entry. We reject this argument for the simple reason that anticompetitive conduct by one firm against another is not an "entry barrier." Barriers to entry may be defined as either "additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred [17] by new entrants," or "factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn [*1428] monopoly returns." Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law Par. 409' at 509-10 (1992 Supp.) (internal quotation omitted). [4] The evidence of Brunswick's behavior toward L.A. Land and Gelber fits neither definition.

L.A. Land also argues that the difficulty of obtaining financing for a new center's bowling equipment is a barrier to entry. This is a more serious proposition. There is some evidence in the record that lenders generally have [18] trepidations about financing bowling equipment purchases. Though there was also evidence that some 19 different lenders have financed purchases of Brunswick equipment since 1986, the jury was entitled to find that bowling equipment financing is hard to obtain. However, the jury could not rationally construe this factor as a barrier to entry, as there was no evidence that the lenders who were willing to finance bowling equipment imposed higher financing costs on new entrants than on established firms. See note 4. The fact that many lenders do not understand the bowling market does not mean that the capital costs for new entrants and incumbents in the market differ, or that it is any more difficult for new entrants to obtain financing than incumbents. Cf. Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1490 (9th Cir. 1991) (a jury could not reasonably find cost of equipping a physician's office to be a significant entry barrier where evidence does not permit comparing that cost to potential competitors' resources or expected returns). The disadvantage of new entrants as compared to incumbents is the hallmark of an entry barrier. [19] See 2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law Par. 409e at 303 ("The mere fact that entry requires a large absolute expenditure of funds does not constitute a 'barrier to entry'; a new entrant is disadvantaged only to the extent that he must pay more to attract those funds than would an established firm."). Thus, the record does not support a finding of significant entry barriers.

The fundamental problem in this case is that L.A. Land pursued a flawed theory, which the district court should not have sent to the jury. L.A. Land's antitrust theory was a source of considerable confusion and controversy throughout this litigation in the district court. Early on in the case, L.A. Land chose not to allege that Brunswick monopolized the market for bowling equipment - that is, L.A. Land specifically eschewed a supply monopoly theory; consequently, it was precluded from obtaining discovery on that theory. Throughout the litigation, the question surfaced whether L.A. Land could prove its case without showing monopolistic control over the supply of equipment and access to lenders and builders. The district court on several occasions expressed its doubt about L.A. Land's theory, [5] but sent [20] it to the jury nonetheless. For example, in denying Brunswick's mid-trial directed verdict motion, the court stated:

---

[4] The main sources of entry barriers are: (1) legal license; (2) control over an essential or superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preferences for established brands or company reputations; and (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants. Economies of scale may also be considered an entry barrier in some situations. 2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law Par. 409b at 299-300 (1978). L.A. Land points to no evidence which fits in any of these categories.

[5] In its February 27, 1989 order denying Brunswick's first motion for summary judgment, the court stated the following:

On the present record, plaintiffs have not met their burden of submitting sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case for all the elements of the alleged antitrust offenses. Nevertheless, the Court believes that plaintiffs should have more time to engage in discovery to support their claims. . . . The Court cautions plaintiffs, however, that the theory of their case is confused and problematic.

Despite plaintiffs' insistence that the Brunswick market study is patently false, because the survey states that Palmdale can support only one new center, plaintiffs themselves argued to this Court during a prior hearing that Palmdale could only add one new center. Moreover, plaintiffs must offer proof that Brunswick's position as a manufacturer of bowling equipment gives Brunswick control of the many banks from which plaintiffs could receive financing. There is already some evidence that Brunswick has no such power in the financial markets.

[21] I have decided to deny the motion. However, in denying the motion, I do not want [*1429] to indicate that I think there is not any merit in what the defendants say. I think that there is enough to go to the jury, but I must tell you, Mr. Disner, that there are a couple of things in there that bother me tremendously and what bothers me is that . . . because there were other lenders and there were other builders available, you just wonder if they couldn't have gone to those builders or those lenders, and that has been a problem all during the time we were arguing the motion.

R.T. at 1648.

In the factual circumstances of this case, a rational jury could not conclude that Brunswick possessed the power to exclude competition from the relevant market without hearing evidence that Brunswick had monopoly control of the equipment market. Cf. Indiana Grocery, Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1414 (7th Cir. 1989). [6] [23] L.A. Land never alleged that Brunswick had power to exclude from the market a potential competitor that chose to purchase equipment from a company other than Brunswick, nor did it prove that other suppliers did not exist. [7] A supply monopoly [22] theory, if it could be substantiated, logically would have led to proof of Brunswick's power to exclude competition in the retail bowling market. The theory which L.A. Land did pursue, however, apparently led it to focus on proof of particular anticompetitive acts and leave unsatisfied the requirement that it show Brunswick possessed the power to control prices or exclude competition. Consequently, because the evidence does not support a finding of monopoly power, the antitrust claim must fail. See Syufy, 903 F.2d at 671 n. 21 (plaintiff can not prevail on section 2 claim without proof of defendant's power to exclude competition).

B. Tort Claims

L.A. Land's tort claims were based on Brunswick's alleged interference in L.A. Land's business relationships with DCC and Timberlake. In order to succeed at trial on its claims of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, L.A. Land had to prove these elements: (1) an economic relationship containing the probability of future economic benefit to L.A. Land; (2) knowledge by Brunswick of the existence of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of Brunswick designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) damages to L.A. Land proximately caused by Brunswick's acts. Buckaloo v. Johnson, 14 Cal. 3d 815, 122 Cal. Rptr. 745, 752, 537 P.2d 865 (Cal. 1975).

The jury specifically answered in the affirmative the question whether Brunswick "intentionally and improperly interfered, without justification or privilege, with any prospective economic advantage of" L.A. Land. The jury further replied [24] affirmatively to the question whether "any such act of interference proximately caused damage" to L.A. Land. Because the form of verdict did not distinguish between Brunswick's alleged interference in L.A. Land's relationship with DCC and in its relationship with Timberlake, we consider both claims.

1. L.A. Land - DCC Relationship.

Because L.A. Land rejected a supply monopoly theory, it apparently never did offer proof that Brunswick, as a supplier, controlled all sources of financing.

[6] In Indiana Grocery, the court observed that "the output of the Indianapolis retail grocery market is, of course, groceries, and Indiana Grocery concedes that Kroger could never control the supply of groceries in the Indianapolis retail market. If so, it is very difficult to see how Kroger could ever restrict total market output and thereby raise prices." Id. (emphasis in original). The court further noted that "while market share may indicate market power in certain cases, the two are not necessarily the same. Market share indicates market power only when sales reflect control of the productive assets in the business, for only then does it reflect an ability to curtail total market output." Id. By failing to prove a supply monopoly, L.A. Land essentially failed to prove that Brunswick controlled access to the productive assets of the retail bowling services market.

[7] The jury could have inferred from the evidence presented, however, that Brunswick was a desirable supplier at the relevant time.

Brunswick argues that, as a matter of law, L.A. Land's allegations fail to support a tort claim because Brunswick was not a stranger to the relationship between L.A. Land and DCC, and indeed had a financial stake in that relationship. Brunswick contends, relying on Gianelli Distributing Co. v. Beck & Co., 172 Cal. App. 3d 1020, 219 Cal. Rptr. 203, 221 (Cal. Ct. App. 1985), that evidence in the [*1430] record must support a finding of an independent economic relationship between L.A. Land and DCC. Brunswick correctly asserts that evidence in the record instead shows that, because of its agreement with DCC, Brunswick was a necessary party to the prospective relationship between DCC and L.A. Land. See, e.g., R.T. at 2275 (testimony by DCC official: "We weren't willing to make loans on new centers without some form of recourse guarantee[] from Brunswick [25] so we wouldn't have made any of these loans without it."); R.T. at 2263 (testimony that DCC required Brunswick to prepare loan application packages for potential purchasers); R.T. at 2276 (testimony that DCC required Brunswick to prepare market surveys as part of loan packages because of Brunswick's superior knowledge of bowling industry).

L.A. Land does not point to any evidence which indicates an independent relationship between itself and DCC, or which contradicts evidence that DCC would not be in the business of financing equipment purchases by Brunswick's customers without Brunswick's financial participation and information-gathering. Instead, L.A. Land counters Brunswick's argument by asserting that Brunswick's defense that its interference was justified by its repurchase obligations under the DCC-Brunswick agreement is pretextual because there was no evidence that any perceived risks motivated Brunswick to discourage DCC from lending to L.A. Land. Apparently, L.A. Land fails to see that the issue is not Brunswick's motivation for interference as a matter of fact, but whether the tort claim falls as a matter of law because Brunswick was not a third party to the prospective relationship [26] between L.A. Land and DCC. Brunswick could not have "interfered" if there was no independent economic relationship between DCC and L.A. Land in which to interfere. See Kruse v. Bank of America, 202 Cal. App. 3d 38, 248 Cal. Rptr. 217, 234 (Cal. Ct. App. 1988) ("The tort of intentional interference with economic advantage affords a remedy for wrongful interference with an economic relationship by a third party.") (emphasis in original), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1043, 102 L. Ed. 2d 993, 109 S. Ct. 869, 109 S. Ct. 870 (1989). [8] Thus, we conclude that Brunswick has the better argument on this issue.

[27] L.A. Land also contends that Brunswick's argument is "moot" because Brunswick did not request the jury to be instructed on the issue of L.A. Land's independent relationship with DCC. L.A. Land cites no authority for this proposition, and we reject it on the basis of Air-Sea Fowarders, which holds that the truly applicable law rather than the jury instructions governs review of a denial of a directed verdict or judgment notwithstanding the verdict. 880 F.2d at 182-83 & n. 5. Finally, L.A. Land argues that Brunswick's defense does not apply because the jury implicitly found malicious conduct by awarding one dollar in punitive damages. The only authority which L.A. Land provides to support this contention is a "Cf." citation to a case, Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co., 79 Cal. App. 3d 13, 144 Cal. Rptr. 664 (Cal. Ct. App. 1978), which does not support its proposition either directly or inferentially. We are aware of no other authority which supports L.A. Land's argument.

2. L.A. Land - Timberlake Relationship.

Brunswick argues that because it and L.A. Land were competitors for the services of bowling center builders, the "privilege of competition" [28] protects it from liability for the pressure it applied on Timberlake not to build for L.A. Land. See Buckaloo, 122 Cal. Rptr. at 752 ("Perhaps the most significant privilege or justification for interference with a prospective business advantage is free competition."). Assuming without deciding that the record supports a finding that Brunswick prevailed upon Timberlake not to deal with its competitor, a number of authorities establish that Brunswick had the right under state law to do so.

---

[8] Contrary to an assertion by L.A. Land in this appeal, Brunswick's reliance on Kruse does not mean that its argument rests on the premise that it and DCC were "identical." Given the evidence in the record that Brunswick was not a disinterested "third party" to the relationship between L.A. Land and DCC, Kruse merely supports the proposition that L.A. Land's allegations do not state a tort claim as a matter of law because Brunswick was not a third party.

In A-Mark Coin Co. v. General Mills, Inc., 148 Cal. App. 3d 312, 195 Cal. Rptr. 859, [*1431] 867 (Cal. Ct. App. 1983), the court held that a firm's interference with another's prospective economic relation falls within the privilege of competition as long as: (1) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the firm and the other; (2) the firm does not employ wrongful means; (3) the firm's action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint of trade; and (4) the firm's purpose is "at least in part" to advance its interest in competing with the other. Id. (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 768.) This court confirmed in Pacific [29] Express that a firm's motive need only stem in part from a genuine competitive purpose. 959 F.2d at 819-20. Because the record shows that L.A. Land's contractual relations with Timberlake were "merely contemplated or potential," Brunswick was free to "refuse to deal with third parties [e.g., Timberlake] unless they cease dealing with" L.A. Land. A-Mark Coin, 195 Cal. Rptr. at 867 (internal quotation omitted); see New Kids on the Block v. News America Publishing, Inc., 971 F.2d 302, 310 (9th Cir. 1992). L.A. Land points to no evidence in the record that shows Brunswick's sole motive in wedging itself between L.A. Land and Timberlake, if it did so at all, was other than to advance its own economic interest, or that otherwise suggests that the conditions for the privilege outlined above did not exist. [9]

[30] In addition, L.A. Land's proposition is belied by the facts of A-Mark Coin, which did not involve competition for a customer, but rather for a particular good. In that case, the court held that the privilege of competition protected the actions of a successful bidder for a coin collection against an allegation by the unsuccessful bidder of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. A-Mark Coin, 195 Cal. Rptr. at 861-64. Thus, Brunswick's conduct with respect to Timberlake is privileged.

IV. CONCLUSION

We conclude that the evidence regarding the antitrust claim does not support a finding that Brunswick possessed monopoly power. We further conclude that L.A. Land's claim that Brunswick interfered with its prospective relationship with DCC fails as a matter of law because Brunswick was not a stranger to that relationship. Also, the privilege of competition protected Brunswick's conduct with respect to the prospective relationship between L.A. Land and Timberlake. Therefore, we reverse the district court's judgment and remand with directions to enter judgment in favor of Brunswick on L.A. Land's claims of both monopolization and [31] tort. Consequently, we deny L.A. Land's request for attorneys' fees on appeal.

---

[9] An exception is that L.A. Land does assert (presumably relying on evidence pertaining to the antitrust claim) that the interference here created an unlawful restraint of trade. Because we reverse the district court's judgment on the antitrust claim, no basis for this assertion remains.

Lifemark Hosps. v. Liljeberg Enters.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

October 19, 1993, Decided ; October 19, 1993, Filed; October 20, 1993, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. 93-1794 SECTION: E/1, BANKRUPTCY NO. 93-10295

Reporter
161 B.R. 21 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14830 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,437

LIFEMARK HOSPITALS OF LOUISIANA, INC. v. LILJEBERG ENTERPRISES, INC.; IN RE: LILJEBERG ENTERPRISES, INC., Debtor

Subsequent History: Motion to strike denied by Lifemark Hosps. v. Liljeberg Enters., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23889 (E.D. La., Oct. 29, 1997)

Core Terms

withdrawal, antitrust claim, antitrust, argues, non-bankruptcy, mandatory, interstate commerce, counterclaims, defenses, lease, anti trust law, federal law, statute of limitations, bankruptcy court, antitrust violation, de minimis, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Venue > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > Time Limitations

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > General Overview

HN1[] Procedural Matters, Venue

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 157(d).

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Venue > General Overview

HN2[] Procedural Matters, Venue

A court must withdraw the reference from the bankruptcy court when it is established that: (1) the proceeding in the bankruptcy court involves a substantial and material question of both title 11 and non-Bankruptcy Code federal law; (2) the non-Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C.S. § 101 et seq., federal law has more than a de minimis effect on interstate commerce; and (3) the motion for withdrawal was timely filed. Withdrawal of reference, however, is intended to apply only to a limited class of proceedings and is not intended to be an escape hatch through which most bankruptcy matters could be removed to a district court. In determining whether mandatory withdrawal is appropriate, the court examines the above listed factors individually.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN3[] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

To find that "substantial and material" consideration of non-bankruptcy laws is necessary, the court must determine that the motion to assume requires significant interpretation of such non-bankruptcy laws on the part of the court. Where application of non-bankruptcy federal law is merely speculative, mandatory withdrawal is not necessary. In addition, simple application of fixed legal standards provided by such non-bankruptcy laws to a given set of facts does not necessarily trigger mandatory withdrawal. Mandatory withdrawal of reference is appropriate only in cases where the bankruptcy judge must engage in significant interpretation, as opposed to simple application, of federal laws apart from the bankruptcy statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Enforcement & Execution > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

HN4[] Sherman Act, Defenses

Antitrust violations are a valid defense to the enforcement of a contract where the judgment of a court enforcing the contract would be enforcing the precise conduct made illegal by the antitrust laws. The antitrust defense is a narrow one, however, which is intended to avoid making the courts a party to the carrying out of one of the very restraints forbidden by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

HN5[] Defenses, Public Policy Violations

Where a contract may be substantially infected with antitrust illegality, the antitrust defense is appropriate.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN6[] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

Not every validly stated antitrust claim in a bankruptcy proceeding automatically triggers mandatory withdrawal.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN7[] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

Mandatory withdrawal of reference is not required where it seems that the case in issue will probably not require such interpretation of antitrust laws, but rather mere application of established antitrust principles to new facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN8[] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction over federal antitrust laws sits exclusively with the federal courts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN9[] Private Actions, Remedies

An antitrust cause of action accrues each time the defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiff. However, the mere acceptance of payments made pursuant to an illegal contract does not necessarily establish a continuing violation.

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Executory Contracts & Unexpired Leases > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Executory Contracts

HN10[] Administrative Powers, Executory Contracts & Unexpired Leases

See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 6006.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Contested Matters

HN11[] Procedural Matters, Contested Matters

See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN12[] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

Antitrust claims, by their very nature, have a greater than de minimis effect on interstate commerce.

Judges: [1] LIVAUDAIS, JR.

Opinion by: MARCEL LIVAUDAIS, JR.

Opinion

[*23] ORDER AND REASONS

Lifemark Hospitals of Louisiana, Inc. ("LHL") moves pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(d) to withdraw from the bankruptcy court the reference of Debtor's Motion to Assume Executory Contract and LHL's defenses to such assumption. LHL argues that withdrawal is mandated under 28 U.S.C. § 157(d) because resolution of the motion to assume will require substantial and material consideration of non-Bankruptcy Code federal laws. LHL's principal argument is that the contract the debtor seeks to assume violates federal antitrust laws. In the alternative, LHL argues that permissive withdrawal of the reference is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 157(d) because the motion to assume involves consideration of "intertwined core and noncore issues," and allowing the bankruptcy court to review and decide these issues in the first instance may create a complex jurisdictional problem for a reviewing district court.

Liljeberg Enterprises, Inc. ("Liljeberg" or "debtor") argues that mandatory withdrawal of the reference is inappropriate because resolution [2] of the motion to assume will not involve substantial and material consideration of non-bankruptcy laws. In addition, debtor argues that the antitrust claims (1) are barred by res judicata and/or collateral estoppel, (2) are barred by the statute of limitations, (3) are improperly asserted as counterclaims in a contested matter, and (4) can be asserted separately from the debtor's motion to assume the contract. Debtor further argues that permissive withdrawal is also inappropriate inasmuch as bankruptcy courts are better equipped to efficiently dispose of issues such as those raised in the motion to assume.

[*24] ANALYSIS

The Bankruptcy Code provides that

> HN1[] The district court may withdraw, in whole or in part, any case or proceeding referred under this section, on its own motion or on a timely motion of any party, for cause shown. The district court shall, on timely motion of a party, so withdraw a proceeding if the court determines that resolution of the proceeding requires consideration of both title 11 and other laws of the United States regulating organizations or activities affecting interstate commerce.

28 U.S.C. § 157(d). The first sentence [3] of § 157(d) allows for "permissive" withdrawal of reference, while the second sentence provides for "mandatory" withdrawal.

I. Mandatory Withdrawal

HN2[] A court must withdraw the reference from the bankruptcy court when it is established that (1) the proceeding in the bankruptcy court involves a substantial and material question of both title 11 and non-Bankruptcy Code federal law, (2) the non-Bankruptcy Code federal law has more than a de minimis effect on interstate commerce, and (3) the motion for withdrawal was timely filed. United States Gypsum Co. v. National Gypsum Co. (In re National Gypsum Co.), 145 Bankr. 539, 541 (N.D. Tex. 1992); see also Sibarium v. NCNB Texas National Bank, 107 Bankr. 108, 111 (N.D. Tex. 1989). Withdrawal of reference, however, is intended to apply only to a limited class of proceedings and is not intended to be an "'escape hatch through which most bankruptcy matters [could] be removed to a district court.'" In re National Gypsum Co., 145 Bankr. at 541 (citation omitted). In determining whether mandatory withdrawal is appropriate, the Court examines the above listed [4] factors individually.

A. Substantial and Material Questions of Bankruptcy and non-Bankruptcy Laws

The parties acknowledge the need to consider substantial and material questions of bankruptcy law in the motion to assume, therefore the Court's primary focus is on the extent to which non-bankruptcy law is implicated. HN3[] To find that "substantial and material" consideration of non-bankruptcy laws is necessary, the Court must determine that the motion to assume "requires 'significant interpretation' [of such non-bankruptcy laws] on the part of the Court." Sibarium, 107 Bankr. at 111 (citation omitted). Where application of non-bankruptcy federal law is merely speculative, mandatory withdrawal is not necessary. Id. at 113. In addition, simple application of fixed legal standards provided by such non-bankruptcy laws to a given set of facts does not necessarily trigger mandatory withdrawal. Dow Jones/Group W Television v. NBC, Inc., 127 Bankr. 3, 4 (S.D. N.Y. 1991) (requiring withdrawal of reference only in cases where bankruptcy judge must "'engage in significant interpretation, as opposed to [5] simple application, of federal laws apart from the bankruptcy statutes'") (citation omitted).

Here, LHL argues that its antitrust claims are "substantial and material" to resolution of the motion to assume, and are neither speculative nor peripheral. LHL claims that determining the antitrust issues will require more than "rote application [] of federal law" and further states that "application of the antitrust laws is not routine." LHL's Response to Amended Mem. in Opposition to Mtn to Withdraw Reference 3, 4.

In support of its position that resolution of the antitrust claims is necessary for deciding the motion to assume, LHL argues that "the antitrust issues go to the heart of the Assumption Motion because their resolution will determine if a contract exists for the debtor to assume." LHL's Mem. in Support of Mtn to Withdraw Reference 8. HN4[] Antitrust violations are a valid defense to the enforcement of a contract where the judgment of a court enforcing the contract would be enforcing the precise conduct made illegal by the antitrust laws. Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., 212 U.S. 227, 29 S. Ct. 280, 290-92, 53 L. Ed. 486 (1909). The antitrust defense is a narrow [6] one, however, which is intended to avoid "'making the courts a party to the carrying out of one of the very restraints forbidden by the Sherman Act.'" Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, [*25] Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1059 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1105, 74 L. Ed. 2d 953, 103 S. Ct. 729 (1983) (quoting Kelly v. Kosuga, 358 U.S. 516, 520, 79 S. Ct. 429, 432, 3 L. Ed. 2d 475 (1959)). Thus, if the assumption of the lease contract would constitute implicit enforcement of the alleged antitrust violations, LHL's antitrust defense may be appropriate.

LHL argues that the lease contract between itself and the debtor consists of an illegal tying agreement. This argument is bolstered by statements of the state trial court judge who presided over a prior contract dispute between LHL and the debtor:

> The monopolistic intent of the Clinical Pharmacy agreement is clear from the claim asserted by Liljeberg Enterprises against Lifemark for the blood derivative products purchased from sources other than Liljeberg Enterprises. This fact alone seems to underscore the monopolistic effect of the Clinical Pharmacy Agreement.

[7] Liljeberg Enterprises, Inc. v. Lifemark Hospitals of Louisiana, Inc., No. 87-12474, Civ. Dist. Ct. Orleans, Reasons for Judgment, Oct. 10, 1990, at 4 (attached as debtor's Exh. "B" to Amended Mem. in Opposition to Mtn to Withdraw Reference). Thus, it appears that the antitrust violations alleged by LHL are not minor nor collateral aspects of the lease contract, and allowing assumption would be to implicitly enforce the alleged illegal provisions. In such circumstances, HN5[] where a contract may be substantially infected with antitrust illegality, the antitrust defense is appropriate. Kaiser Aluminum, 677 F.2d at 1059-60. As a result, resolution of the antitrust issues is necessary to deciding the motion to assume.

LHL asserts that because antitrust issues are involved, withdrawal of the reference is necessary. In support of its assertion, LHL cites Michigan Milk Producers Assoc. v. Hunter, 46 Bankr. 214 (N.D. Ohio 1985). In Michigan Milk Producers, the court found that the Trustee's allegation that a supply agreement restrained interstate trade in milk products required "substantial and material consideration of federal [8] antitrust" laws, thereby requiring withdrawal of the reference. Id. at 216. However, HN6[] not every validly stated antitrust claim in a bankruptcy proceeding automatically triggers mandatory withdrawal.

In Dow Jones/Group W, the court found that HN7[] mandatory withdrawal of reference was not required, because "as the record now stands, it seems that the case in issue will probably not require such interpretation [of antitrust laws], but rather mere application of established antitrust principles to new facts." Dow Jones/Group W, 127 Bankr. at 5. The Dow Jones/Group W opinion does not provide any development of the facts which led the court to its conclusion. The court did, however, cite the "wasting nature of the debtor's property [as] an additional factor militating against withdrawal." Id.

Absent a more developed record, and without examining the merits of the instant antitrust claims, the Court is unable to say that such claims require mere routine application of established antitrust principles to new facts. The exclusive dealing aspects of the contract do not in and of themselves constitute per se violations of [9] the Sherman Act. See Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1558-60, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984). LHL claims that deciding its antitrust claims will require, among other things, definition of the relevant product and geographic market area, and determinations of whether competition was unreasonably restrained by a tying or exclusive dealing agreement, whether a particular hospital lease constituted a tying product, and whether debtor's conduct constituted an unfair trade practice. Determination of LHL's antitrust defenses to the motion to assume will involve more than "rote application" of established antitrust law.

Because determination of the antitrust claims is necessary in determining whether a contract exists to be assumed in the first place, and because determination of these antitrust claims requires more than routine application of established law, the Court finds that "substantial and material" consideration of non-bankruptcy federal law is needed for the resolution of the motion to assume. However, the debtor argues that [*26] the Court need not consider the antitrust defenses and counterclaims raised by LHL for other reasons as well. Debtor argues [10] that LHL's antitrust claims are improperly raised because they (1) are barred by res judicata and/or collateral estoppel, (2) are barred by the statute of limitations, (3) are improperly asserted as counterclaims in a contested matter, and (4) should be asserted separately from the debtor's motion to assume the contract. The Court addresses these contentions below.

1. Preclusion

Debtor argues that LHL is precluded in this action from raising antitrust claims because "Lifemark admitted that it could have and should have asserted the federal and state antitrust claims as a defense to the state court proceeding [for declaratory judgment and damages]." Debtor's Amended Mem. in Opposition to Mtn to Withdraw Reference 9. However, regardless of LHL's or debtor's belief that such claims "could have and should have" been brought in state court, they could not have been. HN8[] Jurisdiction over federal antitrust laws suits exclusively with the federal courts. 15 U.S.C. § 15; see also Hayes v. Solomon, 597 F.2d 958, 984 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1078, 62 L. Ed. 2d 761, 100 S. Ct. 1028 (1980) ("federal courts have exclusive [11] jurisdiction over federal antitrust claims"). In Hayes, the Fifth Circuit held that > the . . . state court had no jurisdiction to consider the alleged federal antitrust violations arising out of the breach of the lease. Therefore, we hold that the state court suit is not a res judicata bar to this federal antitrust action.

Id. at 985. See also Kurek v. Pleasure Driveway and Park District, 583 F.2d 378, 379 (7th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1090, 59 L. Ed. 2d 57, 99 S. Ct. 873 (1979) (federal antitrust claims not precluded despite defendants' argument that they were adjudicated in state court because jurisdiction over federal antitrust suits is exclusively in federal courts). Similarly here, res judicata does not preclude the instant antitrust claims. Furthermore, because the antitrust issues were not--and could not have been--litigated in the state court action, collateral estoppel is inapplicable.

2. Statute of Limitations

Debtor next argues that LHL's antitrust claims are barred by the four-year statute of limitations provided by the Sherman Act because the lease which is the subject of the motion [12] to assume was executed over four years ago. 15 U.S.C. § 15b. LHL agrees that the four-year statute of limitations applies, but argues that there exists a continuing violation such that a cause of action accrues with each alleged violation, not just on the original execution of the lease.

The general rule in the Fifth Circuit is that "an HN9[] antitrust cause of action accrues each time the defendant commits an act that injures [the] plaintiff." Bell v. Dow Chemical Co., 847 F.2d 1179, 1186 (5th Cir. 1988). However, the mere acceptance of payments made pursuant to an illegal contract does not necessarily establish a continuing violation. Kaiser Aluminum, 677 F.2d at 1052-53. Whether the contract between LHL and the debtor, and the actions taken by the parties subsequent to execution of the contract, constitute continuing violations are questions going to the merits of the antitrust allegations and are not apparent from the face of the pleadings. This being so, the Court does not at this juncture find that the antitrust claims are barred by the statute of limitations.

3. Antitrust Claims are [13] Improper Counterclaims

Debtor argues that LHL's antitrust claims are improperly raised as counterclaims to a contested matter. HN10[] Bankruptcy Rule 6006 provides that "[a] proceeding to assume . . . an executory contract, including an expired lease, . . . is governed by Rule 9014." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 6006. Debtor argues that the rule governing counterclaims in bankruptcy matters (Rule 7013) is not among those listed in Rule 9014 as applying to contested matters, and therefore the antitrust claims should be dismissed. However, debtor appears to misunderstand the full nature of LHL's claims. LHL raises its antitrust claims not only in the form of counterclaims, but also in the form of defenses to the assumption motion. While Rule 9014 states [*27] that no response is required [1] to a motion to assume, that does no mean that no response is allowed. Thus, Rule 9014 does not operate to bar defenses to a motion to assume a contract. The Court is persuaded by LHL's argument that antitrust allegations tending to demonstrate the illegality of a contract are valid defenses to the assumption of that contract.

[14] 4. The Antitrust Claims can be Asserted Separately

As discussed above, the antitrust claims advanced by LHL are not merely counterclaims, but are also defenses to the motion to assume. As such, they are integral to a consideration of the motion to assume. It is illogical that defenses to a motion could be brought separate and apart from the proceeding on the motion itself. Therefore, debtor's argument to that end must fail.

B. Effect of non-Bankruptcy Laws on Interstate Commerce

Courts generally hold that HN12[] antitrust claims, by their very nature, have a greater than de minimis effect on interstate commerce. See, e.g., In re National Gypsum Co., 145 Bankr. at 542 ("if U.S. Gypsum's patent infringement claims raise an antitrust defense in response, then certainly--by implication at least--there is more than a de minimis effect on interstate commerce"); Dow Jones/Group W, 127 Bankr. at 4 ("antitrust laws clearly do concern interstate commerce"). Accordingly, the Court finds that LHL's antitrust claims have a greater than de minimis effect on interstate commerce.

C. Timeliness of LHL's Motion to Withdraw

[15] Debtor filed its motion to assume in the bankruptcy court on March 26, 1993. LHL filed its motion to withdraw the reference on May 17, 1993--fifty-two days after the motion to assume was filed, but prior to hearing on the motion to assume. The Court does not find this delay was unreasonable. Therefore, the filing of the motion to withdraw reference was timely.

---

[1] HN11[] Bankruptcy Rule 9014 provides in pertinent part that "in a contested matter . . ., relief shall be requested by motion. . . . No response is required under this rule unless the court orders an answer to the motion." Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014.

Having determined that "substantial and material" consideration of non-bankruptcy laws is necessary to resolution of the motion to withdraw reference, and because antitrust violations have a greater than de minimis effect on interstate commerce, and finding that such motion to withdraw was timely filed, mandatory withdrawal of reference pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 157(d) is required.

II. Permissive Withdrawal

Having found mandatory withdrawal necessary, the motion for permissive withdrawal is moot.

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that LBL's motion for withdrawal of reference on the motion to assume (Rec. Doc. No. 1) be and is hereby GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that counsel for the parties to the motion to assume attend a STATUS CONFERENCE in Chambers, C-405, on FRIDAY [16] OCTOBER 29, 1993 at 3:00 P.M.

New Orleans, Louisiana, October 19, 1993.

MARCEL LIVAUDAIS, JR.

United States District Judge

End of Document

Willman v. Heartland Hosp. E.

United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Western Division

October 19, 1993, Decided ; October 19, 1993, Filed

No. 89-0785-CV-W-9

Reporter

836 F. Supp. 1522 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16471 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,412

CHARLES R. WILLMAN, M.D., Plaintiff, v. HEARTLAND HOSPITAL EAST, et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

conspiracy, medical staff, privileges, summary judgment, practices, staff, antitrust, conspire, monopoly, peer review, Sherman Act, competitors, peer review process, revoke, essential facilities doctrine, executive committee, member of the board, staff privileges, monopolization, general surgery, recommendation, internal medicine, optometrists, Credentials, facilities, leveraging, decisions, inferred, patients, anti trust law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) provides that summary judgment shall be rendered if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, it is the court's obligation to view the facts in the light most favorable to the adverse party and to allow the adverse party the benefit of all reasonable inferences to be drawn from the evidence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2[ ] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

If there is no genuine issue about any material fact, summary judgment is proper because it avoids needless and costly litigation and promotes judicial efficiency. The summary judgment procedure is not a disfavored procedural shortcut. Rather, it is an integral part of the federal rules as a whole. Summary judgment is appropriate against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish that there is a genuine issue for trial about an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN3[ ] Supporting Materials, Affidavits

The moving party bears the initial burden of demonstrating by reference to portions of pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, the absence of genuine issues of material fact. However, the moving party is not required to support its motion with affidavits or other similar materials negating the opponent's claim. The nonmoving party is then required to go beyond the pleadings and by affidavits, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. A party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment cannot simply rest on allegations and denials in his pleading to get to a jury without any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4[ ] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A genuine issue of material fact exists if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. The evidence favoring the nonmoving party must be more than merely colorable. When the moving party has carried its burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. The inquiry to be made mirrors the standard for a directed verdict: whether the evidence presented by the party with the onus of proof is sufficient that a jury could properly proceed to return a verdict for that party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

The essential elements of a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, are: 1) a contract, combination or conspiracy; 2) affecting interstate commerce; 3) which imposes an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN6[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

No court applies a Sherman Act per se rule when an individual has been denied privileges.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to satisfy the first element of a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim, there must be a conspiracy between separate entities. The Sherman Act does not reach conduct that is wholly unilateral.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The intra-corporate immunity doctrine applies to peer review proceedings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN9[] Sherman Act, Penalties

The decision to conduct the peer review process does not represent the sudden joining of independent economic forces that The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is designed to deter and penalize. There are not strong anti-trust concerns that would warrant a departure from the traditional concepts of agency since the hospital and medical staff, are not competitors.

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Establishment > Consent

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Establishment > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > Manifestation by Principal

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > Right to Control by Principal

HN10[] Establishment, Consent

A principal/agent relationship is established by showing manifestation of consent by one person to another that the other shall act on his own behalf, and subject to his control, and consent by the others so to act. In other words, the principal must in some manner indicate that the agent is to act for him, and the agent must act or agree to act on the principal's behalf and subject to his control.

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Authority to Act > General Overview

HN11[] Agency Relationships, Authority to Act

The "personal stake" exception arises when the officers or agents were, at the time of the conspiracy, acting beyond the scope of their authority or for their own benefit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Because a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices, an antitrust conspiracy cannot be inferred from highly ambiguous evidence.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > Professional Review

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

Because the purpose of peer review is to maintain quality patient care and because hospitals have an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and the number of doctors to whom it accords staff privileges, a peer review process that is at least as consistent with this lawful purpose as with an illegal conspiracy to restrain trade cannot support an inference of antitrust conspiracy and does not justify subjecting these health care provider defendants to the expense of a lengthy jury trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN14[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolization and attempted monopolization of trade or commerce. The offense of monopoly under § 2 has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from the growth or development of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. In order to demonstrate attempted monopolization a plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN15[] Regulated Industries, Sports

Under the bottleneck or essential facilities doctrine, those in possession of facilities, which cannot practically be duplicated must share the facilities with their competitors on fair terms. The elements of the essential facilities doctrine are: 1) control of an essential facility by a monopolist; 2) the inability to practically or economically duplicate the facility; and 3) the unreasonable denial of the use of the facility to a competitor when such use is economically and technically feasible. With regard to the third element, the antitrust laws do not require that an essential facility be shared if such sharing would be impractical or would inhibit the defendant's ability to serve its customers adequately. Applying this principle to a hospital's efforts to monitor the performance of staff doctors, several courts have found that the essential facilities doctrine is not applicable when a hospital facility is denied to a physician.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It would be singularly inappropriate to apply a doctrine, which would prevent a hospital from keeping doctors it had adjudged unqualified off of its staff. Neither public policy nor the Sherman Act can countenance such a result. Consequently the essential facilities doctrine is inapplicable to hospital staff privileges decisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > Professional Review

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > Restrictions

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The essential facilities doctrine is not applicable to cases involving hospital peer review decisions which revoke or limit a doctor's medical staff privileges.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN18[] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

Hospital decisions to revoke or limit staff privileges are essentially pro-competitive. The peer review process, by policing the competence and conduct of doctors, can enhance competition. By monitoring the quality of care received by patients at the hospital, the hospital improves its competitive position in the eyes of the health care consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN19[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

Although the essential facilities doctrine has its own elements, it is still a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act for either illegal monopoly or attempted monopoly. The second element of a monopoly claim is the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power. In order to satisfy this element the plaintiff must show that a jury could find no valid business reason or concern for efficiency in the choice the defendant made. Specific intent is also required in an attempted monopoly.

Counsel: [1] For CHARLES R WILLMAN, M.D., plaintiff: George M. Bock, Slagle, Bernard & Gorman, Kansas City, MO. David W. Harlan, Gallop, Johnson & Neuman, St. Louis, MO. Julian O. Von Kalinowski, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Los Angeles, CA. J. Bennett Clark, Senniger, Powers, Leavitt & Roedel, St. Louis, MO.

For HEARTLAND HOSPITAL EAST, HEARTLAND HOSPITAL WEST, HEARTLAND HEALTH SYSTEM, INC., defendants: Thomas G Kokoruda, George E. Leonard, Shughart, Thomson & Kilroy, Kansas City, MO. For RICHARD CRAIG, M.D., ERNEST WEINAND, M.D., EDWARD ANDRES, M.D., JAMES MCMILLEN, M.D., ORLYN LOCKARD, JR, M.D., CHARLES MULLICAN, M.D., WALLACE MCDONALD, M.D., defendants: R. Dan Boulware, Watkins, Boulware, Lucas, Miner, Murphy & Taylor, St. Joseph, MO. For EDWARD BEHELER, M.D., defendant: Matthew R. Davis, Field, Gentry & Benjamin, P.C., Kansas City, MO. Reed O. Gentry, Field, Gentry & Benjamin, P.C., Kansas City, MO. R. Dan Boulware, Watkins, Boulware, Lucas, Miner, Murphy & Taylor, St. Joseph, MO. Michael L. Taylor, Watkins, Boulware, Lucas, Miner, Murphy & Taylor, St. Joseph, MO. For ROBERT STUBER, M.D., defendant: R. Dan Boulware, Watkins, Boulware, Lucas, Miner, Murphy & Taylor, St. Joseph, MO. Mark R. Woodbury, [2] Michael L. Taylor, Watkins, Boulware, Lucas, Miner, Murphy & Taylor, St. Joseph, MO.

Judges: BARTLETT

Opinion by: D. BROOK BARTLETT

Opinion

[*1524] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON COUNTS I, II AND III, DISMISSING COUNT IV WITHOUT PREJUDICE AND DISMISSING PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON THE COUNTERCLAIM

Alleging a per se violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count I), restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count II), monopoly leveraging and abuse of an essential facility in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Count III) and intentional interference with business expectancy (Count IV), plaintiff Charles R. Willman seeks reinstatement of his admission privileges at defendant hospitals, costs of litigation, attorney fees and damages. Defendants Heartland Health Systems, Heartland Hospital East and Heartland Hospital West (hereafter "the defendant hospitals") and Richard Craig, Ernest Weinand, Edward Beheler, Edward Andres, Steven Krueger, James McMillen, Robert Stuber, Orlyn Lockard, Charles Mullican and [3] Wallace McDonald (hereafter "defendant doctors") move for summary judgment on Counts I, II, III and IV of the Complaint.

In addition to denying the claims asserted by plaintiff, defendants have asserted a Counterclaim against plaintiff for abuse of process and malicious prosecution. Plaintiff moves for summary judgment against defendants on the Counterclaim.

I. Facts

Plaintiff Dr. Charles Willman began practicing medicine in St. Joseph in 1959. Plaintiff practiced general surgery and provided general medical services in Buchanan County, Missouri, and surrounding areas. Willman had endoscopy facilities in his office and planned to construct a one-day surgical center. Defendant hospitals also had endoscopy facilities.

Defendant Heartland Hospital East is a Missouri Corporation. Prior to June 26, 1985, it operated under the name St. Joseph Hospital. Defendant Heartland Hospital West is also a Missouri corporation. Prior to June 26, 1985, it operated under the name Methodist Medical Center. In 1983 the Hospitals created a corporation, Heartland Health Affiliates, to coordinate the operation and services of the hospitals. Defendant Heartland Health System, Inc. is the successor to [4] Heartland Health Affiliates.

Defendant Richard Craig, M.D. practices general surgery. Craig was Chief of the Department of Surgery at Methodist Hospital and was a member of the Executive Committee.

Defendant Ernest Weinand, M.D. practices general surgery. Weinand was a member of Methodist's credentials Committee and of St. Joseph's Executive Committee.

Defendant Edward Beheler, M.D. practices general surgery. Beheler was a member of Methodist's Critical Care Committee, Methodist's Board of Trustees and of St. Joseph's Executive, Credentials and Critical Care Committees.

[*1525] Defendant Edward Andres, M.D. practices General Surgery. He was a member of St. Joseph's Critical Care, Ad Hoc and Credentials Committees.

Defendant Steven Krueger, M.D. practices primary care/internal medicine. He was a member of Methodist's Credentials and Critical Care Committees and of St. Joseph's Executive, Credentials and Critical Care Committees.

Defendant James McMillen, M.D. practices primary care/internal medicine. He was a member of Methodist's Executive and Credentials Committees and was President of General Staff at Methodist. McMillen also participated in proceedings before the St. Joseph Hospital Board [5] of Trustees.

Defendant Robert Stuber, M.D. practices internal medicine/primary care. He was a member of Methodist's Critical Care and Executive Committees and the Board of Directors of St. Joseph Hospital.

Defendant Orlyn Lockard, M.D. practices endoscopy. He was a member of Methodist's and St Joseph's Executive Committee. He was also president of the General Staff at St. Joseph's.

Defendant Charles Mullican, M.D. practices primary care/internal medicine. He was a member of Methodist's Executive and Critical Care Committees and of St. Joseph's Executive Committee.

Defendant Wallace McDonald, M.D. practices primary care/internal medicine. He was a member of Methodist's Executive Committee.

In February 1982, the Critical Care Committee of Methodist Hospital reviewed Willman's care of patient Bobby Fanning. After this review, Willman's privileges were limited by adding a consultation requirement. Willman's privileges were suspended at Methodist Hospital in February 1983. A hearing was held in June 1983, that resulted in a recommendation to the Board of Trustees at Methodist to revoke Willman's privileges. The Board suspended his privileges in July 1983. The Board denied Willman's reapplication [6] for privileges in 1984 and a new application for privileges in 1986.

St. Joseph Hospital reviewed the Fanning case in 1983. In May 1983, the Credentials Committee recommended revocation of Willman's privileges and the recommendation was approved by the executive committee in June 1983. The Board of Trustees voted to revoke Willman's privileges. At Willman's request, the Circuit Court of Buchanan County in 1983 issued a writ of mandamus requiring St. Joseph Hospital to restore his privileges. Willman practiced general surgery at St. Joseph Hospital for slightly less than 15 months, until the writ was dissolved in 1985. St. Joseph Hospital denied Willman's 1985 application for privileges for the year 1986.

In 1983 or 1984, Willman applied for privileges at Atchison Hospital, but was told that he should consider withdrawing his application because of the suspension of privileges at Methodist and St. Joseph Hospitals.

Willman applied for privileges at Spelman Memorial Hospital in 1985 and his application was rejected after Spelman received a copy of the Ad Hoc committee report dated October 19, 1983, from St. Joseph Hospital.

Willman's malpractice insurance with Momedico was cancelled [7] in July 1982. Willman was insured by St. Paul Fire & Marine from 1982 to August 17, 1985. St. Paul cancelled Willman's insurance because his privileges had been suspended at Methodist and St. Joseph Hospitals.

II. Standard for Summary Judgment

HN1[] Rule 56(c), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, provides that summary judgment shall be rendered if the "pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, it is the court's obligation to view the facts in the light most favorable to the adverse party and to allow the adverse party the benefit of all reasonable inferences to be drawn from the evidence. Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 1608, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970); Inland Oil and Transport Co. v. United States, 600 F.2d 725, 727-28 [*1526] (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 991, 62 L. Ed. 2d 420, 100 S. Ct. 522 (1979).

HN2[] If there is no genuine issue about any material fact, summary [8] judgment is proper because it avoids needless and costly litigation and promotes judicial efficiency. Roberts v. Browning, 610 F.2d 528, 531 (8th Cir. 1979); United States v. Porter, 581 F.2d 698, 703 (8th Cir. 1978). The summary judgment procedure is not a "disfavored procedural shortcut." Rather, it is "an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2555, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986); see also City of Mt. Pleasant v. Associated Electric Cooperative, Inc., 838 F.2d 268, 273 (8th Cir. 1988). Summary judgment is appropriate against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish that there is a genuine issue for trial about an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Celotex, 106 S. Ct. at 2553.

HN3[] The moving party bears the initial burden of demonstrating by reference to portions of pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, the absence of genuine issues of material [9] fact. However, the moving party is not required to support its motion with affidavits or other similar materials negating the opponent's claim. Id. (emphasis added).

The nonmoving party is then required to go beyond the pleadings and by affidavits, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Id. A party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment cannot simply rest on allegations and denials in his pleading to get to a jury without any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2510, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

HN4[] A genuine issue of material fact exists "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Id. The evidence favoring the nonmoving party must be more than "merely colorable." Id. at 2511. When the moving party has carried its burden under Rule 56(c), its opponent must do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) [10] (footnote omitted).

The inquiry to be made mirrors the standard for a directed verdict: whether the evidence presented by the party with the onus of proof is sufficient that a jury could properly proceed to return a verdict for that party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 106 S. Ct. at 2511.

In applying these rules to a case brought under 15 U.S.C. § 1, the Sherman Antitrust Act, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals cautions that "because a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices, an antitrust conspiracy cannot be inferred from 'highly ambiguous evidence.'" Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 998 F.2d 575, 577, (quoting Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). "Conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. Essentially, the question in ruling on a motion for summary judgment and on a motion for directed verdict is whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission [11] to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law. 106 S. Ct. at 2512.

III. Discussion

A. Counts I and II

In Counts I and II of the Complaint, plaintiff alleges violations of 15 U.S.C. § 1, the Sherman Antitrust Act. HN5[] The essential elements of a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act are:

1) a contract, combination or conspiracy;

2) affecting interstate commerce;

3) which imposes an unreasonable restraint of trade.

White & White, Inc. v. American Hosp. Supply Corp., 723 F.2d 495 (6th Cir. 1983) (citations omitted).

[*1527] In Count I of the Complaint, plaintiff alleges a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN6[] "No court has applied a per se rule when an individual has been denied privileges." Julian O. Von Kalinowski, 6 Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulations § 52.03[1] (1992). In Flegel v. Christian Hospital Northeast-Northwest, 4 F.3d 682, 1993 WL 345593 (8th Cir. 1993), the plaintiff, an osteopath, alleged that a hospital and doctors from the medical staff conspired with one another to boycott the plaintiff [12] from obtaining privileges in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals held that a per se analysis was not applicable to a medical staff privilege case because "the exclusion from staff privilege in this case arguably falls within the category . . . 'industry self regulation' and is consequently not appropriate for per se analysis." Id. at * 5 (citing Weiss v. New York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786 (3d Cir. 1984).

