HP's reference to unilateral refusal to deal cases similarly misses the point. HP relies heavily on a footnote in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\). There, the Supreme Court stated: "Assuming, arguendo, that Kodak's refusal to sell parts to any company providing service can be characterized as a unilateral refusal to deal, its alleged sale of parts to third parties on condition that they buy service from Kodak is not." 112 S. Ct. at 2080 n.8. This simply [18] means that, for the purposes of tie-in analysis, the defendant may sell the tying product to anybody or nobody at all. What it may not do is condition the sale of the tying product upon the purchase of the tied product, thereby expanding its market power into the market for the tied product. The harm from tying arrangements is the forced sale of the tied product, not the withholding of the tying product. HP does not argue that it had some legitimate policy of unilaterally refusing to sell software services to certain parties. Kodak does not help HP.

Finally, HP's "law of the case" argument is meritless. In refusing to reconsider its original pre-remand summary judgment order, the district court commented that Buckner's testimony was "insignificant" and "not enough to show coercion in this context." These comments went to the determination of whether HP's conduct had a large enough impact on the hardware service market to be anticompetitive under a rule of reason analysis. See Datagate I, 941 F.2d at 868-69 (discussing antitrust standing). As discussed above, if HP's conduct was per se illegal, it was also per se anticompetitive. At the time the district court [19] made the observations quoted by HP, it had already dismissed Datagate's tie-in cause of action for failure to state a claim. The court's comments, made on summary judgment, could not be a dispositive ruling on a legal issue not before it.

Despite HP's persistent attempts to obfuscate the applicable legal standards, we hold that Datagate presented evidence sufficient to create a factual dispute as to whether HP coerced Rockwell into purchasing its hardware services by threatening to withhold software services.²

[*1428] VI

We conclude that Jefferson Parish does not create a "single *20 purchaser" rule of general applicability. There are disputed issues of material fact that preclude summary judgment for HP. The judgment of the district court is REVERSED and the case is REMANDED to that court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

End of Document

² Datagate argues that, even if there is a "multiple purchaser" requirement, it presented evidence sufficient to create a disputed issue of material fact regarding more than a single tying arrangement. As we have concluded that Datagate's tie-in claim survives summary judgment on the basis of the disputed issues of material fact concerning the alleged Rockwell tying arrangement, we need not address Datagate's alternative argument.

Newman v. Associated Press

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

July 28, 1995, Dated ; July 31, 1995, FILED

94 Civ. 3474 (PKL) (THK)

Reporter

1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19588 *

FRANCINE NEWMAN, Plaintiff, - against - THE ASSOCIATED PRESS, Defendant.

Subsequent History: [*1] Adopting Order of January 2, 1996, Reported at: 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5.

Core Terms

racketeering activity, pro se, racketeering, anti trust law, enterprise, dismissal with prejudice, plaintiff's claim, conspiracy, recommend, publish, listen, antitrust claim, Teachers, conclusory allegation, economic injury, anticompetitive, Affirmation, allegations, disseminate, antitrust, newspaper, asserts, damages, deprive, rights, press, views

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN1[Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\) sets forth a minimum standard for the sufficiency of complaints, requiring that a complaint shall contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) addresses the substantive, rather than technical, elements of the complaint, providing that a party may move to dismiss a complaint on the ground that it fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. In deciding a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the court must construe the allegations of the complaint in the plaintiff's favor. Only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief is dismissal warranted.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Pro Se Litigants > Pleading Standards

Civil Procedure > Parties > Pro Se Litigants > General Overview

HN3 Pro Se Litigants, Pleading Standards

Courts must construe pro se complaints liberally, applying less stringent standards than when a plaintiff is represented by counsel. Where a plaintiff acts pro se, a court must read his supporting papers liberally, and interpret them to raise the strongest arguments that they suggest.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > Scope

HN4 Protection of Rights, Section 1983 Actions

A plaintiff proceeding under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 must specifically identify the federal right she claims has been violated and must demonstrate that the defendant acted under color of state law when depriving the plaintiff of that right.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN5 Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

To state a claim for damages under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., a plaintiff must satisfy two distinct pleading burdens. First, she must allege that the defendant has violated the RICO statute. To do so, she must allege that the following seven RICO elements exist: (1) that the defendant (2) through the commission of two or more acts (3) constituting a "pattern" (4) of "racketeering activity" (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (6) an "enterprise" (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce. Second, a plaintiff must allege that she was injured in her business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Securities Law > ... > Elements of Proof > Pattern > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Securities Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Elements of Proof > Definition of Racketeering Activity

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Elements of Proof > Enterprise

HN6 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., "racketeering activity" is any act chargeable under several generically described state criminal laws, any act indictable under numerous specific federal criminal provisions, including mail and wire fraud, and any offense involving bankruptcy or securities fraud or drug-related activities that is punishable under federal law. The specific acts which qualify as racketeering activity are set forth in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(1\). The statute defines a "pattern" of racketeering activity as at least two acts of racketeering activity occurring within a ten-year period. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(5\). The two or more acts of racketeering activities must be criminal acts, and only certain criminal acts fall within the statute. An "enterprise" is defined as any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(4\). The existence of an enterprise is proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit. Further, the enterprise must be connected to the pattern of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 [down] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 15 provides in part: Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the cost of suit, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN8 [down] Standing, Requirements

In order to have standing to prosecute private antitrust claims, plaintiffs must show more than that the defendants' conduct caused them an economic injury. The economic injury must be of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. Those suffering derivative injuries, not within the sector of the economy directly affected by a defendant's anticompetitive practices, lack antitrust standing.

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

HN9 [down] Dismissal, Involuntary Dismissals

Where a plaintiff is unable to allege any fact sufficient to support its claim, a complaint should be dismissed with prejudice.

Counsel: FRANCINE NEWMAN, plaintiff, [PRO SE], Forest Hills, NY.

For ASSOCIATED PRESS, INC., defendant: Carolyn Killeen Foley, Rogers & Wells, New York, NY.

Judges: Theodore H. Katz, United States Magistrate Judge. Judge Peter K. Leisure

Opinion by: Theodore H. Katz

Opinion

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

THEODORE H. KATZ, United States Magistrate Judge.

TO THE HON. PETER K. LEISURE, United States District Judge:

This pro se action was referred to me for general pretrial supervision and reports and recommendations on dispositive motions, pursuant to your Order Of Reference dated May 12, 1994. Defendant has moved to dismiss the Complaint for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), Fed. R. Civ. P., and for failure to plead with adequate specificity, pursuant to Rule 8\(a\)\(2\). For the following reasons, I recommend that Defendant's motion be granted and that the Complaint be dismissed with prejudice.

BACKGROUND

Pro se plaintiff, Francine Newman, brought this Section 1983 action to recover monetary damages from Defendant, The Associated Press ["the AP"]. Plaintiff's claims arise [*2] out of a single incident which she describes as follows. On or about July 10, 1992, she went to a reception area at one of Defendant's offices, located at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, in order to deliver information about alleged racketeering on the part of the New York City Board of Education, the United Federation of Teachers, and the New York City Corporation Counsel, to compel "whistleblower" teachers to submit to forced psychiatric evaluations. (Complaint PP 1-3.) After identifying herself as a New York City high school teacher and successful litigant in a lawsuit concerning this alleged wrongdoing, two receptionists, a male employee, and a security officer threatened to oust Plaintiff with police assistance and forced her to leave the building. (Complaint PP 5, 6.) The information Plaintiff wished the AP to disseminate was not published, in Plaintiff's view "consistent with the racketeering conspiracy of 'mental health' practitioners such as psychiatrists and their collaborators in and out of the public sector . . ." (Complaint P 6.)

Based on this single encounter with Defendant, Plaintiff claims that the AP has: (1) violated and conspired to violate her First Amendment rights; (2) [*3] violated federal RICO laws; (3) violated federal antitrust laws; and, (4) violated certain provisions of the United Nations Charter. (Complaint P 1.) She asserts that there has been underreporting of the procedures applied to New York City teachers and Defendant is under a duty not to deprive her of her freedom of speech. (Complaint P 5.) She further asserts that Defendant "has a vested interest in this form of racketeering enslavement of the human condition" and seeks $ 10 million in damages. (Complaint PP 7, 8.)

DISCUSSION

Defendant has moved to dismiss the Complaint based on two grounds: (1) Rule 8, Fed. R. Civ. P., for failure to plead with adequate specificity; and, (2) Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), Fed. R. Civ. P., for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

HN1 [↑] Rule 8\(a\) sets forth a minimum standard for the sufficiency of complaints, requiring that a complaint "shall contain . . . a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief . . ." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\). The rule ensures that a defendant has notice of the charges against it and can file a responsive pleading and prepare a defense. Simmons v. Abruzzo, 49 F.3d 83, 86 \(2d Cir. 1995\); Salahuddin v. Cuomo, 861 F.2d 40, 42 \(2d Cir. 1988\); Chodos v. F.B.I., 559 F. Supp. 69, 71 \(S.D.N.Y.\), aff'd without op., 697 F.2d 289 \(2d Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1111, 103 S. Ct. 741, reh'g denied, 460 U.S. 1048, 103 S. Ct. 1451 \(1983\). It "also serves to sharpen the issues to be litigated and to confine discovery and the presentation of evidence within reasonable bounds." Chodos, 559 F. Supp. at 71.

HN2 [↑] Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) addresses the substantive, rather than technical, elements of the complaint, providing that a party may move to dismiss a complaint on the ground that it fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. In deciding a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the Court must construe the allegations of the complaint in the plaintiff's favor. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 \(1974\). See also Hernandez v. Coughlin, 18 F.3d 133, 136 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 L. Ed. 2d 63, 115 S. Ct. 117 \(1994\); Dahlberg v. Becker, 748 F.2d 85, 88 \(2d Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1084, 105 S. Ct. 1845, 85 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1985); Ruderman v. Police Dept. of the City of New York, 857 F. Supp. 326, 328 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\). Only if "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief . . ." is dismissal warranted. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 102, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\). See also Hernandez, 18 F.3d at 136; Dahlberg, 748 F.2d at 88; Ruderman, 857 F. Supp. at 328.

"The Supreme Court has long held that HN3 [↑] courts must construe pro se complaints liberally, applying less stringent standards than when a plaintiff is represented by counsel." Elliott v. Bronson, 872 F.2d 20, 21 \(2d Cir. 1989\) (per curiam). See also Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 520, 92 S. Ct. 594, 596, 30 L. Ed. 2d 652 \(per curiam\), reh'g denied, 405 U.S. 948, 92 S. Ct. 963, 30 L. Ed. 2d 819 \(1972\); Sadler v. Brown, 793 F. Supp. 87, 90 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\); Barsella v. United States, 135 F.R.D. 64, 66 \(S.D.N.Y. 1991\). "Where a plaintiff acts pro se, a court must 'read his supporting papers liberally, and . . . interpret them to raise the strongest arguments that they suggest.'" [Burrus v. Keane, 93 Civ. 3945 \(LAP\), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3988, *4 \(S.D.N.Y. \[*6\] March 30, 1995\)](#) (citing Soto v. Walker, 44 F.3d 169, 173 \(2d Cir. 1995\)). See also Hernandez, 18 F.3d at 136 ("In reviewing a complaint for dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the court must accept the material facts alleged in the complaint as true and construe all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. . . . This standard is applied with even greater force where the . . . complaint is submitted pro se.").

This policy, however, does not require courts to sustain every pro se complaint. See, e.g., Barsella, 135 F.R.D. at 66 (dismissing a pro se complaint where, even viewed in its most favorable light, it "contained little more than a prolix collection of demands for relief"); Chodos, 559 F. Supp. at 71-72 (dismissing pro se complaint on grounds that it consisted of "rambling, confused documents from which it is impossible to adequately discern the basis for plaintiff's claim or the facts upon which the alleged claim exists."). Factual allegations must support the legal basis upon which the plaintiff asserts that she is entitled to relief. See Ruderman, 857 F. Supp. at 330 ("mere conclusory allegations . . . 'are meaningless as a practical [*7] matter and, as a matter of law, insufficient to state a claim.'") (quoting Duncan v. AT & T Communications, Inc., 668 F. Supp. 232, 234 \(S.D.N.Y. 1987\)).

I. First Amendment Claim

Although Plaintiff asserts a variety of grounds for her claims against Defendant, the core of this action arises out of the AP's alleged violation of Plaintiff's First Amendment rights, by its failure to listen to and publish her story. All of Plaintiff's other allegations concern purported reasons why Defendant refused to do so.¹

[*8] This Court is satisfied that Plaintiff has pleaded her First Amendment claim with sufficient specificity to comply with the requirements set forth in Rule 8, Fed. R. Civ. P. The predicate factual allegation for her First Amendment claim -- that Defendant failed to listen to and publish her story when she was on its premises on July 10, 1992 -- is clear. Nevertheless, it is my conclusion that Plaintiff's First Amendment claim fails, under Rule 12(b)(6), to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

HN4 A plaintiff proceeding under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 must specifically identify the federal right she claims has been violated and must demonstrate that the defendant acted under color of state law when depriving the plaintiff of that right. See Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 171-72, 81 S. Ct. 473, 476, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1961); Rodriguez v. Hynes, No. 94 Civ. 4578 (JBW), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7951, *12 (E.D.N.Y. June 8, 1995); City of Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 816, 105 S. Ct. 2427, 2432-33, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791, reh'g denied, 473 U.S. 925, 106 S. Ct. 16, 87 L. Ed. 2d 695 (1985).

The Court need not reach the issue of whether the AP acts under color of state law, since [*9] Plaintiff simply does not have a First Amendment right to require the AP to listen to or disseminate her views.

"The First Amendment has long been recognized as promoting diversity of expression of differing views by allowing numerous means of expression to flourish, not by allowing suits because a given publication or even chain declines to broadcast or publish any particular view." Glendora v. Gannett Company, 858 F. Supp. 369, 371 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd without op., 40 F.3d 1238 (2d Cir. 1994), cert. denied, U.S. , 115 S. Ct. 1435 (1995). See also Miami Herald Publishing Company v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, 258, 94 S. Ct. 2831, 2839, 41 L. Ed. 2d 730 (1974) (holding that a state "right of reply" statute, which granted a political candidate whose record or personal character had been assailed in a newspaper the right to demand that the newspaper print any reply to the charges, violated the newspaper's First Amendment right to a free press); Cyntje v. Daily News Publishing Company, 551 F. Supp. 403, 405-06 (D.V.I. 1982) ("plaintiff may deem his press releases and his other messages to be of transcendent national importance . . . that still does [*10] not give him an enforceable right to see such information printed in the pages of someone else's publication."); Ahmad v. Levi, 414 F. Supp. 597, 602 (E.D. Pa. 1976) (a court "cannot, consistent with the constitutional guarantee of a free press, order . . . defendants to publish certain information or assess damages against them for past failures to publish certain information."). As the Supreme Court stated in Tornillo:

A newspaper is more than a passive receptacle or conduit for news, comment, and advertising. The choice of material to go into a newspaper, and the decisions made as to limitations on the size and content of the paper, and treatment of public issues and public officials -- whether fair or unfair -- constitute the exercise of editorial control and judgment. It has yet to be demonstrated how governmental regulation of this crucial process can be exercised consistent with First Amendment guarantees of a free press as they have evolved to this time.

418 U.S. at 258, 94 S. Ct. at 2840 (footnote omitted).

In short, Plaintiff has no constitutional right to force the AP to publish her story, or to listen to her speech. See AMSAT Cable Ltd. v. Cablevision [*11] of Connecticut L.P., 6 F.3d 867, 871 (2d Cir. 1993) (First Amendment does not guarantee the right to have someone listen to speech); Warner Cable Communications, Inc. v. City of Niceville, 911 F.2d 634, 638 (11th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1222, 111 S. Ct. 2839, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1007

¹ The following excerpts from Plaintiff's Complaint illustrate this point. Plaintiff asserts that "defendant in its capacity as a commercial disseminator of information is under a duty as a licensee of public utilizes [sic] in the nature of a monopoly for that purpose not to deprive plaintiff of her right to freedom of speech." (Complaint P 5.) Plaintiff believes that she has a First Amendment right to "deliver[] information" to the defendant. (Complaint P 3.) She claims that when she "protested the denial of her constitutional right to publicize the protected racketeering practiced by the defendant," she was "required to leave the building and the information was withheld from dissemination." (Complaint P 6.)

(1991) ("the first amendment does not guarantee that someone will listen to Warner's speech") (quoting district court opinion). Thus, Plaintiff's Section 1983 claim that her First Amendment rights have been violated should be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

II. RICO Claim

Plaintiff seeks treble damages under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq., claiming that the AP withheld her story from publication "consistent with the racketeering conspiracy of 'mental health' practitioners such as psychiatrists and their collaborators in and out of the public sector for the racketeering agenda of said defendant as an illegal substitution for the application of the rule of law without any judicial process or due process of law." (Complaint P 6.) She further claims that "defendant Associated [*12] Press has a vested interest in this form of racketeering enslavement of the human condition [operated by the New York City Board of Education and the United Federation of Teachers in collusion with the New York City Corporation Counsel] under color of law and interfered with plaintiff's constitutional rights to plaintiff's damage solely in consequence of its racketeering efforts." (Complaint PP 4, 7.) These are the sum and substance of Plaintiff's RICO allegations.

HN5 To state a claim for damages under RICO, a plaintiff must satisfy two distinct pleading burdens. Moss v. Morgan Stanley, 719 F.2d 5, 17 \(2d Cir. 1983\), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1025, 104 S. Ct. 1280, 79 L. Ed. 2d 684 (1984). First, she must allege that the defendant has violated the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1962. Moss, 719 F.2d at 17. To do so, she must allege that the following seven RICO elements exist: "(1) that the defendant (2) through the commission of two or more acts (3) constituting a 'pattern' (4) of 'racketeering activity' (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (6) an 'enterprise' (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce." [*13] Moss, 719 F.2d at 17. See also 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(a\)-\(c\). Second, a plaintiff must allege that she was "'injured in her business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962.'" Moss, 719 F.2d at 17 (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\)). See also Terminate Control Corp. v. Horowitz, 28 F.3d 1335, 1344 \(2d Cir. 1994\); First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 767 \(2d Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 L. Ed. 2d 632, 115 S. Ct. 728 (1995).

HN6 Under RICO, "racketeering activity" is "any act 'chargeable' under several generically described state criminal laws, any act 'indictable' under numerous specific federal criminal provisions, including mail and wire fraud, and any 'offense' involving bankruptcy or securities fraud or drug-related activities that is 'punishable' under federal law." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 481-82, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 3277, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 \(1985\). The specific acts which qualify as racketeering activity are set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\). The statute defines a "pattern" of racketeering activity as at least two acts of racketeering activity occurring within a ten-year period. 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(5\). [*14] See also Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 n.14, 105 S. Ct. at 3285 n.14; Moss, 719 F.2d at 17. Significantly, "the two or more acts of racketeering activities must be criminal acts, and only certain criminal acts fall within the statute." Carlino v. Hammer, 91 Civ. 0466 \(KMW\), 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4927, *7 (S.D.N.Y. April 15, 1992). See also 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 \(1\) and \(5\).

An "enterprise" is defined as "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(4\). See also United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S. Ct. 2524, 2528, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246 \(1981\) ("The enterprise is an entity . . . a group of persons associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct."); Riverwoods Chappaqua Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank, N.A., 30 F.3d 339, 344 \(2d Cir. 1994\); Moss, 719 F.2d at 21-22. The existence of an enterprise "is proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit." Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583, 101 S. Ct. at 2528. Further, [*15] the enterprise must be connected to the pattern of racketeering activity. Id. at 583, 101 S. Ct. at 2528; Moss, 719 F.2d at 21. See also 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\).

In the instant case, it is readily apparent that Plaintiff's RICO claim fails under the standards of both Rules 8 and 12\(b\)\(6\), Fed. R. Civ. P., and should be dismissed with prejudice. First, Plaintiff has failed to allege that the AP has engaged in a "pattern" of "racketeering activity" as contemplated by the RICO statute. The only act Defendant is alleged to have committed consists of refusing to disseminate Plaintiff's views. This act, however, is legal and does not qualify as "racketeering activity." Cf. Carlino, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4927 (complaint dismissed where plaintiffs alleged that defendants filed baseless charges of unfair labor practices, since those acts were neither criminal nor sufficient to qualify as "racketeering activity").² Moreover, Plaintiff alleges only a single act, rather than the minimum of two, as required by the statute. See McLaughlin v. Anderson, 962 F.2d 187, 194 \(2d Cir. 1992\).

[*16] Further, other than through vague and conclusory allegations of conspiracy,³ Plaintiff has failed to plead any facts which infer that Defendant is engaged in an "enterprise" as defined by the statute, i.e., an ongoing organization which is engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity. Cf. Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 25-26 n.4 \(2d Cir. 1990\) (court affirms dismissal of RICO conspiracy claim under Rule 8, where alleged facts do not imply any agreement involving each of the defendants to commit at least two predicate acts, or knowledge that those acts were part of a pattern of racketeering).

[*17] Finally, Plaintiff has neither alleged, nor can she plausibly assert, as is required under 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\), that she has suffered an injury to her property or business as a result of Defendant's racketeering activity. See Town of West Hartford v. Operation Rescue, 915 F.2d 92, 103-04 \(2d Cir. 1990\) (rejecting plaintiff town's argument that injuries to its "ability to carry out its functions" falls within the ambit of section 1964\(c\)); Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assocs., Inc., 483 U.S. 143, 150, 107 S. Ct. 2759, 2764, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121 \(1987\). "Business or property" within the meaning of the statute refers to "commercial interests or enterprises." Town of West Hartford, 915 F.2d at 103. Since Plaintiff's only injury consists of being denied access to the AP to disseminate her personal views, it is clear that the harm she has suffered does not qualify as economic injury within the meaning of the statute.

In sum, Plaintiff has asserted only the most conclusory allegations about Defendant's "vested interest" in racketeering activities. She has failed to plead the existence of the essential elements of a RICO claim, nor could she. Plaintiff had only a single [*18] encounter with Defendant and that incident in no way reflects or suggests either a single act or a pattern of racketeering activity, or the existence of a RICO "enterprise". Moreover, Plaintiff has not suffered any economic harm as a result of Defendant's conduct.⁴ I therefore recommend that Plaintiff's RICO claim be dismissed. Cf. Moss, 719 F.2d at 23 (affirming trial court's Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal of RICO claim, since defendant did not commit a predicate act under the RICO statute and plaintiff failed to allege a causal connection between his injury and defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct); Carlino, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4927,  6-7 (dismissal under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) is warranted when complaint fails to allege racketeering activity); Behette v.

² Because Plaintiff did not suffer any injury as a result of a predicate racketeering act by Defendant, she also lacks standing under RICO. See Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 25 \(2d Cir. 1990\) (plaintiff found to lack standing because act of discharging an employee was not predicate racketeering act; "standing may be founded only upon injury from overt acts that are also section 1961 predicate acts, and not upon any and all overt acts furthering a RICO conspiracy.").

³ Plaintiff apparently believes that a conspiracy against "whistleblower" teachers exists between the New York City Board of Education, the United Federation of Teachers and the New York City Corporation Counsel's Office. See Complaint PP 4, 7. Conclusory allegations of conspiracy are insufficient to survive a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss. See San Filippo v. U.S. Trust Co. of New York, 737 F.2d 246, 256 \(2d Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1035, 105 S. Ct. 1408, 84 L. Ed. 2d 797 \(1985\); Ostrer v. Aronwald, 567 F.2d 551 \(2d Cir. 1977\) (per curiam); Srubar v. Rudd, Rosenberg, Mitofsky & Hollender, 875 F. Supp. 155, 159 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\).

⁴ I note that Plaintiff was suspended from her job as a teacher many years before the incident with Defendant which is described in the Complaint. Any economic harm Plaintiff suffered as a result of losing her employment is unconnected to the harm she is alleged to have suffered as a result of Defendant's failure to listen to or print her story, and was the subject of separate litigation, initiated almost twenty years ago, against the New York City Board of Education and various psychiatrists. See, e.g., Newman v. Board of Education of City School Dist. of New York, 594 F.2d 299 \(2d Cir. 1979\); Newman v. Board of Education of City School Dist. of New York, 508 F.2d 277 \(2d Cir. 1974\); Newman v. deSola Pool, No. 78 Civ. 1088, LEXIS GENFED Library, DIST File \(S.D.N.Y. June 1, 1979\).

Saleeby, 842 F. Supp. 657, 661 \(E.D.N.Y. 1994\) (dismissing plaintiff's RICO claim under Rule 8 on the ground that the complaint did not allege specific facts showing the elements of a RICO claim).

[*19] III. Antitrust Claim

Plaintiff's Complaint alludes to antitrust law in two passing references. It suggests a basis for federal jurisdiction arising out of a "violation of Title 15 U.S.C. § 4 for illegal restraint of trade." (Complaint P 1.) Since pro se complaints are to be read liberally, this Court assumes that Plaintiff intended to invoke 15 U.S.C. § 15, section 4 of the Clayton Act. That statute provides a remedy to any person who has been injured in her business or property as a result of an antitrust violation.⁵ [*20] The Complaint further asserts that "defendant in its capacity as a commercial disseminator of information is under a duty as a licensee of utilizes⁶ [sic] in the nature of a monopoly for that purpose not to deprive plaintiff of her right to freedom of speech." (Complaint P 5.) These are the Complaint's total allegations making reference to antitrust law or terminology.

Viewed liberally and in the only way that makes sense, the Complaint merely characterizes the AP as a monopoly, and accuses it of depriving Plaintiff of her freedom of speech. This is simply a variation of Plaintiff's First Amendment claim, which has already been addressed, supra, pages 5-8. There can be little question that the Complaint fails to state a claim under the antitrust laws and that any such claim would be frivolous.

As a threshold matter, based upon the facts alleged and any reasonable inferences that can be drawn from them, Plaintiff lacks standing to assert any antitrust claims. Like the RICO statute, the Clayton Act, which permits private suits based on antitrust violations, is meant to remedy economic injury. See Agency Holding Corp., 483 U.S. at 150, 107 S. Ct. at 2764; Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 338-343, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 2330-2333, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 \(1979\) (discussing injury to business and property as requiring some pecuniary, rather than personal, injury). Further, "it is now [*21] well settled that HN8[[↑]] in order to have standing to prosecute private antitrust claims, plaintiffs must show more than that the defendants' conduct caused them an [economic] injury." Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 797 \(2d Cir. 1994\). The economic injury must be "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\). Those suffering derivative injuries, not within the sector of the economy directly affected by a defendant's anticompetitive practices, lack antitrust standing. See G.K.A. Beverage Corp. v. Honickman, No. 94-7200, 55 F.3d 762, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 13556, * 10 \(2d Cir. June 1, 1995\).

In this action, Plaintiff has not alleged, nor can she, that she sustained any economic injury flowing from Defendant's conduct (not to mention conduct that is proscribed by the antitrust laws). She claims only a deprivation of her constitutional rights resulting from the AP's [*22] refusal to publish her personal views. As noted above, any economic harm that Plaintiff may have suffered would have been as a result of having been terminated as a teacher many years before the incident in issue occurred. The AP is not even alleged to have played any role in those events.

Any antitrust claim must fail for other obvious reasons as well. Plaintiff has failed to identify any anticompetitive activity by Defendant, either in the form of a per se violation of the Sherman Act (through such activity as price-fixing, tying arrangements or group boycotts), see, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 1; Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 542-43 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, U.S. , 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 \(1993\), or under the rule of reason, which at a minimum, requires the identification of a relevant market and an adverse effect on competition in that market. Id.; see also North Jersey Secretarial School v. McKiernan, 713 F.

⁵ HN7[[↑]] 15 U.S.C. § 15 provides in relevant part: "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the cost of suit, including reasonable attorney's fees."

⁶ The Court assumes that Plaintiff intends this word to be "utilities."

Supp. 577, 583 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (dismissing plaintiff's complaint where it did not sufficiently define the relevant product market or the effect of the allegedly unlawful agreement on the market). She has [*23] also failed to identify any agreement or concerted action in restraint of trade between the AP and another distinct economic entity in restraint of trade. See, e.g., Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2740, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984); Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542; Heart Disease Research Found. v. GMC, 463 F.2d 98, 100 (2d Cir. 1972) (a bare bones statement of conspiracy or of injury under the antitrust laws without any supporting facts permits dismissal). In addition, she has failed to identify any anticompetitive conduct by the AP which threatens monopolization. See 15 U.S.C. § 2; Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767-68, 104 S. Ct. at 2739-40; Triple M Roofing Corp. v. Tremco, Inc., 753 F.2d 242, 246 (2d Cir. 1985). In short, other than alluding to the antitrust laws as one of many bases for her claims against the AP, Plaintiff has failed to plead any of the basic elements of an antitrust claim and, based upon the facts alleged, any such claim would be frivolous.

In conclusion, I recommend that Plaintiff's antitrust claim be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P., for failure to state a claim upon which [*24] relief may be granted. Not only does Plaintiff's Complaint fail to conform with the pleading requirements of Rule 8, Fed. R. Civ. P., but the facts upon which the Complaint is predicated cannot possibly sustain a claim for antitrust violations.

IV. Dismissal with Prejudice

Although it is apparent that Plaintiff's claims against Defendant should be dismissed, the question remains whether dismissal should be with or without prejudice. In general, plaintiffs whose pleadings are dismissed for legal insufficiency should be offered at least one opportunity to replead. See, e.g., Ronzani v. Sanofi S.A., 899 F.2d 195, 198 (2d Cir. 1990); Cortec Industries, Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 48 (2d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, U.S. , 118 L. Ed. 2d 208, 112 S. Ct. 1561 (1992); Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 230, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962). However, the court has discretion to dismiss a complaint without granting leave to amend. See Hernandez, 18 F.3d at 138; McLaughlin, 962 F.2d at 195; Ronzani, 899 F.2d at 198; Kaster v. Modification Systems, Inc., 731 F.2d 1014, 1018 (2d Cir. 1984).

HN9 "Where a plaintiff is unable to allege any fact [*25] sufficient to support its claim, a complaint should be dismissed with prejudice." Cortec, 949 F.2d at 48-49 (affirming district court's dismissal with prejudice of one of plaintiff's 1933 Securities Act claims against defendant Westinghouse, on the ground that the undisputed facts revealed that Westinghouse could not possibly be liable to plaintiff for § 12(2) liability). See also Spain v. Ball, 928 F.2d 61, 62-63 (2d Cir. 1991) (Title VII and ADEA claims should have been dismissed with prejudice, since the plaintiff could not possibly allege facts sufficient to support either claim; those statutes do not apply to uniformed members of the armed services, and the plaintiff was applying for a uniformed position in the Navy); Greenwaldt v. Coughlin, 93 Civ. 6551 (LAP), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5144, *16 (S.D.N.Y. April 16, 1995) (pro se prisoner whose conspiracy claim was dismissed not granted leave to replead, since the prisoner had no protected interest at stake and thus could not possibly cure his pleading defect).

As discussed in detail above, Plaintiff has made only disjointed, rambling and conclusory allegations concerning the legal effect of a single event in which [*26] Defendant, the AP, expelled her from its reception area without listening to or printing her story. Her Complaint fails to state a claim under the First Amendment, or the RICO or antitrust statutes. Indeed, the facts pled by Plaintiff make it apparent that she lacks standing under RICO and the antitrust laws. Furthermore, in response to Defendant's motion to dismiss, Plaintiff submitted an Affirmation, dated June 13, 1994 and a Reply Affirmation, dated July 5, 1994. Although Plaintiff asserted that the facts on which she based her claims were clear, and she restated them, they remained essentially unchanged from those set forth in the Complaint and were accompanied by even more disjointed and conclusory allegations of fraud, prior restraint, and psychiatric racketeering. Since the underlying events in issue could not plausibly give rise to a federal cause of action, any amendment of the Complaint would be futile.⁷ I therefore recommend that the Complaint be dismissed with prejudice. Cf. In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig., 39 F.3d 395, 402 (2d Cir. 1994) (dismissal without leave to replead RICO claim not erroneous where amendment would be futile because of inability [*27] to satisfy RICO's proximate cause requirement); Town of West Hartford, 915 F.2d at 100-04 (plaintiff's RICO claims viewed as so insubstantial and implausible as to merit dismissal for want of jurisdiction); Hecht, 897 F.2d at 26 (because it would have made no difference in outcome if Plaintiff pleaded RICO conspiracy properly, Second Circuit declined to remand to give opportunity to move to amend complaint).

⁷ In addition, Plaintiff has failed to plead any facts which could even suggest the existence of any federally cognizable claim under the United Nations Charter.

CONCLUSION

For the above reasons, I respectfully recommend Defendant's motion to dismiss the action pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) be granted with prejudice. Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(C\) and Rule 72\(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the parties shall have ten days from service of this Report to file written objections. See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 6\(a\) and \(e\). Such objections shall be filed with the Clerk [*28] of the Court, with extra copies delivered to the chambers of the Honorable Peter K. Leisure, U.S.D.J., and to the chambers of the undersigned, Room 1660. Any requests for an extension of time for filing objections must be directed to Judge Leisure. Objections that are not filed on time will be waived for purposes of appeal. Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 106 S. Ct. 466, 88 L. Ed. 2d 435 \(1985\), reh'g denied, 474 U.S. 1111, 106 S. Ct. 899, 88 L. Ed. 2d 933 \(1986\); Frank v. Johnson, 968 F.2d 298, 300 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1038, 121 L. Ed. 2d 696, 113 S. Ct. 825 \(1992\); Small v. Secretary of Health & Human Servs., 892 F.2d 15, 16 \(2d Cir. 1989\).

Dated: July 28, 1995

New York, New York

Respectfully submitted,

Theodore H. Katz

United States Magistrate Judge

End of Document

CENTURY SHOPPING CTR. FUND I v. MALONE & HYDE, INC.

Court of Appeals of Wisconsin, District One

August 1, 1995, Released

No. 94-2922

Reporter

1995 Wisc. App. LEXIS 943 *; 197 Wis. 2d 117; 541 N.W.2d 838; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,149

T.C. #88-CV-018071 CENTURY SHOPPING CENTER FUND I, a Wisconsin Limited Partnership, by its general partner, Century Capital Group, and CENTURY MANAGEMENT GROUP, LTD., a Wisconsin corporation, Plaintiffs-Joint-Appellants, v. MALONE & HYDE, INC., a Delaware Corporation, as successor in interest to Godfrey Company, Inc., JOSEPH A. CRIVELLO and CRIVELLO PROPERTIES, a General Partnership, Defendants-Respondents. MARQUETTE PHARMACY, INC., a Wisconsin Corporation, SUSAN L. KULINSKI, d/b/a Oak Creek Book Exchange, a Sole Proprietorship, RONALD J. and MARGARET S. ENTRINGER, d/b/a Oak Creek Homestyle Laundry and Cleaners, a Wisconsin General Partnership, Plaintiffs-Joint-Appellants, v. MALONE & HYDE, INC., a Delaware Corporation, JOSEPH A. CRIVELLO and CRIVELLO PROPERTIES, a General Partnership, Defendants-Respondents. RONALD P. HUNTLEY, as and only as Trustee in Bankruptcy of HOWELL PLAZA, INC., Plaintiff-Joint-Appellant, v. MALONE & HYDE, INC., a Delaware Corporation, Defendant-Respondent.

Notice: [*1] UNPUBLISHED LIMITED PRECEDENT OPINION - REFER TO LOCAL RULE 809.23(1)(B)5, STATS.

Prior History: APPEAL from orders of the circuit court for Milwaukee County: JOHN E. MCCORMICK, Judge.

Disposition: Reversed.

Core Terms

alleges, lease, discovery, shopping center, monopolize, conspiracy, trial court, trial court's dismissal, conspired, space, relevant market, predecessors, tenant, unfair competition, supermarket, indirectly, damages, destroy, amicus, pattern of racketeering activity, trade association, food store, Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, privileges, Antitrust, documents, predicate, retail

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Facts alleged in a complaint must be taken as true, and a claim should be dismissed as legally insufficient only if it is quite clear that under no conditions can the plaintiff recover. Whether a complaint states a claim is a question of law that the appellate court decides independently of the trial court's determination.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN2 [down] Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

Absent extraordinary circumstances, a final appellate decision in a lawsuit is the law of the case for all subsequent proceedings in that action.

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Partners > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN3 [down] Vicarious Liability, Partners

One who intentionally and improperly interferes with the performance of a contract (except a contract to marry) between another and a third person by inducing or otherwise causing the third person not to perform the contract, is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss resulting to the other from the failure of the third person to perform the contract.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action > General Overview

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Partners > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Authorized Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN4 [down] Management Duties & Liabilities, Causes of Action

A partner is liable for the wrongful acts of his or her partners.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN5 [down] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

See Wis. Stat. § 134.01.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN6 [down] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

Wis. Stat. § 134.01 gives rise to a civil claim for damages by those injured by a conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN7 [down] Amendment of Pleadings, Relation Back

See Wis. R. Civ. P. 802.09(3), Wis. Stat. § 802.09\(3\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

An instance where the result of antitrust law and unfair competition law enforcement may not conflict is when a firm with substantial market power, perhaps approaching that of a monopoly, uses unfair competition to augment its position by eliminating a rival concern from the market. But it is the elimination of the competition, by fair means or foul, that is the concern of the antitrust law, and it is only the unfair method on which the law of unfair competition focuses.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN9 [down] Conspiracy, Elements

A plaintiff who suffers damages as the result of a combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish some unlawful purpose or to accomplish by unlawful means some purpose not in itself unlawful has a claim sounding in conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 [down] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Wis. Stat. § 133.03.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN11 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

See Wis. Stat. § 133.18\(1\)\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN12 [down] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The court interprets Wis. Stat. § 133.03\(1\) in accordance with the federal courts' interpretation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN13 [blue arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Allegations that defendants conspired or combined to engage in acts of unfair competition with intent to injure or to destroy the plaintiff as a competitor constitute allegations of an antitrust violation under Wis. Stat. § 133.03\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN14 [blue arrow] Clayton Act, Penalties

See Wis. Stat. § 133.03\(2\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > State Regulation

HN15 [blue arrow] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The court interprets Wis. Stat. § 133.03\(2\) in accordance with the federal court's interpretation of its Sherman Antitrust Act counterpart, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN16 [blue arrow] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

The focus of Wis. Stat. § 133.03\(2\) (§ 133.03\(2\)) is monopolization by predatory or anticompetitive conduct combined with specific intent to achieve monopoly power. Attempted monopolization in violation of § 133.03\(2\) requires, in addition, that there be a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN17 [blue download icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act (Act), Wis. Stat. §§ 946..80 to 946.88, is patterned after the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, and the court is guided by pertinent federal authority interpreting that statute. For the purposes of a private plaintiff seeking damages resulting from the violation of the Act, the Act has three main components: the section describing the activities prohibited by the Act, Wis. Stat. § 946.83; the section defining the terms of art used in the Act, Wis. Stat. § 946.82; and the provision permitting recovery of damages, Wis. Stat. § 946.87\(4\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Racketeering > General Overview

HN18 [blue download icon] Criminal Offenses, Racketeering

See Wis. Stat. § 946.83.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Racketeering > General Overview

HN19 [blue download icon] Criminal Offenses, Racketeering

See Wis. Stat. § 946.82.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN20 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

See Wis. Stat. § 946.87\(4\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Racketeering > General Overview

HN21 [blue download icon] Criminal Offenses, Racketeering

Defendants violate the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, Wis. Stat. §§ 946.80 to 946.88, if they knowingly use, directly or indirectly, proceeds derived directly or indirectly from a pattern of racketeering activity to acquire any title to, or any right, interest, or equity in, real property or in the establishment or operation of any enterprise, Wis. Stat. § 946.83\(1\); acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise or real property through a pattern of racketeering activity, Wis. Stat. § 946.83\(2\); or as employees or associates of any enterprise conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, Wis. Stat. § 946.83\(3\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Racketeering > General Overview

HN22 [L] Criminal Offenses, Racketeering

The crimes that constitute racketeering activity are listed in Wis. Stat. § 946.82\(4\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Racketeering > General Overview

HN23 [L] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

As long as the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, Wis. Stat. §§ 946.80 to 946.88, is been violated it is sufficient for a plaintiff to allege injury flowing from the predicate offenses rather than a racketeering injury. Further, general factual allegations of injury suffice at the preliminary stage because on a motion to dismiss the court presumes that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Governance > Record Inspection & Maintenance > General Overview

HN24 [L] Corporate Governance, Record Inspection & Maintenance

See Wis. Stat. § 133.12.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Miscellaneous Offenses > General Overview

HN25 [L] Criminal Offenses, Miscellaneous Offenses

See Wis. Stat. § 180.0129.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > False Pretenses > General Overview

HN26 [L] Fraud, False Pretenses

See Wis. Stat. § 943.39\(1\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Destruction of Property > General Overview

HN27 [L] Miscellaneous Offenses, Destruction of Property

See Wis. Stat. § 943.01.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Relevance of Discoverable Information

HN28 [L] Discovery, Relevance of Discoverable Information

As with its federal counterpart, Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b), Wis. R. Civ. P. 804.01(2)(a), Wis. Stat. § 804.01\(2\)\(a\) (Rule 804.01(2)(a)), is an expansive grant of pre-trial discovery. Anything that is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action is fair game even though what is sought to be discovered would not itself be admissible at trial if discovery appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Rule 804.01(2)(a). As long as these requisites are met, the hoary cry of fishing expedition is not a valid objection.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN29 [+] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Although there is, of course, a broad right under the First Amendment and its Wisconsin equivalent to petition government and participate in judicial proceedings, that right does not immunize illegal activity when the petitioning of government or the participation in judicial proceedings is a mere sham designed to cloak and advance illegal activity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN30 [+] Discovery, Privileged Communications

Wis. R. Civ. P. 804.01(2)(a), Wis. Stat. § 804.01\(2\)\(a\), permits discovery of any matter, not privileged. Statutory privileges are to be strictly and narrowly construed.

Judges: Before Wedemeyer, P.J., Sullivan and Fine, JJ.

Opinion by: FINE

Opinion

FINE, J. This is an appeal from the trial court's dismissal of consolidated actions brought against what this opinion refers to as the Sentry defendant--the successor to the entities that owned the anchor tenant in the Howell Plaza Shopping Center in Oak Creek, Wisconsin, a Sentry food store. One action was brought by the former owner and manager of Howell Plaza and by former tenants in the Howell Plaza shopping center. We refer to these parties as the "Century plaintiffs," and to their complaint as the "Century complaint." The Century plaintiffs also sued the Crivello defendants, developers of Oak Creek Centre, a shopping center across the street from Howell Plaza.¹ The other action, against the Sentry defendant only, was brought by the trustee-in-bankruptcy of Howell Plaza's developer and current owner. The trial court dismissed the complaints and precluded Century from pursuing [*2] certain discovery. We reverse.

I. The complaints.

A. Standard of review.

HN1[] Facts alleged in a complaint must be taken as true, and "a claim should be dismissed as legally insufficient only if 'it is quite clear that under no conditions can the plaintiff recover.'" Morgan v. Pennsylvania Gen. Ins. Co., 87 Wis.2d 723, 731, 275 N.W.2d 660, 664 (1979) (citation omitted). Unfortunately, the trial court ignored this paradigm. In any event, whether a complaint states a claim is a question of law that we decide independently of the trial court's determination. See Williams v. Security Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 120 Wis.2d 480, 482, 355 N.W.2d 370, 372 (Ct. App. 1984).

B. The claims.

The complaints filed by the various plaintiffs allege claims that are either identical or similar to each other, [*3] or are overlapping. For simplicity of discussion, we analyze the separate claims seriatim.

1. The Century plaintiffs allege that the Sentry food store owner breached its anchor-tenant lease. This claim had been dismissed previously, but the dismissal was reversed by this court in Century Shopping Center Fund I v. Crivello, 156 Wis.2d 227, 233-237, 456 N.W.2d 858, 861-863 (Ct. App. 1990). The supreme court denied review. 461 N.W.2d 444 (1990) (Table). The Sentry defendant argues, and the trial court agreed, that the breach-of-lease issue could be revisited because the supreme court partially overruled Century Shopping Center Fund in Sampson Investments v. Jondex Corp., 176 Wis.2d 55, 69-70, 499 N.W.2d 177, 183 (1993). We disagree.

Sampson Investments explained that the lease clause in Century Shopping Center Fund was different than the lease clause in Sampson Investments:

Although the court of appeals, in Century, required a commercial lessee to continuously operate a retail food market, the lease at issue in Century is distinguishable from the lease at issue in the present case. The lease in Century[*4] provided that the premises "shall be used as a retail food market and allied operation." The provision at issue in Century, however, differs from the provision at issue in the present case which contains the word "only." Furthermore, while the commercial lessee in Century was not permitted to sublet the premises without the lessor's written consent, Jondex possesses an unfettered right to sublet[,] which is inconsistent with a continuous operation clause. Additionally, the lease in Century contained a percentage-of-gross-receipts as part of the rent component while the lease at issue in the present case provided for a flat-rate monthly rent. These distinctions render the Century case inapposite to the present case.

Sampson Investments, 176 Wis.2d at 69-70, 499 N.W.2d at 183 (footnote omitted). Nevertheless, Sampson Investments opined that the legal analysis in Century Shopping Center Fund was flawed, and overruled the decision "to the extent it contradicts the law as expressed herein." Id., 176 Wis.2d at 70, 499 N.W.2d at 183.

HN2[] Absent extraordinary circumstances, a final appellate decision in a lawsuit is the law of [*5] the case for all subsequent proceedings in that action. Univest Corp. v. General Split Corp., 148 Wis.2d 29, 38-39, 435 N.W.2d 234, 237-238 (1989) (doctrine may be disregarded "when 'cogent, substantial, and proper reasons exist'") (citation omitted); cf. Schauer v. DeNeveu Homeowners Assoc., No. 93-2459, slip op. at 11-14 (Wis. June 20, 1995) (RULE 806.07(1)(f), STATS., does not permit trial court to reopen judgment because caselaw relied upon in rendering judgment has been overruled in an unrelated proceeding). Although Sampson Investments criticized the analysis in Century Shopping Center Fund in connection with whether a lease clause requires a tenant to continually operate its business, it did not opine that the result in Century Shopping Center Fund was wrong. Accordingly, we see no reason to depart from the general rule--Century Shopping Center Fund's decision on the breach-of-lease issue is the law of the case here.

¹ The action against Frank P. Crivello and Crivello Investments has been stayed pursuant to § 362 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, as the result of their filing under Chapter 11 of the Code.

The breach-of-contract count also asserts claims other than the clause required Sentry to continuously operate a food store at Howell Plaza. The trial court's written decision did not address these [*6] claims. We do. First, the count alleges that the Sentry defendant intentionally destroyed property in its Howell Plaza space, thereby violating the lease provision that required Sentry to surrender the premises at the end of the lease term "in the same condition in which they were at the commencement of said term, reasonable use and wear thereof, and damage by accidental fire or the elements excepted." Second, the count asserts that Sentry secretly assigned to the Crivello defendants effective control to whom Sentry could sublease its space, in violation of a clause in the lease that provided that the lease "shall not be assigned in any way" by Sentry "nor shall the leased premises be subleased in whole or in part without the written consent" of Howell Plaza. These averments state claims. The trial court's dismissal of the breach-of-lease count is reversed.

2. The Century plaintiffs allege that Joseph A. Crivello, a partner in Crivello Properties, tortiously interfered with Century's contract rights in connection with Howell Plaza's lease with Sentry. The classic summary of what constitutes tortious interference with contract rights is in RESTATEMENT \(SECOND\) OF TORTS § 766 (1979):

HN3 [*7]

One who intentionally and improperly interferes with the performance of a contract (except a contract to marry) between another and a third person by inducing or otherwise causing the third person not to perform the contract, is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss resulting to the other from the failure of the third person to perform the contract.

This formulation is the law in this state. Charolais Breeding Ranches, Ltd. v. FPC Securities Corp., 90 Wis.2d 97, 105-106, 279 N.W.2d 493, 497 \(Ct. App. 1979\). HN4 A partner is liable for the wrongful acts of his or her partners. Sections 178.10 and 178.12, STATS. The Century complaint alleges sufficiently that the Crivello partnership acting through partner Frank P. Crivello induced Sentry to violate its contract with Howell Plaza. The trial court's dismissal of the tortious-interference-with-contract claim against Joseph A. Crivello is reversed.

3. The Century plaintiffs allege that the Sentry defendant conspired to injure Century's "reputation, trade and business," and the Howell Plaza trustee alleges that Frank P. Crivello and the Sentry defendant entered into a similar conspiracy to injure [*8] Howell Plaza, Inc., in its business, all in violation of § 134.01, STATS. HN5 Section 134.01 provides that: "Any 2 or more persons who shall combine, associate, agree, mutually undertake or concert together for the purpose of wilfully or maliciously injuring another in his or her reputation, trade, business or profession by any means whatever ... shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year or by fine not exceeding $ 500." HN6 This statute gives rise to a civil claim for damages by those injured by the conspiracy. Radue v. Dill, 74 Wis.2d 239, 244-245, 246 N.W.2d 507, 510-511 \(1976\).

The complaints allege that the Sentry defendant agreed with Crivello to cripple Howell Plaza and destroy Howell Plaza's business, and that, pursuant to that agreement, the Sentry defendant, among other things, destroyed Howell Plaza property, violated its lease agreement to operate a food store in Howell Plaza, gave Crivello effective control over to whom the Sentry defendant could sublet its Howell Plaza space, and that the Sentry defendant refused to relinquish its space at Howell Plaza once it moved to the Oak Creek Centre, thereby preventing Howell Plaza from getting [*9] another anchor tenant. These allegations sufficiently assert that the conspiracy was to harm Howell Plaza; they thus state a claim under § 134.01, STATS. See Maleki v. Fine-Lando Clinic Chartered, S.C., 162 Wis.2d 73, 86-88, 469 N.W.2d 629, 634-635 \(1991\) ("malice" requirement in § 134.01 means that all parties to conspiracy intended to do harm). The trial court's dismissal of the claims predicated on § 134.01 is reversed.²

² The trial court dismissed the claim under § 134.01, STATS., because it believed that the violation of an underlying legal right was required (relying on our statement in Century Shopping Center Fund I v. Crivello, 156 Wis.2d 227, 239, 456 N.W.2d 858, 864 \(Ct. App. 1990\), that there is no violation of § 134.01 "unless a legal right has been invaded") and that Howell Plaza had no

[*10] 4. The Century plaintiffs allege that Crivello defamed them by telling a Howell Plaza tenant that "Century is a real estate group and is a risky venture," that the "Century management group is bankrupt," and that the tenant "should really go with someone more stable" as a shopping center landlord. These statements are capable of a defamatory meaning and are actionable per se. See Ridgeway State Bank v. Bird, 185 Wis. 418, 426, 202 N.W. 170, 173 \(1925\). Further, the complaint sufficiently avers that the statements were part of the alleged conspiracy between Crivello and the Sentry defendant to destroy Howell Plaza so as to make the Sentry defendant liable for the defamation even though it did commit the tort directly. See Segall v. Hurwitz, 114 Wis.2d 471, 481, 339 N.W.2d 333, 338 \(Ct. App. 1983\). Moreover, although the defamation claim was asserted in an amended Century pleading beyond the applicable two-year statute of limitations, § 893.57, STATS., Century's original complaint was filed within the two-year period, and the defendants have not explained why the relation-back provisions of § 802.09\(3\), STATS., do not apply.³ The trial court's dismissal of [*11] the defamation claim is reversed.

5. The Century plaintiffs allege that the Sentry defendant and Crivello engaged in "unfair competition." We are puzzled by this stand-alone [*12] count because we are unaware of any Wisconsin authority, and the parties have cited none, sanctioning in this context a legally cognizable claim for "unfair competition" as such, absent an impairment on some other right or interest. Indeed, "unfair competition is still competition," and restraints on competition, fair or unfair, may run counter to the core free-market-place rationale underlying the anti-trust laws. See Northwest Power Products, Inc. v. Omark Industries, Inc., 576 F.2d 83, 88-90 \(5th Cir. 1978\) (absent anti-competitive effect, allegations that "unfair" methods were used to eliminate a competitor does not state a cognizable claim under the Sherman Antitrust Act), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75, 99 S. Ct. 1021. Giving Century's complaint the benefit of every reasonable inference, as we must, we read the "unfair competition" count to refer to the other, more specific allegations of injury that have been well-pleaded. See id., 576 F.2d at 89.⁴ Accordingly, we reverse the trial court's dismissal of the "unfair competition" count.

legal right to compel the Sentry defendant to operate a food store at the shopping center. Our statement in Century Shopping Center Fund, however, was predicated on our holding to that effect in Maleki v. Fine-Lando Clinic Chartered, S.C., 154 Wis.2d 471, 481-486, 453 N.W.2d 208, 212-214 \(Ct. App. 1990\). The supreme court overruled our decision in Maleki on this point. Maleki v. Fine-Lando Clinic Chartered, S.C., 162 Wis.2d 73, 91-95, 469 N.W.2d 629, 636-638 \(1991\). The supreme court's decision in Maleki thus also overruled, sub silentio, its own decision on this point in Cranston v. Bluhm, 33 Wis.2d 192, 198-200, 147 N.W.2d 337, 340-341 \(1967\), which it did not cite and which held that a conspiracy claim based on the closing of a theater for six months was properly dismissed when there was "no affirmative requirement in the lease that the theatre [sic] be operated at least six months in any lease year."

³ HNT RULE 802.09(3), STATS., provides:

RELATION BACK OF AMENDMENTS. If the claim asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the transaction, occurrence, or event set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading, the amendment relates back to the date of the filing of the original pleading. An amendment changing the party against whom a claim is asserted relates back if the foregoing provision is satisfied and, within the period provided by law for commencing the action against such party, the party to be brought in by amendment has received such notice of the institution of the action that he or she will not be prejudiced in maintaining a defense on the merits, and knew or should have known that, but for a mistake concerning the identity of the proper party, the action would have been brought against such party.

⁴ As Northwest Power Products explains:

HN8 "An instance where the result of antitrust law and unfair competition law enforcement may not conflict is when a firm with substantial market power, perhaps approaching that of a monopoly, uses unfair competition to augment its position by eliminating a rival concern from the market. But it is the elimination of the competition, by fair means or foul, that is the concern of the antitrust law, and it is only the unfair method on which the law of unfair competition focuses."

Id., 576 F.2d at 89 (emphasis added). See also Grams v. Boss, 97 Wis.2d 332, 347, 294 N.W.2d 473, 481 \(1980\) ("Allegations that the defendants conspired or combined to engage in acts of unfair competition with intent to injure or destroy the plaintiff as a competitor" state an antitrust-violation claim under § 133.03\(1\), STATS.).

[*13] 6. The Century plaintiffs allege that the Sentry defendant and Crivello, together with "the other co-conspirators" engaged in a common-law conspiracy. HN9 A plaintiff who suffers damages as the result of a "combination of two or more persons by some concerted action to accomplish some unlawful purpose or to accomplish by unlawful means some purpose not in itself unlawful" has a claim sounding in conspiracy. Radue v. Dill, 74 Wis.2d at 241, 246 N.W.2d at 509; see also Cranston v. Bluhm, 33 Wis.2d 192, 198, 147 N.W.2d 337, 340 (1967). Century's complaint alleges that among the methods Crivello and the Sentry defendant used to harm Howell Plaza was the unlawful destruction of Howell Plaza's property. This is sufficient to state a claim for conspiracy under the Radue formulation, and the trial court's dismissal of the conspiracy claim is reversed.

7. The Century plaintiffs and the Howell Plaza trustee allege that the Sentry defendant and Crivello conspired to restrain trade and commerce in violation of § 133.03\(1\), STATS. This provision, which tracks section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, declares: HN10 "Every contract, combination in the form of [*14] trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal." HN11 "Any person injured, directly or indirectly," by a violation of § 133.03\(1\) "shall recover threefold the damages sustained by the person and the cost of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees." Section 133.18\(1\)\(a\), STATS. HN12 We interpret § 133.03\(1\) in accordance with the federal courts' interpretation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Independent Milk Producers Co-op v. Stoffel, 102 Wis.2d 1, 6, 298 N.W.2d 102, 104 (Ct. App. 1980).

HN13 "Allegations that the defendants conspired or combined to engage in acts of unfair competition with intent to injure or to destroy the plaintiff as a competitor" "constitute [allegations of] an antitrust violation" under § 133.03\(1\), STATS. Grams v. Boss, 97 Wis.2d 332, 347, 294 N.W.2d 473, 481 (1980). The Century complaint's allegations in support of this claim are abundant. The only question is whether there must be an allegation of an anti-competitive effect, or whether a per se rule applies. See id., 97 Wis.2d at 348, 294 N.W.2d at 481.⁵ As with the situation in Grams, 97 Wis.2d at 351, 294 N.W.2d at 483, we need [*15] not decide whether application of the per se rule here is appropriate because the Century complaint amply alleges the anti-competitive effects of the alleged conspiracy.

[*16] The Century complaint identifies a relevant market for grocery and related products, which, for the purposes of the appeal, the Sentry defendant does not challenge, and alleges that the Sentry defendant, as the anchor tenant in Howell Plaza was serving that market. The complaint also alleges that Crivello's Oak Creek Centre was seeking a supermarket similar to Sentry but decided that it would be in its interest if there were only one, rather than two, supermarkets serving that market, and that Crivello conspired with the Sentry defendant to have Sentry move to Oak Creek Centre and, significantly, to prevent Howell Plaza from replacing Sentry. Thus, according to the facts alleged in the complaint, the defendants saw to it that a second supermarket could not operate in what is alleged to be the relevant market. Whether or not these allegations can be proved at a trial, or whether or not they can survive

⁵ The per se doctrine is a broad-bladed sword, unable to make distinctions with any precision. It is pressed into service by the dual engine of instinct and necessity. It spares victims of presumed inherently pernicious practices the burden of demonstrating the market impact of those practices, which would be required under the so-called "rule of reason," because adverse market impact is assumed. See Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 7-8, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979); Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). Membership criteria for this club of convenience, however, is strict: the practice must threaten the "central nervous system of the economy." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224 n.59, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940). As we have already noted, the antitrust laws protect competition not competitors. See Northwest Power Products, Inc. v. Omak Industries, Inc., 576 F.2d 83, 88-90 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75, 99 S. Ct. 1021; Mid-West Underground Storage, Inc. v. Porter, 717 F.2d 493, 497 (10th Cir. 1983). The per se rule's rationale has weakened as markets have expanded and the tools with which to compete in those market have become more efficient. Frank H. Easterbrook, The Limits of Antitrust, 63 Tex. L. Rev. 1, 19 (1984). Accordingly, there has been a retrenchment from the rigidity of the per se rule, see, e.g., National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984); Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); Independent Milk Producers Co-op v. Stoffel, 102 Wis.2d 1, 10-11, 298 N.W.2d 102, 106 (Ct. App. 1980), and calls for permitting the forces of free-market dynamics to assume the greater regulatory burden, Easterbrook, 63 Tex. L. Rev. at 29.

a motion for summary judgment, they certainly state a claim under § 133.03\(1\), STATS. See Grams, 97 Wis.2d at 352-353, 294 N.W.2d at 483-484. The trial court's dismissal of the § 133.03\(1\) claims is reversed.⁶

[*17] 8. The Century plaintiffs allege that Frank P. Crivello monopolized and attempted to monopolize the relevant market for "retail strip mall supermarket space," that Frank P. Crivello and the Sentry defendant monopolized and attempted to monopolize the relevant market for groceries and related products, and that Frank P. Crivello and the Sentry defendant conspired to monopolize the relevant market for "retail strip mall supermarket space" and the relevant market for groceries and related products, all in violation of § 133.03\(2\), STATS. The Howell Plaza trustee alleges that the Sentry defendant attempted to monopolize the relevant market, and that Frank P. Crivello and the Sentry defendant conspired to monopolize that market, also all in violation of § 133.03\(2\). This provision, which tracks section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, declares: HN14[[↑]] "Every person who monopolizes, or attempts to monopolize, or combines or conspires with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of trade or commerce may be fined not more than $ 100,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 50,000, or be imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both." "Any person injured, directly [*18] or indirectly," by a violation of § 133.03\(2\) "shall recover threefold the damages sustained by the person and the cost of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees." Section 133.18\(1\)\(a\), STATS. As with § 133.03\(1\), STATS., HN15[[↑]] we interpret § 133.03\(2\) in accordance with the federal court's interpretation of its Sherman Act counterpart. See Grams, 97 Wis.2d at 346, 294 N.W.2d at 480.

HN16[[↑]] The focus of § 133.03\(2\), STATS., is monopolization by "predatory or anticompetitive conduct" combined with specific intent to achieve monopoly power. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. ___, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 257 \(1993\) (interpreting § 2 of the Sherman Act). Attempted monopolization in violation of § 133.03\(2\) requires, in addition, that there be a "dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Ibid.

Century's allegations are sufficient to state a claim under § 133.03\(2\), STATS. Century asserts that Frank P. Crivello and the Sentry defendant conspired to and did acts that would cripple Howell Plaza as a competing shopping center and that would prevent the location in Howell Plaza of a competing supermarket. Indeed, incorporated [*19] into the complaint is a letter by Frank P. Crivello to a potential source of financing for Oak Creek Centre. In that letter, Frank P. Crivello boasts of his pursuit of monopoly power as assisted by the Sentry defendant. He tells the financing source that the Sentry defendant has agreed to close its store in Howell Plaza, and "keep it dark." This, he predicts, "will cripple [Howell Plaza] and make it difficult for them to compete with me in the future." Further, he notes that the Sentry defendant can tie up its space ("keep it dark") in Howell Plaza for six years, and that this "will make the lease of our [non anchor-tenant] space extremely easy because we will be the dominant center without question." Additionally, Frank P. Crivello describes the result of his deal with the Sentry defendant as a "very neat play for us" because "we are not going to see competition pop up down the road in the way of another food store" inasmuch as "the other corners are already developed." Century alleges that Howell Plaza was forced into bankruptcy as a result of the defendants' predatory practices. This is a sufficient allegation of injury to pass muster under § 133.18\(1\)\(a\), STATS. The trial [*20] court's dismissal of the monopolization and attempted monopolization claims is reversed.

9. The Century plaintiffs allege that the Sentry defendant's predecessors and the Crivello defendants violated the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, §§ 946.80 to 946.88, STATS. HN17[[↑]] The Act was patterned after the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968, and we are guided by pertinent federal authority interpreting that statute. State v. Evers, 163 Wis.2d 725, 732, 472 N.W.2d 828, 831 \(Ct.

⁶ In its brief and on oral argument, the Sentry defendant focussed on Juster Associates v. City of Rutland, 901 F.2d 266 (2nd Cir. 1990), as, in the Sentry defendant's view, requiring affirmance of the trial court's dismissal of the antitrust claims. In Juster, a shopping center owner complained because the City of Rutland "subsidized or otherwise aided" the developers of a competing shopping center--thus increasing competition in the relevant market, id., 901 F.2d at 269; here, on the other hand, Century complains that the defendants have conspired to destroy, not help, a competitor--thus decreasing competition. Juster recognized that "increased competition and reduced profits resulting from an agreement between other parties does not constitute an antitrust injury." Ibid. Juster is wholly inapplicable.

App. 1991). For the purposes of a private plaintiff seeking damages resulting from the violation of the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, the Act has three main components: the section describing the activities prohibited by the Act, § 946.83, STATS.;⁷ [*21] the section defining the terms of art used in the Act, § 946.82, STATS.;⁸ [*22] and the provision permitting recovery of damages, § 946.87(4), STATS.⁹

⁷ HN18 [↑] Section 946.83, STATS., provides:

Prohibited activities. (1) No person who has received any proceeds with knowledge that they were derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity may use or invest, whether directly or indirectly, any part of the proceeds or the proceeds derived from the investment or use thereof in the acquisition of any title to, or any right, interest, or equity in, real property or in the establishment or operation of any enterprise.

(2) No person, through a pattern of racketeering activity, may acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise or real property.

(3) No person employed by, or associated with, any enterprise may conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity.

⁸ HN19 [↑] Section 946.82, STATS., provides:

Definitions. In ss. 946.80 to 946.88:

(1) "Commission of a crime" means being concerned in the commission of a crime under s. 939.05.

(2) "Enterprise" means any sole proprietorship, partnership, limited liability company, corporation, business trust, union organized under the laws of this state or other legal entity or any union not organized under the laws of this state, association or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. "Enterprise" includes illicit and licit enterprises and governmental and other entities.

(3) "Pattern of racketeering activity" means engaging in at least 3 incidents of racketeering activity that have the same or similar intents, results, accomplices, victims or methods of commission or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics, provided at least one of the incidents occurred after April 27, 1982 and that the last of the incidents occurred within 7 years after the first incident of racketeering activity. Acts occurring at the same time and place which may form the basis for crimes punishable under more than one statutory provision may count for only one incident of racketeering activity.

(4) "Racketeering activity" means any activity specified in 18 USC 1961 (1) in effect as of April 27, 1982 or the attempt, conspiracy to commit, or commission of any of the felonies specified in: chs. 161 and 945 and ss. 49.49, 134.05, 139.44 (1), 180.0129, 181.69, 184.09 (2), 185.825, 215.12, 221.17, 221.31, 221.39, 221.40, 551.41, 551.42, 551.43, 551.44, 553.41 (3) and (4), 553.52 (2), 940.01, 940.19 (3) to (6), 940.20, 940.203, 940.21, 940.30, 940.305, 940.31, 941.20 (2) and (3), 941.26, 941.28, 941.298, 941.31, 941.32, 943.01 (2), 943.012, 943.013, 943.02, 943.03, 943.04, 943.05, 943.06, 943.10, 943.20 (3) (b) to (d), 943.23 (1g), (1m), (1r), (2) and (3), 943.24 (2), 943.25, 943.27, 943.28, 943.30, 943.32, 943.34 (1) (b) and (c), 943.38, 943.39, 943.40, 943.41 (8) (b) and (c), 943.50 (4) (b) and (c), 943.60, 943.70, 944.21 (5) (c) and (e), 944.32, 944.33 (2), 944.34, 945.03, 945.04, 945.05, 945.08, 946.10, 946.11, 946.12, 946.13, 946.31, 946.32 (1), 946.48, 946.49, 946.61, 946.64, 946.65, 946.72, 946.76, 947.015, 948.05, 948.08, 948.12 and 948.30.

⁹ HN20 [↑] Section 946.87(4), STATS., provides, as material here:

Civil Remedies.

....

(4) Any person who is injured by reason of any violation of s. 946.83 or 946.85 has a cause of action for 2 times the actual damages sustained and, when appropriate, punitive damages. The person shall also recover attorney fees and costs of the investigation and litigation reasonably incurred. The defendant or any injured person may demand a trial by jury in any civil action brought under this section.

HN21[] Defendants violate the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act if they knowingly use, directly or indirectly, proceeds derived directly or indirectly "from a pattern of racketeering activity" to acquire "any title to, or any right, interest, or equity in, real property or in the establishment or operation of any enterprise," § 946.83\(1\), STATS.; "acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise or real property" "through a pattern of racketeering activity," § 946.83\(2\), STATS.; or as employees or associates of "any enterprise" "conduct or participate, [*23] directly or indirectly, in the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity," § 946.83\(3\), STATS. "Pattern of racketeering activity" means engaging in at least 3 incidents of racketeering activity that have the same or similar intents, results, accomplices, victims or methods of commission or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics, provided at least one of the incidents occurred after April 27, 1982 and that the last of the incidents occurred within 7 years after the first incident of racketeering activity." Section 946.82\(3\), STATS.

HN22[] The crimes that constitute "racketeering activity" are listed in § 946.82\(4\), STATS.

The Century plaintiffs sufficiently allege all the necessary elements to support its claim under the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act. First, as predicate crimes under § 946.82\(4\), STATS., the complaint alleges that the Sentry defendant's predecessors falsely reported to the Wisconsin Secretary of State that they did not conspire to restrain trade and monopolize the relevant market. Such false reports, if made, violate § 180.0129, STATS., and § 943.39\(1\), STATS., which are predicate offenses under the Act.¹⁰ [*26] See § 946.82\(4\), [*24] STATS. The complaint also alleges that the Sentry defendant's predecessors illegally destroyed Howell Plaza property, in violation of § 943.01, STATS., which is also a predicate offense under the Act. See § 946.82\(4\).¹¹ [*27] Second,

¹⁰ Section 133.12, STATS., requires every Wisconsin corporation, HN24[] "in its annual report filed with the secretary of state, [to] show whether it has entered into any contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce." HN25[] Section 180.0129, STATS., provides:

Penalty for false document. (1) A person may not sign a document with intent that it be delivered to the secretary of state for filing or deliver, or cause to be delivered, a document to the secretary of state for filing, if the person knows that the document is false in any material respect at the time of its delivery.

(2) Whoever violates this section may be fined not more than $ 10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 2 years or both.

HN26[] Section 943.39\(1\), STATS., provides:

Fraudulent writings. Whoever, with intent to injure or defraud, does any of the following is guilty of a Class D felony:

(1) Being a director, officer, manager, agent or employee of any corporation or limited liability company falsifies any record, account or other document belonging to that corporation or limited liability company by alteration, false entry or omission, or makes, circulates or publishes any written statement regarding the corporation or limited liability company which he or she knows is false[.]

¹¹ HN27[] Section 943.01, STATS., provides:

Damage to property. (1) Whoever intentionally causes damage to any physical property of another without the person's consent is guilty of a Class A misdemeanor.

(2) Any person violating sub. (1) under the following circumstances is guilty of a Class D felony:

(a) 1. In this paragraph, "highway" means any public way or thoroughfare, including bridges thereon, any roadways commonly used for vehicular traffic, whether public or private, any railroad, including street and interurban railways, and any navigable waterway or airport.

2. The property damaged is a vehicle or highway and the damage is of a kind which is likely to cause injury to a person or further property damage; or

(b) The property damaged belongs to a public utility or common carrier and the damage is of a kind which is likely to impair the services of the public utility or common carrier; or the Century plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that the Sentry defendant's predecessors, Crivello Properties, Joseph A. Crivello, and Frank P. Crivello violated § 946.83 in connection with their interest in Oak Creek Centre and the anchor-tenant space, see §§ 946.83\(1\) & \(2\), and that they participated in each other's affairs "through a pattern of racketeering activity," see § 946.83\(3\). The Century plaintiffs also sufficiently allege damage under the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control HN23¹² Act--as long as the Act has been violated it is sufficient for a plaintiff to allege injury flowing from the predicate offenses (here, alleged violations of §§ 180.0129, 943.01, and 943.39\(1\)) rather than a "racketeering injury." See Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 497, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985) (interpreting the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act). Further, "general factual allegations of injury" suffice at this stage because "on [*25] a motion to dismiss we presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim." NOW, Inc. v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 798, 803, 127 L. Ed. 2d 99, 107 (1994) (interpreting the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act) (citation omitted). The trial court's dismissal of the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act claim is reversed.¹²

II. Discovery.

On July 2, 1992, the Milwaukee law firm of O'Neil, Cannon & Hollman, S.C., attorneys for the Sentry defendant in this case, and the firm that represented one of the Sentry defendant's predecessors in Century Shopping Center Fund I v. Crivello, 156 Wis.2d 227, 456 N.W.2d 858 (Ct. App. 1990), filed motions with the supreme court for permission to submit amicus briefs in the then pending Sampson Investments case on behalf of the Wisconsin Merchants Federation and the Wisconsin Grocers Association, trade associations representing retailers in this state. The supreme court granted the motions on July 16, 1992, and a consolidated brief on behalf of the Federation and the Association was filed on August 4, 1992. The motions and the consolidated amicus brief filed with the [*28] supreme court argued that the court of appeals decision in Sampson Investments, which relied on Century Shopping Center Fund, see Sampson Investments v. Jondex, Nos. 91-0297, 91-0957, slip op. at 5 (Wis. Ct. App. Jan. 10, 1992) (unpublished), would "have calamitous results" for the members of the Federation and the Association. In their consolidated brief, the trade associations asked, inter alia, that the supreme court overturn this court's holding in Century Shopping Center Fund.

(c) The property damaged belongs to a person who is or was a witness as defined in s. 940.41 (3) or a grand or petit juror and the damage was caused by reason of the owner's having attended or testified as a witness or by reason of any verdict or indictment assented to by the owner.

(d) If the total property damaged in violation of sub. (1) is reduced in value by more than $ 1,000. For the purposes of this paragraph, property is reduced in value by the amount which it would cost either to repair or replace it, whichever is less.

(e) The property damaged is on state-owned land and is listed on the registry under sub. (5).

(2m) Whoever causes damage to any physical property of another under all of the following circumstances is subject to a Class B forfeiture:

(a) The person does not consent to the damage of his or her property.

(b) The property damaged is on state-owned land and is listed on the registry under sub. (5).

....

(3) If more than one item of property is damaged under a single intent and design, the damage to all the property may be prosecuted as a single forfeiture offense or crime.

(4) In any case of unlawful damage involving more than one act of unlawful damage but prosecuted as a single forfeiture offense or crime, it is sufficient to allege generally that unlawful damage to property was committed between certain dates. At the trial, evidence may be given of any such unlawful damage that was committed on or between the dates alleged.

(5) The department of natural resources shall maintain a registry of prominent features in the landscape of state-owned land. To be included on the registry, a feature must have significant value to the people of this state.

¹² Inasmuch as we have reversed the trial court's dismissal of the complaints, we do not reach the issue of whether the trial court erred in denying leave to the plaintiffs to replead. See Gross v. Hoffman, 227 Wis. 296, 300, 277 N.W. 663, 665 (1938) (only dispositive issue need be addressed).

As part of their discovery in this action, Century sought to depose two attorneys from O'Neil, Cannon & Hollman, S.C., and officers and employees of the Wisconsin Merchants Federation and the Wisconsin Grocers Association, all in connection with the filing of the amicus brief in Sampson Investments. The notices of deposition also sought documents described as pertinent to that inquiry. The trade associations, again represented by O'Neil, Cannon & Hollman, S.C., moved to quash, and asserted three grounds in support of the motion. First, they alleged that the information sought was "not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence," [*29] a prerequisite to discovery under RULE 804.01(2), STATS. Second, they argued that discovery would "chill the constitutional rights of non-parties to petition the government for redress of grievances contrary to the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and Article I, sec. 4 of the Wisconsin Constitution." Third, they asserted that the discovery "seeks information protected by the attorney-client privilege." In support of the motion, the trade associations submitted a conclusory affidavit by a lawyer from O'Neil, Cannon & Hollman, S.C., that essentially reiterated these arguments.

In opposition to the motion to quash, and in support of its own motion to compel discovery, Century argued that the amicus filing in Sampson Investments was part of the scheme by one of the predecessors of the Sentry defendant to affect the merits of this action in the guise of the amicus submission in another case: "The Plaintiffs seek the discovery at issue in order to determine whether and the extent to which [a predecessor of the Sentry defendant] subverted the integrity of the judicial process by effectively appearing before the Wisconsin Supreme Court ex parte [*30], and without the full disclosure required by the applicable ethical rules." (Footnote omitted.) The trial court granted the motion to quash and denied Century's motion to compel discovery, holding that the information sought was not relevant to the issues in this case, would subject those named in the notices of deposition to "an unwarranted fishing expedition" and would invade the attorney client privilege. The trial court neither held an evidentiary hearing on the motions nor examined in camera any of the requested documents. We reverse.

HN28[] As with its federal counterpart, Rule 26(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, RULE 804.01(2)(a), STATS., is an expansive grant of pre-trial discovery. Anything that is "relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action" is fair game even though what is sought to be discovered would not itself be admissible at trial if discovery "appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." RULE 804.01(2)(a). As long as these requisites are met, the hoary cry of "fishing expedition" is not a valid objection. See Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 507, 91 L. Ed. 451, 67 S. Ct. 385 \(1947\); State ex rel. Dudek v. Circuit Court [*31], 34 Wis.2d 559, 585, 150 N.W.2d 387, 402 (1967); see also State ex rel. Amek bin Rilla v. Circuit Court, 76 Wis.2d 429, 435, 251 N.W.2d 476, 480 (1977) (requirement that material sought be relevant).

On this record, sparse and untested by examination and cross-examination as it is, Century has made a threshold showing that the material it seeks is within the scope of permissible discovery. First, the spine of this case is the alleged conspiracies by the defendants in connection with termination of Sentry's anchor-tenant status in the Howell Plaza shopping center. An important vertebra in that spine is Sentry's Howell Plaza lease. Our decision in Century Shopping Center Fund interpreted that lease, and, as noted, the supreme court denied review. The amicus submission to the supreme court in Sampson Investments by the law firm that represents the Sentry defendant in this case sought to have Century Shopping Center Fund overruled. Century claims that the law firm did not adequately disclose to the supreme court that, as alleged by Century, the law firm's interest in seeking to have Century Shopping Center Fund overruled extended [*32] beyond the face of its submissions and that those submissions were attempts by the firm on behalf of the Sentry defendant here to influence the outcome of this case in a proceeding at which the plaintiffs in this case would not be represented. HN29[] Although there is, of course, a broad right under the First Amendment and its Wisconsin equivalent to petition government and participate in judicial proceedings, that right does not immunize illegal activity when the petitioning of government or the participation in judicial proceedings is a mere "sham" designed to cloak and advance illegal activity. California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 511-516, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\) (applying the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine enunciated in Eastern R.R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\)); Badger Cab Co., Inc. v. Soule, 171 Wis.2d 754, 762-765, 492 N.W.2d 375, 379-380 \(Ct. App. 1992\) (applying California Motor Transport). This is what Century contends is the situation here; it has the right under RULE 804.01(2)(a), STATS., to pursue [*33] discovery in that area. Accordingly, we reverse the trial court's order precluding discovery.

Our conclusion that Century may pursue discovery does not mean that it may rummage unchecked through the files of either the trade associations or of O'Neil, Cannon & Hollman, S.C. HN30 RULE 804.01(2)(a), STATS., permits discovery of "any matter, not privileged." (Emphasis added.) "Statutory privileges are to be strictly and narrowly construed." Steinberg v. Jensen, No. 92-2475, slip op. at 20 (Wis. June 30, 1995). Upon remand, those subject to the notices of deposition are to produce all documents requested and to answer all questions asked, with the exception of those matters or documents claimed to be protected by privilege. Documents that are not produced pursuant to a claim of privilege are to be listed by date, author, recipient, and privilege or privileges asserted, and are to be transmitted to the trial court for its in camera inspection. A copy of the list shall also be furnished to all counsel. The trial court is to decide in a written memorandum keyed to each document for which privilege is claimed whether the claimed privilege or privileges apply. See United [*34] States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 568-569, 105 L. Ed. 2d 469, 109 S. Ct. 2619 \(1989\) (in camera review is appropriate method to determine applicability of attorney-client privilege) (crime-fraud exception to privilege). All questions that are not answered pursuant to a claim of privilege shall be certified to the trial court. The trial court is to decide in a written memorandum keyed to each question so certified whether the claimed privilege or privileges apply. The trial court may, in the appropriate exercise of its discretion, hold an evidentiary hearing in connection with the applicability of the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and in connection with any claim of privilege.

By the Court.--Orders reversed.

Publication in the official reports is recommended.

End of Document

Saratoga Harness Racing v. Veneglia

United States District Court for the Northern District of New York

August 2, 1995, Decided ; August 3, 1995, FILED

94-CV-1400

Reporter

897 F. Supp. 38 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11064 **

SARATOGA HARNESS RACING INC., Plaintiffs, -v- PETER VENEGLIA, Individually and as Chairman of UNITED STANDBRED HORSEMEN OF NEW YORK; NORTHEASTERN HARNESS HORSEMEN'S ASSOC. Inc.; JOSEPH A. FARALDO; STANDBRED OWNERS ASSOC. OF NEW YORK; LEONARD D. POWELL; STANDBRED BREEDERS AND OWNERS ASSOC. OF NEW JERSEY, INC., Defendants.

Core Terms

simulcasting, horsemen's, racing, associations, interstate, track, host, negotiated, wagering, broadcasting, contracted, personal jurisdiction, reconsideration, contractual, rights, allegations, supplying, harness, terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Where the underlying action is based on a federal statute, in order to subject a non-domiciliary to jurisdiction federal courts must consider both the state statutory basis for jurisdiction and whether application of that statutory jurisdiction comports with the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN2 [down arrow] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

A court is justified in reconsidering its previous ruling if there is an intervening change in the controlling law, new evidence not previously available comes to light, or it becomes necessary to remedy a clear error of law or to prevent obvious injustice.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN3 Contracts, Sales of Goods

For personal jurisdiction to lie in a New York court under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 302\(a\)\(1\), the non-domiciliary must have transacted business within New York State or contracted anywhere to supply goods or services in the state and the cause of action must arise out of such transaction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN4 Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Prior to discovery, a plaintiff challenged by a jurisdiction testing motion may defeat the motion by pleading in good faith legally sufficient allegations of jurisdiction. At that preliminary stage, then, the plaintiff's prima facie showing may be established solely by allegations.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

HN5 State & Territorial Government Licensing, Gaming & Lotteries

By federal statute, the host racing association must have a written agreement with the horsemen's group representing the participants in the race that is to be subject to interstate wagering. 15 U.S.C.S. § 3004\(a\)\(1\)\(A\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

HN6 Higher Education & Professional Associations, Professional Associations

One permissible interpretation of the Federal Interstate Horse Wagering Act, 15 U.S.C. § 3001 et seq., suggests that a racetrack obtain the horsemen's consent during regular contract negotiations with the trade association that the horsemen choose to represent them; if a racetrack did not previously negotiate with a representative trade association, the racetrack would be required to obtain the consent directly from the owners.

Counsel: [1] E. Guy Roemer Esq., ROEMER, FEATHERSTONHAUGH LAW FIRM, Capital Center, 99 Pine Street, Albany, NY 12207, For Plaintiff.

Neil L. Levine, Esq., Jonathan P. Nye, Esq., WHITEMAN, OSTERMAN LAW FIRM, One Commerce Plaza, Albany, NY 12260, For Defendants, Peter J. Veneglia, United Standardbred Horsemen of NY, NorthEast Harness Horseman's Assoc., Inc., Joseph A Faraldo, Standardbred Owners Assoc. of NY, Inc., Leonard D. Powell.

Michael S. Stein, Esq., STERNS & WEINROTH LAW FIRM, Trenton, New Jersey, For Defendants, Standardbred Breeders & Owners Assoc. of New Jersey, Inc..

Judges: Thomas J. McAvoy, Chief U.S. District Judge

Opinion by: Thomas J. McAvoy

Opinion

[*39] MEMORANDUM

DECISION & ORDER

ON January 27, 1995, oral argument was heard on plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction and defendants' motions under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12. In a decision delivered from the bench on that date the Court denied plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, denied the rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction of all defendants but Standardbred Breeders & Owners Association of New Jersey, and denied the rule 12(b)(2) motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction [2] of Standardbred Breeders & Owners Association of New Jersey ("SBOA-NJ"). Comes now SBOA-NJ seeking reconsideration of their motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Facts:

This action stems from failed contract negotiations between plaintiff Saratoga Harness Racing, Inc., which operates a harness race track at Saratoga, New York, and the horse owners who race at Saratoga. Defendant Northeastern Harness Horsemen's Association, Inc. ("NHHA") is the trade organization of horsemen with which Saratoga previously had a contract relating to the terms and conditions of racing at Saratoga. That contract expired on November 30, 1993. Defendant Powell is a vice-president of NHHA. Defendants Faraldo and Veneglia are styled as members, agents and negotiators for defendant NHHA. Defendant Faraldo is also president of defendant Standardbred Owners Association of New York, Inc. ("SBOA-NY"), which represents horsemen at Yonkers racetrack. Defendant Veneglia is also an officer and member of defendant United Standardbred Horsemen of New York ("USH") an unincorporated group of horsemen's associations. Negotiations [3] for a new contract between plaintiff and NHHA took place during the fall of 1993 and the Spring of 1994: those negotiations ultimately failed.

Plaintiff essentially states two separate antitrust claims against these defendants ¹ based on their conduct during and since the time that negotiations broke down between plaintiff and the NHHA: 1) that defendant NHHA, through defendants Faraldo, Powell, and Veneglia both individually and through defendant USH, have organized a boycott of Saratoga by their membership and other horsemen, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act; and, 2) that these defendants and local horsemen's associations at other tracks have engaged in an illegal "tying" operation, whereby these local associations, in combination with other defendants, threatened to withhold their consent to simulcasting of those other tracks' races if those other tracks simulcasted races to Saratoga.

[4] One of the reasons such concerted undertakings by horsemen's associations are theoretically possible is because under the Interstate Horseracing Act of 1978, 15 U.S.C. § 3001 et seq., local horsemen's associations are guaranteed a power of consent to interstate simulcasting: that act says that consent of the "host-racing association"

¹ Plaintiff also asserts violations of New York State antitrust law, N.Y. G. B. L. § 340, (the "Donnelly Act"), and a common law claim for tortious interference with contract.

(the live-racing track) to interstate simulcasting is valid only if that track has a written agreement with its local horsemen's association, setting forth the terms and conditions of interstate wagering (including simulcasting). The Interstate Horseracing Act gives local horsemen's [*40] associations a power of consent meant to be "withdrawn or varied only within the regular contractual process of negotiating an agreement as to terms and conditions between the horsemen's group and the host racing association." See Alabama Sportservice, Inc. v. National Horsemen's Benevolent & Protective Ass'n, 767 F. Supp. 1573, 1579 (M.D. Fla. 1991). "It is the legislative intent of [the act] that [horsemen's associations] give consent in exchange for acceptable 'terms and conditions'--agreements as to money and exclusivity." Id. In short, the act provides [5] consent powers to be negotiated with reference to the contractual relationship between the host racing association and the local horsemen's association.

Concerning SBOA-NJ, plaintiff alleges that the various defendants caused defendant SBOA-NJ to wrongfully withhold their consent to the simulcasting to Saratoga of harness racing from Meadowlands, Garden State Park and Freehold Raceway, SBOA-NJ's host racing associations' racetracks, whereby Saratoga was deprived of simulcasts from these tracks.²

[6] B. Procedural History:

SBOA-NJ previously claimed that this court lacked the requisite personal jurisdiction over them to adjudicate plaintiff's claims. Plaintiff claimed that long-arm personal jurisdiction was proper under N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. § 302(a)(1) ("contracts anywhere to supply goods or services in the state"), and § 302(a)(3)("commits a tortious act without the state causing injury to person or property within the state"), under both subdivisions (i) and (ii) of that section.

The Court concluded, construing plaintiff's jurisdictional allegations in the light most favorable to them, that plaintiff had met its prima facie burden of demonstrating that jurisdiction over these defendants was proper under 302(a)(1). The Court found that SBOA-NJ, as the representative body of its horsemen membership, had contracted with its host racing associations to supply services into New York. As part of that conclusion, the Court found that the supplying of simulcasting into New York for purposes of interstate wagering constituted the provision of services into New York within the meaning of § 302(a)(1). The Court also concluded that, as agents and negotiators of the [*7] horsemen, SBOA-NJ had agreed to provide its members' services for, and its own negotiated consent to, both the simulcasting of racing in New York and the acceptance of wagers from New York. As such, the Court found that SBOA-NJ's negotiated written consent constituted a contract to provide services into New York.

II. DISCUSSION.

Defendant SBOA-NJ now seeks the Court's reconsideration of its decision that it properly had personal jurisdiction over them under New York's long-arm statute.³

² Further tying allegations through which plaintiff implicates the horsemen's associations' consent power, allegedly exercised in violation of antitrust include: 1) that the SBOA-NY threatened management at Yonkers raceway that they would withdraw their consent to interstate simulcasting from Yonkers if Yonkers proceeded to simulcast in-state to Saratoga. Saratoga is now unable to receive simulcasts from Yonkers; and 2) that defendants caused the horsemen's association at Vernon Downs to exercise a contractual provision to withhold their consent to simulcasting of Vernon's races to Saratoga.

³ SBOA-NJ offers no basis for the Court to reconsider its earlier determination that assertion of personal jurisdiction over these defendants would not offend due process. See Omni Capital Int'l, Ltd. v. Rudolf Wolff & Co., 484 U.S. 97, 104-105, 108 S. Ct. 404, 98 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1987); Mareno v. Rowe, 910 F.2d 1043, 1046 (2d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1028, 112 L. Ed. 2d 673, 111 S. Ct. 681 (1991) HN1[↑] (Where the underlying action is based on a federal statute, in order to subject a non-domiciliary to jurisdiction federal courts must consider both the state statutory basis for jurisdiction and whether application of that statutory jurisdiction comports with the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment).

[8] A. Standard for Reconsideration

HN2 A court is justified in reconsidering its previous ruling if: (1) there is an intervening change in the controlling law; (2) new evidence not previously available comes to light; or (3) it becomes necessary to remedy a clear error of law or to prevent obvious [*41] injustice. Larsen v. Ortega, 816 F. Supp. 97, 114 (D. Conn. 1992).

SBOA-NJ relies on the third, "clear error of law" ground in seeking reconsideration. "With regard to the third ground, the Court cautions that any litigant considering bringing a motion to reconsider based upon that ground should evaluate whether what may seem to be a clear error of law is in fact simply a point of disagreement between the Court and the litigant." Atkins v. Marathon LeTourneau Co., 130 F.R.D. 625, 626 (S.D. Miss. 1990). The motion for reconsideration is not a device "intended to give an unhappy litigant one additional chance to sway the judge." Durkin v. Taylor, 444 F. Supp. 879, 889 (E.D. Va. 1977). It is in light of these considerations that the court undertakes reconsideration of its January 31, 1994 order.

B. Defendants' Bases for Reconsideration:

HN3 For personal jurisdiction [9] to lie in a New York court under § 302(a)(1), the non-domiciliary must have transacted business within New York State or contracted anywhere to supply goods or services in the state and the cause of action must arise out of such transaction. Pellegrino v. Stratton Corp., 679 F. Supp. 1164, 1172 (N.D.N.Y. 1988).

SBOA-NJ offers three arguments why the Court erred in finding personal jurisdiction in the first instance: 1) that it never contractually consented to simulcasting its members' races; 2) that assuming arguendo it contracted with its host racing association to provide simulcasting into New York, simulcasting is not "supplying goods or services in the state" within the meaning of § 302(a)(1); and 3) that irrespective of the Court's determination of the first two objections, plaintiff's claims did not "arise out of" the alleged contracts.

i. No Contract, No Consent:

When it decided that SBOA-NJ had contracted to supply services in the state, the Court relied on plaintiff's uncontested allegations that SBOA-NJ had "agreed to provide simulcasts and accept wagers from off-track betting systems located in New York State." (Pltff. Memo in Opp. to Motion [10] to Dismiss, at 4). See Ball v. Metallurgie Hoboken-Overpelt, S.A., 902 F.2d 194, 197 (2d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 854, 111 S. Ct. 150, 112 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1990) ("prior HN4 to discovery, a plaintiff challenged by a jurisdiction testing motion may defeat the motion by pleading in good faith . . . legally sufficient allegations of jurisdiction. At that preliminary stage, [then,] the plaintiff's prima facie showing may be established solely by allegations.") (emphasis added). While it is undisputed that HN5 by federal statute the host racing association (i.e. the simulcasting track) "must have a written agreement with the horsemen's group" representing the participants in the race which is to be subject to interstate wagering, See 15 U.S.C. § 3004(a)(1)(A),⁴ on the original motion neither party placed the relevant statutorily required written agreement before the Court. Defendant SBOA-NJ now submits to the Court its written agreements with its host racing associations, and claims that these establish that it "never entered into a contract to supply simulcasting services into New York," (Deft. Memo for Recons. at 1). Upon examination of these artfully drafted [11] agreements, however, the Court concludes that they in fact constitute contracts between the New Jersey host racing associations and SBOA-NJ to provide simulcasting services into New York.

⁴ As the Sixth Circuit recently held, HN6 "One permissible interpretation of the Act suggests that a racetrack obtain the horsemen's consent during regular contract negotiations with the trade association that the horsemen choose to represent them; if a racetrack did not previously negotiate with a representative trade association, the racetrack would be required to obtain the consent directly from the owners." Kentucky Division of the Horsemen's Benevolent Assoc. v. Turfway Park, 20 F.3d 1406 (6th Cir. 1994).

The interstate simulcasting provision of these agreements reads in pertinent part as follows:

TWENTIETH: In the event that the Authority considers proposals for inter-track betting, . . . the following provisions apply:

[*42] A. With regard to . . . simulcasting, the Parties recognize the applicability of the Federal [12] Interstate Horse Wagering Act, 15 U.S.C. § 3001 et seq. (the "Federal Act") and that the SBOA as the recognized representative of the harness horseman racing under the terms of this agreement, shall have all the rights permitted to horsemen's groups as defined in the Federal Act. The parties agree that the execution of the agreement is not to be construed as the SBOA's consent to the Authority's participation in any activities contemplated by the above-mentioned Federal Act.⁵ If the Authority proposes to enter into Agreements with respect to interstate wagering . . . the SBOA shall be notified of same and a copy of any such proposed agreement shall be submitted to the SBOA and shall not become effective unless the SBOA approves such agreement in writing within 21 days of its receipt. Such approval shall not be unreasonably withheld. In the event that the SBOA shall not have approved or disapproved said agreement within the 21-day period provided for herein, the proposed agreement for interstate . . . wagering shall be deemed to have been approved as submitted by the Authority.

(Stein Recons. Aff. Ex. A, B & C). This consent clause is followed by thirteen paragraphs of [13] contractual provisions which are to explicitly control the implementation of simulcasting and interstate wagering and the disposition of revenues acquired from simulcasting and interstate wagering, once SBOA-NJ has consented to participate in such proposed simulcasting under this consent provision.

SBOA-NJ claims that the foregoing provision shows that they undeniably refused to provide negotiated written consent to simulcasting in New York. The Court finds, however, that this provision merely establishes [14] the mechanism by which SBOA-NJ consents to participate in the proposed simulcasting agreements forwarded to them under this agreement--either by expressly responding to the submitted proposal or by failing to respond within twenty-one days. Having approved and consented to various proposed New York simulcasting agreements⁶ (expressly or by silence), and thereby subjected such simulcasting to the previously negotiated terms and conditions contained in their agreements with their host racing associations, the Court finds that SBOA-NJ has contracted with the relevant New Jersey racetracks to participate in providing simulcasting into New York according to the detailed terms of the parties agreements.⁷

[15] ii. No Goods or Services:

SBOA-NJ also argues on reconsideration that, even assuming their agreements with their host racing associations constitute contracts to provide simulcasting to New York State, providing simulcasting is not "supplying goods or services in the state" within the meaning of § 302\(a\)\(1\). The Court adheres to its earlier conclusion that by contractually participating in simulcasting into New York these defendants have supplied a service in New York.

⁵ Defendant places particular emphasis on this sentence as evidence that it never contractually negotiated for or consented to simulcasting. In the Court's view, however, this sentence simply establishes that execution of the instant agreement is not of itself consent to simulcasting: consent must be further sought and granted under the contractual consent terms which follow. Nothing in this sentence, however, precludes SBOA-NJ from exercising their power to consent in the future under this contract.

⁶ With Monticello Raceway, Vernon Downs, Yonkers Racetrack, Batavia Downs, Buffalo Raceway, and the Capital District and Nassau County OTBs, all in New York. (DeSantis Aff. Ex. A, B).

⁷ In a footnote SBOA-NJ argues that under the Court's analysis, by entering into contracts with New Jersey racetracks wherein they do not consent to interstate simulcasting, they could be found to have contracted to provide simulcasting services in each of the 50 states. Of course this does not follow: it is only where SBOA-NJ consents to simulcasting into a state according to their own contractual consent provision, and participates in that simulcasting and the proceeds therefrom under the negotiated explicit terms of their contract with the New Jersey race tracks, that they can be found to have contracted to provide simulcasting services for that state's jurisdictional purposes.

SBOA-NJ points to [*Broadcasting Rights International Corp. v. Societe du Tour de France, S.A.R.L., 675 F. Supp. 1439 \(S.D.N.Y. \[43\] 1987\)](#), for the proposition that broadcasting signals are supplied in the state where an event occurs, not the state to which a signal is transmitted. The Court finds that not only does that case not stand for that proposition, it is in any event not on all fours with this case. Initially, Broadcasting Rights is concerned far more with broadcasting rights than broadcasting signals. Cf. CBS, Inc. v. Snyder, 798 F. Supp. 1019, 1028 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\) (allegation that TV station supplies television broadcast segments into New York insufficient for § 302(a)(1) where claims [16] against station are not closely related to station's broadcast segments), aff'd, 989 F.2d 89 \(2d Cir. 1993\). The contract offered in support of jurisdiction in Broadcasting Rights concerned the one time sale of all broadcast rights to the Tour de France by the sponsoring group, to a middleman who later sold those rights to a New York broadcasting entity. There is no indication in that case, however, that the Tour sponsor had any notice of, or contractual consent power over, the locations to which the middleman would later provide the Tour de France for future broadcast. Thereafter, the New York broadcasting entity "first took possession of and exercised those rights in France by taping the race." Broadcasting Rights 675 F. Supp. at 1445.

Simulcasting, however, has little in common with the one-time taping for future exhibition of a single event for entertainment or informational purposes. Rather, together with their host racing associations, these defendants instantaneously provide the New York receiving track with a live, ongoing sporting exhibition which is in turn "resold" by the receiving track via track admission fees, and which is subject to lucrative [17] wagering in both locations. Indeed the net result is that by an electronic medium, the horsemen's association provides the same services to the New York track that it provides to its host racing association.

Furthermore, by both the terms of its contract and by statute, SBOA-NJ directly and immediately profits from providing the receiving track with its members' services through its receipt of a portion of the races' handle. The Court notes also that simulcasting involves extensive interaction between the broadcasting and receiving parties, including the contemporaneous exchange of betting information and wagering across state lines.

In short then, the Court finds that just as SBOA-NJ provides services to its host racing associations by negotiating on behalf of and ultimately providing its members as participants for harness races, so to by its contractual consent to, and participation in simulcasting (which provides those self-same services to the receiving tracks, albeit electronically), SBOA-NJ has contracted in New Jersey to provide services into New York.

iii. Not Arising out of:

With respect to the requirement that the cause of action "arise out of" the defendants' [18] transactions the Court adheres to its earlier conclusion that plaintiff's allegations that SBOA-NJ, by combining and conspiring in violation of antitrust to withhold simulcasting to plaintiff while contractually providing simulcasting and interstate wagering to other New York venues, satisfies the articulable nexus requirement. Pellegrino, 679 F. Supp. at 1172 ("the New York Court of Appeals has stated that "there must be some 'articulable nexus between the business transacted and the cause of action sued upon.'") (quoting McGowan v. Smith, 52 N.Y.2d 268, 272, 437 N.Y.S.2d 643, 645, 419 N.E.2d 321 \(1981\)).

Plaintiff here has alleged that SBOA-NJ has wrongfully withheld their consent, which power they possess both by statute and under their contract with their host racing association as discussed supra. The Court stresses again that it is not defendant's statutorily empowered denial of consent alone which gives rise to personal jurisdiction. Rather, it is the alleged wrongful denial of consent, under the terms of the self-same contract by which SBOA-NJ has otherwise agreed to reap the benefits of providing their services to other New York race-tracks, which satisfies the [19] requirements of New York's long-arm statute.

[*44] III. CONCLUSION:

Having considered defendant SBOA-NJ's arguments in support of reconsideration and modification of The Court's earlier determination that plaintiff had properly asserted personal jurisdiction over SBOA-NJ, for all the foregoing reasons the Court declines to modify its earlier determination that jurisdiction is proper under N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R.

§ 302(a)(1).⁸ Therefore, the relief sought by Standardbred Breeders & Owners Association of New Jersey is hereby DENIED.

[20] IT IS SO ORDERED

August 2, 1995

Auburn, New York

Thomas J. McAvoy

Chief U.S. District Judge

End of Document

⁸ Although the Court did not reach the question in its original decision from the bench, upon review of the briefing and filings on the original motion as well as plaintiff's response to the motion for reconsideration, the Court has little doubt that personal jurisdiction is likewise proper under N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. § 302(a)(3)(ii), under an analysis similar to that conducted in Broadcasting Rights 675 F. Supp. at 1445-46. See Daniel v. American Bd. of Emergency Medicine, 802 F. Supp. 912, 919 (W.D.N.Y. 1992) ("An action alleging violations of antitrust laws is a claim for injuries sustained, and therefore is in the nature of a tort and long-arm jurisdiction would apply."); Harrison Conference Services, Inc. v. Dolce Conference Services, Inc., 768 F. Supp. 405, 407 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) ("If defendants improperly use the trade secrets to take New York customers from plaintiff, defendants will cause an injury within New York"); see also Roemer Aff. in Opp. to Dismissal, Desantis Aff. in Opp. to Recons. (discussing defendants income from interstate commerce); SBOA-NJ Reply Memo in Support of Dismissal, at 2 ("Admittedly, by operation of statute, SBOA-NJ does receive 3.5% of the retained handle from the New Jersey racetracks, some of which handle comes from interstate simulcasting.").

International Audiotext Network v. American Tel. & Tel. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

June 16, 1995, Argued ; August 3, 1995, Decided

Docket No. 95-7128

Reporter

62 F.3d 69 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 20662 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,093

INTERNATIONAL AUDIOTEXT NETWORK, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Defendant-Appellee.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (McKenna, J.), dismissing the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

telephone, long-distance, audiotext, caller, monopolize, carrier, traffic, lines

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a district court's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal of a complaint and, taking all the plaintiff's factual allegations as true, the appellate court will affirm only where no set of facts could support its claim.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Enforcement > Duties & Liabilities of Parties > Conversion of Instruments

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN2 Duties & Liabilities of Parties, Conversion of Instruments

A complaint is deemed to include any written instrument attached to it as an exhibit or any statements or documents incorporated in it by reference. Moreover, when a plaintiff chooses not to attach to the complaint or incorporate by reference a document upon which it solely relies and which is integral to the complaint, a court may nevertheless take the document into consideration in deciding the defendant's motion to dismiss, without converting the proceeding to one for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

On review of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal, the reviewing court will draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party.

Counsel: JEFFREY M. SCHLOSSBERG, New York, NY (Joel R. Dichter, Klein Zelman, Briton, Rothermel & Dichter, New York, NY, of counsel), for Plaintiff-Appellant.

ELIZABETH M. SACKSTEDER, New York, NY (Sidley & Austin, New York, NY, of counsel), for Defendant-Appellee.

Judges: Before: WINTER, MAHONEY, and JACOBS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

[*70] Per Curiam:

Plaintiff-appellant International Audiotext Network, Inc. ("IAN") filed a complaint against defendant-appellee American Telephone and Telegraph Company ("AT&T") in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (McKenna, J.), alleging, among other claims, violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. Plaintiff's appeal relates solely to these Sherman Act claims. After limited pre-answer discovery conducted pursuant to a stipulation and order, AT&T filed a motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). The district court, in a thorough 2 opinion dated December 14, 1994, granted the motion. International Audiotext Network, Inc. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., ___ F. Supp. ___, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19217 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\). [*71] Final judgment having been entered and a timely notice of appeal filed, we have jurisdiction to hear the appeal. After careful consideration of the arguments advanced by the parties, we affirm.

IAN is engaged in the telecommunications industry as an information provider ("IP"). As such, IAN provides audiotext services via telephone, including such information as stock quotes, sports scores, time, weather reports, and horoscopes. IPs may derive revenue for audiotext services in several ways. One way is for the IP to require callers to charge the cost of the service to a credit card, ordinarily at the outset of the call. Another means of collecting charges is to set up a special number with the long-distance carrier. Under this arrangement, the IP levies either a per-minute charge or a flat fee for the call, the long-distance carrier bills the caller accordingly and forwards the balance (net of handling charges) to the IP. The collection method that IAN desires to use in this case entails an agreement between the IP and [\[3\]](#) the long-distance carrier to split the revenue paid to the carrier, by phone companies in the originating countries, for transmitting the long-distance calls to the IP. Thus the caller abroad pays only the regular cost of the long-distance call. For certain low-cost services, an arrangement that involves no extra charges to the caller offers a competitive advantage.

The complaint alleges that AT&T is the nation's dominant long-distance carrier as a result of its former monopoly position, and that for the same reason AT&T dominates the market for international telephone calls originating or terminating in the United States. In 1991 AT&T carried approximately 70.8 percent of such calls. In respect of inbound telephone traffic to the United States, AT&T enters into individual agreements with foreign telephone companies, undertaking to accept calls originating in those countries, carry the calls over its long-distance lines, and terminate them at the desired destination in the United States. For this service, AT&T charges a fee to the foreign telephone company; that fee is a component of the price of the call billed to the caller by the foreign company, which then remits to AT&T the [\[4\]](#) amount owed for AT&T's services. AT&T's U.S. competitors for the domestic handling of calls originating abroad have similar arrangements in many countries.

In 1991, AT&T entered into an agreement (the "Agreement") with Malhotra & Associates, Inc., which is an IP. Under the Agreement, Malhotra undertook to "stimulate" international telephone traffic over AT&T's lines by promoting its audiotext services to international callers, who access Malhotra's services by dialing Malhotra's telephone numbers in the United States. Because AT&T receives a fee for in-bound telephone traffic on its international long-distance lines, AT&T's revenues are increased by the incremental telephone traffic generated by Malhotra. The Agreement was initially limited to four countries, but was expanded in scope to cover at least 120 countries. The Agreement provides that Malhotra will receive a commission for each international call to Malhotra that is delivered via AT&T's lines; that commission is calculated as a share of the revenues AT&T receives for the telephone traffic, which varies depending on the fee that each country's telephone company pays to AT&T.

IAN would like to enter what it characterizes [\[5\]](#) as the international market for American audiotext services, and it unsuccessfully approached AT&T with a business proposal that, as it happens, is similar to the arrangement AT&T has with Malhotra. After being rebuffed by AT&T, IAN discovered that AT&T had a deal with Malhotra that was substantially similar to what it was seeking, and filed this lawsuit, alleging that AT&T's refusal to contract with IAN violates federal antitrust law. The district court has granted AT&T's motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), and entered judgment dismissing the complaint in its entirety. IAN now appeals that dismissal.

HN1[↑] We review de novo the district court's 12(b)(6) dismissal of the complaint and, "taking all the plaintiff's factual allegations as true, we will affirm only where no set of facts could support [its] claim." Annis v. County of Westchester, New York, 36 F.3d 251, 253 \(2d Cir. 1994\) (citing Christ Gatzonis Elec. Contractor, Inc. v. New York City [\[*72\]](#) Const. Auth., 23 F.3d 636, 639 \(2d Cir. 1994\)). HN2[↑] The complaint is deemed to include any written instrument attached to it as an exhibit or any statements or documents incorporated in it by reference." Cortec Indus., [\[6\]](#) Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 47 \(2d Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 960 (1992). Moreover, "when a plaintiff chooses not to attach to the complaint or incorporate by reference a [document] upon which it solely relies and which is integral to the complaint," the court may nevertheless take the document into consideration in deciding the defendant's motion to dismiss, without converting the proceeding to one for summary judgment. Id. at 47-48.

Although the amended complaint in this case does not incorporate the Agreement, it relies heavily upon its terms and effect; therefore, the Agreement is "integral" to the complaint, and we consider its terms in deciding whether IAN can prove any set of facts that would entitle it to relief. In so doing, we are not constrained to accept the allegations of the complaint in respect of the construction of the Agreement, although--at this stage in the proceedings--we will strive to resolve any contractual ambiguities in IAN's favor. See Doe v. City of New York, 15 F.3d 264, 266 \(2d Cir. 1994\) (HN3) on review of 12(b)(6) dismissal, reviewing court will "draw all reasonable inferences in favor of[] the non-moving party").

IAN's 7 first and second causes of action allege, respectively, that AT&T has engaged in a monopoly and that AT&T has attempted to engage in a monopoly, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, which makes it unlawful for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. IAN's third cause of action alleges that AT&T has violated section 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits "contracts, combinations . . . or conspiracies, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Each of these claims is premised on the contention that AT&T has abused its dominant position in the market for international telephone calls to the United States (which, at 70.8 percent, is presumed at this stage in the proceedings to constitute control over the market) in order to prevent IAN from offering its audiotext services to prospective customers in foreign countries. According to IAN, this is being done either to preserve AT&T's monopoly in the market for international audiotext services, or in an attempt to monopolize that market, or to protect 8 Malhotra's position in that market.

Regarding the monopolization claim, the district court noted that this claim is based upon IAN's contention that AT&T is depriving it of access to an essential facility. However, with respect to the essential facilities doctrine, this case does not involve a facility to which IAN seeks access (and for which IAN would be willing to pay). See, e.g., Twin Laboratories, Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566, 569 \(2d Cir. 1990\) (involving advertising space in a magazine and collecting cases involving power lines, sports arenas, newspaper advertisements, and a mountain). Rather, IAN seeks an arrangement by which AT&T would agree to pay IAN and all competitors money for what are essentially advertising or promotional services. The essential facility doctrine does not extend this far. We have carefully considered all arguments put forward by IAN in support of its claims and we affirm the dismissal of the complaint for substantially the reasons stated in the district court's opinion. See International Audiotext, ____ F. Supp. ____.

End of Document

Paul E. Volpp Tractor Parts v. Caterpillar, Inc.

United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division

August 3, 1995, Decided ; August 3, 1995, FILED, ENTERED

NO. 86-2871-TUA

Reporter

917 F. Supp. 1208 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18082 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,243

PAUL E. VOLPP TRACTOR PARTS, INC. d/b/a CEM SUPPLY COMPANY, Plaintiff, VS. CATERPILLAR, INC., Defendant.

Core Terms

dealers, non-genuine, products, genuine, tying arrangement, sales, competitors, dealership, anti trust law, manufacturers, consumers, purchasing, summary judgment, vertical, tie, coercion, line-forcing, sourcing, selling, buy, rule of reason, Sherman Act, Machinery, forcing, business relationship, district manager, Clayton Act, tie-in, principles, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

917 F. Supp. 1208, *1208 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18082, 18082

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN2 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. However, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) is not a requirement that the moving party negate his opponent's claim, but does require a showing of an absence of evidence supporting the non-moving party's case.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

The standard for granting summary judgment mirrors the directed verdict standard under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a), which requires the court to grant a directed verdict where there can be but one reasonable conclusion. A scintilla of evidence in support of the non-moving party's position is not sufficient to successfully oppose summary judgment; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff. No genuine issue for trial exists where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN4 Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 requires the moving party to inform the court of the basis for the motion, and to identify those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The non-moving party may oppose the motion with any of the evidentiary materials listed in Fed R. Civ. P. 56(c), but reliance on the pleadings alone is not sufficient to withstand summary judgment.

917 F. Supp. 1208, *1208 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18082, 18082

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In ruling on a summary judgment motion the court accepts as true the non-moving party's evidence, draws all justifiable inferences in favor of the non-moving party, and does not weigh the evidence or the credibility of witnesses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Substantive law determines which facts are material; that is, which facts might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Irrelevant or unnecessary facts do not preclude summary judgment even when they are in dispute. The issue of fact must be genuine.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN7 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

To establish a genuine issue of fact the non-moving party must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. The non-moving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN8 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A summary judgment determination is essentially an inquiry as to whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN10 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

917 F. Supp. 1208, *1208 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18082, 18082

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN11 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, was intended to complement the Sherman Act and to facilitate achievement of its purposes by reaching, in their incipiency, acts and practices that promise, in their full growth, to impair competition in interstate commerce. Specifically, Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, intended to declare illegal contracts of sale made upon the agreement or understanding that the purchaser shall not deal in the goods of a competitor or competitors of the seller, which may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN12 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product the tying product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. A tying arrangement may violate either Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, or Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN13 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act makes it unlawful for a person engaged in commerce to make a sale or contract for sale of goods on the condition, agreement or understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods of a competitor or competitors of the lessee or seller, where the effect of such sale or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

917 F. Supp. 1208, *1208 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18082, 18082

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tying arrangement may violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market. Many tying arrangements have long been considered unreasonable restraints of trade under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN15 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Tying claims may violate Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, pursuant to the same test as the Sherman Act if the tie-in involves goods, wares, merchandise or other commodities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN16 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

The Supreme Court has set forth two distinct methods of proving an unlawful tying arrangement pursuant to Section 3 of the Clayton Act and Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The first employs a presumption that an agreement is an antitrust violation, thus invoking a per se illegality rule to classify the agreement; the second, called rule of reason analysis, requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

917 F. Supp. 1208, *1208 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18082, 18082

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

A vertical non-price restraint is an agreement between entities at different levels of distribution that does not purport to affect prices or price levels charged for the goods.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The fact that consumers might buy goods because of convenience created by a tie does not suffice as evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The rule of reason approach requires that the party challenging the alleged unlawful tie set forth the tying arrangement itself and that the arrangement is an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To set forth a per se violation, a plaintiff must show that: 1) There is a tying arrangement between two distinct products or services; 2) The seller has sufficient economic power in the tying market to restrain appreciably competition in the tied product market; and 3) The amount of commerce affected is not insubstantial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN21[] Sherman Act, Claims

If plaintiff cannot establish a per se tying arrangement, then plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the alleged illegal conduct unreasonably restrained competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN22[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN23[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

HN24[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Choice of Law

When a federal court is called upon to apply state substantive law to a claim, the conflicts law of the forum determines which state's law to apply.

Counsel: [1] FOR PAULE E. VOLPP TRACTOR PARTS, INC. dba CEM Supply Co, plaintiff: John I. Houseal, Jr., Esq., GLANKLER BROWN GILLILAND CHASE ROBINSON & RAINES, Memphis, TN. H. Kenneth Kudon, Esq., JACKSON & CAMPBELL, P.C., Washington, DC.

FOR CATERPILLAR, INC., defendant: J. Brooke Lathram, Esq., BURCH PORTER & JOHNSON, Memphis, TN. Richard T. Colman, Esq., HOWREY & SIMON, Los Angeles, CA. Gregory L. Baker, Esq., HOWREY & SIMON, Washington, DC.

FOR CATERPILLAR, INC., counter-claimant: J. Brooke Lathram, Esq., BURCH PORTER & JOHNSON, Memphis, TN. Richard T. Colman, Esq., HOWREY & SIMON, Los Angeles, CA. Gregory L. Baker, Esq., HOWREY & SIMON, Washington, DC.

FOR PAUL E. VOLPP TRACTOR PARTS, INC., counter-defendant: John I. Houseal, Jr., Esq., GLANKLER BROWN GILLILAND CHASE ROBINSON & RAINES, Memphis, TN. H. Kenneth Kudon, Esq., JACKSON & CAMPBELL, P.C., Washington, DC.

Judges: JEROME TURNER, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: JEROME TURNER

Opinion

[*1211] ORDER ON DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Plaintiff Paul E. Volpp Tractor Parts, Inc. ("Volpp") d/b/a CEM Supply Company ("CEM"), filed this action alleging federal and state antitrust violations as well as several state common law claims against defendant Caterpillar, Inc. ("Caterpillar"). Volpp subsequently filed an amended complaint. The essence of the claim is that Caterpillar entered into unlawful arrangements with authorized Caterpillar dealers in which Caterpillar conditioned the sale of its machines upon dealers' agreements to purchase genuine Caterpillar parts, to the near exclusion of parts offered for sale by CEM and other competitors. The specific claims alleged in the amended complaint are as follows:

- (1) Action pursuant to Sections 4 and 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 & 26, for treble damages, injunctive relief, and costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, for injuries suffered as a result of unlawful "tying" arrangements, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14;
- (2) Unlawful combination and conspiracy, [\[*1212\]](#) in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1;
- (3) Unlawful agreements made with a view to lessen full and free competition in importation of parts, in violation of Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101; and
- (4) Intentional interference with prospective business relations.

Caterpillar answered and counter-claimed, alleging false representation as to the quality and performance of its parts in violation of section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\). Both parties seek damages and injunctive relief.

Caterpillar filed a motion for summary judgment on each claim alleged by Volpp. On Volpp's tie-in claim (Count 1), Caterpillar argues: (a) that there is no evidence that it "tied" the sale of machines to the sale of replacement parts, (b) that there is no evidence [\[*1212\]](#) of coercion, (c) that there is no evidence of antitrust injury, and (d) that Volpp cannot show antitrust damages. On Volpp's conspiracy claim (Count 2), Caterpillar argues that the claim merely duplicates the tie-in claim and that there is no evidence of a conspiracy. On Volpp's Tennessee antitrust claim (Count 3), Caterpillar maintains that (a) Volpp may not seek damages under the Tennessee [\[*1213\]](#) Antitrust Statute, (b) that there is no evidence of an unlawful combination, and (c) that Volpp cannot show an anticompetitive intent or effect. Finally, on Volpp's claim for interference with prospective business relations (Count 4), Caterpillar argues that Tennessee law does not recognize the tort and that the claim should accordingly be dismissed.

The parties have filed extensive memoranda and several volumes of exhibits in support of their respective filings. The court heard oral argument on the motion for summary judgment on June 1, 1994.

I. FACTS

In considering the defendant's motion for summary judgment, the court will believe the evidence of the plaintiff and draw all justifiable inferences in its favor. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\); accord Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\).

1. Caterpillar, Inc.

Caterpillar is engaged in the business of designing, manufacturing and marketing earth-moving, construction, agricultural and materials-handling equipment, engines and replacement parts. Caterpillar sells its products [\[*1214\]](#) and services through a world-wide network of independent dealerships. Each dealership enters into a contractual "Sales and Service Agreement" with Caterpillar, a portion of which provides as follows:

2. Primary Purpose and [Caterpillar's] Reliance on Principles

- (a) Both Dealer's and [Caterpillar's] primary purpose in entering into this agreement is to develop and promote the sale of products and to provide a high standard of parts availability and mechanical service to insure satisfaction by users of products. Within the service territory described in Exhibit A, Dealer shall be primarily responsible for fully and adequately developing and promoting the sale to customers and prospective customers located within such territory and for the servicing of all of the products specified in Exhibit A.

917 F. Supp. 1208, *1212 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18082, 4

(b) [Caterpillar] and Dealer agree that Dealer's effectiveness and ability in achieving such purpose could be adversely affected by Dealer's affiliation with another organization which is a substantial operator of products. Dealer agrees that during the life of this agreement it will avoid any such affiliation whether by way of capital investment, source of capital, common [5] management, common ownership, or otherwise, except to the extent that [Caterpillar] may otherwise agree in writing.¹ [6]

The agreement may be terminated with or without cause on ninety days written notice.²

2. Paul E. Volpp Tractor Parts, Inc.

Volpp manufactures, assembles and distributes components and parts for off-road heavy construction, mining and logging equipment. These parts, commonly referred to as "non-genuine," "will-fit" or "gypo" are usually less expensive than genuine parts. Volpp distributes its products through two sales divisions, CEM and Heavy Equipment parts. Through CEM, Volpp sells parts primarily to dealers for original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs"), including Caterpillar. The parts distributed by CEM for use in Caterpillar equipment include seals, gaskets and "O" rings. Volpp successfully cultivated several Caterpillar dealerships as its principal clients for its Caterpillar-compatible parts. According to Caterpillar, between [*1213] January 1982 and July 1986, over ninety percent of CEM's aggregate sales of Caterpillar-compatible parts were made to fifteen Caterpillar dealers.³

3. Caterpillar's Goal To Regain Lost Parts Sales

Following Caterpillar's first three years of losses in its history, the Caterpillar Product Support Department announced plans to move all programs that contribute to short term profitable sales to "top priority."⁴ One such program was the sale of genuine Caterpillar parts to Caterpillar dealers.⁵ All district managers, sales managers, and parts and service sales representatives were instructed to "do all those things that we know will work to sell parts."⁶ Specifically, Caterpillar aggressively sought to recapture parts sales business which it lost to competitors when dealers sold "will-fit" parts instead of Caterpillar parts.⁷

¹ "Sales and Service Agreement" § 2, Ex. #82 to Caterpillar Inc.'s Mem. in Supp. of its Mot. for Summ. J. ("Caterpillar's Motion") (Vol. III); Ex. #1.15 to Pl.'s Statement of Material Facts in Dispute Responsive to Caterpillar's Mot. to [sic] Summ. J. ("Volpp's Response") (Vol. 1).

² Id. § 29.

³ Mem. in Supp. of Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. at 10.

⁴ See Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers, Sales Representatives, and Parts and Service Sales Representatives (Oct. 12, 1984), Ex. #3.4 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id.

⁷ This effort actually had its origin prior to 1984. At a 1983 meeting of Caterpillar dealer principals, a Caterpillar representative gave the following statement:

Before closing, there is one additional area I'd like to discuss. (Pause)

No doubt due to the recessionary economy, some suppliers and numerous other companies have increased their efforts to secure a portion of your parts orders. Some Caterpillar dealers are utilizing, to varying degrees, these alternative sources.

You may be thinking, "this doesn't apply to us." You might be surprised. Some well-intentioned employee may have found what appears to be a cheaper source for a few parts such as seals, hardware, electrical components, or friction material. This employee probably feels it's the same as Caterpillar supplies, but costs less. Perhaps your company is one of the Caterpillar dealers who has taken on a line of filters to supplement our line. You may find that in certain cases, the other line gets substituted for Caterpillar because "that's what the customer wants." These examples and others are starting to happen all too frequently, even though you may fully intend to totally represent Caterpillar, as your agreement requires.

[7] 4. The "Pilot Exercises"

Caterpillar developed a mathematical formula for the purpose of identifying dealers who were selling competitive parts.⁸ Caterpillar then conducted a "pilot exercise" focused on three dealers: (1) Mustang Tractor & Equipment Co. in Houston, Texas; (2) Taylor Machinery Co. in Memphis, Tennessee; and (3) Pape' Brothers, Inc. in Eugene, Oregon.⁹ This exercise confirmed the accuracy of Caterpillar's formula. Caterpillar "confronted" those dealers and sought to aggressively persuade them to purchase their parts almost exclusively from Caterpillar.¹⁰ [8] Eventually, these dealers were persuaded to source almost exclusively from Caterpillar.¹¹

5. Spreading The Word

Caterpillar's pilot exercise had an effect beyond the three dealers directly involved. [*1214] Word spread throughout the dealer network that Caterpillar was "getting serious" about the practice of selling non-genuine parts.¹² [9] Caterpillar welcomed and encouraged this effect. Tom Headington at Caterpillar recommended that Caterpillar "take an official position strongly discouraging dealer sourcing non-genuine parts where a genuine Caterpillar part is available to the dealer from Caterpillar."¹³

The issue of non-genuine parts sales was addressed at a Caterpillar "Worldwide Marketing Management Meeting" in October of 1985 in Galesburg, Illinois. It was determined that dealers who "outsource" would be "personally contacted by district/region managers and reminded of their obligations to CTCO."¹⁴ It was further determined that if the personal contact produced no reaction from the dealer, "one or more persuasive measures [could] be employed: suspension of parts returns; 100 percent inspection of warranty parts; [and] a dealer requirement to identify non-genuine parts on customer invoices."¹⁵ Also at the Galesburg meeting, Caterpillar initiated a challenge to increase incremental parts sales worldwide by $ 200 million.¹⁶ The emphasis on "dealer sourcing loyalty" was

⁸ "1983 Dealer Principal Meetings," p. 9, Ex. #3.0 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) (emphasis added). Although the speaker is not identified within the text itself, the immediately preceding document identifies the speaker as Dean Moore. See Memo from RD Murphy to Parts & Service Sales Representatives (June 6, 1983), Ex. #3.0 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("Attached are two references concerning dealers' use of competitive parts. The first is a copy of the talk Dean Moore gave to dealer principals at the meeting in Colorado Springs").

⁹ See Memo from BJ Hansotia to Steve Larson (Oct. 4, 1984), Ex. #3.5 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

¹⁰ See Memo from TE Headington to JD Keenan (Aug. 15, 1985), Ex. #3.15 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

¹¹ See "Dealer Parts Sourcing Loyalty," Ex. #3.23 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("Three dealers confronted and changed"); "Dealer Sourcing Loyalty," Ex. #3.26 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("several dealers confronted and converted"); "Dealer Sourcing Loyalty," Ex. #3.41 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) ("several dealers confronted and converted").

¹² See Memo from JG Evans to RP Bonati (Aug. 22, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("word is on the streets that Caterpillar is finally serious about their dealers' involvement in competitive parts."); Memo from MD Meadows to Region Managers, BR Clough, LS Goetsch, DA Lewis, & JM Tedford (Aug. 28, 1985), Ex. #5 to Volpp's Supp. Resp. ("from comments we've received, word is apparently spreading throughout the dealer organization that we are at last, getting serious about the practice of not using Caterpillar as the source for parts needs.").

¹³ See Memo from TE Headington to JD Keenan (Aug. 15, 1985), Ex. #3.27 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

¹⁴ Synopsized Minutes of Oct. 27-31 Worldwide Marketing Management Meeting in Galesburg, attached to Memo from RJ Gutierrez to DV Fites (Nov. 7, 1985), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1). See also Memo from BR Clough to RJ Gutierrez (Nov. 5, 1985), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

¹⁵ Id.

expected to account for $ 40-$ 50 million toward this total.¹⁷ Caterpillar made the decision that local representatives would have a "Woodshed" talk" with dealers "who are into nongenuine parts" and send out a "sourcing [10] loyalty letter."¹⁸

[11] Caterpillar's official position on the issue of non-genuine parts sales went out on May 12, 1986, in the form of a letter from Dave Lewis to all dealers, region managers and district managers. The position statement was as follows:

The basis of our agreements with dealers is our expectation that they will adequately represent the Caterpillar products designated in those agreements to our satisfaction. The use of genuine Caterpillar parts is essential to the performance of our dealers' obligation to support Caterpillar prime products and the fulfillment of their obligation to adequately represent the entire Caterpillar product line -- including parts.¹⁹ [12]

The letter further informs the dealers that:

District Managers will be discussing this subject with you as appropriate. I encourage those of you affected by this position to review your current sourcing and sales practices and do what is necessary to ensure your practices are consistent with the [*1215] effective representation of Caterpillar and our common interests.²⁰

6. Caterpillar's Instructions To District Managers On Approaching Dealers Who Sell Non-Genuine Parts

Caterpillar sent copies of this letter to all district managers in advance of its distribution to dealers. In addition to the letter, district managers were given several documents for use in communicating with dealers who sell non-genuine parts. One such document attempts to answer the question, "What do you say to the dealer who buys from competitors and says, 'why shouldn't I buy this part from your competitor? It seems like good quality and it's 25% less than your price?'"²¹ The suggested response is as follows:

You can buy from whomever you choose -- we have no control over that. But, I would ask you a similar question. Why shouldn't we sell tractors or parts to your competitor -- perhaps the local Komatsu dealer? They may be happy to buy many items from us at good prices -- our sales and profits could increase.²²

The document goes on to emphasize the importance of Caterpillar and its dealers "helping each other" in their "mutual interest." [13] It concludes with "one last question -- our agreement implies that you will totally represent

¹⁶ See Memo from MD Meadows to RP Bonati, SB Brush, DE Moore, RD Nitto, and RR Schild (Nov. 8, 1985), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1); Memo from JD Keenan to RC Brown, FP Cholat, PR Dalton, DW Lahti, MD Meadows, H Neilson, and BM Smith (Nov. 5, 1985), Ex. #3.26 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1); Memo from JD Keenan to DV Fites (April 3, 1986), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1); Memo from DA Lewis to SB Brush, RP Bonati, DE Moore, RD Nitto, RR Schild (May 16, 1986), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

¹⁷ "Dealer Sourcing Loyalty," attached to Memo from BR Clough to RC Brown, FP Cholat, RJ Jacobson, DW Lahti, JT McCabe and HC Neilson (Feb. 7, 1986), Ex. #3.26 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

¹⁸ Id.

¹⁹ Letter from DA Lewis to Dealer Principals, Region Managers, and District Managers (May 12, 1986), Ex. #3.35 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2); Ex. #85 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol III). Caterpillar has submitted proof that the author of this letter believes that dealers "certainly . . . have no contractual obligations to source entirely genuine Caterpillar parts." Confidential Testimony of David Lewis, Ex. #84 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. III).

²⁰ Id.

²¹ "Loyalty' - It's Not a One Way Street," attached to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (April 2, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

²² Id.

Caterpillar -- if you do not represent us for specific items in your service territory, who should we look to be the Caterpillar representative in your territory for these items?"²³

Caterpillar sent another "dealer sourcing" letter to district managers, with "support materials" attached, as a follow-up to the May 12, 1986 "position statement."²⁴ These materials were "designed to assist [district managers] in [their] understanding of this issue, as well as future dealer discussions."²⁵ The first "support material" attachment is the May 12, 1986 letter from Dave Lewis itself. The second attachment is a "position statement" which states, inter alia, as follows:

Today dealers consider and/or actively source [14] for resale nongenuine parts. This practice displaces the sale of new/remanufactured genuine Caterpillar parts. It is estimated to cost NACD between $ 50-$ 100 M annually in parts sales revenue.

....
Dealer sourcing of nongenuine parts which displace the sale of genuine Caterpillar parts for the purpose of improved gross profit is unacceptable.

....
Districts should advise dealers that Caterpillar is committed to providing competitive prices which generate a reasonable (aggregate) return to the dealer. We realize (and so do most dealers) that there will be situations where an individual transaction may not provide this return. Nevertheless, we expect dealers to pursue the total opportunity.²⁶ [15]

The third attachment is a definition of a genuine Caterpillar part: "A genuine Cat part is a part manufactured by or for Caterpillar which is sold under a Caterpillar trademark."²⁷

The final "support material" attachment to Mr. Meadows' July 18, 1986 Memo includes two documents. The first is a sample copy of a "district action letter" which district managers [*1216] could send to dealers.²⁸ The second is a summary of a "successful attempt at encouraging one dealer to source only genuine CAT parts."²⁹ The sample "district action letter" states as follows:

Under our dealership agreement, you have an obligation to adequately represent Caterpillar products including parts. Representation of directly competitive parts adversely affects that obligation. If you choose to stock non-genuine parts, we expect it to be only as an accommodation to customers who insist upon purchasing such parts. We would expect you to not promote such products where we provide genuine Caterpillar parts.

....
In failing to adequately represent us, you create some serious problems which inhibit our ability to do business with

²³ Id.

²⁴ Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

²⁵ Id.

²⁶ "Position Statement," Attachment II to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) (emphasis added).

²⁷ Attachment III to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

²⁸ Sample Letter, Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

²⁹ "Summary . . . [of] successful attempt at encouraging one dealer to source only genuine CAT parts" (June 11, 1986), Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

[16] is our only dealer in . You have elected to eliminate your representation of certain Caterpillar products. Will the list be ever growing? If so, we may be forced to consider who will represent us in for such items and whether we wish to have more than one dealer in the area.³⁰

[17] The "summary" in the final "support material" attachment to Mr. Meadows' Memo describes the manner in which Caterpillar successfully convinced one of the "pilot" dealerships to purchase all of its parts requirements from Caterpillar sources. The summary states that "it is hoped that this document will be beneficial for other districts with similar problems."³¹ The summary explains how Caterpillar representatives prepared for the "showdown" by gathering data indicating a "significant reduction in purchases of certain CAT parts commodities."³² It then details the discussions with dealer principals who were called into the district office and presented with the findings. The discussion included emphasis on all of the reasons why Caterpillar felt that its parts were superior to those of its competitors. The discussion concluded with one last question to the dealer: "our agreement implies that you will totally represent Caterpillar -- if you do not represent us for specific items in your service territory, who should we look to be the Caterpillar representative in your territory for these items?"³³ The summary states that "at the conclusion of the meeting, it was made [18] clear that the dealer was free to represent any product (or parts) line they wished. However, if they chose not to completely represent our lines, we would have to seek that representation in some other fashion."³⁴ Caterpillar then gave the dealer one week to give notice of [*1217] which course of action they would be taking. The summary concludes by stating that the dealer decided "to completely represent CAT parts" and that the dealership continues to be "clean."³⁵

7. Caterpillar's Response To An Anonymous Tip

In late 1986, Caterpillar received a letter from an anonymous "concerned but loyal Caterpillar dealer" who informed the company that certain [19] dealers were selling non-genuine parts through their used parts departments.

³⁶ [20] A handwritten note on that letter indicates that a Caterpillar representative "will address it in [his] NACD remarks . . . to the extent agreeable by legal."³⁷ Mr. D.V. Fites then had this to say at the September 1986 NACD Dealer Meeting:

³⁰ Sample Letter, Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) (emphasis in original).

This form letter appears to have been derived from a letter sent to Rozier Machinery Co. from the Jacksonville District Manager. See infra note 66, and accompanying text; Letter from RF Noonan to Dabo Dabasinskas, Rozier Machinery Co. (Feb. 20, 1986), Ex. #3.28c to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2). That dealer responded by objecting to "the threatening nature of the letter." Letter from G. Robert Blanchard to RF Noonan (March 13, 1986), Ex. #3.28d to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2); but see Aff. of G. Robert Blanchard, Ex. #73 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. II) ("In retrospect, my language [about the 'threatening nature' of Mr. Noonan's letter] was poorly chosen. I knew Mr. Noonan was not threatening me or the dealership in a literal sense."). The dealership subsequently terminated purchases of all non-genuine parts. See Letter from Chuck Bacon to Bob McCreary (March 4, 1986), Ex. #3.28d to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2); see also Letter from RF Noonan to Dabo Dabasinskas (May 2, 1986), Ex. #3.28e to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

³¹ "Summary . . . [of] successful attempt at encouraging one dealer to source only genuine CAT parts" (June 11, 1986), Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

³² Id.

³³ Id. (emphasis added).

³⁴ Id. (emphasis added).

³⁵ Id.

³⁶ See Letter from "A concerned but loyal Caterpillar dealer" to Mr. George Schaefer (Aug. 15, 1986), Ex. #3.40 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

³⁷ Id.

And speaking of winning the battle and losing the war, let me raise one further point in the strongest terms possible. We have recently received a report indicating that several dealers are involved in the nongenuine parts business through their used parts operations. We are currently in the process of investigating this report. Let me just say that I urge all of you to examine your used parts activities. If you are in the nongenuine parts business, I urge you to get out. If you're not in it, don't get in. I can think of nothing more injurious to our mutual long-term future than assisting competitive parts manufacturers to gain a stronger market position through our own distribution organization.³⁸

8. The Success Of Caterpillar's Campaign

Caterpillar's efforts to reduce sales of non-genuine parts by Caterpillar dealers proved quite successful. Sales of Caterpillar parts increased as dealers dropped or decreased their sales of nongenuine parts in favor of genuine Caterpillar parts. Similarly, CEM lost sales to Caterpillar dealers, while their sales in other markets continued to grow.³⁹ At issue in the instant litigation is whether Caterpillar's attempts to increase parts sales, in the manner in which it did, were improper.

9. Caterpillar's Proof

Caterpillar submitted, inter alia, seventy-eight affidavits from employees (usually presidents, vice-presidents, chairmen of the board, or other executive positions) [21] at various Caterpillar dealerships throughout the United States. The affidavits detail the policies and practices at dealerships with respect to purchasing parts from sources other than Caterpillar. The affidavits also describe the reasons behind such policies and practices. A common theme in almost every affidavit is either (1) assurances that Caterpillar has not threatened, pressured or coerced the dealership on the issue of purchasing non-genuine parts, or (2) assurances that policy decisions at the dealership are not based on threats, pressure or coercion.⁴⁰ Caterpillar submitted additional evidence challenging Volpp's substantive claims⁴¹ [22] as well as Volpp's damage theory.⁴²

10. Volpp's Proof

In addition to the proof discussed supra, Volpp has submitted volumes of anecdotal [*1218] evidence pertaining to Caterpillar's communications with various specific dealerships.⁴³ [23] Much of this evidence is inadmissible

³⁸ D.V. Fites Comments at September 1986 NACD Meeting, Ex. #3.40 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) (emphasis added).

³⁹ Decl. of Larry Gray, Ex. #1.0 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁴⁰ Only two of Caterpillar's seventy-eight affidavits lack such a statement. See Aff. of Gregory Poole, Jr., Ex. #26 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. I); Aff. of John R. Traynham, Ex. #76 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. II).

⁴¹ See, e.g., Pl.'s Second Resp. to Caterpillar's First Request for Admissions, Ex. #80 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. III); Confidential Testimony of Donald V. Fites, Ex. #83 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. III); Confidential Testimony of David Lewis, Ex. #84 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. III).

⁴² See Dep. of Craig Walter Kugler, Ex. #89 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. III).

⁴³ Some of Volpp's evidence indicates that in communicating with dealers Caterpillar emphasized that dealers were free to make their own business decisions. See Letter from DP Walsh to Omer Lamkin (Nov. 19, 1984), Ex. #3.8 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("we are acutely aware Whayne Supply Company is an independent business and as such has the right to sell any product, to any customers in any area") ("We have no desire to 'force' our dealers into buying genuine parts solely as a method of extending our profitability"); Memo from JG Evans to RP Bonati (July 31, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("I made myself clear that Taylor Machinery Company could sell to whomever they chose"); Memo from JG Evans to RP Bonati (Aug. 22, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("I made myself clear that Taylor Machinery Company could represent any product (or parts) line they wished"); "Loyalty' - It's Not a One Way Street," attached to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (April 2, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) ("We have no control over dealers' decisions to sell or not sell competitive parts"); "Summary . . . [of] successful attempt at encouraging one dealer to source only genuine CAT parts" (June 11, 1986), Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) ("At the conclusion of the meeting, it was made clear that the dealer was free to represent any product (or parts) line they wished").

hearsay, particularly the evidence contained in "Sales Call Reports" and "Unfair Competition Reports" prepared by CEM to describe conversations with employees at several Caterpillar dealerships.⁴⁴ However, much of the evidence, described infra, is admissible.

As noted, one tactic used by Caterpillar to increase parts sales was to inform dealers identified as sellers of non-genuine parts that Caterpillar [24] would take certain protective measures. Among them were: (1) requiring inspections of all warranty claims submitted by the dealer, and (2) suspension or auditing of all year-end parts returns.⁴⁵ [25] Volpp has conceded that these measures are reasonable when employed in order to protect the integrity of Caterpillar's warranty and parts return programs.⁴⁶ However, Volpp has submitted evidence to indicate that Caterpillar may have intended these measures not to further these reasonable goals but in order to "punish" or "sanction" dealers for selling non-genuine parts.⁴⁷ [26] In addition, Volpp has submitted evidence to suggest that Caterpillar was acting with an intent to flex its [*1219] muscle over dealers in attempting to increase sales of genuine Caterpillar parts.⁴⁸ [27] Some evidence suggests that this intention was communicated directly to ⁴⁴ Volpp has submitted a motion to strike affidavits and Caterpillar has submitted a motion in limine which it wishes to have considered together with the instant motion for summary judgment. At issue in both motions is the admissibility of certain dealer affidavits, unfair competition reports and sales call reports submitted in connection with the instant motion for summary judgment.

The parties have stipulated and agreed that "it would be onerous for the Court to make individual rulings on the admissibility of all or part of each such dealer affidavit, unfair competition report or sales call report proffered by the parties." Stipulation and Order at 2 (filed June 16, 1994). Thus, for purposes of the instant motion for summary judgment, the parties have agreed "to relinquish any right that they may have to such individual rulings." Id. But, should either party find a need for specific individual rulings, a motion to that effect may be filed.

⁴⁵ See, e.g., Memo from RJ Gutierrez (Nov. 7, 1985), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1); Memo from BR Clough (Nov. 5, 1985), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1); Letter from DP Walsh to Omer Lamkin, Whayne Supply Co. (Dec. 14, 1984), Ex. #3.8a to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1); Dep. of J. William Pullen, Ex. to Pl.'s Supp. Mem. to Caterpillar Inc.'s Mot. for Summ. J. ("Volpp's Supp. Response").

⁴⁶ In response to requests for admissions, Volpp has admitted that "it is reasonable for Caterpillar to protect the integrity of its warranty system by refusing to honor claims that do not involve the failure of genuine Caterpillar parts." Pl.'s Second Resp. to Caterpillar's First Request for Admissions P 423, Ex. #80 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol III). Volpp has also admitted that "it is reasonable for Caterpillar to protect the integrity of its annual parts return program by refusing to accept the return of non-genuine parts." Pl.'s Second Resp. to Caterpillar's First Request for Admissions P 425, Ex. #80 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. III).

⁴⁷ See, e.g., Memo from JM DeLuca to JG Evans (Nov. 26, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) & Ex. #3.18 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("sanctions"); Synopsized minutes of Oct. 27-31 Worldwide Marketing Management Meeting in Galesburg, attached to Memo from RJ Gutierrez to DV Fites (Nov. 7, 1985), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("persuasive measures"); Memo from BR Clough to RJ Gutierrez (Nov. 5, 1985), Ex. #3.24 to Volpp's Response ("persuasive measures"); Memo from BR Clough to RC Brown, FP Cholat, RJ Jacobson, DW Lahti, JT McCabe, & HC Neilson (Feb. 7, 1986), Ex. #3.26 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("punitive measures").

⁴⁸ See, e.g., Memo from DE Moore to District Managers (Dec. 11, 1984), Ex. #3.9 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("We expect dealers to purchase their parts and remanufactured components from Caterpillar sources") (emphasis added); Memo from TE Headington to JD Keenan (Aug. 15, 1985), Ex. #3.15 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("CTCo. should take an official position strongly discouraging dealer sourcing non-genuine parts where a genuine Caterpillar part is available to the dealer from Caterpillar") (emphasis added); Memo from JM DeLuca to JG Evans (July 24, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("we should demand Taylor [Machinery Co.] remove all non-genuine parts from their main and branch stores within five working days") (emphasis added).

See also Memo from JD Keenan to RC Brown, FP Cholat, PR Dalton, DW Lahti, MD Meadows, H Neilson and BM Smith (Nov. 5, 1985), Ex. #3.26 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1). This memo requests input on several items, including ideas for increasing incremental sales. Those ideas are attached to the memo on a sheet styled, "Some Additional Potential Incremental Sales Possibilities." One idea listed on the sheet is "Regain dealer sourcing loyalty." An unknown individual has crossed through the word "Regain" and has written the following below: "Not regain, but demand -- should not even be open to discussion" (emphasis added).

dealers.⁴⁹ Ultimately, Caterpillar's only power over dealers is cancellation of the dealership.⁵⁰ However, to this court's knowledge of the record, Caterpillar has never terminated a dealership on the basis of non-genuine parts sales.

On some occasions in communicating with dealers, Caterpillar characterized the practice of selling non-genuine parts in such a way that a reasonable dealer could conclude that Caterpillar regarded [28] the practice as a violation of the dealer's contractual obligations under the Sales and Service Agreement.⁵¹ Caterpillar did this by describing the practice of selling non-genuine parts and then stating that this may be occurring despite the dealer's intention to "totally represent Caterpillar, as the agreement requires."⁵²

(a) Boyce Machinery

Volpp has submitted evidence [29] that a Caterpillar representative named Tom Neely made an arguably threatening statement to an employee at Boyce Machinery Co. Boyce had been involved in purchasing non-genuine parts, including CEM parts, beginning in the early 1980s. When Mr. Neeley began making telephone inquiries, Boyce employees took actions to hide their purchases of non-genuine parts because they felt Mr. Neeley would "disapprove."⁵³ On at least one occasion, Mr. Neeley did disapprove.⁵⁴ At a later time, in reference to the purchase of non-genuine parts at other dealerships, Mr. Neeley indicated to Paul Hubert, Inventory Control Manager at Boyce, that "somebody could lose their contract over it -- somebody could lose their dealership over it."⁵⁵ Boyce "slowed down" their outside purchases for [*1220] two or three months because such purchases made Caterpillar "unhappy."⁵⁶

[30] (b) Carlton Co.

Volpp has submitted evidence that Carlton Co. attempted to prevent Caterpillar from discovering its purchases of CEM parts.⁵⁷ Carlton would split its orders for seals and gaskets between Caterpillar parts and CEM parts in order to hide the CEM purchases.⁵⁸

⁴⁹ See, e.g., Memo from TE Headington to JD Keenan (Aug. 15, 1985), Ex. #3.15 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("District is taking a strong posture [with Taylor Machinery Co.] and fully expects the dealer's commitment to stop.") (emphasis added); Memo from JG Evans to RP Bonati (Aug. 9, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) ("Jon Thompson and Ed Newton . . . were confronted regarding their involvement in selling competitive parts and their active pursuit of parts, service, and machine sales outside their service territory. Although he initially denied participation in this activity, Jon later confessed his intent . . . when confronted with overwhelming evidence") (emphasis added).

⁵⁰ See, e.g., Memo from RD Page to BR Clough (Oct. 22, 1985), Ex. #3.27 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) ("Ultimately there is still no identified basis for enforcement short of threat of cancellation.").

⁵¹ See "1983 Dealer Principal Meetings," p. 9, Ex. #3.0 to Volpp's Response [Vol. 1]; see also "'Loyalty' - It's Not a One Way Street," attached to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (April 2, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2); Sample Letter, Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2); "Summary . . . [of] successful attempt at encouraging one dealer to source only genuine CAT parts" (June 11, 1986), Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

⁵² Id.

⁵³ Hubert Dep., pp. 37-43; Trosclair Dep., pp. 15-16, 71-73, 78.

⁵⁴ Hubert Dep. at 37-43.

⁵⁵ Hubert Dep. at 44.

⁵⁶ Hubert Dep., pp. 53-55.

⁵⁷ Dep. of William Gerald Grimsley, Jr., Ex. #3.39 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

⁵⁸ Id.

(c) Mustang Tractor Co.

As noted, Mustang Tractor Co. was one of three dealerships selected by Caterpillar in its "pilot exercise."⁵⁹ Caterpillar representatives had discussions with Mustang about its practice of selling non-genuine parts. The result of those discussions was that Mustang was to "develop an action plan to return to sourcing from Cat."⁶⁰ Caterpillar "directed" Mustang to "selectively disengage from most [of its]" alternatively sourced parts business by the end of November 1985.⁶¹ Mustang was permitted to continue dealing with CEM "for now."⁶² Mustang later agreed to "stop doing business with CEM . . . in exchange for [Caterpillar's] assistance on hydraulic and turbocharger repair option development."⁶³

(d) Rozier Machinery Co.

Caterpillar learned about Rozier's practice of buying from alternative sources. Caterpillar representatives asked "about the quality of the parts, [stated] the fact that they were unhappy with the fact that [Rozier was] doing it, and [stated] that there was an agreement between Caterpillar and the dealers that parts would be purchased, replacement parts would be purchased from Caterpillar."⁶⁴ [32] Caterpillar pressed this in terms of an obligation.⁶⁵

The district manager of the Jacksonville District at Caterpillar, Mr. R. F. Noonan, sent a letter to Dabo Dabasinskas, the General Manager at Rozier, on February 26, 1986. That letter stated as follows:

Under our dealership agreement you have an obligation to adequately represent Caterpillar products including parts. Representation of directly competitive parts adversely affects that obligation. If you choose to stock non-genuine parts, we expect it to be only as an accommodation to customers who insist upon purchasing such parts. We would expect you to not promote such products where we provide genuine Caterpillar parts.

. . .

In failing to adequately represent us, you create some serious problems which inhibit our ability to do business with Rozier. . . .

. . .

Rozier is our only dealer in central Florida. You have elected to eliminate your representation of certain Caterpillar products. Will the list be ever growing? If so, we may be forced to consider who will represent us in central Florida for such items and whether we wish to have more [33] than one dealer in the area.⁶⁶

The letter from Mr. Noonan prompted an angry response from the dealer principal at Rozier, Mr. Robert Blanchard. Mr. Blanchard [*1221] wrote to Mr. Noonan and objected to "the threatening nature of the letter."⁶⁷

⁵⁹ See supra notes 7-10, and accompanying text.

⁶⁰ Memo from TE Headington to JD Keenan (Aug. 15, 1985), Ex. #3.15 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁶¹ Memo from Jeff Alt to John Chalmers (September 9, 1985), Ex. #5 to Dep. of John C. Chalmers, Volpp's Supp. Response.

⁶² Id.

⁶³ Id.

⁶⁴ Dep. of James T. Badger, Ex. #3.28b to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

⁶⁵ Id.

⁶⁶ Letter from RF Noonan to Dabo Dabasinskas (Feb. 20, 1986), Ex. #3.28c to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2) (emphasis in original). As noted, this letter appears to be the source for a "sample letter" sent to all district managers as a model for addressing the problem of alternatively sourced parts with dealers. See supra note 30, and accompanying text; Sample Letter, Attachment IV to Memo from MD Meadows to District Managers (July 18, 1986), Ex. #3.36 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

[34] In early 1986, Rozier decided to stop buying outside parts "because Caterpillar was unhappy and [Caterpillar was] telling [Rozier] they were very unhappy about it." ⁶⁸ Chuck Bacon at Rozier notified CEM by letter that it would no longer be purchasing CEM products. ⁶⁹ Mr. Bacon expressed "regret" at "having to write this letter." ⁷⁰

(e) Taylor Machinery Co.

As noted, Taylor Machinery Co. was one of three dealerships selected by Caterpillar in its "pilot exercise." ⁷¹ Caterpillar representatives had discussions with Taylor about their practice of selling non-genuine parts. The district management took a "strong posture" and "fully expected the practice to stop." ⁷² Mr. J. G. Evans from Caterpillar "confronted" Jon Thompson and Ed Newton at Taylor with "overwhelming evidence" of Taylor's involvement [35] in competitive parts. ⁷³ Mr. Thompson eventually "confessed," and Mr. Evans asked them to "consider the consequences of their actions." ⁷⁴ Mr. Evans met later with Mr. Thompson on August 13, 1985, making himself clear that Taylor was free to purchase from whomever it chose. Mr. Evans then stated that "if [Taylor] chose not to completely represent [Caterpillar's] lines, [Caterpillar] would have to seek that representation in some other fashion." ⁷⁵

Taylor made the decision to purchase parts only from Caterpillar in [36] order to "clear their bad name" and have all "sanctions" against them removed. ⁷⁶ Taylor apparently stood by this decision and "cleaned up their act," dealing solely with genuine Caterpillar parts. ⁷⁷

(f) West Texas Equipment Co.

Volpp has submitted evidence that Mr. Burdett at Caterpillar approached Mr. Bill Caudy at West Texas Equipment Co. (West Texas was involved in selling parts from CEM and S.K. Wellman) and "in a heavy handed manner and tone," asked why and where Caudy was buying these non-genuine parts. ⁷⁸ Mr. Burdett then told Mr. Caudy "in an accusatory tone" that West Texas Equipment was the only dealership in the territory that was buying competitive

⁶⁷ Letter from G. Robert Blanchard to R. F. Noonan (March 8, 1986), Ex. #3.28d to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2). See supra note 29. Mr. Blanchard subsequently recanted his objection to Mr. Noonan's letter. Aff. of G. Robert Blanchard, Ex. #73 to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. II) ("In retrospect, my language [about the 'threatening nature' of Mr. Noonan's letter] was poorly chosen. I knew Mr. Noonan was not threatening me or the dealership in a literal sense").

⁶⁸ Dep. of James T. Badger, Ex. #3.28b to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

⁶⁹ Letter from Chuck Bacon to Bob McCreary (March 4, 1986), Ex. #3.28d to Volpp's Response (Vol. 2).

⁷⁰ Id.

⁷¹ See supra notes 8-11, and accompanying text.

⁷² Memo from TE Headington to JD Keenan (Aug. 15, 1985), Ex. #3.15 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁷³ Memo from JG Evans to RP Bonati (Aug. 9, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁷⁴ Id.

⁷⁵ Memo from JG Evans to RP Bonati (July 31, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) (emphasis added); see also Memo from JG Evans to RP Bonati (Aug. 22, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁷⁶ Memo from JM DeLuca to JG Evans (Nov. 26, 1985), Ex. #3.16 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1) and Ex. #3.18 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁷⁷ Memo from JG Evans to MD Meadows (Dec. 12, 1985), Ex. #3.18 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁷⁸ Decl. of Bill Caudy (filed March 9, 1992).

parts.⁷⁹ Shortly after this confrontation, Mr. Burdett's boss, Mr. Stephenson, instructed Mr. Burdett [37] to stop all outside purchasing.⁸⁰

(g) Whayne Supply Co.

In late 1984, Mr. Dan Walsh at Caterpillar sent a letter to Mr. Omer Lamkin at Whayne Supply Co. That letter stated, in pertinent part, as follows:

This letter expresses our concern over Whayne's current practice of sourcing non-genuine parts and reiterates some of our [*1222] opinions as to "why you should buy from us". At the advent, let me say we are acutely aware Whayne Supply Company is an independent business and as such has the right to sell any product, to any customers in any area. We, as a supplier to Whayne, have an obligation to provide you with quality, high-value products which you can merchandise at a profit. You and I both know the Caterpillar/dealer enterprise has grown far above that simple definition--and I propose its success is due largely to that increased commitment. We also haven't lost track of the success you have had with the Caterpillar [38] products you do represent.

Omer, no doubt due to the difficult economy, some current suppliers and numerous other companies have increased their efforts to secure a portion of your parts orders. While we all may be surprised to the extent this happens in the Caterpillar family, we suspect it isn't management's intention, but rather the action of some well-intentioned employee. What results is dealers that fully intend to represent CAT (as the agreement requires) find themselves offering competitive parts⁸¹ [39]

The letter goes on to detail many of the advantages of Caterpillar parts, including product quality, distribution, price and other concerns. It concludes as follows:

. . . . That Whayne has chosen to use non-genuine parts is very disturbing. Situations such as these severely limit your Caterpillar contacts' motivation to "fight" for your special requests (i.e. re-instating the GET Specialist or increasing our participation in u/c merchandising). . . .

. . . .

We are committed to merchandising our parts only through a strong Caterpillar dealer organization. We ask you to make a similar commitment in return.⁸²

Mr. Lamkin responded to Mr. Walsh by defending Whayne's practice of purchasing a "limited" quantity of non-genuine parts.⁸³ Mr. Walsh then notified Mr. Lamkin that Caterpillar would "monitor all transmission warranty claims until source of the parts and cause of failure can be verified."⁸⁴ Mr. Walsh also notified Mr. Lamkin that "similar limitations" would be required on Whayne's surplus parts returns.⁸⁵ Mr. Walsh informed Mr. Lamkin that these were protective measures to be put in place "until [Caterpillar] can respond to [Whayne's] concerns and regain [Whayne's] business."⁸⁶

⁷⁹ Id.

⁸⁰ Id.

⁸¹ Letter from DP Walsh to Omer Lamkin (Nov. 19, 1984), Ex. #3.8 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁸² Id.

⁸³ Letter from Omer Lamkin to Dan Walsh (Dec. 14, 1984), Ex. #3.8a to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁸⁴ Letter from DP Walsh to Omer Lamkin (Feb. 14, 1985), Ex. #3.8a to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁸⁵ Id.

⁸⁶ Id.

Whayne Supply Co. thereafter changed its policy and ceased the practice of buying [40] competitive parts for stock.⁸⁷ Whayne's new policy permitted the purchase of non-genuine parts only in repairing downed machines and only where unacceptable delays in delivery prevented the use of authorized parts.⁸⁸ Whayne's new policy absolutely prohibited the purchase of competitive parts where the part was "such that its failure would lead to potential warranty claims against the manufacturer if it should fail."⁸⁹ This was viewed as a "positive action" by Caterpillar.⁹⁰

II. DISCUSSION

1. Summary Judgment Standards

HN1[] Summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that [*1223] the moving party is [41] entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). HN2[] Rule 56\(c\) mandates the entry of summary judgment, "after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). However, Rule 56\(c\) is not a requirement that the moving party negate his opponent's claim, but does require a showing of an absence of evidence supporting the non-moving party's case. U.S. v. Currency $ 267,961.07, 916 F.2d 1104, 1108 (6th Cir. 1990) (citing Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323).

HN3[] The standard for granting summary judgment mirrors the directed verdict standard under Rule 50\(a\), which requires the court to grant a directed verdict where there can be but one reasonable conclusion. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). A scintilla of evidence in support of the non-moving party's position is not sufficient to successfully oppose summary judgment; "there must be evidence [42] on which the jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff." Pierce v. Commonwealth Life Ins. Co., 40 F.3d 796, 800 (6th Cir. 1994) (quoting Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252). No genuine issue for trial exists "where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986).

HN4[] Initially, Rule 56 requires the moving party to inform the court of the basis for the motion, and to identify those portions of the "pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. The non-moving party may oppose the motion with any of the evidentiary materials listed in Rule 56\(c\), but reliance on the pleadings alone is not sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. HN5[] In ruling on a summary judgment motion the court accepts as true the non-moving party's evidence, draws all justifiable inferences in favor of the non-moving party, and does not weigh the [43] evidence or the credibility of witnesses. Id. at 255.

HN6[] Substantive law determines which facts are material; that is, which facts might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Id. at 248. Irrelevant or unnecessary facts do not preclude summary judgment even when they are in dispute. Id. The issue of fact must be genuine. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), \(e\). HN7[] To establish a genuine issue of fact the non-moving party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586; Pierce, 40 F.3d at 800. The non-moving party must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587; Pierce, 40

⁸⁷ Memo from Frank Applegate to Byrl Bell (July 31, 1985), Ex. #3.8b to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

⁸⁸ Id.

⁸⁹ Id.

⁹⁰ Memo from D Waddilove to MD Meadows (Aug. 7, 1985), Ex. #3.8b to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1).

F.3d at 800. HN8 A summary judgment determination is essentially an inquiry as to "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 251-52.

The Supreme Court has affirmed the appropriateness of summary judgment in antitrust cases. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468, 119 J441 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 ("If plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted); Matsushita, 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (antitrust conspiracy claim dismissed because of plaintiffs' failure, after several years of detailed discovery, to put forward significant probative evidence of the alleged conspiracy); First Nat'l Bank of Arizona, etc. v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 284-90, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968); White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 259, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963). Here, both parties have engaged in significant discovery, and in the absence of any material factual dispute, summary judgment is an appropriate procedural tool for this case.

The Sixth Circuit has also recognized the propriety of summary judgment in antitrust [*1224] cases. See, e.g., Bouldis v. Suzuki Motor Corp., 711 F.2d 1319, 1324-25 (6th Cir. 1983); Smith M.D. v. Northern Michigan Hosp., Inc., 703 F.2d 942, 947-48 (6th Cir. 1983). Therefore, the court agrees with defendant's assertion that if it demonstrates that no factual dispute is present and that [45] it should prevail as a matter of law, summary judgment should be rendered in its favor.

2. Volpp's Federal Antitrust Claims (Counts I and II)

Volpp has alleged two federal antitrust claims in its complaint (Counts I and II). Count I alleges unlawful "tying" arrangements under both Section 1 of the Sherman Act⁹¹ [46] and Section 3 of the Clayton Act.⁹² Count II alleges unlawful combination and conspiracy under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Volpp has standing to bring this action for injunctive relief, treble damages, and costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee, pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15,⁹³ [47] and Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26.⁹⁴

⁹¹ Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides as follows:

HN9 Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding one million dollars if a corporation, or if any other person, one hundred thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

15 U.S.C. § 1 (1985). The punishments provided for in this provision were increased by amendment in 1990. See Antitrust Amendments Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-588, § 4(a), 104 Stat. 2879, 2880 (1990) (now codified at 15 U.S.C. § 1). The amended provisions are not applicable to the instant complaint.

⁹² Section 3 of the Clayton Act provides as follows:

HN10 It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities . . . or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

15 U.S.C. § 14 (1985).

⁹³ Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

The Supreme Court has explained the purpose of the Sherman Act as follows:

The [48] Sherman Act was designed to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty [*1225] aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade. It rests on the premise that the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of our economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of our democratic political and social institutions. But even were that premise open to question, the policy unequivocally laid down by the Act is competition.

Northern Pac. R.R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). The Court has consistently held that Section 1 of the Sherman Act only proscribes unreasonable restraints of trade. See Business Elec. Corp. v. Sharp Elec. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988) (citing those cases).

HN11 [+] Section 3 of the Clayton Act was intended "to complement the Sherman Act and to facilitate achievement of its purposes by reaching, in their incipiency, acts and practices that promise, in their full growth, to impair competition in interstate [49] commerce." Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 201, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392 (1974). Specifically, Section 3 of the Clayton Act intended to declare illegal "contracts of sale made upon the agreement or understanding that the purchaser shall not deal in the goods of a competitor or competitors of the seller, which may 'substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.'" Standard Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U.S. 346, 356, 66 L. Ed. 653, 42 S. Ct. 360 (1922).

(a) Volpp's Tying Arrangement Claim (Count I)

(a) Amount of recovery; prejudgment interest. . . . Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue there for . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. The court may award under this section, pursuant to a motion by such person promptly made, simple interest on actual damages for the period beginning on the date of service of such person's pleading setting forth a claim under the antitrust laws and ending on the date of judgment, or for any shorter period therein, if the court finds that the award of such interest for such period is just in the circumstances. In determining whether an award is just in the circumstances, the court shall consider only --

- (1) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, made motions or asserted claims or defenses so lacking in merit as to show that such party or representative acted intentionally for delay, or otherwise acted in bad faith;
- (2) whether, in the course of the action involved, such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, violated any applicable rule, statute, or court order providing for sanctions for dilatory behavior or otherwise providing for expeditious proceedings; and
- (3) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, engaged in conduct primarily for the purpose of delaying the litigation or increasing the cost thereof.

15 U.S.C. § 15 (1985).

⁹⁴ Section 15 of the Clayton Act provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

Injunctive relief for private parties; exception; costs.

Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue. . . . In any action under this section in which the plaintiff substantially prevails, the court shall award the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to such plaintiff.

15 U.S.C. § 26 (1985).

i. Elements of a Tying Claim

HN12 A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product [the tying product] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Northern Pacific, 356 U.S. at 5-6 (emphasis added). A tying arrangement may violate either Section 3 of the Clayton Act or Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Davis v. Marathon Oil Co., 528 F.2d 395, 398 (6th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 823, 50 L. Ed. 2d 85, 97 S. Ct. 75 (1976).

HN13 The Clayton Act makes it "unlawful for a person engaged [50] in commerce" to "make a sale or contract for sale of goods" on the "condition, agreement or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor or competitors of the lessee or seller, where the effect of such . . . sale[] or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 14. Although the language of the Clayton Act does not specifically address tying claims, concern regarding the "anticompetitive character of tying arrangements" was expressed during the enactment of § 3. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 10, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984); See H.R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 101-3 (1914); S. Rep. No. 698 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 6-9 (1914). Thus, the language of the Clayton Act coupled with its legislative history provided an impetus for the courts' subsequent development of tying arrangement theory.

HN14 A tying arrangement may violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act "if the seller has 'appreciable economic power' in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects [51] a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (quoting Fortner Enters., Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 503, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252, (1969)). Many tying arrangements have long been considered unreasonable restraints of trade under the Sherman Act. See Int'l Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947); Fortner Enters., Inc., 394 U.S. 495, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252. HN15 Tying claims may violate Section 3 of the Clayton Act pursuant to the same test as the Sherman Act if the tie-in involves goods, wares, merchandise or other commodities. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 23-24, n.39 (same substantive standards used by Sherman and Clayton Acts); Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1330; Marathon Oil Co., 528 F.2d at 398 ("The standard of illegality under the two statutes [Sherman and Clayton Acts] are similar.").

HN16 The Supreme Court has set forth two distinct methods of proving an unlawful tying arrangement pursuant to Section 3 of the Clayton Act and Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

The first [52] employs a presumption that an agreement is an antitrust violation, thus invoking a per se illegality rule to classify the agreement; the second, called "rule of reason" analysis, "requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition."

Lie v. St. Joseph Hosp., 964 F.2d 567, 569 (6th Cir. 1992) (quoting Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982)). Therefore, the two acknowledged methods of proving the existence of a tying arrangement are the per se and "rule of reason" approaches. In determining which analysis the court should apply, it must first decide whether the specific factual context of this case warrants per se treatment. See Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 726 (there is a "presumption in favor of the rule-of-reason standard, [and] departure from that standard must be justified by demonstrable economic effect"); Smith Mach. Co. Inc. v. Hesston Corp., 878 F.2d 1290, 1296 (10th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1073, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1026, 110 S. Ct. 1119 (1990) (per se rules appropriate [53] only for "conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive," . . . [and] "ordinarily rule of reason analysis should be employed to determine whether a practice violates the Sherman Act") (citing Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 723-24).

ii. Vertical Non-Price Restraints: Line Forcing v. Tying Arrangements

The facts of this case resemble a line forcing situation where "a manufacturer agrees to license or grant a franchise to a dealer to sell its products only if the dealer sells a full or representative line of those products." David Pester, Antitrust Law: Removing the Confusion in Tying Arrangement Jurisprudence, 1990 Ann. Surv. Am. L. 699, 737 (1992). Line-forcing is, to a great extent, a type of tying arrangement. Id. at 741. The plaintiff in this case alleges that Caterpillar is "forcing" its dealers to fully stock Caterpillar parts. However, in the typical line-forcing arrangement competitors of the defendant manufacturer are not foreclosed from selling to the dealer; the dealer is simply forced to carry a full line of the manufacturer's products (including some products the dealer may not have wanted, or may have chosen to buy elsewhere). See Smith Machinery, I541 878 F.2d at 1296 (In most line-forcing situations the manufacturer does not prohibit the dealer from carrying competing lines). In the instant case, Volpp claims that not only is Caterpillar requiring that its dealers fully stock genuine parts, but that Caterpillar is also foreclosing competitors, such as itself, from selling non-genuine parts to its dealers. Therefore, although this case has some characteristics generally associated with a line-forcing arrangement, it is not wholly representative of a pure line-forcing situation. Instead, this case most closely resembles a line-forcing exclusive dealing arrangement because the manufacturer is forcing the dealer to buy its full line, to the exclusion of all other competitors. See Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379 \(5th Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 673, 115 S. Ct. 779 (1995) (involving an exclusive dealing line-forcing arrangement).

[*1227] Plaintiff alleges that Caterpillar unlawfully tied sales of its equipment to sales of Caterpillar replacement parts, thereby excluding Caterpillar's competitors in the parts market from access to Caterpillar dealerships. Plaintiff contends that Caterpillar sales [55] of machinery represent the tying product, while replacement parts are the tied product. For the purposes of this portion of the analysis, the court will accept those allegations of plaintiff's as true and will assume the presence of a tie. With this assumption, the court will focus its inquiry on whether or not that tie is illegal. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 11 (finding that not all tying arrangements, or refusals to sell two products separately, necessarily restrain competition).

The distinction between line-forcing and traditional tying arrangements is significant because several courts have treated them differently when deciding whether a particular scenario violates the antitrust laws. Pester, Removing the Confusion at 737; see Smith Machinery, 878 F.2d 1290; Parts & Electric I, 826 F.2d 712 \(7th Cir. 1987\), aff'd, Parts & Electric II, 866 F.2d 228 \(7th Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 847, 107 L. Ed. 2d 100, 110 S. Ct. 141 (1989). Most importantly, some courts have held that per se treatment is inappropriate for line-forcing situations and that in such cases rule of reason analysis should be applied. Id. Because the court finds persuasive [56] the position that the circumstances underlying line-forcing are different from standard tie-in arrangements, the court adopts the analysis of those courts that have recognized the distinction. Thus, in considering that the facts of this case fall somewhere between pure line-forcing and a tie, the question before the court becomes whether or not per se analysis is appropriate here. While reconciling these competing principles, the court remains mindful of the admonition of the Jefferson Parish Court that "the legality of [the challenged] conduct depends on its competitive consequences, not on whether it can be labeled 'tying.'" 466 U.S. at 21 n.34. Therefore, because the facts of this case do not fall clearly within any pre-delineated scenario, the court abandons the myriad of confusing labels in favor of following the basic principles underlying antitrust law. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 466 ("Legal presumptions that rest on formalistic distinctions rather than actual market realities are generally disfavored in antitrust law.").

iii. Smith Machinery & Roy B. Taylor Sales

Most significant to the court's analysis are the Tenth Circuit's decision in Smith Mach. [57] Co. v. Hesston Corp., 878 F.2d 1290 \(10th Cir. 1989\), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1073, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1026, 110 S. Ct. 1119 (1990), and the Fifth Circuit's decision in Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379 \(5th Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 673, 115 S. Ct. 779 (1995). In Smith Machinery, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant, a manufacturer of farm machinery, had unlawfully tied the sale of its tractors to other farm machinery products. In affirming the district court's grant of summary judgment for the defendant, the court noted that line forcing is a vertical non-price restraint. Id. 878 F.2d at 1295. HN17 A vertical non-price restraint is "an agreement between entities at different levels of distribution that does not purport to affect prices or price levels charged for the goods." Id.