Similarly, in this case industry self-regulation is involved because Willman was excluded from staff privileges as the result of peer review. Therefore, plaintiff's per se theory must fail. Summary judgment will be granted to all defendants on Count I, the claim for a per se violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Even if a per se claim were available in a case involving exclusion from the medical staff of a hospital, summary judgment on Counts I and II would be granted because Willman has failed to present facts from which a reasonable jury could conclude that a contract, combination or conspiracy existed. Therefore, plaintiff has not demonstrated that he can satisfy the first element of a [13] § 1 claim.

Willman alleges that some of the doctors on the medical staff both conspired among themselves and with the defendant hospitals to revoke his hospital privileges and to deny his reapplication for privileges in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN7[] In order to satisfy the first element of a § 1 claim, there must be a conspiracy "between separate entities. It [the Sherman Act] does not reach conduct that is 'wholly unilateral.'" Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) (emphasis in original). "Independent action is not proscribed." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984).

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has not yet determined whether a hospital can conspire with its medical staff. Flegel v. Christian Hospital Northeast-Northwest, 4 F.3d 682, 1993 WL 345593 n.3 (8th Cir. 1993). There is a split among the Circuits on whether a hospital is capable of conspiring with its medical staff to violate antitrust laws. See cases cited in Flegel, F.3d at , 1993 WL 345593 n.3. I believe that the better-reasoned [14] decisions recognize that HN8[] the intracorporate immunity doctrine applies to peer review proceedings.

For instance, in Okansen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 703 (6th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137, 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992), the plaintiff contended that during the peer review process the medical staff conspired with the hospital and members of the medical staff conspired among themselves to revoke his hospital privileges. Based on the principle of intercorporate immunity articulated in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) Okansen, held that the staff is incapable of conspiring with the hospital.

> In effect, the medical staff was working as the Board's agent under an 'internal agreement to implement a single unitary firm's policies' of evaluating the conduct and competence of those to whom the hospital extended privileges.
>
> This type of delegation of authority does not implicate the concerns of section one of the Sherman Act. HN9[] The decision to conduct the peer review process does not represent the sudden joining of independent economic forces that section one [15] is designed to deter and penalize. 'There are not strong anti-trust concerns that would warrant a departure from the traditional concepts of agency since the hospital and medical staff are not competitors.' Far from being a competitor with the hospital, the medical staff was in fact a natural component of the hospitals management structure.

[*1528] 945 F.2d at 703 (quoting Nurse Midwifery Assoc. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605 (6th Cir. 1990).

Plaintiff responds relying on Steele v. Armour & Co., 583 F.2d 393, 398 (8th Cir. 1978). Plaintiff argues that an agency relationship does not arise solely because the hospitals controlled the final decision.

HN10[] "A principal/agent relationship is established by showing manifestation of consent by one person to another that the other shall act on his own behalf, and subject to his control, and consent by the others so to act." Montague v. Heater, 836 F.2d 422, 424 n.3 (8th Cir. 1988) (citing Leidy v. Taliaferro, 260 S.W.2d 504, 505 (Mo. 1953)). In other words, "the principal must in some manner indicate that the agent is to act for him, [16] and the agent must act or agree to act on the principal's behalf and subject to his control." Restatement of Agency 2d § 1 cmt. a. (1958).

Here, the hospital boards delegated to the medical staff the responsibility for conducting the initial peer review pursuant to a procedure adopted by each Board. After the medical staff performed its part of peer review, the board of each hospital made the final decision with regard to staff privileges. In the peer review process, the staffs participating in the hospitals' peer review procedures were acting as agents of the hospitals. As stated in Okansen, "this type of delegation of authority does not implicate the concerns of section one of the Sherman Act." Okansen, 945 F.2d at 703.

Plaintiff argues that, even if the medical staffs were agents of the hospitals, the "personal stake" exception to intercorporate immunity applies because the staff doctors conducting the peer review were competitors of the plaintiff. Of the approximately 65 doctors who participated in the peer review process at the hospitals, 43 practiced either general surgery, primary care/internal medicine, gynecology/urology or endoscopy. One [17] of Willman's expert witnesses has concluded that Willman competed with physicians who practice general surgery (Willman's specialty) as well as urology, gynecology, gastroenterology and internal medicine. Therefore, Willman asserts that the physicians who reviewed his performance were his competitors and that a reasonable inference arises that they acted against him with an anti-competitive motive.

HN11[] The "personal stake" exception "arises when the officers or agents were, at the time of the conspiracy, acting beyond the scope of their authority or for their own benefit." Morton Buildings of Nebraska, Inc. v. Morton Buildings, Inc, 531 F.2d 910, 917 (8th Cir. 1976) (citing Greenville Pub. Co. v. Daily Reflector, Inc., 496 F.2d 391, 399 (4th Cir. 1974)).

In Okansen, this same argument was made and rejected. There, two competitors of Dr. Okansen were involved in the peer review, although one of the competitors was not accepting new patients:

> In any event, the more important aspect of Greenville for the purposes of peer review is the degree of control the officer or agent with the independent interest exercised over [18] the defendant firm's decision making process. If the officer cannot cause a restraint to be imposed and his firm would have taken the action anyway, then any independent interest is largely irrelevant to antitrust analysis. See P. Areeda, Antitrust Law, P 1471d & g (1986). In Greenville, the individual who had an interest in another firm was also the defendant company's president, director, and shareholder. Consequently, he could control the defendant company's decisions.
>
> Here, by contrast, the medical staff had no such control. 'To give advice when asked by the decision maker is not equivalent to being the decision maker itself.' Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n v. Medical Serv. Ass'n, 745 F.2d 248, 259 (3d Cir. 1984). The Board of Trustees at Page Memorial requested and encouraged the medical staff to take corrective action against Okansen. The Board in the end retained authority over staff privilege decisions at Page Memorial. Because the challenged decision was subject to review by the hospital and because decision making authority in Dr. Okansen's case was dispersed among a number of individuals, the personal stake exception is inapplicable.

[19] Okansen, 945 F.2d at 705.

In the present case, the final decision on questions of staff privileges rested with the [*1529] Boards of the defendant hospitals. On July 22, 1983, the Board of Trustees of Methodist Medical Center met and voted unanimously by secret ballot to suspend Willman's privileges through December 31, 1983. Two of the thirteen Board members present at this meeting were physicians. Neither physician is a defendant in this case. On May 17, 1984, the Board of Trustees for Methodist met and considered the recommendation from the medical staff executive committee to deny Willman's application for reappointment. Four of the 16 Board members present were physicians. One of the physicians is a defendant. Fourteen votes were cast to deny Willman's application with two abstentions. Beheler, the defendant who was present, abstained. On December 18, 1985, the Board of Methodist voted unanimously to approve the decision of the executive committee of the medical staff which denied Willman's request for appointment to the staff. Five of the 14 Board members present were physicians. Only one physician Board member is a defendant in this case.

At St. Joseph, [20] the executive committee of the Board of Directors on August 25, 1982, directed the medical staff to review the action taken at Methodist restricting Willman's privileges. No defendants were present. The Board met again on November 7, 1983, with 15 members present. Three of the Board members were physicians, but only one defendant was present. At this meeting, Willman's privileges at St. Joseph Hospital were revoked by a unanimous vote. At the November 27, 1985, Board meeting, the Board unanimously voted to deny Willman's application for appointment to the medical staff. Eleven Board members were present, three of whom were physicians. Only one physician defendant was present.

At each of the crucial Board meetings in both hospitals, physicians made up a small percent of the voting Board members and only some of these physicians are defendants. At no meeting did the doctor members of either Board provide the determining votes. Therefore, no reasonable jury could conclude that the defendant doctors actually controlled the Board's decision regarding Willman's staff privileges.

Although the hospitals here could not conspire with their staff doctors, members of the medical staff could conspire [21] with each other and theoretically could coerce the Hospital Board to take action consistent with the objective of the conspiracy. "A medical staff can be comprised of physicians with independent and at times competing economic interests. As a result, when these actors join together to take action among themselves, they are unlike a single entity and therefore they have the capacity to conspire as a matter of law." Okansen, 945 F.2d at 706.

In the present case, Willman has not shown that the defendant doctors, who allegedly competed with Willman, did anything other than meet with other doctors during the peer review process. Willman seems to believe that "the fact the medical staff met and took action against him through the peer review process proves the existence of a conspiracy." Id. But just as in Okansen, this is not enough. "There must be something more such as a conscious commitment by the medical staff to coerce the hospital into accepting its recommendation." Id.

Here, each board member has presented an affidavit stating that he/she made the final decision and that he/she acted independently of the staff. "Denial of the conspiracy [22] by defendant's affidavits is sufficient, under Rule 56(e), to shift the burden to plaintiff to establish a factual question by the offering of evidence of the conspiracy." Pontius v. Children's Hospital, 552 F. Supp. 1352, 1375 (W.D. Pa. 1982) (citing Daley v. St. Agnes Hospital, Inc., 490 F. Supp. 1309 (E.D. Pa. 1980); see also Lamb's Patio Theatre, Inc. v. Unusual Film Exchanges, Inc., 582 F.2d 1068 (7th Cir. 1978)). Plaintiff provides a couple of affidavits that state that hospital Boards defer to staff recommendations about staff privileges. Even if the Boards of the two hospitals did defer to staff recommendations, there is no evidence they did so because they were coerced. As the affidavits of the non-physician Board members state, the Board members exercised their independent judgment.

Therefore, because this case is closer to Okansen than Greenville, the personal stake exception is inapplicable. The doctrine of [*1530] intracorporate immunity prevents plaintiff from establishing that there was a conspiracy between separate entities; the hospitals and their medical staffs were a single [23] entity.

If I assume that the doctors not only had the capacity to conspire with one another but that they did indeed conspire during the peer review process, this conspiracy would be meaningless in the context of the § 1 claims advanced by plaintiff "if the staff lacks the final authority to implement any agreement that it does reach." Okansen, 945 F.2d at 706. Because Willman has not presented facts from which a reasonable jury could conclude that the defendant doctors coerced the Boards of the hospitals to effectuate any agreement they had, his § 1 claim against defendant doctors must fail for lack of a causal connection between the assumed conspiracy and the action taken by the Board of each hospital on the several votes involving plaintiff's hospital privileges.

Even if a medical staff and a hospital can conspire to violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, Willman's claims as to Counts I and II would still fail because no reasonable juror could infer the existence of an antitrust conspiracy from the circumstantial evidence in this case. As stated by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 998 F.2d 575, 578 (8th Cir. 1993), [24] HN12[] "because a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices, an antitrust conspiracy cannot be inferred from 'highly ambiguous evidence.'" (quoting Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984)). Although the court "view[s] the evidence and all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable" to the plaintiff, "the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence is limited in a section one case." Id. (citing ( Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)). "Monsanto does not permit a jury to infer the existence of a conspiracy from ambiguous evidence." Id. at 579. The court in Lovett also stated that "conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. "An inference of conspiracy must be 'reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action.'" Id. (quoting Monsanto, 475 U.S. at 588). Although Lovett was a review of a judgment as a matter [25] of law, the standard for judging evidence on a motion for summary judgment parallels that of a directed verdict, the precursor to judgment as a matter of law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

In the present case, Willman presents no direct evidence of a conspiracy. However, Willman argues that the existence of a conspiracy can be inferred from facts which he has presented. Therefore, I must "decide whether a reasonable juror could infer the existence of a conspiracy from the circumstantial evidence." Lovett, 998 F.2d at 578. The heart of Willman's conspiracy claim is his factual conclusion that competitors participated in the peer review process. Willman then concludes that the peer review process was a "sham" to cover up his competitors' intent to drive him out of the St. Joseph market.

Plaintiff cites Gibson v. Berryhill, 411 U.S. 564, 36 L. Ed. 2d 488, 93 S. Ct. 1689 (1973) for the proposition that competitors of a physician should not participate in peer review of that physician. Gibson involved licensing issues at the state level, not peer review. In Gibson, the Alabama Board of Optometry [26] could only be composed of optometrists who were in private practice. Of the 192 optometrists in the state, 100 were in private practice and 92 were employed by others. There were no charges of substandard care in Gibson. "The aim of the Board was to revoke the licenses of all optometrists in the state that were employed by business corporations . . . and that these optometrists accounted for nearly half of all optometrists practicing in Alabama." Id. at 578. Driving half of the optometrists in the state out of business would have a direct, measurable effect on the business of the remaining private optometrists.

Here, Willman lists 43 physicians who he contends were competitors. One doctor's patients [*1531] divided among 43 physicians does not suggest the level of pecuniary interest that made the state licensure proceeding in Gibson a violation of due process. The insignificant competitive advantage to be gained by the alleged co-conspirators destroys the reasonableness of the inference Willman seeks to draw from the participation of his competitors.

In addition, Willman supports his argument that the peer review process was a sham by presenting expert [27] testimony that the care he provided was proper. However, Willman's own medical experts, even if believed fully, do not establish that the peer reviewers were so misguided that one could conclude reasonably that the process was a sham. For instance, Dr. Miller, one of Willman's medical experts, testified that "some of the cases, you know, represent outer edges of what we perceive as standard of care." Miller depo. p 171, 1. 19-22. Also, Willman's own experts do not state that the peer review committees were unreasonable to be concerned about the issues they inquired about. If believed, Willman's experts establish that reasonable medical minds may differ about how seriously Willman's treatment departed from acceptable practice. This would not allow a reasonable jury to conclude that the process was a sham.

HN13[] Because the purpose of peer review is to maintain quality patient care and because hospitals have an "unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and the number of doctors to whom it accords staff privileges," ( Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 12 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 30, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)), a peer review process that is at least as consistent with [28] this lawful purpose as with an illegal conspiracy to restrain trade cannot support an inference of antitrust conspiracy and does not justify subjecting these health care provider defendants to the expense of a lengthy jury trial.

Bolt v. Halifax Hospital Medical Center, 891 F.2d 810, 821 (11th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 924, 109 L. Ed. 2d 322, 110 S. Ct. 1960 (1990), relied on by plaintiff, demonstrates the deficiency in the factual record presented by plaintiff. In Bolt, the court concluded that a conspiracy could easily be inferred from expert testimony that no reasonable medical practitioner could have reached the same conclusion about a physician that was reached by the peer reviewers in that case. But none of Willman's experts state that a reasonable medical practitioner could not have concluded that Willman's work was substandard. The mere fact that Willman's experts may reach a different conclusion about the quality of care furnished by Willman is not sufficient to create an inference that the doctors and hospitals conspired in violation of antitrust law when they reached a different but nevertheless reasonable conclusion about the quality [29] of care Willman's patients received.

Plaintiff points to the refusal by defendant doctors to consider Willman's performance during the 15 months in which Willman practiced at the hospitals pursuant to a court order from Buchanan County, Missouri, as evidence of improper motive. There was friction between the plaintiff and defendants. The defendants believed that they were maintaining practice standards that would benefit the hospitals' reputation and protect the public. Plaintiff believed that he was being treated unfairly. As a result, Willman secretly tape-recorded numerous conversations with physicians in St. Joseph. Also, he obtained a court order requiring St. Joseph Hospital to allow him to practice in that hospital. Under these circumstances, not considering plaintiff's performance in the hospital while under the court order was just as likely to be because of the friction between Willman and the members of the medical staff as because of any antitrust conspiracy.

Certainly, Willman has had a full opportunity to develop the evidence in this case. Over 100 days of depositions have been taken. The inferences Willman relies on to support his conspiracy theory conflict with economic [30] reality because the hospitals had every incentive to include as many physicians as possible on their staffs. The more staff physicians a hospital has admitting and treating patients, the more revenue for the hospital.

Therefore, because the hospital and its medical staff do not have the capacity to conspire and because, even if they did have [*1532] this capacity, the plaintiff's evidence of conspiracy is not sufficient to create a genuine issue for trial, summary judgment will be granted on Counts I and II of the Complaint.

B. Count III

In Count III, plaintiff alleges a violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2. According to the plaintiff "count III of Dr. Willman's complaint states a cause of action pursuant to Section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 2) for two closely related theories: abuse of an essential facility and monopoly leveraging." Pl. Brief at 22.

HN14[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act "prohibits monopolization and attempted monopolization of trade or commerce. The offense of monopoly under section 2 has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of [31] that power as distinguished from the growth or development of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." City of Malden, Mo. v. Union Elec. Co., 887 F.2d 157, 160 n.3 (8th Cir. 1989) (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). In order to "demonstrate attempted monopolization a plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993).

HN15[] "Under the 'bottleneck' or essential facilities doctrine, those in possession of facilities which cannot practically be duplicated must share the facilities with their competitors on fair terms." City of Malden, 887 F.2d at 160. (citations omitted). The elements of the essential facilities doctrine are: 1) control of an essential facility by a monopolist; 2) the inability to practically or economically duplicate the facility; and 3) the unreasonable denial of the use of the facility to a competitor [32] when such use is economically and technically feasible. Id.

With regard to the third element, "the antitrust laws do not require that an essential facility be shared if such sharing would be impractical or would inhibit the defendant's ability to serve its customers adequately." Hecht v. Pro-Football, Inc., 187 U.S. App. D.C. 73, 570 F.2d 982, 992-93 (D. C. Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 956, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1121, 98 S. Ct. 3069 (1978) (footnote omitted). Applying this principle to a hospital's efforts to monitor the performance of staff doctors, several courts have found that the essential facilities doctrine is not applicable when a hospital facility is denied to a physician. In Pontius v. Children's Hospital, 552 F. Supp. 1352, 1371 (W.D. Pa. 1982), the court stated:

> We believe HN16[] it would be singularly inappropriate to apply a doctrine which would prevent a hospital from keeping doctors it had adjudged unqualified off of its staff. Neither public policy nor the Sherman Act can continence such a result. Consequently we now hold that the essential facilities doctrine is inapplicable to hospital staff privileges decisions.

In Robles v. Humana Hospital Cartersville, 785 F. Supp. 989, 996 (N.D. Ga. 1992), [33] the court, after quoting this language from Pontius, concluded "this Court concludes that HN17[] the essential facilities doctrine is not applicable to cases involving hospital peer review decisions which revoke or limit a doctor's medical staff privileges."

In Castelli v. Meadville Medical Center, 702 F. Supp. 1201, 1209 (W.D. Pa. 1988) the court granted summary judgement in a case involving an exclusive contract with a hospital because the court was "persuaded that the essential facilities doctrine is not appropriate for a hospital's decisions about professional services."

I agree with this conclusion. HN18[] Hospital decisions to revoke or limit staff privileges are essentially pro-competitive. "The peer review process, by policing the competence and conduct of doctors, can enhance competition." Okansen, 945 F.2d at 709. By monitoring the quality of care received by patients at the hospital, the hospital improves its competitive position in the eyes of the health care consumer.

Even if the essential facilities doctrine were applicable, plaintiff's claim would still fail because the hospitals' concerns about [*1533] the care provided by [34] Willman were not unreasonable. As previously discussed, even Willman's experts concede that the questions asked by the defendants during peer review were not unreasonable. Also, a Missouri state court has stated that one committee's decision to recommend revocation of Willman's privileges at St. Joseph's Hospital was reasonable. Willman v. Dooner, 770 S.W.2d 275 (Mo. Ct. App. 1989). "This Committee was not on a witch hunt. They picked Willman for good reasons." Id. at 278. In light of these considerations, the essential facilities doctrine is not available in this hospital staff privileges case.

Furthermore, even if I were to hold that the doctrine is applicable to staff privileges cases, the plaintiff's claim would still fail because he fails to show that the control of the hospital facility carries with it the power to eliminate competition in the downstream market.

In Alaska Airlines, Inc. V. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 118 L. Ed. 2d 316, 112 S. Ct. 1603 (1992), the court held that the essential facility doctrine only applies to a monopolist [35] if the monopolist's control over the facility carries with it the power to eliminate competition in the downstream market.

As stated in defendants' brief, the hospitals could not eliminate competition for general surgical services or any other medical services in St. Joseph:

> Alaska applies with equal force here. In this case, the "monopolist," Heartland, is incapable of ever eliminating competition in the market of general surgical services in St. Joseph, MO. plaintiff has not claimed, and could not claim, that surgery on persons in St. Joseph would cease to be performed if defendant refused to allow anyone to use its surgical facilities. Even if Heartland closed its doors to all surgeons (a reductio ad absudum, to be sure), Heartland could not prevent physicians from performing surgery for people in St. Joseph, although the site of that surgery might move from St. Joseph to some other location such as Liberty, North Kansas City, Kansas City, Cameron or Chillicothe. Thus, it is impossible for Heartland to ever monopolize the 'downstream' market of general surgery, and the essential facilities doctrine is not applicable to this Section 2 claim.

Def. Brief at 6.

[36] Additionally, HN19[] although the essential facilities doctrine has its own elements, it is still a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act for either illegal monopoly or attempted monopoly. The second element of a monopoly claim is "the willful acquisition or maintenance of" monopoly power. United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals stated that in order to satisfy this element the plaintiff must show that a jury could find no valid business reason or concern for efficiency in the choice the defendant made. White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98, 105 (4th Cir. 1987) (citing Aspen Skiing Co. V. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985)). Specific intent is also required in an attempted monopoly. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993).

Although the plaintiff has presented expert testimony that the expert would not have revoked Willman's hospital privileges, these experts do not state that it was unreasonable for either hospital to revoke his privileges. Willman has been unable to present [37] any evidence that the hospitals did not have valid business reasons for seeking to revoke the hospital privileges of a doctor who was believed reasonably to have rendered substandard care. Therefore, summary judgment will be granted as to the essential facilities claim of Count III.

Plaintiff also asserts a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act for monopoly leveraging. Plaintiff relies on Berkey Photo Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980), and Carleton v. Vermont Dairy Herd Improvement Association Inc., 782 F. Supp. 926 (D. Vt. 1991) for the proposition that monopoly leveraging is a separate claim under § 2. However, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, after the [*1534] Berkley Photo decision, stated that the recognition of a claim for monopoly leveraging was dictum. Also, Berkley Photo was a case involving a tying claim, not a case involving the denial of essential facilities. Twin Laboratories v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 570 (2d Cir. 1990). No tying claim has been alleged in this case.

In addition, [38] the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has held that "monopoly leveraging" is not an independent theory for recovery under § 2 of the Sherman Act, it is just a claim for an attempted monopolization of a second market. Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 547.

Therefore, because monopoly leveraging is just another way of alleging either monopolization or attempted monopolization, and because I have already determined that defendants are entitled to summary judgment on a claim of monopolization or attempted monopolization, summary judgment will be granted on all claims in Count III.

C. Count IV and the Counterclaim

Having granted summary judgement on Counts I, II and III, I decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction as to the state law claims asserted in Count IV and the Counterclaim.

IV. Conclusion

Plaintiff is no stranger to litigation over the peer review proceedings that led to the revocation of his privileges at the hospitals. See Willman v. Dooner, 770 S.W.2d 275 (Mo. Ct. App. 1989); State ex rel. St. Joseph Hospital v. Fenner, 726 S.W.2d 393 (Mo. Ct. App. 1987); State ex rel. Willman v. St. Joseph Hospital, 707 S.W.2d 828 (Mo. Ct. App. 1986); [39] and State ex rel. Willman v. St. Joseph Hospital, 684 S.W.2d 408 (Mo. Ct. App. 1984). The antitrust laws were not intended to be used to subject health care providers to protracted and expensive litigation over efforts to protect the public from substandard care when the evidence of defendants' acts is just as consistent with permissible self-regulation in the public interest as with an illegal conspiracy. See Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 998 F.2d at 577.

Accordingly, for the reasons stated, it is ORDERED that:

1) defendants are granted summary judgment as to Counts I and II of plaintiff's Complaint;

2) defendants are granted summary judgment as to Count III of plaintiff's Complaint; and

3) Count IV and the Counterclaim are dismissed without prejudice.

D. BROOK BARTLETT

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Kansas City, Missouri

October 19, 1993.

Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Cos. v. FTC

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

October 21, 1993, Filed

Civil Action No. 92-2760 (JLG)

Reporter

151 F.R.D. 483 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15053 **

DR PEPPER/SEVEN-UP COMPANIES, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Defendant.

Subsequent History: [1] As Amended.

Core Terms

Bottling, consent order, rights, prior approval, license, distribute, acquisition, soft drink, staff, proposed acquisition, proposed transaction, metropolitan, coverage, parties, ceased, entity, terms, agency's action, supermarkets, negotiated, franchise, vertical, sells, civil penalty, plaintiffs', formerly, acquire, brand, words, veto

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Informal Agency Action

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Reviewable Agency Action

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Judicial Review

Environmental Law > Administrative Proceedings & Litigation > Judicial Review

HN1[] Agency Adjudication, Informal Agency Action

Prior approval provisions in Federal Trade Commission (Commission) consent orders have been held to give the Commission a veto over proposed acquisitions or divestitures. The Commission's exercise of that veto with respect to a prior approval application is an adjudication within the meaning of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), falling within the residual category of informal adjudication, to which apply the minimal procedural requirements of § 555 of the APA, 5 U.S.C.S. § 555, and as such is reviewable as final agency action. A predicate for the lawful exercise of that veto power is that the prior approval provisions of a consent order govern the proposed transaction in the first place; if they do not govern, then the exercise of that veto in the denial of an application is arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law. 5 U.S.C.S. § 706(2)(A).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation

HN2[] Settlements, Consent Judgments

The court reads a consent decree essentially as it would a contract. Thus, while the meaning of a consent decree's terms must be discerned within its four corners, the inquiry is guided by conventional aids to construction, including the circumstances surrounding the formation of the consent order and any technical meaning words used may have had to the parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation

HN3[] Settlements, Consent Judgments

The rule that a consent order should be interpreted as a contract is particularly appropriate when the issue involves the interpretation of terms contained in the consent order itself, as opposed to procedural questions implicating the consent order but on which the order itself is silent.

Counsel: For Dr. Pepper/7-Up Companies, Inc., Plaintiff: Philip Dean Bartz, Morrison & Foerster, 2000 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Suite 5000, Washington, D.C. 20006. For Harold A. Honickman, Plaintiff: Peter E. Greene, Gary Alan MacDonald, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, 1440 New York Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005-2107.

For Defendant: Jeffrey Todd Sprung, Assistant United States Attorney, Judiciary Center, 555 Fourth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20001.

Judges: GREEN

Opinion by: JUNE L. GREEN

Opinion

[*484] MEMORANDUM OPINION

This case concerns the bottling and distribution of Seven-Up brand soft drinks in the metropolitan New York City area. It is the second of two related lawsuits brought by plaintiffs Harold A. Honickman ("Mr. Honickman") and Dr. Pepper/Seven-Up Companies, Inc. ("DPSU") against the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC" or "the Commission"), challenging the Commission's refusal to approve proposed acquisitions by Mr. Honickman of certain soft drink bottling assets pursuant to a 1991 Consent Order. The earlier case, referred to here as DPSU I and presently on partial remand to the FTC, concerned Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of assets of the now defunct Brooklyn Bottling Company [2] ("Seven-Up Brooklyn"). Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Cos. v. FTC, 798 F. Supp. 762 (D.D.C. 1992), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 301 U.S. App. D.C. 150, 991 F.2d 859 (D.C. Cir. 1993). This case concerns distribution rights formerly held by the also defunct New York Seven-Up Bottling Company ("New York Bottling") and is now before this Court on cross-motions for summary judgment. [1] For the reasons set forth below, the Court will grant plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and deny defendant's cross-motion.

THE PARTIES

Mr. Honickman owns interests in and controls [3] all voting rights of the Canada Dry Bottling Company of New York and the Pepsi Cola Bottling Company of New York, Inc., which are bottlers and distributors of soft drinks in New York State. AR 4. [2] DPSU is a manufacturer of soft drink concentrate, in particular of "Seven-Up," a leading lemon-lime flavored soft drink brand. Like other major concentrate manufacturers, DPSU does not distribute Seven-Up directly to consumers, but rather grants exclusive territorial marketing rights to bottlers to do so. New York Bottling was one such franchisee, with rights to bottle and distribute Seven-Up and other soft drinks in a portion of the lucrative New York metropolitan market before it ceased operations in October 1991. AR 6000. [3] DPSU and Mr. Honickman now want the latter to obtain the licensing rights that would enable him to bottle and distribute Seven-Up brand carbonated soft drinks ("CSDs") in territory formerly served by New York Bottling.

[4] In the case at bar, plaintiffs seek judicial review of the FTC's decision to deny prior approval in part to Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of these rights. In an opinion letter dated November 16, 1992, the Commission determined, first, that this proposed acquisition was subject to a 1991 Consent Order settling other litigation between [*485] Mr. Honickman and the FTC and, second, that the acquisition would likely have an anticompetitive impact on the market for CSDs in parts of Manhattan, the Bronx, and Westchester Counties, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTC Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 45. AR 6044-6065. Accordingly, the FTC denied his request for prior approval with respect to those areas. [4] Plaintiffs contend that these decisions are arbitrary and capricious, and that the FTC's rejection of Mr. Honickman's application for prior approval also violates his due process rights and substantive antitrust law.

[5] BACKGROUND

---

[1] DPSU I was heard and decided by the late Judge George H. Revercomb. The case at bar was also originally assigned to Judge Revercomb, who heard oral argument on the instant cross-motions on June 7, 1993. The case was reassigned to this Court after Judge Revercomb's death. In addition to reviewing the extensive Administrative Record ("AR") and the briefs, the Court has also reviewed the transcript of the June 7 hearing.

[2] Citations to the administrative record in this case are given herein as "AR ."

[3] Prior to its demise in October, 1991, New York Bottling's franchise territory covered Manhattan, the Bronx, and Westchester counties in New York, nine counties New Jersey, and parts of Connecticut. AR 6827. Apart from Seven-Up, New York Bottling also held distribution franchises for RC Cola (Royal Crown), Barq's, Perrier, Hawaiian Punch, and Crush (Cadbury-Schweppes). Id.; AR 5288.

[4] The Commission approved Mr. Honickman's application for the following New Jersey counties: Morris, Union, Somerset, Middlesex, Sussex, Hudson, Essex, Bergen, and Passaic. AR 6044.

Mr. Honickman's previous efforts to acquire rights to distribute Seven-Up in the metropolitan New York area and his involvement with the FTC in that connection are recounted in detail in Judge Revercomb's Memorandum Opinion in DPSU I and need not be repeated at length here. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 764-68. It suffices to say that Mr. Honickman's acquisition of the franchise rights and assets of Seven-Up Brooklyn was the subject of an administrative complaint brought by the FTC on November 2, 1989. See id. at 765. [5] Subsequently, Mr. Honickman and the FTC entered into an "Agreement Containing Consent Order" ("the Settlement Agreement") in January, 1991, to settle this litigation. See id., AR 1442-1462. The Settlement Agreement became final on July 25, 1991. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 765.

[6] The Consent Order portion of the Settlement Agreement contained the following provision in Paragraph II:

> that for a period of ten (10) years after the date this order becomes final, respondents shall not, without prior approval of the Commission, acquire directly or indirectly all or any part of the stock of, share capital of, equity interest in, assets of or rights relating to any Bottling Operation in any county in the New York Metropolitan Area where at the time of such acquisition any Existing Honickman Bottling Operation distributes CSDs directly using company-owned or equity distributors to supermarkets.

AR 1444. The Consent Order defined the term "Bottling Operation" as follows:

> "Bottling Operation" means any business, person, or other entity that distributes and sells CSDs directly using company-owned or equity distribution to supermarkets pursuant to a franchise, license, distribution contract, or other similar agreement; provided, however, a Bottling Operation shall not include any business, person or other entity that distributes and sells CSDs only by warehouse delivery or through a beer distributor that does not hold a CSD franchise, license or similar distribution [7] agreement.

AR 1443. Thus, according to this definition, Seven-Up Brooklyn -- the assets of which were at issue in DPSU I -- was a Bottling Operation and subject to the prior approval provisions of the Consent Order. Under the terms of Paragraph II of that Order, therefore, Mr. Honickman was required to make an application for and obtain the Commission's approval before he could proceed to reacquire Seven-Up Brooklyn's assets and franchise rights. The FTC's denial of that application constituted the agency action reviewed by the court in DPSU I. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 764-66.

Having been in financial difficulty for some time, New York Bottling ceased operations -- including all bottling and selling of soft drinks -- in October 1991. AR 6000. [6] On [*486] October 24, 1991, Mr. Honickman filed with the FTC a "Request For a Declaration Or in the Alternative For Approval to Obtain Certain Assets of New York Seven-Up" ("the Application"). AR 6000-6009. The Application informed the Commission that New York Bottling had ceased its operations and that Mr. Honickman wished to acquire "certain licensing rights, currently held by New York Seven-Up Bottling [8] Company." AR 6000. The Application also sought FTC permission for Honickman to distribute Seven-Up in the former New York Bottling territory on an interim basis. AR 6001. [7]

---

[5] Mr. Honickman first acquired Seven-Up Brooklyn in 1987. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 764. After the FTC commenced its investigation of that acquisition, but before it filed its administrative complaint, Mr. Honickman sold most of his interests in the company. See id. at 765.

[6] The precise date on which operations ceased is unclear from the record. Mr. Honickman's Application and various Commission memoranda give October 24, 1991 as the date. See AR 6000, 5164, 5288. An article from New York Newsday, attached to Mr. Honickman's Application, indicates that New York Bottling shut its doors on October 21, 1991. See AR 6010. A memorandum in aid of FTC consideration of Mr. Honickman's Application, submitted by plaintiffs and dated June 24, 1992, gives October 18, 1991 as the date on which New York Bottling "abruptly closed its doors." AR 6514. Virtually all of plaintiffs' filings in this case refer to the October 18 date. Whatever the precise date, however, it is undisputed that Mr. Honickman's Application was filed after New York Bottling ceased operations.

[7] On December 16, 1991, the Commission partially approved and partially denied Mr. Honickman's request for interim distribution, permitting interim distribution in the nine New Jersey counties, but not in the three New York counties. AR 6239-6246. Plaintiffs thereafter applied for emergency injunctive relief to compel the FTC to grant interim distribution in Manhattan, the

[9] With regard to the acquisition of these licensing rights, Mr. Honickman's Application made three arguments which are reasserted in plaintiffs' instant summary judgment motion. First, Mr. Honickman argued that the prior approval provisions of the Consent Order did not apply to the proposed transaction, which involved the acquisition of licensing rights directly from DPSU rather than from New York Bottling. AR 6003. DPSU -- a concentrate manufacturer -- was and is not a Bottling Operation within the meaning of Paragraph II of the Consent Order. Moreover, because New York Bottling had ceased operations entirely, DPSU planned to terminate the license of New York Bottling, thereby extinguishing its legal right to bottle and distribute Seven-Up brand products. AR 6004. In other words, according to the Application, "the transaction does not involve an acquisition of the assets of a 'Bottling Operation,' as that term is defined in the Consent Order." Id. Thus, Mr. Honickman asked in the first instance for a declaration that the Consent Order's prior approval provision did not apply to "a vertical assignment of a new license from the franchisor, DPSU." Id.

Second, Mr. Honickman argued [10] -- as he had in DPSU I -- that the proposed acquisition would be procompetitive because economies in distribution and marketing could be achieved by linking Seven-Up brands to a large scale distribution system. AR 6005; DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 765-66. Such economies of scale were necessary to compete effectively in a major metropolitan area such as New York. AR 6005-6006. Finally, Mr. Honickman argued -- again, as he had in DPSU I -- that, even if the proposed transaction were not considered procompetitive, it would nevertheless satisfy the requirements of the "failing company defense." AR 6006; DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 766. Indeed, as the Application pointed out, New York Bottling was not merely a failing firm, but a failed firm, with no prospects for reorganizing and with Mr. Honickman as the only available and viable purchaser. AR 6007-6008.

By the time Mr. Honickman submitted the Application to the FTC, he and DPSU were involved in the Brooklyn Seven-Up litigation before Judge Revercomb. Plaintiffs attempted to wrap the New York Bottling transaction together with the Brooklyn case by seeking leave to amend their [11] complaint, which Judge Revercomb denied by Order dated January 13, 1992. See Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Cos. v. FTC, Civ. A. No. 91-2712- GHR, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1295 (D.D.C. Jan. 13, 1992). This same Order dismissed all New York Bottling claims from the Brooklyn case on ripeness grounds, in view of the fact that the FTC had yet to rule on Mr. Honickman's October 24, 1991 Application. Id. The Seven-Up Brooklyn and New York Bottling cases henceforth proceeded on separate tracks.

[*487] The Commission placed the Application on the public record for comment, as is required by Section 2.41(f) of its Rules of Practice. See 16 C.F.R. § 2.41(f); AR 6083. Numerous public comments were submitted, see AR 6083-6235, including many submissions from Mr. Honickman and DPSU. AR 6134-6149, 6321-6322, 6323-6348, 6351-6478, 6508-6509, 6510-6558B, 6571-6572, 6591-6598, 6601-6604, 6606-6607, 6613-6614, 7108-7115. Mr. Honickman and representatives from DPSU also met on numerous occasions with FTC staff, see AR 6672-6673, 6674-6675, 6676-6679, 6680-6681, 6724-6730, 6735-6736, 6748-6749, 6750-6752, 6756-6758, 6770-6773, 6775-6826, 7451-7452, 7453-7455, and individually with each FTC Commissioner. AR 6584-6590, 6653-6662, 6663-6666.

[12] On November 16, 1992, the Commission issued its opinion letter granting in part and denying in part Mr. Honickman's request for prior approval. AR 6044-6065. This lawsuit followed.

ANALYSIS

The threshold issue, and the issue that most differentiates this case from DPSU I, is whether the prior approval provision of the Consent Order applies at all to the proposed transaction. As a preliminary matter, the FTC contends that this Court lacks jurisdiction to consider the question of Consent Order coverage. According to the Commission, the scope of the Consent Order would not be ripe for judicial review until the FTC actually sought to enforce it in a civil penalty action pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 45(1). In support of this contention, the FTC relies heavily on Flowers

Bronx, and Westchester County, which Judge Revercomb denied by Order dated December 19, 1991. See Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Cos. v. FTC, Civ. A. No. 91-2712- GHR, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19472 (D.D.C. Dec. 19, 1991).

Industries v. FTC, and two other cases. See Flowers Industries v. FTC, 849 F.2d 551, 553 (11th Cir. 1988) (citing Floersheim v. Engman, 161 U.S. App. D.C. 30, 494 F.2d 949, 952 (D.C. Cir. 1973); see also Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Engman, 527 F.2d 1115 (2d Cir. 1975). Thus, says the Commission, Mr. Honickman [13] would have to acquire New York Bottling's assets, await FTC enforcement of the Consent Order in a civil penalty action, and then assert non-coverage as a defense. Only then could a district court review the coverage issue. The implication of this argument is that the Court should assume that coverage is proper and proceed to analyze the merits of the FTC's decision. See Def.'s Mem. in Supp. of Summ. J. at 17-19.

This argument would have some force were the FTC's opinion letter of November 16, 1992 merely advisory or otherwise not a final agency action under the APA. See 5 U.S.C. § 704. A careful reading discloses that to have been the case in each of the cases relied upon by the Commission. In Flowers Industries, for example, what was at issue was an FTC letter approving the sale of two bakeries to a third party under the terms of a modified consent order. See Flowers Industries v. FTC, 849 F.2d at 552-53. The letter in question was not self-implementing and the FTC had taken no action to enforce it at the time the plaintiff sought declaratory and injunctive relief. See id. at 552. [14] Brown & Williamson Tobacco concerned the reviewability of FTC letters to tobacco companies stating that the Commissioners agreed with staff conclusions that the plaintiffs had violated consent orders pertaining to the Surgeon General's warning concerning the hazards of smoking and that the Commission intended to commence an action for civil penalties. See Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. v. Engman, 527 F.2d at 1117. At the time the plaintiffs filed their complaints, however, the FTC had not commenced civil penalty actions against them. See id. at 1117-18. Similarly, Floersheim v. Engman involved an FTC determination that certain "skip-tracer" forms sold by the plaintiff to creditors and debt-collection agencies did not comply with the terms of a cease-and-desist order. See Floersheim v. Engman, 494 F.2d at 951. Plaintiff thereupon filed suit seeking a declaration that the forms did comply and to stop the FTC from bringing a civil penalty action. See id. Each of these cases, in other words, involved an attempt to review an FTC determination concerning the scope of consent or cease-and-desist [15] orders before the Commission undertook the agency action made reviewable under 15 U.S.C. § 45(l) and 5 U.S.C. § 704.

This case is different, because the FTC determination as to the scope of the Consent Order was made in conjunction with [*488] agency action that is most assuredly reviewable by this Court. That agency action was the FTC's decision to deny Mr. Honickman's application for prior approval made pursuant to the terms of the Consent Order and the FTC's regulations. See AR 6044-6065; 15 U.S.C. § 2.41(f). HN1[] Prior approval provisions in FTC consent orders such as the one at bar have been held to give the Commission a veto over proposed acquisitions or divestitures. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 771 (citing United States v. Louisiana-Pacific Corp., 569 F. Supp. 1141, 1147 (D. Or. 1983); and West Texas Transmission L.P. v. Enron Corp., 1989 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16305, 1989-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P 68,424, at 60,333-34 (W.D. Tex. 1988), aff'd, 907 F.2d 1554 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. den'd, 111 S. Ct. 1105 (1991)). [16] As both the district court and the court of appeals made clear in DPSU I, the FTC's exercise of that veto with respect to a prior approval application is an adjudication within the meaning of the APA, falling within "the residual category of 'informal adjudication,' to which apply the minimal procedural requirements of Section 555 of the APA," and as such is reviewable as final agency action. DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 773, 776; DPSU I, 991 F.2d at 862-63. A predicate for the lawful exercise of that veto power is that the prior approval provisions of the Consent Order govern the proposed transaction in the first place; if they do not govern, as plaintiffs persuasively argue, then the exercise of that veto in the denial of an application is "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law." 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

Having determined that consideration of the coverage issue is now proper, the Court will turn to the interpretation of the Consent Order with regard to Mr. Honickman's proposed transaction. Our court of appeals has provided the following succinct [17] guidance on the interpretation of consent decrees:

> HN2[] "We read [a] Decree essentially as we would a contract. See United States v. ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 236-37, 43 L. Ed. 2d 148, 95 S. Ct. 926 . . . (1975); United States v. Western Elec. Co., 254 U.S. App. D.C. 415, 797 F.2d 1082, 1089 (D.C.Cir. 1986) . . ., cert. denied, 480 U.S. 922 . . . (1987). Thus, while the meaning of [a] Decree's terms 'must be discerned within its four corners,' United States v. Armour &

> Co., 402 U.S. 673, 682, 29 L. Ed. 2d 256, 91 S. Ct. 1752 . . . (1971), our inquiry is guided by conventional 'aids to construction,' including 'the circumstances surrounding the formation of the consent order [and] any technical meaning words used may have had to the parties . . .' ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. at 238 . . . ." United States v. Western Elec. Co., 894 F.2d 1387 at 1390.

United States v. Western Elec. Co., 283 U.S. App. D.C. 299, 900 F.2d 283, 293 (D.C. Cir. 1990). This principle -- that HN3[] a consent order should be interpreted as a contract would be -- is particularly appropriate here, [18] when the issue involves the interpretation of terms contained in the Consent Order itself, as opposed to procedural questions implicating the Consent Order but on which the Order itself is silent (as was the case in DPSU I). See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 769-70.

Plaintiffs argue that New York Bottling's cessation of all bottling and distribution activities prior to the filing of Mr. Honickman's Application with the FTC had two practical consequences that rendered the Consent Order's prior approval clause inapplicable. First, they contend that New York Bottling's shutdown in October, 1991 meant that it was no longer a "Bottling Operation" as defined in the Consent Order, because that definition limits the term "Bottling Operation" only to a "business, person, or other entity" that presently distributes and sells CSDs directly to supermarkets. AR 6003-6004. The term, plaintiffs argue, does not apply to entities that formerly distributed CSDs but ceased doing so prior to Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of licensing rights. AR 6584, 6592, 6593-6594, 6654-6655. Moreover, they contend, "by ceasing to distribute soft drinks, New York [Bottling] breached [19] its license agreements to distribute 7-Up and other beverages." AR 6654-6655. The Seven-Up licenses were then suspended by DPSU pursuant to a Termination Agreement dated November 9, 1991, and effectively terminated by the bankruptcy court on November [*489] 6, 1991. AR 6274; Pls.' Mem. at 17 n.14. [8] Thus, although New York Bottling's Seven-Up license may have remained "vested" in the defunct firm during the pendency of Mr. Honickman's Application, the suspension of the licenses effectively terminated New York Bottling's ability legally to bottle and distribute Seven-Up. See Pls.' Op. at 11. In short, not only had New York Bottling ceased to be a Bottling Operation, it "had" nothing for Mr. Honickman to acquire.

Second, and following from the preceding analysis, plaintiffs contend that Mr. Honickman sought [20] to acquire the Seven-Up licenses not from New York Bottling but directly from DPSU, the parent company. Because DPSU does not sell its products to supermarkets, it is not a Bottling Operation within the meaning of the Consent Order. They contend, moreover, that acquisition of licensing rights directly from the franchisor and owner of the Seven-Up trademark is a "vertical" transaction that is beyond the scope of the Consent Order, which applies only to "horizontal" transactions, or acquisitions by Mr. Honickman of the rights or assets of other bottlers. For these reasons, plaintiffs' argue, the Consent Order's prior approval clause simply does not apply to the direct acquisition of rights by vertical assignment.

Although the question is a close one, the Court on balance finds plaintiffs' arguments to be persuasive for the following reasons. First, the FTC's contentions as to the breadth of the "directly or indirectly . . . rights relating to" language in Paragraph II of the Consent Order are undermined by other language in the Order and by extrinsic evidence from the Order's negotiating history. While it may be true the "related to" language in Paragraph II is not limited by a verb [21] with either a present or past tense -- as in "rights that are related to" or "rights that were related to" -- the term "Bottling Operation," which modifies the references to assets or rights, is unambiguously defined as an entity that presently distributes and sells CSDs to supermarkets, and does not include entities that formerly did so. The negotiating history of the Consent Order clearly shows, moreover, that FTC staff first proposed, and Mr. Honickman rejected, language requiring prior approval for the acquisition of "assets located in the New York metropolitan area used in or previously used in (and still suitable for use in) the soft drink products business." AR 7690-7691 (emphasis added). The language finally agreed to by Mr. Honickman and the FTC limited prior approval to the acquisition of assets or rights related to a Bottling Operation, which is defined solely in the present tense as "any business, person, or other entity that distributes and sells CSDs directly using company-owned or equity distribution to supermarkets pursuant to a franchise, license, distribution contract, or other similar agreement." AR 11 (emphasis added). To accept the FTC's interpretation [22] of "rights related to," in other words, would not only contravene the plain meaning of the Consent Order but also expand that phrase to encompass meanings clearly rejected by the parties during negotiations.

---

[8] The record shows that New York Bottling's licenses to distribute Barq's and Crush brand soft drinks were terminated and reverted to their respective franchisors when New York Bottling closed its doors. AR 6898, 6900.

The record also clearly shows that, prior to the Commission's final acceptance of the Consent Order, FTC staff members who had participated in negotiations with Mr. Honickman believed that the final language of Paragraph II did not apply to the vertical assignment of licensing rights directly from DPSU and so advised the Commission. AR 1413, 1418, 1427. Indeed, the Commission was advised by the Assistant Director of the Bureau of Competition that when FTC staff had "suggested to Honickman that we cover the vertical franchise award explicitly, he turned us down." AR 1427. FTC staff appear to have changed their view of the expansive application of the prior approval provision only after Mr. Honickman submitted the Application on October 24, 1991. AR 6892 (memorandum to the Commission from Bureau of Competition staff, dated June 15, 1992, interpreting the "rights related to" language to cover the proposed transaction). While the views of FTC staff do not necessarily reflect the understanding [23] of Commission [*490] members themselves, the Court believes that the opinions expressed in staff memoranda prior to final acceptance of the Consent Order are probative of the parties' intent as regards the coverage issue at the time the Order was negotiated.