Relying on the Supreme Court's decision in Business Electronics, 485 U.S. 717, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, which held that vertical non-price restraints are not per se illegal, the Tenth Circuit concluded that line forcing arrangements, because they are vertical non-price restraints, should likewise be exempt from per se treatment. See id. ("We concluded [in [58\] Continental Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\)](#)] that vertical nonprice restraints had not been shown to have such a 'pernicious effect on competition' and to be so lacking in redeeming value' as to justify per se illegality.").

Tying arrangements between manufacturers and dealers are also a form of vertical restraint and under certain circumstances should only be subject to rule of reason analysis. See Jean Wegman Burns, The New Role of Coercion in Antitrust, 60 Fordham J. 12281 L. Rev. 379, 435 n.3 \(1991\) ("Vertical restraints (in the form of vertical pricing, territory, and customer restrictions) and tying arrangements are both vertical restraints in the sense that both affect (and usually limit) the freedom of choice of a party on another level of the distribution chain."); Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 35, n.2 (O'Connor, J. concurring) ("Exclusive contracts, that, like tie-ins, require the buyer to purchase a product from one seller, are subject only to the rule of reason."); Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 717 ("Although vertical agreements on resale prices are illegal per se, extension of that treatment to other 59 vertical restraints must be based on demonstrable economic effect rather than upon formalistic line-drawing."). ⁹⁵

In Taylor, the Fifth Circuit reversed the jury's finding of an unlawful tie and instead held in favor of the defendant 60 manufacturer. 28 F.3d 1379. Hollymatic was a manufacturer of hamburger patty products and sold hamburger patty machines and paper products to its dealer (plaintiff). Id. at 1381. Hollymatic and Taylor had a contractual agreement that Taylor would use its "best efforts" to sell and service the full line of Hollymatic products. Id. Implicit in that agreement was that Taylor would not purchase patty paper from any of Hollymatic's competitors. Id. After selling only Hollymatic patty paper for several years, Taylor began to purchase a substitute. Id. Hollymatic confronted Taylor about its purchases from Hollymatic's competitors, and the parties attempted to forge a new agreement. Id. When they could not come to terms over the amount of patty paper that Taylor would be required to purchase each month, Hollymatic severed its relationship with Taylor. Id. Taylor then brought suit against Hollymatic alleging that it unlawfully tied the sale of hamburger patty machines to patty paper.

While assuming the presence of a tie, the Taylor court found that the tie between patty machines and paper did not violate the antitrust laws because it had no anticompetitive effect 61 on the market. The court based its decision on the fact that the tie did not limit the ultimate choices available to consumers because customers purchasing patty machines from Taylor were free to purchase their patty paper elsewhere. See Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1383 ("Where, however, only dealers are subject to a tie, competitors do not lose a segment of the tied market if there are genuine alternative paths to consumers.") (emphasis in original). Relying on the cardinal antitrust principle that "the antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors," (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\)), the Taylor court decided that the absence of any anticompetitive harm to the consumer prevented the court from allowing the jury verdict to stand. The court further explained that not all tying arrangements, or refusals to sell two products separately, necessarily restrain competition. Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1382 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. 2, 11). Because the alleged tie in the Taylor case was also a vertical nonprice restraint, the court was further convinced that it should not be subject to per se analysis. [62\] 28 F.3d at 1383](#). The court reasoned that "there must be proof 'as a threshold matter of a substantial potential for impact on competition in order to justify per se condemnation.'" Id. at 1382 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16).

The instant case involves a vertical restraint because Caterpillar and its dealers are "at different levels of distribution" and the alleged restraint has not resulted in Caterpillar charging significantly higher prices for its parts as is normally associated with [*1229] monopolist activity.⁹⁶ In Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 735, the Court held that "economic analysis supports the view, and no precedent opposes it, that a vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels." Therefore, although the facts of this case amount to a hybrid between line-forcing and tying, they are most definitely characteristic of a vertical non-price restraint. Because vertical non-price restraints are generally not subject to per se analysis, the per se test should not be applied in this case.⁹⁷ See Int'l Logistics Group, LTD. v. Chrysler Corp., that all competitors were allegedly foreclosed [63] from selling parts 884 F.2d 904, 906 (6th Cir. 1989) ("[vertical restraints] must be judged by the criteria of a 'rule of reason' analysis rather than the rubric of 'per se' illegality."); Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 717 (vertical non-price restraints, such as exclusive territory agreements, are not illegal per se).

⁹⁵ See also Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 723 ("Per se rules are appropriate only for conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive"); Lie, 964 F.2d at 569 ("[A per se violation involves an] agreement[] whose nature and necessary effect [is] so plainly anticompetitive, no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish its illegality"); National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 \(1978\); National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 103-104, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1977\) ("Per se rules are invoked when surrounding circumstances make the likelihood of anticompetitive conduct so great as to render unjustified further examination of the challenged conduct.").

[64] iv. Effect on the Consumer

Most significant to the courts' decisions in Smith Machinery and Taylor, and extremely relevant to this case, is the courts' reliance on the fact that in most line-forcing situations, even those that involve exclusive-dealing arrangements like Taylor,⁹⁸ the ultimate consumer is not harmed by the arrangement. See Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1378-79 ("Such an arrangement [exclusive-dealing line-forcing/tie] is not the sort that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. It does not threaten competition to the same extent as tying arrangements that bind ultimate consumers."). Focusing on ultimate consumers is encouraged by the antitrust laws themselves. See e.g., Smith Machinery, 878 F.2d at 1296 ("The primary objective of the Sherman Act is to benefit consumers by promoting efficient and beneficial competition"); ("[We have always] considered alleged antitrust violations in light of their effect on consumers, not on competitors.") (citing Westman, 796 F.2d 1216, 1220). The Supreme Court has also focused on the alleged antitrust violation's effect on the consumer to determine whether an illegal tying [65] arrangement exists. See e.g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 18 ("Our analysis of the tying issue must focus on the hospital's sale of services to its patients, rather than its contractual arrangements with the providers of anesthesiological services."). Because consumers are not hurt by vertical non-price restraints between manufacturers and dealers, the type of line-forcing/exclusive arrangement found in this case should not be subject to the same per se treatment as traditional tying arrangements.⁹⁹ It is true [*1230] that competitors such as Volpp may be harmed by line-forcing situations that limit their opportunities with particular outlets; however, the antitrust laws were "designed to protect competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962).

⁹⁶ Even if the prices have been increased to some degree, this fact only aids the plaintiff's competitive position with consumers. The higher the prices that Caterpillar charges for its parts, the more likely the consumer will shop elsewhere (i.e., look to Caterpillar's competitors).

⁹⁷ The Smith Machinery scenario is not the typical vertical restraint because competitors can still sell their products to the dealer, while they arguably cannot in the instant case. See Smith Machinery, 878 F.2d at 1295 n.5 ("In this particular case, the alleged line forcing might better be termed a vertical 'arrangement' rather than 'restraint' since Smith was not prohibited from carrying the product lines of competitors as it would be under an exclusive dealing arrangement, the classic 'vertical restraint.'"). Nevertheless, the Tenth Circuit's analysis is still relevant here, and its relevance is demonstrated by the applicability of the Smith Machinery analysis to the Taylor case which is very similar to this case. In Taylor, the dealer was prohibited from buying patty paper from Hollymatic's competitors like the dealers in this case; a typical vertical non-price restraint. Yet, despite that difference between Smith Machinery and Taylor, Taylor was still decided on the same basis and consistent with the same principles as Smith Machinery. Therefore, the fact that this case is distinguishable from Smith Machinery in to Caterpillar dealers does not undermine the relevancy of the Smith Machinery analysis to this case.

⁹⁸ See Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1384 ("It [the agreement between Taylor and Hollymatic] was in effect an exclusive-dealing agreement in which Hollymatic required Taylor to sell Hollymatic, and only Hollymatic, patty paper.").

⁹⁹ This court is not convinced that even typical tying arrangements should be subject to per se analysis and would likely agree with Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion in Jefferson Parish. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. 2, 34-35 (O'Connor, J. concurring) (arguing in favor of abandoning per se test for tying arrangements and applying rule of reason analysis instead). However, the law in its current form retains quasi-per se treatment for some tying claims. See infra pp. 18-19.

[66] The consumers in this case still have significant choice as well as a guarantee of price competition in the replacement parts market, both of which the antitrust laws protect. The only negative consequence for a consumer of an exclusive line-forcing arrangement, like the one here, is the potential loss of convenience. It is true that the affected consumers in this case may not be able to purchase everything they want in the same place (i.e. machinery, service and parts). However, the Taylor court held that HN18 "the fact that consumers might buy goods because of convenience created by a tie does not suffice as evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition." Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1385. What the plaintiff in the instant case must demonstrate is that the tie "as it actually operated in the marketplace" harmed competition. Breaux Brothers, 21 F.3d 83, 86 \(5th Cir. 1994\) (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31). Plaintiff has not produced such evidence.

Although consumers of Caterpillar machinery may not be able to buy non-genuine parts at Caterpillar dealerships, they may still purchase non-genuine parts on the open market. Volpp has alternative paths to consumers [67] through its HEP marketing arm and its related chain of distribution. The HEP marketing arm sells its parts to repair shops, tractor parts operations, seal houses, OEM attachment manufacturers and to exporters. See Martin Tr. at 61-62, 75-76, 106-08; Request for Admission Nos. 242, 252, 253, 255, 294-305 and plaintiff's responses Ex. 91-93 (DX 180-82). Plaintiff can also still sell to other OEM dealers besides Caterpillar. See supra p. 4. Further, although Plaintiff may have lost sales to Caterpillar dealers, their sales in other markets have continued to grow. Decl. of Larry Gray, p. 41, Ex. #1.0 to Volpp's Response (Vol. 1). These facts demonstrate that the only exclusion that plaintiff has experienced as a result of the alleged tie is its "exclusion" from free-riding on defendant's own dealer distribution system.

The only drawback for Caterpillar consumers, with whom the antitrust laws are most concerned, is that they may ¹⁰⁰ be prevented from purchasing a non-genuine part at a Caterpillar dealer. For Caterpillar equipment owners that prefer to have their equipment serviced at Caterpillar dealers and also prefer to use non-genuine parts, Caterpillar's line-forcing will [68] likely cause inconvenience. However, the antitrust laws were not designed to protect convenience, but were enacted to safeguard competition. Caterpillar equipment owners can service their equipment at places other than Caterpillar dealerships where non-genuine parts are stocked and sold. There is no guarantee implicit in the antitrust laws that manufacturers will always have unrestricted access to any and all outlets through which they desire to sell their products. This is particularly true where a competitor, such as Caterpillar, has exerted tremendous effort to set up a dealer distribution chain for its own products. Plaintiff has no federally protected right to access the Caterpillar dealership market - - there is no free-rider guarantee in the antitrust laws. Accordingly, plaintiff has failed to produce evidence that the alleged tie in this case, as it actually operated in the market, harmed competition or created a substantial potential for impacting competition negatively. Therefore, in paying heed to the venerable principles of antitrust law, the court finds that per se analysis is inappropriate [*1231] here and will accordingly review this case under rule of reason principles. [69]

v. Rule of Reason Analysis

HN19 The "rule of reason" approach requires that the party challenging the alleged unlawful tie set forth the tying arrangement itself and that the arrangement is "an unreasonable restraint on competition." Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 343, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 \(1982\); Beard v. Parkview Hosp., 912 F.2d 138, 140 \(6th Cir. 1990\). As the Supreme Court held in Nat'l Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 \(1978\), "the inquiry mandated by the Rule of Reason is whether the challenged agreement is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition." See also Taylor, 28 F.3d at 1386 ("To establish an unreasonable restraint of trade, Taylor's proof must have included evidence from which the jury could have found that Hollymatic's actions had a substantially adverse impact on competition.") (citations omitted). Volpp bears the burden of demonstrating that Caterpillar's actions had such an "actual adverse effect on competition."

¹⁰⁰ Caterpillar dealers have not completely stopped purchasing non-genuine parts. Many dealers still use such parts in emergency situations and others still use them on occasion. See e.g., Blake Quinn Aff. (Dealer principal of Quinn Co., a California Caterpillar dealership) (noting dealership's policy of using non-genuine parts on occasion if the part is unavailable from Caterpillar, if a customer requests a non-genuine part on a particular job, or due to price considerations). It is notable that Volpp has not been completely cut out of the Caterpillar dealership "mini-market," and Caterpillar has never terminated a dealership for stocking non-genuine parts.

"Assessing such an impact requires an inquiry into the conditions of the relevant market." Smith Machinery, 878 F.2d at 1296. Under certain circumstances, tying arrangements may actually promote competition. See IX Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1703g, at 50 (1991) ("suggesting that tying sometimes benefits society by protecting quality, lowering costs or increasing value, increasing price competition, aiding entry, or rewarding a valuable patent."). [71] Thus, "to the extent that a manufacturer's distribution practices enhance competition in the consumer market, they should be encouraged despite their effect on suppliers in an intermediate distribution market." Smith Machinery, 878 F.2d at 1296.

Even considering the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, Volpp has not set forth any evidence that competition in the marketplace for replacement parts has been suppressed or is likely to be suppressed. Rather, the evidence in the record suggests that Caterpillar's aggressive promotion of its own products may have actually stimulated competition and resulted in Caterpillar becoming more price and service conscious when urging their products on their own dealers. See e.g., supra p.11 and n.26 ("Districts should advise dealers that Caterpillar is committed to providing competitive prices which generate a reasonable (aggregate) return to the dealer"); supra p.22 and n.63 (Caterpillar and Mustang reaching an agreement whereby Mustang was to disengage from sourcing alternative parts by a certain date in exchange for Caterpillar's assistance on hydraulic and turbocharger repair option development). For Volpp [72] to prevail under the facts and circumstances of this case, "it would have to show that [Caterpillar's] line requirement so restricted the marketing of Volpp products that it impeded competition in the consumer market." Smith Machinery at 1296. As has already been discussed in the preceding section, the consumer is not hurt by Caterpillar's alleged actions in this case. Accordingly, under the rule of reason analysis, plaintiff's claim must fail.

vi. Per Se Analysis

As set forth above, the court believes that a rule of reason analysis is most appropriate in the instant case. However, even if the court were to apply the per se test, plaintiff's claim would still fail.

HN20 To set forth a per se violation, a plaintiff must show that:

- 1) There is a tying arrangement between two distinct products or services;
- 2) The seller has sufficient economic power in the tying market to restrain appreciably competition in the tied product market; and
- 3) The amount of commerce affected is not insubstantial.

Virtual Maintenance v. Prime Computer, Inc., 11 F.3d 660, 664, n.6 (6th Cir. 1993) (citations and internal quotations omitted), cert. dismissed sub [73] nom. Virtual Maintenance v. Computervision Corp., U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 2700, 129 L. Ed. 2d 829 (1994). Establishing a tying claim where the plaintiff [1232] has concrete proof of a tie, such as a contract that has been reduced to writing, is fairly simple. See Bell v. Cherokee Aviation Corp., 660 F.2d 1123, 1126 (6th Cir. 1981). However, in the absence of such an express tying arrangement, a plaintiff can also demonstrate that an unlawful tie exists by showing that a seller forced the tied product on an unwilling buyer. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 15; Breaux Brothers, 21 F.3d at 86; Unijax, Inc. v. Champion Int'l, Inc., 683 F.2d 678, 685 (2d Cir. 1982) ("Actual coercion by the seller that in fact forces the buyer to purchase the tied product is an indispensable element of a tying violation"); Ogden Food Serv. v. Mitchell, 614 F.2d 1001, 1002 (5th Cir. 1980) (coercion is an element of an illegal tie-in); but see Cherokee Aviation Corp., 660 F.2d 1123 (coercion is not an element of an illegal tie-in). Here, no express agreement exists.¹⁰¹ Therefore, to prove a tying claim plaintiff must rely on evidence of coercion.

¹⁰¹ The Sales and Service Agreement between Caterpillar and its dealers contains no provision that expressly requires the purchase of replacement parts in order to also buy Caterpillar equipment. Plaintiff alleges, however, that the contract's mandate

[74] In the post-Jefferson Parish era, the modern per se rule abandons the former strict per se treatment in favor of a modified approach.¹⁰² This quasi per se test is really "a hybrid between per se and rule of reason analysis because of the threshold examination of market power." Timothy S. Cragin, Antitrust and Trade Regulation Law, 42 La. B. J. 386, 387 (1994); Lazaroff, Reflections of Eastman Kodak at 115 ("[The Jefferson Parish Court] endorsed a method of analysis that does not entail all the elements of a full-blown rule of reason approach, but also does not label a tie-in illegal without some threshold demonstration of market power in the tying product."). Pure per se treatment would automatically invalidate a tying arrangement without inquiring into market power. However, quasi per se condemnation is only appropriate "if the existence of forcing is probable." Id.

[75] Therefore, the presence of coercion is a critical factor in the determination of whether the particular circumstances of a case give rise to an illegal tying arrangement. See Unijax, 683 F.2d at 686 ("[A] finding of the actual exercise of economic muscle [is] an indispensable element for proving a tying violation."). As the Supreme Court held in Jefferson Parish:

Our cases have concluded that the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such forcing is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 (emphasis added). The burden of proving coercion rests with the plaintiff. Ogden Food Serv., 614 F.2d at 1002; Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. v. Diversified Packaging Corp., 549 F.2d 368, 377 (5th Cir. 1977). [*1233] Even when the facts are considered in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, [76] plaintiff cannot sustain its burden of demonstrating that, in the context of a distributor-dealer relationship, Caterpillar dealers were forced to purchase Caterpillar parts in violation of the antitrust laws.

In deciding these types of cases, courts must be wary of the difference between forcing that amounts to an illegal tie under the antitrust laws, and aggressive salesmanship that is encouraged by those same antitrust laws. As the Fifth Circuit noted in Unijax:

A manufacturer's use of "strong persuasion, encouragement, or cajolery to the point of obnoxiousness to induce [its] retailer to buy its full line of products" does not, however, amount to actual coercion.

683 F.2d at 685 (quoting Bob Maxfield Inc. v. Am. Motors Corp., 637 F.2d 1033, 1037 (5th Cir. 1981)); see also Ungar v. Dunkin' Donuts of Am., Inc., 531 F.2d 1211, 1225 (3d Cir. 1976) ("The purpose of the antitrust laws is to stimulate economic competition, the essence of which is the presence of many competing sellers; salesmanship -- the art of persuasion and influence -- is inherent in competition among sellers."). Here, defendant's representatives did use "strong persuasion" and hard-line [77] tactics to lure dealers into sourcing almost exclusively genuine parts. However, as the Unijax court found (even though the manufacturers in that case actually terminated plaintiff's distribution outlets in two states), such cajolery is not the sort of coercion proscribed by the antitrust laws. See also Marathon Oil, 528 F.2d 395 (rejecting a tie-in claim even though defendant's sales representative told plaintiff that to "adequately promote the sale of Caterpillar products" and its provision that dealer affiliation with other organizations that are "substantial operator[s] of products" would adversely affect that obligation to promote Caterpillar products, amounts to the express conditioning necessary to set out a tying arrangement. Such strong language, although indicative of Caterpillar's serious commitment to regaining lost sales of replacement parts, is not an express tie. There is nothing in the language of the agreement that absolutely requires Caterpillar dealers to stock only genuine parts. For that reason, plaintiff cannot prove that an express tying agreement between Caterpillar and its dealers exists.

¹⁰² Commentators have recognized that Jefferson Parish limited the scope of the per se rule. See e.g., Daniel E. Lazaroff, Reflections of Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc.: Continued Confusion Regarding Tying Arrangements and Antitrust Jurisprudence, 69 Wash. L. Rev. 101, 114 (1994) ("The shift in the Supreme Court's general attitude regarding tying arrangements became strikingly evident in Jefferson Parish Hospital District No.2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). In Hyde, four justices concurred with a five justice majority and specifically called for a repudiation of any per se approach to tie-ins. These four justices were, in essence, calling for rule of reason treatment of tie-ins as just another non-price vertical restraint. Even the majority, which did not wish to repudiate the per se approach, severely limited its applicability.").

his lease might be cancelled unless he purchased more of defendant's products and plaintiff's lease was ultimately cancelled).

Plaintiff has set forth numerous examples of alleged coercion, all of which essentially highlight the aggressive direction that Caterpillar undertook in order to increase revenue from genuine parts sales. The majority of these examples are contained in the fact section of this order. See supra pp. 1-28. The court will analyze those typical instances of Caterpillar's general behavior.¹⁰³ When Caterpillar committed itself to the task of regaining the replacement part sales it had lost to non-genuine parts manufacturers, managers were instructed to "do all those things that we know will work to sell parts." See supra p.5. Such [78] a company statement embodies the very principles that the antitrust laws were designed to protect -- competitive initiative. Caterpillar recognized that non-genuine parts sales were increasing and cutting into genuine parts sales profits. It is antithetical to American corporate culture, grounded in capitalist principles, to expect Caterpillar to ignore a potential profit center and decline to aggressively compete.

One example of Caterpillar's alleged "forcing" is the Caterpillar "Worldwide Marketing Management Meeting" where it was determined that dealers who outsource would be personally contacted by district/region managers and reminded of their obligations to Caterpillar. See supra p. 8 and n.14. In that meeting, the various measures for dealing with those situations were outlined. Those measures were: suspension of parts [79] returns, one hundred percent inspection of warranty parts, and a dealer requirement that all non-genuine parts be identified on customer invoices. See supra p. 8. None of those responses amount to termination of a dealership or rise to the level of unlawful coercion within the context of a tying arrangement. Since its inception in 1925, Caterpillar has established itself as a leader in the heavy equipment machinery market, and as such is certainly entitled to ensure that it is not covering the cost for warranties on parts not manufactured by Caterpillar by paying for non-genuine parts on return. Non-genuine parts manufacturers, such as the plaintiff, do not have a right to free-ride on Caterpillar's distribution system. If Caterpillar did not attempt to safeguard its investment in its own distribution system and its warranty and return parts programs, it would be declining to aggressively compete. [*1234] This kind of monitoring should simply be expected in a dealer-distributor relationship and does not rise to the level of coercion necessary to establish a tying arrangement.

After this meeting, Caterpillar decided that local representatives would have a "Woodshed talk" with dealers "who [80] are into nongenuine parts" and send out a "sourcing loyalty letter." See supra p. 8 and n.18. The sourcing loyalty letter provided in relevant part:

The basis of our agreements with dealers is our expectation that they will adequately represent the Caterpillar products designated in those agreements to our satisfaction. The use of genuine Caterpillar parts is essential to the performance of our dealers' obligation to support Caterpillar prime products and the fulfillment of their obligation to adequately represent the entire Caterpillar product line -- including parts.

See supra p. 9 and n.19. This letter does not contain unlawful coercion when viewed within the context of a distributor-dealer relationship. Caterpillar may be attempting to use its influence to cajole its dealers into sourcing almost exclusively from Caterpillar -- but such conduct does not rise to the level of the forcing required for a- tying claim. Further, Caterpillar has submitted proof that the author of this sourcing letter believes that dealers "certainly . . . have no contractual obligations to source entirely genuine Caterpillar parts." Confidential Testimony of David Lewis, Ex. #84 [81] to Caterpillar's Motion (Vol. III).

As a follow-up to the loyalty sourcing letter, Caterpillar also suggested that district managers respond to dealers who sell non-genuine parts with the following statement:

You can buy from whomever you choose -- we have no control over that. But, I would ask you a similar question. Why shouldn't we sell tractors or parts to your competitor -- perhaps the local Komatsu dealer? They may be happy to buy many items from us at good prices -- our sales and profits could increase.

¹⁰³ The court will not discuss each individual act of alleged "coercion," but the typical instances reflect the type of conduct alleged and suffice to explain the court's conclusion.

See supra p. 10 and n.22. The very first statement of the response, "you can buy from whomever you choose," clearly indicates that Caterpillar understood that it could not implement a strict requirement that dealers only stock genuine parts. However, there is a distinction between an absolute requirement and the sort of procompetitive focused persuasion found here.

A second dealer-sourcing letter, designed to assist district managers in their understanding of the parts issue, was sent as a follow-up to "suggested responses" such as the one quoted above. This letter strongly discouraged sourcing non-genuine parts by calling such conduct "unacceptable." Most [\[82\]](#) significantly, however, the letter also contained a position statement that included the following declaration:

Districts should advise dealers that Caterpillar is committed to providing competitive prices which generate a reasonable (aggregate) return to the dealer. We realize (and so do most dealers) that there will be situations where an individual transaction may not provide this return. Nevertheless, we expect dealers to pursue the total opportunity.

See supra p. 11 and n.26. This statement demonstrates that Caterpillar recognized it must compete and potentially lower its prices in order to guarantee sourcing loyalty from its dealers. It is true that Caterpillar may be able to leverage its influence as a distributor to more successfully persuade its dealers to source only genuine parts; however, such power is inherent in a distributor-dealer relationship and does not constitute unlawful forcing when considered in that context.

Other materials comprised within Caterpillar's campaign to sway its dealers to return to purchasing more genuine parts include a "district action letter" and a summary of a "successful attempt at encouraging one dealer to source only [\[83\]](#) genuine CAT parts." The district action letter provides in relevant part:

Under our dealership agreement, you have an obligation to adequately represent Caterpillar products including parts. Representation of directly competitive parts adversely affects that obligation. If you choose to stock non-genuine parts, we expect it to be only as an accommodation to customers who insist upon purchasing such [\[*1235\]](#) parts. We would expect you to not promote such products where we provide genuine Caterpillar parts.

See supra p. 12 and n.30. This statement indicates that Caterpillar recognizes that dealers will continue to stock non-genuine parts; however, Caterpillar's position as a distributor gives it some "extra muscle" to promote its best interests. Nevertheless, such muscle is a probable consequence of its relationship with its dealers and should be expected within that economic mini-system. Further, the summary of the successful attempt at encouraging one dealer to source only genuine Caterpillar parts indicates, by definition, that there are "unsuccessful attempts" and that Caterpillar does not assume it has the power to force dealers to obey its requests under any and all [\[84\]](#) circumstances.

At a Caterpillar dealer meeting a Caterpillar representative explained Caterpillar's disapproval of the selling of non-genuine parts by stating that:

I can think of nothing more injurious to our mutual long-term future than assisting competitive parts manufacturers to gain a stronger market position through our own distribution organization.

See supra p. 15 and n.38. As mentioned previously, Caterpillar is right to be concerned about the network it has painstakingly constructed over the years to profitably market its own products, and in a competitive system it should be protective of its own goodwill. Therefore, even strong measures to ensure that its own distribution system inures to the benefit of Caterpillar machinery and products, and not Caterpillar's and its dealers' competitors, are not coercive. Such measures are sound and expected competition.¹⁰⁴

[\[85\]](#) The contract between the individual dealers in this case and Caterpillar calls for the dealers to represent Caterpillar's full line, in return for which the dealers get an exclusive territory to sell Caterpillar products. By granting its dealers exclusive territories, Caterpillar essentially selected one individual dealer in each area to whom it could look to promote its sales in that area. If any individual dealer did not live up to its agreement, then Caterpillar would not make any sales in that "exclusive territory." And if Caterpillar did not make any sales in its territory, competition would diminish because then only the plaintiff would have an outlet to sell its products in that area. Therefore, Caterpillar's aggressive promotion of its genuine parts, which may have risen to the level of extreme persistence and cajolery, do not, in the context of the relationships between the parties in this case, rise to the level of coercion necessary to satisfy a tying arrangement. Accordingly, plaintiff has failed to submit sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to return a verdict in Volpp's favor on its per se tying claim.

¹⁰⁴ The court notes that plaintiff has not provided any testimony from the more than 70 dealer principals that plaintiff claims were coerced. Instead, plaintiff focused its discovery on low-level employees in dealer parts departments even though plaintiff's expert conceded the relevance of dealer testimony on the issue of coercion. Kyler Tr. 463, Ex. 89.

HN21 [↑] If plaintiff cannot establish a per se tying arrangement, [86] then plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the alleged illegal conduct "unreasonably restrained competition." See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29 ("In order to prevail in the absence of per se liability, respondent has the burden of proving that the Roux contract [alleged tie] violated the Sherman Act because it restrained competition."). The court has already applied the rule of reason analysis to the facts of this case and explained why the alleged antitrust violation in this case does not unreasonably restrain competition. See supra pp. 48-50.

vii. Conclusion: Tying Arrangement Claim

The court concludes that even if it were to accept all of plaintiff's allegations as true, the antitrust claim asserted simply makes no economic sense. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 468 (Finding that if plaintiff's theory is "economically senseless" no reasonable jury could find in its favor and summary judgment should be granted). Aggressive salesmanship is protected and encouraged by the antitrust laws and therefore cannot, in the context of distributors who award exclusive territories to dealers, form [*1236] the coercion necessary to prove a tie-in claim. To trigger federal [87] protection under the antitrust laws, a violation must have an actual anticompetitive effect -- it must hinder the machinations of the free market system. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31 ("Without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition, respondent cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws, and no such showing has been made."). Nothing in this case has such an impact on the market, particularly the consumer for whom the antitrust laws were created. Therefore, even considering all the facts in the light most favorable to plaintiff, Volpp's claim must fail because it has not set forth any evidence of a tying claim that has an adverse effect on the consumer marketplace (rule of reason analysis). Nor has it established the presence of coercion necessary to justify per se treatment on a tying claim (per se analysis). Accordingly, and for the reasons discussed above, the court grants defendant's motion for summary judgment on the tying claim and on the issue of coercion.¹⁰⁵

[88] (b) Volpp's Conspiracy Claim (Count II)

Caterpillar claims that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on Volpp's conspiracy claim (Count II) because it merely duplicates the tie-in claim (Count I) and also because there is no evidence of a conspiracy. Because Caterpillar is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the tie-in claim, its argument for summary judgment on the conspiracy claim is well taken. Without an underlying unlawful tie or antitrust violation, there is no illegal conduct on which to base a conspiracy. Therefore, the court grants summary judgment on plaintiff's conspiracy claim.

3. Volpp's State Antitrust Claim (Count III)

In Count III of its amended complaint, Volpp has alleged state antitrust violations under *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101*¹⁰⁶ [89] and seeks compensatory and punitive damages as well as injunctive relief. Caterpillar contends, ¹⁰⁵ Because the court has already held that no unlawful tying arrangement exists in this case, it need not reach the antitrust injury or damages issues.

¹⁰⁶ Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 provides as follows:

HN22 [↑] All arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, full and free competition in the importation or sale of articles imported into this state, inter alia, that the damages section of the statute, § 47-25-106,¹⁰⁷ provides only a consumer remedy and that no remedy at all is available to a competitor such as Volpp.

Caterpillar notes that the exclusive remedy of the statute is that the person injured "may sue for and recover . . . the full consideration or sum paid by him" for any goods sold in violation of the statute. As a competitor, Volpp never paid any consideration or sum for any product sold in violation of the statute. Caterpillar argues that as a consequence, Volpp may recover nothing. At oral argument, Volpp conceded that a competitor such as itself has no remedy under the Tennessee antitrust statute. The court agrees. Viewing all evidence in the light most favorable to Volpp, Caterpillar is entitled to judgment as a matter of [\[90\]](#) law on Count III. The court will accordingly grant Caterpillar's motion for summary judgment on Count III.

4. Volpp's Claim for Intentional Interference with Prospective Business Relations (Count IV)

Count IV of Volpp's complaint alleges that Caterpillar "intentionally interfered with [\[*1237\]](#) [plaintiff's] on-going and prospective business relations with authorized Caterpillar dealers." Amended Compl. at P 21. On its face, Count IV appears to be a claim for interference with an existing contractual relationship as well as an action for interference with prospective business relations.

Caterpillar contends that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this claim because: (1) Volpp has failed to establish certain elements of the tort of interference with ongoing business relations, and (2) Tennessee law does not recognize the tort of interference with prospective business relations. Specifically, as to the claim for interference with on-going business relations, Caterpillar cites cases applying Tennessee law to argue: (1) that Caterpillar cannot be held liable for interfering with Volpp's at-will business relationship with Caterpillar dealers; (2) that there is no [\[91\]](#) evidence that Caterpillar was motivated by malice; and (3) that there is no evidence to show that but for Caterpillar's actions, Volpp would have entered into a business relationship with any Caterpillar dealer. As to the claim for interference with prospective business relations, Caterpillar argues Tennessee law does not recognize the tort and that the claim should accordingly be dismissed.

An assumption underlying Caterpillar's arguments is that Tennessee law should be applied to Count IV. This assumption is stated explicitly with respect to Caterpillar's argument on the claim for interference with prospective business relations. Caterpillar argues that Tennessee law applies to that claim, relying on the old choice of law principle of lex loci delecti. See Restatement of Conflict of Laws § 377 (1934) ("First Restatement"); see also Winters v. Maxey, 481 S.W.2d 755 \(Tenn. 1972\), overruled by Hataway v. McKinley, 830 S.W.2d 53 \(Tenn. 1992\). Caterpillar makes no choice of law argument on the claim for interference with on-going business relations but relies on cases applying Tennessee law in arguing that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on that claim.

[\[92\]](#) HN24[] When a federal court is called upon to apply state substantive law to a claim, the conflicts law of the forum determines which state's law to apply. Telecommunications, Eng'g Sales & Serv. Co. v. Southern Tel. Supply Co., 518 F.2d 392, 394 \(6th Cir. 1975\). Caterpillar is thus correct in looking to choice of law principles of Tennessee to determine the applicable substantive law. However, after the briefs on the instant motion were filed, the Tennessee Supreme Court rendered its decision in Hataway v. McKinley, 830 S.W.2d 53 \(Tenn. 1992\). In Hataway, the court abandoned the lex loci delecti choice of law doctrine embodied within the First Restatement, or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or of domestic raw material, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article, are declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void.

¹⁰⁷ Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106 provides as follows:

HN23[] Any person who may be injured or damaged by any such arrangement, contract agreement, trust, or combination, described in this part may sue for and recover, in any court of competent jurisdiction, of any person operating such trust or combination, the full consideration or sum paid by him for any goods, wares, merchandise, or articles, the sale of which is controlled by such combination or trust.

adopting instead the "most significant relationship" approach of the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws ("Second Restatement"). 830 S.W.2d at 57, 59. Under this approach, "the law of the state where the injury occurred will be applied unless some other state has a more significant relationship to the litigation." The court adopted the following provision of the Second Restatement:

§ 145. The General Principle

(1) The rights and liabilities of the parties with respect to an issue in tort are determined [\[93\]](#) by the local law of the state, which with respect to that issue, has the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties under the principles stated in § 6.

(2) Contacts to be taken into account in applying the principles of § 6 to determine the law applicable to an issue include:

- (a) the place where the injury occurred,
- (b) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred,
- (c) the domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation and place of business of the parties,
- (d) the place where the relationship, if any, between the parties is centered.

These contacts are to be evaluated according to their relative importance with respect to the particular issue.

Hataway, 830 S.W.2d at 59. The Tennessee Supreme Court also adopted Section 6 of the Second Restatement, referenced in Section 145 (quoted above), as follows:

[*1238] § 6. Choice-of-Law Principles

(1) A court, subject to constitutional restrictions, will follow a statutory directive of its own state on choice of law.
(2) When there is no such directive, the factors relevant to the choice of the applicable rule of law include:

- (a) the needs of the interstate [\[94\]](#) and international systems,
- (b) the relevant policies of the forum,
- (c) the relevant policies of other interested states and the relative interests of those states in the determination of the particular issue,
- (d) the protection of justified expectations,
- (e) the basic policies underlying the particular field of law,
- (f) certainty, predictability, and uniformity of result, and
- (g) ease in the determination and application of the law to be applied.

Id.

Caterpillar has not addressed the prevailing choice of law principles in Tennessee and therefore at this point has failed to show that Tennessee substantive law applies to Volpp's claim(s) for either on-going or prospective business relations. In the absence of such a showing, Caterpillar's attempt to demonstrate that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of Tennessee substantive law on Count IV must fail. The court will accordingly deny Caterpillar's motion for summary judgment on Count IV.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰⁸ The court further notes that even if Tennessee law applied, plaintiff's claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage would fail because that tort has never been recognized by the Tennessee courts. See Chilton Air Cooled Engines, Inc. v. Omark Indus., Inc., 721 F. Supp. 151, 156 (M.D. Tenn. 1988) (finding that Tennessee has not developed any case law concerning interference with prospective business relations). Although the Tennessee courts have never expressly rejected such a cause of action, quality Auto Parts v. Bluff City Buick, 876 S.W.2d 818, 823-24 (Tenn. 1994) ("We conclude that the question of whether Tennessee law recognizes the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage should be postponed to another day"), this court declined to create a cause of action for interference with economic advantage in Valley Prods. Co., Inc. v. Landmark, 877 F. Supp. 1087, 1994 WL 772307 (W.D. Tenn. 1994). Because such a claim does not presently exist under Tennessee law, this court would once again decline to create a cause of action that has never before been recognized. See Chilton Air, 721 F. Supp. at 156 (dismissing claim because "Tennessee has not recognized tort of interference with prospective business relations.").

[95] CONCLUSION

Caterpillar's motion for summary judgment on all of Volpp's federal claims is granted and accordingly the federal claims are dismissed with prejudice. The court also grants Caterpillar's motion for summary judgment on Volpp's state antitrust claim. The court denies Caterpillar's motion for summary judgment on Volpp's state claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 3rd day of August, 1995.

JEROME TURNER

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

United States v. Eastman Kodak Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

February 14, 1995, Argued ; August 4, 1995, Decided

Docket No. 94-6190

Reporter

63 F.3d 95 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 20755 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,078

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. EASTMAN KODAK CO., A Corporation of New Jersey, and EASTMAN KODAK, CO., A Corporation of New York, Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from an order entered on May 20, 1994 in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Telesca, Chief Judge) granting defendants-appellees' motion to terminate two antitrust consent decrees, one entered in 1921 and the other in 1954, the district court having found that the purposes of both consent decrees had been achieved and that termination of the decrees would benefit consumers.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

film, district court, Decree, market power, geographic, world-wide, consumers, prices, consent decree, photofinishing, percent, terminate, premium, elasticity, antitrust, price discrimination, argues, market share, manufacturers, sales, Cellophane, seller, markets, products, cases, costs, possesses, wholesale, contends, monopolistic

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > Modification & Termination

HN1 [down arrow] Settlements, Consent Judgments

The power of a court to modify or terminate a consent decree is, at bottom, guided by equitable considerations. Indeed, Fed. R. Civ. P. 60\(b\)\(5\) makes no exception for antitrust decrees. An antitrust defendant requesting to modify or terminate a consent decree should be prepared to demonstrate that the basic purposes of the consent decrees -- the elimination of monopoly and unduly restrictive practices -- has been achieved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > Modification & Termination

HN2 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

Cases may arise in which modification or termination of a consent decree is appropriate even though the purpose of the decree has not been achieved. However, as a general matter, an antitrust defendant should not be relieved of restrictions that it voluntarily accepted until the purpose of the decree has been substantially effectuated, or when time and experience demonstrate that the decree is not properly adapted to accomplishing its purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN3 [+] Market Definition, Relevant Market

In determining whether a firm possesses market power, the first step in a court's analysis must be a definition of the relevant markets. Without a definition of the relevant market, there is no way to measure a company's ability to act as a monopolist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN4 [+] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The relevant geographic market is defined as the area of effective competition in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.

International Trade Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

63 F.3d 95, *95 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 20755, 1

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN5 International Trade Law

The 1992 Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission Horizontal Merger Guidelines (Merger Guidelines) provide that a geographic market generally will be defined as a region in which a "hypothetical monopolist" could exact a small but significant and nontransitory increase in price, holding constant the terms of sale for all products produced elsewhere. While this standard fully encompasses foreign competition and can result in the definition of a world-wide market, it applies only in the absence of "geographic price discrimination." If the company is capable of geographic price discrimination, then smaller geographic markets, defined by the regions in which the company is able to price discriminate, will be recognized. Thus, the Merger Guidelines recognize that a geographic market is limited to the area in which prices are relatively uniform.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A company's ability to price discriminate against certain classes of consumers may be evidence of power in a particular market.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Tribunals

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Consent Decrees

HN7 Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The court's review of a district court's decision to terminate a consent decree is limited to ensuring that the district court exercised its broad discretion in a proper manner.

Counsel: DIANE P. WOOD, Deputy Asst. Atty. General, Washington, D.C. (Anne K. Bingaman, Asst. Atty. General, Catherine G. O'Sullivan, Robert B. Nicholson, Robert J. Wiggers, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., of counsel) for Plaintiff-Appellant.

DAVID M. LASCELL, Rochester, N.Y. (Hallenbeck, Lascell, Norris & Zorn, Rochester, N.Y., Robert B. Bell, Wiley, Rein & Fielding, Washington, D.C., of counsel) for Defendants-Appellees.

Judges: Before: MINER and JACOBS, Circuit Judges, and CEDARBAUM, District Judge. *

Opinion by: MINER

Opinion

* The Honorable Miriam Goldman Cedarbaum of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting by designation.

[*97] MINER, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiff-appellant, the United States of America, appeals from [*2] an order entered on May 20, 1994 in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Telesca, Chief Judge) granting a motion made by defendant-appellee Eastman Kodak Co. ("Kodak") to terminate two antitrust consent decrees. The first decree was entered in 1921 ("the 1921 Decree") after a finding by the district court that Kodak had monopolized the sale of cameras and photographic supplies. The 1921 Decree continues to impose a variety of restrictions on Kodak's business practices. Most notably, Section X of the 1921 Decree prevents Kodak from selling "private label" film, which is film marketed under a brand name other than Kodak's, typically that of a retail outlet. The second decree was entered in 1954 ("the 1954 Decree") without any adjudication of law or facts. Section V of the 1954 Decree continues to prevent Kodak from selling its film in a "bundle" with its photofinishing services.

After a nine-day evidentiary hearing, the district court granted Kodak's motion to terminate both decrees. See United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 853 F. Supp. 1454, 1487-88 (W.D.N.Y. 1994). In deciding to terminate the 1921 Decree, the district court relied on its findings [*3] that Kodak no longer possesses market power over the sale of film and that the elimination of the decree's remaining provisions would benefit consumers. With respect to the 1954 Decree, the district court found that the purpose of the decree -- the [*98] creation of a competitive photofinishing market -- had been accomplished, that neither Kodak nor its affiliates had market power in the photofinishing or film markets, and that allowing Kodak to sell film and photofinishing as a bundle would enhance competition. For the reasons that follow, we affirm the order of the district court terminating both the 1921 and the 1954 Decrees.

BACKGROUND

1. The Consent Decrees

a. The 1921 Decree

The 1921 Decree arose out of antitrust enforcement proceedings initiated by the government more than 80 years ago. These proceedings led to a finding by the district court in 1915 that Kodak had monopolized the amateur camera, film, and photofinishing industries through acquisitions and a variety of exclusionary practices. See United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 226 F. 62, 79-80 (W.D.N.Y. 1915), appeal dismissed, 255 U.S. 578, 65 L. Ed. 795, 41 S. Ct. 321 (1921). Six years later, while its appeal [*4] of the district court's decision still was pending in the Supreme Court, Kodak entered into the 1921 Decree with the government and withdrew its appeal.

The 1921 Decree imposed both short- and long-term obligations on Kodak. In the short term, the decree required Kodak to divest itself of many of its acquisitions so as to "effectually dissolve the combination found to exist in violation of the [antitrust] statute." Id. at 81. These provisions were satisfied long ago. In the longer term, the consent decree proscribed certain sales and distribution practices that the government believed to be anti-competitive. A number of these restrictions remain in force today. Section X of the decree prevents Kodak from selling private-label film by requiring its products to "be labeled in such manner as to show clearly that the [product] is manufactured by [Kodak]." Sections VI and VII of the decree enjoin Kodak from entering into exclusive dealing contracts and from imposing other restraints on its dealers.

b. The 1954 Decree

The 1954 Decree concerned Kodak's practice of tying its photographic film and photofinishing services. Until the 1954 Decree, the sales price of Kodak [*5] color film included Kodak photofinishing. Since Kodak sold approximately 90 percent of the color film in the United States during that time, this practice allowed Kodak to maintain a 90-percent share of the photofinishing market as well. The government filed suit to stop this practice, and, prior to trial, Kodak and the government entered into the 1954 Decree. The decree principally required Kodak to make its color photofinishing technology available to competitors. Kodak fully complied with this requirement. The only provision of the 1954 Decree that remains operative today is Section V, which prevents Kodak from "tying or otherwise connecting in any manner the sale of its color film to the processing thereof." The broad language of Section V precludes Kodak from engaging in the otherwise lawful practice of bundling its film and photofinishing services.

2. Today's Markets for Film and Photofinishing

a. Film

The marketplace for film has changed considerably in the last 80 years. Today, five companies manufacture all of the amateur color negative film (hereinafter "film") sold in the United States: Kodak, Fuji, Konica, Agfa, and 3M. All five are "well-financed, [6] billion-dollar, multinational corporations selling film all over the world." 853 F. Supp. at 1471. On a world-wide basis, Kodak is the leading seller of film, with a 36-percent market share, followed closely by Fuji, which has 34 percent of the market. Id. at 1471 & n.10. Konica has a 16-percent share of the world-wide market, followed by Agfa, with ten percent, and 3M, which has a four-percent market share.

In the United States, Kodak is far and away the leading seller of film with 67 percent of the market. Id. at 1472. It is followed by Fuji, which has between eleven and twelve percent of the United States market. When market share is measured in dollar [*99] terms, rather than in unit sales, Kodak's market share in the United States is even more impressive. Kodak accounts for 75 percent of United States films sales in dollar terms.¹ Id. Part of Kodak's high market share in the United States is attributable to the large number of retail outlets that carry its products. Almost all retail outlets that sell film carry Kodak film. Only thirty percent of retail outlets carry Fuji film. However, Fuji film tends to be carried by mass-merchandisers, such as K-Mart and Wal-Mart, [7] which account for between 45 and 50 percent of all film sales. Id. at 1474.

Notwithstanding Kodak's success in the United States, photographic experts agree that there is very little difference in quality among the various brands of film. Kodak and Fuji films are both considered excellent, and "it would be very hard for any one to tell a good Fuji print from a good Kodak print." Konica and Agfa film, while slightly coarser-grained, also produce very good photographs. While 3M film is of slightly lower quality than the four other brands, it still is of acceptable quality to most consumers.

b. Photofinishing

Today, there are three principal types of photofinishers: mail-order macrolabs, wholesale and captive macrolabs, and minilabs. See 853 F. Supp. at 1482-84. Mail-order photofinishers operate large film processing labs ("macrolabs") and often have the lowest prices, but [8] with the disadvantage of a longer turn-around time. Construction of a macrolab requires a several million dollar investment and takes six to nine months. Wholesale or "captive" macrolabs process film dropped off at retailers, such as drug stores.² Wholesale labs tend to process film in two or three days, but also can provide overnight service at an additional price. Minilabs, the third and newest type of photofinisher, are installed at retail locations, such as supermarkets, to provide on-site photofinishing. A new minilab can be purchased for as little as $ 40,000 and can provide one-hour film developing. However, minilabs have a somewhat higher per-print cost and cannot handle the volume of work required by large retail customers. In 1992, minilabs and wholesale labs each processed 36 percent of the film in the United States, captive labs processed 21 percent, and mail-order labs processed only 7 percent.

¹ Kodak attributes its higher dollar-volume share to its competitors' ability to sell less-expensive private-label film.

² A "captive" lab is a macrolab owned by a large retailer that processes only the retailer's film. Only the largest retailers produce sufficient volume of photofinishing work so as to make a captive lab cost-effective.

[9] In the last ten years, Kodak has reclaimed a large share of the photofinishing market through acquisitions. The most important was a joint venture to establish Qualex, Inc., a company that accounts for approximately 30 percent of the overall United States photofinishing business. Id. at 1486. In the United States, Qualex is the largest wholesale photofinisher, with more than 70 percent of the wholesale market, and the second largest operator of minilabs.

3. Proceedings Below

After a nine-day evidentiary hearing, the district court granted Kodak's motion to terminate both the 1921 and 1954 Consent Decrees in their entirieties. See 853 F. Supp. at 1487-88. The first issue addressed in the district court's comprehensive opinion was the legal standard under which to evaluate Kodak's request to terminate or modify the consent decrees. The district court decided that the "flexible" standard that the Supreme Court recently set forth in Rufo v. Inmates of Suffolk County Jail, 502 U.S. 367, 116 L. Ed. 2d 867, 112 S. Ct. 748 (1992), should be applied. See 853 F. Supp. at 1465. Applying Rufo, the district court reasoned that the consent decrees could be modified or terminated on the basis of significant [10] changes in market conditions. See id. at 1487-88.

With respect to the 1921 Decree, the district court first determined that Kodak no longer possesses market power over the sale of film. Id. at 1471-73. In so doing, the court defined the relevant geographic market to include not only the United States, but also Japan and Western Europe (collectively "the world-wide market"). Id. at 1471. [*100] Finding that Kodak only has a 36-percent share of the highly competitive world-wide market, the district court concluded that Kodak does not possess market power over film. Id.

Alternatively, the district court determined that, even if the relevant geographic market were defined as the United States, its determination that Kodak lacks market power would not be altered, despite Kodak's 67-percent market share in the United States. The district court reasoned that "price elasticities are better measures of market power" than market share data, id. at 1472-73, and found that Kodak would lose ten percent of its sales to its foreign competitors if it raised its price for film by five percent, a finding that the court deemed incompatible with the presence of market power. The district [11] court also determined that, although Kodak film sells for a small price premium in certain types of retail outlets, the premium simply is evidence "of the perceived quality difference that exists in the minds of consumers who are satisfied with Kodak products." Id. at 1477. Having determined that Kodak no longer possesses market power under either geographic market definition, the court determined that termination of the 1921 Decree would enhance competition in the sale of film.

With respect to the 1954 Decree, the court found that the decree's purpose of creating a competitive photofinishing market had been accomplished. The court determined that the relevant product market includes all three types of photofinishers, and that the relevant geographic market is the United States. Id. at 1483-86. In this market, Kodak has only a thirty-percent share, which the court found to be too small to give rise to an inference of market power, particularly in light of the low barriers to entry. Id. at 1486. Finally, the court determined that allowing Kodak to bundle film and photofinishing would enhance competition in both markets. Id. at 1486-87.

DISCUSSION

1. Standard [12] for Terminating Antitrust Consent Decrees

The government contends that the district court misunderstood and misapplied the legal standard governing termination of an antitrust decree. In opposing Kodak's motion, the government argued that the modification of an antitrust consent decree was governed by United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U.S. 106, 76 L. Ed. 999, 52 S. Ct. 460 \(1932\), where the Supreme Court stated that "nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions" permits modification or termination of an antitrust decree. Id. at 119. Kodak argued for the "less stringent and more flexible" standard set forth in Rufo v. Inmates of Suffolk County Jail, 502 U.S. 367, 116 L. Ed. 2d 867, 112 S. Ct. 748 \(1992\). The trial court agreed with Kodak and indicated that it was applying the Rufo standard. 853 F. Supp. at 1463-66.

On appeal, the government does not argue for application of Swift's "grievous wrong" standard, but it rejects the Rufo test as too lenient in antitrust cases. The government contends that the controlling standard for antitrust cases is set forth in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 391 U.S. 244, 20 L. Ed. 2d 562, 88 S. Ct. 1496 \(1968\), in which the Court explained that the "grievous [13] wrong" standard of Swift was, in large part, the product of the peculiar circumstances of the case: a defendant's attempt to escape the impact of a consent decree a short time after its entry, where the same dangers of monopoly and unfair restraint of trade still were present. Id. at 248; see also Rufo, 502 U.S. at 379-80. Looking beyond the "grievous wrong" language, the United Shoe Court explained Swift as teaching that an antitrust decree may be changed upon an appropriate showing, and . . . that it may not be changed in the interests of the defendants if the purposes of the litigation as incorporated in the decree (the elimination of monopoly and restrictive practices) have not been fully achieved.

391 U.S. at 248. The government therefore argues that Kodak should not be relieved from the 1921 and 1954 Decrees absent a showing that the purposes of the decrees have been fully achieved.

[*101] In response, Kodak argues that the Court's recent decision in Rufo is controlling. The Rufo case involved attempts by state and county officials to modify a consent decree governing conditions in a correctional institution. In rejecting the district [14] court's reliance on the "grievous wrong" standard of Swift, the Court recognized that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60\(b\)\(5\), "in providing that . . . a party may be relieved from a final judgement or decree where it is no longer equitable that the judgment have prospective application, permits a less stringent, more flexible standard" for modifying or terminating a consent decree. 502 U.S. at 380. Specifically addressing the case "when a party seeks modification of a . . . consent decree that arguably relates to vindication of a constitutional right," id. at 383 n.7, the Court held that a party seeking to modify or terminate a consent decree "bears the burden of establishing that a significant change in circumstances warrants revision of the decree," id. at 383.³ In formulating this standard, the Court drew upon a number of cases from this court. See, e.g., New York State Ass'n for Retarded Children, Inc. v. Carey, 706 F.2d 956, 969 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 915, 78 L. Ed. 2d 257, 104 S. Ct. 277 \(1983\); King-Seeley Thermos Co. v. Aladdin Indus., Inc., 418 F.2d 31, 34 \(2d Cir. 1969\).

[15] Although the Rufo Court seemed to limit the "significant change in circumstances" test to the type of decree presented in that case -- one relating to the vindication of constitutional rights -- this court has, on two occasions, applied Rufo in other contexts. First, in Still's Pharmacy, Inc. v. Cuomo, 981 F.2d 632, 636-37 \(2d Cir. 1992\), we applied the Rufo standard to a consent decree relating to New York State's compliance with federal Medicaid regulations. Our most recent case to address the applicability of the Rufo standard is Patterson v. Newspaper & Mail Deliverers' Union, 13 F.3d 33 \(2d Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 16, 115 S. Ct. 58 (1994), where an action had been brought by a union and its employees to set aside an affirmative-action consent decree. We held that the flexible standard outlined in [Board of Educ. of Oklahoma City v. Dowell, 498 U.S. 237, 247, 112 L. Ed. 2d 715, 111 S. Ct. 630 \(1991\)] and Rufo is not limited to cases in which institutional reform is achieved in litigation brought directly against a governmental entity. . . . If a decree seeks pervasive change in long-established practices affecting a large number of people, and the changes are sought [16] to vindicate significant rights of a public nature, it is appropriate to apply a flexible standard 13 F.3d at 38. Applying this standard, we upheld an order of a district court vacating a consent decree where, although not every provision of the decree had been satisfied, we were satisfied that the decree had served its primary purpose. Id. at 39.

³The Court discussed a number of situations that may constitute a showing of changed circumstances, including: where changed factual conditions make compliance with the decree "substantially more onerous"; where the decree proves unworkable because of unforeseen obstacles; or where enforcement of the decree would be detrimental to the public interest. See 502 U.S. at 383-84.

In this case, the parties devote a considerable portion of their briefs to the issue of whether Rufo or United Shoe is controlling in the context of an antitrust consent decree. We think that both cases bear on the issue at hand. Rufo teaches that HN1[[↑]] the power of a court to modify or terminate a consent decree is, at bottom, guided by equitable considerations. Indeed, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b)(5) makes no exception for antitrust decrees. However, we also believe that United Shoe provides a useful starting point for evaluating an antitrust defendant's request to modify or terminate a consent decree. In most cases, the antitrust defendant should be prepared to demonstrate that the basic purposes of the consent decrees -- the elimination of monopoly and unduly restrictive practices -- have been [17] achieved. See United Shoe, 391 U.S. at 248.

Contrary to Kodak's arguments, we see nothing in Rufo that undermines the vitality of this approach. The decision in [*102] United Shoe was cited favorably by the Court in Rufo, 502 U.S. at 379-80, and it was both cited and applied one year earlier in Board of Educ. of Oklahoma City v. Dowell, 498 U.S. 237, 247, 112 L. Ed. 2d 715, 111 S. Ct. 630 (1991) (concluding that the termination of a decree was warranted where "the purposes of the desegregation litigation had been fully achieved"). The United Shoe standard promotes adherence to settlement agreements voluntarily entered into by parties to a litigation and ensures that consent decrees are not so easily modifiable as to discourage parties from reaching constructive settlements. See Patterson, 13 F.3d at 38.

Of course, HN2[[↑]] cases may arise in which modification or termination of a consent decree is appropriate even though the purpose of the decree has not been achieved. For example, there may be significant changes in the factual or legal climate. See Rufo, 502 U.S. at 383. Cf. United States v. Western Elec. Co., 46 F.3d 1198, 1207 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (holding that unanticipated developments in telecommunications [18] industry warranted waiver of consent decree provision). However, as a general matter, we believe that an antitrust defendant should not be relieved of the restrictions that it voluntarily accepted until the purpose of the decree has been substantially effectuated, or when time and experience demonstrate that the decree "is not properly adapted to accomplishing its purposes." King-Seeley, 418 F.2d at 35.

In view of the foregoing, we reject the government's contention that the district court misapplied the legal standards governing termination of an antitrust decree. The district court properly rejected the government's reliance on Swift and recognized that parties should be released from consent decrees when it is no longer equitable to enforce the decrees. In exercising its equitable discretion to terminate the 1921 and 1954 Decrees, the district court required Kodak to prove that: (1) it no longer possesses market power over film and photofinishing, and therefore that the primary purposes of the decrees -- the elimination of monopoly and unduly restrictive practices -- have been achieved; and (2) termination of the consent decrees would benefit consumers. We conclude that, [19] under the legal standards established by Rufo and United Shoe, the district court's resolution of these issues in Kodak's favor provided a proper basis for the court's decision to terminate the consent decrees.

2. The Relevant Geographic Market

The district court found that the relevant geographic market for film is world-wide. The government contends that this determination is clearly erroneous and that the relevant geographic market in this case should be limited to the United States. In contending that the district court's world-wide market definition is overbroad, the government argues that the district court's own factual findings and certain items of undisputed evidence provide direct empirical proof that Kodak exercises market power in the United States. This, the government argues, is inconsistent with the world-wide geographic market found by the district court and weighs heavily in favor of a more narrowly defined geographic market, the United States.

a. The District Court Decision

The district court defined the relevant geographic market as the "area of effective competition in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can [20] practicably turn for supplies." 853 F. Supp. at 1468 (quoting Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 \(1961\)). Applying this definition, the court found that the market for film is world-wide. In so doing, the court relied on findings that "each [film] manufacturer produces film for world-wide distribution using generally the same emulsions, and that the films are of comparable quality," 853 F. Supp. at 1469, that foreign film manufacturers have excess production capacity, and that the supply of film is "elastic," meaning that foreign film manufacturers quickly could increase the supply of film for consumption in the United States if Kodak attempted to increase prices and reduce output. See id. at 1468.

In defining the geographic market, the district court also relied on two journal articles [*103] that address the process of defining the relevant geographic market in antitrust cases: William M. Landes & Richard A. Posner, Market Power in Antitrust Cases, 94 Harv. L. Rev. 937 (1981) (hereinafter "Landes & Posner"), and Kenneth G. Elzinga and Thomas F. Hogarty, The Problem of Geographic Market Delineation in Antimerger Suits, 18 Antitrust Bulletin 45 (1973) [21] (hereinafter "Elzinga & Hogarty"). Landes & Posner advocate a general rule that, "if a distant seller has some sales in a local market, all its sales, wherever made, should be considered a part of that local market for purposes of computing the market share of a local seller." Landes & Posner, supra, at 963. They reason that a foreign seller with a United States presence has proved its ability to sell in this market -- overcoming such factors as higher transportation costs as well as political and economic barriers -- and could increase its sales here should local prices rise. See id. at 963-66. Elzinga and Hogarty advocate a more empirical approach to defining markets, contending that markets properly are defined by determining the areas from which, and to which, a significant amount of the relevant product is shipped. See Elzinga & Hogarty, supra, at 73-75. This approach is sometimes referred to as the "shipments" or the "imports/exports" approach.

The district court found that application of these two approaches also supported the definition of the relevant market as the world, rather than the United States. In particular, the court relied on the testimony of [22] Kodak's economics expert, Professor Hausman, who opined that the Landes & Posner test was satisfied because: (1) each of the foreign film manufacturers had proven its ability to establish market share in the United States; (2) the foreign film manufacturers have excess production capacity; and (3) the supply of film is elastic. See 853 F. Supp. at 1468. With respect to the Elzinga & Hogarty approach, Professor Hausman testified that he applied the imports/exports analysis and determined that the world-wide flow of imports and exports of film were "significant," also leading to the conclusion that the relevant geographic market was world-wide. Id.

The district court rejected the government's contention that Professor Hausman's economic analysis was tainted by the so-called Cellophane⁴ fallacy. The issue in Cellophane was whether du Pont had monopoly power over the sale of cellophane, and, in resolving this issue, the Court defined the relevant product market as comprising "flexible wrapping materials." In defining the product market, the Court relied heavily on the high cross-elasticity of demand between cellophane and other wrapping materials, such as wax paper. [23] This decision was criticized by many commentators because it failed to recognize that a monopolist -- i.e., a seller that has reduced output and raised prices -- always faces a highly elastic demand; its products are so overpriced that even inferior substitutes begin to look good to consumers. See, e.g., Landes and Posner, supra, at 960-61. In this case, the government argued that foreign film is an adequate substitute for Kodak film only because Kodak's film prices in this country are excessive. The district court found the government's Cellophane argument to be misplaced, because foreign film is an excellent substitute for Kodak film, whereas the other wrapping products discussed in Cellophane were inferior for many applications. See 853 F. Supp. at 1469-70.

⁴ Cellophane is a reference to United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\), an antitrust enforcement action brought by the government to put an end to du Pont's alleged monopoly over cellophane wrap.

While [24] conceding that foreign competition should be taken into account in defining markets, the government argued that Kodak's ability to engage in price discrimination against this country's consumers directly shows that Kodak is exercising market power in the United States, and, therefore, that the world-wide geographic market proposed by Kodak is too broad. In support of this contention, the government noted that Kodak's average wholesale prices were lower in Europe (where Kodak has a 43-percent market share) than in the United States (where Kodak has a 67-percent market share), and its prices are even lower in Japan (where Kodak has less than a ten-percent market share) [*104] than in Europe. The district court rejected the government's price discrimination argument on two grounds. First, the court noted that the data upon which the government relied represented Kodak's prices at only a single point in time. 853 F. Supp. at 1475. This, even the government's expert acknowledged, is not necessarily evidence of systematic price discrimination. Id. The court also found that differing currency exchange rates and costs of distribution in different parts of the world made the government's price [25] comparisons of "limited evidentiary value." Id.

The district court also rejected the government's argument that the "premium" price that Kodak film commands in the United States was evidence of market power in this country. The court found that Kodak film was priced 4.5 percent higher than Fuji film in the smaller retail outlets for film, and that this price premium has declined over time. Id. at 1474. This small difference in pricing, the court found, "results not from an intention on Kodak's part to extract a premium price for its film, but from a purposeful marketing strategy on Fuji's part to undercut whatever price Kodak is charging for its film, which Fuji considers to be the industry standard." Id. Also contributing to the price premium is "the perceived quality difference that exists in the minds of consumers who are satisfied with Kodak products." Id. at 1477.

Having rejected the government's arguments that Kodak engages in price discrimination and that Kodak film is priced at monopolistic levels, the district court stood by its definition of a world-wide market.

b. Definition of the Relevant Market

HN3 In determining whether a firm possesses market [26] power, "the first step in a court's analysis must be a definition of the relevant markets." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 268 \(2d Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980). Without a definition of the relevant market, there is no way to measure a company's ability to act as a monopolist. Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 \(1965\). The relevant product market here -- amateur color negative photographic film -- is not in dispute. Kodak and the government disagree, however, as to the relevant geographic market. As the district court properly noted, HN4 the relevant geographic market is defined as the "area of effective competition . . . in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies." Tampa Electric, 365 U.S. at 327. The district court applied this definition and found that an examination of the elasticities of supply and demand supported a world-wide geographic market for film. We see no error in the district court's analysis.

Looking first to the area where film sellers operate, we find strong support for the district court's determination that film sellers [27] operate on a world-wide scale. Kodak is the only domestic film manufacturer. Of its four competitors, all of which sell film in the United States, "Fuji manufactures film in Japan and in the Netherlands, Konica manufactures film in Japan, Agfa manufactures film in Germany, and 3M manufactures film in Italy." 853 F. Supp. at 1468. Since Kodak has two-thirds of the United States film market, a full one-third of all film used in the United States comes from abroad. Additionally, the district court accepted Professor Hausman's opinion that "foreign manufacturers could quickly increase the supply of film for U.S. consumption if Kodak attempted to restrict output and raise prices." Id. Moreover, the flow of imported film has been continuous and systematic through the entire United States, and there is no evidence in the record of transportation costs or tariffs that put imported film at a significant cost disadvantage. The foregoing provides an ample basis for the district court's finding that foreign film producers act as a check on Kodak's ability to raise domestic prices.

Looking to the area in which film purchasers turn for supplies, the district court found that film purchasers [28] are, for the most part, price sensitive and will shift among Fuji, Kodak, and private label film on the basis of changes in price. Id. at 1473. Thus, while many consumers state a preference for the familiar Kodak brand name, the empirical [*105] evidence of what consumers actually do indicates that consumers find non-Kodak film to be an acceptable substitute. The increasing price sensitivity of consumers is evidenced by the fact that private label film has become the fastest growing segment of the film market, with at least a 12.8-percent share of the market. Id. at 1473. Also, as noted above, one-third of all the film purchased in the United States is manufactured abroad. These findings amply support the district court's factual determination that a significant segment of United States film purchasers turn to foreign sources of film.

The government, however, contends that, by relying on the significant cross-elasticity of demand between Kodak film and other brands, the district court fell victim to the Cellophane fallacy. It contends that, because Kodak already is pricing its products at monopolistic levels in the United States, consumers' willingness to switch to other brands [29] of film when the price of Kodak film rises actually demonstrates that Kodak possesses market power in the United States. We disagree.

The economic error allegedly committed by the Court in Cellophane was in failing to recognize that a high cross-elasticity of demand may, in some cases, be the product of monopoly power rather than a belief on the part of consumers that the products are good substitutes for one another. As the district court succinctly stated: "At a high enough price, even poor substitutes look good to the consumer." 853 F. Supp. at 1469. That is, in the Cellophane case, the high cross-elasticity between cellophane and wax paper simply may have been a function of the high price that du Pont demanded for cellophane. This case, however, does not involve a comparison of two highly-differentiated products like cellophane and wax paper. The district court found, and we agree, that the film produced by Kodak's competitors is of comparable quality to Kodak's film and is an excellent substitute. Moreover, the government's contention assumes that Kodak film is priced well above competitive levels, and we do not believe that the small but declining price premium that [30] Kodak obtains for its film bears out this assumption.⁵ Under these circumstances, we do not believe that the district court fell victim to the Cellophane fallacy.

Based on the foregoing evidence that foreign film sellers operate as a check on Kodak's ability to raise prices and that a substantial segment of United States film purchasers turn to foreign sources of film, we agree with the district court that the "area of effective competition" for film encompasses the entire world.

c. Empirical Challenges to a World-Wide Market

While conceding that "foreign competition should be taken into account in defining markets, and that the prospect of foreign firms increasing their sales into the United States may sometimes prevent American firms from maintaining prices above competitive levels," the government argues that the world-wide geographic market [31] found by the district court is overly broad and that the relevant geographic market should be limited to the United States. In making this argument, the government relies on certain empirical evidence before the district court that allegedly establishes that Kodak exercises market power over film in the United States. In particular, the government relies on the following "direct proof" of Kodak's market power in the United States: (1) Kodak's ability to engage in price discrimination against United States customers; (2) Kodak's ability to sell film no better than the film sold by its rivals at a substantial price premium; and (3) Kodak's excessive profits, as evidenced by an "own elasticity" of two. Kodak's ability to exercise market power in this country, the government argues, conflicts with the world-wide market definition that resulted from examination of the elasticities of supply and demand for film. For this reason, the government asserts, the relevant geographic market should be limited to the United States, an area in which ⁵ The government's contention that Kodak film commands a significant premium price in the United States is discussed infra in sub-section (c)(ii).

Kodak can and does exercise market power. We address each of [*106] the three types of direct evidence of market power offered by the government in turn.

[32] i. Price Discrimination

The government first argues that Kodak's ability to engage in geographical price discrimination against its United States customers establishes that the world-wide market definition adopted by the district court is overly broad. It is the position of the government that Kodak charges a higher price for its film in the United States than it charges for the same film in other parts of the world. This, the government argues, is proof that Kodak exercises market power in the United States. The district court disagreed, finding that the factual record did not support the government's price-discrimination theory. 853 F. Supp. at 1474-75. In response, the government further argues that the district court compounded its error by "suggesting that the government had not carried [its] burden of persuasion" on this point.

Support for the government's theory that a market can be defined on the basis of price discrimination can be found in HN5¹ the 1992 Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission Horizontal Merger Guidelines ("the Merger Guidelines"). The Merger Guidelines provide that a geographic market generally will be defined as a region in which a "hypothetical [33] monopolist" could exact a "'small but significant and nontransitory' increase in price, holding constant the terms of sale for all products produced elsewhere." Merger Guidelines § 1.12. While this standard fully encompasses foreign competition and can result in the definition of a world-wide market, it applies only in the absence of "geographic price discrimination." Id. § 1.22. If the company is capable of geographic price discrimination, then smaller geographic markets, defined by the regions in which the company is able to price discriminate, will be recognized. See id. Thus, the Merger Guidelines recognize that a geographic market is limited to the area in which prices are relatively uniform.

The Supreme Court's recent decision in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\), also recognizes that HN6¹ a company's ability to price discriminate against certain classes of consumers may be evidence of power in a particular market. In that case, the Court rejected Kodak's theory that its lack of market power in the photocopier and micrographics market precluded, as a matter of law, the possibility that it could exercise market power in derivative [34] aftermarkets, i.e., parts and service for equipment that it sold. Id. at 455, 475-78. In rejecting Kodak's theory, the court relied, in part, on the possibility that Kodak could price-discriminate against various classes of consumers. Id. at 475-78; see also U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 997 \(11th Cir. 1993\) (relying on "unusual circumstance of severe price discrimination against a distinct group of consumers based solely on brand preference"), cert. denied, 129 L. Ed. 2d 837, 114 S. Ct. 2710 (1994).⁶

[35] Even if we accept the government's theory that the relevant geographic market may be defined on the basis of price discrimination, there simply is no probative evidence in the record to support the assertion that Kodak engages in geographic price discrimination. To support its argument, the government relies upon pricing data supplied by Kodak in response to an interrogatory. This data indicates that the price of Kodak film is subject to regional variations. However, evidence that Kodak film sells for different prices in different parts of the world is insufficient to establish price discrimination without proof that Kodak's costs are uniform [*107] throughout the world. See Areeda et al., supra, § 522, at 125. While there was no evidence in the record that Kodak's costs are the same in each region, there is evidence that Kodak's marketing and distribution systems differ markedly from country to country. Even the government's expert conceded that such variations would have to be "factored . . . in" to determine whether there was price discrimination. Further, as the district court noted, fluctuations in currency exchange rates also are relevant to this inquiry. See 853 F. Supp. at 1475. Absent proof that Kodak's costs are uniform throughout the world, the government's price-discrimination argument simply is conjecture.

⁶The theory that price discrimination is one of the indicia of market power also has received acceptance in the academic community. See, e.g., Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law § 522, at 125 (1995) (price discrimination "can usefully show the existence and degree of market power if cost differences (or their absence) are readily determinable"); id. § 534d, at 183-85 (price discrimination also is relevant to market definition process); Robert Pitofsky, New Definitions of Relevant Market and the Assault on Antitrust, 90 Colum. L. Rev. 1805 \(1990\) (arguing that definition of relevant market should be adjusted if seller can discriminate against certain classes of consumers).

We also reject the government's argument that the district court improperly placed upon it the burden of persuasion on this point. In this proceeding, Kodak had the burden of proving that it no longer possessed market power over film in the relevant geographic market. To discharge its burden of establishing that the market for film is a world-wide one, Kodak put forth evidence that foreign film producers act as a check on its ability to raise prices and that consumers in the United States look to foreign sources of film. As discussed above, this evidence provides a sufficient basis for the definition of a world-wide market for film. In rebuttal, the government argued that the market definition proposed by Kodak was overbroad in view of, inter alia, Kodak's ability to price discriminate against its United States customers. Having chosen to rebut Kodak's proposed market definition by relying on its theory of price discrimination, it was incumbent upon the government to produce probative evidence of systematic price discrimination, [\[37\]](#) which it failed to do. In the absence of such proof, the district court properly rejected the government's theory.

ii. Premium Pricing and Consumer Perception

In a similar vein, the government argues that the district court erred in failing to appreciate the significance of United States customers' strong preference for Kodak film and the resulting premium price that Kodak is able to obtain for its film in this country. This, the government contends, demonstrates that Kodak possesses market power over film in the United States and, therefore, that the relevant geographic market should be limited to the United States.

In addressing Kodak's argument regarding consumer loyalty, the district court recognized that "50 percent of [surveyed] consumers will only buy Kodak film, while another 40 percent of consumers prefer Kodak film, but are willing to purchase another brand of film." 853 F. Supp. at 1475 (footnote omitted). The court attributed this loyalty "to the fact that Kodak has earned consumer trust by producing a product the consumer perceives to be superior." Id. at 1477. With respect to the government's contention that Kodak sells for a monopolistic premium, [\[38\]](#) the district court found that, in mass merchandisers, which account for approximately one-half of all film sales, Kodak and Fuji film are priced within one percent of each other; on occasions, Fuji film is the higher priced, while at other times, Kodak film is more expensive. Id. at 1474. In smaller food and drug stores, which account for the vast majority of other sales of film, the court found evidence of an average price difference of 4.5 percent. The court determined that these small price differences resulted from Fuji's policy of undercutting Kodak's price in order to make its product more attractive to retailers as well as from consumers' preference for Kodak film.

The government argues here, as it did below, that Kodak's ability to sell film of similar quality as its competitors for a price premium while maintaining a very high market share is strong empirical evidence of Kodak's market power within the United States, and that the district court erred in failing to recognize this. In support of this argument, the government relies on the 4.5-percent retail price premium charged in the smaller outlets, and the ten-percent premium that Kodak film allegedly commands at the [\[39\]](#) wholesale level. Since Fuji's strategy is to undercut Kodak's wholesale prices, the government argues, "it is all the more significant that Kodak nevertheless maintains a dominance of 67% to 10% over Fuji in U.S. sales." [\[*108\]](#) With regard to consumers' preference to Kodak film, the government argues that the issue is not how Kodak obtained its market power -- whether as a result of its illegal monopoly ninety years ago or through a perceived difference in quality resulting from Kodak's leadership in the photography field -- but only whether Kodak has market power.

The government's arguments here are not without some force. While Fuji may be Kodak's equal on a world-wide basis, Kodak's dominant position in the United States cannot seriously be disputed. However, the evidence before the district court demonstrates that the difference in price between Kodak film and that of its competitors is small and declining. The district court found, and the government does not dispute, that one-half of Kodak's film is sold at virtually no premium and the rest is sold at an average premium of less than five percent. These price differences are not of the magnitude to raise significant market power concerns. [\[40\]](#) Moreover, the declining nature of this premium is evident from the fact that, only five years ago, Kodak film fetched a 6.3-percent price premium at mass merchandisers, and this premium has since fallen to less than one percent. See 853 F. Supp. at 1474. This supports the district court's finding that the premium paid for Kodak film is dissipating rapidly as its competitors' favorable reputations continue to grow. Under these circumstances, we believe that the small and declining price premium paid for Kodak film in the United States was not sufficient to call in question the district court's definition of a world-wide market.

For similar reasons, we must reject the government's contention that the strong preference of United States customers for Kodak film demonstrates Kodak's market power in the United States. Although consumers do state a strong preference for Kodak film when surveyed, empirical evidence introduced at trial by Kodak demonstrates, and the district court found, that "film purchasers are . . . price sensitive, and will shift between Kodak, Fuji and private label film on the basis of changes in price." 853 F. Supp. at 1473. In this regard, the district court accepted [41] Professor Hausman's conclusion that if Kodak were to raise prices by five percent, it would lose ten percent of its film sales. Accepting these factual findings -- as we must, since they are well supported by the record -- in conjunction with the small price premium for Kodak film, we cannot say that the district court erred in rejecting the government's argument that the preference of American consumers gives Kodak market power over the sale of film in the United States. Accordingly, this evidence is not inconsistent with a world-wide market definition.

iii. "Own Elasticity of Demand"

The last item of direct evidence relied upon by the government to support a finding that Kodak has market power within the United States is the fact that Kodak's "own elasticity of demand" is two. According to the government, an "own elasticity" of two indicates that Kodak is earning excessive profits from its film. This, the government argues, is strong evidence that Kodak exercises market power in the United States and weighs against a world-wide market definition.

The economist's term "own elasticity of demand" expresses the change in quantity of goods a firm will sell in response to [42] a change in the price it charges for the goods. For a firm operating with an own elasticity of two, a price increase by the firm would result in its sales dropping by twice the percentage of the price change. Kodak's expert, Professor Hausman, opined that Kodak film is subject to an own elasticity of two, and, therefore, that Kodak would lose ten percent of film sales if it were to raise the price of its film by five percent.

The significance of an own elasticity of two, in the government's view, is that it indicates that the sales price of Kodak film is twice the short-run marginal cost. This conclusion follows from the "Lerner index," a mathematical formula expressing the relationship between a firm's own elasticity and the marginal cost of the goods sold. See Landes & Posner, supra, at 939-40. From this, the government argues that Kodak is [*109] earning monopolistic profits from the sale of its film. Thus, from Kodak's own elasticity of two, the government concludes that Kodak is exercising significant market power in the United States.

We are unpersuaded by this argument for a number of reasons. First, the government contends that the Lerner index applies to Kodak as the seller [43] of a differentiated product that sets prices independently of its rivals. But, the contention that Kodak film is differentiated from the film sold by its rivals is directly contradicted by the district court's findings with respect to the elasticities of supply and demand for film. Accordingly, we believe that the use of the Lerner index in this manner rests on unwarranted factual assumptions.

Second, even if we were to accept the government's contention that Kodak's short-run marginal costs equal one-half of the product's sales price, we do not think that it necessarily follows that Kodak is earning monopolistic profits. Certain deviations between marginal cost and price, such as those resulting from high fixed costs, are not evidence of market power. See Landes & Posner, supra, at 939. In this case, there was overwhelming evidence that Kodak's film business is subject to enormous expenses that are not reflected in its short-run marginal costs. In particular, Professor Hausman testified that (1) Kodak uses between eight and nine percent of its revenues for research and development, and (2) Kodak's film is produced at plants costing hundreds of millions of dollars. See [44] 853 F. Supp. at 1473. The government's own witnesses and submissions confirm that the fixed costs in the film industry are huge. In light of these considerations, we do not believe that the district court erred in rejecting the government's argument that Kodak's own elasticity of two proves that Kodak is exercising market power in the United States. Even if the government's evidence in this regard supported an inference of market power, and we are not persuaded that it does, it certainly did not compel such an inference. Accordingly, we do not believe that the government's "own elasticity" argument calls in question the district court's determination that the market for film is world-wide.

d. Conclusions as to the Relevant Geographic Market

To prevail on this appeal, the government was obliged to show that the district court abused its discretion in defining the geographic market for film as a world-wide one. We conclude that the government has failed to make such a showing. The district court applied the correct legal principles, and its factual findings relied upon herein are well supported by the evidence in the record. While another fact-finder might have weighed [45] the evidence differently, HNT [↑] our review of the district court's decision is limited to ensuring that the district court exercised its broad discretion in a proper manner. We are convinced that it did so, and we therefore affirm its definition of a world-wide geographic market.

3. Termination of the Decrees

Having upheld the district court's world-wide market definition, we also must uphold its determination that Kodak lacks market power over film. On a world-wide basis, Kodak has only a 36-percent share of the market for film. This low market share, in connection with the other factors addressed in the district court's opinion, see 853 F. Supp. at 1471-72, strongly supports the finding that Kodak no longer possesses market power. Since the government concedes that the restrictions set forth in the 1921 Decree should not be maintained if we affirm the district court's finding that Kodak lacks market power, we therefore affirm the district court's decision to terminate the 1921 Decree. With respect to the 1954 Decree, which prohibits Kodak from bundling its film with photofinishing, the government does not challenge the district court's finding that Kodak lacks market [46] power over photofinishing. Given that Kodak lacks market power over both film and photofinishing, we see no abuse of discretion in the district court's decision to terminate the 1954 Decree.

[*110] CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the order of the district court is affirmed.

End of Document

Little Caesar Enters. v. Smith

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division

August 7, 1995, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO. 93-73354, CIVIL ACTION NO. 93-74041

Reporter

895 F. Supp. 884 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11300 ; 1996-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,411

LITTLE CAESAR ENTERPRISES, INC., Plaintiff, v. GARY G. SMITH ET AL., Defendants. GARY G. SMITH ET AL., Plaintiffs, v. LITTLE CAESAR ENTERPRISES, INC. ET AL., Defendants.

Core Terms

franchisees, supplies, logoed, distributor, independent distributor, products, franchise agreement, class certification, prices, plaintiffs', tying arrangement, advertising, license agreement, contends, regional, magistrate judge, certification, recommended, suppliers, summary judgment, antitrust, franchise, forcing, tie-in, alternate, coercion, parties, partial summary judgment, class action, price-fixing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Supporting Materials, Discovery Materials

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), summary judgment may be granted if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. A fact is "material" and precludes grant of summary judgment if proof of that fact would have the effect of establishing or refuting one of the essential elements of the cause of action or defense asserted by the parties, and would necessarily affect the application of appropriate principles of law to the rights and obligations of the parties. The court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the nonmovant as well as draw all reasonable inferences in the nonmovant's favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The movant bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of all genuine issues of material fact. The initial burden on the movant is not as formidable as some decisions have indicated. The moving party need not produce evidence showing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Rather, the burden on the moving party may be discharged by "showing" -- that is, pointing out to the district court -- that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. Once the moving party discharges that burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to set forth specific facts showing a genuine triable issue.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the nonmovant's evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

A nonmovant must do more than raise some doubt as to the existence of a fact; the nonmovant must produce evidence that would be sufficient to require submission to the jury of the dispute over the fact. The evidence itself need not be the sort admissible at trial. However, the evidence must be more than the nonmovant's own pleadings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN5[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

In order to establish fraudulent concealment in order to defeat the bar posed by a statute of limitations, plaintiff must show the following: (1) Wrongful affirmative concealment; (2) Failure to discover within the limitations period; and (3) Due diligence until discovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act at 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is violated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

An approved source requirement is not, alone, illegal. Only if a franchisee is coerced into purchasing products from a company in which the franchisor has a financial interest does an illegal tie exist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Procedural Matters > Objections & Offers of Proof > Objections

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In order to prove a tying claim, plaintiffs must produce evidence that the undesired condition was imposed over plaintiff's objection, or at the explicit refusal of the defendant to do otherwise. When a condition is accepted without objection, the element of coercion becomes totally speculative. Similarly, if two products are sold together, there must be evidence that the buyer objected to the package, that the buyer was only interested in one of the two products or that the tied product was forced upon him. Where the tying arrangement is admitted or where the arrangement is imposed as part of a contract, there is no further need to demonstrate the forcing element. All courts agree, however, that absent contractual tie-in provisions, actual coercion must be demonstrated.

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Revival

895 F. Supp. 884, *884 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11300, 11300

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN10 [] Statute of Limitations, Revival

A continuing antitrust violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded. First, when a continuing antitrust violation is alleged, a cause of action accrues each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants. Second, in the context of a continuing conspiracy, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act that causes the plaintiff's damage. Thus, even when a plaintiff alleges a continuing violation, an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act. For statute of limitations purposes, therefore, the focus is on the timing of the causes of injury, i.e., the defendant's overt acts, as opposed to the effects of the overt acts.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN11 [] Legislation, Interpretation

Pursuant to Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 445.784\(2\), in construing Michigan antitrust law, the courts shall give due deference to interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable antitrust statutes.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

HN12 [] Parties, Joinder of Parties

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN13 [] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The burden is on the party seeking class certification to show that the prerequisites of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) have been satisfied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN14 [] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

In deciding whether to certify a class action, the court should not inquire into the merits of plaintiffs' claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where plaintiff franchisees place no reliance on express contractual tie-ins, each, individually, must prove that his purchases were coerced as an element of establishing a prima facie case of illegal tying. The district court's class certification with respect to the tying claims was expressly premised on its rejection of the individual coercion doctrine.

Counsel: [1] For Little Caesar Ent, plaintiff: Stephen D. Susman, Susman Godfrey, Houston, TX. Alan C. Harnisch, Harnisch & Associates, Bingham Farms, MI. Irwin M. Alterman, Kemp, Klein, Troy, MI.

For Gary G. Smith, defendant: Shawn M. Perry, Perry, Minneapolis, MN. Richard J. Rodney, Mound, MN. For Smith Family Foods, defendant: Robert J. Schmit, Schatz, Paquin, Minneapolis, MN. Richard A. Lockridge, Heins, Schatz, Minneapolis, MN. Charles E. Turnbull, Paul J. O'Reilly, O'Reilly, Rancilio, Sterling Heights, MI.

Judges: HONORABLE PAUL V. GADOLA, U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: PAUL V. GADOLA

Opinion

[*886] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

These two consolidated cases involve various claims made by three disgruntled franchisees against Little Caesar Enterprises, Inc. ("Little Caesar") and various affiliate companies or subsidiaries. The first action, Little Caesar Enterprises v. Smith, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11300, No. 93-73354, is a declaratory judgment action by Little Caesar against one of its franchisees, Gary Smith and his company, for a determination of contract rights under their franchise agreement. The center of this dispute and the subject of the three motions being considered, however, is the second suit, [Smith \[*2\] v. Little Caesar Enterprises, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11300](#), No. 93-74041. In the second suit, the three franchisees have brought a putative class action against Little Caesar for various antitrust violations, conversion, and for breach of their franchise agreements.

Before the court are Little Caesar's two motions for partial summary judgment and the parties' objections to the magistrate judge's report and recommendation on the franchisees' motion for class certification. For the reasons stated below, the court will grant Little Caesar's motions for partial summary judgment, accept in part and reject in part the magistrate judge's report and recommendation, and deny the franchisees' motion for class certification.

[*887] I. Background

The franchisee-plaintiffs in this action are Gary Smith, John Hennessy, and Sharon Fields. Gary Smith owns three Little Caesar stores in Florida, and Linda Smith, Brian Smith, and Smith Family Foods, Inc. are also plaintiffs in this action who are associated with Gary Smith. John Hennessy owns one store in Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Hennessy's company, Pizza Farm, Inc. is also a plaintiff. Sharon Fields owns four stores in Tennessee. Each of Fields' four companies affiliated [3] with these stores are also plaintiffs: LCP of Lenoir City, Inc., LCP of East Maryville, Inc., LCP of Chapman Square, Inc., and LCP of Powell Place, Inc. These franchisee-plaintiffs are seeking damages and other relief on their own behalf and on behalf of a proposed class of Little Caesar franchisees from across the country. As of June 1, 1994, there are a total of 536 franchisees who operate 2,867 restaurants, in addition to about 550 restaurants that opened in K-mart stores and 1,275 company-owned restaurants.

Defendant Little Caesar Enterprises, Inc. is a privately owned franchisor of pizza/fast food restaurants. Defendant Blue Line Distributing, Inc. was a wholly owned subsidiary of Little Caesar until early 1994 when it merged into its parent company. Blue Line has acted as a distributor of supplies to Little Caesar franchisees. Defendant Little Caesar International, Inc. was the passive shareholder of Little Caesar until it merged with that company in early 1994. Defendant Little Caesar National Advertising Program, Inc. ("LCNAP") is a non-profit corporation that pools and collects money from each franchisee pursuant to the franchise agreements and then uses the money to conduct [4] national advertising campaigns. Throughout this opinion, the court will refer to the Little Caesar defendants as "Little Caesar" unless it is necessary to refer separately to one of the defendant companies.

A. Plaintiffs' Complaint

In their complaint, plaintiffs allege a mixture of antitrust and contract claims. Plaintiffs' antitrust claims are based upon allegations of price-fixing and an illegal tying arrangement. In Count I, plaintiffs seek damages and other relief pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar conspired to fix the price of supplies--food, beverages, equipment, smallwares, graphics, and logoed paper products--sold to its franchisees. Count III is an identical claim under MCLA § 445.772 of Michigan's antitrust statute.

In Count II, plaintiffs allege that Little Caesar engaged in an illegal tying arrangement in violation of the Sherman Act, by forcing franchisees to buy their supplies from Blue Line, rather than independent distributors, in order to remain as viable franchisees. The same claim is expressed in Count IV under section 445.772 of Michigan law.

Plaintiffs' three breach of contract claims are presented in [5] Count V. In their first contract claim, plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar has breached a common provision of the standard franchise agreement that gives franchisees the freedom to set their own retail prices. Plaintiffs argue that Little Caesar conducts national advertising campaigns based upon price which force its franchisees to follow the prices set by Little Caesar in breach of the franchise agreements.

In their second contract claim, plaintiffs allege that Little Caesar has breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing by failing to pay its franchisees any rebates and discounts that it receives from suppliers. Plaintiffs' final contract claim is that Little Caesar has also breached the franchise agreements by causing defendant LCNAP to implement advertising campaigns that are detrimental to franchisees and to misuse pooled franchisee funds for improper purposes. A similar claim is stated in Count VI, where plaintiffs allege conversion by Little Caesar and LCNAP for taking franchisee advertising funds and using them for purposes other than advertising that benefits franchisees.

B. Tying Arrangement

The claim upon which plaintiffs rely most heavily, as expressed [6] in Count II, is that Little Caesar has conducted a systematic campaign, pursuant to a "master plan," to replace independent distributors of food and other supplies to franchisees with a Little [*888] Caesar subsidiary, Blue Line, now merged into Little Caesar. Plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar has forced all franchisees to purchase food and other supplies from itself, and that Little Caesar's conduct constitutes an illegal tying arrangement under the federal and state antitrust laws.

Originally, Blue Line was only able to service franchisees located in the Midwest. Over the past twelve years, however, Blue Line/Little Caesar has expanded and now has sixteen distribution centers all over the country capable of servicing all franchisees except for certain remote areas of Idaho and North Dakota. Plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar and Blue Line had a master plan to force franchisees to cease buying their supplies from independent distributors and have them buy exclusively from Blue Line instead. As part of this scheme, plaintiffs allege that Little Caesar used its market power, selective rejection of requests for alternate suppliers, and the attractiveness of one-stop shopping to franchisees [7] in order to take control of the distribution of supplies to its franchisees.

The essence of the illegal tying claim is that in order to own a Little Caesar franchise (the tying product), franchisees are forced to buy their food and other supplies (the tied product) from Little Caesar. The price-fixing claim centers around plaintiffs' claim that Little Caesar has conspired with others, including the independent distributors, to fix the price of supplies charged to franchisees.

Under the franchise agreements, franchisees are free to buy food and other supplies from approved, independent distributors. However, franchisees are only allowed to buy a secret spice mix and special Pan!Pan! dough mix from Little Caesar and no other source. Plaintiffs do not challenge Little Caesar's right to control the distribution of these two special proprietary items and they are not part of this lawsuit. Plaintiffs are, however, challenging the control of all other food and supplies. Furthermore, starting in mid-1990, all newly signed franchisees, through a provision in their franchise agreements, were not allowed to request alternate distributors of paper products that have the Little Caesar logo on [8] them. Because Little Caesar/Blue Line is the exclusive distributor of "logoed paper products," plaintiffs contend that franchisees are thus forced to buy such items from Little Caesar. However, plaintiffs' tying claim is not limited to logoed paper products or agreements signed after mid-1990. Instead, plaintiffs' claim encompasses all franchisees and all supplies necessary to run a franchise except for the special proprietary items mentioned above.

This lawsuit appears to have arisen from an incident in 1992, when plaintiff Smith sought to have Ameriserv, an independent distributor of fast food supplies, approved by Little Caesar as a distributor to its franchisees. The approval process is supposed to be a determination of whether the distributor can provide supplies that meet specifications set by Little Caesar. Ultimately, Little Caesar rejected Ameriserv's application. It appears that the rejection of Ameriserv led to the filing of this lawsuit. Since the inception of this action, however, Little Caesar has approved franchisee requests for three independent distributors--Gordons, PYA Monarch, and Schloss & Kahn--to be authorized to sell supplies to franchisees. In addition, Little [9] Caesar contends that the rejection of Ameriserv was an isolated occurrence and that it has received only six requests over the decade before this lawsuit for approval of new independent distributors. Two of these requests were rejected and four were withdrawn.

C. Breach of Contract

The second main claim of plaintiffs, as expressed in a portion of Count V, is that Little Caesar has breached the franchise agreements that allow franchisees to set their own retail prices. Plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar has used national advertising campaigns that mention specific prices to force its franchisees to match those prices. Because the franchisees are forced to match the nationally advertised prices as a result of consumer expectations, plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar has breached the franchise agreement provision allowing individual franchisees to set their own retail prices. Little Caesar points out, however, that each of the national ads contain the following disclaimer: "Limited time offer at participating stores. Prices may vary." In addition, Little Caesar [*889] relies on the fact that all three of the plaintiff-franchisees admit that on occasion they do not follow the nationally [10] advertised prices, and instead, set higher prices or encourage alternate special deals that are more profitable.

The third major area of the lawsuit, expressed in portions of Count V and VI, concerns the handling of franchisee money given to LCNAP. LCNAP is a non-profit company that collects and pools money from all of the franchisees and uses it to advertise Little Caesar pizza. In Count VI, plaintiffs contend that LCNAP and Little Caesar have converted franchisee money in the LCNAP advertising fund for purposes beneficial to Little Caesar only and not the franchisees. In addition, plaintiffs allege that Little Caesar and LCNAP have breached the franchise agreements by failing to use the LCNAP funds for the benefit of the franchisees. An example of the alleged breach includes the use of $ 670,000 of LCNAP funds as sponsorship money for the Detroit Drive, an arena football team owned by Mike Ilitch, Little Caesar's primary owner. As another example, $ 200,000 in LCNAP funds were allegedly used to pay a former Little Caesar executive to sponsor his racing boat which appeared in nationally televised racing competitions.

In this memorandum opinion, the court will address two motions [11] for partial summary judgment filed by Little Caesar in January and February of 1995. In addition, the court will consider the parties objections to the magistrate judge's March 31, 1995 report and recommendation regarding plaintiffs' motion for class certification. In its first Rule 56\(c\) motion, Little Caesar is seeking a finding limiting the applicability of a 1989 licensing agreement between Little Caesar and Blue Line to certain specified logoed products. This issue is important as it impacts upon contentions made by plaintiffs in their class certification motion. Little Caesar's second motion for partial summary judgment seeks judgment as to many, but not all, of plaintiffs' individual claims presented in Counts I-V.

In his March 31, 1995 report, Magistrate Judge Stephen Pepe recommended that the court certify sixteen regional classes as to plaintiffs' tying claim and a national class on the breach of contract claims. Both sides have filed objections to this report. In their June 1994 motion for class certification, plaintiffs did not seek class certification as to all of their claims. Instead, plaintiffs are only seeking Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) certification of Count II, the tying arrangement. [12] In addition, plaintiffs are seeking Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) certification for injunctive and declaratory relief, of Count II, the breach of contract claims based upon the use of LCNAP funds and the national advertising campaigns as presented in Count V, and the conversion claim in Count VI.

II. Standard of Review

A. Summary Judgment

HN1[] Under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment may be granted "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." "A fact is 'material' and precludes grant of summary judgment if proof of that fact would have [the] effect of establishing or refuting one of the essential elements of the cause of action or defense asserted by the parties, and would necessarily affect [the] application of appropriate principle[s] of law to the rights and obligations of the parties." Kendall v. Hoover Co., 751 F.2d 171, 174 (6th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 881 (6th ed. 1979)). The court must view the [13] evidence in a light most favorable to the nonmovant as well as draw all reasonable inferences in the nonmovant's favor. See United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 (1962); Bender v. Southland Corp., 749 F.2d 1205, 1210-11 (6th Cir. 1984).

HN2[] The movant bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of all genuine issues of material fact. See Gregg v. Allen-Bradley Co., 801 F.2d 859, 861 (6th Cir. 1986). The initial burden on the movant is not as formidable as some decisions have indicated. The moving party need not produce evidence showing the absence of a genuine issue of [*890] material fact. Rather, "the burden on the moving party may be discharged by 'showing' -- that is, pointing out to the district court -- that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). Once the moving party discharges that burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to set forth specific facts showing a genuine triable issue. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); Gregg, 801 F.2d at 861.

To create a genuine issue of material fact, however, the nonmovant must do more than present some evidence on a disputed issue. As the [14] United States Supreme Court stated in Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249-50, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986), HN3[¹⁵] There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the [nonmovant's] evidence is merely colorable, or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted.

(Citations omitted). See Catrett, 477 U.S. at 322-23; Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). The standard for summary judgment mirrors the standard for a directed verdict under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(a\); Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250. Consequently, HN4[¹⁶] a nonmovant must do more than raise some doubt as to the existence of a fact; the nonmovant must produce evidence that would be sufficient to require submission to the jury of the dispute over the fact. Lucas v. Leaseway Multi Transp. Serv., Inc., 738 F. Supp. 214, 217 \(E.D. Mich. 1990\), aff'd, 929 F.2d 701 (6th Cir. 1991). The evidence itself need not be the sort admissible at trial. Ashbrook v. Block, 917 F.2d 918, 921 \(6th Cir. 1990\). However, the evidence must be more than the nonmovant's own pleadings. *15 Id.

B. Review of a Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation

Pursuant to Rule 72\(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\), and LR 72.1(d)(2) (E.D. Mich. Jan. 1, 1992), the court will review the magistrate judge's March 31, 1995 report and recommendation as well as the objections filed by the parties. Because of the nature of plaintiffs' motion for class certification, the court will conduct a de novo review of the report and recommendation.

III. Little Caesar's First motion for Partial Summary Judgment

In its first motion for partial summary judgment, Little Caesar is asking the court to determine the scope of a 1989 licensing agreement between Little Caesar and its former subsidiary, Blue Line. This issue is important because plaintiffs have relied heavily on this document as a basis for their request for class certification. As a result, should the court construe the licensing agreement more narrowly, it may have a tangential effect upon plaintiffs' certification motion.

The June 1989 agreement gave Blue Line an exclusive license to distribute logoed products to franchisees. Little Caesar contends that this agreement only covers *16 those items that bear a Little Caesar's registered mark, and thus is asking this court to find that the 1989 agreement only applies to items given to a retail customer that bear a registered mark, such as logo paper items and individual packages of condiments marked with logos. This only includes only such items as bags, cups, napkins, and logo condiments used by retail customers, such as individual salad dressings. Plaintiffs, however, seek to define "logo products" much more broadly.

In exchange for the license, Blue Line agreed to pay Little Caesar 1% of its gross sales of these items. After the agreement was executed in May 1989, all third-party distributors and suppliers were informed by memo that Blue Line would be the exclusive supplier of the logo items. The memos listed only the items discussed above. In the agreement itself, the following language defines the covered logo items:

WHEREAS Little Caesar desires to grant an exclusive license to Blue Line to contract with third parties for the manufacture and production of certain supplies and 891 paper products which utilize the Proprietary Marks, including without limitation, carry out bags, wrappers, dishes, napkins, cups *17 and boxes ("Logo Products").

Little Caesar has presented evidence demonstrating that the logo items amount to only a small percentage of the purchases made by franchisees. Little Caesar has also shown that it was the consistent course of conduct of itself and Blue Line to have the agreement only apply to those few logoed items going to retail customers. Under the agreement, Blue Line is required to submit monthly reports to Little Caesar detailing the amount of sales of the logoed products so that the 1% royalty can be determined. Little Caesar has presented numerous examples of these monthly reports that confirm that only the sales of paper products and individual salad dressings bearing a registered mark are covered by the licensing agreement. In the 1989 memos sent to independent distributors and suppliers about the new licensing arrangement, Little Caesar told them that only the following items were covered: cups, lids, straws, bags, salad containers, napkins, cup carriers, dressings, and convenience packs. In essence, Little Caesar is asking the court to rule that the licensing agreement only covers items given out to customers with the Little Caesar logo on them.

Plaintiffs [18] argue that the licensing agreement covers virtually all supplies delivered in bulk to franchisees by Blue Line that have a Little Caesar logo somewhere on the packaging. Under this interpretation, the licensing agreement would apply to most supplies bought by franchisees. This is because many of the supplies purchased by franchisees are provided according to Little Caesar specifications and thus have Little Caesar logo on the bulk packaging even though the supplies were sold by an independent distributor.

If plaintiffs' interpretation is correct, then franchisees would be required to purchase much of their supplies through Blue Line, thereby seemingly establishing a tying arrangement on the basis of the national 1989 agreement that appears to be applicable to all franchisees. This is important because plaintiffs' interpretation would strengthen their argument for class certification.

In support of their interpretation of the licensing agreement, plaintiffs point to the language of the agreement that says that the license applies to "certain supplies . . . including without limitation . . ." Plaintiffs contend that the without limitation language means that the agreement could apply [19] to any supplies named by Little Caesar. In addition, plaintiffs cite other documents in which Little Caesar lists specific logoed products as being covered by the licensing agreement, but also indicates that the agreement's coverage is not limited to the list.

In response, Little Caesar argues that the "without limitation" language was included so that new products given out to retail customers that bear the company's registered mark would be covered by the agreement. This was the case when certain franchisees started to issue promotional plastic cups to its customers that had the Little Caesar logo on them, and Little Caesar informed the franchisees and their suppliers that Blue Line had the exclusive right to distribute such logoed products. In addition, Little Caesar has indicated that signs, uniforms, and logoed promotional items are restricted in their distribution, but that this is not a result of the 1989 licensing agreement.

Plaintiffs also rely upon various statements by Little Caesar officials concerning logoed products. However, some of the statements cited by plaintiffs actually support Little Caesar's motion. For example, in a 1992 memo from David Deal, the head of Blue [20] Line, to Mike Ilitch, Little Caesar's primary owner, about the prospect of a new independent distributor that would compete with Blue Line, Deal said that franchisees would be less likely to contract with the new distributors because of the necessity of taking two deliveries, one from Blue Line for logoed products and one from the distributor for all other products. In addition, the president of Ameriserv, William Burgess, testified that his company had to have access to the logoed products as defined by Little Caesar in order to compete. Although these facts support plaintiffs' contention that Little Caesar was trying to control the supplies going to its franchisees, they also support Little Caesar's position in its motion for partial summary [*892] judgment on the issue of the scope of the term "logoed products."

Finally, plaintiffs oppose Little Caesar's motion because they claim that Little Caesar is trying to inject merit issues into the class certification determination through this motion for partial summary judgment. Additionally, plaintiffs argue that the motion is improper because it seeks to determine a single, non-dispositive issue of fact. However, in France Stone Co., Inc. f21 v. Charter Township of Monroe, 790 F. Supp. 707, 710 (E.D. Mich. 1992), this court addressed a similarly narrow issue of particular concern to the parties that significantly advanced the progress of that litigation. In the same way, the court finds that the scope of the 1989 licensing agreement in this case is of sufficient import so as to justify an examination of Little Caesar's motion. Furthermore, the court also finds that this motion does not inject merit issues into the class certification motion, but instead clarifies an issue that the court finds to be clear from the facts and evidence presented by both sides.

In this vein, the court concludes that the 1989 licensing agreement between Little Caesar and Blue Line only applies to items given to a retail customer that bear a Little Caesar's registered mark, such as logo paper items and individual packages of logo condiments. This is the only rational interpretation of the licensing agreement given its explicit language and the long and established course of conduct demonstrated between Little Caesar and Blue

Line. It also is consistent with the way Little Caesar has explained the agreement to independent distributors and suppliers. [22] In this instance, plaintiffs have attempted to stretch the language of the agreement to apply to virtually all supplies purchased by franchisees. Such an interpretation contradicts the language of the agreement, the way the agreement has been carried out, and common sense. As a result, the court concludes that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to the interpretation of the 1989 agreement, and it will grant Little Caesar's motion for summary judgment.

IV. Little Caesar's second Motion to Dismiss and/or for Partial Summary Judgment

In this motion, Little Caesar is seeking summary judgment and/or dismissal of the claims presented in portions of Counts I-V.

A. Count I--Price-fixing

In Count I, plaintiffs allege that Little Caesar conspired with independent distributors to fix prices of the supplies sold to franchisees. From 1982 until January 1988, Blue Line told independent distributors what prices to charge Little Caesar restaurants for supplies, which generally was a national price. From January 1988 until May 1988, Little Caesar established "regional pricing" whereby independent distributors were directed to charge the same prices as those charged by a Blue [23] Line warehouse in the same or nearby region. In this way, Little Caesar argues, prices would more accurately reflect the actual freight costs of suppliers to the various regional distributors. From May 1988 until Blue Line opened a warehouse in a particular region, Blue Line suggested maximum percentage markup ranges for various categories of supplies.

Little Caesar claims it began suggesting prices to independent distributors in 1982 when it was discovered that the prices charged to franchisees by distributors were too high. By suggesting maximum prices, Little Caesar allegedly hoped to protect its franchisees from unscrupulous distributors trying to gouge the unwary.

In responding to the price-fixing claim, Little Caesar has focused upon the particular distributor that serviced each of the plaintiffs. Plaintiff Smith's franchise was serviced by Continental Meats, an independent distributor, until January 1986, when Blue Line began selling supplies to Smith. Plaintiff Fields' distributor was PYA Monarch. In February 1989, Blue Line opened a warehouse that serviced Fields' region. When PYA Monarch withdrew from the market in July 1989, Fields switched to Blue Line. Plaintiff [24] Hennessy has at all times purchased his supplies from Blue Line.

[*893] 1. Plaintiffs Smith and Hennessy

Little Caesar contends that plaintiffs Smith and Hennessy do not have a price-fixing claim because the alleged conspiracy was designed to fix the maximum prices of independent third-party distributors and not Blue Line who was the distributor serving Smith and Hennessy. Thus, Little Caesar contends that the prices charged Smith and Hennessy were not fixed.

In response, plaintiffs Smith and Hennessy contend that they have standing to sue Little Caesar and Blue Line for the alleged price-fixing because Blue Line was able to set its prices at anti-competitive levels because the prices of competing distributors had been fixed at similarly high levels in accord with the conspiracy. In addition, plaintiffs contend that any co-conspirator is jointly and severally liable to a plaintiff even if that plaintiff did not deal directly with them. See Ambook Enters., Inc. v. Time, Inc., 612 F.2d 604, 620 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 448 U.S. 914, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1179, 101 S. Ct. 35 (1980).

Little Caesar contends, however, that no evidence has been offered to show that Blue Line's prices were set by agreement with [25] the independent distributors. Since plaintiffs Smith and Hennessy purchased only from Blue Line, they have not been harmed by the higher prices allegedly fixed by the independent distributors.

The court will grant Little Caesar's motion for summary judgment against plaintiffs Smith and Hennessy as to the price-fixing claim. Plaintiffs Smith and Hennessy have not produced any evidence in response to the Rule 56 motion to show that they have suffered any harm as a result of the alleged conspiracy. They have come forward with no evidence showing that the prices they paid for supplies were even affected by Little Caesar's conduct. In their response brief, plaintiffs merely allege that Blue Line's prices were anti-competitive, but provide no evidence of any kind to back this conclusion. During oral argument, plaintiffs conceded that the price-fixing claim was not of great import to them and was merely "background" information for their tying claim. In this context, and because plaintiffs Smith and Hennessy have failed to raise a genuine issue of material doubt in response to Little Caesar's motion, summary judgment is appropriate on Count I as against Smith and Hennessy.

2. [26] Plaintiff Fields

Little Caesar contends that it deserves summary judgment as to plaintiff Fields because this plaintiff has not suffered any antitrust injury from the vertical maximum suggested markup policy--the alleged price fixing--and because her claims are barred by the statute of limitations.

As to antitrust injury in particular, from May 1988 until February 1989, the prices as to Fields were maximum prices only. In memos to independent distributors, Little Caesar told the distributors that the suggested prices were "maximum ranges only! Lower markup ranges would certainly be welcomed!" In fact, after the suggested prices went into effect, PYA Monarch told its customers, including Fields that the "result of this change will be savings to you." Under these circumstances, Little Caesar contends that Fields suffered no antitrust injury when her distributor was prevented from charging her higher prices.

Even if Fields suffered antitrust injury, Little Caesar contends that her claim is barred by the four year statute of limitations set in 15 U.S.C. § 15\(b\), unless the price-fixing policy was fraudulently concealed.

Fields filed her claim in September 1993, more than four years [27] after her distributor withdrew from the market. In its brief, Little Caesar details how the pricing policies complained of were fully explained and revealed to its franchisees, including Fields. In particular, Fields learned from her sister in early 1989 from PYA Monarch that it would like to charge lower prices, but was prevented from doing so by Little Caesar's pricing policies.

HN5 In order to establish fraudulent concealment in order to defeat the bar posed by a statute of limitations, plaintiff Fields must show the following:

(1) Wrongful affirmative concealment;

[*894] (2) Failure to discover within the limitations period; and

(3) Due diligence until discovery.

Pinney Dock & Trans. Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1465 \(6th Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 880, 102 L. Ed. 2d 166, 109 S. Ct. 196 (1988). Under the circumstances presented here, Little Caesar contends that plaintiff Fields cannot establish fraudulent concealment of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy. In response to the motion as to this claim, plaintiffs have not presented a spirited or meaningful defense, and it appears that plaintiffs are concentrating on their tying claim to the exclusion of the price-fixing [28] claim, admitting during oral argument the price-fixing claim was not "central" to their case.

Under these circumstances, the court will grant Little Caesar's motion for summary judgment against plaintiff Fields as to Count I. It is apparent that Fields was made fully aware of the pricing policy instituted as to her distributor at least as early as the beginning of 1989. As a result, her September 1993 complaint alleging price-fixing was filed beyond the period allowed by the statute of limitations. In addition, Fields has failed to present any evidence showing that she suffered any antitrust injury as a result of the alleged conspiracy. Thus, plaintiff Fields has failed to present sufficient evidence to defeat Little Caesar's motion concerning the price-fixing claim.

B. Count II--Tying Arrangement

As discussed earlier, plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar has forced them to buy their food and other supplies from Blue Line in order to continue in their business as franchisees. Plaintiffs contend that this conduct is an illegal tying arrangement and a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The essential elements of a tying claim under the Sherman Act are as follows: [\[29\]](#)

- HN6[] 1. there must be a tying arrangement between two distinct products;
2. the seller must have sufficient economic power in the tying market to restrain appreciably competition in the tied product market; and
 3. the amount of commerce affected must not be insubstantial.

Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Corp., Inc., 11 F.3d 660, 664 n.6 (6th Cir. 1993), cert. dismissed, 129 L. Ed. 2d 829 (1994); see Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 613-14, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953). In addition, "coercion is an implicit requirement for an unlawful tie-in agreement." Earl W. Kintner & Joseph P. Bauer, 2 Federal Antitrust Law § 10.59, at 250 (1980, Supp. 1995). In this instance, plaintiffs claim that in order to have a Little Caesar franchise (the tying product), franchisees are forced to buy their food and supplies (the tied product) from Little Caesar/Blue Line.

1. All Plaintiffs

Little Caesar is seeking summary judgment on the tying claims based upon its contention that no tying arrangement existed, and that the existence of "forcing" or actual coercion of the individual franchisees is a required element of the claim. Little Caesar admits [\[30\]](#) that this portion of its motion does not apply to any of the claims asserted by plaintiff Smith after his request to approve Ameriserv as an independent distributor was made in April 1992. Little Caesar concedes that plaintiff Smith has a triable issue of fact as to whether the denial of the request to approve Ameriserv was reasonable and proper. In addition, Little Caesar indicates that its motion assumes it has market power and that the franchise and its supplies are distinct products. Little Caesar indicates that future motions will address these issues.

The basis of this portion of Little Caesar's motion is its contention that the plaintiffs, other than Smith, cannot show that they have been forced to purchase the tied product (food and other supplies) from Little Caesar/Blue Line. Little Caesar argues that in order to establish a tying claim plaintiffs must point to a particular contractual provision that binds their ability to choose independent distributors. Alternatively, Little Caesar claims that plaintiffs could establish a tying claim by showing that they objected in some way to Little Caesar/Blue Line as their [\[*895\]](#) distributor or that plaintiffs knew that a request for [\[31\]](#) approval of an alternate distributor was futile. In essence, Little Caesar contends that plaintiffs must show some sort of forcing or coercion as an essential element of a tying arrangement.

In Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), the Supreme Court stated that our cases have concluded that HN7[] the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

Id. (emphasis added). Under the Supreme Court's decision and subsequent lower court interpretation, antitrust plaintiffs must demonstrate that they have been forced to purchase the tied product. As one leading commentator indicated as early as 1980 and even before Jefferson Parish, "[a] growing trend is to require a strict individual demonstration of coercion." Bauer & Kintner, supra, at 250. Such forcing can [32] be demonstrated by an explicit contractual provision or provisions, individual evidence of coercion, or an admission by a defendant. The Sixth Circuit cases relied upon by plaintiffs show support, rather than opposition, to this method of proof in tying cases. See Virtual Maintenance Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 957 F.2d 1318, 1324 \(6th Cir. 1992\) (extreme price differential meant that all rational buyers were forced to accept tied product), vacated on other grounds, 121 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1992); Bell v. Cherokee Aviation Corp., 660 F.2d 1123, 1131 \(6th Cir. 1981\) (defendant admitted to tying arrangement based upon provisions of lease and sub-lease).

As Little Caesar points out, each of the franchise agreements at issue specifically allows the plaintiffs the ability to seek approval of independent distributors to provide them with supplies. In Midwestern Waffles, Inc. v. Waffle House, Inc., 734 F.2d 705, 712 \(11th Cir. 1984\), the court stated that HN8↑ "an approved source requirement is not, alone, illegal. Only if a franchisee is coerced into purchasing products from a company in which the franchisor has a financial interest does an illegal tie exist." The question then is [33] whether Little Caesar unreasonably refused to grant approval of an independent distributor or whether plaintiffs were aware that the approval process was futile. In this case, plaintiffs concede that they do not claim that they knew that the approval process was futile.

Plaintiff Smith claims that a tie-in has existed since 1982, and he claims damages since September 1989, four years prior to the filing of this lawsuit and within the statute of limitations. However, Smith only sought approval of an independent distributor as an alternative to Blue Line in April or May of 1992. At that time, Smith sought Little Caesar's approval of Ameriserv as a distributor. Under these circumstances, Little Caesar is seeking summary judgment against Smith as to any damages pursuant to a tying claim suffered before he sought approval of the alternate distributor. Little Caesar contends that it was only when Smith objected to Blue Line and sought Ameriserv that it became clear that he was being forced to buy the tied product.

Little Caesar's position is strengthened by the fact that in 1988 Smith was part of a large group of franchisees who considered purchasing supplies from a competitor of Blue [34] Line. However, after a series of meetings, Smith's concerns were addressed and he decided to stay with Blue Line. On this basis, Little Caesar contends that Smith cannot claim that he was forced to do anything since he agreed to stay with Blue Line of his own free will. Thus, Little Caesar alleges that Smith experienced none of the forcing symptomatic of a tying arrangement until April 1992 when he sought approval of an independent distributor.

Little Caesar applies similar logic to the claims of plaintiffs Fields and Hennessy. In Hennessy's case, he has never sought an alternate distributor. Fields also has never sought approval of another distributor and [*896] was only aware of the single rejection of Ameriserv as an alternative distributor for Smith. Under these facts, Little Caesar argues that none of the plaintiffs, except for Smith after April 1992, has objected to the status of Blue Line as the sole distributor of supplies and can thus demonstrate that it was forced to purchase supplies from Little Caesar/Blue Line.

Little Caesar cites Klo-Zik Co. v. General Motors Corp., 677 F. Supp. 499, 506 \(E.D. Tex. 1987\) and Dubuque Communications Corp. v. American Broadcasting Co., \[351 432 F. Supp. 543, 546 \(N.D. Ill. 1977\), aff'd, 547 F.2d 1170 (7th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 985, 52 L. Ed. 2d 379, 97 S. Ct. 1682 (1977) for the proposition that HN9↑ in order to prove a tying claim, plaintiffs must produce "evidence that the undesired condition was imposed over plaintiff's objection, or at the explicit refusal of the defendant to do otherwise. When a condition is accepted without objection, the element of coercion becomes totally speculative." Dubuque, 432 F. Supp. at 546. Similarly, in Klo-Zik, the court stated that if two products are sold together, there must be evidence that the buyer objected to the package, that the buyer was only interested in one of the two products or that the tied product was forced upon him." Klo-Zik, 677 F. Supp. at 506. Where the tying arrangement is admitted or where the arrangement is imposed as part of a contract, there is no further need to demonstrate the forcing element. Because of the very nature of a binding contract, coercion and forcing can be implied since the victim of the tying arrangement has no other choice but to comply with the arrangement or face litigation to enforce the contract. "All courts agree, [however], that absent contractual [36] tie-in provisions, actual coercion must be demonstrated." Bauer & Kintner, supra, at 252.

Of the three plaintiffs currently before the court, only Smith has signed a franchise agreement that arguably contains an explicit tying arrangement. As a result, since no express contractual tie is present in this case as to plaintiffs Fields and Hennessy and because they have not sought approval or otherwise objected to Blue Line as their distributor, Little Caesar contends that summary judgment is proper.

As to plaintiff Smith, however, one of his three franchise agreements was signed after mid-1990, and thus includes a limitation on the approval of independent distributors as to the supply of logoed products. As a result, Smith may have a tying claim for the purposes of this motion based upon an express contractual tie. Thus, there is no further need to show forcing or some other coercive element in order to establish his claim. Consequently, plaintiff Smith could have a tying claim as it relates to his one franchise governed by the mid-1990 agreement.

As to plaintiffs Hennessy and Fields, however, the court will grant Little Caesar's motion for summary judgment on the tying claim as [\[37\]](#) to these two plaintiffs. Within the applicable time period, neither one requested approval of an independent distributor or were subject to an explicit contractual tie-in as part of the franchise agreements by which they were bound. Furthermore, these plaintiffs cannot show that had they made a request for an alternate distributor, it would have been futile. As a result, there is no indication that either Fields or Hennessy was forced to continue purchasing supplies through Little Caesar/Blue Line. Any claim by plaintiff Fields based upon PYA Monarch's exit from the market is addressed in the section below.

2. Plaintiff Fields

Little Caesar contends that any tying claim relating to the independent distributor PYA Monarch, which serviced plaintiff Fields' franchises, is barred by the statute of limitations.

Prior to February 1989, plaintiff Fields' franchises purchased their supplies from an independent, third-party distributor, PYA Monarch. In February 1989, Blue Line opened a warehouse in Atlanta that serviced the region in which Fields' franchise is located. Following Blue Line's entry into the market, Fields continued to purchase from PYA Monarch until it withdrew from [\[38\]](#) the market in July 1989 and stopped selling supplies [\[*897\]](#) to Fields' franchises. Fields then began purchasing her supplies from Blue Line.

Little Caesar contends that Fields may claim that her purchases from Blue Line, beginning when PYA Monarch withdrew from the market, were a tie-in because of actions that Little Caesar allegedly took against PYA Monarch. Little Caesar argues that assuming for the purposes of this motion that such a tie-in resulted, any such claim by Fields would be barred by the four year antitrust statute of limitations. See 15 U.S.C. § 15\(b\). As indicated earlier, this case was filed in September 1993, so the unlawful conduct must have occurred after September 1989, in order for Fields' claim not to be barred.

Little Caesar argues that since PYA Monarch withdrew from the market more than four years before this lawsuit commenced, the claim is barred unless the "continuing violation" doctrine applies. According to the Sixth Circuit, a HN10 [↑] "continuing [antitrust] violation [is] one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded." This circuit has refined the Zenith standard to the point that it now can be expressed as two discrete rules. [\[39\]](#) First, "when a continuing antitrust violation is alleged, a cause of action accrues each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants." Second, "in the context of a continuing conspiracy, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act that causes the plaintiff's damage." Thus, even when a plaintiff alleges a continuing violation, an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act." For statute of limitations purposes, therefore, the focus is on the timing of the causes of injury, i.e., the defendant's overt acts, as opposed to the effects of the overt acts.

Peck v. General Motors Corp., 894 F.2d 844, 849 \(6th Cir. 1990\) (citations omitted). In Peck, even though the plaintiff had suffered some injury within the last four years, the court dismissed his claim under the statute of limitations because there was no new overt act. See Fontana Aviation, Inc. v. Baldinelli, 575 F.2d 1194 \(6th Cir. 1978\) (claim accrued when company pulled out of the market), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 911, 58 L. Ed. 2d 257, 99 S.

Ct. 281 (1978); Barnosky Oils, Inc. v. Union Oil Co., 665 F.2d 74, 82 (6th Cir. 1981) (claim [40] accrued when boycott first occurred, not while it continued to be in force). Little Caesar contends that because no overt act has been directed at plaintiff Fields in the last four years, any claim she may have based upon the pullout of PYA Monarch from the market is barred by the statute of limitations.

In response, plaintiffs allege that Little Caesar fraudulently concealed its conduct against Fields and that its conduct was not limited to the elimination of PYA Monarch from the market. As to fraudulent concealment, plaintiffs rely upon the 1989 licensing agreement which they claim was kept hidden from them, such that Fields could not have filed her claim due to this concealment.

Plaintiffs also claim that Little Caesar committed numerous overt acts, other than the elimination of PYA Monarch from the market, after September 1989 as part of its effort to control the distribution of supplies. Plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar refused to approve other distributors in other parts of the country, used the licensing agreement to foreclose competition, and sent letters to franchisees, suppliers, and distributors enforcing the tying agreement.

The court finds, however, that any tying [41] claim by plaintiff Fields based upon the elimination of PYA Monarch from the market is barred by the statute of limitations. Conduct by Little Caesar directed towards eliminating PYA Monarch from the relevant market could serve as the basis of a tying claim, but this conduct occurred more than four years before this suit was filed. None of the new overt acts complained of by plaintiffs in the past four years appear to relate to plaintiff Fields and her franchise. Plaintiffs refer generally to many incidents cited in their various briefs, but fail to point out specific incidents applicable to Fields. In addition, there have been so few refusals to approve independent distributors, and Fields was only aware of the refusal relating to Ameriserv, that plaintiffs cannot argue that the process was made futile in the past four [*898] years. Furthermore, under Fields' franchise agreement she could ask for approval of a distributor of any products and was not limited as to logoed products. Also, Fields never asked Little Caesar to approve a new distributor in the past four years. Any refusal of such a request would have been a new overt act by Little Caesar. However, since Fields made no such request, [42] her tying claim is barred.

C. Counts III-IV--State Antitrust Law

Little Caesar is also seeking summary judgment on the state antitrust claims for the same reasons advanced in support of its motion for summary judgment on the federal claims. Since Michigan antitrust law is identical to federal law and follows the federal precedents, the decision as to Counts I and II will govern the success of Counts III and IV. HN11[]. Pursuant to MCLA S. 445.784\(2\), in construing Michigan antitrust law, "the courts shall give due deference to interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable antitrust statutes." As a result, there is no practical difference between the federal and state claims and the court reaches the same conclusions as to Counts III and IV as it did with respect to Counts I and II.

D. Count V--Breach of Contract and National Price Advertising

Each franchise agreement provides that "the final decision as to all matters of pricing . . . shall be made solely by [the] Franchise owner." Plaintiffs claim that Little Caesar breached this provision by conducting a national advertising campaign based upon "price point advertising." The campaigns consist of a series of [43] short run promotions of particular items that are pervasively advertised nationally at a specific price in the ads. In its motion, Little Caesar contends that it has not breached the pricing provision of the franchise agreements, and that plaintiffs have always had the freedom to set their own retail prices.

Little Caesar has presented evidence showing that many franchisees do not sell the promoted products at the nationally advertised price, and that it in no way punishes franchisees who do not follow the advertised prices. In fact, each of the three plaintiffs in this case have admitted charging prices that are higher than those that are nationally advertised, or that they have deviated from the national promotions in some other manner. In addition, each of the national ads contain the following disclaimer: "Limited time offer at participating stores. Prices may vary."

In response to this portion of Little Caesar's motion, plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar required its franchisees to abide by its pricing decisions by first creating tremendous customer expectation through pervasive price advertising, and second, by then intimidating franchisees willing to upset customer expectations [44] and deviate from the national price.

Since 1989, Little Caesar has advertised based upon price through LCNAP. Franchisees are required to contribute up to 4% of their gross revenue to LCNAP for advertising purposes. The advertising monies amount to $ 50-$ 60,000,000 annually and are managed by Little Caesar employees.

Plaintiffs point to a 1988 letter sent to Little Caesar by its advertising agency stating that the "use of a specific price in the national network creative would force all markets to run a common price and could compromise LCE's competitive value and/or profit margins in particular markets." In addition, plaintiffs point to various complaints by franchisees about the use of price point advertising.

Not only do plaintiffs contend that the advertising policies took away their pricing freedom, they also claim that Little Caesar threatened franchisees who failed to follow the nationally advertised prices. In support of this contention, however, plaintiffs have only produced one letter by a Little Caesar employee to a non-plaintiff franchisee who was not following the nationally advertised prices. In the September 1991 letter, Little Caesar told the franchisee that his [45] "practice of altering the pricing on the national promotions to accommodate what your group believes to be 'above the average costs to operate' is not acceptable. You need to understand that the continuation of this practice will affect the future of your group's [*899] relationship with Little Caesar." However, all three of the plaintiffs admit having no knowledge of this letter until it appeared during this litigation.

Finally, plaintiffs also contend that the disclaimers presented in each advertisement are not sufficient. They complain that they are not audible on TV ads, and that a Michigan regulation holds that the phrase "available at participating stores" is inadequate since it is merely a general disclaimer. See Mich. Admin. Code R 14.208(1).

In reply, Little Caesar points out that the franchisee who was threatened is not one of the plaintiffs, none of the plaintiffs have received similar letters even though they all have deviated from national prices, and plaintiffs have presented no evidence to show that they had knowledge of the September 1991 letter. As a result, Little Caesar contends that the September 1991 letter is irrelevant. In addition, plaintiffs have failed to show [46] how the Michigan regulation applies, how it creates private rights in contract suits, or how it applies to Little Caesar's specific disclaimer which uses language which is different from that cited in the regulations.

The court finds that Little Caesar has not breached the provision of plaintiffs' franchise agreements giving them the freedom to set retail prices. As Little Caesar has demonstrated, plaintiffs are free of any contractual restrictions requiring them to follow the nationally advertised prices. Each advertisement contains a proper disclaimer that indicates that not all franchises may follow the advertised price.¹ Most importantly, plaintiffs have presented no evidence to show that they have been coerced in any way by Little Caesar to follow the national prices. In fact, all three admit to charging higher prices and to deviating from the national promotions. Plaintiffs have not submitted competent evidence showing that their freedom to set retail prices was restricted by anything other than their own business judgment. As a result, plaintiffs have not shown that Little Caesar has acted in breach of the franchise agreements.

[47] Under the franchise agreements, although franchisees are free to set their own retail prices, they also have ceded all authority as to decisions concerning national advertisements to Little Caesar. As a result, plaintiffs cannot now complain that Little Caesar is breaching the agreement when it is simply exercising authority given to it under the franchise agreements themselves. This authority was bargained for by the parties, and it appears to be part of the overall scheme established by the franchise agreements, a scheme that in the case of these three plaintiffs has continued to allow individual franchisees the freedom to ultimately set their own price.

¹ As part of its decision in this regard, the court notes that the regulation relied upon by plaintiffs is inapplicable. Little Caesar uses a specific disclaimer regarding price which satisfies R 14.208(1)-(2).

As plaintiffs readily admit, many franchisees eagerly support national advertisements based upon price, pointing to this program as the basis for their success. As is demonstrated by this suit, however, some franchisees are unhappy with the way in which Little Caesar has exercised its authority under the advertising provisions of the franchise agreements. To the court, there appears to be no dispute that such unhappiness merely amounts to dissatisfaction over the bargain received as part of the contract. Such unhappiness does [48] not amount to a breach of contract when there is no dispute that plaintiffs still retain the freedom guaranteed in the franchise agreements. As a consequence, the court will grant Little Caesar's motion for summary judgment on this portion of the breach of contract claim.

E. Count V--Breach of Contract and Supplier Rebates

Plaintiffs also claim breach of contract based upon their allegation that Little Caesar has failed to credit them with rebates, discounts, and bonuses paid by vendors to Blue Line as purportedly required by the franchise agreements and/or the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Little Caesar is seeking summary judgment as to these claims on the basis that it is not required to make such credits under the franchise agreements, and that the implied [900] covenant is not applicable to the circumstances of this particular claim. However, Little Caesar is not seeking judgment on that portion of Count V relating to Hormel advertising allowance claims.

In support of its motion, Little Caesar cites the relevant franchise agreements which make no provision for crediting the accounts of franchisees with vendor rebates or discounts. In addition, Little Caesar [*49] contends that the implied covenant is inapplicable in this case because "Michigan courts will recognize an action for breach of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing where a 'party to a contract makes the manner of its performance a matter of its own discretion.'" ParaData Computer Networks, Inc. v. Telebit Corp., 830 F. Supp. 1001, 1005 \(E.D. Mich. 1993\) (citing Burkhardt v. City Nat'l Bank, 57 Mich. App. 649, 652, 226 N.W.2d 678 \(1975\)). In this instance, Little Caesar argues that no provision of the franchise agreement is of a discretionary nature so as to implicate the implied covenant of good faith. Little Caesar specifically excludes from its motion any claim involving advertising allowance payments made by Hormel to Blue Line for including Hormel logo in ads paid for by LCNAP. Little Caesar states that it believes its franchisees received full credit and will resolve this issue by settlement or further motion.

In response to this portion of Little Caesar's motion, plaintiffs only discuss the Hormel issue and unrelated LCNAP issues that Little Caesar explicitly exempted from the scope of its motion. As a result, the court finds that Little Caesar deserves summary judgment [*50] on the portion of Count V pertaining to the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and/or to the payment of supplier rebates other than the claim specifically excluded from this motion regarding the Hormel advertising allowance. Plaintiffs have not raised instances other than the Hormel situation that implicate a breach of contract claim in response to Little Caesar's motion as to this portion of Count V. As a result, since there is no dispute between the parties and plaintiffs have not presented any evidence to the contrary, the court will grant Little Caesar's motion for summary judgment as it relates to any breach of contract claim for failure to pay supplier rebates or discounts, except as delineated above.

V. Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification

In their motion for class certification, plaintiffs have requested Rule 23\(b\)\(2\)-\(3\) certification of a class of Little Caesar franchisees under the following claims:

1. Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) --Count II--illegal tying arrangement.
2. Rule 23\(b\)\(2\)--(for injunctive and declaratory relief)-- Count II-illegal tying arrangement.

3. Rule 23(b)(2)--(for injunctive declaratory relief)--Count V--breach of contract based upon national [51] price advertising.
4. Rule 23(b)(2)--(for injunctive and declaratory relief)-- Counts V & VI--misappropriation of LCNAP funds in breach of the contract and conversion of LCNAP funds.

Under Rule 23(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the following prerequisites must be satisfied before an action can proceed as a class action:

HN12 [↑] (a) Prerequisites to a Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

HN13 [↑] The burden is on the party seeking class certification to show that these prerequisites have been satisfied. Senter v. General Motors Corp., 532 F.2d 511, 522 (6th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 870, 50 L. Ed. 2d 150, 97 S. Ct. 182 (1976).

Once the requirements of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied, plaintiffs must demonstrate that the case falls within the guidelines set by Rule 23(b). [52] Rule 23(b) provides as follows:

[*901] HN14 [↑] (b) Class Actions Maintainable. An Action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:

...

(2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole; or

(3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

[53] Id. HN15 [↑] In deciding whether to certify a class action, the court should not enquire into the merits of plaintiffs' claims. Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline, 417 U.S. 156, 177, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732, 94 S. Ct. 2140 (1974).

A. The Magistrate Judge's Recommendations

In response to plaintiffs' motion for certification of one national class of Little Caesar franchisees as to each of their various claims, Magistrate Judge Pepe recommended that the court deny the request for a national class on the tying claim under Rule 23(b)(3), and instead certify sixteen separate regional classes, each divided into two different subclasses, for a total of thirty-two different groupings of franchisees. The sixteen regional classes recommended by the magistrate judge are based upon the sixteen warehouse/distribution regions established by Blue Line to cover the country. Neither plaintiffs nor Little Caesar asked for or briefed certification of the regional classes suggested by the magistrate judge. In fact, both sides have filed objections to this portion of the magistrate judge's report.

Similarly, the magistrate judge recommended that the court certify, pursuant to Rule 23\(b\)\(2\), sixteen regional classes, and apparently thirty-two [\[54\]](#) subclasses, of franchisees for purposes of injunctive and declaratory relief as to the tying claim. He also recommended that plaintiffs be ordered to solicit, within ninety days, class representatives for each of the thirteen regional classes and sixteen subclasses not already represented.

With regard to plaintiffs' other claims, the magistrate judge recommended certification of a national class under Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) on plaintiffs' claims under Counts V and VI regarding national price advertisements as a breach of contract and the handling of LCNAP funds. Because it has granted Little Caesar's motion for summary judgment on the breach of contract claim relating to national price advertisements, the court will not address the magistrate judge's recommendation to certify a national class as to this claim. Instead, the court will simply deny this portion of plaintiffs' class certification motion as moot.

B. Class Certification and the Tying Claim

In his report, the magistrate judge found, and Little Caesar basically conceded, that the class requested by plaintiffs as to the tying claim satisfied the four requirements of Rule 23\(a\): numerosity, typicality, commonality, and adequate [\[55\]](#) representation. However, the main fight as to the certification of a class for the tying claim centers around the Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) requirement that common issues of fact predominate over individual issues of fact. In this regard, the magistrate judge recognized that his recommendations could be significantly altered depending upon this court's rulings regarding the necessary components of a tying claim in response to Little Caesar's summary judgment motions.

[\[*902\]](#) Little Caesar contends that the circumstances of this case dictate that individual issues will predominate because the position of each franchisee is different, and Little Caesar's treatment of each franchisee and various independent distributors was different across the country. To Little Caesar, the key question is whether franchisees were forced to buy the tied product, thus satisfying the first element of a tying claim--the existence of a tying arrangement. Little Caesar contends that where, as here, there is not a uniform contract expressing the tie, the case will be decided by individual issues. In support of its contention, Little Caesar cites nineteen cases in which courts have denied a request for class certification [\[56\]](#) because the forcing or coercive part of a tying arrangement had to be proven individually because there were no uniform ties, thus causing individual issues of fact to predominate. See, e.g., Waldo v. North Am. Van Lines, Inc., 102 F.R.D. 807, 814 \(W.D. Pa. 1984\); Chase Parkway Garage, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 94 F.R.D. 330, 332 \(D. Mass. 1982\); Krehl v. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co., 78 F.R.D. 108, 118-19 \(C.D. Cal. 1978\).

In their motion for certification, plaintiffs argue that common issues of fact predominate in this case because of Little Caesar's "master plan" to control the distribution of supplies to its franchisees. The centerpiece of plaintiffs' motion is the 1989 licensing agreement between Little Caesar and its subsidiary, Blue Line. Under the agreement, Blue Line received the exclusive right to distribute "logoed products" to franchisees. Previously, the parties were in dispute as to the meaning of "logo products" under the licensing agreement, and the definition of this term is the subject of Little Caesar's first motion for partial summary judgment. As the court found above, however, the effect of the licensing agreement is limited to items given [\[57\]](#) to a retail customer that bear a registered mark, such as logo paper items and individual packages of condiments. To plaintiffs, the licensing agreement is the common document and a piece of evidence that justifies a national class action. This document, combined with plaintiffs' ancillary facts relating to the alleged master plan and Little Caesar's refusals to approve certain independent distributors serve as the main basis for this class certification motion.

Plaintiffs contend that by controlling logoed products, Little Caesar could force its franchisees to purchase all supplies through Blue Line. In support of this analysis, plaintiffs have presented the joint affidavit of two economists who contend that the licensing agreement forces franchisees to purchase all goods from Blue Line because to do otherwise would require two-stop shopping. Under the licensing agreement, franchisees would have to purchase logoed products, as defined by the licensing agreement, from Blue Line. If the franchisee chooses to purchase all other supplies from an independent distributor, two separate deliveries would become necessary. Plaintiffs' economists contend that the two deliveries make utilizing [58] an independent distributor unattractive and economically unfeasible as compared to simply purchasing all supplies through Blue Line.

In response, Little Caesar points out that each of the three named plaintiffs engages in multiple-stop shopping, receiving and purchasing various supplies from several different distributors based on different advantages provided by each. Most importantly, Little Caesar contends that the logoed products covered by the licensing agreement only include trademarked items that amount to a small percentage of the total supplies purchased by an average franchisees. As a result, because almost ninety-five percent of supplies are not even governed by the agreement, franchisees are free to purchase the vast majority of their supplies from independent distributors. Furthermore, all franchise agreements executed prior to mid-1990 specifically allow franchisees to seek approval of independent distributors of any supplied item except special dough and spice mix not covered in this lawsuit. As a result, these franchisees could still request an alternate supplier of logoed products, regardless of any internal Little Caesar directive. After mid-1990, the standard franchise [59] agreement includes a clause that prevented franchisees from seeking alternate suppliers of logoed goods.

[*903] The important issue to Little Caesar for purposes of this motion, however, is that the situation of each franchisee is different depending upon the particular region in which it is located, its proximity to suppliers, the availability and willingness of independent distributors, and the actions of Little Caesar towards distributors and franchisees in the franchisee's particular area. Little Caesar contends that these issues make each franchisee different in terms of whether they were forced to purchase the tied item, thus amounting to a tying arrangement. In addition, the various issues listed above all relate to the question of the impact of the alleged tying arrangement on each different franchisee as it concerns damages.

In his report, the magistrate judge found that there is no express contract provision tying the purchase of supplies from Little Caesar/Blue Line to the obtaining of a Little Caesar franchise. In addition, the magistrate judge determined that in order to show the impact of a tie-in, i.e., the fact of damages, plaintiffs will need to demonstrate that a regional [60] market would support two distributors, and that there was an able alternate distributor willing to enter the market if approved by Little Caesar who could provide better prices and service. The magistrate judge concluded that such questions could only be proven on a region by region basis. Furthermore, he indicated that plaintiffs are not relying upon a claim of improper refusals to approve alternate distributors as a basis for class certification. He found that such a claim would necessarily involve a determination of individual issues. However, in their objections to the report and recommendation, plaintiffs assert that individual refusals to approve alternate distributors will play some role in their proposed class-wide proofs.

The court finds that it will accept in part and reject in part the magistrate judge's report and recommendation on plaintiffs' class certification motion. Most importantly, however, the court will deny plaintiffs' motion for class certification of the tying claim as currently proposed. It is clear that the magistrate judge recognized the complicated and individualized nature of the tying claims alleged in this case. Although he recognized the problem, he [61] came up with a solution that undermines the main request of plaintiffs' motion. The court agrees to a large extent with the magistrate judge's finding that the "bulk of the proofs on impact and substantial proofs on liability will be common only to franchisees within that Blue Line distribution region." He thus recognized, to a certain degree, that plaintiffs could not prove their case based upon national or uniform methods of proof, but must instead depend upon a multitude of local, regional, and individualized factors. On this basis, the magistrate judge then correctly concluded that this fact made certification of a national class impossible. However, he did not recognize that these same factors would make sixteen regional classes and thirty-two subclasses equally inappropriate. As a result, instead of relying upon his own findings regarding the regional and individualized nature of the claims, as well as the importance of the franchisee agreements signed after mid-1990 that he so clearly recognized, the magistrate judge has made a recommendation that this court finds unworkable and contrary to the dictates of Rule 23. The very nature of the recommendation for sixteen separate classes, [62] not to mention the multiple subclasses, simply adds strength to the court's conclusion that the facts of this case militate against class certification, at least as it concerns the class proposed by plaintiffs.

To the court, it appears that the better choice is to follow the magistrate judge's logic and find that the factors that make a national class inappropriate also make regional classes inappropriate as well. The very fact that thirty-two separate subclasses are proposed by the magistrate judge when there are only 500 franchisees suggests that individual issues of fact predominate over common issues of fact. In addition, the recommendation flaunts the requirement of Rule 23(b)(3) that "a class action [be] superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." In this instance, it is hard to understand how a vast multitude of separate regional class actions would be superior to individual actions filed by those franchisees who object to Little Caesar's conduct. Under these circumstances, it appears that the magistrate [*904] judge's recommendation is not superior to other methods of resolving the lawsuit.

The court's conclusion is not only [63] based upon the factors found by the magistrate judge, but also upon the very nature of a tying claim under the antitrust laws. The main dispute between Little Caesar and plaintiffs is over whether coercion or forcing needs to be proven on an individualized basis in this case. There is no dispute that where a tying arrangement is apparent from the face of a contract, or from reasonable inferences based upon the contract and related documents, a national class would be appropriate. In this case, no such contract or set of contracts appears to fill this requirement. As a result, Little Caesar contends that proof of a tying claim will have to be done on an individual basis.

In essence, plaintiffs base their tying claim upon the master plan evidence and the 1989 licensing agreement. However, there is no evidence that any of the franchisees, except possibly the post mid-1990 franchisees, were even aware that such an internal agreement between Blue Line and Little Caesar existed. However, plaintiffs' contention appears to be that even though they might not have been aware of the tying arrangement, it was still a tying arrangement from which they can seek recovery. In response, Little Caesar [64] cites to the nineteen cases referred to above to support its claim that proof of a tying arrangement in these circumstances is individual and not class wide. In addition, Little Caesar relies again upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). In Jefferson Parish, the Supreme Court, in addressing a tying claim, indicated that the "essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." Id. at 12.

Thus, the important inquiry centers on the buyer's state of mind and whether the buyer was forced or coerced into making the purchase of the tied product by the seller's conduct. As the court discussed previously, in cases involving an express contractual tie, the coercion imposed by the seller is manifest. Where there is not an express contractual tie, the plaintiff must prove the existence of the tying arrangement by other means. These means could include an unreasonable refusal [65] to approve an alternate distributor, as could be claimed by plaintiff Smith, or by forcing a competing distributor out of a relevant market as could have been claimed by plaintiff Fields. In each case, the evidence proving the claim would appear on an individual basis and would not be susceptible to class treatment. See Ungar v. Dunkin' Donuts of America, Inc., 531 F.2d 1211 (3d Cir. 1976). In Dunkin' Donuts, the court held that where HN16[↑] plaintiff franchisees place no reliance on express contractual tie-ins, each, individually, must prove that his purchases were coerced as an element of establishing a prima facie case of illegal tying. The district court's class certification with respect to the tying claims was expressly premised on its rejection of the individual coercion doctrine. Accordingly, the certification should not have been granted.

Id. at 1226 (citations omitted).

In response to this general position stated by Little Caesar, plaintiffs, and the magistrate judge to a certain extent, argue that certain extrinsic facts and some relevant documents can establish a tying arrangement in such a way as to justify class treatment in this case. Plaintiffs [66] rely upon Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 561 F.2d 434 (3d Cir. 1977), which allowed class certification where an express contractual tie-in was not present. In Bogosian, a refusal to grant class certification was reversed because a tying arrangement could be discerned from a set of lease documents common to all franchisees that reflected the imposition of an unreasonable condition based upon an economic analysis.

Plaintiffs analogize Bogosian to this case because they claim that the 1989 licensing agreement, combined with various ancillary evidence of Little Caesar's master plan to take over distribution to its franchisees, amounts to a class-wide unreasonable condition that tied the purchase of supplies to the [*905] ownership of a franchise. By restricting the purchase of logoed products, plaintiffs contend that Little Caesar forced franchisees to buy their supplies through Blue Line in order to avoid the two-stop shopping discussed above. In addition, the licensing agreement was intended to force independent distributors out of the market by taking away the most profitable part of distribution, the sale of logoed products. In this way, plaintiffs contend that class certification [67] is proper because proofs concerning the licensing agreement, its effect on franchisees, and proofs about the master plan are common and they predominate over individual issues.

However, as discussed earlier, the court finds that individual issues of fact relevant to each franchisee predominate over common issues of fact, thereby making it inappropriate to certify the particular class proposed by plaintiffs. It is quite apparent that "the necessity of an individual demonstration of actual coercion frustrates the ability of many suits to obtain class status." Earl W. Kintner & Joseph P. Bauer, 2 Federal Antitrust Law § 10.59, at 256 (1980, Supp. 1995). Any actions Little Caesar may have taken against certain independent distributors would only be relevant to those certain franchisees who could have been serviced by them. The importance of one-stop shopping would also depend upon local conditions, distance to suppliers, and the preferences of the individual franchisees. Most importantly, as found by the magistrate judge, the impact of damages depends upon the peculiar conditions faced by each franchisee.

Both parties also cite to Sixth Circuit authority on the issue of whether [68] forcing or coercion are an element of a tying arrangement. See, e.g., Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 11 F.3d 660 (6th Cir. 1993); Bell v. Cherokee Aviation Corp., 660 F.2d 1123 (6th Cir. 1981). However, these cases appear to be inconclusive or to support the general method of proof outlined by the court. But given the nature of the tying claim alleged here and the Supreme Court's language in Jefferson Parish, some sort of forcing, conditioning, or actual coercion must be individually shown by plaintiffs as part of their cause of action under the scheme presented by plaintiffs in support of their class certification motion.

As it appears to the court, the only arguable basis for certification of a national class action are the franchise agreements signed after mid-1990. Franchise agreements signed after mid-1990 prevent franchisees from requesting an alternate distributor of logoed products. Only plaintiff Smith signed one of these agreements, and it only applies to one of his three stores. For some reason, possibly because plaintiffs Fields and Hennessy, as well as a large number of current franchisees have franchise agreements that were signed prior [69] to mid-1990, plaintiffs have not sought class certification based upon these later franchise agreements. It is not clear if plaintiff Smith has even alleged his one post mid-1990 agreement as the basis of an individual claim.

It could be argued that the post mid-1990 agreements, combined with the 1989 exclusive licensing agreement, evidence an express contractual tie-in of logoed products which could receive class treatment. The magistrate judge regarded the post mid-1990 agreements as so important as to justify the creation of thirty-two subclasses because of his finding that the later franchise agreements create a better opportunity for recovery. Little Caesar argues that even if there were a tie-in of logoed products, such a tie-in would not violate the antitrust laws. See Principe v. McDonald's Corp., 631 F.2d 303 (4th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 970, 68 L. Ed. 2d 349, 101 S. Ct. 2047 (1981). However, plaintiffs cite Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F.2d 43 (9th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 955 (1972) for the proposition that such conduct would violate the antitrust laws. In any event, because the court will not delve into the merits of a possible claim by plaintiffs regarding a [70] tie-in of logoed products, the court must simply assume that such a claim is viable. As a result, it could be argued, although plaintiffs do not advance this claim, that there is a basis for class certification of a claim by those franchisees who signed the post mid-1990 agreement that their ability to purchase logoed products was tied to their status as a franchisee. An obvious point of [*906] dispute arises, however, as to whether such a class could be certified as to only the logoed products, or whether such a class could claim that a tie-in of the logoed products resulted in a tie-in of all supplies because of the alleged economic necessity of one-stop shopping. Furthermore, the issue remains whether a claim by all franchisees with agreements from after mid-1990 as to all supplies, rather than just logoed products, would satisfy the requirements of Rule 23\(b\)\(3\). The court declines to certify any such class, given that plaintiffs have made the choice not to pursue certification of such a group at this time.

In conclusion, the court finds that individual issues of fact predominate over common issues of fact in the proposed claims raised by plaintiffs as the basis for certification of [\[71\]](#) a national class as to the tying arrangement. Because of the nature of plaintiffs' proposed claim, as found by the magistrate judge and by this court, the facts necessary to prove the tying arrangement alleged by plaintiffs are not conducive to class-wide treatment since the issue of whether individual franchisees were forced to purchase supplies necessitates individual proofs. As a result, the court will deny plaintiffs' motion for class certification. The court does acknowledge, however, that a national class could arguably be certified composed of franchisees governed by agreements executed after mid-1990. Because the plaintiffs have not proposed this class and the parties have not had an opportunity to brief the many issues involved, the court will not certify such a proposed class.

C. Class Certification and LCNAP

Plaintiffs claim that defendant LCNAP has wrongly disbursed advertising funds collected from each of their franchisees. Plaintiffs assert that they will show that Little Caesar has converted some of the funds to its own use rather than for purely advertising purposes as required by the franchise agreement. They are seeking Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) certification of a class [\[72\]](#) composed of all franchisees on the LCNAP claim.

In his report, the magistrate judge recommended Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) certification of plaintiffs' LCNAP claim. The magistrate judge found that because he had already recommended class certification of several other issues, he "saw little harm in also certifying this narrow claim."

In its objections, Little Caesar contends that resort to the device of a class action is unnecessary as to this claim. If plaintiffs prove their claim, Little Caesar admits that it would be forced to reimburse LCNAP for the full amount of the allegedly improper expenses. As a result, Little Caesar contends that in this way the entire class would benefit without the need for the cumbersome process of class certification.

The court similarly finds that class certification is inappropriate for the LCNAP claims presented in Counts V and VI. The magistrate judge's recommendation on this issue was made contingent upon the acceptance of his other recommendations in favor of the certification of regional or national classes on the tying claim and the claim relating to national price advertisements. Because the court will deny plaintiffs' motion for certification on the [\[73\]](#) tying claim and will enter summary judgment in favor of Little Caesar on the price advertising claim, the magistrate judge's reasoning is not still be applicable to the LCNAP claim. As Little Caesar correctly points out, no benefit would be gained from certification since all the class members would benefit if the LCNAP claim is decided in their favor. As a result, the costs and burdens of class certification are not necessary in this instance.

ORDER

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the magistrate judge's March 31, 1995 report and recommendation is ACCEPTED IN PART and REJECTED IN PART.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs' motion for class certification is DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiffs' motion to stay defendant Little Caesar's motions for partial summary judgment is DENIED.

[*907] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that defendant Little Caesar's January 30, 1995 motion for partial summary judgment as to the scope of the 1989 licensing agreement is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that defendant Little Caesar's February 28, 1995 motion for partial summary judgment and/or to dismiss is GRANTED. The [\[74\]](#) court will enter judgment in favor of defendants as to all plaintiffs on

895 F. Supp. 884, *907 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11300, 74

Counts I and III, as to the Fields and Hennessy plaintiffs on Counts II and IV, as to the Smith plaintiffs on Counts II and IV before mid-1990, as to all plaintiffs regarding their breach of contract claim concerning supplier discounts other than Hormel, and as to all plaintiffs on the breach of contract claim in Count V relating to national price advertising.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: 8/7/95

PAUL V. GADOLA

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

E.W. French & Sons v. General Portland

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

July 14, 1995, Argued and Submitted, Pasadena, California ; August 8, 1995, Filed

No. 94-55525

Reporter

1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 23773 *; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,112

E.W. FRENCH & SONS, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. GENERAL PORTLAND, INC., Defendant-Appellee.

Notice: [*1] RULES OF THE NINTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 62 F.3d 1424, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 29320.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California. D.C. No. CV-78-01928-RJK. Terry J. Hatter, Jr., District Judge, Presiding. Robert J. Kelleher, Senior District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: AFFIRMED in part; REVERSED and REMANDED in part.

Core Terms

competitors, cement, concrete, conspiracy, announcements, prices, district court, price-fixing, directed verdict, summary judgment, antitrust, envelopes, mailing, customers, ready-mix, rule of reason, manufacturers, standardize, memorandum, amend

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Relevance > Preservation of Relevant Evidence > Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutors

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN1 [blue icon] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Respondents in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action. However, a plaintiff need not present evidence tending to exclude the possibility of unilateral action unless a defendant first shows that its conduct is consistent with other plausible explanations.

Judges: Before: LAY,  BRUNETTI and RYMER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM *

In the 17th year of this lawsuit's life, it has returned to the circuit essentially in the same shape it was before, only older. Last time, we reversed a directed verdict on the claim by E.W. French & Sons, Inc., a maker and [*2] seller of ready-mix concrete, that cement manufacturers, including General Portland, Inc., conspired to fix prices because the district court used the wrong evidentiary standard in ruling on admissibility of co-conspirator statements. E.W. French & Sons, Inc. v. General Portland, Inc., 885 F.2d 1392 \(9th Cir. 1989\) ("French I"). We also reversed judgment in favor of General Portland on French's claim that GP had conspired with French competitors (the "Conrock conspiracy") to put French out of business because the district court erred in instructing the jury that even if the Conrock conspiracy harmed competition, the elimination of a single competitor could never violate § 1. Id. at 1401. The jury had found a conspiracy, but no effect on competition in the relevant market. We further held that the probative value of evidence of two mailing lists in General Portland files which French believed show that GP exchanged price information with competitors and fraudulently concealed its involvement in the alleged cement price-fixing conspiracy, if authentic, should have been left to the trier of fact. Finally we stated that if there were sufficient evidence on remand to go to [*3] the jury on the price-fixing claim, that a reasonable juror could conclude that GP denials of price-fixing coupled with use of "plain white envelopes" to mail pricing information to competitors sufficed to show that GP sought fraudulently to conceal the alleged conspiracy. Id. at 1399-1400.

On remand, the district court ¹ reaffirmed its prior decision to exclude hearsay, considered evidence previously admitted only for a limited purpose, and reaffirmed the price-fixing directed verdict. Before retrial of the rule of reason case, the court granted summary judgment to GP on the footing that French had failed to prove the existence of a relevant antitrust market in ready-mix concrete in the West Los Angeles area. French appeals both decisions, as well as the district court's denial of its motion to amend, brought after final judgment was entered, to present new claims under California law.

[*4] We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. We affirm the summary judgment on French's rule of reason claim and the order denying French's motion to amend. We reverse the directed verdict on the cement price fixing claim and remand for further proceedings. And we would like to see what remains of this case move along expeditiously, by ADR if possible ² and an early trial if not.

I

 Honorable Donald P. Lay, Senior Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting by designation.

* This disposition is not appropriate for publication and may not be cited to or by the courts of this circuit except as provided by 9th Cir. R. 36-3.

¹ Hon. Terry J. Hatter, Jr., presiding. Thereafter, the action was transferred to the calendar of Hon. Robert J. Kelleher.

² The services of the Ninth Circuit Settlement Unit are available and the parties are ordered to meet and confer, and consult with Chief Circuit Mediator David E. Lombardi, Jr., about the prospects of settlement. A status report shall be filed with the district court and this court within 45 days of the date this disposition is filed.

Because it would make French's appeal on the price-fixing claim go away, we first treat General Portland's insistence that the law of the case precludes this court from overturning the directed verdict.³ It doesn't. While French I obviously frames the remand, the district court considered [*5] evidence that it had not considered before: at a minimum, the "plain white envelope" mailing lists (Exhibits 992 and 996) were considered for all purposes whereas before they had been considered only for a limited purpose. Although the order is unclear, we assume from what the district court said that it also considered evidence that had previously been stricken as beyond the period of limitations. We therefore must look afresh at whether the directed verdict may stand.⁴

[*6] As French recognizes, an inference of conspiracy cannot be based solely on evidence of parallel movements in price or price protection in an oligopolistic market such as the cement market in which GP operated. But it argues that other evidence -- especially the 1970 and 1973 mailing lists in GP's files with the missing "white paper envelope" signal above competitors' names in the latter list; a GP vice president's acknowledgment that he knew about a competitor's price change before it was announced; a meeting of competitors at the Owl Ranch; efforts by a GP competitor to standardize pricing; advance price announcements; and a GP memorandum about price protection -- indicates collusive behavior rather than procompetitive conduct.

We examine the evidence through the lens of Matsushita v. Zenith Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\), because French's case is essentially circumstantial. Matsushita admonishes that "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case," and that HN1 [↑] conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference [*7] of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Respondents in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action. . . .

Id. at 588. However, a plaintiff need not present evidence tending to exclude the possibility of unilateral action unless a defendant first shows that its conduct is "consistent with other plausible explanations." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906 F.2d 432, 440 (9th Cir. 1990).

Uniformity among the six cement manufacturers in the Los Angeles market in the price of cement to ready-mix dealers, parallel price moves, the refusal of the firms to underbid each other for this business, and the testimony of cement company officials (including Don Muir of General Portland) to that effect, are to be expected as normal incidents of individual self-interest in an oligopolistic market with few competitors [*8] and a fungible, undifferentiated product. Independent Iron Works, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 322 F.2d 656, 665 \(9th Cir.\), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 922, 11 L. Ed. 2d 165, 84 S. Ct. 267 \(1963\); VI Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law PP 1410b, 1430 (1986). As we have held, it is plausible to assert that interdependent parallel pricing behavior can occur when the number of significant rivals in a market is sufficiently small. Coordinated, 906 F.2d at 443 (market comprising 12 defendants). Thus, French's evidence of parallel price moves does not itself support an agreement in violation of the antitrust laws. Wilcox v. First Interstate Bank of Oregon, N.A., 815 F.2d 522, 526 \(9th Cir. 1987\).

³General Portland relies almost entirely on the "law of the case" from French I, and essentially leaves it to us to ferret out its argument related to the facts from earlier briefs that are incorporated by reference. This is contrary to 9th Cir. R. 28-3.2. Moreover, it is not helpful to the court, which is what briefs are for.

⁴French does not appeal the district court's reaffirmed ruling on the inadmissibility of co-conspirator hearsay, so we do not revisit that issue.

Nor does evidence of advance price announcements by the cement manufacturers create a stronger inference of agreement than of independent action. It likewise is not sufficient to infer agreement under Matsushita, as the evidence clearly demonstrates a plausible legitimate reason for the practice: cement customers had to precommit to supply concrete for construction projects at set prices. Cf. Coordinated, 906 F.2d at 448 (publishing prices creates permissible inference [*9] of agreement under Matsushita where defendant's customers are captive franchisees and "not free to shop around for their oil").

Similarly, the memorandum by which French believes that Jack E. Craddock of Monolith (a GP competitor) instructed his subordinate to "standardize prices" with Monolith's competitors is insufficiently probative of an agreement involving General Portland. The memorandum tells the employee to discuss "the possibility of standardizing invoicing and pricing"; Craddock explained that this meant that prices should be standardized "in hundredweights and tonnage versus barrels." Seeking to standardize the way in which cement was quoted to customers does not tend to exclude the possibility of unilateral action in pricing.

We also do not see what the 1973 internal memorandum from GP's Puckett to J.R. Johnson concerning price protection for its customer, Conrock, adds to the mix. It evinces uncertainty at General Portland about competitors' price protection offers to Conrock, and reflects competition between Conrock's cement suppliers for its business, not collusion.

An expense report showing that Johnson of GP spent $ 22.40 on drinks and met with a "Mr. Schooner" [*10] (presumably Paul Schoonover who was then president of Monolith) at the Owl Ranch was not admitted as substantive proof of conspiracy and, in any event, does nothing to create an inference of agreement to fix cement prices charged to ready-mix concrete dealers.

Finally, the fact that General Portland and Monolith sent out identical pricing announcements on the same day, August 14, 1972, fails to signify anticompetitive behavior since these price announcements followed on the heels of similar moves announced earlier, at different times, by Riverside Cement, California Portland, Southwestern Portland, and Kaiser. GP's announcement and the coincidence of Monolith's same-day announcement are consistent with independent behavior in a legal, but concentrated market. VI Areeda, P 1410b, at 66.

Thus, most of French's evidence is insufficient to permit an inference of conspiracy under Matsushita. However, General Portland did not put forward any pro-competitive business justification for mailing price information to its competitors in plain white envelopes, or for redacting that part of the mailing list bearing the "plain white envelopes" legend in the 1972 version. Similarly, General [*11] Portland failed to explain the testimony of Jim Tortrice, a former General Portland credit manager, that he heard Johnson state at an internal GP meeting sometime in 1974 or 1975 that he possessed a price announcement from a competitor that had not yet been sent out to customers. While price announcements to customers in advance of effective dates may have had a legitimate business function in this marketplace, General Portland offered no legitimate justification for sharing those announcements with competitors ahead of general distribution. Counsel's suggestion at oral argument that the practice could be explained by the fact that cement companies also purchased cement from each other is unsupported by any portion of the record cited to us. In any event, purchases among cement companies would not explain the inference raised by Tortrice's testimony that GP had its competitors' price announcements in hand before they were generally distributed.

Overall, French's case is about as thin as it can be. Its evidence, in the main, is adequately explained as legitimate business conduct raising no reasonable inference of illegal agreement. However, we cannot say the same for the "plain [*12] white envelopes" and prior exchange of competitors' price announcements. As we held in French I that a reasonable juror could conclude that GP denials of price-fixing together with the use of "plain white envelopes" to mail pricing information to competitors showed that General Portland sought to fraudulently conceal the alleged price-fixing conspiracy, we are hard pressed not to conclude here that it suffices to create a jury question regarding the existence of the alleged conspiracy itself.

We accordingly hold that French's evidence does not permit only one reasonable conclusion, that General Portland was not part of a cement price-fixing conspiracy. The directed verdict on that claim must, therefore, be reversed.

II

French's appeal from the summary judgment on its "rule of reason" claim (that General Portland conspired with Conrock to drive French out of business) turns on whether the district court properly struck the declaration of Wayne T. French which, French submits, affords sufficient evidence of a restraint on trade in the relevant market to go to the jury. The court excluded as hearsay French's statement that Tom Lipman (of Livingston-Graham, a French competitor) [*13] told him that concrete producers other than French had agreed to adhere to a fixed discount. French argues that Lipman's statement was admissible under Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(3) or Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(5), since Lipman had died and was thus unavailable. However, Rule 804 arguments are waived; French raised them only in its motion for reconsideration after summary judgment, and it does not appeal the denial of that motion. Regardless, excluding Wayne French's account was within the court's discretion, as his version of what Lipman had said changed as the litigation wore on. Certainly we cannot say that the statements French attributed to Lipman so "solidly" inculpate the declarant, United States v. Nazemian, 948 F.2d 522, 530 (9th Cir. 1991), or are so trustworthy, Mutuelles Unies v. Kroll & Linstrom, 957 F.2d 707, 713 (9th Cir. 1992) (Rule 804(b)(5) is not to be used as a new and broad hearsay exception, but rather rarely and in exceptional circumstances), that it was erroneous as a matter of law to exclude them.⁵

[*14] The court also excluded Wayne French's opinion that removing any one of the independent ready-mix concrete manufacturers in West Los Angeles "as a competitive brake on the high zone prices charged by the integrated producers in West Los Angeles, would . . . create an unreasonable restraint on the sales of ready-mix concrete in West Los Angeles." French claims the court erred because lay opinion based on years of experience is admissible. It may be, but not on subjects requiring particularized expertise. French may have considerable expertise and experience in the concrete industry, but he was never shown to have the economics expertise required to opine on what constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade. Pacific Coast Agriculture Export Assoc. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 526 F.2d 1196 (9th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 959, 48 L. Ed. 2d 204, 96 S. Ct. 1741 (1976), upon which French relies, is not to the contrary; it establishes only that experienced businesspeople may be qualified to project market shares for the purpose of establishing damages in an antitrust case. For these reasons, the district court did not abuse its discretion in rejecting the declaration.

[*15] We have not been directed to any other substantial evidence of a defined market within which to measure anticompetitive effect, if any. French uses "Southern California," "West Los Angeles," the "Los Angeles basin" and "Los Angeles" somewhat interchangeably. That aside, counsel's suggestion at oral argument that the existence of a relevant market was shown by testimony of the owner of Pearman & Sons, a concrete maker in Gardena, that he "couldn't make any money" hauling concrete to West Los Angeles, falls short of the mark. That a single concrete supplier could not profitably sell in West Los Angeles (however characterized) does not suffice to demonstrate that the West Los Angeles concrete market was sufficiently insulated from all other surrounding suppliers to make it a relevant market within which trade might be restrained. Indeed, French itself occasionally hauled concrete from Hawthorne to West Los Angeles.

French's reliance on Pinhas v. Summit Health, Ltd., 894 F.2d 1024 (9th Cir. 1989), aff'd, Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, 111 S. Ct. 1842 (1991), is misplaced. There, we were concerned with an alleged boycott, where injury [*16] to competition is generally presumed, and with the question whether injury to competition had been adequately pleaded for purposes of Rule 12(b)(6) -- not with the question whether sufficient facts have been proved (on the basis of a full trial record) to raise a genuine issue of material fact for purposes of summary judgment. Pearman's testimony does not show that French's removal injured competition by allowing other concrete manufacturers to charge higher prices, or had any other appreciable effect on the market.

⁵Because we do not reverse the exclusion of the French declaration, and because we agree with the district court that the deposition testimony of Mr. Watkins is insufficient to raise a reasonable inference of a concrete price fixing conspiracy (a conclusion with which French does not take issue on appeal), we need not address the merits of the legal theory for which this evidence is intended to provide support: that French could prove a relevant market for purposes of the GP-Conrock conspiracy claim by showing a price fixing conspiracy among West Los Angeles concrete sellers. French I, 885 F.2d at 1402 (Farris, J., concurring). In any event, French has failed to argue the merits of this theory in its briefs to this court.

We therefore hold that the district court correctly concluded that French failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact with respect to the existence of a relevant antitrust market among producers of concrete in West Los Angeles. Summary judgment on the "rule of reason" claim was therefore correctly entered.

III

French argues that the district court erred in refusing leave to amend to allege claims under California law that were "parallel" to its federal antitrust claims. In its motion for reconsideration, filed 16 years after bringing suit and only after final judgment was entered, French asked for leave to assert an "intentional interference" claim under ^{*17}[Herron v. State Farm Mutual Ins. Co., 56 Cal. 2d 202, 14 Cal. Rptr. 294, 363 P.2d 310 \(Cal. 1961\)], and in the alternative to assert a claim for restitution under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203.

The district court did not abuse its discretion. We recognize that leave to amend "shall be freely given when justice so requires" and the policy underlying Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 is to be applied with "extreme liberality." Morongo Band of Mission Indians v. Rose, 893 F.2d 1074 \(9th Cir. 1990\). But while under Morongo a two year delay is "not alone enough to support denial," id. at 1079, nevertheless it is "relevant." French's delay here is nearly an order of magnitude longer and unexplained.

There is no reason why the Herron claim, based on a 1961 opinion, could not have been brought at the outset of this action. Similarly, French's argument that it needed to wait for Bank of the West v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. 4th 1254, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 538, 833 P.2d 545 \(Cal. 1992\), to bring its § 17203 restitution claim is without basis; French I clearly stated in 1989 that the statute authorizes restitution, 885 F.2d at 1402, and Bank of the West noted that the statute ^{*18}[had been held to authorize restitution on quite liberal grounds as early as 1983. 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 546.

Conclusion

We affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment to General Portland on French's rule of reason claim and the denial of French's motion for leave to amend. We reverse the district court's grant of a directed verdict to General Portland on French's cement price-fixing claim and remand for further proceedings on that claim.

Each side shall bear its own costs.

AFFIRMED in part; REVERSED and REMANDED in part.

Nichols Motorcycle Supply v. Dunlop Tire Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

August 10, 1995, Decided ; August 15, 1995, DOCKETED

No. 93 C 5578

Reporter

1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12153 *

NICHOLS MOTORCYCLE SUPPLY INC., an Illinois corporation, Plaintiff, v. DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation, ED TUCKER DISTRIBUTOR, INC. d/b/a TUCKER-ROCKY DISTRIBUTING, a Texas corporation, and LEMANS CORPORATION, a Wisconsin corporation, Defendants.