Finally, as was explained by Judge Revercomb in his Memorandum Opinion in DPSU I and as the FTC argued in that case, the parties expressly agreed that the Commission's 1989 administrative complaint against Mr. Honickman could be used to construe the terms of the Consent Order. See DPSU I, 798 F. Supp. at 772. Examination of that complaint shows that it was premised on the theory that Mr. Honickman's acquisition of the assets of another Bottling Operation (Seven-Up Brooklyn) would likely reduce competition by, among other things, eliminating direct competition from a competitor. AR 6 (P 22). The facts alleged in that complaint describe potential harm to competition from horizontal transactions. AR 0-9 (PP 2-16, 21, 22). As such, it reinforces the impression given by the staff memoranda discussed above that the Consent Order as negotiated and agreed to by the parties gave the FTC a veto over future Honickman [24] acquisitions of the assets or rights of other bottlers, such as those of Seven-Up Brooklyn, but not over vertical acquisitions of rights directly from concentrate manufacturers. The Court is convinced in this case that the more expansive interpretation of the Consent Order urged by the FTC is thus inconsistent with record evidence of the intentions of the parties and "'the circumstances surrounding the formation of the consent order [and] any technical meaning words used may have had to the parties . . .'" United States v. Western Elec. Co., 900 F.2d at 293 (quoting ITT Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. at 238).

The Court concludes, therefore, that Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition from DPSU of a license to bottle, distribute and sell Seven-Up in parts of the territory formerly covered by the now defunct New York Bottling Company is not subject to the Consent Order he entered into with the FTC in 1991. It follows that the Commission's decision to the contrary, and its denial of prior approval of the transaction necessarily based on that decision, are arbitrary and capricious under the APA. Because the coverage question [25] is dispositive, it is unnecessary to address the parties' arguments regarding the substantive merits of the FTC's decision or the procedures it employed in reviewing Mr. Honickman's Application.

Accordingly, the Court will this day enter an Order granting plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment, denying defendant FTC's motion for summary judgment, declaring that Mr. Honickman's proposed acquisition of a new soft drink license from DPSU is not a transaction covered by or subject to the prior approval provision of the 1991 Consent Order, and enjoining the FTC from taking a position to the contrary. This Order, of course, is strictly limited to the question of Consent Order coverage and in no way affects any other actions that the FTC may deem appropriate in the lawful exercise of its discretion vis-a-vis the proposed transaction or the soft drink market in metropolitan New York.

JUNE L. GREEN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Clorox Co. v. Sterling Winthrop

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

November 3, 1993, Decided

CV 92-386

Reporter

836 F. Supp. 983 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15749 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,413

THE CLOROX COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. STERLING WINTHROP, Defendant.

Core Terms

trademark, disinfectant, products, cleaner, PINE, anticompetitive, advertising, competitor, antitrust, household, cleaning, spray, discovery, marketing, effects, restrictions, submarkets, monopoly, summary judgment, marks, restraint of trade, anti trust law, promotion, labels, likelihood of confusion, settlement agreement, relevant market, conditions, displayed, consumer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Supporting Materials, Discovery Materials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) provides for the granting of summary judgment when the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Movants may discharge their burden by showing that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. The evidence and all factual inferences, however, must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Despite the plain language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, only unreasonable restraints of trade violate the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Courts find certain restraints of trade illegal per se, while subjecting other restraints to an elaborate inquiry known as the "rule of reason." Per se illegal restraints are agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Examples of per se violations include horizontal and vertical price-fixing, division of a market into territories, certain tying arrangements, and certain group boycotts involving concerted refusals to deal with a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

When a restraint is not plainly anticompetitive, a factfinder must determine whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The "rule of reason" does not require a court to extend the right to trial to anyone who files a valid cause of action notwithstanding the absence of any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint. To survive summary judgment, a plaintiff must raise a genuine issue of fact concerning the anticompetitive effect of the challenged restraint. Under this rule of reason test plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. This rule reflects the principle that antitrust laws exist for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Convergence of injury to a market competitor and injury to competition is possible when the relevant market is both narrow and discrete and the market participants are few.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

HN7[] Misuse of Rights, Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

The protection of trademark rights does not violate antitrust laws. Used as a means of identifying the trademark owner's products, a trademark makes effective competition possible in a complex, impersonal marketplace by providing a means through which the consumer can identify products which please him and reward the producer with continued patronage. However, since trademark laws only protect the trademark's source-denoting function, a trademark is misused if it serves to limit competition in the manufacture and sales of a product. Misusing a trademark for anticompetitive purposes can violate the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust considerations must be viewed in light of actual market realities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN9[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

To establish the offense of actual monopoly under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must show the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiff: Kim J. Landsman, Esq., Morrison & Foerster, New York, New York.

For Defendant: John L. McGoldrick, Esq., McCarter & English, New York, New York.

Judges: DEARIE

Opinion by: RAYMOND J. DEARIE

Opinion

[*985] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

DEARIE, District Judge.

In this action, the defendant seeks summary judgment dismissing plaintiff's federal and state antitrust claims and related state common law claims of restraint of trade and unfair competition. For the following reasons, the defendant's motion is denied.

BACKGROUND

This lawsuit is the latest skirmish in a 40 year battle between competing trademarks, LYSOL and PINE-SOL. The defendant, Sterling Winthrop ("Sterling"), manufactures and distributes household cleaning and disinfectant products under the trade name LYSOL. The LYSOL trademark has been federally registered for disinfectants since 1906, and for cleaning products since the 1920's. Sterling's primary product using the LYSOL name is an aerosol spray disinfectant. [1]

[2] The establishment of the PINE-SOL trademark did not come easily. In the 1940's, Clorox Company ("Clorox")'s predecessor filed an application to register the trademark PINE-SOL for a liquid general household cleaner, disinfectant, and deodorant. Sterling opposed this registration in the U.S. Patent Office. On October 2, 1952, the Examiner in Chief sustained the Examiner of Interferences' finding of confusing similarity between the PINE-SOL mark and the LYSOL mark as used on the same or similar goods.

According to Sterling, Clorox's predecessor continued to use the PINE-SOL mark despite the Examiner in Chief's decision. Sterling sued, and the parties eventually settled the dispute by agreement executed on May 3, 1956 ("1956 Agreement"). Then, in 1965, Sterling filed suit again against the then-owner of the PINE-SOL mark, American Cyanamid Company ("Cyanamid"), alleging trademark infringement arising from Cyanamid's marketing of

---

[1] This product is currently marketed in various versions including an "original scent," a "country scent," a "fresh scent," and a "light scent." Sterling also markets a disinfectant in a bottle that uses just the LYSOL name and a LYSOL deodorizing cleaner with a lemon scent. Brand extensions include LYSOL PINE ACTION pine cleaner-disinfectant, LYSOL DIRECT multi-purpose spray cleaner, LYSOL basin, tub, and tile cleaner, LYSOL and LYSOL CLING toilet bowl cleaners, LYSOL PINE FRESH CLING toilet bowl cleaner and LYSOL PINE SCENT basin, tub and tile cleaner.

a PINE-SOL disinfectant spray. In 1967, a settlement agreement ("1967 Agreement"), which superseded the 1956 Agreement, ended that suit.

Pursuant to the 1967 Agreement, Cyanamid could continue to manufacture, promote, and sell its existing PINE-SOL liquid cleaner [3] as long as Cyanamid complied with certain [*986] conditions. The agreement provided that Cyanamid "shall not use the trademark PINE-SOL in connection with the manufacture, offering for sale, distribution, sale, advertising or promotion of any disinfectant product," (Paragraph 2(a)), except that Cyanamid could continue to "manufacture, offer for sale, distribute, sell, advertise and promote under the trademark PINE-SOL its present liquid cleaner with disinfecting and deodorizing properties," (Paragraph 3(c)), as long as this product continued to be "sold, advertised, and promoted primarily as a cleaner" rather than as a "disinfectant product." (Paragraph 4(a)).

Paragraph 4(a)(i) of the 1967 Agreement specified that, "when the generic name or purpose of the product is set forth in labels or advertising or promotional material, the generic name 'cleaner' or the generic function 'cleans' will continue to be set forth first, i.e., before such terms as 'disinfectant' or 'disinfects' or the like." Paragraph 4(a)(ii) prohibited "a display of such generic terms or functions as 'disinfectant' or 'disinfects' or the like in greater prominence than the generic name or function 'cleaner' or 'cleans,'" [4] and Paragraph 4(a)(iii) further required that "more detailed labeling or advertising claims for the product in regard to its cleaning and disinfecting functions will be displayed in an analogous manner." (Paragraph 4(a)(i), (ii), (iii)).

The 1967 Agreement also provided, at Paragraph 4(c), that:

> In the display of the trademark PINE-SOL on all labels, packages, containers, other labeling, and advertising and promotional materials, separation must be maintained between the words or syllables 'Pine' and 'Sol' by placing between those words or syllables a device representing a pine or evergreen tree as presently used, and each of such words or syllables must begin with a capital letter with the remaining letters being small letters. It is understood, however, that the mark may appear in letters of the same size and a hyphen may be substituted for the small separation device representing a pine or evergreen tree in the text of labels or advertising material where the mark is not used in large type or otherwise displayed with prominence, but even then such words or syllables must always be used in separated form.

(Paragraph 4(c)). Paragraph 5 repeated this requirement with respect [5] to "all labels, packages, containers, other labeling, and advertising and promotional materials used in connection with the products permitted to be marketed by paragraphs 2(b), 3(a) and 3(b)" of the agreement. (Paragraph 5).

Despite the elaborate specificity of the 1967 Agreement, disagreements persisted. In 1983, Cyanamid took the offensive and brought suit against Sterling alleging that Sterling had breached the 1967 Agreement by marketing LYSOL PINE ACTION. Although Sterling contends that Cyanamid alleged that the "use of the LYSOL trademark on a pine oil cleaning product constituted trademark infringement and unfair competition," (Def. 3(g) Statement), Clorox maintains that Cyanamid challenged the product because its "trade dress copied that of the Pine-Sol cleaner." (Pl. 3(g) Statement). [2] The parties eventually resolved this dispute and other pending disputes with yet another settlement agreement negotiated in 1987 ("1987 Agreement" or "Agreement").

[6] In the 1987 Agreement, Sterling gave considerable ground. Expanding upon the 1967 Agreement, the new agreement permitted new uses of the PINE-SOL mark. The 1987 Agreement provided that Cyanamid could use the PINE-SOL mark for a "multi-purpose pump spray household cleaner with disinfecting properties" (Paragraph 3(d)) as long as Cyanamid complied with certain conditions. These conditions included the requirement that the product "continue to be sold under a generic name indicating that it [*987] is a general purpose spray cleaner." (Paragraph 3(d)(ii)). For example, Paragraph 3(d)(ii) specified that, while the product could not be offered as a "special purpose

---

[2] Sterling maintains that, in interrogatory answers filed in the 1983 action, Cyanamid "contended that use of the trademark LYSOL for a pine oil cleaner, separate and apart from its trade dress, was likely to cause confusion with Cyanamid's Pine-Sol mark for pine oil cleaners." (Def. 3(g) Statement). Clorox disputes this assertion calling it "materially incomplete and misleading." (Pl. 3(g) Statement). Clorox adds that it has not been "given adequate opportunity to discover information concerning documents filed in the prior litigations." (Pl. 3(g) Statement).

cleaner, e.g., 'bathroom cleaner,'" it could be promoted "for particular uses, surfaces and areas, including new uses, surfaces and areas." (Paragraph 3(d)(ii)). In addition, the Agreement required that the PINE-SOL product not be offered "in more than one delivery form, formula, or scent in a single geographical area" at a given time. (Paragraph 3(d)(iv)).

The 1987 Agreement permitted Cyanamid to use the PINE-SOL mark as part of an endorsement phrase to promote other disinfectant products under trademarks other than PINE-SOL. [7] However, such use depended upon Cyanamid's compliance with an elaborate set of rules. For instance, the Agreement specified that the other trademark could not be used as part of the phrase that included the PINE-SOL mark, could not be likely to cause confusion with the trademark LYSOL or the trademark PINE-SOL, and had to "be, at least, capable of distinguishing the product on which it is to be used, i.e., eligible to be registered on the Supplemental Register, pursuant to Title 15, U.S.C., Section 1091, as presently worded." (Paragraph 2(e)(i)). In addition, the Agreement provided that "it must reasonably appear from the wording of said phrase that it was intended to convey only the meaning that the said disinfectant product originates with the company that has marketed 'PINE-SOL products." Accordingly, the Agreement noted that the phrases, "FROM PINE-SOL" and "FROM THE MAKERS OF PINE-SOL," would be "permissible," while "ANOTHER PINE-SOL PRODUCT" AND "CLEANS LIKE PINE-SOL" would not be permissible. (Paragraph 2(e)(ii)). The Agreement specified that PINE-SOL could be used "only once in the said phrase and must be preceded somewhere in said phrase [8] by a word no shorter than 'FROM,'" (Paragraph 2(e)(iii)), and that "'PINE-SOL' in the said phrase shall never be displayed with 'PINE' above 'SOL', and 'PINE-SOL' must always appear on a single line." (Paragraph 2(e)(iv)).

Further, at Paragraph 2(e)(xii), the Agreement provided that "no matter may appear on the said disinfectant product or in advertising or promotional material there for which states that the said disinfectant product is generally better than any named or displayed disinfectant product on which Cyanamid uses the trademark PINE-SOL." (Paragraph 2(e)(xii)). However, this provision did permit Cyanamid to "state in such materials that said disinfectant products are better than 'PINE-SOL' for a particular purpose, surface or area." (Paragraph 2(e)(xii)).

The 1987 Agreement explicitly retained the requirement that the PINE-SOL product not be offered in more than one form, scent or formula in a single geographic area at a given time. (Paragraph 4(e)). The Agreement acknowledged Sterling's right to use LYSOL as a mark "in connection with cleaning, disinfecting, deodorizing, laundering and personal care products for home or institutional use, and services related thereto." [9] (Paragraph 7(a)(i)). In addition, the Agreement permitted Sterling to use the name or the mark, "PINE ACTION," as well as to use certain "PINE" designations including "PINE CLEANER," "PINE DISINFECTANT," "PINE SCENT," "PINE FRAGRANCE," "PINE ODOR," "PINE FORMULA," and "PINE FRESH."

Pine-Sol became the number one liquid all-purpose household cleaner in the United States. In August 1990, Clorox purchased the PINE-SOL trademark and products from Cyanamid. Clorox maintains that today, the PINE-SOL trademark possesses the highest recognition factor of all trademarks in the pine cleaner category. (Pl. 3(g) Statement).

On June 4, 1991, Sterling filed suit in New Jersey Superior Court alleging that a Clorox advertising campaign breached the settlement agreement by emphasizing Pine-Sol's disinfectant property. Clorox filed counterclaims based on federal and state antitrust laws. On August 15, 1991, Judge Kevin M. O'Halloran issued a preliminary injunction restraining Clorox from using the disputed advertising and tentatively rejected Clorox's antitrust counterclaims. In his decision, Judge O'Halloran noted: "It is unlikely that [*988] the defendant will be able to prove that an agreement which merely [10] provides for emphasis in advertising could be a violation of any antitrust laws. There is no price fixing or division of markets or the like." (See O'Halloran, Tr. at 10). On January 28, 1992, Clorox filed this antitrust action and simultaneously moved in the New Jersey court for a stay of the state proceeding. On April 23, 1992, the New Jersey court granted the stay.

No discovery has taken place in this action and very limited discovery took place in the state action before the stay. Nevertheless, Sterling contends that the matter is ripe for summary judgment.

DISCUSSION

Standard For Summary Judgment

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) HN1[] provides for the granting of summary judgment when "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment "against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden [11] of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). Movants may discharge their burden by showing "that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Id. at 326. The evidence and all factual inferences, however, must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant. Beacon Enterprises Inc. v. Menzies, 715 F.2d 757, 762 (2d Cir. 1983).

Although antitrust cases often present complex issues of fact that make summary disposition difficult to obtain, summary judgment "remains a vital procedural tool to avoid wasteful trials and may be particularly important in antitrust litigation to prevent lengthy and drawn-out litigation that has a chilling effect on competitive market forces." Capital Imaging Associates, P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Associates, Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 541 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-88, 593-94, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986)). In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp, 475 U.S. 574, 586-88, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), [12] the Supreme Court advised:

> The non-moving party must come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial' . . . if the factual context renders respondents' claim implausible-- if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense-- respondents must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary . . . . Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case . . . conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Id.

Restraint of Trade

Clorox contends that the Agreement restrains trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, as well as the parallel provisions of New York's Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen'l. Bus. Laws § 340 et. seq. (McKinney 1988). [3] HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1 [13] (Supp.1992). Despite the plain language of Section 1, only unreasonable restraints of trade violate the Act. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 60, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911).

HN3[] Courts find certain restraints of trade illegal per se, while subjecting other restraints [*989] to an elaborate inquiry known as the "rule of reason." Per se illegal restraints are "agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pacific Railway v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). [14]

---

[3] No separate analysis is required under the Donnelly Act because this Act is "construed in light of federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language or the legislative history justify such a result." Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 N.Y.2d 327, 520 N.E.2d 535, 538, 525 N.Y.S.2d 816 (N.Y. 1988).

Examples of per se violations include horizontal and vertical price-fixing, division of a market into territories, certain tying arrangements, and certain group boycotts involving concerted refusals to deal with a competitor.

At least for the purposes of this motion, the 1987 Agreement is not per se illegal. A product of arm's length negotiations over a period of years, the Agreement limits the uses of the PINE-SOL mark in an apparent effort to insure co-existence between the senior and junior marks. HN4[] When a restraint is not "plainly anticompetitive," National Soc'y of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 (1978), a factfinder must determine "whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition." Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 (1918). See also Professional Engineers, 435 U.S. at 691. This "rule of reason" approach requires consideration of the "facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and [15] after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable," as well as the "history of the restraint" and "the purpose or end sought to be attained." Chicago Bd. of Trade, 231 U.S. at 238. See also Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977); United States v. Topco Assoc., Inc, 405 U.S. 596, 607, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 (1972).

However, HN5[] the "rule of reason" does not require a court to "extend the right to trial to 'anyone who files a valid cause of action . . . notwithstanding the absence of any significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint.'" Arnold Pontiac-GMC, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 786 F.2d 564, 574 (3d Cir. 1986) (quoting First Nat'l Bank v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 290, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968)). Rather, to survive summary judgment, a plaintiff must raise a genuine issue of fact concerning the anticompetitive effect of the challenged restraint. As the Second Circuit recently advised, "Under this [rule of reason] test plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged [16] action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice." Capital Imaging Assoc., 996 F.2d at 543. This rule reflects the principle that antitrust laws exist for "the protection of competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962).

Clorox contends that the Agreement unreasonably restrains trade by restricting Clorox's marketing of new products as well as its promotion of the existing PINE-SOL products. Clorox argues that, because many consumers base buying decisions on products' disinfectant properties, Clorox's inability to focus its advertising efforts on Pine-Sol's disinfectant qualities impedes Pine-Sol's ability to compete meaningfully with Lysol.

Although the Agreement only restricts Clorox's use of the PINE-SOL trademark, Clorox urges that, given existing market realities, the Agreement inhibits competition against Lysol in the cleaner-disinfectant market and its relevant submarkets. These submarkets, Clorox urges, include the pure disinfectant market, the spray disinfectant [17] market, the pine cleaner market, and the bathroom cleaner market. According to Clorox, the importance of using a famous brand name to enter the cleaner-disinfectant market and submarkets "has become even more pronounced" since the 1980's (Savage Aff. at 10), and "successful brand extension requires not just a well known trademark, but extension of it to use on products that is [*990] consistent and complementary with the existing consumer associations with the well known trademark." (Pl. 3(g); Savage Aff. at 12).

The Group Marketing Manager of Clorox's subsidiary, the Household Products Company, maintains that "successful market entries in household cleaning and disinfecting products without the use of a famous trademark have been rare in the past five years" and that companies recognize that a product that lacks a name already familiar to consumers possesses a low likelihood of success. (Pl.3(g); Savage Aff. at 12). Clorox's manager describes Clorox's own experience with the marketing of certain products and also cites academic and business literature describing the importance of "megabrands" and brand extension. (See Pl. Exh. 1-3). According to Clorox, the PINE-SOL mark appears "uniquely [18] suited to enter various new household markets, including the disinfectant spray and bathroom cleaner categories." (Pl. Rep. Mem. at 16; Savage Aff. at 20). Clorox explains that the CLOROX and FORMULA 409 products could not be extended to a disinfectant spray. The company maintains that CLOROX "carries too much association with bleach" and would "also not be appropriate for a product that had a pine scent, because it would only confuse people." (Pl. 3(g) Statement). Furthermore, according to Clorox, FORMULA 409 would not be an effective brand for extension because this product "is a spray cleaner with no disinfectant properties and less consumer association with disinfectancy." (Pl. 3(g) Statement).

Clorox argues that no legitimate trademark purposes justify the Agreement's anticompetitive effects. According to Clorox, no likelihood of confusion exists between the LYSOL and PINE-SOL marks. [4] Further, Clorox emphasizes that Sterling's use of the LYSOL mark on products that directly compete with Clorox's PINE-SOL product-- such as LYSOL PINE ACTION cleaner-disinfectant-- reveals that Sterling "is indifferent to any likelihood of confusion between the LYSOL and PINE-SOL trademarks that [19] might exist, or, more likely, knows that there is no such problem." (Pl. Rep. Mem. at 19). Thus, according to Clorox, the Agreement, rather than effectuating reasonable protection of a trademark, impermissibly protects "certain LYSOL product niches from competition." (Pl. Mem. at 3).

According to Sterling, Clorox's Section 1 claims fail as a matter of law because Clorox cannot demonstrate that the Agreement results in any anticompetitive effect. Although Clorox has had no discovery, Sterling maintains that discovery is unnecessary because Clorox's claims "make no economic sense." (Def. Rep. Br. at 25). Emphasizing that the Agreement merely limits one competitor's use of one trademark, Sterling proclaims that Clorox's claims [20] require "the Court to accept two fundamentally absurd assumptions regarding the market in this case: that . . . the only company capable of competing with Sterling is Clorox, and the only trademark capable of competing with LYSOL is Pine-Sol." (Def. Rep. at 20).

The argument is overstated. While Clorox must show that the Agreement substantially and adversely affects competition and does not merely injure Clorox's own ability to compete with Lysol, Clorox need not show that the Agreement precludes competition entirely. Indeed, Sterling's position ignores the apparent logic of Clorox's contentions. Clorox asserts that only national brands with superior name recognition and the appropriate connotations for brand extension can compete as viable players in today's household cleaner-disinfectant market and submarkets. (See Savage Aff; Pl. Exh. 1-3). Accepting this theory, at least for the purpose of this motion, common sense indicates that the pool of potential competitors and famous names is limited, and that an agreement that restricts even one competitor from using a famous mark could possibly implicate competitive conditions in the market. HN6[] "Convergence of injury to a market competitor [21] and injury to competition is possible when the relevant market is both narrow and [*991] discrete and the market participants are few." Les Shockley Racing v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 508 (9th Cir. 1989). See also Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 842 F.2d 1034 (9th Cir. 1987).

Sterling, however, maintains that "there are numerous competitors in the household products market with numerous valuable trademarks." (Rep. Br. at 25). In a Sterling affidavit, the President of the Household Product Division asserts:

> In addition to Clorox and [Sterling], there are other major companies, including Proctor & Gamble, Colgate and Dow, as well as lesser-known companies, now marketing products in the United States with cleaning or cleaning and disinfecting capabilities. These major companies market products with well known trademarks such as COMET, MR. CLEAN, TOP JOB, SPIC & SPAN, and FANTASTIC. The market is extremely competitive, and is characterized by frequent new product entries accompanied by heavy advertising and promotional campaigns.

(Healy Aff. at 3). Sterling's identification of three "major companies," in addition to Clorox [22] and Sterling, does not refute the possibility that a few leading competitors dominate the market. Further, Sterling's focus on the "household products market" ignores Clorox's contentions regarding the existence of relevant submarkets, including, for example, the disinfectant submarket in which it is generally acknowledged that Sterling enjoys a 90% market share. Although Sterling professes its willingness to accept "as true Clorox's definition of the relevant market" (Def. Rep. at 23, n.9), it focuses instead on competitors in the broader "household products market" and asserts that "the market is extremely competitive."

---

[4] In support of this assertion, Clorox cites a recent consumer survey commissioned by Clorox which concluded that "essentially no one in the applicable consuming public currently sees Pine-Sol and LYSOL as coming from a common source or origin." (See Rappeport Aff. Opp. Summ. J.; Pl. Exh. B).

Indeed, whatever the precise contours of the relevant market, any determination on the issue of anticompetitive effects is premature. Although Clorox's theory may ultimately fail, Clorox's claims cannot be dismissed as "economic nonsense." (Def. Rep. at 25). Rather, Clorox must be afforded an opportunity to seek the discovery that may substantiate its allegations. Sterling complains that "what Clorox really wants is to hinder LYSOL by obtaining extensive, burdensome discovery and prolonging this litigation." (Def. Letter, August 31, 1993). Given the parties' [23] continuing battles for position in the markets in which they compete and the courtrooms in which they have appeared, Sterling's concern is understandable. However, plaintiff presents viable claims that cannot be summarily dismissed and, absent yet another agreement, dispositive action must, at least, await discovery. Accordingly, the supervising magistrate will insure that discovery proceeds efficiently, particularly on those issues that may invite dispositive action.

At this time, the Court must also reject Sterling's assertion that, as a matter of law, the Agreement represents a valid trademark agreement rather than an unreasonable restraint of trade. In general, HN7[] the protection of trademark rights does not violate antitrust laws. "Used as a means of identifying the trademark owner's products, a trademark 'makes effective competition possible in a complex, impersonal marketplace by providing a means through which the consumer can identify products which please him and reward the producer with continued patronage.'" Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. General Mills Fun Group, 611 F.2d 296, 301 (9th Cir. 1979) (quoting Smith v. Chanel, Inc., 402 F.2d 562, 566 (9th Cir. 1968)). [24] However, since trademark laws only protect the trademark's "source-denoting function," a "trademark is misused if it serves to limit competition in the manufacture and sales of a product." 611 F.2d at 301. Misusing a trademark for anticompetitive purposes can violate the antitrust laws. Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. U.S., 341 U.S. 593, 95 L. Ed. 1199, 71 S. Ct. 971 (1951). See also United States v. Bayer Co., 135 F. Supp. 65, 70-71 (S.D.N.Y. 1955) (trademark provisions "went far beyond any protection required for the trademark").

Sterling emphasizes that trademark litigation often results in settlement agreements which prohibit junior users from using trademarks absolutely, or in certain ways or on certain goods. According to Sterling, the Agreement at issue here, like thousands of other trademark settlement agreements, simply delineates the parties' respective trademark [*992] rights and limits the future likelihood of consumer confusion concerning the source of the products on which the marks appear. Relying on California Packing Corp. v. Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California, 165 F. Supp. 245 (S.D.Cal. 1958) aff'd, 273 F.2d 282 (9th Cir. 1959), [25] which upheld an agreement confining the use of the SUN-MAID trademark to raisins and raisin products against an anti-trust challenge, Sterling argues that restrictions on one competitor's use of one trademark "have long been held not to constitute antitrust violations, but rather to be permissible in the trademark context." (Def. Rep. Br. at 15). California Packing Corp., however, is not dispositive here. While the court in that case emphasized that "Sun-Maid . . . has been free, all these years, to can anything,--vegetables or fruits-- and market them under any name so long as that name is not Sun-Maid," the court's discussion provides no information regarding the market conditions at the time of the challenge and whether these conditions limited Sun-Maid's effective ability to enter the market under another name. Because HN8[] antitrust considerations must be viewed in light of "actual market realities," Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (U.S. 1992), California Packing Corp. does not preclude the possibility that a trademark agreement that limits one competitor's use of one trademark could, in some [26] instances, violate antitrust laws.

Sterling correctly notes that the Court should show some deference to the agreements that embody the parties' arm's length resolution of their differences over the competing marks. Agreements negotiated by experienced business people should enjoy some level of deference from the Court. However, the Court cannot be expected to ignore the possibility that the Agreement unreasonably restrains competition under the guise of protecting the LYSOL mark. Here, Clorox contends that the Agreement's restrictions on the use of the PINE-SOL mark serve no valid trademark purpose, but rather exist in order to foreclose competition with the LYSOL mark. On their face, several of the Agreement's restrictions do appear to go beyond that which is necessary to protect LYSOL's senior mark. Certainly if the evidence were to show that the current strength of the once inferior PINE-SOL mark removes or significantly reduces the risk of confusion, it is not inconceivable that the parties' considerable efforts in negotiating the very detailed settlement agreements were directed toward other objectives. It may be that Sterling's recognition of the acquired strength of Pine-Sol [27] and the resulting reduction in the likelihood of confusion drove its willingness to give ground to Pine-Sol in the agreements; it is just as plausible that Sterling's objective may have at some point become fired by the objective of protecting certain product or market niches from Clorox's advance. The precise delineation of the parameters within which Clorox is permitted to deploy the PINE-SOL mark may indeed suggest that trademark protection became a secondary consideration at some point. Accordingly, without discovery on the anticompetitive effect of the Agreement or the intent behind the various provisions, the Court cannot find, as a matter of law, that the Agreement simply promotes valid trademark or other legitimate business purposes and does not unreasonably restrain trade.

Monopolization

Clorox also asserts a monopolization claim and an attempted monopolization claim pursuant to Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Sterling has moved for summary judgment on these claims as well. According to Clorox, Sterling possesses a monopoly in the spray disinfectant market and the Agreement enables Sterling to retain this monopoly. (Savage Aff. at 22). The Agreement's restrictions on advertising, [28] Clorox alleges, reinforce Sterling's monopoly by maintaining an artificial separation between the cleaning and disinfectant categories. Without these restrictions, Clorox insists, the PINE-SOL product could and would compete as a "pure disinfectant." (Savage Aff. at 36-38). Clorox also claims that Sterling's recent attempts to enforce expansive interpretations of the Agreement threaten to exacerbate the monopolistic effects of the Agreement.

[*993] HN9[] To establish the offense of actual monopoly under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, Clorox must show "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 63, 16 L. Ed. 2d 369, 86 S. Ct. 1301 (1966). As for the first element, Clorox contends that the relevant market is the market for household cleaner and disinfectant products, and, significantly, that within that market, two relevant submarkets-- spray and liquid pure disinfectants-- exist. Clorox maintains that Sterling possesses monopoly power in each of those submarkets, [29] controlling over 90% of the spray disinfectant market and at least 90% of the pure liquid disinfectant market. (Savage Aff. at 22, 36). Although Sterling suggests that pure disinfectants may not be an appropriate market, (Def. Br. at 38, n.10), Sterling does not challenge Clorox's monopoly claims on this ground for the purposes of this motion. Sterling also does not challenge Clorox's estimation of Sterling's market power or claim that this market share could not, as a matter of law, constitute a monopoly.

The second element requires Clorox to prove that Sterling used or attempted to use monopoly power "to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor." United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948). This element requires proof of exclusionary or anticompetitive intent as well as effect. U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1358-60 (2d Cir. 1992). Clorox maintains that the purpose of the Agreement is "to maintain [LYSOL's] monopoly in the spray and pure disinfectants submarkets by prohibiting entry of a major competitor." (Pl. Br. at 67). Clearly, Clorox [30] requires discovery to attempt to seek to prove this contention. However, once again, Sterling counters that these monopolization claims fail in any event because Clorox cannot establish an anticompetitive injury. As previously discussed, resolution of the Agreement's anticompetitive effects will await discovery. Moreover, although Sterling boasts that Lysol's success is due to superior product or business acumen and not because of the Agreement's restrictions on the PINE-SOL mark, this argument, in addition to raising an issue of material fact, begs the question of the anticompetitive intent and effect of the Agreement.

Sterling's assertion that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine bars Clorox from relying on the state litigation to establish exclusionary conduct need not concern the Court at this point because Clorox's claims of exclusionary conduct do not rely solely on the initiation of litigation. Rather, Clorox also asserts that the Agreement excludes competition by "preventing PINE-SOL products from entering the spray disinfectant submarket, creating and maintaining an artificial separation between household cleaners and disinfectants, and, more generally, placing complex restrictions [31] on the use, marketing, and promotion of the PINE-SOL mark." (Pl. Br. at 69).

However, in the interest of clarifying issues for trial, one aspect of Clorox's claims with respect to the state court litigation warrants attention. Clorox alleges that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply because the state court litigation initiated by Sterling to enforce the Agreement constitutes a "mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 511, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972). Clorox expounds, "If Sterling knew that there was no likelihood of confusion between the LYSOL and PINE-SOL marks . . . then a reasonable jury could conclude that Sterling knew that there was no legitimate ancillary purpose to an anticompetitive agreement and therefore that the New Jersey action was sham litigation." (Pl. Br. at 71). Clorox's emphasis on the existing likelihood of confusion between the PINE-SOL and LYSOL marks is misguided. Even if true, the mere fact that confusion does not now exist between the LYSOL and PINE-SOL trademarks means little. [32] If no confusion exists between the two marks because the Agreement has been effective in preventing such confusion, the lack of confusion neither [*994] means that the Agreement serves no valid trademark purposes nor renders the state court litigation a sham. The current likelihood of confusion between the two marks may be relevant, but is by no means dispositive, of the question of whether a "legitimate ancillary purpose" exists to justify the Agreement's purported anticompetitive effects.

Claim Preclusion

Sterling argues that res judicata bars Clorox's claims. According to Sterling, Clorox's predecessor, Cyanamid, sought termination of the 1967 Agreement in two litigations in 1983 and 1986 and did not argue that the 1967 Agreement violated antitrust principles. Sterling maintains that since that litigation ended by stipulations of dismissal with prejudice, Clorox is now barred from raising antitrust claims that could have been raised in those litigations. The Court rejects Sterling's argument. The settlement of the prior litigations did not perpetually immunize Sterling from antitrust scrutiny. Clorox maintains that its claims are based on changed circumstances. Clorox cites the [33] anticompetitive effects of the present Agreement in the current market, Sterling's efforts to enforce expansive interpretations of the Agreement, and the disappearance of any likelihood of potential for confusion between the two marks. (Pl. Br. at 74). Further Clorox broadly opines that the 1987 amendments to the Agreement "altered virtually every operative paragraph of the prior agreement, creating new anticompetitive effects and giving rise to new antitrust violations." (Pl. Br. at 84). Whether these antitrust claims are of recent vintage and whether the claims could have, or should have, been raised on an earlier occasion, critical factual questions must be resolved before any preclusion may be seriously considered. See Lawlor v. Nat'l Serv. Corp., 349 U.S. 322, 99 L. Ed. 1122, 75 S. Ct. 865 (1955).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court denies Sterling's motion for summary judgment. The Court refers the parties to the assigned magistrate for a discovery conference pursuant to Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: Brooklyn, New York

November 3, 1993

RAYMOND J. DEARIE

[34] United States District Court

Denny's Marina v. Renfro Prods.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

September 9, 1993, Argued ; November 4, 1993, Decided

Nos. 93-1168 and 93-1302

Reporter

8 F.3d 1217 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 28799 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,402

DENNY'S MARINA, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. RENFRO PRODUCTIONS, INCORPORATED; INDIANAPOLIS BOAT, SPORT AND TRAVEL SHOW, INCORPORATED; MAXINE J. RENFRO, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: DENIED.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division. No. 91 C 1333. Larry J. McKinney, Judge.

Disposition: Reversed and Remanded

Core Terms

boat, Dealer, conspiracy, horizontal, summary judgment, per se rule, price-fixing, competitors, marine, unreasonable restraint, district court, Fairgrounds, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment will be denied if a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-movant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

A successful claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, requires proof of three elements: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

There are two standards for evaluating whether an alleged restraint of trade is unreasonable: the rule of reason and the per se rule. The nature of the restraint determines which rule will be applied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] International Aspects, Commerce With Foreign Nations

Price-fixing agreements need not include explicit agreement on prices to be charged or that one party has the right to be consulted about the other's prices. Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se. Concerted action by dealers to protect themselves from price competition by discounters constitutes horizontal price-fixing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Horizontal price-fixing is illegal per se without requiring a showing of actual or likely impact on a market. This is because joint action by competitors to suppress price-cutting has the requisite substantial potential for impact on competition to warrant per se treatment. The pernicious effects are conclusively presumed.

Counsel: For DENNY'S MARINA, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellant (93-1168): Michael C. Terrell, William C. Barnard, Gayle A. Reindl, SOMMER & BARNARD, Indianapolis, IN.

For DENNY'S MARINA, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellee (93-1302): Jeffrey S. Zipes, James K. Wheeler, COOTS, HENKE & WHEELER, Carmel, IN. Michael C. Terrell, William C. Barnard, Gayle A. Reindl, SOMMER & BARNARD, Indianapolis, IN.

For RENFRO PRODUCTIONS, INCORPORATED, INDIANAPOLIS BOAT, SPORT AND TRAVEL SHOW, INCORPORATED, MAXINE J. RENFRO, KEVIN RENFRO, Defendants-Appellees (93-1168): Terrill D. Albright, Robert K. Stanley, BAKER & DANIELS, Indianapolis, IN. James D. Blythe, II, BUTLER, BROWN & BLYTHE, Indianapolis, IN.

For CENTRAL INDIANA MARINE DEALERS ASSOCIATION, Defendant-Appellee (93-1168): Timothy L. Wade, Indianapolis, IN.

For BROWNIE'S MARINE SALES, INCORPORATED, JAMES L. MASSEY, Defendants-Appellees (93-1168): Christopher Kirages, John C. Stark, STARK, DONINGER, & SMITH, Indianapolis, IN.

For INDIANAPOLIS BOAT COMPANY, INCORPORATED, JACK HUMMEL, [2] Defendants-Appellees (93-1168): Thomas L. Davis, LOCKE, REYNOLDS, BOYD & WEISELL, Indianapolis, IN.

For G.A. AND GROUP 3, INCORPORATED, dba Indianapolis Watersports, GARY A. STORY, Defendants-Appellees (93-1168): Christopher Kirages, Robert C. Bruner, STARK, DONINGER, & SMITH, Indianapolis, IN.

For JUST ADD WATER BOATS, INCORPORATED, TIMOTHY L. MEYER, Defendants-Appellees (93-1168): James N. Scahill, SCHNORR, GOOD & SCAHILL, Indianapolis, IN.

For LAKEVIEW MARINA, INCORPORATED, JEFF LINGENFELTER, Defendants-Appellees (93-1168): Steven A. Holt, Stephen H. Free, HOLT, FLECK, & FREE, Noblesville, IN.

For TED'S AQUA MARINE, INCORPORATED, THADDIUS S. NOVICKI, Defendants-Appellees (93-1168): William P. Wooden, Dale W. Eikenberry, Stephen Akard, WOODEN, MCLAUGHLIN & STERNER, Indianapolis, IN.

For INDIANAPOLIS BOAT, SPORT AND TRAVEL SHOW, INCORPORATED, MAXINE J. RENFRO, KEVIN RENFRO, Defendants-Appellants (93-1302): Terrill D. Albright, Robert K. Stanley, BAKER & DANIELS, Indianapolis, IN. Timothy L. Wade, Indianapolis, IN. James D. Blythe, II, BUTLER, BROWN & BLYTHE, Indianapolis, IN. Daniel B. Altman, KATZMAN, KATZMAN & PYLITT, Indianapolis, IN.

For FREDRICK W. DECKER, JERRY [3] BRIAN LUDLOW, Defendants-Appellees (93-1302): Jeffrey S. Zipes, James K. Wheeler, COOTS, HENKE & WHEELER, Carmel, IN. William C. Barnard, SOMMER & BARNARD, Indianapolis, IN.

Judges: Before CUMMINGS, COFFEY and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: CUMMINGS

Opinion

[*1219] CUMMINGS, Circuit Judge.

This is an appeal from summary judgment granted in favor of the defendants below: The "Renfro Defendants" (Renfro Productions, Inc.; Indianapolis Boat, Sport, and Travel Show, Inc.; Maxine J. Renfro; and Kevin Renfro), "CIMDA" (the Central Indiana Marine Dealers Association), and the "Dealer Defendants" (certain members of CIMDA), in an action brought under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 and the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15(a), 26. The Court has jurisdiction over the appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

In December 1991 Denny's Marina, Inc. ("Denny's"), a marine dealer in Peru, Indiana, filed this suit, alleging that the defendants had excluded Denny's from two Indianapolis boat shows. (See note 3 infra.) On defendants' motions for summary judgment the district court held that plaintiff could not invoke the [4] per se rule of illegality under Section 1 of the Sherman Act even if it could demonstrate a horizontal conspiracy to exclude it from the boat shows because it regularly undersold its competitors. Before Denny's could invoke the per se presumption of an unreasonable restraint of trade, the court held, it must "make a sufficient showing of a potential market-wide impact" resulting from the defendants' actions. Because Denny's did not make such a showing, the court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. [1] We hold that this was error and therefore reverse and remand for trial.

[5] FACTS

Because summary judgment was granted to the defendants, the facts alleged by Denny's and any inferences therefrom must be construed in its favor. HN1[] Summary judgment will be denied if a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff. Valenti v. Qualex, Inc., 970 F.2d 363, 365 (7th Cir. 1992).

Denny's is a full-service marine dealer located near Peru, Indiana. It sells fishing boats, motors, trailers and marine accessories in the central Indiana market. [2] The Dealer Defendants are marine dealers in the same market area who compete with Denny's to sell boats to Indiana consumers. CIMDA is a trade association of marine dealers in that area. The Renfro Defendants are producers of two boat shows held annually at the Indiana State Fairgrounds (the "Fairgrounds Shows"). [3] The February fairgrounds show (the "Spring Show") originated over 30 years ago. It is one of the top three boat shows in the United States, attracting between 160,000 and 191,000 consumers annually. The [*1220] October show (the "Fall Show") is smaller and began in 1987. Denny's alleges that the defendants conspired to exclude it from participating in these shows because its policy [6] was to "meet or beat" its competitors' prices at the shows.

Denny's participated in the Fall Show in 1988, 1989, and 1990; it participated in the Spring Show in 1989 and 1990. At all of these shows Denny's [7] was very successful, apparently because it encouraged its customers to shop the other dealers and then come to Denny's for a lower price. During and after the 1989 Spring Show some of the Dealer Defendants began to complain to the Renfro Defendants about Denny's sales methods. After the 1990 Spring Show these Dealer Defendants apparently spent a good part of one CIMDA meeting "venting their . . . frustration" (App. at 15) about Denny's. The complaints to the Renfro Defendants also escalated. As a result, the Renfro Defendants informed Denny's that after the 1990 Fall Show (in which Denny's was contractually entitled to participate) it could no longer participate in the Fairgrounds Shows. This litigation ensued. Denny's seeks compensatory damages to be assessed by a jury, as well as injunctive relief.

Discussion

HN2[] A successful claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires proof of three elements: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury. Dillard v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 961 F.2d 1148, 1158 (5th Cir. 1992), certiorari [8] denied sub nom. Dillard v. Security Pacific Corp., 122 L. Ed. 2d 355, 113 S. Ct. 1046; Wilder Enterprises, Inc. v. Allied Artists Pictures Corp., 632 F.2d 1135, 1139 n.1 (4th Cir. 1980); Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v.

---

[1] The Renfro Defendants had filed a state law counterclaim against Denny's over which the district court had supplemental jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C. § 1367. Having dismissed all of the federal claims with prejudice, the district court declined to retain jurisdiction over the state law claims, dismissing them without prejudice. Plaintiff agrees that the counterclaim should be reinstated if the antitrust claim is remanded. Reply Brief at 37.

[2] The central Indiana market is defined by the parties as extending from Peru and Wabash on the north to Greenwood and Columbus on the south, and from Muncie and Newcastle on the east to Lafayette and Crawfordsville on the west. This geographic market is said to comprise the area served by Indianapolis news and advertising media. The product market concerns the retail sale of boats and marine accessories to consumers, and the promotion of such sales at boat and recreation shows. In 1989 the total sales of the relevant products in central Indiana was $ 89 million. R. 114 at 6.

[3] The original defendants included International Shows, Inc. and its president Charles Worpell. They also produce an annual boat show in Indianapolis, but Denny's settled its claims against them prior to filing its Amended Complaint below.

Codding, 615 F.2d 830, 844 (9th Cir. 1980); cf. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348. The district court noted that defendants do not dispute the first and third elements of proof. [4] Hence the parties' only argument is whether Denny's has made a sufficient showing of the second element, unreasonable restraint of trade, to withstand defendants' motions for summary judgment.

[9] HN3[] There are two standards for evaluating whether an alleged restraint of trade is unreasonable: the rule of reason and the per se rule. See, e.g., Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884; Federal Trade Commission v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009. The nature of the restraint determines which rule will be applied. Atlantic Richfield Co., 495 U.S. at 342. Because the restraint alleged by Denny's constitutes a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy, it is per se an unreasonable restraint of trade. See, e.g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 348, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 218, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811; cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 423-424, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768.

The conspiracy in this case was horizontal because it was "the product of a horizontal agreement." Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730 n.4, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515; accord United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 140, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 [10] passim. It consisted of Denny's competitors and their association. That the conspiracy was joined by the operators of the Fairgrounds boat shows does not transform it into a vertical agreement. See, e.g., Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 767-768, 104 [*1221] S. Ct. 1464, 1472-1473, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775; General Motors, 384 U.S. at 140; Premier Electrical Construction Co. v. National Electrical Contractors Ass'n, 814 F.2d 358, 369 (7th Cir. 1987); Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 678 F.2d 742, 743-744 (7th Cir. 1982).

Likewise, the conspiracy was to fix prices. HN4[] Price-fixing agreements need not include "explicit agreement on prices to be charged or that one party have the right to be consulted about the other's prices." Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 48, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401; accord United States v. Capitol Service, Inc., 756 F.2d 502, 506 (7th Cir. 1985), certiorari denied sub nom. United Artists Communications, Inc. v. United States, 474 U.S. 945, 88 L. Ed. 2d 288, 106 S. Ct. 311; Premier Electrical, 814 F.2d at 368. [11] "Under the Sherman Act a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se." Socony-Vacuum Oil, 310 U.S. at 223. Concerted action by dealers to protect themselves from price competition by discounters constitutes horizontal price-fixing. General Motors, 384 U.S. at 147; Valley Liquors, 678 F.2d at 743-744. Hence the actions of the Dealer Defendants and CIMDA, joined by the Renfro Defendants, to prevent Denny's from participating in the Boat Shows constitutes a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy notwithstanding the apparent lack of an explicit agreement to set prices. [5]

[12] So far, the position of this Court is similar to that of the court below. Nevertheless, having essentially found that plaintiff had adduced sufficient evidence of a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy to withstand a motion for summary judgment, the court below refused to apply the per se rule that would allow it to conclude that there had been an unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market. Instead, before it would apply the per se rule the court required plaintiff to demonstrate a substantial potential for impact on competition in the central Indiana market as a whole. [6] [13] Such an exception to the per se rule against price-fixing is unwarranted by cited precedent

---

[4] The district court assumed, for the purposes of ruling on the defendants' motions for summary judgment, that "(1) the Dealer Defendants and CIMDA conspired to get Denny's out of the Boat Shows because it was a pricecutter; (2) the Renfro Defendants and/or International [International Shows, Inc., another producer of boat shows] joined the conspiracy, giving it the power to achieve its goals, and Denny's was kicked out; (3) with Denny's gone, the defendants were able to (and did) charge higher prices at the Boat Shows than they could have otherwise. . . ." App. at 24.

[5] The Renfro Defendants argue that their conduct was not part of a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy but rather was unilateral action taken to ensure that their shows would not be damaged by the plaintiff free-riding on other exhibitors' elaborate displays. The argument is misplaced because there is presently enough evidence of a conspiracy to withstand defendants' motions for summary judgment. At trial, of course, all the defendants are free to argue that they did not conspire against the plaintiff.

apart from a district court case discussed below. As plaintiff explains, it "simply cannot afford the elaborate market analysis and expert witnesses required to make such a showing." [7]

As far [14] back as 1940, it has been clear that HN5[] horizontal price-fixing is illegal per se without requiring a showing of actual or likely impact on a market. Socony-Vacuum Oil, 310 U.S. at 223-224, and its progeny; Areeda & Haverkamp, Antitrust* [*1222] *Law (1986) § 1510 at 415, 418-419. This is because joint action by competitors to suppress price-cutting has the requisite "substantial potential for impact on competition," Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. at 433 (quoting Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 16, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551) to warrant per se treatment. The district court would require plaintiff in this case to demonstrate a particular potential for impact on the market, when one of the purposes of the per se rule is that in cases like this such a potential is so well-established as not to require individualized showings. Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 646-647, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, 100 S. Ct. 1925; Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 7-8, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551. The pernicious effects are conclusively presumed. Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1108 (7th Cir. 1984), [15] certiorari denied, 470 U.S. 1054, 84 L. Ed. 2d 821, 105 S. Ct. 1758.

In support of its holding that Denny's needed to show that the restraint here had a substantial potential for impact on competition in the market as a whole, the district court relied on Family Boating Center, Inc. v. Washington Area Marine Dealers Association, 1982-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P64,592 (D.D.C. 1982). In that case, the court refused to apply the per se rule to a case in which the plaintiff's competitors had engaged in concerted action to exclude it from exhibiting at a boat show. The facts in the opinion are sketchy, but the concerted action is characterized as a group boycott, apparently because the defendants--themselves also competitors of plaintiff Family Boating Centers--were the ones who refused to sell it exhibition space. The Family Boating Centers court required the plaintiff to demonstrate likely anti-competitive effects before it would apply the per se rule to the boycott. The reasoning of that opinion is contrary to all other authority brought to our attention and therefore will not be followed here.

Since Denny's presented enough evidence for a court and jury [16] to conclude that the defendants engaged in a horizontal conspiracy to suppress price competition at boat shows, their conduct is a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Maricopa Medical Society, 457 U.S. at 338. The district court's grant of summary judgment to defendants is reversed and the case is remanded for trial. The dismissal of the Renfro Defendants' counterclaim is likewise reversed and remanded for further consideration.

End of Document

[6] The requirement imposed by the district court is not the same as the "quick look" described in General Leaseways v. National Trucking Ass'n, 744 F.2d 588, 595 (7th Cir. 1984). When an otherwise-illegal practice is alleged to be in furtherance of a lawful, pro-competitive end, a "quick look" at the economies of the restraint might be necessary in order to decide whether to apply the per se rule. In this case, however, the Dealer Defendants have not alleged a lawful end to which the restraint in question could be said to be ancillary.

[7] Plaintiff actually offers this as an explanation of why it elected to pursue only a legal theory that would trigger the per se rule and not one that would trigger the so-called rule of reason. The rule of reason requires an inquiry into whether the challenged practices were "unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions." Standard Oil Co., 221 U.S. 1, 65, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502; accord National Society of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 690, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355. Proof of actual impact on competitive conditions can result in both parties presenting extensive economic analysis of the relevant market. It is in part to avoid such excessive costs of litigation that the per se rule is applied in cases where the anti-competitive effect of certain practices may be presumed.

The court below incorrectly required plaintiff to establish a "potential" for impact on competitive conditions before it would apply the per se rule. This would effectively require plaintiffs to make a rule of reason demonstration in order to invoke the per se rule!

McCormick v. Bradley

Court of Appeals of Colorado, Division B

November 4, 1993, Decided

No. 92CA1613

Reporter

870 P.2d 599 *; 1993 Colo. App. LEXIS 298 ; 1994-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,532; 17 BTR 1720

Lewrence R. McCormick d/b/a McCormick Custom Homes, Plaintiff-Appellant and Cross-Appellee, v. Leo N. Bradley, Bear Creek Development Corporation, a Colorado corporation, and Bear Creek Properties Corporation, a Colorado corporation, Defendants-Appellees and Cross-Appellants.

Subsequent History: [1] Rehearing Denied December 2, 1993. Certiorari Denied April 11, 1994 (93SC773). Released For Publication April 12, 1994.

Prior History: Appeal from the District Court of Jefferson County. Honorable Christopher J. Munch, Judge. No. 91CV1437

Disposition: JUDGMENT AFFIRMED IN PART, AND CAUSE REMANDED WITH DIRECTIONS

Core Terms

seller, relevant market, trial court, economic power, defendants', antitrust, attorney's fees, costs, tied product, tying arrangement, products, tying product, directed verdict, comparable, custom home, residential, possesses, award of attorney's fees, antitrust violation, present evidence, buyers, fact finder, foreclosed, prevailing, purchaser

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

When considering a motion for directed verdict, the evidence and all legitimate inferences therefrom must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

A directed verdict is proper if the facts are not in conflict and are susceptible of only one reasonable interpretation and if no reasonable jury could decide the issue against the moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-104 (1992).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

While the broad language of Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-104 (1992) could potentially bar almost any business arrangement if literally construed, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-104 was meant to prohibit only those combinations which unreasonably restrain, or are designed to eradicate competition in, a specific market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5[] Private Actions, Standing

Any person injured by a violation of the Colorado antitrust statutes may bring a civil action and recover actual damages pursuant to Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-114 (1992).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Conditioning the sale of one product on the purchase of another tends to suspend the purchaser's independent judgment as to the merits of the tied product and insulates that product from the competitive stresses of the open market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Because the federal antitrust statutes serve similar purposes and seek to achieve a similar goal of protecting competition, federal antitrust opinions are entitled to careful consideration when interpreting Colorado antitrust statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Selling two products in combination is not illegal; it first must be established that this tying arrangement possesses a significant potential for restraint of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement may be a per se antitrust violation, and if so, the detrimental effect on the tied market is presumed without a detailed inquiry into actual market conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN10[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Under Colorado law, a tying arrangement is unreasonable per se only if (1) the supplier of the tying product possesses sufficient economic power with respect to that product appreciably to restrain free competition in the market for the tied product and (2) a not insubstantial amount of commerce in the tied market is affected thereby. If no per se violation is established, the practice may nonetheless be illegal under the rule of reason test if the anti-competitive impact in the market for the tied product outweighs any pro-competitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The existence of two separate products is usually determined by evidence of separate consumer demand for each product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the first part of the per se violation analysis, a plaintiff must prove that the seller possesses economic power in the relevant market. Economic power, in antitrust terms, means that a single seller possesses the ability to raise prices and restrict output for the product in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Economic power can be established by showing that the tying product is unavailable elsewhere or is particularly unique and desirable or, alternatively, that the defendant occupies a dominant position in the tying market. Thus, if the seller offers a unique product, the proper focus of concern is whether the uniqueness of the product gives the seller the power to raise prices or impose other burdensome terms, such as accepting a tied product, with respect to any appreciable number of buyers within the market. Factual uniqueness alone is not adequate. If the seller's unique product does not confer some significant economic marketing advantage or is not significantly differentiated from what other sellers could offer if they so chose, and therefore competitors are able to offer a comparable product at a comparable price even if they have not done so, then there is no economic power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN14[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The fact that a product is unique, in the sense of without like or equal, does not in and of itself, confer economic power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > Machines

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The burden is on the antitrust plaintiff to show that no competitor could have offered a comparable product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Overview & Legal Concepts > Related Legal Issues > Copyright

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The fact that a particular customer prefers a particular tying product is not necessarily probative of significant economic power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN17[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The impact on competition of a single forced sale of a tied product to a single customer is never sufficient to warrant a finding of market power over the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To have established the requisite economic power, a plaintiff needs to show that because of this power in the tying market, defendants had the ability to impose a burden upon an appreciable number of buyers in the relevant geographic area that defendants could not have affected in a competitive market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN19[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Economic power may also be established by showing that the seller occupies a dominant position in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN20[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The critical figure for whether a substantial amount of commerce within the tied market has been foreclosed is the percentage of sales of the tied product that was foreclosed by the tying arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN21[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

To prevail in the absence of a per se violation, a plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating that the tying arrangement unreasonably restrains competition and must necessarily explain to the fact finder what the actual effect on competition in the relevant market has been. Only if the actual anti-competitive impact of the tying arrangement on the market for the tied product outweighs any pro-competitive effects may the practice be found to be an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN22[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Because plaintiff did not recover a judgment in excess of that offer of settlement pursuant to Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-17-202 (Cum. Supp. 1993), defendants were entitled to an award of actual costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

HN23[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

The trial court has no discretion to deny an award of actual costs under Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-17-202 (Cum. Supp. 1993), so long as it determines that those costs are reasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs > Costs Recoverable > Reproduction Costs

HN24[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-16-122(1)(f) (1987) authorizes the award of fees for copies of papers necessarily obtained for use in the case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN25[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

A losing position does not necessarily justify an award of attorney fees under Colo. Rev. Stat. § 13-17-102 (1987).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN26[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Attorney fees may not be awarded if a plaintiff makes a good faith presentation of an arguably meritorious legal theory upon which no determinative authority in Colorado exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

HN27[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

An award of attorney fees to the prevailing party under Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-114(2) (1992) is discretionary with the trial court.

Counsel: Gary S. Cohen, Denver, Colorado, for Plaintiff-Appellant and Cross-Appellee.

Bradley, Campbell, Carney & Madsen, Jim M. Hansen, Matthew S. McElhiney, Golden, Colorado, for Defendants-Appellees and Cross-Appellants.

Judges: Opinion by JUDGE DAVIDSON, Hume and Briggs, JJ., concur

Opinion by: DAVIDSON

Opinion

[*601] Plaintiff, Lewrence McCormick, d/b/a McCormick Custom Homes, appeals from the judgment entered against him on a partial directed verdict and a jury verdict in favor of defendants, Leo N. Bradley, Bear Creek Development Corporation, and Bear Creek Properties Corporation. Defendants cross-appeal. We affirm and remand for consideration of defendants' claim for attorney fees pursuant to § 6-4-114(2), C.R.S. (1992 Repl. Vol. 2).

Plaintiff is a builder of custom houses. In early 1991, he entered into a contract with Lonnie and Christi Herbert to build a house for them on one of the 35 lots located in the South Pointe section of the Bear Creek sub-division near Golden, [2] Colorado. The Herberts had been informed by the South Pointe sales agent that the developer had an approved [*602] builder policy and that plaintiff was not one of the approved builders.

It was undisputed that, during the period relevant here, the real estate market was in decline, and South Pointe was having difficulties getting started as a viable residential development. Originally, the developer had expected to have all 35 South Pointe lots sold with either speculation or custom homes by 1991, but at the time of trial in 1992, although the real estate market had begun to improve, 12 lots remained unsold.

According to the testimony of the South Pointe sales agent, at the time the Herberts purchased their lot, six speculation homes had been built by South Pointe approved builders. No lots had yet been sold for custom homes; a total of 29 vacant lots were available for sale. The sales agent agreed to ask the developer if it was possible to have plaintiff approved as a builder. After the sales agent informed the Herberts that plaintiff would not be approved, the Herberts chose an approved builder to construct their home and cancelled the contract with plaintiff.

Plaintiff filed suit against [3] the developer alleging antitrust violations under Colorado law and tortious interference with contractual or prospective economic relationship. After the close of defendants' evidence, the trial court granted a directed verdict in favor of defendants on the antitrust claim. The trial court then submitted the tort claim to the jury, and it returned a verdict in favor of defendants.

Defendants then moved to alter or amend the judgment seeking attorney fees and costs. Treating this motion as a motion for an award of attorney fees and a bill of costs, the trial court denied the motion for attorney fees, and approved the bill of costs, without comment.

I.

Plaintiff first argues that the trial court erred in determining that he had not presented sufficient evidence to submit the antitrust claim to the jury. We disagree.

HN1[] When considering a motion for directed verdict, the evidence and all legitimate inferences therefrom must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Ferguson v. Gardner, 191 Colo. 527, 554 P.2d 293 (Colo. 1976); Klein v. Sowa, 759 P.2d 857 (Colo. App. 1988).

HN2[] A directed verdict [4] is proper if the facts are not in conflict and are susceptible of only one reasonable interpretation and if no reasonable jury could decide the issue against the moving party. Paine, Webber Jackson & Curtis, Inc. v. Adams, 718 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1986); Evans v. Webster, 832 P.2d 951 (Colo. App. 1991).

According to § 6-4-104, C.R.S. (1992 Repl. Vol. 2): HN3[] "Every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal." HN4[] While this broad language could potentially bar almost any business arrangement if literally construed, our supreme court has determined that the statute was meant to prohibit only those combinations which unreasonably restrain, or are designed to eradicate competition in, a specific market. See People v. Colorado Springs Board of Realtors, Inc., 692 P.2d 1055 (Colo. 1984).

HN5[] Any person injured by a violation of the Colorado antitrust statutes may bring a civil action and recover actual damages pursuant to § 6-4-114, C.R.S. (1992 Repl. Vol. 2).

Plaintiff alleges that the approved builder policy adopted by defendant violates [5] § 6-4-104. Specifically, he contends that because a potential buyer may not purchase the residential lot (the tying product) without also purchasing the goods and services provided by one of the approved builders (the tied product), the approved builder policy constitutes an illegal tying arrangement.

HN6[] Conditioning the sale of one product on the purchase of another tends to suspend the purchaser's independent judgment as to the merits of the tied product and insulates that product from the competitive stresses of the open market. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 97 L.Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953). For this reason, tying arrangements are subject to rigorous examination under most state and federal antitrust laws. See Northern Pacific Ry. Co. [*603] v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958).

HN7[] And, because the federal antitrust statutes serve similar purposes and seek to achieve a similar goal of protecting competition, federal antitrust opinions are entitled to careful consideration when interpreting Colorado antitrust statutes. [6] People v. North Avenue Furniture & Appliance Inc., 645 P.2d 1291 (Colo. 1982).

As the trial court noted, HN8[] selling two products in combination is not illegal; it first must be established that this tying arrangement possesses a significant potential for restraint of competition. See Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984); Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co., 815 F.2d 1407 (11th Cir. 1987).

HN9[] A tying arrangement may be a per se antitrust violation, and if so, the detrimental effect on the tied market is presumed without a detailed inquiry into actual market conditions. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 92 L.Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947).

HN10[] Under Colorado law, a tying arrangement is unreasonable per se only if (1) the supplier of the tying product possesses sufficient economic power with respect to that product appreciably to restrain free competition in the market for the tied product and (2) a not insubstantial amount [7] of commerce in the tied market is affected thereby. People v. Colorado Springs Board of Realtors, Inc., supra. If no per se violation is established, the practice may nonetheless be illegal under the "rule of reason" test if the anti-competitive impact in the market for the tied product outweighs any pro-competitive effects. People v. Colorado Springs Board of Realtors, Inc., supra; see also Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, supra.

Prior to granting defendants' motion for directed verdict on the antitrust claims, the trial court found that two separate products, South Pointe lots and the goods and services provided by one of the approved builders, were tied together. HN11[] The existence of two separate products is usually determined by evidence of separate consumer demand for each product. See Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 957 F.2d 1318 (6th Cir. 1992) modified on other grounds, 995 F.2d 1324 (6th Cir. 1993). The parties seem to be in agreement that separate consumer demand [8] exists for the two products here, and we conduct our analysis accordingly.

The parties also seem to agree that the fact that the two products here are sold by two separate sellers does not preclude plaintiff's per se antitrust claim. We note that there is authority to suggest that when two products are sold together by two separate sellers, a per se analysis will pertain only if the two sellers share in the profits derived from the sale of the packaged items. See generally Gonzalez v. St. Margaret's House Housing Development Fund Corp., 880 F.2d 1514 (2d Cir. 1989) (economic interest factor discussion). However, from the evidence presented at trial it is unclear whether profits were shared by the two sellers, and this issue was neither raised nor addressed by the parties or the trial court. Thus, we will assume, as do the parties, that a per se analysis is not precluded here.

A.

Plaintiff first contends that he presented sufficient evidence to create a jury question as to whether defendants' approved builder policy was a per se antitrust violation. We disagree.

1.

HN12[] Under the first part of the per se violation analysis, a plaintiff [9] must prove that the seller possesses economic power in the relevant market. Economic power, in antitrust terms, means that a single seller possesses the ability to raise prices and restrict output for the product in the relevant market. Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 (1969).

HN13[] This requisite economic power can be established by showing that the tying product is unavailable elsewhere or is particularly [*604] unique and desirable or, alternatively, that the defendant occupies a dominant position in the tying market. See Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., supra; United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 (1962).

Thus, if the seller offers a unique product, the proper focus of concern is whether the uniqueness of the product gives the seller the power to raise prices or impose other burdensome terms, such as accepting a tied product, with respect to any appreciable number of buyers within the market. Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., supra. [10]

Factual uniqueness alone is not adequate. If the seller's unique product does not confer some significant economic marketing advantage or is not significantly differentiated from what other sellers could offer if they so chose, and therefore competitors are able to offer a comparable product at a comparable price even if they have not done so, then there is no economic power. United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80, 97 S. Ct. 861 (1977); Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., supra; Midwestern Waffles, Inc. v. Waffle House, Inc., 734 F.2d 705 (11th Cir. 1984).

Here, the Herberts agreed to use the goods and services provided by one of the approved builders only because the South Pointe lot was, in their view, uniquely suited for their needs and they could not purchase that lot unless they agreed to use an approved builder. Plaintiff's primary contention, both at trial and on appeal, is that this particular piece of land was such a unique and otherwise unavailable product that defendants, by virtue of mere possession [11] of the lot, also possessed the requisite economic power.

We do agree that rarely, if ever, would a potential purchaser find that any two pieces of real property were identical. See Denver Urban Renewal Authority v. Berglund-Cherne Co., 193 Colo. 562, 568 P.2d 478 (1977). Any particular piece of real estate is therefore, in that sense, unique and impossible of precise duplication. Benson v. Nelson, 725 P.2d 71 (Colo. App. 1986); see also Prosser v. Schmidt, 118 Colo. 502, 197 P.2d 318 (1948).

HN14[] Contrary to plaintiff's contentions, however, the fact that a product is "unique," in the sense of "without like or equal," does not in and of itself, confer economic power. See Spartan Grain & Mill Co. v. Ayers, 581 F.2d 419 (5th Cir. 1978). HN15[] The burden is on the antitrust plaintiff to show that no competitor could have offered a comparable product. 3 P.M., Inc. v. Basic Four Corp., 591 F. Supp. 1350 (E.D. Mich. 1984). Compare International Salt Co. v. United States, supra [12] (the tying product, a salt dispensing machine, was unique because the seller's patent prevented others from selling comparable machines) and United States v. Loew's, Inc., supra (the copyright attached to seller's product, feature films for television, prevented others from selling comparable films) with 3 P.M., Inc. v. Basic Four Corp., supra (trademark and partial copyright attached to seller's product, business computer systems, did not conclusively demonstrate that others could not have produced a comparable product). HN16[] Further, the fact that a particular customer prefers a particular tying product is not necessarily probative of significant economic power. See Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, supra.

Land has been recognized as a "unique" product in antitrust cases, see Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, supra; State v. Hossan-Maxwell, Inc., 181 Conn. 655, 436 A.2d 284 (1980). In the majority of cases cited [13] by plaintiff, however, the "uniqueness' of the land did not, ipso facto, establish economic power but instead was considered in conjunction with other considerations, including objective criteria of desirability, in defining what was the relevant market. See Suburban Mobile Homes, Inc v. Amfac Communities, Inc., 101 Cal. App. 3d 532, 161 Cal. Rptr. 811 (1980) (the highly desirable locations within commuting distance of San Francisco and the unique amenities of certain mobile home lots constituted economic power in the market for such lots); MacManus v. A.E. Realty Partners, 146 Cal. App. 3d 275. 194 Cal. Rptr. 567 (1983) (the desirable [*605] characteristics of the defendant's homes coupled with a general scarcity of available homes supported an allegation of economic power within the residential real estate market); Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, supra (Northern Pacific's vast holdings of land situated in desirable locations adjacent to the railroad tracks conferred sufficient economic power in the relevant market).

[14] Plaintiff relies upon State v. Hossan-Maxwell, Inc., supra, in which the Connecticut Supreme Court concluded, without discussion, that the uniqueness of residential property was sufficient evidence of market power. In that case, the court first announced that the pertinent inquiry was whether the seller had the power to force a tying arrangement upon any appreciable number of buyers within the market for the tying product, but then neglected to explain how the uniqueness of residential lots, without more, bestowed this ability upon the seller. We decline to reach the same conclusion concerning defendants' lots here without, at the minimum, evidence that defendants' lots possessed unique and desirable attributes, attractive to other buyers in addition to the Herberts, which prevented other sellers from offering a comparable product. See 3 P.M., Inc. v. Basic Four Corp., supra, and compare State v. Hossan-Maxwell, Inc., supra, with Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, supra.

Moreover, what is absent [15] from the Hossan-Maxwell analysis is the recognition of the fundamental concept that any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement, even when a unique product is involved, must focus on the markets in which the products are sold. See Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, supra; cf. United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L.Ed 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956) (products need not be fungible to be considered in the relevant market; that market is composed of products which are reasonably interchangeable for the purposes for which they are offered).

This market power analysis has both a product and a geographic dimension that, once defined, provide the framework against which economic power may be measured. Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., supra. Accordingly, the analysis of defendant's power within the tying market necessarily required plaintiff to define precisely the market for vacant residential lots. See People v. Colorado Springs Board of Realtors, Inc., supra. [16]

Plaintiff, however, presented no evidence establishing the relevant market. Therefore, no reasonable fact finder could conclude that the uniqueness of the custom home lot creates sufficient economic power in the relevant market for the tying product.

We reject the notion urged by plaintiff that the relevant market consists of a single lot which a single purchaser has selected. HN17[] The impact on competition of a single forced sale of a tied product to a single customer is never sufficient to warrant a finding of market power over the tying product. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, supra; Ryko Manufacturing Co. v. Eden Services, 823 F.2d 1215 (8th Cir. 1987); W.H. Brady Co. v. Lem Products, Inc., 659 F. Supp. 1355 (N.D.Ill. 1987).

The facts of this case aptly illustrate the soundness of this principle; by proving merely that one purchaser found the South Pointe lot subjectively more desirable than others they had seen, plaintiff did not show that defendants had economic power within the relevant market of residential lots available to all potential buyers. [17] See United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., supra; Kingsport Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 644 F.2d 566 (6th Cir. 1981).

HN18[] To have established the requisite economic power, plaintiff needed to show that because of this power in the tying market, defendants had the ability to impose a burden, here the purchase of the tied product, upon an appreciable number of buyers in the relevant geographic area that defendants could not have affected in a competitive market. See II E. Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law 238 (1980). Taken by itself the evidence of the forced sale to the Herberts did not demonstrate that the unique characteristics of the South Pointe lots made the package offered by defendants sufficiently more advantageous than that offered by other sellers to confer [*606] any economic power within the relevant market. See Will v. Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665 (7th Cir. 1985).

2.

As noted above, HN19[] economic power may also be established by showing that the seller occupies a dominant position in the relevant market. Plaintiff failed [18] to demonstrate that defendants controlled even a significant portion of the relevant market here.

Assuming that plaintiff meant to define the relevant market as including the Denver metropolitan area, defendants presented evidence that, at the time the Herberts were looking for a custom home lot on which to build, at least 1419 comparable lots, in terms of desirability of location, price range, and other considerations, were available. Thus, it was undisputed that the South Pointe lots represent less than 3% of the total number available in the area.

This was the only evidence presented tending to define the relevant market. By failing to present evidence of his own to define the relevant market, plaintiff lost any opportunity to show that defendants' conception of the relevant market was incorrect.

As so defined, 3% of the available vacant custom home lots in the area does not constitute significant economic power in the market for such lots. See United States Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enterprises, Inc., supra; United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., supra (although [19] each seller possesses a monopoly with respect to the seller's own individual product, the measure of market dominance must take into account similar substitute products); Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, supra (30% market share insufficient); Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., supra (11% market share insufficient); Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792 (1st Cir. 1988) (5.6% market share insufficient); A. I. Root Co. v. Computer/Dynamics, Inc., 806 F.2d 673 (6th Cir. 1986) (2-4% market share insufficient).

We therefore agree that no reasonable fact finder could have concluded that defendant had the requisite economic power in the relevant market for the tying product.

B.

Plaintiff's proof also suffered a similar deficiency as to whether a substantial amount of commerce within the tied market had been foreclosed. HN20[] The critical figure for purposes of this analysis is the percentage of sales of the tied product that was foreclosed by the tying arrangement. Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., supra. [20]

However, plaintiff made no effort to define the market for the tied product -- the goods and services provided by custom home builders in the relevant geographic area. It was plaintiff's burden to establish that a not insubstantial amount of these sales were foreclosed by defendants' policy, but plaintiff presented evidence of only one out of an unknown number of total sales which was foreclosed from competition.

While we agree with plaintiff that the dollar amount of the Herbert contract is not insignificant or paltry, see Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., supra, we do not agree that this is the relevant figure for the purpose of proving a not insubstantial amount of commerce has been foreclosed. See Aspen Title & Escrow, Inc. v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 677 F. Supp. 1477 (D.Or. 1987); Metromedia Broadcasting Corp. v. MGM/UA Entertainment Co., 611 F. Supp. 415 (C.D.Cal. 1985); cf. Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co., supra (although the evidence presented dealt with a single purchaser, the fact that this purchaser [21] was involved in a total of seven forced transactions was sufficient to show a substantial impact on the market). Therefore, we agree with the trial court that no reasonable fact finder could conclude that plaintiff had established a per se antitrust violation. See People v. Colorado Springs Board of Realtors, Inc., supra.

II.

Plaintiff next argues that, even if no per se antitrust violation could be established, the trial court was required to submit [*607] the claim to the jury for consideration of the "rule of reason" test. We disagree.

HN21[] To prevail in the absence of a per se violation, a plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating that the tying arrangement unreasonably restrains competition and must necessarily explain to the fact finder what the actual effect on competition in the relevant market has been. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, supra. Only if the actual anti-competitive impact of the tying arrangement on the market for the tied product outweighs any pro-competitive effects may the practice be found to be an antitrust violation. People v. Colorado Springs Board of Realtors, Inc., supra. [22]

Plaintiff did not define the market for the tied product by product or by geography, see Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., supra, and he presented no evidence of any impact on that market. Because of this lack of definition of the relevant market, it cannot be presumed that defendants' policy had anti-competitive effects, other than plaintiff's loss of the Herbert contract which he contends would not have occurred if the market were unrestrained by defendants' policy. See People v. Colorado Springs Board of Realtors, Inc., supra.

Therefore, we agree with the trial court's conclusion that no reasonable fact finder could determine that the pro-competitive effects of the approved builder policy were outweighed by anti-competitive impact. Hence, the directed verdict in favor of defendants was not erroneous. See Candell v. Western Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n, 156 Colo. 552, 400 P.2d 909 (1965).

III.

Plaintiff also argues that the trial court erroneously awarded defendants photocopying costs in the amount of $ 950.95. We disagree.

Plaintiff rejected defendants' [23] offer of settlement pursuant to § 13-17-202, C.R.S. (1993 Cum. Supp.). HN22[] Because plaintiff did not recover a judgment in excess of that offer of settlement, defendants were entitled to an award of actual costs. See Callaham v. First American Title Insurance Co., 837 P.2d 769 (Colo. App. 1992); § 13-17-202(1)(a)(II), C.R.S. (1993 Cum. Supp.).

HN23[] The trial court has no discretion to deny an award of actual costs under this statute, so long as it determines that those costs are reasonable. Scholz v. Metropolitan Pathologists, P.C., 851 P.2d 901 (Colo. 1993); Jorgensen v. Heinz, 847 P.2d 181 (Colo. App. 1992).

HN24[] Moreover, contrary to plaintiff's assertion that photocopying costs may not be awarded as reasonable costs, § 13-16-122(1)(f) C.R.S. (1987 Repl. Vol. 6A) authorizes the award of fees for "copies of papers necessarily obtained for use in the case." See Cherry Creek School District #5 v. Voelker, 859 P.2d 805, 812 (Colo. 1993) (the list of items which may be awarded as costs in § 13-16-122(1) is meant to be illustrative and not exclusive); Perkins v. Flatiron Structures Co., 849 P.2d 832, [24] (Colo. App. 1992).

Here, plaintiff does not contend that the photocopies were not necessary for use in this case or that the costs were unreasonable. Thus, we conclude that the trial court was well within its discretion to award photocopying costs.

IV.

Because of our resolution of the antitrust issues, we need not address plaintiff's remaining contention that the improper directed verdict prejudiced the jury as to his claim for tortious interference with contract.

V.

On cross-appeal, defendants argue that because plaintiff's claims were groundless, frivolous, and vexatious, they were entitled to an award of attorney fees under § 13-17-102, C.R.S. (1987 Repl. Vol. 6A). Defendants also argue that they are entitled to an award of attorney fees as the prevailing party pursuant to § 6-4-114(2), C.R.S. (1992 Repl. Vol. 2). We agree that a remand is necessary on the issue of attorney fees.

A.

HN25[] A losing position does not necessarily justify an award of attorney fees under § 13-17-102. *See Romberg v. Slemon, 778 P.2d 315 [608] (Colo. App. 1989); Federal Land Bank v. Jost, 761 P.2d 270 (Colo. App. 1988). HN26[] Attorney fees may not be awarded [25] if, as here, a plaintiff makes a good faith presentation of an arguably meritorious legal theory upon which no determinative authority in Colorado exists. See SaBell's, Inc. v. City of Golden, 832 P.2d 974 (Colo. App. 1991); Pedlow v. Stamp, 819 P.2d 1110 (Colo. App. 1991).

We conclude that the trial court did not err by refusing to award attorney fees on this basis. We also decline to award attorney fees incurred in defending this appeal. See Mission Denver Co. v. Pierson, 674 P.2d 363 (Colo. 1984).

B.

As to defendants' request for an award of attorney fees under § 6-4-114(2) of the Colorado antitrust statute, an amended version came into effect on July 1, 1992, several weeks before the trial of this matter. Plaintiff requested permission to supplement his complaint before trial to include remedy provisions included in the new version of the statute. Plaintiff contended, and the trial court agreed, that the new version of the statute should be applicable to this action prospectively under Billington v. Yust, 789 P.2d 196 (Colo. App. 1989). Accordingly, defendants [26] then requested that the trial court award them their attorney fees incurred after the effective date of the amendments to § 6-4-114(2).

HN27[] By its terms, an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party under § 6-4-114(2) is discretionary with the trial court. We recognize that unlike, for example, § 14-10-119, C.R.S. (1987 Repl. Vol. 6B), there are no specific guidelines to assist the court in the exercise of its discretion. Certainly, there are many reasons why a court may choose to grant or not to grant attorney fees, such as disparity of income. Here, however, although defendants prevailed on the merits on all claims, the trial court denied defendants' request for attorney fees without comment. And, we cannot ascertain from a review of the record what factors, if any, it relied upon in exercising its discretion. Thus, we must remand the cause to the trial court to delineate the basis for its ruling concerning defendants' request for attorney fees under § 6-4-114(2) as the prevailing party both in the trial court and on appeal. Cf. Cherry Creek School District #5 v. Voelker, supra.

VI.

Defendants also argue that the trial court erred by denying their motion for directed verdict [27] on plaintiff's tortious interference with contract claim. In view of the jury verdict rendered in their favor, and the disposition of this appeal, it is not necessary to address this issue.

The cause is remanded on the issue of defendants' request for attorney fees under § 6-4-114(2), and the judgment is affirmed in all other respects.

JUDGE HUME and JUDGE BRIGGS concur.

Gabriel & Assocs. v. Invisible Fence Co.

United States District Court for the District of Maryland

November 9, 1993, Decided ; November 9, 1993, Filed

CIVIL NO. H-93-1016

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19907 *; 93-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,440

GABRIEL & ASSOCIATES, INC. and LAUR & BEV CORPORATION, Plaintiffs v. INVISIBLE FENCE COMPANY, INC., et al., Defendants

Core Terms

distributors, pet, monopolization, electronic, personal jurisdiction, conspiracy, manufacturer, motion to dismiss, plaintiffs', defense motion, contracts, network, lack of personal jurisdiction, allegations, marketing, commerce, restraint of trade, fail to state, Robinson-Patman Act, Sherman Act, competitor, contacts, amended complaint, anti trust law, Clayton Act, defendants', antitrust violation, interstate commerce, relevant market, leave to amend

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN1[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

The limits of a federal district court's personal jurisdiction are coextensive with that of the state courts of the state in which the federal district court sits. Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(e) a court must apply a two step analysis in determining whether or not it may exercise personal jurisdiction over a particular defendant. First, the court must determine whether such personal jurisdiction is statutorily authorized. Second, the court must determine whether such personal jurisdiction is permissible under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Distribution, Processing & Storage

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Commencement & Prosecution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN2[] Agriculture & Food, Distribution, Processing & Storage of Food & Agricultural Products

Md. Cts. and Jud. Proc. Code Ann., § 6-103, states in relevant part: A court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person who directly or by an agent: Transacts any business or performs any character of work or service in the state; Contracts to supply goods, food, services, or manufactured products in the state; Causes tortious injury in the state by an act or omission in the state; Causes tortious injury in the state or outside of the state by an act or omission outside the state if he regularly does or solicits business, engages in any other persistent course of conduct in the state or derives substantial revenue from goods, food, services, or manufactured products used or consumed in the state. This statute has been interpreted by Maryland courts as extending personal jurisdiction to the limits permissible under the Due Process Clause.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Challenges

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN3[] In Personam Actions, Challenges

In order for a court to assert personal jurisdiction over a defendant who is neither a domiciliary of Maryland nor served while present in Maryland, such defendant must have "minimum contacts" with Maryland such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. Generally, the defendant must have taken some action "purposefully directed" towards Maryland. If a court determines that a defendant has purposeful contacts with the forum state, it must then determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would conform to fair play and substantial justice. Importantly, when a court's exercise of personal jurisdiction is challenged by a defendant, the burden of alleging and proving the factual basis for the court's exercise of such jurisdiction is upon the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN4[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

The burden is on the plaintiff to make out a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over a defendant.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN5[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

It is well established that jurisdiction over a corporation does not constitute jurisdiction over corporate officers, directors or employees who are sued as individuals.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

HN6[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) should be denied unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. In determining whether to dismiss a complaint, the court must view the well-pleaded material allegations in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, with the alleged facts accepted as true.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN7[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) calls for a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(b) states, each claim founded on a separate transaction or occurrence shall be stated in a separate count whenever a separation facilitates the clear presentation of the matters set forth.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 provides, in part, every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states is declared to be illegal. Mere conclusory allegations do not satisfy the requirements for pleading a violation of the antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN9[] Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

The facts alleged must, if proved, show that the plaintiff is entitled to relief under the statutory provision in question.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Mere meetings between a manufacturer and its distributors do not, without more, prove the existence of an unlawful vertical conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

An arrangement does not violate the antitrust laws unless it creates an unreasonable restraint on interbrand competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN12[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 makes it unlawful to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states. The statute bars three types of conduct: monopolization, attempted monopolization, and a conspiracy to monopolize trade. To prove an antitrust violation of monopolization, a plaintiff must prove (1) the defendant's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. To prove an antitrust violation of attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show that the would-be monopolist had a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To prove an antitrust violation of conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that a conspiracy to obtain (or maintain) a monopoly in the relevant market existed; (2) that this conspiracy to monopolize concerned goods in interstate commerce; (3) that the defendant entered into the conspiracy with the specific intention or purpose of monopolizing the relevant market; (4) that at least one of the conspirators committed an overt act to further the conspiracy; and (5) that the plaintiff was injured in its business or property as a result of the defendant's actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN14[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) provides: It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

To have standing the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, a plaintiff must also prove that it was injured by the defendant's actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN16[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14 provides: It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in interstate commerce, in the course of such commerce, to make a sale or contract for sale of goods for use, consumption or resale within the United States on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods of a competitor or competitors of the seller, where the effect of such sale may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

In order to plead a cause of action under section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14 plaintiff must allege that a contract for sale of goods between defendant and plaintiff, not defendant and others, was conditioned on a promise of not dealing in the goods of a competitor.

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN18[] Civil Procedure, Attorneys

Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 provides that if a particular claim is not well grounded in fact and warranted by existing law, sanctions should be imposed.

Judges: [*1] Harvey, II

Opinion by: ALEXANDER HARVEY, II

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

In this civil action, plaintiffs have charged numerous defendants with violations of federal antitrust law resulting from defendants' sale and distribution of the "Sta-Put System" brand of electronic pet restraints. [1] The two plaintiffs, Gabriel & Associates, Inc. and Laur & Bev Corporation, are distributors of electronic pet restraints. The complaint named 19 defendants, including 15 corporations and 4 individuals. By its Memorandum and Order of October 13, 1993, the complaint was dismissed without prejudice as to four of the corporate defendants. [2] The 11 remaining corporate defendants include one manufacturer of electronic pet restraints and 10 distributors of that product.

[*2] Pending before the Court are motions to dismiss filed on behalf of all of the remaining defendants. The following motions have been filed:

(1) Motion of defendant Invisible Fence Company, Inc. to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted;

(2) Motion of individual defendants Helen Weary, Thomas Weary, William Annesley and Jeffrey Hanhausen to dismiss the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction;

(3) Motion of defendant Clark Enterprises, Inc. to dismiss the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction;

(4) Motion of defendants Canine Containment Distributing Company; I.F.D., Inc.; Clark Distributors, Inc.; Invisible Fence Distributor of the Midwest; Invisible Fence of the Northland; Invisible Fence of the North Pacific; Invisible Fence South and J.G.B. Distributing, Inc. to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted;

---

[1] Electronic pet restraints emit low frequency signals which are inaudible to the human ear and which harm a pet that strays from the area "fenced in" by these signals.

[2] Two defendants were dismissed pursuant to Rule 4(j), F.R.Civ.P., and two others were dismissed for lack of prosecution.

(5) Motion of defendants Invisible Fence of the North Pacific; Canine Containment Distributing Company; I.F.D., Inc.; Invisible Fence Distributor of the Midwest; Invisible Fence of the Northland; Invisible Fence South and J.T.B. Distributing Inc. to dismiss the complaint for lack [*3] of personal jurisdiction; and
(6) Motion of defendant Canine Fence Company, Inc. to dismiss the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Following its review of the complaint, defendants' motions and the extensive memoranda and exhibits filed in support of and in opposition to the pending motions, the Court has determined that no hearing is necessary. See Local Rule 105.6. For the reasons stated herein, the Court has concluded that all of the pending motions to dismiss of all defendants must be granted.

I

Background Facts

Reading the complaint in a light most favorable to the plaintiffs, the following are the pertinent facts. Invisible Fence Company ("IF"), is the manufacturer of the "Sta-Put" brand of electronic pet restraints. Plaintiffs have here sued four of IF's corporate officers individually, and numerous distributors of the product located in various parts of the United States.

Defendant IF is incorporated in Delaware and has its principal place of business in Pennsylvania. It currently markets its product through a network of independent, exclusive distributors. The distributors are guaranteed by IF to be the only "Sta-Put" distributor in their region. In [*4] return, each distributor agrees not to sell or market the brands made by other pet restraint manufacturers. [3] Vigorous competition exists in the field of electronic pet restraints.

Plaintiffs Gabriel & Associates, Inc. and Laur & Bev Corporation distribute pet restraints to retailers in two markets, namely in Maryland and North Carolina. Plaintiffs were once part of IF's distribution network and purchased their stocks of "Sta-Put" pet restraints directly from IF as the manufacturer. However, when IF reorganized its distribution network in 1991, plaintiffs were no longer permitted to be a part of IF's exclusive network. As a result, plaintiffs could no longer purchase products directly from IF as the manufacturer but instead had to purchase the "Sta-Put" product from distributors, which were one step further down the distribution chain.

Plaintiffs complain of their exclusion from IF's [*5] direct distribution network. They allege that IF has harmed their business by selling products directly to plaintiffs' customers on a consignment basis. According to plaintiffs, they cannot, because of these circumstances, profitably offer competitive prices to their customers. Plaintiffs further allege that IF and its distributors frequently failed to fill plaintiffs' orders of "Sta-Put" systems. Plaintiffs also assert that IF sought to harm their business by "junking" the plaintiffs' stock [4] and by interfering with plaintiffs' attempts to sell their business. Between 1989 and 1992, plaintiffs attempted to sell their North Carolina business, and, at least on one occasion, they had lined up a buyer. However, IF allegedly interfered with and scuttled that transaction by offering the potential buyer the exclusive territory formerly assigned to the plaintiffs.

Based on these allegations, plaintiffs contend that defendants have violated various provisions [*6] of federal antitrust law, including provisions of the Sherman Act, of the Clayton Act, and of the Robinson-Patman Act. [5]

II

---

[3] It appears that it was the violation by plaintiffs of this exclusivity agreement that led to their termination as an IF distributor.

[4] It is not clear from the complaint what is meant by "junking."

[5] The complaint also claims, in its introductory paragraph, violations by defendants of the "Fair Trade Law." However, the complaint does not address such a law beyond this initial mention of it, and the Court will not therefore consider that assertion.

Discussion

(a)

The Motions to Dismiss

For Lack of Personal Jurisdiction

HN1[] The limits of a federal district court's personal jurisdiction are coextensive with that of the state courts of the state in which the federal district court sits. Rule 4(e), F.R.Civ.P. A court must apply a two step analysis in determining whether or not it may exercise personal jurisdiction over a particular defendant. First, the court must determine whether such personal jurisdiction is statutorily authorized. Second, the court must determine whether such personal jurisdiction is permissible under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. E.g., Prince v. Illien Adoptions International, Ltd., 806 F. Supp. 1225, 1228 (D.Md. 1992). [*7]

Maryland's long-arm statute, HN2[] Md. Cts. & Jud. Proc. Code Ann. § 6-103, states in relevant part:

> (b) In general -- A court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person who directly or by an agent:
> (1) Transacts any business or performs any character of work or service in the State;
> (2) Contracts to supply goods, food, services, or manufactured products in the State;
> (3) Causes tortious injury in the State by an act or omission in the State;
> (4) Causes tortious injury in the State or outside of the State by an act or omission outside the State if he regularly does or solicits business, engages in any other persistent course of conduct in the State or derives substantial revenue from goods, food, services, or manufactured products used or consumed in the State.

This statute has been interpreted by Maryland courts as extending personal jurisdiction to the limits permissible under the Due Process Clause. E.g., Geelhoed v. Jensen, 277 Md. 220, 224, 352 A.2d 818 (1976). HN3[] In order for a court to assert personal jurisdiction over a defendant who is neither a domiciliary of Maryland nor served while present in Maryland, such defendant must [*8] have "minimum contacts" with Maryland such that maintenance of the suit does not offend "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 319, 90 L. Ed. 95, 66 S. Ct. 154 (1945). Generally, the defendant must have taken some action "purposefully directed" towards Maryland. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283, 78 S. Ct. 1228 (1958); Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court of California, 480 U.S. 102, 109, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92, 107 S. Ct. 1026 (1987). If a court determines that a defendant has purposeful contacts with the forum state, it must then determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would conform to "fair play and substantial justice." Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528, 105 S. Ct. 2174 (1985), quoting International Shoe Co., 326 U.S. at 320. Importantly, [*9] when a court's exercise of personal jurisdiction is challenged by a defendant, the burden of alleging and proving the factual basis for the court's exercise of such jurisdiction is upon the plaintiff. Mylan Laboratories, Inc. v. AKZO, N.V., 2 F.3d 56, 59-60 (4th Cir. 1993).

In this case, 13 of the 15 remaining defendants have challenged this Court's jurisdiction over them. When the principles of the decisions cited hereinabove are applied to the facts of this case, it is apparent that all of the pending motions to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction must be granted. Plaintiffs have failed to establish, either by the allegations of the complaint or in the oppositions which they have filed to defendants' motions to dismiss, that the 13 defendants in question have contacts with the State of Maryland which would permit this Court to exercise personal jurisdiction over them.

(i)

The Nine Remaining Distributors

The distributors of IF which have been sued here are located in various parts of the United States. Defendant IF operates its business mostly in Pennsylvania. The plaintiffs have not alleged any facts indicating that IF's distributors, other [*10] than Clark Distributors, Inc., (hereinafter "Clark Distributors"), have engaged in any kind of business activity in Maryland.

All the distributors (except for Clark Distributors, which operates in Maryland) have submitted affidavits establishing that they are incorporated outside Maryland, that they have their principal places of business outside Maryland, that they transact no business in Maryland, that they have not contracted to conduct any business in Maryland, and indeed that they have engaged in no activity at all in Maryland. [6] [*11] These affidavits place the burden on plaintiffs to come forward with contrary evidence. [7] No such evidence has been supplied by the plaintiffs. Indeed, in their complaint, plaintiffs have not even alleged facts which would indicate that these defendants had the necessary "minimum contacts" with Maryland. [8]

For these reasons, the motions of these [*12] nine defendants to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction will be granted.

(ii)

The Four Individual Defendants

Defendants Helen Weary, Thomas Weary, William Annesley, and Jeffrey Hanhausen, all of whom are officers or directors of defendant IF, have challenged this Court's jurisdiction on grounds that they, as individuals, have no contacts with Maryland.

Plaintiffs' complaint contains no allegations which would, if proved, establish that these individual defendants had any of the necessary "minimum contacts" with Maryland. Indeed, the facts alleged by plaintiffs concerning these defendants' activities, such as visiting plaintiffs' Maryland warehouse, making phone calls to Maryland discussing shipments, and the like, are clearly acts done in their position as corporate officers conducting the business of their employer.

HN5[] It is well established that jurisdiction over a corporation does not constitute jurisdiction over corporate officers, directors or employees who are sued as individuals. Birrane v. Master Collectors, Inc., 738 F. Supp. 167, 168-70 (D.Md. 1990); Umans v. PWP Services, Inc., 50 Md. App. 414, 420-21, 439 A.2d 21 (1982). [*13] Thus, the fact that personal jurisdiction exists in this case as to defendant IF does not give this court personal jurisdiction over these individual officers and directors.

---

[6] Defendant Canine Fence, Inc., acknowledges in its motion to dismiss that it has twice sold goods to a Maryland resident. It sold replacement parts for a machine that it had sold in Connecticut, whose buyer later moved to Maryland. Two isolated sales to one customer in Maryland does not constitute the necessary minimum contacts under the International Shoe due process analysis. Moreover, plaintiffs did not even file an opposition to Canine Fence's motion to dismiss.

[7] In a case such as this one, HN4[] the burden is on the plaintiff to make out a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over a defendant. Mylan Laboratories, Inc. v. AKZO, N.V., 2 F.3d 56, 60 (4th Cir. 1993).

[8] In their opposition to defendants' motions to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, plaintiffs completely ignore the issue of personal jurisdiction. Instead, they argue that this Court has subject matter jurisdiction in antitrust cases and that venue was proper in this district. It is axiomatic, however, that "venue provisions come into play only after jurisdiction has been established." Lindahl v. Office of Personnel Management, 470 U.S. 768, 793 n.30, 84 L. Ed. 2d 674, 105 S. Ct. 1620 (1985). See also, Neirbo Co. v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 308 U.S. 165, 167-68, 84 L. Ed. 167, 60 S. Ct. 153 (1939), 15 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 3801, at 4-5 (1986).

Plaintiffs have therefore failed to satisfy their burden of alleging or producing facts establishing the necessary minimum contacts. Accordingly, the motions to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction of the four individual defendants will also be granted.

(b)

The Motions to Dismiss

For Failure to State a Claim

Only two defendants, IF, a manufacturer, and Clark Distributors, a distributor, have conceded that this Court has personal jurisdiction over them. These two defendants have, however, filed motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), F.R.Civ.P. [9]

[*14] HN6[]

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), F.R.Civ.P., should be denied unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). In determining whether to dismiss a complaint, this Court must view the well-pleaded material allegations in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, with the alleged facts accepted as true. 2A Moore's Federal Practice, P 12.07 [2.-5] (2d ed. 1987); 5A C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357, at 304-21 (1990).