Core Terms

distributors, termination, prices, tires, discounts, competitor, dealer, Motorcycle, sales, conspiracy, warehouse, vertical, manufacturer, memo, summary judgment, conversation, market share, antitrust, customers, pricefixing, increased price, damages, Reply, parties, rule of reason, horizontal, percent, consumers, products, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been labelled horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints; thus the nature of a restraint is determined by the type of agreement that gives rise to the restraint rather than the anticompetitive economic effects of the restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Sherman Act, Claims

According to the Sherman Act, particularly 15 U.S.C. § 1, a plaintiff claiming a violation must establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. Whether an unlawful conspiracy or combination is demonstrated should be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by words they used. An explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy where joint and collaborative effort is pervasive. Under well-established principles of antitrust law, unilateral conduct by a single person or enterprise falls outside the scope of this provision. Once a plaintiff establishes the existence of an illegal contract, combination or conspiracy it must then proceed to demonstrate that the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade under either the per se rule or the rule of reason. The nature of the restraint determines which rule must be applied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Per Se Invalidity

HN4 Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Conduct considered illegal per se is limited to cases where a defendant's actions are so plainly harmful to competition that they are presumed illegal and the need for further proof of anticompetitive impact is unnecessary. Per se cases include horizontal and vertical pricefixing agreements and certain types of group boycotts. Pricefixing agreements need not include an explicit agreement on prices to be charged or that one party has the right to be consulted about the other's prices. Rather, pricefixing agreements need only have been formed for the purpose and effect of fixing or stabilizing the price of a product in interstate commerce. Tacit agreements are therefore actionable if they can be shown to exist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The per se presumption eliminates the plaintiff's burden of proving anticompetitive impact to the finder of fact through market analysis by an expert economist, as required under the rule of reason; it does not eliminate the need to find antitrust injury, nor does it relieve the plaintiff of its burden to identify and articulate the precise anticompetitive impact caused by the per se pricefixing violation. An antitrust injury flows from pricefixing agreements that plainly reduce competition. Finding an agreement is only the first step; the agreement is not illegal under the Sherman Act, specifically 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, unless the nature of the pricefixing agreement reduces competition and injures dealers or consumers. The court must carefully scrutinize the competitive effect of the pricefixing agreement alleged to be illegal per se. Because the presumption of injury eliminates the need for a plaintiff to produce an economist, this theoretical hurdle is now a question of law for the court on summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Evidence > ... > Illegally Obtained Evidence > Eavesdropping, Interception & Wiretapping > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Illegally Obtained Evidence > Eavesdropping, Interception & Wiretapping > General Overview

HN6 [PDF] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

An agreement to terminate a distributor without evidence of a related agreement on price is not sufficient to establish a per se violation. However, an agreement to terminate, if proven to have an anticompetitive impact, can be illegal under the rule of reason as a nonprice restraint.

Evidence > Relevance > Preservation of Relevant Evidence > Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutors

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

HN7 [PDF] Preservation of Relevant Evidence, Exclusion & Preservation by Prosecutors

An agreement that is illegal per se under the Sherman Act, specifically 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is difficult to prove. The antitrust analysis proceeds in stages because it involves shifting burdens that lead to an ultimate burden of proof that is extremely difficult for a plaintiff to satisfy. There is a two-part test: (1) is the plaintiff's evidence of a conspiracy ambiguous, that is, is it as consistent with the defendant's permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy; and, if so, (2) is there any evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendant was pursuing these independent interests; and a burden shifting formula: when the defendant establishes that its conduct is consistent with independent action, the plaintiff is required to come forward with evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action. Ultimately, the plaintiff must demonstrate, through specific evidence, that the inference of conspiracy to fix prices is reasonable in light of the competing inference of independent action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

HN8 [] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act requires that there be a contract, combination, or conspiracy between the manufacturer and other distributors in order to establish a violation. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. The manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination. The second important distinction in distributor-termination cases is that between concerted action to set prices and concerted action on nonprice restrictions. The former have been per se illegal since the early years of national antitrust enforcement. The latter are judged under the rule of reason, which requires a weighing of the relevant circumstances of a case to decide whether a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN9 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

On a claim of concerted pricefixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement. Evidence that is sufficient to show agreement is evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Acceptance > Meeting of Minds

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > General Overview

HN10 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The concept of a meeting of the minds or a common scheme to fix prices in a distributor termination case includes more than a showing that the nonterminated distributor conformed to the manufacturer's suggested resale price. It means that evidence must be presented by the plaintiff that shows that the distributor not only communicated its acquiescence or agreement, but that the manufacturer also sought this acquiescence.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Circumstantial & Direct Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN11[Defenses, Ambiguities & Mistakes

A plaintiff must produce evidence that tends to preclude independent action. The range of justifiable inferences that can be drawn from ambiguous evidence is limited. Direct evidence of a conspiracy will always meet this standard. Ambiguous circumstantial evidence, alone, will not be enough. Ambiguous evidence permits equally competing inferences without tending to point in one direction or the other. Ambiguous evidence cannot be sent to a jury because a court may not invite the factfinder to speculate that an agreement existed. To prevent such speculation, the range of permissible inferences that may be drawn from ambiguous evidence must be limited, and cannot be used, without more, to establish the existence of an agreement under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act. Conversely, unambiguous evidence tends to point in a single direction. The absence of ambiguity is defined as evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently for lawful business reasons, rather than in concert for unlawful purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12[Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Direct evidence of an agreement under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act includes such things as documents, meetings, and participant testimony that defendants exchanged commitments or otherwise collaborated by some means other than making a marketplace decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN13[Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Conscious parallelism by itself is not enough to support an antitrust conspiracy case nor does evidence of informal communications among several parties unambiguously support an inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN14[Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Proof of parallel business behavior does not conclusively establish agreement and such behavior does not of itself constitute a Sherman Act offense. However, parallelism in an interdependent market plus conspiratorial motivation and acts against self-interest may provide the basis from which to infer an agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Market interdependence exists when competitors base their pricing decisions in part on anticipated reactions to them. Interdependence exists when each competitor's pricing decision is interdependent with that of its rivals: each knows that his choice will affect the others, who are likely to respond, and that their responses will affect the profitability of its initial choice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN16 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Although interdependence must be present to infer a conspiracy from parallel behavior, it cannot serve as the only basis for a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act. What is needed is additional proof from which the factfinder can conclude that parallel behavior would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN17 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Termination of a distributor following or in response to price complaints is not enough to support the inference of a conspiracy. A defendant's actions become illegal only when its concerns and plans cross the line between encouragement and agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN18 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To infer a conspiracy from parallel behavior, the parallel conduct must occur in a logically relevant manner. For instance, it cannot arise from a plausible coincidence or an expectable response to a common business problem. Although simultaneous parallel action may be convincing, the time frame is not limited to events occurring at a single moment. The definition is functional rather than literal and asks whether each alleged conspirator would normally have knowledge of another's act before deciding upon his own course of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN19 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must still prove the existence of an agreement that restrains trade. An agreement under the rule of reason is not as difficult to prove as it is under the per se rule, because there is not a presumption of antitrust injury. In a rule of reason case, the inference of an illegal agreement may be sustained merely by producing evidence that casts doubt on inferences of independent action. However, although the agreement may not be as difficult to prove under the rule of reason, additional elements must be met. For instance, a plaintiff must show that the defendants had market power to fix prices and that the pricefixing scheme had an anticompetitive impact on the market as a whole.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN20 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Most cases fall outside the categories of agreements held to be illegal per se. In the typical case, a plaintiff must prove an antitrust injury under the rule of reason. Under this test, a plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged agreement has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market protects competition in general, rather than individual competitors. The plaintiff must also show that the defendant had market power to raise prices significantly above the competitive level without losing business. A district court must proceed to the first step in the rule of reason analysis, balancing the effects the vertical restraint has on competition, only if the evidence gives rise to the inference that defendants had sufficient market power to control dealer resale prices. Ultimately, the factfinder must weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN21 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN22 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Termination of a small distributor pursuant to a price agreement does not restrain trade until distribution is channeled exclusively through a few large or specifically advantaged dealers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN23 [] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

To prove a group boycott, a plaintiff must allege a horizontal agreement by the defendants to engage in concerted activity to deprive the plaintiff of access to sell goods.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN24 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se offenses are those set out in § 3(1) of the Illinois Antitrust Act (IAA), 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/3. The conduct proscribed by § 3(1) is violative of the IAA without regard to, and the courts need not examine, the competitive and economic purposes and consequences of such conduct. However, a vertical pricefixing agreement is not prohibited under § 3(1). Section 3(1) does not reach vertical agreements, such as agreements between buyers and sellers fixing the price at which the buyer shall resell.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN25 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The analysis for rule of reason claims under § 3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/3 tracks the legal analysis applied in federal cases under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN26[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Boycotts are not proscribed by § 3(1) of the Illinois Antitrust Act (IAA), 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/3. Horizontal boycotts may be found unlawful under the general restraint of trade § 3(2) of the IAA, 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/3. Vertical agreements to refuse to deal or boycotts, that is, agreements between persons at different levels of production and distribution which have as their immediate purpose the depriving of a third person of a supply of a commodity or service, may also be found violative of § 3(2).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN27[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

To establish a prima facie violation of § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), a plaintiff must establish the existence of (1) price discrimination, and (2) injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN28[] Remedies, Damages

Like any damages remedy, the purpose of the Clayton Act is to place the antitrust plaintiff as far as possible in the position it would have occupied but for the violation. Thus, any calculation of damages must strive to approximate a violation-free state of affairs. The plaintiff can not merely infer damages from the fact that the defendant had engaged in discriminatory pricing irrespective of any showing that the defendant's behavior had an effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN29[] Private Actions, Remedies

Causation is established where the plaintiff presents evidence that many customers would not have purchased from the defendant had they known of the defendant's wrongdoing and that the plaintiff's position in the market would have been more advantageous absent the defendant's wrongful conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

Section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(f\), which makes it unlawful for a buyer knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by the Robinson-Patman Act. In order to establish a prima facie case under § 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff must show that the distributors knew or should have known that it was receiving greater discounts from the manufacturer than the plaintiff, and that it knew or should have known that the lower prices it induced or received from the manufacturer were discriminatory in violation of § 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN31 [blue icon] Defenses, Cost Justification Defense

Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) makes it illegal to discriminate in price between buyers when the consequence is an injury to competition. To establish a prima facie violation of § 2(a), a plaintiff must establish the existence of (1) price discrimination, and (2) injury to competition. A prima facie violation, however, may be rebutted by one of the Robinson-Patman Act's two affirmative defenses: (1) cost justification or (2) meeting a competitive price, commonly known as the meeting competition defense. If established, an affirmative defense eliminates the need to decide the issue of injury to competition because a properly established defense renders such injury justifiable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Bona Fide Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN32 [blue icon] Defenses, Meeting Competition Defense

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN33 [blue icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act is merely a price difference between the price for which a defendant sells to one buyer versus the price to which it sells to another. Although the burden of establishing a factual basis for the defense falls on the defendant, all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of the defendant when the plaintiff is the moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN34 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The moving party has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that it is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN35 [blue icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Defenses

The defense under § 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\), has two elements; both must be factually supported to send the defense to a jury. The two elements of a § 2(b) defense are as follows. First, the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, must show the existence of facts that would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor. Second, the seller must demonstrate that its price was a good-faith response to a competitor's lower price. There are four factors that may be relevant to the determination of the seller's good faith. These include whether the seller (1) had received reports from other customers of similar discounts; (2) was threatened with a termination of purchases if the discount were not met; (3) made efforts to corroborate the reported discount by seeking documentary evidence or by appraising its reasonableness in terms of available market data; and (4) had past experience with the buyer.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN36[Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

When a properly supported motion for summary judgment is made, the adverse party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN37[Price Discrimination, Defenses

In most situations, a showing of facts giving rise to a reasonable belief that equally low prices were available to the favored purchaser from a competitor will be sufficient to establish that the seller's lower price was offered in good faith to meet that price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN38[Price Discrimination, Defenses

The good faith defense does not require that the defendant know the identity of his competitor or have concrete proof of the amount of the competitive offer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN39[Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN40[Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 501(f).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

HN41[Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

Some Illinois courts find that the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act (Consumer Fraud Act), 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/1 et seq., is intended to protect and benefit Illinois residents. For practical purposes, this means that a valid Consumer Fraud Act claim must include allegations of trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting consumers in Illinois. Conversely, some courts construe the language of the Consumer Fraud Act broadly so that it was not strictly intended to protect only Illinois consumers, but also to prohibit fraud in the conduct of any trade or commerce. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois believes that the Consumer Fraud Act, although intended to protect Illinois consumers, does not contain a geographic limitation, and that the Consumer Fraud Act should be construed liberally to include all consumers whose allegations of fraud directly or indirectly affect trade or commerce in Illinois.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

HN42 [] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The next question is whether a genuine issue of triable fact exists on the issues of price discrimination and termination. To establish a claim under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/1 et seq., a plaintiff must allege and prove the following elements: (1) the misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; (2) an intent by the defendant that the plaintiff rely on the misrepresentation or concealment; and (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct of any trade or commerce. A plaintiff must show that the challenged conduct of the defendant proximately caused the damages alleged under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN43 [] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A misrepresentation is material if the party to whom it was made would have acted differently had the party known the truth. The determination of whether a misrepresentation is material involves factual determinations generally inappropriate for resolution on a summary judgment motion. Similarly, questions of intent are inappropriate for summary judgment.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Elements

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Franchise Fees

HN44 [] Franchise Relationships, Elements

A franchise is defined as a contract granting the right to engage in business and requiring the payment of a franchise fee. 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 705/3\(1\). A franchise fee is any fee or charge that is required by the franchisor for the right to sell, resell, or distribute goods or services, and is paid directly or indirectly by the franchisee. 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 705/3\(14\). A franchise thus requires a contract and a required fee. Illinois law requires that, in order for a payment to be considered a franchise fee, it must precisely fit within the statutory definition.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN45 [blue icon] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

In Illinois, the elements necessary to establish a claim of promissory estoppel are: (1) an unambiguous promise; (2) on which the promisee reasonably and justifiably relied; (3) which was foreseeable by the promisor; and (4) on which the promisee relied to his detriment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > Elements of Equitable Estoppel

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > General Overview

HN46 [blue icon] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

Unlike promissory estoppel, the doctrine of equitable estoppel is based upon an intended misrepresentation or the concealment of a material fact rather than a promise. The elements necessary to assert a claim for equitable estoppel are: (1) words or conduct consisting of misrepresentations or concealment of material facts; (2) defendant must have actual or implied knowledge at the time the representations are made that they are untrue; (3) plaintiff does not know that the representations are untrue at the time that they are made; (4) the party estopped must intend or expect that his conduct or representations will be acted on by the plaintiff; (5) plaintiff relies on the representations in such a manner that he would be prejudiced if the party making the representations is allowed to deny the truth thereof.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Discharge & Termination

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Compensatory Damages

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Good Cause

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN47 [blue icon] Standards of Performance, Discharge & Termination

The equitable recoupment doctrine applies when a contract is terminated without just cause before the terminated party has the opportunity to recoup its losses. The doctrine is designed to remedy the inequity which arises after a manufacturer requires a distributor to make a sizeable investment in furtherance of the distributorship, terminates the relationship without just cause and leaves the distributor with substantial unrecovered expenses. In some courts, the doctrine is cognizable only after it is shown that the contract in question is terminable at will.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Discharge & Termination

HN48 [+] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Both Illinois and New York courts have declared that every contract implies good faith and fair dealing between its parties. However, the covenant is not an independent source of contractual duties; rather, it guides the construction of explicit terms in the agreement. When a term in the contract grants a wide range of discretion, the party must exercise that discretion reasonably, with proper motive and in a manner consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties. On its face, this covenant appears to be at odds with the concept of at will contracts, which allow a party to exercise its discretion to terminate a contractual relationship for virtually any reason. However, since an at will contract expressly allows each party to terminate at any time, the parties have no reasonable expectation that it will be terminated only for cause. Therefore, the covenant is not breached when one party terminates an at will contract because the party's actions were in accord with the other's reasonable expectations.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN49 [+] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

The elements of a cause of action for common law fraudulent misrepresentation are: (1) false statement of material fact; (2) known or believed to be false by the party stating it; (3) intent to induce the other party to act; (4) justifiable reliance by the other party on the misrepresentation; and (5) damage to the other party resulting from such reliance.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN50 [+] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

The reasonableness of a party's reliance is determined at the time that the party acts upon the misrepresentation. A plaintiff's subsequent opportunity to become informed of the true facts contradicting a misrepresentation cannot render prior reliance unreasonable.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN51 [+] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

As a general rule, promises of future conduct are not actionable in fraud. However, an exception to this rule exists when the false representation is part of a scheme or device used to accomplish the fraud. Whether or not a scheme actually existed in this case is a question of fact for the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN52 [Remedies, Damages

Questions of reasonableness and intent involve factual determinations and are generally inappropriate for resolution on a motion for summary judgment.

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN53 [Contracts Law, Breach

The elements that a plaintiff must allege and prove for a valid claim of tortious interference with contract include: (1) the existence of a valid and enforceable contract between the plaintiff and another; (2) that the defendant was aware of the contractual relationship; (3) an intentional and unjustified inducement of a breach of the contract which causes a subsequent breach by the third party; and (4) damages. Generally, if a contract at will is terminated, no breach has occurred. Therefore, most courts do not recognize tortious interference with contract claims that are based upon a contract at will.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN54 [Intentional Interference, Defenses

Lawful competition is a justifiable reason for interfering with contractual relations. A competitor who intentionally causes a third party not to enter into a contract with another or not to continue a contract terminable at will does not interfere improperly if: (1) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and the other; and (2) the actor does not employ wrongful means; and (3) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint on trade; and (4) when a business relationship affords the parties only the hope of benefits, the parties must allow for the rights of others.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN55 [blue icon] Unfair Business Practices, Elements

The elements of a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage are: (1) the plaintiff's reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship; (2) the defendant's purposeful interference and destruction of this legitimate expectancy; and (3) that the defendant's actions caused harm to the plaintiff. In cases where an individual with a prospective business relationship has a mere expectancy of future economic gain; a party to a contract has a certain and enforceable expectation of receiving the benefits of the contract. When a business relationship affords the parties no enforceable expectations, but only the hope of benefits, the parties must allow for the rights of others. They therefore have no cause of action against a bona fide competitor unless the circumstances indicate unfair competition, that is, an unprivileged interference with prospective advantage.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Right to Jury Trial

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Trial by Jury in Civil Actions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Waiver of Jury Trial > Requirements for Waiver > Knowing & Voluntary Waivers

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Waiver of Jury Trial > Requirements for Waiver > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Juries & Jurors > Waiver of Jury Trial > Right of Waiver

HN56 [blue icon] Jury Trials, Right to Jury Trial

Although U.S. Const. amend. VII guarantees the right to a jury trial in civil cases; this right may be waived. However, such a waiver must be made knowingly and voluntarily. Indeed, as the right of jury trial is fundamental, courts indulge in every reasonable presumption against waiver. The factors to consider in determining whether a contractual waiver of the right to jury trial was entered into knowingly and voluntarily include: (1) the parties' negotiations concerning the waiver provision, if any, (2) the conspicuousness of the provision, (3) the relative bargaining power of the parties, and (4) whether the waiving party's counsel had an opportunity to review the agreement.

Counsel: [*1] For NICHOLS MOTORCYCLE SUPPLY, INC., an Illinois corporation, plaintiff: Joseph G. Bisceglia, James A. McKenna, Royce Richard Bedward, Steven P Blonder, Jenner & Block, Chicago, IL.

For DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation, defendant: Kenneth Henry Hoch, Robert Thomas Joseph, Patrick John Kelly, David E Lieberman, Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, Chicago, IL. For ED TUCKER DISTRIBUTOR, INC., a Texas corporation dba Tucker/Rocky Distributing, defendant: Joseph E. Coughlin, Terrence Patrick Canade, Michael J. Gaertner, Lord, Bissell & Brook, Chicago, IL. For LEMANS CORP, a Wisconsin corporation, defendant: Ethan Edward Trull, Alexander S. Vesselinovitch, Seyfarth, Shaw, Fairweather & Geraldson, Chicago, IL. David J. MacDougall, Brennan, Steil, Basting & MacDougall, Janesville, WI.

For DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION, counter-claimant: Kenneth Henry Hoch, Patrick John Kelly, Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, Chicago, IL.

For NICHOLS MOTORCYCLE SUPPLY, INC., counter-defendant: Joseph G. Bisceglia, James A. McKenna, Royce Richard Bedward, Jenner & Block, Chicago, IL. Richard P. Campbell, Campbell & DiVincenzo, Chicago, IL. Anthony S. DiVincenzo, Chicago, IL.

For DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION, counter-claimant: Kenneth Henry Hoch, Patrick John Kelly, Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, Chicago, IL.

For NICHOLS MOTORCYCLE SUPPLY, INC., counter-defendant: Joseph G. Bisceglia, James A. McKenna, Royce Richard Bedward, Jenner & Block, Chicago, IL. Richard P. Campbell, Campbell & DiVincenzo, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Ruben Castillo, United States District Judge

Opinion by: Ruben Castillo

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

1

[*2] TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. THE FACTS

- A. Nichols
- B. Dunlop
- C. Metzeler
- D. Tucker-Rocky
- E. Parts Unlimited
- F. Combined Market Share
- G. The Economic Experts

II. ANTITRUST CONSPIRACY CLAIMS

- A. The Sherman Act § 1
 - 1. Count I: Per Se Violations
 - a. Legal Standards
 - b. The Plaintiff's Evidence
 - (i) The Year 1991
 - (ii) The Year 1992
 - (iii) The Year 1993
 - (iv) March 1993 - June 15, 1993

¹ On August 1, 1995, following oral argument, the Court, in a minute order, granted summary judgment in favor of all defendants as to Counts I-VI (1-6) of the Third Amended Complaint. The Court also granted Defendant Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Counts IX through XIV (9-14) and Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Counts VII, XVI, and XVII (7, 16 and 17) of the Plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint. The Court denied Defendant Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Counts VII, VIII and XV (7, 8, and 15) of the Plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint. The Court further granted Plaintiff's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Defendant Dunlop's Section 2(b) affirmative defense to Count VII of Plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint, and denied Dunlop's Motion to Strike Plaintiff's jury demand. The minute order was intended to give the remaining parties sufficient time to prepare for trial. This Opinion is intended to provide reasons for those judgments. The entry of final judgment will be ordered on the date this Opinion is issued.

- (a) March 15, 1993: Tucker-Rocky Article Quoting Bob Gregg (PX 382)
- (b) The March 22, 1993 Gregg Letter (PX 4C)
- (c) March 22, 1993: Parts Unlimited Revises Price List (PX 444)
- (d) March 31, 1993: Phone Call (PX 624)
- (e) Late March 1993: Mike Buckley Replaces Pat Logue as Dunlop's National Sales Manager . . .
- (f) Late March 1993: Gregg Phone Call to Buckley Urging Termination of Distributors
- (g) April 1, 1993: Buckley Memo to Dunlop Distributors (PX 2)
- (h) The April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter (PX 5)
- (i) April Phone Call Between Buckley and Gregg Regarding April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter
- (j) April 30, 1993: Logue Conversation with Motorcycle Stuff Regarding Tucker-Rocky's Low Prices
- (k) May 6, 1993: Buckley Visits Nichols, Meets Jack Jesse and Writes Call [*3] Report (PX 14)
- (l) May 6, 1993: Buckley Spends Evening with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited
- (m) May 7, 1993: Buckley Visits Tucker-Rocky Warehouse in Chicago
- (n) Early May 1993: "Firm Commitments" (PX 17)
- (o) Late May 1993: Tucker-Rocky Issues Revised Price List (PX 214; PX 645)
- (p) May 20, 1993: Buckley's "Price War" Memo (PX 3)
- (q) Buckley's Memos to Robin Mitchell (PX 17; PX 18)
- (r) June 15, 1993: Dunlop Terminates Nichols (PX 16)
- (v) Post-Termination Evidence
 - (a) June 1993 Tucker-Rocky Branch Manager's Report (PX 277)
 - (b) Joe Piazza (PX 540)
 - (c) Tucker-Rocky's Missing Branch Manager Reports
 - (d) September 1993: Trade Show Memo (PX 206)
 - (e) Metzeler Memo of October 5, 1993, on "Price Stability" (PX 303)
 - (f) Tucker-Rocky Memo Regarding "Market Stabilizing Programs" (PX 280)
 - (g) Dunlop Raises MSD Mid-Year
 - (h) Rick Ward (DX 36)
 - (i) 1994 Price Increases
 - (j) Tom Peterich
 - (vi) Inadmissible Testimony

(a) James Stewart

(b) Rocky Trevino (PX 622)

(c) Terry Baisley - William Giacomelli Conversation (PX 643)

c. Analysis

(i) Horizontal Agreement

(ii) Vertical Agreement

(a) No Evidence of Parallelism Supporting Inference of an Agreement to Terminate [4] Nichols or Fix Prices

i) Market Theory

ii) Three Examples of Non-Parallel Behavior

a) Dunlop's Unilateral Decision to Reduce Its Distribution Network

b) Parts Unlimited's 1993 Price Increases

c) Tucker-Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's 1994 Price Increases

(b) Gregg Letters are Ambiguous Evidence and Therefore Do Not Support an Inference of a Pricefixing or Termination Agreement

i) The March 22, 1993 Letter

ii) The April 8, 1993 Letter

(c) No Other Direct or Circumstantial Evidence of Collusion Supporting Nichols' Section 1 Claim

2. Count II: The Rule of Reason

a. Legal Standards

b. Analysis

3. Count III: Group Boycott

B. The Illinois Antitrust Act

1. Count IV: Per Se Price Fixing

2. Count V: Rule of Reason

3. Count VI: Group Boycott

C. The Robinson-Patman Act Claims

1. The Facts

2. The Merits

a. Dunlop: § 2(a)

b. Tucker-Rocky and Parts Unlimited: § 2(f)

3. The "Meeting Competition" Defense

a. Background

b. Analysis

III. THE STATE LAW CLAIMS

A. The Facts

B. Claims Against Dunlop

1. Count VIII: Illinois Consumer Fraud Act

2. Counts IX & X: Illinois Franchise Act

3. Count XI: Promissory Estoppel

4. Count XII: Equitable [*5] Estoppel

5. Count XIII: Equitable Recoupment

6. Count XIV: Breach of Contract/Good Faith & Fair Dealing

7. Count XV: Fraud

C. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited

1. Count XVI: Tortious Interference with Contract

2. Count XVII: Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

IV. NICHOL'S RIGHT TO A JURY TRIAL

V. CONCLUSION

On June 15, 1993, after a thirty-year business relationship, Dunlop Tire Corporation ("Dunlop"), the largest manufacturer of motorcycle tires in the United States, terminated Nichols Motorcycle Supply Inc. ("Nichols"), its oldest distributor. The termination letter--commonly referred to in the vernacular as a "Dear John" letter--merely stated:

Dear Jack:

Please see enclosed copy of your "Dunlop Distributor Motorcycle Tire/Tube Agreement" signed by you on January 11, 1993.

In reference to item nine of above-mentioned agreement, Dunlop Tire Corporation exercises its option to terminate this agreement effective five days from receipt of this letter.

Regards,

DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION

Mike Buckley

National Sales Manager

Motorcycle Tire Division

Not surprisingly, as a direct result of this letter, Nichols [*6] commenced a multi-faceted litigation campaign against Dunlop and other parties. Thus, currently pending before this court is an antitrust action brought by Nichols against Dunlop and Dunlop's two largest distributors, Tucker/Rocky Distributing ("Tucker/Rocky") and LeMans Corporation, through its Parts Unlimited division ("Parts Unlimited"), Nichols' former competitors.² The Third Amended Complaint contains seventeen counts.³ The federal antitrust conspiracy claims, brought under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1995\), and the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\) \(1995\),⁴ are asserted in Counts I-III and VII. The Illinois antitrust claims are asserted in Counts IV-VI and the supplemental state law claims are asserted in Counts VIII-XVII. The Court has federal subject matter, supplemental and diversity jurisdiction. The fate of the state law claims depends largely upon the decisions this Court makes regarding the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Act claims. We will begin there.

[*7] I. The Facts

5

[*8] The relevant market for antitrust purposes in this case is defined as the manufacture, sale, distribution and resale of replacement and premium motorcycle tires in the United States. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 5. The relevant manufacturers and distributors, for purposes of this case, are as follows.

A. Nichols

Nichols is an Illinois corporation with its principal place of business in Alsip, Illinois. Nichols has been in the business of distributing motorcycle parts, accessories, supplies, and clothing since around 1960. 12(M) P 1. Jack Jesse has been Nichols' president since the spring of 1993. 12(M) App. A. Terry Baisley has been Nichols' national sales manager since October 1989. Id. Ken Anderson is the marketing manager. Id. Nichols currently operates two warehouse distribution centers. Nichols' principal distribution center, which it has operated since approximately 1970, is in Alsip, Illinois (a Chicago suburb). In September 1992, Nichols acquired a second warehouse distribution center in Phoenix, Arizona. 12(M) P 33. Currently, those warehouses remain open. Id. See also 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 67.

Nichols formerly distributed Dunlop tires and was Dunlop's [*9] oldest distributor, acting in this capacity for over 30 years before being terminated on June 15, 1993. 12(M) PP 146, 400. At the time Nichols was terminated, Dunlop tires constituted approximately 20 percent of Nichols' total sales. PX 608 at 29. Nichols is not and has never distributed Metzeler products. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 54. However, Nichols does sell about 150 lines of motorcycle-related merchandise to motorcycle retailers and approximately 15-20 different distributors. Nichols currently sells

²This lawsuit was originally assigned to Judge Conlon and transferred to this Court, by order of the Executive Committee, on May 13, 1995.

³Count XVIII, alleging a civil conspiracy, was dismissed with prejudice by this Court on December 9, 1994.

⁴The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13 et seq., is commonly referred to by its internal numbering as § 2 of the Clayton Act, and will be referred to as § 2 in this opinion.

⁵The following facts are derived from the parties' Statements of Material (undisputed) Facts filed pursuant to Local Rules 12(M)-(N)(3)(b) of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. Some facts in this case will be more easily understood in context of the asserted claims and will be discussed in those portions of the Opinion. References to the undisputed facts, identified in the parties' Rule 12(M) statements and admitted by the nonmoving party in the Rule 12(N) statement, will be designated "12(M) P --." Factual disputes, when relevant, will be designated "12(N) P --." Where additional facts supporting the denial of the summary judgment motion, as identified in the Rule 12(N)(b)(3) motion, have been admitted by the moving party, those facts will be designated "12(N)(3)(b) P --." Where certain facts are admitted and others denied, the admitted facts of the Rule 12(N)(3)(b) Statement of Additional Facts, will be designated "12(N)(3)(b) Reply P --." The undisputed facts summarized in this opinion are those facts that appear to be "without substantial controversy" pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(d\). These facts should not be relitigated during trial.

the following tire brands: Bridgestone, Cheng Shin, Continental, Kenda, and Kings. 12(M) P 2. In the past Nichols has also sold Dunlop, Avon, Michelin, Pirelli, and Yokohama. Nichols is also the owner of the Pro Sport line of motorcycle products and the exclusive agent for Kings motorcycle tires in continental North America. Nichols sells Pro Sport products and Kings tires through a network of distributors and publishes an annual catalog of suggested resale prices. 12(M) PP 12, 48.

Nichols' market share for Dunlop tires between 1990-1994, as indicated by the percentage of tires Dunlop sold to Nichols, was as follows:

	*6*Table
	6. Dunlop
	Motorcycl e Tire
	Sales to
	*6*Select Distributo rs, 1990-
	94
	6(Perce nt)
	1990
	1991
	1992
	1993
	1994
Nichols	13.2
	5.4
	9.3
	1.9
	0.0

[*10] 12(N)(3)(b) P 12. ⁶

B. Dunlop

Dunlop is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in West Amherst, New York. 12(M) P 4. Dunlop manufactures motorcycle tires and sells them to wholesale distributors, who resell them to retail dealers and subdistributors. Retail dealers in turn sell Dunlop tires primarily to the consuming public. 12(M) P 4. Robin Mitchell is Dunlop's senior vice president of marketing and sales. Id. Patrick Logue was Dunlop's national sales manager from approximately 1987 through March 1993. Id. Michael J. Buckley succeeded Mr. Logue as the national sales [*11] manager in March 1993. Id.

Dunlop is the largest selling motorcycle tire manufacturer in the United States. Its current market share in the relevant markets is approximately 62-70 percent. 12(M) P 6. Dunlop's success can be partially attributed to the fact that Dunlop has very high consumer name recognition, which predisposes many consumers to purchase Dunlop replacement motorcycle tires. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 7. Dunlop tires are also used by distributors as a lead product to generate sales of other non-Dunlop products to dealers. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 8.

At the time Nichols was terminated as a Dunlop distributor in June 1993, Dunlop sold tires to 18 distributors: American Honda, Bell Industries, Custom Chrome, Cycle Products, Cycle Sports (in Puerto Rico), Dixie, Harley-Davidson, Intrac, J & D Walter, KK Motorcycle, Marshall Distributing, Motorcycle Stuff, Parts Unlimited, Performance Tire, Pikes Peak, Tucker/Rocky, and Tri-State. Of these 18 distributors, Dunlop sold the most tires to the following four distributors between 1990-1993 (in decreasing order): Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited, Motorcycle Stuff, and Nichols Supply. 12(M) P 10. Dunlop's top three distributors, measured [*12] by the percentage of tires sold to them from 1990-1994, are: Tucker/Rocky, followed closely by Parts Unlimited (within 2-5%), and Motorcycle

⁶ Defendants have admitted, solely for summary judgment purposes, the assertions of Nichols' expert regarding percentage of sales of various motorcycle tire brands in certain markets, because they believe that these assertions are immaterial to the Court's inquiry into whether the parties agreed to fix prices. The relevant expert data is contained in Plaintiff's Exhibit ("PX") 608 at 19.

Stuff (7-9% off the leader from 1990-92; 21% off the leader in 1993; 12.4% off the leader in 1994; and 12.2% off the leader for all four years). Id. (Px 608, App. Table D-3). Nichols followed in fourth and fifth⁷ place from 1990-1992, until its termination on June 15, 1993. Id.

C. Metzeler

Metzeler is a German tire manufacturer, owned by Pirelli. Metzeler Motorcycle Tire North America is its North American subsidiary. 12(M) PP 7-8. Gregory Blackwell has been the president of Metzeler N.A. since January 1992. 12(M) App. A.

Metzeler is the second largest selling motorcycle tire manufacturer in the relevant market. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply [*13] P 9. Metzeler tires generally sell at a higher price than Dunlop, and are not discounted as much because there is less intrabrand competition (i.e., fewer distributors) for Metzeler tires. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 13. In the last several years, Metzeler has reduced its distributor base from approximately 12 distributors to five. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 14. Metzeler's five U.S. distributors are: KK Motorcycle, Motorace, Parts Unlimited, Pike's Peak and Tucker/Rocky. 12(M) P 10. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited sell the largest numbers of Metzeler tires; together they account for 90 percent of its sales (Tucker/Rocky buys 60% and Parts Unlimited buys 30%). 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 14.

In 1990, Metzeler had a market share in the relevant markets of 24-30 percent. The president of Metzeler N.A., Gregory Blackwell, estimates that Metzeler's market share is currently 25-30 percent. However, Dunlop and other reports indicate that Metzeler's total market share for tires fell to about 12.8-13.75 percent in 1993, although its share of the premium tire market may have been 15 percent. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 10 (PX 608 at 16-18).

D. Tucker/Rocky

Tucker/Rocky is a Texas corporation with [*14] its principal place of business in Irving, Texas (Dallas). 12(M) P 5. Robert Nickell is the current chairman and past president (October 1989 to October 1992). Robert Gregg succeeded Mr. Nickell as president on October 1, 1992. 12(M) App. A. Tucker/Rocky owns and operates 12 warehouses in the United States and is considered a national distributor. Tucker/Rocky is in the business of distributing parts, accessories, and apparel for motorcycles and watercraft. 12(M) P 5. Tucker/Rocky is Dunlop's largest distributor, as indicated by its market share. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. This market share is based on the percentage of tires Dunlop sold to Tucker/Rocky during the periods 1990-1994, and was as follows:

*6*Table 6. Dunlop Motorcycl e Tire Sales to
*6*Select Distributo rs, 1990- 94
6(Perce nt)	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Tucker/
Rocky	25.2	27.5	27.2	36.4	33.3

12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12.

⁷ Nichols was beaten by Bell Industries in 1991, in terms of Dunlop distributor purchases, by .9 percent. This was the only year between 1990 and 1992 that Nichols did not finish fourth. See PX 608, App. Table D-3.

E. Parts Unlimited

LeMans Corporation is a Wisconsin corporation with its principal place of business in Janesville, Wisconsin. 12(M) P 6. Fred Fox is the current chairman and chief executive officer. Jeff Fox is Fred Fox's son, and has been the president [*15] of Parts Unlimited since approximately October 1992. 12(M) App. A. LeMans, through its Parts Unlimited division, is in the business of distributing parts and accessories for motorcycles, watercraft, and snowmobiles. 12(M) P 6. Parts Unlimited is Dunlop's second largest distributor, as indicated by its Dunlop market share. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. This market share is based on the percentage of tires Dunlop sold to Parts Unlimited during the period 1990-1994, and was as follows:

*6*Table 6. Dunlop Motorcycl e Tire Sales to	*6*Select Distributo rs, 1990- 94	6(Perce nt)	Parts	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Un-			Un-
limited			limited
				19.0	23.6	24.7	31.5	28.0

12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. Plaintiff's expert concedes that Parts Unlimited, by itself, does not possess market power. Id.

F. Combined Market Share

*6*Table 6. Dunlop Motorcycl e Tire Sales to	*6*Select Distributo rs 1990- 94	6(Perce nt)	T/R & PU	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
			Subtotal	44.2	51.1	51.9	67.9	61.4

12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. This data establishes that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited's combined market share at the end of 1993 rose by 16 percent, dropping [*16] off in 1994, but remaining 9.5 percent higher than their combined 1992 market share. The combined market share of Dunlop and Metzeler is currently about 85 percent 12(n)(3)(b) Reply P 11.

G. The Economic Experts

Nichols has retained an economist, Dr. John Pisarkiewicz, as an expert to perform several tasks in this litigation. 12(M) PP 21,196. Raymond S. Sims is a Vice President at A.T. Kearney, Inc., in Chicago, Illinois. He has been retained as an expert in this case by Dunlop. 12(M) P 201. The defendants also offer Professor David T. Sheffman, who has produced a report entitled "Trends in the Motorcycle Industry 1985-1993," which indicates that the number of motorcycle dealers selling motorcycles and other related products dropped from 12,953 to 9,264 from 1985 to 1993. The number of real dollars (per million) from these sales, according to this report, also dropped from $ 1,671 to $ 1,247 during that time period. DX 70.

II. The Antitrust Conspiracy Claims

A. The Sherman Act § 1

In Counts I, II and III, Plaintiff broadly alleges that the Defendants unreasonably restrained trade by forming an illegal conspiracy to terminate smaller discounting [*17] distributors, like Nichols, to consolidate the market and implement an agreement to raise and stabilize resale dealer prices for Dunlop tires in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. 12(N)(3)(b) P 12.⁸ In particular, Nichols claims that Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited formed vertical and horizontal combinations.⁹

HN2[] Section 1 states: "Every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. . . is declared to be illegal." [*18] 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1995\). HN3[] According to the statute, a plaintiff claiming a Section 1 violation must establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771 \(1984\). Whether an unlawful conspiracy or combination is demonstrated should be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by words they used. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44 \(1960\) (citing Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Ass'n v. United States, 239 U.S. 600, 612 \(1914\); see also United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 142 \(1966\) (holding explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy where joint and collaborative effort is pervasive)). Under well-established principles of antitrust law, unilateral conduct (" independent action") by a single person or enterprise falls outside the scope of this provision. Monsanto Co. v. Spray Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761 \(1984\)(citing United States v. Colgate, 250 U.S. 300, 307 \(1919\)).¹⁰ Once a plaintiff establishes the existence of an illegal contract, combination or [*19] conspiracy ("an agreement"), it must then proceed to demonstrate that the agreement constituted an unreasonable (and therefore illegal) restraint of trade under either the per se rule or the rule of reason. The nature of the restraint (e.g., vertical price restraint, vertical nonprice restraint, horizontal price restraint etc.) determines which rule must be applied. See Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Prods., Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 \(7th Cir. 1993\). The per se claims will be addressed first.

1. Count 1: Per Se Violations

In Count I, Plaintiff broadly alleges that the defendants participated in a vertical and a horizontal conspiracy to fix prices in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The Plaintiff's theory in Count I is that these agreements were illegal per se. In particular, Plaintiff's theory is that Dunlop, together with its two largest distributors, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, conspired to terminate smaller discounting [*20] distributors, like Nichols, to consolidate their market share and implement an illegal agreement to raise and stabilize resale dealer prices for Dunlop motorcycle tires. There are two agreements under this theory: an agreement to terminate Nichols (because it was a discounter) and an agreement to fix prices. Plaintiff defines these agreements as both horizontal (between the two defendant distributors) and vertical (between Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited) and admits that the proof of these conspiracies "tends to blend together." Transcript at 26. A review of the Plaintiff's proof follows a short discussion of the applicable legal principles.

⁸ Defendants admit only that Dunlop terminated Nichols as a distributor. Defendants do not concede that the record supports Nichols' theory of concerted activity to consolidate market share and to fix prices.

⁹ HN1[] Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been labelled horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints; thus the nature of a restraint is determined by the type of agreement that gives rise to the restraint rather than the anticompetitive economic effects of the restraint. See Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730 \(1980\).

¹⁰ Under the Colgate doctrine, "independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." Id.

a. Legal Standards

HN4[]

Conduct considered illegal per se is limited to cases where a defendant's actions are so plainly harmful to competition, Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 724 (1988), that they are presumed illegal and the need for further proof of anticompetitive impact is unnecessary.¹¹ Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328 (1990); Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50 (1977). Per se cases include horizontal and vertical pricefixing [*21] agreements and certain types of group boycotts. See Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 542-43 (2d Cir. 1993) (listing the types of per se violations recognized by the Supreme Court). Pricefixing agreements need not include an "explicit agreement on prices to be charged or that one party have the right to be consulted about the other's prices." Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1221 (7th Cir. 1993) (citing cases). Rather, pricefixing agreements need only have been formed for the purpose and effect of fixing or stabilizing the price of a product in interstate commerce.¹² Id. Tacit agreements are therefore actionable if they can be shown to exist. 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 66 (1986).

[*22] HN7[]

An agreement that is illegal per se under Section 1 is difficult to prove. Much like Title VII cases, the antitrust analysis proceeds in stages because it involves shifting burdens that lead to an ultimate burden of proof which is extremely difficult for a plaintiff to satisfy.¹³ Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1171 (7th

¹¹ HN5[]

The per se presumption simply eliminates the plaintiff's burden of proving anticompetitive impact to the finder of fact through market analysis by an expert economist, as required under the rule of reason; it does not eliminate the need to find antitrust injury, nor does it relieve the plaintiff of its burden to identify and articulate the precise anticompetitive impact caused by the per se price-fixing violation. An antitrust injury flows from pricefixing agreements which plainly reduce competition. However, some pricefixing agreements do not "restrain trade" and are therefore reasonable. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 339-40 (1990). It is important to note, however, that "the antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Id. at 338 (citing Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320 (1962)). Thus, a competitor "may not complain of conspiracies that set minimum [or maximum] prices at any level." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n.8 (1986) (minimum prices); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 (1968) (maximum prices), unless the dangers identified by Albrecht are present (i.e., the smaller competitor is eliminated from competition pursuant to the price agreement and distribution is then channelled "through a few large or specifically advantaged dealers."). Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 327. Therefore, finding an agreement is only the first step; the agreement is not illegal under S 1 of the Sherman Act unless the nature of the pricefixing agreement reduces competition and injures dealers or consumers. Id. The Court must therefore carefully scrutinize the competitive effect of the pricefixing agreement alleged to be illegal per se. Because the presumption of injury eliminates the need for a plaintiff to produce an economist, this theoretical hurdle is now a question of law for the court on summary judgment. This Court is extremely cognizant of this important distinction, recently recognized by the Seventh Circuit in Israel Travel Advisory Serv., Inc. v. Israel Identity Tours, Inc., Nos. 94-1451, 94-1554, 94-1815, & 94-1816, 1995 WL 425224, *5 (7th Cir. July 20, 1995) (Easterbrook, J.) ("the antitrust injury doctrine applies with full vigor to the per se offenses.

¹² HN6[]

An agreement to terminate a distributor without evidence of a related agreement on price is not sufficient to establish a per se violation. However, an agreement to terminate, if proven to have an anticompetitive impact, could be illegal under the rule of reason as a nonprice restraint. See Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 724, 726. Nonprice restraints are not alleged in this case.

Cir. 1990). The Seventh Circuit has articulated a two-part test: (1) is the plaintiff's evidence of a conspiracy ambiguous, i.e., is it as consistent with the defendant's permissible independent interests as with an illegal conspiracy; and, if so, (2) is there any evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing these independent interests, id. at 1171; and a burden shifting formula: "when [*23] the defendants establish that their conduct is consistent with independent action, the plaintiffs are required to come forward with evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action." Id. Ultimately, the plaintiff must demonstrate, through specific evidence, that the "inference of conspiracy to fix prices is reasonable in light of the competing inference of independent action." Id. at 1171 (quoting Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 660-61 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977 (1987)).

To survive summary judgment in this case, the plaintiff's evidence must conform to the specific standards set out by the Supreme Court in Matsushita Electric Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574 (1986), and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752 (1983). In Matsushita, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to articulate the standard that district courts must apply when [*24] deciding a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case. In Monsanto, the Court granted certiorari to articulate the standard of proof required to find a vertical pricefixing conspiracy in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. These two cases establish the legal parameters for this Court's decision.

In Monsanto, Justice Powell, writing for the Supreme Court, found that the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence of an agreement to terminate a distributor, pursuant to a vertical pricefixing conspiracy between a manufacturer and a large distributor, to create a jury issue. In reaching this conclusion, the Court articulate the proper standard to be applied to Section 1 claims like the one before us. The Court also outlined several important distinctions that are worth repeating here because they address the very heart of this case:

This Court has drawn two important distinctions that are at the center of this and any other distributor-termination case. First, there is the basic distinction between concerted and independent action -- a distinction not always clearly drawn by the parties and the courts. HN8[¹³] Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that there [*25] be a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" between the manufacturer and other distributors in order to establish a violation. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307 (1919); cf. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29 (1960). Under Colgate, the manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination. The second important distinction in distributor-termination cases is that between concerted action to set prices and concerted action on nonprice restrictions. The former have been per se illegal since the early years of national antitrust enforcement. See Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 404-409 (1911). The latter are judged under the rule of reason, which requires a weighing of the relevant circumstances of a case to decide whether a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable [*26] restraint on competition. See Continental T.V. Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36 (1977).

While these distinctions in theory are reasonably clear, often they are difficult to apply in practice. In Sylvania we emphasized that the legality of arguably anticompetitive conduct should be primarily judged by its "market impact." But the economic effect of all the conduct described above -- unilateral and concerted vertical price-setting, agreements on price and nonprice restrictions -- is in many, but not all cases similar or identical. [citation omitted]. And judged from a distance, the conduct of the parties in the various situations can be indistinguishable. For example, the fact that a manufacturer and its distributors are in constant communication about prices and marketing strategy does not alone show that the distributors are not making independent pricing decisions. A manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about prices and the reception of their products in the market. Moreover, it is precisely in cases in which the manufacturer attempts to further a particular marketing strategy by means of agreements on often costly nonprice [*27] restrictions that it will have the most interest in the distributors' resale prices. The manufacturer often will want to ensure that its distributors earn sufficient profit to pay for programs such as hiring and training additional salesmen or demonstrating the technical features of the product, and will want to see that "free-riders" do not interfere. Thus, the manufacturer's strongly felt concern about resale prices does not necessarily mean that it has done more than the Colgate doctrine allows. Nevertheless, it is of considerable importance that independent action by the manufacturer, and concerted action on nonprice restrictions, be distinguished from price-fixing agreements, since under present law the latter are subject to per se treatment and treble damages. HN9[] On a claim of concerted price-fixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement. If an inference of such an agreement may be drawn from highly ambiguous evidence, there is a considerable danger that the doctrines enunciated in Sylvania and Colgate will be seriously eroded.

¹³ Unlike Title VII cases, however, the Plaintiff cannot prove an agreement to conspire merely by showing that the defendants' assertions of independent conduct was a pretext for pricefixing and illegal termination agreements.

Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 760-63 (emphasis added). [*28] The Supreme Court then held that evidence that is sufficient to show agreement is evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." 465 U.S. at 764.¹⁴

In Matsushita, the Court found that the defendants lacked an economically plausible motive to conspire and thus concluded that there was no genuine issue for trial. On the issue of motive, Justice Powell, again writing [*29] for the Court, found:

the absence of plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a genuine issue for trial exists within the meaning of Rule 56\(e\). Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy.

475 U.S. at 596. To summarize, Monsanto requires the HN11[] plaintiff to produce evidence that tends to preclude independent action. Matsushita limits the range of justifiable inferences that can be drawn from ambiguous evidence offered to comply with Monsanto.

Direct evidence of a conspiracy will always meet this standard. "Ambiguous" circumstantial evidence, alone, will not be enough. Somewhere between those two extremes lies the kind of circumstantial evidence that will provide enough direction for the fact-finder to conclude that the defendants' minds met, and from this meeting an agreement arose and was implemented through concerted action that achieves an unlawful objective. [*30] Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761 n.9. The demarcation between circumstantial evidence which is "ambiguous" and that which is not, however, is unclear.

Ambiguous evidence permits equally competing inferences without "tending" to point in one direction or the other. Market Force, 906 F.2d at 1171. For example, circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy that is "consistent with independent action" is ambiguous. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763. Ambiguous evidence cannot be sent to a jury because a court may not invite the factfinder to speculate that an agreement existed. See 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1405 at 21-23, for a good discussion of the judge and jury's role in determining whether an agreement exists. To prevent such speculation, the Supreme Court has held that "the range of [permissible] inferences that may be drawn from ambiguous evidence [must be] limited," Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574 (1986); Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993); Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 660-61 (7th Cir. 1987), and cannot be [*31] used, without more, to establish the existence of a Section 1 agreement.

¹⁴ In a footnote, the Court explained:

HN10[] The concept of a meeting of the minds or a common scheme [to fix prices] in a distributor termination case includes more than a showing that the [nonterminated] distributor conformed to the [manufacturer's] suggested resale price. It means . . . that evidence must be presented [by the plaintiff that shows] that the distributor [not only] communicated its acquiescence or agreement, [but] that this [acquiescence] was [also] sought by the manufacturer.

Conversely, unambiguous evidence tends to point in a single direction--like a signpost.¹⁵ The Supreme Court has defined the absence of ambiguity as evidence which "tends to exclude the possibility" that the defendants acted independently for lawful business reasons, rather than in concert for unlawful purposes. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761. As Professor Areeda says:

Notwithstanding many difficulties in appraising the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence, we know what we are looking for: some level of commitment to a common course of action. The fact-finder may be perplexed by the evidence, but his reasoning will not be confused if he keeps clearly in mind that he is looking for a traditional agreement.

The analytical problem is that there is a "no man's land" between the traditional agreement and tacit coordination through recognized interdependence. The line between lawful interdependent behavior and unlawful commitment is not sharp. The former can often blend into the latter, because reciprocal assurances can be communicated by conduct rather than be words and remain "agreements" even though [*32] vague, incomplete, and riddled with qualifications and exceptions.

Id. § 1410 at 67. The crucial question is: "Who was in agreement with whom and about what?" Id. § 1409 at 59.

b. The Plaintiff's Evidence

What follows is the evidence [*33] that the Plaintiff has relied upon in an attempt to meet the requirements of Monsanto and Matsushita and to survive the Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment.¹⁶ It is summarized in a chronological fashion to give the reader a comprehensive view of the evidence Plaintiff discovered to prove its case and which this Court evaluated in reaching its decisions.¹⁷

[*34] (i) The Year 1991

In August of 1991, Tucker/Rocky, the largest distributor for Dunlop tires in the United States, attempted to purchase Nichols' business, which then consisted of just one warehouse located in Alsip, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago. Tucker/Rocky threatened to open its own warehouse in Chicago if Nichols declined to sell. Nichols declined to pursue negotiations with Tucker/Rocky. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 17. Tucker/Rocky then made good on its threat, opening its own Chicago warehouse (its 12th location) in August 1992. In May 1992, Nichols began planning to open a Phoenix, Arizona warehouse.

¹⁵ As a practical matter, it may be difficult to draw a distinction between direct and unambiguous circumstantial evidence, since the characterization depends upon the facts of an individual case. Cf. 6 Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 64 HN12 [+] ("Direct evidence [of an agreement includes] such [things] as documents, meetings, and participant testimony that defendants exchanged commitments or otherwise collaborated by some means other than making a marketplace decision."). In this case, the documents and testimony that will be reviewed do not manifest an agreement that is so obvious that the Court need not pause in reaching a decision under Section 1. Quite the contrary, the evidence in this case never exceeds the outer limit of ambiguity.

¹⁶ References to the Exhibits submitted in this case are as follows: Defendants' Joint Exhibits are marked "DX---"; Plaintiff's Exhibits are marked "PX---." Deposition testimony is designated by name and page number.

¹⁷ The Court has attempted to summarize the Plaintiff's most relevant evidence. The fact that every single piece of Plaintiff's evidence is not contained in this summary does not mean that the evidence was not evaluated by this Court. The Court has fully evaluated all the evidence cited by the Plaintiff in deciding the motions addressed in this Opinion and has followed the urging of Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of No. Am., 974 F.2d 1358, 1364 (3d Cir. 1992), to view the evidence as a whole.

In the meantime, a price war among distributors had developed regarding the sale of Dunlop tires.¹⁸ For instance, in September of 1991, Tucker/Rocky's monthly reports indicate that its Dunlop sales were dropping due to "deteriorating service level and competitive pressure." PX 252U. Reports in the following months bore the same complaints. An October 1991 report noted the existence of "severe price pressure on Dunlop." PX 251. A December 1991 report referred to "another 25% drop in Dunlop sales over the previous month. . . . Discounting by the competition has to be [*35] a big factor." PX 250U.

Despite its one-warehouse operation, the evidence indicates that Nichols successfully used discounting methods to undercut Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited in areas of the country where these large distributors were strongest. There is also deposition testimony that Tucker/Rocky was "unwilling to sell" at Nichols' prices and that Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited discussed the need to "clean up the market" with Pat Logue of Dunlop.

(ii) The Year 1992

In January 1992, Tucker/Rocky's [*36] monthly reports indicated that "if profits fell in 1991, [Dunlop] was probably to blame." PX 249U. In April 1992, Tucker/Rocky indicated that it was concerned about maintaining a "decent [profit] margin." PX 228. By November 1992, Bob Gregg found it necessary to send a memo to Tucker/Rocky's sales representatives to pass the word that "dealers should resent deals that are too low" and should "tell the opportunist distributor that the path to long term success is not short term deep discounts that actually hurt the dealer. Rather, if they want the business they must earn it through market stabilizing programs, service and support that helps a dealer short and long term." PX 280 (emphasis in original). Gregg also noted that dealers "should not switch orders from an industry supporter like Tucker/Rocky to an opportunistic offer." Id.

During the summer and fall of 1992, various meetings took place between Dunlop, Nichols, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited. For instance, in July or August 1992, Pat Logue of Dunlop met with Jack Jesse, the president of Nichols. Nichols did not mention the new warehouse at that time. On August 16, 1992, Logue attended Tucker/Rocky's open [*37] house for its new Chicago warehouse. On August 17, 1992, Logue held a business meeting with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited. On September 14, 1992, Nichols leased the new Phoenix warehouse. Later that month, at the IMAE trade show in Las Vegas, Nevada, Jesse told Logue that Nichols planned to open a new warehouse in Phoenix. In October 1992, Logue flew to Dallas to hold business meetings with Bob Nickell, the current chairman and past-president of Tucker/Rocky, and Bob Gregg, the president of Tucker/Rocky since October 1, 1992. In November of 1992, Nickell spoke with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited at a Dunlop distributor meeting in Hawaii. Fox recalled discussing only non-business matters with Nickell in Hawaii.

On November 14, 1992, Lee Walsh, a Parts Unlimited representative, wrote a letter to Jeff Fox, which stated:

Nichols Motorcycle supply has recently hired 2 Road Reps for this area. One in Washington and One in Oregon. While in Oregon this week I got my hands on the discount program that they are proposing to the dealers. (copy enclosed). I also did a price compare spread sheet so we could see where we stood (copy enclosed).

The pricing is bad enough, but they are [*38] also talking up the new Phoenix warehouse and are telling the dealers that they are looking to expand their warehouse locations and that Seattle is one of the target areas!

This is probably a big line of bull--but the dealers are sure listening.

I'm not concerned, but I thought you ought to know and should see how the pricing actually ends up.

Please show this to Jet.

Thanks,

Jeff.

PX 22.

¹⁸ This price war consisted of aggressive price discounting by Dunlop distributors to dealers nationwide. However, Dunlop discounting was particularly fierce in southern California, which was an important market for motorcycle tires. 12(N)(b)(3) P 20 (citing PX 601 a Dunlop Memorandum identifying Arizona (Phoenix, Scottsdale, Mesa, and Chandler); California (Los Angeles and San Jose); and Illinois (Chicago) as "key" markets). Southern California was a stronghold for Parts Unlimited. PX 6.

On December 28, 1992, Pat Logue, the National Sales Manager for Dunlop, issued the following Memorandum to all of Dunlop's distributors:

To: All Dunlop Motorcycle Tire Distributors

From: P.J. Logue

Date: December 28, 1992

Subject: 1993 Dunlop Distributor Motorcycle Tire/Tube Agreement

As we move into 1993, it is important that you understand Dunlop's plans for 1993. The tire replacement market is not going to grow in the predictable future.

Our distributor base is still at approximately the same level as it was when the market was 35% larger than it is today.

Because of this situation, it is our intention to reduce our account base before the September IMAE by at least two to three distributors. This is a very difficult decision [*39] but it is still one that must be made. In addition, anyone involved in sub-distribution will be cancelled. Clearly if we are concerned about the size of our existing direct distributor base, it would only make sense that "unapproved" sub-distribution base must be eliminated first.

You are encouraged to read the entire Motorcycle Tire/Tube Agreement. In particular, read point number 3. The channel of distribution that Dunlop will support and approve is detailed in this section.

Please return the signed agreement by January 8, 1993. After January 8th, all shipments will cease to distributors that have not returned agreements.

Thank you for both your understanding and cooperation.

Happy Holidays!

Patrick J. Logue

National Sales Manager

Dunlop Motorcycle Tires

PX 1.

(iii) The Year 1993

By the beginning of 1993, the ongoing price war had driven the resale price of Dunlop tires down. Decreased retail sales and "small dealer purchases from distributors" led to deep price cutting. PX 605 (Tucker/Rocky Feb. 1993 Report). On January 14, 1993, three days after Nichols signed its 1993 distributor agreement,¹⁹ Logue flew to [*40] Dallas to have dinner with Nickell, Gregg, and Andre Lacy, the owner of Tucker/Rocky's parent company. Logue testified that the four men discussed the termination of distributors and the pricing of Dunlop tires. Nickell and Gregg do not recall any such conversation.²⁰ Logue Dep. 985-88.

[*41] Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited also admit that they often complained to Dunlop about Nichols' pricing during this time frame. PX 240U (refers to "Nichols' ridiculous pricing"); PX 510 states that "our most frequent thorn is Nichols M/C in Chicago" due to deep discounting). By February 1993, Tucker/Rocky's President's Report indicated that the ongoing price war had reduced the profit margins for Tucker/Rocky to an "unacceptable" level. PX 605H.

¹⁹ This agreement contained an alleged jury trial waiver which is discussed at the end of this Opinion.

²⁰ In many instances, the testimony in this case is in conflict. Plaintiff claims that this conflict creates a credibility issue for the jury. Defendants correctly point out that Plaintiff cannot establish genuine issues of material fact with credibility arguments. Trans Aire Int'l, Inc. v. Northern Adhesive Co., Inc., 882 F.2d 1245, 1257 (7th Cir. 1989) (affirming entry of summary judgment and dismissing plaintiff's suggestion that deposition testimony relied on by the defendant is not credible); Walter v. Fiorenzo, 840 F.2d 427, 434 (7th Cir. 1988) ("A motion for summary judgment cannot be defeated merely by an opposing party's incantation of lack of credibility over a movant's supporting affidavit.").

On February 1, 1993, the two defendant distributors issued their annual published dealer price catalogs for that year. Tucker/Rocky's prices remained the same as its 1992 dealer resale prices. Parts Unlimited's prices, however, increased to reflect Dunlop's increased manufacturer's suggested dealer ("MSD") prices for 1993. The defendants argue that this disparity in pricing demonstrates the lack of a conspiracy. Nichols claims, however, that the disparity shows only that Tucker/Rocky reneged on the agreement to raise prices.

In February 1993, a new round of conversations between the defendants ensued. Pat Logue talked to Jeff Fox about Tucker/Rocky's published prices for Dunlop tires in early February 1993 at the Cincinnati dealer show. [*42] According to Logue, Fox pointed out that Parts Unlimited's published prices were significantly higher than Tucker/Rocky's published prices. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(g). Fox admits that he recalled talking to Pat Logue about price levels, but did not recall when this conversation took place. Id. Mike Buckley (who did not yet work for Dunlop) and Jeff Fox also spoke together at the Cincinnati show. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 31(j). In addition, Pat Logue's daybook contains a notation for February 15, 1993, stating "Call J. Fox." Id. at P 31(g)(citing PX 153).²¹ Logue testified that he assumed he entered the notation because he received a message to call Fox, but could not recall the subject matter of any message or phone call. Id. Then, on February 16, 1993, Nickell, Tucker/Rocky's chairman, attended a sports banquet in Buffalo, New York, as Logue's guest. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(h). On February 17, 1993, Tucker/Rocky's phone records indicate that someone at Tucker/Rocky (although the source of the call could not be identified) placed a telephone call to the Parts Unlimited main switchboard that lasted 17 minutes and 32 seconds. There is no evidence regarding the subject matter or the persons [*43] involved in that telephone call. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 31(i). Two days later, on February 19, 1993, Logue and Fox once again discussed Tucker/Rocky prices at a trade show.

Standing alone, these conversations, despite their coincidental (and perhaps suspicious) timing, are not probative of the issue before us: whether the defendants agreed to fix prices and terminate Nichols. At most, the admissions on record indicate that Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited felt it was necessary to point out to Logue that Tucker/Rocky's published prices were lower than those published by Parts Unlimited. This evidence, taken at face value, reflects only Parts Unlimited's complaint and general expectation, which it believed Dunlop should hear about, that Tucker/Rocky should raise its prices in 1993. Logue's subsequent and contemporaneous discussions with Nickell of Tucker/Rocky, and Tucker/Rocky's mysterious phone [*44] call to Parts Unlimited, while sufficient to raise a question in the factfinder's mind, do not tend to point in the direction of an agreement to fix prices. Without evidence regarding the subject of these conversations, the suspicious timing alone does not take Plaintiff's Section 1 case past Monsanto.

The February conversations, however, do not stand alone; they provide the context for the two events which took place on March 22, 1993:²² [*45] (1) Parts Unlimited published its revised dealer price list for 1993, in which it dropped its prices (including its "best quantity" price) significantly below the MSD price, thereby equalling or undercutting Tucker/Rocky's published February 1, 1993, prices--in most cases by mere cents, PX 444;²³ and (2) the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter to Pat Logue (PX 4), the first documented communication between the three defendants since the February 19, 1993, trade show meeting between Logue and Fox.

(iv) March 1993 -- June 15, 1993

The following evidence is a list of events, documents and testimony that date from March 1993 through June 15, 1994.

²¹ The daybook also contains notations regarding routine contact with Nichols' personnel. 12(N)(b)(3) Reply P 31(g).

²² Parts Unlimited claims that it issued the revised price list on March 19, 1993, rather than March 22, 1993. Because the portion of that memorandum (PX 444) dated March 19, 1993, is redacted, it is impossible for the Court to make this determination. However, the portion of the memo dated March 22, 1993, appears to confirm the revision just as well.

²³ According to Plaintiff, Parts Unlimited had never before issued revised prices prior to publication of its next annual catalog and never before had its "best quantity" prices (the subject matter of the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter) been the same as Tucker/Rocky's prices--they were generally lower.

(a) March 15, 1993: Tucker/Rocky Article Quoting Bob Gregg (PX 382)

An in-house article by Tucker/Rocky, regarding a Tucker/Rocky meeting, reports:

Bob [Gregg] indicated that Tucker/Rocky will immediately undertake to require stable pricing and minimal discounting at the retail level of all house brands sold by Tucker/Rocky.

12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 39. Gregg apparently stated: "Tucker/Rocky will take a leadership role in bringing price stability to major house brands." Id.

(b) The March 22, 1993 Gregg [*46] Letter (PX 4C)

On or around March 22, 1993, Robert Gregg, the president of Tucker/Rocky, wrote a two-page letter to Patrick Logue, then the national sales manager for Dunlop, and enclosed a price analysis comparing Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's 1992 dealer resale prices with each other and then against Dunlop's suggested dealer price. This letter is reprinted in its entirety:

March 22, 1993

Mr. Pat Logue

Dunlop Tire & Rubber Co.

P.O. Box 1109

Buffalo, NY 14240

Re: Dealer Price Analysis

Dear Pat,

Enclosed please find a detailed analysis of current Tucker/Rocky dealer prices, relative to Dunlop suggested dealer, Parts Unlimited, and Tucker/Rocky 1992. Note: Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky are both published quantity prices. The following observations are of interest:

1. Tucker/Rocky 1993 prices are equal to Tucker/Rocky 1992 prices. That is, it confirms Tucker/Rocky has not passed along Dunlop's 1993 price increase.
2. Excluding ATV and Scooter, 213 tires are in the analysis. Of those the number and percentage of tires fall into the following categories:

TR Prices Greater Than PU	22	10%
TR Prices 0%-3.5% Lower Than PU	112	52%
TR Prices 3.5%-5.0% Lower Than PU	36	17%
TR Prices 5.0% + Lower Than PU	32	15%
TR Prices With Errors 	11	5%

* All K591R and K127

* Adjusted Approx. 3/12/93

[*47]

As you read this, 85% of Tucker/Rocky prices are higher or within 5% of Parts Unlimited. 15% (K591R and K127) are more than 5% lower than Parts Unlimited.

Conclusion: Tucker/Rocky would like to pass on the 1993 Dunlop price increase at this time.

(Page Two)

Problem: Tucker/Rocky pricing relative to Parts Unlimited is not relevant. Single warehouse distributors who dump tires at disruptively low and predatory prices, thousands of miles from their warehouse and service area continue to damage Dunlop's marketing objectives.

Solution: Dunlop is on record that Dunlop has too many distributors. We strongly urge Dunlop to take the action Dunlop has already identified as necessary to bring Dunlop distribution in line with market conditions. Please take into consideration the percentage of tires sold outside a distributor's service area (i.e., more than 500 miles from any warehouse) and the degree of disruptive and predatory pricing.

Tucker/Rocky will increase the amount of resources Tucker/Rocky spends to promote and service Dunlop tires to assure Dunlop increased sales and market share for Dunlop via the resulting distributor network. This [*48] extra Tucker/Rocky expenditure on behalf of Dunlop market share will increase interbrand competition.²⁴

Sincerely,

Robert R. Gregg

President

RRG:ms

enclosure

PX 4C (emphasis in original).

During the course of discovery, the Plaintiff found copies of this letter and the price analysis in the files of both Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky. Plaintiff also found a copy of the first page of the letter in the files of Parts Unlimited. PX 4A. No one knows how (or why) this page was sent to Parts Unlimited, nor who sent it (no envelope with the names of the addressee or addressor was found). The Parts Unlimited copy has a handwritten notation on the front stating:

3/26--Fred-Donna C. rec'd this in her mail today!-? (She didn't get envelope, so we don't know who it was addressed to) Janice.

[*49] (PX 4B). "Donna C." is Donna Colclasure, the person in charge of credit inquiries at Parts Unlimited. 12(M) P 87. "Janice" is the secretary to Jeff Fox, the current president of Parts Unlimited and Fred Fox's son. "Fred" is Fred Fox, chairman and former president of Parts Unlimited. In Fred Fox's handwriting, the following is written: "Lynne Forward to Jeff." There is no evidence that Parts Unlimited received a copy of either the second page of the letter or the attached price analysis, both of which Pat Logue at Dunlop did receive. Id. Pat Logue also gave a copy of the letter to his successor at Dunlop, Michael Buckley. 12(M) P 83. Logue testified that he never asked for the letter, 12(M) P 79, but spoke to Gregg after receiving it and was told that Gregg wanted to show that Tucker/Rocky's prices "aren't that different than those of Parts Unlimited." Logue Dep. at 301. Gregg denied any such conversation. Gregg Dep. at 328-29. Gregg also denied ever discussing the letter with Parts Unlimited. Gregg Dep. at 356.

In his deposition, however, Gregg explained his motivation for sending the letter. For instance:

Question: "Why were you comparing the prices for Logue?"

[*50] Answer: "I thought he would find it interesting."

Question: "Why?"

Answer: "Because he's in the tire business."

Gregg Dep. at 269-70; Transcript at 20.

(c) March 22, 1993: Parts Unlimited Revises Price List (PX 444)

On March 22, 1993, Parts Unlimited issued a revision of its February 1, 1993, price list to conform its prices with those issued by Tucker/Rocky on the same date. The revision went into effect on March 23, 1993. Parts Unlimited's prices were higher than Tucker/Rocky's February 1, 1993, prices with respect to the "any" price (quantity of 1), with about 2-6 cents difference. On the "best quantity" price (large orders) the differences are negligible. The parties agree that the best quantity price is the important price because most dealer discounts are applied to that number. Fox Dep. at 677; Nickell Dep. at 222.

(d) March 31, 1993: Phone Call (PX 624)

²⁴ Interbrand competition means competition between different manufacturers; intrabrand competition means competition among different distributors selling the same product.

On March 31, 1993, Bob Gregg at Tucker/Rocky made a phone call to the Parts Unlimited switchboard; the call lasted 18 minutes. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply at P 31(k). Gregg cannot remember making the call. Gregg Dep. at 455-69, 477.

(e) Late March 1993: Mike Buckley Replaces Pat [*51] Logue as Dunlop's National Sales Manager

In late March 1993, Michael Buckley was hired by Dunlop to replace Logue. Before hiring Buckley, Logue talked with Robert Gregg and Robert Nickell at Tucker/Rocky and Jeff Fox at Parts Unlimited to inquire whether their contacts with Buckley had been agreeable. Buckley received a favorable recommendation.

(f) Late March 1993: Gregg Phone Call to Buckley Regarding Termination of Distributors

Around the time of Gregg's March 22, 1993, Letter, Gregg telephoned Mike Buckley, who had just replaced Logue as Dunlop's national sales manager. According to Buckley, Gregg wanted to know if Dunlop was going to terminate any distributors. (Buckley, 91-95). Gregg, however, denied the conversation. (Gregg, 247-49; 327).

(g) April 1, 1993: Buckley Memo To Dunlop Distributors (PX 2)

On April 1, 1993, Mike Buckley sent a memo to all Dunlop distributors introducing himself as Dunlop's new national sales manager. PX 2. In this memo, Buckley indicated that he would be meeting with the distributors to become acquainted. He also stated that he would continue with Logue's plan to move Dunlop's distribution "to a more limited focus" in the [*52] coming months. Buckley also specifically requested a "current price list" in order to update his files.

(h) The April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter (PX 5)

On April 8, 1993, Mike Buckley received a letter from Bob Gregg regarding "1993 Suggested Dealer Pricing." This letter is reprinted in its entirety:

April 8, 1993
Mr. Mike Buckley
National Sales Manager
Dunlop Motorcycle Tires
P.O. Box 1109
Buffalo, N.Y. 14240-1109
Re: 1993 Suggested Dealer Pricing

Dear Mike:

Enclosed please find analysis of published "each" prices in the market. In most cases, Tucker/Rocky publishes manufacturer suggested dealer (MSD) prices. As you know, our current price list is from 1992 due to stock carryover.

It has been our opinion that Dunlop MSD is unrealistically high versus actual market conditions. Column #2 is approximately 4.5% below Dunlop 1993 MSD and seems to be a more realistic level.

Just a suggestion to discuss:

How about issuing a new 1993 MSD price list that (without changing distributor cost) lowers MSD about 4.5 %. This would be an official lowering of MSD, making Dunlop dealer pricing more competitive without [*53] reducing the amount for which Dunlop sells tires to distributors.

It would also make our imminent 1993 price increase more logical as we could just publish Dunlop MSD.

Please give it some thought and call me as we need to make a decision soon as to new prices.

Best regards,
Robert R. Gregg
President
RRG:ms
enclosure

P.S. Our Dunlop sales were up 15% and 16% in February and March.

PX 5.

The letter also includes a handwritten post-script, asking Buckley to find out if Parts Unlimited's new published prices are intended to be an "April Special" or "long term repricing." There is no evidence that Parts Unlimited received a copy of this letter.

i) April Phone Call Between Buckley & Gregg Regarding April 8, 1992 Gregg Letter

Mr. Buckley remembers, and Mr. Gregg does not, one telephone conversation in which Mr. Buckley said he would disregard the suggestions in Mr. Gregg's April 8, 1993, Letter. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(1). Buckley recalls telling Gregg that "it didn't make sense to change a suggested dealer pricing in the middle of the year. There's no good reason to do that." Buckley Dep. at 139.

(j) April 30, 1993: Logue [*54] Conversation with Motorcycle Stuff Regarding Tucker/Rocky's Low Prices

Mr. Dodd of Motorcycle Stuff testified that he complained about Tucker/Rocky's low prices and asked Mr. Logue to take action. According to Mr. Dodd, Mr. Logue said that he would try to get Tucker/Rocky to increase its prices. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(m).

(k) May 6, 1993: Buckley Visits Nichols, Meets Jack Jesse, and Writes Call Reports (PX 14)

On May 6, 1993, Mike Buckley made a personal visit to Nichols in Chicago. He met Jack Jesse and other Nichols personnel, discussed Dunlop's goals, the price war and Nichols' concerns about the market.

After this meeting, Mr. Buckley made two handwritten notes of the interview designated as "call reports." These call reports state:

May 6--Meeting in Chicago w/Kenny Anderson, Terry Baisley, Jack Jesse.

Nichols staff was adamant about the fact that it is D > responsibility to improve or control the inability of Dist. to make acceptable profit margins on D> Tires. Nichols felt that T/R, P/U, M.Stuff were actively discounting D> at close to Dist. cost to all dealers. Nichols was adamant that they are not involved w/mail order houses. They feel that the [*55] 3 previously mentioned dist. all sell mail order houses at cost. Nichols feels its D> responsibility to address this. Jack Jesse made specific mention that if we don't address the mailorder and discounting problems that very soon Nichols will have to stop selling D>. ²⁵ He also asked me what I felt sold our Tires. I replied--Advertising, Racing, Club + PR involvement, word of mouth. He replied Bull He feels Dealers only! Sell in this system and we need to do everything possible to make them more profitable. While at this meeting we discussed Pro Sport--aline of offroad apparel and acc. exclusively imported by Nichols. While touring their warehouse I observed a container of Alpinestar Boots which they had Gray-Marketed in from Europe to sell against P/U--the exclusive importer of Alpinestar in the U.S. Aggressive Tone Throughout meeting.

[*56] (DN00438).

Meeting--Nichols Dist.
Terry Baisley
Kenny Anderson
Jack Jesse

Topics

Gave Dist. Interview
Talked Quite a bit about Mail order Problem
Nichols doesn't sell Mail order.

²⁵ There is no other evidence in the record that any other distributor, including Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, ever threatened to stop selling Dunlop if Dunlop did not respond to their price complaints or other grievances.

Nichols has much concern about where current trends are taking D>
Nichols Does not agree That D> has a "loyal" cust base
Nichols Feels That dealers will begin switching to Profitable brands.
Nichols is now importing their own Private label tire--"Kings"
This Tire is Mail order Prohibited.
Also heavily involved in their own Private label M/C acces.
inc.--"Pro Sport"
Nichols has 30 Road Reps 10 Phone
Nichols feels they are a National Dist.
I sent Nichols 100 T.T.L. Brochures.

Nichols feels that P/U and T/R are causing All The Problem with Discounting out there.

(DN 00439). No call reports were prepared for any other distributor. (Buckley, 272-73). There was, however, a form filled out for the interview with Motorcycle Stuff. PX 15.

(1) May 6, 1993: Buckley Spends Evening with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited

Late in the afternoon on May 6th, Buckley visited [*57] Parts Unlimited's Janesville, Wisconsin office and went out for supper and drinks with Jeff Fox. Mr. Buckley called ahead to set up the meeting. Mr. Fox recalled having dinner with Buckley. Mr. Fox also remembered that Mr. Buckley told him he was making a trip through the area visiting Dunlop distributors and mentioned his visit with Nichols that day, commenting that ". . . Jack Jesse was a real piece of work or something to that effect." Mr. Buckley also remembered telling Mr. Fox that he had visited Nichols on May 6 and also telling him that the visit was ". . . rather strange." Buckley denies discussing the termination of distributors with Mr. Fox. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(n).

(m) May 7, 1993: Buckley Visits Tucker/Rocky Warehouse in Chicago

The next day, May 7, 1993, Mr. Buckley made a visit to Tucker/Rocky's Chicago warehouse and had lunch with the Bensenville, Illinois branch manager. There is no relevant testimony regarding their conversation. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(o).

(n) Early May 1993: "Firm Commitments" (PX 17)

In early May 1993 Buckley called Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited and Bob Gregg of Tucker/Rocky seeking commitments from these distributors to absorb the sales [*58] volume of any unnamed distributor to be terminated. Fox and Gregg gave Buckley "firm commitments" which Buckley memorialized in a document designated PX 17. Fox admits this conversation. Gregg denies it. Although defendants collectively admit that they individually discussed the absorption of sales volume of unnamed distributors to be terminated with Buckley, they do not admit a common commitment to fix prices or terminate distributors. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 31(p).

(o) Late May 1993: Tucker/Rocky Issues Revised Price List (PX 214; PX 645)

In late May of 1993, shortly before Nichols' termination, Tucker/Rocky published a new dealer resale price list on Dunlop tires, which significantly raised its prices above those published on February 1, 1993.

(p) May 20, 1993: Buckley's "Price War" Memo (PX 3)

On May 20, 1993, Mike Buckley sent the following memo to all Dunlop distributors entitled "Price Wars." Buckley attached a Wall Street Journal Article to the memo entitled "How to Avoid a Price War." Buckley wrote:

Enclosed please find some "food for thought" regarding the negative effects of attempting to gain market share by lowering price. I think [the article] [*59] raises some extremely valid points to the long term damage we do when we attempt these types of practices. Particularly alarming is the fact that almost never do we accomplish what we attempt (market share gain) when we do business in this way. The only thing we do is establish a "lower perceived value" for our products.

I'm sure you'll all agree that this doesn't do anything positive for our future growth. I'm not pointing fingers here; I'm just offering some more information. We can never have enough information.

The Wall Street Journal Article goes on to suggest:

"All too often, this kind of price war has no real winner except the customer."

PX 3.

(q) Buckley's Memos to Robin Mitchell (PX 17; PX 18)

In May 1993, Mike Buckley wrote two memos to Robin Mitchell proposing to terminate Nichols as a distributor. The first memo, titled "Reasons For Change" states:

1. Overall market size shrinking. Less sales available for same number of distributors when market was bigger.
2. National distributor expansion provides excellent regional coverage (overnight service anywhere in U.S.)
3. Nichols only real weapon right now--discounting [*60] .
4. Nichols recently opened warehouse in Phoenix market. Recent meeting with Nichols officials revealed plans to expand further. Next market--Dallas.
5. Recent meeting also revealed Dunlop and Nichols are at odds on how to continue to grow Dunlop business. Dunlop--Advertising, racing, public relations.
- Nichols--None of the above, stop mail-order.
6. Nichols focus right now on off-shore produced "house brands," pro-sport off-road apparel, kings--private label tires, etc. In this scenario, Dunlop gets used as a loss leader to leverage sales for "exclusive" products.
7. Nichols claims no mail-order solicitation--invoices prove otherwise.
8. Firm commitment from T/R and P/U to absorb volume of any cancelled distributor.
9. Cycle Products--credit situation makes the decision easy.

PX 17 (DN 02279).

The second memo is dated June 15, 1993, and the subject is "Motorcycle Distributor Reduction."

As a follow-up to our discussion of the above-mentioned topic two weeks ago, I want to update you on the current situation.

As I told you, Pat Logue and I agreed that since the motorcycle market continues to shrink, it has now become [*61] necessary to cut the number of distributors we have. This is a list of the reasons for this move:

1. Less sales available for the same number of distributors has led to aggressive discounting tactics.
2. Expansion of national distributors allows us complete coverage off 11 parts of the country (overnight service).
3. Discounting has produced a low "perceived value" for premium Dunlop product.

The two distributors I am cancelling immediately are Nichols Distributing and P.J. Cycle Products.

Nichols is currently viewed as the leaders of the "sales by discounting" philosophy. By analyzing invoices from all over the country, it is clear that Nichols is using Dunlop as a "loss leader" ²⁶ to leverage sales for their own private label--high margin products. In addition, Nichols management does not agree with Dunlop's marketing ideas for future growth of the Dunlop brand.

P.J. Cycle Products has gone through recent financial problems including restructuring. A continual habit of slow pay still exists and from a credit risk standpoint, this decision is much easier than the Nichols decision.

It is my feeling that this move will send a message [*62] to our current distributor base that we are very interested in maintaining profitability for our customers, in addition to our premium image which we've worked so hard to achieve. This will create more Dunlop loyalty.

²⁶ Buckley's testimony regarding his "loss leader" theory is found in his deposition at DX 13 at 114-121.

Please contact me if you have further questions.

PX 18 (DN 00443). In deposition testimony, Buckley explained that he terminated distributors to achieve "an increased sense of loyalty to Dunlop" among the remaining distributors. Buckley Dep. at 167.

(r) June 15, 1993: Dunlop Terminates Nichols (PX 16)

In a letter dated June 15, 1993, Dunlop informed Nichols that Nichols was terminated as a Dunlop distributor, effective in five days. After 30 years of service, Dunlop's explanation, given by Robin Mitchell, was that Nichols had been terminated because of its price discounting and that Tucker/Rocky had given Dunlop the invoices showing Nichols' low prices. Dunlop terminated [*63] another distributor, P.J. Cycle (Cycle Products), which also discounted Dunlop tires. P.J. Cycle was in Chapter 11 and delinquent in payment.

(v) Post-Termination Evidence

(a) June 1993: Tucker/Rocky Branch Manager's Report (PX 277)

A Tucker/Rocky branch manager, Bob Crawford, wrote to Nickell and Gregg reporting that a Tucker/Rocky salesman, Jay Crist was "glad to see Nichols problem being resolved and says thanks." PX 277 at 515. In the same report, Mr. Crawford wrote that another salesman, Kevin Christensen, was "also elated over the Nichols/Dunlop deal," and "hopes Shoei (Tucker/Rocky's other largest selling line) will follow suit or put pressure on their distributors." Crawford Dep. at 516.

(b) Joe Piazza (PX 540)

A Tucker/Rocky regional manager (Joe Piazza) indicated that Tucker/Rocky was aware of Nichols' termination before it occurred. Piazza wrote in a July 1993 report:

There are several large accounts that I am anticipating to recapture the Dunlop business away from Nichols Distributing now that their distribution restriction has become public knowledge.

(c) Tucker/Rocky's Missing Branch Manager Reports

Plaintiff [*64] claims that Piazza's reports from May and June 1993 are missing and that the July statement indicates that the earlier reports would have mentioned Nichols' termination. Piazza regularly prepared reports through the fall of 1993. Other reports from Chicago, Michigan and Portland are missing, and there are no reports from Corona, California and Maryland.

(d) September 1993: Trade Show Memo (PX 206)

A couple months after Nichols was terminated, Buckley wrote a memo to all (remaining) Dunlop distributors which says:

For 1994, our goals in marketing, as I mentioned earlier[,] take on a new focus. We will be committed to the dealer network, developing closer relationships with dealers through seminars, dealer visits, hospitality events, dealer incentive programs, so on. We're also going to do everything in our power to use our resources to drive customers into dealerships. By doing this, in conjunction with dealer education, we hope to combat the mail order issue.

PX 206. Plaintiff argues that this evidence is proof that Buckley's reasons for terminating Nichols, as reflected in his memo to Robin Mitchell in May of 1993, were a pretext for illegal termination [*65] pursuant to a pricefixing agreement.

(e) Metzeler Memo of October 5, 1993 on "Price Stability" (PX 303)

The "Metzeler Memo" was written by Guido Carissimo, a Metzeler official, recalling a meeting he had with Bob Gregg, president of Tucker/Rocky, and Greg Blackwell, president of Metzeler, on September 29, 1993. This memo states in relevant part:

Bob hopes that with Mike Buckley Dunlop (as already discussed between them) will look for more price stability in 1994 (Dunlop has gained market share in 1993 but made many dealer angry).

PX 303. Defendants have raised a hearsay objection to the admission of this testimony pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 802. However, for purposes of this ruling, the Court finds this memo admissible as a business record. Fed. R. Evid. 803(6).

(f) Tucker/Rocky Memo Regarding "Market Stabilizing Programs" (PX 280)

In November 1992, Gregg issued a memo to Tucker/Rocky sales personnel suggesting ways to deal with "super low prices" of competitors and suggesting that dealers tell Tucker/Rocky competitors that "if they want the business they must earn it through market stabilizing programs."

(g) Dunlop Raises MSD [*66] Mid-Year

In October 1993, Dunlop raised its MSD price even though Buckley testified that there was "no good reason" to do so in the middle of the year. Buckley Dep. at 139.

(h) Rick Ward (DX 36)

Rick Ward, a Parts Unlimited Sales representative, admits that in early November 1993, shortly after the Long Beach Trade Show held at the end of October 1993, he talked with Jerry Stewart, a dealer (with inadmissible testimony) about the termination of Nichols. According to Ward, Stewart complained that Nichols had been terminated because Nichols' prices were so low. Specifically, Ward and Stewart compared specific tiring pricing--"What I was able to sell it to him at versus what he could buy it at from Nichols; us always being, you know, much more expensive than what he could buy it from the Nichols organization." Ward also admits that there was a "one-year period" in which Nichols was his most aggressive competitor for Dunlop tires. DX 36, Ward at 62.

(i) 1994 Price Increases

In January 1994, Dunlop raised its MSD prices again (by approximately 3-5%). PX 645. Similarly, on February 1, 1994, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited published annual catalogs in which both [*67] distributors raised their prices by significant margins. Parts Unlimited raised its catalog prices by 15 percent or more across the board. PX 645; PX 356. Tucker/Rocky increased its prices by approximately 10 percent. PX 209. Both distributors also incorporated the MSD price as part of their price lists. Parts Unlimited adopted Dunlop's suggested dealer price as its "best quantity" price. PX 356; PX 645. Tucker/Rocky adopted Dunlop's suggested dealer price as its "each" price (the price for less than a quantity of 25). PX 645; PX 209. The "best quantity" price is the important price, because discounts are usually applied to that price. Fox Dep. at 677; Nickell Dep. at 222. Once again, Fox became "very upset" once he saw Tucker/Rocky's published prices. Several weeks after the initial publication, Parts Unlimited published a revised version, which priced all popular brands of Dunlop at a level commensurate with the prices published by Tucker/Rocky with respect to the "best quantity" price. PX 645.

(j) Tom Peterich

In the fall of 1993, Tom Peterich, a dealer in Northern California, told another Parts Unlimited representative, Jim Hutzer, that there would be a price hike by [*68] LeMans (Parts Unlimited) of 15 percent in the coming year. Peterich Dep. at 10-14, 66-67, 71-72.

(vi) Inadmissible Testimony

The following evidence tendered by Nichols has been determined to be inadmissible and therefore was not relied upon by the Court in reaching its decision.²⁷

²⁷ Nevertheless, the Court expressly notes that even the addition of this ambiguous evidence would not have altered the conclusions it has reached herein.

(a) James Stewart

This testimony is inadmissible, because the witness statement was not signed and Stewart does not admit to the statements transcribed in the statement prepared by Plaintiff's counsel. See Fed. R. Evid. 802. Nonetheless, Stewart allegedly testified as follows:

In approximately April of 1994, the sales representative for Parts Unlimited, Rick Ward, visited me at Cycle Country's store in Salem. He told me that Parts Unlimited had issued a new price list on Dunlop tires effective in April 1994, which changed the prices [*69] on Dunlop tires from their catalog prices published in February 1994. He said to me that Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited had "agreed" that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited would increase their prices on Dunlop tires in 1994, and that Parts Unlimited's catalog prices reflected that agreement, and that after Parts Unlimited had published its catalog prices for Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky didn't raise their prices like they said they would. Mr. Ward also said that Parts Unlimited then issued the new price list for Dunlop with lowered prices on Dunlop to the level of Tucker/Rocky's prices. Just he and I were present during the conversation. Mr. Ward gave me a copy of Parts Unlimited's new price list, which reflected lower prices for Dunlop tires than in the February 1994 catalog.

PX 456.

(b) Rocky Trevino (PX 622)

This is an affidavit by a dealer who stated that a different Parts Unlimited representative, Jon Hanson, told him in January of 1994, that "there was going to be a big increase in Dunlop tires, and that both Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky would be increasing their prices on Dunlop tires by approximately 15%." Parts Unlimited strongly contests [*70] the admission of this testimony under Fed. R. Evid. 801\(d\)\(2\). Parts contends that this affidavit is facially ambiguous and Hanson was not involved in pricing decisions (so his remarks were not within the scope of his agency). Parts Unlimited's evidentiary arguments are well taken. This evidence will be excluded.

(c) Terry Baisley - William Giacomelli Conversation (PX 643)

Terry Baisley, Nichols' national sales manager, testified that in June or July 1994, he had a telephone conversation with William Giacomelli, a former branch manager at Tucker/Rocky. During the course of the conversation, Giacomelli told Baisley that Robert Gregg had told him that he (Gregg) was responsible for pressuring Dunlop to terminate Nichols as a distributor. PX 643. This testimony is also inadmissible hearsay under Fed. R. Evid. 802.

c. Analysis

In this case, the "combination" of Monsanto and Matsushita is deadly. The evidence in this case is largely if not completely circumstantial, and most of it is ambiguous. The justifiable inferences that can be drawn from it, even when viewed as a whole according to Plaintiff's time line and taken in the light most favorable to [*71] the Plaintiff, are equally consistent with Defendant's assertions of independent and interdependent conduct. See Market Force, 906 F.2d at 1173 HN13 [↑] ("conscious parallelism by itself is not enough to support an antitrust conspiracy case. . . [nor does] evidence of informal communications among several parties . . . unambiguously support an inference of conspiracy"). Although the Court has some suspicions that the defendants may have conspired to terminate Nichols in an uncoordinated effort to affect prices, the evidence presented to the Court is not sufficient to show that the defendants implemented and enforced a pricefixing agreement by terminating Nichols, given the standards set forth in Monsanto and Matsushita. Mere suspicion does not provide the basis from which a reasonable inference of agreement can be drawn, no matter how well-intentioned these suspicions may be.

The central question in this case is whether the Defendants agreed to raise dealer resale prices and to terminate Nichols in violation of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff concedes that there is no distinction between its proof of a vertical agreement and its proof of a horizontal agreement. After careful [*72] review, the Court concludes that there is no unambiguous evidence of a horizontal agreement between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to fix prices or to terminate Nichols.²⁸ Plaintiff is therefore left with a vertical conspiracy claim involving the three defendants. The proof of a vertical conspiracy must also fail. First, there is simply no evidence that Parts Unlimited conspired with Dunlop (and with Tucker/Rocky through Dunlop) to terminate Nichols. Without proof of a termination agreement, Nichols cannot sustain an antitrust pricefixing action against Parts Unlimited. Second, although the vertical conspiracy case against Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky is stronger, because there is some proof of collusion on the issue of termination and pricefixing, this evidence is also ultimately ambiguous and therefore insufficient to prove an agreement under Monsanto and Matsushita, because the limited inferences, added up, do not tend to exclude the possibility of independent action.

[*73] We begin by reviewing the evidence of a horizontal agreement, then discuss the absence of proof on the issue of termination against Parts Unlimited, and conclude by addressing the central question in this case: whether the evidence is sufficient to show a vertical agreement between Tucker/Rocky and Dunlop to fix prices and to terminate Nichols pursuant to that agreement. On all questions, we find that Plaintiff's evidence has failed to prove the per se theories alleged under Count I.

(i) The Horizontal Agreement

Plaintiff alleges that there is a horizontal agreement between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to raise and stabilize the dealer resale prices of Dunlop tires. During oral argument, Plaintiff argued that the horizontal agreement is supported by "evidence that there were direct communications [between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited] and [indirect] communications through Dunlop between Tucker and Parts, . . ." Transcript at 9. There is no horizontal agreement in this case because the direct communications between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited do not provide any evidence of illegal conduct. Cf. Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., 8 F.2d 1217, 1220 (7th Cir. 1993)(holding that restraint alleged by dealer constituted per se horizontal pricefixing conspiracy). Similarly, the indirect communications between the two distributors through Dunlop do not manifest a horizontal agreement, because the presence of Dunlop reflects a vertical arrangement. See Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 678 F.2d 742 (1982)(noting factual difference between a horizontal and vertical conspiracy). There are only two relevant examples of direct communication between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited in which Dunlop was not present: two telephone calls and several conversations at trade show meetings in early 1993. The telephone calls, although significant with respect to the time period in which they were made and the context in which they occurred, do not provide any evidence of a horizontal conspiracy because there is no testimony indicating who called whom or what was said during those conversations.²⁹ Even if price had been discussed, at most, these telephone calls provided a mere opportunity to conspire. 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1417 at 97. Similarly, the trade show meetings fall under [*75] the category of "informal communications" which have been held to be, at best, ambiguous evidence of a conspiracy. See Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1172 (7th Cir. 1990) (evidence of informal communications among several parties does not unambiguously support an inference of a conspiracy); Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 662 (7th Cir. 1987) (evidence of informal communications discussing complaints about competitors prices is not sufficient evidence to raise an inference that there was an "agreement to set, control, fix, maintain, or stabilize prices"); Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc., 878 F.2d 801, 805-06 (4th Cir. 1989) (evidence that dealers agreed with a ban on discounters not sufficient to support the inference of a conspiracy). The Court therefore concludes that these conversations also merely provide opportunities for collusion rather than unambiguous circumstantial evidence from which the inference of an agreement or concerted action can be drawn. Consequently, Nichols has failed to prove a horizontal agreement between Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky.

²⁸ Plaintiff suggests that the Court need not find evidence of an agreement to terminate Nichols, because an agreement to terminate discounting distributors like Nichols is sufficient. Although we agree with this proposition, there is no significant difference in this case between the two agreements, because an agreement does not exist under either theory.

²⁹ During their depositions, both Fred Fox and Bob Gregg guessed what these conversations were about. Fox asserts that the February phone call involved a conversation between Jim and Sharon Ricci who left Parts Unlimited and were at that time talking to their prospective employer, Tucker/Rocky, in February 1993. Gregg speculates that the March phone call covered the subject of "SBS brake pads." Parts Unlimited was the exclusive distributor for these pads, and Tucker/Rocky wanted to sell them. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply at P 31(i); Transcript at 141.

[*76] (ii) The Vertical Agreement

Because there is no evidence of a horizontal agreement in this case, Plaintiff's Sherman Act Section 1 claims are limited to vertical conduct between Dunlop and one or both of the defendant distributors. In a vertical arrangement, both distributors need not have participated in the alleged conspiracy. For purposes of per se liability in this case, however, the evidence must show that at least one of the defendant distributors agreed with Dunlop to terminate Nichols and fix prices.³⁰ The evidence of a vertical agreement between Dunlop and Parts Unlimited to terminate Nichols is wholly lacking. Parts Unlimited is therefore entitled to summary judgment on Count I. Similarly, although the evidence of a vertical agreement to terminate Nichols between Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky is stronger, this evidence is also ambiguous. Finally, Nichols has no standing to assert that a pricefixing agreement caused an antitrust injury, either under the per se rule or the rule of reason, without a termination agreement. Under the Plaintiff's theory, the antitrust injury in this case resulted when Nichols was terminated because, without Nichols' aggressive [*77] price competition, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were able to raise prices and use their market power to force the smaller distributors to stop discounting or face termination. We will now review the evidence that is material to these determinations.

(a) There is no evidence of parallelism supporting the inference of an agreement to terminate Nichols or to fix prices.

"Judicial scrutiny of alleged concerted action, undertaken to determine whether it was the result of an agreement, is an intricate endeavor." Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1011 (3d Cir. 1994). The intricacy in this case involves timing: the timing of the defendants' conduct in an extremely interdependent market. If a price agreement exists in this case, it is reflected by the way the parties behaved in the market from December 28, 1992 through [*78] June 15, 1993. However, parallel behavior in an interdependent market, by itself, is not sufficient to prove the existence of an agreement to fix prices, Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, 971 F.2d 37, 50 (7th Cir. 1992), and the Supreme Court has HN14 [↑] "never held that proof of parallel business behavior conclusively establishes agreement or, phrased differently, that such behavior itself constitutes a Sherman Act offense." Id. (quoting Theatre Enter., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 541 (1954)). However, parallelism in an interdependent market plus conspiratorial motivation and acts against self-interest may provide the basis from which to infer an agreement under Monsanto and Matsushita. 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1434 at 213.

i) Market Theory

The traditional agreement sought by conspiracy law involves some kind of commitment to a common cause. The commitment may be weak or strong, express or implied. Because such traditional agreements are often inferred from ambiguous circumstantial evidence, the inference may be erroneously based on competitors' parallel behavior. . . in the absence of interdependence.

[*79] 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 64

HN15 [↑] Market interdependence exists when competitors "base their pricing decisions in part on anticipated reactions to them." R. Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective 43 (1976). Interdependence exists when each competitor's "pricing decision is interdependent with that of its rivals: each knows that his choice will affect the others, who are likely to respond, and that their responses will affect the profitability of [its] initial choice." 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 65. This process explains both price reductions and price increases. Price increases can be achieved by "oligopolistic price leadership."

³⁰ Conversely, an agreement to terminate Nichols, without a price agreement, would limit Nichols to a nonprice rule of reason claim which it has not asserted.

When one oligopolist raises his price, each of his rivals must decide whether to follow or not. Continuing the previous price would allow each of the others to increase his sales if the leader persists in charging a higher price. But each knows that the leader is likely to retract an increase that is not followed. Accordingly, each rival asks himself whether he is better off at the lower price when charged by all or at the higher price when charged by all. If the latter, as will often be the case, the [*80] leader's price increase is likely to be followed.

Id. Price leadership can result in what is known as parallel behavior by competitors, that is, conduct by one that mirrors another.

HN16 [+] Although interdependence must be present to infer a conspiracy from parallel behavior, it cannot serve as the only basis for a Section 1 claim. Id. § 1411. What is needed is additional proof from which the factfinder could conclude that parallel behavior "would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties." Id. § 1425 at 144. Professor Areeda argues that "if the actual defendants could not or would not have acted as they did without advance communication and understanding, then their action necessarily proves a traditional conspiracy." Id. However, as the Professor notes, this conclusion begs the ultimate question that this Court must answer, namely, whether the defendants would not have acted without such communication and assurance. Or, to put it differently, is the parallelism in this case (if it exists) "too close" for coincidence? Id. at 145. Our [*81] answer to that question depends upon a close analysis of three events: Dunlop's unilateral decision to terminate distributors; Parts Unlimited's decision to raise prices in 1993; and Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited's 1994 price increase.

ii) Three Examples of Non-Parallel Behavior

a) Dunlop Unilaterally Decided to Reduce Its Distribution Network

On December 28, 1993, Dunlop issued a memo to all of its distributors announcing that it planned to terminate two or three distributors in 1993 because the market for replacement tires, Dunlop's largest market, was shrinking. Along with this memo, Dunlop included the 1993 Distributor Agreements which contained a termination at will provision.

Although there is evidence of informal business and social conversations between the defendants at various trade show meetings and evidence of general price complaints by Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited about Nichols, there is no evidence preceding December 28, 1993, that tends to exclude the possibility that Dunlop's decision to terminate distributors was an independent action. In fact, there are numerous economic justifications for Dunlop's decision to terminate distributors [*82] which support the inference of independence.

In 1993, the tire industry was extremely interdependent. When tire sales dropped off and the number of tire dealers began to decrease in 1991, a price war between competing distributors ensued to capture the remaining sales, driving the price of Dunlop tires down, far below Dunlop's suggested dealer resale price. Dealer sales went to the lowest bidder, or to the lowest bidder with the most nonprice services to offer. Dunlop expressed concern that lower prices on a long-term basis would only achieve a "lower perceived value" for Dunlop tires. Tucker/Rocky expressed a similar concern, remarking that price stability would support the industry, whereas excessive discounting would exploit it. Additionally, because of these concerns, both Dunlop and its two largest distributors, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, were extremely cognizant of the prices each distributor charged dealers for various Dunlop tires.

By 1993, distributor profit margins, determined in part by the difference between the distributor's cost and the dealer resale price, were also in decline (at least on Dunlop tires), due to low dealer resale prices. The record in this case [*83] confirms that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited believed that Nichols, a small but expanding competitor, was its most aggressive competitor on price. There is also evidence that Parts Unlimited complained that Nichols was charging "ridiculous prices," which were at least partially responsible for the declining profit margins. In fact, Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited went so far as to tell Dunlop it should "clean up [the market]." Tucker/Rocky also complained to Dunlop about Nichols' (and other distributors') low prices, indicating that it was "unwilling to sell at those prices." Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were also concerned about Nichols' expansion into Phoenix, Arizona, and its proposed expansion into Dallas, Texas and Seattle, Washington. Finally, Plaintiff argues that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited saw an opportunity to capture an increased market share once Nichols, their most aggressive competitor on the price of Dunlop tires, was out of the picture. Plaintiff's counsel explained, "what they're trying to do is take over the Dunlop market like they control the Metzeler market, . . . They only have 68% . . . of Dunlop [in 1993]. With Nichols out, they hope to get it up probably [*84] to 90, 95 [percent] . . ." Transcript at 33.

In an elastic market, increased sales could be generated by a large number of distributors competing vigorously on price. On December 28, 1992, however, Dunlop went on record, stating that it believed the market had become inelastic:

The tire replacement market is not going to grow in the predictable future. Our distributor base is still at approximately the same level as it was when the market was 35% larger than it is today.

Because of this situation, it is our intention to reduce our account base before the September IMAE by at least two to three distributors.

PX 1. In an inelastic market, it is economically plausible that Dunlop, having attained the largest market share in the country and convinced that the demand for Dunlop tires had stabilized and matured, sought to increase profits for its distributors by reducing its distributor base. Cf. Valley Liquors Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 678 F.2d 742, 745 \(7th Cir. 1982\)(discussing restricted distribution cases under the rule of reason and the role of market power). Dunlop's concern with its largest distributors' profit margins, although facially [*85] suspicious, is a legitimate business concern under the relevant legal precedent. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762-63. Dunlop's interest in its "perceived" image is also legitimate cover because continued lost profits for Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited might translate into lost marketing services necessary to promote Dunlop's brand name. Termination of smaller competitors³¹ would not reduce Dunlop's profit so long as the nonterminated distributors could absorb the sales being made by the terminated distributor(s).

None of these motivations or actions violate the antitrust laws, so long as Dunlop acted independently in recognition of the interdependent market. In fact, HN17 termination of a distributor following or in response to price complaints, even those that expressly or impliedly [*86] referred to Nichols, is not enough to support the inference of a conspiracy. Valley Liquors, 822 F.2d at 660 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764; Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 998 F.2d 575, 578 \(8th Cir. 1993\)). A defendant's actions become illegal only when its concerns and plans cross the line between encouragement and agreement.

After careful review, the Court has concluded that Dunlop's asserted reasons for terminating distributors, in general, were economically plausible and equally consistent, if not more consistent, than the conclusions the Plaintiff would have the trier of fact draw from the same evidence. Despite the evidence of strong lobbying efforts by Tucker/Rocky, there is simply not enough evidence tending to exclude the possibility that Dunlop's decision to terminate Nichols was anything other than an independent action supported by the legitimate business reasons described above.

Although there is very little evidence tending to exclude the possibility that Dunlop's decision to terminate Nichols was an independent action, there is one document, the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter, which raises some inferences of concerted action between Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky. [*87] However, the letter raises equally reasonable (but competing) inferences on the issue of termination and pricefixing which render the letter ambiguous evidence at best. With respect to a pricefixing agreement among the three defendants, the additional evidence is equally as ambiguous.

(b) Parts Unlimited's 1993 Price Increases

On February 1, 1993, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited published their 1993 price catalogs. Parts Unlimited, despite the price war, raised its prices significantly. Given the fact that Parts Unlimited did not have the market power, by itself, to lead sales to a higher price level, it is rational to conclude that Parts Unlimited's decision to raise its prices would have been perilous without an advance agreement with its primary competitor, Tucker/Rocky, and some wholesale discounting support by its manufacturer, Dunlop. It was also an unusual move because it was contrary to Parts Unlimited's economic self-interest, given the competitive forces still in play in an admittedly sensitive market. In other words, it does not make economic sense for Parts Unlimited alone to simply raise its prices on February 1, 1993.

³¹ Plaintiff's counsel admitted during oral argument that "Dunlop would have an independent right to reduce distributors to shake out the market so long as it did not terminate Nichols pursuant to a conspiracy." Transcript at 25.

In the Court's view, this evidence [*88] may have been sufficient to raise the inference of a vertical pricefixing agreement if there were any objective evidence of parallel behavior between Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky. Although Tucker/Rocky could have backed out of any agreement reached between the three defendants, the Court's speculation about what happened cannot provide the basis upon which we allow the Section 1 claim to reach a jury. Nichols has simply failed to produce sufficient evidence that shows that Parts Unlimited's decision to raise prices resulted from an unlawful relationship with Tucker/Rocky and/or Dunlop. This is because there is no unambiguous evidence of market conduct which would tend to show that the defendants were committed to a common course of action and united by a common purpose.³² Instead, the evidence shows erratic, unpredictable conduct that is more consistent with parties trying to obtain a competitive edge than with parties allied by a common cause.

[*89] HN18 [↑]

To infer a conspiracy from parallel behavior, the parallel conduct must occur in a logically relevant manner. For instance, it cannot arise from a "plausible coincidence or an expectable response to a common business problem." 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1425 at 146. Although "simultaneous" parallel action may be convincing, the time frame "is not limited to events occurring at a single moment. The definition is functional rather than literal and asks whether each alleged conspirator would normally have knowledge of another's act before deciding upon his own course of action." Id. at 147. In this case, the prices each competitor published would not necessarily be known before they were distributed, although once distributed they became public knowledge. Thus, there is nothing suspicious about the fact that Tucker/Rocky's prices differed from those Parts Unlimited published on February 1, 1993, especially since Tucker/Rocky's prices stayed the same as its 1992 prices.

However, there is no sequential parallelism in this case either. In sequential cases, the leader's action is known before the other players must make their choices. This method works if the leader can alter [*90] or reverse its position after seeing what the other competitors do. Id. at 147. Parts Unlimited was the leader on the price increase of 1993, and it waited until March 22, 1993, to see whether Tucker/Rocky would respond. The unfortunate coincidence for Plaintiff is that on the very day that Gregg wrote the March 22, 1993, Letter to Logue confirming its desire to raise dealer resale prices to reflect Dunlop's 1993 price increase, Parts Unlimited reversed course and published prices substantially equal to those Tucker/Rocky published for 1993 on February 1. The fact that Parts Unlimited reversed course is one more indication that the minds at Tucker/Rocky never met with those at Parts Unlimited or Dunlop and vice versa.

Finally, Tucker/Rocky's price increase in May 1993 looks more like the traditional price leadership that occurs when a distributor makes the choice to risk short-term loss in the hope that its competitors will find it more profitable to sell at the higher price rather the lower one. However, Parts Unlimited did not follow Tucker/Rocky's lead. Instead, Parts Unlimited "stayed put." As counsel for Parts Unlimited phrased it during oral argument: "the best time to [*91] rock and roll on the conspiracy [was] in May '93. They didn't do it." Transcript at 139. Parts Unlimited's motivation for staying put is irrelevant since that move, combined with Tucker/Rocky's recalcitrance in February, destroys any possible theory of parallelism and any reasonable inference that can be drawn from it. In short, the relevant conduct in the market reveals that the parties were coming and going, but never once acted in a concerted way until February 1, 1994, well after Nichols had been terminated.

³² Thus, there is no need to consider whether the presence of the so called "plus factors"--conspiratorial motivation and acts against self-interest--support a conspiracy inference. See 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law §§ 1433-1434, at 218-221.

c) Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited's 1994 Price Increases

The 1994 increase, although a more classic example of parallelism, is insufficient, by itself, to support the inference of an agreement, without additional evidence that the parties' decisions were the result of concerted action. The fact that Parts Unlimited once again needed to revise its price list to become more competitive with Tucker/Rocky, not only with respect to the percentage of the price increase, but with respect to the "best quantity" price, precludes the concerted action inference. Typically, in the context of secret bids (like the catalogs) which ultimately become public knowledge, the inference [*92] of collusion is stronger where there is price uniformity on specific terms which would not exist but for collusion. No such uniformity existed in this case. In short, shared interests do not constitute an agreement without evidence tending to show some symmetry and synchronicity in the parties' conduct, either simultaneous or sequential.

In this case the market is far from synchronized; it is erratic, full of unexpected shifts in movement which are not at all in synch with the actions one would expect from co-conspirators who combine to implement a common scheme. Thus, any inference of collusion that can be drawn from the 1993 and 1994 pricing movements by Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited cannot be sustained given the undisputed fact that Jeff Fox had to revise his published prices downward for two consecutive years, 1993 and 1994, to meet Tucker/Rocky's more competitive (lower) levels. This conduct occurred both before and after Nichols' termination and therefore cannot support the inference of a conspiracy from parallel conduct because there was no parallelism. These pricing movements are at best ambiguous evidence because they are much more consistent with classic interdependence: [*93] each distributor resting its own decision to lead or withdraw on price based upon its belief that its competitor would do the same. Interdependent behavior without evidence of parallelism, however, does not reflect an unlawful agreement under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The inference of a Section 1 agreement under the parallelism theory must therefore be rejected.

Although the preceding evidence does not prove that a vertical agreement - either on price or termination - existed, there is one document, as alluded to previously, upon which Count I turns. The March 22, 1993, Gregg letter. We will begin with that letter and analyze the events subsequent to it in light of the influences it raises.

(b) The Gregg letters are ambiguous evidence and therefore do not support an inference of pricefixing or a termination agreement

i) The March 22, 1993 Gregg Letter

There is only one document in this case, the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter to Logue that can be viewed as supporting the plaintiff's proof of a vertical agreement. The question this Court has carefully considered is whether this single document, viewed in context of the record as a whole, takes the case [*94] past Monsanto and Matsushita. We believe it falls short of the mark.

There are several reasonable (but competing) inferences that can be drawn from this document. First, the concluding sentence to page one states: "Tucker/Rocky would like to pass on the 1993 Dunlop price increase at this time." This language suggests that Tucker/Rocky, in response to the pressure it received from Dunlop and Parts Unlimited after publication of the February 1, 1993, catalog, agreed to raise its prices in 1993 to reflect both Dunlop's 1993 price increase and the published increase in Parts Unlimited's prices.³³ The conditional language used in this sentence also implies some measure of control by Dunlop because the statement can be framed as an offer, requiring not only assent (or acceptance) but also the occurrence of an event or a condition precedent to form an agreement on price. Similarly, the second page encourages Dunlop to terminate single warehouse distributors "who dump tires at disruptively low and predatory prices, thousands of miles from their warehouse." In consideration of an agreement on these issues, Tucker/Rocky proposed that it would "increase the amount of resources [*95] Tucker/Rocky spends to promote and service Dunlop tires . . . [which] will increase interbrand competition." From this language it is not difficult to infer that Tucker/Rocky was willing to increase resale dealer prices to reflect the MSD levels suggested (and desired by) Dunlop if Dunlop terminated discounting distributors, like Nichols, who prolonged the price war that made a price increase untenable. Second, the fact that Parts Unlimited received a copy of the first page of the letter implies some sort of collusion between the three defendants regarding price: the letter appears to expressly refer to the February conversations regarding Dunlop's 1993 increase of its dealer resale prices (MSD) and Parts Unlimited's complaints that Tucker/Rocky did not pass on this increase in its published prices, as Parts Unlimited did.

³³ The fact that neither Nichols, nor any other distributor, is ever mentioned in either the first page of the Gregg Letter, or the price analysis, indicates that Tucker/Rocky is responding to the complaints Dunlop received from Parts Unlimited regarding Tucker/Rocky's 1993 published prices.

[*96] The inferences break down with respect to Parts Unlimited, however, because neither a copy of the price analysis, which might have indicated plans to collude on specific tire prices, nor the second page of the letter addressing the termination of discounting distributors, like Nichols, was ever found in the possession of Parts Unlimited. Without these documents, Parts Unlimited cannot be tied to either a price-fixing or a termination agreement. The fact that Parts Unlimited admittedly only received a copy of the first page of the letter, although a somewhat strange coincidence, does not evidence a deliberate act to include Parts Unlimited in some form of traditional offer or acceptance.³⁴ See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761 n.9. The most that can be said is that Tucker/Rocky addressed Parts Unlimited's concerns and someone, either Dunlop or Tucker/Rocky, sent the first page to Parts Unlimited to set the record straight.

[*97] With respect to Tucker/Rocky, the inferences are stronger, but equally ambiguous. Given the detailed price comparison between Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's prices, the concluding sentence of the first page may simply mean: Tucker/Rocky would like to pass on the 1993 Dunlop price increase, but our prices are already higher than those charged by Parts Unlimited, our main competitor, and we cannot afford to raise them any higher until Parts Unlimited's dealer resale prices go up even further. The second page, although evidence of strong lobbying to terminate Nichols, may be nothing more than a complaint: identifying problems and proposing solutions. Distributors are entitled to express their opinions, and manufacturers are entitled to both listen and act on the information without being charged with illegal antitrust agreements. Business Elecs. v. Sharp Elecs., 485 U.S. at 726. In this case, both Logue and Buckley testified that they did not act on the letter, which means that their decision to terminate Nichols was not based on this letter. In similar cases, courts found similar memoranda and complaints to be insufficient evidence of an agreement. Valley Liquors, 822 \[*981 F.2d at 660-61 (competitors' price complaints coupled with separate meetings with manufacturer before plaintiff's termination were insufficient to go to a jury); Winn v. Edna Hibel Corp., 858 F.2d 1517, 1520 \(8th Cir. 1988\)(competitor's memo to manufacturer that it didn't discount and hoped that manufacturer would prevent plaintiff distributor from discounting, followed by termination of plaintiff, was insufficient to go to jury); Lovett, 998 F.2d at 577, 581 (evidence which showed plaintiffs' competing dealers complained specifically about plaintiff's pricing program and asked manufacturer to take strong action to eliminate plaintiff's program, followed by plaintiff's termination was insufficient to jury); Helicopter Support Sys., Inc. v. Hughes Helicopter Inc., 818 F.2d 1530, 1533-34 & n.4 \(11th Cir. 1987\)("more evidence is needed of impermissible behavior than a mere response to distributor complaints to establish liability under Colgate); Ben Elfman & Son, Inc. v. Criterion Mills, Inc., 774 F. Supp. 683, 685-86 n.6 \(D. Mass. 1991\)(where largest distributor and a competitor of pricecutting plaintiff wrote memo to manufacturer stating that: "the problem [with [*99] plaintiff's pricing] has escalated to a point beyond which we can tolerate. You do what you must, we'll do what we must," court held that memo was ultimatum to manufacturer to make plaintiff raise prices or to terminate plaintiff as a distributor but was insufficient evidence of an agreement under Section 1). Given the competing inferences and the case law on similar issues, the Court finds that the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter does not tend to preclude either the possibility of independent action by Dunlop to terminate Nichols, nor by Tucker/Rocky to raise its prices.

In conclusion, the Court finds that one may reasonably infer from the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter that Tucker/Rocky strongly encouraged Dunlop to terminate Nichols, even though Nichols is never mentioned in the letter, because Gregg admits that the term "single warehouse distributors" referred to Nichols.³⁵ One may also reasonably infer that Tucker/Rocky offered to raise dealer resale prices to reflect Dunlop's 1993 MSD price increase, if Dunlop promised to terminate Nichols. There is no evidence, however, that Dunlop accepted this offer, even though Tucker/Rocky's prices went up in May and Nichols was terminated [*100] in June. In addition, the fact that Parts Unlimited only received the first page of the letter, but not the price analysis or the second page of the letter, renders the probative value of the first page of the letter, for purposes of finding the relevant agreements against Parts Unlimited, marginal at best.

³⁴ The Court must draw this inference, despite Parts Unlimited's "credit inquiry" theory, see Transcript at 131-32, because all reasonable inferences go to the Plaintiff as the nonmoving party.

ii) The April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter

The inference that Tucker/Rocky held out on raising its prices until Nichols was terminated is undermined by Gregg's April 8, 1993, letter to Buckley. The April letter announced Tucker/Rocky's seemingly independent plans to raise its published [*101] 1993 dealer resale prices and proposes a pricefixing agreement: Tucker will trace Dunlop's MSD in its price increase if Dunlop lowers the MSD by 4.5 percent. Dunlop, however, does not lower its MSD mid-year, it raises it in October of 1993, for which Buckley concedes there was "no good reason." Furthermore, Tucker/Rocky raised its published dealer resale prices in May 1993, without waiting for Dunlop to lower the MSD. This market conduct by Tucker/Rocky and Dunlop does not evidence either simultaneous or sequential parallelism. Although there may have been a commitment by Dunlop to terminate Nichols prior to Tucker/Rocky's price increase, the equally competing inference is that Tucker/Rocky's price increase was independent action. The Court therefore concludes that these two letters, Plaintiff's most direct evidence of an agreement between Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky, are at best ambiguous because they raise equally competing inferences of independent action.

(c) There is no other direct or circumstantial evidence of collusion supporting Nichols' Section 1 claim

The only other evidence of a vertical agreement between Parts Unlimited, Tucker/Rocky and Dunlop to terminate [*102] distributors involves phone calls made in early May 1993 by Mike Buckley to both Bob Gregg of Tucker/Rocky and Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited. Buckley admittedly made these calls for the express purpose of seeking "firm commitments" from the two distributors to absorb the sales of any terminated distributor. Buckley did not call any other distributor seeking similar commitments. Jeff Fox admits that he agreed to "pick up the slack" in case there was a termination. Bob Gregg denies giving his commitment. Buckley, however, memorialized both commitments in writing at the time he made the phone calls. Although the exchange of commitments can constitute direct evidence of collusion, in this case they do not. Admittedly, the statements allude to the prospective termination of distributors, but these calls do not raise any inferences that Parts Unlimited or Tucker/Rocky did anything more than agree to absorb sales. An agreement to absorb sales is not an agreement to fix prices, nor is it an agreement to terminate a distributor in light of Dunlop's previously stated, independently asserted, decision to terminate someone due to market stasis. Further, there is no evidence that either Parts Unlimited [*103] or Tucker/Rocky agreed with Dunlop to terminate Nichols and to absorb Nichols' sales volume. Without this evidence, there is no vertical agreement between Parts Unlimited and Dunlop or Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky.

Although Monsanto does not impose a higher summary judgment standard upon the Plaintiff, the inferences we may draw in favor of the Plaintiff from ambiguous evidence are limited. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 596. The Court has determined that the Plaintiff's evidence is ambiguous and therefore insufficient to support the inference of a vertical agreement between the defendants, for the reasons given above. Summary judgment is therefore granted in favor of all defendants on Count I.

2. Count II: The Rule of Reason

³⁵ Even if the March Gregg Letter constituted an agreement to terminate Nichols, it is not sufficient to state a per se claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, because it would at most constitute a nonprice restraint which, if it had an anticompetitive impact, would need to be tested under the rule of reason. Plaintiff has not alleged a nonprice restraint under the rule of reason, so the Court does not reach that question.

In Count II, Plaintiff restates its pricefixing and termination conspiracy claim under the rule of reason.³⁶ HN19 Under this rule, a plaintiff must still prove the existence of an agreement that restrains trade. An agreement under the rule of reason is not as difficult to prove as it is under the per se rule, because there is not a presumption of antitrust injury. In a rule of reason case, the inference of an illegal agreement may be sustained merely [*104] by producing evidence that "casts doubt" on inferences of independent action. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 545. However, although the agreement may not be as difficult to prove under the rule of reason, additional elements must be met. For instance, a plaintiff must show that the defendants had market power to fix prices and that the pricefixing scheme had an anticompetitive impact on the market as a whole. After careful review, the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to produce sufficient evidence of anticompetitive impact for Count II to survive summary judgment.

a. Legal Standards

HN20 Most cases fall outside the narrow, carefully demarcated categories of agreements held to be [*105] illegal per se. In the typical case, a plaintiff must prove an antitrust injury under the rule of reason. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d 537 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993). Under this test, plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged agreement has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Tunis Bros. Co. Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715 \(3d Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 112 S. Ct. 3034 (1992). Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market protects competition in general, rather than individual competitors. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 52 (the goal of antitrust law is to protect interbrand rather than intrabrand competition). The Seventh Circuit has held that were the law otherwise, routine disputes between business competitors would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action, thereby trivializing the Act because of its ready availability. Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 \(7th Cir. 1986\) ("antitrust laws are not balm for rivals' wounds"). The Plaintiff must also show that [*106] the defendant had market power, that is, the "power to raise prices significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business." Valley Liquor, 822 F.2d 656, 665 \(7th Cir. 1987\). The Seventh Circuit has held that a district court must proceed to the first step in the rule of reason analysis, which is to balance the effects the vertical restraint has on intrabrand and interbrand competition, only if the evidence gives rise to the inference that defendants had sufficient market power to control dealer resale prices. Id. Ultimately, the factfinder must weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior.

The classic articulation of how the rule of reason analysis should be undertaken is found in Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231 \(1918\), where Justice Brandeis, speaking for the Supreme Court, said:

HN21 The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its [*107] condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret the facts and to predict consequences.

Id. at 238.

b. Analysis

³⁶ The idea of applying a rule of reason analysis to a vertical pricefixing violation was discussed in Monsanto in a footnote, 465 U.S. at 760 n.7, but was not ruled on because it was not raised at the district court level. The Court has not found any case since Monsanto that discusses this theory for recovery.

This test is easier to state than to apply to the facts of this case. Applying this test, the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to prove anticompetitive impact under the rule of reason and Count II must be denied. Products Liab. Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Crum & Forster Ins. Cos., 682 F.2d 660, 663 (7th Cir. 1982) ("plaintiff must show that the refusal to deal is likely to reduce competition"). Plaintiff's theory of anticompetitive impact is that the termination of Nichols sent a message to other small distributors, whose only competitive "weapon" against the larger distributors was price. The proof of anticompetitive impact, argues Plaintiff, is [*108] that prices have gone up significantly since June 15, 1993, and smaller distributors have lost sales to Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited--who absorbed not only Nichols' sales but the sales of other discounters who stopped aggressive discounting. At the outset, it is important to recognize that "the antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 338. HN22[] Termination of a small distributor pursuant to a price agreement does not restrain trade until distribution is channeled exclusively "through a few large or specifically advantaged dealers." Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145 (1968) (where Court found evidence of an agreement to terminate a small distributor pursuant to an agreement with larger distributor to charge maximum prices).

Nichols only evidence of this anticompetitive impact is the testimony and opinion by its expert, Dr. Pisarkiewicz. This testimony is wholly lacking. Nichols argues that Dr. Pisarkiewicz, after extensive analysis, has concluded that the conspiracy alleged would result in an unreasonable restraint of trade and have a substantial adverse effect on competition (PX 608 at 4, [*109] 41-42). At page 4 of his report, Dr. Pisarkiewicz claims:

Report of Dr. John Pisarkiewicz, Jr.

4. In summary my conclusions are as follows:

g) But for this lawsuit, there is compelling evidence that prices of Dunlop tires to dealers and to consumers would be significantly higher. This is a substantial adverse effect on competition. In addition, the termination of Nichols indicates that the defendants have the power to exclude competitors and discipline remaining competitors. This too is a substantial adverse effect on competition.

42. . . .the impact on competition due to the termination of Nichols is very substantial. Nichols did challenge T/R. Nichols did challenge T/R and PU and was trying to grow in spite of discriminatory prices from Dunlop. Nichols size and long standing reputation in the industry made it a competitor to be reckoned with. Its termination by Dunlop was a strong signal to other Dunlop distributors not to challenge on the basis of price. Dunlop had already signaled all of its distributors that it was concerned about price wars (5/20/93 memo from Mike Buckley to all Dunlop distributors attaching a Wall Street Journal article, [*110] entitled, "How to Avoid a Price War."

Terminating Nichols strongly reinforced that signal.

43. In addition, Dunlop has already raised prices sharply in 1993 and 1994 (App. 7, Table D-1).

44. T/R and PU receive favored treatment by Dunlop and Metzeler, and T/R and PU have used these advantages to gain market share, to earn more profits and to buy other lines of products.

Nichols contends that the full anticompetitive impact has not yet been felt, because the filing of this lawsuit prevented prices from rising to the 15 percent mark allegedly agreed upon, and has resulted in the addition of new distributors and other "anticompetitive" indicia as a cover up. Nichols also claims that a question of fact exists because defendants' expert, Raymond Sims, disagrees with Dr. Pisarkiewicz's analysis.

Raymond Sims does not directly controvert Dr. Pisarkiewicz's statements, and the defendants do not use his analysis in their arguments. However, Mr. Sims would testify at trial that Nichols' prices on Dunlop tires analyzed were at or below Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited between 1991-93 on the 50 best selling tires. This is disputed. Sims will also testify that Nichols' [*111] profits remained "relatively stable" while the profits of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited went up from 1991 through 1993. This is also disputed.

The defendants' position on the lack of anticompetitive impact appears to relate more to the lack of evidence offered by Dr. Pisarkiewicz, rather than to its experts own opinions. For instance, in his deposition, Dr. Pisarkiewicz admits that he has made no analysis of actual prices that dealers paid for tires, 12(M) P 174 (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 434, 523); that he has no opinion on whether Tucker/Rocky or Parts Unlimited is pricing at, above or below competitive levels before or after the Nichols termination, Id. (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 434); that he has no information that the Nichols termination led to reduced market output, Id. (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 510-11); and that he has no formation that the Nichols termination led to a deterioration in the quality of service available to dealers, Id. (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 511).

These admissions are crucial because:

there is a sense in which eliminating even a single competitor reduces competition. But it is not the sense that is relevant in deciding whether the antitrust laws have [*112] been violated. Those laws, we have been told by the Supreme Court repeatedly in recent years, are designed to protect the consumer interest in competition. The consumer does not care how many sellers of a particular good or service there are; he cares only that there be enough to assure him a competitive price and quality.

Products Liability, 682 F.2d at 663-64 (citations omitted). There is no evidence provided by Dr. Pisarkiewicz, other than his theory that "but for this litigation" prices would not be competitive, that the termination of Nichols, due to its aggressive discounting, sent a message that reduced competition and injured consumers or their dealers. This is not sufficient evidence to withstand a motion for summary judgment, even under the rule of reason, because it is mere speculation, without a sound economic analysis to support it. Therefore, the Court must grant the Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgement because the Plaintiff failed to produce evidence of anticompetitive impact on the market as a whole.

3. Count III: Group Boycott

In Count III, Nichols vaguely alleges that the defendants' actions constitute an illegal group boycott in [*113] violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Nichols claims that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited convinced both Dunlop and Metzeler not to deal with Nichols. HN23 To prove a group boycott, Nichols must allege a horizontal agreement by Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to engage in concerted activity to deprive Nichols of access to sell motorcycle tires. Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 734; United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127 (1966); Phil Tolkan Datsun, Inc. v. Greater Milwaukee, Etc., 672 F.2d 1280, 1284 (7th Cir. 1982). Although some group boycott claims (those involving concerted refusals to deal with a competitor) are analyzed under the per se rule, Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 (1959), Nichols has alleged its Section 1 group boycott claims under the rule of reason and therefore must show anticompetitive impact. Thus, Nichols must only submit some evidence that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited agreed to induce Metzeler not to add Nichols as a distributor, or that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited agreed to induce Dunlop to terminate Nichols as a distributor.

Although there is "some" ambiguous circumstantial evidence that [*114] the defendant distributors agreed to induce Dunlop to terminate Nichols, there is no evidence of an agreement among Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to induce Metzeler to refuse to deal with Nichols. The only evidence of any inducement is a conversation Metzeler President Greg Blackwell had with Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited regarding the addition of new distributors in general and Nichols in particular. The defendant distributors independently advised Blackwell that they did not advise adding new distributors, in particular, Nichols, a known discounter. This evidence does not satisfy the concerted action/agreement requirement. Regardless, there is no evidence of anticompetitive impact, with respect to a boycott involving Dunlop or Metzeler, for the reasons expressed in Count II. Therefore, Count III also fails for lack of proof on the element of anticompetitive impact.

B. The Illinois Antitrust Act

In Counts IV, V and VI, Plaintiff alleges various vertical and horizontal agreements between the defendants to fix prices, terminate Nichols and refuse to deal with Nichols. Counts IV and V must be dismissed for failure to state a claim. Count V states a rule of reason [*115] claim under Section 3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10/3. Summary judgment must be granted for the defendants on all counts.

1. Count IV: Per Se Pricefixing

In Count IV, Plaintiff alleges that the defendants conspired to raise, fix, maintain or stabilize prices, in violation of Section 3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act ("IAA"), 740 ILCS 10/3. Because Nichols levies its allegation against "all defendants," that is, Dunlop (a seller), Tucker/Rocky (a buyer) and Parts Unlimited (a buyer), it alleges a vertical pricefixing agreement. Nichols' claim fails as a matter of law.

HN24 [↑] Per se offenses are those set out in Section 3(1) of the IAA. See 740 ILCS 10/3, Bar Committee Comments-1967 (1993). "The conduct proscribed by Section 3(1) is violative of the Act without regard to, and the courts need not examine, the competitive and economic purposes and consequences of such conduct." Id. The Bar Committee Comments clearly state, however, that a vertical pricefixing agreement is not prohibited under Section 3(1):

Section 3(1) does not reach vertical agreements, such as agreements between buyers and sellers fixing the price at which the buyer shall [*116] resell. Although not unlawful under Section 3(1), such vertical price fixing, if not exempt under the Illinois Fair Trade Act, may be proscribed by Section 3(2), the general restraint of trade section. Since the draftsmen carefully constructed Section 3 to require it, the Illinois courts should conclude that they must examine the competitive and economic purposes and consequences of such agreements before reaching a conclusion that Section 3(2) has been violated. While it is perhaps possible, as under Federal law, that the courts may hold such agreements violative of Section 3(2) without such an examination, they should not, since to do so would defeat the clear intention of the draftsmen.

Id. The Bar Committee Comments could not be any more explicit that a vertical agreement may not constitute a per se violation of Section 3 of the IAA, because per se claims are only those listed in Section 3(1), which does not cover vertical pricefixing agreements. While Nichols could have alleged that "all defendants" violated Section 3(2), the general restraint of trade subsection of the IAA, Section 3(2) necessarily requires a rule of reason analysis of the "economic purposes [*117] and consequences" of the agreement and therefore does not contemplate per se violations. Count IV fails as a matter of law.

2. Count V: Rule of Reason

In Laughlin v. Evanston Hosp., 550 N.E.2d 986, 996 \(Ill. 1990\), the Illinois Supreme Court held that HN25 [↑] the analysis for rule of reason claims under Section 3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10/3, tracks the legal analysis applied in federal cases under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Therefore, since Count V is the counterpart to Count II, which alleges a rule of reason claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the Court grants summary judgment for all defendants on this claim for the reasons expressed in the portion of the Opinion analyzing Count II.

3. Count VI: Group Boycott

Nichols alleges in Count VI that the actions of all the defendants constitute a per se illegal group boycott in violation of § 3 of IAA. Because Nichols alleges a per se violation of the IAA, its claim falls under Section 3(1) of the IAA, which is the only subsection of the IAA that refers to per se violations. See Bar Committee Comments-1967 (1993). The Bar Committee Notes are clear however, that an alleged boycott [*118] does not present a legally cognizable claim under Section 3(1). In its discussion of claims under Section 3(1), the Comments note that HN26 [↑] boycotts are not proscribed by this "per se" subsection. Here again in view of federal precedents and of Section 11, horizontal boycotts may be found unlawful under the general restraint of trade Section 3(2). Vertical agreements to refuse to deal or boycotts, that is, agreements between persons at different levels of production and distribution which have as their immediate purpose the depriving of a third person of a supply of a commodity or service, may also be found violative of Section 3(2).

Id. Thus, although Nichols could have alleged a group boycott under Section 3(2), it has instead alleged a per se violation, which falls under Section 3(1) of the IAA and does not contemplate group boycotts. Count VI therefore fails as a matter of law.

C. The Robinson-Patman Act Claims

1. The Facts

Price is an important sales determinant in the industry. 12(N)(3)(b) P 57. Motorcycle tire manufacturers (i.e., Bridgestone, Cheng Shin, Continental, Dunlop, Metzeler, etc.) commonly provide discounts, including [*119] volume-based discounts, in selling tires to distributors. 12(M) P 323. The defendants concede that Dunlop provided discounts to Nichols' competitors that Nichols did not receive. 12(N)(3)(b) P 44. For instance, Parts Unlimited requested and received from Dunlop a one-time special promotional discount for the opening of its facility in Southern California. 12(M) P 312 (PX 181). Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited also admit that they knew of and took advantage of discounts that Dunlop did not publish but made available to them. 12(N)(3)(b) P 53. Because Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited are sophisticated business entities that separately monitor information from dealers about prices at which competitor distributors sell products, 12(N)(3)(b) PP 51-52, they knew they were receiving individually negotiated prices on Dunlop tires. 12(N)(3)(b) P 53 (PX 161-187). For instance, Pat Logue of Dunlop informed them that large orders would permit Dunlop manufacturing facilities to have longer production runs on specific tires without the need to stop production, change molds, and switch over to producing other types of tires. 12(M) P 322. Large orders, in turn, would result in greater discounts during [*120] certain periods.

Other distributors, such as Bell Industries, Dixie, KK Motorcycle, and Pike's Peak, also received a variety of discounts. Bell Industries, Dixie, Parts Unlimited, and Tucker/Rocky earned Dunlop's growth bonus in 1993. 12(M) P 316. Motorcycle Stuff is a Dunlop distributor headquartered in Cape Girardeau, Missouri. Over the past four years, according to Nichols' expert report, Motorcycle Stuff has purchased fewer Dunlop tires each year than did Tucker/Rocky or Parts Unlimited. During the years 1990-93, even Nichols' expert concludes that Motorcycle Stuff received significantly higher overall discounts than Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited, Nichols, or any other Dunlop distributor. 12(M) P 317.

Tucker/Rocky also received a range of discounts from Metzeler, Dunlop's largest rival in the alleged "premium tire" market. 12(M) P 323. Moreover, Nichols, the exclusive distributor of King's tires in the United States, offered a volume-based discount to its customers. 12(M) P 313. Sometimes Nichols also offered lower prices on Dunlop tires to its dealers than were offered by Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited, and Motorcycle Stuff in the marketplace. 12(M) P 318. One printed report [*121] produced by Nichols indicates that Nichols gave discounts on Dunlop tires to almost 600 of its customers. These discounts were well over 20% off the best published pricing for many of Nichols' customers. For instance, Nichols discounted Dunlop tires by 20-24 percent for 88 of its customers and discounted Dunlop tires by 25 percent or more for 72 of its customers. 12(M) P 319.

The difference between the gross margins of Tucker/Rocky and Nichols on the sale of Dunlop tires during the relevant period was significantly greater than the alleged price advantage received by Tucker/Rocky. 12(M) P 324. Dunlop distributors faced and continue to face intense intrabrand competition from other Dunlop distributors during all relevant periods. 12(N)(3)(b) P 55 (PX 252U; PX 251; PX 250U; PX 249U; PX 240U; PX 510; PX 248; PX 246; PX 242U; PX 267U; PX 605F; PX 239U; PX 605H; PX 274; PX 248; PX228; PX 280; PX 22). The average price (the yearly revenues from the sale of Dunlop tires divided by the annual unit sales on an indiscriminate basis, without regard to product mix by model or type or size) on Dunlop tires sold to dealers decreased from 1991 to 1993 for Nichols, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited. [*122] 12(N)(3)(b) (PX 609 at 13).

2. The Merits

a. Dunlop: Section 2(a)

Dunlop seeks summary judgment on Count VII, Nichols' Section 2(a) Robinson-Patman Act claim. HN27 To establish a prima facie violation of Section 2(a), a plaintiff must establish the existence of (1) price discrimination, and (2) injury to competition. See Robert M. Klein, The Robinson-Patman Act: Jurisdictional Aspects and Elements, 59 Antitrust L.J. 777 (1991). Dunlop does not contest that price discrimination occurred, but asserts that Nichols has failed properly to establish injury to competition. Because Nichols' assertions and its expert's analyses demonstrate, however, that Nichols has properly asserted at least two types of damages under the Act, it must prevail on Dunlop's motion for summary judgment.

Nichols claims three types of damages under the Act: (1) damages for lost profits on sales of Dunlop tires that it actually made (because it was not receiving the same discounts that Dunlop granted to the Defendant distributors and had to sell at lower prices than those at which it would have sold absent the price discrimination); (2) damages for lost sales of Dunlop products [*123] that Nichols was not able to make because of its increased costs; and (3) damages for lost sales of non-Dunlop products that it otherwise would have made from customers who would have been drawn to buy from Nichols had Nichols been able to offer more attractive prices on Dunlop products. Pl.'s Mem. Opp. Def.'s Mot. Summ. Judg. at 72-73. Dunlop asserts in its Motion for Summary Judgment that the first type of damages that Nichols claims amounts to "automatic damages" (i.e., damages measured by the amount of the alleged price discrimination, which are not recoverable under the Act). Def.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Summ. Judg. at 22-23. Dunlop further asserts that the second and third type of damages represent legally deficient theories that rest on unsupported assumptions. Id. at 25, 28.

HN28 [↑] "Like any damages remedy, the purpose of [the Clayton Act] is to place the antitrust plaintiff as far as possible in the position it would have occupied but for the violation. Thus, any calculation of section 4 damages must strive to approximate a violation-free state of affairs." Rose Confections, Inc. v. Ambrosia Chocolate Co., 816 F.2d 381, 394 (8th Cir. 1987).

The first type of damages [*124] claimed by Nichols, lost profits due to the fact that Nichols was forced to sell Dunlop tires at lower prices than it would have absent the price discrimination, is not "automatic damages" as defined by the Supreme Court in J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557 (1981). In J. Truett Payne, the Court noted that the plaintiff could not merely infer damages from the fact that the defendant had engaged in discriminatory pricing irrespective of any showing that the defendant's behavior had an effect on competition. Id. at 563-64. The plaintiff had failed to produce any documentary evidence to show the effect of the discrimination on retail prices. Id. at 564.

In contrast, Nichols presents evidence prepared by its economic expert, Dr. John Pisarkiewicz, that calculates Nichols' market share prior to the period of the alleged discrimination, computes Nichols' projected market share absent any price discrimination for the period 1991-93 (the time of the alleged price discrimination), and alleges that Nichols' actual market share for that period declined and its competitors' shares increased as a result of Dunlop's alleged discriminatory behavior. App. [*125] to Pl.'s Mem. Opp. Defs.' Mots. Summ. Judg. Vol. III, Tab 608, at 44. Nichols also presents evidence of its declining market share and its competitors' simultaneously rising market share during the period of the alleged discrimination--fluctuations that Pisarkiewicz attributes to competitive injury. App. to Pl.'s Mem. Opp. Defs.' Mots. Summ. Judg., Vol. III, Tab 608, at I and VI. Although Dunlop contests that Nichols has failed to demonstrate a sufficient causal connection between Nichols' declining market share, Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's rising market share, and the alleged discriminatory behavior, Nichols has done more than simply claim automatic damages, and thus has asserted sufficient facts to support a finding of injury due to increased costs. See J. Truett Payne, 451 U.S. at 565 (citing Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123-24 (1969)) (noting that damages may be awarded on the basis of plaintiff's estimate of sales it could have made absent the violation); id. at 566 (citing Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251 (1946)) (noting that damages may be awarded on the basis of comparison of plaintiff's profits with [*126] the contemporaneous profits of a competitor who was not the victim of discriminatory pricing, together with evidence of plaintiff's profits during the conspiracy as compared with his profits prior to the conspiracy).

The second type of damages claimed by Nichols, lost sales of Dunlop products that Nichols was allegedly unable to make due to the discriminatory pricing, is also a legally permissible type of damages as long as Nichols' expert's calculations properly approximate a violation-free state of affairs as opposed, for example, to one in which Nichols was able to share in the benefit of the discriminatory pricing. See Rose Confections, 816 F.2d at 394. Nichols has properly done so.

Using Nichols' pre-violation market share, which takes into account not just the relative market shares of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, but the other fourteen nationwide Dunlop distributors, Dr. Pisarkiewicz estimates what Nichols' market share would have been for 1991-93 absent the alleged discriminatory pricing. Dunlop contends that Nichols' loss of market share was due to its poor customer service; if this is the case, however, it is a factual determination that must be made by a jury. [*127] Nichols has therefore asserted at least two types of damages recognizable under the Act, therefore this Court must deny Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment on this issue.³⁷

[*128] b. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited: Section 2(f)

Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited also seek summary judgment on Count VII, with respect to Nichols' claim that they violated HN30 ↑ Section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, which makes it unlawful for a buyer "knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited" by the Act. 15 U.S.C. § 13\(f\). In order to establish a prima facie case under Section 2(f), Nichols must show that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew or should have known that it was receiving greater discounts from Dunlop than Nichols, and that it knew or should have known that the lower prices it induced or received from Dunlop were discriminatory in violation of Section 2(a) of the Act. Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 74 \(1953\).

Although Nichols' evidence shows that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited received higher discounts from Dunlop than Nichols did, Nichols is unable to show that either distributor possessed the requisite knowledge (i.e., knew the amount of discounts any other distributor, including Nichols, received). Both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited deny that they had any knowledge of the amount of discounts [*129] that any other distributor received. See Rule 12(N)(3)(b) Reply PP 52-54. Nichols' assertion that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew that they received better discounts than did Nichols, see 12(N)(3)(b) PP 52-54, is based on a single document (PX 158) that merely lists the annual volume bonus discounts available for 1992. Based on this list, Nichols claims that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew or should have known that the discounts greater than those listed were not generally available to the other distributors. Id. at P 53. However, there is no dispute that Dunlop individually negotiated prices with its distributors. Id. This is indicated by the fact that Nichols received a 6 percent volume bonus discount in 1992, an amount higher than that listed in the Dunlop distributor program. Rule 12(M) P 304. Although Nichols asserts that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited not only received higher discounts than those listed but also different discounts than those listed is insufficient, without a factual showing, to support the inference that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew that Nichols did not receive non-listed discounts. This evidence, taken together with Tucker/Rocky's [*130] and Parts Unlimited's denials of knowledge (which has not been controverted), must be taken as true. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited therefore had no basis to determine how the discounts they were able to negotiate from Dunlop compared to those that Nichols was able to negotiate.³⁸

³⁷ The third measure of damages, lost sales on non-Dunlop products is not cognizable because Dr. Pisarkiewicz uses a statistical regression analysis to determine the percentage of Dunlop buyers who would also buy non-Dunlop products and the amount of these products that the buyers would purchase, without demonstrating evidence of a causal connection between the injury and the asserted damages. See, e.g., BASF Corp. v. Old World Trading Co., 41 F.3d 1081, 1093 \(7th Cir. 1994\) HN29 ↑ (finding causation to be established where the plaintiff presented evidence that many customers would not have purchased from the defendant had they known of the defendant's wrongdoing and that the plaintiff's position in the market would have been more advantageous absent the defendant's wrongful conduct); Alpo Petfoods, Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 778 F. Supp. 555, 560 \(D.D.C. 1991\) (noting that statistical regression analyses, "while useful for demonstrating general trends and the broad impact of certain actions, are simply not usable with respect to the type of specific, concrete evidence needed. Without the regression analyses, however, there is nothing in the record from which this Court can deduce a lost profits figure without speculation."), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 997 F.2d 949 (D.C. Cir. 1993); Nikkal Indus., Ltd. v. Salton, Inc., 735 F. Supp. 1227, 1233 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (finding that linear regression analysis "did not provide for the impact of other significant factors, such as the possible effect on sales of a declining trend in the popularity of [the product], the appearance of several competitors, vigorous price competition and, most importantly, [the plaintiff's] poor marketing strategy."). For example, Plaintiff would need to offer something along the lines of testimony from buyers who would have bought non-Dunlop products from Nichols who went elsewhere because of price discrimination on Dunlop products.

³⁸ Both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited note that Dunlop's pricing structure was highly individualized and flexible, and that there was no way for them to determine independently the amount of the discounts that another distributor might be receiving. See, e.g., Tucker/Rocky Mem. Supp. Mot. Summ. Judg. at 31-32.

Nichols argues, however, that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited should have known that they were receiving discriminatory prices based on their dominant positions in the marketplace (the two distributors together accounted for 60% of all Dunlop sales nationwide) and their extensive trade experience. Pl.'s Mot. Opp. Defs.' Mot. Summ. Judg. at 84; Rule 12(N)(3)(b) PP 53-54. Nichols notes that "trade experience in [*131] a particular situation can afford a sufficient degree of knowledge to provide a basis for prosecution." Automatic Canteen, 346 U.S. at 79-80. In Automatic Canteen, however, the Supreme Court stated in dicta that "by way of example, a buyer who knows that he buys in the same quantities as his competitor and is served by the seller in the same manner . . . as the other buyer can fairly be charged with notice that a substantial price difference cannot be justified." Id. at 80. This is not the case in the instant situation. Both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited bought from Dunlop in greater quantities than Nichols and neither has been shown to be aware of what price any other distributor received, much less the existence of any "substantial price difference." Nichols' claim is further weakened by the fact that Motorcycle Stuff, another distributor, who has not been named as a defendant in this lawsuit, received greater discounts than both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited even though it bought fewer tires than either of these defendants. Even if Nichols could show that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were aware of the amount of discounts that other distributors received, the [*132] fact that Motorcycle Stuff's discounts exceeded Nichols', Tucker/Rocky's, and Parts Unlimited's would have provided Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited with reason to believe that the prices offered to them were not discriminatory. Therefore, Nichols has failed to show that the defendants had the requisite knowledge under Section 2(f) of the Act, and summary judgment is granted in favor of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited on Count VII.

3. The "Meeting Competition" Defense

HN31[] Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\), makes it illegal to discriminate in price between buyers when the consequence is an injury to competition. Reserve Supply Corp. v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 971 F.2d 37, 41 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (citing United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 450 \(1978\)). To establish a prima facie violation of Section 2(a), a plaintiff must establish the existence of (1) price discrimination, and (2) injury to competition. See Robert M. Klein, The Robinson-Patman Act: Jurisdictional Aspects and Elements, 59 Antitrust L.J. 777 (1991). A prima facie violation, however, may be rebutted by one [*133] of the Robinson-Patman Act's two affirmative defenses: (1) "cost justification" or (2) "meeting a competitive price" (commonly known in this case as the "meeting competition" defense). Falls City Indus., Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 434 \(1983\). If established, an affirmative defense eliminates the need to decide the issue of injury to competition, because a properly established defense renders such injury justifiable. Dunlop asserts the meeting competition defense, ³⁹ contained in Section 2(b) of the Act, which states:

HN32[] that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

[*134] 15 U.S.C. § 13\(b\) \(1975\)(emphasis added). HN33[] Price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act "is merely a price difference" between the price for which a defendant sells to one buyer versus the price to which it sells to another. Falls City, 460 U.S. at 443 n.10 (quoting FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 549 \(1960\)). Although the burden of establishing a factual basis for the defense falls on Dunlop, see Falls City, 460 U.S. at 451, all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of Dunlop because Nichols is the moving party. ⁴⁰

HN35[]

³⁹ Dunlop initially asserted, but has since withdrawn, a cost justification defense, which is therefore no longer an issue in this case.

⁴⁰ HN34[] As the moving party, Nichols has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that it is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

The Section 2(b) defense has two elements; both must be factually supported to send the defense to a jury. The two elements of a Section 2(b) defense are as follows. First, "the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, [must] show the existence [*135] of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." FTC v. A.E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746, 759-60 (1945) (emphasis added). Second, "the seller must demonstrate that its price was a good-faith response to a competitor's lower price." Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 41 (citing Falls City, 460 U.S. at 451).

The determination of whether a seller acted in good faith does not lend itself to the application of a rigid standard. The Supreme Court has stated that the concept of good faith is flexible and pragmatic . . . Rigid rules and inflexible absolutes are especially inappropriate in dealing with the § 2(b) defense; the facts and circumstances of the particular case, not abstract theories or remote conjectures, should govern its interpretation and application.

Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 454 (quoting Continental Baking Co., 63 F.T.C. 2071, 2163 (1963)). The Supreme Court has, however, identified four factors that may be relevant to the determination of the seller's good faith. These include whether the seller (1) had received reports from other [*136] customers of similar discounts; (2) was threatened with a termination of purchases if the discount were not met; (3) made efforts to corroborate the reported discount by seeking documentary evidence or by appraising its reasonableness in terms of available market data; and (4) had past experience with the buyer. Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 454-55. We rely on the above standards in assessing whether Dunlop has successfully asserted an affirmative defense under Section 2(b).

a. Background

Nichols moves for partial summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 on Dunlop's Section 2(b) defense, contending that Dunlop has not made a sufficient factual showing to demonstrate that the price discrimination was made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor and that Dunlop had no procedures in place for verifying the existence of any alleged equally low price of a competitor. Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 4. HN36 [↑] "When a properly supported motion for summary judgment is made, the adverse party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Id. at 250. Because the question of whether the Section 2(b) defense [*137] has been successfully asserted "demands a 'fact-specific' inquiry," Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 43 (quoting Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 454-55), we now review the material facts presented by the parties in order to determine whether Dunlop has successfully demonstrated that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Dunlop contends that it has demonstrated "the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." Falls City, 460 U.S. at 438 (citations omitted). In support of its contention, Dunlop provides deposition testimony and a supplementary affidavit from Patrick Logue, Dunlop's national sales manager from approximately 1987 to March 1993. Logue states that when distributors would report to him that they were being offered better discounts from Dunlop's competitors, Logue would attempt to obtain specific details about the offer directly from the distributor, but generally would accept the distributor's word that such discounts were in fact being offered. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 7, at 1288. Logue would consider his prior experience with the customer [*138] and his opinion of the customer's honesty and integrity in evaluating the customer's information. Def.'s Mem. Opp. Pl.'s Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 7. Where possible, Logue would refer to the competitors' price lists on file with Dunlop in an attempt to verify that the alleged competing discount was in line with the competitor's published prices. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 7, at 1288. These price lists, however, were sometimes outdated and, in any case, did not include the unofficial discounts frequently offered by tire manufacturers. Id. at 1289. Logue states that he was not aware of any other method of verification used to ensure that the discount he offered was necessary to meet competition. Id. After following these standard practices, Logue would determine whether meeting the competitive offer was consistent with Dunlop's business objectives. Def.'s Mem. Opp. Pl.'s Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 7. If so, he would seek to meet the competitive offer by offering additional discounts to these customers that he believed to be equivalent to the competing offers. Id. at 8. Logue states that he believed that the failure to do so would result in a loss of business to Dunlop. [*139] Id.

Specifically, Logue states that he had conversations with Robert Nickell, president of Tucker/Rocky; Jeffrey Fox, president of Parts Unlimited; and James and Timothy Dodd, president and vice president, respectively, of Motorcycle Stuff, in which they discussed with him the prices and discounts that they were receiving from Dunlop's competitors that were more favorable than those received from Dunlop. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 1, PP 23-25, 29, 35-38, 48-50. In the case of Tucker/Rocky, Logue states that Nickell typically provided him with "some details about those programs and incentives," but generally refused to disclose further details when asked. Id. P 25.

Logue does not indicate, however, whether "some details" included specific numerical information as to prices or discounts offered by Dunlop's competitors. See id. In the case of Parts Unlimited, Logue states that "on several occasions when I tried to obtain specific information about specific competitive discounts from Mr. Fox, he informed me that it was not his practice to disclose such information between competitors. . . . It was not his practice to provide me with competitors' specific prices [*140] or all the other specific details about their discounts." Id. P 37.

Logue did, however, offer Parts Unlimited a year-long 5% discount when it opened a new warehouse in order "to compete aggressively for market share against Metzeler, Michelin and Bridgestone." Pl.'s Repl. Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 4 n.5. This is the sole instance in which Logue refers to specific competitors as the impetus for offering a discount on Dunlop tires. In the case of Motorcycle Stuff, Logue states that he "was not generally provided specific prices of competitors or various other details about . . . their discounts, despite my asking and re-asking about them." Id. P 49. In one instance, Logue granted Motorcycle Stuff a discount in July 1991, but "cannot now remember whether Mr. Dodd mentioned any specific competitors whose competition he was asking Dunlop to meet." Pl.'s Repl. Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 3 n.4. Logue admits that there was one instance in which he met a price of $ 30 offered by a competitor to Motorcycle Stuff, as opposed to a discount. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 15, at 1297. There is no other testimony where the specific level of Dunlop's competitor's [*141] discount was revealed or discussed. Furthermore, according to Logue, at no time did any of these three distributors threaten to terminate their business with Dunlop, but all three indicated that Dunlop's failure to provide additional discounts could result in a loss of sales of Dunlop tires through those distributors. Id. PP 26, 39, 51.

Dunlop also provides deposition testimony by Robert Nickell and Jeffrey Fox. Robert Nickell refers to "discussions [with Logue] to do with the fact that we were getting volume incentives from other tire manufacturers . . . I would have been negotiating to try to get similar type incentives or volume programs from Dunlop." App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 7, at 413. He does not recall any specific occasions, however, on which Logue requested or received any documentation of the competing offers. Id. Similarly, Jeffrey Fox states that he and Logue discussed "on a continuous basis . . . what the water level is in this industry," but is unable to recall specific conversations or details. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 5, at 164. He does not refer to any instances in which he provided Logue with specific information about discounts [*142] from competitors. See id.

b. Analysis

Under the first prong of the Falls City test, Dunlop does not necessarily need to know the specific price offered by the competitor, but it must produce facts sufficient to enable a jury to determine the range of discount(s) offered by Dunlop's competitors, so that they can compare the discounts Dunlop offered to Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited (but not Nichols) to "meet competition." Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited would then need to testify at trial that they reported such a range of discounts. None of the defendants have offered that testimony; in fact, it is conspicuously absent. Failure to satisfy this element of the section 2(a) defense requires summary judgment in Nichols' favor.

Instead of concentrating on the objective requirements of a Section 2(a) defense, both parties have focused on whether Dunlop demonstrated good faith in responding to a competitor's lower price, invoking the four Gypsum factors.⁴¹ Dunlop relies on a number of cases in which courts have applied Gypsum's extremely flexible standard. See, e.g., Falls City, 460 U.S. at 439 HN37 [↑] ("In most situations, a showing of facts giving rise to [*143] a reasonable belief that equally low prices were available to the favored purchaser from a competitor will be sufficient to establish that the seller's lower price was offered in good faith to meet that price."); Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69 (1979) (holding that the defendant had successfully demonstrated good faith where the defendant had a long-standing business relationship with the customer and faced a credible threat of losing its account with the customer unless it made substantial concessions); Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d 37 (affirming district court's grant of summary judgment to the defendant manufacturer on the issue of good faith even though the ultimate discount did not meet, but rather beat, the competition, where the manufacturer had presented evidence of its long-term relationship with the customer, whom it believed to be trustworthy, and other customers had reported precisely the same discount from the manufacturer's competitor); Cadigan v. Texaco, Inc., 492 F.2d 383 (9th Cir. 1974) (affirming summary judgment in favor of the defendant where the defendant relied on the buyer's uncorroborated reports that the defendant's competitors offered [*144] greater discounts and threatened to terminate business with the defendant if it failed to grant additional discounts); Jones v. Borden Co., 430 F.2d 568 (5th Cir. 1970) (holding that a good faith defense was properly asserted where several buyers informed the manufacturer that the manufacturer's price was uncompetitive and the manufacturer suffered substantial loss of sales prior to granting an additional discount); Forster Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 335 F.2d 47 (1st Cir. 1964) HN38 [↑] (noting that good faith defense does not require that the defendant know the identity of his competitor or have concrete proof of the amount of the competitive offer), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 906 (1965); McCaskill v. Texaco, Inc., 351 F. Supp. 1332 (S.D. Ala. 1972) (granting summary judgment to the defendant where customers provided the defendant with uncorroborated reports of greater discounts from the defendant's competitors), aff'd, 486 F.2d 1400 (5th Cir. 1973); Krieger v. Texaco, Inc., 373 F. Supp. 108 (W.D.N.Y. 1972) (granting summary judgment to the defendant where a long-standing customer informed the defendant of competing offers and partially terminated business with the defendant until [*145] the defendant lowered its prices).

⁴¹ Note that the "good faith" response is only one part of the test. The other part of the test regards the objective and verifiable evidence used by the manufacturer to come up with or calculate a discount level or range that would meet competition.

On the issue of good faith alone, Dunlop has relied heavily on Logue's subjective determinations, which were based on his business experience. Pat Logue testified at his deposition that Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited and Motorcycle Stuff all informed him that Dunlop's discounts were uncompetitive and that Dunlop would lose sales as a result. Dunlop had long-standing business relationships with each of these distributors and believed them to be trustworthy. In addition, Logue states that it was his practice to request from the distributors documentation of these competing offers, even though such information was rarely, if ever, forthcoming. Logue also states that it was his practice to refer to the competitors' published [*146] price lists, if available to Dunlop, in order to confirm that the reported offers which no one now recalls were indeed in line with current market conditions. This evidence may have been sufficient to present a genuine issue of fact as to Dunlop's good faith under Gypsum's lenient standards for good faith, as applied by the Seventh Circuit in Reserve Supply, if other non-subjective facts about actual price ranges from competitors had been established.

The key issue in this case is whether Dunlop has successfully shown "the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor," a necessary element to asserting a Section 2(b) affirmative defense. Staley, 324 U.S. at 759-60. Nichols touches upon this issue tangentially in its assertion that Dunlop had no procedures in place for verifying the existence of any alleged equally low price of a competitor. See Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 12-15. Dunlop, however, is unable to point to facts that would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that Dunlop was meeting the equally low price [*147] of a competitor and has not provided sufficient evidence that it was ever apprised or aware of what its competitors' prices or price levels were, as compared with Dunlop's prices. Furthermore, Dunlop, through the deposition testimony of Logue, Nickell and Jeffrey Fox, is unable to show that Logue (i.e., Dunlop) ever knew, or even believed that he knew, the amount of the discounts offered by Dunlop's competitors. Absent such information, Dunlop had no way to determine that the lower price it granted to distributors who informed Logue that they were receiving discounts from competing manufacturers was "meeting" the equally low price of a competitor.

In each of the cases cited by Dunlop, the defendant had some knowledge of the nature of the offer presented by its competitor upon which to base its counter-offer. See Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 440 U.S. at 84 (noting that customer told the defendant that a $ 50,000 improvement in its bid "would not be a drop in the bucket"); Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 43 (noting that manufacturer's representative had contemporaneous notes of his conversation with customer indicating the exact amount of the competitor's discount); [Cadigan \[*148\]](#), 492 F.2d at 385-86 (stating that buyer told defendant the exact amount of the discounts offered by defendant's competitors); Jones, 430 F.2d at 573 (noting that buyer told defendant that defendant's price was "generally five percent higher" than competitor's); Forster, 335 F.2d at 54 (stating that several buyers informed the defendant of the exact nature of the competitive offer, and the defendant conducted an independent investigation in order to confirm the offer); McCaskill, 351 F. Supp. at 1337-38 (stating that buyers told defendant the exact amount of the discounts offered by defendant's competitors); Krieger, 373 F. Supp. at 112 (noting that buyer told defendant the prices offered by defendant's competitors).

In addition, in Glowacki v. Borden, 420 F. Supp. 348 \(N.D. Ill. 1976\), a case we find analogous to the instant situation, Judge Grady denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment where the seller informed the defendant distributor that the defendant's prices were higher than those of a competitor, but the defendant failed to assert facts demonstrating that it had reason to believe that the prices it offered in response were no [\[*149\]](#) lower than those offered by its competitor. In this case, Dunlop offers no evidence that it was ever aware of even the approximate amount of the discounts offered by its competitors. Logue can recall no specific instance in which a distributor informed him of an exact amount of a competitor's discount, or even provided some sort of benchmark by which Logue could set a competitive discount on Dunlop tires. The competitors' price lists to which Logue referred were often outdated and did not include unofficial discounts, which were frequently offered by tire manufacturers such as Dunlop and its competitors.

Dunlop therefore has failed to demonstrate "the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor," Falls City, 460 U.S. at 438 (citations omitted). Because "the seller must show that under the circumstances it was reasonable to believe that the quoted price or a lower one was available to the favored purchaser or purchasers from the seller's competitors," id. (quoting Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 451), to prevail, Dunlop has failed to produce sufficient factual [\[*150\]](#) support for the assertion of a Section 2(b) defense, and has therefore failed to carry its burden on Nichols' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment. Its motion on the Section 2(b) defense is, therefore, granted.

III. The State Law Claims

A. The Facts

The following facts relate to the state law claims alleged in Plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint. In September 1992, Pat Logue, from Dunlop, told Ken Anderson, from Nichols, that the "prices" Nichols received from Dunlop were the same as those offered to other Dunlop distributors; that "there were no other prices." 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 63. Logue also told Terry Baisley, from Nichols, that all distributors bought from the same price sheet. Id. In addition, there is no dispute that sometime in 1992 Logue told Nichols that it would not be terminated as a distributor. 12(N)(3)(b) P 64. At that time, Nichols operated as a Dunlop distributor under the 1992 Distributor Agreement, which ended December 31, 1992. Id. On December 28, 1992, Dunlop issued a Memorandum informing all of its distributors that it intended to terminate two or three of them in 1993. PX 16. Dunlop mailed a copy of this Memo with the 1993 Distributor [\[*151\]](#) Agreements to each of its distributors. Nichols received a copy of the Memo and the Agreement, which it signed on January 11, 1993. The 1993 Distributor Agreement contained a "termination" provision which provided that Dunlop had the option to terminate the agreement with five days notice. PX 1.

In addition to Dunlop's alleged misrepresentations, Nichols bases some of its state law claims upon its decision to open a second warehouse. Nichols began exploring the possibility of opening a second warehouse in Phoenix, Arizona, in March 1992. 12(N)(3)(b) P 66. Nichols leased the warehouse in September 1992. Id. Nichols admits that Dunlop never asked for the Phoenix warehouse, nor did it require Nichols to obtain the warehouse as a condition of its right to distribute Dunlop tires under the relevant agreements. 12(M) P 419 The record also reflects that Nichols attempted to conceal its Phoenix plans. For instance, in September 1992, two days after Nichols leased the warehouse, Jack Jesse testified that in Las Vegas "we kind of told him [Logue] with our laughter and humor" that Nichols was opening a Phoenix warehouse. 12(N)(3)(b) P 66. Nichols began to stock Dunlop tires in its Phoenix [*152] warehouse before it opened on January 14, 1993. Id. Dunlop attended the opening of the warehouse and agreed to ship Dunlop products there. Id. There is no evidence that Dunlop knew that Nichols had invested in the warehouse until it received Nichols' first purchase order. Id. The warehouse currently remains open. 12(N)(3)(b) P 67.

B. Claims Against Dunlop

1. Count VIII: Illinois Consumer Fraud Act

In Count VIII, Plaintiff alleges that Dunlop intentionally misrepresented that: (1) Nichols received the same prices and discounts offered to the other distributors; and (2) Nichols would not be terminated as a Dunlop distributor, in violation of the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act ("Consumer Fraud Act" or "the Act"). 815 ILCS 505/1 et seq. Compl. P 63.

Section 2 of the Act provides:

HN39[] Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, including but not limited to the use or employment of any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation or the concealment, suppression or omission of such material fact, or the use or employment of any practice described in Section 2 of the 'Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices [*153] Act,' approved August 5, 1965, in the conduct of any trade or commerce hereby declared unlawful whether any person has in fact been misled, deceived or damaged thereby. In construing this section consideration shall be given to the interpretations of the Federal trade Commission and the federal courts relating to Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

815 ILCS 505/2.

Dunlop contends that Nichols is not a "consumer" under the Act and therefore lacks standing to bring this claim. In particular, Dunlop contends that the claim is defective because it does not involve Illinois trade or commerce or affect Illinois consumers. Nichols fails to specify allege an affect on trade or commerce in Illinois.

There is currently a split among both Illinois and federal district courts as to whether an effect upon Illinois consumers is required to properly bring a claim under the Act. 815 ILCS 505/2.

HN40[] Section 815 ILCS 501/(f) defines trade or commerce as:

the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of any services and any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situated, and [*154] shall include any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this State. (emphasis added).

HN41[

Some Illinois courts find that the Act is intended to "protect and benefit Illinois residents," Lincoln Nat'l Life Ins. Co. v. Silver, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13857 at * 34-35 \(N.D. Ill. October 1, 1991\). These courts construe the language "shall include any trade or commerce" to limit the reach of the Act's protection. See Schwartz v. Schaub, 818 F. Supp. 1214 \(1993\)(Shadur, J.)(citing Seaboard Seed Co. v. Bemis Co., Inc., 632 F. Supp. 1133 \(N.D. Ill. 1986\)(Shadur, J.)). See also Cange v. Stotler & Co., 913 F.2d 1204, 1210 \(7th Cir. 1990\) (Act outlaws unfair methods of competition in the conduct of any trade or commerce which directly or indirectly affects the people of Illinois). For practical purposes, the holdings in these cases mean that a valid Consumer Fraud Act claim must include allegations of trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting consumers in Illinois.

Conversely, some courts construe the language of the Act broadly and hold that the Act was not strictly intended to protect only Illinois consumers, but also to prohibit fraud [*155] in the conduct of any trade or commerce. See Cirone-Shadow v. Union Nissan of Waukegan, No. 94 C 6723, 1995 WL 238680, * 3 \(N.D. Ill. April 20, 1995\)(Kocoras, J.)(holding that the statute, by its terms, does not limit its scope to the protection of Illinois residents); Fry v. UAL Corp., 136 F.R.D. 626 (N.D. Ill. 1991) (Holderman, J.) (same); CPS Corp. v. Tkalitch, 1994 WL 724834 (N.D.Ill. Dec. 22, 1994) (Pallmeyer, J.). Duhl, 102 Ill. App.3d at 495 (legislature clearly mandated that Illinois courts should liberally construe and broadly apply the Consumer fraud Act in order to eradicate all forms of deceptive and unfair business practices).