Defendants first contend that the complaint fails to meet the minimal pleading requirements of Rule 8 and Rule 10, F.R.Civ.P. HN7[] Rule 8(a) calls for "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," and Rule 10(b) states, "Each claim founded on a separate transaction or occurrence . . . shall be stated in a separate count . . . whenever a separation facilitates the clear presentation of the matters set forth."

The complaint filed in this case by plaintiffs is a veritable jumble [*15] of facts, conclusory statements of law, and antitrust jargon. It is disorganized and confusing. Nevertheless, the Court will not dismiss the complaint for failure of the plaintiffs to comply with Rules 8 and 10. A court should liberally construe an antitrust complaint. Knuth v. Erie-Crawford Dairy Coop., 395 F.2d 420, 423 (3rd Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 913, 35 L. Ed. 2d 278, 93 S. Ct. 966 (1973). Even if the complaint is given a liberal reading, this Court nevertheless concludes that it fails to state claims against defendants IF and Clark Distributors upon which relief may be granted. The motions to dismiss of these two defendants will therefore be granted pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), with leave to plaintiffs to file an amended complaint against defendants IF and Clark. [10]

The complaint contains [*16] two counts. Count I is entitled "Violation of Title 15 USC § 1 and § 2." In this Count, plaintiffs also allege a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13. Count II is entitled "Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade (USC § 1 Monopoly of Trade) (15 U.S.C. § 14 Civil Damages, Sale, etc. On Agreement Not To Use Goods Of a Competitor)." Although it cannot be readily determined from a reading of the complaint, the Court will assume that plaintiffs are asserting claims under all of the antitrust statutes listed. The Court will therefore address herein §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, § 2 of the Robinson-Patman Act, and § 3 of the Clayton Act.

(i)

---

[9] while this Court discusses herein only the motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim of these two defendants, its analysis would apply to the other defendants as well. Plaintiffs' failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted thus represents an alternative ground for dismissal of the other thirteen defendants as well.

[10] If an amended complaint is filed, it should be drafted in strict compliance with Rule 8(a) and Rule 10(b), F.R.Civ.P.

15 U.S.C. § 1

Both counts of the complaint assert claims under HN8[] § 1 of the Sherman Act, which provides, in part, "Every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is declared to be illegal." Plaintiffs' complaint does not properly allege a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Mere conclusory allegations do not satisfy the requirements for pleading [*17] a violation of the antitrust laws. As Judge Friendly wrote:

> A mere allegation that defendants violated the antitrust laws as to a particular plaintiff and commodity no more complies with Rule 8 than an allegation which says only that a defendant made an undescribed contract with the plaintiff and breached it, or that a defendant owns a car and injured plaintiff by driving it negligently.

Klebanow v. New York Produce Exchange, 344 F.2d 294, 299 (2d Cir. 1965). Moreover, HN9[] the facts alleged must, if proved, show that the plaintiff is entitled to relief under the statutory provision in question.

Applying these principles here, this Court concludes that plaintiffs have not alleged sufficient facts to avoid dismissal of the claims asserted by plaintiffs under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Paragraph 20 of the complaint alleges:

> That at various times between 1991 and 1993 your defendants met, conspired, entered into contracts, engaged in combination and conspiracy to restrain the trade and commerce of the electronic pet restraint business with the sole purpose of fixing or conspiring to fix the price, market share and availability of the electronic pet [*18] restraint commerce.

Plaintiffs here rely on the fact that the defendants "met" and "entered into contracts." [11] HN10[] Mere meetings between a manufacturer and its distributors do not, without more, prove the existence of an unlawful vertical conspiracy. As the Supreme Court said in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763-764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), "In order to assure an efficient distribution system, manufacturers and distributors constantly must coordinate their activities to assure that their product will reach the consumer persuasively and efficiently."

[*19] Plaintiffs do not in the complaint explain how the contracts relied upon resulted in a restraint of trade. On the contrary, the "contracts" which the defendants allegedly entered into are not proof of antitrust violations. These contracts are described in Paragraphs 27-29 of the complaint, as follows:

> 27. That on or about April of 1991, the Defendants . . . attempted to set up and establish the national marketing scheme [sic] to conduct the business of distribution and marketing electronic pet restraints and conferred on the Defendants . . . as the exclusive agency for the marketing the same [sic] in the continental United States in which the Plaintiff and other dealers conduct the business of selling electronic pet restraints to wholesale and retail dealers for resale. That in order to participate in said marketing scheme, each of the above defendants agreed not to use or deal in merchandise, goods or wares of a competitor in violate [sic] of 15 USC § 14.
>
> 28. That on or about April 1, 1991 pursuant to an Agreement executed by each one of the Defendants [sic], the Defendants commenced thereinafter and still continue the marketing and distribution [*20] of "Sta-Put Systems" as the exclusive agent in the continental United States.

---

[11] In addition, plaintiffs allege various types of unilateral conduct on the part of defendant IF, such as buying plaintiffs' stock and "junking" it, and placing some retailers on a "consignment basis." Complaint P 19. Unilateral conduct, however, does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, which bars a "conspiracy" in restraint of trade. More than one party is obviously required. Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984).

> 29. The distributorship system of the Defendants as alleged in paragraph 3 above and the contract of the Defendants as alleged in paragraph 4 about [sic] [12] were undertaken by the Defendants as part of a conspiracy to fix, control, raise and stabilize arbitrarily, unlawfully, unreasonably and knowingly the price of electronic pet restraints in interstate commerce; to restrain trade in interstate commerce for electronic pet restraints and to preclude the Plaintiff and other dealers marketing and distributing electronic pet restraints from dealing in interstate commerce except on the terms controlled by the Defendants in violation of Title 15 USC § 1, et seq.

The contracts alleged by plaintiffs as restraining trade in the sale of electronic pet restraints are those whereby defendant [*21] IF appointed a network of exclusive distributors for its product. However, the appointment by a manufacturer of a network of exclusive dealers results in a vertical relationship, which must be reviewed under the rule of reason. Such HN11[] an arrangement does not violate the antitrust laws unless it creates an unreasonable restraint on interbrand competition. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Nowhere in the complaint is it alleged that the defendants' network had any impact on competition between brands of pet restraints. On the contrary, the complaint alleges that interbrand competition is vigorous. Paragraph 17 alleges:

> The business of the Plaintiffs is in the purchasing of electronic pet restraint systems from various manufacturers and reselling the same to various customers and purchasers for retail trade in the state of Maryland and North Carolina constitutes a substantial competitive product to the [defendant Invisible Fence] "Sta-Put System" and sold by the Defendant, Invisible Fence Company, Inc. in the same states. (emphasis added)

Under conditions [*22] like those alleged in the complaint, there is no violation of the antitrust laws. Furthermore, IF's unilateral exclusion of the plaintiffs from its network likewise does not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. Garment Dist., Inc. v. Belk Stores Services., Inc., 799 F.2d 905, 910 (4th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1005, 100 L. Ed. 2d 193, 108 S. Ct. 1728 (1988); Purity Prods., Inc. v. Tropicana Prods., Inc. 702 F. Supp. 564, 570-74 (D.Md. 1988), aff'd mem., 887 F.2d 1081 (4th Cir. 1989).

For these reasons, this Court concludes that the complaint fails to state a claim against defendants IF and Clark Distributors under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

(ii)

15 U.S.C. § 2

HN12[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to "monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire . . . to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states . . . ." The statute bars three types of conduct: monopolization, attempted monopolization, and a conspiracy to monopolize trade.

To prove an antitrust [*23] violation of monopolization, a plaintiff must prove (1) the defendant's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hosp., 945 F.2d 696 (4th Cir. 1991) (en banc), cert. denied, U.S. , 112 S. Ct. 973 (1992), citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 596 n.19, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985).

The complaint contains no allegations addressing the element of market power. [13] Not only is there no discussion of market shares or barriers to entry, but the complaint even describes a vigorously competitive market. Complaint P 17. The complaint thus fails to state a proper claim of monopolization.

---

[12] Paragraphs 3 and 4 do not relate in any way to defendants' distributorship system or to contracts between them.

[13] Nor does the complaint address the second element. In this Circuit, a plaintiff must show, in order to satisfy this element, that there could be no valid business reason or concern for efficiency for the defendant's conduct. Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 710.

To prove an antitrust violation of attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show that the would-be monopolist had a "dangerous probability of success." United States v. Empire Gas, 537 F.2d 296 (8th Cir. 1976), [*24] cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572, 97 S. Ct. 1158 (1977). The complaint does not address this element in any way. Therefore, it fails to state a proper claim of attempted monopolization.

HN13[]

To prove an antitrust violation of conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must prove (1) that a conspiracy to obtain (or maintain) a monopoly in the relevant market existed, (2) that this conspiracy to monopolize concerned goods in interstate commerce, (3) that the defendant entered into the conspiracy with the specific intention or purpose of monopolizing the relevant market, (4) that at least one of the conspirators committed an overt act to further the conspiracy, and (5) that [*25] the plaintiff was injured in its business or property as a result of the defendant's actions. Leonard B. Sand et al., Modern Federal Jury Instructions - Civil P 80.03, p. 80-72 (1993). See also, Cullum Electric & Mechanical, Inc. v. Mechanical Contractors Association of S.C., 436 F. Supp. 418, 425 (D.S.C. 1976), aff'd, 569 F.2d 821 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 910, 58 L. Ed. 2d 255, 99 S. Ct. 277 (1978).

These necessary elements have not been pled in the complaint. Although plaintiffs have alleged that a conspiracy existed, the complaint does not define the relevant market in any way, nor does it allege an overt act on the part of a conspirator which would tend to indicate furtherance of the conspiracy to monopolize. Therefore, the complaint fails to state a proper claim of attempted monopolization.

(iii)

15 U.S.C. § 13

While the complaint does not rely on this section of the Robinson-Patman Act in a separate count, plaintiffs have alleged a violation of § 13 in the concluding line of Paragraph 19. [14] HN14[] Section 2(a) [*26] of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a), provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where . . . the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition . . . .

[*27] To prove a violation of this Section of the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff must prove the following elements: (1) discrimination in price; (2) between different purchasers; (3) of commodities of like grade and quality; and (4) that the effects of such discrimination may substantially lessen or injure competition. Universal Lite Distributors, Inc. v. Northwest Indus., Inc., 452 F. Supp. 1206, 1214 (D.Md. 1978), aff'd, 602 F.2d 1173 (4th Cir. 1979). Obviously, HN15[] to have standing, a plaintiff must also prove that it was injured by the defendant's actions.

The plaintiffs have not pled any of the required elements. Remarkably, they have not even asserted that defendant IF sold its pet restraint systems at different prices to different customers. Such an allegation is the cornerstone of a claim asserted under § 13(a). Moreover, plaintiffs have failed to allege that IF's "indirect price discrimination" has had or would have any impact on competition. FTC v. Sun Oil Co., 371 U.S. 505, 527, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466, 83 S. Ct. 358 (1963). Accordingly, the complaint fails to state [*28] a proper claim under the Robinson-Patman Act.

---

[14] Paragraph 19, entitled "Violations of Title 15 USC § 1 and § 2," states:

> 19. At various times between January 1992 and January 1993 Defendant, Invisible Fence Company, Inc. took over the stock of Gabriel and Associates, Inc. and the Laura [sic] and Bev Corporation sold by the Plaintiffs to retail sellers in the state of Maryland and the state of North Carolina and arranged to junk and destroy such stocks. At the same time Defendant, Invisible Fence Company, Inc. arranged to place such retail sellers who were the Plaintiff's customers under a consignment basis to induce them to transfer their business from the Plaintiffs to the Defendant, Invisible Fence Company, Inc., thereby committing indirect price discrimination in violation of Title 15 USC § 13, Subsection (a).

(iv)

15 U.S.C. § 14

HN16[] Section 3 of the Clayton Act provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in [interstate] commerce, in the course of such commerce, to . . . make a sale or contract for sale of goods . . . for use, consumption or resale within the United States . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor or competitors of the seller, where the effect of such . . . sale . . . may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

To prevail on a claim of a violation of this statute, a plaintiff must allege and prove (1) that the defendant made a sale on the condition that the buyer not deal in the goods of the sellers' competitors; (2) that the contract has the effect of substantially lessening competition in the relevant market; and (3) that the plaintiff was injured in its business or property as a result of the defendant's actions.

Plaintiffs' Clayton Act claims must fail for two reasons. First, plaintiffs have no standing to assert a Clayton [*29] Act claim. Indeed, a plaintiff will usually be injured only when the challenged contract prevents it from entering into other contracts which it would deem beneficial. As Judge Watkins of this Court said in Central Chem. Corp. v. Agrico Chem. Co., 531 F. Supp. 533, 540 (D.Md. 1982), aff'd, 1985-2 CCH Trade Cases P 66, 753 (4th Cir. 1985), HN17[] "In order to plead a cause of action under § 3, plaintiff must allege that a contract for sale of goods between [defendant] and [plaintiff], not [defendant] and others, was conditioned on a promise of not dealing in the goods of a competitor . . . ."

In this case, the plaintiffs acknowledge in their complaint that they are able to and do purchase the products of IF's competitors. Complaint P 17. Such an admission is fatal to a Clayton § 3 claim. David R. McGeorge Car Co., Inc. v. Leyland Motor Sales, Inc., 504 F.2d 52, 58 (4th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 992, 43 L. Ed. 2d 674, 95 S. Ct. 1430 (1975); McElhenney Co. v. Western Auto Supply Co., 269 F.2d 332, 338 (4th Cir. 1959). [*30]

Second, plaintiffs have failed to allege any adverse impact of the challenged contracts on competition in the sale of electronic pet restraint systems. As discussed above, they actually do the opposite by alleging that substantial competition exists among various manufacturers of the product. Complaint P 17.

Thus, the complaint fails to state a proper claim under the Clayton Act.

IV

Leave to Amend

The motions to dismiss of thirteen defendants have been granted because this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over those defendants. These dismissals are without leave to amend.

The motions to dismiss of defendants IF and Clark Distributors have been granted because the complaint fails to state claims against those defendants which would entitle them to relief. If they choose to do so, plaintiffs may file an amended complaint against those two defendants. The dismissals as to defendants IF and Clark Distributors are therefore with leave to amend.

As the Court has pointed out herein, the facts alleged in the complaint do not come close to stating proper antitrust claims against defendants IF and Clark Distributors. Although the precise nature of plaintiffs' claims cannot be determined [*31] from a reading of the complaint, it appears here that the essential dispute between plaintiffs and defendant IF arises as a result of the latter's network of exclusive distributors from which plaintiffs have now been excluded. It appears that plaintiffs are now unable to purchase the "Sta-Put" system of pet restraints directly from defendant IF and that plaintiffs are therefore required to pay a mark-up imposed by IF's distributors. It is doubtful that these facts amount to antitrust violations under any theory which may be espoused. Nevertheless, the Court will not at this stage of these proceedings foreclose plaintiffs from attempting to allege proper antitrust claims against defendants IF and Clark.

In this regard, the Court would remind counsel for plaintiffs to pay strict attention to counsel's obligations under HN18[] Rule 11, F.R.Civ.P. Rule 11 provides that if a particular claim is not well grounded in fact and warranted by existing law, sanctions should be imposed. Counsel should carefully consider the facts and should include in any amended complaint only those claims which are well grounded in fact and existing law. If the claims alleged in an amended complaint which is later [*32] filed are not well grounded in fact and existing law, defendants IF and Clark Distributors may move for sanctions under Rule 11.

Although there are many deficiencies in the existing complaint, the Court will not under all the circumstances here impose sanctions at this time on counsel for plaintiffs. Rule 11 sanctions addressed to an original complaint are not ordinarily imposed until later in the proceedings. Now that plaintiffs' attorney has had the benefit of reviewing defendants' memoranda and the Court's rulings set forth in this Memorandum and Order, plaintiffs' attorney should have a much more comprehensive understanding of the applicable facts and existing law. Counsel for plaintiffs should understand that the Court will not hesitate to impose sanctions if Rule 11 is later violated.

V

Conclusion

For the reasons stated, the motions to dismiss of thirteen of the remaining defendants will be granted without leave to amend. The motions to dismiss of defendants IF and Clark Distributors will be granted with leave to amend.

Accordingly, it is this 9th day of November, 1993 by the United States District Court for the District of Maryland,

ORDERED:

1. That the motion of defendant [*33] Invisible Fence Company, Inc. to dismiss the complaint be and the same is hereby granted, with leave to plaintiffs to file an amended complaint against said defendant within 20 days;
2. That the motion of defendants Helen Weary, Thomas Weary, William Annesley and Jeffrey Hanhausen to dismiss the complaint be and the same is hereby granted;
3. That the motion of defendant Clark Enterprises, Inc. to dismiss the complaint be and the same is hereby granted;
4. That the motion of defendant Clark Distributors, Inc. to dismiss the complaint be and the same is hereby granted, with leave to plaintiffs to file an amended complaint against said defendant within 20 days;
5. That the motion to dismiss the complaint of defendants Invisible Fence of the North Pacific; Canine Containment Distributing Company; I.F.D., Inc.; Invisible Fence Distributor of the Midwest; Invisible Fence of the Northland; Invisible Fence South and J.T.B. Distributing, Inc. be and the same is hereby granted; and
6. That the motion of defendant Canine Fence Company, Inc. to dismiss the complaint be and the same is hereby granted.

Alexander Harvey, II, Senior United States District Judge

Lone Star Indus. v. Compania Naviera Perez Companc (In re New York Trap Rock Corp.)

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

November 16, 1993, Decided

93 Civ 5480 (VLB)

Reporter

160 B.R. 876 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16326 **

In re: NEW YORK TRAP ROCK CORPORATION, LONE STAR INDUSTRIES, INC., et al., Debtors. LONE STAR INDUSTRIES, INC., A Delaware corporation, Debtor and Debtor-in-Possession, Plaintiff - Appellant, v. COMPANIA NAVIERA PEREZ COMPANC, SACFIMFA, SUDACIA, SA, INVESORA PATAGONICA, SA and LOMO NEGRA COMPANIA INDUSTRIAL ARGENTINA SA, all Argentine corporations, Defendants - Appellees.

Prior History: [1] (Chapter 11) Case Nos 90 B 27276 to 21286, 90 B 21334 and 21335, (Jointly Administered) Adversary Proceeding No 92-5403A.

Core Terms

entities, premium, corporate control, shareholders, nonfederal, reasons, trading, shares, potential bidder

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Contracts Law > Contract Formation

HN1[] Contracts, Contract Formation

As is often the case in bargaining, a party that must complete a transaction is in a weaker position than one that can walk away from it. Where a party is irrevocably committed to sell an asset and bail out of a relationship, the opportunities for win-win bargaining in a nonzero sum game that are available in ongoing relationships are thinned to a point approaching nonexistence.

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > Collusive Bidding

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > General Overview

HN2[] Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use, Collusive Bidding

11 U.S.C.S. § 363(n) provides for adverse consequences when the sale price of an asset sold in bankruptcy was controlled by an agreement among potential bidders at such sale.

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > Collusive Bidding

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > General Overview

HN3[] Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use, Collusive Bidding

It is impossible for a sale of property other than that belonging to the debtor to violate 11 U.S.C.S. § 363(n); the seller of non-debtor property is acting independently and any consequences to the debtor are not regulated by the statute.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholders > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Takeovers & Tender Offers > Duties & Liabilities of Shareholders

Securities Law > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Tender Offers > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Takeovers & Tender Offers > General Overview

HN4[] Shareholders, Shareholder Duties & Liabilities

Failure to obtain a corporate control premium does not represent a judicially cognizable loss of a property right absent special circumstances such as violation of the Williams Act, designed to protect public shareholders against potential pressure in connection with tender offers for traded securities.

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > Collusive Bidding

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > General Overview

HN5[] Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use, Collusive Bidding

11 U.S.C.S. 363(n), in addition to not covering sales of non-debtor property, bars only collusion among actual or potential bidders for a debtor's property and not secret or other use of one's own bargaining power.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholders > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Takeovers & Tender Offers > General Overview

HN6[] Shareholders, Shareholder Duties & Liabilities

No statutory restriction such as that provided by the Williams Act on purchases and sales of securities involving corporate control has been enacted with regard to privately held companies not traded on United States exchanges. Apart from such special cases, a control premium - as opposed to any market or agreed value of the shares themselves - is not ordinarily recognized as an independent legally protected property interest. Absent specific statutory protection such as that provided by the Williams Act, a corporate control premium is not a benefit to which the holder is entitled to rely absent violation of contractual commitments, fraud, breach of trust or other legally prohibited behavior.

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > Collusive Bidding

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Creditors & Debtors

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > General Overview

HN7[] Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use, Collusive Bidding

11 U.S.C.S. 363(n) imposes sanctions against action such that in connection with a sale of debtors' property under the Bankruptcy Code, the sale price was controlled by an agreement among potential bidders at such sale.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > General Overview

Bankruptcy Law > Administrative Powers > Estate Property Lease, Sale & Use > Collusive Bidding

HN8[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

In prohibiting collusion affecting bids for property sold under the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C.S. § 363(n) is in effect a supplementary antitrust law akin to § 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C.S. § 1) with its own separate jurisdictional groundwork and separate sanctions for violation. 11 U.S.C.S. § 363(n) does not prohibit independent trading affecting such a price, nor secrecy in regard to such trading. In this regard, § 363(n) parallels the interpretation given to the Sherman Act--and by virtue of its importance to the related Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act (15 U.S.C.S. § 13), which encourages rather than prohibits nonfraudulent secrecy in formulation of trading positions.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Forum Non Conveniens

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN9[] Venue, Forum Non Conveniens

Declination of exercise of supplemental jurisdiction over nonfederal claims where there is no independent basis of federal subject matter jurisdiction is a lesser step than dismissal on grounds of forum non conveniens where such a independent ground is present.

Judges: BRODERICK

Opinion by: VINCENT L. BRODERICK

Opinion

[*878] MEMORANDUM ORDER

VINCENT L. BRODERICK, U.S.D.J.

I

This bankruptcy appeal involves sale of the debtor Lone Star's 50% interest in a series of Argentine corporations. The holder of the other 50% interest, the defendant Perez Companc, sold its share to a potential buyer at a higher price than obtained by Lone Star, to the only other interested bidder for shares in the Argentine entities. [1] Prior to this sale, Perez Companc held an advantage in bidding for Lone Star's share because as the existing 50% owner, only it could deliver 100% of the shares involved to a third party. Only Perez Companc could offer complete control of the Argentine companies to a new owner.

[2] Lone Star, on the other hand, chose to take advantage of its ability to file for a [*879] noninsolvency bankruptcy for purposes of effecting a corporate reorganization under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, and pursuant to that Chapter sought to liquidate its 50% interests in the Argentine entities. Because a 50% share of what amounts to a corporate partnership with parties with whom one has no prior dealings is difficult to sell, Lone Star found Perez the only available buyer - for the very reason that only it could obtain for itself or a third party complete ownership of the Argentine entities. Lone Star, of course, knowingly entered into the corporate betrothals involved which would doubtless be profitable if and only if both 50% owners cooperated, and which would foreseeably be difficult to sell successfully to others at a desirable price.

HN1[] As is often the case in bargaining, a party which must complete a transaction is in a weaker position than one which can walk away from it. See Roth, "Toward a Theory of Bargaining: An Experimental Study in Economics," 220 Science 687 (May 13, 1983); Hofstadter, "Mathematical Themas," 245 Sci Am 18 (July 1981). Where a party is irrevocably [3] committed to sell an asset and bail out of a relationship, the opportunities for win-win bargaining in a nonzero sum game which are available in ongoing relationships are thinned to a point approaching nonexistence. Compare T. Schelling, The Strategy of Conflict (1960) with E. Goffman, Strategic Interaction (1969).

Lone Star, having chosen to enter a 50%-50% corporate shareholder relationship and further to commit itself to sell its holdings within a finite time, was quite predictably able to obtain only a fire sale price for its share in the Argentine entities. Dissatisfied, it brought this litigation asserting that Perez Companc should have acted in such a way as to equalize the inherently unequal structure of the situation.

II

---

[1] Perez Companc, sold its 50% of the Argentine entities, to a third party for $ 55 million without informing Lone Star. Lone Star later sold its 50% interest to the same party for $ 37 million; Perez Companc did not bid and there were no other bidders. For a more detailed discussion of the facts, see In re New York Trap Rock Corp. (Lone Star Industries v Compania Naviera Perez Companc et al.), 155 Bankr. 871 (1993) (Schwartzberg, J.).

In its adversary complaint before the Bankruptcy Court, Lone Star contends that Perez Companc's conduct and related acts of other defendants violated 11 USC 363(n) which HN2[] provides for adverse consequences when "the sale price [of an asset sold in bankruptcy] was controlled by an agreement among potential bidders at such sale." Lone Star also asserted a large number of related state law claims.

United States Bankruptcy [4] Judge Howard Schwartzberg in a carefully reasoned 41-page opinion reported at 155 Bankr. 871 (1993) held that HN3[] it was impossible for a sale of property other than that belonging to the debtor to violate § 363(n); the seller of non-debtor property was acting independently and any consequences to the debtor were not regulated by the statute. He also rejected Lone Star's nonfederal claims. I affirm the decision of the Bankruptcy Court for the reasons set forth by Judge Schwartzberg in his opinion, and for additional reasons set forth in greater detail below. I do not repeat here the reasoning articulated by the Bankruptcy Judge, with which I agree, [2] and discuss only my additional reasons for reaching the same conclusions as did the Bankruptcy Judge:

(1) HN4[] Failure to obtain a corporate control premium does not represent a judicially cognizable loss of a property right absent special circumstances such as violation of the Williams Act, designed to protect public shareholders against potential pressure in connection with tender offers for traded securities.

(2) Section 363(n) of the Bankruptcy Code, HN5[] in addition to not covering sales of non-debtor property as [5] pointed out by Judge Schwartzberg, bars only collusion among actual or potential bidders for a debtor's property and not secret or other use of one's own bargaining power.

(3) Exercise of supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining, nonfederal, claims in this [*880] case was properly declined, in addition to the reasons given by Judge Schwartzberg, because of inappropriateness of such exercise under the criteria set forth in 28 USC 1367(c).

[6] III

The essence of Lone Star's complaint is that the "control premium" inherent in ability to determine the policies of a corporation is an asset belonging in part to Lone Star, so that any machinations to deprive Lone Star of its share of that premium are illegal under one or more sources of law.

The existence of a control premium is based on the ability of the controlling party to utilize the assets of the controlled corporation for the benefit of the controlling party rather than exclusively for the benefit of all stockholders equally. In some instances, a side benefit to the controlling party and benefit to the shareholders collectively are sufficiently aligned that both gain from the coincidence of interests. Thus, corporate law does not forbid all self-interested transactions involving officers or directors of an entity, but requires full disclosure of them to independent directors and frequently bars voting on such transactions by the interested parties.

Where coincidence of interests is attenuated and a transaction benefiting those in control of an entity does not redound to the benefit of all, there is a breach of the fiduciary duty of the directors of the entity chosen [7] by the controlling party. The combination of legitimate coincident interests and temptations of breaches of fiduciary duty by directors or management at the behest of holders of control, yields a control premium as a result of buyers' and sellers' evaluation of how much a position in a corporation is worth. See City National Bank v. American Commonwealth Financial Corp, 801 F.2d 714, 715 n 1 (4th Cir 1986), cert. denied 479 U.S. 1091 (1987); Bayne, "A Legitimate Transfer of Control," 18 Stan L Rev 438 (Jan 1966); Berle, "The Price of Power: Sale of Corporate Control," 50 Cornell LQ 628 (1965); Bayne, "The Sale of Corporate Control," 33 Fordham L Rev 583 (1965); Comment, 31 Emory LJ No 1 at 139 (Winter 1982); see also Note, 27 Geo LJ 217 (1938).

---

[2] Appellant points out that a transaction not involving a debtor may violate 11 USC 363(n) if it is a ruse or subterfuge to prevent someone from bidding, but this concept is inapplicable to the present case. Appellant also stresses that it never waived the right to discovery. But no specific discoverable information which would alter Judge Schwartzberg's ruling or those in this memorandum order has, however, been pinpointed. I find these and numerous other objections made to Judge Schwartzberg's decision lacking in merit.

Trading in corporate control has at times functioned to the detriment of noncontrolling shareholders (generally holding far less than 50% interests in the entity involved), leading Congress to adopt restrictions on the practice in connection with tender offers for publicly [8] held corporations in the United States. These restrictions involved waiting periods for mature consideration of such offers and mandatory proration of tender offers among public shareholders whether or not they rushed to buy first before the offeror had the necessary number of shares to seize control. See § 14(d)(6) of the Williams Act, 15 USC 78n(d)(6) ; Securities & Exchange Commission Rules 14-d-8, 17 CFR 240.14d-8 and 14-d-6(e)(vi), 17 CFR 240.14(e)(vi); Piper v. Chris-Craft Industries, 430 U.S. 1, 23, 51 L. Ed. 2d 124, 97 S. Ct. 926 (1977); Pryor v. United States Steel Corp, 794 F.2d at 55-56.

HN6[] No such statutory restriction on purchases and sales of securities involving corporate control has been enacted with regard to privately held companies not traded on United States exchanges. Apart from such special cases, a control premium - as opposed to any market or agreed value of the shares themselves - is not ordinarily recognized as an independent legally protected property interest.

Absent specific statutory protection such as that provided by the Williams Act, a corporate control premium is not a benefit to which the [9] holder is entitled to rely absent violation of contractual commitments, fraud, breach of trust or other legally prohibited behavior. As discussed below, such claims in this case, if sustainable, are based on state or foreign, not federal law, and it is questionable whether this country is the proper location for their exploration.

Acknowledgment of the monetary value of a share of control, in contrast to a share of the profits of an enterprise, as a separate, independent property right to be protected by the courts would require the judiciary to determine just how far directors could practicably [*881] go in violation of their fiduciary duty to proceed exclusively for the benefit of all shareholders. This is not a tenable position for the courts.

Awarding half of the difference between the proceeds obtained by the debtor and that obtained by Perez Companc is not a satisfactory substitute because this would deprive Perez Companc of the value of its contribution toward successful sale of the asset through its willingness to dispose of its own share, thus giving the ultimate buyer ability to manage the Argentine entities without the need for constant consultation and perhaps combat with a co-equal [10] 50% owner. The risk of a disadvantage of this type was inherent in Lone Star's decision to enter into a 50-50 share division in the first instance, and the cost of that choice cannot be shifted to others because it turned out to be significant.

IV

Section 363(n) of the Bankruptcy Code HN7[] imposes sanctions against action such that in connection with a sale of debtors' property under the Code, "the sale price was controlled by an agreement among potential bidders at such sale". There is no claim here that bidders or potential bidders agreed in advance concerning what sums they would or would not offer at the sale of Lone Star's 50% interest in the Argentine entities involved in this case.

HN8[] In prohibiting collusion affecting bids for property sold under the Bankruptcy Code, § 363(n) is in effect a supplementary antitrust law akin to § 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) with its own separate jurisdictional groundwork and separate sanctions for violation. Section 363(n) does not prohibit independent trading affecting such a price, nor secrecy in regard to such trading. In this regard, § 363(n) parallels the interpretation given to the Sherman Act - and by virtue [11] of its importance to the related Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act (15 USC 13) which encourages rather than prohibits nonfraudulent secrecy in formulation of trading positions. See United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978); Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153, 99 S. Ct. 925 (1979).

Lone Star's complaint appears to be not that Perez Companc colluded with another bidder, but that it failed to combine forces with Lone Star to permit Lone Star to get a share of the control premium which it had inherently lost the ability to obtain because of its conduct of the equivalent of a fire sale of a 50% interest in the Argentine entities. Collusion between Lone Star and Perez Companc as to what they would demand from third parties for their respective 50% interests in the Argentine entities involved, however (as opposed to a sale of the interest of one to the other) would appear to restrain the market in such shares to the same extent as collusion between Perez and other potential bidders in fixing the price such bidders would offer (which is not claimed to have occurred).

[12] V

In addition to Judge Schwartzberg's reasons for rejecting Lone Star's nonfederal claims, his decision should also be affirmed on the ground that exercise of supplemental (previously known as pendent) jurisdiction over them should be declined under criteria set forth in 28 USC 1367(c) once the claim under 11 USC 363(n) has been dismissed.

The only significant connection between the Argentine entities and the United States appears to be that a U.S. entity, Lone Star, purchased a 50% interest in them and then sought to reorganize in this country under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code; all further events in this country were brought about by Lone Star's actions or responses to them. See generally Karmel, "The Second Circuit's Role in Expanding the SEC's Jurisdiction Abroad," 65 St. John's L Rev No 3 at 743 (Summer 1991); Tepass, "Resolving Extraterritoriality Conflicts in Antitrust," 5 Conn J Int'l L No 2 at 565 (Spring 1990); see also Alesayi Beverage Corp v. Canada Dry Corp, 797 F. Supp. 320 (SDNY 1992).

Here, the only federal claim in this case (under 11 USC 363 [13] (n)) has been dismissed. 28 USC 1367(c)(3). The intricacies of nonfederal (state or Argentine) corporate [*882] law involved in the remaining claims are novel and complex, and substantially predominate. 28 USC 1367(c)(1), (2).

There are also "exceptional circumstances" involving "other compelling reasons for declining jurisdiction." 28 USC 1367(c)(4). Argentina is the primary location of the underlying assets relevant to the sale. The relevance of this factor is emphasized by its treatment as significant in each situation described in each major subdivision of the general federal venue statute. 28 USC 1391(a)(2), (b)(2), (e)(2). This factor is as important in adversary proceedings under the Bankruptcy Code as in other contexts. See In re New York Trap Rock Corp (Lone Star Industries v. Rankin County, 158 Bankr. 574, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12740, 1993 WL 3607 (SDNY 1993).

Argentine corporate law may also be the most appropriate one to govern the rights of the parties with regard to their shares in the [14] Argentine entities at stake in this case. It would be far more appropriate for such matters, in contrast to claims under U.S. Bankruptcy Code provisions such as 11 USC 363(n), to be adjudicated in Argentina.

HN9[] Declination of exercise of supplemental jurisdiction over nonfederal claims where there is no independent basis of federal subject matter jurisdiction is, of course, a lesser step than dismissal on grounds of forum non conveniens where such a independent ground is present.

Even if some other source of jurisdiction over nonfederal claims such as diversity of citizenship under 28 USC 1332(a)(2) were to be sustainable the factors discussed above, and by Judge Schwartzberg in regard to personal jurisdiction over the defendants, would support a forum non conveniens dismissal with respect to Lone Star's claims. The center of gravity of this case, apart from the bankruptcy sale governed by 11 USC 363(n), is clearly in Argentina. See generally Borden, Inc. v. Meiji Milk Products Co, 919 F.2d 822 (2d Cir 1990), cert. denied 111 S. Ct. 2259, 114 L. Ed. 2d 712 (1991); [15] Pedro Pablo Blanco F. v. Banco Industrial de Venezuela, SA, 997 F.2d 974 (2d Cir 1993).

Dated: White Plains, N.Y.

November 16, 1993

/s/ Gerard L. Goettel, U.S.D.J.

in the absence of

VINCENT L. BRODERICK, U.S.D.J.

Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

November 17, 1993, Decided ; November 18, 1993, Filed

NO. C 86-20018 RPA

Reporter
1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17707 *; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,827

DATAGATE, INC., Plaintiff, v. HEWLETT-PACKARD COMPANY, Defendant.

Core Terms

hardware, software, summary judgment, tying arrangement, injunctive relief, customers, offers, tie-in, user

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[ ] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, summary judgment is proper if no factual issues exist for trial. To survive a motion for summary judgment, the non-moving party must demonstrate that the fact in contention is material, that is, a fact that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. In addition, the nonmoving party must demonstrate that the factual dispute is genuine, that is, the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party. Although summary judgment is generally disfavored in anti-trust litigation, it is appropriate when the non-moving party does not show any issues of material fact and does not present an adequate record to support a finding in his favor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different, or tied, product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C. § 1, if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

If only a single purchaser is "forced" with respect to the purchase of a tied item, the resultant impact on competition is not sufficient to warrant the concern of antitrust law.

Judges: [*1] AGUILAR

Opinion by: ROBERT P. AGUILAR

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Defendant Hewlett-Packard Company ("HP") moves this Court pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 for an order granting summary judgment in its favor with respect to Plaintiff Datagate Inc.'s ("Datagate") tie- in claim on the ground that Plaintiff lacks sufficient evidence to support such a claim. Defendant further moves for summary judgment on Plaintiff's claim for permanent injunctive relief. For the reasons set forth below, Defendant's motion for summary judgment is GRANTED.

BACKGROUND

HP manufactures, sells, and services computer systems. HP offers both hardware and software maintenance support for its systems. Datagate is an independent service organization ("ISO") which specializes in providing hardware maintenance service for HP systems. As an ISO, Datagate competes directly with HP for the hardware maintenance business of HP system users. ISO's have thrived over the last decade by offering maintenance services at significantly lower prices than the computer manufacturers.

Datagate has alleged that it and other ISOs which service HP products cannot provide software support because such support requires [*2] the use of HP proprietary materials. Datagate claims that beginning in 1983, HP, as part of a scheme to drive out of business those ISOs which service HP hardware, started tying its software support to its hardware support. Pursuant to this alleged strategy, if an HP system user hired an ISO instead of HP to provide hardware maintenance, HP would refuse to provide the customer with software service. This tying arrangement, according to Datagate, forced many of its customers to switch to using HP's hardware service, thereby damaging Datagate's business. Datagate's complaint also contains a claim for permanent injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26.

While HP stipulates for purposes of this motion that it had market power in the tying product (software service) and that there was a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product (hardware service) - requisite elements of a tie-in claim - it argues that there is no evidence that it imposed tying arrangements on its customers.

DISCUSSION

HN1[] Under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment is proper if no factual issues exist for trial. To survive [*3] a motion for summary judgment, the non-moving party must demonstrate that the fact in contention is material, i.e., a fact that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc, 477 U.S. 242, 248-249, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2510, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). In addition, the nonmoving party must demonstrate that the factual dispute is genuine, i.e., the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party. Id. "Although summary judgment is generally disfavored in anti-trust litigation, it is appropriate when the non-moving party does not show any issues of material fact and does not present an adequate record to support a finding in his favor." Christofferson Dairy, Inc. v. MMM Sales, Inc., 849 F.2d 1168, 1171 (9th Cir. 1988).

1. Tie-in Claim

HN2[] A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2079 (1992). [*4] Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product. Id. at 2079.

The parties have stipulated for purposes of the instant motion that HP had sufficient market power in the tying product market (software service) to restrain competition appreciably in the tied product market (hardware service) and that a tying arrangement imposed by HP would affect a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market. Accordingly, the sole issue before the Court is whether there is sufficient evidence that HP illegally tied the sale of software service to the sale of hardware service by representing to more than one or a few isolated HP system users that HP would not service the user's software unless the user also purchased hardware service from HP.

As evidence of an HP tying arrangement, Datagate proffers the declaration of Judy Lefkowitz, a former Datagate employee. In words reminiscent of facts presented in a law school evidence exam, Ms. Lefkowitz avers that the person [*5] responsible for awarding Beverly Hospital's HP service contracts told her that an HP representative told him that HP would provide software support only on the condition that the hospital purchase hardware service from HP. This assertion cannot be considered in determining the existence of issues for trial, as it would not be admissible in evidence as required by Rule 56 (e). The declaration, replete with hearsay, was not made on personal knowledge.

Similarly inadequate to withstand summary judgment is Datagate's reliance on the deposition of David Carver, An HP officer. Datagate's statement in its opposition brief that Carver admitted that he discussed tying service to software maintenance with other HP officers misrepresents Carver's testimony. Carver testified only that he took part in discussions relating to competition between HP and Datagate for service contracts. Carver never said he discussed Datagate in the context of tying arrangements. Moreover, as HP points out, discussions of tying arrangements do not amount to evidence sufficient to create a triable issue as to the existence of a tying arrangement. There must be facts showing that tying arrangements were actually imposed.

[*6] Datagate also offers the declaration of Paul Lawrence, the president of Ideal Computer Services, an ISO which services HP hardware, and the interrogatory answers of Amtek, another ISO involved in litigation with HP. Both the declaration and interrogatory answers involve allegations that HP engaged in illegal acts to expand its hardware service business. Lawrence avers that some of his customers have told him that HP would not sell software service separate from hardware service. He further claims that other customers have said that HP coerced them into buying its hardware service by offering hardware and software services together at a lower price than the software service alone. These statements are inadmissible hearsay which the Court cannot consider when determining the existence of genuine issues for trial. Further, the evidence concerning the pricing practices of HP is not relevant to the claim at issue here. As previously stated, a tie-in claim must involve a threat to withhold a product unless the customer also purchases another product. While evidence of HP's pricing for combined hardware and software may be relevant to a Section 2 monopolization claim under the Sherman Act, [*7] it does not raise a triable issue as to Datagate's Section 1 tie-in claim. The Amtek interrogatory responses relied on by Datagate also concern allegations that HP engaged in anticompetitive pricing practices. As such, this evidence is also inapposite to the instant motion.

The only probative evidence Datagate offers is the deposition of Robert Buckner, a Rockwell International employee who testified that HP employees told him that HP would not provide software service to Rockwell unless it also purchased Hardware support from HP. According to Buckner, these representations forced Rockwell to purchase hardware support from HP instead of Datagate in 1986. Although this testimony constitutes evidence that HP engaged in tying conduct, a single incident of tying is insufficient to support a tie-in claim. As the Supreme Court has stated, HN3[] "If only a single purchaser were 'forced' with respect to the purchase of a tied item, the resultant impact on competition would not be sufficient to warrant the concern of antitrust law." Hyde, 466 U.S. at 16. Evidence that HP coerced purchasers in addition to Rockwell is necessary to withstand summary judgment.

2. Injunctive [*8] Relief Claim

Plaintiff has effectively stipulated that it has no cognizable claim for permanent injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. Statement of Plaintiff Regarding Injunctive Relief for Acts Occurring in 1986 at 1-2. Accordingly, Defendant is entitled to summary judgment on this claim.

CONCLUSION

For the above-stated reasons Defendant Hewlett Packard's motion for summary judgment is GRANTED as to all of Plaintiff's claims.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: November 17, 1993

ROBERT P. AGUILAR

United States District Judge

JUDGMENT

Pursuant to this Court's order of this date, "Order Granting Defendant's Motion For Summary Judgment," judgment is entered in favor of Defendant Hewlett-Packard Company and against Plaintiff Datagate, Inc.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: November 17, 1993

ROBERT P. AGUILAR

United States District Judge

AHP Subsidiary Holding Corp. v. Stuart Hale Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

November 19, 1993, Decided ; December 1, 1993, Docketed

No. 89 C 8566

Reporter

1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16878 *; 1993 WL 498331

AHP SUBSIDIARY HOLDING CORPORATION, INC., a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff, v. STUART HALE COMPANY, an Illinois corporation, Defendant.

Core Terms

counterclaim, trademark, motion to strike, affirmative defense, sham, infringement, redundant, declaratory judgment, move to strike, contends

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Affirmative defenses may be stricken under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) only if they are legally insufficient on their face. Motions to strike affirmative defenses will not be granted unless it appears to a certainty that plaintiffs would succeed despite any state of the facts which could be proved in support of the defense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Defenses

Actions that are taken through legally protected channels do not violate the antitrust laws, even if they are intended to eliminate competition.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN3[] Pleadings, Crossclaims

When a counterclaim for declaratory relief brings into question issues that already have been presented in plaintiff's complaint and defendant's answer to the original claim, it is redundant and a decision on the merits of plaintiff's claim will render the request for declaratory judgment moot.

Judges: [*1] Conlon

Opinion by: SUZANNE B. CONLON

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

AHP Subsidiary Holding Corp., Inc. ("AHP") [1] sues Stuart Hale Co. ("Stuart Hale") for federal trademark infringement and unfair competition. AHP contends that its registered trademark for the aerosol cooking spray, Pam, is infringed by Stuart Hale's aerosol cooking spray, Pan-Lite. AHP moved for a preliminary injunction, and Stuart Hale moved for summary judgment. Stuart Hale's motion was granted, and AHP's motion was found to be moot. See Order, No. 89 C 8566 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 22, 1992) (adopting magistrate's report in full).

The Seventh Circuit reversed and remanded. AHP Subsidiary Holding Co. v. Stuart Hale Co., 1 F.3d 611 (7th Cir. 1993). The Seventh Circuit found that there were material issues of fact precluding summary judgment on AHP's infringement [*2] claims. Id. at 616-19. [2] The Seventh Circuit, invoking Circuit Rule 36, [3] reassigned this action to this court for further proceedings. Presently still pending are motions that were not ruled upon before this case was appealed. AHP moves to strike Stuart Hale's affirmative defense, as well as its counterclaim, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). In addition, AHP moves to strike Stuart Hale's demand for a jury trial.

DISCUSSION

[*3] 1. Motion To Strike Affirmative Defense

As an affirmative defense, Stuart Male contends that by filing this trademark action, AHP is intentionally attempting to force Stuart Hale out of the cooking spray market, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. 15 U.S.C. § 2. AHP moves to strike Stuart Male's defense, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f).

---

[1] The original plaintiff in this action, Boyle-Midway Household Products, Inc., transferred all of its rights, title, and interest to the trademark at issue in this case to AHP.

[2] The complaint also stated a claim for dilution of trademark under Illinois law. The Seventh Circuit upheld summary judgment on the dilution claim. See AHP, 1 F.3d at 619.

[3] Circuit Rule 36 provides that on remand after a trial, a case generally must be reassigned to a different judge. The Seventh Circuit found that the district court had "evaluate[d] the evidence as if the proceeding were a trial on the merits," and concluded that the case therefore must be reassigned. AHP, 1 F.3d at 620.

HN1[] Affirmative defenses may be stricken under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) only if they are legally insufficient on their face. See Heller Financial, Inc. v. Midwhey Powder Co., Inc., 883 F.2d 1286, 1294 (7th Cir. 1989). Motions to strike affirmative defenses will not be granted "unless it appears to a certainty that plaintiffs would succeed despite any state of the facts which could be proved in support of the defense." Williams v. Jader Fuel Co., Inc., 944 F.2d 1388, 1400 (7th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 119 L. Ed. 2d 228, 112 S. Ct. 2306 (1992) (citations omitted). However, if the insufficiency of a defense is apparent, a motion to strike can help to "clear away irrelevant or redundant clutter." Van Schouwen v. Connaught Corp., 782 F. Supp. 1240, 1245 (N.D. Ill. 1991). [*4] Thus, in reviewing AHP's motion to strike, the court must determine if Stuart Male's defense is insufficient as a matter of law.

AHP argues that Stuart Male's defense is not well-pleaded under the Sherman Act because it does not define the relevant market and does not allege a dangerous probability of success. AHP's arguments are inapposite on a motion to strike. AHP does not address the question whether it "would succeed despite any state of the facts which could be proved in support of the defense." Williams v. Jader Fuel Co., Inc., 944 F.2d 1388, 1400 (7th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 119 L. Ed. 2d 228, 112 S. Ct. 2306 (1992) (citations omitted). AHP's arguments based on the form of the affirmative defense lack merit.

AHP contends that Stuart Male's affirmative defense is defective because AHP's allegedly anticompetitive actions consist solely of a legitimate pursuit of legal redress. AHP notes that under the Supreme Court's Noerr-Pennington doctrine, HN2[] actions that are taken through legally protected channels do not violate the antitrust laws, even if they are intended to eliminate competition. See Eastern Railroad Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135-36, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1960) [*5] (attempt to influence public officials does not violate Sherman Act); United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965) (same); California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510-11, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972) (good faith attempt to protect economic interests through use of the courts does not violate antitrust laws). AHP asserts that Stuart Male's defense is legally insufficient because AHP's suit cannot be a violation of the Sherman Act.