In the absence of a ruling by the Illinois Supreme Court on this issue, this Court must determine which construction of the Act to apply. This Court believes that the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, although intended to protect Illinois consumers, does not contain a geographic limitation. The Court also believes that the Illinois Supreme Court would construe the Act liberally to include all consumers whose allegations of fraud directly or indirectly affect trade or commerce in Illinois. The Seventh Circuit has held that if the Illinois [*156] Supreme Court were to face the question whether the Act requires injury to a particular consumer, or consumers generally, the Court would require a showing that a defendant's misconduct injured consumers generally." First Comics, Inc. v. World Color Press, Inc., 884 F.2d 1033, 1040 (7th Cir. 1989) (cited by Cange, 913 F.2d at 1210). Thus, both the definition of a consumer and the affect upon that consumer sweeps broadly and includes Nichols' general allegations of injury. Nichols is not only an Illinois corporation, but it does business in Illinois. Therefore, any injury to Nichols is either an injury or the functional equivalent of an injury to an Illinois consumer. Nichols therefore has standing to assert Count VIII.

HN42[] The next question is whether a genuine issue of triable fact exists on the issues of price discrimination and termination. To establish a claim under the Act, a plaintiff must allege and prove the following elements: (1) the misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; (2) an intent by the defendant that the plaintiff rely on the misrepresentation or concealment; and (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct of any trade or commerce. [*157] Celex, 877 F. Supp. at 1128; Seigel, 153 Ill.2d at 542. In 1994, the Illinois Supreme Court also recognized that a plaintiff must show that the challenged conduct of the defendant proximately caused the damages alleged under the Act. See Martin v. Heinhold Commodities, Inc., 163 Ill.2d 33, 58-59, 643 N.E.2d 734, 746-47 (1994) (citing cases); 815 ILCS 505/2.

Nichols claims that Dunlop made two misrepresentations: First, sometime in 1992, Dunlop promised not to terminate Nichols (termination claim). Second, in September 1992, Pat Logue told Ken Anderson that Nichols was receiving Dunlop's best distributor prices and discounts on tires.

It is undisputed that Logue's statement about price was false (price discrimination claim). Therefore, the element of misrepresentation has been established. The question on price is whether this misrepresentation was material, and whether Dunlop intended for Nichols to rely on the misrepresentation. See Ryan v. Wersi Elec. GMBH & Co., No. 94-2783, 1995 U.S. App LEXIS 16048 (7th Cir. June 28, 1995). With respect to materiality, there are genuine issues of material fact. HN43[] A misrepresentation is material if the party to whom it was made [*158] would have acted differently had the party known the truth. Id. at * 3. The determination of whether a misrepresentation is material involves factual determinations generally inappropriate for resolution on a summary judgment motion. Foster v. Zeeko, 540 F.2d 692, 694 (7th Cir. 1976). Similarly, questions of intent are inappropriate for summary judgment. Celex Group Inc. v. Executive Gallery, Inc., 877 F. Supp. 1114, 1128 (N.D. Ill. 1995). In this case, the Court is unable to find, as a matter of law, that Nichols would not have brought this lawsuit sooner than it did had it known that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were receiving discounts it did not receive. Moreover, genuine issues of fact regarding injury from price discrimination exist in this case which would preclude summary judgment on Count VIII.

With respect to termination, there are similar questions. The difference between the termination claim for fraud under the Act, and the claim alleged under common law, is that under common law reliance is an element; under the Act it is not. Celex, 877 F. Supp. at 1128 (citing Seigel v. Levy Organization Dev. Co., 153 Ill.2d 534, 542 (1992)). Whereas the Court [*159] can confidently say that Nichols could not reasonably rely, as a matter of law, on any promises not to terminate after January 11, 1993 (the date it signed the 1993 Distributor Agreement), we cannot say that Dunlop did not manifest an intent to deceive Nichols in 1992 when it made the alleged statements, nor can the Court say that these statements were not material misrepresentations, as those terms have been defined. Ryan, Supra at * 3. We therefore deny summary judgment, under both the theory of price and termination, on Count VIII.

2. Counts IX & X: Illinois Franchise Act Illinois

The key issue involved in resolving Counts IX and X is whether Nichols is a franchise under the Illinois Franchise Disclosure Act. 815 ILCS 705(3)(1)(1995) ("Franchise Act"). Whether Nichols has standing to bring a suit under the Franchise Act depends upon whether it satisfies the definition of a franchise.

HN44 [+] A franchise is defined as a contract granting the right to engage in business and requiring the payment of a "franchise fee." 815 ILCS 705/3\(1\). A franchise fee is any fee or charge (including payment for goods or services) that is required by the franchisor for the right to sell, resell, [*160] or distribute goods or services, and is paid directly or indirectly by the franchisee. 815 ILCS 705/3\(14\).

A "franchise" thus requires a contract and a required fee. Nichols' contract with Dunlop did not characterize their relationship as a "franchise" nor did it require payment of a fee. 12(M) P 443 (the agreement did not require payment of a "franchise fee," "service fee," or "royalty fee"). Illinois law requires that, in order for a payment to be considered a "franchise fee," it must precisely fit within the statutory definition. See Account Services Corp. v. DAKCS Software Services, Inc., 567 N.E.2d 381, 385 \(Ill. App. 1990\). Nichols contends, however, that either maintaining large inventories, processing customer returns, or providing its own products liability insurance (at Dunlop's request) operates as a franchise fee. This argument is flawed, because all the payments Nichols made to Dunlop pursuant to its distributorship agreement were voluntary. 12(M) P 443. Nichols was not required by Dunlop to maintain large inventories, nor can Dunlop's discount system be considered a "de facto" inventory requirement since Nichols admits it was able to sell off the inventory within [*161] six months without special promotions or discounts. Costs stemming from processing customer returns are simply costs associated with doing business and are, therefore, not a franchise fee. See Bryant Corp. v. Outboard Marine Corp., 1994 WL 745159 at * 3 (W.D. Wash. Sept. 29, 1994) (providing warranty administration work for the suppliers products does not constitute a franchise fee). Finally, Dunlop's request that Nichols provide products liability insurance is just that, a request, and not a requirement.

For these reasons, the Court finds that Nichols never paid a franchise fee to Dunlop and therefore has no standing to sue under the Act as "franchise." Summary judgment is therefore granted in favor of Dunlop as to Counts IX and X.

3. Count XI: Promissory Estoppel

The 1993 Distributorship Agreement signed by Nichols contained a clause which allowed Dunlop to terminate their relationship at any time, as long as Nichols was provided with five days notice. In Count XI, Nichols argues that, in spite of this provision, it reasonably and foreseeably relied upon Dunlop's promise, made in 1992, not to terminate Nichols as a Dunlop distributor. Nichols contends that this promise [*162] modified the contract and that Dunlop should be estopped from exercising the termination provision.

HN45 [+] In Illinois, the elements necessary to establish a claim of promissory estoppel are: (1) an unambiguous promise; (2) on which the promisee reasonably and justifiably relied; (3) which was foreseeable by the promisor; and (4) on which the promisee relied to his detriment. See M. T. Bonk Co. v. Milton Bradley Co., 945 F.2d 1404, 1408 \(7th Cir. 1991\). New York law, which applies to the contract claims in this case, applies the same elements. Gellerman v. Deet, 625 N.Y.S.2d 831, 832 \(1995\)(citing James King & son, Inc. v. De Santis Constr., 413 N.Y.S.2d 78, 81 (1977)).

Even if this Court were to accept Nichols' claim that Dunlop's oral promises modified the written distributor contract, Nichols' promissory estoppel claim must fail. Sometime in 1993, Logue promised Nichols that their relationship would not be terminated. At most, this promise could affect only the 1992 Distributorship Agreement. In January 1993, Nichols signed a new Distributorship Agreement. This agreement contained the termination clause with no mention of the oral promises. It also contained an integration [*163] clause. The 1993 contract supersedes the 1992 contract, whether the 1992 contract was modified or not. Further, there is no indication that the 1993 contract was similarly modified. Therefore, if Nichols' reliance on Dunlop's promises was actionable at all under the doctrine of promissory estoppel, it was actionable only under the 1992 contract. Dunlop terminated Nichols in 1993 pursuant to their 1993 agreement. Plaintiff's promissory estoppel claim must fail and summary judgment is granted for Dunlop on Count XI.

4. Count XII: Equitable Estoppel

Nichols also claims that Dunlop is equitably estopped from exercising its right to terminate Nichols under the terms of the 1993 contract because Dunlop made material misrepresentations with respect to price and termination. HN46 Unlike promissory estoppel, the doctrine of equitable estoppel is based upon an intended misrepresentation or the concealment of a material fact rather than a promise. Derby Meadows Util. v. Inter-Continental, 559 N.E.2d 986, 995 \(Ill. App. 1990\). The elements necessary to assert a claim for equitable estoppel are: (1) words or conduct consisting of misrepresentations or concealment of material facts; (2) [\[*164\]](#) defendant must have actual or implied knowledge at the time the representations are made that they are untrue; (3) plaintiff does not know that the representations are untrue at the time that they are made; (4) the party estopped must intend or expect that his conduct or representations will be acted on by the plaintiff; (5) plaintiff relies on the representations in such a manner that he would be prejudiced if the party making the representations is allowed to deny the truth thereof. See Derby Meadows Util., 559 N.E.2d at 995.

Nichols' equitable estoppel claim fails because Nichols cannot prove, as a matter of law, that it relied on Dunlop's 1992 statement that Nichols would not be terminated. Nichols cannot prove reasonable reliance because it read the December 28, 1992, Memorandum from Dunlop announcing the imminent termination of two or three distributors and signed the 1993 Distributorship Agreement which contained an express at will provision and an integration clause. Nichols also cannot prove reliance, as a matter of law, after it signed the 1993 contract because Dunlop made no additional assurances to Nichols regarding termination after January 11, 1993. The Court therefore [\[*165\]](#) grants summary judgment in favor of Dunlop on Count XII.

5. Count XIII: Equitable Recoupment

HN47 The Equitable Recoupment doctrine applies when a contract is terminated without just cause before the terminated party has the opportunity to recoup its losses. Cox v. Doctor's Associates, Inc., 245 Ill.App.3d 116, 200 \(Ill.App. 1993\). The doctrine "is designed to remedy the inequity which arises after a manufacturer requires a distributor to make a sizeable investment in furtherance of the distributorship, terminates the relationship without just cause and leaves the distributor with substantial unrecovered expenses." Id. at 200. In some courts, the doctrine is cognizable only after it is shown that the contract in question is terminable at will. Ag-Chem Equip. Co. v. Hahn, Inc., 480 F.2d 482, \(8th Cir. 1973\).

Nichols alleges that it made sizable investments, including leasing, improving and stocking the Phoenix warehouse to promote Dunlop goods in reliance on Dunlop's assurances that it would not be terminated. Compl. P 81. Nichols claims that Dunlop terminated its agreement with Nichols without just cause, leaving Nichols with substantial unrecouped investments. Compl. [\[*166\]](#) P 82.

Nichols equitable recoupment claim fails because there is no evidence that Dunlop "required" Nichols to establish a business in Phoenix. Rather, Nichols alleges that Dunlop merely "encouraged" such action. Compl. P 15. Hence, Dunlop is not responsible for Nichols investments due to its termination as a Dunlop distributor, since Dunlop did not require Nichols to make such investments. Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Count XIII is, therefore, granted.

6. Count XIV: Breach of Contract/Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN48 Both Illinois and New York courts have declared that every contract implies good faith and fair dealing between its parties. Fasolino Foods Co. v. Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, 961 F.2d 1052, 1056 \(2nd Cir. 1992\); Beraha v. Baxter Health Care Corp., 956 F.2d 1436, 1443 \(7th Cir. 1992\). However, the covenant is not an independent source of contractual duties; rather, it "guides the construction of explicit terms in the agreement." Beraha, 956 F.2d at 1443. When a term in the contract grants a wide range of discretion, the party must "exercise that discretion reasonably, with proper motive and in a manner consistent with the reasonable [*167] expectations of the parties." Id. at 1444 (citing Dayan v. McDonald's Corp., 466 N.E.2d 958, 972 (Ill. App. 1984) (emphasis in original)).

On its face, this covenant appears to be at odds with the concept of at will contracts, which allow a party to exercise its discretion to terminate a contractual relationship for virtually any reason. However, since an at will contract expressly allows each party to terminate at any time, the parties have no reasonable expectation that it will be terminated only for cause. Beraha, 956 F.2d at 1444-1445. Therefore, the covenant is not breached when one party terminates an at will contract because the party's actions were in accord with the other's reasonable expectations. Id.

In this case, the 1993 contract entered into between Nichols and Dunlop stated: "In addition to the termination rights in paragraph 2, this agreement may be terminated with or without cause by either party upon five days' written notice addressed to the other party by mail or wire." 12(M) P 407. Nichols claims that Dunlop breached the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing when it terminated Nichols because it exercised the discretion provided by this clause [*168] in bad faith. However, since the contract expressly provided that Dunlop could terminate its distributorship relationship with Nichols for any reason, Nichols could not have had a reasonable expectation that Dunlop would only terminate it for cause. Nichols' claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing fails because Nichols does not allege that Dunlop exercised its discretion in any manner inconsistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties. Therefore, Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment of Count XIV is granted.

7. Count XV: Fraud

HN49 [↑] The elements of a cause of action for common law fraudulent misrepresentation are: (1) false statement of material fact; (2) known or believed to be false by the party stating it; (3) intent to induce the other party to act; (4) justifiable reliance by the other party on the misrepresentation; and (5) damage to the other party resulting from such reliance. Heider v. Leewards Creative Crafts, Inc., 613 N.E.2d 805, 811 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1993) (citing Soules v. General Motors Corp., 402 N.E.2d 599, 601 (Ill. 1980)). Nichols bases its fraud claim against Dunlop upon two alleged misrepresentations. First, [*169] Nichols points to Logue's statement, made in 1992, that Nichols would not be considered for termination as a distributor. Second, Nichols alleges that Dunlop falsely represented that Nichols was getting the same discounts from Dunlap that other distributors were receiving.

With respect to Logue's 1992 statement regarding the possibility that Nichols would be terminated as a distributor, the Court has already determined that the statement was superseded by the 1993 contract. After Nichols signed this contract on January 11, 1993, Nichols reliance on Logue's statement was unjustified. See Merex A.G. v. Fairchild Weston Systems, Inc., 810 F. Supp. 1356, 1372 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (no justified reliance when oral promise contradicts an admitted, subsequent written executory agreement). Therefore, Nichols can not recover for the damages it is seeking that result from events that occurred after the 1993 contract was signed, which primarily arise from the opening of the Phoenix warehouse. During that time, the 1993 contract was controlling.

There is a possibility that Nichols could have been damaged by its reliance on Logue's statement during the time between when the statement was made [*170] and when Nichols signed the 1993 contract. HN50 [↑] The reasonableness of a party's reliance is determined at the time that the party acts upon the misrepresentation. Duran v. Leslie Oldsmobile Inc., 594 N.E.2d 1355, 1363 (Ill. App. 1992). A plaintiff's subsequent opportunity to become informed of the true facts contradicting a misrepresentation cannot render prior reliance unreasonable. Id. However, Nichols still must prove that its reliance during this time was reasonable.

Dunlop asserts that Nichols cannot prove that its reliance upon Logue's statements was reasonable because it was a promise of future conduct. HN51 [↑] As a general rule, promises of future conduct are not actionable in fraud. Wilsmann v. Stearns, 664 F. Supp. 386, 391 (N.D. Ill. 1987) (citing Steinberg v. Chicago Medical School, 371 N.E.2d 634, 641 (1977)). However, an exception to this rule exists when the false representation is part of a "scheme or device" used to accomplish the fraud. Wilsmann, 664 F. Supp. at 391. Nichols has alleged that the promise was part of a scheme. Whether or not a scheme actually existed in this case is a question of fact for the jury. See [Stamakis Indus., Inc. v. King, 520 \[*171\] N.E.2d 770 \(Ill. App. 1987\)](#).

In addition, Nichols must prove that its reliance upon Dunlop's statements regarding price was reasonable, and that Dunlop intended to deceive Nichols with these statements. This creates genuine issues of material fact that the jury must decide. See Foster v. Zeeko, 540 F.2d 1310, 1319 \(7th Cir. 1976\); Fitzsimmons v. Best, 528 F.2d 692, 694 \(7th Cir. 1976\); Fisher v. Samuels, 691 F. Supp. 63, 69 \(N.D. Ill. 1988\) HN52⁴² (questions of reasonableness and intent involve factual determinations and are generally inappropriate for resolution on a motion for summary judgment). There are also genuine issues of material fact with respect to the evidence of damages, as expressed in the portion of this opinion dealing with the Robinson- Patman Act claims. Therefore, this Court will deny Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment as to Count XV. However, Nichols' claim for fraud regarding the termination will be limited to the alleged damages which preceded the signing of the 1993 contract.

C. Claims against Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited

1. Count XVI: Tortious Interference with Contract

HN53⁴³ The elements that a plaintiff must allege and prove for [*172] a valid claim of tortious interference with contract include: (1) the existence of a valid and enforceable contract between the plaintiff and another; (2) that the defendant was aware of the contractual relationship; (3) an intentional and unjustified inducement of a breach of the contract which causes a subsequent breach by the third party; and (4) damages. A-Apart Elec. Supply Inc. v. Emerson Elec. Co., 956 F.2d 1399, 1404 \(7th Cir.\) (quoting Mannion v. Stallings & Co., 561 N.E.2d 1134, 1139 \(Ill. App. 1st Dist. 1990\)), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 194 (1992). Nichols claims that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited unjustifiably induced Dunlop to breach its contract with Nichols.

Generally, if a contract at will is terminated, no breach has occurred. Therefore, most courts do not recognize tortious interference with contract claims that are based upon a contract at will. See Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Sipula, 776 F.2d 157, 162 \(7th Cir. 1985\); Belden v. InterNorth, Inc., 413 N.E.2d 98, 102 \(Ill. App. 1980\); Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 768 cmt. i (1977); cf. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Von Matre, 511 N.E.2d 740, 744 \(Ill. App. 1987\) (at will nature [*173] of contract does not relieve alleged tortfeasor of liability). In this case, the Court has already determined that Dunlop's termination of Nichols was not a breach of contract because the contract was terminable at will. Since there was no breach, Nichols' claim must fail.

In addition, Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's actions are protected by the "competitor's privilege." HN54⁴⁴ Lawful competition is a justifiable reason for interfering with contractual relations. See Von Matre, 511 N.E.2d at 744, Getschow v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 444 N.E.2d 579, 584 \(1982\). According the Restatement (Second) of Torts:

A competitor who intentionally causes a third party not to enter into a contract with another or not to continue a contract terminable at will does not interfere improperly if: (1) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and the other; and (2) the actor does not employ wrongful means; and (3) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint on trade; and (4) when a business relationship affords the parties only the hope of benefits, the parties must allow for the rights of others.

[Restatement \(Second\) \[*174\] of Torts § 768](#).⁴² We have already determined, in the section of this Opinion dealing with Count I, that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited did not participate in conduct restraining trade. Therefore, their actions are protected by the competitor's privilege. Consequently, summary judgement is granted for Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited as to Count XVI.

2. Count XVII: Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

⁴² This section of the Restatement was adopted by Illinois courts in Galinski v. Kessler, 480 N.E.2d 1176, 1182 \(Ill. App. 1985\).

HN55 [+] The elements of a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage are: (1) the plaintiff's reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship; (2) the defendant's purposeful interference and destruction of this legitimate expectancy⁴³; and (3) that the defendant's actions caused harm to the plaintiff. A-Abart Elec. Supply Inc., 956 F.2d at 1404 (quoting Kurtz v. Illinois Nat'l Bank, 534 N.E.2d 1007, 1012 (Ill. App. 1989)). In cases where an individual with a prospective business relationship has a mere expectancy of "future economic gain; a party [*175] to a contract has a certain and enforceable expectation of receiving the benefits of the contract. When a business relationship affords the parties no enforceable expectations, but only the hope of . . . benefits, the parties must allow for the rights of others. They therefore have no cause of action against a bona fide competitor unless the circumstances indicate unfair competition, that is, an unprivileged interference with prospective advantage.

A-Abart Elec. Supply, 956 F.2d at 1404-1405 (quoting Belden Corp. v. InterNorth, Inc., 413 N.E.2d 98, 102 (Ill. App. 1980)).

There is no unfair competition in this case, given the Court's rulings on the antitrust claims. Nichols argues that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited interfered with its valid expectancies to continue [*176] its business dealings with Dunlop; to continue to sell Dunlop tires to its customers; to enter into a distributorship relationship with Metzeler; and, as to only Tucker/Rocky, to continue its relationship with its top salespeople, who were hired away from Tucker/Rocky after Dunlop terminated Nichols. However, Nichols' claim fails because the competitor's privilege applies not only to claims of tortious interference with contract, but also to claims of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. Id. Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited, and Nichols are all players in a very competitive market. The Court has determined that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited did not employ improper competitive strategies. Therefore, summary judgement is granted in favor of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited on Count XVII.

IV. Dunlop's Motion to Strike Nichols' Jury Demand

Given the rulings contained in this Opinion, this Court hereby denies defendant Dunlop's Motion to Strike Nichols' jury demand. Dunlop's motion is entirely based on form language which is contained in the distribution agreement which existed between Dunlop and Nichols. This proviso was contained in paragraph two entitled [*177] "Terms" and stated as follows:

TERMS: The due date and terms of each shipment are indicated on the invoice and on the monthly statement of account. If the Distributor fails to make payment in accordance therewith, or if there is a change in the Distributor's credit worthiness, Dunlop may modify such due dates and terms, or refuse to make further shipments except for cash and the payment in full or the balance due in the Distributor's account, and if Dunlop so decides in such case, may terminate this Agreement without ADVANCE NOTICE. Distributor agrees to pay to [sic] the collection costs of any obligation due from it to Dunlop including attorney's fees, court costs and collection agency fees. In any dispute arising between Distributor and Dunlop, Distributor hereby waives trial by jury in any action, proceeding, counterclaim, whether at law or equity against Distributor or Dunlop, or in any manner whatsoever connected with this Agreement or the performance by Distributor under this Agreement. In the event that the balance shown owing on the Distributor's Statement of Account with Dunlop remains unpaid, in whole or in part, for 30 days or more after the due date shown on [*178] said statement and Dunlop institutes a court collection action against Distributor, Distributor agrees to additionally pay interest to Dunlop from said due date. The interest shall be paid at the maximum legal rate which may be charged by commercial banks in Distributor's jurisdiction on payable-on-demand business loans, equal in amount to the past due sum, made by express contract to borrowers similar to the Distributor.

⁴³ The interference must take the form of unfair competition such as fraud, intimidation, or disparagement. A-Abart Elec. Supply Inc., 956 F.2d at 1404-1405. This standard is more stringent than the one used in tortious interference with contract claims because a party's interest in prospective economic advantage receives less protection than its enforceable contract rights. Id.

Based on this language Dunlop asserts that Nichols has waived its fundamental constitutional right to a trial by jury. HN56 [+] Although the Seventh Amendment of the United States Constitution guarantees the right to a jury trial in civil cases, this right may be waived. Stewart v. RCA Corp., 790 F.2d 624, 630 \(7th Cir. 1986\) Bonfield v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc., 717 F. Supp. 589, 594 \(N.D. Ill. 1989\). However, such a waiver must be made knowingly and voluntarily. In re Reggie Packing Co., 671 F. Supp. 571, 573 \(N.D. Ill. 1987\). Indeed, "as the right of jury trial is fundamental, courts indulge in every reasonable presumption against waiver." Aetna Insurance Co. v. Kennedy, 301 U.S. 389, 393, 57 S. Ct. 809, 812, 81 L. Ed. 1177 \(1987\). The factors to consider [*179] in determining whether a contractual waiver of the right to jury trial was entered into knowingly and voluntarily include: (1) the parties' negotiations concerning the waiver provision, if any, (2) the conspicuousness of the provision, (3) the relative bargaining power of the parties and (4) whether the waiving party's counsel had an opportunity to review the agreement. Heller Financial, Inc. v. Finch-Bayless Equip. Co., No. 90 C 1672, 1990 WL 77500 \(N.D.Ill. May 31, 1990\), reconsideration denied, 1990 WL 103232 \(N.D. Ill. July 17, 1990\); Bonfield, 717 F. Supp. at 595-96; In re Reggie, 671 F. Supp. at 573-74. The Court expressly finds that interpreting this clause to be a waiver of an important constitutional right would be unjust under the circumstances of this case.

First, the Court notes that the claims that will proceed to trial in this case are limited to claims that do not directly arise or have their basis in the Distribution Agreement. Instead, this case will proceed to trial on Nichols' claims against Dunlop involving violations of the Robinson-Patman Act, the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act and common law fraud. Each of these claims are ultimately based on both [*180] statutory and common law and cannot be based on the parties' Distribution Agreement. Thus, despite the somewhat broad working of the purported jury waiver, the Court finds that this jury waiver should be strictly construed against Dunlop, the drafter of the agreement, and that it does not apply to the claims remaining this case.

Moreover, even if this Court were to find that the alleged jury waiver applies to the claims remaining in this case, this Court would still fail to enforce the waiver because there is no evidence that this alleged waiver was ever the subject of any negotiations between the parties. Given the absence of any evidence of such negotiations this Court finds that the alleged jury waiver was inconspicuous and therefore invalid. Whirlpool Financial Corp. v. Sevaux, 866 F. Supp. 1102, 1106 \(N.D. Ill. 1994\); Heller Financial, Inc. v. FinchBayless Equipment Co., No. 90 C 1672, 1990 WL 77500 \(N.D. Ill. May 31, 1990\). Finally, all of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the alleged jury waiver have led the Court to conclude that it was not undertaken in a knowing, voluntary and intelligent manner -- elements which are necessary conditions for the waiver [*181] of any important constitutional right.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons given above, the Court directs the Clerk of the Court to enter summary judgment in favor of Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky, and Parts Unlimited and against Nichols on Counts I-VI (1-6) of the Third Amended Complaint. The Court further directs the Clerk to enter judgment in favor of Dunlop and against Nichols on Counts IX through XIV (9-14), and in favor of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited and against Nichols on Counts VII, XVI, and XVII (7, 16, 17) of the Third Amended Complaint. Finally, the Court directs the Clerk to enter partial summary judgment in favor of Nichols and against Dunlop on Dunlop's Section 2(b) affirmative defense to Count VII of the Third Amended Complaint.

The Court denies Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Counts VII, VIII and XV (7, 8, and 15) of the Third Amended Complaint. The Court also denies Dunlop's Motion to Strike Nichols' jury demand.

ENTER:

Ruben Castillo

United States District Judge

August 10, 1995

Minute Order Form

Enter Memorandum Opinion and Order. The Clerk of the Court is directed to enter summary judgment in favor of Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky, [*182] and Parts Unlimited and against Nicholas on Counts I-VI of the Third Amended Complaint. The Court directs the Clerk to enter judgment in favor of Dunlop and against Nichols on Counts IX through XIV, and in favor of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited and against Nichols on Counts VII, enter partial summary judgment in favor of Nichols and against Dunlop on Dunlop's Section 2(b) affirmative defense to Count VII of the Third of Amended Complaint. The Court denies Dunlop's motion for summary judgment with respect to Counts VII, VIII and XV of the Third Amended Complaint. Dunlop's motion to strike Nichols' jury demand is denied.

End of Document

Bathke v. Casey's Gen. Stores

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

May 15, 1995, Submitted ; August 11, 1995, Filed

No. 94-3776

Reporter

64 F.3d 340 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 21612 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,085

Gilbert Bathke; Valoris Bathke; Ronald Condon; Lanina Condon; Panora Oil Company; Martin Kress; Annette Kress; Anne Lubeck; Petroleum Marketers of Iowa, Plaintiffs - Appellants, v. Casey's General Stores, Inc., Defendant - Appellee.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Iowa. District No. 90-CV-80658. Honorable Charles Wolle, District Judge.

Core Terms

pricing, geographic, gasoline, district court, consumers, plaintiffs', summary judgment, relevant market, Robinson-Patman Act, competitors, costs, Sherman Act, antitrust, monopolization, customers, predatory, rivals, depositions, unfair, anti trust law, recoup, jury question, seller, sufficient evidence, class member, shoe store, small town, trade area, probability, discovery

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In complex antitrust cases, no different or heightened standard for the grant of summary judgment applies.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN2 [] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews de novo a district court's decision granting summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN3 [down arrow] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

The court must review the record in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and determine whether the movant demonstrated that there are no genuine issues of material fact for trial and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Although the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, reads as a criminal statute, the antitrust laws provide a civil cause of action arising from a violation of this section, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\). By its language the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is directed at controlling monopolies. The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, prohibits predatory pricing when it poses a dangerous probability of actual monopolization. Predatory pricing means pricing a product below some objective measure of its cost.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

64 F.3d 340, *340 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 21612, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN7 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

By its terms, the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) condemns price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition. The type of price discrimination injury under this statute which harms direct competitors of the discriminating seller, is known as primary-line injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

There are differences between the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, and the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\). For example, the interpret § 2 of the Sherman Act to condemn predatory pricing when it poses a dangerous probability of actual monopolization, whereas the Robinson-Patman Act requires only that there be a reasonable possibility of substantial injury to competition before its protections are triggered. But whatever additional flexibility the Robinson-Patman Act standard may imply, the essence of the claim under either statute is the same: A business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise control over the prices in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [blue icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for the protection of competition, not competitors. Inflicting painful losses on competitors is of no moment to the antitrust laws if competition is not injured.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN10 [blue icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In proving a pricing violation in a relevant market, under both the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), there are two prerequisites to recovery. First, a plaintiff seeking to establish competitive injury resulting from a rival's low prices must prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs. In short, the plaintiff must prove the rival was pricing below cost. The second prerequisite to holding a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a reasonable prospect, or, under the Sherman Act, a dangerous probability, of recouping its investment in below-cost prices. In short, the plaintiff must prove the defendant's eventual ability to recoup its losses from pricing below cost. Actually, the defendants must recoup more than the losses suffered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN11 [blue icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The court holds that the essence of both a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 and Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) claim is that a business engaged in unfair pricing in order to gain and exercise control over prices in the relevant market. While it has long been clear that plaintiffs asserting claims of monopolization in violation the Sherman Act were required to prove the relevant geographical market, the court also requires plaintiffs asserting a Robinson-Patman Act predatory pricing claim to submit proof of the relevant market as well.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

To determine whether the defendants have the market power required for monopolization liability, the plaintiffs have to demonstrate a well defined product and geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

Like any other issue, market definition is subject to summary judgment if the plaintiffs fail to provide sufficient evidence from which a jury could reasonably find in their favor. Antitrust claims often rise or fall on the definition of the relevant market. An actual monopolization claim often succeeds or fails strictly on the definition of the product or geographic market. The definition of the relevant market has two components -- a product market and a geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The proper definition of a geographic market is determined by a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by the consumer. The geographic market encompasses the geographic area to which consumers can practically turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The relevant geographic market is defined as the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN16[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Evidence of consumers' actual habits is not enough to establish relevant geographic market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

HN17[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Costs

There is a presumption that the prevailing party is entitled to costs, Fed. R. Civ. P. 54\(d\). Costs other than attorneys' fees shall be allowed as of course to the prevailing party unless the court otherwise directs. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54\(d\) codifies the presumption that, with exceptions, costs will be awarded to prevailing parties.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

HN18[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The court reviews a district court's decision to award costs for an abuse of discretion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

HN19[] Costs & Attorney Fees, Costs

The district court has substantial discretion in awarding costs.

Counsel: Counsel who represented the appellant were Barry J. Nadler and James A. Brewer, Ames, Iowa.

Counsel who represented the appellee were Edward W. Remsburg and H. Richard Smith, Des Moines, Iowa.

Judges: Before McMILLIAN, BEAM, and HANSEN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: HANSEN

Opinion

[*341] HANSEN, Circuit Judge.

The plaintiffs, gasoline retailers located in small towns, appeal the district court's ¹ order granting summary judgment to the defendant, Casey's General Stores, Inc., a multi-state retailer of gasoline and other goods, on the plaintiffs' complaint alleging that Casey's had sold gasoline at below-cost prices to destroy or control competition in violation of federal and state antitrust laws. The district court held that the plaintiffs failed to produce sufficient evidence to create a jury question on three required elements of their unfair pricing claims: the relevant geographic market, that Casey's was selling gas below cost, and that Casey's had either a reasonable prospect or a dangerous probability of recouping its investment in the alleged below-cost prices. We affirm.

[2] I.

There are no significant factual disputes on the questions presented for our review. The only dispute concerns the legal sufficiency of the plaintiffs' evidence to raise a jury question.

The named plaintiffs and the nearly 175 class members they represent (hereinafter "plaintiffs") owned or operated gasoline stations in small Iowa towns in 1988. The plaintiffs' stores were located in 67 Iowa towns where Casey's had convenience stores that sold gasoline. Each of the 67 towns has a population of fewer than 5500 persons.

Casey's is a multi-state retailer of gasoline and other merchandise, and operates over 800 convenience stores in Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Wisconsin, and South Dakota. Casey's owns approximately 600 of the stores and the remainder are owned by franchisees. It owns all of the stores in the 67 Iowa towns involved in this case.

During the 1980's some of Casey's competitors for gasoline business began converting their gasoline stations to convenience stores and generally upgrading their facilities. These competitors began to gain a larger [*342] percentage of the gasoline market at Casey's expense. From 1984 through early 1988, Casey's gasoline [3] sales for its company stores dropped from 450,000 gallons per year to nearly 365,000 gallons per year per store.

Casey's internal company documents indicate that sometime during 1987, Casey's decided to take action to restore the lost volume of gasoline sales in certain towns. Casey's directed company-owned stores where volume had fallen below thirty thousand gallons per month to reduce the price of gas until the store restored the thirty thousand gallon volume. Casey's directed stores losing sales to competition to reduce gas prices to regain the volume. Casey's instructed stores selling at least thirty thousand gallons monthly simply to price competitively. These pricing directives did not target towns or markets of any particular population or geographic size. Casey's gave a different set of instructions to stores that faced new competitors or unusual competitive situations. Casey's goal was to achieve gasoline sales of thirty thousand gallons per month in each store.

On December 4, 1990, the plaintiffs filed this three-count anti-competition lawsuit against Casey's. Count I alleged that Casey's engaged in discriminatory pricing practices in violation of section 2(a) of the [4] Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). Count II alleged that Casey's engaged in predatory pricing in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Count III alleged violation of the Iowa unfair discrimination statute, Iowa Code ch. 551 (1989). The district court certified this case as a class action in 1993.

The plaintiffs' theory underlying all three of its claims in this case is that Casey's developed and implemented a plan to target and destroy, or to tame, rival gasoline sellers in small Iowa towns by pricing its gasoline below cost for a period of time. The plaintiffs contend that in towns where rivals were destroyed, Casey's then would recoup its losses on the below cost gasoline sales by charging monopoly prices far above normal competitive market prices. The plaintiffs contend that in towns where the rivals were tamed, oligopolistic pricing of gasoline resulted because the rivals realized their peril and tacitly accepted charging their customers excessive gasoline prices.

Casey's first moved for summary judgment before the parties had completed discovery. The district court denied Casey's motion. After the parties completed extensive discovery, Casey's again [5] moved for summary judgment. Casey's also filed a motion to dismiss some class members who had not complied with discovery orders or, alternatively, to decertify the class.

¹ The Honorable Charles J. Wolle, Chief Judge, United States District Court for the Southern District of Iowa.

On August 23, 1994, the district court held an all day hearing on the motions. The district court eventually denied Casey's motion to decertify the class, but dismissed with prejudice the claims of class members who had not complied with discovery requests. The district court held two additional hearings on the motion for summary judgment, on September 8, 1994, and October 11, 1994, each hearing lasting about two hours. On October 14, 1994, the district court granted Casey's motion for summary judgment.

In entering summary judgment, the district court held that the plaintiffs failed to present sufficient evidence to create a jury question on three essential requirements of their unfair pricing scheme claims under both the Sherman Act and the Robinson-Patman Act. The district court ruled that the plaintiffs produced insufficient facts: (1) to establish the relevant geographic market, (2) to establish that Casey's sold the gasoline below its cost, or (3) to establish that Casey's would be able to recoup its losses [6] and actually profit from this alleged illegal pricing scheme. Accordingly, the district court entered judgment in favor of Casey's on the plaintiffs' two federal claims, and dismissed without prejudice the Iowa state law unfair discrimination claim. The district court also assessed against the plaintiffs Casey's costs of taking certain depositions. The plaintiffs appeal both the decision granting summary judgment and the decision assessing costs. II.

HN1 [↑] "In complex antitrust cases, no different or heightened standard for the grant of summary judgment applies." Flegel v. Christian [*343] Hosp., Northeast-Northwest, 4 F.3d 682, 685 (8th Cir. 1993) (quoting Amerinet, Inc. v. Xerox Corp., 972 F.2d 1483, 1489-90 (8th Cir. 1992)), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 356, 113 S. Ct. 1048 (1993). HN2 [↑] We review de novo the district court's decision granting summary judgment. Willman v. Heartland Hosp. East, 34 F.3d 605, 609 (8th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 218, 115 S. Ct. 1361 (1995). HN3 [↑] We must review the record in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and determine whether the movant demonstrated that there are no genuine issues of material fact for trial and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of [7] law. See id. at 609-610.

We note at the outset that the Supreme Court has urged great caution and a skeptical eye when dealing with unfair pricing claims. "'Predatory pricing schemes are rarely tried, and even more rarely successful,' Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 589, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), and the costs of an erroneous finding of liability are high." Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2589 (1993).

"The mechanism by which a firm engages in predatory pricing -- lowering prices -- is the same mechanism by which a firm stimulates competition; because 'cutting prices is the very essence of competition . . . ;' mistaken inferences . . . are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 122 n.17, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986) (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594). It would be ironic indeed if the standards for predatory pricing liability were so low that antitrust suits themselves became a tool for keeping prices high.

113 S. Ct. at 2589-90. With these guidelines in mind, we turn to the merits of the issues presented for [8] our review. The plaintiffs allege that Casey's engaged in a pricing scheme that violated both section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides:

HN4 [↑] Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony

15 U.S.C. § 2. HN5 [↑] Although this section reads as a criminal statute, the antitrust laws provide a civil cause of action arising from a violation of this section. See 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). By its language, section two of the Sherman Act is directed at controlling monopolies. Section two of the Sherman Act prohibits predatory pricing "when it poses 'a dangerous probability of actual monopolization.'" Brook Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2587 (quoting Spectrum Sports, Inc.

v. McQuillan, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890 (1993)). Predatory pricing means pricing a product below some objective measure of its cost. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 585 n.8.

HN6 [↑] Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman [9] Act, a more detailed statute specifically addressing certain forms of price discrimination, provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

15 U.S.C. § 13(a). HNT [↑] "By its terms, the Robinson-Patman Act condemns price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition." Brook Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2586. The type of price discrimination injury under this statute "which harms direct competitors of the discriminating seller, is known as primary-line injury." Id. The plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman claim against Casey's alleges harm to [*344] direct competitors and thus is a primary-line injury claim.

"It has become evident that primary-line competitive injury under the [10] Robinson-Patman Act is of the same general character as the injury inflicted by predatory pricing schemes actionable under § 2 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 2587.

HN8 [↑] There are, to be sure, differences between the two statutes. For example, we interpret § 2 of the Sherman Act to condemn predatory pricing when it poses a dangerous probability of actual monopolization, . . . whereas the Robinson-Patman Act requires only that there be a reasonable possibility of substantial injury to competition before its protections are triggered But whatever additional flexibility the Robinson-Patman Act standard may imply, the essence of the claim under either statute is the same: A business rival has priced its products in an unfair manner with an object to eliminate or retard competition and thereby gain and exercise control over the prices in the relevant market.

Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted) (emphasis added).

The focus of these cases is the effect in the relevant market of reduced competition on consumers, not the competitors. HN9 [↑] "It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" [11] Id. at 2588 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962)). Inflicting painful losses on competitors "is of no moment to the antitrust laws if competition is not injured." Id.

HN10 [↑] In proving a pricing violation in a relevant market, under both § 2 of the Sherman Act and section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, there are two prerequisites to recovery. 113 S. Ct. at 2587. "First, a plaintiff seeking to establish competitive injury resulting from a rival's low prices must prove that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of its rival's costs." Id. In short, the plaintiff must prove the rival was pricing below cost. "The second prerequisite to holding a competitor liable under the antitrust laws for charging low prices is a demonstration that the competitor had a reasonable prospect, or, under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a dangerous probability, of recouping its investment in below-cost prices." Id. at 2588. In short, the plaintiff must prove the defendant's eventual ability to recoup its losses from pricing below cost. Actually, the defendants must recoup "more than the losses suffered." Id. (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588-89). [12]

As noted above, the district court found that the plaintiffs failed to present sufficient evidence to create a jury question on three required elements of the pricing claims under Brook Group: relevant market, pricing below cost, and recoupment. Because we find the plaintiffs' failure to produce evidence of the relevant market dispositive, we will not address the other issues.

The district court held that the plaintiffs' antitrust claims failed because they did not produce sufficient evidence to create a jury question on the relevant geographic market of competition. In particular, the district court found that the plaintiffs failed to create a jury issue on their contention that the relevant geographic markets were the 67 separate small towns (and their immediate surrounding areas) involved in this case.

The plaintiffs do not dispute that they were required to establish the relevant geographic market to recover under their unfair pricing theory. HN11 [↑] As we noted above, the essence of both a Sherman Act and Robinson-Patman Act claim is that a business engaged in unfair pricing in order to "gain and exercise control over prices in the relevant market." Brook Group, 113 F.2d at 2587. (emphasis added). While it has long been clear that plaintiffs asserting claims of monopolization in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act were required to prove the relevant geographical market, see Spectrum Sports, 113 S. Ct. at 892 ("demonstrating the dangerous probability of monopolization in an attempt case also requires inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market and the defendants' economic power in that market"); [*345] Morgenstern v. Wilson, 29 F.3d 1291, 1295-96 \(8th Cir. 1994\) (HN12 [↑]) to determine whether the defendants have the market power required for monopolization liability, the plaintiffs had to demonstrate a well defined product and geographic market), we also have required plaintiffs asserting a Robinson-Patman Act predatory pricing claim to submit proof of the relevant market as well, Henry v. Chloride, Inc., 809 F.2d 1334, 1347 \(8th Cir. 1987\); see also Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy, § 3.1, at 79 n.6 (1994) ("When predatory pricing is challenged as a so-called 'primary line' violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13, most courts require that a relevant market be defined as well") (citing Henry [*14], 809 F.2d at 1347).

HN13 [↑] "Like any other issue, market definition is subject to summary judgment if the plaintiffs fail to provide sufficient evidence from which a jury could reasonably find in their favor." Flegel, 4 F.3d at 689. Antitrust claims often rise or fall on the definition of the relevant market. See Morgenstern, 29 F.3d at 1296 ("An actual monopolization claim often succeeds or fails strictly on the definition of the product or geographic market."). The definition of the relevant market has two components -- a product market and a geographic market. Flegel, 4 F.3d at 689; see also Spectrum Sports, 113 S. Ct. at 892. The definition of the geographic market is the only one at issue here because the parties agree that the relevant product market is gasoline.

HN14 [↑] The proper definition of a geographic market is determined by a "factual inquiry into the "commercial realities" faced by consumers." Flegel, 4 F.3d at 690 (quoting Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Serv., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2076, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 572, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\))). "The geographic market encompasses the geographic area to which consumers can practically turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face competition." Morgenstern, 29 F.3d at 1296 (citing Baxley-DeLamar Monuments, Inc., v. American Cemetery Ass'n, 938 F.2d 846, 850 \(8th Cir. 1991\); see also Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 \(1961\) (HN15 [↑] defining relevant geographic market as "the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practically turn for supplies."). The plaintiffs bear the "burden of establishing that a specified area constitutes a relevant geographic market." Morgenstern, 29 F.3d at 1296.

In Morgenstern, we concluded that the plaintiffs' expert testimony and evidence was insufficient to establish a relevant geographic market because the plaintiffs' evidence "failed to address a critical legal question: where could consumers of the product . . . practically turn for alternative sources of the product." Id. Here, there is an identical failure of proof.

The plaintiffs' expert in this case relied on price differences between Casey's stores in different towns as an indication that those towns (and their surrounding areas) were separate markets. The plaintiffs' [*16] expert also relied on testimony from class members that most of their business came from in-town customers and that they priced their gas to compete with other in-town prices. The record is virtually silent, however, on the issue of where the consumer could "practically turn for alternative sources" of gas. Id. This silence is fatal to the plaintiffs' case under Morgenstern.

The plaintiffs' evidence, viewed in a light most favorable to them, suggests that gasoline retailers considered other in-town stores as their competitors and that consumers preferred to buy their gasoline in the small towns where they lived. Evidence of the competitor's perspective is not sufficient, however, because a geographic market is determined by inquiring into the "commercial realities" faced by consumers." Flegel, 4 F.3d at 689 (quoting Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Serv., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2076, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\)) (emphasis added) (other citation omitted). HN16 [↑] Likewise, evidence of consumers' actual habits is not enough to establish relevant geographic market under our cases. In Morgenstern, we rejected as insufficient both evidence [*346] detailing where consumers actually went [*17] for services as well as evidence indicating that consumers tended to go close to home for services because the evidence did not address where they could practicably go for the products and services. 29 F.3d at 1296-97. Thus, even if we fully credit the testimony from a number of the plaintiffs that consumers in the class towns prefer to buy gasoline close to home, there is still an absence of evidence on a critical question: where those gasoline consumers could practicably turn for alternatives.

A leading antitrust treatise further demonstrates the logic and necessity of applying such a requirement in this case: . . . a court would often be mistaken to conclude that a seller's "trade area," or the area from which it currently draws its customers, constitutes a relevant geographic market. In fact, the "trade area" and the "relevant market" are precisely reverse concepts.

Consider the following illustration. Fifteen miles outside of City A is a small town, Town B, which contains a single shoe store, Smith's Clothing. The only people who ever shop in Smith's Clothing are residents of Town B. When Smith's is accused of monopolization, the plaintiffs argue that Town [*18] B defines the relevant geographic market, since all of the store's customers come from there. In that case, Smith's market share is 100%.

But further inquiry shows the following. Last year 800 residents of Town B purchased shoes. 400 of them purchased from Smith's Clothing, and the other 400 purchased from the numerous shoe stores in City A. Note that this conclusion is absolutely consistent with the proposition that Smith's "trade area" is Town B. The only customers Smith's had were from Town B, assuming no one drove from City A to buy shoes at Smith's. In fact, Smith's is probably in close competition with the City A shoe stores. To the extent Town B residents go into City A to work or to shop, they regard the City shoe stores as interchangeable, and would respond to any local price increase by purchasing even more of their shoes in City A.

In sum, "trade area" considers the extent to which customers will travel in order to do business at Smith's. "Relevant market" considers the extent to which customers will travel in order to avoid doing business at Smith's. Unfortunately, this means that using discovery to obtain the addresses of a seller's customers [*19] seldom provides us with useful information about geographic market. What we really need to know is the extent to which people from the immediate area can readily turn to alternative sellers, and the defendant is far less likely to have such information.

H. Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy, § 3.6d, at 113-114 (footnotes omitted). Here, the plaintiffs' evidence, at best, demonstrates only the "trade area" of a Casey's store, i.e., the particular small town and immediate surrounding area. However, the plaintiffs have failed to present any evidence of "the extent to which customers will travel in order to avoid doing business" at a particular Casey's store. Id.

Requiring the plaintiffs to examine consumers' practicable alternatives in this case makes particularly good sense. Casey's has pointed to the unrefuted evidence that 42% of the people living in the relevant towns work elsewhere. Given these facts, it is entirely possible, if not likely, that those consumers have alternatives to purchase gas beyond their town of residence. See H. Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy, § 3.6d at 113 ("To the extent that Town B residents go into City A to work or [*20] to shop, they regard the City shoe stores as interchangeable, and would respond to any local price increase by purchasing even more of their shoes in City A"). On these facts alone, it is a distinct possibility that Casey's could never gain the control of the competition in those towns because there would be too many people who could easily avoid monopolistic or oligopolistic prices by looking to alternative sources for gasoline that are beyond Casey's control. Thus, the alternatives available to the consumers in this case must be accounted for in determining the relevant geographic market.

In sum, the problem with the evidence the plaintiffs submitted to establish the relevant geographic market is that it looks at the [*347] issue only from the perspective of Casey's rivals, not from the perspective of the consumer. This is not the correct approach in antitrust cases. See Spectrum Sports, 113 S. Ct. at 891-92 (the purpose of the antitrust laws "is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market"). Accordingly, we must affirm the district court's conclusion that summary judgment is appropriate because the plaintiffs [21] failed to create a jury question on the issue of the relevant geographic market.

III.

The plaintiffs also argue that the district court erred in assessing $ 30,831.78 against them for costs Casey's incurred in taking depositions of class members. HN17[] There is a presumption that the prevailing party is entitled to costs. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d) ("costs other than attorneys' fees shall be allowed as of course to the prevailing party unless the court otherwise directs"); Police Retirement Sys. v. Midwest Inv. Advisory Serv., 940 F.2d 351, 358-59 (8th Cir. 1991) ("Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54\(d\) codifies the presumption that, with exceptions not relevant here, costs will be awarded to prevailing parties"). HN18[] We review the district court's decision to award costs for an abuse of discretion. Milton v. Des Moines, Iowa, 47 F.3d 944, 947 (8th Cir. 1995), petition for cert. filed, 64 USLW 3017 (June 26, 1995).

The plaintiffs argue that the district court abused its discretion in awarding Casey's all of its deposition costs because: (1) many of the depositions were unnecessary or too broad in scope; and (2) the district court did not rely on all of the depositions in deciding the [22] case.² The district court rejected both of these arguments, finding that the depositions were necessary and specifically indicating that it relied on the depositions in ruling on the motion for summary judgment. The district court is in the best position to make these determinations. As such, we cannot conclude in this case that the district court abused its substantial discretion in assessing the deposition costs against the plaintiffs. See Richmond v. Southwire Co., 980 F.2d 518, 520 (8th Cir. 1992) ("HN19[] The district court has substantial discretion in awarding costs").

IV.

For the reasons stated above, we affirm the judgment of the district court.

End of Document

² To the extent that the plaintiffs are arguing about the amount of costs the district court awarded, we have no jurisdiction over that issue. Poe v. John Deere, Co., 695 F.2d 1103, 1108-09 \(8th Cir. 1982\).

MCM Partners v. Andrews-Bartlett & Assocs.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

January 5, 1995, Argued ; August 11, 1995, Decided

No. 94-3019

Reporter

62 F.3d 967 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 21695 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,088

MCM PARTNERS, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. ANDREWS-BARTLETT & ASSOCIATES, INCORPORATED, doing business as ANDREWS-BARTLETT EXPOSITION SERVICES, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 92 C 5641. Paul E. Plunkett, Judge.

Disposition: VACATED AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

conspiracy, coerced, allegations, enterprise, district court, forklifts, Sherman Act, conspirators, exhibition, antitrust, threats, contractors, rented, relevant market, personnel, coercion, material handling, moving equipment, racketeering, upper management, acquiescence, participated, lower-rung, rental, rental equipment, co-conspirator, cooperative's, defendants', convention, violations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews the dismissal of plaintiff's complaint de novo, accepting as true the complaint's well-pleaded factual allegations and drawing all reasonable inferences from those allegations in plaintiff's favor.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court will affirm the dismissal of plaintiff's complaint only if it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to state a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 a plaintiff must allege: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A party may independently decide with whom it will deal, and it may, without running afoul of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, decide to direct all of its business to a single supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A conspiracy to monopolize may exist even where one of the conspirators participates involuntarily or under coercion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The involuntary nature of one's participation in a conspiracy to monopolize is no defense. An antitrust conspirator can be liable for damages even though he participates only under coercion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

So long as defendants knew that they were acquiescing in conduct that was in all likelihood unlawful, there is no difficulty concluding that they thereby joined a combination or conspiracy for which they can be held accountable under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN9 Sherman Act, Remedies

To state a claim for relief under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must allege either that the contract, combination, or conspiracy resulted in a per se violation of the Sherman Act or that it unreasonably restrained competition in a relevant market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Scope > Government Actions

Governments > Local Governments > Police Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN10 Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

It is sufficient for the plaintiff to include in its complaint only a short and plain statement of the claim showing entitlement to relief, Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\).

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 Business & Corporate Law, Cooperatives

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\) makes it unlawful for any person employed by or associated with enterprise to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN12 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

To be liable under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), it must be shown that the defendant participated in the operation or management of the enterprise itself and that requires that the defendant play some part in directing the enterprise's affairs.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN13 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

The reach of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\)'s is not limited to upper-level management, explaining that an enterprise also may be operated by lower-rung participants who are under the direction of upper management. Therefore, a RICO enterprise may be operated at least by upper management, lower-rung participants in the enterprise who are under the direction of upper management, or others associated with the enterprise who exert control over it, as for example, by bribery.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN14 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(d)'s target is the agreement to violate RICO's substantive provisions, not the actual violations themselves, and liability under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(d) is therefore not coterminous with liability under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

A defendant may conspire to violate 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) if it agrees to conduct or participate in the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, and it is only necessary that the defendant agree to the commission of at least two predicate acts on behalf of the conspiracy. The defendant need not agree to actually commit the predicate acts itself or even to participate in the commission of those acts so long as it agrees that the acts will be committed on behalf of the conspiracy.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Coercion & Duress

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Racketeering > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Defenses, Coercion & Duress

Economic coercion or duress is generally an affirmative defense to a conspiracy charge and that defense takes into consideration the types of pressure or coercion applied to the defendant and any alternatives to acquiescence that may have been available.

Counsel: For MCM PARTNERS, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff - Appellant: Kenneth A. Jenero, MCBRIDE, BAKER & COLES, Chicago, IL. Richard P. Campbell, Anthony S. DiVincenzo, CAMPBELL & DIVENCENZO, Chicago, IL. Terrence M. Jordan, Chicago, IL.

For ANDREWS-BARTLETT & ASSOCIATES, INCORPORATED dba Andrews-Bartlett Exposition Services, HAROLD BARTLETT, BONNIE AARON, Defendants - Appellees: Jeffrey M. Carey, Chicago, IL. John J. Eklund, John P. Susany, CALFREE, HALTER & GRISWOLD, Cleveland, OH.

For FREEMAN DECORATING COMPANY, DOUG VANORG, Defendants - Appellees: William C. Holmes, James McConnell, William A. Spence, Thomas Kottler, FREEBORN & PETERS, Chicago, IL. Jerry C. Alexander, James F. Adams, Joshua P. Oden, PASSMAN & JONES, Dallas, TX.

For DALE LEITHLEITER, Defendant -Appellee: William C. Holmes, James McConnell, William A. Spence, Thomas Kottler, FREEBORN & PETERS, Chicago, IL. James F. Adams, Joshua P. Oden, PASSMAN & JONES, Dallas, TX.

Judges: Before RIPPLE and ROVNER, Circuit Judges, and MILLER, District Judge. *

Opinion by: ROVNER

Opinion

[*969] ROVNER, Circuit Judge. MCM Partners, Incorporated ("MCM") alleged that two exhibition contractors who staged conventions and trade shows at Chicago's McCormick Place violated the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962\(c\) & \(d\), when they refused to rent forklifts and other material handling and personnel moving equipment from MCM. The district court dismissed MCM's antitrust claim with prejudice, and after permitting MCM to replead its RICO claims, found that MCM also had failed to state a claim under that statute. The district court found from the allegations in MCM's complaint that the exhibition contractors had been coerced by O.G. Service Corporation ("OG"), a competing rental equipment company, and individuals acting on its behalf [2] into refusing to deal with MCM. The court concluded that, as coerced parties, neither of the contractors could be considered conspirators under section 1 of the Sherman Act or section 1962\(d\) of RICO. The court also dismissed MCM's claim under section 1962\(c\) because neither defendant met the test for liability set out in Reves v. Ernst & Young, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525, 113 S. Ct. 1163 \(1993\). In this appeal, MCM challenges the dismissal of all three claims.¹ It argues that even if coerced by a third party, the exhibition contractors are not immune from liability for a conspiracy under the Sherman Act or RICO. It also contends that the dismissal of its section 1962\(c\) claim under Reves was erroneous. For the reasons that follow, we vacate the dismissal of all three claims and remand for further proceedings.

I. BACKGROUND

[3] Because we are reviewing a dismissal at the pleading stage, we take MCM's allegations at face value. See Land v. Chicago Truck Drivers, Helpers and Warehouse Workers Union \(Independent\) Health and Welfare Fund, 25 F.3d 509, 511 \(7th Cir. 1994\). We accordingly describe the facts as they are alleged in MCM's initial complaint and its second amended complaint.²

[*970] MCM brought its initial complaint against not only the exhibition contractors--Andrews-Bartlett & Associates, Incorporated ("A-B") and Freeman Decorating Company ("FDC")--and their principals, but also against OG and its principal, Nick Boscarino. The two complaints are a bit convoluted, but the essence of both the antitrust and RICO claims is simple enough--that OG conspired with A-B and FDC to monopolize the market for the rental of forklifts and material handling and personnel moving equipment [4] at McCormick Place, thereby excluding MCM as a competitor in that market. MCM alleges in that regard that the conspiracy enabled OG to procure 100 percent of the McCormick Place rental market. The facts leading to the creation of this monopoly are alleged to be the following.

Prior to April 1991, only OG and AIM Industrial Lift Truck ("AIM") were in the business of providing forklifts and other material handling and personnel moving equipment to exhibition contractors at McCormick Place. In April 1991, however, MCM began to compete with OG and AIM for this exhibition business.³ MCM alleged that at that point it procured an order from A-B for the rental of forklifts and other heavy machinery for one of A-B's upcoming McCormick Place shows. Boscarino learned of this order in May 1991, and he contacted National Lift Truck ("NLT"), whom he knew would be leasing certain equipment to MCM to be used at the A-B show. Boscarino told an NLT

* The Honorable Robert L. Miller, Jr., of the Northern District of Indiana, sitting by designation.

¹ The district court also dismissed MCM's claims under section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. MCM has not challenged the dismissal of those claims in this appeal.

² The second amended complaint addressed only MCM's RICO claims, as the district court had dismissed the Sherman Act claim in MCM's initial complaint with prejudice.

³ In the fall of 1991, OG purchased the assets of AIM, leaving MCM as OG's sole competitor at McCormick Place.

principal that unless NLT terminated any relationship with MCM in relation to the buildings and facilities at McCormick Place, NLT's property would be in jeopardy. MCM also alleged that another OG employee, Cliff Larson, made a call to NLT the following [5] day, threatening that the NLT forklifts rented by MCM would be damaged unless the business relationship was terminated. Indeed, on the day following Larson's threat, one of the rented forklifts was damaged when it was rammed in the side by another forklift.

By letter dated January 17, 1992, A-B committed to utilize MCM equipment for a number of its shows throughout the year. For instance, A-B agreed that MCM would serve as its primary supplier of gas scooters at McCormick Place for the entire calendar year, and that MCM would provide either 50 or 100 percent of A-B's forklift requirements for designated trade shows. The letter noted that A-B "looked forward to this working relationship and the possibility of maintaining and expanding our relationship throughout the year." (R. 1, Ex. A.) In accordance with this letter, A-B's equipment manager delivered two purchase orders for forklifts and gas scooters [6] to MCM on April 14, 1992. Less than one week later, however, A-B sent to MCM the following notice canceling those purchase orders:

We regret to inform you that due to an advance agreement between O.G. Service and Andrews-Bartlett Exposition Services Corporate office, we must cancel [the April 14, 1992] purchase orders. . . . I have been informed by my corporate office that any and all equipment required by our Chicago operation will be provided by O.G. Services.

(R. 1, Ex. D.) MCM alleged that prior to A-B's cancellation of the two purchase orders, Boscarino met with two A-B managers, who informed him of A-B's ongoing relationship with MCM. Boscarino told the managers that Bill Hogan, who was president of the local branch of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters (the "Teamsters"), was "not going to like" the fact that A-B was doing business with MCM. Upon learning of the A-B/MCM agreement, Hogan met with A-B's president, Harold Bartlett, on April 17, 1992, and agreed to grant A-B certain work rule concessions. It was after this meeting that Bartlett directed his Chicago managers to cancel the MCM purchase orders and to terminate any business relationship with MCM [7] at McCormick Place.

Consistent with these specific allegations, MCM generally alleged that both A-B and FDC proceeded, at the direction of Hogan, to [971] lease forklifts and other material and personnel handling equipment at McCormick Place only from OG, whose principal (Boscarino) was a steward of the Teamsters' local branch. According to MCM, whenever either exhibition contractor took any steps that were inconsistent with Hogan's directive in this regard, the contractor was subject to discipline by the Teamsters, including threats of labor strikes and damage to property. As a result, since August 1992, A-B and FDC have exclusively used OG for their rental equipment needs at McCormick Place. Because the effect of defendants' actions was to provide OG with a virtual monopoly at the convention center, defendants paid rates for OG's rental equipment that were higher than the prevailing market rates.⁴

[8] From these factual allegations, MCM advanced claims under two federal statutes. First, MCM maintained that defendants had violated section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by conspiring to monopolize the market for the rental of forklifts and other material handling and personnel moving equipment at McCormick Place. The conspiracy's purpose, the complaint alleged, was to raise or stabilize the price of rental equipment either by excluding MCM from the market or by substantially limiting its ability to compete with OG. MCM was successfully excluded because Boscarino procured agreements from both A-B and FDC not to deal with MCM and to instead use OG for all of their rental equipment needs. MCM therefore alleged that actual and potential competition in the relevant market was restrained or eliminated altogether. MCM asked that the Sherman Act violation be enjoined and that it recover treble the damages it incurred.

MCM alleged, in addition, that defendants' conduct also violated RICO sections 1962\(c\) & \(d\). The predicate acts allegedly constituting a pattern of racketeering activity were defendants' payments to OG for the rental of equipment at McCormick Place at higher than market [9] rates. MCM alleged that these payments violated section 186 of the Taft-Hartley Act, 29 U.S.C. § 186, as they were payments by an employer to a union representative of its employees.⁵ In its RICO count, MCM also prayed for treble damages and injunctive relief.

⁴ MCM alleged that A-B and FDC controlled 75 percent of the convention and trade show business at McCormick Place in 1992 and that the remaining 25 percent was divided between United Exposition Services and several smaller exposition contractors. These contractors also refused to rent from MCM at McCormick Place, as they allegedly had been told that problems would develop with the Teamsters if they used a rental equipment company other than OG.

After filing its original complaint, MCM voluntarily dismissed OG and Boscarino,⁶ and the remaining defendants then moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim. The district court permitted MCM to replead [10] its RICO claims but dismissed the antitrust claim with prejudice. See MCM Partners, Inc. v. Boscarino, 1994-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P 70,547 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 17, 1994). The district court subsequently dismissed the RICO claims that MCM realleged in a second amended complaint. (See R. 107.) The court determined that neither the antitrust nor the RICO claims could survive MCM's voluntary dismissal of OG and Boscarino. In the court's words, the dismissal of these defendants "left a racketeering count with no racketeer and an antitrust suit with no monopoly." 1994-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P 70,547, at 71,958. Finding from the allegations in MCM's complaint that A-B and FDC had been coerced into dealing exclusively with OG at McCormick Place, the court held that a coerced party could not be liable as a co-conspirator [*972] under RICO or the Sherman Act. The court also found that a coerced party could not operate or manage a racketeering enterprise under RICO section 1962\(c\).

[11] II. DISCUSSION

HN1 We review the dismissal of MCM's complaint de novo, accepting as true the complaint's well-pled factual allegations and drawing all reasonable inferences from those allegations in MCM's favor. Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1161 \(1993\); Richmond v. Nationwide Cassel L.P., 52 F.3d 640, 644 \(7th Cir. 1995\). HN2 We will affirm the dismissal of MCM's complaint "only if it 'appears beyond doubt that [MCM] can prove no set of facts in support of [its] claim which would entitle [it] to relief.'" Sidney S. Arst Co. v. Pipefitters Welfare Educ. Fund, 25 F.3d 417, 421 \(7th Cir. 1994\) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\)). We apply that liberal standard first to MCM's antitrust claim and then to its RICO claims.

A. Sherman Act Claim

1. Contract, Combination, or Conspiracy

The district court viewed MCM's claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act⁷ as somewhat unique:

⁵ Section 186 provides, inter alia, that:

- (a) It shall be unlawful for any employer or association of employers . . . to pay, lend, or deliver, or agree to pay, lend, or deliver, any money or other thing of value--
- (1) to any representative of any of his employees who are employed in an industry affecting commerce; or
- (2) to any labor organization or any officer or employee thereof, which represents, seeks to represent, or would admit to membership, any of the employees of such employer who are employed in an industry affecting commerce.

⁶ The record does not reveal MCM's reason for dismissing these defendants, although it apparently relates to the fact that MCM previously had sued OG and Boscarino but had settled its claims in that case.

⁷ Section 1 provides in pertinent part that:

- HN3 Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . .

15 U.S.C. § 1. HN4 In order to state a claim under that section, a plaintiff must allege: "(1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury." Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Prods., Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 \(7th Cir. 1993\).

Instead of a conspiracy of sellers to raise prices, we have a conspiracy of buyers to raise prices by entering into exclusive dealing arrangements, coerced by threats of labor disruption by a union official in cahoots with the would-be monopolist. [12] As a consequence, [MCM] is unable to compete and prices for rental equipment at McCormick Place have allegedly been artificially inflated. But what makes this suit truly extraordinary is that [MCM] is not suing the would-be monopolist but the victims forced to deal with it.

1994-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P 70,547, at 71,953 (district court's emphasis). The court concluded, however, that MCM had failed to state a claim for relief under section 1 because it had not adequately alleged a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade. The district court believed that "the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the facts alleged in the Complaint [was] that A-B and FDC's agreement to deal exclusively with OG was motivated by their desire to avoid labor trouble and damage to the rented equipment." Id. at 71,954. In the court's view, this "hardly suggests a meeting of the minds with OG or Boscarino," as "the person who 'agrees' to give a gunman his wallet is not a co-conspirator." Id. MCM contends in this appeal that, contrary to the import of the district court's opinion, coercion is not an absolute defense to conduct that otherwise violates section 1. According to [13] MCM, a coerced party that acquiesces in the unlawful conduct of another is considered a co-conspirator of its coercer and may thus be held accountable under the antitrust laws.

If A-B or FDC had independently exercised its business judgment to refuse to rent equipment from MCM at McCormick Place, that decision would not be actionable under section 1 of the Sherman Act. See Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\); United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\). HN5 A party may independently decide with whom it will deal, and it may, without running afoul of section 1, decide to direct all of its business to a single supplier. Yet MCM's allegations suggest that A-B and FDC did not make independent business decisions here. Instead, MCM alleged that A-B and FDC decided to deal exclusively with OG at McCormick Place only in response to threats of labor disruption and damage to property made by Hogan, Boscarino, or others [*973] on behalf of OG. Indeed, MCM alleged that in both 1991 and 1992, it had procured contracts with A-B to supply equipment for certain of A-B's McCormick Place exhibitions. A-B canceled those agreements, according to the complaint, only in response to pressure and threats from Boscarino and Hogan.⁸ The allegations therefore support the inference that both A-B and FDC acquiesced to the demands of Boscarino and Hogan that they deal only with OG in renting forklifts and other material handling and personnel moving equipment at McCormick Place.

[15] A-B and FDC argue, however, and the district court found, that their acquiescence did not establish a combination or conspiracy for purposes of section 1 because the complaint itself indicated that A-B and FDC acted only at the direction of and in response to pressure applied by OG and its principals--that is, that they were coerced victims of OG's scheme. But the district court's holding in that regard is without support in the case law interpreting section 1. In United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 161, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 \(1948\), for example, the Supreme Court dispatched a similar argument in short order:

There is some suggestion . . . that large exhibitors with whom defendants dealt fathered the illegal practices and forced them onto the defendants. But as the District Court observed, that circumstance if true does not help the defendants. For acquiescence in an illegal scheme is as much a violation of the Sherman Act as the creation and promotion of one.

⁸ In its second amended complaint filed after the dismissal with prejudice of its section 1 claim, MCM also alleged that Hogan, on April 17, 1992, agreed to grant A-B certain work rule concessions if it terminated its business relationship with MCM and rented equipment at McCormick Place only from OG. Although the district court had no opportunity to consider this allegation in connection with MCM's antitrust claim, it suggests that AB's actions may not have been entirely coerced, as A-B was able to negotiate concessions from the Teamsters in return for conduct in conformance with Hogan's wishes. Because the allegation was not before the district court, however, and because MCM does not allege that FDC received similar concessions, we will disregard that additional allegation when considering MCM's antitrust claim and will treat A-B and FDC both as coerced parties. On remand, however, MCM should be afforded the opportunity to include this potentially significant allegation in an amended complaint.

Later courts have applied this principle in a variety of settings, concluding that the "combination or conspiracy" element of a section 1 violation is not negated by the fact that one or more of the co-conspirators [16] acted unwillingly, reluctantly, or only in response to coercion. See, e.g., Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 142, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968) (plaintiff could allege a conspiracy between a manufacturer and the franchise dealers who acquiesced in the manufacturer's demands); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 150 & n.6, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968); United States v. Parke, Davis and Co., 362 U.S. 29, 45, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960); City of Vernon v. Southern California Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1361, 1371 (9th Cir.) HN6[¹⁵] ("a conspiracy to monopolize may exist even where one of the conspirators participates involuntarily or under coercion."), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 228, 113 S. Ct. 305 (1992); Duplan Corp. v. Deering Milliken, Inc., 594 F.2d 979, 982 (4th Cir. 1979) (coercion no defense in horizontal conspiracy involving patent), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1015 (1980); Calnetics Corp. v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 532 F.2d 674, 682 (9th Cir.) HN7[¹⁶] (¹⁵) ("The involuntary nature of one's participation in a conspiracy to monopolize is no defense. An antitrust conspirator can be liable for damages even though he participates only under coercion."), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 940, 50 L. Ed. 2d 309, 97 S. Ct. 355 (1976); Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368, 375 (9th Cir.) ("Because one is [17] coerced by economic threats to participate in or aid and abet an illegal scheme does not excuse the actor."), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 835, 2 L. Ed. 2d 46, 78 S. Ct. 54 (1957); C & W Constr. Co. v. Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of Am., Local 745, 687 F. Supp. 1453, 1462-63 (D. Haw. 1988) (suppliers coerced by labor union to refuse to deal with the plaintiff were co-conspirators under section 1); Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 656 F. Supp. 760, 763 (D. Mont. 1987) (hospital board of trustees [*974] that bowed to pressure from anesthesiologists in refusing to continue to deal with the plaintiff held to have conspired with the anesthesiologists), aff'd, 861 F.2d 1440, 1451 (9th Cir. 1988); Linseman v. World Hockey Ass'n, 439 F. Supp. 1315, 1321-22 (D. Conn. 1977) ("Courts have uniformly rejected any defense that an antitrust violation was 'forced' onto the defendant."); Otto Milk Co. v. United Dairy Farmers Coop. Ass'n, 261 F. Supp. 381, 385 (W.D. Pa. 1966) ("even if one is coerced by economic threats or pressure to participate in an illegal scheme, that does not make him any less a co-conspirator."), aff'd, 388 F.2d 789, 797 (3d Cir. 1967); Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 245 F. Supp. 889, [18] 892-93 (N.D. Ill. 1965) (striking economic coercion defense in horizontal price fixing case as inconsistent with Paramount Pictures). Our cases, too, have adhered to this general principle. See Isaksen v. Vermont Castings, Inc., 825 F.2d 1158, 1163 (7th Cir. 1987) ("The fact that Isaksen may have been coerced into agreeing is of no moment; an agreement procured by threats is still an agreement for purposes of section 1."), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1005, 100 L. Ed. 2d 193, 108 S. Ct. 1728 (1988).

A-B and FDC acknowledge that courts traditionally have found concerted action even where at least one of the alleged conspirators may have been coerced, but they argue that the purpose of finding a conspiracy in that instance is to provide the coerced party or an injured third party with a remedy against the coercer. Defendants maintain that a combination or conspiracy should not be found when a third party seeks recovery from the coerced party itself. Under defendants' theory, then, treatment of the identical conduct would vary under section 1 based upon the identity of the defendant. Yet nothing in the text of the Sherman Act or in the Supreme Court's interpretation of that statute suggests to us that the defendant's identity [19] is at all relevant to whether or not there was an actionable contract, combination, or conspiracy. Moreover, it would be logically inconsistent to find a conspiracy only when the coercing party is sued, as the conduct relevant to the conspiracy determination is the same if only the coerced party is targeted.

Defendants, however, find some support for their theory in Professor Areeda's treatise. See VI P.E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1408 (1978 & 1994). There, the author explains that a judicial desire to protect "the coerced party has often been the impulse behind proclaiming coerced compliance to be a conspiracy," and he therefore argues that courts should be "wary of extending the same proclamation to cases in which the coerced party is the defendant." Id. at 45. Areeda concedes, however, that "judicial declarations on the matter provide little comfort for coerced parties" because "the legal convention of treating express promises in the vertical context as [section 1] contracts or conspiracies is well established notwithstanding an unwilling dealer." Id. at 45, 48. Indeed, neither A-B nor FDC can cite a single case which holds that a section 1 conspiracy exists only where the coerced [20] party or an injured third party seeks a remedy against the coercer.⁹ Professor Areeda acknowledges, [*975] moreover, that courts have found conspiracies even where the coerced party is the defendant. Id. at 48 (citing Calnetics Corp., 532 F.2d at 682); see also, e.g., Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. at 161; Flintkote, 246 F.2d at 375-76. In advocating a more flexible rule that takes into account a variety of casespecific factors, Areeda is primarily concerned with the potential injustice of imposing treble damage liability against a coerced party who "may seem more a victim than a sinner." VI Areeda, P 1408, at 46, 48. That potential is particularly acute, Areeda argues, in cases involving a vertical relationship because the coerced party may find it difficult to distinguish unlawful and anticompetitive threats from "lawful persuasion." Id. at 48.

[21] Even given the legitimacy of Professor Areeda's concerns, however, we do not find this an appropriate case to depart from the traditional rule, as MCM's allegations permit the inference that A-B and FDC must have realized that the "persuasion" applied by OG and its principals was unlawful. MCM alleged that both A-B and FDC were induced by threats of labor disruption and of damage to property to rent all of their forklifts and other material handling and personnel moving equipment from OG. At the time these threats were made, A-B had already committed some of its rental business to MCM, but it canceled those commitments after being threatened by Boscarino and Hogan. Taking these allegations as true, A-B and FDC knew or should have known that OG's attempt by such means to procure and to further exclusive dealing relationships would have the effect of excluding MCM from McCormick Place and eliminating competition in that venue. A-B and FDC must have realized, then, that OG's conduct was probably unlawful under the antitrust laws. Cf. C & W Constr. Co., 687 F. Supp. at 1463. HN8 So long as defendants knew that they were acquiescing in conduct that was in all likelihood unlawful, we have no [22] difficulty concluding that they thereby joined a combination or conspiracy for which they can be held accountable under section 1. See Albrecht, 390 U.S. at 150; Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 214 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993); Flintkote, 246 F.2d at 375-76; C & W Constr. Co., 687 F. Supp. at 1463; see also Syufy Enter. v. American Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 1001 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1031, 479 U.S. 1034, 93 L. Ed. 2d 830, 107 S. Ct. 876 (1987); II E.W. Kintner, Federal Antitrust Law § 9.17, at 34 (Supp. 1995); VI Areeda, P 1408, at 44. Indeed, the acquiescence of A-B and FDC was essential to the success of OG's scheme, as only those companies had the ability to effectively exclude MCM from the McCormick Place market by refusing to rent its equipment. See Duplan Corp., 594 F.2d at 982.

Although the evidence itself may establish that A-B and FDC made independent business decisions in renting equipment only from OG, MCM's conspiracy allegations were sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss.

2. Relevant Market

⁹ FDC maintains that two more recent decisions "buttress" its argument (FDC Br. at 14-15 (citing Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171 (3d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 677, 113 S. Ct. 1285 (1993); Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding, Inc., 625 F. Supp. 737 (D.N.J. 1986)), yet neither case holds that concerted action is absent when the coerced party is named as a defendant. In Fineman, the Third Circuit considered whether the plaintiff had shown a conspiracy between a manufacturer and one of its distributors where the manufacturer had pressured the distributor into refusing to deal with one of its competitors. 980 F.2d at 212. The district court directed a verdict for the defendant manufacturer on the ground that no conspiracy had been established because the distributor did not share the manufacturer's purpose of eliminating the competitor from the market. Id. The Third Circuit reversed, believing that the district court's ruling would have the effect of rendering "section 1" unavailable to private litigants suffering antitrust injury as a result of concerted action in a vertical matrix." Id. The court held that a conspiracy could be found in that circumstance even if the manufacturer and distributor had different motives for engaging in anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 215. In reaching that conclusion, the court mentioned Professor Areeda's suggestion that a distributor should not always be subject to liability when coerced by a manufacturer. Yet that question was not actually presented in Fineman, as the coerced distributor had not been sued. Id. The court addressed the point only to show that Professor Areeda would find a conspiracy in the case actually before the court even if the distributor had its own motives for acquiescing in the manufacturer's plan. Id.

In Garshman, the court also discussed Professor Areeda's treatise and was reluctant to find a conspiracy where such a finding would subject a possible victim of coercion to liability for treble damages. 625 F. Supp. at 743. Yet the court did not base its decision on that ground, as it found other defects warranting dismissal of the complaint even if the facts alleged would support an inference of conspiracy. Id.

The district court alternatively found that MCM had failed to plead facts supporting its definition of the market where competition allegedly had [23] been restrained. MCM defined the market as "the rental of forklifts, material handling and personnel moving equipment to the convention and trade show industry in Chicago, Illinois." (R. 1, P 72.) It alleged that the "vast majority" of Chicago's convention and trade show business is conducted at McCormick Place and that the consumers in that market are the "exhibition contractors who set up, install, and disassemble the booths and other physical items" used in the industry. (Id. at P 72(a).) The district court believed that these allegations defined the market too narrowly because the complaint [*976] did not include facts establishing that the market for MCM's equipment was limited to exhibition contractors. In the absence of such allegations, the court took judicial notice of the fact that forklifts and material handling and personnel moving equipment are subject to widespread industrial use, and it therefore found MCM's narrowly-defined market "so improbable" that the suit should not proceed. MCM Partners, 1994-1 Trade Cas. P 70,547, at 71,956.¹⁰ MCM contends on appeal that its relevant market allegations were sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss and that its proof at trial would [24] establish that the equipment rented by MCM and OG to exhibition contractors at McCormick Place was unique in that it could not readily be used in other locations for other purposes. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481-82, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (proper market definition requires factual inquiry into commercial realities faced by consumers). MCM therefore contends that the district court should not have rejected its definition of the relevant market as a matter of law based solely on the allegations in its complaint.

HN9[] To state a claim for relief under section 1, a plaintiff must allege either that the contract, combination, or conspiracy resulted in a per se violation of the Sherman Act or that it unreasonably restrained competition in a relevant market. See Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Prods., Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 [*25] (7th Cir. 1993); Banks v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 977 F.2d 1081, 1088 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 2336 (1993); Dos Santos v. Columbus-Cuneo-Cabriani Med. Ctr., 684 F.2d 1346, 1352 (7th Cir. 1982). In the instant case, MCM did not attempt to make out a per se violation of section 1 but alleged instead that OG, A-B, and FDC restrained competition in the market for rental equipment at McCormick Place by effectively eliminating MCM as a competitor in that market and thereby securing a virtual monopoly for OG. According to MCM, this had the effect of permitting OG to charge higher than market rates for the rental of its equipment at that facility. Assuming that McCormick Place can be characterized as a relevant market, then, these allegations were sufficient to allege an unreasonable restraint on competition.

The district court found it highly improbable, however, that the market could be limited to exhibition contractors in the convention and trade show industry because the equipment rented by MCM had a number of alternative uses. 1994-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P 70,547, at 71,956. We are less sure than the district court that the market as defined in the [26] complaint could not be a relevant market in these circumstances even if there may be other uses for MCM's equipment. See, e.g., Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 531-32 (7th Cir. 1986) (defining the relevant market as that to which access had been sought and foreclosed by anticompetitive conduct even if the plaintiff may have had other business opportunities). Yet we need not definitively decide that question at this stage because there is nothing in the record to suggest that there in fact are other uses for MCM's equipment. The district court's willingness to look behind MCM's allegations because it believed MCM had not alleged facts to support the complaint's market definition is in considerable tension with our recent decision in Hammes v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc., 33 F.3d 774, 778, 782 (7th Cir. 1994). There, we explained that judicial attempts to apply a heightened pleading standard in antitrust cases had been "scotched" by the Supreme Court's decision in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1163 (1993), and that after Leatherman, an antitrust plaintiff need not include "the particulars of his claim" to survive [27] a motion to dismiss. 33 F.3d at 782. HN10[] It is instead sufficient for the plaintiff to include in its complaint only "a short and plain statement of the claim" showing an entitlement to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\); see Leatherman, 113 S. Ct. at 1163; Hammes, 33 F.3d at 778. If a claim is stated against a [*977] municipality under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 when a plaintiff alleges only that the municipality maintained an official policy, custom, or practice and that an individual police officer acted in conformance with that official policy (Leatherman, 113 S. Ct. at 1162-63), then we fail to see how MCM's allegations in the instant case are insufficient to define the relevant market. See Hammes, 33 F.3d at 782. Moreover, it is not inconceivable to us that MCM could prove a set of facts supporting the relevant market definition alleged in its complaint. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). It was therefore erroneous for the district court also to dismiss MCM's section 1 claim on this ground.

¹⁰ The court did not provide MCM with the opportunity to amend its complaint to attempt to allege facts supporting its market definition but dismissed the section 1 claim with prejudice.

Having rejected the alternative bases relied on by the district court for dismissing MCM's claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, we reverse that dismissal and remand for further proceedings.

B. [28] RICO Claims

MCM also alleged claims for treble damages and injunctive relief under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962\(c\) & \(d\), but the district court dismissed both claims pursuant to Reves v. Ernst & Young, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525, 113 S. Ct. 1163 \(1993\). Because the only reasonable inference the court could draw from MCM's complaint was that A-B and FDC were victims of a scheme operated and managed by others, the court concluded that neither defendant had "conducted or participated in the conduct of a racketeering enterprise" under section 1962\(c\), or had joined a conspiracy to do so under section 1962\(d\). (R. 108, at 3.) MCM argues on appeal that its allegations were sufficient to establish defendants' participation in the operation or management of a racketeering enterprise under Reves. Even if they were not, however, MCM maintains that the district court erred in applying Reves, a section 1962\(c\) case, to its conspiracy claim under section 1962\(d\). We address each argument in turn.

1. Section 1962\(c\)

Section 1962\(c\) HN11[ makes it unlawful for "any person employed by or associated with [an] enterprise . . . to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern [29] of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\). The question in Reves was whether an outside accounting firm could be liable under this provision for incorrectly valuing a farm cooperative's assets on the cooperative's financial statements. The Supreme Court held that it could not because the accounting firm had not "conducted, or participated, directly or indirectly, in the conduct" of the cooperative's affairs. 113 S. Ct. at 1173-74. HN12 To be liable under [section 1962\(c\), the Court held, it must be shown that the defendant "participated in the operation or management of the enterprise itself" (id. at 1172, 1173), and that requires that the defendant play "some part in directing the enterprise's affairs." Id. at 1170 (emphasis in Reves). At the same time, however, the Court refused to HN13 limit [section 1962\(c\)'s reach to upper-level management, explaining that an enterprise also may be operated "by lower-rung participants . . . who are under the direction of upper management." Id. at 1173; ¹¹ see also LaSalle Bank Lake View v. Seguban, 54 F.3d 387, 393-94 \(7th Cir. 1995\); United States v. Antar, 53 F.3d 568, 580 \(3d Cir. 1995\). Under Reves, therefore, a [30] RICO enterprise may be operated at least by "upper management, 'lower-rung participants in the enterprise who are under the direction of upper management,' or 'others associated with the enterprise who exert control over it, as for example, by bribery.'" Azrielli v. Cohen Law Offices, 21 F.3d 512, 521 \(2d Cir. 1994\) (quoting Reves, 113 S. Ct. at 1173).

In the instant case, MCM defined the RICO enterprise as "an association-in-fact" comprised of OG, Boscarino, Hogan, the Teamsters, A-B, and FDC. (R. 94, at [*978] P 23.) ¹² The enterprise's purpose, according to the complaint, was to make OG "the exclusive provider of forklift and material handling and personnel moving equipment for all exhibition contractors at McCormick Place." (Id. at P 25.) All activities of A-B and FDC in relation to that enterprise are alleged to have been undertaken "at the direction of" one or more of [31] the other members of the enterprise, and whenever A-B or FDC disobeyed such directions, it was "subject to discipline, including threats of strikes and damage to property." (Id. at P 26.) The TaftHartley Act violations (the underlying predicate acts of racketeering) were therefore all undertaken by A-B and FDC at the direction of others. Indeed, MCM's counsel conceded at oral argument that his client has not alleged any conduct by these defendants that was not "directed by" OG, Boscarino, or Hogan. The district court determined on the basis of these allegations that neither defendant had played any part in directing the affairs of the enterprise under Reves, and it accordingly dismissed the claim.

¹¹ The Court found it clear, however, "that Arthur Young was not acting under the direction of the Co-op's officers or board." Id. at 1173 n.9.

¹² An "enterprise" for RICO purposes may include "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(4\).

MCM argues that the dismissal was erroneous because Reves itself observes that [32] lower-rung participants under the direction of upper management may "operate" a racketeering enterprise. See Reves, 113 S. Ct. at 1173. Thus, even if Boscarino, Hogan, or perhaps OG may have managed the enterprise here, MCM maintains that both A-B and FDC still participated in the enterprise's operation by carrying out the directions given them. MCM's argument finds support in United States v. Oreto, 37 F.3d 739, 750 \(1st Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1116, 115 S. Ct. 1161 (1995), where the First Circuit relied on Reves' statement about lower-rung participants to hold that a defendant may participate in the conduct of an enterprise "by knowingly implementing decisions, as well as by making them."¹³ Oreto observed that:

Reves is a case about the liability of outsiders who may assist the enterprise's affairs. Special care is required in translating Reves' concern with "horizontal" connections--focusing on the liability of an outside adviser--into the "vertical" question of how far RICO liability may extend within the enterprise but down the organizational ladder. In our view, the reason the accountants were not liable in Reves is that, while they were undeniably involved in the enterprise's [33] decisions, they neither made those decisions nor carried them out; in other words, the accountants were outside the chain of command through which the enterprise's affairs were conducted.

Id. at 750 (emphasis in Oreto); see also Reves, 113 S. Ct. at 1173; Jaguar Cars, Inc. v. Royal Oaks Motor Car Co., 46 F.3d 258, 266 \(3d Cir. 1995\). In our view, Oreto correctly reconciles the Supreme Court's holding in Reves--that a defendant must play some part in directing the enterprise's affairs--with its subsequent statement that "lower-rung participants . . . under the direction of upper management" may also "operate" the enterprise. See Reves, 113 S. Ct. at 1170, 1173 & n.9; see also Daniel R. Fischel & Alan O. Sykes, Civil RICO After Reves: An Economic Commentary, 1993 Sup. Ct. Rev. 157, 192 (noting tension between "direction" requirement and statement about lower-rung participants and concluding that [979] "the 'direction' requirement includes both those who direct, as well as those who take direction."). The question posed in the instant case, then, is whether A-B and FDC should be characterized as "outsiders," like the accounting firm in Reves, or as lower-rung participants who acted [34] under the direction of the enterprise's upper management.

[35] Although the question is not an easy one under the facts alleged here, we think these defendants are properly characterized as "lower-rung participants who are under the direction of upper management." See Reves, 113 S. Ct. at 1173. The primary fact leading us to this conclusion is the nature of the "enterprise" MCM has depicted, as both A-B and FDC are alleged to be members of an "association-in-fact" constituting the RICO enterprise. In Reves, by contrast, the plaintiffs maintained that the farm cooperative itself was the RICO enterprise, and the Court was then required to determine whether the accountants had conducted or participated in the conduct of the cooperative's affairs. See Reves, 113 S. Ct. at 1169. Under the theory advanced in Reves, the accounting firm was considered by the Court as an "outsider" to the enterprise, and the Court found that, as ¹³ See also United States v. Starrett, 55 F.3d 1525, 1548 \(11th Cir. 1995\) ("we agree with the First Circuit that one may be liable under the operation or management test by 'knowingly implementing decisions, as well as by making them.'"); United States v. Wong, 40 F.3d 1347, 1373 \(2d Cir. 1994\) ("Reves makes it clear that a defendant can act under the direction of superiors in a RICO enterprise and still 'participate' in the operation of the enterprise within the meaning of § 1962(c)."), cert. denied, 132 L. Ed. 2d 820, 115 S. Ct. 2568, 63 U.S.L.W. 3873 (1995); cf. United States v. Viola, 35 F.3d 37, 41 \(2d Cir. 1994\) ("Since Reves, it is plain that the simple taking of directions and performance of tasks that are 'necessary or helpful' to the enterprise, without more, is insufficient to bring a defendant within the scope of § 1962(c)."); University of Maryland v. Peat, Marwick, Main & Co., 996 F.2d 1534, 1538-39 \(3d Cir. 1993\) ("Under [Reves], not even action involving some degree of decisionmaking constitutes participation in the affairs of an enterprise.").

outsiders, the accountants had not participated in the operation or management of the cooperative. Id. at 1173-74. Here, however, it is difficult on the pleadings to characterize A-B and FDC as "outsiders" because they are alleged to be part of the enterprise itself. Cf. Jaguar Cars, 46 F.3d at 265-66 & n.5; Fischel & Sykes, 1993 [36] Sup. Ct. Rev. at 193-94. MCM also alleged that the predicate acts of racketeering were undertaken by these defendants "at the direction" of the enterprise's managers. Cf. Reves, 113 S. Ct. at 1173 n.9. Moreover, these defendants were vital to the achievement of the enterprise's primary goal, as only they had the ability to exclude MCM from the market by dealing exclusively with OG. Thus, even if A-B and FDC may have been reluctant participants in a scheme devised by "upper management," they still knowingly implemented management's decisions, thereby enabling the enterprise to achieve its goals. In our view, Reves would not bar a recovery against these defendants if the complaint's allegations were ultimately established after a trial. See United States v. Wong, 40 F.3d 1347, 1373-74 (2d Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 132 L. Ed. 2d 820, 115 S. Ct. 2568 (1995); Oreto, 37 F.3d at 750-51 (section 1962(c) applies to foot soldiers as well as to generals). We therefore reverse the dismissal of MCM's claim under section 1962(c) and remand for further proceedings.

2. Section 1962(d)

It should be plain from our discussion of MCM's section 1962(c) claim that MCM also has stated a claim against A-B and FDC for a conspiracy [37] to violate that section. RICO's conspiracy provision makes it unlawful "for any person to conspire to violate" section 1962(a), (b), or (c). 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). As we observed in United States v. Quintanilla, 2 F.3d 1469, 1484 (7th Cir. 1993), this conspiracy provision, "unlike [section] 1962(c), is not a substantive RICO offense; rather, [section] 1962(d) merely makes it illegal to conspire to violate any of the preceding sections of the statute." See also United States v. Neapolitan, 791 F.2d 489, 497 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 939, 940 (1986). Section 1962(d)'s HN14[¹] target, then, is "the agreement to violate RICO's substantive provisions, not the actual violations themselves" (Schiffels v. Kemper Fin. Servs., Inc., 978 F.2d 344, 348 (7th Cir. 1992) (emphasis in Schiffels)), and liability under section 1962(d) is therefore "not coterminous with liability under [section] 1962(c)." Quintanilla, 2 F.3d at 1485. A defendant may conspire to violate section 1962(c) even if that defendant could not be characterized as an operator or manager of a RICO enterprise under Reves. Quintanilla, 2 F.3d at 1484-85; see also United States v. Starrett, 55 F.3d 1525, 1547 (11th Cir. 1995); [38] United States v. Viola, 35 F.3d 37, 43 (2d Cir. 1994); cf. Antar, 53 F.3d at 581. As Quintanilla explains, "Reves addressed only the extent of conduct or participation necessary to violate a substantive provision of the statute; the holding in that case did not address the principles of conspiracy [*980] law undergirding [section] 1962(d)." 2 F.3d at 1485.

Our cases explain that HN15[¹] a defendant may conspire to violate section 1962(c) if it agreed "to conduct or participate in the affairs of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity," and "it is only necessary that the defendant agree to the commission of [at least] two predicate acts on behalf of the conspiracy." Neapolitan, 791 F.2d at 498; see also Quintanilla, 2 F.3d at 1484; United States v. Stern, 858 F.2d 1241, 1246-47 (7th Cir. 1988). The defendant need not have agreed to actually commit the predicate acts itself or even to participate in the commission of those acts so long as it agreed that the acts would be committed on behalf of the conspiracy. Quintanilla, 2 F.3d at 1484; United States v. Campione, 942 F.2d 429, 437 (7th Cir. 1991); United States v. Gleier, 923 F.2d 496, 500 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. [39] 810, 116 L. Ed. 2d 31, 112 S. Ct. 54 (1991).

In the instant case, MCM alleged that A-B and FDC agreed to commit, on behalf of the enterprise, the TaftHartley Act violations comprising the pattern of racketeering activity. Defendants maintain, however, that this allegation must be read in conjunction with the remaining allegations in the complaint, which establish that they acted only at the direction of and in response to threats by OG, Boscarino, and Hogan. In essence, then, defendants advance the same argument here that we rejected under section 1 of the Sherman Act--that their actions were coerced and that a coerced party cannot be said to have joined an illegal conspiracy.

The argument is easily answered with respect to A-B, for the allegations in MCM's second amended complaint support the inference that A-B was able to extract work rule concessions from Hogan in return for its agreement to stop doing business with MCM. (See R. 94, at P 39.) The complaint suggests, then, that A-B was not entirely a coerced party, but that it voluntarily agreed to participate in OG's scheme. Accepting those allegations as true, we may infer that A-B agreed to participate in the affairs of the alleged enterprise through a pattern [40] of TaftHartley Act violations.

The question is potentially more difficult with respect to FDC, which apparently received nothing of value in return for dealing exclusively with OG at McCormick Place. Any illegal "agreement," then, may well have been thrust upon FDC by the threats and other pressure utilized by OG, Boscarino, and Hogan. We are reluctant to conclude, however, that the allegations in the complaint establish that FDC was coerced into violating the Taft-Hartley Act as a matter of law. Cf. United States v. Sanders, 962 F.2d 660, 676 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 262, 284 (1992). HN16[¹⁴] Economic coercion or duress is generally an affirmative defense to a conspiracy charge (see United States v. Kopituk, 690 F.2d 1289, 1315 \(11th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 928, 463 U.S. 1209, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1391, 103 S. Ct. 3542 (1983)), and that defense takes into consideration the types of pressure or coercion applied to the defendant and any alternatives to acquiescence that may have been available. See Sanders, 962 F.2d at 674 n.16, 676 (approving coercion instruction in RICO conspiracy case which explained that a defendant was "coerced" if he "committed the offense charged only because he reasonably feared that immediate, [41] serious bodily harm or death would be inflicted upon him if he did not commit the offense, and he had no reasonable opportunity to avoid the injury."); see also United States v. Bailey, 444 U.S. 394, 410-11, 62 L. Ed. 2d 575, 100 S. Ct. 624 \(1980\); United States v. Crowder, 36 F.3d 691, 696 \(7th Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1105, 115 S. Ct. 1146 (1995); United States v. Logan, 49 F.3d 352, 359 \(8th Cir. 1995\); United States v. Stevens, 985 F.2d 1175, 1181 \(2d Cir. 1993\); United States v. Karr, 742 F.2d 493, 497 \(9th Cir. 1984\); cf. United States v. Haversat, 22 F.3d 790, 796 \(8th Cir. 1994\) (coercive economic influence of one conspirator does not provide basis for downward departure to sentences of other conspirators under the Sentencing Guidelines). Although MCM's allegations indicate that some economic pressure was applied and that threats of violence were made, the complaint does not establish that FDC lacked a reasonable opportunity to avoid the threatened consequences [*981] in some other way. Thus, although one or both defendants may ultimately succeed in asserting a coercion defense, they do not do so on the basis of the allegations in MCM's complaint alone.

FDC alternatively argues that MCM failed to allege the existence [42] of a RICO enterprise or of a pattern of racketeering activity.¹⁴ The district court did not address these issues in dismissing MCM's RICO claims, but we of course may affirm the dismissal on any ground finding support in the record. Indemnified Capital Inv., SA v. R.J. O'Brien & Assoc., Inc., 12 F.3d 1406, 1410 \(7th Cir. 1993\). We think it more efficient here, however, to leave those additional matters to the district court in the first instance, as the resolution of those issues in defendants' favor would not obviate the need for a remand. See supra, at 18 (remanding Sherman Act claim).

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we vacate the dismissal of MCM's claims under section 1 of the Sherman Act and sections 1962\(c\) & \(d\) of the RICO statute and remand to the district court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

VACATED AND REMANDED.

End of Document

¹⁴ A-B has not advanced similar arguments in this appeal.

Westport Taxi Serv. v. Westport Transit Dist.

Supreme Court of Connecticut

April 21, 1995, Argued ; August 15, 1995, decision released

(15199)

Reporter

235 Conn. 1 *; 664 A.2d 719 ; 1995 Conn. LEXIS 315 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,180

WESTPORT TAXI SERVICE, INC. v. WESTPORT TRANSIT DISTRICT

Prior History: [1] Action to recover damages for, inter alia, the defendant's alleged violation of the state antitrust act, and for other relief, brought to the Superior Court in the judicial district of Stamford-Norwalk and tried to the court, Katz, J.; judgment for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appealed.

Disposition: Reversed in part; judgment directed.

Core Terms

trial court, pricing, prejudgment interest, taxi, predatory, antitrust, damages, rates, fare, competed, immunity, taxi service, costs, lost profits, governmental immunity, percent, anti-competitive, certificate, ride, transportation authority, monopoly power, monopolization, practices, quotation, variable, recoup, marks, reasonable anticipation, treble damages, plain error

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN1 [] Private Actions, Remedies

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-35.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

HN2 [] Local Governments, Licenses

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 13b-97.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Certificates of Public Convenience > Issuance

235 Conn. 1, *1 664 A.2d 719, 719 1995 Conn. LEXIS 315, 1

HN3 Local Governments, Licenses

Under Conn. Gen. Stat. § 13b-97, no person, association or corporation is permitted to operate a taxi service without first obtaining a certificate of public convenience and necessity from the commission.

Governments > Local Governments > Licenses

HN4 Local Governments, Licenses

Before it issues a certificate, the commission is required to determine the number of taxicabs and the type of taxi service that the community needs, and it is also required to limit the service authorized according to the community's needs.

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

HN5 Local Governments, Duties & Powers

In addition to regulating the number of taxis permitted to operate, the commission regulates the rates that were chargeable within a given locality. Conn. Gen. Stat. § 16-319 et seq. (Rev. to 1958).

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

HN6 Public Utility Commissions, Authorities & Powers

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 7-273d (Rev. to 1975).

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

HN7 Local Governments, Duties & Powers

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 7-273e (Rev. to 1977).

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

HN8 Local Governments, Duties & Powers

See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 7-273b \(g\) (Rev. to 1977).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN9 Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

235 Conn. 1, *1 664 A.2d 719, 719 1995 Conn. LEXIS 315, 1

To the extent that the trial court has made findings of fact, the reviewing court is limited to deciding whether such findings were clearly erroneous.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN10[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

When the trial court draws conclusions of law the reviewing court's review is plenary and it must decide whether its conclusions are legally and logically correct and find support in the facts that appear in the record.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN11[] Appeals, Standards of Review

The reviewing court cannot retry the facts or pass upon the credibility of the witnesses.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN12[] Appeals, Standards of Review

The reviewing court's function is not to examine the record to see if the trier of fact could have reached a contrary conclusion.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN13[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

A finding of fact is clearly erroneous when there is no evidence in the record to support it or when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN14[] Appeals, Standards of Review

Because it is the trial court's function to weigh the evidence and determine credibility, the reviewing court gives great deference to its findings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN15[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

235 Conn. 1, *1 664 A.2d 719, 719 1995 Conn. LEXIS 315, 1

The legislative history of the Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-24 et seq., clearly establishes that it was intentionally patterned after the antitrust law of the federal government.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN16 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Construction of the Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-24 et seq., is aided by reference to judicial opinions interpreting the federal antitrust statutes. Accordingly, the court follows federal precedent when it interprets the act unless the text of Connecticut Antitrust Act, or other pertinent state law, requires the court to interpret it differently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN17 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopolization requires possession and willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN18 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopoly power is power to fix or control prices or to exclude or control competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN19 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A finding of attempt to monopolize requires a showing of predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed at accomplishing an unlawful purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN20 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The plaintiff is required to prove two elements for monopolization, (1) the defendant gained monopoly power, and (2) the defendant attained monopoly power by willfully engaging in anti-competitive business practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN21 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

235 Conn. 1, *1 664 A.2d 719, 719 1995 Conn. LEXIS 315, 1

Monopoly power is found where the defendant obtains from 87 to 90 percent of the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN22 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The second element of monopolization requires proof that the defendant engaged in anti-competitive business practices in order to acquire or retain its monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN23 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory pricing may be defined as pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run. It is a practice that harms both competitors and competition. In contrast to price cutting aimed simply at increasing market share, predatory pricing has as its aim the elimination of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN24 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

There are three factors when evaluating a predatory pricing claim: (1) price cost analysis; (2) predatory intent; and (3) likelihood of recoupment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN25 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory pricing is most commonly found when a seller sets its prices below reasonably anticipated marginal or average variable costs, while prices at or above reasonably anticipated marginal or average variable costs are deemed to be non-predatory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN26 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Prices that are below reasonably anticipated marginal cost, and its surrogate, reasonably anticipated average variable cost, are presumed predatory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN27 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

If the plaintiff presents proof that a defendant priced below a reasonably anticipated average variable cost, the fact finder may infer that the defendant knew that it was pricing below cost and intended to do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN28 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Intent is generally proven by circumstantial evidence because direct evidence is rarely available.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN29 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The test of the sufficiency of proof by circumstantial evidence is whether rational minds could reasonably and logically draw the inference.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN30 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

To show predatory pricing, a plaintiff must show not only: (1) that the defendant intended to recoup its investment in below cost prices, but also (2) that the defendant had a reasonable prospect of doing so in order to prove predatory pricing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN31 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

For the investment to be rational, the predator must have a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN32 [blue download icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Determining whether recoupment of predatory losses is likely requires an estimate of the cost of the alleged predation and a close analysis of both the scheme alleged by the plaintiff and the structure and conditions of the relevant market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN33 [blue icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Governmental immunity must be raised as a special defense in the defendant's pleadings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN34 [blue icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Governmental immunity is essentially a defense of confession and avoidance similar to other defenses required to be affirmatively pleaded. The purpose of requiring affirmative pleading is to apprise the court and the opposing party of the issues to be tried and to prevent concealment of the issues until the trial is underway.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN35 [blue icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

In certain limited circumstances, an appellate court will address the issue of whether governmental immunity is available to a defendant where the defense was not specially pleaded. If the question of governmental immunity was fully litigated at trial, without objection from the plaintiff, the plaintiff is deemed to have waived its objection to the requirement that the defense be specially pleaded.

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > General Overview

HN36 [blue icon] Standards of Review, Plain Error

Although the reviewing court is not bound to review the defendant's claim, it may in the interests of justice notice plain error not brought to the attention of the trial court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > Obvious Errors

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > General Overview

HN37 [blue icon] Plain Error, Obvious Errors

Plain error review is reserved for truly extraordinary situations where the existence of the error is so obvious that it affects the fairness and integrity of and public confidence in the judicial proceedings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

235 Conn. 1, *1 664 A.2d 719, 719 1995 Conn. LEXIS 315, 1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN38 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

In order to be shielded by qualified state action immunity, the defendant must show that its anti-competitive conduct is specifically directed or required by the government. Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-31 \(b\). Whether the monopolistic conduct of the defendant was specifically directed or required by the government is a mixed question of fact and law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Administrative Law > Sovereign Immunity

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN39 [] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Unlike the state, municipalities have no sovereign immunity from suit. Rather, municipal governments have a limited immunity from liability. Nevertheless, regardless of whether a defendant is an agency of the state claiming the protection of sovereign immunity or an agency of the town claiming a limited immunity, the issue of whether it is entitled to such immunity is fact bound.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN40 [] Remedies, Damages

The trial court has broad discretion in determining damages.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN41 [] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

The determination of damages involves a question of fact that will not be overturned unless it is clearly erroneous.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN42 [] Private Actions, Remedies

There is a lesser burden of proving the amount of damages in antitrust suits than in other contexts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN43 [] Private Actions, Remedies

A damage theory may be based on assumptions so long as the assumptions are reasonable in light of the record evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN44 [] Private Actions, Remedies

The reasonableness of the assumptions underlying the plaintiff's damage theory is determined by the trier of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > General Overview

HN45 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Reviewing courts refuse to find damage evidence insufficient unless there was no basis for critical assumptions made by the trial court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN46 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Lost profits may be awarded as damages for antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN47 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Where the plaintiff's business is totally or partially destroyed by the defendant's violation, damages may be measured by lost goodwill or the going concern value of the plaintiff's business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN48 [] Private Actions, Remedies

A plaintiff injured by an antitrust violation may recover both lost past profits and the probable value of the business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN49 [] Private Actions, Remedies

235 Conn. 1, *1 664 A.2d 719, 719 1995 Conn. LEXIS 315, 1

The owner of property is competent to testify to its value.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > General Overview

HN50 [] Private Actions, Remedies

A franchise owner is competent to testify as to the value of a franchise. The weight to be accorded such testimony is for the trier to decide.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN51 [] Private Actions, Remedies

The trial court has broad discretion to admit the testimony of anyone who is involved with a business or property and may have personal knowledge of its value.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > Prejudgment Interest

HN52 [] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Interest need not be specially claimed in the demand for damages in order to recover.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > General Overview

HN53 [] Private Actions, Remedies

The allowance of interest as an element of damages is primarily an equitable determination and a matter lying within the discretion of the trial court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > Definition of Plain Error

HN54 [] Standards of Review, Plain Error

The court reaches a statutory interpretation issue under the plain error rule where neither party is prejudiced by the court's decision to review this issue under the plain error rule. Unlike the issues of immunity and treble damages, the court's interpretation of the statutes does not require further fact-finding by the trial court, and both parties have had an opportunity to present arguments regarding their proposed statutory interpretation in their appellate briefs.

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Plain Error > General Overview

HN55[] Standards of Review, Plain Error

Plain error review may be appropriate where the record is complete and the question is essentially one of law, so that neither party is prejudiced.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN56[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-35 mandates an award of treble damages, attorney's fees and costs for injury to business or property due to any violation of the provisions of the act.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

HN57[] Legislation, Interpretation

First, the court looks to the words of the statute in order to discern the intent of the legislature and then resolve any ambiguity by turning for guidance to the legislative history and purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN58[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-35 specifically provides that a successful plaintiff shall recover its costs.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN59[] Legislation, Interpretation

A statute must be interpreted to give effect to all its provisions.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN60[] Legislation, Interpretation

No word within a statute is to be rendered mere surplusage.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN61[Legislation, Interpretation

Unless there is evidence to the contrary, statutory itemization indicates that the legislature intended the list to be exclusive.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > Prejudgment Interest

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Judgment Interest > General Overview

HN62[Judgment Interest, Prejudgment Interest

The Connecticut legislature intended specifically to include all available remedies for an antitrust violation in the Connecticut Antitrust Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-35, and that because prejudgment interest is not specifically included, it may not be awarded.

Counsel: George J. Markley, with whom, on the brief, was Gregory C. Hammonds, for the appellant (defendant).

David S. Golub, with whom was Jonathan M. Levine, for the appellee (plaintiff).

Judges: Callahan, Borden, Berdon, Norcott and Schaller, Js. In this opinion the other justices concurred.

Opinion by: BERDON

Opinion

[722] BERDON, J. In this appeal, we must decide whether the trial court properly imposed liability upon the defendant under the Connecticut Antitrust Act (act); General Statutes § 35-24 et seq.; and, if so, whether the trial court properly awarded the plaintiff treble damages, including lost profits, business value and prejudgment interest, totaling $ 1,048,260.96.

The plaintiff, Westport Taxi Service, Inc., brought this action against the defendant, Westport Transit District, claiming that the defendant had intentionally [2] engaged in monopolistic practices in violation of the act. The plaintiff sought treble damages, attorney's fees and costs pursuant to General Statutes § 35-35¹ of the act. ² [3]

¹ General Statutes § 35-35 provides: HN1["Treble damages for injury to business or property. The state, or any person, including, but not limited to, a consumer, injured in its business or property by any violation of the provisions of this chapter shall recover treble damages, together with a reasonable attorney's fee and costs."

² In addition to claiming that the defendant had violated the act, the plaintiff claimed that: (1) the defendant's conduct constituted a taking of the plaintiff's franchise and business, and that the plaintiff was entitled to adequate compensation; (2) General Statutes § 7-273e entitles the plaintiff to just compensation from the defendant for the taking of its taxi franchise; (3) the

The trial [723] court found that the defendant had engaged in monopolistic practices, and awarded damages to the plaintiff for lost profits, the value of the plaintiff's business and prejudgment interest.³ The court then trebled the total damage award. We affirm the trial court's judgment except as it pertains to the award of prejudgment interest.

[*4] The trial court found the following relevant facts. From 1969 until 1978, the plaintiff provided taxi services to the Weston and Westport areas⁴ pursuant to a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the Connecticut public utilities commission (commission) pursuant to General Statutes (Rev. to 1958) § 16-320.⁵ Anthony and Michael Gilbertie each owned 50 percent of the plaintiff corporation's stock and served as president and vice president, respectively. The Gilberties actively managed the business and regularly worked as dispatchers.

[4] HN3 Under § 16-320, no person, association or corporation was permitted to operate a taxi service without first obtaining a certificate of public convenience and necessity [*5] from the commission.⁶ HN4 Before it issued a certificate, the commission was required to determine the number of taxicabs and the type of taxi service that the community needed, and it was also required to limit the service authorized according to the community's needs. The plaintiff's certificate permitted it to provide three types of taxi service: premium ride service involving the transportation of a single fare; shared ride service involving the transportation of multiple fares; and package delivery. During the 1970s, there was a substantially larger demand for shared ride service, and this constituted the major part of the plaintiff's business.

HN5 In addition [5] to regulating the number of taxis permitted to operate, the commission regulated the rates that were chargeable within a given locality. General Statutes (Rev. to 1958) § 16-319 et seq. The commission adopted the regulatory philosophy that competition among taxi operators was to be with regard to quality of service rather than price. Therefore, the commission required all operators within a given locality to charge the same rates. In determining the appropriate rate structure, the commission considered whether, given the number of vehicles, the rates would permit a reasonable return to the operator on its investment. Certified taxi services were not permitted to charge rates that were lower than those approved by the commission. The last fare increase that the plaintiff had requested was granted by the commission on September 15, 1970, and permitted the defendant's conduct constituted willful and wanton interference with the plaintiff's economic relations; and (4) the defendant's conduct violated the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act. General Statutes § 42-110g. The trial court did not address these claims.

³ We note that the record does not disclose the disposition of the claim for attorney's fees.

⁴ The business actually had begun many years earlier. The Gilbertie family, who owned and operated the plaintiff corporation, originally purchased the taxi business in 1955 and operated it as a sole proprietorship until it was incorporated in 1968.

⁵ General Statutes (Rev. to 1958) § 16-320, now codified at § 13b-97, provides: HN2 "No person, association or corporation shall operate a taxicab until such person, association or corporation has obtained a certificate from the commission certifying that public convenience and necessity require the operation of a taxicab or taxicabs for transportation of passengers, the acceptance or solicitation of which originates within the territory specified in such certificate. Such certificate shall be issued only after written application for the same has been made and public hearing held thereon. Upon receipt of such application, the commission shall fix a time and place of hearing thereon and shall give notice of the pendency of such application and of the time and place of hearing thereon to such applicant, the mayor of each city, the warden of each borough or the first selectman of each town in which the applicant desires to originate the transportation of such passengers, and to any common carrier operating within the territory specified. Any town, city or borough within which taxicab service is operated or any interested party may bring a written petition to the commission in respect to fares, service, operation or equipment or the convenience, protection and safety of passengers and the public. Thereupon, the commission shall fix a time and place for a hearing upon such petition, and shall mail notice thereof to the parties in interest and give notice thereof at least one week prior to such hearing. No certificate shall be sold or transferred until the commission, upon written application to it setting forth the purpose, terms and conditions thereof, after investigation, approves the same. The commission may amend or, for sufficient cause shown, may suspend or revoke any such certificate."

⁶ In 1979, the department of transportation assumed the statutory responsibilities of the public utilities commission with respect to taxis. See General Statutes § 13b-97.

plaintiff to charge $ 1.70 for a [724] three mile one-way trip. In addition, beginning in the fall of 1975, the commission permitted all taxi services in Connecticut to charge an additional ten cents per fare.

[*6] The defendant was formed in 1969, pursuant to General Statutes (Rev. to 1966) § 7-273b.⁷ Initially, pursuant [6] to a financial grant from the federal Urban Mass Transportation Authority (transportation authority), the defendant had intended to establish only a fixed route bus service in Westport.

[*7] Because the Gilberties were aware of these plans, they did not seek additional fare increases from the commission. The Gilberties hoped that, by maintaining the plaintiff's rates, they would remain competitive and minimize the negative impact they predicted that the bus service would have on the local private taxi operators. On August 11, 1974, the defendant instituted its "Minnybus" service, and the plaintiff's ridership and revenues initially decreased. The plaintiff expanded its services within the Westport area, however, and, in 1976, as a result, increased its revenues over those earned in 1973 and 1974. The trial court determined, therefore, that the defendant's implementation of the Minnybus service did not ultimately cause the plaintiff to go out of business. The plaintiff's increase in revenues, however, was at the expense of Teddy's Taxi, the only other taxi service in the Westport area.

When the defendant first commenced the Minnybus service, both the plaintiff and Teddy's Taxi complained to the defendant about the deleterious effects that the [*7] Minnybus initially had on their businesses. In response, in 1975, the defendant applied for, and obtained, an additional [8] $ 25,000 grant from the transportation authority ostensibly to conduct a study to determine how to remedy that initial negative impact its bus service was having on the private taxi operators. The plaintiff cooperated fully, permitting the defendant access to all its records and books. The information that was made available to the defendant included equipment and employee records, trip data, operating and capital costs, revenue data and ridership data. The study revealed that together the plaintiff and Teddy's Taxi averaged between 200 and 250 trips per day but that, because the companies were operating under a 1970 fare schedule during a highly inflationary period, the companies were subsisting at a marginal level.

The results of the study prompted the defendant to apply for an additional grant from the transportation authority to fund a project for a proposed transportation system that would integrate bus and taxi services under the defendant's auspices and provide all the services that the plaintiff offered. In its application, the defendant represented that it intended substantially to take over all the private taxi business in Westport and assume the regulatory powers of the [9] commission under General Statutes (Rev. to 1975) § 7-273d.⁸ [10] The defendant represented [*8]

⁷ There was no evidence presented at trial regarding how the defendant was actually created. It is clear, however, that the defendant applied for and received federal funding as a transit authority and functioned as a transit authority. Therefore, the trial court reasonably assumed, as do we, that the defendant was formed pursuant to General Statutes (Rev. to 1966) § 7-273b, which provides in relevant part: "Formation of district. (a) Any town, city or borough may, by itself or in cooperation with one or more other municipalities, form a transit district, in the manner and for the purposes hereinafter provided. The inhabitants of the municipality or municipalities forming the district shall be a body corporate and politic, and may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, hold and convey real or personal estate and adopt and alter a common seal."

⁸ General Statutes (Rev. to 1975) § 7-273d provides in relevant part: HNC "Assumption of public utilities commission powers relative to transit system within district. Appeals. Upon written notice to the public utilities commission, to the chief executive officer of a private transit system, and to the elected chief executive officer of each municipality composing the district, the district, by its board of directors, may assume all powers of the public utilities commission to regulate and supervise the operation of any such transit system within the district, provided that such transit system would be subject to the supervision of the public utilities commission except for this section. Upon assuming such supervision the district, by its board of directors, shall establish passenger fares and any other rates to be charged and shall establish service standards, may order abandonment of uneconomic routes and shall exercise all powers of regulation and supervision over such transit system as are conferred on the public utilities commission by title 16, in the same manner and under the same standards are established by said title 16. Any company, town, city, borough, corporation or person aggrieved by any order, authorization or decision of the board of directors, except an order, authorization or decision approving the taking of land, in any matter to which he or it was or ought to have been made a party, may appeal therefrom to the public utilities commission within thirty days after the filing of such order, authorization or decision. . . ."

that [725] it intended to revoke the certificates of the private companies and issue new certificates to them that would exclude shared ride service. Under General Statutes \(Rev. to 1977\) § 7-273e \(c\), if the defendant were to acquire by eminent domain the plaintiff's right to provide shared ride service, the defendant would have been required to compensate the plaintiff.⁹ Furthermore the defendant represented that it intended to consolidate [*9] the dispatching services of the plaintiff and Teddy's Taxi into one service provided by the defendant. The defendant also represented that for the first year of its operations, it would offer the contract for providing shared ride service to one of the two private taxi companies then operating in Westport. Because the transportation authority was concerned about the impact that a government subsidized transit authority could have on private operators, the defendant's representation in its application about its intended treatment of the existing franchises was critical to the defendant's ability to obtain the federal grant.

[11] After the defendant completed its study and before it received the federal grant to [726] expand its services, the [*10] defendant's executive director, Richard H. Bradley, notified the Gilberties of the defendant's intentions to establish a taxi service, which eventually became known as the "Maxytaxy," and to eliminate the plaintiff's certificate of public convenience and necessity. Bradley informed the Gilberties that the defendant proposed to hire them as salaried employees, but neither Bradley nor any other representative of the defendant ever offered to compensate the Gilberties for the proposed elimination of the plaintiff's certificate or the value of their business. The Gilberties informed Bradley that they were unwilling to give up their business without compensation and that they chose to remain independent businessmen. The trial court found that "when the Gilberties expressed their unwillingness to give up their own business without compensation and their desire to ⁹ General Statutes \(Rev. to 1977\) § 7-273e provides in relevant part: HNT [↑] "(b) In order to insure the continuance of adequate transit services when it appears that the holder of the franchise is or will be incapable of continuing to offer satisfactory service to meet present or future public passenger transportation requirements and it is improbable that such franchise will be sought by any other private concern, the public utilities control authority, on its own initiative, may or, on request of the transit district or the legislative body of one or more municipalities in the area served, shall fix a time and place for a hearing as to whether such franchise is suitable for acquisition by a transit district. Said authority shall give written notice of such hearing to the board of selectmen of each town, or in the case of cities and boroughs to the chief executive of each, within the area not less than fourteen days prior to such hearing, and shall cause to be published twice, not more than fourteen nor less than seven days prior to such hearing, notice of such hearing in a newspaper or newspapers having a substantial circulation in each municipality within such area. Suitability of a franchise for acquisition by a transit district shall be determined from the following considerations: (1) That public convenience and necessity require the continuance of transit service within the area, (2) that the present franchise holder is or will be incapable of continuing to offer satisfactory service, (3) that it is improbable that such franchise will be sought by a private concern and (4) that continuance of transit service may require the operation of such service by a transit district. After a public hearing thereon and consideration of the above-mentioned factors, the public utilities control authority may declare such franchise suitable for acquisition by a transit district, provided such declaration shall not affect the authority of the municipalities in the area to establish such a district. Ability to offer satisfactory service shall be based upon the financial stability of the franchise holder as determined from past, current and projected net income and from an estimate of financial ability to meet future public passenger transportation requirements in the area. The public utilities control authority may make periodic inspections of transit system franchise holders to determine the financial stability of each and for this purpose may examine the books, accounts and other pertinent documents of such franchise holders and shall have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, accounts and other pertinent documents by the issuance of a subpoena.

"(c) A transit district shall have the power to acquire real property and interests and rights in real property by eminent domain in the name of the transit district for the purposes of the transit district subject to the prior approval of the legislative body or bodies of the municipality or municipalities in which the real property is located. The owner shall be paid by the transit district for all damages. Where the transit district and the owner of such property cannot agree upon the amount to be paid to the owner for any property thus taken, the transit district shall proceed in the same manner specified for redevelopment agencies in accordance with sections 8-129 to 8-133, inclusive. Where the public utilities control authority has determined that a franchise is suitable for acquisition pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, the transit district shall have the power to acquire by eminent domain all or any part of the franchise and of the holder's transit system, including the holder's real estate or interests therein, personal property, and funds under the control or held for the use of or the benefit of such holder. Where the transit district and the holder of such franchise and property cannot agree upon the amount to be paid to the holder for any franchise or property thus taken, the transit district shall proceed in the same manner specified for redevelopment agencies in accordance with sections 8-129 to 8-133, inclusive."

remain independent businessmen Mr. Bradley stated, 'We are going to run this thing at below cost fares. You can't compete with us. . . . We are going to put you out of business . . . !'

In the summer [12] of 1976, the transportation authority approved a $ 635,000 grant to fund the defendant's project, and in December, 1976, the defendant executed a contract with the federal government for the implementation of the project, including the Maxytaxy. The contract included a clause that obligated the defendant to comply with the terms of its application, which were incorporated by reference into the contract.

In early 1977, pursuant to a complaint from the private operators that the defendant intended to operate taxis without the commission's authority, an investigator from the commission visited the defendant and the private taxi operators of Westport. The investigator, Robert L. Cumpstone, concluded that the services the defendant intended to provide were the same as those provided by the private taxi operators but that, under [General Statutes \[*11\] \(Rev. to 1977\) § 7-273b \(g\)](#),¹⁰ [13] the defendant was exempt from regulation by the commission.¹¹

In April, 1977, the defendant began providing taxi services. The defendant offered substantially the same services as the plaintiff and competed for the same customers at substantially lower rates. Accordingly, the defendant's ridership increased and the plaintiff's ridership declined. The defendant never assumed the regulatory powers of the commission.¹² Consequently, it also failed to eliminate the plaintiff's certificate and issue a more limited permit, acts which would have required the defendant to compensate the plaintiff. Furthermore, the defendant awarded the shared ride service contract to a newly formed company, Westport Transport Corporation, and not to the plaintiff or Teddy's Taxi as it had asserted [14] in its agreement with the transportation authority.

The plaintiff discontinued its taxi operations in May, 1978. Teddy's Taxi had discontinued its taxi operations one month earlier. In 1978, after the plaintiff had closed its business, the defendant increased its rates 28 percent and thereafter continued to raise its prices. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant in 1979. Subsequently, on September 22, 1989, the plaintiff amended its complaint and the case was heard by the trial court in January, 1991.

[*12] The trial court found that the evidence of the defendant's intentional anti-competitive conduct for the purpose of monopolizing the Westport taxi business was overwhelming. The trial court determined that the defendant knew that the plaintiff would not be able to compete with government subsidized, below cost taxi rates, [15] and that the defendant [*727] had instituted such fares in order to put competing taxi companies out of business and monopolize the market for taxi services in Westport. The trial court found that once the defendant had eliminated its competition, it had intended to raise rates so that it would no longer require federal government subsidies.

The court also found that the defendant had acted upon its monopolistic intent, had forced the plaintiff out of business by virtue of predatory pricing, and that, after the defendant had monopolized the taxi services in Westport, it had raised its prices substantially.¹³ The trial court concluded that the defendant had engaged in both attempted

¹⁰ General Statutes \(Rev. to 1977\) § 7-273b \(g\) provides in relevant part: HNB [+] "Whenever any transit district is formed under the provisions of this chapter, no provision of chapter] . . . 287 [regulation of taxicabs] . . . shall apply to the operation of transit systems by such district."

¹¹ Cumpstone testified that, had the defendant been subject to regulation by the commission, it would not have received permission to operate the number of vehicles it proposed because Westport's requirements did not justify the increases. Furthermore, he stated that the commission would not have approved the defendant's rates because they were below cost and below existing rates.

¹² If the defendant had assumed the commission's regulatory powers, the plaintiff would have had a right to appeal from the defendant's actions. See footnote 8.

¹³ The trial court further found that the defendant had misrepresented its intended treatment of the plaintiff to the transportation authority in order to obtain funding for the project. Because the transportation authority is concerned about the impact that government subsidized transport districts may have on private operators, it evaluates this impact when considering an monopolization and actual monopolization in violation of General Statutes § 35-27 of the act.¹⁴ After considering and rejecting the defendant's special defenses, the trial court concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for: lost profits from April, 1977, through May, 1978, the period during which the defendant directly competed with the plaintiff, in the amount of $ 12,144; the value of the business in the amount of [*13] $ 150,000; prejudgment interest of $ 14,026.32 on lost [16] profits; and prejudgment interest of $ 173,250 on the value of the business. The court further concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to recover treble damages under § 35-35 and awarded the plaintiff damages totaling $ 1,048,260.96.¹⁵ application for a grant. Although the defendant's application assured that private operators would receive fair treatment, the trial court found that the defendant had failed to comply with these assurances.

¹⁴ General Statutes § 35-27 provides: "Monopolization or attempt to monopolize unlawful. Every contract, combination, or conspiracy to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or monopolization of any part of trade or commerce is unlawful."

¹⁵ The trial court arrived at this figure as follows:

$ 12,144.00

Lost profits

14,026.32

Prejudgment interest on lost profits

150,000.00

Value of business

173,250.00

Prejudgment interest on value of business

$ 349,420.32

Subtotal

multiplied by 3

Trebled

$ 1,048,260.96

Total treble damages

[17] The defendants appealed from the judgment of the trial court to the Appellate Court, and the appeal was transferred to this court pursuant to Practice Book § 4023 and General Statutes § 51-199 \(c\). On appeal, the defendant claims that the trial court improperly: (1) determined that the defendant had engaged in predatory pricing in violation of the act; (2) rejected the defendant's alleged defense of governmental immunity; (3) awarded the plaintiff damages based on speculative assumptions; and (4) awarded prejudgment interest from 1978.¹⁶ We address [728] the defendant's claims in the order in which they are raised.

[18] [*14] I

We begin our analysis by setting forth our standard of review and the construction that guides our interpretation of the act. "The scope of our appellate review depends upon the proper characterization of the rulings made by the trial court. HN9 To the extent that the trial court has made findings of fact, our review is limited to deciding whether such findings were clearly erroneous. HN10 When, however, the trial court draws conclusions of law our review is plenary and we must decide whether its conclusions are legally and logically correct and find support in the facts that appear in the record." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Gateway Co. v. DiNoia, 232 Conn. 223, 229, 654 A.2d 342 \(1995\); Practice Book § 4061. HN11 "This court cannot retry the facts or pass upon the credibility of the witnesses." Holy Trinity Church of God in Christ v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 214 Conn. 216, 223, 571 A.2d 107 \(1990\). Furthermore, HN12 "our function is not to examine the record to see if the trier of fact could have reached a contrary conclusion." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Ranciato v. Nelson, 36 Conn. App. 678, 680, 654 A.2d 358, cert. denied, 233 Conn. 911, 191 659 A.2d 184 \(1995\). HN13 "A finding of fact is clearly erroneous when there is no evidence in the [*15] record to support it . . . or when although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Dornfried v. October Twenty-Four, Inc., 230 Conn. 622, 636, 646 A.2d 772 \(1994\). HN14 Because it is the trial court's function to weigh the evidence and determine credibility, we give great deference to its findings.

HN15 The legislative history of the act clearly establishes that it was intentionally patterned after the antitrust law of the federal government. See 14 H.R. Proc. Pt. 9, 1971 Sess., p. 4182, remarks of Representative David H. Neiditz ("this bill gives Connecticut an Anti-Trust Law similar to the existing Federal Anti-Trust Law in every respect"); 14 S. Proc., Pt. 7, 1971 Sess., p. 3211, remarks of Senator William J. Sullivan ("[the proposed act] gives the small businessman the protection afforded to the large corporations under the Federal Anti-Trust Act"). HN16 Therefore, "our construction of the Connecticut Anti-Trust [20] Act is aided by reference to judicial opinions interpreting the federal antitrust statutes. Elida, Inc. v. Harmar Realty Corporation, 177 Conn. 218, 226-27,

¹⁶ The defendant also claims that the trial court improperly based its conclusion that the defendant had violated the act on its determination that the defendant had the power to acquire the plaintiff's franchise and should have exercised that power. This claim mischaracterizes the opinion of the trial court and we conclude that it is without merit. The court based its findings of monopolistic intent upon the actions and statements of the defendant relating to achieving domination of the relevant market and driving competitors out of business. Furthermore, the trial court determined that the defendant's predatory pricing was anti-competitive and illegal. On that basis, the court imposed liability upon the defendant. The defendant's failure to acquire the plaintiff was not a significant factor in the trial court's analysis of this issue and we need not address it further.

In addition, the defendant claims that the trial court improperly trebled the prejudgment interest award. Because we conclude that the plaintiff is not entitled to prejudgment interest, we do not address this claim.

Finally, the defendant claims that the trial court improperly awarded treble damages against it because it was a government agency against which such damages may not be awarded unless there is explicit statutory authority for such an award. For the same reasons set forth in part III of this opinion in which we decline to review the defendant's claim that it is shielded from liability by governmental immunity, we likewise do not review this claim. It was not raised before the trial court, either by special pleading or otherwise, and the record does not indicate the nature of the defendant with respect to its governmental characteristics. See footnote 25.

The plaintiff raises as an alternate ground for affirmance that the trial court properly awarded the plaintiff compensation because the defendant infringed on the plaintiff's property right to be free from competition absent a finding of public convenience and necessity. Because we affirm the treble damages awarded by the trial court, with the exception of prejudgment interest, we do not reach the alternate ground for affirmance.

413 A.2d 1226 [1979]; Mazzola v. Southern New England Telephone Co., 169 Conn. 344, 348, 363 A.2d 170 [1975]. Cf. Wilson v. Freedom of Information Commission, 181 Conn. 324, 435 A.2d 353 [1980]."¹⁷ State v. Hossan-Maxwell, Inc., 181 Conn. 655, 660, 436 A.2d 284 (1980). Accordingly, we follow federal precedent when we interpret the act unless the text of our antitrust statutes, [*16] or other pertinent state law, requires us to interpret it differently.

[21] II

The defendant first contends that its actions did not violate the act and that it did not engage in predatory pricing. The defendant claims that consumers benefited from [*729] the lower prices that the defendant offered and that it had no ulterior motive other than the desire to relieve traffic congestion in Westport. The defendant also contends that it did not actually compete with the plaintiff because it offered only shared ride services and not premium ride services. Furthermore, the defendant claims that the plaintiff has failed to show that the defendant engaged in predatory pricing because it had no intention of making a profit and indeed never earned a profit. We are unpersuaded.

HN17 "Monopolization requires possession and willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power. . . . HN18 Monopoly power is power to fix or control prices or to exclude or control competition in the relevant market." (Citations omitted.) Shea v. First Federal Savings & Loan Assn. of New Haven, 184 Conn. 285, 304, 439 A.2d 997 (1981), citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966). Similarly, HN19 a finding of attempt to monopolize [*22] requires a showing of predatory or anti-competitive conduct directed at accomplishing an unlawful purpose. Shea v. First Federal Savings & Loan Assn. of New Haven, supra, 304. Therefore, HN20 the plaintiff was required to prove two elements: (1) the defendant gained monopoly power; and (2) the defendant attained monopoly power by willfully engaging in anti-competitive business practices. See id.

A

Accordingly, the trial court first determined that "by May, 1978, [the] defendant indisputably possessed [*17] monopoly power over taxi services in the Westport area -- the 'relevant market' for antitrust purposes. After [the] plaintiff was forced to close its taxi business in May, 1978, as a result of [the] defendant's below-cost operations, [the] defendant controlled over 95 percent of the taxi market in Westport." This finding is not in dispute. HN21 As the trial court noted, monopoly power has been found where the defendant obtains from 87 to 90 percent of the market. See, e.g., United States v. Grinnell Corp., supra, 384 U.S. 571; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 428-31 (2d Cir. 1945). Therefore, the trial court's undisputed finding that the [*23] defendant captured 95 percent of the relevant market was sufficient to support its conclusion that the defendant had obtained monopoly power.

B

HN22 The second element of monopolization requires proof that the defendant engaged in anti-competitive business practices in order to acquire or retain its monopoly power. The plaintiff based its theory of anti-competitive practices on predatory pricing and, indeed, the trial court found that the defendant had engaged in the practice of predatory pricing. HN23 "Predatory pricing may be defined as pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run. It is a practice that harms both competitors and competition. In contrast to price cutting aimed simply at increasing market share, predatory pricing has as its aim the elimination of competition." (Emphasis in original.) Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of

¹⁷ We note that in 1992, the legislature explicitly incorporated into law its intent that the judiciary be guided by interpretations of federal antitrust statutes when it enacted No. 92-248 of the 1992 Public Acts, now General Statutes § 35-44b, which provides that "it is the intent of the general assembly that in construing sections 35-24 to 35-46, inclusive, the courts of this state shall be guided by interpretations given by the federal courts to federal antitrust statutes."

Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 117-18, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986); 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law (1978) P 715b. HN24[] Recent federal court cases have focused on three factors when evaluating a predatory pricing claim: (1) price cost analysis; [24] (2) predatory intent; and (3) likelihood of recoupment. [*18] 1 A.B.A. Antitrust Section, Antitrust Law Developments (3d Ed. 1992) p. 227 (Antitrust Law Developments).

1

HN25[] Predatory pricing is most commonly found when a seller sets its prices below reasonably anticipated marginal or average variable costs,¹⁸ while prices at or above reasonably anticipated marginal or average variable [730] costs are deemed to be nonpredatory. See McGahee v. Northern Propane Gas Co., 858 F.2d 1487, 1503-1504 (11th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1084, 109 S. Ct. 2110, 104 L. Ed. 2d 670 (1989) (average variable cost may usually be used as surrogate for marginal cost in determining whether pricing is predatory); Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 651 F.2d 76, 88 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943, 102 S. Ct. 1438, 71 L. Ed. 2d 654 (1982) (reasonably anticipated marginal cost is best determinant for predatory pricing). HN26[] The Second Circuit Court of Appeals has held that "prices that are below reasonably anticipated marginal cost, and its surrogate, reasonably anticipated average variable cost . . . are presumed predatory." (Citations [25] omitted; emphasis added.) Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning Ferris Industries of Vermont, Inc., 845 F.2d 404, 407 (2d Cir. 1988), aff'd on other grounds, 492 U.S. 257, 109 S. Ct. 2909, 106 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1989); see Irvin Industries, Inc. v. Goodyear Aerospace Corp., 974 F.2d 241, 245 (2d Cir. 1992); Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., supra. [*19] 88; see P. Areeda & D. Turner, "Predatory Pricing and Related Practices Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act," 88 Harv. L. Rev. 697, 716-18 and 733 (1975).

[26] In this case, the defendant does not contest that its fares were not only below cost but substantially below average variable costs. Indeed, as the trial court found, "[the] defendant's own analysis of its fare structure over the first two years of operation indicates [the] defendant's non-capital operating costs were $ 12 per operating hour per taxi as against revenues of only $ 6 per operating hour, literally a 50 percent below cost pricing structure."

2

Although there is substantial conflict among the federal Circuit Courts of Appeals as to whether intent is relevant to predatory pricing; 1 Antitrust Law Developments, supra, p. 234; cases have generally focused on whether a plaintiff must prove that pricing below the relevant cost standard was motivated by anti-competitive intent. Id., p. 234 n.209. The Second Circuit Court of Appeals, stating that predatory pricing requires proof that the defendant priced below "reasonably anticipated" average variable cost, has held that a trier of fact that has "evidence that [the] defendants had engaged in predatory pricing . . . could have inferred intent from this fact." Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning Ferris Industries [27] of Vermont, Inc., supra, 845 F.2d 408. Therefore, under Kelco Disposal, Inc., HN27[] if the plaintiff presents proof that a defendant priced below a reasonably anticipated average variable cost, the fact finder may infer that the defendant knew that it was pricing below cost and intended to do so.

HN28[] Furthermore, we have held that intent is generally proven by circumstantial evidence because direct evidence is rarely available. State v. Mejia, 233 Conn. 215, 223, 658 A.2d 571 (1995). HN29[] "The test of the sufficiency [*20] of proof by circumstantial evidence is whether rational minds could reasonably and logically draw the inference." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Puro v. Henry, 188 Conn. 301, 310, 449 A.2d 176 (1982); Andrea v. New York, N.H. & H.R. Co., 144 Conn. 340, 344, 131 A.2d 642 (1957).

¹⁸ Marginal cost "is traditionally defined as 'the increment to total cost that results from producing an additional increment of output.'" Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 651 F.2d 76, 87 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 943, 102 S. Ct. 1438, 71 L. Ed. 2d 654 (1982). "Average variable cost is the sum of all variable costs those that vary with output -- divided by output." Morgan v. Ponder, 892 F.2d 1355, 1360 n.11 (8th Cir. 1989). Variable costs are those costs that are dependent on a firm's output, while fixed costs are not. Kelco Disposal, Inc. v. Browning Ferris Industries of Vermont, Inc., 845 F.2d 404, 407 (2d Cir. 1988), aff'd on other grounds, 492 U.S. 257, 109 S. Ct. 2909, 106 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1989).

In this case, there was ample evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that the defendant's below cost pricing was instituted to drive its competitors out of business and not merely to gain market share. Despite the defendant's contention that it did not compete with the plaintiff, the trial court determined that it did compete¹⁹ and that due to the defendant's [28] anti-competitive business [731] practices the plaintiff was forced out of business. The trial court specifically found, as we previously have pointed out, that the defendant's prices were below average variable costs and that the defendant's monopolistic intent had been expressed in its application to the transportation authority. The trial court further noted that these facts were admitted by an officer [*21] of the defendant and that the defendant's executive director had told the Gilberties, "we are going to run this thing at below cost fares. You can't compete with us. . . . We are going to put you out of business . . ." In addition, the trial court found that the defendant had extensive knowledge of the plaintiff's business due to the federally funded study of the plaintiff it had conducted in 1975, and that it therefore knew the plaintiff could not withstand below cost price competition.

[*29] We conclude that not only was there sufficient circumstantial evidence to support the trial court's conclusion of predatory intent, but there was also direct evidence regarding that intent.

3

The United States Supreme Court has recently held in Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2587-88, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993), that HN30[↑] a plaintiff must show not only: (1) that the defendant intended to recoup its investment in below cost prices,²⁰ but also (2) that the defendant had a reasonable prospect of doing so in order to prove predatory pricing.²¹ HN31[↑] "For the investment to be rational, [*22] the [predator] must have a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered. . . . Recoupment is the ultimate object of an unlawful predatory pricing scheme; it is the means by which a predator profits from predation. Without it, predatory pricing produces lower aggregate prices in the market, and consumer welfare is enhanced. Although unsuccessful predatory pricing may encourage some inefficient substitution toward the product being sold at less than its cost, [30] unsuccessful predation is in general a boon to consumers." (Citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted.) Id., 2588. HN32[↑] "Determining whether recoupment of predatory losses is likely requires an estimate of the cost of the alleged predation and a close analysis of both the scheme alleged by the plaintiff and the structure and conditions of the relevant market." Id., 2589.

¹⁹ The defendant contends that it did not provide premium ride service and therefore did not compete with the plaintiff in this area. The trial court determined, however, that the services that the defendant offered were substantially similar to those offered by the plaintiff. This finding is supported by the testimony of commission investigator Cumpstone. There was evidence that although shared ride service comprised most of the market for taxi services, the defendants provided premium service when it was requested. Its application to the transportation authority, which was incorporated by reference into the contract between the defendant and the federal government, stated that "[a] fully integrated taxi service will offer premium ride, shared-ride and small package delivery services within the town of Westport . . ." Furthermore, Paul Green, one of the organizers and directors of the defendant, testified that Maxytaxi at times offered the equivalent of premium ride service. Finally, in its request for proposal for a personnel and management services contract pertaining to what became the Maxytaxi, the defendant stated that, in addition to shared ride service, it intended to provide "special market services," which was described as a demand response, advance request service. This is an apparent description of premium ride service. We conclude that there is ample evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that the defendant did compete with the plaintiff.

²⁰ The trial court's found that the defendant intended to raise its prices to eliminate the government subsidy and this finding was supported by the evidence and is not clearly erroneous. Furthermore, the defendant admitted that it intended to raise its prices in order to continue to operate after the subsidy was expended.

²¹ In Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., supra, 113 S. Ct. 2578, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had engaged in price discrimination in violation of the Clayton Act as amended by § 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act. 15 U.S.C. § 13 (a) (1982). The court recognized that the standard for analyzing recoupment is somewhat different under the Sherman Antitrust Act, which provides for a general prohibition against monopolistic business practices, comparable to General Statutes § 35-27. 15 U.S.C. § 2 (1982). The Sherman Antitrust Act has been interpreted to require the plaintiff to show that there was a dangerous probability that the defendant would recoup its investment in below cost pricing. Brooke Group, Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., supra, 2588. Therefore, under federal law the level of probable recoupment that the plaintiff must show varies according to which act the plaintiff alleges that the defendant violated. Because, in this case, we conclude that the defendant had no investment or losses to recoup, we leave for another day the issue of the level of probability of recoupment that must be shown in order to prove predatory pricing under the Connecticut act.

[31] [732] In this regard, the defendant claims that it never intended to generate profits and that the price increases that were implemented after the plaintiff had gone out of business did not recoup the defendant's losses. The defendant further claims that it never intended to recoup its losses, which were covered by the government subsidies, that its ridership dropped after its rates increased, and that it subsequently was forced to cease operations.

Because the case before us presents a novel circumstance,²² we do not employ literally the second prong of Brooke Group, Ltd. -- that is, the requirement of a [*23] reasonable prospect of recoupment. Although there may have been little prospect of recouping the federal grants that the government had provided to the defendant, federal funding enabled the defendant to charge below cost prices at no risk to itself. As a result of its below cost pricing, the defendant was able to drive all its competitors out of the market at the expense of the federal government.²³ After the plaintiff was forced out of business, which was well before the defendant expended its government subsidy, the trial court determined that the defendant [32] substantially raised its prices, by 28 percent. It continued to raise its fares after the initial increase. In reality, the defendant suffered no losses from pricing below cost. Moreover, as the trial court specifically found, once its competition had been eliminated, the defendant intended to raise rates so that it would no longer depend upon the government subsidies. Accordingly, in considering whether the second prong was satisfied, the trial court could have taken into account the government subsidy together with the increases in pricing once the plaintiff closed its doors. Therefore, there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that the defendant's pricing was predatory and that the defendant was liable under the act.

[33] III

The defendant claims that the trial court improperly concluded that the defendant is not entitled to either absolute governmental immunity or qualified immunity pursuant to General Statutes § 35-31 \(b\).²⁴ The plaintiff [*24] argues that because the defendant failed to plead immunity as a special defense, or to raise the defense at trial, the issue of whether the defendant is entitled to governmental immunity is not reviewable by this court.

We have previously determined that HN33[↑] governmental immunity must be raised as a special defense in the defendant's pleadings. Gauvin v. New Haven, 187 Conn. 180, 184-85, 445 A.2d 1 \(1982\). HN34[↑] "Governmental immunity is essentially a defense of confession and avoidance similar to other defenses required to be affirmatively [34] pleaded [under Practice Book § 164]. . . . The purpose of requiring affirmative pleading is to apprise the court and the opposing party of the issues to be tried and to prevent concealment of the issues until the ²² The parties have been unable to point to any analogous case involving a similar instance of an alleged predatory pricing scheme that was federally funded either in Connecticut or elsewhere. In addition, our research has not revealed such a case.

²³ Maxytaxi's only competition after May, 1978, was from Teddy's Taxi which, under new ownership, reinitiated its limousine services in the fall of 1978. The town of Westport conditioned the lease for livery service at the train station on a requirement that Teddy's Taxi provide limited taxi service. As a result, that taxi service, which operated at a substantial loss, totaled two taxis and averaged ten rides per day within Westport.

²⁴ General Statutes § 35-31 \(b\) provides: "Nothing contained in this chapter shall apply to those activities of any person when said activity is specifically directed or required by a statute of this state, or of the United States."

trial is underway." (Citations omitted.) Id., 185.²⁵ In this [\[733\]](#) case, the defendant did not specially plead any immunity defense -- absolute or qualified.

[\[35\]](#) HN35 In certain limited circumstances, an appellate court will address the issue of whether governmental immunity is available to a defendant where the defense was not specially pleaded. If the question of governmental immunity was fully litigated at trial, without objection [\[*25\]](#) from the plaintiff, the plaintiff is deemed to have waived its objection to the requirement that the defense be specially pleaded. Id., 184. In this case, the defendant did not raise the issue of governmental immunity at trial and the plaintiff cannot be deemed to have waived its objection. In fact, the issue was first raised by the plaintiff in its posttrial brief in which it urged that the defendant was not entitled to immunity. In its reply brief, the defendant addressed the issue of immunity for the first time.

The defendant argues that we should invoke plain error review to decide the issue of qualified immunity pursuant to § 35-31 \(b\). Under Practice Book § 4185, HN36 although we are not bound to review the defendant's claim, we "may in the interests of justice notice plain error not brought to the attention of the trial court." See Magnan v. Anaconda Industries, Inc., 193 Conn. 558, 577-78, 479 A.2d 781 \(1984\). HN37 Plain error review "is reserved for truly extraordinary situations where the existence of the error is so obvious that it affects the fairness and integrity of and public confidence in the judicial proceedings." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Scott v. Barrett, 212 Conn. 217, 222, 561 A.2d 941 \(1989\).

HN38 In order to be shielded by qualified state action immunity, the defendant must show that its anti-competitive conduct was "specifically directed or required" by the government; General Statutes § 35-31 \(b\); Mazzola v. Southern New England Telephone Co., supra, 169 Conn. 359, 366 (interpreting act to apply more stringent standards for exemption from liability than federal law because "§ 135-31 \(b\) of our General Statutes has no parallel in the federal antitrust statutes," and holding that governmental role amounting to mere acquiescence cannot be construed as directing or requiring an action under the state statute). We conclude that plain error review is not warranted with respect to the issue [\[*26\]](#) of qualified immunity in this case because the record is factually insufficient to permit such a review. Whether the monopolistic conduct of the [\[37\]](#) defendant was "specifically directed or required" by the government is a mixed question of fact and law; see Schnabel v. Tyler, 230 Conn. 735, 743, 646 A.2d 152 \(1994\) (question of immunity predicated on factual issues as well as law); and the record before us is insufficient to make such a determination. See Genovese v. Gallo Wine Merchants, Inc., 226 Conn. 475, 480 n.6, 628 A.2d 946 \(1993\).

The defendant also claims that it is shielded from liability by the governmental immunity applicable to municipalities and their agencies because it is a transit district established by the town of Westport.²⁶ [\[39\]](#) HN39 Unlike ²⁵ We note that in Gauvin, although governmental immunity was not specially pleaded and the trial court therefore refused to consider it for that reason, this court remanded the case for articulation regarding whether the defendant was entitled to governmental immunity because the trial court had requested certain clarifications from the parties after the trial wherein the defendant raised the defense. We concluded that, because the trial court specifically requested the information through which the defense was introduced, the court created the opportunity for the defense to be raised and, therefore, we held that the court had no discretion regarding whether to consider the defense. Gauvin v. New Haven, supra, 187 Conn. 185-86. More importantly, however, this court based its decision on the determination that there was apparently "an adequate basis for the trial court to determine whether . . . the defense of governmental immunity could have been sustained." Id., 187. In the case before us, the issue was introduced in the normal course of filing posttrial memoranda of law, and there was no evidence introduced by the defendant upon which the court could make a determination on the merits.

²⁶ The defendant also argues that because the federal antitrust laws exempt local government from liability, it should also be protected under the Connecticut act. In 1984, long after the actions at issue in this case took place, the Local Government Antitrust Act was enacted, which exempts local government entities from federal antitrust damage awards. 15 U.S.C. §§ 34-36 \(1989\). Prior to the amendment, however, municipalities were liable under federal law for treble antitrust damages. See Palm Springs Medical Clinic, Inc. v. Desert Hospital, 628 F. Supp. 454, 459-60 n.4 \(C.D. Cal. 1986\). In Connecticut, municipalities

the state, municipalities "have no sovereign immunity from suit." Cone v. Waterford, 158 Conn. 276, 278, 259 A.2d 615 (1969). Rather, municipal governments have a limited immunity from liability. Tango v. New Haven, I7341 173 Conn. 203, 204-205, 377 A.2d 284 (1977). Nevertheless, regardless of whether a defendant is an agency of the state claiming the protection of sovereign immunity or an agency of the town claiming a limited immunity, the issue of whether it is entitled to such immunity is fact bound. See Gauvin v. New Haven, supra, 187 Conn. 186 [38] (whether town is entitled to limited governmental immunity is question of fact); Dolnack v. Metro-North Commuter Railroad Co., 33 Conn. App. 832, 836-37, I*271 639 A.2d 530 (1994) (listing several fact based factors that must be considered in determining whether given entity is entitled to immunity of state); see also 5 F. Harper, F. James & O. Grey, Torts (2d Ed. 1986) § 29.6, p. 627 (in considering whether immunity applies based on government-proprietary distinction, criteria most commonly considered are: [1] whether function is allocated to municipality for its profit or special advantage; and [2] whether function is one historically performed by government). Because this issue was raised only in the posttrial briefs of the parties, the record is insufficient to determine whether the defendant is a municipal agent and, if so, whether it may be shielded by governmental immunity from antitrust liability.²⁷ Accordingly, we also decline to review whether the defendant is entitled to the limited governmental immunity available to municipalities and their agencies.

IV

We next turn to the defendant's allegation that the trial court improperly awarded the plaintiff damages based on [40] speculative data and that, therefore, the plaintiff failed to establish damages with reasonable certainty.

HN40[] The trial court has broad discretion in determining damages. Buckman v. People Express, Inc., 205 Conn. 166, 175, I*281 530 A.2d 596 (1987); Amwax Corp. v. Chadwick, 28 Conn. App. 739, 745, 612 A.2d 127 (1992). HN41[] The determination of damages involves a question of fact that will not be overturned unless it is clearly erroneous. Beckman v. Jalich Homes, Inc., 190 Conn. 299, 309-10, 460 A.2d 488 (1983); Gerber & Hurley, Inc. v. CCC Corp., 36 Conn. App. 539, 545, 651 A.2d 1302 (1995). "The vagaries of the marketplace usually deny us sure knowledge of what [the] plaintiff's situation would have been in the absence of the defendant's antitrust violation." HN42[] This fact and the general belief that it would be inequitable to allow a wrongdoer to defeat recovery by insisting on rigorous proof of damages have resulted in a lesser burden of proving the amount of damages in antitrust suits than in other contexts." 1 Antitrust Law Developments, supra, p. 668. HN43[] "A damage theory may be based on assumptions so long as the assumptions are reasonable in light of the record [41] evidence." Id., p. 673; see, e.g., National Farmers' Organization, Inc. v. Associated Milk Producers, Inc., 850 F.2d 1286, 1301-1303 (8th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1081, 109 S. Ct. 1535, 103 L. Ed. 2d 840 (1989). HN44[] The reasonableness of the assumptions underlying the plaintiff's damage theory is determined by the trier of fact. General Leaseways, Inc. v. National Truck Leasing Assn., 830 F.2d 716, 726-27 (7th Cir. 1987). HN45[] Federal appellate courts have refused to find damage evidence insufficient unless there was no basis for critical assumptions made by the trial court. See McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802, 806-807 (9th Cir. 1988).

have not been exempted by statute from antitrust damages. Accordingly, we reject the defendant's argument that its actions during 1977 and 1978 should be exempt from antitrust liability.

²⁷ Although the trial court discussed governmental immunity in its memorandum of decision, and held that the defendant was not entitled to it, the court reached this conclusion by determining that governmental immunity is not available to transit districts pursuant to General Statutes § 7-273h. Section 7-273h (a) provides in relevant part: "Any district operating a transit service pursuant to the provisions of this chapter shall be responsible for any injury or damage to persons or property, happening or arising by reason of the maintenance or operation of the same, in the same manner and to the same extent as though the same were owned and operated by individuals or by a private corporation. . . . Because we are unable to determine in the first instance whether the defendant would have otherwise been entitled to governmental immunity, we leave for another day the question of whether § 7-273h constitutes a waiver of immunity from liability under the Connecticut act."

The defendant challenges the trial court's findings that the plaintiff is entitled to damages for lost profits for the year ending May, 1978, in the amount of $ 12,144, and for the [735] loss of the business, which the court valued at $ 150,000.

A

HN46 [+] It is well established that lost profits may be awarded as damages for antitrust violations. See, e.g., *H.J. Inc. v. I*291 International Telephone & Telegraph Corp.*, 867 F.2d 1531, 1549 (8th Cir. 1989); D&S Redi-Mix v. Sierra Redi-Mix & Contracting [421] Co., 692 F.2d 1245, 1249 (9th Cir. 1982). In this case, the trial court made meticulous findings of fact and clearly detailed its calculations regarding the plaintiff's damages for the year in which the defendant directly competed with the plaintiff.

The defendant points to the fact that although the plaintiff's rates were controlled by the commission, the plaintiff did not choose to seek a rate increase from 1970, until it ceased business in 1978. The defendant claims that, therefore, the trial court's finding that if the defendant had not competed at below cost rates the plaintiff would have requested and received authorization to increase its rates from the commission was purely speculative.²⁸ We disagree.

[43] First, we must view the defendant's claim in its proper context. The trial court found that the plaintiff had been unable to request an increase in its rates from 1976, onward, initially because of the advent of the Minnybus [*30] service and subsequently because the Gilberties knew that the defendant intended to compete with them directly at rates set below cost. The plaintiff sought damages, however, exclusively for the one year period in which it competed directly with the defendant's Maxytaxy. The trial court specifically found that the "plaintiff legitimately feared that it would have trouble enough competing with Maxytaxy's service at present rates without adding to the problem by increasing its fares." The defendant does not challenge these findings.

The trial court found that when the commission reviews an application for an increase in rates, it considers the rates charged in comparable localities and the profitability to the taxi operator. The commission considers a reasonable rate of return to be a ratio of operating costs to gross revenue of between 85 and 95 percent, or, in other words, a return of between five cents and fifteen cents on every dollar. In 1977, [44] the plaintiff was permitted to charge only $ 1.80 for a one-way three mile trip, which the trial court found was the plaintiff's average fare, while taxi companies in the surrounding areas of Bridgeport, Greenwich and Stamford were permitted to charge $ 2.70 for the same distance.

The trial court further determined that, if the plaintiff had increased its average fare to $ 2.70, it would have had a net operating ratio of 87 percent, which was within the commissioner's guidelines for a fair rate of return. Accordingly, the trial court found that during the year in which the plaintiff was competing with the Maxytaxy, the plaintiff could have obtained permission to charge $ 2.70 for a one-way three mile trip instead of $ 1.80 because the surrounding communities were charging that rate. The trial court concluded that if the defendant had not competed illegally, the plaintiff would have sought permission to charge an average $ 2.70 fare and that such an increase would have been [736] [*31] granted.²⁹ Therefore, the trial court based its award of the damages for lost ²⁸ The defendant contends that the trial court incorrectly calculated the plaintiff's damages based on the rates for premium ride service in the surrounding localities because the defendant did not compete with the plaintiff in this area. There was contradictory testimony on this point. See footnote 19. The trial court concluded that the defendant and the plaintiff provided substantially the same services and this conclusion is supported by the testimony presented at trial.

A related argument that the defendant sets forth is that the trial court improperly applied the premium ride service rate of $ 2.70 to calculate the plaintiff's damages. There was a wide range of rates that applied according to the distance traveled. The trial court determined that $ 2.70 was the rate charged for the average distance traveled. There was no evidence offered to show that shared ride service resulted in lower per ride revenues to the taxi companies than premium ride service. On the contrary, although the record is unclear regarding how shared rider service was charged, it was reasonable for the trial court to assume that although individual shared ride passengers paid less than they would have for premium service, the total revenue to the taxi company was at least the same as premium service. Therefore, we conclude that the use by the trial court of an average distance and rate was reasonable.

profits on the difference between the $ 1.80 average fare the plaintiff collected during the year ending May, [45] 1978, and the $ 2.70 average fare it could have earned.

The trial court found, on the basis of the plaintiff's financial information, that the plaintiff earned a net profit of $ 5759.12³⁰ during the year it competed directly with the defendant.³¹ [47] The trial court then determined that if Maxytaxi had not illegally competed with the plaintiff and if the plaintiff had requested and received rate increases comparable to those charged in the surrounding communities, based on its actual 1977 ridership,³² [48] the plaintiff would have earned an adjusted [*32] operating profit of $ 17,903.³³ Accordingly, the trial court concluded that the plaintiff had suffered [46] lost profits between April, 1977, and May, 1978, of the difference between $ 17,903 and $ 5759, which totals $ 12,144.³⁴

We conclude that the trial court based its calculation of the plaintiff's damages due to lost profits on sufficient evidence and reasonable assumptions, and, accordingly, the trial court's calculation of the plaintiff's damages from lost profits was not clearly erroneous.³⁵

²⁹ In addition, John Riley, a senior rate specialist with the commission who was responsible for the development and approval of taxi rates, testified that if the plaintiff had requested a fare increase in 1977, the commission would have approved such an increase to the rate of $ 2.70 for a three mile trip that was charged in other nearby localities.

³⁰ The defendant argues that, because the plaintiff generated greater revenues in 1977, after the defendant initiated the Maxytaxi, than in 1974, before the defendant began its operations, the plaintiff, therefore, was not negatively impacted by the Maxytaxi. This argument is without merit. It is true that the plaintiff's revenues from taxi operations were $ 114,070 in 1977, as opposed to $ 100,362 in 1974. We have already affirmed the trial court's determination, however, that if the defendant had not competed illegally at below cost prices in order to drive the plaintiff out of business, the plaintiff's revenue would have been much higher. This is the dispositive issue that entitles the plaintiff to lost profits.

³¹ In addition to revenues from its taxi operations, the plaintiff also earned revenue from a rental car business, vending machines and the sale of lottery tickets. The trial court subtracted all revenue that was not directly derived from the plaintiff's taxi services from its damage calculations. The defendant does not dispute the trial court's calculations or conclusion regarding the plaintiff's actual profits for this period.

³² The defendant argues that the trial court improperly based its calculations on the assumption that the defendant did not exist at all and awarded damages according to what the plaintiff would have earned without any competition from the defendant.

It is impossible to speculate regarding what would have happened if the defendant had chosen to compete legally. It certainly would have had to charge fares sufficient to perpetuate its existence. What those fares would have been is not determinable and, therefore, as the trial court stated, the level of competition the defendant would have given the plaintiff is similarly indeterminate.

Contrary to the defendant's allegation, however, the trial court did not assume the defendant's nonexistence when it calculated the plaintiff's damages. The trial court used the plaintiff's actual ridership during the period between 1977 and 1978, which had been adversely impacted by competition from the defendant and was lower than it otherwise would have been. Michael Gilbertie testified that the plaintiff's ridership dropped noticeably in 1977. In contrast, the defendant's ridership increased from 1458 in April, 1977, to 11,319 in January, 1978. It is reasonable to assume that a substantial portion of the plaintiff's lost ridership was the defendant's gain. Therefore, a competitive impact was included in the calculation.

³³ The trial court further determined that this outcome was reasonable because it was within the range that the commission deemed an acceptable profit margin. The plaintiff's adjusted revenue for 1977 would have been $ 176,587, which amounts to a net operating ratio of 87 percent.

³⁴ The defendant has not challenged on appeal any aspect of the mathematic methodology employed by the trial court and, therefore, we do not review it.

³⁵ The defendant argues that any decrease in revenues between 1976 and 1977 was due to the closing of the plaintiff's evening operations, which was, in turn, due to the death of John Gilbertie, who worked as the night dispatcher. Michael Gilbertie testified, however, that the decision was precipitated by the fact that, due to competition from the defendant, the evening operations were not profitable and that was the basis of the decision to discontinue them. The trial court obviously decided to credit his testimony and the defendant has failed to show that the court's decision was clearly erroneous.

[49] [737] B

The defendant also claims that the trial court improperly awarded the plaintiff damages of $ 150,000 for the loss of the business. HN47 "Where the plaintiff's business is totally or partially destroyed by [the] defendant's [*33] violation . . . damages may be measured by lost goodwill or the 'going concern' value of [the] plaintiff's business." 1 Antitrust Law Developments, supra, p. 670; Sciambra v. Graham News Co., 841 F.2d 651, 657 (5th Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Sciambra v. ARA Services, Inc., 488 U.S. 855, 109 S. Ct. 143, 102 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1988). HN48 A plaintiff injured by an antitrust violation may recover both lost past profits and the probable value of the business. Northeastern Telephone Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., supra, 651 F.2d 95 n.30.

After calculating the plaintiff's lost profits, the trial court determined what the plaintiff's value would have been if the defendant had not forced it out of business due to its illegal, anti-competitive business practices. The court found that an appropriate return on investment for the period of 1976 through 1978 would have been approximately 10 to 12 percent. By capitalizing the [50] plaintiff's projected profits for the year ending May, 1978, the trial court concluded that the value of the plaintiff's business was $ 150,000.³⁶

The defendant first argues that its operations had nothing to do with the plaintiff's decision to cease operations and that the trial court improperly awarded the plaintiff damages for the value of the business. The defendant claims that the plaintiff closed because the severe winter necessitated the purchase of new vehicles and the Gilberties were unwilling personally to secure business loans that would have been required to acquire the new vehicles. Michael Gilbertie testified, however, that the underlying reason for their decision not to purchase new vehicles was that they felt that, because of competition from the defendant, such an investment [*34] would not have been prudent.³⁷ The trial court [51] credited Gilbertie's testimony and the defendant has failed to show that the decision was clearly erroneous.

The defendant next claims that the trial court improperly credited Michael Gilbertie's suggested valuation of the business. Although the defendant concedes that Gilbertie was entitled to testify as to the company's value, it claims that Gilbertie's testimony concerned the proper method to value a taxi company and that it should not have been credited because such an opinion could only have been given by a qualified expert. The defendant argues, therefore, that the trial court improperly permitted Gilbertie to give expert testimony without being qualified or disclosed [52] as an expert. We are not persuaded by the defendant's distinction between Gilbertie's valuation of the business and his method of valuation.

Gilbertie testified that, because a fair return on a taxi business would be 10 percent to 12 percent, he valued the business at between $ 194,875 and $ 233,850. The trial court determined that Gilbertie's valuation of the business was "based on his own experience in the taxi business for more than twenty years, his knowledge of how a taxi business was valued by the industry, his discussions with other owners, his knowledge of other sales, his membership in the Connecticut Taxi Cab Association, his membership in the International Taxi Cab Association, and finally, his own personal experience and practice in the 1960s and 1970s . . ." The trial court applied this rate of return to its own calculations of the plaintiff's lost profits and concluded that the plaintiff's value was $ 150,000.

[*35] HN49 It is well settled that the owner of property is competent to testify to its value. Somers v. LeVasseur, 230 Conn. 560, 566 n.2, 645 A.2d 993 (1994); Griffin v. Nationwide Moving & Storage Co., 187 Conn. 405, 422, [\[738\]](#) 446 A.2d 799 [\[*53\]](#) (1982); Anderson v. Zweigbaum, 150 Conn. 478, 483 n.1, 191 A.2d 133 (1963); State v. Rochette, 25 Conn. App. 298, 307, 594 A.2d 1006, cert. denied, 220 Conn. 912, 597 A.2d 337 (1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1045, 112 S. Ct. 905, 116 L. Ed. 2d 806 (1992). Furthermore, we have determined that HN50 a franchise owner is competent to testify as to the value of a franchise. Lovejoy v. Darien, 131 Conn.

³⁶ The trial court capitalized $ 17,903 at between 10 to 12 percent, and valued the plaintiff's taxi franchise at between approximately $ 149,000 and $ 179,000.

³⁷ Michael Gilbertie explained: "We just saw no way from a business point of view that we should risk our private property to continue beating our head against the wall and competing with these people. And like my father said, don't throw good money after bad. And we were in a no win situation. So we just said, close the doors"

533, 536, 41 A.2d 98 \(1945\). This is "based in part on the common experience that an owner is familiar with her property" (Internal quotation marks omitted.) Somers v. LeVasseur, supra, 566 n.2. "The weight to be accorded such testimony is for the trier to decide." Ridgeway v. Ridgeway, 180 Conn. 533, 544 n.7, 429 A.2d 801 \(1980\).

We note that HN51 the trial court has broad discretion to admit the testimony of anyone who is involved with a business or property and may have personal knowledge of its value. Lovejoy v. Darien, supra, 131 Conn. 536. We conclude that as an owner, Gilbertie was competent to testify as to the method he employed in valuing his business, and that the weight given such testimony was for the trial court to decide.

Gilbertie testified as [\[54\]](#) to what he thought his business would have been worth according to the return that he expected on his investment if the defendant had not illegally competed with the plaintiff. The defendant did not object to the substance of this testimony and, as the trial court noted, there was no motion to strike Gilbertie's testimony for lack of foundation or competence. The trial court determined that the asserted rate was reasonable and the defendant has provided no basis for overturning the trial court's determination. The court did not characterize Gilbertie's testimony as [\[*36\]](#) expert, nor do we. The testimony was that of a business owner testifying as to the value of his business and the method he employed to value it. Its admission was a matter within the discretion of the trial court.³⁸

[55] V

Finally, we turn to the defendant's claim that the trial court improperly awarded prejudgment interest to the plaintiff.
39

[*37] A

The plaintiff contends that because the defendant failed to object in the trial [\[739\]](#) court to the plaintiff's claim that it was entitled to prejudgment interest, [\[56\]](#) and raises its various objections to the award for the first time on appeal, we should not reach this issue. The plaintiff clearly argued that it was entitled to prejudgment interest in its proposed posttrial findings of fact and conclusions of law, and in its posttrial memorandum of law. The defendant

³⁸ The defendant further claims that the plaintiff did not suffer a total loss when it chose to discontinue operations and that the trial court did not properly credit the defendant for several transactions and retained assets. First, the defendant contends that the plaintiff's Weston operation and package delivery service should have been deducted from the damages awarded. We do not agree. The defendant's illegal conduct caused the plaintiff to lose its entire business, not only the parts in which the plaintiff and the defendant directly competed. The defendant offered no evidence that the plaintiff could have continued to run a profitable enterprise by operating one taxi in Weston and delivering packages.

The defendant next contends that the plaintiff's certificate of public necessity and convenience had value and should have been deducted from its damages. Although the defendant did not raise this issue at trial and the trial court did not make any findings regarding the certificate, it reasonably could have found that the certificate was worthless at the time the plaintiff ceased operations. The below cost fares offered by the defendant would have been a serious disincentive for any private taxi operator to begin operations in Westport, and it is doubtful that any such operator would have attempted to enter the Westport market.

Finally, the defendant claims that the plaintiff retained two cars and its dispatching equipment and that the value of this equipment should have been discounted from the damage calculation. We disagree. The plaintiff unsuccessfully attempted to sell its dispatching equipment and sold two fully depreciated taxis for between $ 200 and $ 300. Accordingly, the dispatching equipment had no value and the value of the cars was negligible. We conclude that none of the defendant's contentions shows that the trial court's damage determination was clearly erroneous.

³⁹ In addition to arguing that the act includes no provision for prejudgment interest, the defendant alleges that the plaintiff is not entitled to prejudgment interest because it did not seek prejudgment interest in its amended complaint. HN52 "The allowance of interest as an element of damages is . . . primarily an equitable determination and a matter lying within the discretion of the trial court." State v. Stengel, 192 Conn. 484, 487, 472 A.2d 350 \(1984\). We conclude that the plaintiff's claim for prejudgment interest was properly before the trial court.

had an opportunity to respond to the plaintiff's claim in its reply brief but failed to argue that prejudgment interest was not an appropriate remedy. Thus, because the defendant makes this argument for the first time on appeal, the trial court was never alerted to the claim that, as a matter of law, the plaintiff is not entitled to prejudgment interest.⁴⁰ [57] Nevertheless, we reach this issue under the plain error rule for several reasons.⁴¹

First, because we conclude that the statutory scheme of the act does not permit an award of interest, it was plain error for the trial court to rely on an improper statute to provide for such an award even though this was not brought to the attention of the court during trial. See Genovese v. Gallo Wine Merchants, Inc., supra, 226 Conn. 480 n.6. Second, HN54[⁴²] neither party is prejudiced by our decision to review this issue under the plain error rule. Id. Unlike the issues of immunity and treble [*38] damages⁴² in this case, our interpretation of the statutes does not require further fact-finding by the trial court, and both parties have had an opportunity to present arguments regarding their proposed statutory interpretation in their appellate briefs. HN55[⁴³] Plain error review may be appropriate where the record is complete and the question is essentially one of law, so that neither party is prejudiced. Id.

[58] Finally, we note that a substantial amount of the total damages awarded by the trial court consists of prejudgment interest. This is largely because the case has lingered in our court system since 1979, when the plaintiff filed its initial complaint. It lay virtually dormant from 1979 to 1989, when the plaintiff amended its complaint. During that interval, the case was subject to the dormancy program; Practice Book § 251; which requires dismissal if the plaintiff fails to prosecute with reasonable diligence. Indeed, the case was dismissed at least once in 1981, but was restored to the docket pursuant to motions by the plaintiff. As a result of this leisurely progression, the case was not heard by the trial court until 1991, twelve years after it had been commenced. The trial court awarded prejudgment interest in the amount of $ 187,276 for that entire length of time and then trebled the award, the total of which amounted to $ 561,828.

Although the plaintiff submitted one motion for default in 1989, and the defendant filed one motion for an extension of time, most of the delay was apparently due to the plaintiff's failure to pursue the action. Surely, it would be unjust to compensate [59] the plaintiff for its own procrastination. We conclude that the interests of justice demand that we review the trial court's award of prejudgment interest. Magnan v. Anaconda Industries, Inc., supra, 193 Conn. 577-78 (plain error review appropriate where interests of justice require it).

[*39] B

In this case, for the first time, we are asked to decide whether a plaintiff may be awarded prejudgment interest under the act.

Our analysis is guided by the well established rules of statutory interpretation, the intent of the legislature and interpretations of federal law upon which the act is structured. Section 35-35 HN56[⁴⁴] mandates an award of treble damages, attorney's fees and costs for injury to business or property due to any violation of the provisions of the act. The plaintiff argues that, although the act includes [*740] no explicit provision for prejudgment interest, it is entitled to such an award pursuant to General Statutes § 35-44, which provides that "unless otherwise set forth in this chapter, all actions or proceedings under the provisions of this chapter shall be according to the statutes of Connecticut pertaining to civil actions." See General Statutes J601 § 37-3a.⁴⁵ Therefore, the plaintiff claims that the trial court had discretion to award prejudgment interest. We disagree.

⁴⁰ Practice Book § 285A requires that "if a party intends to raise any claim of law which may be the subject of an appeal, he must either state the same distinctly to the court before his argument is closed or state it in a written trial brief. If this is not done, it will not be the duty of either the trial court or the appellate court to decide the claim."

⁴¹ Reference is made to our discussion of plain error review in part III of this opinion.

⁴² See footnote 16.

⁴³ General Statutes § 37-3a provides: "Rate recoverable as damages. Except as provided in sections 37-3b, 37-3c and 52-192a, interest at the rate of ten per cent a year, and no more, may be recovered and allowed in civil actions or arbitration proceedings

[61] We begin our analysis with the principles of statutory interpretation. HN57 First, we look to the words of the statute in order to discern the intent of the legislature and then resolve any ambiguity by turning for guidance to the [*40] legislative history and purpose. In re Sheldon G., 216 Conn. 563, 568-69, 583 A.2d 112 \(1990\). In this case, the plain meaning of the statutes, in conjunction with the principle that no statutory phrase or word will be interpreted as superfluous; Rydingsword v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 224 Conn. 8, 16, 615 A.2d 1032 \(1992\); leads us to conclude that the legislature intended to include in § 35-35 all the elements of damage available to an injured plaintiff in an antitrust action.

Section 35-35 HN58 specifically provides that a successful plaintiff shall recover its costs. Similarly, chapter 901 of the General Statutes provides for the recovery of costs by a successful plaintiff in a civil action. If the legislature had intended § 35-44 to incorporate all civil remedies into the antitrust act, it would not have had to specify that costs were recoverable because chapter 901 would have been incorporated into the antitrust act through § 35-44.
 [62] HN59 A statute must be interpreted to give effect to all its provisions. Pintavalle v. Valkanos, 216 Conn. 412, 418, 581 A.2d 1050 \(1990\). HN60 No word within a statute is to be rendered mere surplusage. Rydingsword v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., supra, 224 Conn. 16. Therefore, we cannot interpret § 35-44 to incorporate all civil remedies because such an interpretation would render the inclusion of costs superfluous in § 35-35. HN61 Furthermore "unless there is evidence to the contrary, statutory itemization indicates that the legislature intended the list to be exclusive." (Internal quotation marks omitted.) White Oak Corp. v. Dept. of Transportation, 217 Conn. 281, 301, 585 A.2d 1199 \(1991\). We conclude that HN62 the Connecticut legislature intended specifically to include all available remedies for an antitrust violation in § 35-35 and that because prejudgment interest is not specifically included, it may not be awarded.

We note that this statutory interpretation is consistent with our law that prohibits awards of interest on [*41] punitive damages.⁴⁴ Nielsen v. Wisniewski, 32 Conn. App. 133, 140, 628 A.2d 25 \(1993\). In Nielsen, the court reasoned that "the purpose of [63] an award of interest is to compensate a party for a wrong. . . . Such an allowance is primarily an equitable determination within the discretion of the trial court. . . . Under General Statutes § 37-3a, interest 'may be recovered and allowed in civil actions . . . as damages for the detention of money after it becomes payable.' For example, interest is awarded at the maturity of a debt from the time the money becomes due. . . . Since punitive damages do not become payable before judgment, however, § 37-3a is inapplicable." (Citations omitted.) Id. 139. [741] We believe this reasoning is equally pertinent in the case before us.

Our conclusion that prejudgment interest is not available under the Connecticut antitrust act is supported by judicial interpretations of the federal antitrust statutes.⁴⁵ Until 1980, the federal [*64] antitrust statutes did not provide for prejudgment interest and federal courts universally refused to award it.⁴⁶ "Although federal courts [*42] generally under chapter 909, including actions to recover money loaned at a greater rate, as damages for the detention of money after it becomes payable. Judgment maybe given for the recovery of taxes assessed and paid upon the loan, and the insurance upon the estate mortgaged to secure the loan, whenever the borrower has agreed in writing to pay such taxes or insurance or both. Whenever the maker of any contract is a resident of another state or the mortgage security is located in another state, any obligee or holder of such contract, residing in this state, may lawfully recover any agreed rate of interest or damages on such contract until it is fully performed, not exceeding the legal rate of interest in the state where such contract purports to have been made or such mortgage security is located."

⁴⁴ Treble damages are punitive damages. Avis Rent A Car System, Inc. v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 203 Conn. 667, 671, 526 A.2d 522 \(1987\); 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, supra, P 630c.

⁴⁵ We note that the federal statutes include no equivalent to § 35-44 and that there is no discussion of this provision in the legislative history of the act. Therefore, we cannot ascertain the precise legislative intent for its enactment. Title 15 of the United States Code, § 21, details, however, how federal antitrust actions must be handled procedurally. Section 21 discusses at length, for example, the issuance of complaints for violations, hearing procedures, review of orders, jurisdiction, conclusiveness of findings, finality of judgment and service of process. No such procedural detail is included in the Connecticut antitrust act and it is reasonable to assume that the legislature included § 35-44 to indicate that state antitrust actions are to be managed procedurally in the same manner as any other civil action unless otherwise stated in the act.

have the discretion to award pre-judgment interest, it [was] widely believed that such discretion does not exist in antitrust cases since trebling provides adequate compensation for delay." A. Joslyn, "Measures of Damages for the Destruction of a Business," 48 Brook. L. Rev. 409, 462 (1993). Because the statutes mandate an award of treble antitrust damages, courts have reasoned that any such award is intended to be substantial enough to include all that the plaintiff is entitled to receive. See, e.g., Strobl v. New York Mercantile Exchange, 768 F.2d 22, 24 \(2d Cir. 1985\) (summarily affirming reasoning in Strobl v. New York Mercantile Exchange, 590 F. Supp. 875, 882-83 [S.D.N.Y. 1984]; Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Hughes, 449 F.2d 51, 80 \(2d Cir. 1971\), rev'd on other grounds, 409 U.S. 363, 93 S. Ct. 647, 34 L. Ed. 2d 577 \(1973\); Locklin v. Day-Glo Color Corp., 429 F.2d 873, 877 \(7th Cir. 1970\), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 1020, 91 S. Ct. 582, 584, 27 L. Ed. 2d 632; Smith v. Pro-Football, Inc., 528 F. Supp. 1266, 1275 \(D.D.C. 1981\); Cape Cod Food Products, Inc. v. National Cranberry Assn., 119 F. Supp. 900, 911 \(D. Mass. 1954\)).

[66] In 1980, the federal antitrust statutes were amended to permit the recovery of prejudgment interest on actual damages in specific and limited circumstances. 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 \(a\) and 15a \(1982\), as amended, Act of Sept. 12, 1980, Pub. L. No. 96-349, 94 Stat. 1156.⁴⁷ [67] Federal [*43] courts may now award [742] prejudgment interest but only on actual damages in private antitrust actions⁴⁸ and only for the period between the commencement of the suit and the judgment provided that the court finds that the defendant acted in bad faith by engaging in dilatory behavior to delay the court proceedings. The amendment was interpreted as a change in the existing law, not a technical amendment or clarification, and therefore it has not been permitted retroactive application. See, e.g., Fishman v. Estate of Wirtz, 807 F.2d 520, 561-62 \(7th Cir. 1986\). Courts have refused to consider any award of prejudgment interest in actions that had been brought before the amendment was enacted but were decided afterwards. Id.

⁴⁶ Our research has revealed only two cases in which prejudgment interest had been awarded in an antitrust action. Uniroyal, Inc. v. Jetco Auto Service, Inc., 1980-81 Trade Cas. CCH P 63,806, pp. 78,315, 78,321 (S.D.N.Y. 1981); Eiberger v. Sony Corp. of America, 459 F. Supp. 1276, 1289 \(S.D.N.Y. 1978\), rev'd on other grounds, 622 F.2d 1068 \(2d Cir. 1980\). This precedent was effectively overruled in Strobl v. New York Mercantile Exchange, 768 F.2d 22 (2d Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Simplot v. Strobl, 474 U.S. 1006, 106 S. Ct. 527, 88 L. Ed. 2d 459 \(1985\), which affirmed the lower court's adoption of the reasoning in Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Hughes, 449 F.2d 51, 80 \(2d Cir. 1971\), rev'd on other grounds, 409 U.S. 363, 93 S. Ct. 647, 34 L. Ed. 2d 577 \(1973\), that mandatory treble damages are sufficient to compensate a plaintiff in an antitrust action. See Strobl v. New York Mercantile Exchange, 590 F. Supp. 875, 882-83 \(S.D.N.Y. 1984\) (providing detailed discussion of why prejudgment interest is unavailable where damages are trebled).

⁴⁷ Title 15 of the United States Code § 15 \(a\) \(1982\) provides in relevant part: "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. The court may award under this section . . . simple interest on actual damages for the period beginning on the date of service of such person's pleading setting forth a claim under the antitrust laws and ending on the date of judgment, or for any shorter period therein, if the court finds that the award of such interest for such period is just in the circumstances. In determining whether an award of interest under this section for any period is just in the circumstances, the court shall consider only --

"(1) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, made motions or asserted claims or defenses so lacking in merit as to show that such party or representative acted intentionally for delay, or otherwise acted in bad faith;

"(2) whether, in the course of the action involved, such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, violated any applicable rule, statute, or court order providing for sanctions for dilatory behavior or otherwise providing for expeditious proceedings; and

"(3) whether such person or the opposing party, or either party's representative, engaged in conduct primarily for the purpose of delaying the litigation or increasing the cost thereof."

⁴⁸ We note that there is a divergence in the federal act between damages available to private plaintiffs and to the United States as plaintiff. While prejudgment interest may be awarded to a private plaintiff on actual damages only; see 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) \(1982\); the United States may recover prejudgment interest on its threefold damages. 15 U.S.C. § 15a \(1982\).

Nonetheless, even after the amendment permitting prejudgment interest, federal courts have refused to award prejudgment interest under 15 U.S.C. § 15 \(a\) \(1982\) unless there was proof that the defendant acted [44] with extreme bad faith. See, e.g., Zapata Gulf Marine Corp. v. Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Authority, 133 F.R.D. 481, 486-87 \(E.D. La. 1990\), appeal dismissed, 925 F.2d 812 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1262, 111 S. Ct. 2917, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1080 (1991) (no prejudgment interest awarded where there was no evidence defendant acted in deliberate and extreme bad faith); [Automotive Products v. Tilton Engineering, Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20813, 33 U.S.P.Q.2d \(BNA\) 1065, 1072 \(C.D. Cal. 1993\) \[68\]](#) (same). Indeed, our research indicates, with only the exceptions cited in footnote 46, that prejudgment interest has never been awarded by any federal court under 15 U.S.C. § 15 \(a\), nor has it revealed an award of prejudgment interest by a state court in an antitrust action. See Zapata Gulf Marine Corp. v. Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Authority, supra, 487 n.4 (court and parties unable to find case where court imposed prejudgment interest under 15 U.S.C. § 15); Automotive Products v. Tilton Engineering, Inc., supra, 1072 (although 15 U.S.C. § 15 permits imposition of prejudgment interest, no court has actually awarded them); 2 A.B.A. Antitrust Section, Annual Review of 1993 Antitrust Law Developments (3d Ed. 1994) p. 170 (there is no reported decision awarding prejudgment interest in an antitrust case under 15 U.S.C. § 15 \(a\)).

Like the federal statutes, § 35-35 mandates an award of treble damages, the award of attorney's fees and costs. We believe that § 35-35 provides an ample recovery in damages for an injured plaintiff. Federal courts have refused to consider an award of prejudgment interest prior to its specific inclusion in the federal statutes and even [69] after the provision for prejudgment interest was included for a limited purpose, courts have declined to make any such award. Therefore, federal precedent reinforces our interpretation of the act. We conclude that prejudgment interest is not available to the plaintiff under the act.

[45] In sum, we affirm the trial court's judgment that the defendant had violated the Connecticut Antitrust Act and that the defense of immunity was not available to the defendant. We further conclude that the trial court properly awarded the plaintiff treble damages for lost profits and for the loss of the value of the business. We reverse, however, the trial court's decision to award prejudgment interest. Accordingly, the judgment is reversed in part and the case is remanded to the trial court with instructions to vacate the judgment of $ 1,048,260.96 and render judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the amount of $ 486,432.⁴⁹

[70] In this opinion the other justices concurred.

End of Document

⁴⁹ Judgment shall enter in the amount of $ 12,144 for lost profits and $ 150,000 for the value of the lost business, totaling $ 162,144. These damages are to be trebled and the total judgment to be rendered is $ 486,432.

Doctor's Hosp. v. Southeast Medical Alliance

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

August 18, 1995, Decided ; August 21, 1995, FILED, ENTERED

CIVIL ACTION NO. 93-2493 SECTION "S"(1)

Reporter

897 F. Supp. 290 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12207 **

DOCTOR'S HOSPITAL OF JEFFERSON, INC. VERSUS SOUTHEAST MEDICAL ALLIANCE, INC. and JEFFERSON PARISH HOSPITAL SERVICE DISTRICT NO. 2

Core Terms

antitrust, Reasons, summary judgment, per se rule, Sherman Act, defendants', anti trust law, partial summary judgment, competitor, consumers, prices, entry of judgment, court of appeals, conspiracy, horizontal, increased price, reconsideration, deposition, terminated, argues, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Multiple Claims & Parties

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

HN1 [] Entry of Judgments, Multiple Claims & Parties

Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b) states, in pertinent part, that any order which adjudicates fewer than all the claims is subject to revision at any time before entry of judgment adjudicating all the claims.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

897 F. Supp. 290, *290 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12207, 12207

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN2 Justiciability, Standing

In an antitrust case, a private plaintiff must prove that it has suffered or will suffer an "antitrust injury." For the purposes of standing, "antitrust injury" is of the type that flows from that which makes a defendant's acts unlawful. Whether a plaintiff seeks damages or injunctive relief, the plaintiff must prove antitrust injury. Neither does it matter whether the plaintiff makes a claim under § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act; antitrust injury must still be established.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN3 Justiciability, Standing

In determining antitrust standing, the question is whether the injuries allegedly sustained by a plaintiff are of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. The court's focus must be upon competition in the allegedly restrained market. Restraint in the market affects consumers and competitors in the market; as such, they are the parties that have standing to sue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN4 Private Actions, Remedies

Injury to a single competitor does not constitute an "antitrust injury."

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust Actions, Facilities

897 F. Supp. 290, *290 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12207, 12207

The narrow standard for showing antitrust injury requires more than mere threat of antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN6 [+] Private Actions, Remedies

Part of the requirement for antitrust standing is not only that the injury was the type that antitrust laws were intended to prevent, but also that the injury was "a direct and determinable injury" to a plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN7 [+] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

A group boycott requires a concerted refusal by traders to deal with traders. There must be a plurality of actors on the same market level who refuse to deal with another entity before there can be a per se violation of the antitrust laws under a group boycott.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Multiple Claims & Parties

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > General Overview

HN8 [+] Entry of Judgments, Multiple Claims & Parties

Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b) provides, in pertinent part, that the court may direct the entry of a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims only upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and upon express direction for entry of judgment. The decision whether to enter a "54(b) judgment" is within the discretion of the court.

Counsel: [1] For DOCTOR'S HOSPITAL OF JEFFERSON, INC., plaintiff: Gene W. Lafitte, Sr., Frank E. Massengale, Marie Breaux, Shannon Skelton Holtzman, Liskow & Lewis, New Orleans, LA.

For SOUTHEAST MEDICAL ALLIANCE, INC., defendant: Peter Joseph Butler, Peter J. Butler, Jr., Richard G. Passler, Locke, Purnell, et al, New Orleans, LA. For JEFFERSON PARISH HOSPITAL SERVICE DISTRICT NO. 2, defendant: Harry Simms Hardin, III, Howard Earl Sinor, Jr., Katy Kimbell Theriot, Jones, Walker, et al, New Orleans, LA. Lucas Joseph Giordano, East Jefferson General Hospital, General Counsel, Metairie, LA.

Judges: OKLA JONES II, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: OKLA JONES II

Opinion

[*291] ORDER AND REASONS

Pending before the Court is plaintiff's "Motion for Reconsideration, or, Alternatively for Entry of Final Judgment Under Rule 54\(b\)," which was taken under submission on a previous date without oral argument. Having considered the memoranda of the parties, the record and the applicable law, the Court GRANTS the motion to the extent that the Court clarifies the basis for its original ruling but REAFFIRMS the grant of partial summary judgment in defendants' favor. Further, the Court DEFERS ruling on plaintiff's request [2] for entry of judgment pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 54\(b\).

Background

The background of this matter is set forth at length in an "Order and Reasons" dated April 18, 1995, in which the Court granted partial summary judgment in favor of defendants on plaintiff's federal and state antitrust claims. (R.Doc. 282.) Without repeating the factual situation at length, suffice it to say that plaintiff, Doctor's Hospital of Jefferson, Inc., sued defendants, Southeast Medical Alliance, Inc. (hereinafter "SMA") and Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 (hereinafter "East Jefferson Hospital"), alleging violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2; Louisiana antitrust laws, LSA-R.S. 51:122 et seq.; the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act, LSA-R.S. 51:1401 et seq.; and various other state-law based claims, including civil conspiracy, tortious interference with business relations, and breach of contract. Suit was brought pursuant to Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26.

The defendants filed a motion for partial summary judgment, which was based partly on the contention that the plaintiff, Doctor's Hospital of Jefferson, [3] Inc. (hereinafter "Doctor's Hospital"), had no standing to proceed because it could not prove that there had been any "antitrust injury." ("Order and Reasons, p. 4, R.Doc. 282. See Defendants' memorandum in support of motion for partial summary judgment, p. 8-24, R.Doc. 247.) The Court agreed with defendants while at the same time rejecting plaintiff's arguments in opposition. (R.Doc. 282.)

Doctor's Hospital seeks reconsideration of the Court's decision, or, alternatively, for entry of judgment pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 54\(b\) on the Court's ruling. In its 95-page memorandum in support, Doctor's Hospital argues that the Court committed legal error in numerous ways in granting partial summary judgment. The legal error included:

- 1) misapplication of the summary judgment standard;
- 2) misapplication of the requirement of "standing" under antitrust law;
- 3) improper analysis of its § 2 Sherman Act claim;
- 4) improper rejection of its argument for applicability of the per se rule of antitrust law; and,
- 5) improper analysis of its prima facie showing of injury to competition under the "rule of reason" analysis.

In opposition, defendants argue that the Court correctly [4] applied the law to the record in finding that defendants' failed to establish "antitrust standing" because there was no proof of "antitrust injury." Defendants alternatively address plaintiff's other contentions. Finally, as to plaintiff's request for entry of judgment pursuant to Rule 54\(b\), defendants contend that such entry is premature and/or would be improper.

Law and Application

I. Reconsideration

In addition to providing the standard for entry of partial judgments, Rule 54\(b\) also sets forth the standard by which the Court may reconsider its grant of partial summary judgment in defendants' favor. HN1[]. The rule states, in pertinent part, that "any order . . . which adjudicates fewer than all the claims . . . is subject to revision at any time before entry of judgment adjudicating all the claims . . ." Cf. Zimzores v. Veterans Administration, 778 F.2d 264, 266 \(5th Cir. 1985\) (analogizing Rule 54\(b\) provision on revision to entry of summary judgment on liability alone under Rule 56\(c\)).

[*292] Clearly, the Court has the power to revise its previous order. However, for the following reasons, the Court declines to exercise its discretion to change or vacate the grant of partial [*5] summary judgment.

II. Summary Judgment Standard

Plaintiff's initial argument is that the Court misapplied summary judgment standards. First, plaintiff argues that the Court did not apply the standard "cautiously" as required in an antitrust case. Second, defendant contends that the Court improperly decided issues of motive and intent central to Doctor's Hospital's claims.

Doctor's Hospital is correct that the Supreme Court stated in Poller v. CBS, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 491, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458 \(1962\), that "summary (judgment) procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of alleged conspirators, and hostile witnesses thicken the plot." However, as the Fifth Circuit recognized in discussing Poller and finding the foregoing statement to be Obiter dictum, "simply because a case is based upon the antitrust laws does not suspend the application of Rule 56." Aladdin Oil Company v. Texaco, Inc., 603 F.2d 1107, 1111 \(5th Cir. 1979\). Cf. Little v. Liquid Air Corporation, 37 F.3d 1069, 1075, n. 14 \(5th Cir. 1994\) (en banc) (rejecting any notion that "appropriateness [*6] of summary judgment can be determined" by case classification).

Thus, where motive and intent play important roles in determination of factual issues, summary judgment may be inappropriate in antitrust cases. However, where -- as here -- the Court's determination of summary judgment was based on the legal issue of "antitrust injury" as part of "antitrust standing" and on plaintiff's expert's recitation of that "antitrust injury," the use summary judgment was clearly appropriate.

Further, as the Court will explain, because the Court did not have to reach the specific elements of the claims under §§ 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act, the Court did not improperly construe any inferences of motive and intent in favor of defendants.

III. "Antitrust Injury" Necessary for Antitrust Standing

Doctor's Hospital next argues that the Court confused "antitrust injury" as an element of standing with "injury to competition" as one of the elements of a Sherman Act offense. As a result, plaintiff maintains that the Court improperly mixed a question of law -- "antitrust injury" -- with a question of fact -- injury to competition. Upon review of the earlier decision, the Court agrees that the manner [*7] in which the Court addressed "antitrust injury" as an element of standing was confusing. Therefore, the Court clarifies its ruling as follows.

In the "Order and Reasons," the Court noted defendants' contention that plaintiff did not have antitrust standing. ("Order and Reasons," p. 4, R.Doc. 282.) The Court then correctly framed the threshold legal standard for antitrust standing, i.e., HN2 in an antitrust case, a private plaintiff must prove that it has suffered or will suffer an 'antitrust injury,'" citing Anago, Inc. v. Tecnol Medical Products, Inc., 976 F.2d 248, 249 \(5th Cir. 1992\), citing Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 113, 107 S. Ct. 484, 491, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 \(1986\). ("Order and Reasons," pp. 5-6, R.Doc. 82.) For the purposes of standing, "antitrust injury" is "of the type that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id. at 109, 107 S. Ct. at 489, quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\). Whether a plaintiff seeks damages or injunctive relief, as Doctor's Hospital does here, the plaintiff must prove antitrust injury. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 113, 107 [*8] S. Ct. at 491. Neither does it matter whether the plaintiff makes a claim under § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act; antitrust injury must still be established. See Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 \(1982\) (applying Brunswick "antitrust injury" requirement to § 1 claim); T.O. Bell v. Dow Chemical Company, 847 F.2d 1179, 1182 and n. 4 \(5th Cir. 1988\) ("antitrust injury" applicable to violations of § 2 of Sherman Act).

[*293] HN3¹ The question, then, is whether the injuries allegedly sustained by Doctor's Hospital are of the "type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Id. at 1183, citing Brunswick, supra. "The court's focus must be upon competition in the allegedly restrained market. Restraint in the market affects consumers and competitors in the market; as such, they are the parties that have standing to sue." Bell, 847 F.2d at 1183, citing Associated General Contractors v. Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539, 103 S. Ct. 897, 909, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 \(1983\).

As stated in the Court's earlier decision, the Fifth Circuit has described "typical anticompetitive effects [as] including increased prices and decreased [*9] output." Anago, 976 F.2d at 249. The Anago court also "narrowly interpreted the meaning of antitrust injury, excluding from it the threat of decreased competition." *Id.*¹

With these principles in mind, the Court turns to plaintiff's main contentions that "antitrust injury" exists, which are based on its expert report. Specifically, as noted in the Court's previous "Order and Reasons," Dr. Henry Zaretsky opined for Doctor's Hospital that antitrust injury occurred in three ways when Doctor's Hospital was terminated from SMA: consumers would pay more; consumers had less choice, and Doctor's Hospital was weakened as a competitor. (R.Doc. 82, p. 23.)²

[10] Addressing this last contention first, the Court notes, as it did in its earlier ruling, that Doctor's Hospital concedes that HN4¹ injury to a single competitor does not constitute an "antitrust injury." (Plaintiff's reply memorandum, R.Doc. 276, p. 12, n. 8). See, e.g., Green v. State Bar of Texas, 27 F.3d 1083, 1087 \(5th Cir. 1994\) ("Appellant may not just show that defendants' actions injured him but must also demonstrate that the defendants' actions unreasonably restrained competition").

In the previous ruling the Court also distinguished Reazin v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas, 899 F.2d 951, 963 \(10th Cir. 1990\), on which plaintiff relied for the proposition that "under appropriate circumstances," injury to a single competitor may be actionable. (R.Doc. 282, pp. 22-26.) The Court adopts its previous statements as to the inapplicability of Reazin as set forth in the prior decision and will not repeat it here. Simply put, Reazin is inapposite to the case at hand.

Doctor's Hospital also relies on Dr. Zaretsky's expert report for the proposition that the increase in consumer prices constitutes antitrust injury. However, as the Court recognized in its earlier [*11] ruling, Dr. Zaretsky's opinions hedge on whether prices will rise. For example, Dr. Zaretsky states that "studies suggest that the success of [East Jefferson] and SMA in eliminating [Doctor's Hospital] as a competitor is likely to lead to an increase in prices of all hospitals in the geographic market, not to mention prices paid by SMA members to its contracting hospitals." (Exh. 13, p. 24, R.Doc. 247, emphasis added.) Dr. Zaretsky also stated that "by eliminating competition, the termination of [Doctor's Hospital] immediately harmed consumers by creating an environment conducive to increased prices." Id. at 23. These speculative statements about anticompetitive effects are insufficient to create antitrust injury under HN5¹ the narrow standard set forth by the Fifth Circuit in Anago, which requires more than mere "threat of antitrust injury." Anago, 976 F.2d at 249 (emphasis added). As the Court stated previously, "the mere 'likelihood' that prices will increase or that an environment is 'conducive' to increased prices for inpatient and outpatient hospital care on the east bank of Jefferson [Parish] falls short of the strict Fifth Circuit standard for showing [*12] antitrust injury." ("Order and Reasons," p. 27, R.Doc. 282.)

[*294] There is an additional reason why plaintiff's claims of increased price fail to establish standing. Doctor's Hospital alleges that East Jefferson insisted on a 10 percent price increase from SMA that was higher than that of other SMA entities. (R.Doc. 290, p. 6.) This argument fails to establish standing for the reasons set forth by the Supreme Court in Matsushita Electrical Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corporation, 475 U.S. 574, 583, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1354, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1976\) as to actions that do not violate the Sherman Act:

¹ Plaintiff attempts to distinguish Anago as factually inapposite because it is a merger case. (Plaintiff's memorandum in support, pp. 20-21, R.Doc. 290.) While Anago did involve a merger, its facts do not lessen the principle of law set forth therein.

² In the instant motion, Doctor's Hospital offers no new contentions specifically as to "antitrust injury" in terms of standing other than new supporting evidence for its contention as to the effect on consumer choice. This new proof is discussed herein.

Nor can respondents recover damages for any conspiracy by petitioners to charge higher than competitive prices Such conduct would indeed violate the Sherman Act, but it could not injure respondents: as petitioners' competitors, respondents stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price Finally, for the same reasons, respondents cannot recover for a conspiracy to impose nonprice restraints that have the effect of . . . raising market price Such restrictions, though harmful to competition, actually benefit competitors by making supracompetitive [13] pricing more attractive.

As the Fifth Circuit has noted, HNG part of the requirement for antitrust standing is not only that the injury was "the type that antitrust laws were intended to prevent" but also that the injury was "a direct and determinable injury" to plaintiff. Walker v. U-Haul Co. of Mississippi, 747 F.2d 1011, 1014 (5th Cir. 1984). Assuming that the prices were increased by 10 percent, the Court finds that there was no injury of a direct and determinable nature to Doctor's Hospital. Although rates may have been increased, Doctor's Hospital would only stand to gain from this increase as set forth in Matsushita.

Finally, the Court turns to Dr. Zaretsky's third statement bearing on evidence of antitrust injury, i.e., that consumers have less choice as a result of the exclusion of Doctor's Hospital from SMA. Specifically, Dr. Zaretsky believes that this exclusion reduces "the SMA subscribers' choices among providers (hospitals and some physicians). This reduces both price and nonprice competition." (Exh. 13, p. 25, R.Doc. 247.) However, as explained in the prior ruling, this only addresses "antitrust injury" in the SMA market, not in the allegedly restrained [14] market as required under Bell, supra, which Dr. Zaretsky defined as the acute care inpatient services and hospital-based outpatient services on the east bank of Jefferson Parish. (Exh. 13, p. 14-15, R.Doc. 247.) Additionally, according to the deposition of the former chairman of Doctor's Hospital, nearly all of the doctors on staff at Doctor's Hospital are also on staff at East Jefferson. (Exh. 27, p. 23, R.Doc. 247.) Thus, as the Court stated in its earlier decision, there does not appear to be any reduction in physician choice.

In the prior ruling, the Court rejected plaintiff's argument that consumer choice was affected because consumers would choose Doctor's Hospital over East Jefferson because Doctor's Hospital was less bureaucratic, more efficient and more comfortable than East Jefferson. This was based on the lack of support provided in the form of affidavits, depositions or otherwise as required by Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(c\). Doctor's Hospital now argues that this patient choice is supported by an affidavit and deposition testimony of Dr. Alvin S. Merlin. (Attachments to motion for reconsideration, Exhs. 4 and 8, respectively, R.Doc. 290.)

The Court first notes that Dr. Merlin's [15] affidavit was executed after the Court's prior decision in this matter. This fact constitutes reason enough to disregard the affidavit, as Doctor's Hospital could have presented it to the Court earlier. See Abbott v. The Equity Group, 2 F.3d 613, 619 (5th Cir. 1993) (court under no obligation to allow new legal theory to be presented following grant of summary judgment). Even considering the affidavit, however, the Court finds that it contains conclusory, self-supporting statements, which the Court finds does not constitute a genuine issue of material fact. As to the deposition testimony of Dr. Merlin, it refers to alleged problems at East Jefferson at the time Doctor's Hospital began, not at the time of SMA's termination of Doctor's Hospital's. There is no indication that the alleged problems existed at the time that SMA terminated Doctor's Hospital. Therefore, the deposition [*295] testimony of Dr. Merlin also does not raise a genuine issue of material fact.

In the instant motion, Doctor's Hospital also claims that it is entitled to standing as a matter of law under Crimpers Promotions, Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290, 294-97 (2nd Cir. 1983), because it is alleging [16] a concerted refusal to deal with Doctor's Hospital. However, in Crimpers, although the question before the Court of Appeals was whether plaintiff had standing, the defendants "conceded that their alleged activities were within the concern of Congress insofar as they adversely affected the producers or the stations." Id. at 294. Thus, "antitrust injury" at issue here and as refined by the cases cited above was not an issue in Crimpers. Quite obviously, there was no similar concession by defendants in this matter.

Therefore, for the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that Doctor's Hospital lacks standing to proceed with this matter due to an absence of "antitrust injury."

IV. Section 2 "Monopolization" Claim

Doctor's Hospital also contends that this Court erred in dismissing its § 2 Sherman Act claim because the Court failed to analyze the various elements necessary to justify summary judgment on its claims of monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. Plaintiff also maintains that the Court failed to take into account East Jefferson's use of market power and the applicability of Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 72 [17] S. Ct. 181, 96 L. Ed. 162 (1951). As set forth above, however, an antitrust plaintiff must establish "antitrust injury" under both § 1 and § 2 claims. See, e.g., Bell, 847 F.2d at 1182 and n. 4. Therefore, because plaintiff has failed to establish antitrust injury here under either of his Sherman Act claims, the Court dismisses the § 2 claim without having to reach the substantive elements of its § 2 claim or the Lorain Journal argument.

V. Analysis of § 1 Claim

Doctor's Hospital also contends that this Court undertook an improper analysis of its § 1 claim. The Court rejects this argument for two reasons. First, as set forth above, Doctor's Hospital has failed to establish "antitrust injury" necessary to pursue its § 1 claim. Second, as explained herein, the Court properly found that this was not a case for the application of the per se rule of liability of antitrust law.

Doctor's Hospital argues that Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959) and its progeny control this matter as a group boycott, or concerted refusal to deal. Hence, plaintiff maintains that the per se rule is applicable.

The Court [18] dismisses this argument for the same reason as set forth in the previous "Order and Reasons." In Klor's the Supreme Court clearly stated that HNT[↑] a group boycott requires "a concerted refusal by traders to deal with traders." Id. at 212, 79 S. Ct. at 709. Here, there was only one entity -- SMA -- which terminated Doctor's Hospital. There must be a plurality of actors on the same market level who refuse to deal with another entity before there can be a per se violation of the antitrust laws under a group boycott. See Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1567-68 (11th Cir. 1991).

Further, the contention of Doctor's Hospital's that Klor's must be given a broad reading such that the present case falls within its ambit ignores Supreme Court recognition of Klor's as involving a horizontal combination. Business Electronics Corporation v. Sharp Electronics Corporation, 485 U.S. 717, 734, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 1525, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988) (both Klor's and another Supreme Court case "involved horizontal combinations"). Plaintiff's argument also ignores the Supreme Court's admonition that "per se rules are appropriate only for 'conduct that is manifestly [19] anticompetitive. . . .' " Id. at 723, 108 S. Ct. at 1519. See also FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458-59, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2017-2018, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986) ("We have been slow . . . to extend per se analysis to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.")

[*296] Finally, the Court addresses plaintiff's reliance on two cases, Six Twenty-Nine Productions, Inc. v. Rollins Telecasting, Inc., 365 F.2d 478 (5th Cir. 1966) and St. Bernard Hospital, Inc. v. Hospital Service Association of New Orleans, Inc., 712 F.2d 978 (5th Cir. 1983) for its argument that the per se rule of antitrust liability is applicable to this case.

In Six Twenty-Nine Productions it was alleged that a television station "engaged in a combination or conspiracy with another advertising agency for the purpose of eliminating plaintiff as a competitor in the field of advertising services." Six Twenty-Nine Productions, 365 F.2d at 484. The Fifth Circuit analyzed whether a cause of action was stated for a § 1 claim and found, based on United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, [*201] 86 S. Ct. 1321, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1966) that the complaint stated a cause of action. Six Twenty-Nine Productions, 365 F.2d at 484-85. However, the court of appeals analyzed General Motors and, implicitly, Klor's, on which the court of appeals stated General Motors relied, as vertical restraints of trade. Six Twenty-Nine Productions, 365 F.2d at 484. As noted, the Supreme Court has since stated that both General Motors and Klor's involved horizontal combinations. Sharp Electronics Corporation, 485 U.S. at 734, 108 S. Ct. at 1525. Because the Court has found that the instant case does not constitute a horizontal restraint of trade and because plaintiff does not claim that the present case involves a vertical restraint of trade, the Court finds Six Twenty-Nine Productions inapplicable.

There are two additional reasons why Six Twenty-Nine Productions is inapposite. First, the Court notes that the Fifth Circuit at the time of that decision did not have the benefit of later Supreme Court statements as to its hesitancy to impose the per se rule of liability in antitrust cases. *Id. at 723, 108 S. Ct. at 1519; FTC v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, [21] 476 U.S. at 458-59, 106 S. Ct. at 2017-18. Second, the Fifth Circuit did not specifically state in Six Twenty-Nine Productions that the per se rule should be applied to the facts of that case. The court of appeals only found that a cause of action existed under § 1 and that summary judgment was inappropriate and remanded the case.

Turning to St. Bernard Hospital, the Court finds that this case also is inapplicable. First, the Court first notes that the Fifth Circuit had doubts whether the cause of action could be construed under the per se rules of antitrust liability because the allegations did "not assume a strictly horizontal restraint, but rather include a vertical link from supplier to customer." St. Bernard Hospital, 712 F.2d 978. "These charges are not so clearly per se violations of antitrust laws." Id. Having made that statement, the Fifth Circuit refused to find that the factual scenario in St. Bernard Hospital required use of the per se rule but remanded the case for further consideration of the "per se charges." Id. at 987. Additionally, the allegation of per se liability in St. Bernard Hospital was based on price fixing, id., [22] an allegation not made by Doctor's Hospital in this case. Finally, in discussing various other alternative forms for relief, the court of appeals noted that the evidence might indicate a refusal to deal. Id. at 987-88. However, the court of appeals did not state that there was any less of a requirement for a plurality of traders at one level in considering whether the per se rule should be applied. Id. Finally, as noted, since the decision in St. Bernard Hospital, the Supreme Court has recognized the specific horizontal nature of cases such as Klor's, on which plaintiff relies for its contention that the present case requires imposition of a per se rule for refusal to deal. Sharp Electronics Corporation, 485 U.S. at 734, 108 S. Ct. at 1525.

Therefore, for the foregoing reasons, the Court reaffirms its earlier decision that this case is not one where per se rules of illegality under the Sherman Act should be applied.

VI. Rule of Reason Analysis

Doctor's Hospital contends that the Court committed numerous errors in its analysis of plaintiff's claims under the rule of reason. However, in view of the Court's findings set forth above as to plaintiff's lack [23] of antitrust standing, the Court recalls Section IV of its previous "Order and Reasons" except as specifically [*297] adopted above and except as to its discussion of Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hospital, 861 F.2d 1440 (9th Cir. 1988). ("Order and Reasons," pp. 28-29, R.Doc. 282.)

VIII. Request for 54(b) Judgment

HN8 [↑] Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides, in pertinent part, "the court may direct the entry of a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims . . . upon only upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and upon express direction for entry of judgment." The decision whether to enter a "54(b) judgment" is within the discretion of the Court. H & W Industries v. Formosa Plastics Corp., 860 F.2d 172, 175 (5th Cir. 1988). The policy underlying Rule 54(b) is to prohibit "piecemeal appeals" except in limited circumstances. Road Sprinkler Fitters v. Continental Sprinkler, 967 F.2d 145, 148 (5th Cir. 1992).

Although through its prior order and this ruling the Court dismisses plaintiff's federal and state antitrust claims, there still remain other claims based upon state law. The defendants have filed motions [24] for summary judgment on those claims, which are set for hearing in the near future.

Therefore, pending a ruling on those motions, the Court defers ruling on plaintiff's request for entry of a judgment pursuant to Rule 54(b). Should defendants be successful on those motions, then a judgment will be entered in the entire matter. Should plaintiff prevail on those motions, the Court will consider whether to enter judgment pursuant to Rule 54(b) at that time. This decision is in accord with the policy against "piecemeal appeals" and follows the most judicially efficient path.

Accordingly,

897 F. Supp. 290, *297 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12207, 24

IT IS ORDERED that plaintiff's motion for reconsideration is GRANTED insofar as the Court clarifies its earlier ruling.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that, in accord with the foregoing, partial summary judgment is GRANTED in favor of defendants' as to plaintiff's antitrust claims under federal and state law.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Court's prior "Order and Reasons" dated April 18, 1995, be AMENDED AND MODIFIED in accord with the foregoing.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiff's motion for entry of judgment pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 54(b) is DEFERRED pending ruling on defendants' remaining motions for [25] summary judgment.

New Orleans, Louisiana, this 18th day of August, 1995.

OKLA JONES II

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

FTC v. Onkyo U.S.A Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

August 18, 1995, Decided

Civil Action No. 95-1378-LFO

Reporter

1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21222 *; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,111

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Plaintiff, v. ONKYO U.S.A. CORPORATION, Defendant.

Disposition: [*1] Judgment entered in favor of plaintiff.

Core Terms

final judgment, parties, public interest, civil penalty, orders, entry of final judgment, consent decree, FTC Act, settlement, costs

Counsel: Richard R. Lury, Esq., Kelley Drye & Warren, New York, New York, Attorney for Onkyo U.S.A. Corporation.

Elizabeth A. Piotrowski, Esq., Deputy Assistant Director, Bureau of Competition, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C., Attorney for Federal Trade Commission.

Judges: Louis F. Oberdorfer, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: Louis F. Oberdorfer

Opinion

FINAL JUDGMENT

Plaintiff, Federal Trade Commission, commenced this action against defendant, Onkyo U.S.A. Corporation, for violations of an order issued by the Federal Trade Commission on July 2, 1982, in FTC Docket No. C-3092, 100 F.T.C. 59 \(1982\). The parties have consented to entry of Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law, and without the Final Judgment constituting any evidence against or an admission by any party with respect to any such issue. They filed a joint motion for entry of judgment and a Stipulation on July 25, 1995.

The proposed Final Judgment contemplates a finding that: "Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest." An Order of July 25, 1995, requested that counsel submit to this Court a statement demonstrating the public interest in the entry of this judgment. Pursuant [*2] to that Order, counsel submitted a "Joint Statement Demonstrating the Public Interest in Entry of the Final Judgment in This Case" on August 4, 1995, a copy of which is attached. For the reasons provided in that Statement, the proposed Final Judgment is deemed to be in the public interest. Accordingly, it is this 18th day of August, 1995, hereby ORDERED: that this Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of each of the parties consenting hereto, and the Complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted against defendant under Sections 5(1) and 16(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 45\(1\) and 56\(a\)\(1\); and it is further

ORDERED: that judgment is entered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, who shall pay to the United States, pursuant to Section 5(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, a civil penalty in the amount of two hundred twenty-five thousand U.S. dollars ($ 225,000) within thirty (30) days after entry of this Final Judgment; the payment shall be made by wire transfer of funds to the U.S. Treasury through the Treasury Financial Communications System; in the event of default in payment, interest at the rate of twelve (12) percent [*3] per annum shall accrue thereon from the date of default to the date of payment; and it is further ORDERED: that each party shall bear its own costs of the within action.

Louis F. Oberdorfer

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Attachment

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Plaintiff, v. ONKYO U.S.A. CORPORATION, Defendant.

Civ. Action No. 95-1378-LFO

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

AUG 21 1995, FILED

JOINT STATEMENT DEMONSTRATING THE PUBLIC INTEREST IN ENTRY OF THE FINAL JUDGMENT IN THIS CASE

This statement is submitted pursuant to this Court's July 25, 1995, Notice To Counsel, asking the parties to submit, either jointly or separately, "demonstration of the public interest in the entry of this [Final Judgment]." ¹

[*4] On July 25, 1995, the Federal Trade Commission ("Commission") filed a motion for entry of judgment in the above-entitled case, together with a Stipulation by which defendant consents to the filing and entry of a Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law. The proposed Final Judgment requires defendant to pay a civil penalty to the United States Treasury in the amount of $ 225,000 for alleged violations of an order issued by the Commission on July 2, 1982, in FTC Docket No. C-3092, 100 F.T.C. 59 \(1982\). No injunctive or other relief is required by the proposed Final Judgment, which also asserts that "Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest."

BACKGROUND

This action is brought by the Commission under Section 5(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTC Act"), as amended, 15 U.S.C. §§ 45\(1\), pursuant to its residual authority under Section 16\(a\)\(1\) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 56\(a\)\(1\), to obtain civil penalties for alleged violations of a final consent order issued by the Commission in FTC

¹ In doing so, the Court referred to this Circuit's recent decision in United States v. Microsoft Corporation, 56 F.3d 1448 \(D.C. Cir. 1995\), which held that a proposed antitrust consent decree was in the public interest. As discussed herein, this action is not subject to the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16\(b\)-\(h\), which governed the court proceedings in Microsoft. Nonetheless, we show here that the relevant public interest standards that apply to the consent settlement met in this case. See, e.g., SEC v. Randolph, 736 F.2d 525 \(9th Cir. 1984\).

Docket No. C-3092.² [*6] Under Section 5(1) of the FTC Act, civil penalties may be imposed up to $ 10,000 a day for each day of a continuing [*5] failure to obey a final order of the Commission.³ Under Section 16(a)(1) of the FTC Act, the Commission may bring any civil action under the FTC Act, including an action for civil penalties, in its own name if it notifies the Attorney General before commencing such an action and the Attorney General fails within 45 days of such notification to commence the litigation of the contemplated action.⁴

The Commission and the defendant have agreed [*7] to a settlement under which the defendant will pay $ 225,000 to the United States Treasury for alleged violations of the Commission's order in Docket No. C-3092. Defendant has agreed to pay the sum within thirty days of entry of the final judgment.

ENTRY OF THE PROPOSED FINAL JUDGMENT IS IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST

As the Supreme Court has recognized:

Consent decrees are entered into by parties to a case after careful negotiation has produced agreement on their precise terms. The parties waive their right to litigate the issues involved in the case and thus save themselves the time, expense, and inevitable risk of litigation. Naturally, the agreement reached normally embodies a compromise; in exchange for the saving of cost and elimination of risk, the parties each give up something they might have won had they proceeded with the litigation.

United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673, 681, 29 L. Ed. 2d 256, 91 S. Ct. 1752 (1971). Likewise, when it stated that "the Tunney Act was not intended to create a disincentive to the use of the consent decree," the court in Microsoft acknowledged that consent decrees are substantial antitrust enforcement tools. [*8] United States v. Microsoft Corporation, 56 F.3d 1448, 1456 (D.C. Cir. 1995). See also SEC v. Randolph, 736 F.2d 525, 528 (9th Cir. 1984) ("The use of consent decrees encourages informal resolution of disputes, thereby lessening the risks and costs of litigation.").

² We note that the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act ("Tunney Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 16(b)-(h), to which the government's proposed consent decree in Microsoft was subject, requires that any proposal for a "consent judgment" submitted by the United States in a civil case filed "under the antitrust laws" be filed with the court at least 60 days in advance of its effective date, published in the Federal Register and a newspaper for public comment, and reviewed by the court for the purpose of determining whether it is in the public interest. The FTC Act is not an "antitrust law" within the meaning of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12(a). Accordingly, it is well settled that any action brought pursuant to the FTC Act for the recovery of civil penalties is not subject to the requirements of the Tunney Act. Even in procedures involving the assessment of civil penalties under Section 11(1) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 21(1), for violation of Federal Trade Commission orders, the courts have not required use of Tunney Act procedures in cases involving only the payment of civil penalties. Indeed, this Court has consistently entered consent judgments for civil penalties under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act, Section 7A of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18a, without employing Tunney Act procedures. See, e.g., United States v. Harold A. Honickman, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18148, 1992-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P17,018 (D.D.C.); United States v. Beazer, plc, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12755, 1992-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P62,923 (D.D.C.); and United States v. Atlantic Richfield Company, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 738, 1992-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,695 (D.D.C.).

³ Section 5(1) of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45(1) provides that:

Any person, partnership, or corporation who violates an order of the Commission after it becomes final, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a civil penalty of not more than $ 10,000 for each violation, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the Attorney General for the United States. Each separate violation of such an order shall be a separate offense, except that in the case of violation through continuing failure to obey or neglect to obey a final order of the Commission, each day of continuance of such failure or neglect shall be deemed a separate offense . . .

⁴ On June 9, 1995, the Commission notified the Attorney General of its intention to commence the civil penalty action against the defendant in accordance with Section 16(a)(1) of the FTC Act. On July 19, 1995, the U.S. Department of Justice informed the Commission that it could file the action at any time without allowing 45 days to elapse.

The parties submit that the proposed settlement in this action is in the public interest in that it is fair, adequate and reasonable based on consideration of the factors discussed below.⁵ These factors include, among others: the need to deter similar conduct by this defendant and others;⁶ [*9] the need to vindicate the authority of the Commission and the rule of law⁷; and the defendant's ability to pay civil penalties.

Here, payment to the United States Treasury by the defendant of the $ 225,000 civil penalty set by the Final Judgment is in the public interest because it likely will have the desired deterrent effect, by signaling to the defendant, other industry participants and other respondents subject to Commission orders, that Commission orders cannot be violated without significant consequences. It will also demonstrate the Commission's commitment to monitoring the compliance by respondents subject to its orders with the terms of such orders, as well as the Commission's willingness to enforce its orders. In addition, entry of the proposed Final Judgment is in the public interest because it will vindicate the authority of the Commission and the rule of law. The credibility of the Commission as a serious enforcer of its orders is essential. Consequently, the Commission must demonstrate to the business and legal communities that its orders must [*10] be complied with.⁸

The defendant's financial condition was also an element in the parties' agreement [*11] to settle for a $ 225,000 payment. In 1994, the defendant's share of the United States home audio products market was only about 3%, and its net profits were only in the range of 1.2% of its gross sales. Moreover, the defendant already has significant lines of credit in place and is not in a position to materially increase its debt. It is in the public interest for the defendant to continue to be a viable competitor in the relevant market, and the Court should enter the proposed Final Judgement because its implementation would enable the defendant to continue its operations without having to cut costs or divert funds from activities directly involved in attempts to improve its financial and competitive positions in the marketplace.

The parties separately also considered the litigation risks present in this case,⁹ and the fact that, without settlement, both parties would incur substantial costs in litigation. In the case of the Commission, even if litigation resulted in an outcome favorable to the Commission, there is certainly some risk that the amount of civil penalties imposed on the defendant would be less than the $ 225,000 agreed upon. In the defendant's case, the costs that [*12] it would incur in litigation would negatively impact its resources available for new product development and promotion and would make it a less viable competitor, to the public's detriment. Under the circumstances, the amount of the civil penalty agreed upon is entirely appropriate.

⁵ See SEC v. Randolph, 736 F.2d 525, 529 \(9th Cir. 1984\) ("unless a consent decree is unfair, inadequate, or unreasonable, it ought to be approved.").

⁶ To have any deterrent effect, a penalty must be large enough to be more than just a license fee or an acceptable cost of doing business. On the other hand, a penalty must not be so large that it threatens the financial health or competitive viability of the penalized entity. See United States v. I.T.T. Continental Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 231, 43 L. Ed. 2d 148, 95 S. Ct. 926 \(1975\).

⁷ See United States v. J.B. Williams Co., Inc., 354 F. Supp. 521, 551 \(S.D.N.Y. 1973\), rev'd and modified on other grounds, 498 F.2d 414 \(2d Cir. 1974\).

⁸ At the same time, it should be noted that the defendant is not charged with de novo violations of the antitrust laws. The principal conduct alleged in the complaint in this matter involves the defendant, one of its independent sales representatives and one of its former retail dealers with which the defendant was in litigation at the time the Commission's investigation was commenced. The former retail dealer, Best Buy, had filed suit against the defendant alleging that it had been terminated due to its failure to continue participating in a nationwide resale price maintenance conspiracy among the defendant and all its dealers. The Commission's complaint does not allege that defendant was engaged in a resale price maintenance conspiracy with its dealers or that defendant's former retail dealer, Best Buy, was terminated by the defendant in violation of any provision of the order in Docket No. C-3092.

⁹ For example, the age of the evidence concerning the alleged order violations was considered by the Commission.

Finally, although the proposed Final Judgment, involving only the payment of a civil penalty by the defendant for alleged violations of a final Commission order, is not subject to review under the Tunney Act, the parties believe that the concerns raised by the district court and third parties in Microsoft, in any event, are not present here. For example, the proposed Final Judgment is not ambiguous; it clearly sets out the amount and method of payment by the defendant of the agreed-to civil penalty. It also contains a finding that each party shall bear its own costs of the action. The specificity with which these [*13] matters are addressed in the proposed Final Judgment eliminates any chance that its implementation would be difficult to achieve. In addition, in Microsoft, third parties contended that they would be injured by entry of the consent decree. In this case, the government seeks only civil penalties and no third parties are involved.

The proposed settlement is in the public interest because it is fair and reasonable under the circumstances described above.¹⁰ The Commission believes that the proposed settlement is adequate to deter violations of Commission orders by the defendant and others, and to vindicate the Commission's authority, while providing a fair amount of latitude to accommodate the defendant's ability to pay a civil penalty without jeopardizing its competitive viability.

[*14] CONCLUSION

For the reasons expressed above, we ask the Court to grant the Commission's Motion For Entry of Judgment and enter the Final Judgment in the form stipulated by the parties.

Respectfully submitted,

Richard R. Lury, Esq.

Kelley Drye & Warren

101 Park Avenue

New York, NY 10178

Elizabeth A. Piotrowski

Deputy Assistant Director

D.C. Bar No. 348052

Joseph Eckhaus

Attorney

Bureau of Competition

Federal Trade Commission

Dated: August 4, 1995

End of Document

¹⁰ The Commission also considered the following factors before determining to accept the settlement: (1) the good or bad faith of the defendant; (2) any benefits that the defendant may have derived from its alleged violation of the order; and (3) the harm to the public resulting from the defendant's alleged conduct.

Hialeah, Inc. v. Florida Horsemen's Benevolent & Protective Ass'n

United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida

August 24, 1995, Decided ; August 25, 1995, FILED

CASE NO. 94-0480-CIV-NESBITT

Reporter

899 F. Supp. 616 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13174 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,130; 9 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. D 263

HIALEAH, INC., a Florida corporation, and HIALEAH PARK, INC., a Florida corporation, Plaintiffs, vs. FLORIDA HORSEMEN'S BENEVOLENT & PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION, INC., a dissolved Florida corporation; KENT H. STIRLING, individually and as President; SCOTT SAVIN, individually and as First Vice President and Treasurer; JAMES R. CHAMPMAN, individually and as Second Vice President; WILLIAM P. WHITE, individually and as Secretary; J.C. BARNHILL; JACQUELINE BRITTAINE; VINCENT CINCOTTA; ANDREW COLANDO; O.S. EDWARDS; MANUEL ESTEVEZ; FRANK GOMEZ; JOSE MENDEZ; SHAWN MUSGRAVE; LINDA PETERSON; R.J. RICHARDS, JR.; EMANUEL TORTORA; and RALPH ZIADIE, individually and as directors of FLORIDA HORSEMEN'S BENEVOLENT & PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION, INC., a dissolved Florida corporation, Defendants.

Core Terms

betting, racing, Antitrust, cause of action, simulcasting, horse, off-track, motion to dismiss, horsemen's, alleges, host, wagering, takeout, track, mootness, purposes, parties, season, transmissions, horseracing, Injunction, Damages, anti trust law, race track, Sherman Act, Declaratory, interstate, concerted, trainers, entity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Gambling > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Gambling > General Overview

HN1[] State & Territorial Government Licensing, Gaming & Lotteries

15 U.S.C.S. § 3004(a) prohibits wagering at off-track betting offices unless three parties consent: (1) the track which conducts the live race; (2) the racing commission having jurisdiction to regulate racing within the state where the live race occurs; and (3) the racing commission having jurisdiction over race wagering in the state where the simulcast occurs.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Conditions Precedent

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

HN2 Contract Conditions & Provisions, Conditions Precedent

The Interstate Horseracing Act (IHA) requires that, as a condition precedent to obtaining the consent of a host racing association, the host racing association must also have a written agreement with the horsemen's group. 15 U.S.C.S. § 3004\(a\)\(1\)\(A\). The "horsemen's group" is defined by the IHA as the group which represents the majority of owners and trainers racing at a horserace track. 15 U.S.C.S. § 3002\(12\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Gambling > Elements

HN3 State & Territorial Government Licensing, Gaming & Lotteries

The Interstate Horseracing Act (IHA) states in a section entitled "Liability and damages" that any person accepting an interstate off-track wager in violation of the chapter shall be civilly liable for damages to the host state, the host racing association and the horsemen's group. 15 U.S.C.S. § 3005. The IHA provides, under a section entitled "Civil Action," that the host state, the host racing association, or the horsemen's group may commence a civil action against any person alleged to be in violation of the chapter, for injunctive relief to restrain violations and for damages in accordance with 15 U.S.C.S. 3005. 15 U.S.C.S. § 3006.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) authorizes a court to dismiss a claim on the basis of a dispositive issue of law. A court is confined to a review of the allegations pled in a complaint, must accept those allegations as true, and must resolve any factual issues in a manner favorable to the nonmovant. A claim may be dismissed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts consistent with the allegations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > Evading Review Exception

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN5 Mootness, Evading Review Exception

An exception to the mootness doctrine exists for situations which are capable of repetition, yet evading review. The "capable of repetition, yet evading review" exception to the mootness doctrine applies when a case meets the exception's following criteria: (1) a challenged action is in its duration too short to be fully litigated prior to its cessation or expiration, and (2) there is a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party will be subjected to the same action again.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

HN6 State & Territorial Government Licensing, Gaming & Lotteries

The Interstate Horseracing Act provides no immunity to any party from federal antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [] Sherman Act, Remedies

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

Since every contract could be considered a restraint of trade, the Sherman Act prohibits only unreasonable restraints of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must prove that two or more distinct entities agreed to take action against him.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

HN10 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

899 F. Supp. 616, *616 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13174, 13174

Trade associations have been recognized as being comprised of competitors. Merely because the members of a trade association act in a unified manner instead of individually does not remove their actions from enforcement under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN11 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Florida Antitrust Act of 1980 provides that every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in the state is unlawful. Fla. Stat. ch. 542.18 (1995). This language is nearly identical to section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Florida's antitrust law states that it is the intent of the legislature that, in construing the chapter, due consideration and great weight be given to the interpretations of the federal courts relating to comparable federal antitrust statutes. Fla. Stat. ch. 542.32 (1995).

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN12 [L] Courts, Judicial Precedent

A decision of a sister circuit court of appeals is not binding precedent on a district court in another circuit, but is merely persuasive authority.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

HN13 [L] State & Territorial Government Licensing, Gaming & Lotteries

15 U.S.C.S. § 3006\(a\) provides that a horsemen's group may commence a civil action against any person alleged to be in violation of the chapter.

Counsel: [1] For Plaintiffs: Fred E. Karlinsky, Esquire, Maria Elena Abate, Esquire, Colodny, Fass & Talenfeld, P.A., 2000 West Commercial Blvd, Suite 232, Fort Lauderdale, Florida 33309.

For Defendants: Bruce David Green, Esquire, Bruce David Green, P.A., 2600 South Andrews Avenue, Suite 400, Fort Lauderdale, Florida 33316. Steven Wisotsky, Esquire, Steven Wisotsky, P.A., 3050 Jefferson Street, Miami, Florida 33133.

Judges: LENORE C. NESBITT, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: LENORE C. NESBITT

Opinion

[*617] ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

This cause comes before the Court upon Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Second Amended Complaint for Failure to State a Claim Upon Which Relief Can be Granted, filed March 28, 1995 (D.E. #78), and Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss Count I of First Amended Counterclaims for Damages, Injunction [*618] and Declaratory Relief for Failure to State a Claim Upon Which Relief Can be Granted, filed May 27, 1994 (D.E. #26).

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

A. Simulcasting

According to Plaintiff's Second Amended Civil Complaint, the parties are as follows: Plaintiff Hialeah, Inc. ("Hialeah") is the operator of Hialeah Park Race Track, a thoroughbred horseracing track located [2] in South Florida. Defendant Florida Horsemen's Benevolent & Protective Association, Inc. ("FHBPA") is a not-for-profit group that represents the interests of horse owners and trainers at Florida's thoroughbred horseracing tracks, including Hialeah Park. The remaining individually named Defendants are either officers or directors of Defendant FHBPA.

This action stems from Plaintiff Hialeah's desire to transmit simulcasts of horseraces held at Hialeah Park to betting places outside of the state of Florida. These out of state betting establishments -- termed "off-track betting offices" -- would then pay a portion of their proceeds to Plaintiff Hialeah for the permission to receive the transmission of, and to bet on, races held at Hialeah Park.

Congress was concerned about the effects such interstate transmissions would have on attendance at small horse race tracks that were located near off-track betting offices, as these off-track betting offices could receive transmissions of and take bets on races held at much more prestigious tracks involving a higher caliber of horses than was commonly found at small local tracks. See Alabama Sportservice, Inc. v. National Horsemen's Benevolent & Protective Ass'n, 767 F. Supp. 1573, 1578 \(M.D. Fla. 1991\). Congress also appeared concerned with the possibility that off-track betting offices could take bets on simulcasted horse races without compensating either the track where the race occurred or the horse owners. In addition, Congress recognized that, "In the limited area of interstate off-track wagering on horse races, there is a need for Federal action to ensure States will continue to cooperate with one another in the acceptance of legal interstate wagers." 15 U.S.C. § 3001\(a\)\(3\) \(1995\). Consequently, in 1978 Congress passed the Interstate Horseracing Act, 15 U.S.C. § 3001, et seq. ("the IHA"), to regulate such wagering, as well as to "further the horseracing and legal off-track betting industries in the United States." § 3001\(b\).

B. The IHA

The IHA mandates that before betting can be accepted in another state on a simulcasted horserace, the consent of a number of interested parties must first be obtained.

HN1[] Title 15, U.S.C. § 3004\(a\) prohibits such wagering at ["off-track betting offices"] unless three parties consent: (1) the track which conducts the live race [termed the "host racing association"]; [4] (2) the racing commission having jurisdiction to regulate racing within the state where the live race occurs [the "host racing commission"]; and (3) the racing commission having jurisdiction over race wagering in the state where the simulcast occurs [the "off-track racing commission"].

Sterling Suffolk Racecourse Limited Partnership v. Burrillville Racing Ass'n, Inc., 989 F.2d 1266, 1267 \(1st Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 593, U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 634 \(1993\). In addition, and of most importance to the action before this Court, HN2[] the IHA requires that, as a condition precedent to obtaining the consent of the host racing association, the host racing association must also "have a written agreement with the horsemen's group." § 3004\(a\)\(1\)\(A\). The "horsemen's group" is defined by the IHA as "the group which represents the majority of owners and trainers racing . . ." at the horserace track. § 3002\(12\).

Two sections of the IHA discuss the enforcement of this consent requirement. First, HN3¹ the IHA states in a section entitled "Liability and damages" that, "Any person accepting an interstate off-track wager in violation of this chapter shall be [5] civilly liable for damages to the host State, the host racing association and the horsemen's group." § 3005. In addition, the IHA provides, under a section entitled "Civil Action," that, "The host State, the host racing association, or the horsemen's group may commence a civil action against any person alleged to be [*619] in violation of this chapter, for injunctive relief to restrain violations and for damages in accordance with section 3005 of this title." § 3006.

C. The Instant Action

1. Background

In the action presently before the Court, Plaintiff Hialeah alleges that it is a "host racing association" as defined by the IHA. (2nd Am. Compl. P 6.) Plaintiff Hialeah also states that Defendant FHBPA "asserts that it is a 'horsemen's group,'" as defined by the IHA (2nd Am. Compl. P 7.).¹

[6] The underlying basis for Plaintiff Hialeah's action is that, because of longstanding hostilities between Plaintiff Hialeah and Defendant FHBPA, "Defendants are operating contrary to their best economic interest in a predatory attempt to injure the Plaintiff's business or property." (2nd Am. Compl. P 41.) One of the main ways in which Defendants are carrying out this objective, Plaintiff Hialeah believes, is by unjustifiably withholding their consent to the simulcasting for betting purposes of races held at Hialeah Park.²

Before Hialeah Park's 1994 racing season, Plaintiff Hialeah entered into twenty-five contracts with off-track betting offices for the simulcasting of races held at Hialeah Park Race Track.³ Defendant FHBPA, however, pursuant to the IHA, initially refused to give its consent to Plaintiff Hialeah to simulcast Hialeah Park races to these twenty-five off-track [7] betting offices until Plaintiff Hialeah agreed to enter into "Paragraph H" of a contract between Plaintiff Hialeah and Defendant FHBPA. Paragraph H is "a provision in a proposed agreement between the parties which limited the amount of 'takeout'... Plaintiff would be able to use to cover its operating expenses and attempt to make a profit." (2nd Am. Compl. P 50.) The "takeout" is defined by Plaintiff Hialeah as the "total pari-mutuel handle to cover its operating expenses and account for profit." (2nd Am. Compl. P 23.) In sum, then, Plaintiff Hialeah alleges that, as part of its scheme to destroy Plaintiff's business, Defendant FHBPA has refused to give consent to simulcast races for betting purposes unless Plaintiff Hialeah agrees to be restricted to what Hialeah believes is an unfairly small amount of the takeout. Without a suitable takeout amount, Plaintiff Hialeah alleges that it will be unable to maintain its facilities, to make a profit, and to stay in business.

[8] In addition, Plaintiff Hialeah has also alleged that Defendant FHBPA has attempted to damage Plaintiff Hialeah's business by refusing to send FHBPA-member horses to Plaintiff Hialeah's race track. Without horses, of course, Plaintiff Hialeah cannot run races, cannot take bets, and cannot derive suitable income to maintain its operations. (Compl. PP 35-37.)

¹ The Court notes that although Plaintiff Hialeah seems reluctant to admit that Defendant FHBPA is the relevant "horsemen's group" as defined by the IHA, Plaintiff Hialeah does not contest the status of Defendant FHBPA as the relevant horsemen's group in any of Plaintiff's moving papers.

² This refusal by Defendant FHBPA to give consent to the simulcasts has been referred to by Defendants as the "horsemen's veto."

³ Although Plaintiff Hialeah has not affirmatively asserted that it has obtained the necessary consent from the appropriate "host racing commission" and the "off-track racing commissions" to simulcast the races, Defendants have also not asserted that Plaintiff Hialeah has failed to obtain the consent of these agencies.

In an attempt to bypass the FHBPA and obtain the consent to simulcast races for betting purposes from the individual horse owners and trainers themselves, Plaintiff Hialeah has required individual horsemen to give such consent when they rent a stall from Plaintiff Hialeah or when they enter their horse in a race.

In applying for a stall at Plaintiff's racetrack to stable a horse, a release must be completed by each horse owner or trainer authorizing Plaintiff to "televise, or authorize or license the televising of horse racing. . .at the Track. . .without compensation". . .In addition, the entry blank for all horses entered by trainers or owners in a race at the Plaintiff's facility also authorizes Plaintiff to "televise, or authorize or license the televising of, with or [620] without consideration therefor, certain horse [9] races to be conducted in its racing plant."

(2nd Am. Compl. PP 66-67.)

2. The 1994 Racing Season

Having not received Defendant FHBPA's consent on the eve of the 1994 racing season, Plaintiff Hialeah brought suit against Defendants on March 11, 1994, seeking, along with other relief, a declaration that the IHA is unconstitutional. Plaintiff Hialeah also sought an emergency preliminary injunction "prohibiting Defendants from further unreasonable withholding of their consent required under the [IHA]. . . ." (Emergency Mot. for Prelim. Injunctive Relief at 1-2.) After a hearing held before the Court on March 14, 1994, Defendant FHBPA agreed to give its consent to simulcasting for betting purposes after Plaintiff Hialeah agreed to enter into the above-mentioned Paragraph H.

Subsequent to this agreement, the parties have had continuous disputes regarding the amount of takeout Plaintiff Hialeah should receive from simulcasting revenue. As a further development bearing on this ongoing action, soon after Plaintiff Hialeah originally filed its action, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals held in a similar suit that the IHA is constitutional. Kentucky Division, Horsemen's [10] Benevolent & Protective Ass'n, Inc. v. Turfway Park Racing Ass'n, Inc., 20 F.3d 1406 \(6th Cir. 1994\). These circumstances compelled Plaintiff Hialeah to amend its Amended Complaint.

In its Second Amended Complaint, Plaintiff Hialeah alleges three causes of action: (1) for violation of section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act; (2) for violation of the Florida Antitrust Act of 1980; and (3) for declaratory relief that the IHA is unconstitutional as applied to Plaintiff Hialeah. Defendants have moved to dismiss Plaintiff's entire Second Amended Complaint.

Defendants have also filed a Counterclaim alleging first, a count seeking damages for violation of the IHA, and second, declaratory judgments that its horsemen's veto is valid and that Plaintiff's actions to require the giving of consent in its stall and entry applications is a violation of the IHA. In response, Plaintiff Hialeah moved to dismiss Count I of Defendants Counterclaim brought for violation of the IHA.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard for Motion to Dismiss

HN4  Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure authorizes a court to dismiss a claim on the basis of a dispositive issue of law. [*Neitzke v. Williams, \[11\] 490 U.S. 319, 326, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 109 S. Ct. 1827 \(1989\)](#). The Court, however, is confined to a review of the allegations pled in the complaint, must accept those allegations as true, and must resolve any factual issues in a manner favorable to the nonmovant. See Quinones v. Durkis, 638 F. Supp. 856, 858 \(S.D. Fla. 1986\). Thus, a claim may be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts consistent with the allegations. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 \(1984\); Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\).

B. Defendant FHBPA's Motion to Dismiss

The primary basis for Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is that Plaintiff Hialeah has failed to allege anti-competitive behavior on the part of Defendants as required under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Defendants also raise two prudential issues, which the Court must first address.

1. Mootness

Initially, Defendants argue that this case is now moot, as Defendant FHBPA has already given its consent to Plaintiff Hialeah to simulcast races for betting purposes during the 1994 [12] racing season. The parties agree that those races were, indeed, simulcasted for betting purposes, and therefore any cause of action against Defendant FHBPA for failure to give its consent to the simulcasting is now moot.

Although the 1994 races and simulcasting may have already occurred -- thus apparently terminating the controversy between the parties -- HNS [] an exception to the mootness doctrine exists for situations which are "capable [*621] of repetition, yet evading review." See New Suffolk Downs Corp. v. Rockingham Venture, Inc., 656 F. Supp. 1190, 1191 (D.N.H. 1987) (quoting Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. ICC, 219 U.S. 498, 515, 55 L. Ed. 310, 31 S. Ct. 279 (1911)). When a similar argument regarding mootness was brought in an action involving the IHA -- where the racing season had already been completed at the time the court reviewed a motion for summary judgment -- the District Court for the District of New Hampshire held that the "capable of repetition, yet evading review" exception to the mootness doctrine applied because the case met the exception's following criteria: "(1) the challenged action was in its duration too short to be fully litigated prior to its cessation [13] or expiration, and (2) there was a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party would be subjected to the same action again." Suffolk Downs, 656 F. Supp. at 1191 (quoting Weinstein v. Bradford, 423 U.S. 147, 149, 46 L. Ed. 2d 350, 96 S. Ct. 347 (1975)) (other citations omitted).

The instant action also meets both of these criteria. The 58-day 1994 racing season is certainly too short a duration to fully litigate an action, and Plaintiff Hialeah believes that it will be subject to Defendant FHBPA's refusal to give consent before each following year's racing season. Consequently, this is a classic case for application of the "capable of repetition, yet evading review" exception to the mootness doctrine, and the Court, therefore, finds that the doctrine of mootness does not bar this action.

2. Standing

Second, Defendants argue that Plaintiff Hialeah lacks standing to bring its action. Defendants explain their argument in this way:

Plaintiff has not and will not suffer injury as transmission of racing from Hialeah Race Track is not prohibited, nor is wagering on the racing at Hialeah Race Track prohibited. Rather, wagering is only prohibited at remote [14] "off-track betting systems," which are the only parties who would, could or might suffer a cognizable injury as a result of their inability to accept wagers on such racing transmissions in the absence of a written agreement between the "host racing association" and the "horsemen's group." The IHA does not give standing to a "host racing association" to seek redress against a "horsemen's group" due to the inability of the host racing association to successfully negotiate an agreement.

(Defs.' Mem. of Law in Support of Mot. to Dismiss P 14) (footnotes omitted).

First, Plaintiff Hialeah has clearly alleged in its Second Amended Complaint that it will suffer economic injury from Defendants' refusal to give consent to simulcasting for betting purposes. "Revenues obtained by Plaintiff pursuant to the off-track wagers placed as a result of the broadcast of its signal make up a large percentage of the total revenues received by the Plaintiff for its racing meet." (2nd Am. Compl. P 45. See also 2nd Am. Compl. P 80, listing injury to Plaintiff's business "as a direct result of Defendant's conduct. . . .") Without the additional revenues from off-track transmissions and betting, [15] Plaintiff Hialeah believes it will have difficulty staying in business.

Second, Plaintiff Hialeah is not proceeding under a cause of action provided for by the IHA, but is proceeding under federal and state antitrust laws. Whether the IHA confers standing to Plaintiff Hialeah is irrelevant to the causes of action brought by Plaintiff in its Second Amended Complaint, and Defendant does not challenge that Plaintiff Hialeah has standing to bring antitrust causes of action against Defendants. Consequently, the Court finds that Plaintiff Hialeah has standing to bring its current action against Defendants.

3. Anti-Competitive Activity

a. Harm to Competition

Defendants' remaining arguments revolve around the applicability of an antitrust cause of action to the allegations in Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint. Initially, the Court recognizes that HN6 the IHA provides no immunity to any party from federal antitrust law, nor does the legislative history indicate that this was Congress's intent:

The legislative history further provides:

[*622] This legislation in no way modifies or affects the scope or application of the antitrust laws of the United States, nor does it confer [16] upon any person or persons the right to enter into any agreement in restraint of trade which would be prohibited under the antitrust laws.

Alabama Sportservice, 767 F. Supp. at 1578 (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 1733, 95th Cong., 2d Sess., at 4 (1978) U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1978, pp. 4132).

Next, turning to the heart of Defendants' argument, the Court first recognizes that HN7 section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides that, "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. . . is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1995\).⁴ Defendants allege that Plaintiff's Sherman Antitrust Act action must be dismissed because "Plaintiff has failed to state a basis for relief under Section 1 of the Sherman Act [in that] it has failed to allege that the acts of the FHBPA are and were injurious to competition in general." (Defs.' Mem. of Law in Support of Mot. to Dismiss at 11.) (See American Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 n.8 \(11th Cir. 1985\) ("Harm to competition is a necessary element of all private antitrust suits under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. . . ."). [17] In response, Plaintiff Hialeah argues that it has alleged an injury to competition, because its theory is that Defendants have engaged in a "concerted refusal to deal" with Plaintiff Hialeah, one of the recognized "unreasonable restraints of trade" prohibited by section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act which have been determined to cause a harm to competition. See Cha-Car, 752 F.2d at 612-13.

The Court agrees that Plaintiff Hialeah has set forth a sufficient cause of action against Defendants under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that [18] Defendant FHBPA's refusal to give consent consists of a concerted refusal to deal with Plaintiff Hialeah.⁵ This theory can either be analyzed under a "rule of reason" (i.e., a determination as to whether the activity unreasonably harms competition), or can be declared per se illegal. Id. The Court has not yet been asked to decide whether to apply a rule of per se illegality or rule of reason analysis to this action, but under either analysis, if plaintiff Hialeah is able to establish that ⁴ Of course, HN8 since "every contract could be considered a restraint of trade, the Sherman Act prohibits only 'unreasonable restraints of trade.'" Cha-Car, Inc. v. Calder Race Course, Inc., 752 F.2d 609, 612 \(11th Cir. 1985\) (quoting National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 2959, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 \(1984\), reh'g denied, 762 F.2d 1023 (11th Cir. 1985)).

⁵ Also termed a "group boycott."

Defendants have engaged in a concerted refusal to deal or in a group boycott, then Plaintiff Hialeah will have established a harm to competition.

b. Single Entity

Second, Defendants argue that Plaintiff Hialeah has failed to set forth a cause of action under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act upon which relief can be granted because Plaintiff Hialeah cannot establish that more than one entity is involved in the allegedly actionable activity. HN9 "To establish a violation [19] of section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove that two or more distinct entities agreed to take action against him." Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center, 891 F.2d 810, 818 \(11th Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 924, 109 L. Ed. 2d 322, 110 S. Ct. 1960 (1990). Defendants argue that they are really one entity -- the FHBPA -- and, therefore, in not giving consent to Plaintiff Hialeah to simulcast its races for betting purposes, Defendants have not conspired with anyone else to restrain trade.

While the FHBPA may be one entity, it is composed of a number of competitors that can act together in a concerted fashion. Therefore, the actions of a number of horsemen, taken by one association representing them, can be a concerted action such as to meet the definition of a Sherman Act violation. HN10 Trade associations have been recognized as being comprised of competitors. See Alabama Sportservice, 767 F. Supp. at 1580. Consequently, merely because the members of the FHBPA have acted with one unified vote instead of individually withholding [*623] consent does not, at this time, remove their actions from enforcement under section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Consequently, [20] Defendants have failed to meet their burden of establishing that Count I of Plaintiff Hialeah's Second Amended Complaint, alleging a violation section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, does not allege a cause of action upon which relief can be granted.

4. State Antitrust Cause of Action

In addition to Plaintiff's Sherman Antitrust Act cause of action at Count I, Plaintiff Hialeah's Second Amended Complaint also alleges a cause of action at Count II for violation of HN11 the Florida Antitrust Act of 1980, which provides that, "Every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this state is unlawful." FLA. STAT. ch. 542.18 (1995). This language is nearly identical to section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Recognizing this, Florida's antitrust law states that, "It is the intent of the Legislature that, in construing this chapter, due consideration and great weight be given to the interpretations of the federal courts relating to comparable federal antitrust statutes." FLA. STAT. ch. 542.32 (1995).

Defendants' sole basis for seeking the dismissal of Plaintiff's Florida Antitrust Act cause of action is that, because Plaintiff Hialeah's Sherman Act cause [21] of action is untenable based on federal law, so, too, must Plaintiff's Florida antitrust action be untenable when that same federal law is applied to it. "Because Plaintiffs [sic] have failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, they have similarly failed to state a basis upon which relief may be granted under the Florida Antitrust Act of 1980." (Defs.' Mem. of Law in Support of Mot. to Dismiss P 27.) As the Court, however, has held that Defendants have failed to meet their burden of establishing that Count I of Plaintiff Hialeah's Second Amended Complaint does not allege a cause of action upon which relief can be granted, Defendants have also failed to meet their burden as to Count II.

5. Challenge to Constitutionality

Plaintiff Hialeah's third and final cause of action challenges the constitutionality of the IHA as it is applied to these facts.⁶ Plaintiff Hialeah alleges that because the IHA, as applied, is void for vagueness, bears no rational relationship to legitimate government goals, and is violative of substantive due process rights, the Court should declare the IHA unconstitutional.

[22] Defendants moved to dismiss Count III of Plaintiff Hialeah's Second Amended Complaint on the grounds that, because the Sixth Circuit in Kentucky Division has declared that the IHA is constitutional, the additional language "as applied" to the current challenge to constitutionality does "absolutely nothing to make these claims tenable." (Defs.' Mem. of Law in Support of Mot. to Dismiss P 28.) In short, Defendants' sole basis for dismissal of Count III is that, "These issues have all been considered and rejected by the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeal." (Id.)

HN12 [↑] A decision of a sister circuit court of appeals is not binding precedent on a district court in another circuit, but is merely persuasive authority. See Generali v. D'Amico, 766 F.2d 485, 489 (11th Cir. 1985). Therefore, Defendants cannot establish that Plaintiff's cause of action fails to state a cause of action upon which relief can be granted, as any district court outside of the Sixth Circuit could disagree with the Sixth Circuit's analysis and declare the IHA unconstitutional. Because Defendants have not raised any other grounds for dismissal of Plaintiff's Count III other than that the Sixth Circuit's decision [23] should preclude it, Defendants have failed to meet their burden of establishing that Plaintiff's Count III fails to state a cause of action upon which relief can be granted, and Defendants' motion to dismiss must be denied as to this Count. After more discovery, and at the summary judgment stage, the Court will examine the constitutionality of the IHA, keeping in mind the persuasive effect of the Sixth Circuit's decision.

[*624] C. Plaintiff Hialeah's Motion to Dismiss Count I of Defendants' First Amended Counterclaims

The Court finally turns to Defendants' Counterclaim and the challenge made to it by Plaintiff Hialeah. In Count I of its First Amended Counterclaims for Damages, Injunction and Declaratory Relief ("Amended Counterclaims"), Defendant FHBPA alleges that the "FHBPA has suffered, and will continue to suffer, significant financial losses resulting from the excessive takeout of HIALEAH INC. and its refusal to bargain in 'the regular contractual process' over the takeout. . . . The past and continuing violations of the IHA stated above entitles counterplaintiff FHBPA to relief under 15 U.S.C. § 3006. . . ." (Am. Counterclaim PP 11-12.)

In its Motion to Dismiss Count I of [24] Defendants' Amended Counterclaims, Plaintiff Hialeah argues that § 3006 of the IHA cannot be the basis for a cause of action against it because Defendant FHBPA has given its consent to the acceptance of off-track wagers. Therefore, because Defendants cannot allege that a violation of the IHA has occurred, they cannot bring an action against Plaintiff Hialeah for the violation of the IHA.

The Court agrees. HN13 [↑] Section 3006\(a\) provides that "the horsemen's group may commence a civil action against any person alleged to be in violation of this chapter. . . ." § 3006\(a\). The question then becomes whether Defendant FHBPA's action alleges a violation of the IHA by Plaintiff Hialeah. It does not. The IHA only requires that the consent of the horsemen's group be obtained before bets can be taken at an off-track site, and Defendants concede that that consent was obtained. The IHA does not limit the amount of takeout a horse racing association can demand, nor does it impose on a horse racing association a requirement to negotiate for such consent by some standard defined by Defendant FHBPA as "the regular contract process." Accordingly, taking Defendant FHBPA's allegations in Count I of its [25] Counterclaim as true, Defendant FHBPA's statements that Plaintiff Hialeah is taking an excessive takeout and is refusing to bargain in the regular contract process does not adequately state a violation of the IHA such that relief may be granted. Consequently, Count I of Defendant FHBPA's Counterclaim must be dismissed.

⁶ The Court has granted the United States of America leave to intervene in this action so that it may defend Plaintiff Hialeah's challenge to the constitutionality of the IHA.

III. CONCLUSION

Based on the preceding analysis, it is hereby

ORDERED and ADJUDGED that:

1. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Second Amended Complaint for Failure to State a Claim Upon Which Relief Can be Granted, filed March 28, 1995 (D.E. #78), is DENIED.

2. Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss Count I of First Amended Counterclaims for Damages, Injunction and Declaratory Relief for Failure to State a Claim Upon Which Relief Can be Granted, filed May 27, 1994 (D.E. #26), is GRANTED.

DONE and ORDERED in chambers, Miami, Florida, this 24 day of August, 1995.

LENORE C. NESBITT

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Leslie v. Lloyd's of London

United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Houston Division

August 25, 1995, Decided ; August 28, 1995, ENTERED

CIVIL ACTION NO. H-90-1907 CONSOLIDATED

Reporter

1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15380 *

CHARLES ROBERT LESLIE, Plaintiff, v. LLOYD'S OF LONDON, a/k/a LLOYD'S, a/k/a THE CORPORATION OF LLOYD'S, a/k/a THE SOCIETY OF LLOYD'S, and R.W. STURGE & CO., a/k/a R.W. STURGE LTD., Defendants.

Core Terms

syndicates, underwriting, clauses, alleges, consumers, courts, risks, extraterritorially, recommendation, choice-of-law, rights, forum-selection, transactions, securities law, regulation, motion to dismiss, participations, Supplemental, Memorandum, reinsurers, remedies, reconsideration motion, securities fraud, public policy, membership, provisions, comity, misrepresentations, retroactive, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Forum Non Conveniens

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court is not concerned with the proof either side has offered, but solely with the plaintiff's allegations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint is subject to dismissal if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The court must accept all well-pleaded allegations as true and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Securities Law > ... > Securities Exchange Act of 1934 Actions > Implied Private Rights of Action > Deceptive & Manipulative Devices

HN3 Implied Private Rights of Action, Deceptive & Manipulative Devices

See 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Postoffering & Secondary Distributions > Registration Requirements > Registration of Securities

Securities Law > ... > Registration Requirements > Registration of Markets & Market Participants > Broker-Dealers

Securities Law > ... > Securities Exchange Act of 1934 Actions > Implied Private Rights of Action > Deceptive & Manipulative Devices

HN4 Postoffering & Secondary Distributions, Registration of Securities

The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 § 10(b), 15 U.S.C.S. § 78j, applies not only to any security registered on a national securities exchange, but also to any security not so registered. 15 U.S.C.S. § 78j\(b\). The scope of Rule 10b-5, 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5, does not exceed the scope of Rule 10(b), 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b, and a violation must involve some form of manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN5 Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

While the "clearly erroneous" standard of review is appropriate for the magistrate's rulings on non-dispositive matters, it is not the appropriate standard of review for dispositive motions, injunctions, and the like. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72\(b\); 28 U.S.C.S. §§ 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\) and \(C\). A judge of the court shall make a de novo determination of those portions of the report or specified proposed findings or recommendations to which objection is made.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Warranty

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Defenses

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Remedies

HN6 [down] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

A primary purpose of the enactment of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act (DTPA), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 17.41-17.63, is to provide consumers a cause of action for deceptive trade practices without the burden of proof and numerous defenses encountered in a common law fraud or breach of warranty suit. The DTPA does away with any common-law requirement of contractual privity.

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Subject Matter > Definitions > General Overview

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Personality Leases > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN7 [down] Subject Matter, Definitions

The definition of "consumer" under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 17.41-17.63, is quite broad: an individual who seeks or acquires by purchase or lease, any goods or services. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.45\(4\) (1987).

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN8 [down] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 17.46\(a\)\(2\), \(3\), \(5\), \(7\), \(12\), and \(23\), and 17.50\(a\)\(1\) (1987 & Supp. 1995).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN9 [down] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The Texas Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 17.41-17.63, 60-day demand letter requirement is never a ground for outright dismissal of a claim.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Investment Contracts

Securities Law > Blue Sky Laws > Types of Securities

HN10 [down] Types of Contracts, Investment Contracts

A bare Name is not an "investment contract," as that term is defined in the controlling cases.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Investment Contracts

Securities Law > Blue Sky Laws > Types of Securities

HN11 [L] Types of Contracts, Investment Contracts

The test for an "investment contract" is whether the scheme involves an investment of money in a common enterprise with profits to come primarily from the efforts of others. The Howey/Forman test is to be applied in light of the substance, the economic realities of the transaction, rather than the names that may have been employed by the parties.

Securities Law > Blue Sky Laws > Types of Securities

HN12 [L] Blue Sky Laws, Types of Securities

The purchase of a participation involves the investment of money, delivery of a clean irrevocable letter of credit and assumption of unlimited several liability, in a common enterprise, with profits to come solely from the efforts of others.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > Explicit Delegation of Authority

Securities Law > ... > Exemptions > Exempt Transactions > Intrastate Offerings & Recapitalizations

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN13 [L] Legislative Controls, Explicit Delegation of Authority

The courts should grant significant deference to administrative decisions when an agency has regulatory authority over matters a court must address.

International Trade Law > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Scope of Provisions > Covered Transactions > Foreign Transactions

Securities Law > ... > Elements of Proof > Materiality > Statements of Opinion

HN14 [L] International Trade Law

The Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C.S. § 78j, and Rule 10-b-5, 17 C.F.R. § 240.10b-5, apply extraterritorially to certain transactions in foreign commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Scope of Provisions > Definitions > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Definition of Commerce

HN15 [L] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

The term interstate commerce means trade, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several states, or between a foreign country and any State, or between any State or place or ship outside thereof under 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 78c\(a\)\(17\) and 78aa.

Securities Law > ... > Securities Exchange Act of 1934 Actions > Implied Private Rights of Action > Deceptive & Manipulative Devices

HN16 Implied Private Rights of Action, Deceptive & Manipulative Devices

See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50\(a\) (Vernon 1987).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airline Deregulation Act > Preemption

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > State Law > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Consumer Protection

HN17 Interstate Commerce, State Powers

A state may not regulate aspects of interstate commerce if Congress has expressly preempted such regulation. However, when the pre-emptive effect of federal enactments is not explicit, courts sustain a local regulation unless it conflicts with federal law or would frustrate the federal scheme, or unless the courts discern from the totality of the circumstances that Congress sought to occupy the field to the exclusion of the states.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Practice & Procedure > Forum Selection

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Forum Selection Clauses

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Coercion & Duress > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Dispute Resolution > Conflict of Law > Forum Selection

HN18 Practice & Procedure, Forum Selection

United States admiralty law treats forum selection clauses as presumptively enforceable: Such clauses are prima facie valid and should be enforced unless enforcement is shown by the resisting party to be "unreasonable" under the circumstances; the choice of that forum was made in an arm's length negotiation; there are compelling reasons why a freely negotiated private international agreement, unaffected by fraud, undue influence, or overreaching bargaining power should be given full effect. A contractual choice-of-forum clause should be held unenforceable if enforcement would contravene a strong public policy of the forum in which suit is brought, whether declared by statute or judicial decision. Courts have also suggested that a forum clause, even though it is freely bargained for and contravenes no important policy of the forum, may nevertheless be "unreasonable" and unenforceable if the chosen forum is seriously inconvenient for the trial of the action.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Forum Selection Clauses

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN19 [] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Forum Selection Clauses

The presumption that a forum-selection clause is reasonable may be overcome by a strong showing that a party's accession to the forum clause was obtained by fraud or overreaching.

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Material Misrepresentations

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > Elements

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Nondisclosure > General Overview

Torts > ... > Affirmative Duty to Act > Types of Special Relationships > General Overview

HN20 [] Fraud & Misrepresentation, Material Misrepresentations

Texas law defines fraud as misrepresentation of a material fact with intention to induce action or inaction, and reliance on the misrepresentation by a person who, as a result of such reliance, suffers injury. A defendant's failure to disclose a material fact is fraudulent only if the defendant has a duty to disclose that fact. A duty to speak may arise by operation of law or by agreement of the parties. In the absence of an agreement, there must be some special relationship between the parties. The non-disclosing party must have knowledge of the facts it withheld.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Securities Fraud > Elements

Securities Law > ... > Securities Act Actions > Civil Liability > General Overview

HN21 [] Securities Fraud, Elements

In dealing with federal securities, the general rule is that unknown or subsequently maturing causes of action may not be waived.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Forum Non Conveniens

HN22[] Venue, Forum Non Conveniens

A plaintiff's choice of forum should rarely be disturbed. However, when an alternative forum has jurisdiction to hear the case, and when trial in the chosen forum would establish oppressiveness and vexation to a defendant out of all proportion to the plaintiff's convenience, or when the chosen forum is inappropriate because of considerations affecting the court's own administrative and legal problems, the court may, in the exercise of its sound discretion, dismiss the case.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Forum Non Conveniens

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

HN23[] Venue, Forum Non Conveniens

The forum non conveniens determination is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. It may be reversed only when there has been a clear abuse of discretion; where the court has considered all relevant public and private interest factors, and where its balancing of these factors is reasonable, its decision deserves substantial deference.

Counsel: [*1] For CHARLES ROBERT LESLIE, plaintiff: Jacks C Nickens, Clements O'Neill Pierce & Nickens, Houston, TX.

For LLOYD'S OF LONDON aka The Corporation of Lloyd's aka Lloyd's aka The Committee of Lloyd's, defendant: J Clifford Gunter, III, Bracewell & Patterson, Houston, TX. For R W STURGE aka R W Sturge Ltd., defendant: Kenneth D Kuykendall, Royston Rayzor Vickery & Williams, Houston, TX. For CHEMICAL BANK INC., defendant: William R Burke, Jr, Cunningham Amann & Burke, Houston, TX.

Judges: JOHN D. RAINY, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: JOHN D. RAINY

Opinion

ORDER AFFIRMING, AFTER RECONSIDERATION, MAGISTRATE'S MEMORANDUM & RECOMMENDATION

On May 11, 1991, Magistrate Frances H. Stacy delivered two documents, the first styled Memorandum & Recommendation Regarding Lloyd's of London's Motion to Dismiss (Docket entry #43), the second styled Memorandum & Recommendation Regarding R. W. Sturge & Co.'s Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction Under Rule 12 and Forum Non Conveniens or Alternatively, Motion to Stay Proceedings Pending Arbitration. (Dkt. #44). On September 4, 1991, the Court, "after a thorough review of the motions[,] responses of [the Defendants] and the rulings of [*2] the magistrate," signed an order affirming the magistrate's memoranda and recommendations. (Dkt. #49). The Defendants subsequently moved for reconsideration of the Court's order, filing the following documents:¹

¹ This list of documents does not include any Lloyd's or Sturge documents filed in response to opposition documents that Plaintiff Robert Leslie filed. Cf. Syndicate 420 at Lloyd's of London v. Early Am. Ins. Co., 796 F.2d 821, 826 \(5th Cir. 1986\) ("Much as Eurystheus imposed the twelve labors upon Hercules, so the E & O Underwriters imposed upon the Court below the Herculean task of resolving a number of exceedingly complex issues in their motions to dismiss.").

(1) [Defendant Lloyd's of London's] Motion for Reconsideration of the Court's Memorandum and Order Dated September 4, 1991; Motion for New Trial; Motion for Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law; and Motion for Interlocutory Appeal in Accordance With 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\). (Dkt. #50).

(2) Defendant R. W. Sturge & Co., Ltd.'s Motion for Reconsideration of Court's Memorandum and Order Dated September 4, 1991; Motion for New Trial; Motion for Findings of Facts and Conclusions of Law; and Motion for Interlocutory Appeal in Accordance With 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\). (Dkt. #51).

(3) Lloyd's of London's Supplemental Motion to Dismiss and Supplemental Motion to Reconsider. (Dkt. #54).

(4) Defendant R. W. Sturge & Co., Ltd.'s Supplemental Memorandum in Support of its Motion for Reconsideration of Court's Memorandum and Order Dated September 4, 1991, Motion for New Trial, and Motion for Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law. (Dkt. #57).

(5) Lloyd's of London's [*3] Supplemental Motion to Reconsider. (Dkt. #64).

(6) Lloyd's of London's Supplemental Motion to Dismiss. (Dkt. #65).

(7) Defendant Lloyd's of London's Supplemental Motion to Reconsider. (Dkt. #70).

(8) Defendant Lloyd's of London's Third Supplemental Motion to Reconsider. (Dkt. #83).

(9) Defendant R. W. Sturge & Co., Ltd's Second Supplemental Motion for Reconsideration of Court's Memorandum and Order Dated September 4, 1991, Motion for New Trial, and Motion for Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law. (Dkt. #90).

Subsequently, Plaintiff Charles R. Leslie ("Leslie") notified the Court of his intent to dismiss Defendant R. W. Sturge & Co. ("Sturge") from this action voluntarily. (Dkt. nos. 85, ² [*5] 86, 108). All motions filed by Sturge still pending before the Court, therefore, should be terminated as MOOT. (Dkt. nos. 51, 57, 90, 105). Before the Court are the various motions and supplemental motions to reconsider and dismiss filed by Defendant Lloyd's of London. ("Lloyd's"). (Dkt. nos. 50, 54, 64, 65, 70, 83). After considering the motions,³ Plaintiff's responses thereto, all replies by Lloyd's, and the applicable law, the Court is of the opinion that Lloyd's [*4] motion to reconsider should be GRANTED, that the memorandum and recommendation of the magistrate should be AFFIRMED upon reconsideration, that Lloyd's motion and supplemental motions to dismiss should be DENIED, that Lloyd's motion for interlocutory appeal should be GRANTED, and that any other motions by Lloyd's should be DENIED.

I. ALLEGATIONS AND FACTUAL BACKGROUND

A. Insurance for long-tail risks -- general background on the industry.

Because of developments in liability for latent, long-term risks such as asbestos exposure or environmental pollution,⁴ [*7] the insurance industry in the last three decades has developed more than a passing interest in the subject. Other chapters in the saga of allocating responsibility for long-tail liability among insurers, insureds, brokers, reinsurers, retrocessionaires, and others include battles involving (1) the shift from occurrence-based liability coverage to claims-made⁵ policies,⁶ [*8] (2) the definition of "occurrence"⁷ [*9] and the possibility of ²The stipulation to dismiss claims against Sturge arising from two Outhwaite syndicates was filed pursuant to the settlement agreement in Stockwell v. R.H.W. Outhwaite (Underwriting Agencies) Limited, Nos. 89-2729, 91-1501 (Q.B. Comm'l Ct. filed Dec. 18, 1989) (Eng.). Leslie subsequently dismissed all claims against Sturge, apparently for reasons of litigation strategy.

³Some of the Lloyd's documents adopt Sturge's arguments by reference. Therefore, the Court will address, as necessary, any arguments adopted by reference.

⁴ See, e.g., In re Joint E. & S. Dist. Asbestos Litig., 982 F.2d 721 (2nd Cir. 1992), modified on reh'g sub nom. In re Findley, 993 F.2d 7 (2nd Cir. 1993) (Johns-Manville bankruptcy); Keene Corp. v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 215 U.S. App. D.C. 156, 667 F.2d 1034 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (developing "tripple trigger" analysis of insurance coverage for continuing occurrences), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1007, 102 S. Ct. 1644, 71 L. Ed. 2d 875, 102 S. Ct. 1645 (1982); 42 U.S.C. § 9607 (establishing widespread joint & several liability, with right of contribution, for "Superfund" response costs).

"stacking" liability policies⁸, (3) adoption of "sudden and accidental" pollution exclusion clauses,⁹ [*10] and (4) the subsequent adoption in 1985 of the "absolute" pollution exclusion.¹⁰ The present dispute is between what is by far

⁵ In contrast with a "claims-made" policy, an "occurrence" policy provides "long-tail" coverage. A claims-made policy covers only claims made during the policy period for occurrences within a coverage period extending back to a recited retroactive date. See American Physicians Ins. Exch. v. Garcia, 876 S.W.2d 842, 843 & nn.3-4 (Tex. 1994) (hereafter, "APIE"). While an "occurrence" policyholder need only buy one insurance policy to be covered for occurrences within a particular year, a "claims-made" policyholder ordinarily must purchase subsequent policies from year to year, or a separate "long-tail" policy, in order to obtain extended coverage. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, U.S. ___, 113 S.Ct. 2891, 2896, 125 L.Ed.2d 612, 61 U.S.L.W. 4855 (1993).

⁶ The United States Supreme Court in Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, U.S. ___, 113 S.Ct. 2891, 2911-17, 125 L.Ed.2d 612, 61 U.S.L.W. 4855 (1993) (Insurance Antitrust Litigation), held that allegations by the attorneys general of nineteen states "that the defendants . . . conspired in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act to restrict the terms of coverage of commercial general liability (CGL) insurance available in the United States" from occurrence to claims-made policies, and to impose other changes in available policy terms, see id., ___ U.S. at ___, 113 S.Ct. at 2895-96, 2897-99 ("As a consequence [of encouragement from American insurance companies], many London-based underwriters, syndicates, brokers, and reinsurance companies informed [the Insurance Services Office, Inc.] of their intention to withhold reinsurance. . . until ISO incorporated all four desired changes. . . into the ISO CCL forms."), stated a claim that fell within the § 3(b) "boycott or coercion" exception to the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1011-1013, which otherwise exempts "the business insurance" from the antitrust laws. However, the Court's holding was limited to the extent that the only allegations supporting the "boycott" claim were allegations that "primary insurers who wrote on disfavored forms would be refused all reinsurance, even as to risks written on other forms," or of similar threats by reinsurers. ___ Id. ___ U.S. at ___, 113 S.Ct. at 2916-17 (emphasis in original); cf. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 98 S.Ct. 2923, 57 L.Ed.2d 932 (1978) (agreement by insurers to force change from "occurrence" to "claims-made" policies constituted a "boycott"). The Supreme Court also rejected the London reinsurers' argument that the District Court should have "declined to exercise . . . jurisdiction over them under the principle of international comity." Hartford Fire Ins. Co., U.S. at ___, 113 S.Ct. at 2908-11. The Insurance Antitrust Litigation has subsequently settled.

⁷ See Chemstar, Inc. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 41 F.3d 429, 433-35 (9th Cir. 1994) (California law), petition for cert. filed, 63 U.S.L.W. 3598 (U.S. Feb. 2, 1994) (No. 94-1337); Society of the Roman Catholic Church of the Diocese of Lafayette and Lake Charles v. Interstate Fire & Casualty Co., 26 F.3d 1359, 1363-67 (5th Cir.) (Louisiana law), reh'g, en banc, denied, 29 F.3d 626 (5th Cir. 1994); Air Prods. & Chems., Inc. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 25 F.3d 177, 180-82 (3d Cir. 1994); Maryland Casualty Co. v. W.R. Grace & Co., 23 F.3d 617, 624-28 (2d Cir.) (New York law), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S.Ct. 655, 130 L.Ed.2d 559, 63 U.S.L.W. 3438 (1994); Eljer Mfg., Inc. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 972 F.2d 805, 812 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1005, 113 S.Ct. 1646, 123 L.Ed.2d 267, 61 U.S.L.W. 3667 (1993); Keene Corp. v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 215 U.S.App. D.C. 156, 667 F.2d 1034 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1007, 102 S.Ct. 1644, 71 L.Ed.2d 875, 102 S.Ct. 1645 (1982); Commonwealth Lloyd's Ins. Co. v. Cullen/Frost Bank of Dallas, 889 S.W.2d 266, 37 Tex. Sup. J. 799 (Tex. 1994) (per curiam); APIE, 876 S.W.2d at 853 n.20 (collecting cases); Northern States Power Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N.Y., 523 N.W.2d 657, 661-64 (Minn. 1994); Sentinel Ins. Co. v. First Ins. Co. of Haw., 76 Haw. 277, 875 P.2d 894, modified, 76 Haw. 453, 879 P.2d 558 (1994); J.H. France Refractories Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 534 Pa. 29, 626 A.2d 502, 506-07 (Pa. 1993); Continental Casualty Co. v. Rapid-American Corp., 80 N.Y.2d 640, 650-52, 609 N.E.2d 506, 510-12, 593 N.Y.S.2d 966 (N.Y. 1993); United States Gypsum Co. v. Admiral Ins. Co., 268 Ill. App. 3d 598, 643 N.E.2d 1226, 1252-1257, 205 Ill. Dec. 619 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994); St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. McCormick & Baxter Creosoting Co., 126 Ore. App. 689, 870 P.2d 260 (Or. Ct. App.), modified, 128 Ore. App. 234, 875 P.2d 537 (Or. Ct. App. 1994); Armstrong World Indus. v. Aetna Casualty & Sur. Co., 30 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1167-1204, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 35, 49-74, 62 U.S.L.W. 2372 (Cal. Ct. App. 1993), review granted, 866 P.2d 1311, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488 (Cal. 1994); Montrose Chem. Corp. of Cal. v. Admiral Ins. Co., 30 Cal. App. 4th 1474, 1513-22, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358 (Cal. Ct. App. 1992), review granted, 862 P.2d 661, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 661 (Cal. 1992).

⁸ Compare Keene Corp., 667 F.2d at 1049-50, and APIE, 876 S.W.2d at 852-55 (majority rule), with Cole v. Celotex Corp., 599 So.2d 1058 (La. 1992) (minority rule).

⁹ See Morton Int'l, Inc. v. General Accident Ins. Co. of Am., 134 N.J. 1, 28-80, 629 A.2d 831, 847-76 (1992), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S.Ct. 2764, 129 L.Ed.2d 878, 62 U.S.L.W. 3861 (1994) ("If applied as written, although interpretative questions undoubtedly would require resolution, the ['sudden and accidental'] clause sharply and dramatically would restrict the coverage that previously had been provided under CGL policies for property damage caused by accidental pollution We are fully satisfied that if given literal effect, the standard clause's widespread inclusion in CGL policies would limit coverage for pollution

the largest and most influential [*6] collection of players in the London (re)insurance market,¹¹ [*11] the Society of Lloyd's, and an individual American retrocessional underwriter¹², or "Name," who is a member of the Society of Lloyd's. The Plaintiff, Leslie, alleges that he discovered in the late 1980s that he was the victim of a scheme whereby "insiders" in the Society of Lloyd's concentrated highly undesirable long-tail asbestos and pollution risks in syndicates underwritten primarily by recently recruited "outside" Names from the United States,¹³ Canada, Australia, and elsewhere,¹⁴ while the "inside" Names focused their own efforts upon more lucrative syndicates and lines of insurance.

B. Nature of the case

HN1 [↑] When ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the Court is not concerned with the proof either side has offered, but solely with the plaintiff's allegations.¹⁵ [*13] All facts discussed below that are not expressly alleged by the Plaintiff are for the purpose of addressing [*12] the forum-selection, choice-of-law, comity, damage to so great an extent that the industry's representation of the standard clause's effect, in its presentation to New Jersey and other state insurance regulatory agencies, would have been grossly misleading. Proffered to regulators merely as a clarification of existing coverage . . . the industry's understatement of the clause's actual effect on coverage for pollution damage is both apparent and unjustifiable. . . . Had full disclosure been made, we would not hesitate to enforce the pollution-exclusion clause as written, resolving nuances inherent in the meaning of "sudden" on a case-by-case basis. Not only did the insurance industry fail to disclose the intended effect of this significant exclusionary clause, it knowingly misstated its intended effect in the industry's submission of the clause to state Departments of Insurance. Having profited from that nondisclosure by maintaining preexisting rates for substantially-reduced coverage, the industry should be required to bear the burden of its omission. . . ."); see also Union Pac. Resources Co. v. Aetna Casualty & Sur. Co., 894 S.W.2d 401 \(Tex. App. -- Fort Worth 1994\), application for writ of error filed, 38 Tex. Sup. J. 637 \(May 17, 1995\) (95-0473).

¹⁰ See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, U.S. at , 113 S. Ct. at 2896, 2899; National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. v. CBI Indus., Inc., 38 Tex. Sup. J. 332, 1995 Tex. LEXIS 17 \(Tex. Mar. 2, 1995\) (D-4353) (unanimous opinion), motion for rehearing filed April 3, 1995.

¹¹ In a 1992 report prepared with assistance from McKinsey & Co., Lloyd's reports, "Lloyd's underwriters underwrite just over half [53%] of all London market business, but more importantly lead more than two thirds [66%] of this business." LLOYD'S OF LONDON, LLOYD'S: A ROUTE FORWARD 46 & Ex. 23 (1992). Based on net reinsurance premiums, Lloyd's reports it was the third-largest reinsurer in the world in 1990; the second-largest if inter-syndicate reinsurance is included. Id. at 48 Ex. 25. In 1989, 31,329 individuals worldwide were Names, or members of the Society of Lloyd's, engaged in active underwriting, up from 6,020 in 1971. See id. at 26 Ex. 6.; LLOYD'S OF LONDON, 1993 ANNUAL REPORT AND ACCOUNTS 47. In 1993, Lloyd's reported 32,015 total active and inactive Names, down from 34,218 in 1989; the number of active names in 1993 was 19,537, down from 32,433 in 1988. LLOYD'S OF LONDON, A GUIDE TO CORPORATE MEMBERSHIP App. 1, at 47 (1993).

¹² See ROBERT H. JERRY, II, UNDERSTANDING INSURANCE LAW 683-84 (Matthew Bender ed. 1987) (explaining the terms "primary insurer," "ceding insurer," "reinsurance," "retrocession," and "retrocessionnaire").

¹³ Notably, what the Supreme Court caned domestic [American] retrocessional reinsurers were not among the defendants from whom the attorneys general sought relief in Hartford Fire Ins. Co., U.S. at , 113 S. Ct. at 2899 & n.5.

¹⁴ See Steve Boggan, Foreigners fared worst in Lloyd's losses, THE INDEPENDENT, Apr. 27, 1992, at A2; Julian Barnes, The Deficit Millionaires, THE NEW YORKER, Sept. 20, 1993 at 74, 84 (noting statistical correlation between geographic distance from 1 Lime Street and losses in Lloyd's syndicates).

¹⁵ HN2 [↑] A complaint is subject to dismissal if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, , 112 S. Ct. 2130, 2137, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 \(1992\); Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 2232, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 \(1984\). The Court must accept all well-pleaded allegations as true, Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2891, 2895, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 \(1993\); Albright v. Oliver, U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 807, 810, 127 L. Ed. 2d 114 \(1992\), and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Schultea v. Wood, 27 F.3d 1112, 1115 \(5th Cir. 1994\), modified on reh'g en banc, 47 F.3d 1427 \(5th Cir. 1995\) (en banc).

and forum non conveniens issues.¹⁶ Because a lengthy discussion of the Plaintiff's allegations or the Court's prior findings would be superfluous, see Leslie v. Lloyd's of London, No. 90-1907, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18565 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 2, 1994) (findings of fact and conclusions of law) (Dkt. #122), this order will provide only a brief description of the structure of Lloyd's and the nature of Leslie's claims against it.

[*14] The Society of Lloyd's is a private entity created by statute, whose members underwrite insurance.¹⁷ [*16] Its organization bears little similarity to the corporations that sell insurance in the United States.¹⁸ But see Crum & Forster, Inc. v. Monsanto Co., 887 S.W.2d 103, 148-49 (Tex. App. -- Texarkana 1994), application for writ of error filed, 38 Tex. Sup. J. 46 (Oct. 27, 1994) (No. 94-1088). Only a member of the Society of Lloyd's, a Name, may participate in underwriting Lloyd's policies. Only individuals, not corporations or limited partnerships, may become Names.¹⁹ Names do not generally underwrite insurance alone; rather, they combine into syndicates, which collectively underwrite risks and take advantage of greater risk-spreading than individual Names could achieve alone. To become a Name, one must pledge to undertake unlimited personal liability for his or her share of any losses. Every Name also pays an initial entrance fee of # 1900 and annual subscription fees of # 365 to the Society of Lloyd's in exchange for various services that are necessary for the operation of the Lloyd's insurance market. In addition, Names pay fees and commissions to their Members' and [*15] Managing Agents. Although Names are

¹⁶ The parties have subsequently submitted affidavits and live proof in the course of this proceeding. Rule 12(b) does provide, "if, on a motion asserting the defense numbered (6) to dismiss for failure of the pleading to state a claim . . . matters outside the pleading are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as a motion for summary judgment" FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b). However, the Court currently has before it a motion to reconsider an order adopting a magistrate's recommendation to deny the Defendants' 12(b)(6) motions. It would be extraordinarily awkward, to say the least, at this juncture to convert the motion to reconsider into a motion for summary judgment. Moreover, the Court is of the opinion that the Plaintiff would be entitled to further discovery before the Court could appropriately rule on a motion for summary judgment. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(f). Therefore, the Court shall confine its 12(b)(6) analysis to the Plaintiff's allegations in the various pleadings filed in this consolidated action, without deciding whether the Plaintiff has introduced legally sufficient evidence to support the allegations.

¹⁷ See generally Edinburgh Assurance Co. v. R. L. Burris Corp. 479 F. Supp. 138, 144-46 (C.D. Cal. 1979) (describing the customary practices of the Lloyd's insurance market).

The Court considers unpersuasive any characterization of Lloyd's as roughly similar to the New York Stock Exchange ("NYSE"), because this analogy ignores dramatic differences between the two institutions. See contra Bonny v. Society of Lloyd's, 3 F.3d 156, 158 n.2 (7th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1057, 127 L. Ed. 2d 378, 62 U.S.L.W. 3551 (1994); Roby v. Corporation of Lloyd's, 996 F.2d 1353, 1357 (2d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 385, 126 L. Ed. 2d 333, 62 U.S.L.W. 3319 (1993). First, Lloyd's has greater similarity to a private club than it does to a public stock exchange. Virtually anyone in the world may buy and sell securities listed on the NYSE, except, for example, certain nationals of foreign states subject to sanctions under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act or the Trading With The Enemy Act. In contrast, the opportunity to participate in Lloyd's underwriting syndicates is strictly limited to approximately 30,000 individuals who have applied for and qualified as "Names." More importantly, business conducted on the NYSE, whether by United States citizens or by foreign nationals, is subject to comprehensive regulation by an independent government agency with extensive enforcement authority. In contrast, the government of England has elected not to regulate the Lloyd's insurance market. See Lloyd's Act, 1982 (Eng.). Except to the extent Lloyd's or its syndicates issue or sell securities, insurance, and services abroad, the Lloyd's insurance market, at least in theory, is largely self-regulating.

¹⁸ Applying Texas law to a "Lloyd's plan" organization, which "is not a corporation but is controlled by its own underwriters and maintains its own directors, officers, bylaws, books and records, and assets and liabilities, the Crum & Forster court held for purposes of "disregarding the corporate fiction," that "such organizations have a legal status that is much more in the nature of corporate entities and should be regarded as insurance corporations." Crum & Forster, Inc., 887 S.W.2d at 149.

¹⁹ This statement is only true for the time period in which Leslie participated in underwriting at Lloyd's. Lloyd's 1993 Annual Report states, "The business plan, published in April 1993, set out a programme of profound change for all sectors of the Society. In essence, the plan promoted three significant structural changes: strong central direction of the market; a widening of the capital base to include corporate membership; and reinsuring the 1985 and prior liabilities of members into a new vehicle, NewCo." LLOYD'S OF LONDON, 1993 ANNUAL REPORT AND ACCOUNTS 7-8 (emphasis added) (NewCo is now called Equitas). In the last year, Lloyd's has started admitting corporate (i.e. limited liability) members.

liable for their proportional share of the risks underwritten by the syndicates they have joined, they are not liable for the share of risks borne by other Names, or by other syndicates. Lloyd's has historically observed a policy of several, not joint, liability for losses -- "each for his own part and none for the other." Policy premiums collected as a result of each syndicate's underwriting activities, after losses and loss reserves, generate profits which are distributed to Names in proportion to the share of any syndicate each Name has underwritten.

[*17] In the usual course of events, accounting for Lloyd's syndicates takes place in three-year cycles. An account year commences every year and each account year concludes three years later. At the end of a three-year cycle, a syndicate may still have policies with outstanding risks. Generally, the syndicate will close an account year through a process called "reinsurance to close." The outstanding risks are then borne by the Names of the reinsuring syndicate, who accepted the reinsurance premium, while any ceding Names who closed their account year (and therefore paid a loss in the amount of the reinsurance premium) are free from the liability they have ceded and may continue to underwrite future account years of the ceding syndicate, or to resign and underwrite elsewhere. Rarely are the risks of a Lloyd's syndicate ceded to entities outside the Society of Lloyd's.²⁰

[*18] Lloyd's syndicates are not democratic. Rather, a syndicate is underwritten primarily by passive names, while an Active Underwriter will generally employ, or act as, a Managing Agent. The Managing Agent of a syndicate, subject to the supervision of the Active Underwriter, directs the syndicate's underwriting activity. The Managing Agent for some of Leslie's syndicates, Sturge, also happened to be Leslie's Members' Agent. Members' Agents introduce new Names to Lloyd's and assist Names in joining syndicates.

As Lloyd's states in materials filed with the Court, "The underwriting member is a completely passive participant in the underwriting activity of the syndicates. . . . Members, as passive participants in the underwriting process, put their faith and assets behind the efforts of their members' agents and the underwriting decisions of the active underwriter. The members, therefore, are not permitted an active role in the day-to-day business of insuring risks or handling claims." See Dkt. #5, at 10-11 (emphasis added).

Through the collective efforts of Names' organizations, some comparative information has become available in recent years²¹ concerning the periodic profits [*19] or losses generated by various Lloyd's syndicates. However, during the 1970s and 1980s, the Lloyd's syndicates did not employ any public disclosure or reporting practices even remotely approaching the requirements imposed upon public companies, investment advisors, or mutual funds in the United States. As a general matter, passive names such as Leslie relied almost completely upon the underwriting experience and training of syndicates' Managing Agents, without themselves having much involvement in or knowledge of syndicate underwriting practices.

Leslie alleges that Charles Parnell, acting on behalf [*20] of the Society of Lloyd's came to Texas and recruited him to become a Name in 1977. Parnell was a director for Sturge, both a Members' Agent and the Managing Agent for several syndicates.²² At the time Parnell contacted Leslie, Lloyd's insiders were already well aware of the mounting

²⁰ However, Lloyd's has created a limited-liability corporate entity within Lloyd's, Equitas, to reinsure pre-1986 pollution and asbestos policies. While the entity was under consideration, it was called NewCo. In the Lloyd's 1993 Annual Report, Chairman Peter Rowland states:

We set ourselves to creating, by the end of 1995, the largest reinsurance / run-off company the world has ever seen. . . . I am very confident that NewCo will succeed in offering Names an exit route from Lloyd's in respect of their pre-1986 liabilities.

LLOYD'S OF LONDON, 1993 ANNUAL REPORT AND ACCOUNTS at 8-9.

²¹ At the time Leslie applied, Lloyd's did not even publish a list of underwriting agents:

Whilst a list of Underwriting Agents is not published, the Membership Department at Lloyd's can confirm to potential candidates whether a specific person, firm or company is on the list of agents.

potential for losses from asbestos and pollution liability insurance.²³ Representations made to Leslie in Texas before he joined Lloyd's included the claims that membership in Lloyd's was a safe and attractive investment, that Leslie's underwriting involvement would be focused on low-risk insurance, and that his exposure was limited because after he had participated as an underwriting member in an account year of a particular syndicate for a period of three years, he would be able to resign his underwriting membership in that syndicate at any time by following the notice procedure. See Dkt. #89, at 5-6. Leslie was also led to believe that the maximum annual loss he could ever expect from a syndicate was approximately equivalent to the long-term average of annual profits, around 10% of his undertaking, and that gains would far exceed losses in the long run, as they have for Lloyd's Names for 300 [*21] years.

In 1982, the English Parliament passed the Lloyd's Act, which altered the regulatory structure of Lloyd's and included a provision granting Lloyd's qualified immunity to civil liability from suits by Names in English courts. Lloyd's Act, 1982, ch. 14 (Eng.).

Leslie alleges that several syndicates closed the 1979 accounting year in 1982, despite [*22] a letter from auditor Neville Russel, unknown to the passive names, recommending that many syndicates should not close that year because of unquantifiable liability from asbestos. Subsequently, in 1986, Leslie alleges Lloyd's induced him to sign a new General Undertaking containing forum-selection and choice-of-law clauses. These clauses, if enforced, require claims "arising out of or related to" Leslie's membership in Lloyd's to be resolved in England, under English law. In March and June 1986, Sturge informed Leslie that the Lloyd's Act and subsequent regulatory changes by the Council of Lloyd's had "required us, in common with all Lloyd's agents to reformalise (and in some cases may require us to modify)²⁴ all your underwriting arrangements at Lloyd's over the next few months."²⁵ While the letters indicated that documents Leslie would sign contained "few variations of substance," any mention of the forum-selection and choice-of-law clauses was conspicuously absent from the notices Leslie received. Lloyd's and its agents never undertook to explain to Leslie the intended effect of these clauses on lawsuits that Lloyd's anticipated its American Names would soon file against it. [*23] The notices emphasized that "all Names are required to enter into [the revised General Undertaking] as a condition of continuing membership . . ."²⁶ [*24] Because Leslie was involved in ongoing underwriting syndicates, he further believed that Lloyd's would call an irrevocable letter of credit that he had posted with Texas Commerce Bank if he terminated his participation as an underwriting member by failing to sign the General Undertaking.²⁷

Not long after Leslie executed the 1986 General Undertaking, he learned he would have been better off if he had stopped underwriting. Initially, Leslie learned that several syndicates he had underwritten would not close as ²² As mentioned above, Names are generally introduced to Lloyd's through Members' Agents.

²³ Insiders at Lloyd's had been cognizant of asbestos risks at least as early as 1969, see Dkt. #122, at P 11, yet did not disclose the Cromer Report to outside Names until October 1986, after Leslie had executed the General Undertaking containing the contested forum selection clause. Incidentally, about this time, entities participating in the American insurance industry were actively misrepresenting the intended effect of "sudden and accidental" pollution-exclusion clauses to insurance regulators. Morton Int'l, Inc., 134 N.J. at 3243, 629 A.2d at 849-55.

²⁴ The Court has not discovered in the Lloyd's Act any requirement that claims by or against Names related to their membership in the Society of Lloyd's must be brought in English courts, solely under English law.

²⁵ Letter from Peter Rawlins, Managing Director, R. W. Sturge & Co., to Charles Leslie 1 (Mar. 10, 1986).

²⁶ Letter from K. J. Leonard, R. W. Sturge & Co., to Charles Leslie 2 (June 23, 1986); see also Letter from Peter Rawlins, Managing Director, R. W. Sturge & Co., to Charles Leslie 4 (Mar. 10, 1986) ("The Council [of Lloyd's] approved modifications in the terms of [the revised Premiums Trust Deed and General Undertaking] and all Names are now required to accede to them in their revised form as a condition of their continuing underwriting membership.

²⁷ Cf. Letter from Peter Rawlins, Managing Director, R. W. Sturge & Co., to Charles Leslie 3 (Mar. 10, 1986) ("The Council of Lloyd's has advised agents . . . that all names will be required to come into line with the current requirements for means and deposits . . .").

planned. Although four account years for syndicates he had underwritten had not closed properly at the time he signed the General Undertaking, and he had incurred some losses,²⁸ he was not at that time remotely aware of the scope of Lloyd's problems, or of the likelihood that his liabilities on those syndicates would continue in perpetuity. In 1989, Leslie learned that he could not limit his liability for these open syndicates' losses by resigning from them. Leslie also alleges he learned after 1986 that asbestos and pollution risks had been concentrated in syndicates underwritten by himself and [*25] other passive outside Names.²⁹ [*26] As the Court understands his allegations, these syndicates had taken on long-tail risks in the early- and mid- 1980s from profitable "inside" syndicates, and/or underwritten new long-tail risks that the "inside" syndicates did not, without collecting (re)insurance premiums sufficient to cover the risks. In short, Leslie discovered he was on the receiving end of a high-stakes game of hot-potato.³⁰ By the time he learned what had happened it was not feasible to cede the unquantifiable risk back to the insiders.

Leslie makes three claims against Lloyd's: ³¹ breach of fiduciary duties, deceptive acts or practices in violation of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices - Consumer Protection Act, TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. §§ 17.41 - 17.63 (Vernon 1987 & Supp. 1995) ("DTPA"), and securities fraud, in violation of § 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, 15 U.S.C. § 78j, and Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder.³² [Superintendent of Ins. of N.Y. v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 404 \[27\] U.S. 6, 9-12](#) & n.9, 92 S. Ct. 165, 167-69 & n.9, 30 L. Ed. 2d 128 \(1971\). Leslie has not pleaded a claim for sale of an unregistered security, or sale of a security by means of a false or incomplete prospectus, under section 12\(1\) or 12\(2\) of the 1933 Securities Act. 15 U.S.C. § 77j; see generally Gustafson v. Alloyd Co., Inc., U.S. , 115 S. Ct. 1061, 1079-83, 131 L. Ed. 2d 1, 63 U.S.L.W. 4165 \(1995\) (Ginsberg, J., dissenting) (addressing recent change in scope of the section 12\(2\) rescission remedy). Nor does he allege a civil ²⁸ See Dkt. #89, at P16. Leslie's pleadings also indicate that most of his syndicates and account years continued to pay profits up to the time he signed the General Undertaking. In other papers Leslie has filed with the Court, Leslie claims that appropriate underwriting and accounting practices would have required these syndicates to accumulate significantly greater reserves to cover future losses, rather than paying temporary "profits" which would be called back later as losses on open or reopened accounting years. See Dkt. #117, at 20, P 35.

²⁹ See Dkt. #81, at P 23; Dkt. #89, at PP 15, 27.

³⁰ The four apparent options available to a Name in the position Leslie alleges he was in were: (1) paying the losses and, in the event of insolvency, declaring bankruptcy, (2) if possible, buying reinsurance from "insiders" or existing Lloyd's syndicates, for a premium equal to or greater than the discounted present value of expected future losses, (3) recruiting new "outsiders" with sufficient capacity to reinsure his risks, and reinsuring to them, or (4) if possible, reinsuring to NewCo / Equitas (i.e. paying a similar premium as would be paid to "insiders", or treating policyholders as "outsiders," as the case may be).

³¹ The Court has not at this time granted Leslie's motion for leave to file his second amended complaint.

³² HN3 It shall unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly . . .

- (1) to employ any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud, or
- (2) to make any untrue statement of material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in light of the circumstances . . . not misleading, or
- (3) to engage in any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon any person, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security.

17 C.F.R. part 240.10b-5 (emphasis added). HN4 Section 10(b) applies not only to "any security registered on a national securities exchange," but also to "any security not so registered." 15 U.S.C. § 78j\(b\). The scope of Rule 10b-5 does not exceed the scope of Rule 10(b), and a violation must involve some form of manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance. Santa Fe Indus., Inc. v. Green, 430 U.S. 462, 473-74, 97 S. Ct. 1292, 1301, 51 L. Ed. 2d 480 \(1977\).

racketeering claim under Title XI of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, commonly known as the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act.³³ 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\) ("RICO").

[*28] ³³

II. SUPPLEMENTAL MOTIONS TO DISMISS

At the outset, the Court notes that Lloyd's has filed a series of motions potentially [*29] dispositive of Leslie's section 10(b) / Rule 10b-5 securities fraud claim. Lloyd's position is based upon the watershed case of Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson, 501 U.S. 350, 111 S. Ct. 2773, 115 L. Ed. 2d 321 (1991). According to a case the Supreme Court decided on June 20, 1991, the same day as Lampf, James B. Beam Distilling Co. v. Georgia, 501 U.S. 529, 111 S. Ct. 2439, 115 L. Ed. 2d 481 (1991), Lampf applied retroactively to time-bar all securities fraud claims based on the implied 10b-5 cause of action that were filed within applicable borrowed state limitations periods, but not within the newly announced uniform federal limitations period.

Lloyd's argument that Leslie's claim is time-barred is mistaken. The Lampf decision does not bar Leslie's claim because Congress subsequently decided Lampf does not apply to lawsuits, such as this one, filed before Lampf was handed down. 15 U.S.C § 78aa-1\(a\). Although Lloyd's directs the Court to a multitude of cases suggesting that section 27A of the 1934 Act, 15 U.S.C. § 78aa-1, is unconstitutional, the Supreme Court recently affirmed the decision of the Fifth Circuit that section 27A(b) [*30] is not unconstitutional. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. First Republicbank Corp., 997 F.2d 39 (5th Cir. 1993), aff'd sub nom. Morgan Stanley & Co. v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1827, 128 L. Ed. 2d 654, 62 U.S.L.W. 4396 (1994) (per curiam) (evenly divided court), reh'g denied, 114 S. Ct. 2774, 129 L. Ed. 2d 887, 62 U.S.L.W. 3862 (1994); but see BDO Seidman v. Simmons, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1789, 131 L. Ed. 2d 718, 63 U.S.L.W. 3771 (1995) (connected case); Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. First Republicbank Corp., 53 F.3d 1409 (5th Cir. 1995) (per curiam). Although the Supreme Court has subsequently held that section 27A(b) violates the separation of powers between Congress and the Judiciary insofar as it purports to require the courts to reopen judgments that have become final, Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm, Inc., 514 U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1447, 1456-58, 1463, 131 L. Ed. 2d 328, 63 U.S.L.W. 4243 (1995), this case has remained pending throughout the Lampf controversy and has never been dismissed on limitations grounds. The circuit courts of appeal have uniformly upheld the constitutionality of section [*31] 27A(a), which is applicable in this case. See Plaut, 514 U.S. at ___ 114 S. Ct. at 1469 n.6 (Stevens, J., dissenting) (collecting cases).

Nor does section 27A(a) represent a mere codification of the uniform limitations period announced in Lampf. The term "laws applicable in the jurisdiction," used in section 27A, refers to borrowed state limitations periods, without regard to the fact that Lampf technically, announced not only what the law was in every jurisdiction but what the law had been previously. As Justice Scalia recognized:

But respondents' argument confuses the question of what the law in fact was on June 19, 1991, with the distinct question of what § 27A means by its reference to what the law was. We think it entirely clear that it does not mean the law enunciated in Lampf for two independent reasons. . . . [First,] if the statute referred to [Lampf] its reference to the "laws applicable in the jurisdiction" (emphasis added) would be quite inexplicable. Second, if the statute refers to the law enunciated in Lampf it is utterly without effect, a result to be avoided if possible.

³³ See generally Alfadda v. Fenn, 935 F.2d 475, 479-80 (2d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1005, 116 L. Ed. 2d 656, 112 S. Ct. 638, (1991); United States v. Noriega, 746 F. Supp. 1506, 1516-19 (S.D. Fla. 1990) ("Section 1962(c) makes it unlawful for 'any person associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate, or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate . . . in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity . . .' 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) (emphasis added). . . . These prohibitions are on their face all-inclusive Indeed, if any statute reaches far and wide, it is RICO."); Kristen Neller, Note, Extraterritorial Application of RICO: Protecting U.S. Markets in a Global Economy, 14 MICH. J. INT'L L. 357, 377-82 (1993); Jonathan Turley, "When in Rome:" Multinational Misconduct and the Presumption Against Extraterritoriality, 84 Nw. U. L. Rev. 598, 601 (1990).

Plaut, 514 U.S. at [*321], 115 S. Ct. at 1451-52. Therefore, the Court must eschew a too-literal application of the statutory language and apply section 27A(a) as Congress evidently meant it to apply. Id. Leslie's securities fraud claims should not be dismissed on limitations grounds.

III. MOTION FOR REHEARING

Lloyd's has moved for a rehearing of the previous order affirming the magistrate's memoranda and recommendations. In its motion, Lloyd's correctly points out that the previous order recited that it would apply a "clearly erroneous" standard of review to "the Magistrate's actions." HN5[While this standard of review is appropriate for the magistrate's rulings on nondispositive matters, it is not the appropriate standard of review for dispositive motions, injunctions, and the like.³⁴ FED. R. CIV. P. 72(b); 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B), (C) ("A judge of the court shall make a de novo determination of those portions of the report or specified proposed findings or recommendations to which objection is made."). Although the Court in fact conducted a thorough, de novo review of the magistrate's recommendations concerning the Defendants' dispositive motions, see generally United States v. Wilson, 864 F.2d 1219, 1221-22 (5th Cir. 1989) (citing Aluminum Co. of Am. v. E.P.A., 663 F.2d 502 (4th Cir. 1981)), the order it signed employed standard language concerning district court review of magistrates' routine pretrial decisions, see 42 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(A), and inadvertently omitted any mention of the distinction between dispositive and nondispositive motions.

Nevertheless, the Court is of the opinion that reconsideration of the magistrate's memorandum [*34] and recommendation is in order. This is particularly so in light of opinions Lloyd's has brought to the Court's attention, which have elected to enforce forum-selection and choice-of-law clauses against Lloyd's Names residing in the United States.³⁵ Lloyd's motion for rehearing is therefore GRANTED.

[*35] IV. MOTION TO DISMISS FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

Lloyd's initial criticism of the magistrate's memorandum and recommendation is that the magistrate "ignored the voluminous documentation, as well as affidavit testimony, provided by [the Defendants] in support of their motions to dismiss," and "merely adopted the Plaintiff's pleadings as true." Dkt. #45, at 2. Because the magistrate only recited this standard as she ruled on Lloyd's Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, perhaps ³⁴ The magistrate's recommendation concerning Sturge's motion for referral to arbitration was subject to de novo review by this Court and would have been reviewed under the same standard by the court of appeals. In re Hornbeck Offshore Corp., 981 F.2d 752, 754 (5th Cir. 1993); Neal v. Hardee's Food Sys., Inc., 918 F.2d 34, 37 (5th Cir. 1990). Of course, the Court is not required to reconsider the magistrate's recommendation not to refer this matter to arbitration because Sturge is no longer a party to this lawsuit.

³⁵ The Court is therefore cognizant of the following decisions: Hirsch v. Oakley Vaughn Underwriting, Ltd., C.A. No. H-87-3727 (S.D. Tex. Dec. 14, 1988) (decided on forum non conveniens grounds; does not address any forum-selection or choice-of law issue), aff'd, 904 F.2d 704 (5th Cir. May 31, 1990) (No. 89-2563), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 981, 111 S. Ct. 511, 112 L. Ed. 2d 523 (1990); Riley v. Kingsley Underwriting Agencies, Ltd., 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21174, No. 91-C-1411 (D. Colo. Aug. 30, 1991), aff'd, 969 F.2d 953 (10th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1021, 113 S. Ct. 658, 121 L. Ed. 2d 584 (1992); Bonny v. The Society of Lloyd's, 784 F. Supp. 1350 (N.D. Ill. May 29, 1992), aff'd, 3 F.3d 156 (7th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 114 S. Ct. 1057, 127 L. Ed. 2d 378, 62 U.S.L.W. 3551 (1994); Roby v. Corporation of Lloyd's, 824 F. Supp. 336 (S.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd, 996 F.2d 1353, 1362 (2d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 114 S. Ct. 385, 126 L. Ed. 2d 333, 62 U.S.L.W. 3319 (1993); Shell v. R.W. Sturge, Ltd., 850 F. Supp. 620 (S.D. Ohio 1993), aff'd, 55 F.3d 1227 (6th Cir. 1995); Richards v. Lloyd's of London, C.A. No. 94-1211- IEG (POR), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6888 (S.D. Cal. Apr. 28, 1995); McDade v. NationsBank of Texas, N.A., C.A. No. H-94-3714 (S.D. Tex. June 26, 1995). Lloyd's also cites Ash v. Corporation of Lloyd's, Nos. C12100 & C9113 (Ont. Ct. App. July 28, 1992) (Can.).

The Court is also aware of reports that some Names have litigated these issues successfully in other jurisdictions, such as Australia and Canada. See Steve Boggan, Foreigners fared worst in Lloyd's losses, THE INDEPENDENT, Apr. 27, 1992, at A2.

Lloyd's can forgive the magistrate for following the law. See supra note 15; Hartford Fire Ins. Co., U.S. at __, 113 S. Ct. at 2895; Albright, U.S. at __, 114 S. Ct. at 810 (court accepts well-pleaded allegations as true); Lujan, 504 U.S. at __, 112 S. Ct. at 2137; Hishon, 467 U.S. at 73, 104 S. Ct. at 2232 (claim is subject to dismissal only if it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of claims that would entitle him to relief). The Court shall therefore consider de novo whether Leslie has slated a claim under Rule 10b-5 or the DTPA.

A. Deceptive Trade Practices Act

[*36] Texas consumers are entitled to rely upon a novel statute that has revolutionized tort law in their state and expanded the available remedies.³⁶ [*38] "The DTPA does not represent a codification of the common law. HN6 [↑] A primary purpose of the enactment of the DTPA is to provide consumers a cause of action for deceptive trade practices without the burden of proof and numerous defenses encountered in a common law fraud or breach of warranty suit."³⁷ Bank One, Texas, N.A. v. Taylor, 970 F.2d 16, 28 (5th Cir. 1992); Eagle Properties Ltd. v. Scharbauer, 807 S.W.2d 714, 724 (Tex. 1990); Alvarado v. Bolton, 749 S.W.2d 47, 48 (Tex. 1988); Smith v. Baldwin, 611 S.W.2d 611, 616 (Tex. 1980) (emphasis added). Most important to this case, the DTPA does away with any common-law requirement of contractual privity. Melody Home Mfg. Co. v. Barnes, 741 S.W.2d 349, 352 (Tex. 1987); Kennedy v. Sale, 689 S.W.2d 890, 892 (Tex. 1985); Flenniken v. Longview Bank & Trust Co., 661 S.W.2d 705, 707 (Tex. 1983); Gupta v. Ritter Homes, Inc., 646 S.W.2d 168, 169 (Tex. 1983); Cameron v. Terrell & Garrett, Inc., 618 S.W.2d 535, 541, 24 Tex. Sup. J. 265 (Tex. 1981) ("The Act is designed to protect consumers [*37] from any deceptive trade practice made in connection with any purchase or sale of any goods or services."); Barrett v. U.S. Brass Corp., 864 S.W.2d 606, 620-21 (Tex. App. -- Houston [1st Dist.] 1993, writ granted); Knowlton v. U.S. Brass Corp., 864 S.W.2d 585, 592-94 (Tex. App. -- Houston [1st Dist.] 1993, writ granted) ("To recover under the DTPA, a plaintiff must establish [1] that he is a 'consumer,' [2] that there were false, misleading, or deceptive acts or an unconscionable act, and [3] that the act or acts constituted the producing cause of damage."); cf. Melody Home Mfg. Co., 741 S.W.2d at 352 ("The absence of a cash transfer is not determinative because DTPA plaintiffs establish their standing as consumers by their relationship to a transaction, not by their contractual relationship with the defendant.").

HN7 [↑]

The definition of "consumer" under the DTPA is quite broad: "an individual . . . who seeks or acquires by purchase or lease, any goods or services." TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 17.45(4) (Vernon 1987) (emphasis added).

³⁶ See, e.g., Sorokolit v. Rhodes, 889 S.W.2d 239, 241-42 (Tex. 1994) (recognizing claims against a physician for breast augmentation surgery, based upon knowing misrepresentation and breach of an express warranty, while leaving open the issue of an "implied warranty to perform [medical] services in a good and workmanlike manner."); Archibald v. Act III Arabians, 755 S.W.2d 84, 86 (Tex. 1988) (converting negligence claim into a treble-damages-and-attorneys'-fees DTPA claim by recognizing an "implied warranty of good and workmanlike performance that applies to horse training services"); Vail v. Texas Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 754 S.W.2d 129, 131-37 (Tex. 1987) (insurance law); Melody Home Mfg. Co. v. Barnes, 741 S.W.2d 349, 354 (Tex. 1987) (holding "that an implied warranty to repair or modify existing tangible goods or property in a good and workmanlike manner is available to consumers suing under the DTPA"); Flenniken v. Longview Bank & Trust Co., 661 S.W.2d 705, 706-08 (Tex. 1983) (lender liability for wrongful foreclosure); Gupta v. Ritter Homes, Inc., 646 S.W.2d 168, 169 (Tex. 1983) (liability for builders); Cameron v. Terrell & Garrett, Inc., 618 S.W.2d 535, 539-41 (Tex. 1981); Segura v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 873 S.W.2d 399 (Tex. App. -- Austin 1994) (recognizing a DTPA cause of action by indirect purchasers for cartel behavior, which federal antitrust laws will not permit after Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977)), writ granted, 38 Tex. Sup. J. 49-50 (Nov. 3, 1994) (94-0514); Rickey v. Houston Health Club, Inc., 863 S.W.2d 148 (Tex. App. -- Texarkana, 1993) (recognizing a warranty or misrepresentation cause of action under the DTPA for a slip-and-fall injury in a health club), writ denied, 888 S.W.2d 812 (Tex. 1994); Berry Property Management Co. v. Bliskey, 850 S.W.2d 644 (Tex. App. -- Corpus Christi 1993, writ dism'd) (DTPA claim against apartment manager by rape victim); Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Jefferson Assoc., 839 S.W.2d 866 (Tex. App. -- Austin 1992), rev'd, 896 S.W.2d 156, 38 Tex. Sup. J. 366 (Mar. 16, 1995) (D-3906).

³⁷ The principles applicable to construing the DTPA place primary emphasis on the intent of the legislature, "keeping in view 'the old law, the evil, and the remedy.'" Pennington v. Singleton, 606 S.W.2d 682, 686 (Tex. 1980) (citing Woods v. Littleton, 554 S.W.2d 662 (Tex. 1977)).

Lloyd's does not contend that Leslie is a "business consumer with personal assets of $ 25 million or more, or "owned or controlled by a corporation or entity" that is similarly capitalized. See id. Leslie alleges, and Lloyd's does not contest, that he paid Lloyd's a one-time joining fee and annual membership fees, in exchange for services. Leslie alleges that these included the services necessary to provide an operating insurance market and that Lloyd's represented on several occasions that it provided regulatory and oversight services for its members with respect to the activities of [*39] Active Underwriters, Managing Agents, and Members' Agents. Without question, Leslie alleges a transfer of consideration for services. Kennedy, 698 S.W.2d at 892. Moreover, the services Leslie purchased, or the absence thereof, "form the basis" of Leslie's complaint. Knowlton, 864 S.W.2d at 592.

Leslie alleges that Lloyd's, either directly or through the actual or apparent authority vested in Parnell and Sturge, made the following misrepresentations, among others:

- (1) that an underwriting member becomes a member of Lloyd's, not some unknown underwriting agency, and the member can rely upon all of the representations made by Lloyd's or its various agents;
- (2) that a member's risk, despite nominally unlimited liability, is minimal because Lloyd's tightly regulates its insurance market and oversees all risks to assure that risks are spread throughout the Lloyd's membership, not concentrated in particular syndicates;
- (3) that an underwriting member of Lloyd's can expect to earn approximately ten percent (10%) of his or her total underwriting undertaking in profits each year.

Moreover, the allegations in the pleadings indicate that Lloyd's knew about, but [*40] failed to disclose, both the risks associated with long-tail asbestos and pollution policies and the Lloyd's insiders' practice of concentrating these risks in "outside" syndicates. Leslie further alleges that these misrepresentations and nondisclosures, including representations concerning regulation and oversight services, constituted deceptive acts or practices which were the producing cause of damages to him and violated one or more of the provisions of the DTPA "laundry list," including the following:

- (2) causing confusion or misunderstanding as to the source, sponsorship, approval, or certification of . . . services;
- (3) causing confusion or misunderstanding as to affiliation, connection, or association with, or certification by, another;
- (5) representing that . . . services have sponsorship, approval, characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities which they do not have or that a person has a sponsorship, approval, status, affiliation, or connection he does not;
- (7) representing that . . . services are of a particular standard, quality, or grade . . . if they are of another;
- (12) representing that an agreement confers or involves rights, [*41] remedies, or obligations which it does not have or involve, or which are prohibited by law;
- (23) the failure to disclose information concerning . . . services which was known at the time of the transaction if such failure to disclose such information was intended to induce the consumer into a transaction into which the consumer would not have entered had the information been disclosed.

HN8 [↑] TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. §§ 17.46\(a\)\(2\), \(3\), \(5\), \(7\), \(12\), \(23\), 17.50\(a\)\(1\) (Vernon 1987 & Supp. 1995). The allegations would also seem to support a claim for "an act or practice which, to a person's detriment:

- (A) takes advantage of the lack of knowledge, ability, experience, or capacity of a person to a grossly unfair degree; or
- (B) results in a gross disparity between the value received and consideration paid, in a transfer involving transfer of consideration."

Id. §§ 17.45\(5\), 17.50\(a\)\(3\) (definition of "unconscionable action or course of action"). A consumer's DTPA rights, of course, may not be waived except under very limited circumstances. Id. § 17.42 (waiver enforceable only if defendant pleads and proves (1) no significant difference in bargaining [*42] position, (2) consumer is represented by legal counsel (3) in a transaction for a consideration in excess of $ 500,000, (4) waiver is made in an express provision, (5) in a written contract, and (6) signed by both the consumer and the consumer's counsel). The Court has no difficulty deciding that Leslie's allegations are sufficient to survive Rule 12\(b\)\(6\).

HN9[] The DTPA 60-day demand letter requirement is never a ground for outright dismissal of a claim. Hines v. Hash, 843 S.W.2d 464, 468-69 (Tex. 1993) (The purpose of the statute "is better served by abating an action filed without notice for the duration of the [60-day] statutory notice period . . . than by dismissing the action altogether;" "defendant must request an abatement with the filing of an answer or very soon thereafter."). Abatement of this action to facilitate settlement will be most appropriate after the Fifth Circuit has ruled on an interlocutory appeal of this order.

B. Securities fraud

Upon de novo review of the magistrate's recommendation, the Court is of the opinion that Leslie has stated a claim for securities fraud and done so with sufficient particularity to survive a motion to dismiss. Lloyd's [*43] primary objection to Leslie's securities fraud claim is not that Leslie has failed to allege either (1) misrepresentations or failures to disclose material information, (2) "[a] device, scheme or artifice to defraud," or (3) "an act, practice, or course of business which operates as a fraud or deceit," in connection with a transaction in securities. 17 C.F.R. part 240. 10b-5. Rather, Lloyd's objects that the transactions of which Leslie complains never involved the purchase or sale of any security. See Dkt. #5, at 51-55. Lloyd's also argues that Leslie has failed to allege both loss and transaction causation. Reviewing Leslie's pleadings, it is apparent they sufficiently allege both forms of causation -- that Leslie would not have entered into transactions but for the fraud, and that the fraud caused damage to Leslie.

Although Lloyd's appears to concede that "Leslie's allegations tend to show that he sought and acquired his position as an underwriting member as a prerequisite to his participation in an investment," id. at 48-49, the Court agrees with Lloyd's that Leslie has not alleged that he purchased a security solely by purchasing a Lloyd's Name. Leslie alleges that [*44] he purchased securities when he purchased participations in Lloyd's syndicates, see Dkt. #89 at P 31, and that Lloyd's represented to him that the only way to qualify for purchasing these securities was to purchase a Name. While it may be debatable whether Leslie's overall transaction with Lloyd's insiders constituted an "investment contract" ³⁸ or other security, the Court elects to hold that HN10[] a bare Name is not an "investment contract," as that term is defined in the controlling cases. International Bhd. of Teamsters v. Daniel, 439 U.S. 551, 99 S. Ct. 790, 796, 58 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1979); United Housing Found., Inc. v. Forman, 421 U.S. 837, 851-52, 95 S. Ct. 2051, 2060, 44 L. Ed. 2d 621 (1975); Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. W. J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 301, 66 S. Ct. 1100, 1104, 90 L. Ed. 1244 (1946); Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., 497 F.2d 473 (5th Cir. 1974).

[*45] While a Name, by itself, may not be a security, Leslie certainly has purchased securities in the form of participations in Lloyd's syndicates. The Court finds instructive the position of the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") on the subject:

The staff of the Commission's Division of Corporate Finance has had discussions with Lloyd's concerning the applicability of the Securities Act of 1933 (the "Securities Act") and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (the "Exchange Act") to the solicitation of U.S. Citizens to participate in Lloyd's. It is the Division's position that the solicitation of participations involves the sale of a security, with the issuer of that security being the particular Members' Agent involved. Accordingly, such U.S. sales would be subject to all of the provisions of the Securities Act and the Exchange Act, including the anti-fraud provisions. At the time of those prior discussions, ³⁸ HN11[] The test for an "investment contract" is whether the scheme involves an investment of money in a common enterprise with profits to come primarily from the efforts of others. Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. W. J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 301, 66 S. Ct. 1100, 1104, 90 L. Ed. 1244 (1946); Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., 497 F.2d 473 (5th Cir. 1974). "The [Howey/Forman] test is to be applied in light of 'the substance -- the economic realities of the transaction -- rather than the names that may have been employed by the parties.'" International Bhd. of Teamsters v. Daniel, 439 U.S. 551, 558, 99 S. Ct. 790, 796, 58 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1979). The Howey economic reality test was designed to determine whether a particular investment is an investment contract," not whether it fits within any of the examples listed in the statutory definition of "security." Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681, 691, 105 S. Ct. 2297, 2304, 85 L. Ed. 2d 692 (1985) (emphasis in original).

it was determined that if the Members' Agents solicited participations in accordance with the procedures proposed by Lloyd's counsel (an offering structure intended to comply with the Commission's Regulation D), registration under the Securities Act would [*46] not be required. However, in light of the issues raised by Mr. Roby and others, the staff may consider . . . whether further action is appropriate.

....

While Lloyd's participations do more closely resemble general partnership interests than they do other securities, such as shares of common stock, they are quite unique investments There is no existing precedent as to whether Lloyd's participations are securities but, as we pointed out above, the Division of Corporate Finance believes they are securities and as such are subject to the provisions of the Federal securities laws in the same manner and to the same extent as more conventional securities. . . . Subject to certain limitations and conditions, the provisions of the Federal securities laws generally are as applicable to the sales of foreign securities (including participations in Lloyd's) in the United States as they are to the sales of domestic securities.

Letter from Mary E. T. Beach, Senior Associate Director of the Division of Corporate Finance, United States Securities and Exchange Commission, to Hon. Donald J. Pease, Member, United States House of Representatives 2-3 (Aug. 5, 1991) (emphasis [*47] added), reprinted in Respondent's Brief in Opposition at App. A, Riley v. Kingsley Underwriting Agencies, Ltd., 506 U.S. 1021 113 S. Ct. 658, 121 L. Ed. 2d 584 (Dec. 7, 1992) (No. 92-664). The position of the Securities and Exchange Commission -- that participations in a Lloyd's syndicate are securities -- is correct. HN12[¹²] The purchase of a participation involves the investment of money -- delivery of a clean irrevocable letter of credit and assumption of unlimited several liability³⁹ -- in a common enterprise, Lloyd's and/or a Lloyd's syndicate, with profits to come solely⁴⁰ from the efforts of others -- such as brokers at Lloyd's and the syndicate's Managing Agent. United Housing Found., Inc., 421 U.S. at 851-52, 95 S. Ct. at 2060; Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. W. J. Howey Co., 328 U.S. at 301, 66 S. Ct. at 1104; see also Reves v. Ernst & Young, 494 U.S. 56, 60, 110 S. Ct. 945, 949, 108 L. Ed. 2d 47 (1990) (in enacting the securities laws, Congress "recognized the virtually limitless scope of human ingenuity, especially in the creation of 'countless and variable schemes devised by those who seek [to] use . . . the money of others on the promise of [*48] profits.'") (quoting Howey); Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681, 691, 105 S. Ct. 2297, 2304, 85 L. Ed. 2d 692 (1985) (transaction may be a "security" even though it does not satisfy the Howey economic reality test); Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. Koscot Interplanetary, Inc., 497 F.2d 473 (5th Cir. 1974) ("solely from the efforts of others" criterion "would be easy to evade" if applied too literally; "the admitted salutary purposes of the Acts can only be safeguarded by a functional approach to the Howey test.").

Congress has expressly granted the SEC regulatory authority [*49] under the 1933 and 1934 Acts. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 77c\(b\), \(c\), 77f\(d\), 77i, 77s\(a\), 78u, 78u-2, 78w\(a\)\(1\), 78y; see also 17 C.F.R. part 230.100\(b\). Relevant precedent indicates HN13[¹³] the courts should grant significant deference to administrative decisions when an agency has regulatory authority over matters a court must address. See, e.g., Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 842-43, 104 S. Ct. 2778, 2782, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1984) ("The power of an administrative agency to administer a congressionally created . . . program necessarily requires the formulation of policy and the making of rules to fill any gap left, implicitly or explicitly . . . if the statute is silent or ambiguous with respect to the specific issue, the question for the court is whether the agency's answer is based on a permissible construction of the statute."); Stinson v. United States, 508 U.S. 36, 113 S. Ct. 1913, 1919, 123 L. Ed. 2d 598 (1993) ("Provided an agency's interpretation of its own regulations does not violate the Constitution or a federal statute, it must be given 'controlling weight unless it is plainly erroneous or inconsistent with [*50] the regulation.'") (quoting Bowles v. Seminole Rock & Sand Co., 325 U.S. 410, 414, 65 S. Ct. 1215, 1217, 89 L. Ed. 1700 (1945)). In this case, the position of the SEC Division of Corporate Finance that participations in Lloyd's syndicates are regulated securities is based upon a permissible construction of the 1933 and 1934 Acts, and is not plainly erroneous or inconsistent with agency regulations. The Court holds these participations are securities as that term is defined in the 1933 and 1934 Acts.

³⁹ As a Name increases the number of syndicates he or she underwrites or increases his or her share of the underwriting business of a particular syndicate, Lloyd's requires the Name to increase the face value of the clean, irrevocable letter of credit.

⁴⁰ Passive Names "are not permitted an active role in the day-to-day business of insuring risks or handling claims." See Dkt. #5, at 10-11 (emphasis added).

The SEC also takes the position that Lloyd's program of soliciting Names in the United States, as Lloyd's described its activities to the SEC, is exempt from the registration requirement of the 1933 Securities Act under the SEC's Regulation D. See 17 C.F.R. §§ 230.501 - 230.508. ("Reg D"). It bears mentioning that the Reg D "private offering" exemption is not to be confused with an exemption from the anti-fraud provisions of the 1933 and 1934 Acts. See Landreth Timber Co., 471 U.S. at 692 & n.6, 105 S. Ct. at 2305 & n.6 (quoting Louis Loss favorably for the proposition that "saying . . . the fraud provisions do not apply to private transactions" is "heresy"); [Adena \[*51\] Exploration Co. v. Sylvan, 860 F.2d 1242, 1251 & n.42 \(5th Cir. 1988\)](#); 17 C.F.R. § 230.501 et seq. preliminary note 1 ("Such transactions are not exempt from the antifraud, civil liability, or other provisions of the federal securities laws. Issuers are reminded of their obligation to provide such further material information . . . as may be necessary to make the information required under this regulation, in light of the circumstances . . . not misleading.").⁴¹

[*52] Even though the bare sale of a Name is not an "investment contract," and therefore Lloyd's itself is not necessarily an "issuer" of securities, the Court is of the opinion that Leslie has alleged sufficient facts to support a cause of action against Lloyd's under Rule 10b-5, which prohibits "any device, scheme, or artifice to defraud," any material misrepresentation or failure to disclose, or "any act, practice, or course of business which operates or would operate as a fraud or deceit upon any person . . . in connection with the purchase or sale of any security." The cases establish beyond peradventure that Rule 10b-5 actions are not strictly limited to claims against the "issuer" of the securities in question.⁴²

⁴¹ But see Respondent's Brief in Opposition at 1-2, Riley v. Kingsley Underwriting Agencies, Ltd., 506 U.S. 1021, 113 S. Ct. 658, 121 L. Ed. 2d 584 \(Dec. 7, 1992\) (No. 92-664) (confusing the Reg D registration exemption with an exemption from the anti-fraud provisions of the 1933 and 1934 Acts):

Petitioner errs in suggesting that the decision below deprives him of a right available to him under the U.S. securities laws. When the [SEC] in 1987 and 1988 reviewed the whole issue of offering membership in Lloyd's to United States persons, it concluded that if the Members' Agents solicited participation in Lloyd's in compliance with . . . the Commission's Regulation D, registration under the Securities Act was not required.

Id. (emphasis in original). While this action has been pending, the Supreme Court handed down Gustafson, U.S. , 115 S. Ct. 1061, 131 L. Ed. 2d 1, which holds that the rescission anti-fraud remedy provided in section 12\(2\) of the 1933 Act applies only to initial offerings of securities to the public, and not to secondary or private transactions in securities. However, Leslie has never relied upon section 12\(2\), and Gustafson contains no indication whatsoever that the 10b-5 remedy would or should ever be subject to similar limitations.

⁴² See Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards, Inc. v. Berner, 472 U.S. 299, 315-19, 105 S. Ct. 2622, 2631-33, 86 L. Ed. 2d 215 \(1985\) (recognizing cause of action by "tippee" against securities broker "tipper" who supplies tippee with purported inside information later discovered to be false); Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah v. United States, 406 U.S. 128, 150-54, 92 S. Ct. 1456, 1470-72, 31 L. Ed. 2d 741 \(1972\) (recognizing claim for trader's failure to disclose material information about market conditions); Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. Capital Gains Research Bureau, 375 U.S. 180, 186, 84 S. Ct. 275, 280, 11 L. Ed. 2d 237 \(1963\) (providing cause of action for "scalping" practices of investment adviser); Jolley v. Welch, 904 F.2d 988, 993 \(5th Cir. 1990\) (discussing the "churning" cause of action), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1050, 111 S. Ct. 762, 112 L. Ed. 2d 781 \(1981\); Laird v. Integrated Resources, Inc., 897 F.2d 826, 838 \(5th Cir. 1990\) (recognizing that 10b-5 "churning" violation may constitute a RICO predicate offense); United States v. Winans, 612 F. Supp. 827, 838-48 \(S.D.N.Y. 1985\), aff'd sub nom. United States v. Carpenter, 791 F.2d 1024, 1028-34 \(2d Cir. 1986\) (affirming conviction of Wall Street Journal "Heard on the Street" columnist for trading on column contents in advance of publication), aff'd, 484 U.S. 19, 24, 108 S. Ct. 316, 320, 98 L. Ed. 2d 275 \(1987\) (equally divided court); Miley v. Oppenheimer & Co., 637 F.2d 318, 324-25 \(5th Cir. Unit A 1981\) (recognizing 10b-5 "churning" cause of action, which "occurs when a securities broker enters into transactions and manages a client's account for the purpose of generating commissions and in disregard of his client's interests"); Mihara v. Dean Witter & Co., Inc., 619 F.2d 814 \(9th Cir. 1980\); Zweig v. Hearst Corp., 594 F.2d 1261 \(9th Cir. 1979\) (recognizing 10b-5 cause of action against financial columnist for failure to disclose conflict of interest); see also Basic, Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 108 S. Ct. 978, 99 L. Ed. 2d 194 \(1988\) (approving "fraud on the market" presumption of reliance on material misrepresentations); Dirks v. Securities & Exch. Comm'n,

[*53] V. EXTRATERRITORIAL APPLICATION OF UNITED STATES LAWS*A. Securities Exchange Act of 1934

Relying primarily upon Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n v. Arabian Am. Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 111 S. Ct. 1227, 113 L. Ed. 2d 274, 59 U.S.L.W. 4225 \(1991\) (hereafter, "EEOC"), Lloyd's argues that the 1934 Securities Exchange Act does not apply extraterritorially.⁴³ It is well-settled that HN14[↑] the 1934 Act, and Rule 10b-5, apply extraterritorially to certain transactions in foreign commerce, and the Court is of the opinion that the securities laws apply extraterritorially in this case.

[*54] In EEOC, 499 U.S. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1229, 1236, the Supreme Court decided that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, does not apply extraterritorially to regulate "the employment practices of United States employers who employ United States citizens abroad." In so ruling, the Court affirmed, and arguably strengthened, the presumption" against extraterritorial application of federal statutes, "unless a contrary [legislative] intent appears."⁴⁴ Id. at 1230 (citing Foley Bros., Inc. v. Filardo, 336 U.S. 281, 284-85, 69 S. Ct. 575, 577, 93 L. Ed. 680 \(1949\)). Before the year was out, Congress clearly expressed its contrary legislative intent. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e\(f\); Landgraf v. USI Film Prods., U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 1483, 1489-90, 128 L. Ed. 2d 229, 62 U.S.L.W. 4255 \(1994\).

[*55] The EEOC court determined that the definition of "Commerce" in Title VII, which included "trade, traffic, commerce . . . or communication among the several states; or between a State and any place outside thereof," "is ambiguous, and does not speak directly to the question presented here." EEOC, 499 U.S. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1231 (emphasis added). In contrast, the 1934 Securities Exchange Act is not at all ambiguous: "HN15[↑] The term interstate commerce means trade, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several states, or between a foreign country and any State, or between any State or place or ship outside thereof." 15 U.S.C. § 78c\(a\)\(17\) (emphasis added); see also 15 U.S.C. § 78aa.

Moreover, legal developments subsequent to EEOC provide strong indications that EEOC did nothing to alter the longstanding rule that the 1934 Act may apply extraterritorially to some securities transactions. In an appeal from a 463 U.S. 646, 103 S. Ct. 3255, 77 L. Ed. 2d 911 \(1983\) (qualifying Chiarella with requirement of personal gain motivation); Chiarella v. United States, 445 U.S. 222, 226-30, 100 S. Ct. 1108, 1113-15, 63 L. Ed. 2d 348 \(1980\) (in a 10b-5 action against a "markup man" in a financial printing operation, holding that failure to disclose material information "may constitute a manipulative or deceptive device" if the jury is properly instructed on whether the party charged with the failure to disclose, such as "an insider [or] a fiduciary,' is under a duty to disclose it"); id. 445 U.S. at 230 n.12, 100 S. Ct. at 1116 n.12 (distinguishing Shapiro v. Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, 495 F.2d 228, 237-38 \(2d Cir. 1974\)); Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., 401 F.2d 833 \(2d Cir. 1968\), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1005, 92 S. Ct. 561, 30 L. Ed. 2d 558 \(1972\).

⁴³ Lloyd's does not argue that section 27 of the 1934 Act, 15 U.S.C. § 78aa, does not authorize service of process upon it. Cf. Omni Capital Int'l v. Rudolf, Wolff & Co., 484 U.S. 97, 105-07, 108 S. Ct. 404, 98 L. Ed. 2d 415 \(1987\) (addressing service of process under § 22 of the Commodity Exchange Act). Unlike § 22 of the Commodity Exchange Act, § 27 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 "authorizes service of process 'wherever the defendant may be found.'" Securities & Exch. Comm'n v. Unifund SAL, 910 F.2d 1028, 1033-34 \(2d Cir.\) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 78aa), reh'g denied, 917 F.2d 98 \(2d Cir. 1990\).

⁴⁴ This approach has not gone without comment. See GARY B. BORN & DAVID WESTIN, INTERNATIONAL CIVIL LITIGATION IN UNITED STATES COURTS: COMMENTARY AND MATERIALS 585-90 (2d ed. 1992); Scott A. Burns, The Application of U.S. Antitrust Law to Foreign Conduct: Has Hartford Fire Extinguished Considerations of International Comity, 15 U. PA. J. INT'L BUS. L. 221, 249-52 \(1994\); David L. Shapiro, Continuity and Change in Statutory Interpretation, 67 N.Y.U. L. REV. 921, 959 & n.195 (1992); Russell J. Weintraub, The Extraterritorial Application of Antitrust and Securities Laws: An Inquiry into the Utility of a "Choice-of-Law" Approach, 70 TEX. L. REV. 1799, 1822 \(1992\) (Weintraub argues in favor of rejecting a "choice-" or "conflict-of-law" approach to international securities and antitrust cases, and adopting instead a rebuttable presumption that the relevant statutes apply extraterritorially).

Second Circuit decision involving plaintiffs who were neither United States residents nor citizens, which not only reaffirmed both traditional tests for the extraterritorial application of Rule 10b-5, but held as well that RICO may [*56] apply extraterritorially, the Supreme Court denied certiorari. Alfadda v. Fenn, 935 F.2d 475, 479-80 \(2d Cir. 1991\) (decided June 5, 1991; EEOC was decided March 26, 1991) ("Under our decisions, two tests have emerged for determining whether a federal court has subject matter jurisdiction over a foreign plaintiff's claim under the antifraud provisions of the securities laws[.]. . . the 'conduct' test, [and]. . . the 'effects' test."), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1004, 112 S. Ct. 638, 116 L. Ed. 2d 656, 60 U.S.L.W. 3418 (1991). Second, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit held that the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 required a federal agency to prepare an environmental impact statement in advance of implementing a waste incineration program at a base in Antarctica. Environmental Defense Fund, Inc. v. Massey, 300 U.S. App. D.C. 65, 986 F.2d 528 \(D.C. Cir. 1993\). Third, the Supreme Court held that the Sherman Act would apply extraterritorially in a lawsuit against London reinsurers, and that international comity would not require the United States to decline to enforce the Sherman Act unless "there is in fact a true conflict [*57] between domestic and foreign law." ⁴⁵ Hartford Fire Ins. Co., U.S. at , 113 S. Ct. at 2908-10; see also id. at 2917-19 (Scalia, J., dissenting) (citing EEOC); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582 n.6, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1354 n.6, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\).

[*58] If the EEOC Court's election to re-emphasize the Foley Bros., 336 U.S. at 284-85, 69 S. Ct. at 577, presumption against extraterritoriality did not warrant the Supreme Court's revisiting extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act⁴⁶ in Hartford Fire Ins. Co., U.S. at , 113 S. Ct. at 2908-10, then this Court is not aware of any reason to view EEOC as a mechanism for revisiting the multitude of post-Foley Bros. cases holding that the United States securities laws can apply extraterritorially, either to foreign defendants who have allegedly defrauded United States investors, see Bersch v. Drexel Firestone, Inc., 519 F.2d 974, 985-87 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied sub nom. Bersch v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 423 U.S. 1018, 96 S. Ct. 453, 46 L. Ed. 2d 389 (1975); Leasco Data Processing Equip. Corp. v. Maxwell, 468 F.2d 1326, 1333-35 \(2d Cir. 1972\) (involving an American corporation and a British subsidiary as plaintiffs); Schoenbaum v. Firstbrook, 405 F.2d 200, 206-08 \(2d Cir.\), rev'd in part on other grounds, 405 F.2d 215 \(2d Cir. 1968\) (en banc), cert. denied sub nom. Manley v. Schoenbaum, 395 U.S. 906, 89 S. Ct. 1747, 23 [*59] L. Ed. 2d 219 (1969), or in favor of foreign plaintiffs alleging fraud in a foreign securities transaction, in a 10b-5 claim based either upon conduct in the United States or upon a transaction's substantial effect on United States securities markets. See Alfadda, 935 F.2d at 479-80 \(2d Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 112 S. Ct. 638 (1991); MCG, Inc. v. Great Western Energy Corp., 896 F.2d 170 \(5th Cir. 1990\); Consolidated Gold Fields PLC v. Minorco, S.A., 871 F.2d 252 \(2d Cir.\), modified, 890 F.2d 569 (2d Cir.), cert. dism'd, 492 U.S. 939, 110 S. Ct. 29, 106 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1989); Zoelsch v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 262 U.S. App. D.C. 300, 824 F.2d 27, 31-33 \(D.C. Cir.

⁴⁵ Incidentally, the English Parliament in 1980 passed The Protection of Trading Interests Act, 1980, ch. 11 (Eng.), which was primarily responsive to extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act by the United States. This legislation includes a "clawback" provision creating a cause of action in England for recovery as damages any monies awarded in a foreign jurisdiction (i.e. the United States), and actually collected, in excess of compensatory damages (i.e. Sherman Act treble damages). Of course, this statute does not indicate there is any "true conflict" between the requirements of English law and the prohibitions contained in United States antitrust, racketeering, or consumer protection laws. However, the Protection of Trading Interests Act is an indication that English and American policies differ considerably insofar as the remedies each country provides for wrongdoing.

⁴⁶ Like Rule 10b-5 violations, Sherman Act violations by foreign defendants with a direct and substantial effect on United States commerce have long been held actionable in United States courts, despite the presumption stated in Foley Bros. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. 582-83, 106 S. Ct. at 1351-54; Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 1413, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 \(1962\); Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of Am., 749 F.2d 1378, 1386 \(9th Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 472 U.S. 1032, 105 S. Ct. 3514, 87 L. Ed. 2d 643 (1985); Laker Airways Ltd. v. Sabena, Belgian World Airlines, 235 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 731 F.2d 909, 921-26 \(D.C. Cir. 1984\); see also United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416 \(1945\); cf. Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U.S. 280, 288, 73 S. Ct. 252, 256, 97 L. Ed. 319 \(1952\) (Lanham Act) (cited in EEOC, 111 S. Ct. at 1232-1233). Congress recently attempted to clarify the standard for extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act when it passed the Foreign Antitrust Improvements Act. 15 U.S.C. § 6a ("Section 1 to 7 of this title shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless . . . such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect [on interstate commerce, import commerce, or export commerce by United States exporter.]").