Stuart Hale responds that AHP's suit falls within the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Winterland Concessions Co. v. Trela, 735 F.2d 257, 263-64 (7th Cir. 1984). Stuart Hale suggests that AHP does not bring this action to protect its trademark, but to protect its future ability to market new products, which it does not now produce. Stuart Male concludes that its defense may not be stricken because there is at least a factual dispute concerning the motives for AHP's suit.

Stuart Male's position is unfounded; AHP's suit is not a sham. Under the Seventh Circuit's decisions, a suit is a sham, and therefore is not [*6] protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, only when the purpose of the suit is "'to harm one's competitors not by the result of the litigation but by the simple fact of the institution of the litigation.'" Winterland Concessions Co. v. Trela, 735 F.2d 257, 263-64 (7th Cir. 1984) (citing Gainesville v. Florida Power & Light Co., 488 F. Supp. 1258, 1265-66 (S.D. Fla. 1980) (emphasis in original). Litigation is unprotected "when the purpose is not to win a favorable judgment against a competitor but to harass him, and deter others, by the process itself." Grip-Pak, Inc. v. Illinois Tool Works, Inc., 694 F.2d 466, 472 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 958, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1317, 103 S. Ct. 2430 (1983). Thus, a suit is a sham only if it is brought not for the purpose of prevailing on the merits, but for the purpose of damaging competition by the mere fact of litigation.

It has not been established that this case is a sham; it appears that AHP is pursuing this case to protect its own interests. Instead, Stuart Male alleges that AHP has a particular long-range motive for hoping to prevail [*7] in this suit. Stuart Hale argues that AHP is not entitled to trademark protection because it attempts to protect a trademark on a product it has not yet marketed. However, this allegation does not suggest that the suit is a sham, but merely that it is meritless. Stuart Male's allegations that the suit is a sham are really arguments on the merits against AHP's charges of trademark infringement. Because AHP brings this suit for the legitimate purpose of protecting its interests, it is shielded from Sherman Act liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. As such, Stuart Male's affirmative defense fails as a matter of law -- and must be stricken.

2. Motion To Strike Counterclaim

As a counterclaim in this action, Stuart Hale seeks a declaratory judgment that the name Pan-Lite does not infringe or unfairly compete with the registered trademark, PAM. Stuart Hale also requests that AHP be directed to withdraw its opposition to Stuart Hale's pending trademark application. AHP moves to strike Stuart Hale's counterclaim, pursuant to Fed R. Civ. P. 12(f). AHP contends that Stuart Hale's counterclaim is redundant, duplicative, and is improper under the Declaratory Judgment Act, *28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 [8] -02.

HN3[] When a counterclaim for declaratory relief "brings into question issues that already have been presented in plaintiff's complaint and defendant's answer to the original claim . . . it is redundant and a decision on the merits of plaintiff's claim will render the request for declaratory judgment moot." Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller, and Mary Kay Kane, 6 Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1406 (1990 ed.). When the court finds a counterclaim redundant, and therefore moot, it loses jurisdiction to rule on that counterclaim.

In this case, Stuart Male contends that its counterclaim is not redundant because it raises issues not addressed in the prior pleadings. The counterclaim seeks an order that AHP withdraw its opposition to Stuart Hale's pending trademark application. Stuart Male's contention has merit; this issue is not addressed in the complaint or the answer. First, although the United States Patent and Trademark Office will consider the disposition of AHP's suit in reaching its decision on Stuart Hale's pending trademark application, the decision in this case will not necessarily have collateral estoppel effect. Cf. Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 326, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 99 S. Ct. 645 (1979). [*9] In addition, AHP would not be required to withdraw its opposition to Stuart Hale's application if this court were to rule that Stuart Hale does not infringe AHP's trademark. Thus, Stuart Hale's counterclaim is not redundant because it would not be rendered moot by the disposition of AHP's suit. [4] The counterclaim need not be stricken.

3. Motion To Strike Jury Demand

In its answer to the complaint, Stuart Male demands a jury trial. AHP moves to strike the jury demand. AHP's complaint seeks injunctive relief. Stuart Hale's counterclaim seeks a declaratory judgment. Neither party seeks money damages. Because neither party states a cause of action for money damages, Stuart Hale is not entitled to a jury trial under the Seventh Amendment. Accordingly AHP's motion to strike Stuart Male's jury [*10] demand must be granted.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, plaintiff AHP Subsidiary Holding Corp.'s motions to strike the antitrust affirmative defense and to strike the jury demand are granted. AHP's motion to strike the counterclaim for declaratory judgment is denied.

ENTER:

Suzanne B. Conlon

United States District Judge

November 19, 1993

---

[4] For the same reasons, AHP's contention that Stuart Male's counterclaim "does not serve the purposes of the Declaratory Judgment Act" because it "adds nothing to the issues raised in the existing pleadings" also lacks merit.

Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Alabama, Southern Division

November 19, 1993, Decided ; November 19, 1993, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 90-T-414-S

Reporter
849 F. Supp. 1458 *; 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19740 ; 1994-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,754

T. R. COLEMAN, et al., Plaintiffs, v. CANNON OIL COMPANY, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: [1] As Corrected August 5, 1994.

Core Terms

prices, conspiracy, injunction, anti trust law, Sherman Act, gasoline, damages, nominal damages, price fixing, defendants', price-fixing, competitors, rivals, Clayton Act, plaintiffs', conspire, motion for judgment as a matter of law, retail price, interdependence, gasoline price, fix prices, parallelism, changes, dealers, circumstantial evidence, self interest, antitrust, employees, parties, treble

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Antitrust Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, provides that every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal. The Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

With the phrase "contract, combination, or conspiracy," Congress sought to embrace a single concept -- that is, an agreement, express or implied, between two or more persons-- and thus the terms in the phrase are used interchangeably. Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not prohibit independent business decisions and actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

With the phrase "in restraint of trade or commerce," Congress did not seek to prohibit all agreements that restrain trade or commerce but only those that impose an unreasonable restraint. However, certain agreements, including conspiracies to fix prices, have been held to be per se unreasonable and always illegal, meaning that no demonstration of an unreasonable restraint on competition is required. This conclusion rests on the empirical observation that such agreements would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, requires that a plaintiff who has demonstrated a Sherman Act violation also prove an injury to his or her business or property from the violation and provide some indication of the amount of damage done. The plaintiff must introduce substantial probative facts demonstrating that some damage flowed from the unlawful conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 50.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

In determining whether to grant or deny a Fed. R. Civ. P. 50 motion, all the evidence must be considered in the light, and with all reasonable inferences, most favorable to the party opposed to the motion. The motion may be granted only if the evidence points so overwhelmingly in favor of the moving party that no reasonable person could draw a contrary conclusion. Where reasonable people could differ on the basis of substantial, conflicting evidence, the motion must be denied.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

HN7[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

In determining whether evidence is sufficient to withstand a Fed. R. Civ. P. 50 motion for judgment as a matter of law, because the Fed. R. Civ. P. 50 standard is, for the most part, identical to that for summary judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, the court is constrained by the United States Supreme Court's application of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy. In such circumstances, the plaintiff must come forward with sufficiently unambiguous evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Plaintiff must present direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the defendants were engaged in a conspiracy rather than acting independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN9[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., it is the conspiracy alone that is prohibited; the underlying independent conduct is not necessarily unlawful and, indeed, may be procompetitive and of a nature that the antitrust laws would want to foster. The antitrust laws are thus peculiar in that a conspiracy creates the initial illegality. Setting one's own profit-maximizing price is, for example, entirely lawful under the antitrust laws; the antitrust laws are concerned with such price fixing only when it is the subject or result of a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Antitrust

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

Mere parallel pricing does not, standing alone, establish the existence of a conspiracy. If persons acted similarly, but independently of one another, without any agreement or mutual understanding among themselves, then there would be no conspiracy. The Sherman Act is directed not against uniformity of prices or price levels charged, but against the determination of prices or price levels by agreement among competitors. Rather, parallel conduct is a factor to be weighed, and generally to be weighed heavily. There must therefore be parallelism accompanied by substantial additional evidence to support a finding of an agreement necessary to establish a violation of Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The fact that a firm's action is against its self interest could support a finding of a conspiracy. To satisfy the requirements of a conspiracy, the action that is against self interest must go beyond mere interdependence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN12[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

All that plaintiff must prove is that defendants in some way came to an agreement or mutual understanding to accomplish a common purpose; a "gentlemen's agreement" will do.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators > Statements During Conspiracy

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators > Members of Conspiracy

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators > Statements Furthering Conspiracy

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Party Opponents > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Rule Components > Statements

HN13[] Conspiracy, Elements

Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E) provides that a statement is not hearsay if it is offered against a party and was made by a coconspirator of a party during the course and furtherance of the conspiracy. These statements are admissible, however, only if a preponderance of the evidence shows (1) the existence of a conspiracy, (2) the participation of the defendant and the declarant in the conspiracy, and, (3) that the declarant made the statement during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN14[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Evidence that one dealer complained to another about prices would be insufficient proof of a conspiracy; the proof must show that the dealer sought and obtained an agreement to maintain a certain price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN15[] Remedies, Damages

Trebling of damages under Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, is mandatory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN16[] Private Actions, Remedies

"Nominal damages" constitute more a recognition of an important right than an actual monetary recovery under the right. By making the deprivation of such rights actionable for nominal damages without proof of actual injury, the law recognizes the importance to organized society that those rights be scrupulously observed; but at the same time, it remains true to the principle that substantial damages should be awarded only to compensate actual injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN17[] Remedies, Damages

The Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26 provides in part that any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 13, 14, 18, and 19, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings. In any action in which the plaintiff substantially prevails, the court shall award the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to such plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN18[] Remedies, Injunctions

Even in the absence of actual past and current injury, threatened injury and the necessities of the public interest may independently still warrant a prospective injunction. The Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, which was enacted by the Congress to make available equitable remedies previously denied private parties, invokes traditional principles of equity and authorizes injunctive relief upon the demonstration of threatened injury. That remedy is characteristically available even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury; he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN19[] Remedies, Injunctions

The purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies was not merely to provide private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. The Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims. Its availability should be conditioned by the necessities of the public interest that Congress has sought to protect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN20[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

It is because it is so difficult to determine whether a fixed price is unreasonable at one point in time that price fixing is a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN21[] Private Actions, Remedies

Injury to the public exists merely in an individual acquiring the power to fix prices. It does not matter whether that power is reasonably exercised or not.

Counsel: For T. R. COLEMAN, et al., PLAINTIFFS: Edward M. Price, Jr., Dothan, AL, Rufus R. Smith, Jr., Dothan, AL, L. Andrew Hollis, Jr., Jeffrey C. Kirby, Birmingham, AL, Kenneth Millwood, Aaron Watson, Scott Tippett, John Latham, Sylvia Kochler, Valerie Verduce, Atlanta, GA, Edward C. Brewer, Atlanta, GA.

For Southeastern Oil, McGee Oil, Defendants: W. Terry Travis, Dennis Pierson, George L. Beck, Jr., Montgomery, AL. For Home Oil, Thomas Shirley, Defendants: Joseph Mays, Jr., David Hymer, Cada Carter, Birmingham, AL. For Graceville Oil Co., Defendant: Charles L. Robinson, David Proctor, Birmingham, AL. For Sheffield Oil Co., Defendant: C. H. Espy, Jr., Dothan, AL. For Cannon Oil, Vernon Cannon, Defendants: T. E. Buntin, Jr., Dothan, AL, Thomas S. Lawson, James N. Walter, Montgomery, AL. For Sunshine Jr. Food Stores, Defendant: J. Riley Davis, Tallahassee, FL. For Sunshine Jr. Food Stores, Defendant: J. Riley Davis, Tallahassee, FL. For Davis & Harp Oil Co., Herndon Oil Co., Defendants: Ezra B. Jones, III, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: Thompson

Opinion by: MYRON H. THOMPSON

Opinion

[*1461] MEMORANDUM OPINION

In this class-action lawsuit, plaintiffs, who are individual gasoline consumers, charged that defendants, who are retail sellers [2] of gasoline, violated federal antitrust laws by [*1462] conspiring to fix gasoline prices in Dothan, Alabama. Plaintiffs are: T. R. Coleman; Bernard J. Petit; and R. L. and Lucy Middleton. Defendants are: Sunshine-Jr. Stores, Inc.; Rodney Parrish; Vernon Cannon and his company, Cannon Oil Company; Thomas Shirley and his company, Home Oil Company; and James Sheffield and his company, Sheffield Oil Company. [1] Plaintiffs seek damages and injunctive relief under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 (West Supp. 1993), and § 4 and § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 15, 26 (West Supp. 1993). Plaintiffs properly invoked the court's jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 1331 (West 1993), 1337 (West Supp. 1993).

[1] Vernon Cannon died after this litigation began. His wife Metha Jean Cannon replaced him as a defendant in her capacity as executrix of his estate. For ease of discussion, the court will continue to refer to Mr. Cannon as the defendant.

[3] After a month-long trial, a jury found that defendants had engaged in illegal price fixing but awarded only nominal damages of one dollar. Defendants have filed motions requesting that the court enter judgment in their favor as a matter of law. Plaintiffs have filed motions requesting that the court treble the nominal damages award and enter a final injunction prohibiting defendants from engaging in future illegal price fixing. For the reasons given below, the court will grant plaintiffs' motion to enter a final injunction and defendant Sunshine-Jr. Stores' motion for judgment as a matter of law and will deny the other motions.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit on April 19, 1990, charging several persons and their businesses with conspiring to fix the retail price of gasoline in Dothan, Alabama. The original defendants consisted of the following: Sunshine-Jr. Stores; Rodney Parrish; Vernon Cannon and his company, Cannon Oil Company; Thomas Shirley and his company, Home Oil Company; and James Sheffield and his company, Sheffield Oil Company; Southeastern Oil Company, Inc.; Davis & Harp Oil Company, Inc.; Herndon Oil Company, Inc.; Beard Oil Company; A. W. Herndon and his [4] company, A. W. Herndon Oil Company, Inc.; McGee Oil; and Graceville Oil Company, Inc. The court certified a plaintiff class for "damages" consisting of "all individuals and entities who made retail purchases of gasoline from the defendants in the Houston County, Alabama area since April 15, 1986." [2] [5] The court dismissed Beard Oil Company [3] and entered summary judgment in favor of Southeastern Oil Company, Davis & Harp Oil Company, Herndon Oil Company, and McGee Oil Company. [4] The plaintiffs settled their claims against Graceville Oil Company [5] and against A. W. Herndon and his company, A. W. Herndon Oil Company. [6] This case went to trial as to the remaining defendants--Sunshine-Jr. Stores, Rodney Parrish, Vernon Cannon and Cannon Oil Company, Thomas Shirley and Home Oil Company, and James Sheffield and Sheffield Oil Company--who are collectively referred to in the remainder of this order as just the defendants. A jury found that these defendants had engaged in illegal price fixing and that they should pay nominal damages of one dollar. The parties responded to the verdict with the motions now before the court. [7]

[*1463] II. DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW

---

[2] Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 141 F.R.D. 516, 519 (M.D. Ala. 1992). The court, however, denied plaintiffs' request to certify a plaintiff class with regard to "injunctive relief." Id.

Also, the City of Dothan is within Houston County, Alabama.

[3] Order of March 4, 1993.

[4] Order of January 30, 1992.

[5] Order of June 17, 1992.

[6] Order of April 20, 1993.

[7] After the trial, plaintiffs asked the court to reconsider its order granting summary judgment in favor of Southeastern Oil Company, Herndon Oil Company, McGee Oil Company, and Davis & Harp Oil Company. Plaintiffs also asked the court to add new individual defendants. Plaintiffs contended that the trial evidence reflected that these persons and companies were part of the trial defendants' conspiracy to fix prices. By order dated February 24, 1993, the court denied the plaintiffs' request as untimely. See DeBruyne v. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, 920 F.2d 457, 471 (7th Cir. 1990) (on a motion to reconsider, a court ordinarily will not hear evidence that was within the moving party's knowledge at the time of the initial decision); Barton v. American Red Cross, 826 F. Supp. 407, 409 (M.D. Ala. 1993) (Thompson, J.) (same).

[6] As stated, plaintiffs sought relief under the antitrust laws of the United States: § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 (West Supp. 1993), and § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 15 (West Supp. 1993). [8] Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act HN1[] provides that, "Every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is . . . illegal." Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained." With these laws, "Congress was dealing with competition, which it sought to protect." Standard Oil Co. v. F.T.C., 340 U.S. 231, 249, 71 S. Ct. 240, 249, 95 L. Ed. 239 (1951) (citation omitted). As this court explained in its instructions to the jury, "The purpose of the antitrust laws is to preserve our system of free and open competition, the most important part of our private enterprise system." "These laws," the court continued, "promote the concept [7] that free competition results in the best allocation of economic resources, to the end that the consuming public may receive better goods and services at a lower cost."

Plaintiffs charged that defendants violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into a "contract, combination, or conspiracy" among themselves and with others "in restraint of trade or commerce" to fix the retail price of gasoline in the Dotham, Alabama market. HN2[] With the phrase "contract, combination, or conspiracy," Congress sought "to embrace a single concept"--that is, an agreement, express or implied, between two or more persons--and thus the terms in the phrase are used interchangeably. Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1400a at 3 (1986) (hereinafter referred to as "Areeda"). Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not prohibit independent [8] business decisions and actions. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 760, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1469, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984).

HN3[] With the phrase "in restraint of trade or commerce," Congress did not seek to prohibit all agreements that restrain trade or commerce but only those that impose an "unreasonable restraint." N.C.A.A. v. Board of Regents of the University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 98, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 2959, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). However, certain agreements, including conspiracies to fix prices, have been held to be per se unreasonable and always illegal, meaning that no demonstration of an unreasonable restraint on competition is required. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2740, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). This conclusion rests on the empirical observation that such agreements "'would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output.'" N.C.A.A.. 468 U.S. at 100, 104 S. Ct. at 2959, [9] (quoting Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 1562, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979)).

Finally, § 4 of the Clayton Act HN4[] requires that a plaintiff who has demonstrated a Sherman Act violation also prove an injury to his or her business or property from the violation and provide some indication of the amount of damage done. Construction Aggregate Transport, Inc. v. Florida Rock Industries, Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 782 (11th Cir. 1983). "The plaintiff must introduce substantial probative facts demonstrating that some damage flowed from the unlawful conspiracy." Id.

To prevail under § 1 of the Sherman Act against a defendant, therefore, a plaintiff has to establish the following: first, that there was a conspiracy involving the defendant; and, second, that the purpose of the conspiracy was to fix the retail price of gasoline in the targeted market. A common plan or understanding between two or more persons to adopt or follow any pricing formula which will result in raising, lowering, or maintaining prices or price ranges charged for goods or services would [10] constitute a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. And, third, to obtain relief under § 4 of the Clayton Act, the plaintiff must also show injury in his or her [*1464] business or property as a result of the conspiracy. See, e.g., Storer Cable Communications v. Montgomery, Ala., 826 F. Supp. 1338, 1349 (M.D. Ala. 1993) (Thompson, J.).

Defendants request that the court set aside the jury's finding that they violated the federal antitrust laws, and they ask that the court enter judgment as a matter of law in their favor pursuant to Rule 50 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (1993). Rule 50 provides that, HN5[] "If . . . a party has been fully heard with respect to an issue and there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to have found for that party with respect to that issue, the court may grant a motion for judgment as a matter of law against that party on any claim, counterclaim, cross claim, or third-party claim that cannot under the controlling law be maintained without a favorable finding on that issue." HN6[] In determining whether to grant or deny a Rule 50 motion, all the evidence must be considered in the [11] light, and with all reasonable inferences, most favorable to the party opposed to the motion. The motion may be granted only if the evidence points so overwhelmingly in favor of the moving party that no reasonable person could draw a contrary conclusion. Where reasonable people could differ on the basis of substantial, conflicting evidence, the motion must be denied. Martinez v. City of Opa-locka, 971 F.2d 708, 711 (11th Cir. 1992) (per curiam).

---

[8] Plaintiffs also seek prospective injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26 (West Supp. 1993); this requested relief is discussed later in this memorandum opinion.

HN7[] In determining whether evidence is sufficient to withstand a Rule 50 motion for judgment as a matter of law, defendants correctly point out that, because the Rule 50 standard is, for the most part, identical to that for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (1993), this court is constrained by the Supreme Court's application of Rule 56 in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). There, in finding that summary judgment was appropriate against two American firms on their claim that several Japanese companies had engaged in a predatory pricing conspiracy [12] aimed at driving American firms from the American consumer electronic products market, the Court wrote: first, that the fact that defendants simply "had no rational economic motive to conspire," id. at 596, 106 S. Ct. at 1361, combined with evidence that the defendants' conduct was "consistent with other, equally plausible [innocent] explanations" implied that the defendants' conduct could "not give rise to an inference of conspiracy," id. at 596-97, 106 S. Ct. at 1361; and, second and more importantly, that, even if the defendants had a rational economic motive to conspire, summary judgment would still have been appropriate in light of the fact that "HN8[] conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy." Id. at 597 n. 21, 106 S. Ct. at 1361 n. 21 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763-64, 104 S. Ct. at 1470-71). The Court indicated that, in such circumstances, [13] the plaintiff must come forward with "sufficiently unambiguous" evidence "'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. 475 U.S. at 588, 597, 106 S. Ct. at 1356, 1362 (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471).

However, as Professor Areeda has cautioned, "It is important not to be misled by Matsushita[]." Areeda, P 1405' at 1021 (Supp. 1993). "The Court surely did not mean that the plaintiff must disprove all non-conspiratorial explanations for the defendants' conduct." Id. The Court said that plaintiff's evidence need only "tend" to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently. Id. Moreover, the Court surely did not mean that a trial court must find for defendants as matter of law "whenever the court concludes that inferences of conspiracy and inferences of innocent conduct are equally plausible." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432, 438 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, U.S. , 111 S. Ct. 2274 (1991). [14] First, because "circumstantial evidence is nearly always evidence that is plausibly consistent with competing inferences," id. at 439, such "an approach would imply that circumstantial evidence alone would rarely be sufficient to withstand summary judgment [or judgment as a matter of law] in an antitrust conspiracy case," and indeed "would seem to be tantamount to requiring direct evidence of conspiracy." Id. Compare United States v. Henderson, 693 F.2d 1028, 1031 (11th Cir. 1982) [*1465] ("[circumstantial] evidence is not testimony to the specific fact being asserted, but testimony to other facts and circumstances from which the jury may infer that the fact being asserted does or does not exist") with Clark v. Coats & Clark, Inc., 990 F.2d 1217, 1222 (11th Cir. 1993) ("Evidence is direct when it is sufficient to prove discrimination without inference or presumption"). Matsushita did not dispense with circumstantial evidence as a basis for finding a conspiracy. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471 (plaintiff must "present [15] direct or circumstantial evidence" that reasonably tends to prove that the defendants were engaged in a conspiracy rather than acting independently).

Second, "to read Matsushita as requiring judges to ask whether the circumstantial evidence is more 'consistent' with the defendants' theory than with the plaintiff's theory would imply that the jury should be permitted to choose an inference of conspiracy only if the judge has first decided that he would himself draw that inference." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d at 438. Under this approach, the judge would essentially be "a thirteenth juror, who must be persuaded before an antitrust violation may be found." Id. Matsushita should not understood as having brought about such "a dramatic judicial encroachment on the province of the jury." Id.

Instead, as Professor Areeda has explained, Matsushita's "context made clear that the Court was simply requiring sufficient evidence to allow a reasonable factfinder to infer that the conspiratorial explanation is more likely than not." Areeda, P 1405' at 1021 (Supp. 1993). The question then is [16] what is "sufficient evidence"? The critical import of Matsushita is in its statement that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." 475 U.S. at 588, 106 S. Ct. at 1356. Matsushita, therefore, does not prohibit reliance on circumstantial (that is, ambiguous) evidence; it merely limits the range of permissible inferences that may be drawn from such evidence.

This inferential limitation is grounded in the unique nature of the law of antitrust conspiracy. In general, a conspiracy is an agreement or mutual understanding between two or more persons that they will act together for some purpose. However, a Sherman Act conspiracy differs sharply from the more typical concept of conspiracy found in other contexts. Under the criminal drug laws, for example, both the underlying act and the conspiracy are illegal--that is, the laws make it an offense for anyone to violate, as well as conspire to violate, the federal drug statutes. See e.g., 21 U.S.C.A. § 846. In contrast, HN9[] under the Sherman Act, it is the conspiracy alone that is prohibited; [17] the underlying independent conduct is not necessarily unlawful and, indeed, may be procompetitive and of a nature that the antitrust laws would want to foster. "The antitrust laws are thus peculiar in that a conspiracy creates the initial illegality." Areeda, P 1402a at 9 (1986). As Professor Areeda has explained, "setting one's own profit-maximizing price is," for example, "entirely lawful under the antitrust laws"; the antitrust laws are "concerned with such price fixing only when it is the subject or result of a conspiracy." Id. Because of this peculiar but important distinction, courts have the added responsibility in antitrust conspiracy cases of assuring that underlying lawful conduct is not brought within the prohibitive reach of the law, even inadvertently; they must be careful to condemn only that conduct--that is, the agreement--that Congress intended to fall within the reach of the antitrust laws. Matsushita teaches that the determination of whether underlying circumstantial conduct is sufficient to support an inference of a Sherman Act violation, and thus to fall within the prohibitive reach of the Act, is a legal issue for the court. Of course, if the underlying [18] conduct is sufficient to support such an inference, it is still up to the jury to make the inference.

The evidence presented by the plaintiffs in this case was in large measure circumstantial and consisted of, first, expert testimony and documentary evidence of parallel pricing and, second, anecdotal testimony suggesting price fixing. Defendants argue that expert testimony and documentary evidence did not reflect that there was parallel pricing among them at all times. But, if the evidence reflects that the defendants entered [*1466] into a price-fixing conspiracy, the fact that they did not observe the conspiracy on all occasions for all types of gasoline does not defeat the charge of price fixing. What is critical is that the jury could, and apparently did, reasonably conclude from the evidence that the defendants engaged in parallel pricing for some of their gasoline products for substantial periods of time.

Defendants are correct, however, that HN10[] mere parallel pricing does not, standing alone, establish the existence of a conspiracy. Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, 346 U.S. 537, 541, 74 S. Ct. 257, 259-60, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954); [19] Aviation Specialties, Inc. v. United Technologies Corporation, 568 F.2d 1186, 1192 (5th Cir. 1978). If persons acted similarly, but independently of one another, without any agreement or mutual understanding among themselves, then there would be no conspiracy. The Sherman Act is directed not against uniformity of prices or price levels charged, but against the determination of prices or price levels by agreement among competitors. Rather, parallel conduct is a factor "to be weighed, and generally to be weighed heavily." Morton Salt Company v. United States, 235 F.2d 573, 577 (10th Cir. 1956). There must therefore be parallelism accompanied by substantial additional evidence to support a finding of an agreement necessary to establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Theatre Enterprises, 346 U.S. at 541, 74 S. Ct. at 259-60. This substantial additional evidence may take many forms. Areeda, PP 1434a-1434e at 213-21 (1986).

The reason behind this requirement of substantial additional evidence is, as stated earlier, that the law should not be inadvertently [20] used to condemn non-conspiratorial conduct. The requirement is intended to help assure that there is a reasonable basis to conclude that persons exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan, albeit not necessarily through meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents.

Plaintiffs argue that they presented substantial additional evidence that this parallelism was so aberrant that it could not have been inadvertent but rather could only have resulted from a conscious agreement among defendants to fix prices. Admittedly, the plaintiffs' experts testified that the pricing activities of defendants in the Dothan market differed in significant respects from what could be reasonably expected in a comparable but fully price-competitive market. There were prolonged periods of identical pricing followed by almost simultaneous changes; prices did not vary over time and between competitors. Although, because of their name-recognition, major-brand dealers often charged more than other dealers, there was no price difference between major-brand dealers and other dealers in Dothan; indeed, in one instance, the non-major brand dealers beat the majors in raising their prices [21] by ten cents a gallon. A drop in gasoline wholesale prices did not result in a corresponding drop in retail prices. And finally, when this lawsuit was filed in April 1990, defendants lowered their prices by five to six cents a gallon. A review of data gathered by defendants on 28 other Alabama towns reflected that, in all but two of these towns during this time, the prices were rising or staying the same and, in the two towns, the price dropped less than two cents.

However, this evidence could merely reflect lawful "interdependent conscious parallelism," that is, parallelism based upon the belief that "the profitability of [the firm's] decision depends upon rivals' reaction." Areeda, P 1434c at 214 (1986). Professor Areeda explains this concept in more detail as follows:

> "When [competing] firms are few in number--a so-called oligopoly--each is aware that its output variations are significant enough to affect market price. Each firm's pricing decision is interdependent with that of its rivals: each knows that his choice will affect the others, who are likely to respond, and that their responses will affect the profitability of his initial choice. Each knows that expanding his [22] sales or lowering his price will reduce the sales of rivals, who will notice that fact, identify the cause, and probably respond with matching price reduction. Unless he can somehow conceal his price reduction, or unless his own position is improved by a lower [*1467] market price, he will hesitate to reduce prices at all.
> "A similar process can explain a price rise through oligopolistic price leadership. When one oligopolist raises his price, each of his rivals must decide whether to follow or not. Continuing the previous price would allow each of the others to increase his sales if the leader persists in charging a higher price. But each knows that the leader is likely to retract an increase that is not followed. Accordingly, each rival asks himself whether he is better off at the lower price when charged by all or at the higher price when charged by all. If the latter, as will often be the case, the leader's price increase is likely to be followed.

P 1410b at 65 (emphasis in original). Whether Professor Areeda's observations are always applicable to certain types of markets is a question this court need not answer; it is sufficient that "such pricing behavior can occur when the [23] number of significant rivals in a market is sufficiently small." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d at 443 (emphasis added). Moreover, that interdependent conscious parallelism could occur in Dothan among defendants is especially evident. Because, relatively speaking, the community is small without a large number of retailers and because gas prices were placed on large signs for public viewing, it was easy, if not expected, for each retailer to know what the other was charging and to respond immediately to the other's changes.

Plaintiffs further argue that there were substantial additional evidence that defendants' parallel pricing was against their self interest. Admittedly, HN11[] the fact that a firm's action is against its self interest could support a finding of a conspiracy. Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1456 n. 30 (11th Cir. 1991) ("it is well settled in this circuit that evidence of conscious parallelism does not permit an inference of conspiracy unless the plaintiff establishes that, assuming there is no conspiracy, each defendant engaging [24] in the parallel action acted contrary to its economic self-interest"); Aviation Specialties, Inc., 568 F.2d at 1192 ("significant probative evidence . . . that the defendants engaged in (1) consciously parallel action, (2) which was contrary to their economic self interest so as not to amount to a good faith business judgment" could support a § 1 violation). But the concept of "action against self interest" is an ambiguous one and one of its meanings could merely constitute a restatement of interdependence. For example, refusing to raise or lower prices unless rivals do the same could be against a firm's self interest but it would constitute mere interdependence. Similarly, a firm's motivation, if the motivation is merely to meet rival places, would constitute only interdependence. Areeda, P 1434c at 214-215 (1986). Therefore, to satisfy the requirements of a conspiracy, the action that is against self interest must go beyond mere interdependence. An example given by Professor Areeda is "the act which would be against self interest unless rivals act the same but where individual action would be so perilous in the absence of advanced agreement that [25] no reasonable firm would make the challenged move without such agreement." Id. at 215. Therefore parallel price fixing which would be so unusual that in the absence of advanced agreement no reasonable firm would engage without such an agreement could be sufficient to establish a conspiracy. In such a scenario, the conspiracy would not be based on parallel price fixing alone but on parallel pricing in conjunction with other background evidence which reflected that in absence of advance agreement the rival firms would not engage in such parallel conduct. [9] Plaintiffs here have not [*1468] shown that defendants acted to this degree against their self-interest.

[26] The court is, however, convinced that plaintiffs' anecdotal evidence, in conjunction with their evidence of parallelism, supports the jury's finding of an illegal agreement to fix prices among all defendants except Sunshine-Jr. Stores. The evidence was substantial that Vernon Cannon, Rodney Parrish, Thomas Shirley and his son, and James Sheffield entered into one or more agreements to fix prices. Eugene Welch, a former employee of Cannon Oil, testified to the following: Vernon Cannon successfully predicted how others in Dothan were going to raise their gasoline prices. Cannon would also call Thomas Shirley and ask him to raise Home Oil Company prices, and Cannon would call Parrish and ask him to have Sunshine-Jr. Stores raise its prices. In his conversations with competitors, apparently to disguise the nature of the conversations, Cannon would often use the code words "eggs and oranges" when referring to gasoline prices. Cannon Oil and its competitors, with the exception of Sunshine-Jr. Stores, often moved their prices up in tandem or almost in tandem; Sunshine-Jr. Stores would, however, follow suit shortly after Cannon had contacted Parrish. The prices in the areas surrounding Dothan [27] were significantly lower than those in Dothan, and when prices changed in Dothan they did not change in the surrounding areas.

Charles Vann Carter, one of the defendants' competitors, testified to the following: Over the years Parrish and Thomas Shirley's son often visited or telephoned Carter to inform him that "everyone" in the Dothan Area was about to increase gasoline prices and to ask Carter to change his prices to meet the changes. The prices would usually increase as predicted by Parrish and Shirley's son. Shirley's son stated to him that Cannon wanted everyone to "go along" with the price changes. On one occasion, Carter asked Parrish why Sunshine-Jr. Stores was later than the other companies in raising prices, and Parrish responded that "it just takes a little longer to get in touch with Sunshine Jr."

Marion D. Harmon, who was employed by Thrifty Petroleum, testified that, sometime prior to 1984, Vernon Cannon and Thomas Shirley came by Thrifty's Dothan store, and Cannon angrily complained to him that his prices were below Cannon Oil's. Harmon explained to him that his prices were below Cannon Oil's. Harmon explained to Cannon and Shirley that he did not control the prices [28] and the prices were set by company officials in Montgomery.

Karen D. Bell, who worked for Parrish, testified to the following: Parrish often received telephone calls from his competitors, including Vernon Cannon, Thomas Shirley, and Shirley's son. Also, Shirley, his son, and other competitors often visited Parrish, and, during these visits, Bell heard them mention gasoline prices. After these visits there was often an increase in prices among competitors within a day or so. Indeed, immediately following [9] Early in this litigation, plaintiffs argued that unless a defendant's explanation for parallel conduct is "procompetitive," the court must find for the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs premised this argument on a statement by the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals in Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1574 (11th Cir. 1991), that, where a defendant can put forth a "plausible, procompetitive explanation for his actions," a court should be reluctant to find them circumstantial evidence that an antitrust violation has occurred. The plaintiffs have, however, twisted the quote from Seagood. The Appellate Court merely stated that, if the defendants' reason is procompetitive, and thus plausible, a court should not find a conspiracy. The court did not say, or intend, that procompetitiveness is a prerequisite for a finding that a conspiracy did not exist. Indeed, as shown above, an anticompetitive motive could very well result from nothing more than an effort to survive because of interdependence among the firm and its' rival.

---

these visits, in order to take advantage of current prices before the anticipated increase, Bell would fill up her own car with gasoline and would have her relatives do the same.

C. Diane Leach, who also worked for Parrish, testified to the following: Parrish received calls and visits from his competitors, including Vernon Cannon, Thomas Shirley, and Shirley's son. In the spring of 1988, shortly after a visit from Cannon, Shirley, and two other competitors, Leach overheard Parrish complain that "Tom [Shirley] hasn't raised his prices yet."

Stephen Spicer, who worked as a computer operator for Cannon Oil, testified to the following: In the mid-1980's, Spicer overheard Vernon Cannon [29] talking over the telephone to James Sheffield about prices in Ozark, a small city about 25 miles north of Dothan. Cannon asked Sheffield "what the price was that day in Ozark," and Cannon said "I'll meet you at such and such in the morning." In their conversation the two men "agreed" to the prices. In addition, on other occasions, Spicer overheard "similar conversations" with "unidentified parties" regarding prices in Dothan.

James Ney, who worked for Cannon Oil, testified to the following: Ney overheard Vernon Cannon discuss price changes with individuals "Tom" and "Jimmy" over the telephone, and, after one of these calls, Cannon instructed Ney to change the prices listed on Cannon Oil signs. Shirley's first name was "Thomas," and Sheffield's first name was [*1469] "James." On one occasion, early in the morning, when Ney went to one of the Cannon Oil stations to change the sign prices, he noticed that the station across the street was changing its sign prices at the same time to match Cannon Oil's prices. On another occasion, in a morning meeting of some of Cannon Oil's employees to discuss gasoline prices, Cannon said to the employees "you know, we don't control any prices," and then [30] Cannon looked at them "with a little smile."

To be sure, the mere fact that defendants met together or telephoned each other, while probative, would not support a finding by itself that they had engaged in an effort to fix prices. "Such proof satisfies the necessary precondition of any traditional conspiracy that the parties have the opportunity to conspire," Areeda, P 1417b at 97 (1986), but "it remains the plaintiff's burden to prove that the defendant succombed to the temptation and conspired." Id. Here, plaintiffs have shown through anecdotal evidence, in conjunction with the evidence of parallel pricing, that Vernon Cannon, Rodney Parrish, Thomas Shirley and his son, and James Sheffield did just that--meet and conspire to fix prices. To be sure, the evidence gives us only a peek here and there, but when the many peeks are all put together, along with the evidence of substantial parallel pricing, a full picture emerges and that picture is one of a conspiracy among these men to fix and control gasoline prices in the City of Dothan. There may have been no formal or written agreement among them; but, to establish an illegal antitrust conspiracy a plaintiff need not show that defendants [31] entered into any express, formal, or written agreement or that they directly stated what their object or purpose was, or the details of it, or the means by which they would accomplish their purpose. Areeda, P 1401 at 7, P 1404 at 19-20 (1986). HN12[] All that plaintiff must prove is that defendants in some way came to an agreement or mutual understanding to accomplish a common purpose; a "gentlemen's agreement" will do. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 179, 60 S. Ct. 811, 825, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940). All the evidence, both anecdotal and expert, shows that Cannon, Parrish, Shirley, Shirley's son, and Sheffield entered into just such a mutual understanding. See, e.g., United States v. Container Corp. of America, 89 S. Ct. 510, 393 U.S. 333, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1969); Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra. [10]

[32] The court cannot reach the same conclusion as to Sunshine-Jr. Stores. Although there was evidence that Parrish contacted Sunshine-Jr. Stores about its prices, this evidence consisted only of out-of-court statements by Parrish denied by him at trial; there was no evidence that any employee or acknowledged agent of Sunshine-Jr. Stores took any step to become a member of a price-fixing conspiracy among the other defendants. These out-of-court statements by Parrish are inadmissible as proof against Sunshine-Jr. Stores. Rule 801(d)(2)(E) of the Federal Rules of Evidence HN13[] provides that a statement is not hearsay if it is offered against a party and was made

[10] Although it could perhaps be argued that the anecdotal evidence alone would not support a conclusion of price fixing on the part of all these defendants--the evidence is admittedly stronger as to some defendants and weaker as to others--the anecdotal evidence when considered with all other evidence substantially supports the conclusion that all these defendants engaged in price fixing.

"by a coconspirator of a party during the course and furtherance of the conspiracy." "These statements are admissible, however, only if a preponderance of the evidence shows: (1) the existence of a conspiracy; (2) the participation of the defendant and the declarant in the conspiracy; and, (3) that the declarant made the statement during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy." United States v. Beale, 921 F.2d 1412, 1422 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. , , , 112 S. Ct. 99, 100, 264 (1991). [33] In Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 181, 107 S. Ct. 2775, 2781, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1987), the Supreme Court permitted the trial court to examine the out-of-court statements themselves "in making a preliminary factual determination under Rule 801(d)(2)(E)," but did not address whether the trial court could rely on these statements alone in making a finding that a defendant participated in the conspiracy and thus that, assuming all other requirements of the rule are met, the statements are inadmissible. Here, assuming that the court can rely solely on Parrish's out-of-court statements, the [*1470] court does not believe that this evidence is sufficient to find that Sunshine-Jr. Stores was a member of the other defendants' conspiracy. [11]

[34] In any event, that Parrish contacted Sunshine-Jr. Stores as he allegedly said he did would not support a finding that Sunshine-Jr. Stores was a member of the conspiracy. It is unclear from this evidence whether Parrish was merely complaining to Sunshine-Jr. Stores or was actually fixing prices with the company. HN14[] Evidence that one dealer complained to another about prices would be insufficient proof of a conspiracy; the proof must show that the dealer sought and obtained an agreement to maintain a certain price. Pink Supply Corp. v. Hiebert, Inc., 788 F.2d 1313, 1319 (8th Cir. 1986). Moreover, of all the defendants, the evidence of parallel pricing was weakest as to Sunshine-Jr. Stores. Rather than acting in tandem with the other defendants, Sunshine-Jr. Stores usually raised its prices a period of time after the others, strongly indicating that Sunshine-Jr. Stores was acting interdependently, if not fully independently. See, e.g., Orval Sheppard Real Estate Co. v. Valinda Freed & Assoc., Inc., 608 F. Supp. 354, 357 (M.D. Ala. 1985) (Thompson, J.), aff'd, 800 F.2d 265 (11th Cir. 1986) (table). [35] [12]

III. PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR TREBLING OF DAMAGES

As stated, § 4 of the Clayton Act provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained." 15 U.S.C.A. § 15 (West Supp. 1993). Plaintiffs are correct that the HN15[] trebling of damages under this provision is mandatory. Lehrman v. Gulf Oil Corp., 500 F.2d 659, 667 (5th Cir. 1974), [36] cert. denied, 420 U.S. 929, 95 S. Ct. 1128, 43 L. Ed. 2d 400 (1975).

In Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 98 S. Ct. 1042, 55 L. Ed. 2d 252 (1978), the Supreme Court observed that HN16[] "nominal damages" constitute more a "recognition" of an important right than an actual monetary recovery under [11] There was evidence that Parrish and an employee of Sunshine-Jr. Stores, Jim Burkhalter, were friends and had met on one or more occasions in Panama City, Florida. However, both men denied discussing gas prices, and the mere fact that they met is insufficient to support a finding that they fixed prices, even in the face of evidence of independent and interdependent of parallel pricing. There was also evidence that Burkhalter was friends with and had met other defendants. However, as stated, the mere fact that defendants met together or telephoned each other, while probative, would not support a finding by itself that they had engaged in an effort to fix prices. Areeda, P 1417b at 97 (1986).

Plaintiffs also suggest that Burkhalter gave false testimony before and during the trial. Burkhalter's false testimony would merely serve to impeach him and to discredit his denial of involvement in the other defendants' conspiracy; it cannot, however, be the basis for an affirmative finding of his involvement without any affirmative evidence to that effect. In other words, if there were other credible and substantial evidence of Burkhalter's (and, by implication, Sunshine-Jr. Stores') involvement in the price-fixing conspiracy, then Burkhalter's denial of involvement could be discredited by his false testimony, and a jury could reasonably find that he was a part of the conspiracy; but in such case the finding of his involvement would be based on the other credible and substantial evidence.

[12] The evidence suggests that, after this lawsuit was filed, defendants abandoned their parallel pricing. This evidence, by itself, would merely reflect that, perhaps out of fear of this litigation, defendants abandoned, not any agreement to fix prices, but rather their interdependent conscious parallel pricing. Nevertheless, this evidence, in conjunction with the evidence of the pre-litigation parallel pricing and the anectodal evidence, supports the conclusion that all defendants, except Sunshine-Jr. Stores, fixed prices.

the right. The Court wrote that, "By making the deprivation of such rights actionable for nominal damages without proof of actual injury, the law recognizes the importance to organized society that those rights be scrupulously observed; but at the same time, it remains true to the principle that substantial damages should be awarded only to compensate actual injury." Id. at 266, 98 S. Ct. at 1054. Therefore, if a plaintiff's nominal damages recovery constituted merely a recognition of a violation of his rights then it could be argued that he was not "injured in his business or property" as required for treble damages under § 4.

However, without objection from the parties, the court in its instructions to the jury defined [37] nominal damages as follows:

> [*1471] "However, if you find that the Plaintiffs have established by a preponderance of the evidence that the Defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act and that, as a result, the Plaintiffs have sustained damages but not in a substantial amount, then you may return a verdict for the Plaintiff class in some nominal sum such as one dollar."

Therefore, in order to award nominal damages in this case, the jury had to have found that the plaintiffs sustained some damages. The jury's nominal damages award reflected not only a recognition of a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, but also a finding of actual injury to the property of the plaintiffs, as required for relief under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Nevertheless, the nominal damages award, while reflecting actual damages, did not reflect the amount. Under these circumstances, a trebling would be meaningless. [13]

[38] IV. PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Plaintiffs also seek prospective injunctive relief pursuant to § 16 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C.A. § 26 (West Supp. 1993). [14] Admittedly, the plaintiffs recovered only nominal damages and it appears that defendants ceased their illegal conduct after the filing of this litigation. However, these circumstances do not preclude the issuance of an injunction if the evidence and circumstances otherwise warrant such.

[39] In Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 1580, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969), the Supreme Court rejected as "unsound" the notion that the "failure to prove the fact of injury barred injunctive relief." The Court found that, HN18[] even in the absence of actual past and current injury, "threatened injury" and "the necessities of the public interest" may independently still warrant a prospective injunction. The Court wrote:

> "[Section] 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, which was enacted by the Congress to make available equitable remedies previously denied private parties, invokes traditional principles of equity and authorizes injunctive relief upon the demonstration of 'threatened' injury. That remedy is characteristically available even

---

[13] Defendants appear to suggest that nominal damages are neither appropriate under nor authorized by the Sherman and Clayton Acts. However, because none of the parties objected to the court's instructions on nominal damages or otherwise contended that the instructions were an incorrect statement of law, it is now too late for them to complain that nominal damages--at least, as specifically defined in the court's instructions--are not a type of relief which a jury may award under the antitrust laws.

[14] Section 16 provides in part:

> HN17[] "Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including sections 13, 14, 18, and 19 of this title, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings. . . . In any action under this section in which the plaintiff substantially prevails, the court shall award the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to such plaintiff."

> though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury; he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur."

> "Moreover, HN19[] the purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies [40] was not merely to provide private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. Section 16 should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice 'adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims.' Its availability should be 'conditioned by the necessities of the public interest which Congress has sought to protect.'"

Id. at 130-31, 89 S. Ct. at 1580 (citations and footnotes omitted).

Here, the threat of resumption of the conspiracy remains real. First, the defendants--that is, Cannon, Parrish, Shirley, and Sheffield and their employees--ceased their illegal price-fixing activity only after this lawsuit was filed. It was this litigation alone [*1472] that brought an end to their illegal conduct. The court is convinced, however, that once this litigation is over the defendants will more likely than not resume their illegal conduct. Second, the defendants and some of their employees not only have failed to [41] acknowledge their wrong-doing, they have willfully testified falsely that they did not engage in price fixing and that they acted innocently. Their false testimony actually impeded and obstructed this litigation. Cf. U.S.S.G. § 3C1.1 (1992) ("providing materially false information to a judge or magistrate" constitutes obstructing or impeding the administration of justice, warranting a higher sentence for a criminal defendant). This obstructionist conduct, which the court believes was also conspiratorial and by agreement among defendants, leads the court to believe that defendants are far from having abandoned their illegal ways; indeed, in a very real way, the conspiracy--in that it now manifests itself in false testimony--continued throughout the trial and continues today. Defendants' obstructionist conduct, in conjunction with their conspiracy to fix prices, convinces the court that the likelihood of recidivism on their part is not only likely it is great.

The court is further convinced that the continued operation of the conspiracy poses a "significant threat of injury." Zenith Radio Corp., 395 U.S. at 130, 89 S. Ct. at 1580. [42] First, as previously shown, the nominal damages as defined in this case and as awarded by the jury represented a finding of actual injury to the plaintiffs. Second and in any event, defendants' continued and future illegal activity, if unrestrained by this court, poses the probability of substantial damages. As the Supreme Court recognized in United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 47 S. Ct. 377, 71 L. Ed. 700 (1927), price-fixing may, and quite often does, result in reasonable prices. But the danger is that a reasonable price fixed by agreement today may through economic and business changes become unreasonable tomorrow. Indeed, HN20[] it is because it is so difficult to determine whether a fixed price is unreasonable at one point in time that price fixing is a per se violation of the Sherman Act. As the Supreme Court has explained,

> "The aim and result of every price-fixing agreement, if effective, is the elimination of one form of competition. The power to fix prices, whether reasonably exercised or not, involves power to control the market and to fix arbitrary and unreasonable prices. The reasonable price fixed [43] today may through economic and business changes become the unreasonable price of tomorrow. Once established, it may be maintained unchanged because of the absence of competition secured by the agreement for a price reasonable when fixed. Agreements which create such potential power may well be held to be in themselves unreasonable or unlawful restraints, without the necessity of minute inquiry whether a particular price is reasonable or unreasonable as fixed and without placing on the government in enforcing the Sherman Law the burden of ascertaining from day to day whether it has become unreasonable through the mere variation of economic conditions."

Id. at 397, 47 S. Ct. at 379.

Finally, even in the absence of a threatened injury, "the necessities of the public interest" would still warrant a prospective injunction. That a defendant's illegal price-fixing activity may not in the past have resulted in unreasonable prices and may not even result in the future in unreasonable prices does not mean that the public does not need protection. The HN21[] injury to the public is merely in the individual acquiring "The power to fix [44] prices." Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. at 397, 47 S. Ct. at 379. It does not matter whether that power is "reasonably exercised or not." Id. [15]

[45] [*1473] The court cannot, however acquiesce in the entire wording of the injunction proposed by plaintiffs. First, plaintiffs' proposed injunction is open ended; it has no sunset. This litigation must eventually come to an end. The court believes that a three-year injunction, which would keep the threat of this litigation over defendants for an additional three years, would be sufficient. Second, plaintiffs' proposed injunction is too vague and covers conduct that is not only clearly legal but could conceivably be procompetitive. For example, the proposed injunction prohibits the defendants from "engaging in any conduct or in any other communications which tend to facilitate the fixing of the retail price of gasoline in Dothan, Houston County, Alabama." The court agrees, however, that the injunction should include language, as suggested by plaintiffs, which prohibits defendants from "agreeing, directly or indirectly, to fix the retail price of gasoline in Dothan, Houston County, Alabama." The injunction should also require that defendants take affirmative steps to undo their price-fixing conspiracy. The affirmative steps could include educating defendants' employees about the Sherman Act's [46] prohibition on price-fixing and adopting personnel policies and procedures to help assure that defendants and their employees do not engage in price-fixing in the future.

The court will enter an injunction today prohibiting defendants Cannon Oil Company, Thomas Shirley, Home Oil Company, James Sheffield, Sheffield Oil Company, and Rodney Parrish from agreeing, directly or indirectly, to fix the retail price of gasoline in Dothan, Houston County, Alabama. [16] However, in order to give adequate consideration to the other concerns discussed above, the court will give these defendants an opportunity to propose to the court supplemental language to be included in the injunction.

An appropriate order and injunction will be entered.

DONE, this the 19th day of November, 1993.

Myron H. Thompson

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER AND INJUNCTION

In accordance with the memorandum opinion entered this day, it is the ORDER, JUDGMENT and DECREE [47] of the court:

(1) That the following motions filed by defendants are denied: Metha Jean Cannon and Cannon Oil Company's motion for judgment as a matter of law, filed on June 4, 1992; Thomas Shirley and Home Oil Company's motion for judgment as a matter of law, filed on June 8, 1992; James Sheffield and Sheffield Oil Company's motions for judgment as a matter of law, filed on June 1, 1992; and Rodney Parrish's motion for judgment as a matter of law, filed on June 3, 1992;

---

[15] In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litigation, 756 F.2d 411 (5th Cir. 1985), and United States Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335 (2d Cir. 1988), relied upon by defendants, do not warrant denying injunctive relief in this case. First of all, in Corrugated Container, the jury did not find, as did the jury in the instant case, that plaintiffs had suffered actual antitrust damages. In National Football League, plaintiffs did not appeal from the trial judge's finding that the illegal antitrust activity was not likely to continue or reoccur, and the appellate court otherwise found that injunctive relief was not appropriate under the antitrust laws. But second and more importantly, whether injunctive relief is appropriate should be determined on a case-by-case basis. The specific factual circumstances presented to this court, for the reasons given, warrant such relief against defendants Cannon Oil Company, Thomas Shirley, Home Oil Company, James Sheffield, Sheffield Oil Company, and Rodney Parrish.

[16] Because Vernon Cannon is now deceased, he will not be included in the injunction.

(2) That defendant Sunshine-Jr. Stores' motion for judgment as a matter of law, filed on June 3, 1992 is granted, that the judgment entered on May 22, 1992, is vacated as to defendant Sunshine-Jr. Stores, and that judgment is entered in favor of defendant Sunshine-Jr. Stores and against plaintiffs;

(3) That plaintiffs' motion to amend to reflect treble damages, filed on May 29, 1992, is denied;

(4) That plaintiffs' motion for a permanent injunction filed on May 29, 1992, is granted;

(5) That defendants--Cannon Oil Company, Thomas Shirley, Home Oil Company, James Sheffield, Sheffield Oil Company, and Rodney Parrish--their officers, agents, servants, employees, and those persons in active concert or participation with [48] them who receive actual notice of this injunction by personal service or otherwise, are each ENJOINED and RESTRAINED from agreeing, directly or indirectly, to fix the retail price of gasoline in Dothan, Houston County, Alabama;

(6) That defendants are DIRECTED to file with the court by December 8, 1993, supplemental language to be included in the injunction; and

(7) That the injunction entered this date shall expire on November 19, 1996.

[*1474] It is further ORDERED that the United States Marshal for the Middle District of Alabama or his representative shall personally serve a copy of this order and injunction on defendants Cannon Oil Company, Thomas Shirley, Home Oil Company, James Sheffield, Sheffield Oil Company, and Rodney Parrish.

It is further ORDERED that the clerk of the court shall issue a writ of injunction.

DONE, this the 19th day of November, 1993.

Myron H. Thompson

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

November 23, 1993, Decided

No. 91-8854.

Reporter
7 F.3d 986 *; 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 30124 ; 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,426; 7 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 1005

U.S. ANCHOR MFG., INC., Plaintiff, Counterclaim defendant, Appellee, Cross-Appellant, v. RULE INDUSTRIES, INC., Defendant-Appellant, Cross-Appellee, Tie Down, Inc., a/k/a Tie Down Engineering, Inc., Defendant, Counterclaim plaintiff, Appellant, Cross-Appellee, William Chapman, Counterclaim defendant.

Subsequent History: [1] Certiorari Denied June 20, 1994, Reported at: 1994 U.S. LEXIS 4715.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia. (No. 1:86-cv-2447-JTC). Jack T. Camp, Judge.

Disposition: REVERSED and JUDGMENT RENDERED in part and QUESTIONS CERTIFIED.

Core Terms

Anchor, prices, conspiracy, generic, predatory, market share, monopolization, brand, sales, district court, customers, fluke, restraint of trade, contends, factors, monopoly power, manufacturers, products, damages, parties, season, relevant market, state law claim, probability, costs, probability of success, consumers, submarket, cause of action, market power

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN1[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A predatory pricing claim requires proof that defendants attempted or conspired to drive a competitor out of the relevant market by pricing below some appropriate measure of cost.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Settlement Agreements

HN2[] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

Federal common law, not the state law of contracts, determines the effect of settlement agreements alleged to release federal antitrust claims.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > Sufficiency of Evidence

HN3[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews rulings on motions for judgment as a matter of law by applying de novo the same legal standards used by the district court. Both courts consider all the evidence, but all reasonable inferences must be drawn in the nonmovant's favor. If the jury verdict is supported by substantial evidence--that is, enough evidence that reasonable minds could differ concerning material facts--the motion should be denied. A mere scintilla of evidence in the entire record, however, is insufficient to support a verdict.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN4[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Denial of a motion for a new trial is reviewed for clear abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

HN5[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A district court's evidentiary rulings are not disturbed unless there is a clear showing of abuse of discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

There are three essential elements of a claim alleging attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. First, the plaintiff must show that the defendant possessed the specific intent to achieve monopoly power by predatory or exclusionary conduct. Second, the defendant must in fact commit such anticompetitive conduct. Third, there must have existed a dangerous probability that the defendant might have succeeded in its attempt to achieve monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To have a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market the defendant must be close to achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Monopoly power is the power to raise prices to supra-competitive levels or the power to exclude competition in the relevant market either by restricting entry of new competitors or by driving existing competitors out of the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN9[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The principal judicial device for measuring actual or potential market power remains market share, typically measured in terms of a percentage of total market sales.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN10[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

Defining the market is a necessary step in any analysis of market power and thus an indispensable element in the consideration of any monopolization or attempt case arising under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The definition of the relevant market is essentially a factual question.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Defining a relevant product market is primarily a process of describing those groups of producers which, because of the similarity of their products, have the ability--actual or potential--to take significant amounts of business away from each other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between a product and its substitutes constitutes the outer boundaries of a product market for antitrust purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In the case of product market definition, factors to consider may include whether the products and services have sufficiently distinctive uses and characteristics; whether industry firms routinely monitor each other's actions and calculate and adjust their own prices (at least in part) on the basis of other firms' prices; the extent to which consumers consider various categories of sellers as substitutes; and whether a sizeable price disparity between different types of sellers persists over time for equivalent amounts of comparable goods and services.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The likelihood of demand substitution, if proven, weighs strongly in favor of including the two categories of product within a single market for antitrust analysis. This is so because the very purpose of defining the relevant market under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is to determine whether a monopolist, cartel or oligopoly in that market would be able to reduce marketwide output simply by cutting its own output, and thereby raise marketwide prices above competitive levels.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN16[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Although interbrand competition generally restrains the pricing behavior of individual brand sellers, customer brand loyalty may constitute an impediment to competition and thus an aid in the exercise of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN17[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A single branded product may, in rare cases, constitute its own relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN18[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The understanding that brand loyalty may facilitate monopolization is consistent with the general proposition that the ability to discriminate against a distinct group of customers by charging higher prices for otherwise similar products demonstrates the existence of market power with respect to that group. The existence of such market power may, as a practical matter, remove the higher priced product from the broader market composed of its functional substitutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Regardless of which party bears the ultimate burden of persuasion, the broader economic significance of a submarket must be supported by demonstrable empirical evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN20[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The principal measure of actual monopoly power is market share, and the primary measure of the probability of acquiring monopoly power is the defendant's proximity to acquiring a monopoly share of the market. Thus, a sufficiently large market share may alone create a genuine dispute over whether the defendant possessed a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market despite the existence of other facts tending to make monopolization unlikely, thereby precluding summary judgment for the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN21[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

When assessing market shares for the purpose of ascertaining market power the appropriate measure of a firm's share is the quantity of goods or services actually sold to consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN22[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Although revenues are often relied upon as a surrogate for quantity, actual unit sales must be used whenever a price spread between various products would make the revenue figure an inaccurate estimator of unit sales.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN23[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Market share estimated with reasonable confidence to fall between 60 and 657 suffices to raise a jury question concerning dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN24[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

The elements of a conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, are (1) an agreement to restrain trade, (2) deliberately entered into with the specific intent of achieving a monopoly rather than a legitimate business purpose, (3) which could have had an anticompetitive effect, and (4) the commission of at least one overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN25[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The elements of a conspiracy to restrain trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15, U.S.C.S. § 1, are (1) an agreement to enter a conspiracy (2) designed to achieve an unlawful objective. The plaintiff must also prove (3) actual unlawful effects or facts which radiate a potential for future harm to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN26[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There is no requirement that a conspiracy under either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, have a dangerous probability of successfully achieving its objectives.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN27[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A plaintiff under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, need not prove an intent on the part of the co-conspirators to restrain trade or to build a monopoly. So long as the purported conspiracy has an anticompetitive effect, the plaintiff has made out a case under § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN28[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

A claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and a conspiracy to monopolize claim under § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, require the same threshold showing--the existence of an agreement to restrain trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN29[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Federal antitrust law requires a plaintiff to introduce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently or legitimately.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN30[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

It is not unlawful to slash prices in an attempt to obtain more sales, even if the result is that a competitor happens to be driven out of business.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Business Relationships > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN31[] Commercial Interference, Business Relationships

Georgia law provides a cause of action for tortious interference with the business relationships between a plaintiff and its customers, suppliers or representatives. To be held liable the defendant must have (1) acted improperly and without privilege, (2) purposely and with malice with the intent to injure, (3) induced a third party or parties not to enter into or continue a business relationship with the plaintiff, and (4) caused plaintiff to suffer some financial injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN32[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

The doctrine of pendent jurisdiction gives the district court power to decide claims arising under state law as to which there was no independent basis for federal jurisdiction but which share a common nucleus of operative fact with federal claims. The court also has discretion not to hear such state law claims.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN33[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

While the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction is a flexible one according great leeway to the court, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has found an abuse of discretion in failing to dismiss a case when the federal claims were resolved early in the proceedings and the state law claims posed issues of first impression.

Counsel: For Appellant: TIE DOWN, Harold T. Daniel, Jr., Webb & Daniel, Laurie Webb Danie, N.W., Atlanta, GA., RULE INDUSTRIES, Charles M. Shaffer, jr., J. Kevin Buster, Sean R. Smith, Atlanta, GA.

For Appellee: J. Alexander Porter, Simuel F. Doster, Jr., PORTER & BARRETT, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: Before COX and DUBINA, Circuit Judges, and GODBOLD, Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: DUBINA

Opinion

[*989] DUBINA, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal from a jury verdict imposing civil liability for alleged predatory pricing in violation of the antitrust laws. More specifically, appellants Rule Industries, Inc. ("Rule") and Tie Down Engineering, Inc. ("Tie Down"), defendants below, appeal the district court's denial of their motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on claims by U.S. Anchor Manufacturing, Inc. ("U.S. Anchor") that Rule and Tie Down attempted and conspired to monopolize the United States market for light weight fluke-style anchors for small boats by means of below-cost pricing intended to drive out competition. U.S. Anchor cross-appeals the district court's order of a directed verdict on its state law claims arising from the same allegations. We reverse the denial of defendants' motions concerning the federal claims. With respect to the state law claims, we certify the dispositive issues for authoritative resolution by the Supreme Court of Georgia.

I. FACTS

This [2] case involves several manufacturers and suppliers of light weight anchors for ultimate retail purchase by owners of recreational boats and small commercial fishing craft. As the district court observed in denying cross-motions for summary judgment, > anchors and other marine industry products are generally sold by suppliers to wholesale distributors, who in turn sell the anchors to boat dealers, marinas, and other retailers for ultimate resale to the consumer, the boat owner. The supplier may either manufacture its own anchors, as does U.S. Anchor, or purchase them from another domestic manufacturer, as [Rule] does from Tie Down, or import them from abroad.

U.S. Anchor Mfg. v. Rule Indus., 717 F. Supp. 1565, 1568 (N.D.Ga.1989).

Within the general category of fluke anchors are four distinct product groups recognized in the industry: (1) expensive premium anchors, (2) the "Danforth Standard" brand line of anchors sold only by Rule, (3) so-called "generic" versions of the Danforth Standard, and (4) inexpensive economy anchors used primarily for lake boating.

Rule is a diversified Massachusetts firm that sells an assortment of marine, hardware and automotive [3] products to wholesale distributors. It entered the fluke anchor industry in 1983 when it obtained the rights to sell the Danforth brand line of anchors. Prior to 1985, Danforth anchors were manufactured for Rule exclusively by the Jacquith Company ("Jacquith") in New York. Tie Down is a smaller manufacturing firm in Georgia that began selling generic and economy fluke anchors in the late 1970s under the "Hooker" brand name. In May 1985 Rule obtained the Hooker trademark and the exclusive right to purchase and distribute Tie Down's anchor production in a transaction that U.S. Anchor has characterized as a "merger." After it sold the right to market its own anchors, Tie [*990] Down agreed to manufacture both generic/economy and Danforth brand anchors for Rule. Tie Down's only role in the fluke anchor industry since 1985 has been as one of Rule's suppliers.

U.S. Anchor is a Georgia company founded in 1985 by William Chapman ("Chapman"), the immediate past president of Tie Down whose responsibilities there had recently ended. U.S. Anchor both manufactures and distributes generic and economy fluke anchors under the "Sentinel" brand name. Between August 1985 when it first sent out price lists [4] and December 31, 1990, its market share increased to between 45 and 687, depending on how the relevant product market is defined and measured.

Shortly after U.S. Anchor entered the market in August 1985, on the eve of the 1985-86 marine products season, [1] Rule and U.S. Anchor engaged in a price war. Following publication of U.S. Anchor's August price list, Rule published prices in September that were approximately 11 to 187 higher than U.S. Anchor's. Thus, U.S. Anchor's prices were 10 to 157 lower than Rule's. (R30-27; compare USTX 343 with USTX 345.) [2] In October, after U.S. Anchor had received substantial orders from Rule customers, Rule cut its prices by 207, i.e., to levels 6 to 127 below U.S. Anchor's August prices. (R49-28; RTX 584.) U.S. Anchor then matched Rule's October prices. In a written report to Rule, USTX 683, Tie Down's president Charles MacKarvich ("MacKarvich") estimated U.S. Anchor's costs of production and hypothetical projected sales for a twelve-month period. He theorized that if Rule lowered its prices further and offered extended credit terms to customers, U.S. Anchor would be forced to adopt even more attractive terms in order to compete. From [5] his estimates of cash flow and net revenue derived from these cost and sales projections, he predicted that such terms would subject U.S. Anchor to a negative cash flow and an actual net loss over the 1985-86 marketing year. Rule implemented price reductions consistent with MacKarvich's report in November 1985. In December, U.S. Anchor merely matched Rule's prices and did not attempt to undercut them. (R30-39-40, USTX 351, 353, 543.) U.S. Anchor contends that Rule's first price cut in October was predatory and that all subsequent sales at or below that level were also predatory.

[1] The annual marine products selling season begins each September with a trade show.

[2] U.S. Anchor's trial exhibits will be cited as "USTX _," Rule's trial exhibits as "RTX _" and Tie Down's trial exhibits as "TDTX _."

After the pricing conduct at issue in this case began, distributors' prices for generic brands in the smaller, popular sizes ranged between $ 3 and $ 14 depending on weight, and prices for Danforths were spread 50 to 967 [6] higher. [3] Among the more expensive, larger anchors the spread between Danforth and generic brands was even greater. Excluding premium anchors, [4] annual unit sales of fluke anchors in the United States during the time relevant to this case has varied from 232,000 to 347,000. (USTX 479.)

[7] At trial the parties noted differing possible measures of Rule's share of the relevant product market after the acquisition of Tie Down's anchor line in May 1985, four months before the close of the 1984-85 marine season at the end of August. This dispute encompassed two aspects of market share: whether to define the product market as including the high priced Danforth anchors or only the less expensive generic and economy models, and whether to measure market shares in terms of unit sales or dollar revenues. Including the Danforth line and measuring market shares in revenue, U.S. Anchor asserts that Rule and Tie Down together [*991] controlled 90.5% of the fluke anchor market during the 1984-85 season, the last year before Rule's alleged predation began and the last year before the merger with Tie Down, and that Rule possessed 60.07 of the market during the 1985-86 selling year. (USTX 467.) Using Rule's most favorable calculation, which measures share in units and excludes Danforths from the market, Rule contends that the combined Rule/Tie Down market share in 1984-85 was only 61.57, (RTX 674), and that Rule's aggregate 1985-86 share was 30.17, (id.; RTX 675 at 1). [5] Rule also submitted [8] evidence that its 1985-86 unit market share, including Danforths, was 43.17. (RTX 675 at 1.) Notably, all of these figures encompass an entire season and none of them attempts to pinpoint Rule's share at the exact date when the alleged predation began in October 1985, several months after U.S. Anchor entered the market. The evidence shows, and the parties agree, that the Rule/Tie Down market share consistently decreased after August 1985 when U.S. Anchor first began to solicit orders. The parties also agree that the relevant geographic market was the United States.

[9] II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

In November 1985 Rule filed suit against U.S. Anchor for various violations of state and federal law not involving predatory pricing. The suit was settled on March 19, 1986, when U.S. Anchor and Rule executed an agreement releasing each other from liability for all events occurring prior to the date of the release. Tie Down was a party to neither the litigation nor the ensuing release.

---

[3] (USTX 372 (Rule's 1989-90 price list; 50.4 to 96.27 spread); USTX 368 (Rule's 1988-89 price list; 49.7 to 96.27 spread); USTX 362 (Rule's 1987-88 price list; 73.4 to 91.77 spread); USTX 355 (Rule's 1986-87 price list; 61.0 to 76.17 spread); see also USTX 371 (U.S. Anchor's 1989-90 price list); USTX 367 (U.S. Anchor's 1988-89 price list); USTX 365 (U.S. Anchor's 1987-88 price list).) U.S. Anchor repeatedly opened the marine season with prices higher than Rule's, only to reduce its prices when Rule failed to follow U.S. Anchor's pricing strategy.

[4] The parties have treated this appeal as though premium fluke anchors were irrelevant. They have also ignored other types of anchors designed for holding on different bottom conditions (fluke anchors are most useful on sandy bottoms and least effective in gripping grassy bottoms). We do the same.

[5] Although neither party adduced direct evidence of the combined Rule/Tie Down unit market share in 1984-85 with Danforths included, the jury must have concluded that the firms' combined unit share for that season with the higher-priced anchors included was somewhat greater than the 61.57 unit share they garnered in the non-Danforth market because only Rule marketed the Danforth line. U.S. Anchor's USTX 467 indicates that Rule itself had no 1984-85 revenues in the non-Danforth market. But Rule's RTX 674, which appears to represent the non-Danforth unit market (compare RTX 674, col. 1985-86 with RTX 675 at 1, rows 1985-86), shows Rule with 12.67 of that market in 1984-85. We assume that RTX 674 attributes to Rule the non-Danforth production of Tie Down following the Rule-Tie Down transaction in the final quarter of the 1984-85 season.

On November 13, 1986, U.S. Anchor sued Rule and Tie Down, alleging that Rule had attempted to monopolize the fluke anchor market in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act [6] beginning in October 1985 by engaging in predatory pricing. U.S. Anchor also alleged that Rule and Tie Down had conspired to restrain trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act [7] and conspired to attain a monopoly in violation of section 2, by agreeing to charge predatory prices, also beginning in October 1985. U.S. Anchor also asserted an illegal tying arrangement by Rule, whereby its newly patented and supposedly revolutionary "Deepset" anchors allegedly were sold only to distributors who abstained from buying generic fluke anchors from suppliers other than Rule, in violation of section 1 of [10] the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. [8] U.S. Anchor further alleged that Rule and Tie Down had conspired to restrain trade in violation of Georgia law.

[11] [*992] The district court denied the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment. 717 F. Supp. 1565. A jury trial followed during which the defendants moved for directed verdicts [9] as to all claims. The court granted their motions on the state law claims because it concluded that Georgia law did not permit damages to be recovered for a conspiracy in restraint of trade. The jury found Rule solely liable for attempted monopolization and jointly liable with Tie Down on both conspiracy counts. The verdict exonerated Rule of illegal tying. (R10-321.) The jury set damages for each of the three violations at $ 1,638,028, which the court trebled to $ 4,914,084. Tie Down and Rule both moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on liability and for a new trial on the issue of damages. (R11-348, 349.) The district court denied these motions, awarded U.S. Anchor statutory attorney fees in the stipulated amount of $ 800,000 and entered judgment accordingly. (R14-382.) Rule and Tie Down appealed, and U.S. Anchor cross-appealed with respect to the state law tort claims. U.S. Anchor does not appeal the judgment on the tying claim.

[12] III. CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES

Rule contends that it engaged in no predatory conduct and disputes U.S. Anchor's showing of Rule's and Tie Down's costs of producing the anchors. HN1[] Since a predatory pricing claim requires proof that defendants

---

[6] Section 2 provides: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony…." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

[7] Section 1 provides in relevant part: "Every contract, combination …, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

[8] Section 3 of the Clayton Act provides in relevant part:

> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce … to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods …, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States … on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods … of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition … may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

15 U.S.C. § 14. Among other possible differences between the Sherman Act and Robinson-Patman Act tying provisions is that the Sherman Act prohibition extends to arrangements affecting the sale of services and realty as well as goods. See, e.g., Tic-X-Press, Inc. v. Omni Promotions Co., 815 F.2d 1407 (11th Cir.1987) (tying arrangement conditioning the lease of coliseum theater space upon the employment of a ticket-selling agency affiliated with the lessor); see generally Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1574-79 (11th Cir.1991), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 113 S. Ct. 295, 121 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1992).

[9] A motion for directed verdict is now deemed a motion for judgment as a matter of law, and motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict are now renewed motions for judgment as a matter of law. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 50.

attempted or conspired to drive a competitor out of the relevant market by "pricing below some appropriate measure of cost," the issue of which costs to count may be vital. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585 n. 8, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1355 n. 8, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (noting but not resolving debate over which costs are "relevant"), on remand, In re Japanese Elec. Prods. Antitrust Litig., 807 F.2d 44 (3d Cir.1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1029, 107 S. Ct. 1955, 95 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1987). Rule advances numerous criticisms of U.S. Anchor's expert testimony on this point. Tie Down contends that U.S. Anchor failed to adduce any evidence that Tie Down's prices to Rule were below Tie Down's cost, that Tie Down had any knowledge of (or control over) Rule's other costs, or that it [13] had any control over Rule's prices.

Rule also contends that it had no dangerous probability of successfully achieving a monopoly. The parties first dispute the existence of barriers to entry in the relevant market. Rule and Tie Down contend that without high barriers, a successful monopolist would not have been able to recoup the foregone profits inherent in below-cost pricing by charging supra-competitive prices following the end of the victim's competitive presence. [10] U.S. Anchor contends that there was sufficient evidence of entry barriers to permit the jury to find them and that in any case actual recoupment is not required as a matter of law before the jury may find an attempt or conspiracy to monopolize. Second, Rule points to U.S. Anchor's own success and Rule's declining fortunes in the anchor market as evidence that it could not have monopolized.

[14] Rule and Tie Down also challenge the sufficiency of the evidence of unlawful conspiracy. The parties dispute the inference to be drawn from plaintiff's exhibit 683, the MacKarvich market report. U.S. Anchor contends that MacKarvich was proposing to drive the new entrant from the marketplace. Defendants offered expert testimony, corroborated by MacKarvich himself, that studies [*993] of competitors' costs and revenues are common in competitive industries and that a projected loss after the first year of operation is ordinarily not enough to drive any new entrant from the market, since start-up companies must generally expect early losses. In its cross-appeal U.S. Anchor challenges the district court's exclusion of certain evidence that allegedly supports the existence of a conspiracy.

Rule and Tie Down challenge the sufficiency of U.S. Anchor's proof concerning damages. They argue that at least some of their price cuts were instituted to meet competition from foreign fluke anchor manufacturers and any loss of sales by U.S. Anchor resulting from such reductions is not antitrust injury. Moreover, they contend, the base price from which U.S. Anchor's revenue losses were calculated should have [15] reflected competitive levels as shown by Rule's and U.S. Anchor's early, allegedly non-predatory reductions rather than prices prevailing before U.S. Anchor's entry into the market.

Rule and U.S. Anchor dispute the scope and effect of their settlement agreement in the prior litigation. Rule contends that liability for all predatory sales before the date of the release was discharged. Moreover, Rule maintains that the alleged predatory scheme was ongoing at the time the contract was executed and therefore all post-release liability was discharged as well. U.S. Anchor contends that a general release is ineffective to discharge undiscovered antitrust liability as a matter of law and, moreover, that post-release damages were not waived. We do not reach this dispute as it applies to the federal antitrust claims. [11] As applied to the state law claims, we certify the question, along with the substantive issues of Georgia law, for resolution by the Supreme Court of Georgia.

[16] In its cross-appeal U.S. Anchor also argues that the district court should not have granted a directed verdict on its state law claims because Georgia law allows private damage actions for conspiracies in restraint of trade. Rule and Tie Down disagree with U.S. Anchor's interpretation of Georgia law.

IV. STANDARD OF REVIEW

---

[10] A predatory pricing scheme could be successful by driving the victim out of business or by coercing him to reduce output to levels consistent with profit-maximization by a firm or syndicate possessing monopoly power. Either result would eliminate the victim's competitive presence.

[11] HN2[] Federal common law, not the state law of contracts, determines the effect of settlement agreements alleged to release federal antitrust claims. Redel's Inc. v. General Elec. Co., 498 F.2d 95, 98 & n. 2 (5th Cir.1974).

HN3[] We review rulings on motions for judgment as a matter of law by applying de novo the same legal standards used by the district court. Miles v. Tennessee River Pulp & Paper Co., 862 F.2d 1525, 1528 (11th Cir.1989). Both courts consider all the evidence, but all reasonable inferences must be drawn in the nonmovant's favor. If the jury verdict is supported by substantial evidence--that is, enough evidence that reasonable minds could differ concerning material facts--the motion should be denied. A mere scintilla of evidence in the entire record, however, is insufficient to support a verdict. See Hessen ex rel. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Jaguar Cars, Inc., 915 F.2d 641, 644 (11th Cir.1990). HN4[] Denial of a motion for a new trial is reviewed for clear abuse of discretion. Id. at 644-45. [17] HN5[] A district court's evidentiary rulings are not disturbed unless there is a clear showing of abuse of discretion. Id. at 645.

V. ATTEMPTED MONOPOLIZATION

HN6[] There are three essential elements of a claim alleging attempted monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act. First, the plaintiff must show that the defendant possessed the specific intent to achieve monopoly power by predatory or exclusionary conduct. Second, the defendant must in fact commit such anticompetitive conduct. Third, there must have existed a dangerous probability that the defendant might have succeeded in its attempt to achieve monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, __ U.S. __, __, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993); see McGahee v. Northern Propane Gas Co., 858 F.2d 1487, 1493 (11th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1084, 109 S. Ct. 2110, 104 L. Ed. 2d 670 (1989); 3 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P 820 at 312 (1978) [hereinafter Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law]. We address these elements [18] in reverse order.

[*994] A. Dangerous Probability of Success

HN7[] To have a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market the defendant must be close to achieving monopoly power. [12] HN8[] Monopoly power is "the power to raise prices to supra-competitive levels or … the power to exclude competition in the relevant market either by restricting entry of new competitors or by driving existing competitors out of the market." American Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1581 (11th Cir.1985). Most attempts to measure monopoly power involve quantifying the degree of concentration in a relevant market and/or the extent of a particular firm's ability to control productive capacity in that market. In analyzing attempted monopolization's dangerous probability of success element, the estimate of market power is necessarily speculative to some extent because it requires an evaluation of future behavior by market participants, viewed at the time the alleged attempt began. We are not without guideposts, however.

[19]

> Relevant determinants of the market power of a prospective predator in this regard include its absolute and relative market shares, and those of competing firms; the strength and capacity of current competitors; the potential for entry; the historic intensity of competition; and the impact of the legal or natural environment.

International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 104 F.T.C. 208, 412 (1984) (citation and footnotes omitted). HN9[] Despite the seemingly broad array of factors employed by the Federal Trade Commission, the principal judicial device for measuring actual or potential market power remains market share, typically measured in terms of a percentage of total market sales. Thus, at the outset the appropriate market must be defined or identified. [13]

HN10[] Defining the market is a necessary step in any analysis of market power and thus an [20] indispensable element in the consideration of any monopolization or attempt case arising under section 2. Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 350, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965); American Key, 762 F.2d at 1579. Although the issue is fully developed in the fact section of Rule's brief, the argument section does not address the precise question of market definition. U.S. Anchor, in the fact section of its

---

[12] The terms "monopoly power" and "market power" are synonymous and are used interchangeably in this opinion.

[13] This inquiry may be labelled more appropriately as "market estimation." See Herbert Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law 59 (1985).

brief, contends that the question of market definition is not appropriately before us because Rule does not argue the point. (U.S. Anchor's Br. at 3 n. 1.) We must consider the question nevertheless before passing on the legal significance of evidence concerning Rule's potential market power. As the issue of Rule's dangerous probability of success has been preserved through argument, the subsidiary question of market definition is also preserved because it is set forth fully in the fact section of Rule's brief. [14] [21] The issue was fully argued before the district court. [15]

HN11[] The definition of the relevant market is essentially a factual question, so the precise issue we first must address is whether U.S. Anchor introduced sufficient evidence to raise a jury question on the inclusion of Danforths. *See, e.g., Yoder Bros. v. California-Florida [995] Plant Corp., 537 F.2d 1347, 1366 (5th Cir.1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1094, 97 S. Ct. 1108, 51 L. Ed. 2d 540 (1977). [16]

1. Defining the Market

"Defining HN12[] a relevant product [22] market is primarily "a process of describing those groups of producers which, because of the similarity of their products, have the ability--actual or potential--to take significant amounts of business away from each other.' " General Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 805 (8th Cir.1987) (quoting SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 838, 99 S. Ct. 123, 58 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1978)). HN13[] The reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand [17] between a product and its substitutes constitutes the outer boundaries of a product market for antitrust purposes. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1523, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962).

> Within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, [23] in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors…. The cross-elasticity of production facilities may also be an important factor in defining a product market….

Id. at 325 & n. 42, 82 S. Ct. at 1523-24 & n. 42 (citations and footnotes omitted). As the Supreme Court's language itself suggests, defining a "submarket" is the equivalent of defining a relevant product market for antitrust purposes. International Telephone & Telegraph adequately summarizes our view of the relevant proof:

> Reliable measures of supply and demand elasticities provide the most accurate estimates of relevant markets. However, it is ordinarily quite difficult to measure cross-elasticities of supply and demand accurately. Therefore,

[14] See Fed.R.App.P. 28(a)(4) (brief shall include "a statement of the facts relevant to the issues presented for review, with appropriate references to the record"); cf. Harris v. Plastics Mfg. Co., 617 F.2d 438, 440 n. 1 (5th Cir.1980) (per curiam) (brief that merely stated an issue, without providing any argument or facts, deemed to waive it). For instance, the plaintiff's brief in American Key raised the question of market definition but failed to raise, inter alia, the existence of monopoly power. Although the omission technically "abandoned" the issue of market power, the court addressed it anyway. 762 F.2d at 1579-81. We believe Rule's brief puts this case closer to American Key than cases in which a brief merely stated an issue without fact and argument, or actually ignored an entire claim or defense. Cf. Joe Regueira, Inc. v. American Distilling Co., 642 F.2d 826, 833 n. 16 (5th Cir. Unit B April 1981); In re Municipal Bond Reporting Antitrust Litig., 672 F.2d 436, 439 n. 6 (5th Cir.1982).

[15] (See R10-301-4, Memo at 28-30 (Rule's Motion for Directed Verdict and Memorandum in Support); R9-299 Br. at 3-6 (Tie Down's Motion for Directed Verdict and Brief in Support).)

[16] Decisions of the former Fifth Circuit rendered before October 1, 1981, are binding upon panels of this court. Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 (11th Cir.1981) (en banc).

[17] Also known as "demand substitution."

> it is usually necessary to consider other factors that [24] can serve as useful surrogates for cross-elasticity data.… HN14[] In the case of product market definition, these factors may include > whether the products and services have sufficiently distinctive uses and characteristics; whether industry firms routinely monitor each other's actions and calculate and adjust their own prices (at least in part) on the basis of other firms' prices; the extent to which consumers consider various categories of sellers … as substitutes; and whether a sizeable price disparity between different types of … sellers … persists over time for equivalent amounts of comparable goods and services.
>

104 F.T.C. at 409 (quoting Grand Union Co., 102 F.T.C. 812, 1041 (1983)) (footnotes omitted).

We note that Danforth brand anchors are functionally interchangeable with their equivalent counterparts among the generic brands. Indeed, among smaller sized anchors the Hooker and Danforth anchors have always been virtually identical. (R30-131-33; R33-129-31.) This interchangeability suggests a likelihood that consumers of generic brands would willingly switch to Danforths in the event of significant price [25] increases among generics. Similarly, Danforth customers might switch to generic brands if Rule implemented a significant increase in the price of Danforths. HN15[] The likelihood of demand substitution, if proven, weighs strongly in favor of including the two categories of product within a single market for antitrust analysis. This is so because the very purpose of defining the relevant market under section 2 is to determine whether a monopolist, cartel or oligopoly in that market would be able to reduce marketwide output simply by cutting its own output, and thereby [*996] raise marketwide prices above competitive levels. United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (The Cellophane Case), 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1007, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); Satellite Television & Associated Resources, Inc. v. Continental Cablevision, Inc., 714 F.2d 351, 356 (4th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1027, 104 S. Ct. 1285, 79 L. Ed. 2d 688 (1984). [18]

[26] We hold, however, that the relevant market in this case constituted light weight generic and economy fluke anchors. Four of the Brown Shoe factors weigh strongly in favor of excluding Danforths from the relevant market: distinctly higher prices, a distinct group of customers, strongly inelastic demand and limited substitution of supply. Moreover, the higher prices charged for Danforths are evidence that a distinct group of customers was unwilling to switch away from the prestigious branded product in response to price increases above competitive levels. The fact that this group remained loyal to Danforths despite prices 50 to 967 and more above prices for functionally interchangeable alternative products shows inelastic demand and limited demand interdependence. More importantly, U.S. Anchor showed no reasonable possibility that a significant number of consumers would have switched to Danforths, many of which were offered at nearly double the price of their generic substitutes, in response to more modest increases in generic prices. And as more fully discussed below, there is no evidence that Rule had (or would have) varied its output of Danforths in response to price changes [27] in the broader market. We hold, therefore, that the record provides no support for finding significant cross-elasticity of demand or supply between Danforths and generic anchors.

First, U.S. Anchor's evidence was insufficient for a reasonable juror to conclude that there was a significant cross-elasticity of demand. U.S. Anchor's evidence demonstrated that an increase in the spread between prices for Danforths and other anchors had coincided with lower sales of Danforths. During the period from September 1985 until August 1990, sales of Danforths fell by 61.57 while the spread between the prices of Danforths and other anchors increased by 9.17. (USTX 638; R40-106.) (According to the exhibit, Danforth prices rose while Sentinel and Hooker prices fell). Although we recognize that correlation is often relied upon to infer causation, see, e.g., Cellophane, 351 U.S. at 400, 76 S. Ct. at 1010, we do not believe that this aggregation of sales data over five years provided a sufficiently close correlation between changes in demand and price to justify the inference that consumers were willing and able to switch away from Danforths [28] because of increasing price differences. The exhibit wholly fails to take account of factors other than price (or quality) which may have affected demand for [18] See also, e.g., Richard A. Posner, Antitrust Law*: An Economic Perspective* 125-26 (1976); Hovenkamp, supra at 59.

---

Danforths. If changes in relative prices had been more closely correlated in time with shifting purchases then it might have been reasonable to infer that the demand shifts were caused by the price differences. As the evidence stands, however, the datum aggregating demand behavior from 1985 to 1990 fails to provide any basis from which the jury could have inferred that the demand shifts were caused by prices instead of other factors. Those non-price, non-quality factors might well have included consumers' increased awareness of the similarities between Danforths and other brands (perhaps caused by U.S. Anchor's successful promotion of its own products), changing attitudes concerning thrift and the value of money, the decline in demand for fluke anchors generally after the 1987-88 season, (see USTX 479), or competition from Rule's own more expensive premium Deepset line. Over time the shape of a demand curve changes independently of variations in the pricing and quality of particular substitute products. Aggregate (or [29] average) evidence of demand over too long a period of time provides no support for inferring that changes apparently correlated with substitute price movements represent shifts in the curve caused by those variations in prices. Given the changes in the behavior of competitors that occurred over the five years in [*997] question, namely the development of fierce price competition between Rule and U.S. Anchor in the generic and economy market and the introduction of Deepsets, we conclude that the average Danforth sales statistic was insufficient evidence from which the jury could have inferred demand cross-elasticity in October 1985 or thereafter. Cf. Yoder Bros., 537 F.2d at 1367-68. This conclusion is buttressed by the more precise sales data provided by USTX 508. Comparing the 1985-86 and 1986-87 seasons, which are the two closest in time to the date when the alleged predation began in October 1985 for which data were offered, the exhibit shows that unit sales of Danforths fell 5.4% [19] despite a price reduction of 0.57 and a simultaneous increase in the prices of generic anchors of 0.87. Id. at 2. Danforths suffered this decline while the overall demand [30] for fluke anchors jumped 197, from 273,000 to 325,000 in annual unit sales. (USTX 479.) [20]

Just as an increase in Danforth prices might have been expected to drive customers away from Rule and into the arms of generic manufacturers, an increase in prices for generic brands would likely cause some otherwise price-sensitive customers to prefer the more expensive Danforths. Nonetheless, the present record provides no basis other than guesswork for concluding that a shift away from generics [31] would have been significant in magnitude; [21] the large spread in prices between generic anchors and Danforths tends to suggest that the shift would not have been great. Thus, we conclude that the record provides no support for finding significant cross-elasticity of demand between Danforths and generics.

Second, the evidence was insufficient for a reasonable juror to find a significant cross-elasticity of supply. The jury could not reasonably have found that the manufacturing capacity used to make Danforths likely would have been switched to making generic anchors in response to moderate price increases by a sole seller of the lower priced products. To be sure, the productive processes employed in manufacturing Danforths were virtually identical to [32] those used for generics. (R33-145-50.) Yet it defies logic to suggest that a rational supplier [22] would switch from selling branded products at high prices to selling equally costly equivalent products at lower prices, even assuming that the lower prices would yield significant supranormal profits. Put another way, it would be unreasonable to expect Rule to lower the price of Danforths and abandon its ability to discriminate against brand-conscious boaters solely to earn smaller profits. There was insufficient evidence of likely supply substitution from [19] U.S. Anchor's unit sales exhibit, USTX 479, shows an even more marked decrease in Danforth sales for the two seasons: a 7.87 drop from 56,431 in 1985-86 to 52,035 in 1986-87. This is only one example of inconsistency in the evidence offered by U.S. Anchor, but we assume that the jury credited the version least favorable to Rule.

---

[20] Faced with this evidence, we can only note that the absence of proof concerning changes in prices and sales before the Rule-Tie Down transaction is an especially prominent flaw in U.S. Anchor's case.

[21] By "significant in magnitude" we refer to a shift that is large enough to render unprofitable a monopolistic price increase in the broader market. Again, we defer the task of establishing criteria for testing the quantitative significance of changes in this variable.

[22] There is no evidence that Rule was irrational in its pricing strategies, although it may well have been misinformed or overly optimistic concerning U.S. Anchor's staying power in the market.

which to conclude that any portion of Danforth output would have served to constrain price increases among the generic anchors. [23]

[33] Moreover, the record demonstrates that the Danforth line, although functionally equivalent to their counterparts, may have constituted its own market based on consumer brand loyalty. The fluke anchor industry presented the unusual circumstance of severe price discrimination against a distinct group of consumers based solely on brand preference. U.S. Anchor's expert, Dr. Willard F. [*998] Mueller, testified on direct examination that "people have gotten an attachment to the Danforth Standard in this case, it had kind of a mystique about it at one time, … what happens in one year, simply a price difference, doesn't result in an immediate kind of shift." (R40-106.) HN16[] Although interbrand competition generally restrains the pricing behavior of individual brand sellers, Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 52 n. 19, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 2558 n. 19, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977), on remand, 461 F. Supp. 1046 (N.D.Cal.1978), aff'd, 694 F.2d 1132 (9th Cir.1982), it is settled that customer brand loyalty may constitute an impediment to competition and thus an aid in the [34] exercise of market power. See, e.g., United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546, 559-61, 86 S. Ct. 1665, 1672, 16 L. Ed. 2d 765 (1966) (Harlan, J., concurring), on remand, 296 F. Supp. 994 (E.D.Wis.1969). [24] HN17[] A single branded product may, in rare cases, constitute its own relevant market. Los Angeles Mem. Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1393 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 990, 105 S. Ct. 397, 83 L. Ed. 2d 331 (1984).

[35] The understanding that brand loyalty may facilitate monopolization is consistent with the general proposition that the ability to discriminate against a distinct group of customers by charging higher prices for otherwise similar products demonstrates the existence of market power with respect to that group. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 574, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 1706, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). [25] The existence of such market power may, as a practical matter, remove the higher priced product from the broader market composed of its functional substitutes. See C.E. Services, Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241, 1246 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1037, 106 S. Ct. 604, 88 L. Ed. 2d 583 (1985) (holding that "a ubiquitous price differential of some 20-25%" between branded and unbranded services, combined with other Brown Shoe factors, could justify finding a separate market for the unbranded services and thus precluded summary judgment on the issue of market definition).

[36] We do not suggest that the existence or hypothetical possibility of monopoly power over one product automatically excludes it from a broader market. "Submarkets are not a basis for the disregard of a broader line of commerce that has economic significance." United States v. Phillipsburg Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 399 U.S. 350, 360, 90 S. Ct. 2035, 2041, 26 L. Ed. 2d 658 (1970). HN19[] We do hold, however, that regardless of which party in the case bears the ultimate burden of persuasion, the broader economic significance of a submarket must be supported by demonstrable empirical evidence. Although perhaps difficult to come by, evidence that the dominant firm within a submarket costs of production were insensitive to changes in the quantity of goods sold, suggesting that its only rational response would be to increase output to satisfy the higher demand in the event of price increases above competitive levels in the broader market, might show that submarket production in fact disciplined price levels in the broader market. Especially if the submarket represents a premium-priced segment of the broader market, the relevance of proof regarding [37] elasticity of supply would depend on the validity of the assumption that

---

[23] Of course, Rule's exclusive control over the Danforth trademark also eliminated the possibility of supply substitution by other firms making Danforths. This observation by itself, however, would not be sufficient to show that Danforths and generics represented distinct markets.

[24] See also Cellophane, 351 U.S. at 392-93, 76 S. Ct. at 1005-06; Ware v. Trailer Mart, Inc., 623 F.2d 1150, 1154 (6th Cir.1980); cf. Justice Department Guidelines, supra § 3.3 n. 33 (noting that ease or difficulty of long-term committed entry into a market may depend upon "the relative appeal, acceptability and reputation of incumbents' and entrants' products").

HN18[] -

[25] See also, e.g., 2 Areeda & Turner, Antitrust Law, supra P 514; Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 518.1d (Supp.1991) [hereinafter Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law]; Gregory J. Werden, Market Delineation and the Justice Department's Merger Guidelines, 1983 Duke L.J. 514, 522, 529-30.

significant numbers of consumers would switch in response to significant price increases in the broader market, an assumption that may or may not be supported by evidence or common experience. In the present case U.S. Anchor can rely upon neither evidence nor inference. Simpler evidence of supply and demand substitution, like proof that producers in the submarket had actually increased or decreased their sales in response to corresponding price [*999] changes in the broader market, would also suffice. As we have pointed out, however, U.S. Anchor failed to meet its burden of proving interdependent market behavior by this method as well.

Considering all the evidence in light of the factors identified by Cellophane and Brown Shoe and explained in subsequent decisions, we conclude as a matter of law that the relevant product market was light weight generic and economy fluke anchors.