1987) (limiting extraterritorial application of 10b-5 in favor of foreign plaintiffs to the "conduct" test); Bersch, 519 F.2d at 985-87. Nor would EEOC appear to require courts to revisit issues concerning the extraterritorial application of other commercial statutes. See, e.g., Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U.S. 280, 286, 73 S. Ct. 252, 97 L. Ed. 319 (1952) (Lanham Act). Unless and until the Supreme Court or the Fifth Circuit directs otherwise, this Court [*60] will consider itself bound by the standard announced in MCG, Inc., 896 F.2d at 173-75 ("The first predicate for extending jurisdiction involves conduct occurring in the United States that has an effect on [U.S.] securities markets or [U.S.] investors."), and United States v. Cook, 573 F.2d 281, 283-84 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 836, 99 S. Ct. 119, 58 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1978).

[*61] Lloyd's also argues that MCG requires this Court to hold that Rule 10b-5 does not apply extraterritorially in this case. Obviously, MCG does not stand for the proposition that the presumption against extraterritoriality precludes application of Rule 10b-5 to a transaction involving the offering and sale of a security in the United States to a United States investor merely because the issuer happened to be headquartered in England, see MCG, 896 F.2d at 174 -- even if that security happened to be a participation in a Lloyd's syndicate. The reason the MCG court declined to recognize Rule 10b-5 subject matter jurisdiction under the particular facts of that case was the extraordinary length to which the American plaintiffs had gone to circumvent the United States securities laws:

Our analysis begins and ends with the district court's finding that MCG sought, through extensive machinations, to avoid the application of the federal securities laws and their attendant obligations in order to facilitate their investment in a foreign offering from which they were disqualified, doing so without the knowledge of the defendants The policy concerns that have resulted [*62] in the extension of subject matter jurisdiction are not implicated where, as here, the "foreign" purchaser seeking protection is a mere "shell" created to avoid the securities laws. Having gone to such lengths to structure a transaction not burdened by the securities laws, plaintiffs cannot expect to wrap themselves in their protective mantle when the deal sours.

MCG, 896 F.2d at 175. Lloyd's has not presented the Court with any evidence that Leslie ever attempted to structure his transaction with Lloyd's in an effort to circumvent the securities laws of the United States.

It is true that Lloyd's requires all Names to take part in a ritual ceremony in London at which certain closing documents are executed. However, this alone cannot be sufficient evidence to establish that Leslie's transaction was wholly foreign.⁴⁷ To adopt such a rule would elevate mere formalism over the economic realities of today's global financial markets. The Court is of the opinion that Lloyd's repeated emphasis on the formal closing ceremony in London is a substantial indication that Lloyd's, not Leslie, with full knowledge of the probable application of the United States securities laws to any [*63] sales of syndicate participations to United States Names,⁴⁸ attempted to circumvent the U.S. securities laws through the structure of its transactions. Further evidence of such an effort on Lloyd's part is Lloyd's take-it-or-leave-it offer in 1986 that Leslie either sign the revised General Undertaking or discontinue his underwriting activities.

[*64] Both the allegations and the evidence support the conclusion that Lloyd's transaction with Leslie was predominantly a domestic securities transaction in the United States, not a wholly foreign transaction. Lloyd's

⁴⁷ Lloyd's might have more success making this argument if the facts in this case were more similar to the facts in Hirsch v. Oakley Vaughn Underwriting, Ltd., No. H-87-3727 (S.D. Tex., Dec. 14, 1988), aff'd, 904 F.2d 704 (5th Cir., May 31, 1990) (No. 89-2563), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 981, 111 S. Ct. 511 (1990). The plaintiff in Hirsch initially contacted his underwriter through his English cousin and conducted the bulk of the transaction in England. The only meeting in Houston, the trial court said, was "to discuss a matter unrelated to this case." Slip op. at 3. The trial court concluded it was "unable to find substantial contacts with this Defendant" in the United States. Id.

⁴⁸ "See Letter from Mary E. T. Beach, Senior Associate Director of the Division of Corporate Finance, United States Securities and Exchange Commission, to Hon. Donald J. Pease, Member, United States House of Representatives 2-3 (Aug. 5, 1991) (emphasis added), reprinted in Respondent's Brief in Opposition at App. A, Riley v. Kingsley Underwriting Agencies, Ltd., 506 U.S. 1021, 113 S. Ct. 658, 121 L. Ed. 2d 584 (Dec. 7, 1992) (No. 92-664).

initially contacted Leslie in the United States and Parnell recruited Leslie by visiting him in Houston. Most of the alleged misrepresentations took place either in the United States or through postal or electronic communications in foreign commerce between the United States and England. Leslie signed the revised General Undertaking in the United States and returned it by mail to England. Leslie maintained a clean, irrevocable, letter of credit, which represented the extent of his undertaking at Lloyd's, with Texas Commerce Bank in Houston.

Moreover, this transaction was by no means an isolated event with a negligible effect upon United States citizens and securities markets.⁴⁹ [*66] Cf. Republic of Argentina v. Weltover, Inc., 504 U.S. 607, 112 S. Ct. 2160, 2167-69, 119 L. Ed. 2d 394 (1992). During the late 1970s and early to mid 1980s, evidence indicates that Lloyd's conducted a widespread and systematic campaign to recruit new Names in the United States and elsewhere. [*65] Documents published by Lloyd's show that no fewer than 2,000 United States citizens have pledged their entire personal estates to become Lloyd's Names in the last two decades.⁵⁰ Lloyd's admits that, as of December 1990, no fewer than sixty-four of these Names resided in Texas. Dkt. #21, at 2. The Court is of the opinion that Lloyd's and the registered syndicates at Lloyd's were directly involved in the distribution of securities throughout the United States, and by entering this market have elected to subject themselves to the anti-fraud and disclosure requirements of the United States securities laws.⁵¹ See Leasco Data Processing Equip. Corp., 468 F.2d at 1334 n.3.

Although much of Lloyd's business -- the (re)insurance underwriting [*67] process and most of the regulatory activity Lloyd's promised to perform -- took place in England, the focus of this lawsuit is upon the actions of Lloyd's and its agents as Lloyd's sought access to investment capital in the United States. The securities laws "recognize ⁴⁹ The Supreme Court in Republic of Argentina v. Weltover, Inc., 504 U.S. 607, 112 S. Ct. 2160, 119 L. Ed. 2d 394 (1992), held that a foreign sovereign was not immune from a suit brought in United States courts, solely by non-U.S. plaintiffs, for breach of contract, involving Argentina's unilateral restructuring of some debt securities it had issued in foreign markets. The Court not only held that issuing such debt was "commercial activity," as that term is used in the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976 ("FSIA"), but that the Argentine government's breach of contract with foreign investors had a "direct effect" in the United States. Id., __ U.S. at __, 112 S. Ct. at 2168-69. In determining that the restructuring had a "direct effect," the Court looked to the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment and the International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 158, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945) "minimum contacts" requirements for personal jurisdiction, but "only as an aid in interpreting the direct effect requirement of the [FSIA]." Republic of Argentina, __ U.S. at __, 112 S. Ct. 2169 & n.2. "By issuing negotiable debt instruments denominated in U.S. dollars and payable in New York," the Court held, "Argentina purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting [commercial] activities within the United States." Id. at 2169 (citing Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 475, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 2183, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 (1985)), and by virtue of this activity, Argentina was subject to being haled into a federal court in the United States. Id.; see also Burger King Corp., 471 U.S. at 473, 105 S. Ct. at 2182 ("We have emphasized that parties who reach out beyond one state and create continuing relationships and obligations with citizens of another state are subject to regulation and sanctions in the other state for the consequences of their activities."); Verlinden B.V. v. Central Bank of Nigeria, 461 U.S. 480, 482-83, 103 S. Ct. 1962, 1965-66, 76 L. Ed. 2d 81 (1983) (action against foreign government by foreign plaintiff, based upon Nigeria's unilateral amendment of an unconfirmed letter of credit it had established with a United States bank, is not beyond the Article III power of federal courts).

⁵⁰ The 1992 report of the Lloyd's Task Force, LLOYD'S OF LONDON, LLOYD'S: A ROUTE FORWARD 26, at Ex. 6 (1992), reports that United States Names in 1991 constituted 7.7% of the total membership base of Lloyds, or roughly 2044 out of 26,539 Names. United States Names in 1981 accounted for 6.6% of the membership base, or roughly 1263 out of 19,137 Names. In contrast, Names anywhere outside the United Kingdom in 1971 accounted for only one percent of the total membership base, or roughly sixty out of 6,020 total names.

⁵¹ MCG provides a fine example of how an issuer of securities in a foreign market can avoid the application of the United States securities laws:

As reflected in the prospectus prepared by Brown, the Great Western Shares, as foreign securities, were not registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Accordingly, they had to be offered exclusively to investors who were neither citizens, residents, nationals, nor chartered residents of the United States.

the virtually limitless scope of human ingenuity, especially in the creation of 'countless and variable schemes devised by those who seek to use the money of others on the promise of profits.'" Reves, 494 U.S. at 60, 110 S. Ct. at 949 (quoting Howey). Under the circumstances, the Court concludes that neither the location of Lloyd's headquarters nor the location of Lloyd's mandatory closing ceremony was a legal factor sufficient to entitle Lloyd's "purposefully [to] avail itself of the privilege" of access to United States investors and capital markets, see supra note 49 (quoting Republic of Argentina, __ U.S. at __, 112 S. Ct. at 2169), "on the promise of profits," Reves, 494 U.S. at 60, 110 S. Ct. at 949, without fulfilling the corresponding responsibilities that our laws require.

B. Deceptive Trade Practices Act

Lloyd's underwriters voluntarily subject themselves to the [*68] possibility of DTPA remedies for false, deceptive, or unconscionable trade practices when they sell insurance policies to Texas consumers.⁵² TEX. INS. CODE. ANN. arts. 18.23\(b\), 12.21, § 16(a) (Vernon 1981 & Supp. 1995); see, e.g., Hull & Co. v. Chandler, 889 S.W.2d 513 (Tex. App. -- Houston [14th Dist.] 1994, writ denied); Lloyd's of London v. Walker, 716 S.W.2d 99, 102-03 (Tex. App. -- Dallas 1986, writ ref'd n.r.e.); American Ins. Cos. v. Reed, 626 S.W.2d 898 (Tex. App. -- Eastland 1982, no writ); Union Indem. Ins. Co. v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, 614 F. Supp. 1015 (S.D. Tex. 1985); see also Bellefonte Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Brown, 704 S.W.2d 742, 745 (Tex. 1986); Union Pac. Resources Co. v. Aetna Casualty & Sur. Co., 894 S.W.2d 401 (Tex. App. -- Fort Worth 1994), application for writ of error filed, 38 Tex. Sup. J. 637 (May 17, 1995 (95-0473); Warrior v. Norrell, 791 S.W.2d 515 (Tex. App. -- Corpus Christi 1989, writ denied). It should hardly be surprising that the DTPA applies to transactions in interstate or foreign commerce involving the purchase of services by Texas consumers, including any "Names" Lloyd's of London sells in [*69] Texas.

By its terms, the DTPA provides that "a consumer may maintain an action where any of the following [specified deceptive acts or practices] constitute a producing cause of actual damages," HN16 TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 17.50\(a\) (Vernon 1987), without limiting, in geographic terms, the range of possible defendants. See generally Dowling v. NADW Marketing, Inc., 578 S.W.2d 475, 476 (Tex. Civ. App. -- Eastland 1979, writ ref'd n.r.e.) (despite contractual clause specifying Louisiana forum, reversing Texas trial court's dismissal of DTPA action against Louisiana corporation not registered to do business in Texas). The DTPA must be "liberally construed and applied to promote its underlying purposes, which are to protect consumers against false, misleading, and deceptive business practices" Id. § 17.44. Any interpretation of the DTPA that imposes geographic limitations upon the possible range of DTPA defendants would plainly violate this basic principle of construction.

Of course, HN17 a state may not regulate aspects of interstate commerce if Congress has expressly preempted such regulation. See, e.g., American Airlines, Inc. v. Wolens, __ U.S. __, 115 S. Ct. 817, 130 L. Ed. 2d 715, 63 U.S.L.W. 4066 \(1995\) (Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 preempts application of the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Business Practices Act to airline's retroactive [*71] changes in frequent flier program). However, when the pre-emptive effect of federal enactments is not explicit, courts sustain a local regulation unless it conflicts with federal law or would frustrate the federal scheme, or unless the courts discern from the totality of the circumstances that Congress sought to occupy the field to the exclusion of the states. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 471 U.S. 724, 747-48, 105 S. Ct. 2380, 2393, 85 L. Ed. 2d 728 (1985) (citations omitted). This Court is unaware of any federal regulation that would preempt the application of Texas consumer protection legislation to a transaction in foreign commerce involving services such as those Lloyd's promises its Names. The Court must presume that ⁵² Lloyd's conducts a considerable portion of its underwriting business with United States customers. A 1992 report by Lloyds indicates that, excluding inter-syndicate reinsurance, the United States market accounted for thirty-two percent (32%) of Lloyd's underwriting business in 1990. LLOYD'S OF LONDON, LLOYD'S: A ROUTE FORWARD 49 & Ex. 28 (1992). Only the U.K. market, which accounted for 36% of Lloyd's overall business in 1990, is more important to Lloyd's. Id. In 1989, the U.S. market was the source of twenty-eight percent (28%) of Lloyd's direct insurance premiums, but accounted for over thirty-eight percent (38.3%) of Lloyd's reinsurance premiums excluding inter-syndicate reinsurance -- more than the 31.3% share of reinsurance premiums associated with the U.K. market. Id. at 185 & Ex. 96.

Congress did not intend to preempt areas of traditional state regulation. Id. at 740, 105 S. Ct. at 2389 (citing Jones v. Rath Packing Co., 430 U.S. 519, 525, 97 S. Ct. 1305, 1309, 51 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1977)).

Nor does this appear to be a case in which the "negative" aspect of the commerce clause, which "denies the states the power unjustifiably to discriminate against or burden the interstate flow of articles of commerce," applies. *Oregon [72] Waste Sys. v. Department of Envtl. Quality of Or., U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 1345, 1349, 128 L. Ed. 2d 13 (1994); C & A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, N.Y., U.S. , 114 S. Ct. 1677, 1682, 128 L. Ed. 2d 399 (1994). It is no "unjustifiable burden" on interstate commerce to require both Texans and non-Texans, supplying goods or services to Texas consumers, to refrain from "false, misleading, and deceptive business practices, unconscionable actions, and breaches of warranty." TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE. § 17.44. Application of the DTPA to defendants located outside Texas or outside the United States, far from fostering discrimination against interstate and foreign commerce, promotes uniform application of consumer protection legislation. In this increasingly interdependent world, it would be small consolation indeed for Texas consumers if the DTPA provides a remedy only for Texas manufacturers' deceptive practices and breaches of warranty, but none for the actions of manufacturers beyond Texas's borders or on the far side of the globe. Nor should the DTPA be limited, for example, to provide certain remedies for a Houston attorney's [*73] misbehavior while rendering services to a Houston resident, but no remedy at all to Houston residents seeking services from lawyers located in London or New York.

This case would be more difficult, perhaps, if the only transactions and deceptive practices described in Leslie's pleadings occurred entirely outside this state. However, virtually all the alleged deceptive trade practices took place in Texas. The Court is of the opinion the DTPA should apply extraterritorially under the facts presented in this case.

VI. FORUM-SELECTION AND CHOICE-OF-LAW CLAUSES

In 1986, Lloyd's required Leslie to sign a revised General Undertaking. Although Lloyd's had apparently managed, for the previous three hundred years of its history, without any forum-selection or choice-of-law clauses in the agreements it required members to sign, the revised 1986 General Undertaking contained clauses which, if enforced, required Leslie to bring any claims he might have in England, for resolution according to English law.⁵³ It is undisputed that Lloyd's offered Leslie, as an alternative to signing the document, the opportunity to discontinue his underwriting activity with Lloyd's. Although other courts [*74] have elected to enforce identical clauses against other Lloyd's Names, see note 35, supra, the Court concludes that the facts of this case are sufficiently different from previous cases that the forum-selection and choice-of-law ("FS/COL") clauses should not be enforced against Robert Leslie. Because Leslie has not raised the issue, the Court will assume, if necessary for present purposes, that the FS/COL agreement was supported by adequate consideration. The Court will also assume, without deciding, that a contractual choice-of-law provision can have the effect of determining which jurisdiction's legal standards apply in all disputes between the contracting parties, including disputes not based upon the contract itself.

[*75] A. Retroactivity

Unlike all prior United States cases involving Lloyd's Names, this case presents an issue concerning the retroactive application of the Lloyd's boilerplate FS/COL clauses. Leslie commenced his underwriting activity with Lloyd's in 1977. He did not sign the revised General Undertaking until 1986. Arguably, a fair portion of his claim is based upon conduct and transactions that took place many years before 1986. Other allegations Leslie makes, however, clearly involve conduct by Lloyd's or Lloyd's agents that took place after 1986.

⁵³ The forum-selection / choice-of-law ("FS/COL") clauses, in substance, are the 1986 General Undertaking. The remainder of the revised General Undertaking consists of (1) an agreement "to comply with the provisions of [the] Lloyds Acts," subordinate legislation, and decisions of designated Lloyd's officials, (2) a clause continuing the FS/COL clauses in effect "notwithstanding that the member ceases, for any reason, to be a Member of . . . Lloyd's," and (3) a savings clause, in the event "any term of this Undertaking shall to any extent be invalid or unenforceable."

In contrast, the plaintiff in Riley v. Kingsley Underwriting Agencies, Ltd., 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21174, No. 91-C-1411 (D. Colo. Aug. 30, 1991), aff'd, 969 F.2d 953 (10th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1021, 113 S. Ct. 658, 121 L. Ed. 2d 584, 61 U.S.L.W. 3418 (1992), signed only one General Undertaking, before beginning any underwriting activity, which "provided that the courts of England would have exclusive jurisdiction over any dispute and that the laws of England would apply." Riley, 969 F.2d at 955. Likewise, the court in Roby v. Corporation of Lloyd's, 824 F. Supp. 336 (S.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd, 996 F.2d 1353, 1362 (2d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 385, 126 L. Ed. 2d 333, 62 U.S.L.W. 3319 (1993), pointed out that "at most five of the 109 appellants" in that case would be affected by "[a] slightly different structure [that] existed prior to 1990." Roby, 996 F.2d at 1357 n. 1. It is not clear whether any of the five exceptional Roby plaintiffs was an underwriting Name under a General Undertaking that did not contain the FS/COL clauses. The Roby court's analysis was premised upon mandatory, pre-underwriting acceptance of the FS/COL terms: "Names are required to enter directly into two agreements The 'General Undertaking' is between a Name and the Lloyd's governing bodies and contains choice of forum (England) and choice of law (English) clauses." Id. at 1357-58. In Bonny v. The Society of Lloyd's, 784 F. Supp. 1350 (N.D. Ill. May 29, 1992), 3 F.3d 156 (7th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1057, 127 L. Ed. 2d 378, 62 U.S.L.W. 3544 (1994), the plaintiffs, before underwriting, "traveled to England and executed a General Undertaking for Membership that included both forum selection [*77] and choice of law clauses." Id. 3 F.3d at 158. One prior case, Shell v. R.W. Sturge, Ltd., 850 F. Supp. 620 (S.D. Ohio 1993), aff'd, 55 F.3d 1227 (6th Cir. 1995), may have had the potential to raise this issue. See id., 850 F. Supp. at 627-28 & n.4. However, neither the Shell court nor the magistrate judge in Shell addressed the issue. Id. at 622-23, 629-30. Recently decided cases in Texas and California were filed in 1994, too recently for retroactive application of the FS/COL clauses to be an issue. See Richards v. Lloyd's of London, No. 94-1211- IEG (POR), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6888 (S.D. Cal. Apr. 28, 1995); McDade v. NationsBank of Texas, N.A., No. H-94-3714 (S.D. Tex. June 26, 1995). Finally, Hirsch v. Oakely Vaughn Underwriting, Ltd., No. H-87-3727 (S.D. Tex., Dec. 14, 1988), aff'd, 904 F.2d 704 (5th Cir., May 31, 1990) (No. 89-2563), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 981, 111 S. Ct. 511 (1990) did not address any FS/COL issue; Hirsch was decided on forum non conveniens grounds.

Therefore, the Court has little guidance in determining whether the FS/COL clauses Leslie signed in 1986 would apply only to claims arising after 1986, or whether [*78] they would also apply to claims existing before 1986 that Leslie could have filed, had he known about them. The language of the forum selection clause, which covers "any dispute and/or controversy of whatsoever nature," while not expressly retroactive, is broad and may indicate Lloyd's contemplated its retroactive application. However, the choice-of-law clause is not so sweeping in its terms:

The rights and obligations of the parties arising out of or relating to the Member's membership of, and/or underwriting of insurance business at, Lloyd's and any other matter referred to in this Undertaking shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of England.

(emphasis added). Whether this clause applies retroactively to Leslie's case is an issue subsidiary to the determination whether it is enforceable. If it must be enforced, then its interpretation necessarily depends upon English law.⁵⁴ On the other hand, if the clause is unenforceable, then it is unnecessary for this Court to determine

⁵⁴ The further possibility remains that "the laws of England," as the term is used in the General Undertaking, include English choice-of-law principles. These choice-of-law principles could potentially refer back to United States or Texas law as governing interpretation of the General Undertaking in this case, a phenomenon known as "renvoi." See Nailen v. Ford Motor Co., 873 F.2d 94, 96-97 & n.1 (5th Cir. 1989); Schexnider v. McDermott Int'l, Inc., 688 F. Supp. 234, 238-39 (W.D. La. 1988), aff'd, 868 F.2d 717, 718-19 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 851, 110 S. Ct. 150, 107 L. Ed. 2d 108 (1989); Larry Kramer, Return of the Renvoi, 66 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 979 (1991); see also Larry Kramer, Rethinking Choice of Law, 90 Colum. L. Rev. 277 (1990); cf. Klaxon v Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., 313 U.S. 487, 496-97, 61 S. Ct. 1020, 85 L. Ed. 1477 (1941) (practice of federal diversity courts to look to the choice-of-law rules of the state in which they sit, and from there to the law of another jurisdiction, resembles a form of renvoi called "transmission"). Of course, the tricky question of what law provides the substantive rule of decision concerning the retroactivity issue is largely irrelevant if the substantive rule is the same in both England and the United States. See Kramer, whether it is retroactive. Because the Court is not necessarily required to reach and decide the retroactivity issue, it is proper for the Court to focus first on [*79] whether the FS/COL clauses are enforceable against Leslie.

[*80] B. What law governs?

Although it may seem surprising, the enforceability of the Lloyd's FS/COL clauses is a matter of United States maritime law, and this Court considers itself so bound. Until the Sixth Circuit expressly identified, but elected not to address, this choice-of-law issue, see Shell, 55 F.3d at 1229, every federal court confronting the Lloyd's FS/COL clauses,⁵⁵ Bonny, 3 F.3d at 159-60; Roby, 996 F.2d at 1363; Riley, 969 F.2d at 957-58; Shell, 850 F. Supp. at 621-22, has relied upon two admiralty cases by the United States Supreme Court in determining whether the clauses are enforceable. See Carnival Cruise Lines v. Shute, 499 U.S. 585, 111 S. Ct. 1522, 1525, 113 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1991) (forum-selection clause) ("We begin by noting the boundaries of our inquiry. First, this is a case in admiralty and federal law governs the forum-selection clause we scrutinize.") (emphasis added); The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Company, 407 U.S. 1, 10, 92 S. Ct. 1907, 1913, 32 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1972) (forum-selection and exculpatory clauses) ("Courts are tending to adopt a more hospitable attitude toward forum-selection clauses. This view, advanced [*81] in the well-reasoned dissenting opinion in the instant case, is that such clauses are prima facie valid and should be enforced unless enforcement is shown by the resisting party to be "unreasonable" under the circumstances. We believe this is the correct doctrine to be followed by federal district courts sitting in admiralty.") (emphasis added). This Court will do the same. But see O'Melveny & Myers v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., U.S. , , 114 S. Ct. 2048, 2054-56, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67, 62 U.S.L.W. 4487 (1994); Texas Indus., Inc. v. Radcliff Minerals,

Return of the Renvoi, 66 N.Y.U. L. Rev. at 1012 ("First, the court must determine whether there is in fact a conflict of laws, since the mere fact that the parties disagree about the principle of law does not mean that these laws actually conflict."). However, the Court need not answer these questions unless the forum-selection clause is enforceable against Leslie.

⁵⁵ Perhaps these courts all decided, sub silentio, that the enforceability of such clauses is and should be a matter of federal common law -- something proposed in academic circles for some time. Cf. Stewart Org., Inc. v. Ricoh Corp., 487 U.S. 22, 28-29, 108 S. Ct. 2239, 2243, 101 L. Ed. 2d 22 (1988) (cited in Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc., 499 U.S. at 589, 111 S. Ct. at 1522); Caldas & Sons, Inc. v. Willingham, 17 F.3d 123, 127 & n.3 (5th Cir. 1994) (recognizing, but not deciding, this question); Kevlin Servs., Inc. v. Lexington State Bank, 46 F.3d 13, 15 (5th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (not addressing this question). However, none of them said so expressly or dealt with any Erie or Klaxon problems this might create. Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938); Klaxon, 313 U.S. 487, 61 S. Ct. 1020, 28 U.S.C. 1652, 85 L. Ed. 1477 ("The laws of the several states, except where the Constitution or treaties of the United States or Acts of Congress otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply."); see also Lampf, 501 U.S. at 355, 111 S. Ct. at 2778 (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1652). The other cases cited by the Bonny, Roby, Riley, and Shell courts, Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 473 U.S. 614, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 (1985), and Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506, 94 S. Ct. 2449, 41 L. Ed. 2d 270 (1974), involve the enforceability of arbitration agreements under authority of the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. § 1, see Scherk, 417 U.S. at 510, 94 S. Ct. at 2453 (the Act "reversed centuries of judicial hostility to arbitration agreements"), an issue this case no longer presents. See also Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., U.S. , , 115 S. Ct. 1212, 1215-16, 1219, 131 L. Ed. 2d 76, 63 U.S.L.W. 4195 (1995); Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson, 513 U.S. , , 115 S. Ct. 834, 838-39, 843, 130 L. Ed. 2d 753, 63 U.S.L.W. 4079 (1995). Of course, the Scherk exception to the rule in Wilko v. Swan, 346 U.S. 427, 74 S. Ct. 182, 98 L. Ed. 168 (1953), is no longer of any moment because Wilko has been squarely overruled. Rodriguez de Quijas Shearson/American Express, 490 U.S. 477, 484, 109 S. Ct. 1917, 1921, 104 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1989). Moreover, one commentator has argued:

A final issue not adequately addressed by the Seventh Circuit in Bonny is the possibility that the solicitation of the plaintiffs in the United States to invest in Lloyd's would constitute sufficient contacts to overcome the presumptive validity of the forum selection and choice-of-law clauses. The majority in Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co. conceded that there may be some situations where the foreign contacts are so insignificant or attenuated that the principles of Wilko should still apply. This concession was in response to the dissent's concern in Scherk that the majority's analysis could result in American investors being forced to arbitrate their claims in a foreign country despite the fact that material misrepresentations inducing them to invest in a foreign corporation were made in the United States; a fact pattern very similar to Bonny.

451 U.S. 630, 640-43, 101 S. Ct. 2061, 2067-68, 68 L. Ed. 2d 500 \(1981\). If this approach is in error, the Court is confident that the error will be corrected promptly, either on interlocutory appeal or on petition for writ of certiorari. The Court will review the magistrate's recommendations de novo.

[*82] C. Analysis

This Court has no doubt that the courts of England can be every bit as impartial, learned and fair as federal and state courts located in Texas. See Roby, 996 F.2d at 1363; Riley, 969 F.2d at 958. Even though it may be true, at least as a sweeping generalization, that fair trials are available on either side of the Atlantic, the choice of forum in this case is by no means inconsequential; if it were, the issue would not be so hotly contested. The issue the Court must decide is whether it is required dismiss Leslie's action so he may refile it in England. Therefore, the Court will only address the enforceability of the Lloyd's choice-of-law clause insofar as it operates in tandem with the forum selection clause.⁵⁶ See Mitsubishi Motors Corp. v. Soler Chrysler-Plymouth, 473 U.S. 614, 637 & n.19, 105 S. Ct. 3346, 3359 & n.19, 87 L. Ed. 2d 444 \(1985\) ("We merely note that in the event the choice-of-forum and choice-of-law clauses operated in tandem as a prospective waiver of a party's right to pursue statutory remedies for antitrust violations, we would have little hesitation in condemning the agreement as against public policy.") (citing Redel's, Inc. v. General Elec. Co., 498 F.2d 95, 98-99 \(5th Cir. 1974\)). The scope and effect of the Lloyd's choice-of-law clause, as it applies to the adjudication of Leslie's substantive rights in a United States court, is not an issue that requires immediate resolution. At this juncture, any such decision would be purely advisory.

[*84] HN18 [↑]

United States admiralty law treats forum selection clauses as presumptively enforceable:⁵⁷ [*87]

⁵⁶ Both parties and all U.S. courts that have examined the matter appear to agree that enforcement of the Lloyd's forum-selection clause will operate "in tandem" with the Lloyd's choice-of-law clause to render any 10b-5, section 12\(2\), or RICO cause of action unenforceable in England. See Bonny, 3 F.3d at 160-61; Roby, 996 F.2d at 13645; Riley, 969 F.2d at 958; Shell, 850 F. Supp. at 622-23; see also Jennifer M. Eck, Note, Turning Back the Clock: A Judicial Return to Caveat Emptor for U.S. Investors in Foreign Markets, 19 N.C. J. Int'l L. & Comm. Reg. 313 (1994) (criticizing Bonny v. Society of Lloyd's) ("The Seventh Circuit still failed . . . adequately [to] address the issue of whether plaintiffs were prospectively waiving their Securities Act remedies because the court's analysis ignored the fact that remedies available in England are not substantially similar to U.S. statutory remedies."). The possibility is intriguing that English courts might recognize that "modern approaches assume that . . . legislative jurisdictions of different states overlap," and conclude that it is not inconsistent with English law to enforce rights based upon certain United States statutes, see Larry Kramer, Return of the Renvoi, 66 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 979, 990, 991 ("The traditional theory purports to find a complete scheme for determining the parties' rights in the principle of territoriality. . . . But the territorial principle does not resolve cases that involve transactions or occurrences connected to several states, because applying the law of any (and none) of these states is consistent with its premise."); see also Laker Airways Ltd. v. Sabena, Belgian World Airlines, 235 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 731 F.2d 909, 921-26 \(D.C. Cir. 1984\) (discussing overlapping bases for national legislative jurisdiction), or even that English courts might conclude that choice-of-law or comity principles require them, in appropriate cases, to enforce legal rights grounded upon United States statutes so long as those statutory rights are not inconsistent with English public policy. Cf. K.D.F. v. Rex, 878 S.W.2d 589, 593-96 \(Tex. 1994\) (discussing principles of comity concerning the enforcement of another sovereign's laws in the interstate context). However, Riley, Roby, Bonny, and Shell reinforce the conclusion that enforcement of the FS/COL clauses necessarily precludes Leslie's enforcement in England of any right arising under the 1934 Securities Exchange Act or the DTPA.

⁵⁷ English law, apparently, is not far different. See The Bremen, 407 U.S. at 11 n.12, 92 S. Ct. at 1914 n. 12; Ted. L. Stein, Jurisprudence and Jurists' Prudence: The Iranian-Forum Clause Decisions of the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal, 78 AM. J. INT'L. L. 1, 21-22 \(1984\) (comparing United States and English law). In Texas, courts are not "bound by forum selection clauses if the interests of. . . public policy strongly favor jurisdiction in a forum other than the one consented to in the contract," particularly when a claim arises under the DTPA. See [Greenwood v. Tillamook Country Smoker, 857 S.W.2d 654, 656 \(Tex. App. -- Houston \[1st Dist.\] 1993, no writ\)](#); Pozero v. Alfa Travel, Inc., 856 S.W.2d 243, 244-45 \(Tex. App. -- San Antonio 1993, no writ\); Dowling v. NADW Marketing, Inc., 578 S.W.2d 475, 476 \(Tex. Civ. App. -- Eastland 1979, writ ref'd n.r.e.\); see also De Santis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 677-78 \(Tex. 1990\), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1048, 111 S. Ct. 755, 112 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1991\);

Such clauses are prima facie valid and should be enforced unless enforcement is shown by the resisting party to be "unreasonable" under the circumstances. . . . The choice of that forum was made in an arm's length negotiation There are compelling reasons why a freely negotiated private international agreement, unaffected by fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power . . . should be given full effect. . . . A contractual choice-of-forum clause should be held unenforceable if enforcement would contravene a strong public policy of the forum in which suit is brought, whether declared by statute or judicial decision. . . . Courts have also suggested that a forum clause, even though it is freely bargained for and contravenes no important policy of the forum, may nevertheless be "unreasonable" and unenforceable if the chosen forum is seriously inconvenient for the trial of the action. . . .

The Bremen, 407 U.S. at 11-16, 92 S. Ct. at 1913-16. Although the magistrate considered it important that the 1986 General Undertaking is an adhesion contract, that [*85] fact alone is not determinative.⁵⁸ Carnival Cruise Lines, 499 U.S. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1527 ("We do not adopt the Court of Appeals' determination that a nonnegotiated forum-selection clause in a form ticket contract is never enforceable simply because it is not the subject of bargaining."). The Supreme Court in Carnival Cruise Lines recognized three policies supporting such clauses:

First, a cruise line has an interest in limiting the fora in which it could be subject to suit. . . . It is not unlikely that a mishap on a cruise could subject a cruise line to litigation in several different fora. . . . Additionally, [such] a clause . . . has the salutary effect of dispelling any confusion about where suits arising from the contract must be brought and defended. . . . Finally, it stands to reason that passengers who purchase tickets containing a forum selection clause benefit in the form of reduced fares. . . .

Id. 499 U.S. at __ 111 S. Ct. at 1527. There is no evidence in the record that Leslie obtained any benefit in the form of reduced or refunded membership or transaction fees after executing the 1986 General Undertaking. Nor can Lloyd's [*86] make as clear a case for an interest in limiting potential fora for lawsuits. First, Lloyd's employs lawyers throughout the world in connection with its insurance business and litigates frequently outside England. Second, Lloyd's has been in operation for over three hundred years, yet Lloyd's only started using forum clauses around 1980 and only required them in 1986.

While it can be argued that few Lloyd's Names were citizens of any country other than England prior to 1970, the fact remains that the introduction of the forum-selection clause did not coincide with Lloyd's initial efforts to recruit Names outside England. Rather, Names started signing agreements containing the clauses around 1980, see Riley, 969 F.2d at 955, at which time Lloyd's had already recruited heavily outside England. See supra note 50. Therefore, the clause coincides more closely with Lloyd's efforts in Parliament to seek passage of the 1982 Lloyd's Act. Nor does it appear Lloyd's realized the need for uniformity in 1980 and promptly sought [*88] to have all foreign Names sign the revised General Undertaking. Rather, Lloyd's mandated the revised General Undertaking in 1986, just as reports started to surface that American Names planned to sue Lloyd's, and shortly before it became impossible for Lloyd's to continue concealing the extent of its problems.

The situation of Lloyd's Names differs from the situation of cruise line passengers in another important respect. In Carnival Cruise Lines, 499 U.S. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1524, the Schuttles lived in Washington and took a cruise to Mexico. Other injured passengers could have come from Nebraska, North Dakota, Asia, or Australia. Carnival did not necessarily conduct cruise operations in all of these locations. In contrast, Lloyd's purposely came into the United States to recruit Names, and recruited Leslie in the state of his domicile. Lloyd's Names like Leslie have a much stronger interest in litigating in their domicile state than would cruise passengers like the Schuttles, injured during a cruise in a foreign land, distant from both their own domicile and Carnival's headquarters.

Duncan v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 665 S.W.2d 414, 431 (Tex. 1984), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1058, 111 S. Ct. 755, 112 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1991); First Commerce Realty Investors v. K-F Land Co., 617 S.W.2d 806, 807-08 (Tex. Civ. App. -- Houston [14th Dist.] 1981, writ ref'd n.r.e.).

⁵⁸ Lloyd's of course objects that the 1986 General Undertaking is not an adhesion contract. As a standard-form contract without negotiable terms, drafted by Lloyd's, and offered to Leslie on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, the revised General Undertaking is by definition an adhesion contract. See Carnival Cruise Lines, 499 U.S. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1527; id. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1530-31 (Stevens, J., dissenting).

The only salutary effect of the Lloyd's clause, therefore, is the possibility of "dispelling [*89] confusion about where suits . . . must be brought." This effect must, of course, be balanced against the effect the clause might have on Names' substantive rights. Notably, both the Roby court and the Bonny court expressed "serious concerns that Lloyd's clauses operate as a prospective waiver of statutory remedies for securities violations." Bonny, 3 F.3d at 160; Roby, 996 F.2d at 1363 ("We depart somewhat from the Riley court with respect to the fourth factor. We believe that there is a serious question whether United States public policy has been subverted by the Lloyd's clauses."). This Court finds no reason to believe this effect on Names' substantive rights was inadvertent or accidental.

1. Fraud

The 1986 General Undertaking is generally understood to operate in tandem with the 1982 Lloyd's Act to deprive Names of any common law cause of action against Lloyd's not based upon Lloyd's "bad faith," and any claim based upon United States statutory rights. See Bonny, 3 F.3d at 161. The Bonny court permitted dismissal of a lawsuit in favor of an English forum only after Lloyd's "stipulated that it would not raise the [Lloyd's Act qualified immunity] [*90] defense." Id. at 162-63. Lloyd's has not offered to make any such stipulation in this case. Even if the FS/COL clauses, in tandem with the Lloyd's Act, do not in fact operate to deprive American Names of important remedies, the federal securities laws among them, substantial evidence exists that Lloyd's did its level best to make it so. Moreover, neither Lloyd's nor Sturge disclosed important information, available to Lloyd's insiders, about asbestos and pollution risks and the "loading" of outside syndicates, before Lloyd's insisted that Leslie and other Names sign the 1986 General Undertaking. Lloyd's and Sturge never informed Leslie of the probable or intended effect of the 1986 General Undertaking on his legal rights. Rather, Sturge represented to Leslie shortly before Lloyd's issued the document that the 1982 Lloyd's Act had a beneficial effect on Names' rights and regulatory protections. In a letter discussing the 1986 documents Leslie had to sign, Sturge represented that documents contained "few variations of substance." None of the notices Leslie received even mentioned the FS/COL clauses.

HN19 [↑] The presumption that a forum-selection clause is reasonable may be overcome by a [*91] strong showing that "[Leslie's] accession to the forum clause" was obtained "by fraud or overreaching." Carnival Cruise Lines, 499 U.S. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1528; The Bremen, 407 U.S. at 12, 92 S. Ct. at 1914 ("fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power"). The Court concludes that Leslie's accession to the forum selection clause was the product of fraud on the part of Lloyd's and Sturge. Although Leslie has dropped Sturge as a defendant, that is irrelevant in determining whether this clause is enforceable.

The Fifth Circuit recently stated:

HN20 [↑] Texas law defines fraud as misrepresentation of a material fact with intention to induce action or inaction, [and] reliance on the misrepresentation by a person who, as a result of such reliance, suffers injury. A defendant's failure to disclose a material fact is fraudulent only if the defendant has a duty to disclose that fact. A duty to speak may arise by operation of law or by agreement of the parties. In the absence of an agreement, there must be some special relationship between the parties The nondisclosing party must have knowledge of the facts it withheld.

Trustees of the Northwest Laundry and Dry Cleaners Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Burzynski, 27 F.3d 153, 157 (5th Cir.), reh'g denied, 38 F.3d 571 (5th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1110, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1075, 63 U.S.L.W. 3625 (1995). The evidence is sufficient to support a finding that, at the time Leslie signed the revised General Undertaking, Lloyd's and Sturge both had a duty to disclose material facts to Leslie, either by agreement or due to a special relationship. Lloyd's and Sturge engaged in misrepresentations, misleading partial disclosures, and nondisclosures of material facts in conjunction with Lloyd's announcement that Leslie was required to sign the 1986 General Undertaking. Moreover, Lloyd's directed Sturge and other Members' Agents to instruct Members, such as Leslie, that their failure to sign the 1986 General Undertaking would result in termination of their underwriting memberships. At Lloyd's behest, Sturge so informed Leslie on two occasions. If any reasonable outside Name had known what insiders at Lloyd's knew in the summer of 1986, that Name most certainly would have preferred to terminate or suspend his or her underwriting activity with Lloyd's. [*93] Nevertheless, Leslie signed the General Undertaking, as Lloyd's intended, in reliance upon representations and reassurances by Lloyd's and its agent, Sturge. Leslie has suffered injury because the 1986 General Undertaking, if enforced, limits his substantive rights to sue for deceptive trade practices and securities fraud.

Leslie's reliance on Lloyd's representations was not reasonable. Leslie was a graduate of the University of Texas Law School and a sophisticated businessman. A cursory reading of the 1986 General Undertaking would have revealed that it contained the FS/COL clauses. Leslie certainly was capable of investigating the provisions of the Lloyd's Act. However, Texas law does not require proof that Leslie's reliance on representations and nondisclosures by Lloyd's and Sturge was reasonable. Martin v. MBank El Paso, N.A., 947 F.2d 1278, 1281 (5th Cir. 1991); Koral Indus. v. Security-Connecticut Life Ins. Co., 802 S.W.2d 650, 651 (Tex. 1990) (per curiam) ("Failure to use due diligence to suspect or discover someone's fraud will not act to bar the defense of fraud to the contract."). Therefore, Lloyd's and Sturge obtained Leslie's accession to the forum selection clause [*94] by fraud.

2. Overreaching

Even if the forum selection clause was not obtained by fraud, it was the product of overreaching. The plaintiffs in Carnival Cruise Lines, 499 U.S. at __, 111 S. Ct. at 1528 (emphasis added) "were given notice of the forum provision and, therefore, presumably retained the option of rejecting the contract with impunity." Likewise, every other Lloyd's Name who has sued in the United States signed a General Undertaking containing the FS/COL clauses "in an arm's length negotiation," The Bremen, 407 U.S. at 12, 92 S. Ct. at 1914, because they signed before becoming Names -- not when they had already been Names for nearly a decade.

Lloyd's was the named beneficiary of a clean, irrevocable letter of credit Leslie had posted with Texas Commerce Bank, with a face amount exceeding $ 100,000. Lloyd's clearly instructed Leslie that the 1986 General Undertaking was a take-it-or-leave-it offer: He had the choice of signing it or terminating his underwriting membership. Leslie's accession to the 1986 General Undertaking was certainly not an "arm's length" transaction which Leslie had the option of rejecting with impunity.

3. Public policy

[*95] Other courts examining the public policy issue have reasoned that the waiver effect of the 1986 General Undertaking does not violate United States public policy because United States Names can sue in England for common-law fraud, relief under the Misrepresentation Act, or for breach of contractual duties. However, the 1986 General Undertaking violates public policy in this case because it effectively waives Leslie's rights under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices -- Consumer Protection Act. Moreover, this Court would argue that Riley, Roby, Bonny, and Shell are wrongly reasoned. Because the General Undertaking operates as both a prospective waiver of the United States securities laws and a waiver of unknown securities fraud claims, it violates public policy.

The Roby and Bonny courts reasoned that English law provides remedies that are good enough to serve the goal of deterring fraud and misleading nondisclosures in securities transactions, even though United States securities fraud remedies are unavailable in England. However, the Rule 10b-5 remedy is significantly more powerful, and reaches a broader range of manipulative or deceptive devices "in connection [*96] with the purchase or sale of a security," than common-law fraud -- including, for example, "churning," "scalping," and trading on pre-publication knowledge of the contents of newspaper reports. See supra note 42. It is not at all apparent that common-law remedies alone are equivalent to Rule 10b-5 for the purpose of addressing the "loading" of insurance syndicates; nor is it evident that English law provides a fully adequate remedy. Congress has expressly legislated against waivers involving securities fraud remedies. 15 U.S.C. §§ 77n, 78cc. HN21¹⁵ In dealing with federal securities, the general rule is that unknown or subsequently maturing causes of action may not be waived.¹⁶ Petro-Ventures, Inc. v. Takessian, 967 F.2d 1337, 1340-42 (5th Cir. 1992) (emphasis added).

Notwithstanding the provisions of the securities laws expressly voiding any private agreement waiving compliance with provisions of the laws, settlements of claims arising from acts which are violations of the securities laws are not void as a matter of law, at least where such settlement agreements do not themselves continue the precise conduct which violates the laws. But judicial hostility toward waivers [*97] of statutory rights requires that the right to private suit extended by the securities laws for alleged violations be scrupulously preserved against unintentional or involuntary relinquishment. . . . Waiver by subsequent conduct that does not take the form of a settlement, is against the policy of the securities laws.

MBank Fort Worth, N.A. v. Trans Meridian, Inc., 820 F.2d 716, 725-26 \(5th Cir.\) (emphasis added) (quoting Murtagh v. University Computing Co., 490 F.2d 810 \(5th Cir. 1974\), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 835, 42 L. Ed. 2d 62, 95 S. Ct. 62 (1974)), reh'g denied, 826 F.2d 391 \(5th Cir. 1987\). The public policy against waivers of securities law remedies is not satisfied merely by the availability of some remotely similar common law or statutory misrepresentation remedy; subject to limited exceptions, such as voluntary settlements, the 1933 and 1934 Acts require that all such waivers are void.

Even if public policy is satisfied by the availability of a common law "bad faith" or fraud remedy for securities violations, the 1986 General Undertaking violates public policy because it operates as a waiver of Leslie's DTPA rights. "The DTPA does not represent [*98] a codification of the common law. A primary purpose of the DTPA is to provide consumers a cause of action for deceptive trade practices without the burden of proof and numerous defenses encountered in a common law fraud or breach of warranty suit." Bank One, Texas, N.A., 970 F.2d at 28; Eagle Properties Ltd., 807 S.W.2d at 724; Alvarado, 749 S.W.2d at 48; Smith, 611 S.W.2d at 616 (emphasis added). A waiver of Leslie's DTPA rights may not be enforced unless Lloyd's pleads and proves (1) Leslie was not in a significantly disparate bargaining position, (2) Leslie was represented by legal counsel, (3) the transaction involved consideration in excess of $ 500,000, (4) the waiver was made in an express provision, (5) in a written contract, and (6) signed by both Leslie and Leslie's counsel. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 17.42 (Vernon 1987 & Supp. 1995). Anything less is "contrary to public policy and is unenforceable and void." Id. Therefore, the Court is not required to enforce the forum selection clause in Lloyd's 1986 General Undertaking as it applies to Robert Leslie.

VII. COMITY

Lloyd's argues that principles of international comity "require this Court [*99] to stay its hand to require Leslie to resolve this dispute in England." Dkt. #5, at 19-21. Reviewing the magistrate's recommendation de novo, the Court is of the opinion that international comity neither requires it to refrain from exercising personal jurisdiction over Lloyd's nor requires it to refrain from exercising subject-matter jurisdiction under the 1934 Securities Exchange Act and the DTPA. The magistrate's recommendation should therefore be affirmed.

Concerning personal jurisdiction, Lloyd's interest in having disputes concerning its transactions with American Names resolved in English courts is apparent -- but the Court cannot fathom what interest English courts might have in adjudicating claims concerning an English defendant's activities in the United States. Aside from a rather peculiar internal structure Lloyd's is no different from any other English business entity and should reasonably anticipate subjecting itself to personal jurisdiction in foreign courts when it does business abroad. Even if Lloyd's U.S. transactions had been conducted by the English sovereign, there would still in all probability be a basis for personal jurisdiction under the principle [*100] of restrictive sovereign immunity. See Republic of Argentina, __ U.S. at, 112 S. Ct. at 2167-69. Surely English business entities are not entitled to treatment more favorable than their own sovereign. Thus, comity provides no basis for this Court to decline to exercise personal jurisdiction.

Concerning subject matter jurisdiction, the Court finds instructive the recent discussion in Hartford Fire Ins. Co., U.S. , 113 S. Ct. 2891:

Finally, we take up the question whether certain claims against the London reinsurers should have been dismissed as improper applications of the Sherman Act to foreign conduct. . . . At the outset, we note that the District Court undoubtedly had jurisdiction of these Sherman Act claims, as the London reinsurers apparently concede. . . . According to the London reinsurers, the District Court should have declined to exercise such [subject-matter] jurisdiction under the principle of international comity. The Court of Appeals agreed that courts should look to that principle . . . This availed the London reinsurers nothing, however. . . .

When it enacted the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 [^{*101}] Congress expressed no view on the question whether a court with Sherman Act jurisdiction should ever decline to exercise such jurisdiction on grounds of international comity. . . . We need not decide that question here, however, for even assuming that in a proper case a court may decline to exercise Sherman Act jurisdiction over foreign conduct . . . international comity would not counsel against exercising jurisdiction here.

The only substantial question is whether "there is in fact a true conflict between domestic and foreign law." . . . The London reinsurers contend that applying the Act to their conduct would conflict significantly with British law, and the British Government, appearing before us as amicus curiae concurs. They assert that . . . the conduct alleged here was perfectly consistent with British law and policy. But this is not to state a conflict. "The fact that conduct is lawful in the state in which it took place will not, of itself, bar application of the United States antitrust laws," even where the foreign State has a strong policy to permit or encourage such conduct. . . . Since the London reinsurers do not argue the British law requires them to act in some [^{*102}] fashion prohibited by the law of the United States . . . or claim that their compliance with the laws of both countries is otherwise impossible, we see no conflict with British law.

Id. U.S. at __, 113 S. Ct. at 2909-11 (emphasis added). ⁵⁹ English law, by permitting Lloyd's to self-regulate, may or may not permit Lloyd's to engage in manipulative or deceptive practices and nondisclosures in its dealings with Names. However, the Court is unaware of any provision of English law which requires Lloyd's and its Members' Agents to do so. Nor does it appear that permission for Lloyd's to engage in deceptive business practices and securities fraud, if Lloyd's in fact has such permission, furthers any legitimate interest or policy of the English government. Indeed, the analysis in Bonny, 3 F.3d at 159-62, and Roby, 996 F.2d at 1363-1366, indicates that English law treats fraudulent and deceptive business practices with disfavor. Thus, enforcement by United States courts of the United States securities and consumer protection laws against English defendants doing business with United States citizens in the United States, far from generating [^{*103}] an irreconcilable conflict with the requirements and prohibitions of English law, tends to promote the underlying policies reflected in English law, as well as United States policies and interests. Lloyd's compliance with both English and American law, in its transactions with United States Names, is by no means "impossible," see Hartford, at __, 113 S. Ct. at 2911, and certainly does not create a "true conflict," id. at __, 113 S. Ct. at 2910, such that international comity would require this court to decline to exercise subject matter jurisdiction under the 1934 Act and the DTPA.

[*104] VIII. FORUM NON CONVENIENS

Finally, Lloyd's contends that Houston is an inconvenient forum for this litigation, compared with London. After considering the relevant factors, the magistrate concluded that Leslie's action should not be dismissed on forum non conveniens grounds.

HN22 [A] plaintiff's choice of forum should rarely be disturbed. However, when an alternative forum has jurisdiction to hear the case, and when trial in the chosen forum would "establish . . . oppressiveness and vexation to a defendant . . . out of all proportion to the plaintiff's convenience," or when the "chosen forum [is] inappropriate because of considerations affecting the court's own administrative and legal problems," the court may, in the exercise of its sound discretion, dismiss the case.

⁵⁹ As mentioned above, see supra note 45, the English Parliament has passed a specific act to counter extraterritorial application of the Sherman Act, including a "clawback" provision to counter treble damage awards. The Supreme Court in Hartford Fire Ins. Co. nevertheless held that international comity would not require United States courts to refrain from exercising Sherman Act jurisdiction. Lloyd's has not directed the Court's attention to any comparable English legislation intended to counter application of United States securities and consumer protection laws to English businesses conducting transactions in the United States.

Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 242, 102 S. Ct. 252, 258, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 (1981) (quoting from Koster v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 330 U.S. 518, 524, 67 S. Ct. 828, 833, 91 L. Ed. 1067 (1947)); cf. id. at 249, 102 S. Ct. at 262 ("Similarly in Koster, the Court rejected the contention that where a trial would involve inquiry into the internal affairs of a foreign [*105] corporation, dismissal was always appropriate."); see also TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 71.051(b) (Vernon Supp. 1995). In this case, unlike Piper Aircraft Co., the plaintiff is a United States citizen, who resides in the state and district of the court in which he filed suit. Piper Aircraft Co., 454 U.S. at 255-56, 102 S. Ct. at 266; see also TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 71.051(f)(1), (2) (Vernon Supp. 1995).⁶⁰ Therefore, the Court is precluded from weakening the presumption in Leslie's favor.

HN23 [↑]

The forum non conveniens determination is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. It may be reversed only when there has been a clear abuse of discretion; where the court has considered all relevant public and private interest factors, and where its balancing of these factors is reasonable, [*106] its decision deserves substantial deference. Piper Aircraft Co., 454 U.S. at 257, 102 S. Ct. at 266. The standard of review that applies when a trial court reviews the determinations of a magistrate is unclear; out of an abundance of caution, however, the Court shall review the magistrate's ruling de novo. Dkt. #43, at 15-17. The magistrate considered: (1) the applicable law, (2) sources of proof, (3) access to witnesses, (4) relative ease to the parties of conducting litigation in a foreign country, (5) potential conflict of laws problems, (6) likelihood that the defendant's misconduct in the United States will be repeated, and (7) access to a forum providing full and complete redress of wrongs.

The Court is of the opinion that the magistrate's reasoning was largely correct, and adopts as its own all but one of her findings. It is not true that a United States court trying this case can avoid difficult issues concerning choice-of-law and the substantive standards of English law. However, an English court would necessarily face difficult problems involving comity, choice-of-law, and the potential application of complex and unfamiliar United States statutes -- problems it could [*107] only avoid by ignoring altogether both United States law and the legal rights of a United States citizen to the extent his rights depend upon the securities and consumer protection statutes. Moreover, a court sitting in the United States should not be overwhelmed by the possibility of referring to English common law, or even to the English statutes likely to apply in the present dispute. The relevant factor is "the avoidance of unnecessary problems in the conflict of laws," see Piper Aircraft Co., 454 U.S. at 241 n.6, 102 S. Ct. at 258 n.6, and the Court is of the opinion that such problems, if any, necessarily arise in this case, and cannot in fairness be avoided simply by dismissing this action in favor of an English forum. This Court is willing, and duty bound, to address and resolve such issues as they arise. Considering the totality of circumstances, this ground is not sufficient to warrant denying Leslie access to his chosen forum.

A more difficult administrative problem the magistrate did not address is Leslie's ability to collect a judgment in the event he prevails with his claim in a United States court. England and the United States are not parties to any treaty [*108] providing for the reciprocal enforcement of judgments. However, it would appear that Lloyd's does a considerable volume of business in the United States, see supra note 52, and that Lloyd's maintains accounts in the United States. Continued unimpeded access to the income stream from United States premiums would appear to be an asset of significant value to Lloyd's. Because the judgments of the United States District Courts are entitled to full faith and credit throughout the United States, U.S. CONST., art. 4, § 1; 28 U.S.C. § 1738; In re Humphreys, 880 S.W.2d 402, 405 (Tex.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 427, 130 L. Ed. 2d 340 (1994); see also Migra v. Warren City Sch. Dist. Bd. of Ed., 465 U.S. 75, 80-82, 104 S. Ct. 892, 896, 79 L. Ed. 2d 56 (1984); Daniels v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y of the U.S., 35 F.3d 210, 213 (5th Cir. 1994) (discussing 28 U.S.C. § 1738 in context of issue preclusive effect of state court judgments in federal court), the Court anticipates Leslie could collect any judgment in his favor without intervention from English courts.

One final factor the Court must consider is the length of time this action has been [*109] pending in Houston, Texas. The Court has already conducted extensive evidentiary hearings and developed considerable familiarity with both the legal issues and the facts in this case. While dismissal would probably serve the administrative convenience of an individual judge, it would promote neither justice nor the collective administrative efficiency of English and American judicial systems. Nor would it advance the combined interest of the litigants in prompt and fair resolution of their dispute. Forcing the parties to start again in England, and transferring the burden of this litigation to the docket of some judge in England, would seem counterproductive from the standpoint of the public and private factors listed in Piper.

⁶⁰ The Texas forum non conveniens statute applies only to personal injury or death actions filed in state court after September 1, 1993. Therefore, it is not controlling in this case.

After weighing the public and private factors listed above, and all remaining factors listed in Piper Aircraft Co., 454 U.S. at 241 n.6, 102 S. Ct. at 258 n.6, the Court in its discretion declines to dismiss this litigation on forum non conveniens grounds.

IX. INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL

In the event this Court affirms the magistrate's recommendations on rehearing, Lloyd's has requested interlocutory review by the Fifth Circuit. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). This order involves several controlling questions of law. Because the Second, Seventh, and Tenth Circuits have either approached or resolved one or more of these issues differently, it would appear there exists a substantial ground for difference of opinion. The Court is of the opinion that an immediate appeal will materially advance the ultimate termination of this litigation -- if it remains in the United States, by narrowing and clarifying crucial legal issues, some of which are issues of first impression. The Court therefore deems it appropriate to certify this order for appeal under the authority of 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Lloyd's motion for new trial and its motion for findings of fact and conclusions of law are not appropriate at this juncture and should be DENIED.

X. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Lloyd's motion to reconsider (Dkt. #50, et seq.) is GRANTED; the memorandum and recommendation of the magistrate (Dkt. #43), upon reconsideration, is hereby AFFIRMED; Lloyd's motion and supplemental motions to dismiss (Dkt. nos. 54, 65, et seq.) are hereby DENIED; Lloyd's motion for interlocutory appeal (Dkt. #50) is GRANTED; and any other motions [*111] by Lloyd's, including Lloyd's motion for new trial and Lloyd's motion for findings of fact and conclusions of law (Dkt. #50), are DENIED. It is so ORDERED.

SIGNED this 25th day of August, 1995.

JOHN D. RAINES

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Leonard v. J.C. Pro Wear

United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit

April 5, 1995, Argued ; August 29, 1995, Decided

No. 94-1498

Reporter

1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 24340 *; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,108

JEANNINE Z. LEONARD; J. GILBERT LEONARD; DANIEL J. LEONARD, Plaintiffs-Appellants, and JOHN E. LEONARD, Plaintiff, v. J.C. PRO WEAR, INCORPORATED, d/b/a Pro Jersey; CRAIG KATCHEN; JAMES L. O'LAUGHLIN; MONTGOMERY WARD & COMPANY, Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [*1] RULES OF THE FOURTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 64 F.3d 657, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 29888.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Alexandria. Albert V. Bryan, Jr., Senior District Judge. (CA-93-545-A).

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

district court, sublicensees, plaintiffs', conspiracy, license agreement, kiosk, advertising, no evidence, commissions, grant of summary judgment, contractual, discounts, fixtures, motive, resale, summary judgment, antitrust, grant summary judgment, suppliers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

HN1[Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

A challenge to the federal courts' subject matter jurisdiction on the basis of standing to sue cannot be waived. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(h\)\(3\).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit's review of a grant of a motion for summary judgment is de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN3 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Summary judgment is justified if, from the totality of the evidence presented, including pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and affidavits, the court is satisfied that there is no genuine factual issue for trial and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). In addition, this court must draw any permissible inference from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, but the non-moving party must do more than present a "scintilla" of evidence in its favor. It must present sufficient evidence that reasonable jurors could find by a preponderance of the evidence for the non-movant. If the evidence is "merely colorable" or "not significantly probative," a motion for summary judgment may be granted.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Fraud & Misrepresentation

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Coercion & Harassment > General Overview

HN4 Causes of Action, Fraud & Misrepresentation

For a pattern of racketeering activity to exist, there must be a threat of continued criminal activity and a showing that ongoing unlawful activities pose a special threat to social well-being.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Fraud & Misrepresentation

HN5 Causes of Action, Fraud & Misrepresentation

A seven-month period of time is insufficient to constitute a RICO pattern in those circuits that have addressed the issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

Concerted activity is an essential element of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To survive a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case, a plaintiff must establish that there is a genuine issue of fact whether the defendant enters into an illegal conspiracy.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN8 [down] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

It is possible to establish an illegal business conspiracy by proving that lawful acts are committed with the motive to willfully and maliciously injure another in his trade or business. Va. Code Ann §§ 18.2-499 to 500.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN9 [down] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

Virginia Business Conspiracy statutes do not require proof of actual malice but only legal malice, i.e. that a defendant acts intentionally, purposely, and without lawful justification, and because it is not necessary for a plaintiff to show that defendant's primary and overriding purpose is to injure plaintiff's trade or business, in a case where all of defendant's motives are illegitimate.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Defects of Form

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN10 [down] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Defects of Form

There can be no conspiracy to do an act which the law allows. Thus, to survive demurrer, an allegation of conspiracy must at least allege an unlawful act or an unlawful purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Types of Price Discrimination > Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN11 [blue icon] Types of Price Discrimination, Brokerage, Commissions & Compensation

Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\), proscribes the payment or receipt of anything of value as a commission, brokerage or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, whether the payment of such compensation is made to a party to the transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary of a party other than the party making the payment.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Statute of Limitations, Time Limitations

The two-year statute of limitations is applicable to fraud claims. Va. Code Ann. § 8.01-243\(A\).

Counsel: ARGUED: David Thomas Ralston, Jr., LEONARD, RALSTON, STANTON & DANKS, Washington, D.C., for Appellants.

William Judah Shieber, COVINGTON & BURLING, Washington, D.C., for Appellee Montgomery Ward; John A. C. Keith, David John Gogal, BLANKINGSHIP & KEITH, P.A., Fairfax, Virginia, for Appellees Pro Wear, et al.

ON BRIEF: Thomas J. Stanton, Mary Gayle Holden, Seanan B. Murphy, LEONARD, RALSTON, STANTON & DANKS, Washington, D.C., for Appellants.

Robert D. Wick, COVINGTON & BURLING, Washington, D.C., for Appellee Montgomery Ward; Elizabeth V.C. Morrogh, BLANKINGSHIP & KEITH, P.A., Fairfax, Virginia, for Appellees Pro Wear, et al.

Judges: Before WIDENER and MICHAEL, Circuit Judges, and CHAPMAN, Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion

OPINION

PER CURIAM:

Appellants Jeannine, Gilbert, and Daniel Leonard (plaintiffs)¹ appeal from the district court's [*2] grant of summary judgment on numerous counts of a complaint alleging RICO activity, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968, several antitrust violations, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Sherman Act), 15 U.S.C. § 13\(c\) (Robinson-Patman Act), a state-law illegal business conspiracy, Va. Code §§ 18.2-499 to -500, state-law false advertising, Va. Code § 18.2-216, and breach of contract on the part of J.C. Pro Wear, Inc., Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., James O'Laughlin, and Craig Katchen. For the reasons stated below, we affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment.

[*3] HN2 Our review of the grant of a motion for summary judgment is de novo. Sylvia Development Corp. v. Calvert County, 48 F.3d 810, 817 \(4th Cir. 1995\). HN3 "Summary judgment is justified if, from the totality of the evidence presented, including pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and affidavits, the court is satisfied that there is no genuine factual issue for trial and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Sylvia Development, 48 F.3d at 817; see Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). In addition, this court must "draw any permissible inference from the underlying facts in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion," Sylvia Development, 48 F.3d at 817 (quotation omitted), but "the non-moving party must do more than present a 'scintilla' of evidence in its favor. . . . [It] must present sufficient evidence . . . that 'reasonable jurors could find by a preponderance of the evidence' for the non-movant If the evidence is 'merely colorable' or 'not significantly probative,' a motion for summary judgment may be granted." Sylvia Development, 48 F.3d at 818 (quotations omitted).

Taking all facts and reasonable inferences in the [*4] light most favorable to plaintiffs, the facts of this case are as follows. Pro Wear, controlled by Katchen and O'Laughlin and Karen, O'Laughlin's wife, entered into a Sidetrips Licensing Agreement with Montgomery Ward in February 1988, by which Pro Wear would lease space (kiosks) in Montgomery Ward's stores to sell licensed athletic clothing and related items. The Sidetrips Agreement was superseded by a Master Licensing Agreement in November 1989. Under both agreements, Montgomery Ward would receive a fee of 12-13% of gross sales from each Pro Jersey kiosk, and the Master Agreement included a provision for minimum rent as well. Pro Wear would then solicit and procure sublicensees to operate the Pro Jersey kiosks in certain Montgomery Ward stores.

In August 1988, Pro Wear advertised in several Virginia newspapers regarding the opportunity to "own your own" sports apparel shop. The advertisement represented that there would be "no minimum rent," and that one could "net $ 50-$ 70,000 1st year" for a "$ 39,500 investment." Plaintiffs responded to the advertisement and began discussions with Pro Wear regarding the purchase of Pro Jersey licenses. During these discussions, and in advertising [*5] and promotional documents mailed by Katchen and O'Laughlin on behalf of Pro Wear, a number of representations were made to the Leonards, including that they could net $ 50 to $ 70,000 annually per kiosk, that they needed no prior retail sales experience to operate a kiosk, and that they could build up equity in each kiosk and freely sell their ownership interest at a profit. In addition, the Pro Wear defendants omitted several facts during these negotiations, including that the defendants conducted no market analysis of the proposed kiosks, that ¹ The original plaintiffs were John, Jeannine, Gilbert, and Daniel Leonard. John Leonard has not appealed from the final order of the district court, and thus we need not decide the validity of the order of dismissal of John's claims with prejudice, which was entered after the notice of appeal was filed in this action. Defendants claim that because John Leonard's claims have been dismissed, his wife, Jeannine, has no interest in any sublicense and thus is not a proper party to this appeal. Because the complaint alleged that Mrs. Leonard did purchase interests in several of the sublicenses, Mrs. Leonard's claims do not depend upon the survival of her husband's. Thus, the defendants' suggestion that Mrs. Leonard is not a proper party to this appeal is a HN1 challenge to the federal courts' subject matter jurisdiction on the basis of her standing to sue these defendants. Such a challenge cannot be waived. See Smith v. County of Albemarle, 895 F.2d 953, 954 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 823 (1990); Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(h\)\(3\).

However, the Pro Wear defendants admitted in their answer that Jeannine Leonard did purchase, with her husband, several interests in Pro Jersey kiosks, and the record evidence cited by the defendants to refute this jurisdictional fact does not establish that Mrs. Leonard owned no interest in any Pro Jersey location. Whether she owned an interest in each of them, as the complaint alleges, need not be decided here, because that is not a jurisdictional question but an issue to be proved on the merits of her claims. It is sufficient for purposes of determining jurisdiction that Mrs. Leonard has established without dispute that she owned some interest in the kiosks. We thus reject the challenge to Mrs. Leonard's standing to sue these defendants.

operation of a kiosk entailed financial risks, and that resales of Pro Jersey businesses were subject to approval by Montgomery Ward.

Plaintiffs entered into several sublicense contracts with Montgomery Ward by signing supplements to the licensing agreement stating their understanding that they were bound by the provisions of the licensing agreement.

Plaintiffs immediately began experiencing financial difficulties in operating their kiosks. As a result, in October 1992 O'Laughlin wrote a letter to Montgomery Ward suggesting that Montgomery Ward "shrink [Gilbert Leonard's store in] Springfield A.S.A.P." Montgomery Ward did so. In addition, [*6] Pro Wear refused to obtain or to guarantee payment for merchandise for several of John and Jeannine Leonard's kiosks, despite an alleged agreement to do so, upon learning that the Leonards owed Pro Wear a sum of money.

Moreover, beginning in April 1990, there was a dispute over the equity interest of sublicensees in the Montgomery Ward-Pro Wear licenses and the power of sublicensees to transfer or sell their interests. In July 1990, Montgomery Ward advised Pro Wear, in accordance with the Licensing Agreements, that sublicensees had no right to sell their sublicenses but that Montgomery Ward would permit such sales during a single 90-day period, after which it would enforce the transfer restrictions in the Master Agreement. Pro Wear notified sublicensees that, after the 90-day period, they could sell their fixtures and furnishings for a price not to exceed $ 25,000 and their inventories as they wished, but that "you can not sell your lease," and that any party interested in assuming a Pro Jersey kiosk would have to be approved by Pro Wear and Montgomery Ward.

Finally, Pro Wear, acting as the plaintiffs' agent for the procurement of supplies, accepted commissions or discounts from [*7] several suppliers on the purchase of inventories by or for the plaintiffs. These commissions and discounts were undisclosed to the plaintiffs. In exchange for these commissions and discounts, Pro Wear guaranteed plaintiffs' payment of the purchase price for supplies, although plaintiffs claim that these guarantees were required by the contracts between Pro Wear and plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs' businesses failed, and they suffered significant financial losses. They brought suit against Pro Wear, Montgomery Ward, Katchen, and O'Laughlin on numerous legal theories. On cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court granted summary judgment to the defendants on all but one count of the complaint, which count was subsequently settled. The district court entered a final order and the plaintiffs appealed therefrom.

I. Breach of Contract

Plaintiffs allege that their contract with Pro Wear consisted of a composite of various oral and written agreements, the newspaper advertisements, and the abovementioned representations and omissions, among others. This argument is without merit. The Sidetrips and the Master Licensing Agreements, both of which were provided to, read by, and subscribed [*8] by plaintiffs, contained integration clauses, stating that no prior understandings were part of the agreement and no subsequent modifications could be made unless in writing and signed by all parties. There were several ancillary written agreements made between Pro Wear and the sublicensees, but none of them is relevant to the claims made by plaintiffs.

Moreover, all actions allegedly taken by the defendants after plaintiffs entered the Licensing Agreements were properly within the terms of those agreements. Even if the plaintiffs believe they were fraudulently induced to enter the Licensing Agreements, they did not raise that claim and we express no opinion as to it. We find no evidence in the record to support plaintiffs' claim of breach of contract by Pro Wear. Nothing in the licensing agreements or the ancillary contracts promised plaintiffs any return of capital, any equity interest, or any maximum investment. The district court so found, and we agree. We, like the district court, are unwilling and unable to release plaintiffs from the terms of their bargain because they claim that they did not understand the plain language of those terms. Accordingly, we affirm the decision [*9] of the district court that there was no valid claim of breach of contract against Pro Wear.

In this context, we will now address plaintiffs' remaining claims.

II. RICO

Plaintiffs allege that Katchen, O'Laughlin, and Montgomery Ward participated in Pro Wear's solicitation of potential investors for the purpose of defrauding plaintiffs and others, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) (count one), and that Montgomery Ward collected and received income derived from a RICO enterprise, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(a\) (count two). We agree with the district court that plaintiffs' evidence of a pattern of racketeering activity is insufficient to sustain these claims.

Regarding Katchen and O'Laughlin, we agree with the district court that no pattern of racketeering activity has been established by the plaintiffs. HN4 [↑] For such a pattern to exist, there must be "a threat of continued criminal activity," H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. 229, 239, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 \(1989\), and a showing that "ongoing unlawful activities . . . pose a special threat to social well-being." Menasco, Inc. v. Wasserman, 886 F.2d 681, 684 \(4th Cir. 1989\).

In contrast, the scheme allegedly engaged in by Katchen [*10] and O'Laughlin was narrowly focused, with the single purpose of procuring the Leonards' investment in sublicenses for the Montgomery Ward licenses. See International Data Bank, Ltd. v. Zepkin, 812 F.2d 149, 155 \(4th Cir. 1987\). There is no evidence in the record that anyone other than the Leonards was defrauded or was the subject of a scheme to defraud by Katchen and O'Laughlin. See Myers v. Finkle, 950 F.2d 165, 169 \(4th Cir. 1991\); Menasco, 886 F.2d at 684; Zepkin, 812 F.2d at 154 (prospectus defrauding ten investors does not constitute RICO pattern). Moreover, the Leonards have presented no evidence of fraud other than the advertisements, solicitation materials, representations, and omissions made by Pro Wear in inducing the Leonards to invest in the kiosks, all of which occurred over HN5 [↑] a sevenmonth period. This period of time has been held to be insufficient to constitute a RICO pattern in those circuits that have addressed the issue. See Primary Care Investors, Seven, Inc. v. PHP Healthcare Corp., 986 F.2d 1208, 1215 \(7th Cir. 1993\) (eleven-month scheme "insubstantial" under RICO); Hughes v. Consol-Pennsylvania Coal Co., 945 F.2d 594, 609-11 \(3d Cir. 1991\) [*11] (twelve months insubstantial for RICO purposes), cert. denied, 60 U.S.L.W. 3600, 3812, 3815 (U.S. June 1, 1992); see also H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 242 ("Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy [the continuity] requirement."); Menasco, 886 F.2d at 684 (noting that the fraudulent transaction in that case "took place over approximately one year," and stating that "clearly, these acts do not constitute" a RICO pattern). While we do not hold that a seven-month scheme is per se insufficient to establish a RICO claim, we think it evident on these facts that the district court properly granted summary judgment to Katchen and O'Laughlin on count one.

Accordingly, we find insufficient evidence that Montgomery Ward was participating in RICO activity. We also note that there is almost no evidence in the record that Montgomery Ward knew of any of the alleged acts of fraud committed by Katchen and O'Laughlin. We thus affirm the grant of summary judgment as to Montgomery Ward on count one.

Because there was insufficient evidence of any RICO activity from which Montgomery Ward could have received proceeds, the [*12] district court was correct in granting summary judgment to Montgomery Ward on count two.

III. Antitrust

A. Sherman Act

The district court granted summary judgment to the defendants on plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims because there was no injury to competition and because defendants' actions with respect to these claims were permissible under both Licensing Agreements.

Initially, we agree with the district court that the defendants' restrictions on the resale or assignment of plaintiffs' sublicenses were permissible under the plain language of the Licensing Agreements. Plaintiffs allege in count three that these contract restrictions constitute an unlawful restraint of trade. This assertion is patently without merit. Contrary to plaintiffs' assertion, they did not bargain for the right to freely assign their interests. Plaintiffs have demonstrated no anticompetitive effects of the contractual no-assignment restrictions. We agree with the reasoning of Clarke v. Amerada Hess Corp., 500 F. Supp. 1067, 1072 \(S.D.N.Y. 1980\), that "the problem with [plaintiff's] theory is that . . . these 'restraints' flow from one source: [Montgomery Ward's] retention of property rights [*13] in the dealership." The contractual prohibition on assignment or resale in this case is not an antitrust violation, and we affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment on count three.

In count four, plaintiffs allege that the $ 25,000 limit on the resale price of sublicensees' fixtures and furnishings constitutes illegal price-fixing and is a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Initially, there is no record evidence that Montgomery Ward was in any way involved in the establishment of this $ 25,000 limit on furniture and fixtures resales, and count four was properly dismissed as to it. Thus, there is no evidence of any combination or conspiracy between Pro Wear and Montgomery Ward with respect to the $ 25,000 limit. See,e.g., Stephen Jay Photography, Ltd. v. Olan Mills, Inc., 903 F.2d 988, 994 (4th Cir. 1990) HN6¹⁵ ("Concerted activity is an essential element of a section 1 claim. . . . HN7¹⁶ To survive a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case, a plaintiff must establish that there is a genuine issue of fact whether the defendant entered into an illegal conspiracy."). So there is no liability of Montgomery Ward on that account.

To the extent that Pro Wear [*14] may unilaterally have purported to impose a vertical restraint on the resale price of its sublicensees' fixtures and furniture, it did so without any authority whatsoever, contractual or otherwise. Plaintiffs purchased their fixtures and furniture independently of the Licensing Agreements, and so far as this record shows remained free to remove their fixtures and furnishings and resell these items at whatever price they might obtain on the open market. Although Pro Wear's conduct may be in violation of its contract with plaintiffs or other law, we have no doubt that the unilateral and unauthorized imposition of a resale price maximum on plaintiffs' fixtures and furnishings does not constitute a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade for purposes of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, the district court correctly granted summary judgment to defendants on count four.

Plaintiffs do not argue in their briefs any impropriety of the district court's grant of summary judgment on count five, which alleged an illegal price-fixing agreement between Pro Wear and one of the Pro Jersey suppliers, Starter, so we affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment on that count.

[*15] B. State-Law Business Conspiracy

Count eight alleges that Montgomery Ward and Pro Wear conspired to reduce the values of plaintiffs' businesses and force them out of business, in violation of the Virginia Business Conspiracy Act, Va. Code §§ 18.2-499 to -500. It is apparent from the record that plaintiffs' businesses were not operating successfully from the outset, and thus that Montgomery Ward had a business justification for being concerned about the loss of profits from those businesses. The only evidence that Montgomery Ward actually interfered with the operation of any of plaintiffs' businesses, and thus that Montgomery Ward and Pro Wear conspired to do anything at all, is the letter from O'Laughlin to a Montgomery Ward employee referring to GilbeLeonard as a "scum bag" and suggesting that the size of Leonard's store in Springfield, Virginia be reduced, followed nine days later by a letter from Montgomery Ward to O'Laughlin informing him that, in accordance with the terms of the license agreement, Montgomery Ward was reducing the size of the kiosk in Springfield. Montgomery Ward had a contractual right to make such a reduction in the leased space on seven days' notice, which [*16] notice was given. Thus, Montgomery Ward's decision to reduce the size of the Springfield location was a valid exercise of its contractual rights.

However, plaintiffs argue that the recent opinion in Commercial Business Systems, Inc. v. BellSouth Services, Inc., 453 S.E.2d 261 (Va. 1995), lowers the standard of proof of a business conspiracy under Virginia law by making HN8¹⁷ it possible to establish an illegal business conspiracy by proving that lawful acts were committed with the motive to "willfully and maliciously injure another in his . . . trade [or] business." Va. Code §§ 18.2-499, 500. In the Commercial Business case, the court reversed and remanded the trial court's grant of summary judgment to defendants on the business-conspiracy claims because the HN9¹⁸ Virginia Business Conspiracy statutes do not require proof of actual malice but only legal malice, i.e. that a defendant "acted intentionally, purposely, and without lawful justification," 453 S.E.2d at 267, and because it is not necessary for a plaintiff to show that defendant's "primary and overriding purpose was to injure [plaintiff's] trade or business," (emphasis omitted) in a case where "all of [defendant's] [*17] motives were illegitimate." 453 S.E.2d at 267.

In contrast, in this case plaintiffs have presented no evidence of improper motive. Although the O'Laughlin letter clearly casts Gilbert Leonard in a derogatory light, the mere fact that O'Laughlin did not like Leonard, standing alone, cannot constitute evidence of an unlawful motive. Moreover, the letter also makes reference (albeit cryptic) to Leonard's poor business acumen, thus evidencing a legitimate motive for reducing the size of his Springfield operation. Plaintiffs present no other evidence of any unlawful motive, and thus no evidence that defendants acted in concert with malice, as required by the Business Conspiracy Act. See Commercial Business, 453 S.E.2d at 267.

The Commercial Business case did not change the requirement that in Virginia, HN10 "there can be no conspiracy to do an act which the law allows. Thus, to survive demurrer, an allegation of conspiracy . . . must at least allege an unlawful act or an unlawful purpose." Hechler Chevrolet, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 230 Va. 396, 337 S.E.2d 744, 748 (Va. 1985) (affirming lower court's sustaining of demurrer to conspiracy claim where franchisor legally terminated or refused [*18] to renew franchise with no unlawful purpose). Plaintiffs have simply failed to meet their burden of showing any unlawful motive or legal malice in defendants' performance of what was undoubtedly a legal act.

C. Robinson-Patman

Plaintiffs assert in count ten that Pro Wear violated HN11 Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(c\), which proscribes the payment or receipt of "anything of value as a commission, brokerage or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise," whether the payment of such compensation is made to a party to the transaction or to an "agent, representative, or other intermediary" of a party other than the party making the payment. The district court found that Pro Wear's acceptance of commissions and discounts from the sublicensees' suppliers was not price discrimination for purposes of Section 2(c) and that in any event the commissions and discounts were paid for services rendered by Pro Wear, namely the guarantee by Pro Wear of sublicensees' payment for the supplies. We agree with the district court that there was no antitrust [*19] injury alleged by plaintiffs in this case, see Metrix Warehouse, Inc. v. Daimler-Benz AG, 828 F.2d 1033, 1046-47 (4th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1017 (1988); 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\), because there is no evidence that plaintiffs paid more than their competitors as the result of these discounts and commissions to Pro Wear. See Metrix Warehouse, 828 F.2d at 1046-47 ("It was MBNA's burden to demonstrate a causal connection between Metrix's unlawful program and its lost profits."). Moreover, plaintiffs argue that the evidence supports a claim for commercial bribery under Section 2(c). Assuming without deciding that such a claim exists, see Stephen Jay Photography, 903 F.2d at 993 (discussing the existence vel non of a commercial-bribery claim under Section 2(c)), we find no evidence to support it. There is no evidence that the commissions paid to Pro Wear were intended to or did unlawfully influence or corrupt Pro Wear's conduct. In fact, plaintiffs do not dispute that the commissions were paid in exchange for Pro Wear's guarantee of the sublicensees' payment for supplies goods, but argue instead that Pro Wear was contractually obligated to guarantee the sublicensees' [*20] purchases in any event.²

We do not think that a pre-existing contractual obligation is relevant to an analysis under Section 2(c), which states that such commissions are legal if given in exchange "for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of . . . merchandise." It seems clear that the sublicensees' suppliers paid Pro Wear in exchange for Pro Wear's guarantee, a service rendered in connection with the sale of the suppliers' merchandise. Some sublicensees had this service, some did not. The payments were in exchange for services rendered, whether Pro Wear's acceptance of them was proper under agency principles or not.

Thus, the plaintiffs have not shown any evidence of "actual injury of a type that Section 2(c) was designed to prevent." Metrix, 828 F.2d at 1046. The district court's grant [*21] of summary judgment to Pro Wear on count ten is accordingly affirmed.

IV. False Advertising

² The Appendix references relied upon by plaintiffs (J. A. 1120, 1127-35) do not support in fact that Pro Wear had otherwise contractually agreed to guarantee the plaintiffs' purchase of merchandise.

Plaintiffs assert in count nine that Pro Wear's advertisements in Virginia newspapers constituted false advertising under Va. Code §§ 18.2-216 (making false advertising unlawful) and 59.1-68.5 (giving a private right of action under Section 18.2-216). The district court found that this claim was barred by HN12[] the two-year statute of limitations applicable to fraud claims, Va. Code § 8.01-243\(A\), and we agree.

V.

The plaintiffs' brief lists six principal assignments of error, three of which are subdivided into eleven sub-assignments of error. We have mentioned each with particularity where the assignment deserves mention. In all events, we are of opinion that none of the assignments of error, whether or not mentioned with particularity or otherwise, are meritorious.

The judgment of the district court is accordingly

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

Multistate Legal Studies v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Publications

United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit

August 29, 1995, Filed

No. 94-1148

Reporter

63 F.3d 1540 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 24405 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,109

MULTISTATE LEGAL STUDIES, INC., a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff/Counter-Defendant/Appellant, v. HARCOURT BRACE JOVANOVICH LEGAL AND PROFESSIONAL PUBLICATIONS, INC.; COLORADO PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION, INC., doing business as Colorado Bar Refresher, Inc., Defendants/Counter-Claimants/Appellees.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLORADO. (D.C. NO. 92-Z-2330).

Core Terms

full-service, workshop, supplemental, percent, monopolize, pricing, predatory, Defendants', bundling, conflicts, markets, courses, competitor, customers, summary judgment, market share, anticompetitive, conspiracy, triable issue, Sherman Act, products, package, conspiracy to monopolize, district court, monopoly power, winter, tying arrangement, offer evidence, bar exam, conditioning

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews the grant of summary judgment de novo, applying the same legal standard used by the district court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN2 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

With the nonmoving party, its evidence is to be believed; all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in its favor; its nonconclusory version of any disputed issue of fact is assumed to be correct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, focuses on the anticompetitive behavior of joint actors, prohibiting every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN4 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

The Sherman Act 15, U.S.C.S. § 2, applies to unilateral as well as joint action, making it illegal for a person to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product the tying product only on condition that the buyer also purchase a second product the tied product or at least agree not to buy that product from another supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tie-in constitutes a per se 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The elements of a tie-in per se violation, are (1) two separate products, (2) a tie or conditioning of the sale of one product on the purchase of another, (3) sufficient economic power in the tying product market, and (4) a substantial volume of commerce affected in the tied product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The Supreme Court has made clear that the test for determining whether two components are separate products turns not on their function, but on the nature of any consumer demand for them. For two items at issue to be considered distinct products there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide one separate from the other. Product improvements may be the cause and/or effect of changes in consumer demand, but the nature of that demand is what counts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The final element of an illegal tying arrangement is conditioning. For an illegal tie-in to exist purchases of the tying product must be conditioned upon purchases of a distinct tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Personality Leases > General Overview

HN10 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where the price of a bundled product reflects any of the cost of the tied product, customers are purchasing the tied product, even if it is touted as being free. The tie may be obvious as in the classic form, or somewhat more subtle, as when a machine is sold or leased at a price that covers "free" servicing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [L] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation, a plaintiff must show a conspiracy to engage in short-term price-cutting to secure long-term monopoly profits. To be predatory, prices must be set below an appropriate measure of costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [L] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Because of the time value of the money lost through price cuts and the uncertainty involved in predatory pricing schemes, the Supreme Court has said such a conspiracy is rational only if the conspirators have a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN13 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To succeed on an attempted monopolization claim, a plaintiff must show: (1) relevant geographic and product markets; (2) specific intent to monopolize; (3) anticompetitive conduct in furtherance of an attempt to monopolize; and (4) a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 is conduct constituting an abnormal response to market opportunities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory practices are illegal if they impair opportunities of rivals and are not competition on the merits or are more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition if the conduct appears reasonably capable of contributing significantly to creating or maintaining monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Defenses

A defendant may avoid liability under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 by showing a legitimate business justification for the conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Illegal tie-ins and predatory pricing under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 may also qualify as anticompetitive conduct for 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Product improvement can sometimes be a defense to a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim. It may seem contradictory that a product improvement motivation at least without something more, such as demonstrated efficiencies will not save an otherwise illegal tying arrangement under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 but it may still weigh in the balance in § 2 analysis. The two sections are distinct, however, and the § 2 balancing test is different from the analysis for per se offenses under § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN19 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Both the purpose and results of a product change, including customers' reception of the change, are relevant to whether a claimed product improvement is pro- or anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN20 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The relevant inquiry is whether the scheduling patterns were anticompetitive, i.e., an abnormal response to market opportunities impairing opportunities of rivals and not competition on the merits or more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN21 [L] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

To establish the dangerous probability of success element of an attempted monopolization claim the plaintiff must show that there was a dangerous probability the defendant would achieve monopoly status as the result of the predatory conduct alleged by the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN22 [L] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Factors relevant to determining dangerous probability include, but are not limited to, a defendant's market share, whether the defendant is a multimarket firm, the number and strength of other competitors, market trends, and entry barriers. Where predatory pricing is alleged, the defendants' financial strength and ability to absorb losses are also relevant. Where predatory pricing is alleged, the defendants' financial strength and ability to absorb losses are also relevant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN23[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

It is not necessary for a defendant to already possess monopoly power in the target market; indeed, if it did, the offense would be monopolization, not attempt. Of course, the higher the firm's initial market share, the greater the likelihood that it will eventually gain monopolistic control over the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The market share that is relevant for determining whether the defendant can satisfy the dangerous probability of success requirement of attempted monopolization should be either that which he possesses at the time of litigation or the largest share he possessed during the period of the alleged offense. No specific minimum market share is universally accepted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN25[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To succeed on a claim of conspiracy to monopolize, plaintiffs must show: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) overt acts done in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy; (3) an effect upon an appreciable amount of interstate commerce; and (4) a specific intent to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN26[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Ambiguous conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not by itself support an inference of antitrust conspiracy under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. A plaintiff must offer evidence tending to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators either acted independently or colluded in a way that could not have harmed the plaintiff.

Counsel: James M. Harris of Sidley & Austin, Los Angeles, California (Robert Fabrikant of Sidley & Austin, Los Angeles, California; JuliaE. Sullivan of Sidley & Austin, Washington, D.C.; and Richard A. Feinstein of McKenna & Cuneo, Washington, D.C., with him on the briefs), for Appellant.

Tucker K. Trautman of Ireland, Stapleton, Pryor & Pascoe, Denver, Colorado (Hardin Holmes of Ireland, Stapleton, Pryor & Pascoe, Denver, Colorado; Stephen M. Axinn and John D. Harkrider of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, New York, New York; and Edward P. Timmins of Otten, Johnson, Robinson, Neff & Ragonetti, Denver, Colorado, with him on the briefs), for Appellees.

Judges: Before ANDERSON and McWILLIAMS, Circuit Judges, and BROWN, * District Judge.

Opinion by: ANDERSON

Opinion

[*1543] ANDERSON, Circuit Judge.

I. INTRODUCTION

The plaintiff in this antitrust action is Multistate Legal Studies, Inc. ("PMBR"), a commercial provider of bar examination preparation to [*2] would-be lawyers in Colorado and elsewhere. PMBR claims that anticompetitive actions by two other providers of bar review courses, defendants Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal and Professional Publications, Inc. ("HBJL") and its Colorado licensee, Colorado Professional Education, Inc. d/b/a Colorado Bar Refresher, Inc. ("CBR"), were the reason PMBR's Colorado market share dropped from 84 percent in 1991 to 23 percent in 1993.

PMBR accuses HBJL and CBR of the following antitrust law violations: engaging in an illegal tying arrangement and conspiring to fix predatory prices, in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act; attempting and conspiring to monopolize the supplemental bar workshop market and monopolizing and conspiring to monopolize the full-service bar review course market, in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. PMBR appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment against it on all claims.¹

[3] We hold that PMBR has shown a genuine issue of material fact with respect to the Sherman Act section 1 tying and predatory pricing claims, and the Sherman Act section 2 claims of attempt and conspiracy to monopolize the supplemental course market, but not with respect to the claims of monopolization of and conspiracy to monopolize the full-service course market.

PMBR also appeals the district court's order overruling PMBR's objections to a magistrate judge's order concerning confidential record information. Because we are remanding the case for trial of other issues, the court's order on this issue becomes interlocutory, and we decline to review it at this time.

*The Honorable Wesley E. Brown, Senior District Judge, United States District Court for the District of Kansas, sitting by designation.

¹ The complaint also contained a tying claim under section 3 of the Clayton Act, which was dismissed as well; because PMBR does not pursue it in its opening brief, we deem it waived. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. v. Mhoon, 31 F.3d 979, 984 n.7 (10th Cir. 1994) (citing Headrick v. Rockwell Int'l Corp., 24 F.3d 1272, 1277-78 (10th Cir. 1994)).

II. BACKGROUND

A. BAR EXAM PREPARATION

The Colorado bar exam consists of four components: the Multistate Bar Exam [1544] ("MBE"), the Multistate Professional Responsibility Exam ("MPRE"), essay questions, and a law practice simulation problem known as a "performance test."

Two types of bar review courses are relevant to this litigation: "full-service" courses, designed to prepare students for all components of a jurisdiction's bar examination, and "supplemental multistate workshops," which prepare students for only [*4] the MBE portion of a jurisdiction's bar exam.

At the heart of this case is the 1992 decision by HBJL and CBR, who previously had offered their full-service course and their supplemental MBE course separately, to offer the full-service course only in a package with the supplemental workshop. HBJL is the country's largest provider of full-service bar review courses. Its exclusive Colorado licensee, CBR, is entitled to use HBJL's "BAR/BRI" course trade name, course materials and national lecturers. HBJL and CBR have stipulated for summary judgment purposes that they exercise monopoly power over the Colorado full-service course market; PMBR's evidence puts their market share at more than 80 percent. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 191 (Summ. of Attach. to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Defs.' Mot. Summ. J. [hereinafter "Summary"]). Their only full-service competitor in Colorado is a company called SMH Bar Review.

The evidence indicates both sides have viewed PMBR as a potential competitor in the Colorado full-service course market. It invested three years and $ 1 million in an effort to enter the California full-service market, but ultimately abandoned that effort. In conjunction with [*5] a company called BRG, PMBR offers a full-service course in Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee, and has expressed its plans to expand throughout the Southeast. PMBR claims that its plan to expand its full-service course from California to other states, including Colorado, has been stymied by the losses caused by the Defendants' alleged predatory acts. Id. at 360-61 (Feinberg Aff. P 30).

PMBR is the largest provider of supplemental MBE workshops nationally, and in Colorado it currently offers only supplemental MBE workshops. PMBR controlled 84 percent of the Colorado supplemental MBE market in 1991 but claims to have dropped to 23 percent by 1993. As discussed infra, HBJL and CBR contest these figures, but we accept them as true for summary judgment purposes. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 456, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992).

In addition to the full-service BAR/BRI course, HBJL and CBR also offer a supplemental MBE workshop that competes with PMBR's workshop. The Defendants' course was previously called the HBJ Multistate Workshop; now it is called "Gilbert." In 1991, the Defendants had 11 percent of the Colorado workshop market, but by 1993 their share had risen [*6] to 76 percent. Other actual or potential competitors in that market include a company called APTS, with 1 percent of the market in 1993; Reed Law Group, which planned a 1993 workshop but cancelled it; and SMH Bar Review, which historically has bundled its MBE training into its full-service course but also offered a separate workshop in 1991.

B. ANTICOMPETITIVE ACTS

PMBR claims that HBJL and CBR engaged in various anticompetitive acts directly targeted at PMBR in the supplemental MBE market. PMBR also claims that HBJL and CBR illegally acquired their monopoly power in the full-service market through a secret market allocation agreement, and their monopoly power made it possible for their acts in the MBE workshop market to harm PMBR.

1. Acts Allegedly Directed at PMBR

PMBR claims that starting in 1992, HBJL and CBR began bundling together their supplemental MBE workshop, Gilbert, with their full-service BAR/BRI course and pricing the bundled Gilbert workshop below cost. PMBR also presents evidence of a substantial increase nationwide in the number of scheduling conflicts between the BAR/BRI course and the PMBR workshop starting in 1991. PMBR identifies three specific [*7] conflicts in Colorado, in the summer 1991, winter [*1545] 1991, and summer 1992 courses. And PMBR complains that HBJL and CBR advertised falsely that the BAR/BRI course would include the Gilbert workshop "for free" when actually, in 1993, Defendants raised the BAR/BRI course price by $ 50.

PMBR contends that these acts had a twofold purpose: to achieve a monopoly in the supplemental MBE workshop market, and thereby to so weaken PMBR that it would be forced to abandon its efforts as a full-service competitor. PMBR alleges that the Defendants adopted this strategy after a prior attempt to avoid competition had failed. PMBR's president, Robert Feinberg, stated that in 1989, HBJL's chief executive officer, Richard Conviser, proposed an illegal market allocation agreement whereby HBJL would abandon the supplemental MBE workshop market nationwide if PMBR would refrain from pursuing future entry into the full-service market outside California. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 193-94 (Summary); id. at 359 (Feinberg Aff. P 23). Mr. Feinberg said that when he refused, Mr. Conviser threatened to make him "sorry," and the bundling, predatory pricing, increase in scheduling conflicts, and false [*8] advertising then ensued.

2. Defendants' Acquisition of Monopoly Power

PMBR also argues that when HBJL and CBR, or their predecessors, signed their first licensing agreement, they secretly entered into an illegal agreement dividing up the Colorado, Wyoming, and other markets between them, and they have secretly renewed their noncompetition pact ever since. The companies were competitors in the Colorado full-service market before signing their first license agreement in 1974. Since then, although their original written agreement and subsequent written extensions have not prohibited competition, the two companies have not competed against each other. HBJL and CBR deny any secret agreement and say it simply would make no sense to compete and undermine the BAR/BRI trademark. The companies' latest written agreement, signed in 1989, was to expire in 1991 but remains in effect by oral extension.

To support its allegation that a secret agreement existed, PMBR offers evidence that HBJL officials previously proposed market allocation agreements to two other competitors, id. at 195-96 (Summary), as well as to PMBR itself, and that in one state HBJL entered an explicit market [*9] allocation agreement that was declared illegal per se by the Supreme Court. See Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 \(1990\) (per curiam). PMBR also points to evidence that CBR's founder, Jerry Kopel, once threatened to offer competing bar review courses outside Colorado if HBJL did not give him more favorable license terms, but he ultimately did not carry out his threat.

III. DISCUSSION

HN1[] We review the grant of summary judgment de novo, applying the same legal standard used by the district court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). Applied Genetics Int'l, Inc. v. First Affiliated Sec., Inc., 912 F.2d 1238, 1241 \(10th Cir. 1990\). HN2[] Because PMBR is the nonmoving party, its evidence is to be believed; all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in its favor; its nonconclusory version of any disputed issue of fact is assumed to be correct. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 456.

A. ANTITRUST CLAIMS

PMBR claims violations of both section 1 and section 2 of the Sherman Act. HN3[] Section 1 of the Act focuses on the anticompetitive behavior of joint actors, prohibiting "every contract, combination ... or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. 1. HN4[] Section 2 applies [*10] to unilateral as well as joint action, making it illegal for a person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of ... trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. 2.

1. Section 1 Tying Arrangement Claim

PMBR claims that HBJL and CBR created an unlawful tying arrangement in violation of Sherman Act section 1, by bundling the Gilbert workshop together with the BAR/BRI [*1546] course and requiring customers to purchase

Gilbert if they wanted BAR/BRI. The Defendants reply that all they did was to improve the curriculum of their full-service BAR/BRI course, a procompetitive act.

Since Colorado began requiring the MBE as part of its bar exam, the Defendants' full-service BAR/BRI course has included some level of MBE preparation. Since the 1970s, BAR/BRI's MBE component has included an in-class practice MBE exam with written answers that could be reviewed at home. In 1989, the label "HarBrace" was attached to this test and associated lectures and practice drills. The separately sold MBE workshop, now known as Gilbert, has consisted of another exam with written answers, plus two days of in-class answer review.

Starting [\[11\]](#) in the 1980s, PMBR and the Defendants' full-service competitor, SMH, began pointing to the Defendants' dual course offerings in their advertising and saying that by selling a separate MBE workshop, the Defendants were admitting that BAR/BRI's internal MBE component was inadequate. At the same time that the ads denigrating the full-service course were appearing, enrollment in Gilbert (or the Defendants' supplemental MBE workshop under a previous name) was dropping precipitously, from 78 people in the winter 1986 course and 238 in the summer 1986 course to a single student in the winter of 1992.

The Defendants added one day of in-class review of the practice MBE exam to their BAR/BRI course in their winter 1992 session, then added a second day of review in the summer 1992 course, so that the full-service course contained the same three-day workshop format as the separate Gilbert course. They then advertised that students signing up for BAR/BRI would receive Gilbert "for free" or "at no extra charge."² The first time they offered the package, in summer 1992, they did not raise the $ 795 Bankr.BRI course tuition. The next winter, however, they raised it by $ 50, partly to cover some [\[12\]](#) of the Gilbert costs. Customers could still buy Gilbert separately for $ 325, but they could not get any discount from the package price if they wanted BAR/BRI without Gilbert. This change was made in Colorado and in some, but not all, other states where HBJL operated.

PMBR offers evidence that the bundling of Gilbert was intended as a temporary move only. In a September 11, 1992, letter written by CBR's president, Stephen P. Davis, to an HBJL official, Mike Connors, Mr. Davis referred to a future time when the Gilbert course would again be offered only for added tuition, as it was before the summer of 1992. Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 199 (Summary); id. at 346 (Baseman Aff. Ex. 6). PMBR also offers evidence that the administration of the BAR/BRI course and the administration of the Gilbert course have never been combined; the courses [\[13\]](#) have separate national administrators, campus representatives, registration forms and addresses, suggesting that administrative streamlining was not the reason for the bundling.

HN5 A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product--the "tying product"--only on condition that the buyer also purchase a second product--the "tied product"--or at least agree not to buy that product from another supplier. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 461-62 (citing Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958)). HN6 A tie-in constitutes a per se section 1 violation if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. 504 U.S. at 462.

HN7 The elements, then, of a per se violation, are (1) two separate products, (2) a tie--or conditioning of the sale of one product on the purchase of another, (3) sufficient economic power in the tying product market, and (4) a substantial volume of commerce affected in the tied product market. Here, the parties stipulate to the third requirement, that HBJL and CBR have monopoly power in the full-service course market, and the Defendants have [\[14\]](#) not raised the issue of [\[*1547\]](#) the fourth requirement, the volume of commerce affected. We examine, therefore, only the two-product and conditioning requirements.

a. The Two-Product Requirement

HBJL and CBR have stipulated that full-service courses and supplemental MBE workshops are in separate product markets for antitrust law purposes. They do not concede, however, that the existence of separate markets means separate products were involved here. They argue that their actions involved nothing more than the improvement of a single product--their full-service course.

² The practice exam within the BAR/BRI course and the practice exam in the separate Gilbert workshop had previously covered the same ground but with different exam questions.

PMBR argues on appeal that the district court failed to apply the proper test to determine whether two products exist. We agree. The court focused on PMBR's stipulation that the purpose of a full-service course includes preparing bar applicants for the MBE as well as for the other parts of the bar exam. From this, the court appears to have concluded that any effort to improve the full-service course by adding elements to it could not possibly constitute the bundling of a second product, at least where those added elements related to the MBE. In this the court erred.³

[15] HN8⁴ The Supreme Court has made clear that the test for determining whether two components are separate products turns not on their function, but on the nature of any consumer demand for them.⁴ For two items at issue to be considered distinct products, "there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide [one] separate from [the other]." Kodak, 504 U.S. 451 at 462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072; Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 21-22, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). See also Service & Training, Inc. v. Data Gen. Corp., 963 F.2d 680, 684-85 \(4th Cir. 1992\) (district court erred in reasoning that since customers' only legitimate purpose for using defendant's diagnostic software was to repair computers, defendant was providing only a single integrated product of computer servicing, rather than a package of service and diagnostic software).

The Defendants argue that a different [16] analysis is required in this case because it involves "overlap markets." They define "overlap markets" as a multicomponent package being sold in one market and one of those components being sold in a second market, and they contend that in such situations, courts have universally held that the package was a single product. We disagree that courts universally have so held. See, e.g., Parts & Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 826 F.2d 712, 720 \(7th Cir. 1987\); Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of N. Am., Inc., 593 F. Supp. 1506, 1515 \(N.D. Cal. 1984\), aff'd, 833 F.2d 1342 \(9th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 148, 109 S. Ct. 179 (1988); Metrix Warehouse, Inc. v. Daimler-Benz Aktiengesellschaft, No. N-79-2066, 1982-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P64,861, 1982 WL 1870, at * 6-9 (D. Md. June 4, 1982), reinstated, No. Civ. A.N. 79-2066, 1984-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P66,226, 1984 WL 1105 (D. Md. June 11, 1984). Moreover, we are not persuaded either that the "overlap markets" characterization does anything more than restate the problem, or that, if it does, the Supreme Court's Kodak/Jefferson Parish test is somehow less controlling in such cases than in any others.

PMBR maintains that by incorporating BAR/BRI and Gilbert into a package, the Defendants [17] have "linked two distinct markets for products that were distinguishable in the eyes of buyers." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19.

PMBR's evidence includes the following:

- 1) Defendants stipulated that full-service courses and supplemental MBE workshops are in separate product markets.
 - 2) Defendants have marketed their full-service course and their supplemental workshop as separate products, for separate fees, for over a decade and still offer Gilbert separately.
- [*1548] 3) In Kansas, Ohio and Hawaii, HB JL and/or its licensees still offer the full-service course unbundled from Gilbert.
- 4) Prior to Defendants' bundling, not every full-service course customer chose to purchase a supplemental workshop; in Colorado, only one-third to one-half did so.

³The district court also erred by relying, for its analysis of this section 1 issue, on Telex Corp. v. IBM Corp., 510 F.2d 894 (10th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 423 U.S. 802 \(1975\), a section 2 monopolization case.

⁴Product improvements may be the cause and/or effect of changes in consumer demand, but the nature of that demand is what counts.

5) In the past, HBJL officials worked to keep their external Gilbert workshop separate and distinct in customers' minds from the HarBrace workshop within the full-service course, because many customers preferred to buy from two different companies to get multiple providers' perspectives on the MBE.

6) Defendants have not consolidated the operation of the full-service and supplemental courses; Gilbert continues to be administered and marketed [18] separately.

7) One or more of Defendants' officers contemplated that the inclusion of the Gilbert workshop in the full-service course at no added charge would be only temporary.

8) Other bar review industry participants view full-service and supplemental MBE courses as separate products.

This evidence is sufficient to create a material factual dispute over whether there is enough consumer demand in Colorado for full-service courses without supplemental MBE workshops to make it efficient to sell the two separately. If there is, then the BAR/BRI-Gilbert package should be viewed as two products.

b. The Conditioning Requirement

HN9 [↑] The final element of an illegal tying arrangement is conditioning. For an illegal tie-in to exist, "purchases of the tying product must be conditioned upon purchases of a distinct tied product." Continental Trend Resources, Inc. v. Oxy USA, Inc., 44 F.3d 1465, 1481 (10th Cir. 1995) (quoting Fox Motors, Inc. v. Mazda Distrib. (Gulf), Inc., 806 F.2d 953, 957 (10th Cir. 1986)), petition for cert. filed, 63 USLW 3819 (U.S. May 8, 1995) (No. 94-1838). HBJL and CBR argue that this element requires a showing of coercion, and that by adding Gilbert [19] to BAR/BRI in the summer of 1992 they did not force or coerce any BAR/BRI students to forgo PMBR's supplemental workshop; since they did not raise BAR/BRI tuition, the economic incentives remained the same as before.

The Defendants are correct with respect to the summer 1992 course, when the bundled BAR/BRI-Gilbert course cost the same as the separate BAR/BRI course had cost previously. It appears that Gilbert truly was free to BAR/BRI customers during that summer's session, so that no separate, tied purchase was involved.

HBJL and CBR do not address, however, the evidence that in the winter 1993 course they raised the tuition of the bundled course by $ 50, in part to cover some of the costs of providing Gilbert. HN10 [↑] Where the price of a bundled product reflects any of the cost of the tied product, customers are purchasing the tied product, even if it is touted as being free. See Directory Sales Management Corp. v. Ohio Bell Tel. Co., 833 F.2d 606, 610 (6th Cir. 1987); 3 Phillip E. Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law P733a (1978) ("The tie may be obvious as in the classic form, or somewhat more subtle, as when a machine is sold or leased at a price that covers 'free' servicing."). [20]

PMBR has presented enough evidence to create a triable issue as to whether the tuition for the bundled BAR/BRI course covered some portion of the Gilbert costs in 1993, and therefore whether the conditioning element was satisfied. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 207-08 (Summary). Summary judgment on the tie-in claim therefore was premature.

2. Section 1 Predatory Pricing Claim

PMBR has alleged that by packaging Gilbert with BAR/BRI for a nominal or no charge, HBJL and CBR engaged in predatory pricing, in violation of both section 1 and section 2 of the Sherman Act.

HN11 [↑] To establish a section 1 violation, PMBR must show a conspiracy to engage in short-term price cutting to secure long-term monopoly profits. Instructional Sys. Dev. Corp. v. Aetna Casualty & Sur. Co., 817 F.2d 639, 649 (10th Cir. 1987). To be predatory, prices must be set below "an appropriate [*1549] measure" of costs. Brooke

Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2587 \(1993\). ⁵ HN12

Because of the time value of the money lost through price cuts and the uncertainty involved in predatory pricing schemes, the Supreme Court has said such a conspiracy is rational only if the conspirators 21 "have a reasonable expectation of recovering, in the form of later monopoly profits, more than the losses suffered." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588-89, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\); cf. Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2587-89 (discussing the elements of predatory pricing under Sherman Act section 2 and the Robinson-Patman Act).⁶

22 The district court dismissed PMBR's predatory pricing claim because it found that the bundled BAR/BRI-Gilbert course was a single product, and PMBR had not alleged that the package was priced below cost. As noted above, however, we find that a factual dispute remains as to the existence of two products.

The parties do not appear to dispute for summary judgment purposes the joint action element of the conspiracy claim. Nor do Defendants disagree that in the summer 1992 course, they included Gilbert for free, a level below any measure of Gilbert's costs.⁷ We see no evidence in the appellate record, however, of any below-cost pricing in the winter 1993 course, when tuition was raised by $ 50. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 344 (Baseman Aff. Ex. 4.) The only Gilbert cost evidence we have located in the record shows that the cost of Gilbert materials was approximately $ 15 per person. See id. at 452, 458 \(Davis Dep.\).

23 HBJL and CBR argue that PMBR has failed to show any evidence that they are likely to be able to recoup, with interest, their losses from any alleged predatory pricing. As discussed infra in our review of the section 2 claims, we find that PMBR has adduced enough evidence of high entry barriers and other structural factors in the supplemental market to create a triable issue as to this element. We therefore conclude that summary judgment on the section 1 predatory pricing claim was premature.

3. Section 2 Attempted Monopolization of Supplemental MBE Course Market

PMBR alleges that HBJL and CBR attempted to monopolize the supplemental MBE workshop market by means of tying, predatory pricing, false advertising, and the creation of schedule conflicts. The district court dismissed the attempt claim after deciding that tying and predatory pricing could not have occurred because only a single product was involved, that any reasonable *1550 juror would find the inclusion of Gilbert in the BAR/BRI course to be a procompetitive product improvement, and that PMBR had failed to show a triable issue as to the existence of schedule conflicts and false advertising.

⁵ Unfortunately for litigants, neither the Supreme Court nor we have taken a position on which of various cost measures is the definitive one, although we have spoken of marginal and average variable costs as being relevant. See Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at 2588 n.1; Instructional Sys., 817 F.2d at 648; Pacific Eng'g & Prod. Co. of Nevada v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 551 F.2d 790, 797 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 879, 54 L. Ed. 2d 160, 98 S. Ct. 234 \(1977\).

⁶ Separate from but closely related to the question of whether a defendant's acts are likely to succeed is the question of whether a defendant with a monopoly in one market would have any plausible reason to use its monopoly profits in that market to subsidize predation in a second market. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 596 (requiring a showing of plausible motive for predatory pricing and observing that "a conspiracy to increase profits in one market does not tend to show a conspiracy to sustain losses in another").

Here, where PMBR has presented evidence that it was probably the most likely challenger to the Defendants' monopoly in the Colorado full-service market, we cannot say as a matter of law that Defendants would find it economically irrational to price below cost in the MBE market for the summer 1992 course as part of a larger scheme, employing tie-ins and schedule conflicts, to monopolize the supplemental market, in order to discipline PMBR for refusing to allocate markets and to deprive PMBR of the resources necessary to continue its full-service market incursions.

⁷ Although the record below is somewhat ambiguous, HBJL and CBR do not appear to seriously dispute on appeal that if the BAR/BRI-Gilbert package does comprise two separate products, then the relevant product for predatory pricing's cost-price analysis is the supplemental workshop, rather than the package.

PMBR argues on appeal [\[24\]](#) that summary judgment was inappropriate as to each type of anticompetitive act alleged. HBJL and CBR argue that the district court's reasoning was sound, and that, in addition, PMBR has failed to show the requisite dangerous probability that the Defendants will succeed in monopolizing the supplemental MBE workshop market.

HN13[↑] To succeed on an attempted monopolization claim, PMBR must show: (1) relevant geographic and product markets; (2) specific intent to monopolize; (3) anticompetitive conduct in furtherance of an attempt to monopolize; and (4) a dangerous probability of success. See TV Communications Network, Inc. v. Turner Network Tel., Inc., 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 537, 113 S. Ct. 601 (1992). The parties do not appear to contest the first and second elements for summary judgment purposes. We proceed, therefore, to examine the evidence with respect to conduct and probability of success.

a. Anticompetitive Conduct

HN14[↑] Anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct under section 2 is "conduct constituting an abnormal response to market opportunities. HN15[↑] Predatory practices are illegal if they impair opportunities of rivals and are not competition on the merits [\[25\]](#) or are more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition," if the conduct appears "reasonably capable of contributing significantly to creating or maintaining monopoly power." Instructional Sys., 817 F.2d at 649 (citations omitted). HN16[↑] A defendant may avoid liability by showing a legitimate business justification for the conduct. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 483.

(1) Tying and Predatory Pricing

As discussed above, PMBR has shown enough evidence to create triable issues as to the existence of a predatory pricing conspiracy in 1992 and a tying arrangement in 1993 in violation of section 1. HN17[↑] Illegal tie-ins and predatory pricing under section 1 may also qualify as anticompetitive conduct for section 2 purposes. See, e.g., Directory Sales, 833 F.2d at 613; Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532, 541 (7th Cir. 1986); Heattransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, A.G., 553 F.2d 964, 981 (5th Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1087, 55 L. Ed. 2d 792, 98 S. Ct. 1282 (1978); see also Areeda & Turner, supra P733c.

HBJL and CBR offer three justifications, however, which they say made the inclusion of Gilbert "for free" as part of the BAR/BRI course permissible competitive [\[26\]](#) activity. First, they argue that since supplemental MBE workshops were being offered "for free" as part of full-service courses in Colorado by SMH and outside Colorado by PMBR, SMH, and other providers, they (HBJL and CBR) were entitled to meet their competitors' prices, even if those prices were predatory. Second, they contend, they were entitled to use legal and ordinary marketing methods such as bundling to respond to PMBR's and SMH's "attack" advertisements, which criticized Defendants for charging "extra" for their MBE workshop. Third, they argue, the bundling of Gilbert with BAR/BRI was a procompetitive improvement of their full-service course.

(a) Meeting competition

Determining when the meeting-competition defense properly applies to a predatory pricing claim can require substantial analysis. See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P717' (Supp. 1994). But Defendants have not shown, at any rate, why they should be allowed to price Gilbert below cost in Colorado in order to meet PMBR's prices in California, Alabama, Tennessee, and Georgia. And PMBR has offered enough evidence to create a triable issue regarding whether HBJL and CBR were truly [\[27\]](#) concerned about and responding to competition from SMH. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 203 (Summary).

[*1551] (b) Ordinary marketing methods

HBJL and CBR say their "free" inclusion of Gilbert in the BAR/BRI course was nothing more than one of the "legal and ordinary marketing methods already used by others in the market" that we have previously said even monopolists are free to use. See Telex, 510 F.2d at 927. We do not necessarily read Telex to mean that absolutely every marketing method available to any nonmonopolist is equally proper when used by a monopolist, since such a reading might eliminate the law on tying arrangements. But in the supplemental MBE market, where HB JL and CBR were not monopolists, they may have been at liberty to temporarily engage in promotional pricing—even giving Gilbert away free—to try to boost the sales of a product that consumers were rejecting. A problem in this case, however, is that they did not offer Gilbert free to every prospective Gilbert customer. Instead, they offered it free only to purchasers of their monopolized BAR/BRI course. Although, as we noted above, this could not have constituted an illegal tying arrangement in [\[28\]](#) 1992 because the allegedly tied Gilbert product was not purchased, neither can we find this linking of a product giveaway to monopoly power in a separate market to be a legal and ordinary marketing method, absent some showing of legitimate business reasons for distinguishing the BAR/BRI customers from other purchasers of Gilbert.⁸ See SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1059-62, 1065 \(3d Cir. 1978\), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 838, 58 L. Ed. 2d 134, 99 S. Ct. 123 (1978).

[29] (c) Product improvement

HN18  Product improvement can sometimes be a defense to a section 2 claim.⁹ See, e.g., Telex, 510 F.2d at 906, 926-27; ILC Peripherals Leasing Corp. v. IBM Corp., 458 F. Supp. 423, 443-44 \(N.D. Ca. 1978\), aff'd sub nom. Memorex Corp. v. IBM Corp., 636 F.2d 1188 \(9th Cir. 1980\), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 972, 69 L. Ed. 2d 983, 101 S. Ct. 3126 (1981). PMBR argues, however, that the Defendants' product improvement justification at most creates a factual dispute. PMBR contends that its evidence shows that the claimed improvement was neither intended as an improvement nor accepted by the market as one.

[30] HN19  Both the purpose and results of a product change, including customers' reception of the change, are relevant to whether a claimed product improvement is pro- or anticompetitive.¹⁰ See In re IBM Peripheral EDP Devices Antitrust Litig., 481 F. Supp. 965, 1003-05 \(N.D. Cal. 1979\), aff'd sub nom. 1552 Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. IBM Corp.*, 698 F.2d 1377, (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 955, 78 L. Ed. 2d 329, 104 S. Ct. 370 (1983). But see Telex Corp. v. IBM Corp., 367 F. Supp. 258, 347 \(1973\) (refusing to second-guess technological justifiability of integrating more internal memory into computer's central processing unit where integration reduced costs and increased utility), rev'd on other grounds, 510 F.2d 894 (10th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 423 U.S. 802 (1975).

⁸ We recognize the split among the circuits regarding the legality of so-called "monopoly leveraging," i.e., using a monopoly in one market to gain a competitive advantage in a second, where the purpose is not to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the second market. Compare, e.g., Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 275-76 \(2d Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 \(1980\), with Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 546-49 \(9th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 977, 112 S. Ct. 1603, 118 L. Ed. 2d 316 \(1992\). Our case falls outside this debate, however, because PMBR has specifically alleged an attempt to monopolize the supplemental MBE workshop market.

⁹ It may seem contradictory that a product improvement motivation—at least without something more, such as demonstrated efficiencies—will not save an otherwise illegal tying arrangement under section 1, see Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 25 n.41, but it may still weigh in the balance in section 2 analysis. The two sections are distinct, however, and the section 2 balancing test is different from the analysis for per se offenses under section 1.

¹⁰ Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp, who argue for a rule of presumptive legality for all product changes, concede the possible anticompetitive nature of what they term "implicit tying" through product integration. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra P P738.1 & 738.4. But they say an inquiry into whether a defendant's intent was actually to harm rivals, as distinct from making a better product, is difficult, costly, and usually pointless, because the evidence is frequently mixed or ambiguous. See id. P738.4e. And they say an objective appraisal of whether a product change truly is an improvement—let alone whether a given improvement could have been achieved with less harm to competition—will often be beyond the courts' competency and may seriously chill innovation. See id. P738.4f.

We are sensitive to both the difficulties and the dangers of these inquiries. Where, as here, however, the claimed product improvement takes the form of a marketing change, rather than some complex technological integration of previously separate functions, our degree of deference to product designers is reduced.

[31] 1) Purpose of product change

PMBR has offered evidence that the bundling was a response to PMBR's refusal to take part in a proposed market allocation agreement, see Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 193-94 (Summary); that Defendants' executives never have believed that bar applicants need Gilbert to pass the bar, id. at 201 (Summary); that Defendants intended the bundling to be only temporary, id. at 199 (Summary); and that bundling cannot reasonably be explained as a response to competitive market conditions where, prior to the bundling of Gilbert, Defendants' course already had more MBE workshop hours than SMH's full-service course, and where SMH's then-partner, Kaplan, went bankrupt around the time the Gilbert bundling began in Colorado. Id. at 203 (Summary).

2) Customer reception of product change

PMBR also cites evaluations from bar applicants in California and elsewhere outside of Colorado, in the summer of 1992, who described the "free" Gilbert sessions as "horrible," "a waste of time," "awful" and "a joke." See id. at 201-02 (Summary).¹¹ PMBR offers evidence that immediately prior to bundling, one-half to two-thirds of Colorado bar applicants [32] who took a full-service course did not choose to take a supplement, see id. at 189-90 (Summary), and that many prefer to take their MBE workshop from a different provider than their full-service company. See id. at 547 (Reed Dep.).

3) Results of product change

PMBR further argues that if the addition of Gilbert had actually improved the product, one would expect Defendants' share of the full-service market and the pass rate of its course enrollees to have increased, but in fact they declined. The Defendants' market share--as measured by the percentage of first-time Colorado bar exam takers taking the BAR/BRI course--dropped from 76 percent in 1991 to 72 percent in 1993, see id. at 336-37 (Baseman Aff. Ex. 2), and BAR/BRI customers' pass rate declined from 5 percentage points above the [33] Colorado average in July 1990 to 1 percentage point above the state average in July 1992. See id. at 413-14 (Sullivan Aff. Exs. 12, 13).

Taken together, the preceding evidence is enough to create a triable issue regarding the validity of the Defendants' product improvement justification for the alleged tying and predatory pricing behavior. In sum, PMBR has sufficiently controverted for summary judgment purposes the arguments that the Defendants were only responding to competition, that they used nothing more than legal and ordinary marketing methods, and that the bundled course was a procompetitive product improvement.

(2) Schedule Conflicts

PMBR also claims the Defendants deliberately created scheduling conflicts between the BAR/BRI course and PMBR's workshop in furtherance of their attempt to monopolize the workshop market. PMBR offers evidence of increased numbers of schedule conflicts nationwide, e.g., 23 conflicts in the summer of 1990, 2 of them major, versus 37 conflicts in the summer of 1992, 17 of them major, see Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 206 (Summary); id. at 370-71 (Feinberg Aff.); and three specific conflicts in Colorado, in the summer 1991, winter [34] 1991 and summer 1992 courses. Id. at 366-68.

PMBR contends that the increased conflicts were intended to discourage people from taking PMBR's workshop. The district [*1553] court held that where PMBR's workshop ran from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and the Defendants' classes ran from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., no reasonable juror could find that any schedule conflicts existed. HBJL and CBR further point out that BAR/BRI students who wished to attend PMBR's course could check out audiotapes of the BAR/BRI lectures at any time or attend videotape replays at various locations.

PMBR argues on appeal that the court erred in concluding that to be actionable, the schedule conflicts had to make it impossible, rather than merely inconvenient, for BAR/BRI students to take PMBR's workshop. We agree.

¹¹ While the evaluations are not from Colorado students, neither side has suggested they are irrelevant because either the Gilbert course or the students taking it are different in Colorado than elsewhere.

HN20 [+] The relevant inquiry is whether the Defendants' scheduling patterns were anticompetitive, i.e., "an abnormal response to market opportunities ... impairing opportunities of rivals and ... not competition on the merits or ... more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition." Instructional Sys., 817 F.2d at 649. What matters is not so much whether the classes actually overlapped as whether the scheduling [35] pattern was reasonably capable of contributing significantly to a monopolization attempt by discouraging BAR/BRI customers from taking PMBR's course, and, if so, whether it was nevertheless justified.

PMBR presented enough evidence to create a triable issue as to whether this same-day scheduling could significantly discourage BAR/BRI students from taking its workshop. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 365-72 (Feinberg Aff. P P 41-63).¹² The Defendants contend, however, that even if there were conflicts, they were justified, because the overwhelming likelihood "is that any same-day scheduling was the inevitable result of two courses attempting to shoe-horn their complex schedules into the same narrow time frame." Defendants-Appellees' Br. at 28.

[36] PMBR offers circumstantial evidence that the three schedule conflicts it has identified in Colorado were not accidental or inevitable, but instead deliberate and unjustified. PMBR points to a substantial increase nationwide in the number of conflicts after HBJL's Mr. Conviser allegedly proposed the illegal market allocation agreement in 1989 and PMBR's Mr. Feinberg rejected it in the spring of 1990. Mr. Feinberg stated by affidavit that there have always been conflicts between PMBR's course and that of BAR/BRI and its licensees, including CBR, but the vast majority were minor or inconsequential until 1991 and thereafter. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 366-72 (Feinberg Aff. P P 47-63). This sequence of events is enough to create a jury question as to whether the disputed schedule conflicts in Colorado were deliberate or the "inevitable result" of crowded curricula and short time frames.

(3) False Advertising

PMBR contends that Defendants advertised falsely when they advertised that their BAR/BRI course included the Gilbert workshop "for free." In 1993, PMBR points out, Defendants raised the price of the BAR/BRI course by $ 50, and an HBJL official testified that [37] the added cost of Gilbert was one of the reasons for the tuition increase. See id. at 207-08 (Summary). The district [1554] court found no triable issue, because Gilbert was being offered as part of the full-service course and, "I guess that is free to that extent." Id. at 313 (Tr. Summ. J. Hr'g).

We affirm for a different reason. Even assuming the advertising was false, PMBR has not shown how it could have contributed to an attempt to monopolize the supplemental MBE market, rather than just to maintenance of Defendants' full-service course monopoly. PMBR has not adduced any evidence that had BAR/BRI enrollees known the alleged "truth"--that they were not getting Gilbert for free but were being forced to pay for it in order to get the desired BAR/BRI course--they would have been more likely to spend another $ 300 or so to take PMBR or another MBE workshop in addition to the BAR/BRI-Gilbert course. We therefore affirm the district court's rejection of false advertising as an anticompetitive act in furtherance of the attempted monopolization claim.

¹² Defendants argued below that they had no duty to accommodate PMBR's scheduling. They analyzed the situation as a monopolist's refusal to cooperate with a competitor and read Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 603, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985), as standing for the proposition that a monopolist has a duty to assist a competitor only where the monopolist has accommodated the competitor in the past and then abruptly terminates assistance. We do not necessarily interpret Aspen Highlands as narrowly as do the Defendants, but principles governing refusals to deal do not control here anyway.

PMBR's complaint goes beyond merely alleging that Defendants refused requests to affirmatively accommodate PMBR's course. PMBR alleges that the Defendants deliberately created schedule conflicts to avoid helping PMBR, and in fact, to harm PMBR. Since the Defendants naturally would not create conflicts between their BAR/BRI full-service course and their own MBE workshop, Gilbert, see Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 370 (Feinberg Aff. P 58), there is a triable issue as to whether schedule conflicts between BAR/BRI and PMBR's MBE workshop would disproportionately raise PMBR's costs. See Premier Elec. Constr. Co. v. National Elec. Contractors Ass'n, Inc., 814 F.2d 358, 368 (7th Cir. 1987) (citing Thomas G. Krattenmaker & Steven C. Salop, Anticompetitive Exclusion: Raising Rivals' Costs to Achieve Power Over Price, 96 Yale L.J. 209 (1986)). This would qualify as anticompetitive conduct unless HBJL and CBR could demonstrate a legitimate business justification for it.

b. Dangerous Probability of Success

As an alternative basis for affirming the district court's dismissal of the attempted [38] monopolization claim, HBJL and CBR argue that PMBR has failed to demonstrate a dangerous probability that their alleged attempt will succeed. PMBR contends that it has provided ample evidence.

HN21[] "To establish the dangerous probability of success element of an attempted monopolization claim, 'the plaintiff must show that there was a dangerous probability the defendant would achieve monopoly status as the result of the predatory conduct alleged by the plaintiff.'" Bacchus Indus., Inc. v. Arvin Indus., Inc., 939 F.2d 887, 894 (10th Cir. 1991) (quoting Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America, 885 F.2d 683, 693 (10th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 972, 112 L. Ed. 2d 424, 111 S. Ct. 441 (1990)). HN22[] Factors relevant to determining dangerous probability include, but are not limited to, a defendant's market share, whether the defendant is a multimarket firm, the number and strength of other competitors, market trends, and entry barriers. See id.; Shoppin' Bag of Pueblo, Inc. v. Dillon Cos., 783 F.2d 159, 162 (10th Cir. 1986). Where predatory pricing is alleged, the defendants' financial strength and ability to absorb losses are also relevant. See Brooke Group, 113 S. Ct. at [39] 2589; Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 119 n.15, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986). HN23[] Because we are talking about probabilities, it is not necessary for a defendant to already possess monopoly power in the target market; indeed, if it did, the offense would be monopolization, not attempt. Of course, "the higher the firm's initial market share, the greater the likelihood that it will eventually gain monopolistic control over the market." Colorado Interstate Gas, 885 F.2d at 694.

(1) Defendants' Market Share/Multiple Markets

HN24[] "The [market] share that is relevant for determining whether the defendant can satisfy the 'dangerous probability of success' requirement of attempted monopolization should be either that which he possesses at the time of litigation or the largest share he possessed during the period of the alleged offense." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra P P 711.2d, 835.2b.¹³ [41] No specific minimum market share is universally accepted. But in this case, the Defendants stipulate that they possess monopoly power in the full-service course market, which is closely related to the target supplemental workshop market; they are accused of leveraging that power to increase [40] their share of the supplemental market; their share of the supplemental market [*1555] went from less than 2 percent in the winter of 1992 to more than 70 percent within a year, while the share of their major competitor, PMBR, went from 84 percent to 23 percent in the same period (and from 22,000 nationwide in 1990 to 14,000 in 1992).¹⁴ Fiberglass Insulators, Inc. v. Dupuy, No. Civ. A. 84-1244-1, 1986-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,316, 1986 WL 13356 at  3-4 (D. S.C. Sept. 30, 1986) (denying summary judgment on attempted monopolization claim where defendant's market share increased from 5 percent to nearly 51 percent in four years); Indiana Grocery Co. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 647 F. Supp. 254, 258 (S.D. Ind. 1986) (refusing to dismiss attempted monopolization case for failure to state a claim where defendant, a new market entrant with extensive resources, obtained a 15 percent market share in 18 months).

¹³ Professors Areeda and Turner, in their earlier, 1978 main volume, said some courts have required a showing that a defendant possessed a significant share of the target market at the time when the challenged conduct was undertaken, and they cite, inter alia, to one of our cases as standing for that proposition. See E.J. Delaney Corp. v. Bonne Bell, Inc., 525 F.2d 296 (10th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 907, 47 L. Ed. 2d 758, 96 S. Ct. 1501 (1976) (cited in Areeda & Turner, supra P P 831, 835a). We do not read Delaney as clear support for such a rule, but even if it were, we would hold it distinguishable from this case, where the Defendants are accused of leveraging their monopoly power in a second market to gain a new monopoly in the target market.

¹⁴ The Defendants complain that PMBR arrived at the high market share for them by counting every sale of the Defendants' full-service course as a sale of a supplemental MBE workshop after the Gilbert inclusion in the summer of 1992. But they do not show why this is conceptually wrong, at least for 1993, when the evidence shows that part of the fee increase charged to enrollees was to cover Gilbert costs, so that we can fairly call the Gilbert enrollments "sales." At any rate, we accept PMBR's numbers for summary judgment purposes. See Kodak, 112 S. Ct. at 2076-77.

(2) Defendants' Resources

PMBR has presented evidence that Defendants have access to substantial money with which to sustain a predatory campaign. HBJL's parent company, General Cinema, had total assets of over $ 5.5 billion as of Jan. 31, 1993, compared with PMBR's assets of less than $ 1.042 million as of June 30, 1993. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 200 (Summary).

(3) Number and Strength of Competitors

PMBR's market structure evidence suggests that if PMBR is seriously damaged or eliminated, remaining [42] competitors in the supplemental market may not be able to compete effectively against Gilbert. The Colorado supplemental MBE market is highly concentrated, dominated by PMBR and the Defendants. The other two competitors--APTS and Reed Law Group--have been relatively weak in Colorado. In 1993, Defendants had 76.2 percent of the market; PMBR had 22.6 percent, and APTS had 1.2 percent. Id. at 339 (Baseman Aff. Ex. 3). Reed cancelled its 1993 workshops. Id. at 361 (Feinberg Aff.). SMH offered a workshop in 1991, but it is unclear to us whether they still compete in the supplemental market.

(4) Market Trends

The trends in the supplemental MBE market, as reflected in PMBR's evidence, provide additional support for PMBR's claim. PMBR's market share increased from 71 percent to 84 percent between 1989 and 1991, but dropped to 25 percent in 1992 and to 23 percent in 1993. The Defendants' market share showed an opposite trend, dropping from 29 percent to 11 percent between 1989 and 1991, then increasing to 72 percent by the end of 1992 and 76 percent in 1993. Figures for the third competitor, APTS, available for 1991-93, showed a steady decline from 4 percent in 1991 to 1 percent [43] over that period.

(5) Entry Barriers

PMBR has also offered evidence that if PMBR is eliminated, new market entrants may not be able to establish a competitive MBE workshop market. PMBR's economic expert testified that entry barriers exist in both the full-service and the supplemental MBE markets in Colorado, because of Defendants' high degree of name recognition and accumulated goodwill, HBJL's large size nationwide, HBJL's economies of scope and scale in the full-service market, and the widespread discounting practices of the bar review industry. See id. at 323-24 (Baseman Aff.). PMBR has presented further evidence of entry barriers in that there have been only three attempted entries in the Colorado supplemental MBE market since 1972, two of them largely unsuccessful. Id. at 192 (Summary), 361 (Feinberg Aff.).

The preceding evidence of the Defendants' market share and resources, the nature of the competition they face, and the barriers to [*1556] entry in the supplemental workshop market, are sufficient to create a material factual dispute with regard to dangerous probability of success. A jury question exists as to whether HBJL and CBR, by predatorily pricing Gilbert [44] sales to BAR/BRI customers in the summer 1992 course and then subsequently tying the BAR/BRI course to purchases of Gilbert, and by creating scheduling conflicts with PMBR's course, could so harm PMBR and other MBE providers that HBJL and CBR could monopolize the MBE market and maintain that monopoly long enough to recoup any predatory pricing losses plus interest. Although many subissues are subject to serious factual dispute, summary judgment on the attempt claim was premature.

4. Section 2 Conspiracy to Monopolize Supplemental MBE Market

PMBR next contends that the district court erred in dismissing its section 2 claim of conspiracy to monopolize the supplemental MBE market, because all of its elements except one--the existence of a conspiracy--are subsumed in the attempt claim, and it has provided evidence of the conspiracy element as well.

HN25 To succeed on a claim of conspiracy to monopolize, PMBR must show: "(1) 'the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize'; (2) 'overt acts done in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy'; (3) 'an effect upon an appreciable amount of interstate commerce'; and (4) 'a specific intent to monopolize.'" TV

Communications, [45] 964 F.2d at 1026 (quoting Olsen v. Progressive Music Supply, Inc., 703 F.2d 432, 438 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 866, 78 L. Ed. 2d 172, 104 S. Ct. 197 (1983)).

As to the conspiracy element, PMBR has presented evidence that major decisions regarding the Colorado course, such as pricing and course content, required the approval of HBJL as well as CBR. See Plaintiff-Appellant's App. at 206-07 (Summary); id. at 455 (Davis Dep.). We agree that this evidence, when combined with the evidence supporting the attempt claim, creates a triable issue and precludes summary judgment on the conspiracy claim.

5. Monopolization of and Conspiracy to Monopolize Full-Service Bar Review Market

PMBR alleges that HBJL and CBR were guilty of Sherman Act section 2 monopolization of and conspiracy to monopolize the full-service bar review market by means of a geographic market allocation agreement, which is illegal per se under section 1.

HBJL and CBR reply that PMBR lacks standing, that a 1990 release agreement and the statute of limitations bar this claim, and that PMBR has not presented evidence that an illegal market allocation agreement ever existed. The district court appears to have relied on the [46] 1990 release agreement in dismissing this claim. Although the court also mentioned the statute of limitations, it does not appear to have made a specific finding based on it. We conclude that PMBR has failed to establish a triable issue regarding the existence of an illegal agreement.

HN26 [↑] Defendants correctly argue that ambiguous conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not by itself support an inference of antitrust conspiracy under Sherman Act section 1. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. A plaintiff must offer evidence tending to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators either acted independently or colluded in a way that could not have harmed the plaintiff. Id.; Gibson v. Greater Park City Co., 818 F.2d 722, 724 (10th Cir. 1987).

We agree with the Defendants that the mere fact that they were competitors before their licensing arrangement and stopped competing afterward is not enough to show that they secretly and illegally divided the market between them. Their written agreements contained no noncompete clauses, but once they entered their licensing arrangement, both companies had legitimate business reasons not [47] to compete and undermine the BAR/BRI trademark's value.

Also ambiguous is the evidence that CBR's founder, Jerry Kopel, once threatened to offer competing bar review courses outside Colorado if HBJL did not give him more [*1557] favorable license terms, but that he ultimately did not carry out his threat. This can be read, as PMBR reads it, to mean that Mr. Kopel was threatening to violate an existing secret agreement not to compete, but it also can be viewed as the normal posturing that occurs in any contract renegotiations.

Nor do we consider that the balance is tipped by the evidence that HBJL entered into an explicit market allocation agreement with a former competitor in Georgia in 1980, see Palmer, 498 U.S. at 49-50, and that it proposed market allocation agreements to Josephson's Bar Review in 1969, to SMH Bar Review in 1976 and 1980, and to PMBR in 1989-90. The timing of these various offers permits two opposite inferences to be drawn. Although PMBR insists that this evidence shows a consistent pattern of behavior, all of the alleged offers were made before November 1990. In that month, the Supreme Court ruled in Palmer that HBJL's market allocation agreement with BRG was [48] "unlawful on its face." Id. at 50. It is clearly possible to infer that in 1991, when HBJL and CBR orally renewed their Colorado licensing agreement, they were aware of the illegality of any market allocation agreement and did not pursue or renew any such agreement.

Since all of PMBR's evidence relative to the existence of a secret market allocation agreement is ambiguous, it cannot support an inference of conspiracy to monopolize the full-service course market, and we affirm the district court's dismissal.¹⁵

[49] B. CONFIDENTIALITY ISSUES

PMBR appeals the district court's refusal to set aside under Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(A) a magistrate judge's orders concerning disclosure of confidential information in the record. The basis for the court's ruling is not clear, but because we are remanding the case, this order becomes interlocutory and subject to reexamination upon renewed motion by PMBR. We therefore decline to address it at this juncture.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, the district court's judgment is REVERSED IN PART, AFFIRMED IN PART, and REMANDED.

End of Document

¹⁵ Although the 1990 settlement agreement released any claims PMBR might have had against HBJL based on pre-1990 activities, PMBR contends that it still has a cause of action for that time period against CBR, which was not a party to the settlement. But even assuming that CBR is not protected by the 1990 release, PMBR's evidence that HBJL proposed or entered into market allocation agreements with other companies in other states in 1969, 1976, 1980, and 1989, without more, is simply too remote to furnish the basis for a conspiracy claim against CBR on grounds that CBR and HBJL, or their predecessors, allocated the Colorado and Wyoming markets in 1974, 1982, 1986, and 1988. (The latter dates are the years when CBR made or renewed its written license agreements.)

National Ass'n of Review Appraisers & Mortgage Underwriters v. Appraisal Found.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

May 16, 1995, Submitted ; August 29, 1995, Filed

No. 94-2689, No. 94-3074

Reporter

64 F.3d 1130 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 24304 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,127

National Association of Review Appraisers and Mortgage Underwriters, Inc., Plaintiff/Appellant, v. The Appraisal Foundation; The Appraisal Institute; American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers; Society of Real Estate Appraisers; American Society of Appraisers; National Society of Real Estate Appraisers, Defendants/Appellees. The Appraisal Foundation, Plaintiff/Appellee, v. National Association of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc., Defendant/Appellant. The Appraisal Foundation, Plaintiff, v. National Association of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc., Defendant, National Association of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc., Counter-Plaintiff/ Appellant, v. The Appraisal Foundation; The Appraisal Institute; American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers; Society of Real Estate Appraisers; American Society of Appraisers; National Society of Real Estate Appraisers, Counter-Defendants/ Appellees. National Association of Review Appraisers and Mortgage Underwriters, Inc.; National Association of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc., Plaintiffs/Appellants, v. Roy Morris, Defendant/Appellee. National Association of Review Appraisers and Mortgage Underwriters, Inc.; National Association of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc., Plaintiff/Appellants, Roy G. Green; George Hamilton Jones, Defendants/Appellees. National Association of Review Appraisers and Mortgage Underwriters, Inc.; National Association of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc., Plaintiffs/Appellants, Joseph S. Durant, Defendant/Appellee.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc Denied October 10, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 28113.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota. District No. CIV 4-91-294. Honorable Diana E. Murphy, District Judge.

Core Terms

membership, Associations, organizations, appraisal, affiliate, antitrust, real estate appraiser, decreased, sponsors, anticompetitive, declining, blame

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

When challenged actions or practices yield a pernicious effect on competition and lack any redeeming virtue they are per se invalid. In such situations the actions so lack redeeming social and competitive value as to warrant being struck down without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

Organizations are free to associate, share information, and engage in self-regulation. Accordingly, in the absence of any showing that the challenged practices are anticompetitive on their face, the court will apply the rule of reason to determine if there is an antitrust violation. Additionally, courts should hesitate to apply a per se rule when there is a question as to the extent of a practice's economic impact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

A group boycott results in impermissible harm even if it results in lower prices or temporarily stimulates competition because such boycotts have, by their nature and character, a monopolistic tendency to restrain free trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In the absence of such a per se violation of the antitrust laws incidental harm to an individual competing in the market is a necessary residuum of the competitive process. In such an environment one competitor will always suffer some form of harm relative to a competitor that gains an advantage. Society reaps the benefits of such competitive behavior through lower prices, better products and services, and greater market efficiencies as individual competitors seek to gain an advantage. Only anticompetitive behavior, i.e. behavior that tends to lessen the potentiality for society to realize the benefits of the competitive process, is proscribed.

Counsel: Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellant was Joseph Alioto of San Francisco, California. Also appearing on the brief was Daniel R. Shulman of Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellee was Peter Hendrixson of Minneapolis, Minnesota. Also appearing on the brief were Kathleen D. Sheehy and Sue Halverson of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Paul R. Hannah and Laurie A. Zenner of St. Paul, Minnesota; Jerome C. Schaefer and John P. Wintrol of Washington, D.C.; David Marx, Jr. and Anne Pramaggiore of Chicago, Illinois.

Judges: Before WOLLMAN and MORRIS SHEPPARD ARNOLD, Circuit Judges, and BOGUE, * Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: WOLLMAN

Opinion

[*1132] WOLLMAN, Circuit Judge.

The National Association of Review Appraisers and Mortgage Underwriters and the National Association of Real Estate Appraisers (hereinafter referred to as the "Review Association" and "Appraisers' Association" individually, and collectively as the "Associations") appeal from the district court's ¹ orders granting summary judgment for the Appraisal Foundation and certain of its member organizations and trustees (collectively the "Foundation") on the Associations' various antitrust and tortious interference claims. We affirm.

[2] I.

In the mid 1980s, as pressure began to increase for regulation of the appraisal industry in the wake of the nationwide savings and loan debacle, a number of appraisal organizations decided to get together to set standards for the industry in an attempt at self-regulation. As a result of this union of interests, the Foundation was created in 1987 to establish uniform appraisal standards and criteria for certifying appraisers. The eight founding member organizations appointed between one and three trustees to the Foundation depending on their size. Other members, which were organizations composed of users of appraisal services, were allowed to appoint one trustee to the board, and two at-large trustees were elected by the appointed trustees. In 1989, Congress passed Title XI of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act (FIRREA), which charged the Foundation's Appraiser Standards Board and Appraiser Qualifications Board with promulgating industry standards for federally related transactions. See 12 U.S.C. §§ 3339, 3345.

In 1991, the Foundation amended its by-laws to create three different types of sponsorship to the Foundation effective January [3] 1, 1992 -- appraisal, affiliate, and corporate. Appraisal sponsors are appraisal organizations; whereas affiliate and corporate sponsors are, respectively, non-profit and for-profit organizations with a "demonstrable interest" in appraisals and appraisal practices. The board of trustees is now composed of one trustee for each appraisal and affiliate sponsor that meets sponsorship criteria, and fourteen at-large trustees selected from a pool of candidates sponsored by each category of affiliation. Since the by-laws were amended, the Foundation has admitted two appraisal and three affiliate members, as well as several corporate sponsors. About

*The HONORABLE ANDREW W. BOGUE, Senior United States District Judge for the District of South Dakota, sitting by designation.

¹The Honorable Diana E. Murphy, then Chief Judge, United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, now United States Circuit Judge for the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

66% of all appraisers (62,651 total) belonged to organizations affiliated with the Foundation in 1990. As of 1992, membership encompassed approximately 71% of all appraisers (70,221 total).

The Review Association filed an antitrust action under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2, in 1991, challenging the Foundation's continuing refusal to admit the Review Association as an appraisal sponsor dating back to its initial application for membership in 1988. The Review Association claims that it meets all membership criteria and that the Foundation's [\[4\]](#) control over the industry has effectively crippled the Review Association's ability to compete with other appraisal organizations that are Foundation members. The Foundation subsequently brought a declaratory judgment action against the Appraisers' Association seeking to establish that the Foundation had not violated the antitrust laws for likewise declining to grant that organization membership status. The Appraisers' Association counterclaimed, asserting claims similar to those of the Review Association. These are apparently the only two appraiser organizations that have applied but not been admitted to sponsorship in one form or another. Both are managed by the same corporate entity, International Association Managers, Inc., and are essentially controlled by the same individual and executive director, Robert G. Johnson. Ken Twitchell is the managing director of the Appraisers' Association [\[*1133\]](#) and director of national affairs for the Review Association. The cases were consolidated with several cases brought by the Review Association against the Foundation's trustees.

II. Antitrust Claims

A.

The Associations assert that the Foundation's actions constitute a per se antitrust [\[5\]](#) violation as a group boycott. The direct result of this failure to admit, according to the Associations, has been a marked decline in membership, with the Review Association's membership declining from more than 7,500 in 1990 to fewer than 3,000 members by 1993, and the Appraisers' Association seeing its membership drop from a peak of more than 20,000 in 1989 to fewer than 10,000 in 1993. These numbers take on even more meaning for the Associations when considered in light of the fact that their respective memberships had increased over the three year period prior to 1990. As further evidence of the anticompetitive nature of exclusion, the Associations contrast the declining membership of other organizations during periods those organizations were not members of the Foundation with the increased membership of those within the Foundation.

HN1 When challenged actions or practices yield a "pernicious effect on competition and lack . . . any redeeming virtue" they are per se invalid. Northern Pac. Ry. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). In such situations the actions so lack redeeming social and competitive value as to warrant being struck down "without elaborate inquiry as to [\[6\]](#) the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Id.; see Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 \(1985\). The Foundation's membership criteria are inherently exclusionary and thereby necessarily restrict competition to some degree. See Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 500, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 \(1988\) (noting that an agreement regarding product standards is an implicit agreement not to deal in non-conforming products); Northwest Stationers, 472 U.S. at 289 (acknowledging that "every commercial agreement restrains trade"). When the exclusion of an organization on the purported basis of those criteria appears to serve some legitimate purpose necessary to the proper functioning of the Foundation and overall efficiency of the market, however, we will analyze that exclusion under the rule of reason to determine whether it in fact does impermissibly restrict competition. See Federal Trade Comm'n v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 \(1986\) (noting reluctance "to condemn rules adopted by professional associations as unreasonable per se"); Northwest Stationers, 472 U.S. at 297-98 [\[7\]](#) (expulsion from wholesale cooperative does not warrant per se treatment). HN2 Organizations are free to associate, share information, and engage in self-regulation. Accordingly, in the absence of any showing that the challenged practices are anticompetitive on their face, we will apply the rule of reason to determine if there is an antitrust violation. Additionally, courts should hesitate to apply a per se rule when there is a question as to the extent of a practice's economic impact. See Indiana Dentists, 476 U.S. at 458-59; see also United States v. Brown Univ., 5 F.3d 658, 672 \(3d Cir. 1993\) (accepting that economic harm is less certain when the market restraint is motivated by its socially utility).

The Foundation's exclusion of the Associations does not appear so deleterious on its face as to be considered per se illegitimate. The Foundation was created to promote educational and ethical standards for appraisal services, and its membership criteria appear to be designed to accomplish those goals by establishing such standards and requiring non-profit status for appraisal organizations. Such requirements generally pose merely incidental market restraints [8] and are necessary to successful industry self-regulation. Establishing and enforcing such criteria may even serve some pro-competitive purposes by increasing the relative market efficiencies. See Allied Tube, 486 U.S. at 501 (noting that where [*1134] "private associations promulgate . . . standards based on the merits of objective expert judgments and through procedures that prevent the standard setting process from being biased by members with economic interests in stifling product competition . . . those private standards can have significant procompetitive advantages"); Pope v. Mississippi Real Estate Comm'n, 872 F.2d 127, 130 \(5th Cir. 1989\) ("If properly administered, membership requirements serve pro-competitive purposes.").

Further, finding a per se violation is not mandated by the antitrust laws because this is not a case in which the alleged boycott "cuts off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the boycotted [associations] to compete." Northwest Stationers, 472 U.S. at 294. To accept the Associations' argument to the contrary would require us to hold that every appraiser organization has an intrinsic and immutable right to membership in [9] the Foundation. This is clearly not what Congress intended when it vested the Foundation with the authority to establish standards. Indeed, such a holding would defeat the very purpose of having the Foundation establish standards and admission criteria. The Associations have failed to convince us that the failure to admit cuts off their ability to transact business with their members or potential members.² Access to the market cannot be equated with success in the market. Nor does the exclusion eliminate access of their members to the related market of those in need of appraisal services.

[10] B.

There can be no doubt that the Associations have suffered a declining membership base in recent years. That, however, is not the full extent of our inquiry. See National Soc'y of Professional Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 690, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 \(1978\) (confining the inquiry "to a consideration of impact on competitive conditions"). We need not decide whether the Foundation has engaged in conspiratorial behavior, or whether the Foundation is capable of such conduct, for even assuming such to be the case, the Associations have failed to generate the inference of causal harm necessary to their claim.

The parties agree that the market in which appraiser organizations vie for members is the relevant market. Thus, the issue is properly framed as whether the Foundation's refusal to admit the Associations has made the market for appraisal organizations less competitive. HN3 A group boycott results in impermissible harm even if it results in lower prices or temporarily stimulates competition because such boycotts have, by their "nature and character, a monopolistic tendency" to restrain free trade. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, 3 L. Ed.

² We recognize the subtle distinctions that may alter an analysis from per se to the rule of reason and the potential blurring of those distinctions when faced with a combination such as we have here. See SCFC ILC, Inc. v. Visa USA, Inc., 36 F.3d 958, 963 \(10th Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 2600 \(1995\) (No. 94-1719); see also 7 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust law PP 1511, 1511' (1986 & Supp. 1994) (discussing the collapsing inquiry). We need not anatomize the precedents to crystallize their theoretical development, however. Suffice it to say that our analysis of the relevant economic structures and market forces at issue here makes it evident that this is not a situation requiring per se treatment. See generally National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents of the Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 104 n.26, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\) (noting that "per se rules may require considerable inquiry into market conditions before the evidence justifies a presumption of anticompetitive conduct"). Nor do the Associations' claims that the market power vested in the Foundation by the combination of its members represents a facility essential to competition. Given the apparent facial validity of the exclusion of the Associations by the Foundation, whatever restraint that exclusion poses must be analyzed under the rule of reason to determine the extent of its power and effect on competition. This will in turn answer the question whether indeed the Foundation is an essential facility and if any denial of access is truly anticompetitive in nature. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, PP 736.2a, 736.2f (Supp. 1994) (asserting that denial of access to an essential facility is never deemed per se unlawful). This is entirely consonant with the usual application of the rule of reason standards to such cooperative conduct.

2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 \(1959\) (internal quotes omitted). [11] HN4 In the absence of such a per se violation of the antitrust laws, however, incidental harm to an [*1135] individual competing in the market is a necessary residuum of the competitive process. In such an environment one competitor will always suffer some form of "harm" relative to a competitor that gains an advantage. See Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 21 \(1st Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 931, 113 L. Ed. 2d 268, 111 S. Ct. 1337 (1991). Society reaps the benefits of such competitive behavior through lower prices, better products and services, and greater market efficiencies as individual competitors seek to gain an advantage. Only anticompetitive behavior, i.e. behavior that tends to lessen the potentiality for society to realize the benefits of the competitive process, is proscribed. See 915 F.2d at 21-22; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\).

The Associations attempt to foist blame on the Foundation for a decrease in the number of appraisers operating in the United States today and the attendant rise in cost of appraiser services. The Associations offered some evidence that consumers of appraiser services prefer appraisers that are members of organizations affiliated [12] with the Foundation. There is no evidence tending to connect the Associations' individual harm to any such harm on the overall market for appraisal organizations, however. The Associations' claims of harm to the market reflect mere individual harm. See T.W Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 635 \(9th Cir. 1987\) (party cannot withstand summary judgment motion in absence of evidence of harm to competition). Blaming the Foundation for fluctuations in the market for individual appraiser services, and the resulting impact on association memberships, fails to raise a sufficient inference that there was harm to the competition among appraiser organizations. See Legal Economic Evaluations, Inc. v. Metropolitan Life Ins., 39 F.3d 951, 954-56 \(9th Cir. 1994\) (finding asserted harm to competition to actually lie in a different market), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 304, 115 S. Ct. 1420 (1995). Rather, such claims are contradicted by evidence of an increase in the number of educational programs offered by the Associations as they compete with other organizations for the affiliation of appraisers. Nor is there any evidence that membership prices in organizations have increased [13] or that the number and quality of such organizations or their output in terms of educational offerings or other benefits to their members has decreased since the dawn of the Foundation. See Visa USA, 36 F.3d at 968 (lack of evidence of increased price, decreased output, or other anticompetitive indicia in the relevant market shows that challenged collective rule making body lacks market power). Even if we were to accept further that the decline in the Associations' membership ranks could sufficiently establish harm to the overall market in which appraisal organizations compete, such a claim must fail in this instance for a lack of a sufficient causal nexus to the Foundation's activities. To succeed on their claims, the Associations must show that a reasonable jury could find that the Foundation's exclusionary behavior was a material cause of the harm suffered. See Alexander v. National Farmers Org., 687 F.2d 1173, 1210 \(8th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 937, 461 U.S. 938, 461 U.S. 939, 77 L. Ed. 2d 313, 103 S. Ct. 2108 (1983). The Associations "may not recover for losses due to factors other than the [Foundation's] anticompetitive violations." Amerinet, Inc. v. Xerox Corp., 972 F.2d 1483, 1494 \(8th Cir. 1992\), [14] cert. denied, 122 L. Ed. 2d 356, 113 S. Ct. 1048 (1993).

A number of highly publicized missteps and other considerations have contributed greatly to the Associations' current deflated membership base, so much so that the Associations cannot claim that their exclusion from the Foundation was a substantially contributing factor to their problems. See Greater Rockford Energy & Tech. Corp. v. Shell Oil, 998 F.2d 391, 404 \(7th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375, 114 S. Ct. 1054 (1994). First, they have received a great deal of negative attention for maintaining lax standards. That cat was let out of the bag, so to speak, when the Appraisers' Association designated a feline named Tobias as a member without verifying his credentials. The Appraisers' Association sued Tobias' owner for defamation when he publicly called the association a diploma mill in the wake of this incident. In that suit, the Appraisers' Association claimed that it had [*1136] witnessed a dramatic drop in membership renewal rates as a result of the negative publicity. The district court found the characterization accurate and denied relief. National Ass'n of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc. v. Schaeffer, C.A. No. 89-0225T (D. R.I. Jun. 1, 1989); [15] see also National Ass'n of Real Estate Appraisers, Inc. v. Schaeffer, No. CV 88-7774-RJK (TX) (C.D. Cal. Mar. 23, 1989) (dismissal for lack of personal jurisdiction). That case was referred to in the course of the adoption of subsequent amendments to FIRREA. The House Operations Committee specifically noted that it did "not intend in any way to suggest that membership [in the Foundation] should be available to such groups as the National Association of Real Estate Appraisers and its related organizations," precisely because of the finding that they were diploma mills. H.R. Rep. No. 101-981, 101st Cong., 2d sess. 1, 7 n.1

(1990). There can be little doubt but that the lingering stigma of this incident has contributed greatly to the Associations' difficulty in attracting and retaining members.

The Appraisers' Association has also blamed the State of Washington for a decrease in membership. In 1990, the Association filed suit alleging that a designation of state-licensed appraisers as "State-Certified Real Estate Appraisers" infringed on the Association's trademark rights regarding the "Certified Real Estate Appraisers" designation. In an affidavit submitted in that case, Johnson [16] stated that the state legislation had caused the Association to lose members. The present litigation has also been a drain on membership strength.

In addition to their own litigious efforts to assign blame for their decreased market share, Johnson and Twitchell have both faced recent legal action on other fronts. Both pleaded guilty to charges stemming from a Federal Elections Commission investigation into illegal contributions to the 1988 presidential campaign. Further, the Department of Labor filed suit against International Association Managers for failing to account for and pay overtime to certain former employees. These incidents have done little to enhance the reputation or membership ranks of either association.

Further, representatives of the American Association of Certified Appraisers and the National Association of Master Appraisers, two other appraisal organizations that also witnessed declining membership before they became Foundation members (which membership decline the Associations point to as evidence of the harm on the overall market), attribute the decline in membership to factors entirely independent from the activities of the Foundation. The advent of state certification [17] has rendered less essential affiliation with an organization and has apparently affected the entire industry. As noted above, the overall market for appraisers has declined, and the Foundation is not to be faulted for the natural market forces driving the market for real estate appraisers. Moreover, the impact of the restraint, whatever it may be, cannot be adequately determined because the Associations apparently could participate in the Foundation in another capacity, an avenue they have not explored.

The Associations have blamed everyone but themselves for their current difficulties, but their problems can be traced directly back to the corporate office. We do not require a negation of all possible explanations for the decreased membership, but in the face of this record the allegations of conspiratorial harm are too speculative to raise a triable issue. Accordingly, because the Associations have failed to establish the existence of a triable fact on the issue of causation, an element essential to their case, the entry of summary judgment in favor of the Foundation was entirely appropriate. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. [18] v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 576, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) (must show conspiracy and injury to survive motion for summary judgment).

III. Tortious Interference

Citing their decreased membership base and attendant reduction in revenues, the Associations next contend that the Foundation's actions constitute a tortious interference [*1137] with contractual relations under Minnesota law. To fashion such a claim, the Associations must show that the Foundation intentionally and wrongfully interfered with existing or prospective contractual relations and that but for the Foundation's actions they would have received the benefits of those relations. See United Wild Rice, Inc. v. Nelson, 313 N.W.2d 628, 632-33 (Minn. 1982); Amerinet, 972 F.2d at 1506, 1508. Our discussion of the causation aspect of the antitrust claims sufficiently disposes of this issue. Amerinet, 972 F.2d at 1508-09. In light of the host of problems faced by the Associations, they are unable to make out a submissible case that had they been admitted to the Foundation they would have retained members and attracted new members.

The judgment [19] is affirmed.

United States v. Milikowsky

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

April 27, 1995, Argued ; August 30, 1995, Decided

Docket Nos. 94-1450, 94-1492, ; 94-1493

Reporter

65 F.3d 4 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 24457 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,125

United States of America, Appellee-Cross-Appellant, v. Daniel Milikowsky, Defendant-Appellant-Cross-Appellee, MACC Holding Corporation, Defendant.

Prior History: [1] Appeal and cross-appeal from a judgment of conviction entered August 10, 1994, following a jury trial in the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut (Ellen Bree Burns, J.). Appellant, a principal in several small steel-related businesses, was convicted of one count of price-fixing, in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and was sentenced to two years' probation, conditioned on a period of six months' home confinement and 150 hours of community service, and a $ 250,000 fine. Appellant contends that his conviction should be overturned because (1) the government failed to correct, and knowingly reinforced, the false testimony of a key prosecution witness; (2) the court wrongly limited cross-examination of the witness; and (3) the government made prejudicial comments during its closing argument. On cross-appeal, the government contends that the district court erred in departing downward one offense level from the Guidelines sentence because of the effect that imprisonment would have on appellant's employees.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

Sentencing, Guidelines, Antitrust, imprisonment, departure, employees, steel, downward, circumstances, offenders, cases, district court, depart, confinement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

Under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2R1.1\(a\) (Nov. 1989), the base offense level for an individual defendant convicted of a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., such as price-fixing is nine. Section

* voluntarily withdrawn.

2R1.1(b)(2) of the Manual provides that two levels are added to the offense level if the volume of commerce attributable to the defendant is more than $ 15 million, and three levels are added if volume is more than $ 50 million. Section 2R1.1(b)(1) of the Manual provides that one level is added if conduct involved bid-rigging.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN2 [] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

The Antitrust Guideline, U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2R1.1, reflects the U.S. Sentencing Commission's belief that, in order to deter potential violators, antitrust offenders should generally be sentenced to prison. The commentary to the Antitrust Guideline states that the Commission believes that the most effective method to deter individuals from committing antitrust violations is through imposing short prison sentences coupled with large fines. The controlling consideration underlying this guideline is general deterrence. In very few cases will the guidelines not require that some confinement be imposed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN3 [] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

The business effects of a white collar offender's incarceration generally provide no ground for departure from the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Adjustments & Enhancements > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Sentencing Guidelines > General Overview

HN4 [] Sentencing Guidelines, Adjustments & Enhancements

The Sentencing Reform Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 3553(b), provides that a court may impose a sentence outside the range set by the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual when it finds a mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the U.S. Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines. The Commission has explained that courts should treat each guideline as carving out a "heartland," a set of typical cases and that, when a court finds an atypical case that significantly differs from the norm the court may consider whether a departure is warranted.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Adjustments & Enhancements > General Overview

HN5 [] Sentencing Guidelines, Adjustments & Enhancements

A district court not only can, but must, consider the possibility of downward or upward departure when there are compelling considerations that take the case out of the heartland factors upon which the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual rest. Departure in the appropriate case is essential to the satisfactory functioning of the sentencing system. The authority to depart provides a "sensible flexibility" to insure that atypical cases are not shoe-horned into a Sentencing Guidelines range that is formulated only for typical cases.

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Consideration > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Departures From Guidelines > Family Responsibilities

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Adjustments & Enhancements > General Overview

HN6 Contract Formation, Consideration

Among the permissible justifications for downward departure is the need, given appropriate circumstances, to reduce the destructive effects that incarceration of a defendant may have on innocent third parties. Although U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 5H1.6's policy statement indicates that family ties and responsibilities are not ordinarily relevant in determining whether a sentence should be outside the guidelines, where a defendant's parental responsibilities are "extraordinary" and incarceration would "wreak extraordinary destruction" on her four young dependents, downward departure to avoid imprisonment is warranted. While the U.S. Sentencing Commission undoubtedly took ordinary family responsibilities into account when formulating the Sentencing Guidelines, extraordinary circumstances are by their nature not capable of adequate consideration, and therefore may constitute proper grounds for departure.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > De Novo Review > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Departures From Guidelines > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Departures From Guidelines > Judicial Review

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review > Sentences

HN7 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews for clear error the district court's factual determination that such extraordinary circumstances to justify downward departure from the U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual are indeed present.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Sentencing Guidelines > Departures From Guidelines > General Overview

HN8 Sentencing Guidelines, Departures From Guidelines

Business ownership alone, or even ownership of a vulnerable small business, does not make downward departure appropriate. Departure may be warranted where imprisonment would impose extraordinary hardship on employees. The U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual do not require a judge to leave compassion and common sense at the door to the courtroom.

Counsel: Steven A. Steinbach, Washington, DC (Regina G. Maloney, Williams & Connolly, of counsel), for Defendant-Appellant and Defendant-Appellant-Cross-Appellee.

[2] Marion Jetton, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC (Anne K. Bingaman, Assistant Attorney General, Diane P. Wood, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, John J. Powers, III, and Peter J. Levitas, of counsel), for Appellee-Cross-Appellant.

Judges: Before OAKES, McLAUGHLIN and LEVAL, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: OAKES

Opinion

[*5] OAKES, Senior Circuit Judge:

This appeal raises the issue, under the Sentencing Guidelines, whether a district court may downwardly depart in order to avoid imprisoning an antitrust offender when imprisonment would impose extraordinary hardship on the defendant's employees.

Daniel Milikowsky appeals, and the government cross-appeals, from a judgment of conviction entered August 10, 1994, following a jury trial in the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut (Ellen Bree Burns, J.). The jury convicted Milikowsky, a principal in several small steel-related businesses, of one count of price-fixing, in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Departing downward to avoid imposing a prison sentence, the court sentenced Milikowsky to two years' probation, conditioned on a period of six months' home confinement and 150 hours of community service, [*3] and a $ 250,000 fine.

Milikowsky contends that his conviction should be overturned for three reasons: (1) the government failed to correct, and knowingly reinforced, the false testimony of a prosecution witness, Benjamin DeBerry; (2) the court wrongly limited cross-examination of DeBerry; and (3) the government made prejudicial comments during its closing argument. On cross-appeal, the government contends that the district court erred in departing downward one offense level from the applicable Guidelines range because of the effect that imprisonment would have on Milikowsky's employees. Milikowsky's contentions have been thoroughly addressed in [*6] Judge Burns's comprehensive opinion denying Milikowsky's motions for a new trial and for acquittal, United States v. Milikowsky, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20581, No. 3-93-CR-191 (EBB) (D. Conn. Aug. 25, 1994), and we affirm his conviction for the reasons stated therein. We write only to address the sentencing issue.

BACKGROUND

During the period relevant to this litigation, Milikowsky, a resident of New Haven, Connecticut, was a principal in several steel-related businesses -- Jordan International Company ("Jordan"), a steel trading company headquartered in [*4] New Haven, Prospect Industries ("Prospect"), a steel pail manufacturing company, and Mid Atlantic Container Corp. ("Mid Atlantic"), which manufactured new steel drums at a plant in Linden, New Jersey, until April 1990, when its assets were sold to The Russell-Stanley Corp. In July 1993, a one-count indictment was filed in the District of Connecticut, charging Milikowsky and MACC Holding Corp. ("MACC"), the successor corporation to Mid Atlantic, along with unnamed co-conspirators, with conspiring to fix the prices of new steel drums in the eastern United States from May 1987 through April 1990. After a three-week jury trial, Milikowsky and MACC were convicted.

HN1 Under the Sentencing Guidelines (Nov. 1989 version)¹, the base offense level for an individual defendant convicted of a Sherman Act violation such as price-fixing is nine. U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1\(a\). Two levels are added to the offense level if the volume of commerce attributable to the defendant is more than $ 15 million, and three levels are added if volume is more than $ 50 million. Id. § 2R1.1(b)(2). One level is added if conduct involved bid-rigging. Id. § 2R1.1(b)(1).

¹ The parties agree that Milikowsky's sentence is governed by the November 1989 Guidelines, and all subsequent references refer to that version of the Guidelines.

[5] At sentencing, the district court found the bid-rigging enhancement inappropriate, but it concluded, over Milikowsky's objection, that a two-level enhancement, for greater than $ 15 million volume, was appropriate. The resulting offense level, accordingly, was eleven. In view of Milikowsky's criminal history category of I, the applicable Guidelines range was eight to fourteen months' imprisonment. Under this offense level, a split sentence is available, allowing part of the term to be served by community confinement or home detention, but imprisonment for at least half the minimum term is required. Id. § 5C1.1(d).

Milikowsky requested a downward departure from level eleven that would allow the court to sentence him to probation rather than prison, on the basis of the effect imprisonment would have on his family and on his employees at Jordan and Prospect. The court took note of the destructive effect imprisonment would have on Milikowsky's family, but found it insufficient by itself to justify a departure. However, the court concluded that Milikowsky's other contention -- the effect of imprisonment on his employees -- did allow the court to downwardly depart, and accordingly [6] it departed down one level, to level ten. The court noted that Milikowsky's circumstances differed from those of other high-level business people it had sentenced, in that "this is a situation where I am convinced that the loss of his daily guidance would extraordinarily impact on persons who are employed by him." Transcript of sentencing of Aug. 8, 1994, at 93. Accordingly, the court placed Milikowsky on two years' probation, with the first six months to be spent in home confinement; it also sentenced him to 150 hours of community service and fined him $ 250,000.

DISCUSSION

The government contends that the court's downward departure is inconsistent with the deterrence rationale of U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1 (the "Antitrust Guideline"), and that it is contrary to case law which rejects effect on employees as a ground for departure.

First, HN2 the Antitrust Guideline, as the government notes, reflects the Sentencing Commission's belief that, in order to deter potential violators, antitrust offenders should generally be sentenced to prison. The commentary to the Antitrust Guideline states that "the Commission believes that the most effective method to deter individuals from [*7] committing [antitrust [7] violations] is through imposing short prison sentences coupled with large fines. The controlling consideration underlying this guideline is general deterrence. . . . In very few cases will the guidelines not require that some confinement be imposed." U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1, cmt. (background); see also United States v. Haversat, 22 F.3d 790, 797-98 (8th Cir. 1994) (confinement should be imposed in "all but the rarest" criminal antitrust cases).

Second, the government cites cases from other circuits holding that HN3 the business effects of a white collar offender's incarceration generally provide no ground for departure. See, e.g., United States v. Reilly, 33 F.3d 1396, 1424 (3d Cir. 1994) ("there was nothing extraordinary in the fact that the incarceration of a company's principal might 'cause harm to the business and its employees'"); United States v. Sharapan, 13 F.3d 781, 785 (3d Cir. 1994); United States v. Rutana, 932 F.2d 1155, 1158 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 907, 116 L. Ed. 2d 243, 112 S. Ct. 300 (1991); United States v. Mogel, 956 F.2d 1555, 1563-64 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 121 L. Ed. 2d 115, 113 S. Ct. 167 (1992). Since enforcement actions by the Antitrust Division have been directed in large [8] part against industries made up primarily of small businesses, see Report of the American Bar Ass'n, Section of Antitrust Law, Task Force on the Antitrust Division, 58 Antitrust L.J. 747, 755 (1990); 60 Minutes with Charles F. Rule, Assistant Attorney General, Antitrust Division, 57 Antitrust L.J. 257, 258-61 (1988), the government contends that there is nothing "extraordinary" about the prospect of imprisoning, and potentially putting out of business, small business owners.

We are not convinced that the government's contentions require vacatur of the court's decision to depart. HN4 The Sentencing Reform Act provides that a court may impose a sentence outside the Guideline range when it finds a "mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree, not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines." 18 U.S.C. § 3553\(b\) \(1988\). The Sentencing Commission has explained that "courts should treat each guideline as 'carving out a "heartland," a set of typical cases' and that, 'when a court finds an atypical case,' that 'significantly differs from the norm, the court may consider whether a departure is warranted.'" United States v. Merritt \[*91, 988 F.2d 1298, 1309 (2d Cir.) (quoting U.S.S.G., intro. 4(b)), cert. denied, 124 L. Ed. 2d 683, 113 S. Ct. 2933 (1993).

This court has taken this guidance firmly to heart in recent years, making clear that HN5 a district court not only can, but must, consider the possibility of downward or upward departure "when there are compelling considerations that take the case out of the heartland factors upon which the Guidelines rest." United States v. Monk, 15 F.3d 25, 29 (2d Cir. 1994); see also United States v. Restrepo, 999 F.2d 640, 644 (2d Cir.) (listing cases upholding departures), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 352, 114 S. Ct. 405 (1993); Merritt, 988 F.2d at 1309-10 (same). "Departure in the appropriate case," we have emphasized, "is essential to the satisfactory functioning of the sentencing system." Merritt, 988 F.2d at 1309. "The authority to depart provides a 'sensible flexibility' to insure that atypical cases are not shoe-horned into a Guidelines range that is formulated only for typical cases." United States v. Rogers, 972 F.2d 489, 493 (2d Cir. 1992).

HN6 Among the permissible justifications for downward departure, we have held, is the need, given appropriate circumstances, to reduce the destructive [\[*10\]](#) effects that incarceration of a defendant may have on innocent third parties. Although a Guidelines policy statement indicates that "family ties and responsibilities . . . are not ordinarily relevant in determining whether a sentence should be outside the guidelines," U.S.S.G. § 5H1.6 (policy statement), we have nonetheless held that, where a defendant's parental responsibilities were "extraordinary" and incarceration would "wreak extraordinary destruction" on her four young dependents, downward departure to avoid imprisonment was warranted. United States v. Johnson, 964 F.2d 124, 126-30 (2d Cir. 1992); see also United States v. Califano, 978 F.2d 65 (2d Cir. 1992) (per curiam); United States v. Alba, 933 F.2d 1117, 1122 (2d Cir. 1991). [*8] While the Commission undoubtedly "took ordinary family responsibilities into account when formulating the Guidelines," we reasoned, "extraordinary circumstances . . . are by their nature not capable of adequate consideration" and "therefore may constitute proper grounds for departure." Johnson, 964 F.2d at 128.

We find the reasoning of Johnson applicable to the antitrust and employment context. It is true, as the government notes, [\[*11\]](#) that the Antitrust Guideline favors prison terms for antitrust offenders as a means of deterring potential violators. See U.S.S.G. § 2R1.1, cmt. (background). Additionally, in drawing up the Antitrust Guidelines, the Commission could hardly have overlooked the effect that imprisonment of offenders would have on small businesses that are likely to be heavily dependent on those very offenders for their continuing success. See cases cited supra, at 5. In considering, and taking into account, the effect of imprisonment on antitrust offenders' businesses, however, the Commission did not thereby take into account the effect imprisonment would have in "extraordinary circumstances." Such circumstances, as we explained in Johnson, 964 F.2d at 128, "are by their nature not capable of adequate consideration."

The issue before us, then, is whether the facts considered by the district court comprise such "extraordinary circumstances," falling outside the heartland envisioned by the Antitrust Guideline. Our de novo review, see Rogers, 972 F.2d at 492, makes clear that extraordinary effects on an antitrust offender's employees, "to a degree[] not adequately taken into [\[*12\]](#) consideration by the Sentencing Commission," warrant a downward departure. HN7 We thus review for clear error the district court's factual determination that such extraordinary circumstances are indeed present. United States v. Jagmohan, 909 F.2d 61, 64 (2d Cir. 1990).

The district court found Milikowsky's situation extraordinary when it distinguished his case from other "high level business people" it had sentenced. Tr. of sentencing of Aug. 8, 1994, at 93. What distinguished his situation, the court noted, was the "extraordinary" impact that the loss of his daily involvement would have on his business and, consequently, on his employees. Id. The record more than adequately supports this conclusion.

Before the court were unrebutted letters and testimony from family members, employees, business associates, and Milikowsky's chief trade creditor attesting to his indispensability to Jordan and Prospect, Milikowsky's two remaining businesses. This record, undisputed by the government, allowed the court to conclude that Milikowsky is the only individual with the knowledge, skill, experience, and relationships to run Jordan, the steel trading concern, on a daily basis: he is the sole [13] buyer of all steel, the only person with the requisite ability and contacts to buy steel at competitive rates, the most successful seller, and the person who deals with Jordan's customers and suppliers. The record allowed the court to conclude, additionally, that Milikowsky's daily involvement at Jordan is necessary to ensure the continuing viability of Prospect, the steel pail company. Milikowsky is the sole buyer of all the steel Prospect uses to make pails, and, according to testimony, the cost advantage attributable to his steel-buying expertise is virtually the only reason that Prospect remains a viable operation.

The two companies' dependence on Milikowsky is greatly increased by the companies' extremely precarious financial condition. The two companies, as well as the Milikowsky families personally, are indebted for approximately $ 20 million to an international steel conglomerate, TradeARBED. According to the testimony of Milikowsky's business lawyer, Jordan and Prospect are so deeply indebted that they are unable to obtain credit from anywhere else, and TradeARBED continues to provide credit only so long as the companies remain profitable. The court, crediting the unrebutted [14] testimony on behalf of Milikowsky, was able to conclude that the companies' continuing livelihood depends entirely on Milikowsky's personal involvement, and that, in his absence, TradeARBED might well withdraw its credit, leading to both companies' immediate bankruptcy and [*9] the loss of employment for Jordan's employees and Prospect's 150 to 200 employees.

On the basis of this record, we cannot find clear error in the court's conclusion that imprisoning Milikowsky would have extraordinary effects on his employees to a degree not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission. While we agree with our sister circuits that HN8[↑] business ownership alone, or even ownership of a vulnerable small business, does not make downward departure appropriate, see cases cited supra, departure may be warranted where, as here, imprisonment would impose extraordinary hardship on employees. As we have noted in similar circumstances, the Sentencing Guidelines "do not require a judge to leave compassion and common sense at the door to the courtroom." Johnson, 964 F.2d at 125.

CONCLUSION

We have considered all of Milikowsky's contentions as to why his conviction should be reversed, [15] and the government's contentions as to why the sentence should be vacated, and have found no basis for either reversal or vacatur. The judgment of conviction and the sentence are affirmed.

Associated Bodywork & Massage Professionals v. American Massage Therapy Ass'n

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 1, 1995, Decided ; September 5, 1995, DOCKETED

No. 95 C 367

Reporter

897 F. Supp. 1116 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12847 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,207

ASSOCIATED BODYWORK AND MASSAGE PROFESSIONALS, a Colorado corporation, Plaintiff, v. AMERICAN MASSAGE THERAPY ASSOCIATION, Defendant.

Core Terms

massage, therapy, allegations, antitrust, anticompetitive, certification, regulations, affiliate, Counts, mail, sham

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN1[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), all well-pleaded factual allegations are presumed to be true. The court must view those allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and accept all reasonable inferences to be drawn from those allegations as true. However, the court is not constrained by the plaintiff's legal characterizations of its allegations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Governments > Legislation > Vagueness

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

HN2[] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a court must construe the pleadings liberally, and mere vagueness or lack of detail alone will not constitute sufficient grounds to dismiss a complaint. The complaint need not specify the correct legal theory nor point to the right statute to survive a rule 12\(b\) motion to dismiss. Rather, the complaint must state, either directly or inferentially, allegations establishing the necessary elements for recovery under the chosen legal theory.

897 F. Supp. 1116, *1116 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12847, 12847

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Political Speech

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

When private organizations encourage legislative action eventually resulting in anticompetitive restraints on potential competitors, those organizations enjoy absolute immunity for the anticompetitive restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Political Speech

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Remedies

Where an alleged antitrust injury stems from a defendant's success in influencing legislation, that injury is caused by the state legislatures' political decisions, not by the defendant itself, thus breaking the chain of causation between defendant's actions and any injury suffered by plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Political Speech

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The First Amendment's, U.S. Const. amend. I, protection of political efforts to encourage legislation extends even where a party possesses an anticompetitive motive in petitioning for legislation. The selfishness of a party's political motives is irrelevant. Concerted efforts to influence legislatures are shielded from the reaches of the Sherman Act, regardless of anticompetitive intent or purpose. Accordingly, a defendant's successful efforts to encourage legislation are protected by the First Amendment, even if those efforts were motivated by anticompetitive animus.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Political Speech

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

897 F. Supp. 1116, *1116 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12847, 12847

The narrow "sham" exception to the general rule providing immunity from antitrust claims as a result of a defendant's lobbying efforts applies only if a defendant had no reasonable expectation of obtaining the favorable legislation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Restraints which are generally not within the reach of the Sherman Act are not brought within its sweep by mere allegations that the restraints were accomplished by improper means under state law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN8 [] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Actionable antitrust conspiracies must involve separate and unrelated entities, not closely held affiliates.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Political Speech

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

HN9 [] Freedom of Speech, Political Speech

For purposes of the First Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. I, immunity, "free trade of information" means free trade in the opportunity to persuade action, not merely to describe facts.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Political Speech

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10 [] Freedom of Speech, Political Speech

Allegations of nonviolent state law transgressions will not inject Racketeering and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, implications into protected speech.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN11 [] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Business rivals may not use the Racketeering and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961-1968, to support a cause of action for injuries indirectly caused by mail fraud which was perpetrated against third parties.

Counsel: [1] For ASSOCIATED BODYWORK AND MASSAGE PROFESSIONALS, a Colorado corporation, plaintiff: Robert Scott Bell, Jr., Cosby & Bell, Chicago, IL. Robert E. Wagner, Julie M. Marcus, Robert E. Wagner & Associates, Springfield, IL.

For AMERICAN MASSAGE THERAPY ASSOCIATION, defendant: Gene H. Hansen, Aronberg, Goldgehn, Davis & Garmisa, Chicago, IL. Dawn Carol Wrona, Sanchez & Daniels, Chicago, IL. Marc William O'Brien, Aronberg, Goldgehn, Davis & Garmisa, Chicago, IL.

Judges: CHARLES RONALD NORGLE, SR., Judge, United States District Court

Opinion by: CHARLES RONALD NORGLE, SR.

Opinion

[*1118] OPINION AND ORDER

CHARLES R. NORGLE, SR., District Judge:

Before the court is the motion of Defendant American Massage Therapy Association ("AMTA") to dismiss the complaint of Associated Bodywork pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). For the reasons set forth below, the motion is granted as to Counts II and IV; because Plaintiff's federal claims are dismissed, the court sua sponte declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Counts I and III.

I. Background

Plaintiff Associated Bodywork and Massage Professionals is a for-profit corporation whose stated purpose is the assistance of massage therapy professionals in the advancement of massage therapy as a profession. At all times material to this case, Plaintiff was a business of good name and reputation, enjoying high esteem both from the public in general and within the massage therapy industry. Defendant is a not-for-profit organization. Through its Government Relations Committee, Defendant contacts various state legislatures across the nation and recommends the enactment of regulatory schemes for the practice of massage [2] therapy.

Defendant has also created the National Certification Board for Therapeutic Massage and Bodywork ("NCBTMB"), as Defendant's administrative affiliate, to supervise certification of massage therapists. The Commission on Massage Therapy Training Accreditation/Approval ("COMTTA") evaluates massage therapy schools and education programs as a self-run affiliate of Defendant. Several state legislatures have approved both NCBTMB and COMTTA programs as part of their massage therapy regulatory schemes.

Through its Government Relations Committee, Defendant routinely distributed literature to legislators of various states, advocating the adoption of massage therapy regulation. The advocated regulations provide, in part, that massage therapists (1) participate in massage therapy training programs which have been accredited by an independent accrediting body (such as COMTTA), (2) receive certification from a national certification program similar to the NCBTMB's, and [*1119] (3) belong to a recognized national professional society. In detailing this third recommended regulation, membership in a recognized national professional society, Defendant's literature states, in part:

Closely-held, [3] for-profit enterprises such as the Associated Bodyworkers and Massage Professionals of Colorado would be excluded from the professional membership qualification. Unfortunately, a private organization provides a loophole model too easily adapted to the service of organized crime.

(Compl. Ex. A.)

Plaintiff's complaint contains four counts: Count I alleges a state law libel claim based on the above quotation; Count II alleges violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1964\); Count III alleges violation of the

897 F. Supp. 1116, *1119 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12847, 3

Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act, 815 ILCS 510 (1966); and Count IV alleges violation of the Organized Crime Control Act, Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations ("RICO"), HN1 [↑] 18 U.S.C. § 1961.

On a motion to dismiss, all well-pleaded factual allegations are presumed to be true. Land v. Chicago Truck Drivers, 25 F.3d 509, 511 \(7th Cir. 1994\). The court must view those allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, Gould v. Artisoft, Inc. 1 F.3d 544, 546 \(7th Cir. 1993\), and accept all reasonable inferences to be drawn from those allegations as true, Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 410 \(7th Cir.\), cert. denied, [484 U.S. \[4\] 935, 98 L. Ed. 2d 269, 108 S. Ct. 311 \(1987\)](#). However, the court is not constrained by the plaintiff's legal characterizations of its allegations. Republic Steel Corp. v. Pa. Eng'g Corp., 785 F.2d 174, 183 \(7th Cir. 1986\).

Additionally, HN2 [↑] the court must construe the pleadings liberally, and mere vagueness or lack of detail alone will not constitute sufficient grounds to dismiss a complaint. Strauss v. City of Chicago, 760 F.2d 765, 767 \(7th Cir. 1985\). The complaint need not specify the correct legal theory nor point to the right statute to survive a Rule 12\(b\) motion to dismiss. Tolle v. Carroll Touch, Inc., 977 F.2d 1129, 1134-35 \(7th Cir. 1992\). Rather, the complaint must state, either directly or inferentially, allegations establishing the necessary elements for recovery under the chosen legal theory. Glatt v. Chicago Park Dist., 847 F. Supp. 101, 103 \(N.D. Ill. 1994\).

II. Antitrust Count

In Count II of the complaint, Plaintiff contends that Defendant's efforts to influence the legislatures, in conjunction with the functioning of the NCBTMB and COMTTA, restrain trade in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(Supp. 1989\). According to Plaintiff, [5] Defendant AMTA, NCBTMB and COMTTA have intentionally conspired to monopolize the industry of massage therapy, thus directly restraining trade and interstate commerce in violation of the Act. Plaintiff states that they have done so state-by-state, by lobbying for and creating "certification requirements" which expressly favor Defendant and its affiliates, and by structuring these requirements to effectually exclude non-AMTA-members from the industry. This has caused Plaintiff to suffer damage to its business reputation, loss of prospective financial income, and severe hardship in the operation of its business.

Defendant anchors its motion to dismiss the antitrust portion of Plaintiff's complaint on the argument that Defendant's actions enjoy protection from prosecution under the First Amendment. Indeed, the type of activity Plaintiff complains of has long been recognized as immune by the First Amendment right to petition the government. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\). Defendant argues that the law on [6] this issue in this circuit is "gin clear." (Def.'s Mem. Dismiss at 7 (citing Lawline v. American Bar Ass'n, 956 F.2d 1378 \(7th Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 452, 114 S. Ct. 551 \(1993\)\).\)

Lawline holds that, HN3 [↑] when private organizations encourage legislative action eventually resulting in anticompetitive restraints on potential competitors, those organizations "enjoy absolute immunity for the anticompetitive restraint." Lawline, 956 F.2d at 1383 (citing Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 499, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 1936, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 \(1988\)). This rule acknowledges that a contrary holding could chill the exercise of the constitutionally [1120] protected right to petition the government, thereby denying the government useful input from parties fearful of antitrust liability. See Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 14 (Supp. 1992).

Furthermore, HN4 [↑] where, as here, the alleged injury stems from a competitor's success in influencing legislation, that injury is caused by the state legislatures' political decisions, not by the competitor itself. Although Defendant may have encouraged the legislatures' actions, the choice [7] to enact massage therapy regulations constituted an independent governmental choice, comprising a supervening "cause," and breaking the link between Defendant's actions and any injury Plaintiff may have suffered. Id. at 14.

HN5 [↑] The First Amendment's protection of political efforts to encourage legislation extends even where a party possesses an anticompetitive motive in petitioning for legislation. The selfishness of a party's political motives is irrelevant. City of Columbia & Columbia Outdoor Advertising v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct.

1344, 1354, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). Concerted efforts to influence legislatures are shielded from the reaches of the Sherman Act, regardless of anticompetitive intent or purpose. Id. at 1354 (citing United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965)). Accordingly, Defendant's successful efforts to encourage legislation are protected by the First Amendment, even if those efforts were motivated by anticompetitive animus.

In its response to Defendant's motion, Plaintiff argues, in an apparent attempt to assert the "sham" exception to Defendant's First Amendment protection, that [8] Defendant should lose the protection because Defendant attempted to deny Plaintiff access to the regulatory process. However, Plaintiff's complaint contains assertions of no more than Defendant's successful attempts to encourage legislation.

Even if Defendant did attempt to deny Plaintiff access to the legislative petitioning system, HN6[[↑]] the narrow "sham" exception would apply to Defendant's attempts only if Defendant had no reasonable expectation of obtaining the favorable legislation. See City of Columbia, 111 S. Ct. at 1354. Since, as Plaintiff emphasized in its complaint, many states actually adopted legislation like that encouraged by Defendant, Defendant cannot be said to have lacked any reasonable expectation that the legislatures would follow Defendant's recommendations.

Plaintiff further argues in its response that the "sham" exception should apply because Defendant used improper means (i.e., libel) when recommending the legislation which resulted in restrained competition. However, HN7[[↑]] restraints which are generally not within the reach of the Sherman Act are not brought within its sweep by mere allegations that the restraints were accomplished by improper means under state [9] law. Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, 486 U.S. 492 at 508, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988).

The narrow scope of the "sham" exception stems from recognition that antitrust laws, "tailored as they are for the business world, are not at all appropriate for application in the political arena." Noerr, 81 S. Ct. at 531. Because they took place wholly within the political arena, Defendant's legislative efforts do not fall within the "sham" exception and, therefore, enjoy First Amendment protection.

Furthermore, HN8[[↑]] actionable antitrust conspiracies must involve separate and unrelated entities, not closely held affiliates. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984). Plaintiff contends that whether NCBTMB is indeed separate and unrelated is a question of fact which necessitates the denial of Defendant's motion. However, in its complaint, Plaintiff states "NCBTMB is an administrative affiliate of Defendant, its parent organization," and continues on to detail the close ties between NCBTMB and Defendant. (Compl. at 4.) Similarly, Plaintiff details the close ties between Defendant and COMTTA. Taking, as we [10] must, all allegations in Plaintiff's complaint as true, Plaintiff has not alleged an actionable antitrust conspiracy and Count II of the complaint is dismissed.

III. RICO Count

Count IV of Plaintiff's complaint alleges that Defendant AMTA, in conjunction [*1121] with NCBTMB and COMTTA, conspired to conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity in violation of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1961. Plaintiff predicates its RICO claim on an assertion that Defendant transmitted fraudulent information through the United States mail. Plaintiff states that this mail fraud occurred when Defendant mailed its allegedly libelous literature to various state legislatures on two separate occasions, directing the legislatures to enact massage therapy regulations.

As discussed above in the antitrust context, the court recognizes that Defendant's communications with the legislatures are entitled to First Amendment protections, despite allegations that those communications contained libelous statements. Vital to our political system is the free trade of information between legislators and the public. In this marketplace of ideas, HN9[[↑]] free trade means "free trade in the opportunity to persuade action, [11] not merely to describe facts." N.A.A.C.P. et al. v. Claiborne Hardware Co. et al., 458 U.S. 886, 102 S. Ct. 3409, 3425, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215 (1982) (quoting Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 537, 65 S. Ct. 315, 325, 89 L. Ed. 430 (1945)). In the context of the instant case, RICO should not be employed so as to raise the price of trade in the free speech marketplace. HN10[[↑]] Allegations of nonviolent state law transgressions will not inject RICO implications into protected speech. See National Org. for Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 897 F. Supp. 1047, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10615, 1995 WL 469717 at *33 (N.D. Ill. 1995).

897 F. Supp. 1116, *1121 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12847, 11

In addition, HN11[] business rivals may not use the RICO statute to support a cause of action for injuries indirectly caused by mail fraud which was perpetrated against third parties. See Israel Travel Advisory Serv. v. Isr. Identity Tours, Inc. 61 F.3d 1250, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 18607, 1995 WL 425224, at *7 (7th Cir. 1995) (citing Lancaster Comm. Hosp. v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Dist., 940 F.2d 397, 405-06 \(9th Cir. 1991\)). Plaintiff seems to complain of a fraud perpetrated against the state legislatures but which caused injury to Plaintiff. Plaintiff was not the direct victim of the alleged fraud: the injury complained [*12] of stems directly from political decisions to legislate, not from the Defendant's conduct.

In drafting RICO, Congress did not intend to create a statutory sieve through which business rivals can filter the content of their competitors' communications with legislative bodies. Nor was it their intent to create protection for themselves from the content of unwanted, unsolicited, even if offensive, communications from private or commercial interests. A representative republic requires the unimpeded flow of information and ideas from its citizens. Although Plaintiff may have a common law remedy against Defendant, the alleged indirect injury does not give rise to a RICO remedy.

Therefore, because Plaintiff has failed to allege the predicate mail fraud and because of First Amendment considerations, Plaintiff's RICO Count is dismissed.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly, Defendant's motion to dismiss is granted with prejudice as to Counts II and IV. The court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Counts I and III.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ENTER:

CHARLES RONALD NORGL, SR., Judge

United States District Court

DATED: 9/1/95

End of Document

Nichols Motorcycle Supply v. Dunlop Tire Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 5, 1995, Decided ; September 6, 1995, DOCKETED

No. 93 C 5578

Reporter

913 F. Supp. 1088 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278 **

NICHOLS MOTORCYCLE SUPPLY INC., an Illinois corporation, Plaintiff, v. DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation, ED TUCKER DISTRIBUTOR, INC. d/b/a TUCKER-ROCKY DISTRIBUTING, a Texas corporation, and LEMANS CORPORATION, a Wisconsin corporation, Defendants.

Core Terms

Nichols, distributors, termination, prices, tires, discounts, competitor, dealer, Motorcycle, sales, warehouse, conspiracy, manufacturer, vertical, memo, summary judgment, market share, conversation, antitrust, customers, Reply, increased price, price-fixing, damages, parties, rule of reason, percent, horizontal, consumers, products

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1 [PDF] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act states: "Every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1995\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

According to the Sherman Antitrust Act, a plaintiff claiming a section 1 violation must establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Under well-established principles of antitrust law, unilateral conduct by a single person or enterprise falls outside the scope of this provision. Whether an unlawful conspiracy or combination exists should be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by the words they used. Once a plaintiff establishes the existence of an illegal contract, combination or conspiracy, it must then proceed to demonstrate that the agreement constituted an unreasonable (and therefore illegal) restraint of trade under either the per se rule or the rule of reason. The nature of the restraint (e.g., vertical price restraint, vertical nonprice restraint, horizontal price restraint etc.) determines which rule must be applied.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN3 [down] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

Conduct a considered illegal per se is limited to cases where a defendant's actions are so plainly harmful to competition, that they are presumed illegal and the need for further proof of anticompetitive impact is unnecessary. Per se cases include horizontal and vertical price fixing agreements and certain types of group boycotts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

HN4 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that there be a contract, combination or conspiracy between the manufacturer and other distributors in order to establish a violation. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Interdependent behavior without evidence of parallelism, however, does not reflect an unlawful agreement under section 1 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

In a rule of reason case, the inference of an illegal agreement may be sustained merely by producing evidence that "casts doubt" on inferences of independent action. However, although the agreement may not be as difficult to prove under the rule of reason, additional elements must be met. For instance, a plaintiff must show that the defendants had market power to fix prices and that the price fixing scheme had an anticompetitive impact on the market as a whole.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the rule of reason test, a plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged agreement has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The Seventh Circuit has held that a district court must proceed to the first step in the rule of reason analysis, which is to balance the effects the vertical restraint has on intrabrand and interbrand competition, only if the evidence gives rise to the inference that defendants had sufficient market power to control dealer resale prices. Ultimately, the factfinder must weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret the facts and to predict consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN10 [] Remedies, Damages

"Like any damages remedy, the purpose of the Clayton Act is to place the antitrust plaintiff as far as possible in the position it would have occupied but for the violation. Thus, any calculation of section 4 damages must strive to approximate a violation-free state of affairs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN11 [] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

Section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, which makes it unlawful for a buyer "knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited" by the Act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(f\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1088 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 13278

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN12[] Defenses, Cost Justification Defense

Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), makes it illegal to discriminate in price between buyers when the consequence is an injury to competition. To establish a prima facie violation of § 2(a), a plaintiff must establish the existence of (1) price discrimination, and (2) injury to competition. A prima facie violation, however, may be rebutted by one of the Robinson-Patman Act's two affirmative defenses: (1) "cost justification" or (2) "meeting a competitive price". If established, an affirmative defense eliminates the need to decide the issue of injury to competition, because a properly established defense renders such injury justifiable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Bona Fide Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN13[] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Section 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act, states: that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor. 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\) \(1975\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1088 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 13278

Price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act is merely a price difference" between the price for which a defendant sells to one buyer versus the price to which it sells to another.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN15 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Defenses

A defense to an allegation of price discrimination under § 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(b\), has two elements; both must be factually supported to send the defense to a jury. The two elements of a § 2(b) defense are as follows. First, the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, must show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor. Second, the seller must demonstrate that its price was a good-faith response to a competitor's lower price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN16 [] Price Discrimination, Defenses

The Supreme Court has identified four factors that may be relevant to the determination of the seller's good faith. These include whether the seller (1) had received reports from other customers of similar discounts; (2) was threatened with a termination of purchases if the discount were not met; (3) made efforts to corroborate the reported discount by seeking documentary evidence or by appraising its reasonableness in terms of available market data; and (4) had past experience with the buyer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > False Pretenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > False Pretenses > Elements

HN17 [] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, Federal Trade Commission Act

Section 2 of the Consumer Fraud Act provides: Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, including but not limited to the use or employment of any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation or the concealment, suppression or omission of such material fact, or the use or employment of any practice described in Section 2 of the 'Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act,' approved August 5, 1965, in the conduct of any trade or commerce hereby declared unlawful whether any person has in fact been misled, deceived or damaged thereby. In construing this section consideration shall be given to the interpretations of the Federal Trade Commission and the federal courts relating to Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/2.

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1088 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 13278

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN18 [+] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, although intended to protect Illinois consumers, does not contain a geographic limitation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN19 [+] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

To establish a claim under the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, a plaintiff must allege and prove the following elements: (1) the misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; (2) an intent by the defendant that the plaintiff rely on the misrepresentation or concealment; and (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct of any trade or commerce. 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 505/1 et seq.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

HN20 [+] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

In Illinois, the elements necessary to establish a claim of promissory estoppel are: (1) an unambiguous promise; (2) on which the promisee reasonably and justifiably relied; (3) which was foreseeable by the promisor; and (4) on which the promisee relied to his detriment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Promissory Estoppel

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > General Overview

HN21 [+] Consideration, Promissory Estoppel

The elements necessary to assert a claim for equitable estoppel are: (1) words or conduct consisting of misrepresentations or concealment of material facts; (2) defendant must have actual or implied knowledge at the time the representations are made that they are untrue; (3) plaintiff does not know that the representations are untrue at the time that they are made; (4) the party estopped must intend or expect that his conduct or representations will be acted on by the plaintiff; (5) plaintiff relies on the representations in such a manner that he would be prejudiced if the party making the representations is allowed to deny the truth thereof.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1088 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 13278

HN22 [blue document icon] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

The elements of a cause of action for common law fraudulent misrepresentation are: (1) false statement of material fact; (2) known or believed to be false by the party stating it; (3) intent to induce the other party to act; (4) justifiable reliance by the other party on the misrepresentation; and (5) damage to the other party resulting from such reliance.

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN23 [blue document icon] Contracts Law, Breach

The elements that a plaintiff must allege and prove for a valid claim of tortious interference with contract include: (1) the existence of a valid and enforceable contract between the plaintiff and another; (2) that the defendant was aware of the contractual relationship; (3) an intentional and unjustified inducement of a breach of the contract which causes a subsequent breach by the third party; and (4) damages.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN24 [blue document icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

The elements of a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage are: (1) the plaintiff's reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship; (2) the defendant's purposeful interference and destruction of this legitimate expectancy; and (3) that the defendant's actions caused harm to the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Right to Jury Trial

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > Trial by Jury in Civil Actions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Waiver of Jury Trial > Requirements for Waiver > Knowing & Voluntary Waivers

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Waiver of Jury Trial > Requirements for Waiver > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Juries & Jurors > Waiver of Jury Trial > Right of Waiver

HN25 [blue document icon] Jury Trials, Right to Jury Trial

Although the U.S. Const. amend. VII of the United States Constitution guarantees the right to a jury trial in civil cases, this right may be waived. However, such a waiver must be made knowingly and voluntarily. Indeed, as the right of jury trial is fundamental, courts indulge in every reasonable presumption against waiver. The factors to consider in determining whether a contractual waiver of the right to jury trial was entered into knowingly and voluntarily include: (1) the parties' negotiations concerning the waiver provision, if any, (2) the conspicuousness of the provision, (3) the relative bargaining power of the parties and (4) whether the waiving party's counsel had an opportunity to review the agreement.

Counsel: [1] For NICHOLS MOTORCYCLE SUPPLY, INC., an Illinois corporation, plaintiff: Joseph G. Bisceglia, James A. McKenna, Royce Richard Bedward, Steven P Blonder, Jenner & Block, Chicago, IL.

For DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation, defendant: Kenneth Henry Hoch, Robert Thomas Joseph, Patrick John Kelly, David E Lieberman, Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, Chicago, IL. For ED TUCKER DISTRIBUTOR, INC., a Texas corporation dba Tucker/Rocky Distributing, defendant: Joseph E. Coughlin, Terrence Patrick Canade, Michael J. Gaertner, Lord, Bissell & Brook, Chicago, IL. For LEMANS CORP, a Wisconsin corporation, defendant: Ethan Edward Trull, Alexander S. Vesselinovitch, Seyfarth, Shaw, Fairweather & Geraldson, Chicago, IL. David J. MacDougall, Brennan, Steil, Basting & MacDougall, Janesville, WI.

For DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION, counter-claimant: Kenneth Henry Hoch, Patrick John Kelly, Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, Chicago, IL.

For NICHOLS MOTORCYCLE SUPPLY, INC., counter-defendant: Joseph G. Bisceglia, James A. McKenna, Royce Richard Bedward, Jenner & Block, Chicago, IL. Richard P. Campbell, Anthony S. DiVincenzo, Campbell & DiVincenzo, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Ruben Castillo, United States District Judge

Opinion by: Ruben Castillo

Opinion

[*1095] TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. The Facts

- A. Nichols
- B. Dunlop
- C. Metzeler
- D. Tucker/Rocky
- E. Parts Unlimited
- F. Combined Market Share
- G. The Economic Experts

II. The Antitrust Conspiracy Claims

A. The Sherman Act § 1

- 1. Count I: Per Se Violations
 - a. Legal Standards
 - b. The Plaintiff's Evidence
 - (i) The Year 1991

(ii) The Year 1992

(iii) The Year 1993

(iv) March 1993 - June 15, 1993

(a) March 15, 1993: Tucker/Rocky Article Quoting Bob Gregg (PX 382)

(b) The March 22, 1993 Gregg Letter (PX 4C)

(c) March 22, 1993: Parts Unlimited Revises Price List (PX 444)

(d) March 31, 1993: Phone Call (PX 624)

(e) Late March 1993: Mike Buckey Replaces Pat Logue as Dunlop's National Sales Manager

(f) Late March 1993: Gregg Phone Call to Buckley Regarding Termination of Distributors

(g) April 1, 1993: Buckley Memo To Dunlop Distributors (PX 2)

(h) The April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter (PX 5)

(i) April Phone Call Between Buckley & Gregg Regarding April 8, 1992 Gregg Letter

(j) April 30, 1993: Logue Conversation with Motorcycle Stuff Regarding Tucker/Rocky's Low Prices

(k) May [2] 6, 1993: Buckley Visits Nichols, Meets Jack Jesse, and Writes Call Reports (PX 14)

(l) May 6, 1993: Buckley Spends Evening with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited

(m) May 7, 1993: Buckley Visits Tucker/Rocky Warehouse in Chicago

(n) Early May 1993: "Firm Commitments" (PX 17)

(o) Late May 1993: Tucker/Rocky Issues Revised Price List (PX 214; PX 645)

(p) May 20, 1993: Buckley's "Price War" Memo (PX 3)

(q) Buckley's Memos to Robin Mitchell (PX 17; PX 18)

(r) June 15, 1993: Dunlop Terminates Nichols (PX 16)

(v) Post-Termination Evidence

(a) June 1993: Tucker/Rocky Branch Manager's Report (PX 277)

(b) Joe Piazza (PX 540)

(c) Tucker/Rocky's Missing Branch Manager Reports

(d) September 1993: Trade Show Memo (PX 206)

(e) Metzeler Memo of October 5, 1993 on "Price Stability" (PX 303)

(f) Tucker/Rocky Memo Regarding "Market Stabilizing Programs" (PX 280)

(g) Dunlop Raises MSD Mid-Year

(h) Rick Ward (DX 36)

(i) 1994 Price Increases

(j) Tom Peterich

(vi) Inadmissible Testimony

(a) James Stewart

(b) Rocky Trevino (PX 622)

(c) Terry Baisley - William Giacomelli Conversation (PX 643)

c. Analysis

(i) The Horizontal Agreement

(ii) The Vertical Agreement

(a) [3] There is no evidence of parallelism supporting the inference of an agreement to terminate Nichols or to fix prices

(i) Market Theory

(ii) Three Examples of Non-Parallel Behavior

(a) Dunlop Unilaterally Decided to Reduce Distribution Network

(b) Parts Unlimited's 1993 Price Increases

(c) Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited's 1994 Price Increases

(b) The Gregg letters are ambiguous evidence and therefore do not support an inference of price-fixing or a termination agreement

(i) The March 22, 1993 Gregg Letter

(ii) The April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter

(c) There is no other direct or circumstantial evidence of collusion supporting Nichols' section 1 claim

2. Count II: The Rule of Reason

a. Legal Standards

b. Analysis

3. Count III: Group Boycott

B. The Illinois Antitrust Act.

1. Count IV: Per Se Pricefixing

2. Count V: Rule of Reason

3. Count VI: Group Boycott

C. The Robinson-Patman Act Claims

1. The Facts

2. The Merits

- a. Dunlop: Section 2(a)
- b. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited: Section 2(f)

3. The "Meeting Competition" Defense

- a. Background
- b. Analysis

III. The State Law Claims

A. The Facts

B. Claims Against Dunlop

1. Count VIII: [4] Illinois Consumer Fraud Act
2. Counts IX & X: Illinois Franchise Act Illinois
3. Count XI: Promissory Estoppel
4. Count XII: Equitable Estoppel
5. Count XIII: Equitable Recoupment
6. Count XIV: Breach of Contract/Good Faith & Fair Dealing
7. Count XV: Fraud

C. Claims against Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited

1. Count XVI: Tortious Interference with Contract
2. Count XVII: Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

IV. Dunlop's Motion to Strike Nichols' Jury Demand

V. Conclusion

[*1096] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

1

¹ On August 1, 1995, following oral argument, the Court, in a minute order, granted summary judgment in favor of all defendants as to Counts I-VI (1-6) of the Third Amended Complaint. The Court also granted Defendant Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Counts IX through XIV (9-14) and Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Counts VII, XVI, and XVII (7, 16, and 17) of the Plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint. The Court denied Defendant Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Counts VII, VIII and XV (7, 8, and 15) of the Plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint. The Court further granted Plaintiff's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Defendant Dunlop's Section 2(b) affirmative defense to Count VII of Plaintiff's Third Amended Complainant, and denied Dunlop's Motion to Strike Plaintiff's jury demand. The minute order was intended to give the remaining parties sufficient time to prepare for trial. This Opinion is intended to provide reasons for those judgments. The entry of final judgment will be ordered on the date this Opinion is issued.

[5] On June 15, 1993, after a thirty-year business relationship, Dunlop Tire Corporation ("Dunlop"), the largest manufacturer of motorcycle tires in the United States, terminated Nichols Motorcycle Supply Inc. ("Nichols"), its oldest distributor. The termination letter -- commonly referred to in the vernacular as a "Dear John" letter -- merely stated:

[*1097] Dear Jack:

Please see enclosed copy of your "Dunlop Distributor Motorcycle Tire/Tube Agreement" signed by you on January 11, 1993.

In reference to item nine of above-mentioned agreement, Dunlop Tire Corporation exercises its option to terminate this agreement effective five days from receipt of this letter.

Regards,

DUNLOP TIRE CORPORATION

Mike Buckley

National Sales Manager

Motorcycle Tire Division

Not surprisingly, as a direct result of this letter, Nichols commenced a multi-faceted litigation campaign against Dunlop and other parties. Thus, currently pending before this Court is an antitrust action brought by Nichols against Dunlop and Dunlop's two largest distributors, Tucker/Rocky Distributing ("Tucker/Rocky") and LeMans Corporation, through its Parts Unlimited division ("Parts [*6] Unlimited"), Nichols' former competitors.² The Third Amended Complaint contains seventeen counts.³ The federal antitrust conspiracy claims, brought under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1995\), and the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\) \(1995\),⁴ are asserted in Counts I-III and VII. The Illinois Antitrust Act claims are asserted in Counts IV-VI and the supplemental state law claims are asserted in Counts VIII-XVII. The Court has federal subject matter, supplemental and diversity jurisdiction. The fate of the state law claims depends largely upon the decisions this Court makes regarding the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Act claims. We will begin there.

[7] I. The Facts

5

[8] The relevant market for antitrust purposes in this case is defined as the manufacture, sale, distribution and resale of replacement and premium motorcycle tires in the United States. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 5. The relevant manufacturers and distributors, for purposes of this case, are as follows.

²This lawsuit was originally assigned to Judge Conlon and transferred to this Court, by order of the Executive Committee, on May 13, 1995.

³Count XVIII, alleging a civil conspiracy, was dismissed with prejudice by this Court on December 9, 1994.

⁴The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13 et seq., is commonly referred to by its internal numbering as § 2 of the Clayton Act, and will be referred to as § 2 in this opinion.

⁵The following facts are derived from the parties' Statements of Material (undisputed) Facts filed pursuant to Local Rules 12(M)-(N)(3)(b) of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. Some facts in this case will be more easily understood in context of the asserted claims and will be discussed in those portions of the Opinion. References to the undisputed facts, identified in the parties' Rule 12(M) statements and admitted by the non-moving party in the Rule 12(N) statement, will be designated "12(M) P --." Factual disputes, when relevant, will be designated "12(N) P --." Where additional facts supporting the denial of the summary judgment motion, as identified in the Rule 12(N)(3)(b) Statement, have been admitted by the moving party, those facts will be designated "12(N)(3)(b) P --." Where certain facts are admitted and others denied, the admitted facts of the Rule 12(N)(3)(b) Statement of Additional Facts, will be designated " 2(N)(3)(b) Reply P --." The undisputed facts summarized in this opinion are those facts that appear to be "without substantial controversy" pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 45\(d\). These facts should not be relitigated during trial.

A. Nichols

Nichols is an Illinois corporation with its principal place of business in Alsip, Illinois. Nichols has been in the business of distributing motorcycle parts, accessories, supplies, and clothing since around 1960. 12(M) P 1. Jack Jesse has been Nichols' president since [*1098] the spring of 1993. 12(M) App. A. Terry Baisley has been Nichols' national sales manager since October 1989. Id. Ken Anderson is the marketing manager. Id. Nichols currently operates two warehouse distribution centers. Nichols' principal distribution center, which it has operated since approximately 1970, is in Alsip, Illinois (a Chicago suburb). In September 1992, Nichols acquired a second warehouse distribution center in Phoenix, Arizona. 12(M) P 33. These warehouses currently remain open. Id. See also 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 67.

Nichols formerly distributed Dunlop tires and was Dunlop's [9] oldest distributor, acting in this capacity for over 30 years before being terminated on June 15, 1993. 12(M) PP 146, 400. At the time Nichols was terminated, Dunlop tires constituted approximately 20 percent of Nichols' total sales. PX 608 at 29. Nichols has never distributed Metzeler products. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 54. Nichols, however, does sell about 150 lines of motorcycle-related merchandise to both motorcycle retailers and approximately 15-20 different distributors. Nichols also currently sells the following tire brands: Bridgestone, Cheng Shin, Continental, Kenda, and Kings. 12(M) P 2. In the past Nichols has also sold Dunlop, Avon, Michelin, Pirelli, and Yokohama. Nichols is also the owner of the Pro Sport line of motorcycle products and the exclusive agent for Kings motorcycle tires in continental North America. Nichols sells Pro Sport products and Kings tires through a network of distributors and publishes an annual catalog of suggested resale prices. 12(M) PP 12, 48.

Nichols' market share for Dunlop tires between 1990-1994, as indicated by the percentage of tires Dunlop sold to Nichols, was as follows:

*6*Table 6. Dunlop
Motorcycle Tire Sales to

*6*Select Distributors,
1990-94

6(Percent)

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Nichols	13.2	5.4	9.3	1.9	0.00

[10] 12(N)(3)(b) P 12.⁶

B. Dunlop

Dunlop is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in West Amherst, New York. 12(M) P 4. Dunlop manufactures motorcycle tires and sells them to wholesale distributors, who resell them to retail dealers and subdistributors. Retail dealers in turn sell Dunlop tires primarily to the consuming public. Id. Robin Mitchell is Dunlop's senior vice president of marketing and sales. 12(M) App. A. Patrick Logue was Dunlop's national sales manager from approximately 1987 through March 1993. Id. Michael J. Buckley succeeded Mr. Logue as the national sales manager in [11] March 1993. Id.

Dunlop is the largest selling motorcycle tire manufacturer in the United States. Its current market share in the relevant markets is approximately 62-70 percent. 12(M) P 6. Dunlop's success can be partially attributed to the fact that Dunlop has very high consumer name recognition, which predisposes many consumers to purchase Dunlop replacement motorcycle tires. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 7. Dunlop tires are also used by distributors as a lead product to generate sales of other non-Dunlop products to dealers. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 8.

⁶ Defendants have admitted, solely for summary judgment purposes, the assertions of Nichols' expert regarding percentage of sales of various motorcycle tire brands in certain markets because they believe that these assertions are immaterial to the Court's inquiry into whether the parties agreed to fix prices. The relevant expert data is contained in Plaintiff's Exhibit ("PX") 608 at 19.

At the time Nichols was terminated as a Dunlop distributor in June 1993, Dunlop sold tires to 18 distributors: American Honda, Bell Industries, Custom Chrome, Cycle Products, Cycle Sports (in Puerto Rico), Dixie, Harley-Davidson, Intrac, J & D Walter, KK Motorcycle, Marshall Distributing, Motorcycle Stuff, Parts Unlimited, Performance Tire, Pikes Peak, Tucker/Rocky, and Tri-State. Of these 18 distributors, Dunlop sold the most tires to the following four distributors between 1990-1993 (in decreasing order). Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited, Motorcycle Stuff, and Nichols Supply. 12(M) P 10. Dunlop's top three distributors, measured by the percentage [12] of tires sold to them from 1990-1994, are: Tucker/Rocky, followed closely by Parts Unlimited (within 2-5%), [*1099] and Motorcycle Stuff (7-9 % off the leader from 1990-92; 21% off the leader in 1993; 12.4% off the leader in 1994; and 12.2% off the leader for all four years). Id. (PX 608, App. Table D-3). Nichols followed in fourth and fifth⁷ place from 1990-1992, until its termination on June 15, 1993. Id.

C. Metzeler

Metzeler is a German tire manufacturer, owned by Pirelli. Metzeler Motorcycle Tire North America is its North American subsidiary. 12(M) PP 7-8. Gregory Blackwell has been the president of Metzeler N.A. since January 1992. 12(M) App. A.

Metzeler is the second largest selling motorcycle tire manufacturer in the relevant market. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 9. Metzeler tires [13] generally sell at a higher price than Dunlop, and are not discounted as much because there is less intrabrand competition (i.e., fewer distributors) for Metzeler tires. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 13. In the last several years, Metzeler has reduced its distributor base from approximately 12 distributors to five. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 14. Metzeler's five U.S. distributors are: KK Motorcycle, Motorace, Parts Unlimited, Pike's Peak and Tucker/Rocky. 12(M) P 10. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited sell the largest numbers of Metzeler tires; together they account for 90 percent of its sales (Tucker/Rocky buys 60% and Parts Unlimited buys 30%). 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 14.

In 1990, Metzeler had a market share in the relevant markets of 24-30 percent. The president of Metzeler N.A., Gregory Blackwell, estimates that Metzeler's market share is currently 25-30 percent. However, Dunlop's reports indicate that Metzeler's total market share for tires fell to about 12.8-13.75 percent in 1993, although its share of the premium tire market may have been 15 percent. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 10 (PX 608 at 16-18).

D. Tucker/Rocky

Tucker/Rocky is a Texas corporation with its principal place of business [14] in Irving, Texas (Dallas). 12(M) P 5. Robert Nickell is the current chairman and past president (October 1989 to October 1992). Robert Gregg succeeded Mr. Nickell as president on October 1, 1992. 12(M) App. A. Tucker/Rocky owns and operates 12 warehouses in the United States and is considered a national distributor. Tucker/Rocky is in the business of distributing parts, accessories, and apparel for motorcycles and watercraft. 12(M) P 5. Tucker/Rocky is Dunlop's largest distributor, as indicated by its market share. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. This market share is based on the percentage of tires Dunlop sold to Tucker/Rocky during the periods 1990-1994, and was as follows:

*6*Table 6. Dunlop
Motorcycle Tire Sales to

*6*Select Distributors,
1990-94

6(Percent)

Tucker/Rocky	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
--------------	------	------	------	------	------

⁷ Nichols was beaten by Bell Industries in 1991, in terms of Dunlop distributor purchases, by .9 percent. This was the only year between 1990 and 1992 that Nichols did not finish fourth. See PX 608, App. Table D-3.

6*Table 6. Dunlop
Motorcycle Tire Sales to

6*Select Distributors,
1990-94

6*(Percent)

Tucker/Rocky	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
	25.2	27.5	27.2	36.4	33.3

12(N)(3)(b) P 12.

E. Parts Unlimited

LeMans Corporation is a Wisconsin corporation with its principal place of business in Janesville, Wisconsin. 12(M) P 6. Fred Fox is the current chairman and chief executive officer. Jeff Fox is Fred Fox's son, and has been the president of Parts Unlimited since approximately [15] October 1992. 12(M) App. A. LeMans, through its Parts Unlimited division, is in the business of distributing parts and accessories for motorcycles, watercraft, and snowmobiles. 12(M) P 6. Parts Unlimited is Dunlop's second largest distributor, as indicated by its Dunlop market share. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. This market share is based on the percentage of tires Dunlop sold to Parts Unlimited during the period 1990-1994, and was as follows:

6*Table 6. Dunlop
Motorcycle Tire Sales to

6*Select Distributors,
1990-94

6*(Percent)

Parts Unlimited	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
	19.0	23.6	24.7	31.5	28.0

[*1100] 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. Plaintiff's expert concedes that Parts Unlimited, by itself, does not possess market power. Id.

F. Combined Market Share

For the years 1990-1994, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, combined, held the following market share:

6*Table 6. Dunlop
Motorcycle Tire Sales to

6*Select Distributors,
1990-94

6*(Percent)

T/R & PU	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Subtotal	44.2	51.1	51.9	67.9	61.4

12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 12. This data establishes that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited's combined [16] market share at the end of 1993 rose by 16 percent, dropping off in 1994, but remaining 9.5 percent higher than their combined 1992 market share. The combined market share of Dunlop and Metzeler is currently about 85 percent. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 11.

G. The Economic Experts

Nichols has retained an economist, Dr. John Pisarkiewicz, as an expert to perform several tasks in this litigation. 12(M) PP 21, 196. Raymond S. Sims is a Vice President at A.T. Kearney, Inc., in Chicago, Illinois. He has been retained as an expert in this case by Dunlop. 12(M) P 201. The defendants also offer Professor David T. Sheffman, who has produced a report entitled "Trends in the Motorcycle Industry 1985-1993," which indicates that the number of motorcycle dealers selling motorcycles and other related products dropped from 12,953 to 9,264 from 1985 to 1993. The number of real dollars (per million) from these sales, according to this report, also dropped from $ 1,671 to $ 1,247 during that time period. DX 70.

II. The Antitrust Conspiracy Claims

A. The Sherman Act § 1

In Counts I, II, and III, plaintiff broadly alleges that the defendants unreasonably restrained trade [17] by forming an illegal conspiracy to terminate smaller discounting distributors, like Nichols, to consolidate the market and implement an agreement to raise and stabilize resale dealer prices for Dunlop tires in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. 12(N)(3)(b) P 12.⁸ In particular, Nichols claims that Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited performed vertical and horizontal combinations.⁹

[18] HN1 [↑]

Section 1 states: "Every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1995\). HN2 [↑] According to the statute, a plaintiff claiming a section 1 violation must establish a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\). Under well-established principles of antitrust law, unilateral conduct ("independent action") by a single person or enterprise falls outside the scope of this provision. Monsanto Co. v. Spray Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\)(citing United States v. Colgate, 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\)).¹⁰ Whether an unlawful conspiracy or combination exists should be judged by what the parties actually did rather than by the words they used. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 \(1960\) (citing Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Ass'n v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 612, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951 \(1914\); see also United [*1101] States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 142, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 \(1966\) (holding explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a [19] Sherman Act conspiracy where joint and collaborative effort is pervasive). Once a plaintiff establishes the existence of an illegal contract, combination or conspiracy ("an agreement"), it must then proceed to demonstrate that the agreement constituted an unreasonable (and therefore illegal) restraint of trade under either the per se rule or the rule of reason. The nature of the restraint (e.g., vertical price restraint, vertical nonprice restraint, horizontal price restraint etc.) determines which rule must be applied. See Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Prods., Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 \(7th Cir. 1993\). The per se claims will be addressed first.

1. Count I: Per Se Violations

⁸ Defendants admit only that Dunlop terminated Nichols as a distributor. Defendants do not concede that the record supports Nichols' theory of concerted activity to consolidate market share and to fix prices.

⁹ Restraints imposed by agreement between competitors have traditionally been labelled horizontal restraints, and those imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution as vertical restraints; thus the nature of a restraint is determined by the type of agreement that gives rise to the restraint rather than the anticompetitive economic effects of the restraint. See Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730 n.4, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1980\).

¹⁰ Under the Colgate doctrine, "independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." Id.

In Count I, plaintiff alleges that the defendants participated in a vertical and a horizontal conspiracy [20] to fix prices in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. The plaintiff's theory in Count I is that these agreements were illegal per se. In particular, plaintiffs theory is that Dunlop, together with its two largest distributors, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, conspired to terminate smaller discounting distributors, like Nichols, to consolidate their market share and implement an illegal agreement to raise and stabilize resale dealer prices for Dunlop motorcycle tires. There are two agreements under this theory: an agreement to terminate Nichols (because it was a discounter) and an agreement to fix prices. Plaintiff defines these agreements as both horizontal (between the two defendant distributors) and vertical (between Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited) and admits that the proof of these conspiracies "tends to blend together." Transcript at 26. A review of the plaintiff's proof follows a short discussion of the applicable legal principles.

a. Legal Standards

HN3 ↑ Conduct a considered illegal per se is limited to cases where a defendant's actions are so plainly harmful to competition, Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 724, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 [21] (1988), that they are presumed illegal and the need for further proof of anticompetitive impact is unnecessary.¹¹ [22] Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990); Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977). Per se cases include horizontal and vertical price fixing agreements and certain types of group boycotts. See Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 542-43 (2d Cir. 1993) (listing the types of per se violations recognized by the Supreme Court). Price-fixing agreements need not include an "explicit agreement on prices to be charged or that one party have the right to be consulted about the other's prices." Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1221 (7th Cir. 1993) (citing cases). Rather, price-fixing agreements need only have been formed for the purpose and effect of fixing or stabilizing the price of a product in interstate commerce.¹² Id. Tacit agreements are therefore actionable if they can be shown to exist. 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 66 (1986).

An agreement that is illegal per se under section 1 is difficult to prove. Much like Title VII cases, the antitrust analysis proceeds in stages because it involves shifting burdens that lead to an ultimate burden of proof which is

¹¹ The per se presumption simply eliminates the plaintiff's burden of proving anticompetitive impact to the finder of fact through market analysis by an expert economist, as required under the rule of reason; it does not eliminate the need to find antitrust injury, nor does it relieve the plaintiff of its burden to identify and articulate the precise anticompetitive impact caused by the per se price-fixing violation. An antitrust injury flows from price-fixing agreements which plainly reduce competition. However, some price-fixing agreements do not "restrain trade" and are therefore reasonable. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 339-40, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990). It is important to note, however, that "the antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Id. at 338 (citing Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962)). Thus, a competitor "may not complain of conspiracies that set minimum [or maximum] prices at any level." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585, n.8, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) (minimum prices); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968) (maximum prices), unless the dangers identified by Albrecht are present (i.e., the smaller competitor is eliminated from competition pursuant to the price agreement and distribution is then channelled "through a few large or specifically advantaged dealers."). Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 327. Therefore, finding an agreement is only the first step; the agreement is not illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act unless the nature of the price-fixing agreement reduces competition and injures dealers or consumers. Id. The Court must therefore carefully scrutinize the competitive effect of the price-fixing agreement alleged to be illegal per se. Because the presumption of injury eliminates the need for a plaintiff to produce an economist, this theoretical hurdle is now a question of law for the court on summary judgment. This Court is extremely cognizant of this important distinction, recently recognized by the Seventh Circuit in Israel Travel Advisory Serv., Inc. v. Israel Identity Tours, Inc., 61 F.3d 1250, Nos. 94-1451, 94-1554, 94-1815, & 94-1816, 1995 WL 425224. *5 (7th Cir. July 20, 1995) (Easterbrook, J.) ("the antitrust injury doctrine applies with full vigor to the per se offenses").

¹² An agreement to terminate a distributor without evidence of a related agreement on price is not sufficient to establish a per se violation. However, an agreement to terminate, if proven to have an anticompetitive impact, could be illegal under the rule of reason as a nonprice restraint. See Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 724, 726. Nonprice restraints are not alleged in this case.

extremely difficult for a plaintiff to satisfy.¹³ Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1171 \(7th Cir. 1990\). The Seventh Circuit has articulated a burden shifting formula: "when the defendants establish that their conduct is consistent with independent action, the plaintiffs are required to come forward with evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action." Id. If the plaintiff's evidence of a conspiracy is ambiguous, ([23] i.e., is as consistent with the defendant's permissible independent interests, then the case may not proceed to a jury). Id. Conversely, the case may proceed if the plaintiff can demonstrate, through specific evidence, that the "inference of conspiracy to fix prices is reasonable in light of the competing inference of independent action." Id. at 1171 (quoting Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 660-61 \(7th Cir.\), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 98 L. Ed. 2d 486, 108 S. Ct. 488 \(1987\)).

These Seventh Circuit standards have been derived from the specific standards set out by the Supreme Court in Matsushita Electric Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\), and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1983\). In Matsushita, the Supreme Court [24] granted certiorari to articulate the standard that district courts must apply when deciding a motion for summary judgment in an antitrust conspiracy case. In Monsanto, the Court granted certiorari to articulate the standard of proof required to find a vertical price-fixing conspiracy in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. These two cases establish the legal parameters for this Court's decision.

In Monsanto, Justice Powell, writing for the Supreme Court, found that the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence of an agreement to terminate a distributor, pursuant to a vertical price-fixing conspiracy between a manufacturer and a large distributor, to create a jury issue. In reaching this conclusion, the Court articulated the proper standard to be applied to section 1 claims like the one before us. The Court also outlined several important distinctions that are worth repeating here because they address the very heart of this case:

This Court has drawn two important distinctions that are at the center of this and any other distributor-termination case. First, there is the basic distinction between concerted and independent action -- a distinction not always clearly [25] drawn by the parties and the courts. HN4 Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that there be a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" between the manufacturer and other distributors in order to establish a violation. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Independent action is not proscribed. A manufacturer of course generally has a right to deal, or refuse to [^{*}1103] deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\); cf. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 \(1960\). Under Colgate, the manufacturer can announce its resale prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination. The second important distinction in distributor-termination cases is that between concerted action to set prices and concerted action on nonprice restrictions. The former have been per se illegal since the early years of national antitrust enforcement. See Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 404-409, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 \(1911\). The latter are judged under the rule of reason, which requires a weighing of the relevant circumstances [26] of a case to decide whether a restrictive practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition. See Continental T.V. Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\).

While these distinctions in theory are reasonably clear, often they are difficult to apply in practice. In Sylvania we emphasized that the legality of arguably anticompetitive conduct should be primarily judged by its "market impact." But the economic effect of all the conduct described above -- unilateral and concerted vertical price-setting, agreements on price and nonprice restrictions -- is in many, but not all, cases similar or identical. [citation omitted]. And judged from a distance, the conduct of the parties in the various situations can be indistinguishable. For example, the fact that a manufacturer and its distributors are in constant communication about prices and marketing strategy distributors are in constant communication about prices and marketing strategy does not alone show that the distributors are not making independent pricing decisions. A manufacturer and its distributors have legitimate reasons to exchange information about price and the reception of their products in the market. [27] Moreover, it is precisely in cases in which the manufacturer attempts to further a particular marketing strategy by means of agreements on often costly nonprice restrictions that it will have the most interest in the distributors' resale prices. The manufacturer often will want to ensure that its distributors earn sufficient profit to pay for programs such as hiring and training additional salesmen or demonstrating the technical features of the product, and will want to see that "free-riders" do not interfere. Thus, the manufacturer's strongly felt concern about resale prices does not necessarily mean that it has done more than the Colgate doctrine allows. Nevertheless, it is of considerable importance that independent action by the manufacturer, and concerted action on nonprice restrictions, be distinguished from price-fixing agreements, since under present law the latter are subject to per se treatment and treble damages. On a claim of concerted price-fixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement. If an inference of such an agreement may be drawn from highly ambiguous evidence, there is a considerable [28] danger that the doctrines enunciated in Sylvania and Colgate will be seriously eroded.

¹³ Unlike Title VII cases, however, the Plaintiff cannot prove an agreement to conspire merely by showing that the defendants' assertions of independent conduct were a pretext for price-fixing and illegal termination agreements.

Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 760-63 (emphasis added). The Supreme Court then held that evidence that is sufficient to show agreement is evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." 465 U.S. at 764.¹⁴

[*1104] In Matsushita, the Court found that the defendants lacked an economically [29] plausible motive to conspire and thus concluded that there was no genuine issue for trial. On the issue of motive, Justice Powell, again writing for the Court, found:

the absence of plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a genuine issue for trial exists within the meaning of Rule 56\(e\). Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with others, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy.

475 U.S. at 596. To summarize, Monsanto requires the plaintiff to produce evidence that tends to preclude independent action. Matsushita limits the range of justifiable inferences that can be drawn from ambiguous evidence offered to comply with Monsanto.

Direct evidence of a conspiracy will always meet this standard. "Ambiguous" circumstantial evidence, alone, will not be enough. Somewhere between these two extremes lies the kind of circumstantial evidence that will provide enough direction for the factfinder to conclude that [30] the defendants' minds met, and from this meeting an agreement arose and was implemented through concerted action that achieves an unlawful objective. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761 n.9. The demarcation between circumstantial evidence which is "ambiguous" and that which is not, however, is unclear.

Ambiguous evidence permits equally competing inferences without "tending" to point in one direction or the other. Market Force, 906 F.2d at 1171. For example, circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy that is "consistent with independent action" is ambiguous. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763. Ambiguous evidence cannot be sent to a jury because a court may not invite the factfinder to speculate that an agreement existed. See 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1405 at 21-23, for a good discussion of the judge and jury's role in determining whether an agreement exists.

¹⁴ In a footnote, the Court explained:

The concept of a meeting of the minds or a common scheme [to fix prices] in a distributor termination case includes more than a showing that the [nonterminated] distributor conformed to the [manufacturer's] suggested resale price. It means . . . that evidence must be presented [by the plaintiff that shows] that the distributor [not only] communicated its acquiescence or agreement, [but] that this [acquiescence] was [also] sought by the manufacturer.

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1104 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 30

To prevent such speculation, the Supreme Court has held that "the range of [permissible] inferences that may be drawn from ambiguous evidence [must be] limited," Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\); Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 \(2d Cir.\), 31 cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 \(1993\); Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 660-61 \(7th Cir. 1987\), and cannot be used, without more, to establish the existence of a Section 1 agreement.

Conversely, unambiguous evidence tends to point in a single direction -- like a signpost.¹⁵ The Supreme Court has defined the absence of ambiguity as evidence which "tends to exclude the possibility" that the defendants acted independently for lawful business reasons, rather than in concert for unlawful purposes. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761. As Professor Areeda says:

Notwithstanding many difficulties in appraising the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence, we know what we are looking for: some level of commitment to a common course of action. The fact-finder may be perplexed by the evidence, but his reasoning will not be confused if he keeps clearly in mind that he is looking for a traditional agreement.

The analytical problem is that there is a "no man's land" between the traditional agreement and tacit coordination through recognized interdependence. The line between *1105 lawful interdependent behavior and unlawful commitment is not sharp. The former 32 can often blend into the latter, because reciprocal assurances can be communicated by conduct rather than be words and remain "agreements" even though vague, incomplete, and riddled with qualifications and exceptions.

Id. § 1410 at 67. The crucial question is "Who was in agreement with whom and about what?" Id. § 1409 at 59.

[33] b. The Plaintiff's Evidence

What follows is the evidence that the plaintiff has relied upon in an attempt to meet the requirements of Monsanto and Matsushita and to survive the defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment.¹⁶ It is summarized in a chronological fashion to give the reader a comprehensive view of the evidence plaintiff discovered to prove its case and which this Court evaluated in reaching its decisions.¹⁷

[34] (i) The Year 1991

In August of 1991, Tucker/Rocky, the largest distributor for Dunlop tires in the United States, attempted to purchase Nichols' business, which then consisted of just one warehouse located in Alsip, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago. Tucker/Rocky threatened to open its own warehouse in Chicago if Nichols declined to sell. Nichols declined to pursue negotiations with Tucker/Rocky. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 17. Tucker/Rocky then made good on its threat, opening its own Chicago warehouse (its 12th location) in August 1992. In May 1992, Nichols began planning to open a Phoenix, Arizona warehouse.

¹⁵ As a practical matter, it may be difficult to draw a distinction between direct and unambiguous circumstantial evidence, since the characterization depends upon the facts of an individual case. Cf. 6 Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 64 ("Direct evidence [of an agreement includes] such [things] as documents, meetings, and participant testimony that defendants exchanged commitments or otherwise collaborated by some means other than making a marketplace decision."). In this case, the documents and testimony that will be reviewed do not manifest an agreement that is so obvious that the Court need not pause in reaching a decision under Section 1. Quite the contrary, the evidence in this case never exceeds the outer limit of ambiguity.

¹⁶ References to the Exhibits submitted in this case are as follows: Defendants' Joint Exhibits are marked "DX --"; Plaintiff's Exhibits are marked "PX --." Deposition testimony is designated by the name and page number.

¹⁷ The Court has attempted to summarize the Plaintiff's most relevant evidence. The fact that every single piece of Plaintiff's evidence is not contained in this summary does not mean that the evidence was not evaluated by this Court. The Court has fully evaluated all the evidence cited by the Plaintiff in deciding the motions addressed in this Opinion and has followed the urging of Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of No. Am., 974 F.2d 1358, 1364 \(3d Cir. 1992\), to view the evidence as a whole.

In the meantime, a price war among distributors had developed regarding the sale of Dunlop tires.¹⁸ For instance, in September of 1991, Tucker/Rocky's monthly reports indicate that its Dunlop sales were dropping due to "deteriorating service level and competitive pressure." PX 252U. Reports in the following months bore the same complaints. An October 1991 report noted the existence of "severe price pressure on Dunlop." PX 251. A December 1991 report referred to "another 25% drop in Dunlop sales over the previous month Discounting by the competition has to be a [35] big factor." PX 250U.

Despite its one-warehouse operation, the evidence indicates that Nichols successfully used discounting methods to undercut Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited in areas of the country where these large distributors were strongest. There is also deposition testimony that Tucker/Rocky was "unwilling to sell" at Nichols' prices and that Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited discussed the need to "clean up the market" with Pat Logue of Dunlop.

(ii) The Year 1992

In January 1992, Tucker/Rocky's monthly reports [36] indicated that "if profits fell in 1991, [Dunlop] was probably to blame." PX 249U. In April 1992, Tucker/Rocky indicated that it was concerned about maintaining a "decent [profit] margin." PX 228. By November 1992, Bob Gregg found it necessary to send a memo to Tucker/Rocky's sales representatives to pass the word that "dealers should resent deals that are too low" and should "tell the opportunist distributor that the path to long term success is not short term deep discounts that actually hurt the dealer. Rather, if they want the business they must [*1106] earn it through market stabilizing programs, service and support that helps a dealer short and long term." PX 280 (emphasis in original). Gregg also noted that dealers "should not switch orders from an industry supporter like Tucker/Rocky to an opportunistic offer." Id.

During the summer and fall of 1992, various meetings took place between Dunlop, Nichols, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited. For instance, in July or August 1992, Pat Logue of Dunlop met with Jack Jesse, the president of Nichols. Nichols did not mention the new warehouse at that time. On August 16, 1992, Logue attended Tucker/Rocky's open house for its [37] new Chicago warehouse. On August 17, 1992, Logue held a business meeting with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited. On September 14, 1992, Nichols leased the new Phoenix warehouse. Later that month, at the IMAE trade show in Las Vegas, Nevada, Jesse told Logue that Nichols planned to open a new warehouse in Phoenix. In October 1992, Logue flew to Dallas to hold business meetings with Bob Nickell, the current chairman and past-president of Tucker/Rocky, and Bob Gregg, the president of Tucker/Rocky since October 1, 1992. In November of 1992, Nickell spoke with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited at a Dunlop distributor meeting in Hawaii. Fox recalled discussing only non-business matters with Nickell in Hawaii.

On November 14, 1992, Lee Walsh, a Parts Unlimited representative, wrote a letter to Jeff Fox, which stated:

Nichols Motorcycle supply has recently hired 2 Road Reps for this area. One in Washington and One in Oregon. While in Oregon this week I got my hands on the discount program that they are proposing to the dealers. (copy enclosed). I also did a price compare spread sheet so we could see where we stood (copy enclosed).

The pricing is bad enough, but they are also talking up [38] the new Phoenix warehouse and are telling the dealers that they are looking to expand their warehouse locations and that Seattle is one of the target areas!

This is probably a big line of bull -- but the dealers are sure listening.

I'm not concerned, but I thought you ought to know and should see how the pricing actually ends up.

Please show this to Jet.

Thanks,

Jeff

PX 22.

¹⁸ This price war consisted of aggressive price discounting by Dunlop distributors to dealers nationwide. Dunlop discounting was particularly fierce in southern California, which was an important market for motorcycle tires. 12(N)(3)(b) P 20 (citing PX 601 a Dunlop Memorandum identifying Arizona (Phoenix, Scottsdale, Mesa, and Chandler); California (Los Angeles and San Jose); and Illinois (Chicago) as "key" markets). Southern California was a stronghold for Parts Unlimited. PX 6.

On December 28, 1992, Pat Logue, the National Sales Manager for Dunlop, issued the following Memorandum to all of Dunlop's distributors:

To: All Dunlop Motorcycle Tire Distributors
 From: P.J. Logue
 Date: December 28, 1992
 Subject: 1993 Dunlop Distributor Motorcycle Tire/Tube Agreement

As we move into 1993, it is important that you understand Dunlop's plans for the 1993 tire replacement market is not going to grow in the predictable future. Our distributor base is still at approximately the same level as it was when the market was 35% larger than it is today.

Because of this situation, it is our intention to reduce our account base before the September IMAE by at least two to three distributors. This is a very difficult decision but [39] it is still one that must be made. In addition, anyone involved in sub-distribution will be cancelled. Clearly if we are concerned about the size of our existing direct distributor base, it would only make sense that "unapproved" sub-distribution base must be eliminated first.

You are encouraged to read the entire Motorcycle Tire/Tube Agreement. In particular, read point number 3. The channel of distribution that Dunlop will support and approve is detailed in this section.

Please return the signed agreement by January 8, 1993. After January 8th, all shipments will cease to distributors that have not returned agreements.

Thank you for both your understanding and cooperation. Happy Holidays!

[*1107] Patrick J. Logue
 National Sales Manager
 Dunlop Motorcycle Tires

PX 1.

(iii) The Year 1993

By the beginning of 1993, the ongoing price war had driven the resale price of Dunlop tires down. Decreased retail sales and "small dealer purchases from distributors" led to deep price cutting. PX 605 (Tucker/Rocky Feb. 1993 Report). On January 14, 1993, three days after Nichols signed its 1993 distributor agreement,¹⁹ Logue flew to Dallas to [40] have dinner with Nickell, Gregg, and Andre Lacy, the owner of Tucker/Rocky's parent company. Logue testified that the four men discussed the termination of distributors and the pricing of Dunlop tires. Nickell and Gregg do not recall any such conversation.²⁰ Logue Dep. 985-88.

[41] Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited also admit that they often complained to Dunlop about Nichols' pricing during this time frame. PX 240U (refers to "Nichols' ridiculous pricing"); PX 510 states that "our most frequent thorn is Nichols M/C in Chicago" due to deep discounting). By February 1993, Tucker/Rocky's President's Report indicated that the ongoing price war had reduced the profit margins for Tucker/Rocky to an "unacceptable" level. PX 605H.

On February 1, 1993, the two defendant distributors issued their annual published dealer price catalogs for that year. Tucker/Rocky's prices remained the same as its 1992 dealer resale prices. Parts Unlimited's prices, however, increased to reflect Dunlop's increased manufacturer's suggested dealer ("MSD") prices for 1993. The defendants argue that this disparity in pricing demonstrates the lack of a conspiracy . Nichols claims, however, that the disparity shows only that Tucker/Rocky reneged on the agreement to raise prices.

¹⁹ This agreement contained an alleged jury trial waiver which is discussed at the end of this Opinion.

²⁰ In many instances, the testimony in this case is in conflict. Plaintiff claims that this conflict creates a credibility issue for the jury. Defendants correctly point out that Plaintiff cannot establish genuine issues of material fact with credibility arguments. Trans Aire Int'l, Inc. v. Northern Adhesive Co., Inc., 882 F.2d 1254, 1257 (7th Cir. 1989)(affirming entry of summary judgment and dismissing plaintiff's suggestion that deposition testimony relied on by the defendant is not credible); Walter v. Fiorenzo, 840 F.2d 427, 434 (7th Cir. 1988)(A motion for summary judgment cannot be defeated merely by an opposing party's incantation of lack of credibility over a movant's supporting affidavit.").

In February 1993, a new round of conversations between the defendants ensued. Pat Logue talked to Jeff Fox about Tucker/Rocky's published prices for Dunlop tires in early February 1993 at the Cincinnati dealer show. [42] According to Logue, Fox pointed out that Parts Unlimited's published prices were significantly higher than Tucker/Rocky's published prices. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(g). Fox admits that he recalled talking to Pat Logue about price levels, but did not recall when this conversation took place. Id. Mike Buckley (who did not yet work for Dunlop) and Jeff Fox also spoke together at the Cincinnati show. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 31(j). In addition, Pat Logue's daybook contains a notation for February 15, 1993, stating "Call J. Fox." Id. at P 31(g)(citing PX 153). ²¹ Logue assumed that he entered the notation because he received a message to call Fox, but he could not recall the subject matter of any message or phone call. Id. Then, on February 16, 1993, Nickell, Tucker/Rocky's chairman, attended a sports banquet in Buffalo, New York, as Logue's guest. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(h). On February 17, 1993, Tucker/Rocky's phone records indicate that someone at Tucker/Rocky (although the source of the call could not be identified) placed a telephone call to the Parts Unlimited main switchboard that lasted 17 minutes and 32 seconds. There is no evidence regarding the subject matter or the persons involved [43] in that telephone call. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 31(i) . Two days later, on February 19, 1993, Logue and Fox once again discussed Tucker/Rocky prices at a trade show.

Standing alone, these conversations, despite their coincidental (and perhaps suspicious) [*1108] timing, are not probative of the issue before us: whether the defendants agreed to fix prices and terminate Nichols. ²² The February conversations, however, do not stand alone; they provide the context for the two events which took place on March 22, 1993: ²³ [45] (1) Parts Unlimited published its revised dealer price list for 1993, in which it dropped its prices (including its "best quantity" price) significantly below the MSD price, thereby equalling or undercutting Tucker/Rocky's published February 1, 1993, prices--in most cases by mere cents, PX 444; ²⁴ and (2) the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter to Pat Logue (PX 4), the first documented communication [44] between the three defendants since the February 19, 1993, trade show meeting between Logue and Fox.

(iv) March 1993 - June 15, 1993

The following evidence is a list of events, documents and testimony that date from March 1993 through June 15, 1994.

(a) March 15, 1993: Tucker/Rocky Article Quoting Bob Gregg (PX 382)

An in-house article by Tucker/Rocky, regarding a Tucker/Rocky meeting, reports: Bob [Gregg] indicated that Tucker/Rocky will immediately undertake to require stable pricing and minimal discounting at the retail level of all house brands sold by Tucker/Rocky.

²¹ The daybook also contains notations regarding routine contact with Nichols' personnel. 12(N)(b)(3) Reply P 31(g).

²² At most, the admissions on record indicate that Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited felt it was necessary to point out to Logue that Tucker/Rocky's published prices were lower than those published by Parts Unlimited. This evidence, taken at face value, reflects only Parts Unlimited's complaint and general expectation, which it believed Dunlop should hear about, that Tucker/Rocky should raise its prices in 1993. Logue's subsequent and contemporaneous discussions with Nickell of Tucker/Rocky, and Tucker/Rocky's mysterious phone call to Parts Unlimited, while sufficient to raise a question in the factfinder's mind, do not tend to point in the direction of an agreement to fix prices. Without evidence regarding the subject of these conversations, the suspicious timing alone does not take plaintiff's Section 1 case past Monsanto.

²³ Parts Unlimited claims that it issued the revised price list on March 19, 1993, rather than March 22, 1993. Because the portion of that memorandum (PX 444) dated March 19, 1993, is redacted, it is impossible for the Court to make this determination. However, the portion of the memo dated March 22, 1993, appears to confirm the revision just as well.

²⁴ According to Plaintiff, Parts Unlimited had never before issued revised prices prior to publication of its next annual catalog and never before had its "best quantity" prices (the subject matter of the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter) been the same as Tucker/Rocky's prices--they were generally lower.

12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 39. Gregg apparently stated: "Tucker/Rocky will take a leadership role in bringing price stability to major house brands." Id.

(b) The March 22, 1993 Gregg Letter (PX 4C)

On or around March 22, 1993, Robert Gregg, the president of Tucker/Rocky, [46] wrote a two-page letter to Patrick Logue, then the national sales manager for Dunlop, and enclosed a price analysis comparing Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's 1992 dealer resale prices with each other and then against Dunlop's suggested dealer price. This letter is reprinted in its entirety:

March 22, 1993

Mr. Pat Logue

Dunlop Tire & Rubber Co.

P.O. Box 1109

Buffalo, NY 14240

Re: Dealer Price Analysis

Dear Pat,

Enclosed please find a detailed analysis of current Tucker/Rocky dealer prices, relative to Dunlop suggested dealer, Parts Unlimited, and Tucker/Rocky 1992. Note: Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky are both published quantity prices. The following observations are of interest:

1. Tucker/Rocky 1993 prices are equal to Tucker/Rocky 1992 prices. That is, it confirms Tucker/Rocky has not passed along Dunlop's 1993 price increase.
2. Excluding ATV and Scooter, 213 tires are in the analysis. Of those the number and percentage of tires fall into the following categories:

[*1109]

TR Prices Greater Than PU	22	10%
TR Prices 0%-3.5% Lower Than PU	112	52%
TR Prices 3.5%-5.0% Lower Than PU	36	17%
TR Prices 5.0% + Lower Than PU	32	15%
TR Prices With Errors	11	5%

*All K591R and K127

*Adjusted Approx. 3/12/93

[47]

As you read this, 85% of Tucker/Rocky prices are higher or within 5% of Parts Unlimited. 15% (K591R and K127) are more than 5% lower than Parts Unlimited.

Conclusion: Tucker/Rocky would like to pass on the 1993 Dunlop price increase at this time.

(Page Two)

Problem: Tucker/Rocky pricing relative to Parts Unlimited is not relevant. Single warehouse distributors who dump tires at disruptively low and predatory prices, thousands of miles from their warehouse and service area continue to damage Dunlop's marketing objectives.

Solution: Dunlop is on record that Dunlop has too many distributors. We strongly urge Dunlop to take the action Dunlop has already identified as necessary to bring Dunlop distribution in line with market conditions. Please take into consideration the percentage of tires sold outside a distributor's service area (i.e., more than 500 miles from any warehouse) and the degree of disruptive and predatory pricing.

Tucker/Rocky will increase the amount of resources Tucker/Rocky spends to promote and service Dunlop tires to assure Dunlop increased sales and market share for Dunlop via the resulting distributor network. This [48] extra Tucker/Rocky expenditure on behalf of Dunlop market share will increase interbrand competition.²⁵

Sincerely,

Robert R. Gregg

President

RRG:ms/enclosure

PX 4C (emphasis in original).

During the course of discovery, the plaintiff found copies of this letter and the price analysis in the files of both Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky. Plaintiff also found a copy of the first page of the letter in the files of Parts Unlimited. PX 4A. No one knows how (or why) this page was sent to Parts Unlimited, nor who sent it (no envelope with the names of the addressee or addressor was found). The Parts Unlimited copy has a handwritten notation on the front stating:

3/26--Fred-Donna C. rec'd this in her mail today-!? (She didn't get envelope, so we don't know who it was addressed to) Janice.

(PX [49] 4B). "Donna C." is Donna Colclasure, the person in charge of credit inquiries at Parts Unlimited. 12(M) P 87. "Janice" is the secretary to Jeff Fox, the current president of Parts Unlimited and Fred Fox's son. "Fred" is Fred Fox, chairman and former president of Parts Unlimited. In Fred Fox's handwriting, the following is written: "Lynne Forward to Jeff." There is no evidence that Parts Unlimited received a copy of either the second page of the letter or the attached price analysis, both of which Pat Logue at Dunlop did receive. Id. Pat Logue also gave a copy of the letter to his successor at Dunlop, Michael Buckley. 12(M) P 83. Logue testified that he never asked for the letter, 12(M) P 79, but spoke to Gregg after receiving it and was told that Gregg wanted to show that Tucker/Rocky's prices "aren't that different than those of Parts Unlimited." Logue Dep. at 301. Gregg denied any such conversation. Gregg Dep. at 328-29. Gregg also denied ever discussing the letter with Parts Unlimited. Gregg Dep. at 356. In his deposition, however, Gregg explained his motivation for sending the letter. For instance:

Question: "Why were you comparing the prices for Logue?"

Answer: [50] "I thought he would find it interesting."

Question: "Why?"

Answer: "Because he's in the tire business."

Gregg Dep. at 269-70; Transcript at 20.

(c) March 22, 1993: Parts Unlimited Revises Price List (PX 444)

On March 22, 1993, Parts Unlimited issued a revision of its February 1, 1993, price list to [*1110] conform its prices with those issued by Tucker/Rocky on the same date. The revision went into effect on March 23, 1993. Parts Unlimited's prices were higher than Tucker/Rocky's February 1, 1993, prices with respect to the "any" price (quantity of 1), with about 2-6 cents difference. On the "best quantity" price (large orders) the differences are negligible. The parties agree that the best quantity price is the important price because most dealer discounts are applied to that number. Fox Dep. at 677; Nickell Dep. at 222.

(d) March 31, 1993: Phone Call (PX 624)

On March 31, 1993, Bob Gregg at Tucker/Rocky made a phone call to the Parts Unlimited switchboard; the call lasted 18 minutes. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply at P 31(k). Gregg cannot remember making the call. Gregg Dep. at 455-69, 477.

²⁵ Interbrand competition means competition between different manufacturers; intrabrand competition means competition among different distributors selling the same product.

(e) Late March 1993: Mike Buckley Replaces Pat Logue as Dunlop's [51] National Sales Manager

In late March 1993, Michael Buckley was hired by Dunlop to replace Logue. Before hiring Buckley, Logue talked with Robert Gregg and Robert Nickell at Tucker/Rocky and Jeff Fox at Parts Unlimited to inquire whether their contacts with Buckley had been agreeable. Buckley received a favorable recommendation.

(f) Late March 1993: Gregg Phone Call to Buckley Regarding Termination of Distributors

Around the time of Gregg's March 22, 1993, Letter, Gregg telephoned Mike Buckley, who had just replaced Logue as Dunlop's national sales manager. According to Buckley, Gregg wanted to know if Dunlop was going to terminate any distributors. (Buckley, 91-95). Gregg, however, denied the conversation. (Gregg, 247-49; 327).

(g) April 1, 1993: Buckley Memo To Dunlop Distributors (PX 2)

On April 1, 1993, Mike Buckley sent a memo to all Dunlop distributors introducing himself as Dunlop's new national sales manager. PX 2. In this memo, Buckley indicated that he would be meeting with the distributors to become acquainted. He also stated that he would continue with Logue's plan to move Dunlop's distribution "to a more limited focus" in the coming months. Buckley [52] also specifically requested a "current price list" to update his files.

(h) The April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter (PX 5)

On April 8, 1993, Mike Buckley received a letter from Bob Gregg regarding "1993 Suggested Dealer Pricing." This letter is reprinted in its entirety:

April 8, 1993

Mr. Mike Buckley

National Sales Manager

Dunlop Motorcycle Tires

P.O. Box 1109

Buffalo, N.Y. 14240-1109

Re: 1993 Suggested Dealer Pricing

Dear Mike:

Enclosed please find analysis of published "each" prices in the market. In most cases, Tucker/Rocky publishes manufacturer suggested dealer (MSD) prices. As you know, our current price list is from 1992 due to stock carryover.

It has been our opinion that Dunlop MSD is unrealistically high versus actual market conditions. Column # 2 is approximately 4.5% below Dunlop 1993 MSD and seems to be a more realistic level.

Just a suggestion to discuss:

How about issuing a new 1993 MSD price list that (without changing distributor cost) lowers MSD about 4.5%. This would be an official lowering of MSD, making Dunlop dealer pricing more competitive without reducing the amount for which Dunlop [53] sells tires to distributors.

It would also make our imminent 1993 price increase more logical as we could just publish Dunlop MSD.

Please give it some thought and call me as we need to make a decision soon as to new prices.

Best regards,

Robert R. Gregg

President

[*1111] RRG:ms

enclosure

P.S. Our Dunlop sales were up 15% and 16% in February and March. PX 5.

The letter also includes a handwritten post-script, asking Buckley to find out if Parts Unlimited's new published prices are intended to be an "April Special" or "long term repricing." There is no evidence that Parts Unlimited received a copy of this letter.

(i) April Phone Call Between Buckley & Gregg Regarding April 8, 1992 Gregg Letter

Mr. Buckley remembers, and Mr. Gregg does not, one telephone conversation in which Mr. Buckley said he would disregard the suggestions in Mr. Gregg's April 8, 1993, Letter. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(1). Buckley recalls telling Gregg that "it didn't make sense to change a suggested dealer pricing in the middle of the year. There's no good reason to do that." Buckley Dep. at 139.

(j) April 30, 1993: Logue Conversation with Motorcycle Stuff [54] Regarding Tucker/Rocky's Low Prices

Mr. Dodd of Motorcycle Stuff testified that he complained about Tucker/Rocky's low prices and asked Mr. Logue to take action. According to Mr. Dodd, Mr. Logue said that he would try to get Tucker/Rocky to increase its prices. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(m).

(k) May 6, 1993: Buckley Visits Nichols, Meets Jack Jesse, and Writes Call Reports (PX 14)

On May 6, 1993, Mike Buckley made a personal visit to Nichols in Chicago. He met Jack Jesse and other Nichols personnel, discussed Dunlop's goals, the price war and Nichols' concerns about the market.

After this meeting, Mr. Buckley made two handwritten notes of the interview designated as "call reports." These call reports state:

May 6--Meeting in Chicago w/Kenny Anderson, Terry Baisley, Jack Jesse.

Nichols staff was adamant about the fact that it is D > responsibility to improve or control the inability of Dist. to make acceptable profit margins on D > Tires. Nichols felt that T/R, P/U, M.Stuff were actively discounting D> at close to Dist. cost to all dealers. Nichols was adamant that they are not involved w/mail order houses. They feel that the 3 previously mentioned dist. all [55] sell mail order houses at cost. Nichols feels its D > responsibility to address this. Jack Jesse made specific mention that if we don't address the mailorder and discounting problems that very soon Nichols will have to stop selling D >. ²⁶ He also asked me what I felt sold our Tires. I replied-- Advertising, Racing, Club + PR involvement, word of mouth. He replied Bull He feels Dealers only! Sell in this system and we need to do everything possible to make them more profitable. While at this meeting we discussed Pro Sport--aline of offroad apparel and acc. exclusively imported by Nichols. While touring their warehouse I observed a container of Alpinestar Boots which they had Gray-Marketed in from Europe to sell against P/U--the exclusive importer of Alpinestar in the U.S. Aggressive Tone Throughout meeting.

[56]

(DN00438).

Meeting--Nichols Dist.
Terry Baisley
Kenny Anderson
Jack Jesse

Topics

Gave Dist. Interview
Talked Quite a bit about Mail order Problem
Nichols doesn't sell Mail order.
" has much concern about where current trends are taking D >

²⁶There is no other evidence in the record that any other distributor, including Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, ever threatened to stop selling Dunlop if Dunlop did not respond to their price complaints or other grievances.

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1111 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 56

" Does not agree That D > has a "loyal" cust base [*1112] " Feels That dealers will begin switching to Profitable brands.

" is now importing their own Private label tire--"Kings"

This Tire is Mail order Prohibited.

Also heavily involved in their own Private label M/C acces.

inc.--"Pro Sport"

Nichols has 30 Road Reps 10 Phone

Nichols feels they are a National Dist.

I sent nichols 100 T.T.L. Brochures.

Nichols feels that P/U and T/R are causing All The Problem with Discounting out there.

(DN 00439). No call reports were prepared for any other distributor. (Buckley, 272-73). There was, however, a form filled out for the interview with Motorcycle Stuff. PX 15.

(l) May 6, 1993: Buckley Spends Evening with Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited

Late in the afternoon on May 6th, Buckley visited Parts Unlimited's Janesville, [*57] Wisconsin office and went out for supper and drinks with Jeff Fox. Mr. Buckley called ahead to set up the meeting. Mr. Fox recalled having dinner with Buckley. Mr. Fox remembered that Mr. Buckley told him he was making a trip through the area visiting Dunlop distributors and mentioned his visit with Nichols that day, commenting that ". . . Jack Jesse was a real piece of work or something to that effect." Mr. Buckley also remembered telling Mr. Fox that he had visited Nichols on May 6 and also telling him that the visit was ". . . rather strange." Buckley denies discussing the termination of distributors with Mr. Fox. 12(N)(3)(b) P 31(n).

(m) May 7, 1993: Buckley Visits Tucker/Rocky Warehouse in Chicago

The next day, May 7, 1993, Mr. Buckley made a visit to Tucker/Rocky's Chicago warehouse and had lunch with the Bensenville, Illinois branch manager. There is no relevant testimony regarding their conversation. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 31(o).

(n) Early May 1993: "Firm Commitments" (PX 17)

In early May 1993 Buckley called Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited and Bob Gregg of Tucker/Rocky seeking commitments from these distributors to absorb the sales volume of any unnamed distributor [*58] to be terminated. Fox and Gregg gave Buckley "firm commitments" which Buckley memorialized in a document designated PX 17. Fox admits this conversation. Gregg denies it. Although defendants collectively admit that they individually discussed the absorption of sales volume of unnamed distributors to be terminated with Buckley, they do not admit a common commitment to fix prices or terminate distributors. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 31(p).

(o) Late May 1993: Tucker/Rocky Issues Revised Price List (PX 214; PX 645)

In late May 1993, shortly before Nichols' termination, Tucker/Rocky published a new dealer resale price list on Dunlop tires, which significantly raised its prices above those published on February 1, 1993.

(p) May 20, 1993: Buckley's "Price War" Memo (PX 3)

On May 20, 1993, Mike Buckley sent the following memo to all Dunlop distributors entitled "Price Wars." Buckley attached a Wall Street Journal Article to the memo entitled "How to Avoid a Price War." Buckley wrote:

Enclosed please find some "food for thought" regarding the negative effects of attempting to gain market share by lowering price. I think [the article] raises some extremely valid points [*59] to the long term damage we do when we attempt these types of practices. Particularly alarming is the fact that almost never do we accomplish what we attempt (market share gain) when we do business in this way. The only thing we do is establish a "lower perceived value" for our products.

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1112 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 59

I'm sure you'll all agree that this doesn't do anything positive for our future growth. I'm not pointing fingers here; I'm just offering some more information. We can never have enough information.

The Wall Street Journal Article goes on to suggest:

[*1113] "All too often, this kind of price war has no real winner except the customer." PX 3.

(q) Buckley's Memos to Robin Mitchell (PX 17; PX 18)

In May 1993, Mike Buckley wrote two memos to Robin Mitchell proposing to terminate Nichols as a distributor. The first memo, titled "Reasons For Change" states:

1. Overall market size shrinking. Less sales available for same number of distributors when market was bigger.
2. National distributor expansion provides excellent regional coverage (overnight service anywhere in U.S.)
3. Nichols only real weapon right now--discounting.
4. Nichols recently opened warehouse [60] in Phoenix market. Recent meeting with Nichols officials revealed plans to expand further. Next market--Dallas.
5. Recent meeting also revealed Dunlop and Nichols are at odds on how to continue to grow Dunlop business. Dunlop--Advertising, racing, public relations.
Nichols--None of the above, stop mail-order.
6. Nichols focus right now on off-shore produced "house brands," pro-sport off-road apparel, kings--private label tires, etc. In this scenario, Dunlop gets used as a loss leader to leverage sales for "exclusive" products.
7. Nichols claims no mail-order solicitation--invoices prove otherwise.
8. Firm commitment from T/R and P/U to absorb volume of any cancelled distributor.
9. Cycle Products--credit situation makes the decision easy.

PX 17 (DN 02279).

The second memo is dated June 15, 1993, and the subject is "Motorcycle Distributor Reduction."

As a follow-up to our discussion of the above-mentioned topic two weeks ago, I want to update you on the current situation.

As I told you, Pat Logue and I agreed that since the motorcycle market continues to shrink, it has now become necessary to cut the number of distributors [61] we have. This is a list of the reasons for this move:

1. Less sales available for same number of distributors has led to aggressive discounting tactics.
2. Expansion of national distributors allows us complete coverage off 11 parts of the country (overnight service).
3. Discounting has produced a low "perceived value" for premium Dunlop product.

The two distributors I am cancelling immediately are Nichols Distributing and P.J. Cycle Products.

Nichols is currently viewed as the leaders of the "sales by discounting" philosophy. By analyzing invoices from all over the country, it is clear that Nichols is using Dunlop as a "loss leader" ²⁷ to leverage sales for their own private label--high margin products. In addition, Nichols management does not agree with Dunlop's marketing ideas for future growth of the Dunlop brand.

P.J. Cycle Products has gone through recent financial [62] problems including restructuring. A continual habit of slow pay still exists and from a credit risk standpoint, this decision is much easier than the Nichols decision.

It is my feeling that this move will send a message to our current distributor base that we are very interested in maintaining profitability for our customers, in addition to our premium image which we've worked so hard to achieve. This will create more Dunlop loyalty.

Please contact me if you have further questions.

²⁷ Buckley's testimony regarding his "loss leader" theory is found in his deposition: DX 13 at 114-121.

[*1114] PX 18 (DN 00443). In deposition testimony, Buckley explained that he terminated distributors to achieve "an increased sense of loyalty to Dunlop" among the remaining distributors. Buckley Dep. at 167.

(r) June 15, 1993: Dunlop Terminates Nichols (PX 16)

In a letter dated June 15, 1993, Dunlop informed Nichols that Nichols was terminated as a Dunlop distributor, effective in five days. After 30 years of service, Dunlop's explanation, given by Robin Mitchell, was that Nichols had been terminated because of its price discounting and that Tucker/Rocky had given Dunlop the invoices showing Nichols' low prices. Dunlop terminated another distributor, P.J. Cycle (Cycle Products), [*63] which also discounted Dunlop tires. P.J. Cycle was in Chapter 11 bankruptcy and delinquent in payment.

(v) Post-Termination Evidence

(a) June 1993: Tucker/Rocky Branch Manager's Report (PX 277)

A Tucker/Rocky branch manager, Bob Crawford, wrote to Nickell and Gregg reporting that a Tucker/Rocky salesman, Jay Crist was "glad to see Nichols problem being resolved and says thanks." PX 277 at 515. In the same report, Mr. Crawford wrote that another salesman, Kevin Christensen, was "also elated over the Nichols/Dunlop deal," and "hopes Shoei (Tucker/Rocky's other largest selling line) will follow suit or put pressure on their distributors." Crawford Dep. at 516.

(b) Joe Piazza (PX 540)

A Tucker/Rocky regional manager (Joe Piazza) indicated that Tucker/Rocky was aware of Nichols' termination before it occurred. Piazza wrote in a July 1993 report:

There are several large accounts that I am anticipating to recapture the Dunlop business away from Nichols Distributing now that their distribution restriction has become public knowledge.

(c) Tucker/Rocky's Missing Branch Manager Reports

Plaintiff claims that Piazza's reports from [*64] May and June 1993 are missing and that the July statement indicates that the earlier reports would have mentioned Nichols' termination. Piazza regularly prepared reports through the fall of 1993. Other reports from Chicago, Michigan and Portland are missing, and there are no reports from Corona, California and Maryland.

(d) September 1993: Trade Show Memo (PX 206)

A couple months after Nichols was terminated, Buckley wrote a memo to all (remaining) Dunlop distributors which says:

For 1994, our goals in marketing, as I mentioned earlier[,] take on a new focus. We will be committed to the dealer network, developing closer relationships with dealers through seminars, dealer visits, hospitality events, dealer incentive programs, so on. We're also going to do everything in our power to use our resources to drive customers into dealerships. By doing this, in conjunction with dealer education, we hope to combat the mail order issue.

PX 206. Plaintiff argues that this evidence is proof that Buckley's reasons for terminating Nichols, as reflected in his memo to Robin Mitchell in May of 1993, were a pretext for illegal termination pursuant to a price-fixing agreement.

[65] (e) Metzeler Memo of October 5, 1993 on "Price Stability" (PX 303)

The "Metzeler Memo" was written by Guido Carissimo, a Metzeler official, recalling a meeting he had with Bob Gregg, president of Tucker/Rocky, and Greg Blackwell, president of Metzeler, on September 29, 1993. This memo states in relevant part:

Bob hopes that with Mike Buckley Dunlop (as already discussed between them) will look for more price stability in 1994 (Dunlop has gained market share in 1993 but made many dealer angry).

PX 303. Defendants have raised a hearsay objection to the admission of this testimony pursuant to Fed. R. Evid. 802. However, for [*1115] purposes of this ruling, the Court finds this memo admissible as a business record. Fed. R. Evid. 803\(6\).

(f) Tucker/Rocky Memo Regarding "Market Stabilizing Programs" (PX 280)

In November 1992, Gregg issued a memo to Tucker/Rocky sales personnel suggesting ways to deal with "super low prices" of competitors and suggesting that dealers tell Tucker/Rocky competitors that "if they want the business they must earn it through market stabilizing programs."

(g) Dunlop Raises MSD Mid-Year

In October 1993, Dunlop [66] raised its MSD price even though Buckley testified that there was "no good reason" to do so in the middle of the year. Buckley Dep. at 139.

(h) Rick Ward (DX 36)

Rick Ward, a Parts Unlimited Sales representative, admits that in early November 1993, shortly after the Long Beach Trade Show held at the end of October 1993, he talked with Jerry Stewart, a dealer (with inadmissible testimony) about the termination of Nichols. According to Ward, Stewart complained that Nichols had been terminated because Nichols' prices were so low. Specifically, Ward and Stewart compared specific tiring pricing--"What I was able to sell it to him at versus what he could buy it at from Nichols; us always being, you know, much more expensive than what he could buy it from the Nichols organization." Ward also admits that there was a "one-year period" in which Nichols was his most aggressive competitor for Dunlop tires. DX 36, Ward at 62.

(i) 1994 Price Increases

In January 1994, Dunlop raised its MSD prices again (by approximately 3-5%). PX 645. Similarly, on February 1, 1994, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited published annual catalogs in which both distributors raised their prices by [67] significant margins. Parts Unlimited raised its catalog prices by 15 percent or more across the board. PX 645; PX 356. Tucker/Rocky increased its prices by approximately 10 percent. PX 209. Both distributors also incorporated the MSD price as part of their price lists. Parts Unlimited adopted Dunlop's suggested dealer price as its "best quantity" price. PX 356; PX 645. Tucker/Rocky adopted Dunlop's suggested dealer price as its "each" price (the price for less than a quantity of 25). PX 645; PX 209. The "best quantity" price is the important price, because discounts are usually applied to that price. Fox Dep. at 677; Nickell Dep. at 222. Once again, Fox became "very upset" once he saw Tucker/Rocky's published prices. Several weeks after the initial publication, Parts Unlimited published a revised version, which priced all popular brands of Dunlop at a level commensurate with the prices published by Tucker/Rocky with respect to the "best quantity" price. PX 645.

(j) Tom Peterich

In the fall of 1993, Tom Peterich, a dealer in Northern California, told another Parts Unlimited representative, Jim Hutzer, that there would be a price hike by LeMans (Parts Unlimited) of 15 percent [68] in the coming year. Peterich Dep. at 10-14, 66-67, 71-72.

vi) Inadmissible Testimony

The following evidence tendered by Nichols has been determined to be inadmissible and therefore was not relied upon by the Court in reaching its decision.²⁸

(a) James Stewart

²⁸ Nevertheless, the Court expressly notes that even the addition of this ambiguous evidence would not have altered the conclusions it has reached herein.

This testimony is inadmissible, because the witness statement was not signed and Stewart does not admit to the statements transcribed in the statement prepared by plaintiff's counsel. See Fed. R. Evid. 802. Nonetheless, Stewart allegedly testified as follows:

In approximately April of 1994, the sales representative for Parts Unlimited, Rick Ward, visited me at Cycle Country's store in Salem. He told me that Parts Unlimited had issued a new price list on Dunlop tires effective in April 1994, which changed [\[*1116\]](#) the prices on Dunlop tires from their catalog prices [\[69\]](#) published in February 1994. He said to me that Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited had "agreed" that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited would increase their prices on Dunlop tires in 1994, and that Parts Unlimited's catalog prices reflected that agreement, and that after Parts Unlimited had published its catalog prices for Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky didn't raise their prices like they said they would. Mr. Ward also said that Parts Unlimited then issued the new price list for Dunlop with lowered prices on Dunlop to the level of Tucker/Rocky's prices. Just he and I were present during the conversation. Mr. Ward gave me a copy of Parts Unlimited's new price list, which reflected lower prices for Dunlop tires than in the February 1994 catalog.

PX 456.

(b) Rocky Trevino (PX 622)

This is an affidavit by a dealer who stated that a different Parts Unlimited representative, Jon Hanson, told him in January of 1994, that "there was going to be a big increase in Dunlop tires, and that both Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky would be increasing their prices on Dunlop tires by approximately 15%." Parts Unlimited strongly contests the admission of this testimony under Fed. R. Evid. 101 801\(d\)\(2\). Parts contends that this affidavit is facially ambiguous and Hanson was not involved in pricing decisions (so his remarks were not within the scope of his agency). Parts Unlimited's evidentiary arguments are well taken. This evidence will be excluded.

(c) Terry Baisley - William Giacomelli Conversation (PX 643)

Terry Baisley, Nichols' national sales manager, testified that in June or July 1994, he had a telephone conversation with William Giacomelli, a former branch manager at Tucker/Rocky. During the course of the conversation, Giacomelli told Baisley that Robert Gregg had told him that he (Gregg) was responsible for pressuring Dunlop to terminate Nichols as a distributor. PX 643. This testimony is also inadmissible hearsay under Fed. R. Evid. 802.

c. Analysis

In this case, the "combination" of Monsanto and Matsushita is deadly. The evidence in this case is largely if not completely circumstantial, and most of it is ambiguous. The justifiable inferences that can be drawn from it, even when viewed as a whole according to plaintiff's time line and taken in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, are equally consistent with defendant's [\[71\]](#) assertions of independent and interdependent conduct. See Market Force, 906 F.2d at 1173 ("conscious parallelism by itself is not enough to support an antitrust conspiracy case. . . . [nor does] evidence of informal communications among several parties . . . unambiguously support an inference of conspiracy"). Although the Court has some suspicions that the defendants may have conspired to terminate Nichols in an uncoordinated effort to affect prices, the evidence presented to the Court is not sufficient to show that the defendants implemented and enforced a price-fixing agreement by terminating Nichols, given the standards set forth in Monsanto and Matsushita. Mere suspicion does not provide the basis from which a reasonable inference of agreement can be drawn, no matter how well-intentioned these suspicions may be.

The central question in this case is whether the defendants agreed to raise dealer resale prices and to terminate Nichols in violation of the Sherman Act. After careful review, the Court concludes that there is no unambiguous evidence of a horizontal agreement between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to fix prices or to terminate Nichols.

²⁹ Plaintiff [72] is therefore left with a vertical conspiracy claim involving the three defendants. The proof of a vertical conspiracy must also fail. First, there is simply no evidence that Parts Unlimited conspired with Dunlop (and [*1117] with Tucker/Rocky through Dunlop) to terminate Nichols. Without proof of a termination agreement, Nichols cannot sustain an antitrust price-fixing action against Parts Unlimited. Second, although the vertical conspiracy case against Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky is stronger, because there is some proof of collusion on the issue of termination and price-fixing, this evidence is also ultimately ambiguous and therefore insufficient to prove an agreement under Monsanto and Matsushita, because the limited inferences, added up, do not tend to exclude the possibility of independent action.

[73] We begin by reviewing the evidence of a horizontal agreement, then discuss the absence of proof on the issue of termination against Parts Unlimited, and conclude by addressing the central question in this case: whether the evidence is sufficient to show a vertical agreement between Tucker/Rocky and Dunlop to fix prices and to terminate Nichols pursuant to that agreement. On all questions, we find that plaintiff's evidence has failed to prove the per se theories alleged under Count I.

(i) The Horizontal Agreement

Plaintiff alleges that there is a horizontal agreement between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to raise and stabilize the dealer resale prices of Dunlop tires. During oral argument, plaintiff argued that the horizontal agreement is supported by "evidence that there were direct communications [between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited] and [indirect] communications through Dunlop between Tucker and Parts, . . ." Transcript at 9. There is no horizontal agreement in this case because the direct communications between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited do not provide any evidence of illegal conduct. Cf. Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Productions, Inc., [74] 8 F.2d 1217, 1220 (7th Cir. 1993) (holding that restraint alleged by dealer constituted per se horizontal price-fixing conspiracy). Similarly, the indirect communications between the two distributors through Dunlop do not manifest a horizontal agreement, because the presence of Dunlop reflects a vertical arrangement. See Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 678 F.2d 742 \(1982\) (noting factual difference between a horizontal and vertical conspiracy).

There are only two relevant examples of direct communication between Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited in which Dunlop was not present: two telephone calls and several conversations at trade show meetings in early 1993. The telephone calls, although significant with respect to the time period in which they were made and the context in which they occurred, do not provide any evidence of a horizontal conspiracy because there is no testimony indicating who called whom or what was said during those conversations.³⁰ Even if price had been discussed, at most, these telephone calls provided a mere opportunity to conspire. 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1417 at 97. Similarly, the trade show meetings fall [75] under the category of "informal communications" which have been held to be, at best, ambiguous evidence of a conspiracy. See Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1172 \(7th Cir. 1990\) (evidence of informal communications among several parties does not unambiguously support an inference of a conspiracy); Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 662 \(7th Cir. 1987\) (evidence of informal communications discussing complaints about competitors prices is not sufficient evidence to raise an inference that there was an "agreement to set, control, fix, maintain, or stabilize prices"); Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc., 878 F.2d 801, 805-06 \(4th Cir. 1989\) (evidence that dealers agreed with a ban on discounters not sufficient to support the inference of a conspiracy). The Court therefore concludes that these conversations also merely provide opportunities for collusion rather than unambiguous circumstantial [*1118] evidence from which the inference of an agreement or concerted action can be drawn. Consequently, Nichols has failed to prove a horizontal agreement between Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky. [76]

²⁹ Plaintiff suggests that the Court need not find evidence of an agreement to terminate Nichols, because an agreement to terminate discounting distributors like Nichols is sufficient. Although we agree with this proposition, there is no significant difference in this case between the two agreements, because an agreement does not exist under either theory.

³⁰ During their depositions, both Fred Fox and Bob Gregg guessed what these conversations were about. Fox asserts that the February phone call involved a conversation between Jim and Sharon Ricci who left Parts Unlimited and were at that time talking to their prospective employer, Tucker/Rocky, in February 1993. Gregg speculates that the March phone call covered the subject of "SBS brake pads." Parts Unlimited was the exclusive distributor for these pads, and Tucker/Rocky wanted to sell them. 12(N)(3)(b) Reply at P 31(i); Transcript at 141.

(ii) The Vertical Agreement

Because there is no evidence of a horizontal agreement in this case, plaintiff's Sherman Act section 1 claims are limited to vertical conduct between Dunlop and one or both of the defendant distributors. In a vertical arrangement, both distributors need not have participated in the alleged conspiracy. For purposes of per se liability in this case, however, the evidence must show that at least one of the defendant distributors [77] agreed with Dunlop to terminate Nichols and fix prices.³¹ The evidence of a vertical agreement between Dunlop and Parts Unlimited to terminate Nichols is wholly lacking. Parts Unlimited is therefore entitled to summary judgment on Count I. Similarly, although the evidence of a vertical agreement to terminate Nichols between Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky is stronger, this evidence is also ambiguous. Finally, Nichols has no standing to assert that a price-fixing agreement caused an antitrust injury, either under the per se rule or the rule of reason, without a termination agreement. Under the plaintiff's theory, the antitrust injury in this case resulted when Nichols was terminated because, without Nichols' aggressive price competition, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were able to raise prices and use their market power to force the smaller distributors to stop discounting or face termination. We will now review the evidence that is material to these determinations.

[78] (a) There is no evidence of parallelism supporting the inference of an agreement to terminate Nichols or to fix prices.

"Judicial scrutiny of alleged concerted action, undertaken to determine whether it was the result of an agreement, is an intricate endeavor." Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1011 (3d Cir. 1994). The intricacy in this case involves timing: the timing of the defendants' conduct in an extremely interdependent market. If a price agreement exists in this case, it is reflected by the way the parties behaved in the market from December 28, 1992 through June 15, 1993. However, parallel behavior in an interdependent market, by itself, is not sufficient to prove the existence of an agreement to fix prices, Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, 971 F.2d 37, 50 (7th Cir. 1992), and the Supreme Court has "never held that proof of parallel business behavior conclusively establishes agreement or, phrased differently, that such behavior itself constitutes a Sherman Act offense." Id. (quoting Theatre Enter., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 541, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954)). Parallelism, however, in an interdependent market plus [79] conspiratorial motivation and acts against self-interest may provide the basis from which to infer an agreement under Monsanto and Matsushita. 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1434 at 213.

i) Market Theory

The traditional agreement sought by conspiracy law involves some kind of commitment to a common cause. The commitment may be weak or strong, express or implied. Because such traditional agreements are often inferred from ambiguous circumstantial evidence, the inference may be erroneously based on competitors' parallel behavior . . . in the absence of interdependence.

6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 64

Market interdependence exists when competitors "base their pricing decisions in part on anticipated reactions to them." R. Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective 43 (1976). Interdependence exists when each competitor's "pricing decision is interdependent with that of its rivals: each knows that his choice will affect the others, who are likely to respond, and that their responses will affect the profitability of [its] initial choice." 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1410 at 65. This process explains both price reductions [80] and price increases. Price increases can be achieved by "oligopolistic price leadership."

³¹ Conversely, an agreement to terminate Nichols, without a price agreement, would limit Nichols to a nonprice rule of reason claim which it has not asserted.

[*1119] When one oligopolist raises his price, each of his rivals must decide whether to follow or not. Continuing the previous price would allow each of the others to increase his sales if the leader persists in charging a higher price. But each knows that the leader is likely to retract an increase that is not followed. Accordingly, each rival asks himself whether he is better off at the lower price when charged by all or at the higher price when charged by all. If the latter, as will often be the case, the leader's price increase is likely to be followed.

Id. Price leadership can result in what is known as parallel behavior by competitors, that is, conduct by one that mirrors another.

Although interdependence must be present to infer a conspiracy from parallel behavior, it cannot serve as the only basis for a section 1 claim. Id. § 1411. What is needed is additional proof from which the factfinder could conclude that parallel behavior "would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance [81] understanding among the parties." Id. § 1425 at 144. Professor Areeda argues that "if the actual defendants could not or would not have acted as they did without advance communication and understanding, then their action necessarily proves a traditional conspiracy." Id. However, as the Professor notes, this conclusion begs the ultimate question that this Court must answer, namely, whether the defendants would not have acted without such communication and assurance. Or, to put it differently, is the parallelism in this case (if it exists) "too close" for coincidence? Id. at 145. Our answer to that question depends upon a close analysis of three events: Dunlop's unilateral decision to terminate distributors; Parts Unlimited's decision to raise prices in 1993; and Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited's 1994 price increase.

ii) Three Examples of Non-Parallel Behavior

a) Dunlop Unilaterally Decided to Reduce Its Distribution Network

On December 28, 1993, Dunlop issued a memo to all of its distributors announcing that it planned to terminate two or three distributors in 1993 because the market for replacement tires, Dunlop's largest market, was shrinking. [82] Along with this memo, Dunlop included the 1993 Distributor Agreements which contained a termination at will provision.

Although there is evidence of informal business and social conversations between the defendants at various trade show meetings and evidence of general price complaints by Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited about Nichols, there is no evidence preceding December 28, 1993, that tends to exclude the possibility that Dunlop's decision to terminate distributors was an independent action. In fact, there are numerous economic justifications for Dunlop's decision to terminate distributors which support the inference of independence.

In 1993, the tire industry was extremely interdependent. When tire sales dropped off and the number of tire dealers began to decrease in 1991, a price war between competing distributors ensued to capture the remaining sales, driving the price of Dunlop tires down, far below Dunlop's suggested dealer resale price. Dealer sales went to the lowest bidder, or to the lowest bidder with the most nonprice services to offer. Dunlop expressed concern that lower prices on a long-term basis would only achieve a "lower perceived value" for Dunlop tires. [83] Tucker/Rocky expressed a similar concern, remarking that price stability would support the industry, whereas excessive discounting would exploit it. Additionally, because of these concerns, both Dunlop and its two largest distributors, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, were extremely cognizant of the prices each distributor charged dealers for various Dunlop tires.

By 1993, distributor profit margins, determined in part by the difference between the distributor's cost and the dealer resale price, were also in decline (at least on Dunlop tires), due to low dealer resale prices. The record in this case confirms that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited believed that [*1120] Nichols, a small but expanding competitor, was their most aggressive competitor on price. There is also evidence that Parts Unlimited complained that Nichols was charging "ridiculous prices," which were at least partially responsible for the declining profit margins. In fact, Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited went so far as to tell Dunlop that it should "clean up [the market]." Tucker/Rocky also complained to Dunlop about Nichols' (and other distributors') low prices, indicating that it was "unwilling to sell at those prices." [84] Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were also concerned about Nichols' expansion into Phoenix, Arizona, and its proposed expansion into Dallas, Texas and Seattle, Washington. Finally, plaintiff argues that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited saw an opportunity to capture an increased market share once Nichols was out of the picture. Plaintiff's counsel explained, "what they're trying to do is take over the Dunlop market like they control the Metzeler market, . . . They only have 68% . . . of Dunlop [in 1993]. With Nichols out, they hope to get it up probably to 90, 95 [percent] . . ." Transcript at 33.

In an elastic market, increased sales could be generated by a large number of distributors competing vigorously on price. On December 28, 1992, however, Dunlop went on record, stating that it believed the market had become inelastic:

The tire replacement market is not going to grow in the predictable future. Our distributor base is still at approximately the same level as it was when the market was 35% larger than it is today.

Because of this situation, it is our intention to reduce our account base before the September IMAE by at least two to three distributors.

[85]

PX 1. In an inelastic market, it is economically plausible that Dunlop, having attained the largest market share in the country and convinced that the demand for Dunlop tires had stabilized and matured, sought to increase profits for its distributors by reducing its distributor base. Cf. Valley Liquors Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 678 F.2d 742, 745 \(7th Cir. 1982\) (discussing restricted distribution cases under the rule of reason and the role of market power). Dunlop's concern with its largest distributors' profit margins, although facially suspicious, is a legitimate business concern under the relevant legal precedent. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 762-63. Dunlop's interest in its "perceived" image is also a legitimate concern because continued lost profits for Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited might translate into lost marketing services necessary to promote Dunlop's brand name. Termination of smaller competitors³² would not reduce Dunlop's profit so long as the nonterminated distributors could absorb the sales being made by the terminated distributor(s).

[86] None of these motivations or actions violate the antitrust laws, so long as Dunlop acted independently in recognition of the interdependent market. In fact, termination of a distributor following or in response to price complaints, even those that expressly or impliedly referred to Nichols, is not enough to support the inference of a conspiracy. Valley Liquors, 822 F.2d at 660 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764; Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 998 F.2d 575, 578 \(8th Cir. 1993\)). A defendant's actions become illegal only when its concerns and plans cross the line between encouragement and agreement.

After careful review, the Court has concluded that Dunlop's asserted reasons for terminating distributors, in general, were economically plausible and equally consistent, if not more consistent, than the conclusions the plaintiff would have the trier of fact draw from the same evidence. Despite the evidence of strong lobbying efforts by Tucker/Rocky, there is simply not enough evidence tending to exclude the possibility that Dunlop's decision to terminate Nichols was anything other than an independent action supported by the legitimate business reasons described above.

[87] Although there is very little evidence tending to exclude the possibility that Dunlop's [*1121] decision to terminate Nichols was an independent action, there is one document, the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter, which raises some inferences of concerted action between Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky. However, the letter raises equally reasonable (but competing) inferences on the issue of termination and price-fixing which render the letter ambiguous evidence at best. With respect to a price-fixing agreement among the three defendants, the additional evidence is equally as ambiguous.

(b) Parts Unlimited's 1993 Price Increases

³² Plaintiff's counsel admitted during oral argument that "Dunlop would have an independent right to reduce distributors to shake out the market so long as it did not terminate Nichols pursuant to a conspiracy." Transcript at 25.

On February 1, 1993, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited published their 1993 price catalogs. Parts Unlimited, despite the price war, raised its prices significantly. Given the fact that Parts Unlimited did not have the market power, by itself, to lead sales to a higher price level, it is rational to conclude that Parts Unlimited's decision to raise its prices would have been perilous without an advance agreement with its primary competitor, Tucker/Rocky, and some wholesale discounting support by its manufacturer, Dunlop. It was also an unusual move because it was contrary [88] to Parts Unlimited's economic self-interest, given the competitive forces still in play in an admittedly sensitive market. In other words, it does not make economic sense for Parts Unlimited alone to simply raise its prices on February 1, 1993.

In the Court's view, this evidence may have been sufficient to raise the inference of a vertical price-fixing agreement if there were any objective evidence of parallel behavior between Parts Unlimited and Tucker/Rocky. Although Tucker/Rocky could have backed out of any agreement reached between the three defendants, the Court's speculation about what happened cannot provide the basis upon which we allow the section 1 claim to reach a jury. Nichols has simply failed to produce sufficient evidence that shows that Parts Unlimited's decision to raise prices resulted from an unlawful relationship with Tucker/Rocky and/or Dunlop. This is because there is no unambiguous evidence of market conduct which would tend to show that the defendants were committed to a common course of action and united by a common purpose.³³ Instead, the evidence shows erratic, unpredictable conduct that is more consistent with parties trying to obtain a competitive edge [89] than with parties allied by a common cause.

To infer a conspiracy from parallel behavior, the parallel conduct must occur in a logically relevant manner. For instance, it cannot arise from a "plausible coincidence or an expectable response to a common business problem." 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law § 1425 at 146. Although "simultaneous" parallel action may be convincing, the time frame "is not limited to events occurring at a single moment. The definition is functional rather than literal and asks whether each alleged conspirator would normally have knowledge of another's act before deciding upon his own course of action." Id. at 147. In this case, the prices each competitor published would not necessarily be known before they were distributed, although [90] once distributed they became public knowledge. Thus, there is nothing suspicious about the fact that Tucker/Rocky's prices differed from those Parts Unlimited published on February 1, 1993, especially since Tucker/Rocky's prices stayed the same as its 1992 prices.

There is no sequential parallelism in this case either. In sequential cases, the leader's action is known before the other players must make their choices. This method works if the leader can alter or reverse its position after seeing what the other competitors do. Id. at 147. Parts Unlimited was the leader on the price increase of 1993, and it waited until March 22, 1993, to see whether Tucker/Rocky would respond. The unfortunate coincidence for plaintiff is that on the very day that Gregg wrote the March 22, 1993, Letter to Logue confirming its desire to raise dealer resale prices to reflect Dunlop's 1993 price increase, Parts Unlimited reversed course and published prices substantially equal to those Tucker/Rocky published [*1122] for 1993 on February 1. The fact that Parts Unlimited reversed course is one more indication that the minds at Tucker/Rocky never met with those at Parts Unlimited or Dunlop and vice versa.

[91] Finally, Tucker/Rocky's price increase in May 1993 looks more like the traditional price leadership that occurs when a distributor makes the choice to risk short-term loss in the hope that its competitors will find it more profitable to sell at the higher price rather the lower one. However, Parts Unlimited did not follow Tucker/Rocky's lead. Instead, Parts Unlimited "stayed put." As counsel for Parts Unlimited phrased it during oral argument: "The best time to rock and roll on the conspiracy [was] in May '93. They didn't do it." Transcript at 139. Parts Unlimited's motivation for staying put is irrelevant since that move, combined with Tucker/Rocky's recalcitrance in February, destroys any possible theory of parallelism and any reasonable inference that can be drawn from it. In short, the relevant conduct in the market reveals that the parties were coming and going, but never once acted in a concerted way until February 1, 1994, well after Nichols had been terminated.

c) Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited's 1994 Price Increases

³³ Thus, there is no need to consider whether the presence of the so called "plus factors" -- conspiratorial motivation and acts against self-interest -- support a conspiracy inference. See 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law §§ 1433-1434, at 218-221.

The 1994 increase, although a more classic example of parallelism, is insufficient, by itself, to support the inference of an agreement, without [92] additional evidence that the parties' decisions were the result of concerted action. The fact that Parts Unlimited once again needed to revise its price list to become more competitive with Tucker/Rocky, not only with respect to the percentage of the price increase, but with respect to the "best quantity" price, precludes the concerted action inference. Typically, in the context of secret bids (like the catalogs) which ultimately become public knowledge, the inference of collusion is stronger where there is price uniformity on specific terms which would not exist but for collusion. No such uniformity existed in this case. In short, shared interests do not constitute an agreement without evidence tending to show some symmetry and synchronicity in the parties' conduct, either simultaneous or sequential.

In this case the market was far from synchronized; it was erratic, full of unexpected shifts in movement which are not at all in synch with the actions one would expect from co-conspirators who combine to implement a common scheme. Thus, any inference of collusion that could be drawn from the 1993 and 1994 pricing movements by Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited cannot be sustained given [93] the undisputed fact that Jeff Fox had to revise his published prices downward for two consecutive years, 1993 and 1994, to meet Tucker/Rocky's more competitive (lower) levels. This conduct occurred both before and after Nichols' termination and therefore cannot support the inference of a conspiracy from parallel conduct because there was no parallelism. These pricing movements are at best ambiguous evidence because they are much more consistent with classic interdependence: each distributor resting its own decision to lead or withdraw on price based upon its belief that its competitor would do the same. HN5[] Interdependent behavior without evidence of parallelism, however, does not reflect an unlawful agreement under section 1 of the Sherman Act. The inference of a Section 1 agreement under the parallelism theory must therefore be rejected.

Although the preceding evidence does not prove that a vertical agreement -- either on price or termination -- existed, there is one document, as alluded to previously, upon which Count 1 turns: the March 22, 1993, Gregg letter. We will begin with that letter and analyze the events subsequent to it in light of the inferences it raises.

[94] (b) The Gregg letters are ambiguous evidence and therefore do not support an inference of price-fixing or a termination agreement

i) The March 22, 1993 Gregg Letter

There is only one document in this case, the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter to Logue that can be viewed as supporting the plaintiff's proof of a vertical agreement. The question this Court has carefully considered is whether this single document, viewed in [*1123] context of the record as a whole, takes the case past Monsanto and Matsushita. We believe it falls short of the mark.

There are several reasonable (but competing) inferences that can be drawn from this document. First, the concluding sentence to page one states: "Tucker/Rocky would like to pass on the 1993 Dunlop price increase at this time." This language suggests that Tucker/Rocky, in response to the pressure it received from Dunlop and Parts Unlimited after publication of the February 1, 1993, catalog, agreed to raise its prices in 1993 to reflect both Dunlop's 1993 price increase and the published increase in Parts Unlimited's prices.³⁴ The conditional language used in this sentence also implies some measure of control by Dunlop [95] because the statement can be framed as a offer, requiring not only assent (or acceptance) but also the occurrence of an event or a condition precedent to form an agreement on price. Similarly, the second page encourages Dunlop to terminate single warehouse distributors "who dump tires at disruptively low and predatory prices, thousands of miles from their warehouse." In consideration of an agreement on these issues, Tucker/Rocky proposed that it would "increase the amount of resources Tucker/Rocky spends to promote and service Dunlop tires [which] will increase interbrand competition." From this language it is not difficult to infer that Tucker/Rocky was willing to increase resale dealer prices to reflect the MSD levels suggested (and desired by) Dunlop if Dunlop terminated discounting distributors, like Nichols, who prolonged the price war that made a price increase untenable. Second, the fact that Parts Unlimited received a copy of the first page of the letter implies some sort of collusion between the three defendants regarding price: the letter appears to expressly refer to the February conversations regarding Dunlop's 1993 increase of its dealer resale price (MDS) [96] and Parts Unlimited's complaints that Tucker/Rocky did not pass on this increase in its published prices, as Parts Unlimited did.

³⁴ The fact that neither Nichols, nor any other distributor, is ever mentioned in either the first page of the Gregg Letter, or the price analysis, indicates that Tucker/Rocky is responding to the complaints Dunlop received from Parts Unlimited regarding Tucker/Rocky's 1993 published prices.

The inferences break down with respect to Parts Unlimited, however, because neither a copy of the price analysis, which might have indicated plans to collude on specific tire prices, nor the second page of the letter addressing the termination of discounting distributors, like Nichols, was ever found in the possession of Parts Unlimited. Without these documents, Parts Unlimited cannot be tied to either a price-fixing or a termination agreement. The fact that Parts Unlimited admittedly only received a copy of the first page of the letter, although a somewhat strange coincidence, does not evidence [97] a deliberate act to include Parts Unlimited in some form of traditional offer or acceptance.³⁵ See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761 n.9. The most that can be said is that Tucker/Rocky addressed Parts Unlimited's concerns and someone, either Dunlop or Tucker/Rocky, sent the first page to Parts Unlimited to set the record straight.

With respect to Tucker/Rocky, the inferences are stronger, but equally ambiguous. Given the detailed price comparison between Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's prices, the concluding sentence of the first page may simply mean: Tucker/Rocky would like to pass on the 1993 Dunlop price increase, but our prices are already higher than those charged by Parts Unlimited, our main competitor, and we cannot afford to raise them any higher until Parts Unlimited's dealer resale prices go up even [98] further. The second page, although evidence of strong lobbying to terminate Nichols, may be nothing more than a complaint: identifying problems and proposing solutions. Distributors are entitled to express their opinions, and manufacturers are entitled to both listen and act on the information without being charged with illegal antitrust agreements. Business Elecs. v. Sharp Elecs., 485 U.S. at 726. [*1124] In this case, both Logue and Buckley testified that they did not act on the letter, which means that their decision to terminate Nichols was not based on this letter. In similar cases, courts found similar memoranda and complaints to be insufficient evidence of an agreement. Valley Liquors, 822 F.2d at 660-61 (competitors' price complaints coupled with separate meetings with manufacturer before plaintiff's termination were insufficient to go to a jury); Winn v. Edna Hibel Corp., 858 F.2d 1517, 1520 \(8th Cir. 1988\) (competitor's memo to manufacturer that it didn't discount and hoped that manufacturer would prevent plaintiff distributor from discounting, followed by termination of plaintiff, was insufficient to go to jury); Lovett, 998 F.2d at 577, 581 (evidence which showed [99] plaintiffs' competing dealers complained specifically about plaintiff's pricing program and asked manufacturer to take strong action to eliminate plaintiffs program, followed by plaintiff's termination was insufficient to jury); Helicopter Support Sys., Inc. v. Hughes Helicopter Inc., 818 F.2d 1530, 1533-34 & n.4 \(11th Cir. 1987\) (more evidence is needed to impermissible behavior than a mere response to distributor complaints to establish liability under Colgate); Ben Elman & Son, Inc. v. Criterion Mills, Inc., 774 F. Supp. 683, 685-86 n.6 \(D. Mass. 1991\) (where largest distributor and a competitor of price-cutting plaintiff wrote memo to manufacturer stating that: "the problem [with plaintiff's pricing] has escalated to a point beyond which we can tolerate. You do what you must, we'll do what we must," court held that memo was ultimatum to manufacturer to make plaintiff raise prices or to terminate plaintiff as a distributor but was insufficient evidence of an agreement under section 1). Given the competing inferences and the case law on similar issues, the Court finds that the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter does not tend to preclude either the possibility of independent [100] action by Dunlop to terminate Nichols, nor by Tucker/Rocky to raise its prices.

In conclusion, the Court finds that one may reasonably infer from the March 22, 1993, Gregg Letter that Tucker/Rocky strongly encouraged Dunlop to terminate Nichols, even though Nichols is never mentioned in the letter, because Gregg admits that the term "single warehouse distributors" referred to Nichols.³⁶ One may also reasonably infer that Tucker/Rocky offered to raise dealer resale prices to reflect Dunlop's 1993 MSD price increase, if Dunlop promised to terminate Nichols. There is no evidence, however, that Dunlop accepted this offer, even though Tucker/Rocky's prices went up in May and Nichols was terminated in June. In addition, the fact that Parts Unlimited only received the first page of the letter, but not the price analysis or the second page of the letter, renders the probative value of the first page of the letter, for purposes of finding the relevant agreements against Parts Unlimited, marginal at best.

³⁵ The Court must draw this inference, despite Parts Unlimited's "credit inquiry" theory, see Transcript at 131-32, because all reasonable inferences go to the plaintiff as the nonmoving party.

[101] ii) The April 8, 1993 Gregg Letter

The inference that Tucker/Rocky held out on raising its prices until Nichols was terminated is undermined by Gregg's April 8, 1993, letter to Buckley. The April letter announced Tucker/Rocky's seemingly independent plans to raise its published 1993 dealer resale prices and proposes a price-fixing agreement: Tucker will trace Dunlop's MSD in its price increase if Dunlop lowers the MSD by 4.5 percent. Dunlop, however, does not lower its MSD mid-year, it raises it in October of 1993, for which Buckley concedes there was "no good reason." Furthermore, Tucker/Rocky raised its published dealer resale prices in May 1993, without waiting for Dunlop to lower the MSD. This market conduct by Tucker/Rocky and Dunlop does not evidence either simultaneous or sequential parallelism. Although there may have been a commitment by Dunlop to terminate Nichols prior to Tucker/Rocky's price increase, the equally competing inference is that Tucker/Rocky's price increase was an independent action. The Court therefore [*1125] concludes that these two letters, plaintiff's most direct evidence of an agreement between Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky, are at best ambiguous because [102] they raise equally competing inferences of independent action.

(c) There is no other direct or circumstantial evidence of collusion supporting Nichols' section 1 claim

The only other evidence of a vertical agreement between Parts Unlimited, Tucker/Rocky and Dunlop to terminate distributors involves phone calls made in early May 1993 by Mike Buckley to both Bob Gregg of Tucker/Rocky and Jeff Fox of Parts Unlimited. Buckley admittedly made these calls for the express purpose of seeking "firm commitments" from the two distributors to absorb the sales of any terminated distributor. Buckley did not call any other distributor seeking similar commitments. Jeff Fox admits that he agreed to "pick up the slack" in case there was a termination. Bob Gregg denies giving his commitment. Buckley, however, memorialized both commitments in writing at the time he made the phone calls. Although the exchange of commitments can constitute direct evidence of collusion, in this case they do not. Admittedly, the statements allude to the prospective termination of distributors, but these calls do not raise any inferences that Parts Unlimited or Tucker/Rocky did anything more than agree to [103] absorb sales. An agreement to absorb sales is not an agreement to fix prices, nor is it an agreement to terminate a distributor in light of Dunlop's previously stated, independently asserted, decision to terminate someone due to market stasis. Further, there is no evidence that either Parts Unlimited or Tucker/Rocky agreed with Dunlop to terminate Nichols and to absorb Nichols' sales volume. Without this evidence, there is no vertical agreement between Parts Unlimited and Dunlop or Dunlop and Tucker/Rocky.

Although Monsanto does not impose a higher summary judgment standard upon the plaintiff, the inferences we may draw in favor of the plaintiff from ambiguous evidence are limited. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 596. The Court has determined that the plaintiff's evidence is ambiguous and therefore insufficient to support the inference of a vertical agreement between the defendants, for the reasons given above. Summary judgment is therefore granted in favor of all defendants on Count I.

2. Count II: The Rule of Reason

³⁶ Even if the March Gregg Letter constituted an agreement to terminate Nichols, it is not sufficient to state a per se claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, because it would at most constitute a nonprice restraint which, if it had an anticompetitive impact, would need to be tested under the rule of reason. Plaintiff has not alleged a nonprice restraint under the rule of reason, so the Court does not reach that question.

In Count II, plaintiff restates its price-fixing and termination conspiracy claim under the rule of reason.³⁷ Under this rule, a plaintiff must still [104] prove the existence of an agreement that restrains trade. An agreement under the rule of reason is not as difficult to prove as it is under the per se rule, because there is not a presumption of antitrust injury. HN6[[↑]] In a rule of reason case, the inference of an illegal agreement may be sustained merely by producing evidence that "casts doubt" on inferences of independent action. Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 545. However, although the agreement may not be as difficult to prove under the rule of reason, additional elements must be met. For instance, a plaintiff must show that the defendants had market power to fix prices and that the price fixing scheme had an anticompetitive impact on the market as a whole. After careful review, the Court finds that plaintiff has failed to produce sufficient evidence of anticompetitive impact for Count II to survive summary judgment.

[105] a. Legal Standards

Most cases fall outside the narrow, carefully demarcated categories of agreements held to be illegal per se. In the typical case, a plaintiff must prove an antitrust injury under the rule of reason, Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d 537 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993). HN7[[↑]] Under this test, plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged agreement has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been [*1126] harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Tunis Bros. Co. Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715 \(3d Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1221, 120 L. Ed. 2d 903, 112 S. Ct. 3034 (1992). Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market protects competition in general, rather than individual competitors. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 52 (the goal of antitrust law is to protect interbrand rather than intrabrand competition). The Seventh Circuit has held that were the law otherwise, routine disputes between business competitors would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action, thereby trivializing the Act because of its ready availability. Ball Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc., 1061 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 \(7th Cir. 1986\) ("antitrust laws are not balm for rivals' wounds"). The plaintiff must also show that the defendant had market power, that is, the "power to raise prices significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business." Valley Liquors, 822 F.2d 656, 665 \(7th Cir. 1987\). HN8[[↑]] The Seventh Circuit has held that a district court must proceed to the first step in the rule of reason analysis, which is to balance the effects the vertical restraint has on intrabrand and interbrand competition, only if the evidence gives rise to the inference that defendants had sufficient market power to control dealer resale prices. Id. Ultimately, the factfinder must weigh the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior.

The classic articulation of how the rule of reason analysis should be undertaken is found in Chicago Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 \(1918\), where Justice Brandeis, speaking for the Supreme Court, said:

HN9[[↑]] The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine [107] that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret the facts and to predict consequences.

Id. at 238. Moreover, it is important to recognize that "the antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors'." Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 338. Termination of a small distributor pursuant to a price agreement does not restrain trade until distribution is channeled exclusively "through a few large or ³⁷ The idea of applying a rule of reason analysis to a vertical price-fixing violation was discussed in Monsanto in a footnote, 465 U.S. at 760 n.7, but was not ruled on because it was not raised at the district court level. The Court has not found any case since Monsanto that discusses this theory for recovery.

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1126 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 107

specifically advantaged dealers." Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968) (where Court found evidence of an agreement to terminate a small distributor pursuant to an agreement with larger distributor to charge maximum [108] prices).

b. Analysis

This test is easier to state than to apply. Applying this test, the Court finds that plaintiff has failed to prove anticompetitive impact under the rule of reason and Count II must be denied. Products Liab. Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Crum & Forster Ins. Cos., 682 F.2d 660, 663 (7th Cir. 1982) ("plaintiff must show that the refusal to deal is likely to reduce competition"). Plaintiff's theory of anticompetitive impact is that the termination of Nichols sent a message to other small distributors, whose only competitive "weapon" against the larger distributors was price. The proof of anticompetitive impact, argues plaintiff, is that prices have gone up significantly since June 15, 1993, and smaller distributors have lost sales to Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited -- who absorbed not only Nichols' sales but the sales of other discounters who stopped aggressive discounting. At the outset,

Nichols only evidence of this anticompetitive impact is the testimony and opinion by its expert, Dr. Pisarkiewicz. This testimony is wholly lacking. Nichols argues that Dr. Pisarkiewicz, after extensive analysis, has concluded that the conspiracy alleged would result [109] in an unreasonable restraint of trade and have a substantial [*1127] adverse effect on competition (PX 608 at 4, 41-42). At page 4 of his report, Dr. Pisarkiewicz claims:

Report of Dr. John Pisarkiewicz, Jr.

4. In summary my conclusions are as follows:

g) But for this lawsuit, there is compelling evidence that prices of Dunlop tires to dealers and to consumers would be significantly higher. This is a substantial adverse effect on competition. In addition, the termination of Nichols indicates that the defendants have the power to exclude competitors and discipline remaining competitors. This too is a substantial adverse effect on competition.

42. . . . the impact on competition due to the termination of Nichols is very substantial. Nichols did challenge T/R. Nichols did challenge T/R and PU and was trying to grow in spite of discriminatory prices from Dunlop. Nichols size and long standing reputation in the industry made it a competitor to be reckoned with. Its termination by Dunlop was a strong signal to other Dunlop distributors not to challenge on the basis of price. Dunlop had already signaled all of its distributors that it was concerned about price [110] wars (5/20/93 memo from Mike Buckley to all Dunlop distributors attaching a Wall Street Journal article, entitled, "How to Avoid a Price War." Terminating Nichols strongly reinforced that signal.

43. In Addition, Dunlop has already raised prices sharply in 1993 and 1994 (App. 7, Table D-1).

44. T/R and PU receive favored treatment by Dunlop and Metzeler, and T/R and PU have used these advantages to gain market share, to earn more profits and to buy other lines of products.

Nichols contends that the full anticompetitive impact has not yet been felt, because the filing of this lawsuit prevented prices from rising to the 15 percent mark allegedly agreed upon, and has resulted in the addition of new distributors and other "anticompetitive" indicia as a cover. Nichols also claims that a question of fact exists because defendants' expert, Raymond Sims, disagrees with Dr. Pisarkiewicz's analysis.

Raymond Sims does not directly controvert Dr. Pisarkiewicz's statements, and the defendants do not use his analysis in their arguments. However, Mr. Sims would testify at trial that Nichols' prices on Dunlop tires analyzed were at or below Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited between [111] 1991-93 on the 50 best selling tires. This is disputed. Sims will also testify that Nichols' profits remained "relatively stable" while the profits of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited went up from 1991 through 1993. This is also disputed.

The defendants' position on the lack of anticompetitive impact appears to relate more to the lack of evidence offered by Dr. Pisarkiewicz, rather than to its experts' own opinions. For instance, in his deposition, Dr. Pisarkiewicz admits that he has made no analysis of actual prices that dealers paid for tires, 12(M) P 174 (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 434, 523); that he has no opinion on whether Tucker/Rocky or Parts Unlimited is pricing at, above or below competitive levels before or after the Nichols termination, Id. (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 434); that he has no information that the

Nichols termination led to reduced market output, Id. (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 510-11); and that he has no formation that the Nichols termination led to a deterioration in the quality of service available to dealers, Id. (Pisarkiewicz Dep. at 511).

These admissions are crucial because:

there is a sense in which eliminating even a single competitor reduces competition. [112] But it is not the sense that is relevant in deciding whether the antitrust laws have been violated. Those laws, we have been told by the Supreme Court repeatedly in recent years, are designed to protect the consumer interest in competition. The consumer does not care how many sellers of a particular good or service there are; he cares only that there be enough to assure him a competitive price and quality.

Products Liability, 682 F.2d at 663-64 (citations omitted). In short, there is no evidence provided by Dr. Pisarkiewicz, other than his theory that "but for this litigation" [*1128] prices would not be competitive, that the termination of Nichols, due to its aggressive discounting, sent a message that reduced competition and injured consumers or their dealers. This testimony is not sufficient evidence to withstand a motion for summary judgment, even under the rule of reason, because it is mere speculation, without a sound economic analysis to support it. Therefore, the Court must grant the defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment because the plaintiff failed to produce evidence of anticompetitive impact on the market as a whole.

3. Count III: Group Boycott

In Count [113] III, Nichols vaguely alleges that the defendants' actions constitute an illegal group boycott in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Nichols claims that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited convinced both Dunlop and Metzeler not to deal with Nichols. To prove a group boycott, Nichols must allege a horizontal agreement by Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to engage in concerted activity to deprive Nichols of access to sell motorcycle tires. Business Electronics, 485 U.S. at 734; United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Phil Tolkan Datsun, Inc. v. Greater Milwaukee, Etc., 672 F.2d 1280, 1284 (7th Cir. 1982). Although some group boycott claims (those involving concerted refusals to deal with a competitor) are analyzed under the per se rule, Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959), Nichols has alleged its section 1 group boycott claims under the rule of reason and therefore must show anticompetitive impact. Thus, Nichols must only submit some evidence that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited agreed to induce Metzeler not to add Nichols as a distributor, or that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited agreed to induce Dunlop to terminate [114] Nichols as a distributor.

Although there is "some" ambiguous circumstantial evidence that the defendant distributors agreed to induce Dunlop to terminate Nichols, there is no evidence of an agreement among Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited to induce Metzeler to refuse to deal with Nichols. The only evidence of any inducement is a conversation Metzeler President Greg Blackwell had with Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited regarding the addition of new distributors in general and Nichols in particular. The defendant distributors independently advised Blackwell that they did not advise adding new distributors, in particular, Nichols, a known discounter. This evidence does not satisfy the concerted action/agreement requirement. Regardless, there is no evidence of anticompetitive impact, with respect to a boycott involving Dunlop or Metzeler, for the reasons expressed in Count II. Therefore, Count III also fails for lack of proof on the element of anticompetitive impact.

B. The Illinois Antitrust Act

In Counts IV, V and VI, plaintiff alleges various vertical and horizontal agreements between the defendants to fix prices, terminate Nichols and refuse to deal with Nichols. [115] Counts IV and V must be dismissed for failure to state a claim. Count V states a rule of reason claim under section 3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10/3. Summary judgment must be granted for the defendants on all counts.

1. Count IV: Per Se Pricefixing

In Count IV, plaintiff alleges that the defendants conspired to raise, fix, maintain or stabilize prices, in violation of section 3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act ("IAA"), 740 IL CS 10/3. Because Nichols levies its allegation against "all defendants," that is, Dunlop (a seller), Tucker/Rocky (a buyer) and Parts Unlimited (a buyer), it alleges a vertical price-fixing agreement. Nichols' claim fails as a matter of law.

Per se offenses are those set out in section 3(1) of the IAA. See 740 ILCS 10/3, Bar Committee Comments-1967 (1993). "The conduct proscribed by section 3(1) is violative of the Act without regard to, and the courts need not examine, the competitive and economic purposes and consequences of such conduct." Id. The Bar Committee Comments clearly state, however, that a vertical [\[*1129\]](#) price-fixing agreement is not prohibited under section 3(1):

Section 3(1) does not reach vertical agreements, [\[*116\]](#) such as agreements between buyers and sellers fixing the price at which the buyer shall resell. Although not unlawful under section 3(1), such vertical price fixing, if not exempt under the Illinois Fair Trade Act, may be proscribed by section 3(2), the general restraint of trade section. Since the draftsmen carefully constructed section 3 to require it, the Illinois courts should conclude that they must examine the competitive and economic purposes and consequences of such agreements before reaching a conclusion that section 3(2) has been violated. While it is perhaps possible, as under Federal law, that the courts may hold such agreements violative of section 3(2) without such an examination, they should not, since to do so would defeat the clear intention of the draftsmen.

Id. The Bar Committee Comments could not be any more explicit that a vertical agreement may not constitute a per se violation of section 3 of the IAA, because per se claims are only those listed in section 3(1), which does not cover vertical price-fixing agreements. While Nichols could have alleged that "all defendants" violated section 3(2), the general restraint of trade subsection of the [\[*117\]](#) IAA, section 3(2) necessarily requires a rule of reason analysis of the "economic purposes and consequences" of the agreement and therefore does not contemplate per se violations. Count IV fails as a matter of law.

2. Count V: Rule of Reason

In Laughlin v. Evanston Hosp., 133 Ill. 2d 374, 550 N.E.2d 986, 996 \(Ill. 1990\), the Illinois Supreme Court held that the analysis for rule of reason claims under section 3 of the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 ILCS 10/3, tracks the legal analysis applied in federal cases under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Therefore, since Count V is the counterpart to Count II, which alleges a rule of reason claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, the Court grants summary judgment for all defendants on this claim for the reasons expressed in the portion of the opinion analyzing Count II.

3. Count VI: Group Boycott

Nichols alleges in Count VI that the actions of all the defendants constitute a per se illegal group boycott in violation of section 3 of IAA. Because Nichols alleges a per se violation of the IAA, its claim falls under section 3(1) of the IAA, which is the only subsection of the IAA that refers to per se violations. See Bar [\[*118\]](#) Committee Comments-1967 (1993). The Bar Committee Notes are clear however, that an alleged boycott does not present a legally cognizable claim under Section 3(1). In its discussion of claims under section 3(1), the Comments note that:

boycotts are not proscribed by this " per se" subsection. Here again in view of federal precedents and of Section 11, horizontal boycotts may be found unlawful under the general restraint of trade Section 3(2). Vertical agreements to refuse to deal or boycotts, that is, agreements between persons at different levels of production and distribution which have as their immediate purpose the depriving of a third person of a supply of a commodity or service, may also be found violative of Section 3(2).

Id. Thus, although Nichols could have alleged a group boycott under section 3(2), it has instead alleged a per se violation, which falls under section 3(1) of the IAA and does not contemplate group boycotts. Count VI therefore fails as a matter of law.

C. The Robinson-Patman Act Claims

1. The Facts

Price is an important sales determinant in the industry. 12(N)(3)(b) P 57. Motorcycle tire manufacturers [119] (i.e., Bridgestone, Cheng Shin, Continental, Dunlop, Metzeler, etc.) commonly provide discounts, including volume-based discounts, in selling tires to distributors. 12(M) P 323. The defendants concede that Dunlop provided discounts to Nichols' competitors that Nichols did not receive. 12(N)(3)(b) P 44. For instance, Parts Unlimited requested and received from Dunlop a one-time special promotional discount for the opening of its facility in Southern California. 12(M) P 312 (PX 181). Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited also admit [*1130] that they knew of and took advantage of discounts that Dunlop did not publish but made available to them. 12(N)(3)(b) P 53. Because Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited are sophisticated business entities that separately monitor information from dealers about prices at which competitor distributors sell products, 12(N)(3)(b) PP 51-52, they knew they were receiving individually negotiated prices on Dunlop tires. 12(N)(3)(b) P 53 (PX 161-187). For instance, Pat Logue of Dunlop informed them that large orders would permit Dunlop manufacturing facilities to have longer production runs on specific tires without the need to stop production, change molds, and switch over [120] to producing other types of tires. 12(M) P 322. Large orders, in turn, would result in greater discounts during certain periods.

Other distributors, such as Bell Industries, Dixie, KK Motorcycle, and Pike's Peak, also received a variety of discounts. Bell Industries, Dixie, Parts Unlimited, and Tucker/Rocky earned Dunlop's growth bonus in 1993. 12(M) P 316. Motorcycle Stuff is a Dunlop distributor headquartered in Cape Girardeau, Missouri. Over the past four years, according to Nichols' expert report, Motorcycle Stuff has purchased fewer Dunlop tires each year than did Tucker/Rocky or Parts Unlimited. During the years 1990-93, even Nichols' expert concludes that Motorcycle Stuff received significantly higher overall discounts than Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited, Nichols, or any other Dunlop distributor. 12(M) P 317.

Tucker/Rocky also received a range of discounts from Metzeler, Dunlop's largest rival in the alleged "premium tire" market. 12(M) P 323. Moreover, Nichols, the exclusive distributor of King's tires in the United States, offered a volume-based discount to its customers. 12(M) P 313. Sometimes Nichols also offered lower prices on Dunlop tires to its dealers than were offered [121] by Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited, and Motorcycle Stuff in the marketplace. 12(M) P 318. One printed report produced by Nichols indicates that Nichols gave discounts on Dunlop tires to almost 600 of its customers. These discounts were well over 20% off the best published pricing for many of Nichols' customers. For instance, Nichols discounted Dunlop tires by 20-24 percent for 88 of its customers and discounted Dunlop tires by 25 percent or more for 72 of its customers. 12(M) P 319.

The difference between the gross margins of Tucker/Rocky and Nichols on the sale of Dunlop tires during the relevant period was significantly greater than the alleged price advantage received by Tucker/Rocky. 12(M) P 324. Dunlop distributors faced and continue to face intense intrabrand competition from other Dunlop distributors during all relevant periods. 12(N)(3)(b) P 55 (PX 252U; PX 251; PX 250U; PX 249U; PX 240U; PX 510; PX 248; PX 246; PX 242U; PX 267U; PX 605F; PX 239U; PX 605H; PX 274; PX 248; PX228; PX 280; PX 22). The average price (the yearly revenues from the sale of Dunlop tires divided by the annual unit sales on an indiscriminate basis, without regard to product mix by model or type or size) [122] on Dunlop tires sold to dealers decreased from 1991 to 1993 for Nichols, Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited. 12(N)(3)(b) (PX 609 at 13).

2. The Merits

a. Dunlop: Section 2(a)

Dunlop seeks summary judgment on Count VII, Nichols' section 2(a) Robinson-Patman Act claim. To establish a prima facie violation of section 2(a), a plaintiff must establish the existence of (1) price discrimination, and (2) injury to competition. See Robert M. Klein, The Robinson-Patman Act: Jurisdictional Aspects and Elements, 59 Antitrust L.J. 777 (1991). Dunlop does not contest that price discrimination occurred, but asserts that Nichols has failed properly to establish injury to competition. Because Nichols' assertions and its expert's analyses demonstrate, however, that Nichols has properly asserted at least two types of damages under the Act, it must prevail on Dunlop's motion for summary judgment.

Nichols claims three types of damages under the Act: (1) damages for lost profits on sales of Dunlop tires that it actually made (because it was not receiving the same discounts that Dunlop granted to the defendant distributors and had to sell at lower prices [*1131] than those [123] at which it would have sold absent the price discrimination); (2) damages for lost sales of Dunlop products that Nichols was not able to make because of its increased costs; and (3) damages for lost sales of non-Dunlop products that it otherwise would have made from customers who would have been drawn to buy from Nichols had Nichols been able to offer more attractive prices on Dunlop products. Pl.'s Mem. Opp. Def.'s Mot. Summ. Judg. at 72-73. Dunlop asserts in its motion for summary judgment that the first type of damages that Nichols claims amounts to "automatic damages" (i.e., damages measured by the amount of the alleged price discrimination, which are not recoverable under the Act). Def.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Summ. Judg. at 22-23. Dunlop further asserts that the second and third type of damages represent legally deficient theories that rest on unsupported assumptions. Id. at 25, 28.

HN10 [↑] "Like any damages remedy, the purpose of [the Clayton Act] is to place the antitrust plaintiff as far as possible in the position it would have occupied but for the violation. Thus, any calculation of section 4 damages must strive to approximate a violation-free state of affairs." [124] Rose Confections, Inc. v. Ambrosia Chocolate Co., 816 F.2d 381, 394 \(8th Cir. 1987\).

The first type of damages claimed by Nichols, lost profits due to the fact that Nichols was forced to sell Dunlop tires at lower prices than it would have absent the price discrimination, is not "automatic damages" as defined by the Supreme Court in J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 \(1981\). In J. Truett Payne, the Court noted that the plaintiff could not merely infer damages from the fact that the defendant had engaged in discriminatory pricing irrespective of any showing that the defendant's behavior had an effect on competition. Id. at 563-64. The plaintiff had failed to produce any documentary evidence to show the effect of the discrimination on retail prices. Id. at 564.

In contrast, Nichols presents evidence prepared by its economic expert, Dr. John Pisarkiewicz, that calculates Nichols' market share prior to the period of the alleged discrimination, computes Nichols' projected market share absent any price discrimination for the period 1991-93 (the time of the alleged price discrimination), and alleges that Nichols' actual market share for that [125] period declined and its competitors' shares increased as a result of Dunlop's alleged discriminatory behavior. App. to Pl.'s Mem. Opp. Defs.' Mots. Summ. Judg. Vol. III, Tab 608, at 44. Nichols also presents evidence of its declining market share and its competitors' simultaneously rising market share during the period of the alleged discrimination -- fluctuations that Pisarkiewicz attributes to competitive injury. App. to Pl.'s Mem. Opp. Defs.' Mots. Summ. Judg., Vol. III, Tab 608, at I and VI. Although Dunlop contests that Nichols has failed to demonstrate a sufficient causal connection between Nichols' declining market share, Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's rising market share, and the alleged discriminatory behavior, Nichols has done more than simply claim automatic damages, and thus has asserted sufficient facts to support a finding of injury due to increased costs. See J. Truett Payne, 451 U.S. at 565 (citing Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123-24, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\)) (noting that damages may be awarded on the basis of plaintiff's estimate of sales it could have made absent the violation); id. at 566 (citing [Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., \[126\] 327 U.S. 251, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 \(1946\)](#)) (noting that damages may be awarded on the basis of comparison of plaintiff's profits with the contemporaneous profits of a competitor who was not the victim of discriminatory pricing, together with evidence of plaintiff's profits during the conspiracy as compared with his profits prior to the conspiracy).

The second type of damages claimed by Nichols, lost sales of Dunlop products that Nichols was allegedly unable to make due to the discriminatory pricing, is also a legally permissible type of damages as long as Nichols' expert's calculations properly approximate a violation-free state of affairs as opposed, for example, to one in which Nichols was able to share in the benefit of the discriminatory [*1132] pricing. See Rose Confections, 816 F.2d at 394. Nichols has properly done so.

Using Nichols' pre-violation market share, which takes into account not just the relative market shares of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, but the other fourteen nationwide Dunlop distributors, Dr. Pisarkiewicz estimates what Nichols' market share would have been for 1991- 93 absent the alleged discriminatory pricing. Dunlop contends that Nichols' loss of market share was due to [127] its poor customer service; if this is the case, however, it is a factual determination that must be made by a jury. Nichols has therefore asserted at least two types of damages recognizable under the Act, therefore this Court must deny Dunlop's motion for summary judgment on this issue.³⁸

[128] b. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited: Section 2(f)

Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited also seek summary judgment on Count VII, with respect to Nichols' claim that they violated HN11 section 2(f) of the Robinson-Patman Act, which makes it unlawful for a buyer "knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited" by the Act. 15 U.S.C. § 13\(f\). In order to establish a prima facie case under section 2(f), Nichols must show that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew or should have known that its was receiving greater discounts from Dunlop than Nichols, and that it knew or should have known that the lower prices it induced or received from Dunlop were discriminatory in violation of section 2(a) of the Act. Automatic Canteen Co. v. FTC, 346 U.S. 61, 74, 97 L. Ed. 1454, 73 S. Ct. 1017 \(1953\).

Although Nichols' evidence shows that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited received higher discounts from Dunlop than Nichols did. Nichols is unable to show that either distributor possessed the requisite knowledge (i.e., knew the amount of discounts any other distributor, including Nichols, received). Both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited deny that they had any knowledge of the amount of discounts [\[129\]](#) that any other distributor received. See Rule 12(N)(3)(b) Reply PP 52-54. Nichols' assertion that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew that they received better discounts than did Nichols, see 12(N)(3)(b) PP 52-54, is based on a single document (PX 158) that merely lists the annual volume bonus discounts available for 1992. Based on this list, Nichols claims that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew or should have known that the discounts greater than those listed were not generally available to the other distributors. Id. at P 53. However, there is no dispute that Dunlop individually negotiated prices with its distributors. Id. This is indicated by the fact that Nichols received a 6 percent volume bonus discount in 1992, an amount higher than that listed in the Dunlop distributor program. Rule 12(M) P 304. Although Nichols asserts that Tucker/Rocky and Parts [\[*1133\]](#) Unlimited not only received higher discounts than those listed but also different discounts than those listed is insufficient, without a factual showing, to support the inference that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited knew that Nichols did not receive non-listed discounts. This evidence, taken together with Tucker/Rocky's [\[130\]](#) and Parts Unlimited's denials of knowledge (which has not been controverted), must be taken as true. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited therefore had no basis to determine how the discounts they were able to negotiate from Dunlop compared to those that Nichols was able to negotiate.³⁹

Nichols argues, however, that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited should have known that they were receiving discriminatory prices based on their dominant positions in the marketplace (the two distributors together accounted for 60% of all Dunlop sales nationwide) and their extensive trade experience. Pl.'s Mot. Opp. Defs.' Mot. Summ. Judg. at 84; Rule 12(N)(3)(b) PP 53-54. Nichols notes that "trade experience in [131] a particular situation can afford a sufficient degree of knowledge to provide a basis for prosecution." Automatic Canteen, 346 U.S. at 79-80. In Automatic Canteen, however, the Supreme Court stated in dicta that "by way of example, a buyer who knows that he buys in the same quantities as his competitor and is served by the seller in the same manner . . . as the other buyer can fairly be charged with notice that a substantial price difference cannot be justified." Id. at 80. This is not the case in the instant situation. Both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited bought from Dunlop in greater quantities than Nichols and neither has been shown to be aware of what price any other distributor received, much less the existence of any "substantial price difference." Nichols' claim is further weakened by the fact that Motorcycle Stuff, another distributor, who has not been named as a defendant in this lawsuit, received greater discounts than both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited even though it bought fewer tires than either of these defendants. Even if Nichols could show that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were aware of the amount of discounts that other distributors received, the [132] fact that Motorcycle Stuff's discounts exceeded Nichols', Tucker/Rocky's, and Parts Unlimited's would have provided Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited with reason to believe that the prices offered to them were not discriminatory. Therefore, Nichols has failed to show that the defendants had the requisite knowledge under section 2(f) of the Act, and summary judgment is granted in favor of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited on Count VII.

³⁸ The third measure of damages, lost sales on non-Dunlop products is not cognizable because Dr. Pisarkiewicz uses a statistical regression analysis to determine the percentage of Dunlop buyers who would also buy non-Dunlop products and the amount of these products that the buyers would purchase, without demonstrating evidence of a causal connection between the injury and the asserted damages. See, e.g., BASF Corp. v. Old World Trading Co., 41 F.3d 1081, 1093 \(7th Cir. 1994\) (finding causation to be established where the plaintiff presented evidence that many customers would not have purchased from the defendant had they known of the defendant's wrongdoing and that the plaintiff's position in the market would have been more advantageous absent the defendant's wrongful conduct); Alpo Petfoods, Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 778 F. Supp. 555, 560 \(D.D.C. 1991\)(noting that statistical regression analyses, "while useful for demonstrating general trends and the broad impact of certain actions, are simply not usable with respect to the type of specific, concrete evidence needed. Without the regression analyses, however, there is nothing in the record from which this Court can deduce a lost profits figure without speculation."), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 997 F.2d 949 \(D.C. Cir. 1993\); Nikkal Indus., Ltd. v. Salton, Inc., 735 F. Supp. 1227, 1233 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\) (finding that linear regression analysis "did not provide for the impact of other significant factors, such as the possible effect on sales of a declining trend in the popularity of [the product], the appearance of several competitors, vigorous price competition and, most importantly, [the plaintiff's] poor marketing strategy."). For example, Plaintiff would need to offer something along the lines of testimony from buyers who would have bought non-Dunlop products from Nichols who went elsewhere because of price discrimination on Dunlop products.

³⁹ Both Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited note that Dunlop's pricing structure was highly individualized and flexible, and that there was no way for them to determine independently the amount of the discounts that another distributor might be receiving. See, e.g., Tucker/Rocky Mem. Supp. Mot. Summ. Judg. at 31-32.

3. The "Meeting Competition" Defense

HN12[⁴⁰] Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\), makes it illegal to discriminate in price between buyers when the consequence is an injury to competition. Reserve Supply Corp. v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 971 F.2d 37, 41 (7th Cir. 1992) (citing United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 450, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978)). To establish a prima facie violation of section 2(a), a plaintiff must establish the existence of (1) price discrimination, and (2) injury to competition. See Robert M. Klein, The Robinson-Patman Act: Jurisdictional Aspects and Elements, 59 Antitrust L.J. 777 (1991). A prima facie violation, however, may be rebutted by one [133] of the Robinson-Patman Act's two affirmative defenses: (1) "cost justification" or (2) "meeting a competitive price" (commonly known in this case as the "meeting competition" defense). Falls City Indus., Inc. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 434, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 (1983). If established, an affirmative defense eliminates the need to decide the issue of injury to competition, because a properly established defense renders such injury justifiable. Dunlop asserts [*1134] the meeting competition defense, ⁴⁰ contained in HN13[⁴¹] section 2(b) of the Act, which states:

that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

15 U.S.C. § 13\(b\) \(1975\)(emphasis added). HN14[⁴²] Price discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act "is merely a price difference" between the price for which a defendant sells to one buyer versus the price to which it sells to another. Falls City, 460 U.S. at 443 n.10 (quoting FTC v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., [134] 363 U.S. 536, 549, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385, 80 S. Ct. 1267 (1960)). Although the burden of establishing a factual basis for the defense falls on Dunlop, see Falls City, 460 U.S. at 451, all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of Dunlop because Nichols is the moving party. ⁴³

HN15[⁴⁴]

⁴⁰ Dunlop initially asserted, but has since withdrawn, a cost justification defense, which is therefore no longer an issue in this case.

⁴¹ As the moving party, Nichols has the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that it is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

The section 2(b) defense has two elements; both must be factually supported to send the defense to a jury. The two elements of a section 2(b) defense are as follows. First, "the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, [must] show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." FTC v. A.E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746, 759-60, 89 L. Ed. 1338, 65 S. Ct. 971 (1945) (emphasis added). Second, "the seller must demonstrate that its price was a good-faith response to a competitor's lower price." Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 41 (citing Falls City, 460 U.S. at 451).

The determination of whether a seller acted in good faith does not lend itself to the application of a rigid standard. The Supreme Court has stated that the concept of good faith is flexible and pragmatic . . . Rigid rules and inflexible absolutes are especially inappropriate in dealing with the § 2(b) defense; the facts and circumstances of the particular case, not abstract theories or remote conjectures, should govern its interpretation and application.

Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 454 (quoting Continental Baking Co., 63 F.T.C. 2071, 2163 (1963)). The HN16 Supreme Court has, however, identified four factors that may be relevant to the determination of the seller's good faith. These include whether the seller (1) had received reports from other customers of similar discounts; (2) was threatened with a termination of purchases if the discount were not met; (3) made efforts to corroborate the reported discount 136 by seeking documentary evidence or by appraising its reasonableness in terms of available market data; and (4) had past experience with the buyer. Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 454-55. We rely on the above standards in assessing whether Dunlop has successfully asserted an affirmative defense under section 2(b).

a. Background

Nichols moves for partial summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 on Dunlop's section 2(b) defense, contending that Dunlop has not made a sufficient factual showing to demonstrate that the price discrimination was made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor and that Dunlop had no procedures in place for verifying the existence of any alleged equally low price of a competitor. Pl.'s Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 4. "When a properly supported motion for summary judgment is made, the adverse party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Id. at 250. Because the question of whether the section 2(b) defense has been successfully asserted "demands *1135 a 'fact-specific' inquiry," Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 43 (quoting Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 454-55), we now review the 137 material facts presented by the parties in order to determine whether Dunlop has successfully demonstrated that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Dunlop contends that it has demonstrated "the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." Falls City, 460 U.S. at 438 (citations omitted). In support of its contention, Dunlop provides deposition testimony and a supplementary affidavit from Patrick Logue, Dunlop's national sales manager from approximately 1987 to March 1993. Logue states that when distributors would report to him that they were being offered better discounts from Dunlop's competitors, Logue would attempt to obtain specific details about the offer directly from the distributor, but generally would accept the distributor's word that such discounts were in fact being offered. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 7, at 1288. Logue would consider his prior experience with the customer and his opinion of the customer's honesty and integrity in evaluating the customer's information. Def.'s Mem. Opp. Pl.'s Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 7. Where possible, 138 Logue would refer to the competitors' price lists on file with Dunlop in an attempt to verify that the alleged competing discount was in line with the competitor's published prices. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 7, at 1288. These price lists, however, were sometimes outdated and, in any case, did not include the unofficial discounts frequently offered by tire manufacturers. Id. at 1289. Logue states that he was not aware of any other method of verification used to ensure that the discount he offered was necessary to meet competition. Id. After following these standard practices, Logue would determine whether meeting the competitive offer was consistent with Dunlop's business objectives. Def.'s Mem. Opp. Pl.'s Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 7. If so, he would seek to meet the competitive offer by offering additional discounts to these customers that he believed to be equivalent to the competing offers. Id. at 8. Logue states that he believed that the failure to do so would result in a loss of business to Dunlop. Id.

Specifically, Logue states that he had conversations with Robert Nickell, president of Tucker/Rocky; Jeffrey Fox, president of Parts Unlimited; and James [139] and Timothy Dodd, president and vice president, respectively, of Motorcycle Stuff, in which they discussed with him the prices and discounts that they were receiving from Dunlop's competitors that were more favorable than those received from Dunlop. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 1, PP 23-25, 29, 35-38, 48-50. In the case of Tucker/Rocky, Logue states that Nickell typically provided him with "some details about those programs and incentives," but generally refused to disclose further details when asked. Id. P 25.

Logue does not indicate, however, whether "some details" included specific numerical information as to prices or discounts offered by Dunlop's competitors. See id. In the case of Parts Unlimited, Logue states that "on several occasions when I tried to obtain specific information about specific competitive discounts from Mr. Fox, he informed me that it was not his practice to disclose such information between competitors. . . . It was not his practice to provide me with competitors' specific prices or all the other specific details about their discounts." Id. P 37.

Logue did, however, offer Parts Unlimited a year-long 5% discount when it opened a new warehouse [140] in order "to compete aggressively for market share against Metzeler, Michelin and Bridgestone." Pl.'s Repl. Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 4 n.5. This is the sole instance in which Logue refers to specific competitors as the impetus for offering a discount on Dunlop tires. In the case of Motorcycle Stuff, Logue states that he "was not generally provided specific prices of competitors or various other details about . . . their discounts, despite my asking and re-asking about them." Id. P 49. In one instance, Logue granted Motorcycle Stuff a discount in July 1991, but "cannot now remember whether Mr. Dodd mentioned any specific competitors whose competition he was asking Dunlop to meet." Pl.'s Repl. [*1136] Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 3 n.4. Logue admits that there was one instance in which he met a price of $ 30 offered by a competitor to Motorcycle Stuff, as opposed to a discount. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 15, at 1297. There is no other testimony where the specific level of Dunlop's competitor's discount was revealed or discussed. Furthermore, according to Logue, at no time did any of these three distributors threaten to terminate their business with Dunlop, but [141] all three indicated that Dunlop's failure to provide additional discounts could result in a loss of sales of Dunlop tires through those distributors. Id. PP 26, 39, 51.