2. Measuring Power in the Market

HN20[] The principal measure of actual monopoly power is market share, and the primary measure of the probability of acquiring monopoly power is the defendant's proximity to acquiring a monopoly share [38] of the market. Thus, a sufficiently large market share may alone create a genuine dispute over whether the defendant possessed a dangerous probability of successfully monopolizing a market despite the existence of other facts tending to make monopolization unlikely, thereby precluding summary judgment for the defendant. McGahee v. Northern Propane Gas Co., 858 F.2d at 1506. HN21[] When assessing market shares for the purpose of ascertaining market power the appropriate measure of a firm's share is the quantity of goods or services actually sold to consumers. HN22[] Although revenues are often relied upon as a surrogate for quantity, actual unit sales must be used whenever a price spread between various products would make the revenue figure an inaccurate estimator of unit sales. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 341 n. 69, 82 S. Ct. at 1533 n. 69.

In McGahee we noted in dicta that several factors may be relevant to whether a particular market share evidences a dangerous probability of success. 858 F.2d at 1505 (citing McGahee v. Northern Propane Gas Co., 658 F. Supp. 189, 196-97 (N.D.Ga.1987), [39] rev'd, 858 F.2d 1487 (11th Cir.1988)). In finding no dangerous probability of success the district court had relied upon the ease of entry by new firms and expansion from adjacent geographic markets, the number and size of alleged victims of the predation and the defendant's declining market share during the alleged attempt to monopolize. 658 F. Supp. at 196-97. Nevertheless, we held:

> Without examining any factors to determine what market share would be necessary for Northern Propane's alleged predatory pricing to present a dangerous probability of success, we can say that a sixty or sixty-five percent market share is a sufficiently large platform from which such a scheme could be launched to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether there was a dangerous probability that Northern Propane would succeed in achieving a monopoly.

McGahee, 858 F.2d at 1506. Finding it "undisputed" that the defendant possessed such a share, we reversed the district court's order of summary judgment for the defendant and remanded for further proceedings. HN23[] Our holding in McGahee that market share [40] estimated with reasonable confidence to fall between 60 and 657 suffices to raise a jury question concerning dangerous probability of success is binding circuit precedent. Sherry Mfg. Co. v. Towel King, Inc., 822 F.2d 1031, 1034 n. 3 (11th Cir.1987). We do note, however, the tension between McGahee 's bright-line approach and Cliff Food Stores, Inc. v. Kroger, Inc., 417 F.2d 203 (5th Cir.1969), in which the court noted that "one must be particularly wary of the numbers game of market percentage when considering an "attempt to monopolize' suit" under the dangerous probability standard. 417 F.2d at 207 n. 2; cf. United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 528, 68 S. Ct. 1107, 1124, 92 L. Ed. 1533 (1948) ("the relative effect of percentage command of a market varies with the setting in which that factor is placed") (actual monopolization case). We believe the cases may be reconciled by requiring a careful definition of the relevant market (as mandated by Walker Process and American Key) [26] and an assessment of each firm's [41] [*1000] ability to vary its

---

[26] Notably, in McGahee itself the district court had observed that despite the defendant's concession for summary judgment purposes concerning the relevant product market, "there is, at the very least, an issue of fact as to whether propane constitutes a distinct product market." 658 F. Supp. at 192 n. 3 (citing United States v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296, 303-304 (8th Cir.1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1122, 97 S. Ct. 1158, 51 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1977)).

output in calculating the size of the market and attributing individual market shares. See, e.g., United States v. General Dynamics Corp., 415 U.S. 486, 499-504, 508-10, 94 S. Ct. 1186, 1194-97, 1199-1200, 39 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1974) (measuring power in market for coal in terms of possession or likely near-term acquisition of uncommitted reserves instead of overall sales, because most sales represented fulfillment of existing long-term requirements contracts).

[42] In Cliff Food Stores the former Fifth Circuit stated that something more than 507 market share would be required to show actual monopoly, at least in the absence of collusive price leadership or tacit coordination in an industry. 417 F.2d at 207 n. 2. The Second Circuit in Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Service of America, Inc., 651 F.2d 122 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 968, 102 S. Ct. 512, 70 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1981), similarly suggested that the absence of actual monopoly power could be found as a matter of law when the defendant supplies only 507 of the market, "or even somewhat above that figure, [when] the record contains no significant evidence concerning the market structure to show that the defendant's share of that market gives it monopoly power." 651 F.2d at 129. Despite these suggestions, we have discovered no cases in which a court found the existence of actual monopoly established by a bare majority share of the market. Nevertheless, a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power may be established [43] by a 507 share. For this reason, it is usually necessary to evaluate the prospects for monopolization as they existed when the alleged attempt began. As shown by the undisputed facts discussed infra, Rule never possessed a dangerous probability of success during the time for which U.S. Anchor seeks damages.

U.S. Anchor points to the combined market shares of Rule and Tie Down at the end of the 1984-85 season, immediately before the transaction that eliminated Tie Down as a supplier and transferred its production to Rule. Accepting arguendo the implicit contention that Tie Down's pre-transaction market share should be attributed to Rule, we conclude from the undisputed evidence that Rule's market share on August 31, 1985, the eve of the 1985-86 season, was 61.57, (RTX 674), and its aggregate (average) share over the entire season was 30.17, (id.; RTX 675 at 1).

Rule has argued that we should not attribute all of Tie Down's pre-transaction market share to it. After the transaction Tie Down had no need for its anchor sales representatives, many of whom found engagements with U.S. Anchor and employed their connections and reputation on behalf of the newcomer's selling efforts. [44] Moreover, U.S. Anchor's Chapman was well known to customers from his days with Tie Down. Thus, according to Rule, U.S. Anchor stepped into Tie Down's shoes and inherited at least some of Tie Down's pre-transaction market share, presumably that portion which U.S. Anchor had the productive capacity to satisfy. This argument is persuasive, although it may be subject to rebuttal on at least two grounds. Cf. American Academic Suppliers, Inc. v. Beckley-Cardy, Inc., 922 F.2d 1317, 1321-22 (7th Cir.1991). First, the depth of Rule's product line and the expertise of its own sales force conferred competitive advantages which might have induced some of Tie Down's former customers to stay with the Hooker line. Second, the anchor industry was highly concentrated and customers had few alternative sources of supply, a factor that is especially important in view of Rule's effort to link purchase of the Deepset anchors to exclusive dealing arrangements with distributors. We need not reach the merits of Rule's contention, however, because even if we consider Rule to have had 61.57 of the market on August 31, 1985, there was insufficient evidence from which the jury could [45] have found a dangerous probability of monopolization in October.

As we have outlined above, Rule's average market share for the 1985-86 season was 30.17, a fact which strongly indicates that Rule's share declined sharply from 61.57 after U.S. Anchor's entry into the market in August. For the month of October, U.S. Anchor's sales of generic and economy anchors exceeded Rule's by 5.77. (RTX 675 at 15). Prior to October U.S. Anchor had no sales at all, but the firm was accepting orders [*1001] during this time and apparently possessed the capacity to fill them. Thus, Rule was never able to maintain a majority position in the market during the 1985-86 season. Cf. General Dynamics, 415 U.S. at 501-02, 94 S. Ct. at 1196. Accordingly, because Rule possessed less than 507 of the market at the time the alleged predation began and throughout the time when it was alleged to have continued, there was no dangerous probability of success in October 1985 as a matter of law.

3. Recoupment

Rule argues that the district court should have granted its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict based on its contention that there can [46] be no dangerous probability of successful monopolization by predatory pricing unless it is shown that the defendant would have recouped the foregone revenues associated with its price-cutting strategy. [27] Our disposition of this case, however, makes it unnecessary to address Rule's recoupment argument.

B. Anticompetitive Conduct, Specific Intent and Damages

Our conclusion that U.S. Anchor failed to show a dangerous probability of success makes it unnecessary for purposes of resolving its attempt claim to evaluate the evidence of Rule's and Tie Down's costs, as would be required to classify its pricing conduct as anticompetitive. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 585 n. 8, 106 S. Ct. at 1355 n. 8; International Air Industries, Inc. v. American Excelsior Co., 517 F.2d 714, 723-25 (5th Cir.1975). [47] The same is true with respect to the evidence of specific intent to achieve monopoly power by unlawful conduct, although we note that such intent may sometimes be inferred from predatory conduct itself. Spectrum Sports, __ U.S. at __, 113 S. Ct. at 892; International Tel. & Tel., 104 F.T.C. at 401-02; see also McGahee, 858 F.2d at 1503-04. Nor must we decide whether to parse this evidence for the precise level during each season at which Rule's prices unlawfully dropped below its costs in order to assess U.S. Anchor's proof of damages, as requested by Rule. See MCI Communications Corporation v. American Telephone and Telegraph Company, 708 F.2d 1081, 1162, 1165 (7th Cir.1983).

VI. CONSPIRACY

U.S. Anchor's conspiracy claims are distinct from its attempted monopolization claim. HN24[] The elements of a conspiracy to monopolize under Section 2 are (1) an agreement to restrain trade, (2) deliberately entered into with the specific intent of achieving a monopoly rather than a legitimate business purpose, (3) which could have had an anticompetitive [48] effect, and (4) the commission of at least one overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1576 (11th Cir.1991). HN25[] The elements of a conspiracy to restrain trade under Section 1 are (1) an agreement to enter a conspiracy (2) designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Ctr., 891 F.2d 810, 820 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 924, 110 S. Ct. 1960, 109 L. Ed. 2d 322 (1990), appeal after remand, 980 F.2d 1381 (11th Cir.1993). The plaintiff must also prove (3) "actual unlawful effects [or] facts which radiate a potential for future harm" to competition. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 622, 73 S. Ct. 872, 888, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953).

HN26[] There is no requirement, however, that a conspiracy under either provision have a dangerous probability of successfully achieving its objectives. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-68, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2740, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). [49] HN27[] Moreover, "[a] section 1 plaintiff … need not prove an intent on the part of the co-conspirators to restrain trade or to build a monopoly. So long as the purported conspiracy has an anticompetitive effect, the plaintiff has made out a case under section 1." Bolt, 891 F.2d at 819-20 (citations omitted). HN28[] We have said, however, that "a section 1 claim and a section 2 conspiracy to monopolize [*1002] claim require the same threshold showing--the existence of an agreement to restrain trade." Seagood, 924 F.2d at 1576.

U.S. Anchor points to evidence of the unlawful intent necessary to create such an agreement. We have reviewed this evidence and find it sufficient to show an intent to achieve an unlawful objective on Rule's part, namely the use of predatory means to monopolize the fluke anchor market. Nevertheless, there is insufficient evidence linking Tie Down to Rule's efforts to support a finding of conspiracy between them. HN29[] Federal antitrust law requires a plaintiff to introduce evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently or legitimately. Bolt, 891 F.2d at 819; [50] see also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Co., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1470, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). U.S. Anchor did not meet this heightened standard of proof. Cf. Boczar v. Manatee Hosps. & Health Sys., Inc., 993 F.2d 1514, 1518-19 (11th Cir.1993) (finding sufficient evidence when defendant's supposed legitimate reasons for acting were shown to be fabricated and contrived). [28] The MacKarvich market report, USTX 683, for instance, does not show that Tie Down desired to employ predatory means to drive U.S. Anchor from the market. Rather, it merely shows the prices at which it would be possible to inflict losses on the newcomer. It says nothing about Rule's costs, and U.S. Anchor does not dispute that Tie Down had no knowledge of Rule's costs other than the price paid for anchors. Tie Down's experts and MacKarvich himself testified that such studies are common in competitive industries and consistent with legitimate competition based on price. MacKarvich's recommendation to set prices low enough to inflict losses on U.S. Anchor merely shows a desire to win on the basis of efficiently [51] producing a product and selling it at a lower price than less efficient rivals. HN30[] It is not unlawful to slash prices in an attempt to obtain more sales, even if the result is that a competitor happens to be driven out of business. Ball Mem. Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338-39 (7th Cir.1986). Moreover, to suffer a loss in the first year of operation is common in competitive industries, and for MacKarvich to anticipate that U.S. Anchor would be temporarily unprofitable does not necessarily show a desire or expectation that the firm would be driven from the marketplace. In short, we have examined the record closely and find there is insufficient evidence linking Tie Down with Rule's scheme to constitute a conspiracy under the substantive proof requirements of federal antitrust law.

[27] If we accepted Rule's argument we could simply remand for a new trial with directions to instruct the jury concerning this "element" of the plaintiff's case, or we could evaluate the record to see whether the jury could have found the element proven.

[52] Without Tie Down, there was no one with whom Rule could have conspired. Hence, its unilateral conduct was not actionable as a conspiracy under federal antitrust law. The district court erred in denying judgment as a matter of law for Rule and Tie Down on the Sherman Act conspiracy claims.

VII. CLAIMS UNDER GEORGIA LAW

U.S. Anchor's complaint alleged violations of article III, § VI, P 5 of the Georgia constitution and O.C.G.A. § 13-8-2(a)(2), which invalidate certain contracts in restraint of trade. (R1-1, PP 60-62.) U.S. Anchor concedes that these provisions merely render such agreements unenforceable and provide no cause of action for damages to those who are parties thereto, see E.T. Barwick Indus. v. Walter E. Heller & Co., 692 F. Supp. 1331, 1349 (N.D.Ga.1987), but argues that Georgia recognizes a common law tort action in favor of third parties who are injured by a conspiracy in restraint of trade. We agree with U.S. Anchor that its complaint stated a valid claim for damages as a result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade. See Blackmon v. Gulf Life Ins. Co., 179 Ga. 343, 175 S.E. 798, 802-03 (1934) [53] (holding that allegations of predatory [*1003] pricing conspiracy with intent to monopolize stated a cause of action); Atlanta Association of Fire Ins. Agents v. McDonald, 181 Ga. 105, 181 S.E. 822, 828 (1935) (awarding nominal damages and injunction for group boycott); see also Harrison Co. v. Code Revision Comm'n, 244 Ga. 325, 260 S.E.2d 30, 34 (1979). The district court erred in failing to perceive "the distinction between a contract or agreement merely in restraint of trade as between the parties, and a combination or contract to stifle competition, or a conspiracy to ruin a competitor." Brown v. Jacobs Pharmacy Co., 115 Ga. 429, 41 S.E. 553, 556 (1902) (suit for damages and injunction). Although we have found insufficient evidence of a conspiracy under federal law standards, this does not answer the question of whether Georgia courts would find sufficient evidence of conspiracy under their substantive law. Cf. Sachdeva v. Smith, 167 Ga. App. 80, 306 S.E.2d 19, 20 (1983).

HN31[] We have previously held that Georgia [54] law provides a cause of action for tortious interference with the business relationships between a plaintiff and its customers, suppliers or representatives. To be held liable the defendant "must have (1) acted improperly and without privilege, (2) purposely and with malice with the intent to injure, (3) induced a third party or parties not to enter into or continue a business relationship with the plaintiff, and (4) [caused] plaintiff [to] suffer[] some financial injury." DeLong Equip. Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1518 (11th Cir.1989) (quotation omitted), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1081, 110 S. Ct. 1813, 108 L. Ed. 2d 943 (1990), appeal after remand, 990 F.2d 1186 (11th Cir.1993), amended, 997 F.2d 1340 (11th Cir.1993) (per [28] We have considered U.S. Anchor's contention that the district court abused its discretion by excluding certain evidence that Rule's customers perceived an attempt by Rule to eliminate U.S. Anchor from the market, a perception based upon reported statements made by a Rule employee. (See USTX 206.) This evidence has such little bearing on the existence of an agreement between Rule and Tie Down that its exclusion on hearsay grounds, even if erroneous, see United States v. Pendas-Martinez, 845 F.2d 938, 942-43 (11th Cir.1988); Southern Stone Co. v. Singer, 665 F.2d 698, 703 (5th Cir. Unit B Jan. 1982), was harmless. Fed.R.Evid. 103(a). We see no abuse of discretion.

---

curiam); see also NAACP v. Overstreet, 221 Ga. 16, 142 S.E.2d 816, 822 (1965), cert. dismissed, 384 U.S. 118, 86 S. Ct. 1306, 16 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1966). The defendant may show that competitive [55] conduct is privileged by establishing that it used no improper means. Integrated Micro Sys., Inc. v. NEC Home Elecs. (USA), Inc., 174 Ga. App. 197, 329 S.E.2d 554, 559 (1985), cert. denied, No. 69405 (Ga. Apr. 24, 1985).

U.S. Anchor's complaint adequately pleads a claim for relief under this theory to present it for adjudication by the district court. Count V gave full notice to the defendants that U.S. Anchor sought recovery under Georgia law for "Unfair Methods of Competition and Unfair Acts and Practices," including conduct which was "inequitable, unfair, unscrupulous, in violation of public policy and unconscionable and tending to defeat or lessen competition…." (R1-1 PP 59-60.) The fact that paragraph 60 of the complaint also refers to the constitutional and statutory provisions which U.S. Anchor concedes confer no independent damages remedy does not by itself deprive the defendants of "fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Quality Foods de Centro Am., S.A. v. Latin Am. Agribusiness Dev. Corp., 711 F.2d 989, 995 (11th Cir.1983) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 103, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)); [56] see Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2). The issue of whether the tort theory is applicable to the facts of this case was adequately argued to the district court in connection with U.S. Anchor's requested jury instructions, (R28-136-45), and thus preserved for appellate review. Cf. Weaver v. Casa Gallardo, Inc., 922 F.2d 1515, 1519 (11th Cir.1991).

The novel questions presented are whether below-cost pricing can satisfy the improper action element of the tort and whether low prices, standing alone, can constitute a prohibited inducement of the plaintiff's customers. Cf. Parks v. Atlanta News Agency, Inc., 115 Ga. App. 842, 156 S.E.2d 137, 140 (1967) (holding that solicitation of competitor's customers is not itself tortious, even when combined with "preferential" prices), cert. denied, No. 42624 (Ga. July 14, 1967). We regard it as unclear whether tortious interference with business relations under Georgia law may be established by a showing of predatory pricing and, if so, what sort of pricing conduct would be deemed predatory. We also have some doubt as to whether intentional interference with business relations [57] is a distinct cause of action from the tort of conspiracy in restraint of trade, or whether there is only a single theory of relief, so that proof of a conspiracy to interfere with the plaintiff's business relations [*1004] would be actionable as U.S. Anchor's sole remedy for the alleged joint conduct of Rule and Tie Down. Compare Cook v. Robinson, 216 Ga. 328, 116 S.E.2d 742 (1960) with Jacobs Pharmacy, 41 S.E. at 554-57 (quoting Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 52 N.E. 924 (1898)); see also Overstreet, 142 S.E.2d at 822. This is not a matter of mere semantics, for while it appears settled that predatory pricing by a group or conspiracy is actionable, we have found no Georgia authority addressing predation by a single defendant acting unilaterally.

Another issue affecting the outcome of U.S. Anchor's state law claims is the validity and effect of its settlement agreement with Rule, executed on March 19, 1986. The agreement provided that each party would release the other > from any and all actions, demands, [58] claims or causes of action whatsoever, which now exist or which may arise in the future, as a result of events which occurred prior to the execution of the Settlement Agreement, including, without limitation, any claims which were or could have been presented by way of complaint or counterclaim in Civil Action Number C85-4466A.

(RTX 457.) Because the predatory pricing scheme allegedly began in October 1985, Rule contends that the settlement agreement operated as a release of U.S. Anchor's cause of action. U.S. Anchor contends that its predatory pricing claims were undiscovered at the time the release was executed and therefore were not intended to be released. In addition, it contends that injuries caused by predatory conduct occurring after the release would not have been discharged even if they arose as a result of a scheme or conspiracy that was ongoing when the release was signed. [29] The district court concluded that the federal predatory pricing claims were undischarged

[29] Compare Imperial Point Colonnades Condominium, Inc. v. Mangurian, 549 F.2d 1029, 1043-44 (5th Cir.1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 859, 98 S. Ct. 185, 54 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1977), Poster Exchange, Inc. v. National Screen Serv. Corp., 517 F.2d 117, 127 (5th Cir.1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1054, 96 S. Ct. 784, 46 L. Ed. 2d 643 and 425 U.S. 971, 96 S. Ct. 2166, 48 L. Ed. 2d 793 (1976), appeal after remand, 542 F.2d 255 (5th Cir.1976) (per curiam), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 904, 97 S. Ct. 1697, 52 L. Ed. 2d

because the agreement unambiguously applied only to causes of action related to the prior litigation. It also relied on Chapman's oral testimony concerning his intent at the time he signed the agreement and [59] on Covington v. Brewer, 101 Ga. App. 724, 115 S.E.2d 368, 372-73 (1960), in which the court held that the scope of a release as intended by the parties could not be presumed to encompass rights respecting a subject matter not clearly referred to in the body of the agreement. But cf. Ingram Corp. v. J. Ray McDermott & Co., 698 F.2d 1295, 1311-12 (5th Cir.1983).

[60] The doctrine of pendent jurisdiction as outlined in United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966), gives the district court power to decide claims arising under state law as to which there was no independent basis for federal jurisdiction but which share a common nucleus of operative fact with federal claims. The court also has discretion not to hear such state law claims.

> Under Gibbs, a federal court should consider and weigh, in each case, and at every stage of the litigation, the values of judicial economy, convenience, fairness, and comity in order to decide whether to exercise jurisdiction over a case brought in that court involving pendent state-law claims. When the balance of these factors indicates that a case properly belongs in state court, as when the federal-law claims have dropped out of the lawsuit in its early stages and only state-law claims remain, the federal court should decline to exercise its jurisdiction by dismissing the case without prejudice.

Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350, 108 S. Ct. 614, 619, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720 (1988) [61] (footnote HN33[] omitted). While the doctrine is a flexible one according great leeway to the court, see id. at 350 n. 7, 108 S. Ct. at 619 n. 7, we have found an abuse of discretion in failing to dismiss a case when the federal claims were resolved early in the proceedings [*1005] and the state law claims posed issues of first impression. See Hardy v. Birmingham Bd. of Educ., 954 F.2d 1546 (11th Cir.1992).

In the present case, the federal claims have survived through trial and have only been resolved on appeal. Thus, the parties have already tried the state law claims in federal court, although the district court's ruling prevented the jury from considering them. The legal issues have been decided by the district court and are now properly before us for review, so that judicial economy and convenience weigh in favor of retaining jurisdiction. On the other hand some of the state law issues are novel, and comity between federal and state judicial systems weighs in favor of determination by state courts. Moreover, a ruling by this court in favor of U.S. Anchor's position would require a new federal trial in [62] which only state law claims would be put in issue. Fairness to U.S. Anchor, however, prevents us from dismissing the state law claims. Dismissal would require the plaintiff to re-file its action in state court more than eight years after the allegedly tortious conduct began, thereby losing a substantial portion of its rights (if any) by application of Georgia's four-year statute of limitations. [30] [64] We might have reached a different result under 388 (1977), and Redel's Inc. v. General Elec. Co., 498 F.2d 95, 99 (5th Cir.1974) with Record Club of Am., Inc. v. United Artists Records, Inc., 611 F. Supp. 211, 217 & n. 8 (S.D.N.Y.1985).

---

HN32[] -

[30] The mechanics of Georgia's statute of limitations have been explained as follows:

> The test to be applied in determining when the statute of limitations begins to run against an action sounding in tort is in whether the act causing the damage is in and of itself an invasion of some right of the plaintiff, and thus constitutes a legal injury and gives rise to a cause of action. If the act is of itself not unlawful in this sense, and a recovery is sought only on account of damage subsequently accruing from and consequent upon the act, the cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run only when the damage is sustained; but if the act causing such subsequent damage is of itself unlawful in the sense that it constitutes a legal injury to the plaintiff, and is thus a completed wrong, the cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run from the time the act is committed, however slight the actual damage then may be.

Fox v. Ravinia Club, Inc., 202 Ga. App. 260, 414 S.E.2d 243, 244 (1991) (quotation omitted), cert. denied, No. Fox v. Ravinia Club, 1992 Ga. LEXIS 91 (Ga. Feb. 4, 1992). As we understand the test, U.S. Anchor's cause of action (if any) the Judicial Improvements Act of 1990, Pub.L. No. 101-650, § 310, 104 Stat. 5089, 5113-14, codified at 28 U.S.C. § 1367. Under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d), the statute of limitations would be tolled while the claims were pending until 30 days after an order of dismissal, thus allowing the plaintiff time for filing a new action in state court without a lapse of its rights. But the present case was commenced before the statute's effective date on December 1, 1990, and § 1367 is not retroactive. Yanez v. United States, 989 F.2d 323, 327 n. 3 (9th Cir.1993). In view of the fact that the case may be certified to the Supreme Court of Georgia for interlocutory [63] resolution of the state law issues, we conclude that the balance of factors involved in the discretionary decision to retain pendent jurisdiction weighs clearly against dismissal. [31]

Accordingly, we respectfully certify the following questions of law to the Supreme Court of Georgia and the Honorable Justices of that Court.

Questions for Certification

1. DOES A GENERAL RELEASE UNDER GEORGIA LAW DISCHARGE LIABILITY FOR INJURY CAUSED BY SUBSEQUENT ACTS IN THE COURSE OF A SCHEME OR CONSPIRACY THAT WAS ONGOING AT THE TIME THE RELEASE WAS EXECUTED BUT UNKNOWN TO THE RELEASING PARTY?

2. DOES A GENERAL RELEASE UNDER GEORGIA LAW DISCHARGE LIABILITY FOR INJURY CAUSED BY TORTIOUS CONDUCT ALREADY COMMITTED THAT WAS UNKNOWN TO THE [*1006] RELEASING PARTY AT THE TIME THE RELEASE WAS EXECUTED?

3. DOES THE TORT OF INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS ENCOMPASS PREDATORY PRICING BELOW SOME MEASURE OF THE DEFENDANT'S COSTS?

4. IF THE ANSWER TO QUESTION 3 IS YES, THEN IN A CASE OF ACTIONABLE PREDATORY PRICING BELOW SOME MEASURE OF COST BY A CONSPIRACY OR A SINGLE DEFENDANT, WHAT IS THE [65] APPROPRIATE MEASURE OF THE DEFENDANTS' COSTS?

Our statement of the questions is not designed to limit the inquiry of the Supreme Court of Georgia. Instead, the Supreme Court has the widest possible latitude to consider the problems and issues involved in this case as it perceives them to be. Martinez v. Rodriquez, 394 F.2d 156, 159 n. 6 (5th Cir.1968), conformed to certified answer, 410 F.2d 729 (5th Cir.1969). To assist the Supreme Court, the entire record in this case and copies of the parties' briefs are transmitted herewith.

VIII. CONCLUSION

The judgment of the district court is reversed with respect to all federal law causes of action and judgment is rendered in favor of the defendants thereon. Dispositive questions of law respecting the plaintiff's state law causes of action are certified to the Supreme Court of Georgia.

REVERSED and JUDGMENT RENDERED in part and QUESTIONS CERTIFIED.

---

continued to accrue with each predatory sale, and would be time-barred under O.C.G.A. § 9-3-31 with respect to each transaction occurring more than four years before commencement of the new action in state court. See Cleveland Lumber Co. v. Proctor & Schwartz, Inc., 397 F. Supp. 1088, 1094 (N.D.Ga.1975) (citing Georgia Power Co. v. Moore, 47 Ga. App. 411, 170 S.E. 520 (1933)); accord Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 806, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971) (federal antitrust law).

[31] We need not decide whether § 1367 would allow the court of appeals to decide the propriety of exercising supplemental jurisdiction or whether such discretion is vested in the district court alone.

Teleconnect Co. v. U.S. West Communications

Supreme Court of Iowa

November 24, 1993, Filed

No. 379 / 92-1460

Reporter

508 N.W.2d 644 *; 1993 Iowa Sup. LEXIS 236 **

TELECONNECT COMPANY, Appellant, v. U.S. WEST COMMUNICATIONS, INC., a Colorado corporation, f/k/a Northwestern Bell Telephone Company, Appellee.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the Iowa District Court for Linn County, Van D. Zimmer, Judge. Interlocutory appeal and cross appeal from rulings in dispute between telephone companies.

Disposition: REVERSED ON THE CROSS APPEAL AND REMANDED; APPEAL MOOTED.

Core Terms

file a tariff, tariff, customers, district court, competitor, rates, local service, antitrust, terms, summary judgment motion, public utility, regulation, telephone, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

For purposes of the review of a motion for summary judgment, a court will render judgment for the movant if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Iowa R. Civ. P. 237(c). No fact question exists if the only dispute concerns the legal consequences flowing from undisputed facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN2[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Iowa Code § 476.1 (1993) delegates to the utilities board the authority to regulate the rates and services of public utilities. Under this regulatory scheme, every public utility must file with the board tariffs showing the rates and charges for its public utility services, and every public utility shall keep copies of its tariffs open to public inspection under such rules as the board may prescribe. Iowa Code § 476.4. These tariffs contain the terms of service that the parties would ordinarily put into private contracts. These publicly filed tariffs thus ensure uniformity of utility rates and prevent the discrimination of price and service that once pervaded utilities industries.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Filing > Financing Statements > Requirements

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Secured Transactions (Article 9) > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN3[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The filed tariff doctrine conclusively presumes that both a utility and its customer know the contents and effects of published tariffs. Under Iowa Code § 476.5, just as under the Interstate Commerce Act and other statutes that establish a tariff system to replace private contracting, neither the customer's ignorance nor the utility's misquotation of the applicable tariff provides refuge from the terms of the tariff. Thus, a customer of a utility has no cause of action against a utility for alleged negligent or intentional misquotation of a tariffed service. Similarly, any contract or agreement to provide a tariffed service on terms other than those set forth in the tariff is void. To allow otherwise would give a preference to and discriminate in favor of the customer who received the representation. Iowa Code § 476.5. Under the doctrine, the relevant regulatory agency retains primary enforcement authority over utility disputes in which, absent the tariff scheme, contract or tort law would ordinarily govern.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Judicial Review > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN4[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Any person dissatisfied with a decision of a utility board may file a petition for rehearing. Iowa Code § 476.12. Judicial review of the board's decision is provided in Iowa district court. Iowa Code § 476.13.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN5[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The filed tariff doctrine prohibits a customer of a utility from suing that utility in contract or tort over terms governed entirely by publicly filed tariffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Common Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Rates & Tariffs

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Contracts for Service

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN6[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Common Carriers

The filed tariff doctrine prohibits discrimination based on service as well as price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

HN7[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Regulatory agencies, not the courts, have primary responsibility for determining the reasonableness of utilities rates or practices.

Counsel: Thomas M. Collins, Kevin H. Collins, and Mark L. Zaiger of Shuttleworth & Ingersoll, P.C., Cedar Rapids, for appellant.

Kasey W. Kincaid of Faegre & Benson, Des Moines, and George A. Carroll of U.S. West, Des Moines, for appellee.

Judges: Considered by McGiverin, C.J., and Larson, Lavorato, Neuman, and Andreasen, JJ.

Opinion by: McGIVERIN

Opinion

[*645] McGIVERIN, C.J.

The controlling question here is whether the "filed tariff" doctrine bars one utility's contract and tort claims against another utility when the terms of the disputed service are regulated by tariffs filed publicly with a regulatory agency.

With our permission, plaintiff Teleconnect Company (Teleconnect) appeals the district court's ruling denying its demand for a jury trial and its motion to disqualify defendant's counsel. Defendant U.S. West Communications, Inc. (or U.S. West, formerly Northwestern Bell or Bell) cross appeals the district's court's denial of its motion for summary judgment based on the "filed tariff" doctrine. [2] We reverse the district court's denial of U.S. West's motion for summary judgment. That decision renders the other issues on this appeal moot. We remand the case to the district court with directions that it enter an order sustaining defendant's motion for summary judgment and dismissing plaintiff's petition.

I. Background facts and proceedings. The events leading to this appeal occurred over a decade ago. In the early 1980s Teleconnect had emerged, in the wake of the governmental breakup of the telephone monopoly held by American Telephone & Telegraph, as a successful long distance company. It wanted to expand into local service. Therefore, in the spring of 1983, Northwestern Bell and Teleconnect began negotiations over Bell's sale of local telephone service to Teleconnect for resale to corporate and institutional customers. On May 26, 1983, Clark McLeod, the president and founder of Teleconnect, received a letter from a Bell sales manager who stated Bell's support of Teleconnect's proposed resale of local service to [*646] be purchased from Bell. A month later, however, Bell's general manager for sales wrote McLeod to inform him that an Iowa utility regulation (or "tariff") prohibited [3] Bell from selling Teleconnect the type of service it wanted.

Teleconnect then sued Bell in Iowa district court under a variety of theories. The ensuing litigation was removed to federal district court, then remanded back to Iowa district court, then removed to federal court, and remanded to Iowa district court once again. Teleconnect's present petition asserts claims against Bell (now U.S. West) for (1) breach of contract; (2) fraud and fraudulent representation; (3) negligence; (4) breach of fiduciary relationship; and (5) tortious interference with business relations.

The district court denied defendant U.S. West's motion for summary judgment based on the "filed tariff" doctrine, granted U.S. West's motion to strike Teleconnect's jury demand, and denied Teleconnect's motion to disqualify U.S. West's counsel from proceeding further in the case. We granted the parties' applications for interlocutory appeal on all three rulings but only need to address one of them. We will provide further details regarding the facts and proceedings in the course of our analysis.

II. Filed Tariff Doctrine. U.S. West cross appeals the district court's denial of its motion for summary judgment based [4] on the theory that the "filed tariff" (or "filed rate") doctrine barred Teleconnect's claims. U.S. West points to a 1979 tariff filed with and approved by the Iowa State Commerce Commission that prohibited new carriers from purchasing the service Teleconnect wanted. U.S. West asserts that under the filed tariff doctrine, Teleconnect has no claim under its various contract and tort theories because the published tariff constructively notified Teleconnect that it did not qualify to purchase the service. Neither party disputes that such a tariff was on file with the Iowa State Commerce Commission at the time the alleged actions in this dispute occurred, nor does either party question the validity of the tariff.

HN1[] For purposes of this review of the district court's ruling against U.S. West's motion for summary judgment, we will render judgment for the movant "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Iowa R. Civ. P. 237(c). No fact question exists if the only dispute concerns the legal [5] consequences flowing from undisputed facts. Ottumwa Housing Auth. v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 495 N.W.2d 723, 726 (Iowa 1993).

Before we can explain our ruling on whether the filed tariff doctrine bars Teleconnect's claim, we must explain the tariff system itself. The Iowa Utilities Board (formerly the Iowa State Commerce Commission) regulates the telecommunications industry and other public utilities through tariffs, or regulations of utility rates and services. HN2[] Iowa Code section 476.1 (1993) delegates to the utilities board the authority to "regulate the rates and services of public utilities." Under this regulatory scheme, every public utility must "file with the board tariffs showing the rates and charges for its public utility services," and every public utility "shall keep copies of its tariffs open to public inspection under such rules as the board may prescribe." Iowa Code § 476.4. These tariffs contain the terms of service that the parties would ordinarily put into private contracts. These publicly filed tariffs thus ensure uniformity of utility rates and prevent the discrimination of price and service that once pervaded utilities industries. [6] See generally Southern Pac. Transp. Co. v. Commercial Metals Co., 456 U.S. 336, 344, 102 S. Ct. 1815, 1821, 72 L. Ed. 2d 114, 121 (1982).

Because of this tariff regime, Bell offered technologically similar services under different tariffs. Until 1979 Bell sold local service to large, institutional customers through the PBX, CENTREX, and CENTRON systems. The University of Iowa, for example, used CENTREX for its old dormitory phones, which all had a 353 prefix. In 1979, pursuant to a tariff, Bell began to phase out its CENTREX service, limiting its use to existing customers.

[*647] Meanwhile, as Teleconnect's business grew, it wanted to participate in the local service market by purchasing local service from Bell and then reselling the service to its own customers. Teleconnect needed Bell's CENTREX service, however, if it expected to make a profit. CENTRON, although functionally identical to CENTREX, would have cost Teleconnect more money because of its pricing system.

In early 1983 Teleconnect presented a proposal to Bell to purchase local service. In a May 26, 1983 letter to Teleconnect, a Bell representative stated that its Iowa [7] tariffs "do indeed allow you to share Centrex/Centron service with other telephone users in Iowa." Teleconnect, apparently relying on this interpretation, concluded that it could resell local service under the cheaper CENTREX tariff.

Teleconnect claims that in reliance on Bell's letter, it solicited additional customers, purchased a building, and hired personnel. In a June 28, 1983 letter, however, Bell clarified its prior communication, explaining: "As the tariff states, 'CENTREX is obsolete effective March 26, 1979 and grandfathered to existing customers . . . .' Under that provision, Centrex is not available for the use that you are proposing." (Emphasis added in letter.) Bell indicated, however, that it would support Teleconnect's use of the CENTRON system. Although the May 1983 assurance from Bell failed to distinguish between CENTREX and CENTRON and although Bell retracted a month later any assurance that first letter may have contained, Teleconnect contends that Bell breached a contract with it and intentionally and recklessly caused it substantial injury in these dealings, entitling it to compensatory and punitive damages.

A. This brings us to U.S. West's defense under [8] the "filed tariff" doctrine. U.S. West contends that the filed tariff doctrine insulates it from tort or contract liability in its dealings with Teleconnect because published tariffs determined the terms of Teleconnect's proposed local service offering.

HN3[] The filed tariff doctrine conclusively presumes that both a utility and its customer know the contents and effects of published tariffs. Maislin Indus., U.S. v. Primary Steel, Inc., 497 U.S. 116, 127 n.9, 110 S. Ct. 2759, 2766 n.9, 111 L. Ed. 2d 94, 109 n.9 (1990); Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Rutledge Oil Co., 669 F.2d 557, 559 (8th Cir. 1982). Under Iowa Code section 476.5, just as under the Interstate Commerce Act and other statutes that establish a tariff system to replace private contracting, neither the customer's ignorance nor the utility's misquotation of the applicable tariff provides refuge from the terms of the tariff. See Maislin, 497 U.S. at 120, 110 S. Ct. at 2763, 111 L. Ed. 2d at 104.

Thus, a customer of a utility has no cause of action against a utility for alleged negligent [9] or intentional misquotation of a tariffed service. Id. at 127 n.9, 110 S. Ct. at 2766 n.9, 111 L. Ed. 2d at 109 n.9. Similarly, any contract or agreement to provide a tariffed service on terms other than those set forth in the tariff is void. Sheldon v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 184 Iowa 865, 870, 169 N.W. 189, 190 (1918). To allow otherwise would give a preference to and discriminate in favor of the customer who received the representation. See Iowa Code § 476.5 ("No public utility subject to rate regulation shall directly or indirectly charge a greater or less compensation for its services than that prescribed in its tariffs."); cf. Iowa Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Wendling Quarries, Inc., 389 N.W.2d 847, 849 (Iowa 1986)(observing argument that utility undercharges, whether intentional or unintentional, "would be to grant a preferential rebate to a customer in violation of [the] statutory mandate of nondiscriminatory rates").

Under the doctrine, the relevant regulatory agency retains primary enforcement authority over utility disputes in which, [10] absent the tariff scheme, contract or tort law would ordinarily govern. See Elk Run Tel. Co. v. General Tel. Co. of Iowa, 160 N.W.2d 311, 315 (Iowa 1968); compare Reiter v. Cooper, 507 U.S. , , 113 S. Ct. 1213, 1220, 122 L. Ed. 2d 604, 618 (1993)("Where relief is available from an administrative agency, the plaintiff is ordinarily required to pursue that avenue of redress before proceeding to the courts; and until that recourse is exhausted, suit is premature and must be dismissed."); *Taffet v. Southern Co., 967 F.2d 1483, 1490 [648] (11th Cir. 1992)("The filed rate doctrine recognizes that where a legislature has established a scheme for utility rate making, the rights of the rate-payer in regard to the rates he pays are defined by that scheme."). HN4[] Any person dissatisfied with a decision of the utility board may file a petition for rehearing. Iowa Code § 476.12. Judicial review of the board's decision is provided in Iowa district court. Iowa Code § 476.13 (providing for judicial review under Iowa Code chapter 17A).

The filed tariff doctrine applies squarely to the alleged [11] agreement between Teleconnect and Northwestern Bell. Teleconnect never asserts that Bell violated the terms of the CENTREX tariff. If it did, it might have had a remedy before the Iowa Utilities Board that would be reviewable in Iowa district court. Instead, however, Teleconnect bases its claims entirely on contract and tort theories. If we allowed Teleconnect to sue U.S. West on these theories, Teleconnect would have the same telephone service as all other Iowa customers (including its competitors), plus a de facto rebate from U.S. West in the amount of any money judgment representing the value to Teleconnect of resold CENTREX service. See Iowa Elec. Light & Power Co., 389 N.W.2d at 849 (noting that a common carrier must charge its tariff rates and any agreement to the contrary is unlawful and void).

We refuse to grant Teleconnect preferential treatment under the otherwise uniform tariff regime that the Iowa legislature and the utilities board have established. HN5[] The filed tariff doctrine prohibits a customer of a utility from suing that utility in contract or tort over terms governed entirely by publicly filed tariffs. See Maislin, 497 U.S. at 126, 110 S. Ct. at 2765-66, 111 L. Ed. 2d at 108. [12] Because the filed tariff doctrine bars Teleconnect's suit based on contract and tort allegations and reliance damages based thereon, it appears that U.S. West is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

B. Teleconnect argues and the district court held that Northwestern Bell's conduct falls outside the control of the filed tariff doctrine in part because its alleged misrepresentation of the CENTREX offering affected only the service Teleconnect would receive from Bell, not the price it would pay. Because the filed tariff doctrine provides no defense against recovery of damages suffered from acts unrelated to rates, Teleconnect argues, U.S. West cannot raise it as a defense against its refusal to sell CENTREX to Teleconnect.

We believe this rate/service distinction elevates form over substance. The only significant difference between CENTREX and CENTRON, as Teleconnect itself points out, lies in the pricing of the two packages. The only breach in this alleged May 1983 agreement occurred when Bell refused to sell Teleconnect local service at the price Teleconnect claims Bell promised. Therefore, we must reject Teleconnect's claim that a rate/service distinction applies to this case.

[13] Even if a genuine difference other than price existed between CENTREX and CENTRON, Teleconnect's claim would still fail. We have previously observed that HN6[] the filed tariff doctrine prohibits discrimination based on service as well as price in Sheldon, 184 Iowa at 869, 169 N.W. at 190. In Sheldon, the shipper paid the tariffed rate for transport of goods between Percival, Iowa and Fort Morgan, Colorado, but entered into a contract with the carrier for additional service, namely, to make two intermediate unloading stops in Brush and Akron, Colorado. Id. The railroad failed to make the intermediate unloading stops and the goods were damaged. Id. We held, however, that the contract for additional service was "nugatory rather than valid." Id. at 869-70, 169 N.W. at 190.

Teleconnect makes the same allegations that the shipper made in Sheldon. There, Mr. Sheldon alleged that the railroad promised but failed to make unloading stops in Brush and Akron; here, Teleconnect alleges that Bell promised but failed to provide CENTREX service for resale. Like the Sheldon court, we refuse to [14] recognize agreements between utilities and customers that create prices or other terms beyond those set out in the applicable tariffs.

C. Teleconnect further urges us to agree with the district court's refusal to apply the [*649] filed tariff doctrine to Teleconnect on the ground that Teleconnect sued as a competitor of U.S. West, not as a customer. We decline to do so.

Some federal courts appear to have created a "competitor exception" to the filed tariff doctrine in cases in which a competitor of a regulated utility brought a claim under antitrust law alleging that the utility used its rate making power to squeeze out a competitor. For instance, in City of Kirkwood v. Union Electric Co., 671 F.2d 1173, 1179 (8th Cir. 1982), on which the district court relied in this case, the court rejected Union Electric's claim that its discriminatory pricing against the city of Kirkwood, Missouri, a customer and competitor of Union Electric, was immunized from antitrust liability by the filed tariff doctrine. The court observed that the doctrine, which "ensures conformity of rates as between customers[,] should not give an unfair advantage to a utility in its dealings [15] with its competitors." Id.

The United States Supreme Court's most recent guidance on the application of the filed tariff doctrine in the antitrust context appeared in Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, 476 U.S. 409, 423, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 1930, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 426 (1986). In that case, the Court held that the filed tariff doctrine insulated defendant motor carriers from liability for price fixing under the federal antitrust laws. The plaintiffs in Square D, however, were not competitors with the defendants, and the federal courts remain split on whether the competitor exception exists. Compare In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litigation, 998 F.2d 1144, 1161 (3d Cir. 1993)(applying competitor exception to filed rate doctrine to allow Sherman Act claim) with Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1457 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988)(applying filed tariff doctrine to insulate defendant from antitrust liability and rejecting competitor exception).

In the present case, [16] the federal district court dismissed Teleconnect's antitrust claims with prejudice, leaving only its contract and tort claims for disposition in state court. Given this posture, the concerns driving any competitor exception to the filed tariff doctrine do not exist under the present pleadings of this case. Unlike the defendant in City of Kirkwood, there is no evidence in this case that U.S. West has placed a price squeeze on Teleconnect that renders U.S. West's local service any cheaper than Teleconnect's would have been. U.S. West invokes the filed tariff doctrine to shield itself from contract and tort claims, not antitrust liability. To the extent that a competitor exception exists, it serves to avoid the potential anticompetitive conduct that can occur when utilities file tariffs in a predatory or discriminatory manner. Absent any threat to competition under the antitrust laws, to apply in this case a competitor exception to the filed tariff doctrine would only encourage other customers of utilities to seek preferential rates below those set by publicly filed tariffs.

D. Teleconnect raises two other exceptions to the filed tariff doctrine, neither of which we believe contain [17] any merit.

Teleconnect first contends that the filed tariff doctrine prohibits only "unreasonable" discrimination and that courts may decide whether the proposed deviation from the tariff remains reasonably faithful to its basic terms. We reject this contention. HN7[] Regulatory agencies, not the courts, have primary responsibility for determining the reasonableness of utilities rates or practices. See Maislin, 497 U.S. at 119, 110 S. Ct. at 2762, 111 L. Ed. 2d at 104. In 1983 the Iowa State Commerce Commission had primary responsibility for determining whether granting a particular service to a customer constituted a reasonable advantage or preference within the meaning of Iowa Code section 476.5. Thus, "if the present action is predicated on a claim that defendant's rates were unreasonable, plaintiff does not have a case here." Oliver v. Iowa Power & Light Co., 183 N.W.2d 687, 690 (Iowa 1971).

Nor do we agree with Teleconnect's argument that the court should hear its claim because it raises no questions that require agency adjudication. We agree that its allegations of breach of contract, fraudulent [18] misrepresentation, and other claims are not ones [*650] over which the Iowa Utilities Board has jurisdiction. Merely because the utilities board has no jurisdiction over such claims, however, does not automatically entail that the district court should let the case go to trial. "'Unless and until [the utility suspends or sets aside a tariff], this rate is made, for all purposes, the legal rate . . . . The rights as defined by the tariff cannot be varied or enlarged by either contract or tort of the [utility].'" Maislin, 497 U.S. at 126, 110 S. Ct. at 2765-66, 111 L. Ed. 2d at 108 (quoting Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 163, 43 S. Ct. 47, 49, 67 L. Ed. 183, 187 (1922)(Brandeis, J.)).

We therefore conclude that the filed tariff doctrine precludes Teleconnect's contract and tort claims against U.S. West. The district court erred in not granting U.S. West's motion for summary judgment on those claims.

III. Disposition. We reverse the district court's denial of U.S. West's motion for summary judgment on Teleconnect's claims of breach of contract, [19] fraud and fraudulent representation, negligence, breach of fiduciary relationship, and tortious interference with business relations. Because we hold that the district court should have granted summary judgment for defendant U.S West, we do not reach the issues raised in Teleconnect's appeal. We remand the cause to the district court with directions to enter an order granting summary judgment for U.S. West and dismissing plaintiff Teleconnect's petition.

REVERSED ON THE CROSS APPEAL AND REMANDED; APPEAL MOOTED.