Dunlop also provides deposition testimony by Robert Nickell and Jeffrey Fox. Robert Nickell refers to "discussions [with Logue] to do with the fact that we were getting volume incentives from other tire manufacturers . . . I would have been negotiating to try to get similar type incentives or volume programs from Dunlop." App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 7, at 413. He does not recall any specific occasions, however, on which Logue requested or received any documentation of the competing offers. Id. Similarly, Jeffrey Fox states that he and Logue discussed "on a continuous basis . . . what the water level is in this industry," but is unable to recall specific conversations or details. App. to Def.'s Rule 12(N) Resp., Tab 5, at 164. He does not refer to any instances in which he provided Logue with specific information about discounts from competitors. See id.

b. Analysis

Under the first prong of the Falls City test, Dunlop does not necessarily need to know the specific price offered by [142] the competitor, but it must produce facts sufficient to enable a jury to determine the range of discount(s) offered by Dunlop's competitors, so that they can compare the discounts Dunlop offered to Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited (but not Nichols) to "meet competition." Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited would then need to testify at trial that they reported such a range of discounts. None of the defendants have offered that testimony; in fact, it is conspicuously absent. Failure to satisfy this element of the section 2(a) defense requires summary judgment in Nichols' favor.

Instead of concentrating on the objective requirements of a section 2(a) defense, both parties have focused on whether Dunlop demonstrated good faith in responding to a competitor's lower price, invoking the four Gypsum factors.⁴² Dunlop relies on a number of cases in which courts have applied Gypsum's extremely flexible standard. See, e.g., Falls City, 460 U.S. at 439 ("In most situations, a showing of facts giving rise to a reasonable belief that equally low prices were available to the favored purchaser from a competitor will be sufficient to establish that the seller's lower price was offered in [143] good faith to meet that price."); Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. FTC, 440 U.S. 69, 59 L. Ed. 2d 153, 99 S. Ct. 925 (1979) (holding that the defendant had successfully demonstrated good faith where the defendant had a long-standing business relationship with the customer and faced a credible threat of losing its account with the customer unless it made substantial concessions); Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d 37 (affirming district court's grant of summary judgment to the defendant manufacturer on the issue of good faith even though the ultimate discount did not meet, but rather beat, the competition, where the manufacturer had presented evidence of its long-term relationship with the customer, whom it believed to be trustworthy, and other customers had reported precisely the same discount from the manufacturer's competitor); Cadigan v. Texaco, Inc., 492 F.2d 383 (9th Cir. 1974) (affirming summary judgment in favor of the defendant where the defendant relied on the buyer's uncorroborated reports that the defendant's competitors offered greater discounts and threatened to terminate business with the defendant if it failed to grant additional discounts); Jones v. Borden Co., 430 F.2d 568 (5th Cir. 1970) (holding [144] that a good faith defense was properly asserted where several buyers informed the manufacturer that the [*1137] manufacturer's price was uncompetitive and the manufacturer suffered substantial loss of sales prior to granting an additional discount); Forster Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 335 F.2d 47 (1st Cir. 1964) (noting that good faith defense does not require that the defendant know the identity of his competitor or have concrete proof of the amount of the competitive offer), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 906, 13 L. Ed. 2d 794, 85 S. Ct. 887 (1965); McCaskill v. Texaco, Inc., 351 F. Supp. 1332 (S.D. Ala. 1972) (granting summary judgment to the defendant where customers provided the defendant with uncorroborated reports of greater discounts from the defendant's competitors), aff'd, 486 F.2d 1400 (5th Cir. 1973); Krieger v. Texaco, Inc., 373 F. Supp. 108 (W.D.N.Y. 1972) (granting summary judgment to the defendant where a long-standing customer informed the defendant of competing offers and partially terminated business with the defendant until the defendant lowered its prices).

[145] On the issue of good faith alone, Dunlop has relied heavily on Logue's subjective determinations, which were based on his business experience. Pat Logue testified at his deposition that Tucker/Rocky, Parts Unlimited and Motorcycle Stuff all informed him that Dunlop's discounts were uncompetitive and that Dunlop would lose sales as a result. Dunlop had long-standing business relationships with each of these distributors and believed them to be trustworthy. In addition, Logue states that it was his practice to request from the distributors documentation of these competing offers, even though such information was rarely, if ever, forthcoming. Logue also states that it was his practice to refer to the competitors' published price lists, if available to Dunlop, in order to confirm that the reported offers which no one now recalls were indeed in line with current market conditions. This evidence may have been sufficient to present a genuine issue of fact as to Dunlop's good faith under Gypsum's lenient standards for good faith, as applied by the Seventh Circuit in Reserve Supply, if other non-subjective facts about actual price ranges from competitors had been established.

The [146] key issue in this case is whether Dunlop has successfully shown "the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor," a necessary element to asserting a section 2(b) affirmative defense. Staley, 324 U.S. at 759-60. Nichols touches upon this issue tangentially in its assertion that Dunlop had no procedures in place for verifying the existence of any alleged equally low price of a competitor. See PI's Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Summ. Judg. at 12-15. Dunlop, however, is unable to point to facts that would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that Dunlop was meeting the equally low price of a competitor and has not provided sufficient evidence that it was ever apprised or aware of what its competitors' prices or price levels were, as compared with Dunlop's prices. Furthermore, Dunlop, through the deposition testimony of Logue, Nickell and Jeffrey Fox, is unable to show that Logue (i.e., Dunlop) ever knew, or even believed that he knew, the amount of the discounts offered by Dunlop's competitors. Absent such information, Dunlop had no way to determine [147] that the lower price it granted to distributors who informed Logue that they were receiving discounts from competing manufacturers was "meeting" the equally low price of a competitor.

⁴² Note that the "good faith" response is only one part of the test. The other part of the test regards the objective and verifiable evidence used by the manufacturer to come up with or calculate a discount level or range that would meet competition.

In each of the cases cited by Dunlop, the defendant had some knowledge of the nature of the offer presented by its competitor upon which to base its counter-offer. See Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 440 U.S. at 84 (noting that customer told the defendant that a $ 50,000 improvement in its bid "would not be a drop in the bucket"); Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 43 (noting that manufacturer's representative had contemporaneous notes of his conversation with customer indicating the exact amount of the competitor's discount); Cadigan, 492 F.2d at 385-86 (stating that buyer told defendant the exact amount of the discounts offered by defendant's competitors); Jones, 430 F.2d at 573 (noting that buyer told defendant that defendant's price was "generally five percent higher" than competitor's); Forster, 335 F.2d at 54 (stating that several buyers informed [*1138] the defendant of the exact nature of the competitive offer, and the defendant conducted an independent investigation in order [148] to confirm the offer); McCaskill, 351 F. Supp. at 1337-38 (stating that buyers told defendant the exact amount of the discounts offered by defendant's competitors); Krieger, 373 F. Supp. at 112 (noting that buyer told defendant the prices offered by defendant's competitors).

In addition, in Glowacki v. Borden, 420 F. Supp. 348 \(N.D. Ill. 1976\), a case we find analogous to the instant situation, Judge Grady denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment where the seller informed the defendant distributor that the defendants' prices were higher than those of a competitor, but the defendant failed to assert facts demonstrating that it had reason to believe that the prices it offered in response were no lower than those offered by its competitor. In this case, Dunlop offers no evidence that it was ever aware of even the approximate amount of the discounts offered by its competitors. Logue can recall no specific instance in which a distributor informed him of an exact amount of a competitor's discount, or even provided some sort of benchmark by which Logue could set a competitive discount on Dunlop tires. The competitors' price lists to which Logue referred were often [149] outdated and did not include unofficial discounts, which were frequently offered by tire manufacturers such as Dunlop and its competitors.

Dunlop therefore has failed to demonstrate "the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor," Falls City, 460 U.S. at 438 (citations omitted). Because "the seller must show that under the circumstances it was reasonable to believe that the quoted price or a lower one was available to the favored purchaser or purchasers from the seller's competitors," id. (quoting Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 451), to prevail, Dunlop has failed to produce sufficient factual support for the assertion of a section 2(b) defense, and has therefore failed to carry its burden on Nichols' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment. Its motion on the section 2(b) defense is, therefore, granted.

III. The State Law Claims

A. The Facts

The following facts undisputed facts relate to the state law claims alleged in plaintiff's Third Amended Complaint. In September 1992, Pat Logue, from Dunlop, told Ken Anderson, from Nichols, that the [150] "prices" Nichols received from Dunlop were the same as those offered to other Dunlop distributors; that "there were no other prices." 12(N)(3)(b) Reply P 63. Logue also told Terry Baisley, from Nichols, that all distributors bought from the same price sheet. Id. In addition, there is no dispute that sometime in 1992 Logue told Nichols that it would not be terminated as a distributor. 12(N)(3)(b) P 64. At that time, Nichols operated as a Dunlop distributor under the 1992 Distributor Agreement, which ended December 31, 1992. Id. On December 28, 1992, Dunlop issued a Memorandum informing all of its distributors that it intended to terminate two or three of them in 1993. PX 16. Dunlop mailed a copy of this Memo with the 1993 Distributor Agreements to each of its distributors. Nichols received a copy of the Memo and the Agreement, which it signed on January 11, 1993. The 1993 Distributor Agreement contained a "termination" provision which provided that Dunlop had the option to terminate the agreement with five days notice. PX 1.

In addition to Dunlop's alleged misrepresentations, Nichols bases some of its state law claims upon its decision to open a second warehouse. Nichols began [151] exploring the possibility of opening a second warehouse in Phoenix, Arizona, in March 1992. 12(N)(3)(b) P 66. Nichols leased the warehouse in September 1992. Id. Nichols admits that Dunlop never asked for the Phoenix warehouse, nor did it require Nichols to obtain the warehouse as a condition of its right to distribute Dunlop tires under the relevant agreements. 12(M) P 419 The record also reflects that Nichols attempted to conceal its Phoenix plans. For instance, in September 1992, two days after Nichols leased the warehouse, Jack Jesse testified that in Las Vegas "we kind of told him [*1139] [Logue] with our laughter and humor" that Nichols was opening a Phoenix warehouse. 12(N)(3)(b) P 66. Nichols began to stock Dunlop tires in its Phoenix warehouse before it opened on January 14, 1993. Id. Dunlop attended the opening of the warehouse and agreed to ship Dunlop products there. Id. There is no evidence that Dunlop knew that Nichols had invested in the warehouse until it received Nichols' first purchase order. Id. The warehouse currently remains open. 12(N)(3)(b) P 67.

B. Claims Against Dunlop

1. Count VIII: Illinois Consumer Fraud Act

In Count VIII, plaintiff [152] alleges that Dunlop intentionally misrepresented that: (1) Nichols received the same prices and discounts offered to the other distributors; and (2) Nichols would not be terminated as a Dunlop distributor, in violation of the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act ("Consumer Fraud Act" or "the Act"). 815 ILCS 505/1 et seq. Compl. P 63.

HN17 [↑] Section 2 of the Act provides:

Unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, including but not limited to the use or employment of any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation or the concealment, suppression or omission of such material fact, or the use or employment of any practice described in Section 2 of the 'Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act,' approved August 5, 1965, in the conduct of any trade or commerce hereby declared unlawful whether any person has in fact been misled, deceived or damaged thereby. In construing this section consideration shall be given to the interpretations of the Federal trade Commission and the federal courts relating to Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

815 ILCS 505/2.

Dunlop contends that Nichols is not a "consumer" under the Act [153] and therefore lacks standing to bring this claim. In particular, Dunlop contends that the claim is defective because it does not involve Illinois trade or commerce or affect Illinois consumers. Nichols fails to specify allege an affect on trade or commerce in Illinois.

There is currently a split among both Illinois and federal district courts as to whether an effect upon Illinois consumers is required to properly bring a claim under the Act. 815 ILCS 505/2.

Section 815 ILCS 501/(f) defines trade or commerce as:

the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of any services and any property, tangible or intangible, real, personal or mixed, and any other article, commodity, or thing of value wherever situated, and shall include any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this State. (emphasis added).

Some Illinois courts find that the Act is intended to "protect and benefit Illinois residents," Lincoln Nat'l Life Ins. Co. v. Silver, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13857 at *34-35 \(N.D. Ill. October 1, 1991\). These courts construe the language "shall include any trade or commerce" to limit the reach of the Act's protection. See Schwartz f1541 v. Schaub, 818 F. Supp. 1214 \(1993\) (Shadur, J.)(citing Seaboard Seed Co. v. Bernis Co., Inc., 632 F. Supp. 1133 \(N.D. Ill. 1986\)(Shadur, J.)). See also Cange v. Stotler & Co., 913 F.2d 1204, 1210 \(7th Cir. 1990\) (Act outlaws unfair methods of competition in the conduct of any trade or commerce which directly or indirectly affects the people of Illinois). For practical purposes, the holdings in these cases mean that a valid Consumer Fraud Act claim must include allegations of trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting consumers in Illinois.

Conversely, some courts construe the language of the Act broadly and hold that the Act was not strictly intended to protect only Illinois consumers, but also to prohibit fraud in the conduct of any trade or commerce. See Cirone-

Shadow v. Union Nissan of Waukegan, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5232, No. 94 C 6723, 1995 WL 238680, *3 \(N.D. Ill. April 20, 1995\) (Kocoras, J.)(holding that the statute, by its terms, does not limit its scope to the protection of Illinois residents); Fry v. UAL Corp., 136 F.R.D. 626 \(N.D. Ill. 1991\)(Holderman, J.)(same); [CPS Corp. v. Tkalitch, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18320, 1994 WL 724834 \[*1140\] \(N.D. Ill. Dec. 22, 1994\)](#) (Pallmeyer, J.). [Duhl, 102 Ill. App. 3d \[155\] at 495](#) (legislature clearly mandated that Illinois courts should liberally construe and broadly apply the Consumer fraud Act in order to eradicate all forms of deceptive and unfair business practices).

In the absence of a ruling by the Illinois Supreme Court on this issue, this Court must determine which construction of the Act to apply. This Court believes that HN18 the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, although intended to protect Illinois consumers, does not contain a geographic limitation. The Court also believes that the Illinois Supreme Court would construe the Act liberally to include all consumers whose allegations of fraud directly or indirectly affect trade or commerce in Illinois. The Seventh Circuit has held that if the Illinois Supreme Court were to face the question whether the Act requires injury to a particular consumer, or consumers generally, the Court would require a showing that a defendant's misconduct injured consumers generally." First Comics, Inc. v. World Color Press, Inc., 884 F.2d 1033, 1040 \(7th Cir. 1989\)(cited by Cange, 913 F.2d at 1210). Thus, both the definition of a consumer and the affect upon that consumer sweeps broadly and includes Nichols' general [\[*156\]](#) allegations of injury. Nichols is not only an Illinois corporation, but it does business in Illinois. Therefore, any injury to Nichols is either an injury or the functional equivalent of an injury to an Illinois consumer. Nichols therefore has standing to assert Count VIII.

The next question is whether a genuine issue of triable fact exists on the issues of price discrimination and termination. HN19 To establish a claim under the Act, a plaintiff must allege and prove the following elements: (1) the misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; (2) an intent by the defendant that the plaintiff rely on the misrepresentation or concealment; and (3) that the deception occurred in the course of conduct of any trade or commerce. Celex, 877 F. Supp. at 1128; Siegel, 153 Ill. 2d at 542. In 1994, the Illinois Supreme Court also recognized that a plaintiff must show that the challenged conduct of the defendant proximately caused the damages alleged under the Act. See Martin v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., 163 Ill. 2d 33, 58-59, 643 N.E.2d 734, 746-47, 205 Ill. Dec. 443 \(1994\) (citing cases); 815 ILCS 505/2.

Nichols claims that Dunlop made two misrepresentations: First, sometime in 1992, Dunlop [\[*157\]](#) promised not to terminate Nichols (termination claim). Second, in September 1992, Pat Logue told Ken Anderson that Nichols was receiving Dunlop's best distributor prices and discounts on tires.

It is undisputed that Logue's statement about price was false (price discrimination claim). Therefore, the element of misrepresentation has been established. The question on price is whether this misrepresentation was material, and whether Dunlop intended for Nichols to rely on the misrepresentation. See Ryan v. Wersi Elec. GMBH & Co., No. 94-2783, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 16048 \(7th Cir. June 28, 1995\). With respect to materiality, there are genuine issues of material fact. A misrepresentation is material if the party to whom it was made would have acted differently had the party known the truth. Id. at *3. The determination of whether a misrepresentation is material involves factual determinations generally inappropriate for resolution on a summary judgment motion. Foster v. Zeeko, 540 F.2d 1310, 694 \(7th Cir. 1976\). Similarly, questions of intent are inappropriate for summary judgment. Celex Group Inc. v. Executive Gallery, Inc., 877 F. Supp. 1114, 1128 \(N.D. Ill. 1995\). In this [\[*158\]](#) case, the Court is unable to find, as a matter of law, that Nichols would not have brought this lawsuit sooner than it did had it known that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited were receiving discounts it did not receive. Moreover, genuine issues of fact regarding injury from price discrimination exist in this case which would preclude summary judgment on Count VIII.

With respect to termination, there are similar questions. The difference between the termination claim for fraud under the Act, and the claim alleged under common law, is that under common law reliance is an element; under the Act it is not. [Celex, 877 F. Supp. at 1128 \[*1141\]](#) (citing Siegel v. Levy Organization Dev. Co., 153 Ill. 2d 534, 542, 180 Ill. Dec. 300, 607 N.E.2d 194 \(1992\)). Whereas the Court can confidently say that Nichols could not reasonably rely, as a matter of law, on any promises not to terminate after January 11, 1993 (the date it signed the 1993 Distributor Agreement), we cannot say that Dunlop did not manifest an intent to deceive Nichols in 1992 when it made the alleged statements, nor can the Court say that these statements were not material misrepresentations, as those terms have been defined. Ryan, supra at *3. We therefore deny [\[*159\]](#) summary judgment, under both the theory of price and termination, on Count VIII.

2. Counts IX & X: Illinois Franchise Act Illinois

The key issue involved in resolving Counts IX and X is whether Nichols is a franchise under the Illinois Franchise Disclosure Act. 815 ILCS 705(3) (1)(1995) ("Franchise Act"). Whether Nichols has standing to bring a suit under the Franchise Act depends upon whether it satisfies the definition of a franchise.

A franchise is defined as a contract granting the right to engage in business and requiring the payment of a "franchise fee." 815 ILCS 705/3\(1\). A franchise fee is any fee or charge (including payment for goods or services) that is required by the franchisor for the right to sell, resell, or distribute goods or services, and is paid directly or indirectly by the franchisee. 815 ILCS 705/3\(14\).

A "franchise" thus requires a contract and a required fee. Nichols' contract with Dunlop did not characterize their relationship as a "franchise" nor did it require payment of a fee. 12(M) P 443 (the agreement did not require payment of a "franchise fee," "service fee," or "royalty fee"). Under Illinois law, a payment is not a "franchise fee," unless [\[160\]](#) it fits precisely within the statutory definition. See Account Services Corp. v. DAKCS Software Services, Inc., 208 Ill. App. 3d 392, 567 N.E.2d 381, 385, 153 Ill. Dec. 423 \(Ill. App. 1990\). Nichols contends, however, that its maintenance of large inventories, its processing of customer returns, and its provision of its own products liability insurance (at Dunlop's request) operates as a franchise fee. This argument, however, is flawed because all the payments Nichols made to Dunlop pursuant to its distributorship agreement were voluntary. 12(M) P 443. Nichols was not required by Dunlop to maintain large inventories, nor can Dunlop's discount system be considered a "de facto" inventory requirement since Nichols admits it was able to sell off the inventory within six months without special promotions or discounts. Costs stemming from processing customer returns are simply costs associated with doing business and are, therefore, not a franchise fee. See Bryant Corp. v. Outboard Marine Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18371, 1994 WL 745159 at *3 \(W.D. Wash. Sept. 29, 1994\) (providing warranty administration work for the suppliers products does not constitute a franchise fee). Finally, Dunlop's request that Nichols provide products liability insurance [\[161\]](#) is just that, a request, and not a requirement.

For these reasons, the Court finds that Nichols never paid a franchise fee to Dunlop and therefore has no standing to sue under the Act as "franchise." Summary judgment is therefore granted in favor of Dunlop as to Counts IX and X.

3. Count XI: Promissory Estoppel

The 1993 Distributorship Agreement signed by Nichols contained a clause which allowed Dunlop to terminate their relationship at any time, as long as Nichols was provided with five days notice. In Count XI, Nichols argues that, in spite of this provision, it reasonably and foreseeably relied upon Dunlop's promise, made in 1992, not to terminate Nichols as a Dunlop distributor. Nichols contends that this promise modified the contract and that Dunlop should be estopped from exercising the termination provision.

HN20 [↑] In Illinois, the elements necessary to establish a claim of promissory estoppel are: (1) an unambiguous promise; (2) on which the promisee reasonably and justifiably relied; (3) which was foreseeable by the promisor; and (4) on which the promisee relied to his detriment. See M. T. Bank Co. v. Milton Bradley Co., 945 F.2d 1404, 1408 \(7th Cir. 1991\). New [\[162\]](#) York law, which applies to the [\[*1142\]](#) contract claims in this case, applies the same elements. Gellerman v. Deet, 164 Misc. 2d 715, 625 N.Y.S.2d 831, 832 \(1995\) (citing James King & Son, Inc. v. De Santis Constr., 97 Misc. 2d 1063, 413 N.Y.S.2d 78, 81 \(1977\)).

Even if this Court were to accept Nichols' claim that Dunlop's oral promises modified the written distributor contract, Nichols' promissory estoppel claim must fail. Sometime in 1993, Logue promised Nichols that their relationship would not be terminated. At most, this promise could affect only the 1992 Distributor Agreement. In January 1993, Nichols signed a new Distributor Agreement. This agreement contained the termination clause with no mention of the oral promises. It also contained an integration clause. The 1993 contract supersedes the 1992 contract, whether the 1992 contract was modified or not. Further, there is no indication that the 1993 contract was similarly modified. Therefore, if Nichols' reliance on Dunlop's promises was actionable at all under the doctrine of promissory estoppel, it was actionable only under the 1992 contract. Dunlop terminated Nichols in 1993 pursuant to their 1993 agreement. Plaintiff's promissory estoppel claim must fail and [163] summary judgment is granted for Dunlop on Count XI.

4. Count XII: Equitable Estoppel

Nichols also claims that Dunlop is equitably estopped from exercising its right to terminate Nichols under the terms of the 1993 contract because Dunlop made material misrepresentations with respect to price and termination. Unlike promissory estoppel, the doctrine of equitable estoppel is based upon an intended misrepresentation or the concealment of a material fact rather than a promise. Derby Meadows Util. v. Inter-Continental, 202 Ill. App. 3d 345, 559 N.E.2d 986, 995, 147 Ill. Dec. 646 (Ill. App. 1990). HN21[¹⁶] The elements necessary to assert a claim for equitable estoppel are: (1) words or conduct consisting of misrepresentations or concealment of material facts; (2) defendant must have actual or implied knowledge at the time the representations are made that they are untrue; (3) plaintiff does not know that the representations are untrue at the time that they are made; (4) the party estopped must intend or expect that his conduct or representations will be acted on by the plaintiff; (5) plaintiff relies on the representations in such a manner that he would be prejudiced if the party making the representations is allowed to deny [164] the truth thereof. See Derby Meadows Util., 559 N.E.2d at 995.

Nichols' equitable estoppel claim fails because Nichols cannot prove, as a matter of law, that it relied on Dunlop's 1992 statement that Nichols would not be terminated. Nichols cannot prove reasonable reliance because it read the December 28, 1992, Memorandum from Dunlop announcing the imminent termination of two or three distributors and signed the 1993 Distributorship Agreement which contained an express at will provision and an integration clause. Nichols also cannot prove reliance, as a matter of law, after it signed the 1993 contract because Dunlop made no additional assurances to Nichols regarding termination after January 11, 1993. The Court therefore grants summary judgment in favor of Dunlop on Count XII.

5. Count XIII: Equitable Recoupment

The equitable recoupment doctrine applies when a contract is terminated without just cause before the terminated party has the opportunity to recoup its losses. Cox v. Doctor's Associates, Inc., 245 Ill. App. 3d 116, 200 (Ill. App. 1993). The doctrine "is designed to remedy the inequity which arises after a manufacturer requires a distributor to make a sizable [165] investment in furtherance of the distributorship, terminates the relationship without just cause and leaves the distributor with substantial unrecovered expenses." Id. at 200. In some courts, the doctrine is cognizable only after it is shown that the contract in question is terminable at will. Ag-Chem Equip. Co. v. Hahn, Inc., 480 F.2d 482 (8th Cir. 1973).

Nichols alleges that it made sizable investments, including leasing, improving and stocking the Phoenix warehouse to promote Dunlop goods in reliance on Dunlop's assurances that it would not be terminated. [*1143] Compl. P 81. Nichols also claims that Dunlop terminated its agreement with Nichols without just cause, leaving Nichols with substantial unrecouped investments. Compl. P 82.

Nichols equitable recoupment claim fails because there is no evidence that Dunlop "required" Nichols to establish a business in Phoenix. Rather, Nichols contends that Dunlop merely "encouraged" such action. Compl. P 15. Hence, Dunlop is not responsible for Nichols investments due to its termination as a Dunlop distributor, since Dunlop did not require Nichols to make such investments. Dunlop's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to Count XIII [166] is, therefore, granted.

6. Count XIV: Breach of Contract/Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Both Illinois and New York courts have declared that every contract implies good faith and fair dealing between its parties. Fasolino Foods Co. v. Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, 961 F.2d 1052, 1056 (2nd Cir. 1992); Beraha v. Baxter Health Care Corp., 956 F.2d 1436, 1443 (7th Cir. 1992). However, the covenant is not an independent source of contractual duties; rather, it "guides the construction of explicit terms in the agreement." Beraha, 956 F.2d at 1443. When a term in the contract grants a wide range of discretion, the party must "exercise that discretion reasonably, with proper motive and in a manner consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties." Id. at 1444 (citing

Dayan v. McDonald's Corp., 125 Ill. App. 3d 972, 466 N.E.2d 958, 972, 81 Ill. Dec. 156 (Ill. App. 1984)(emphasis in original).

On its face, this covenant appears to be at odds with the concept of at will contracts, which allow a party to exercise its discretion to terminate a contractual relationship for virtually any reason. However, since an at will contract expressly allows each party to terminate at any time, the parties have no [167] reasonable expectation that it will be terminated only for cause. Beraha, 956 F.2d at 1444-1445. Therefore, the covenant is not breached when one party terminates an at will contract because the party's actions were in accord with the other's reasonable expectations. Id.

In this case, the 1993 contract entered into between Nichols and Dunlop stated: "In addition to the termination rights in paragraph 2, this agreement may be terminated with or without cause by either party upon five days' written notice addressed to the other party by mail or wire." 12(M) P 407. Nichols claims that Dunlop breached the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing when it terminated Nichols because it exercised the discretion provided by this clause in bad faith. However, since the contract expressly provided that Dunlop could terminate its distributor relationship with Nichols for any reason, Nichols could not have had a reasonable expectation that Dunlop would only terminate it for cause. Nichols' claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing fails because Nichols does not allege that Dunlop exercised its discretion in any manner inconsistent with the reasonable expectations [168] of the parties. Therefore, Dunlop's motion for summary judgment of Count XIV is granted.

7. Count XV: Fraud

HN22 [+] The elements of a cause of action for common law fraudulent misrepresentation are: (1) false statement of material fact; (2) known or believed to be false by the party stating it; (3) intent to induce the other party to act; (4) justifiable reliance by the other party on the misrepresentation; and (5) damage to the other party resulting from such reliance. Heider v. Leewards Creative Crafts, Inc., 245 Ill. App. 3d 258, 613 N.E.2d 805, 811, 184 Ill. Dec. 488 (Ill. App. 1993)(citing Soules v. General Motors Corp., 79 Ill. 2d 282, 402 N.E.2d 599, 601, 37 Ill. Dec. 597 (Ill. 1980)). Nichols bases its fraud claim against Dunlop upon two alleged misrepresentations. First, Nichols points to Logue's statement, made in 1992, that Nichols would not be considered for termination as a distributor. Second, Nichols alleges that Dunlop falsely represented that Nichols was getting the same discounts from Dunlop that other distributors were receiving.

With respect to Logue's 1992 statement regarding the possibility that Nichols would [*1144] be terminated as a distributor, the Court has already determined that the statement was superseded by the 1993 contract. [169] After Nichols signed this contract on January 11, 1993, Nichols reliance on Logue's statement was unjustified. See Merex A.G. v. Fairchild Weston Systems, Inc., 810 F. Supp. 1356, 1372 (S.D.N.Y. 1993)(no justified reliance when oral promise contradicts an admitted, subsequent written executory agreement). Therefore, Nichols cannot recover for the damages it is seeking that result from events that occurred after the 1993 contract was signed, which primarily arise from the opening of the Phoenix warehouse. During that time, the 1993 contract was controlling.

There is a possibility that Nichols could have been damaged by its reliance on Logue's statement during the time between when the statement was made and when Nichols signed the 1993 contract. The reasonableness of a party's reliance, however, is determined at the time that the party acts upon the misrepresentation. Duran v. Leslie Oldsmobile Inc., 229 Ill. App. 3d 1032, 594 N.E.2d 1355, 1363, 171 Ill. Dec. 835 (Ill. App. 1992). A plaintiff's subsequent opportunity to become informed of the true facts contradicting a misrepresentation cannot render prior reliance unreasonable. Id. Thus, Nichols still must prove that its reliance during this time was reasonable.

[170] Dunlop asserts that Nichols cannot prove that its reliance upon Logue's statements was reasonable because it was a promise of future conduct. As a general rule, promises of future conduct are not actionable in fraud. Wilsmann v. Stearns, 664 F. Supp. 386, 391 (N.D. Ill. 1987)(citing Steinberg v. Chicago Medical School, 69 Ill. 2d 320, 371 N.E.2d 634, 641, 13 Ill. Dec. 699 (1977)). However, an exception to this rule exists when the false representation is part of a "scheme or device" used to accomplish the fraud. Wilsmann, 664 F. Supp. at 391.

913 F. Supp. 1088, *1144 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13278, 170

Nichols has alleged that the promise was part of a scheme. Whether or not a scheme actually existed in this case is a question of fact for the jury. See Stamakis Indus., Inc. v. King, 520 N.E.2d 770 \(Ill. App. 1987\).

In addition, Nichols must prove that its reliance upon Dunlop's statements regarding price was reasonable, and that Dunlop intended to deceive Nichols with these statements. This creates genuine issues of material fact that the jury must decide. See Foster v. Zeeko, 540 F.2d 1310, 1319 \(7th Cir. 1976\); Fitzsimmons v. Best, 528 F.2d 692, 694 \(7th Cir. 1976\); Fisher v. Samuels, 691 F. Supp. 63, 69 \(N.D. Ill. 1988\)(questions of reasonableness [171] and intent involve factual determinations and are generally inappropriate for resolution on a motion for summary judgment). There are also genuine issues of material fact with respect to the evidence of damages, as expressed in the portion of this opinion dealing with the Robinson-Patman Act claims. Therefore, this Court will deny Dunlop's motion for summary judgment as to Count XV. However, Nichols' claim for fraud regarding the termination will be limited to the alleged damages which preceded the signing of the 1993 contract.

C. Claims against Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited

1. Count XVI: Tortious Interference with Contract

HN23 The elements that a plaintiff must allege and prove for a valid claim of tortious interference with contract include: (1) the existence of a valid and enforceable contract between the plaintiff and another; (2) that the defendant was aware of the contractual relationship; (3) an intentional and unjustified inducement of a breach of the contract which causes a subsequent breach by the third party; and (4) damages. A-Abar Elec. Supply Inc. v. Emerson Elec. Co., 956 F.2d 1399, 1404 \(7th Cir.\) (quoting Mannion v. Stallings & Co., 204 Ill. App. 3d 179, 561 \(172\) N.E.2d 1134, 1139, 149 Ill. Dec. 438 \(Ill. App. 1990\)), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 194 (1992). Nichols claims that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited unjustifiably induced Dunlop to breach its contract with Nichols.

Generally, if a contract at will is terminated, no breach has occurred. Therefore, most courts do not recognize tortious interference with contract claims that are based upon a contract at will. See Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Sipula, 776 F.2d 157, 162 \(7th Cir. 1985\); Belden v. InterNorth, Inc., 90 Ill. App. 3d 547, 413 N.E.2d 98, 102, 45 Ill. Dec. 765 \(Ill. App. 1980\); Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 768 cmt. i (1977); cf. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Van Matre, 158 Ill. App. 3d 298, 511 N.E.2d 740, 744, 110 Ill. Dec. 563 \(Ill. App. 1987\)(at will nature of contract does not relieve alleged tort-feasor of liability). In this case, the Court has already determined that Dunlop's termination of Nichols was not a breach of contract because the contract was terminable at will. Since there was no breach, Nichols' claim must fail.

In addition, Tucker/Rocky's and Parts Unlimited's actions are protected by the "competitor's privilege." Lawful competition is a justifiable reason for interfering with contractual relations. See Von Matre, 511 N.E.2d at \(173\) 744, Getschow v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 111 Ill. App. 3d 522, 444 N.E.2d 579, 584, 67 Ill. Dec. 343 \(1982\). According the Restatement (Second) of Torts:

A competitor who intentionally causes a third party not to enter into a contract with another or not to continue a contract terminable at will does not interfere improperly if: (1) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and the other; and (2) the actor does not employ wrongful means; and (3) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint on trade; and (4) when a business relationship affords the parties only the hope of benefits, the parties must allow for the rights of others.

Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 768.⁴³ We have already determined, in the section of this opinion dealing with Count I, that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited did not participate in conduct restraining trade. Therefore, these defendants' actions are protected by the competitor's privilege. Consequently, summary judgment is granted for Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited as to Count XVI.

[174] 2. Count XVII: Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

⁴³ This section of the Restatement was adopted by Illinois courts in Galinski v. Kessler, 134 Ill. App. 3d 602, 480 N.E.2d 1176, 1182, 89 Ill. Dec. 433 \(Ill. App. 1985\).

HN24 [+] The elements of a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage are: (1) the plaintiff's reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship; (2) the defendant's purposeful interference and destruction of this legitimate expectancy;⁴⁴ and (3) that the defendant's actions caused harm to the plaintiff. A-Abart Elec. Supply Inc., 956 F.2d at 1404 (quoting Kurtz v. Illinois Nat'l Bank, 179 Ill. App. 3d 719, 534 N.E.2d 1007, 1012, 128 Ill. Dec. 562 (Ill. App. 1989)). In cases where:

an individual with a prospective business relationship has a mere expectancy of future economic gain; a party to a contract has a certain and enforceable expectation of receiving the benefits of the contract. When a business relationship affords the parties no enforceable expectations, but only the hope of . . . benefits, the parties must allow for the rights of others. They therefore have no cause of action against a bona fide competitor unless the circumstances indicate unfair competition, that is, an unprivileged interference with prospective advantage.

A-Abart Elec. Supply, 956 F.2d at 1404-1405 [175] (quoting Belden Corp. v. InterNorth, Inc., 90 Ill. App. 3d 547, 413 N.E.2d 98, 102, 45 Ill. Dec. 765 (Ill. App. 1980)).

There is no unfair competition in this case, given the Court's rulings on the antitrust claims. Nichols argues that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited interfered with its valid expectancies to continue its business dealings with Dunlop; to continue to sell Dunlop tires to its customers; to enter into a distributorship relationship with Metzeler; and, as to only Tucker/Rocky, to continue its relationship with its top salespeople, who were hired away from Tucker/Rocky [*1146] after Dunlop terminated Nichols. However, Nichols' claim fails because the competitor's [176] privilege applies not only to claims of tortious interference with contract, but also to claims of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. id. Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited, and Nichols are all players in a very competitive market. The Court has determined that Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited did not employ improper competitive strategies. Therefore, summary judgement is granted in favor of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited on Count XVII.

IV. Dunlop's Motion to Strike Nichols' Jury Demand

Given the rulings contained in this opinion, this Court hereby denies defendant Dunlop's Motion to Strike Nichols' jury demand. Dunlop's motion is entirely based on form language which is contained in the distribution agreement which existed between Dunlop and Nichols. This proviso was contained in paragraph two entitled "Terms" and stated as follows:

TERMS: The due date and terms of each shipment are indicated on the invoice and on the monthly statement of account. If the Distributor fails to make payment in accordance therewith, or if there is a change in the Distributor's credit worthiness, Dunlop may modify such due dates and terms, or refuse to make [177] further shipments except for cash and the payment in full or the balance due in the Distributor's account, and if Dunlop so decides in such case, may terminate this Agreement without ADVANCE NOTICE. Distributor agrees to pay to [sic] the collection costs of any obligation due from it to Dunlop including attorney's fees, court costs and collection agency fees. In any dispute arising between Distributor and Dunlop, Distributor hereby waives trial by jury in any action, proceeding, counterclaim, whether at law or equity against Distributor or Dunlop, or in any manner whatsoever connected with this Agreement or the performance by Distributor under this Agreement. In the event that the balance shown owing on the Distributor's Statement of Account with Dunlop remains unpaid, in whole or in part, for 30 days or more after the due date shown on said statement and Dunlop institutes a court collection action against Distributor, Distributor agrees to additionally pay interest to Dunlop from said due date. The interest shall be paid at the maximum legal rate which may be charged by commercial banks in Distributor's jurisdiction on payable-on-demand business loans, equal in amount to the [178] past due sum, made by express contract to borrowers similar to the Distributor.

⁴⁴ The interference must take the form of unfair competition such as fraud, intimidation, or disparagement. A-Abart Elec. Supply Inc., 956 F.2d at 1404-1405. This standard is more stringent than the one used in tortious interference with contract claims because a party's interest in prospective economic advantage receives less protection than its enforceable contract rights. Id.

Based on this language Dunlop asserts that Nichols has waived its fundamental constitutional right to a trial by jury. HN25 Although the Seventh Amendment of the United States Constitution guarantees the right to a jury trial in civil cases, this right may be waived. Stewart v. RCA Corp., 790 F.2d 624, 630 \(7th Cir. 1986\); Bonfield v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc., 717 F. Supp. 589, 594 \(N.D. Ill. 1989\). However, such a waiver must be made knowingly and voluntarily. In re Reggie Packing Co., 671 F. Supp. 571, 573 \(N.D. Ill. 1987\). Indeed, "as the right of jury trial is fundamental, courts indulge in every reasonable presumption against waiver." Aetna Insurance Co. v. Kennedy, 301 U.S. 389, 393, 57 S. Ct. 809, 812, 81 L. Ed. 1177 \(1987\). The factors to consider in determining whether a contractual waiver of the right to jury trial was entered into knowingly and voluntarily include: (1) the parties' negotiations concerning the waiver provision, if any, (2) the conspicuousness of the provision, (3) the relative bargaining power of the parties and (4) whether the waiving party's counsel had an opportunity [\[179\]](#) to review the agreement. Heller Financial, Inc. v. Finch-Bayless Equip. Co., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6523, No. 90 C 1672, 1990 WL 77500 \(N.D. Ill. May 31, 1990\), reconsideration denied, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8729, 1990 WL 103232 \(N.D. Ill. July 17, 1990\); Bonfield, 717 F. Supp. at 595-96; In re Reggie, 671 F. Supp. at 573-74. The Court expressly finds that interpreting this clause to be a waiver of an important constitutional right would be unjust under the circumstances of this case.

First, the Court notes that the claims that will proceed to trial in this case are limited to claims that do not directly arise or have their basis in the Distributor Agreement. Instead, [\[*1147\]](#) this case will proceed to trial on Nichols' claims against Dunlop involving violations of the Robinson-Patman Act, the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act and common law fraud. Each of these claims are ultimately based on both statutory and common law and cannot be based on the parties' Distributor Agreement. Thus, despite the somewhat broad wording of the purported jury waiver, the Court finds that this jury waiver should be strictly construed against Dunlop, the drafter of the agreement, and that it does not apply to the claims remaining this case.

Moreover, even [\[180\]](#) if this Court were to find that the alleged jury waiver applies to the claims remaining in this case, this Court would still fail to enforce the waiver because there is no evidence that this alleged waiver was ever the subject of any negotiations between the parties. Given the absence of any evidence of such negotiations this Court finds that the alleged jury waiver was inconspicuous and therefore invalid. Whirlpool Financial Corp. v. Sevaux, 866 F. Supp. 1102, 1106 \(N.D. Ill. 1994\); Heller Financial, Inc. v. Finch-Bayless Equipment Co., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6523, No. 90 C 1672, 1990 WL 77500 \(N.D. Ill. May 31, 1990\). Finally, all of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the alleged jury waiver have led the Court to conclude that it was not undertaken in a knowing, voluntary and intelligent manner--elements which are necessary conditions for the waiver of any important constitutional right.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons given above, the Court directs the Clerk of the Court to enter summary judgment in favor of Dunlop, Tucker/Rocky, and Parts Unlimited and against Nichols on Counts I-VI (1-6) of the Third Amended Complaint. The Court further directs the Clerk to enter judgment in favor [\[181\]](#) of Dunlop and against Nichols on Counts IX through XIV (9-14), and in favor of Tucker/Rocky and Parts Unlimited and against Nichols on Counts VII, XVI, and XVII (7, 16, 17) of the Third Amended Complaint. Finally, the Court directs the Clerk to enter partial summary judgment in favor of Nichols and against Dunlop on Dunlop's section 2(b) affirmative defense to Count VII of the Third Amended Complaint.

The Court denies Dunlop's motion for summary judgment with respect to Counts VII, VIII and XV (7, 8, and 15) of the Third Amended Complaint. The Court also denies Dunlop's Motion to Strike Nichols' jury demand.

ENTER:

/s/ Ruben Castillo

United States District Judge

September 5, 1995

Minute Order Form

Enter Memorandum Opinion and Order. Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(a), this Court hereby amends its Memorandum Opinion and Order dated August 10, 1995, to correct clerical mistakes contained therein. These corrections do not, in any way, alter the substantive rulings made in the opinion; they merely serve to correct typographical and other nonsubstantive oversights which the Court's subsequent review has revealed.

End of Document

Santa Cruz Med. Clinic v. Dominican Santa Cruz Hosp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

September 6, 1995, Decided ; September 7, 1995, FILED

NO. C93 20613 RMW

Reporter

1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21032 *; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,254

SANTA CRUZ MEDICAL CLINIC, a professional partnership, and DERJJAN ASSOCIATES, INC., a corporation, Plaintiffs, v. DOMINICAN SANTA CRUZ HOSPITAL, a nonprofit corporation, Defendants.

Prior History: Santa Cruz Med. Clinic v. Dominican Santa Cruz Hosp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21740 \(N.D. Cal., Oct. 25, 1994\)

Disposition: [*1] Plaintiffs' summary judgment and partial summary judgment motions denied. Defendant's partial summary judgment motion on the tying and channeling claims granted and the motion on the exclusive dealing and concomitant state law claims denied.

Core Terms

patients, prices, inpatient, Declaration, geographic, outpatient, merger, hospital service, summary judgment, relevant market, partial summary judgment, Acquisition, concentration, substitutes, market power, Sherman Act, outmigration, plaintiffs', Clinic, facilities, surgical, antitrust, providers, contends, counters, cardiac, cluster, percent, genuine issue of material fact, tying arrangement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Evidence > Weight & Sufficiency

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN1 [] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Summary judgment is proper when the pleadings, depositions, answer to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). There is a genuine issue of material fact only when there is sufficient evidence such that a reasonable juror could find for the party opposing the motion. Entry of summary judgment is mandated against a party if, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, the party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. The court, however, must draw all justifiable inferences in favor of the nonmoving parties, including questions of credibility and of the weight to be accorded particular evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Mergers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN2\[Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §18, prohibits acquisitions whose effect may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly. Section 7 forbids mergers that are likely to hurt consumers, as by making it easier for the firms in the market to collude, expressly or tacitly, and thereby force price above or farther above the competitive level. A merger with such effects would also violate section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, which proscribes acquisitions which constitute a contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. Once the market structure in an industry reaches monopoly or near-monopoly status, section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 applies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN3 [down] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

An analysis of an alleged § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §18, violation requires a determination of the relevant line of commerce, or product market, in which competition is to be allegedly lessened and the appropriate geographic market. Once the product and geographic markets have been defined, the next steps are to identify the firms in competition with the merging firms, compare pre- and post-merger concentration in the market and analyze other factors bearing on the likelihood of market power and collusion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN4 [down] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Whether particular concerted conduct unreasonably restrains competition in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is determined under a "rule of reason" analysis, which is a case-by-case study in which the fact finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case. In analyzing a rule of reason claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must initially prove: (1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intend to harm or restrain competition; and (3) which actually injures competition. Proving injury to competition in a rule of reason case requires a claimant to prove the relevant market and to show the effects upon competition within that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The offense of monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition in the relevant market, and exists whenever prices can be raised above the competitive market levels. In order to determine whether a defendant possesses monopoly power, the trier of fact must first determine the relevant market. Market power may be demonstrated by direct evidence of the injurious exercise of market power or circumstantially. To demonstrate market power circumstantially, a plaintiff must: (1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and to expansion.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Merger Guidelines

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. For antitrust purposes, defining the product market involves the identification of the field of competition: the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN7[] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

The cluster market concept is to date the uniform approach to product market definition of the hospital merger case law. The relevant product market for hospitals has been described almost uniformly by the courts and enforcement agencies as the "cluster of services" focused on inpatient care.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN8[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Summary judgment is disfavored in antitrust cases. The process of defining the relevant market is a factual question that depends on the particular characteristics of the industry involved. The product market definition can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the commercial realities faced by consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The geographic market of a product is determined by an examination of the geographic area in which competing companies sell their products. The geographic area is the region in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies. Factors such as transportation costs, the availability of alternative suppliers, industry recognition, commercial realities of the industry and consumer convenience and preference are also relevant. The farther apart two hospitals are located, the more probable it is that they belong to different geographical markets. To determine relevant geographic market, a pragmatic factual approach, not a formal legalistic one should be enlisted. The relevant section of the country should correspond to the commercial realities of the industry and should be economically significant.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN10 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

The court may not weigh evidence or judge witness credibility on summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN11 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In order to quantify market concentration, it is necessary to calculate market shares, assess the degree of concentration in the market after the merger, and examine the extent to which the merger increased the level of concentration. In hospital cases, two measures of hospital market share are typically used: (1) hospital share of total inpatient discharges and (2) hospital share of beds.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [L] Sherman Act, Scope

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different, or tied, product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Tying arrangements have long been considered per se unlawful under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. To prove an illegal tie, a party must show: (1) a tying of two distinct products or services; (2) sufficient economic power in the tying product market to affect the tied market; and (3) an effect on a not insubstantial amount of commerce in the tied market. Some modicum of involuntariness or coercion is an essential to the existence of a per se illegal tie-in. In addition, the seller of the tying product must have an economic interest in the tied product for there to be per se illegality. When these prerequisites are met, tying arrangements are illegal without any requirement of unreasonable competitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN13 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An express refusal to sell the tying product without the tied product is the basis for an illegal tying arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Entry of Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN14 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Separate availability will not preclude antitrust liability where a defendant has established its pricing in such a way that the only viable economic option is to purchase the tying and tied products in a single package. Antitrust liability may be predicated on pricing policies in which the only viable economic option is to purchase the tying product with the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN15 [L] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

An exclusive dealing contract involves a commitment by a buyer to deal only with a particular seller. Exclusive dealing arrangements are unlawful only if they violate the rule of reason.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN16 [L] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

A contract must be interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting, so far as the same is ascertainable and lawful. The meaning of a writing can only be found by interpretation in the light of all the circumstances that reveal the sense in which the writer used the words. If the court decides, after considering this evidence, that the language of a contract, in the light of all the circumstances, is fairly susceptible of either one of the two interpretations contended for, extrinsic evidence relevant to prove either of such meanings is admissible.

Counsel: MICHAEL A. DUNCHEON, JOEL S. GOLDMAN, MICHAEL B. McNAUGHTON, LISA K. PUNTILLO, HANSON, BRIDGETT, MARCUS, VLAHOS & RUDY, San Francisco, California, Attorney for Plaintiffs.

MICHAEL L. SPIEGEL, CHARLES M. KAGAY, San Francisco, CA. J. THOMAS ROSCH, PETER K. HUSTON, San Francisco, California, Attorneys for Defendants.

Judges: RONALD M. WHYTE, United States District Judge

Opinion by: RONALD M. WHYTE

Opinion

ORDER DENYING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S CROSS-MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Plaintiffs Santa Cruz Medical Clinic and Derjan Associates, Inc.'s ("Santa Cruz") motion for summary judgment/partial summary judgment and defendant Dominican Santa Cruz Hospital's ("Dominican") cross-motion for partial summary judgment came on for hearing on September 1, 1995. The court has read the moving and responding papers and heard the oral arguments of counsel. For the reasons set forth below, [*2] the court denies plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment and grants in part and denies in part defendant's cross-motion for partial summary judgment.

I. Background

This case involves antitrust claims arising from Dominican's acquisition of AMI Community Hospital of Santa Cruz ("Community"). Plaintiff Santa Cruz is a partnership of physicians and other medical practitioners, and plaintiff Derjan is a corporation that manages and provides some non-physician personnel services to the Clinic. Dominican is operated by a non-profit religious corporation of the same name, based in Santa Cruz. In March 1990, Dominican acquired Community. Within 90 days of the acquisition, Dominican ceased to operate Community as a general acute care hospital. It is now used for the provision of sub-acute health care services such as rehabilitation.

Plaintiffs filed suit against defendants for violation of section 1 and section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2) and section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18). Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act (25 U.S.C. § 26) for Dominican's alleged post-acquisition exclusionary conduct. Plaintiffs also [*3] allege violations of California state law (sections 16720 and 17200 of the Business & Professions Code.)

On August 3, 1995 plaintiffs moved for summary judgment/partial summary judgment against Dominican on the grounds that Dominican's acquisition of Community violated: (1) section 7 of the Clayton Act; (2) section 1 of the Sherman Act; and (3) section 2 of the Sherman Act. In the alternative, plaintiffs request partial summary judgment on the basis that (1) the relevant product market for assessing the Acquisition is the cluster of services known as acute care inpatient hospital services and (2) that the relevant geographic market for assessing the Acquisition is the area described in Exhibit 2 to the Declaration of Glenn A. Melnick ("Melnick") consisting of all zip codes in Santa Cruz County. Plaintiffs also request, in the alternative, summary adjudication on the grounds that the Acquisition is likely to create or enhance Dominican's market power or facilitate its exercise. In addition, plaintiffs request, in the alternative, partial summary judgment on the grounds that Dominican, by acquiring Community, willfully acquired monopoly power.

On August 4, 1995, defendant moved for [*4] partial summary judgment on plaintiffs' claims of: (1) attempted tying in connection with Secure Horizons (Complaint P24(f)); (2) channeling (or "monopoly leveraging") of patients to allegedly affiliated companies (Complaint 24(d)); and (3) threatened exclusive dealing with respect to TakeCare's cardiac patients (Complaint P24(b)). Defendant correctly contends that, if these claims fail to survive summary judgment, plaintiffs' state law claims must also fail.

Plaintiffs have agreed to the dismissal of their channeling claim in light of the law in this circuit on "monopoly leveraging" set forth in Alaska Airlines Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 546-49 \(9th Cir. 1991\) that requires plaintiffs to demonstrate monopoly power in the ancillary services market.

B. Legal Standards

1. Summary Judgment

HN1[] Summary judgment is proper when the "pleadings, depositions, answer to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ. P. 56\(c\). There is a "genuine" issue of material fact only when there [*5] is sufficient evidence such that a reasonable juror could find for the party opposing the motion. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). Entry of summary judgment is mandated against a party if, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, the party fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\). The court, however, must draw all justifiable inferences in favor of the nonmoving parties, including questions of credibility and of the weight to be accorded particular evidence. Masson v. New Yorker Magazine, 501 U.S. 496, 520, 115 L. Ed. 2d 447, 111 S. Ct. 2419 \(1991\).

2. Merger Analysis

The focal point in analyzing mergers is HN2[] section 7 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits "acquisition[s]" whose "effect... may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly." "The current understanding of section 7 is that it forbids mergers that are likely to 'hurt consumers, as by making [*6] it easier for the firms in the market to collude, expressly or tacitly, and thereby force price [sic] above or farther above the competitive level.'" United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1282-83 \(7th Cir. 1990\) cert. denied 498 U.S. 920, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249, 111 S. Ct. 295 (1990) quoting Hospital Corporation of America v. FTC, 807 F.2d 1381, 1386 \(7th Cir. 1986\) cert. denied 481 U.S. 1038, 95 L. Ed. 2d 815, 107 S. Ct. 1975 (1987). A merger with such effects would also violate section 1 of the Sherman Act, which proscribes acquisitions which constitute a "contract, combination...or conspiracy...in restraint of trade." 898 F.2d at 1283. Once the market structure in an industry reaches monopoly or near-monopoly status, section 2 of the Sherman Act applies. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 \(1911\).

HN3[] An analysis of an alleged section 7 violation requires a determination of the relevant "line of commerce," or product market, in which competition is to be allegedly lessened and the appropriate geographic market. United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, 1258 \(N.D.Ill. 1989\) aff'd 898 F.2d 1278 \(7th Cir. 1990\). Once the product and geographic markets have been defined, the next steps are to identify the firms in competition with the merging firms, compare pre- and post-merger concentration in the market and analyze other factors bearing on the likelihood of market power and collusion. United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 \(1963\).

HN4[] Whether particular concerted conduct unreasonably restrains competition in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act is determined under a "rule of reason" analysis, which is a case-by-case study in which "the fact finder weighs all of the circumstances of a case." Continental T.V. v. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36, 49, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). The Supreme Court has identified certain discrete categories of restraints so manifestly anticompetitive in nature that they are illegal per se, dispensing with the need for case-by-case evaluation. Id. at 50. Acquisitions are not a per se violation. In analyzing a rule of reason claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiff must initially prove: (1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct [*8] business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intend to harm or restrain competition; and (3) which actually injures competition. Oitz v. Saint Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1445 \(9th Cir. 1988\). Proving injury to competition in a rule of reason case requires a claimant to prove the relevant market and to show the effects upon competition within that market. Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676 F.2d 1291, 1300 \(9th Cir. 1982\) cert. denied 459 U.S. 1009 at 1009-1010, 74 L. Ed. 2d 400, 103 S. Ct. 364 (1982).

HN5[] The offense of monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\). Monopoly power is the "power to control prices or exclude competition...(footnote omitted)" in the relevant market, [United States v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 S. \[*9\] Ct. 994 \(1956\)](#), and exists whenever prices can be raised above the competitive market levels. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 27 n. 46, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). In order to determine whether defendant possesses monopoly power, the trier of fact must first determine the relevant market. Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1392 \(9th Cir. 1984\), cert. denied 469 U.S. 990 (1984). A determination of the relevant market typically requires an inquiry into the nature of the product and the geographical area of effective competition. Oahu Gas Service, Inc. v. Pacific Resources, Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 364 \(9th Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 149, 109 S. Ct. 180 (1988). Market power may be demonstrated by direct evidence of the injurious exercise of market power or circumstantially. Rebel Oil v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir. 1995.\) To demonstrate market power circumstantially, a plaintiff must: (1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry [*10] and to expansion. Id.

C. Analysis

1. Product Market

In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\), the Supreme Court described the process of product market definition:

HN6[] The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. (footnote omitted).

"The process of defining the 'outer boundaries' of a product market remains more of an art than science, despite the increasing economic sophistication reflected in the documents such as the 1992 Horizontal Merger Guidelines..., the 1993 and 1994 Statements of Enforcement Policy relating to health care...the 1993 Horizontal Guidelines...and the economic formulas...." B. Reeves and L. Blumkin, Acquisitions and Mergers, 890 Practising Law Institute/Corporations 473 (1995).¹ "For antitrust purposes, defining the product market involves the identification of the field of competition: the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business. [*11] (citations omitted)." Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1489 (9th Cir. 1991).²

¹ The Department of Justice has set forth merger guidelines to assist the courts in establishing unifying principles. The merger guidelines examine the effect of a small, hypothetical, nontransitory price increase above prevailing or future price levels to determine relevant product market. (1992 Merger Guidelines § 1.11.) Generally the test employed is a five percent price

[*12] Plaintiffs contend that the relevant product market is "general acute care inpatient services." (Declaration of Glenn A. Melnick, P3). Plaintiffs argue that the cluster of inpatient hospital services is a unique product and that non-hospital services are not substitutes. Plaintiffs' expert opines that outpatient services and long-term care services such as the care provided by nursing homes, behavioral medicine programs, home health agencies, and rehabilitation programs are not a reasonable substitute for inpatient hospital service. Plaintiffs rely on the declaration of Dr. Walter Alexander ("Alexander"), a member of the medical staff at Dominican, who states that "certain hospital services, affecting a substantial number of patients now and for the foreseeable future, can only be provided on an inpatient basis" and "he is unaware of any physician or hospital that treats" on an outpatient basis "non-surgical conditions [such] as heart attacks, acute strokes, diabetic acidosis and sepsis as well as illnesses and conditions requiring major surgical procedures such as those within the abdomen and thorax, to include heart, lung and intestinal surgery as well as major joint replacement [*13] and correction of peripheral vascular diseases." (Alexander Declaration P4).

Defendant contends that the relevant product market is "both inpatient and outpatient hospital services, including at least general acute care hospitals, all types of outpatient surgery centers, birthing centers and home health care companies." (Declaration of Thomas R. McCarthy, P19). Defendant's expert opines that outpatient hospital services, surgery centers, birthing centers and home health care companies can substitute for hospital services either through a direct supply response or by supply-side substitution.³ Defendant also relies on the declaration of Dr. Robert B. Keet ("Keet"), a practicing internist with privileges at Dominican, who states that "many conditions that previously required admission to a hospital can now be treated on an outpatient basis or in other alternative settings such as skilled nursing facilities." Keet points to "ophthalmic procedures" and procedures that utilize "endoscopic technology...such as gallbladder removals." (Keet Declaration, P3).

[*14] The reported hospital merger decisions employ an approach to product market definition that relies on the Supreme Court's "cluster of services" paradigm. The first cluster market was defined by the Court in United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 356-57, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963). In contrast with all previous product markets defined by the Court, the goods and services clustered into the commercial banking increase that would persist for the foreseeable future. If buyers would switch to another product and defeat the price increase, that other product is added to the market. In this regard, the "market" is defined "solely on demand substitution factors i.e., possible consumer responses." (1992 Merger Guidelines § 1.0.) The merger guidelines are not binding on the courts. FTC v. PPG Industries, Inc., 255 U.S. App. D.C. 69, 798 F.2d 1500, 1503 n.4 (D.C. Cir. 1986)(the Department of Justice merger guidelines "are by no means to be considered binding on the court").

² One commentator argues that the difficulty in measuring market definition in health care cases is attributable to the structure and nature of the health care market and the dynamic changes that the health care market today is undergoing. He believes that the third-party payor system has made market definition difficult because it has eliminated both seller and buyer responsiveness to price, that the health care market lumps together a wide variety of services, some of which compete with each other and some of which do not, and that market definition must be based on historical data, but that, given the dynamic changes taking place in health care, the historical data often is not probative. Sylvia H. Walbolt, William McD. Miller III, Jeffrey Cross, Phillip A. Proger, Problems of Access to Health Facilities and Equipment-New Competition for Limited Resources, 55 Antitrust L.J. 599, 613-621 (1986)(comments by panelist Phillip A. Proger).

³ In assessing a possible product market of general acute-care inpatient hospital services, the focus is on the substitutability of alternative services that are competitive with inpatient care. According to economists, this question is divided into two inquiries. The first is to ask whether the consumers of inpatient care can easily turn to other services in lieu of inpatient care. If they can, then there is "demand substitution"; i.e., "inpatient care" is too narrow a definition, and the relevant product definition should embrace the substitute service. The second inquiry is whether suppliers of services other than inpatient care could easily modify their activities to provide inpatient care. If so, then there is "supply substitution" and these suppliers should also be counted as competitors in the market because, even if they do not currently supply the relevant product, they would if the price rose slightly. William J. Lynch, Antitrust Analysis and Hospital Certificate-of-Need Policy, The Antitrust Bulletin 61, 63-64 (Spring 1987).

market in Philadelphia National Bank were neither demand nor supply substitutes.⁴ HNT[↑] The cluster market concept is to date the uniform approach to product market definition of the hospital merger case law. See Gloria J. Bazzoli, David Marx Jr., Richard J. Arnold, Larry Manheim, Federal Antitrust Merger Enforcement Standards: A Good Fit for the Hospital Industry, 20 J. Health Pol. Pol'y & L. 137 (1995); J.R. Baker The Antitrust Analysis of Hospital Mergers and the Transformation of the Hospital Industry, 51(2) Law and Contemp. Probs. 93 (1989). The relevant product market for hospitals has been described almost uniformly by the courts and enforcement agencies in previous merger cases as the "cluster of services" focused on inpatient [*15] care. American Medicorp, Inc v. Humana Inc., 445 F. Supp. 589, 605 (E.D. Pa. 1977) ("short term acute care hospital services"); United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir. 1990) cert. denied 498 U.S. 920, 112 L. Ed. 2d 249, 111 S. Ct. 295 (1990) ("provision of inpatient services by acute-care hospitals"); Hospital Corp. of America v. FTC, 807 F.2d 1381 (7th Cir. 1986) cert. denied 481 U.S. 1038, 95 L. Ed. 2d 815, 107 S. Ct. 1975 (1987); ("general acute care hospital services," excluding outpatient substitutes for the individual services comprising the cluster); FTC v. University Health, Inc., 938 F.2d 1206 (11th Cir. 1991) ("in-patient services by acute-care hospitals"). An exception to this product market definition occurred in United States v. Carilion Health System, 707 F. Supp. 840 (W.D. Va. 1989) aff'd without op., 892 F.2d 1042 (4th Cir. 1989), a case in which the court defined the market more expansively to include outpatient services. However, the Fourth Circuit affirmed the district court's decision in an unpublished opinion.

[*16] In Rockford, supra, 898 F.2d at 1284, Judge Posner considered and rejected defendant's argument that the market should include non-hospital providers:

The defendants point out correctly that a growing number of services provided by acute-care hospitals are also available from nonhospital providers. But the force of the point eludes us...For many services provided by acute-care hospitals, there is no competition from other sorts of providers. If you need a kidney transplant, or a mastectomy, or if you have a stroke or a heart attack or a gunshot wound, you will go (or be taken) to an acute-care hospital for inpatient treatment. The fact that for other services you have a choice between inpatient care at such a hospital and outpatient care elsewhere places no check on the prices of the services we have listed, for their prices are not linked to the prices of services that are not substitutes or complements... The defendants do not argue for the broader market on the basis of substitutability in supply—that is, the ability of a provider of outpatient services to switch to inpatient services should the price of the latter rise as a result of collusive pricing, making such [*17] services more profitable.

In the instant case, defendant acknowledges that it cannot justify a broader market on the basis of demand substitutability, but defendant does argue for a broader market based on substitutability in supply. Defendant's expert opines that while a patient may not be willing to trade a hernia operation for a hysterectomy, a hospital can easily shift its facilities from the production of one service to the other. He also submits that outpatient surgery facilities and physician's offices provide direct competition through supply-side substitution for a large share of a general acute care hospital's business and that alternative providers have significantly affected the economic behavior of general acute care hospitals and will continue to do so. (McCarthy Declaration P14). He points to Dominican and Community's addition of cardiovascular surgery in the late-1980s as evidence of the ease with which a general acute care hospital can add or subtract service lines. He also states that five outpatient facilities in the Santa Cruz-Watsonville area are now capable of performing many of the services which even recently were only performed as inpatient surgery and [*18] that California has no binding Certificate-of-Need law, which generally requires significant regulatory approval before entry into new services is allowed. (McCarthy Declaration P14).

⁴ In United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 573, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966), decided under Sherman Act § 2, the Court defined a cluster market of central station protective services. Grinnell established that the cluster approach is not limited to market definition under the Clayton Act, the statute enforced in Philadelphia National Bank. The protective service clusters in Grinnell are supply substitutes although they are not demand substitutes. Jonathan B. Baker, The Antitrust Analysis of Hospital Mergers and the Transformation of the Hospital Industry, 51 SPG Law & Contemp. Probs. 93, n. 159 (1989).

HN8[] Summary judgment is disfavored in antitrust cases. Christofferson Dairy, Inc. v. MMM Sales, Inc., 849 F.2d 1168, 1171 (9th Cir. 1988). The process of defining the relevant market is a factual question that depends on the particular characteristics of the industry involved. Oahu Gas, supra, 838 F.2d at 363. The product market definition "can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the 'commercial realities' faced by consumers." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 482, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) citing Grinnell, supra, 384 U.S. at 572.

Plaintiffs recognize that the reported hospital merger decisions do not resolve the issue of product market on summary judgment. However, they rely on the court's statement in Rebel Oil, supra, 51 F.3d at 1436 that summary judgment is proper in the face of conflicting expert declarations when economic factors dictate a particular result or when undisputed record facts contradict or render an expert opinion [*19] unreasonable. In urging the court to grant partial summary judgment in the instant case, plaintiffs echo Judge Posner's reasoning. They contend that economic factors dictate the conclusion that there is a core of inpatient hospital services that are not reasonably interchangeable. (Alexander Decl. P4).

Defendant does not dispute the existence of such a core of services that can only be performed on an inpatient basis. However, defendant contends that this fact is not dispositive of the issue of relevant product market. Defendant argues that inpatient services that are unique to a hospital cannot be viewed as a discrete entity but are, in fact, inseparable from other surgical procedures because hospital services are not priced on a malady by malady basis but in broadly inclusive categories such as "medical/surgical", "ICU/CCU" and "TCU." (Supplemental Declaration of McCarthy listing rates of compensation) Therefore, defendant contends, the entire category of medical/surgical is impacted by the supply-side substitution of surgical procedures that are now increasingly performed at free-standing surgical clinics or other outpatient facilities. As a result, defendant argues, the fact that [*20] a patient has a "choice between inpatient care at...a hospital and outpatient care elsewhere [for many surgical procedures] places...a check on the prices of...[inpatient services because] their prices are...linked to the prices of services that are not substitutes or complements." Rockford, supra, 898 F.2d at 1278.

Defendant also contends that the court should not rely on hospital merger decisions from the last decade because these cases fail to take into account the dramatic technological advances in the field of medicine in the last ten years. Defendant bolsters its argument with American Hospital Association statistics that show an increase in outpatient surgery from 24 percent to 55.3 percent between 1983 and 1993. (McCarthy Decl. P151). Therefore, defendant argues, outpatient facilities and surgi-centers have the actual and potential ability to deprive hospitals of significant levels of business and, because of the historical pricing structure of hospitals in the area, these facilities can have a dramatic impact on the price of all services in the medical/surgical category.

Eight years ago, a commentator wrote that "most economists who study the hospital industry consider [*21] inpatient acute care the product definition most relevant for analysis of hospital competition..." and that the exclusion of freestanding ambulatory surgical centers and similar facilities are "a practical concession to lack of data and an empirical judgment that such facilities are currently of minor quantitative importance." W. Link, Antitrust Analysis and Hospital Certificate-of-Need Policy, 32 Antitrust Bulletin 63, 75 (Spring 1987). Today, there is evidence that the technological landscape has changed dramatically in the medical field. There is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether services that can be performed at a hospital or an alternative facility place a check on the prices of the core of inpatient services, whether the price of inpatient services at Dominican is linked to the price of services that are not substitutes and whether the supply-side substitution of alternative providers has a significant effect on the economic behavior of hospitals.

2. Geographic Market

HN9[] The geographic market of a product is determined by an examination of the geographic area in which competing companies sell their products. The geographic area is the region in which [*22] "the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.' (citations omitted)." Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, supra, 374 U.S. 321, 359 (1963). Factors such as transportation costs, the availability of alternative suppliers, industry recognition, commercial realities of the industry and consumer convenience and preference are also relevant.⁵ [*23] The farther apart two hospitals are located, the more probable it is that they belong to different geographical markets. Rockford, supra 898 F.2d at 1285 ("People want to be hospitalized near their families and homes, in hospitals in which their own--local--doctors have hospital privileges.") To determine relevant geographic market, "a pragmatic factual approach," not a "formal legalistic one" should be enlisted. Brown Shoe, supra, 370 U.S. at 336. The relevant "section of the country" should "correspond to the commercial realities" (footnote omitted) of the industry and should be "economically significant." *Id. at 336-37.*⁶

Plaintiffs argue that the relevant geographic market is a market consisting of all zip codes in Santa Cruz. Defendant contends that the relevant geographic market includes Santa Cruz County, Santa Clara County and Northern Monterey County.

Plaintiffs rely on a study of patient origin and destination data known as the Elzinga-Hogarty test and on testimony from local purchasers. In a hospital context, the Elzinga-Hogarty test focuses on patient travel. U.S. v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, 1266 (N.D.Ill. 1989) aff'd. 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir. 1990). The test consists of two separate measurements - Lifo and Lofi. A Lofi or "little out from the inside" statistic signifies the percentage of patients in an area's hospitals who reside in the area (rather than outside the area). A substantial number of patients from outside the area that travel into an area for hospitalization could act as a check on the exercise of market power by hospitals inside the area. A "Lifo" or "little in from out" statistic signifies the percentage of hospital patients from a particular area who remain in that area for hospital services. This statistic is useful in determining whether patients in a particular area make substantial use of hospitals outside the area. If so, that implies that hospitals outside the area could act as a check on the exercise of market power inside the area. Ideally, an area should be defined where few patients leave an area and few patients enter an area to obtain hospital services. "In other words, the Lofi and Lifo figures should ideally yield at least percentages of 90% or greater." U.S. v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, [*25] 1267 (N.D.Ill. 1989) aff'd. 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir. 1990). Lifo and Lofi figures equal to, or greater than, 90% represent a "strong" market while a 75% figure represents a "weak" market. Id. The authors of the Elzinga-Hogarty test conclude that the "strong" standard is most appropriate for identification of the relevant market. Elzinga & Hogarty, "The Problems of Geographic Market Delineation Revisited: the Case of Coal," 23 Antitrust Bulletin 1 (1978).

Plaintiffs' expert applied the Elzinga-Hogarty test to the proposed Santa Cruz County market. His results show a LOFI percentage of 92.9% (percentage of patients in the market who reside in the market) and a Lifo percentage of 84.8% (percentage of patients who reside in the market and receive their care in the market). The results indicate approximately 16% outmigration. Plaintiffs contend that these figures indicate a highly self-contained market with almost no immigration and relatively little outmigration. Defendant cites the fact that approximately one in six patients have chosen to obtain their hospital care in one of the many hospitals located in Santa Clara County or North Monterey County as proof that plaintiffs' [*26] proposed market is too small.

⁵ According to one commentator, the most important factor limiting the geographic scope of markets for the services offered by hospitals is the unwillingness of patients to patronize hospitals far from their residences. The longer the distance a patient must travel, the farther his or her friends and relatives must also travel to visit him and the farther his or her physicians must travel. Long distances between home and hospital are disfavored because a patient may be forced by physical affiliations to switch doctors if he or she wishes to select a distant hospital. Physician preferences and affiliation are likely to count strongly in the patient's decision. Third party payers may also create financial incentives for patients to favor hospitals in a narrow geographic area. Jonathan B. Baker, The Antitrust Analysis of Hospital Mergers and the Transformation of the Hospital Industry, 51-SPG Law & Contemp. Probs. 93 (Spring 1988).

⁶ The Merger Guidelines hypothesize a "small but significant and nontransitory" price increase imposed by a hypothetical monopolist of the relevant product at the location of the merging parties. (1992 Horizontal Merger Guidelines § 1.21.) If enough buyers would switch to alternative sellers, so as to make the hypothetical price increase unprofitable, the location of the alternate sellers would be included in the geographic market. The process is designed to identify a region within which such a hypothetical monopolist could profitably impose at least a "small but significant and nontransitory" increase in price.

"The...underlying question is whether the other hospitals that the immigrating patients turn to can effectively discipline or constrain the merging hospitals by offering ... [16%] of the defendant's inpatient base an alternative. If this is the case, then the...market is too small." U.S. v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, 1264 (N.D.III. 1989) aff'd 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir. 1990). Although the Elzinga-Hogarty test is a useful tool "for eliminating certain geographic areas from consideration as relevant markets...[it is not] an infallible guide to resolve the market..." U.S. v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, 1271-1272 (N.D.III. 1989) aff'd 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir. 1990). Other evidence is also relevant. If the reason for outmigration is "lack of adequate hospitals in the surrounding area, the smaller Lifo-Lofi cutoff (i.e. less than 90%) may be appropriate since the very reason the patients are immigrating into an area proves that the surrounding firms are not relevant competition with the ability to constrain an exercise of market power by the market participants." *Id. at 1272.*⁷

[*27] Plaintiffs contend that hospitals outside Santa Cruz County should be excluded from the market because some of the outmigration is attributable to tertiary⁸ or specialty care not available in Santa Cruz or reasons of perceived quality. Defendant counters that almost all of the outmigration is for care that is available locally. As discussed below, the parties offer conflicting evidence as to whether the outmigration is attributable to services not available at Dominican and to perceived quality differences.

Plaintiffs rely on the deposition testimony of John [*28] Petersdorf, Dominican's Chief Financial Officer, to support their contention that some of the outmigration is attributable to specialist care or reasons of perceived quality. (Petersdorf Depo., 27:12-14; 233:24-235:8; Puntillo Decl. Exhibit A.) In addition, plaintiffs' expert opines that the dispersal of outmigration among many hospitals, including the more distant specialized teaching hospitals of Stanford Medical Center and University of California at San Francisco, suggests substantial outmigration for specialty care not available at Dominican or for reasons of perceived quality. (Melnick Decl. P11.) Defendant counters with statistical evidence that ninety-seven percent of the outmigration is for treatment that was available locally and that over 11 percent of the patients residing in Santa Cruz County chose to use four Santa Clara County hospitals: Stanford, Kaiser-Santa Clara, Good Samaritan and O'Connor Hospital. (McCarthy Decl., PP2-28.)

Plaintiffs argue that it is extremely unlikely that patients will switch to hospitals outside the Santa Cruz area in sufficient numbers in response to price because there is little or no overlap in the medical staff of Dominican and the staff [*29] of hospitals outside the relevant market. Defendant counters that 12 percent of physicians (41 in number) who have privileges at Dominican also have privileges at hospitals in Santa Clara or Monterey County. (McNaughton's Decl. P3, Exhibit B, Dominican's Answers to Interrogatories Nos. 8-18). Defendant also relies on the affidavit of Dr. Keet. Dr. Keet states that the fact that "most physicians who hold privileges at Dominican Hospital do not also hold privileges at other hospitals does not prevent physicians from referring patients to those hospitals" because "in many, if not most, instances the physicians who diagnose an illness or condition for which inpatient care is an alternative is [sic] a general practitioner or internist who is not the surgeon or other specialist providing inpatient care." (Keet Declaration P4).

⁷ One commentator explains why the Elzinga Hogarty percentage should be adjusted for overinclusiveness:

Markets based on patient flows [the Elzinga Hogarty approach] may overstate the geographic markets relevant to antitrust merger analysis when the product market includes hospital services that are not perfect substitutes. In this case, those patients with strong preferences for obtaining services at distant hospitals such as many tertiary care patients... [may be willing to travel] even if most patients are unwilling to travel. A hospital market that includes these distant institutions will therefore encompass a region larger than the smallest region in which a hospital cartel could successfully collude....Distant hospitals can be excluded from the market even if a fraction of patients from the market obtain care there, so long as those patients traveling long distances obtain quantitatively different services from the services available nearby.

Jonathan B. Baker, The Antitrust Analysis of Hospital Mergers and the Transformation of the Hospital Industry, 51-ZPG Law & Contemp. Probs. 93 (Spring 1988).

⁸ Tertiary care involves complex and specialized treatments, such as complex surgery or the treatment of severe illnesses. It is usually provided by teaching hospitals. Sylvia H. Walbolt, William McD. Miller III, Jeffrey Cross, Phillip A. Proger, Problems of Access to Health Facilities and Equipment-New Competition for Limited Resources, 55 Antitrust L.J. 599, 616 (1986)(comments by panelist Phillip A. Proger) 55 Antitrust L.J. 599, 616 (1986).

Plaintiffs also offer the deposition testimony and declarations of representatives of large purchasers of inpatient services in Santa Cruz County who state that they have no alternative but to offer a health plan that includes Dominican to employees.⁹ Gregory Dougherty, Senior Vice President of Human Resources for Santa Cruz Operations, Incorporated testified [*30] at deposition:

Q. ...And if Dominican Hospital were to...increase its prices by five percent, what would SCO's options be?

A. Ultimately we'd have to comply with the price increase.

Q. What if they raise their prices by 10 percent, would your answer be the same?

A. Probably.

Q. Fifteen percent?

A. Probably the same.

(Dougherty Depo. 16:12-22, Puntillo Decl. Exhibit D.)

Defendant counters with a declaration by Norman Lezin ("Lezin"), Chairman of Salz Leathers Corporation, that "in the event that Dominican Hospital were to impose a significant non-transitory price increase upon us, we could and would take steps to shift our employees from Dominican Hospital to Watsonville Hospital, Santa Clara County Hospitals, Salinas Valley Hospital, and/or Natividad Medical [*31] Center." (Lezin Decl. P4). The steps he identifies are: (1) encouraging employees to use those alternatives; (2) providing more liberal co-payments or deductibles; or (3) omitting Dominican Hospital as an option to employers. Id. Plaintiffs contend that this declaration is not "worth a grain of salt" even on summary judgment because Lezin is on the Board of Directors of Dominican. However, this argument fails because HN10[↑] the court may not weigh evidence or judge witness credibility on summary judgment. Syufy Enterprises v. American Multicinema Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 994 \(9th Cir. 1986\) cert. denied 479 U.S. 1031, 93 L. Ed. 2d 830, 107 S. Ct. 876 (1987). Plaintiffs also contend that the declaration does not create a triable issue of fact because Lezin does not dispute the evidence that Dominican has the power to raise prices, and he does not define a significant non-transitory price increase. This argument also does not dictate that the declaration be ignored. Although Lezin does not dispute the testimony that Dominican has the power to raise prices, he does testify that he would shift to a hospital outside the area in response to a price increase by Dominican. The fact that he [*32] fails to define a significant non-transitory price increase goes to the weight of the evidence.

Defendant also points to Santa Cruz Medical Clinic's own policy of referring cardiac patients to Good Samaritan Hospital rather than Dominican, the higher-priced provider, and to deposition testimony by Barbara Lovero ("Lovero"), TakeCare's Contract Manager, that TakeCare required Santa Cruz County members to get non-emergency cardiac care at Good Samaritan Hospital as evidence that purchasers have the ability to meet a price increase with incentives that will push subscribers to alternative providers. (Lovero Depo., 141:19-24, Ulmer Declaration ("Q. Where did TakeCare members from Santa Cruz County get their non-emergency cardiac inpatient care during that three-year period [1990-1993]?....A. They had to go to Good Sam.")) Plaintiffs counter that defendant's argument commits the Cellophane fallacy.¹⁰ Plaintiffs contend that Dominican has already exercised

⁹ See eg. Dougherty Depo. 14:13-17, Puntillo Decl., Exhibit D ("Q. For the Santa Cruz employees and their dependents...would you offer a plan that would not include Dominican Santa Cruz Hospital? A. I cannot conceive of that.)

¹⁰ The Cellophane Fallacy is described in a law review article:

The prevailing price for cellophane in [United States v. E.I. du Pont Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\)]¹¹ was arguably supracompetitive and...at that price consumers regarded a number of other flexible wrapping materials as good substitutes for cellophane...If consumers regarded these other products as good substitutes for cellophane at the prevailing, supra-competitive prices, then they probably would not have regarded them as good substitutes if cellophane were priced competitively. By charging a supra-competitive price, then, du Pont (the producer of cellophane) had already exercised most or all of its market power, i.e., it had raised the price of cellophane until other flexible wrapping materials were regarded as good substitutes.... The Court, then mistakenly interpreted du Pont's inability to raise its prices further as an indication that du Pont had no market power at all, rather than as an indication that du Pont had already exhausted its market power.

Gene C. Schaerr, The Cellophane Fallacy and the Justice Department's Guidelines for Horizontal Mergers, 94 Yale Law Journal 670, 677-78 n. 52 (1984-85).

monopoly power and raised its prices so that Santa Cruz Medical Center and TakeCare regard a Santa Clara hospital, Good Samaritan, as a good substitute. According to plaintiffs, a market that includes Santa Clara County would [*33] be overinclusive and lead to an understatement of Dominican's market power. However, plaintiffs' argument is unavailing in the summary judgment context because there is a genuine issue of material fact as to its factual premise: Dominican's supracompetitive pricing. Dominican's expert opines that there is no evidence of monopoly pricing by Dominican and that Dominican has consistently been within the mainstream of hospital pricing, both before and after the Acquisition. He bases his opinion on price and profitability studies of a group of approximately 75 urban and small urban hospitals in central and northern California. (McCarthy Declaration PP 69-75.) In contrast, Lovero states that Dominican's rates are generally higher than the rates that TakeCare was able to negotiate with other comparable hospitals in the San Francisco/San Jose metropolitan area in 1993. (Lovero Declaration P5). Moreover, the court cannot examine the performance of the entire market until it has defined a geographic market. In the instant case, there is a genuine issue of material fact as to the definition of the relevant geographic market.

[*34] Defendant also contends that the court must assess commercial realities such as the trading connections and the actual distance between Santa Cruz and Santa Clara Counties. Defendant's expert opines that there are connections between San Jose and Santa Cruz on the basis that inter alia "the travel distance is well within reach despite the topographic feature of a mountain range between Santa Cruz and San Jose [because it] is 31 miles between the cities and only 45 miles to Stanford University Medical Center...[and] Good Samaritan and O'Connor are less than 30 miles away...." and "as evidence that the distance is not too great, 17,693 residents of Santa Cruz County commute to their jobs in Santa Clara County." (McCarthy Declaration, P43) Although geographic proximity is a relevant factor, the distance itself is not dispositive of the issue because of the effect that the "topographic feature of a mountain range" and the commute may have on the perception of Santa Cruz residents in the context of health care.

The court finds that there are genuine issues of material fact as to the relevant geographic market.

4. Concentration

HN11 [↑] In order to quantify market concentration, [*35] it is necessary to calculate market shares, assess the degree of concentration in the market after the merger and examine the extent to which the merger increased the level of concentration. In hospital cases, two measures of hospital market share are typically used: (1) hospital share of total inpatient discharges and (2) hospital share of beds. A statistical index, the Herfindahl-Hirschmann Index ("HHI") is then used to calculate market concentration. The HHI is calculated by squaring the market share of each firm in the market and then adding the squares. A market is highly concentrated if the HHI is above 1800, moderately concentrated if it is between 1000 and 1800, and unconcentrated if it is below 1000.¹¹ Other factors are

Schaerr argues that a monopoly price enlarges the geographic market because it expands the geographic area from which other sellers of the product and its substitutes could profitably transport their goods to customers of the merging firms. He explains:

Suppose, for example, that widgets are produced in cities A,B, and C, and are sold for $ 1 in all three cities. Suppose also that it costs $ 1 to transport one widget from any city to any other, and that at prevailing prices it is not profitable for any producer to sell outside the city in which its widget plant is located. In this situation, each city is a separate geographical market. Now suppose that producers in city B form a cartel and in so doing raise the prices of widgets to $ 2.01. This makes it profitable for producers in cities A and C to transport widgets to city B, so that any market including producers in city B also includes producers in cities A and C. If producers in city B now merge, the relevant market will include cities A and C as well as city B.

Schaerr, Cellophane Fallacy, supra, at 676, n. 42. Schaerr contends that "such overstatement of the size of the market leads to understatement of the market power of the merging firms, and therefore to understatement of the anti-competitive consequences of the merger. (footnote omitted)" Id. at 677.

The Cellophane fallacy is not without its critics. Judge Posner of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has rejected this theory. See R. Posner, Antitrust Law: An Economic Perspective 128-29 (1976).

also relevant. The most important is ease of entry into the relevant market. "One reason concentration in the relevant market may not inherently lead to collusive or anti-competitive behavior is when existing competitors or new competitors could easily enter the market and provide enough capacity to defeat an exercise of market power." U.S. v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 717 F. Supp. 1251, 1281 (N.D. Ill. 1989) aff'd. 898 F.2d 1278 (7th Cir. 1990). Factors [*36] that suggest the likelihood of collusion or the profitability of the market are also considered.

The court has found that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to the definition of the relevant geographic market. Having so concluded, the court does not reach the issue of market share or market concentration. Absent a relevant geographic market, market share and [*37] market concentration cannot be calculated. In addition, the court need not decide the viability of defendant's efficiencies or failing firm defense.

D. Tying

Plaintiffs contend that, with the Secure Horizons Health Plan, Dominican has exploited its monopoly power by tying the sale or price of inpatient hospital services to the purchase of physician services from Dominican's affiliated group of doctors, Physicians Medical Group of Santa Cruz ("PMG").¹² Plaintiffs argue that this pattern and practice harms them because it interferes with the competitive processes in the physician services' market in which plaintiffs compete, and denies them the opportunity to compete fairly and freely with PMG for managed care contracts, now and in the future. Defendant counters that plaintiffs have failed to present any evidence to show the existence of a tie -- that is, Dominican's refusal to sell its hospital services unless the purchasers also agree to buy physician services from PMG. Defendant contends that the "alleged" tie is a pricing provision that does not require the health plans to use PMG, but gives favorable pricing if they do. Defendant argues that, as a matter of law, such [*38] a provision cannot establish a tie.

[*39] HN12 [↑]

A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) quoting Northern P.R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). Tying arrangements have long been considered per se unlawful under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Northern P. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). To prove an illegal tie, a party must show: (1)

¹¹ Given a product market of inpatient services and a geographic market of Santa Cruz County, plaintiffs' data indicates that Dominican had a market share in excess of 45% prior to acquisition and that, post-acquisition, Dominican controls approximately 70% of the market. The HHI prior to the transaction was in excess of 3500 and after the acquisition, the HHI value is in excess of 6400. (Melnick Declaration PP13 & 14). Defendant's relevant product market of hospital and non-hospital providers and geographic market of Santa Cruz, Northern Monterey and Santa Clara Counties produces an HHI index in the 1200 to 1300 range. (McCarthy Decl. P59.)

¹² In its opposition to defendant's motion for partial summary judgment, plaintiffs have, for the first time, alleged tying arrangements with health plans other than Secure Horizons. Defendants object on the basis that, after discovery is closed and in the middle of dispositive motions, plaintiffs should not be permitted to throw in any surprise theories they choose. Plaintiffs claim that the "including but not limited to" language in the complaint permits them to allege tying arrangements with other health plans. Defendant counters that the language relates to other forms of monopoly exploitation, not to tying arrangements with other health plans. Paragraph 24 of the complaint provides: "After the Acquisition, DOMINICAN has engaged in willful acts to maintain, extend and exploit its monopoly power, acts which include, but are not limited to, the following...." Plaintiffs proceed to enumerate six forms of monopoly exploitation. Paragraph 24(f), the only paragraph that refers to tying, provides: "attempting to leverage its monopoly power in the acute care market by negotiating an agreement with a Medicare HMO, Secure Horizons, tying the purchase of hospital services to the purchase of exclusive physician services from PSI [PMG]." The court sustains defendant's objection to the new allegations. It is unfair to defendants to permit plaintiffs, on the eve of trial, to allege tying arrangements with health plans other than Secure Horizons without having sought leave to amend their complaint. The court expresses no opinion as to whether Dominican has exploited its monopoly power by tying the sale of Dominican's services to the purchase of physicians' services from PMG with respect to PruCare, LifeGuard or any health plan other than Secure Horizons.

a tying of two distinct products or services; (2) sufficient economic power in the tying product market to affect the tied market; and (3) an effect on a not insubstantial amount of commerce in the tied market. Bhan v. NME Hosp. Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1411 (9th Cir.) cert. denied, 502 U.S. 994, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991). "Some modicum" of involuntariness or coercion is an...essential to the existence of a per se illegal tie-in." Foremost ProColor, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak [*40] Co., 703 F.2d 534, 540 (9th Cir. 1983) cert. denied 465 U.S. 1038, 79 L. Ed. 2d 712, 104 S. Ct. 1315 (1984). In addition, "the seller of the tying product must have an economic interest in the tied product for there to be per se illegality." Robert's Waikiki U-Drive Inc. v. Budget Rent-A-Car Systems, Inc., 732 F.2d 1403, 1407 (9th Cir. 1984). When these prerequisites are met, tying arrangements are illegal without any requirement of unreasonable competitive effect. Id. Conduct which does not meet the requirements of the per se prohibition may still constitute a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act under the "rule of reason" test. Id.

Typically, HN13[¹³] an express refusal to sell the tying product without the tied product is the basis for an illegal tying arrangement. See Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). It is clear that Dominican's pricing provision in the Secure Horizon contract is not an express, contractual tying arrangement because purchasers are not explicitly required to purchase one service, PMG, in order to purchase another service, Dominican. ¹³ "Where the buyer is free to take either [*41] product by itself there is no tying problem even though the seller may also offer the two items as a unit at a single price." Northern P. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 6 n.4, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958). If the desirable, tying product "is truly available without the condition that other products be purchased with it, its alternative sale as part of a package cannot logically be a device to force the purchase of the 'tied' products." Ways & Means, Inc. v. Ivac Corp., 506 F. Supp. 697, 701 (N.D.Cal. 1979) aff'd 638 F.2d 143 (9th Cir. 1981) cert. denied 454 U.S. 895, 70 L. Ed. 2d 210, 102 S. Ct. 394 (1981). In the instant case, Dominican offered its service without PMG.

[*42] HN14[¹⁴]

Separate availability will not preclude antitrust liability where a defendant has established its pricing in such a way that "the only viable economic option is to purchase the tying and tied products in a single package." Ways & Means, supra, 506 F. Supp. at 701. In United States v. Loew's Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 54-55, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11, 83 S. Ct. 97 (1962), the district court found movie distributors guilty of conditioning licenses for popular films upon acceptance of a package containing inferior releases. The judgment enjoined defendants from "entering into any agreement...in which the differential between the price or fee for such feature film when sold or licensed alone and the price or fee for the same film when sold or licensed with one or more other film [sic] has the effect of conditioning the sale or license of such film upon the sale or license of one or more other films." 371 U.S. at 43. The Supreme Court affirmed.

Subsequent cases have recognized that antitrust liability may be predicated on pricing policies in which the only viable economic option is to purchase the tying product with the tied product. In Ways & Means, supra 506 F. Supp.

¹³ The provision at issue states:

C. PacificCare [Secure Horizons] agrees that the cost of all medical and hospital services provided to Secure Horizons members who have selected Physician [sic] Medical Group of Santa Cruz will amount to at least eighty-six percent (86%) of premium through 1994, 85% in 1995, 84% in 1996 and 1997...In the event the cost of medical and hospital services does not amount to the above percentages, the excess will be paid to Physicians Medical Group of Santa Cruz.

....

E. PacificCare and Hospital agree that the reimbursement provisions contained in this Attachment A apply only to Secure Horizons members who select Physicians Medical Group of Santa Cruz. Hospital agrees to consider other physician entities in the future based upon separate compensation provisions. (McNaughton Declaration, Exhibit I).

Although the provision deals generally with the cost of services, there is no evidence of the actual effect of the provision. Plaintiffs fail to explain whether this requirement provides a substantial cost saving to Secure Horizons when its members select PMG, and if so, by how much the cost for members who do not select PMG exceeds the cost for members who select PMG. In any event, both parties characterize the provision as a pricing concession, and neither party disputes the fact that Dominican may be purchased separately from PMG.

at 699, IVAC introduced [*43] a new marketing approach called the "Temperature System Program," or "TSP." Under TSP, IVAC users agreed to purchase probe covers and thermometers at a package price; however, IVAC never refused to sell thermometers separately outside the TSP program. Id. The court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. The court reasoned that separate purchase of thermometers and probe covers was a viable alternative because approximately 25% of all purchases of electronic thermometers were made outside the TSP program. Id. at 702.

In the instant case, plaintiff has also failed to allege and adequately demonstrate the existence of, or threat of an illegal tying arrangement because the evidence submitted in no way indicates that the purchase of physicians' services from Santa Cruz Medical Clinic was considered unfeasible or was not seriously contemplated. In fact, there is evidence that PacificCare had a full contract with Santa Cruz from 1989 through 1994, that Santa Cruz terminated the full contract for "business purposes" in favor of an agreement limited to employees of a single employer, and that Pacific Care wished to continue to contract with Santa Cruz. (Boss Depo 43:24 - [*44] 45:13, Rosch Decl., Exhibit 4.)¹⁴ Therefore, plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that Santa Cruz was not a viable option.

The court finds that, as a matter of law, Dominican's contract with Secure Horizons does not constitute an unlawful tying arrangement. Having so concluded, the court need not decide whether Dominican had sufficient power in the tying product market of inpatient hospital services to affect a substantial amount of trade [*45] in the tied product market of physician services or whether Dominican has an economic interest in PMG.¹⁵

E. Exclusive Dealing

HN15 [+] An exclusive dealing contract involves a commitment by a buyer to deal only with a particular seller. Exclusive dealing arrangements are unlawful only if they violate the rule of reason. Morgan Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., 924 F.2d 1484, 1488-90 (9th Cir. 1991). Plaintiffs allege that Dominican is "threatening to require TakeCare to require SANTA CRUZ to refer all cardiac patients to Dominican." (Complaint, P24(b)). Plaintiffs base this allegation on a contract provision that states:

In exchange for cardiac per diems, PMG [Santa Cruz Medical Clinic]¹⁶ agrees to refer all cardiac cases to Hospital [Dominican], as their preferred hospital, for which Dominican has clinical capability to provide services.

(Lovero Decl., [*46] Exhibit 2).

The provision at issue is a term in a bilateral contract between TakeCare and Dominican. Although the original contract was proposed as a trilateral one to which Santa Medical Clinic would be a signatory, (Lovero Decl., Exhibit 1), Dominican signed a bilateral contract with TakeCare. Defendant argues that the provision has no legal effect because the contract does not bind Santa Cruz Medical Clinic. Plaintiffs counter that the provision requires TakeCare to require Santa Cruz to deal exclusively with Dominican. Lovero states that she "would not have agreed to the paragraph [at issue]...but for the fact that TakeCare had no competitive alternative available to it in SantaCruz and because it was necessary that TakeCare have [*47] a contract with DOMINICAN" (Lovero Decl. P6). Plaintiffs contend that the provision must have meaning because Dominican has never felt it necessary to rescind or delete it. Defendant counters that it has never rescinded or deleted the provision because the provision

¹⁴ In deposition testimony, Wayne Boss, plaintiffs' Rule 30(b)(6) spokesperson on the subject of plaintiffs' tying claim, stated that Health Net "had a much better penetration of patient enrollees in the major employers in Northern California than Pacific Care [sic] did, [and] we felt it was appropriate to pursue the Health Net relationship for the commercial product, and entered into agreements with both Health Net and TakeCare to establish a Medicare at risk program through their plans rather than through Secure Horizons." (Boss Depo. 60:10-17, Rosch Decl., Exhibit 4.)

¹⁵ Plaintiffs rely only on a per se tying theory and do not attempt to prove their theory on a rule of reason basis.

¹⁶ Both parties recognize that the term PMG is used in the contract provision not to refer to Physicians Medical Group of Santa Cruz, but rather as an abbreviation for the generic term "physicians medical group." The specific PMG referred to here is Santa Cruz Medical Clinic.

had no meaning. To withstand summary judgment, plaintiffs must show a genuine factual issue as to whether Dominican and TakeCare had an agreement to restrain competition in a relevant market.

HN16 [↑] A contract must be interpreted as to give effect to "the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting, so far as the same is ascertainable and lawful. (citations omitted)." Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. G.W. Thomas Drayage & Rigging Co., 69 Cal. 2d 33, 38, n.5, 69 Cal. Rptr. 561, 442 P.2d 641 (1968). The meaning of a writing can only be found by "interpretation in the light of all the circumstances that reveal the sense in which the writer used the words. (citations omitted)." Pacific Gas, supra, 69 Cal. 2d at 38-9. If the court decides, after considering this evidence, "that the language of a contract, in the light of all the circumstances, is 'fairly susceptible of either one of the two interpretations [*48] contended for...,' extrinsic evidence relevant to prove either of such meanings is admissible. (citations omitted.)" Pacific Gas, supra, 69 Cal. 2d at 40.

In the instant case, the meaning of the provision is unclear, and it is reasonably susceptible of either of the two interpretations contended for. The provision may be a remnant of a trilateral contract that was intended to have no legal effect. On the other hand, the provision may have been retained in the bilateral contract because it was intended as an obligation on the part of TakeCare to require Santa Cruz Medical Clinic to refer all cardiac patients to Dominican.¹⁷ Therefore, extrinsic evidence relevant to prove either of such meanings is admissible. There are a number of factual issues to resolve with respect to the actual negotiation of the provision and the intent of the parties at the time of contracting. As a result, there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the provision constituted an agreement to restrain competition. Even if the court could decide, as a matter of law, that the interpretation of the provision urged by plaintiff is the only one to which the language is reasonably susceptible, there [*49] is a genuine issue of material fact as to the relevant market. Therefore, the court cannot decide, on a summary judgment motion, whether the alleged exclusive dealing arrangement could impair competition in a defined relevant market.

D. Conclusion

The court denies plaintiffs' summary judgment and partial summary judgment motions. The court grants defendant's partial summary judgment motion on the tying and channeling claims and denies the motion on the exclusive dealing and concomitant state law claims.

DATED: [*50] 9/6/95

RONALD M. WHYTE

United States District Judge

End of Document

¹⁷ Neither party argues that TakeCare or Dominican is currently requiring Santa Cruz Medical Clinic to refer all cardiac patients to Dominican. It is undisputed that it is Santa Cruz Medical Clinic's policy to refer cardiac patients to Good Samaritan Hospital except in emergencies. Santa Cruz contends that Dominican has refrained from enforcing the provision because of the instant lawsuit. Dominican maintains that the provision is unenforceable because Santa Cruz is not a party to the contract.

Gunderson v. University of Alaska

Supreme Court of Alaska

September 8, 1995, Decided

No. 4255, Supreme Court No. S-6570

Reporter

902 P.2d 323 *; 1995 Alas. LEXIS 105 **

TIMOTHY C. GUNDERSON, d/b/a ALASKA CONTRACT MOTOR EXPRESS, Appellant, v. UNIVERSITY OF ALASKA, FAIRBANKS, and ALASKA RAILROAD CORPORATION, Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the Superior Court of the State of Alaska, Fourth Judicial District, Fairbanks, Richard D. Savell, Judge. Superior Court No. 4FA-93-2161 Civil.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

protest, coal, sham, misrepresentation, immunity, sole source, bids, procurement, antitrust, unloading, lawsuit, baseless, transportation, judicial process, anti trust law, summary judgment, superior court, power plant, hoppers, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Public Contracts Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Public Contracts Law > Bids & Formation > General Overview

HN1[

Alaska Stat. § 36.30.699 provides: In Alaska Stat. §§ 36.30.560-36.30.695, "interested party" means an actual or prospective bidder or offeror whose economic interest may be affected substantially and directly by the issuance of a contract solicitation, the award of a contract, or the failure to award a contract; whether an actual or prospective bidder or offeror has an economic interest depends on the circumstances.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a trial court's grant of summary judgment. Summary judgment is affirmed if the evidence in the record fails to disclose a genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In reviewing the record, the court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Attempts to influence legislative and executive officials are beyond the scope of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN4 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine includes attempts to influence adjudicatory proceedings before administrative agencies and the courts. It would be destructive of rights of association and of petition to hold that groups with common interests may not, without violating the antitrust laws, use the channels and procedures of state and federal agencies and courts to advocate their causes and points of view respecting resolution of their business and economic interests vis-a-vis their competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Protection of Rights > Federally Assisted Programs > Civil Rights Act of 1964

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Conduct protected from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is also shielded from business tort and 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A party will be subject to federal antitrust liability if its efforts to influence governmental action are a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.

902 P.2d 323, *323 1995 Alas. LEXIS 105, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN7 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The filing of a single lawsuit may, in certain circumstances, constitute an abuse of the judicial process for the purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

There is a two-part test for determining whether a particular lawsuit constitutes a "sham." First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under the second part of the definition of sham, a court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor, through the use of the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon. The two-tiered process requires a plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability. Of course, even a plaintiff who defeats a defendant's claim to Noerr immunity by demonstrating both the objective and the subjective components of a sham must still prove a substantive antitrust violation. Proof of a sham merely deprives the defendant of immunity; it does not relieve the plaintiff of the obligation to establish all other elements of his claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Allegations of fraud and misrepresentation in the judicial process will only block Noerr-Pennington immunity when such allegations go to the core of a lawsuit's legitimacy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

A successful lawsuit is, by definition, a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and, therefore, not a sham.

Counsel: Lloyd I. Hoppner, Hoppner & Paskvan, P.C., Fairbanks, and Wallace M. Rudolph, Tacoma, Washington, for Appellant.

James Sarafin, Wohlforth, Argetsinger, Johnson & Brecht, Anchorage, for Appellee University of Alaska, Fairbanks. William R. Huprich, Alaska Railroad Corporation Office of the General Counsel, Anchorage, and Gary Foster, Law Office of Gary Foster, Fairbanks, for Appellee Alaska Railroad Corporation.

Judges: Before: Moore, Chief Justice, Rabinowitz, Matthews, Compton and Eastaugh, Justices.

Opinion by: MOORE

Opinion

[*324] OPINION

MOORE, Chief Justice.

This case arises out of a sole source contract issued by the University of Alaska, Fairbanks campus, (UAF) to Timothy Gunderson, d/b/a/ Alaska Contract Motor Express [*2] (Gunderson). UAF cancelled the contract after Alaska Railroad Corporation (ARRC) filed a formal protest, asserting that the sole source contract violated state law. See AS 36.30.300 (providing that a sole source procurement may not be awarded if a reasonable alternative source exists). Gunderson then sued both UAF and ARRC under a variety of theories. On motion by ARRC, the superior court dismissed Gunderson's claims against ARRC, ruling that ARRC was immune from suit under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1926 \(1993\) (under Noerr-Pennington doctrine, those who petition the government for redress are generally immune from antitrust and related liability).

In this appeal, Gunderson asserts that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not bar his claims against ARRC. He also asserts that the court improperly entered final judgment in favor of ARRC under Alaska Civil Rule 54(b). However, because we consider the issues raised in Gunderson's appeal appropriate for discretionary review under Alaska Appellate Rule 402(b), we need not consider whether the superior court [*3] erred in entering final judgment. See Alaska R. App. P. 402(b)(2) (providing that discretionary review is appropriate where an order or decision involves an important question of law on which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and immediate review may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation).

I. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

In 1992 Gunderson submitted an unsolicited proposal to UAF, offering to truck coal to UAF from the Usibelli Coal Mine and to deliver this coal directly into coal hoppers at the UAF power plant in Fairbanks. Up to that time, the coal had been transported by ARRC and delivered in railcars to a siding next to the power plant. This method of delivery required UAF employees to unload coal into the hoppers: a difficult, dangerous and time-consuming job.

UAF officials determined that Gunderson's proposal qualified as a "unique offer" under UAF procurement regulations and awarded Gunderson a five-year sole source contract. The contract set a price of $ 8.25 per ton and estimated a need for 60,500 tons per year, bringing the total contract price to just under $ 500,000 per year.

Upon learning of this contract, ARRC filed [*4] a formal written protest with UAF. See AS 36.30.560 (providing that an interested party may protest a contract award). It asserted that the sole source contract violated both state and university procurement codes and requested that UAF cancel the contract and publicly solicit competitive bids for the job.

UAF's Chief Procurement Officer, Charles Hill, denied ARRC's protest on the ground that ARRC lacked standing to protest UAF's award of the sole source contract because ARRC was not an "interested party" as defined in AS 36.30.699.¹

¹  AS 36.30.699 provides:

In AS 36.30.560 -- 36.30.695, "interested party" means an actual or prospective bidder or offeror whose economic interest may be affected substantially and directly by the issuance of a contract solicitation, the award of a contract, or the failure to award a contract; whether an actual or prospective bidder or offeror has an economic interest depends on the circumstances.

[*325] ARRC appealed this decision and requested a hearing before an [5] independent hearing officer as authorized by AS 36.30.590. Gerald Neubert, University Architect and Acting Chief Procurement Officer for Protest, subsequently notified ARRC that a hearing would be held for the limited purpose of determining whether ARRC was an "interested party" capable of delivering and unloading coal into the UAF hoppers. The Pre-Hearing Order framed the scope of the hearing as follows:

In order to show that it has standing to maintain an appeal, ARRC has the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, that at the time the University of Alaska awarded Contract 93-0012 to [Gunderson], ARRC was able to economically provide all services required under the . . . contract and was willing to do so.

The parties who will participate in this limited hearing are ARRC and the University of Alaska. [Gunderson] is not a party.

Hearing Officer Neubert issued written findings of fact and conclusions of law shortly after the hearing. He found, in part:

11. In 1992, ARRC had equipment and manpower available at its Fairbanks rail yard to move coal cars from the UAF rail siding to the UAF power plant hoppers and to unload those coal cars. It [6] also had the ability to subcontract these services.
12. In 1992, ARRC would have been willing to bid on a UAF proposal to provide coal transportation and unloading services to the UAF power plant using its own personnel and equipment. ARRC would have been capable of performing such services.
13. In 1992, ARRC routinely submitted bids or proposals to customers who solicited bids or proposals for transportation and related services. ARRC routinely entered into volume or "requirements" transportation contracts with customers at rates below those contained in ARRC's published tariffs.
14. If UAF had advertised for bids or proposals for coal transportation/unloading services, ARRC would have submitted a bid or proposal to provide such services.
15. UAF's award of a sole source contract to [Gunderson] has substantially affected ARRC's economic interests by depriving ARRC of an opportunity to earn in excess of $ 2.5 million over the term of the contract. ARRC has an economic interest in the UAF coal delivery contract.

Based on these findings, the hearing officer concluded that ARRC was an "interested party" under AS 36.30.699 because it had the capability to [7] transport and unload coal into the hoppers of the UAF power plant without the assistance of UAF personnel or equipment. He then ruled:

AS 36.30.300 allows a sole source procurement if there is only one source for the required procurement. If there is a reasonable alternative source, a sole source procurement may not be awarded. Because ARRC was a reasonable alternative source for the delivery and unloading of coal, it was improper, as a matter of law, for UAF to award a sole source contract to [Gunderson]. The ARRC protest was legally sufficient and should have been upheld.

UAF subsequently issued a request for proposals for coal transportation and unloading services. Nine companies, including ARRC and Gunderson, submitted bids. UAF awarded the contract to Royal Contractors, the lowest bidder.² Gunderson filed a formal protest with UAF, requesting that UAF cancel the contract with Royal Contractors and reinstate his contract. UAF denied this protest.

[8] In August 1993 Gunderson sued both UAF and ARRC under a variety of theories.³ In the fourth count of his complaint, Gunderson asserted the following claims against ARRC:

² Royal Contractors bid $ 7.57 per ton. Gunderson submitted the third lowest bid, at $ 8.18 per ton. ARRC bid $ 10.20 per ton, the fifth lowest bid.

[*326] [ARRC] has a monopoly of coal shipments into Fairbanks and generally into interior Alaska. [ARRC], in an attempt to maintain its monopoly, filed a frivolous protest against the issuance of the UAF contract to Gunderson. In the hearing that was subsequently held pursuant to the protest (a hearing in which UAF barred Gunderson from participating), [ARRC] misrepresented the facts and misrepresented its intention to bid a competitive price with Gunderson. The misrepresentation by [ARRC] was for the purpose of injuring Gunderson, and excluding the trucking industry from competing with [ARRC] for the hauling of coal in [the] interior of Alaska. These acts by [ARRC] constitute a common law tort of interference with Gunderson's contractual relationship with UAF; constitute a common law tort of interference with Gunderson's prospective advantage with UAF and other coal consumers in interior Alaska; and constitute a violation of Article A.S. §§ 45.50.471, 501, 531 and A.S. §§ 45.50.562, 45.50.576; or, [*9] in the alternative, a violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983. As a result of these common law torts and statutory violations, Gunderson has been damaged in a sum or sums to be proved at trial and is entitled to have these damages tripled pursuant to the appropriate statutory remedies.

ARRC moved to dismiss these claims under Civil Rule 12(b)(6), arguing, inter alia, that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine barred Gunderson's claims against ARRC. The superior court granted ARRC's motion, ruling that ARRC was immune from suit under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Because the court considered materials outside the pleadings in dismissing Gunderson's claims, it treated ARRC's motion as a motion for summary judgment. On motion by ARRC, the court then entered final judgment in favor of ARRC under Alaska Civil Rule 54(b). [*10] This appeal followed.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN2 We review de novo the superior court's grant of summary judgment. Kollodge v. State, 757 P.2d 1024, 1026 n.4 \(Alaska 1988\). "Summary judgment is affirmed if the evidence in the record fails to disclose a genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Dayhoff v. Temsco Helicopters, Inc., 772 P.2d 1085, 1086 \(Alaska 1989\). In reviewing the record, we draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. Id.

III. DISCUSSION

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine evolved out of two United States Supreme Court cases: Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\). In these decisions, the Court held that HN3 attempts to influence legislative and executive officials were beyond the scope of the Sherman Act, reasoning that Congress did not intend federal antitrust law to regulate political activities or to infringe on the First Amendment rights of petition and association. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136-38; Pennington, 381 U.S. at 669-70; see generally John P. Ludington, Annotation, Application of Doctrine Exempting From Federal Antitrust Laws Joint Efforts to Influence Legislative or Executive Action, 17 A.L.R. Fed. 645 (1973).

In California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\), the Court extended HN4 the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to include attempts to influence adjudicatory proceedings before administrative agencies and the courts. Id. at 510.

It would be destructive of rights of association and of petition to hold that groups with common interests may not, without violating the antitrust laws, use the channels and procedures of state and federal agencies and courts to advocate their causes and points of view respecting resolution of their business and economic interests vis-a-vis their competitors.

Id. at 510-11.

³ Gunderson raised the following causes of action against UAF: (1) breach of contract; (2) breach of duty of confidentiality and expropriation of intellectual property; and (3) due process violations.

In his brief, Gunderson concedes that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects the right of a party to invoke the legal process "without fear that such action would be considered [*327] a tortious interference with prospective advantage or a violation of the [12] State's antitrust laws."⁴ However, Gunderson goes on to argue that ARRC subverted the legal process by presenting false and misleading evidence at the April 1992 hearing. For this reason, Gunderson argues that ARRC engaged in a "sham" protest designed to destroy Gunderson's contractual relationship with UAF.⁵

[13] The United States Supreme Court has observed that HN6[↑] a party will be subject to federal antitrust liability if its efforts to influence governmental action are "a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144; see also California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 511-13, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972).

In California Motor, a group of California truckers instituted a series of state and federal proceedings in an effort to defeat an application for in-state operating rights filed by a group of out-of-state truckers. The out-of-state truckers subsequently filed a civil action, alleging that the California truckers had violated federal antitrust laws. In holding that the district court had erred in dismissing their complaint under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the Supreme Court observed:

Misrepresentations, condoned in the political arena, are not immunized when used in the adjudicatory process. Opponents before agencies or courts often think poorly of the other's tactics, motions, or defenses and may readily call them baseless. [14] One claim, which a court or agency may think baseless, may go unnoticed; but a pattern of baseless, repetitive claims may emerge which leads the factfinder to conclude that the administrative and judicial processes have been abused. That may be a difficult line to discern and draw. But once it is drawn, the case is established that abuse of those processes produced an illegal result, viz., effectively barring respondents from access to the agencies and courts. Insofar as the administrative or judicial processes are involved, actions of that kind cannot acquire immunity by seeking refuge under the umbrella of "political expression."

Id. at 513.

In the wake of California Motor, many courts have held that HN7[↑] the filing of a single lawsuit may, in certain circumstances, constitute an abuse of the judicial process for the purposes of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See, e.g., Aydin Corp. v. Loral Corp. 718 F.2d 897, 903 (9th Cir. 1983) (holding that a single action is sufficient to invoke the sham exception); Energy Conservation, Inc. v. Heliodyne, Inc., 698 F.2d 386, 389 (9th Cir. 1983) (holding that a single baseless suit may be held to constitute a sham so long [15] as some abuse of process is alleged); First Nat'l Bank v. Marquette Nat'l Bank, 482 F. Supp. 514, 520-21 (D. Minn. 1979), aff'd, 636 F.2d 195 (8th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1042, 68 L. Ed. 2d 240, 101 S. Ct. 1761 (1981) (holding that the filing of a single action may constitute a "sham" under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine if the action involved unethical [*328] conduct). See ⁴ Thus Gunderson concedes that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies to his state antitrust law claims under AS 45.50.562-.596 (Alaska Restraint of Trade Act). He also concedes that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine may bar a party from bringing related business tort and § 1983 claims. See Video Int'l Prod. v. Warner-Amex Cable Communications, Inc., 858 F.2d 1075, 1084 (5th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 491 U.S. 906, 105 L. Ed. 2d 697, 109 S. Ct. 3189 (1989) (holding that HN5[↑] conduct protected from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is also shielded from business tort and § 1983 claims).

⁵ On appeal, Gunderson also contends that ARRC's protest falls within the "sham" exception because he was improperly excluded from the April 1992 hearing in violation of his due process rights. However, Gunderson did not present this argument to the trial court or include this issue in his points on appeal. Therefore it is waived. See Moran v. Holman, 501 P.2d 769, 769-70 (Alaska 1972) (this court will not consider on appeal arguments which were not raised before the trial court or which were not included in statement of points on appeal).

In any case, Gunderson makes no attempt to argue that ARRC affirmatively sought to exclude Gunderson from the hearing or that ARRC was involved in any way in the hearing officer's decision. As ARRC points out, in the absence of any such connection, Gunderson's exclusion from the hearing process has no bearing on its right to Noerr-Pennington immunity.

generally Glenn A. Guarino, Annotation, "Sham" Exception to Application of Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Exempting from Federal Antitrust Laws Joint Efforts to Influence Governmental Action, 71 A.L.R. Fed. 723 (1985).

In Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993), the Supreme Court established HN8[↑] a two-part test for determining whether a particular lawsuit constitutes a "sham."

First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception [\[16\]](#) must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of our definition of sham, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor," Noerr, supra, 365 U.S. at 144, 81 S. Ct. at 533 (emphasis added), through the "use [of] the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon," Omni, 499 U.S. 365 at 380, 111 S. Ct. 1344 at 1354 (emphasis in original). This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability. Of course, even a plaintiff who defeats the defendant's claim to Noerr immunity by demonstrating both the objective and the subjective components of a sham must still prove a substantive antitrust violation. Proof of a sham merely deprives the defendant of immunity; it does not relieve the plaintiff of the obligation to establish all other elements of his claim.

113 S. Ct. at 1928 (footnote omitted). [\[17\]](#) However, the Court in Columbia Pictures expressly declined to decide whether the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes parties who commit fraud and misrepresentation in bringing an action.

In surveying the "forms of illegal and reprehensible practice which may corrupt the administrative or judicial processes and which may result in antitrust violations," we have noted that "unethical conduct in the setting of the adjudicatory process often results in sanctions" and that "misrepresentations, condoned in the political arena, are not immunized when used in the adjudicatory process." California Motor Transport, 404 U.S. at 512-513, 92 S. Ct. at 613. We need not decide here whether and, if so, to what extent Noerr permits the imposition of antitrust liability for a litigant's fraud or other misrepresentations. Cf. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 60(b)(3) (allowing a federal court to "relieve a party . . . from a final judgment" for "fraud . . . , misrepresentation, or other misconduct of an adverse party"); Walker Process Equipment Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 176-177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 349-350, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965); id. at 179-180, 86 S. Ct. [18] at 351-52 (Harlan, J., concurring).

113 S. Ct. at 1929 n.6.

On appeal, Gunderson does not argue that ARRC's protest was "objectively baseless." Rather, he asserts, as he did below, that ARRC misrepresented its ability and intention to bid a competitive price at the April 1992 hearing. Citing footnote six of Columbia Pictures, Gunderson argues that ARRC's alleged misrepresentations at the hearing suffice to make its protest a "sham" without regard to the objective merit of its protest or ARRC's motivation. In other words, Gunderson contends that where a party engages in misrepresentation or fraud during the judicial process, the two-part Columbia Pictures test does not apply.

As the superior court observed, the Ninth Circuit recently considered and rejected this very argument. See Liberty Lake Invs., Inc. v. Magnuson, 12 F.3d 155 (9th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 818, 130 L. Ed. 2d 32, 115 S. Ct. 77 (1994). In Liberty Lake, a property developer sued a number of business [\[*329\]](#) competitors, alleging that they had conspired to mount a frivolous environmental challenge to the developer's plans to market a tract of land as a regional shopping center. Id. at 156. The district [\[19\]](#) court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, ruling, inter alia, that the defendants were immune from suit under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Id.

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit affirmed, holding that the environmental challenge was not "objectively baseless" under Columbia Pictures and that the defendants were entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity. Id. at 157-58. The court rejected the developer's contention that the defendants' alleged fraud and misrepresentations in the course of the litigation sufficed "to make the litigation sham without regard to the objective merit of the lawsuit or its proponents' motivation." Id. at 158.

As we read the Court's footnote 6, however, it does no more than reserve the issue of whether antitrust liability may be premised on a litigant's deceptive conduct which goes to the core of a lawsuit's legitimacy, such that it is not "genuine," either in the sense of "having the reputed or apparent qualities or character" (i.e., objectively "genuine") or being "sincerely and honestly felt or experienced" (i.e., subjectively "genuine"). Id. at 158, 113 S. Ct. at 1929 (quoting Webster's Third New International [20] Dictionary 948 (1986)).

Following its reservation of the question whether "fraud or other misrepresentations" may amount to "sham," the Court cited as analogous authority Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965), which held that a patent procured by intentional fraud on the Patent Office could form the basis for a federal antitrust claim, id. at 176-77, 86 S. Ct. at 349-50; Justice Harlan's Walker Process concurrence which emphasized that the Court's holding reached only "deliberate fraud," id. at 179-80, 86 S. Ct. at 351-52 (Harlan, J., concurring); and Rule 60(b)(3), which allows a party to obtain relief from judgment because of its opponent's "fraud . . . misrepresentation, or other misconduct."

In a case involving a fraudulently-obtained patent, that which immunizes the predatory behavior from antitrust liability (the patent) is, in effect, a nullity because of the underlying fraud. Similarly, Rule 60(b)(3) enables a party to set aside an otherwise valid judgment on the ground that it resulted from an opposing party's fraudulent behavior or misrepresentation to the court. See Charles [21] Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 2860, at 188-89 (1973). Read in context with the entire [Columbia Pictures] opinion, footnote 6 does not obviate application of the Court's two-part test for determining sham litigation in the absence of proof that a party's knowing fraud upon, or its intentional misrepresentations to, the court deprive the litigation of its legitimacy.

Id. at 158-59 (footnote omitted).

We find the Ninth Circuit's reading of Columbia Pictures persuasive. HN9 Allegations of fraud and misrepresentation in the judicial process will only block Noerr-Pennington immunity when such allegations go "to the core of a lawsuit's legitimacy." Id. at 158. In this case, Gunderson's complaint charged ARRC with misrepresenting "the facts and . . . its intention to bid a competitive price with Gunderson" in its protest. Even assuming the truth of this charge, these misrepresentations do not go to the heart of ARRC's protest. ARRC challenged the sole source contract award to Gunderson on the ground that it was capable of providing the delivery and unloading services offered by Gunderson. See AS 36.30.300 (providing [22] that a sole source procurement is permitted only when there is one source for the required good or service). Gunderson has never argued that ARRC is not capable of providing these services. As noted by ARRC, the fact that ARRC prevailed in its protest and that nine companies ultimately submitted bids demonstrates the protest's legitimacy.⁶ See Columbia Pictures, 113 S. Ct. at 1928 (noting that HN10 a successful lawsuit is "by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham").

[23] We therefore conclude that the superior court properly granted summary judgment in favor of ARRC.⁷

⁶ In a related argument, Gunderson contends that the superior court improperly "assumed" that the sole source contract was illegal under AS 36.30.300. Essentially, Gunderson is arguing that UAF should be able to award a sole source contract to a business which comes up with an innovative service, even if other businesses are equally capable of providing the proposed service. However, this argument has no bearing on whether ARRC is entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity. Even if the superior court were to ultimately conclude that UAF could properly award Gunderson a sole source contract in these circumstances, ARRC would still be entitled to immunity as long as there was a legitimate basis for its protest. See Columbia Pictures, 113 S. Ct. at 1928 n.5 (noting that a losing lawsuit does not prove that the litigation was a sham).

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

⁷ Because we conclude that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine bars Gunderson's claims, we need not address the other grounds raised by ARRC for affirming the superior court's dismissal.

Maric v. St. Agnes Hosp. Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

January 20, 1995, Argued ; September 13, 1995, Decided

Docket No. 94-7569

Reporter

65 F.3d 310 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 25974 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,119

RADOSLAV MARIC, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. ST. AGNES HOSPITAL CORP.; ROBERT J. STACKPOLE; ROBERT J. STANLEY, VINCENT DU VIGNEAUD, JR., M.D.; VINCENT NICOLAIS, M.D.; JOEL GREENSPAN, M.D.; MICHAEL PANIO, M.D.; DONALD N. COHEN, M.D.; VITO MARRERRO, M.D.; BARNEY D. NEWMAN, M.D.; ADRIENNE WEISS-HARRISON, M.D.; ELLIOT MOSHMAN, M.D.; GERALD CAMPANA, M.D.; WILLIAM ZAROWITZ, M.D.; VIRGINIA PELLIGRINO, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] Certiorari Denied February 20, 1996, Reported at: 1996 U.S. LEXIS 999.

Prior History: Appeal by plaintiff from an order of summary judgment before the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Brieant, J.) dismissing plaintiff's antitrust claim on the grounds that a conspiracy to restrain trade had not been shown and dismissing plaintiff's state law claims without prejudice.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

district court, conspire, antitrust claim, antitrust, state law claim, patient, staff privileges, summary judgment, Sherman Act, recommended, Obstetrics, conspiracy, birthing, staff

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), a plaintiff who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may recover treble damages. In order to defeat a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff must create a genuine issue of material fact that (1) defendants violated the antitrust laws and (2) the violation caused him actual injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 Sherman Act, Claims

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States ,or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. In order to establish a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must therefore show (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) in restraint of trade; (3) affecting interstate commerce.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

In regard to the plaintiff's burden at the summary judgment stage to show an antitrust conspiracy, the mere opportunity to conspire does not by itself support the inference that such an illegal combination actually occurred. A plaintiff must prove the defendants illegally conspired. This means that a plaintiff -- to withstand defendants' summary judgment motion -- must present evidence that casts doubt on inferences of independent (not combined) action or proper conduct by defendants.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN4 Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Although a district court retains the discretion to exercise pendent jurisdiction and entertain state law claims once all federal claims have been dismissed, generally if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, the state claims should be dismissed as well.

Counsel: STEVEN M. KRAMER, Steven M. Kramer & Associates, New York, New York, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

RICHARD E. DONOVAN, Kelley Drye & Warren (Roy W. Breitenbach, of counsel), New York, New York, for Defendants-Appellees St. Agnes Hospital Corp., Robert J. Stackpole, Robert J. Stanley, Vincent du Vigneaud, Jr., M.D., Vincent Nicolais, M.D., Donald M. Cohen, M.D., Vito Marrero, M.D., and Virginia Pelligrino.

WAYNE M. RUBIN, Rende, Ryan & Downes, New York, New York, for Defendants-Appellees Barney D. Newman, M.D., Adrienne Weiss-Harrison, M.D., Elliot Moshman, M.D., Gerald Campana, M.D., and William Zarowitz, M.D.

Judges: Before: WALKER, LEVAL, and CALABRESI, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: WALKER

Opinion

[*311] WALKER, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiff Dr. Radoslav Maric, a licensed obstetrician and gynecologist, filed this suit alleging, among other claims, that defendants [*2] conspired to deny him hospital privileges in order to prevent him from opening a birthing center that would compete with their practices. He contended that this conduct constituted a violation of the antitrust laws, namely the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and was thus actionable under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26. The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Charles L. Brieant, District Judge) granted summary judgment in favor of defendants on the antitrust claim and dismissed the remaining state law claims without prejudice. We affirm.

BACKGROUND

On July 1, 1989, Dr. Maric joined the Northeast Permanente Medical Group, P.C. ("NPMG"), a professional corporation that provides physician services to a health maintenance organization, Kaiser Foundation Health Plan of New York ("Kaiser"). As NPMG and Kaiser required, Maric soon after obtained staff privileges at St. Agnes Hospital ("St. Agnes").

After several months at St. Agnes, Dr. Maric told the President of St. Agnes, defendant Dr. Robert J. Stanley, that he wanted to open a birthing center that would feature a method of childbirth in which delivery occurred under water, an idea that [*3] he had entertained for the better part of ten years. According to Dr. Maric's complaint, Dr. Stanley promised his cooperation and signed a non-disclosure agreement on behalf of the hospital.

On November 26, 1989, Lori Cherry, a Kaiser subscriber, entered St. Agnes complaining of abdominal pain. She was five months pregnant. After Ms. Cherry lost consciousness, stopped breathing, and had no pulse, Dr. Maric and an internist were summoned. Dr. Maric arrived at the hospital at 11:30 p.m. and examined Ms. Cherry. By that time, she had spontaneously started breathing again and regained blood pressure but remained in a semicomatose state. Dr. Maric concluded that her condition was not related to her pregnancy and, after discussing the case with the internist, left the hospital at approximately 1:00 a.m. Unfortunately, Dr. Maric's conclusion was wrong. His patient died a few hours later from a ruptured ectopic tubal pregnancy.

As New York law required, the hospital reported Ms. Cherry's death to the New York State Department of Health ("DOH"), which initiated an investigation into the incident. In addition, the case was taken up at a number of meetings of various hospital committees at [*4] St. Agnes, including the Executive Committee, the Emergency Department, the Morbidity and Mortality Committee, the Medical Board, the Board of Trustees Quality Assurance Committee, and the Medical Peer Review Committee. On December 20, 1989, the Medical Peer Review Committee referred the matter to the Obstetrics and Gynecology Department, which held a peer review meeting on February 13, 1990. The Department concluded that Dr. Maric's management of the case was deficient principally because he failed to order certain tests, neglected to obtain a surgical consultation, and left the patient before a diagnosis was reached.

On March 22, 1990, Dr. du Vigneaud, the Director of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology and a defendant, presented the peer review's findings to the Board of Trustees Quality Assurance Committee. He recommended that Dr. Maric be informed that his cases would be monitored by the Obstetrics and Gynecology Department until further notice. The Quality Assurance Committee, concerned that these corrective measures might be inadequate in light of the seriousness of the case, ordered further review of the matter before recommending corrective action to the Board [5] of Trustees.

In early April, 1990, while the foregoing review was underway, Dr. Maric informed Dr. du Vigneaud that he intended to purchase an existing obstetrics and gynecology practice to use as his birthing center. Under New York law, such a center must have [*312] procedures to transfer a patient to a hospital no more than twenty minutes away in case of complications. 10 NYCRR § 754.2(e). New York law also requires the director of such a center to have either obstetrical privileges at the hospital or a formal agreement with the hospital for the provision of necessary care. 10 NYCRR § 754.5(a)(1)-(2).

Meanwhile, following meetings on April 11 and 19 at which Ms. Cherry's death was discussed, the Quality Assurance Committee recommended that the hospital monitor Dr. Maric's and the internist's cases for a period of six months, and on April 24 the hospital sent Dr. Maric a letter to that effect. On May 4, less than two weeks later, another incident occurred that called plaintiff's professional judgment into question. A woman who was approximately twelve weeks pregnant was admitted to the hospital exhibiting signs of a possible miscarriage. Although both the duty nurse and the [6] patient's husband called Dr. Maric repeatedly, he refused to come to the hospital. He claimed that he had been summoned by the woman earlier and had waited at the hospital for her but she had not shown up, and that in any event he was not needed.

On May 10, the State Department of Health cited St. Agnes for its treatment of Ms. Cherry. The deficiencies included Dr. Maric's failure to order certain tests and his decision to leave the hospital despite the patient's rapidly deteriorating condition. Faced with this assessment of the earlier incident and Dr. Maric's behavior on May 4, the Board of Trustees summarily suspended plaintiff's hospital privileges on May 17, 1990. NPMG then terminated him for failure to maintain staff privileges at St. Agnes.

Thereafter, Dr. Maric requested, pursuant to the hospital's by-laws, that an ad hoc committee be formed to review his suspension. The committee, comprised of Drs. du Vigneaud, Donald Cohen, and Michael Panio -- all defendants in this action -interviewed Dr. Maric and examined the facts of the case before reaching an independent conclusion that summary suspension was appropriate. Dr. Maric then asked for and was given permission to [7] present his case at an upcoming Medical Board meeting. The Board, after hearing Dr. Maric, recommended that the suspension be rescinded and that he instead be put on probation for one year, conduct all work under strict supervision, and receive a letter of reprimand. The Board of Trustees accepted this recommendation.

Dr. Maric filed suit in December of 1993. He alleged that the restrictions placed on him by the hospital forced him to abandon his plans for a birthing center, and that the hospital, its administrators, and the various doctors serving in its departments and on its committees had conspired to restrict his staff privileges, thus constituting a group boycott in violation of the Sherman Act and actionable under the Clayton Act. He also pressed a state law claim for intentional interference with contract and prospective contractual relations. On May 11, 1994, the district court granted the defendants summary judgment on plaintiff's antitrust claims and dismissed the state law claim without prejudice. Plaintiff appeals.

DISCUSSION

As the foregoing recitation of facts makes clear, the hospital, faced with what was at the least questionable conduct on the part of Dr. Maric, [8] followed a course of action that was reasoned, responsible, and attentive not only to its own interests but also to those of the public and Dr. Maric. Perhaps due to poor advice of counsel or an inability to perceive that his personal ambitions must at times yield to the hospital's interest in the health and safety of its patients, Dr. Maric has chosen to respond with a baseless antitrust claim that only serves to deplete the resources of the defendants and the courts. The district court correctly concluded that this antitrust claim cannot survive summary judgment.

I. The Antitrust Claim

The first count of Maric's complaint asserts a claim under the Clayton Act. HN1 Under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\), a plaintiff "who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" may recover treble [*313] damages. In order to defeat a motion for summary judgment, Dr. Maric must create a genuine issue of material fact that (1) defendants violated the antitrust laws and (2) the violation caused him actual injury. See New York v. Hendrickson Bros., Inc., 840 F.2d 1065, 1076 (2d Cir.) (citing J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors [*9] Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 \(1981\)), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 848 (1988). Dr. Maric has failed to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact as to the violation of the antitrust laws.

The antitrust violation that Dr. Maric alleges is that defendants violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. Under § 1, "every HN2 contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. In order to establish a claim under § 1, a plaintiff must therefore show (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) in restraint of trade; (3) affecting interstate commerce. See Capital Imaging Assocs. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993). Plaintiff has failed to meet the first of these requirements.

The district court, drawing on Capital Imaging, concluded that, as employees of St. Agnes, the staff doctors and administrators did not have the legal capacity to conspire under the Sherman Act. The Capital Imaging decision, in holding that member physicians of an independent practice association are legally [*10] capable of conspiring with each other, noted that "the doctors are not staff physicians employed by the HMO on a salaried basis, that is, they are not agents of the HMO." 996 F.2d at 544. While this passage could be read to suggest, as the district court held, that staff physicians who are agents of an organization like an HMO or a hospital cannot conspire with the HMO or each other for antitrust purposes, we have not explicitly decided this issue.

We need not decide whether the individual defendants in this case, at least some of whom presumably are full-time staff physicians at the hospital, have the legal capacity to conspire together or with the hospital under § 1 of the Sherman Act. It is abundantly clear to us that, even assuming the legal capacity to conspire, no conspiracy has been shown.

In Capital Imaging, we described HN3 the plaintiff's burden at the summary judgment stage to show an antitrust conspiracy:

The mere opportunity to conspire does not by itself support the inference that such an illegal combination actually occurred. A plaintiff must prove the defendants illegally conspired. . . . This means that a plaintiff -- to withstand defendants' summary [*11] judgment motion -- must present evidence that casts doubt on inferences of independent (not combined) action or proper conduct by defendants.

996 F.2d at 545; see also International Distribution Ctrs. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2d Cir.) ("At a minimum, . . . the circumstances [must be] such as to warrant a jury in finding that the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement." (internal quotations omitted)), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987); Brenner v. World Boxing Council, 675 F.2d 445, 451 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 835, 74 L. Ed. 2d 76, 103 S. Ct. 79 (1982).

We do not have the slightest doubt that defendants acted properly when they decided to limit Dr. Maric's staff privileges. Several different committees and departments within the hospital investigated and reviewed the circumstances leading to Lori Cherry's death, and all of the evidence points inexorably to the conclusion that the various staff members charged with scrutinizing plaintiff's behavior did so with care and reasoned deliberation. There is no credible dispute that this lengthy review process yielded serious, legitimate [*12] concerns as to plaintiff's conduct. The hospital's ultimate decision to allow Dr. Maric to maintain his staff privileges under supervision instead of suspending or revoking them, under these circumstances, was generous towards the plaintiff. Without further evidence of action on the part of defendants that suggests "commitment to a common [*314] end" other than their professed goal of maintaining the standards of medical care at the hospital, the sole fact that some of the defendants may in the future have faced some competition from Dr. Maric's hypothetical birthing center is insufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact as to the existence of a conspiracy to restrain trade. See Michelman v. Clark-Schwebel Fiber Glass Corp., 534 F.2d 1036, 1043 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 885, 50 L. Ed. 2d 166, 97 S. Ct. 236 (1976).

While this case might well be a candidate for sanctions in light of the baseless nature of plaintiff's antitrust claim and the waste of resources that it has generated, because the issue of sanctions has not been raised, we will confine ourselves to affirming the district court's dismissal. Accordingly, we hold that the district court correctly granted summary judgment to defendants [*13] on plaintiff's antitrust claim.

II. Remaining State Law Claims

After dismissing Maric's antitrust claim, the district court then dismissed the remaining state law claims without prejudice. HN4[] Although a district court retains the discretion to exercise pendent jurisdiction and entertain state law claims once all federal claims have been dismissed, see Enercomp, Inc. v. McCorhill Publishing, 873 F.2d 536, 545 (2d Cir. 1989), generally "if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, . . . the state claims should be dismissed as well," United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 (1966); see Girard v. 94th St. & Fifth Ave. Corp., 530 F.2d 66, 72 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 974, 48 L. Ed. 2d 798, 96 S. Ct. 2173 (1976). We are unable to fault the district court in doing so here.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we affirm the judgment of the district court.

End of Document

Tricom, Inc. v. Elec. Data Sys. Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division

September 14, 1995, Decided ; September 14, 1995, FILED

Case No. 92-76374

Reporter

902 F. Supp. 741 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15415 ; 36 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1778 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,188

TRICOM, INC., Plaintiff, v. ELECTRONIC DATA SYSTEMS CORPORATION, Defendant.

Core Terms

software, license, mainframe, patent, antitrust, customer, monopoly, holder, lease, partial summary judgment, time sharing, third party, restrictions, alleges, anti trust law, tied product, Sherman Act, competitor, designers, terminals, products, mall

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment is appropriate only when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The central inquiry is whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

After adequate time for discovery and upon motion, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\) mandates summary judgment against a party who fails to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which that party bears the burden of proof at trial.

902 F. Supp. 741, *741 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15415, 15415 36 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1778, 1778

Computer & Internet Law > Internet Business > Licensing > Patent Assignments & Transfers

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN3 Licensing, Patent Assignments & Transfers

Under patent and copyright law, a party may not be compelled to license its proprietary software to anyone.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Computer & Internet Law > Internet Business > Licensing > Patent Assignments & Transfers

Copyright Law > ... > Assignments & Transfers > Licenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

HN4 Conveyances, Licenses

The refusal to license copyrighted software is valid business justification.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A party may not use patent or copyright law to support a tie over non-patented or non-copyrighted products. A patent or copyright holder may impose only legitimate restrictions on the use of a patent or copyright which do not enforce a tie.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN6 Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

A patent holder may reasonably restrict the use of its patented product. However, a restriction may not attempt to extend the scope of the monopoly permitted by the patent to non-patented products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

902 F. Supp. 741, *741 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15415, 15415 36 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1778, 1778

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN7 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

There are limits on the control a patent holder may exercise over his licensee. Among other restrictions, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell or not to purchase, use or sell another article of commerce not within the scope of his patent monopoly. A patentee may not lawfully exact, as the condition of a license, that unpatented materials used in connection with his invention be purchased.

Computer & Internet Law > Intellectual Property Protection > Copyright Protection > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Online Infringement > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Elements > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Protected Subject Matter > Literary Works > General Overview

HN8 Intellectual Property Protection, Copyright Protection

Copying for purposes of copyright law occurs when a computer program is transferred from a permanent storage device to computer's random access memory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > Copyright Misuse

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A copyright holder's right to enforce its copyright is limited by antitrust laws, like the laws against tying. A copyright owner may not enforce its copyright to violate the antitrust laws or indeed use it in any manner violative of the public policy embodied in the grant of a copyright. A copyright holder may impose only legitimate restrictions on the use of the copyright which do not enforce a tie.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN10 Intellectual Property, Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse

Under antitrust law, a party may not condition the right to use software on the purchase from it of CPU time.

Counsel: [1] FOR TRICOM, INCORPORATED, a Michigan corporation, plaintiff: Bruce C. Kempton, Morrison, Mahoney, Southfield, MI.

FOR ELECTRONIC DATA SYSTEMS CORPORATION, a Texas corporation, defendant: Gregory M. Kopacz, Dykema Gossett, Detroit, MI. Gail M. O'Brien, Duvin, Cahn, Troy, MI.

Judges: Nancy G. Edmunds, U.S. District Judge

Opinion by: Nancy G. Edmunds

Opinion

[*1779] [*742] OPINION AND ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT OR IN THE ALTERNATIVE TO EXCLUDE CERTAIN DAMAGE CLAIMS

This matter came before the court on Defendant's July 10, 1995, motion for partial summary judgment or in the alternative to exclude certain damage claims. For the reasons stated below, the motion is granted in part and denied in part.

I. Facts

The court summarized the essential facts of this case in its October 5, 1994, order as follows:

"Plaintiff, Tricom Inc., brought this antitrust action against Electronic Data Systems Corporation ("EDS"), a wholly-owned subsidiary of General Motors Corporation ("GM"). Both Tricom and EDS sell computer hardware, software, data processing services, and support services. Tricom and EDS provide these products and services to customers, including engineering companies that do computer assisted design and computer assisted manufacturing. Their engineering customers provide design work for manufacturers of automobiles, aircraft, and other products.

There are hundreds of software programs available for use by engineering [2] and design companies. Three are at issue in this case: CGS, CATIA, and CADAM. These software products are part of a category of software known as "CAD/CAM CAE" products. The acronym stands for computer assisted design, computer assisted manufacturing, and computer assisted engineering.

CGS (an acronym for Corporate Graphics System) is software developed and owned by GM and EDS, and EDS is the exclusive supplier of CGS software. On some of its projects, GM requires outside engineering and design vendors to use the CGS software. CGS is used primarily for body surface design.

There are three ways engineering or design companies seeking to use CGS can obtain access to that software from EDS. First, a customer can have computer terminals which are able to access the mainframes at the EDS Information Processing Center installed at its own site (referred to as "mainframe CGS"). Second, a customer can go to an EDS Design Center and use the computers there on an hourly basis. Third, a customer can license a "workstation" version of CGS to be installed on computers at the customer's office. Workstation CGS did not become available until the second quarter of 1991.

TriCom alleges antitrust [3] violations by EDS as follows:

1. Illegal tying in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1;
2. Illegal tying in violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15;

3. Illegal monopoly in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; and
4. Illegal attempted monopoly in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

TriCom alleges that EDS conditions the leasing of its CGS software upon the lease or purchase of certain tied products, thereby depriving TriCom of the opportunity to compete in the lease or sale of the tied products. Tricom further alleges that EDS used its [*743] monopoly power over CGS to engage in various anti-competitive acts."

....

"In Counts I and II of the Complaint, Tricom alleges that EDS engaged in an illegal restraint of trade under section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act by virtue of certain tying arrangements. A tying arrangement is an agreement by a seller to sell one product [the tying product] only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different product [the tied product]. Tricom alleges that EDS leases CGS in a package that requires the lessee [4] to also lease or purchase of the following tied products: 1) CATIA software; 2) CADAM software; 3) telecommunications lines linking the customer to the EDS mainframe computer facility; 4) computer hardware such as graphics terminals, keyboards, monitors, multiplexors, and graphics controllers and associated peripheral devices; and 5) CPU time (time sharing) of 40 hours per week for 50 weeks regardless of whether the time is actually used."

In this, its July 10, 1995, motion for partial summary judgment or in the alternative to exclude certain damage claims, EDS contends that Tricom improperly asserts a refusal to deal claim, that such a claim grossly inflates Tricom's damages, and that the court should grant partial summary judgment and should dismiss such a claim or, in the alternative, that the court should exclude [1780] Tricom's damage study allegedly based on such a claim.

II. Standard of Review

HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate only when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The central inquiry is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission [5] to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). HN2[] After adequate time for discovery and upon motion, Rule 56\(c\) mandates summary judgment against a party who fails to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case and on which that party bears the burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\).

III. Analysis

Part of the parties' dispute centers around whether Tricom actually is asserting a refusal to deal claim. According to EDS, Tricom claims that EDS should be required to license its CGS software to Tricom and to third parties.

Tricom's pleadings are ambiguous. On one hand, Tricom states that it never abandoned its refusal to deal claim. "Tricom never waived EDS's liability for refusing to license CGS." Response, pp. 1-2. "Tricom made it clear that its claims included . . . both the EDS's tying CGS software to CPU time sharing . . . and EDS's 1991 refusal to grant Tricom a CGS license." Response, pp. 5-6 (bold in original). "Tricom [*6] also seeks an injunction remedying EDS's 1991 refusal to deal with Tricom." Final Pretrial Order, p. 3. On the other hand, Tricom states that its claim is not based on an alleged right to obtain a license to CGS. "Tricom's damage calculation is based on its share of lost sales of each of the tied products, including mainframe CPU time, from October 31, 1988, through the date of trial. No CGS license (direct or indirect) is required, and Tricom's damage calculation does not require it to 'use' CGS." Response, p. 2.

902 F. Supp. 741, *743 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15415, 6 36 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1778, 1780

Assuming that Tricom asserts a claim that EDS should be compelled to license CGS to Tricom and to third parties, EDS is entitled to summary judgment on such a claim. HN3[↑] Under patent and copyright law, EDS may not be compelled to license its proprietary software to anyone. Genentech, Inc. v. Eli Lilly and Co., 998 F.2d 931, 949 \(Fed. Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 114 S. Ct. 1126 (1994) (university was free to grant licenses on an exclusive or nonexclusive basis; decision to withhold license alone did not form the basis of antitrust claim); SCM Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 645 F.2d 1195 \(2d Cir. 1981\), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1016, 72 L. Ed. 2d 132, 102 S. Ct. [\[*744\]](#) 1708 (1982) [7] (Xerox's refusal to license its photocopying patent is permissible under patent laws); Data General Corp. v. Grumman Systems Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147 \(1st Cir. 1994\) HN4[↑] (refusal to license copyrighted software is valid business justification; antitrust claim dismissed).¹ Thus, partial summary judgment is granted, and Tricom's claim that EDS should be compelled to license CGS to Tricom and to third parties is dismissed.

[8] The dispute between the parties, however, is more complex. Tricom claims that EDS impermissibly ties the sale of CGS software to the sale of CPU time on EDS's mainframe computer. Tricom is a competitor in the market for sale of CPU time on a mainframe. Thus, Tricom implies that it should be permitted to run on Tricom's mainframe CGS software licensed or otherwise sold to designers.

EDS misconstrues this claim as either 1) a claim that EDS must grant Tricom a license to use CGS or 2) a claim that EDS must grant third parties a license to use CGS on Tricom's mainframe, with the result that Tricom would run CGS as an "indirect licensee." Tricom's claim is that when EDS chooses to permit the use of CGS software, it should not be permitted to limit which mainframe the software is used on. Tricom wants [\[1781\]](#) to compete in the market which provides CPU time to CGS software users. Tricom does not seek to "use" CGS software or to resell it to designers.

EDS further claims if it were forced to license CGS, it would be permitted to place reasonable restrictions on its use, thereby prohibiting its use on the Tricom mainframe. EDS cites [Corsearch, Inc. v. Thomson & Thomson, 792 F. Supp. 305 \(S.D.N.Y. \[\\[*91\\] 1992\\)\]\(#\)](#) in support of this proposition because in that case, the defendant licensed a trademarked database to plaintiff with the restriction that the database could not be used by third parties, operated on more than one computer at a time, operated on a multiple computer processing unit, or operated in a multi-site arrangement. Id. at 313. The defendant later terminated the license. Corsearch does not address the issue of whether the trademark holder had the right to restrict the use of the trademarked database in this manner nor did the court address whether the license restrictions were reasonable. The court merely found that the trademark holder had the right to terminate its license to the plaintiff and the termination did not violate the Sherman Act. Id. at 322-23.

The issue of what use restrictions would be reasonable is not an issue currently before the court.² Moreover, HN5[↑] EDS may not use patent or copyright law to support a tie over nonpatented or noncopyrighted products. A patent or copyright holder may impose only legitimate restrictions on the use of a patent or copyright which do not enforce a tie. In [Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700, 704 \[\\[*101\\] \\(Fed. Cir. 1992\\)\]\(#\)](#), the court held that a

¹ EDS also argues that Tricom should be judicially estopped from making a refusal to deal claim. The doctrine of judicial estoppel bars a party who has "successfully and unequivocally" argued a position in a prior court proceeding from taking an inconsistent position in a later proceeding. Edwards v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 690 F.2d 595, 598 \(6th Cir. 1982\). The requirement that the party must have "successfully" asserted a prior position means that the party must have been successful in persuading the first court to expressly adopt the position. Id. at 599. In other words, judicial estoppel does not prevent a party from contradicting itself, it only bars the party from contradicting itself where a court previously adopted the party's prior position. Teledyne Industries, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 911 F.2d 1214, 1217-18 n.3. (6th Cir. 1990). The issue of whether Tricom asserted a refusal to deal claim was not previously expressly presented to the court, and thus the court did not expressly adopt any parties' position on the issue. Thus, judicial estoppel does not apply.

² This issue may come up at trial in the context of whether EDS has a business justification for tying its software to its mainframe and whether the tie is the least restrictive means for achieving its business purposes. See Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of N. Am., Inc., 833 F.2d 1342 \(9th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 870, 102 L. Ed. 2d 148, 109 S. Ct. 179 \(1988\) (business justification is defense only if there was no less restrictive means to satisfy the legitimate business objective).

HN6 patent holder may reasonably restrict the use of its patented product. However, the court also noted that a restriction may not attempt to extend the scope of the monopoly permitted by the patent to [\[*745\]](#) nonpatented products. Id. (citing Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U.S. 502, 516, 61 L. Ed. 871, 37 S. Ct. 416 \(1917\)).

In Motion Picture Patents a license notice was attached to patented movie projectors, stating that the purchaser had the right to use the machine only with motion picture films that were leased from the patentee. The defendant used a patented projector with films leased from other sources. The Court condemned the patentee's tie-in as illegal, since it extended the "scope of its monopoly" to materials which were not part of the patented invention.

Id. "The Supreme Court has also emphasized that HN7 there are limits on the control a patent holder may exercise over his licensee. among other restrictions, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell or not to purchase, use or sell another article of commerce not within the scope [\[11\]](#) of his patent monopoly." Miller Insituform v. Insituform of N. Am., Inc., 830 F.2d 606 \(6th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1064, 98 L. Ed. 2d 988, 108 S. Ct. 1023 (1988). "[A] patentee may not lawfully exact, as the condition of a license, that unpatented materials used in connection with his invention be purchased exclusively from him." Barber-Colman Co. v. National Tool Co., 136 F.2d 339 \(6th Cir. 1943\).

At oral argument on this motion, EDS claimed that Tricom may not operate CGS software on [\[12\]](#) its mainframe without violating EDS's copyright because in order to operate the CGS software, Tricom must load it onto the mainframe. This constitutes "copying" under copyright law. MAI Systems Corp. v. Peak Computer, Inc., 991 F.2d 511 \(9th Cir. 1993\), cert. dismissed, 114 S. Ct. 671 (1994) HN8 (copying for purposes of copyright law occurs when computer program is transferred from permanent storage device to computer's random access memory). Accord Advanced Computer Services of Mich., Inc. v. MAI Systems Corp., 845 F. Supp. 356 \(E.D. Va. 1994\). EDS overlooks the fact that, as discussed above, HN9 a copyright holder's right to enforce its copyright is limited by antitrust laws, like the laws against tying. A copyright owner may not enforce its copyright to violate the antitrust laws or indeed use it in any "manner violative of the public policy embodied in the grant of a copyright." Lasercomb America, Inc. v Reynolds, 911 F.2d 970, 978 \(4th Cir. 1990\). Again, a copyright holder, like EDS, may impose only legitimate restrictions on the use of the copyright which do not enforce a tie.

Tricom alleges that EDS improperly extends its allowed monopoly power under copyright law over [\[13\]](#) its software to CPU time sharing on its mainframe, a market where [\[1782\]](#) EDS does not have permissible monopoly power. HN10 Under antitrust law, EDS may not condition the right to use CGS software on the purchase of CPU time from EDS.³

EDS also argues that CPU time (access to EDS's mainframe) is not a product separate from CGS software. The court discussed this issue at length in its October 5, 1994 order and determined that Tricom had presented a fact question for trial. EDS moved to reconsider, and the court denied the motion on October 28, 1995. Even if [\[14\]](#) this second request to reconsider was valid and timely, EDS has not provided new grounds in support of such request.

EDS also argues that the statute of limitations bars Tricom's claim. The court discussed this issue at length in its August 15, 1994, order and determined that each contract that a customer signed with EDS constituted a new independent act which allegedly caused a new and independent antitrust injury to Tricom. Thus, Tricom is entitled to sue under the antitrust laws for the injury it suffered as a competitor in the market for sales of CPU time, telecommunications lines, hardware, and access to CATIA and CADAM during the limitations period.

³ It should also be noted that Tricom does not seek to deprive EDS the value of its copyright. If EDS chooses to license its software to a designer, EDS sets the price for the license. Tricom merely claims that it should be able to compete with EDS in selling CPU time to the designer to enable the designer to use the software. Every designer who comes to Tricom wishing to use CGS on Tricom's mainframe would have to obtain the right to use the CGS software from EDS.

[*746] EDS also claims that Tricom lacks standing because it has not suffered an antitrust injury due to the fact that Tricom is not a competitor in the software licensing market. EDS points out that Tricom does not have a right to obtain CGS so that it can resell it to its own customers. For example, in Almeda Mall, Inc. v. Houston Lighting & Power Co., 615 F.2d 343 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 870, 66 L. Ed. 2d 90, 101 S. Ct. 208 (1980), shopping mall owners sought to force an electric company to provide electricity to [*15] only one mall hookup so that the mall owners could resell the electricity to mall tenants. The purpose of antitrust laws is to protect competition. Accordingly, where the mall owners sought to act as mere noncompetitive middlemen, they did not suffer an antitrust injury and they lacked standing to sue. Accord HyPoint Technology, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 949 F.2d 874 (6th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 938, 117 L. Ed. 2d 623, 112 S. Ct. 1480 (1992). EDS further argues that Tricom lacks standing because it is not a design vendor.

Cases like Alameda and Hypoint are not applicable to this case. Tricom's claim is not based on a right to compete in licensing CGS to designers. Nor is Tricom's claim based on a right to use CGS as a designer. Tricom claims that it is a competitor in the market for providing mainframe CPU time sharing, telecommunications lines, related hardware, and access to CATIA and CADAM software. Its antitrust injury lies there.

EDS also contends that Tricom is not a competitor in time sharing services for CGS users because EDS monopolizes this market. This contention obviously begs the question. Tricom seeks to compete in this market. Its antitrust [*16] injury results from EDS's tying of CGS software to CPU time sharing.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, Defendant's July 10, 1995, motion for partial summary judgment or in the alternative to exclude certain damage claims is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows:

IT IS ORDERED THAT Tricom's claim that EDS should be compelled to license CGS to Tricom and to third parties is dismissed.

IT IS ORDERED THAT Tricom's claim that EDS impermissibly ties the sale of CGS software to the sale of CPU time on EDS's mainframe computer, implying that it should be permitted to run CGS licensed or otherwise sold to designers on Tricom's mainframe remains and Tricom's damage study may be introduced as evidence.

Nancy G. Edmunds

U.S. District Judge

Dated: SEP 14 1995

Blue Cross & Blue Shield United v. Marshfield Clinic

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

August 9, 1995, Argued ; September 18, 1995, Decided

Nos. 95-1965, 95-2140

Reporter

65 F.3d 1406 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 26339 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,120

BLUE CROSS & BLUE SHIELD UNITED OF WISCONSIN and COMPCARE HEALTH SERVICES INSURANCE CORPORATION, Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, v. MARSHFIELD CLINIC and SECURITY HEALTH PLAN OF WISCONSIN, INC., Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) As Amended on Denial of Rehearing October 13, 1995, Reported at: 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 29056. Certiorari Denied March 18, 1996, Reported at: 1996 U.S. LEXIS 1949.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin. No. 94 C 137 S. John C. Shabaz, Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

Clinic, patients, insureds, monopolist, prices, competitors, north central, contracts, anti trust law, subscribers, markets, plans, medical services, facilities, monopoly, percent, monopoly power, fee-for-service, terminal, reimbursement, affiliated, damages, high prices, preferred-provider, overcharged, buyers, region, staff, physician's services, Sherman Act

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Insurers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In defining a market, one must consider substitution both by buyers and by sellers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The definition of a market depends on substitutability on the supply side as well as on the demand side. Even if two products are completely different from the consumer's standpoint, if they are made by the same producers, an increase in the price of one that is not cost-justified will induce producers to shift production from the other product to this one in order to increase their profits by selling at a supracompetitive price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Fifty percent is below any accepted benchmark for inferring monopoly power from market share.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

When dealing with a heterogeneous product or service, a reasonable finder of fact cannot infer monopoly power just from higher prices--the difference may reflect a higher quality more costly to provide--and it is always treacherous to try to infer monopoly power from a high rate of return.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Monopolization

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN5[Energy & Utilities, State Regulation

A natural monopolist that acquires and maintains its monopoly without excluding competitors by improper means is not guilty of "monopolizing" in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, and can therefore charge any price that it wants, for the antitrust laws are not a price-control statute or a public utility or common-carrier rate regulation statute.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN6[Courts, Judicial Precedent

The court is not authorized to abrogate doctrines that have been endorsed and not yet rejected by the Supreme Court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN7[Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

Only the direct purchaser from an allegedly overcharging defendant has standing to maintain an antitrust suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Insurers

HN8[Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Market division violates the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Counsel: For BLUE CROSS AND BLUE SHIELD UNITED OF WISCONSIN, Plaintiff - Appellee: Barbara Van Dam, BLUE CROSS & BLUE SHIELD OF WISCONSIN, Milwaukee, WI. Jon G. Furlow, James R. Troupis, MICHAEL, BEST & FRIEDRICH, Madison, WI. John E. Flanagan, MICHAEL, BEST & FRIEDRICH, Milwaukee, WI. William E. Snyder, MICHAEL, BEST & FRIEDRICH, Chicago, IL. Jack A. Rovner, ROVNER & ASSOCIATES, Naperville, IL.

For COMPCARE HEALTH SERVICES INSURANCE CORPORATION, Plaintiff - Appellee: Barbara Van Dam, BLUE CROSS & BLUE SHIELD OF WISCONSIN, Milwaukee, WI. Jon G. Furlow, James R. Troupis, MICHAEL, BEST & FRIEDRICH, Madison, WI. John E. Flanagan, MICHAEL, BEST & FRIEDRICH, Milwaukee, WI. William E. Snyder, MICHAEL, BEST & FRIEDRICH, Chicago, IL.

For MARSHFIELD CLINIC, SECURITY HEALTH PLAN OF WISCONSIN, INCORPORATED, Defendants - Appellants: Steven J. Caulum, BELL, METZNER, GIERHART & MOORE, Madison, WI. Kevin D. McDonald, Thomas F. Cullen, Jr., Phillip A. Proger, Edward L. Fountain, Gregory G. Katsas, JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE, Washington, DC. Reed E. Hall, MARSHFIELD CLINIC, Marshfield, WI.

For AMERICAN GROUP PRACTICE ASSOCIATION, Amicus Curiae: Melinda Reid Hatton, Clifford D. Stromberg, HOGAN & HARTSON, Washington, DC. Kathleen Kenyon, AMERICAN GROUP PRACTICE ASSOCIATION, Alexandria, VA.

For HEALTH INSURANCE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, Amicus Curiae: Arthur N. Lerner, Robert S. Canterman, MICHAELS, WISHNER & BONNER, Washington, DC.

Judges: Before POSNER, Chief Judge, and BAUER and KANNE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: POSNER

Opinion

[*1408] POSNER, Chief Judge. Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin ("Blue Cross" for short), and its subsidiary, CompCare Health Services Insurance Corporation, a health maintenance organization (HMO), brought suit last year under sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, against the Marshfield Clinic and its HMO subsidiary, Security Health Plan of Wisconsin, Inc. After a two-week trial, the jury brought in a verdict for both plaintiffs that, after remittitur, trebling, and addition of attorneys' fees, produced a judgment just short of $ 20 million to which the judge then added a sweeping injunction that we have stayed pending the decision of the defendants' appeal, which we have heard on an expedited schedule. (The plaintiffs filed a cross-appeal, but it was dismissed by agreement of the parties.) The speed with which this complex case was brought to trial is as commendable as it is unusual.

The two plaintiffs [2] have distinct though overlapping claims. CompCare, Blue Cross's HMO, claims that the Marshfield Clinic--a nonprofit corporation owned by the 400 physicians whom it employs--has a monopoly which it acquired and has maintained by improper practices that have excluded CompCare from the HMO "market" in the counties of north central Wisconsin in which the Marshfield Clinic and its HMO subsidiary (Security) operate. This is a section 2 monopolization charge. Blue Cross claims that Marshfield, partly through its own monopoly power and partly by collusion with other providers of medical services, charged supracompetitive prices to patients insured by Blue Cross. This is a section 2 monopolization charge combined with a section 1 price-fixing and division-of-markets charge.

[*1409] Although Marshfield is a town of only 20,000 people in a largely rural region, the Marshfield Clinic is the fifth largest physician-owned clinic in North America, with annual revenues in excess of $ 200 million. The Clinic has its main office in Marshfield but it has 21 branch offices scattered throughout the 14 counties of north central Wisconsin. Oddly, we cannot find in the record, nor were counsel able to inform us [3] at argument, what percentage the 400 physicians employed by the Clinic comprise of all the physicians in the 14 counties. We do know that the Clinic employs all the physicians in Marshfield itself and in several other towns--but one of these towns has only one physician--and all the physicians in one entire county--but a county that has only 12 physicians. Security, the Marshfield Clinic's HMO subsidiary, serves its subscribers through the physicians employed by the Clinic plus almost 900 other physicians with whom Security has contracts. These contracts are not exclusive--the physicians are free to work for other HMOs as well as to practice fee-for-service medicine--and in fact work for Security generates only 6 percent of these physicians' total income. (CompCare argues that the 6 percent figure is found only in a study and testimony excluded from evidence, but our reading of the objection to the testimony and the ruling on that objection is that not the figure, but only the witness's effort to characterize it as insignificant, was excluded.) In nine of the 14 counties in the north central region, Security has more than 90 percent of all subscribers to HMOs.

Compcare persuaded the jury that HMOs constitute a separate market, much as banks are a separate market from currency exchanges; and if there is a reasonable basis for this finding in the evidence, we are bound to accept it regardless of what we might think as an original matter. But we have searched the record in [4] vain for evidence that under contemporary principles of antitrust law would justify such a finding. An HMO is not a distinctive organizational form or assemblage of skills, as is plain from the fact that the physicians retained by Security, whether they are employees of the Marshfield Clinic or completely independent, to serve its subscribers serve other patients on a fee-for-service basis. An HMO is basically a method of pricing medical services. Instead of having the patient pay separately for each medical procedure, the patient pays a fixed annual fee for all the services he needs and the HMO undertakes to provide those services with the physicians with whom it has contracts. The different method of pricing used by the HMO has, of course, consequences both for the practice of medicine and for the allocation of the risk of medical expenses. The method of pricing gives the HMO an incentive to minimize the procedures that it performs, since the marginal revenue it derives from each procedure is zero. Hence HMOs are thought to reduce "waste" and to encourage preventive care, although those hostile to the HMO concept believe that the principal effect is merely to reduce the amount of [5] medical care that patients receive. The risk-shifting feature of the concept lies in the fact that if a subscriber incurs above-average medical expenses, the excess cost is borne by the HMO rather than by the subscriber (or by his insurer, or more likely by both because of copayment and deductible provisions in the insurance policy), while if he incurs below-average medical expense the difference enures to the benefit of the HMO rather than to him or his insurer (or, again, both). To control the upside risk that it incurs, the HMO provides medical services through physicians with whom it has contracts specifying their compensation, rather than merely reimbursing some percentage of whatever fee they might happen to charge for their services. This means that the HMO must be able to line up enough physicians with whom to contract to provide its subscribers with a more or less complete menu of medical services. Compcare complains that Security's contracts with physicians require them to refer their patients to the Clinic rather than to "independent" physicians. But that is of the essence of an HMO: the subscriber must take the service offered by the physicians whom the HMO has enlisted.

[6] Compcare's principal argument is that Security has enlisted such a large fraction of the physicians in the 14-county north central region that Compcare cannot find enough "independent" physicians to be able to offer HMO services competitive with Security's--hence Security's huge market shares in 9 of the 14 counties. Supposing this is true--as [*1410] seems unlikely since Security's almost 900 independent physicians are available to join other HMOs, along with an unknown number of physicians neither employed by the Marshfield Clinic nor retained by Security-- it has monopolistic significance only if HMOs constitute a market separate from other contractual forms in which many of the same physicians sell their services. Of this we cannot find any evidence.

HN1 In defining a market, one must consider substitution both by buyers and by sellers, IIA Phillip E. Areeda, John L. Solow & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P 530a (1995), and let us start with buyers. The record shows, what is anyway well known, that individuals, and their employers, and medical insurers (the real "buyers" of medical services, according to the plaintiffs) regard [7] HMOs as competitive not only with each other but also with the various types of fee-for-service provider, including "preferred provider" plans (generally referred to as "PPOs," for "preferred provider organization") under which the insurer offers more generous reimbursement if the insured patronizes physicians who have contracts with the insurer to provide service at low cost to its insureds. HMOs, though they have made great strides in recent years because of the widespread concern with skyrocketing medical costs, remain relative upstarts in the market for physician services. Many people don't like them because of the restriction on the patient's choice of doctors or because they fear that HMOs skimp on service since, as we said, the marginal revenue of a medical procedure to an HMO is zero. From a short-term financial standpoint-- which we do not suggest is the only standpoint that an HMO is likely to have--the HMO's incentive is to keep you healthy if it can but if you get very sick, and are unlikely to recover to a healthy state involving few medical expenses, to let you die as quickly and cheaply as possible. HMOs compensate for these perceived drawbacks by charging a lower price [8] than fee-for-service plans.

We do not wish to associate ourselves with the critics of HMOs. All that is important to our consideration of this appeal is that many people believe--whether rightly or wrongly is of no moment--that HMOs are not an unalloyed blessing; and this means that the price that an HMO can charge is constrained not only by competition from other

HMOs but also by competition from forms of medical-services contracting that are free from the perceived perverse incentive effects of the HMO form. As far as we know or the record shows, even in areas where there is only one HMO most of the people in its service area do not subscribe to it even if its prices are lower than those of fee-for-service providers.

We do not understand Compcare to be contending that insurance companies cannot find enough physicians in the north central region willing to sign contracts with them to staff preferred-provider plans. This has a dual significance. Such plans are particularly close substitutes for HMOs, since they use the insurer's clout with physicians to drive down price. And if, as the record shows, they are feasible even in areas supposedly dominated by the Marshfield Clinic, and [9] even without including any physicians employed by the Clinic, it is impossible to understand what barrier there could be to the formation of HMOs. All that is needed is an array of physicians who among them provide a broad range of medical services, and the same thing is needed for a preferred-provider plan. Ability to create a preferred-provider plan therefore implies ability to create an HMO, and so implies in turn that if Security raised its prices above competitive levels, and if people had a strong preference for HMOs over preferred-provider plans despite the similarities between the two systems for providing medical care, the operators of those plans would convert them to HMOs. If so, those plans are part of the same market with HMOs. So Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Indiana argued in Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Ins., Inc., 784 F.2d 1325 \(7th Cir. 1986\), and we accepted its argument. Id. at 1331-37.

As we said earlier, HN2[[↑]] the definition of a market depends on substitutability on the supply side as well as on the demand side. Even if two products are completely different from the consumer's standpoint, if they are made by the same producers an increase in the [10] price of one that is not cost-justified will [*1411] induce producers to shift production from the other product to this one in order to increase their profits by selling at a supracompetitive price. SBC Communications Inc. v. FCC, 56 F.3d 1484, 1493-94 \(D.C. Cir. 1995\); cf. Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Ins., Inc., supra, 784 F.2d at 1335. The services offered by HMOs and by various fee-for-service plans are both provided by the same physicians, who can easily shift from one type of service to another if a change in relative prices makes one type more lucrative than others.

We thus do not believe that a reasonable jury, confronting the record compiled in the district court, could find that HMOs constitute a separate market. (We emphasize "record compiled in the district court." Terms such as "HMO" and "PPO" are used to refer to a variety of different types of plan, which may vary in respects crucial to antitrust liability.) Nor, if we examine a more plausible market such as all physician services in north central Wisconsin and thus shift our focus from Compcare, the HMO, to the Marshfield Clinic itself, is there any basis in the record for treating the Clinic not as the alliance of 400 physicians that is the Marshfield Clinic but instead as the almost 1300 physicians who are either employed by the Clinic or have contracts with Security. The 900 independent contractors derive [11] only a small fraction of their income from those contracts, as we have seen, and the contracts do not forbid them to join other HMOs or otherwise compete with Security or with the Marshfield Clinic.

It is true that because of the sparsity of the physician population in north central Wisconsin the physicians employed by the Clinic have a large share of the market for physician services, since, for primary care anyway (an important qualification--people will go a long way for a liver transplant), that market is a local one. Remember, there is one entire county in which all the physicians are employed by the Clinic. We do not understand Compcare to be arguing that this is the market that the Clinic monopolized; the damages to Compcare from being excluded (if it was excluded--we do not know) from that tiny market would be tiny. Compcare paints with a broader brush, drawing a dizzying series of concentric circles around the Clinic's offices and counting the physicians who can serve people living in the circles. It would have been much simpler and we suppose just as good--having in mind the desirability of avoiding a hunt for the snark of delusive exactness--to have treated the counties [12] as the markets. But whatever the precise method chosen, Compcare is unable to show that in what it chooses to regard as the relevant geographic market or series of linked geographic markets for physician services the Marshfield Clinic employed 50 percent or more of the physicians serving the market. And HN3[[↑]] 50 percent is below any accepted benchmark for inferring monopoly power from market share, United States v. Rockford Memorial Corp., 898 F.2d 1278, 1285 \(7th Cir. 1990\); Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries, Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 201-02 \(3d Cir. 1992\); Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co., 885 F.2d 683, 694 n. 18 \(10th Cir. 1989\); United States v. Aluminum

Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945) (L. Hand, J.), and the Clinic has given us no reason for lowering the mark. CompCare is able to derive larger shares only by defining submarkets of specific, very narrowly defined medical procedures, called "Diagnostic Related Groups," such as circumcision of a male 17 years old or older, circumcision of a male under 17, hysterectomy, and reconstructive surgery for the uterine system, in a few of which (14 out of 494, according to CompCare's expert witness) the physicians [13] employed by or under contract with Marshfield Clinic performed most of the procedures in north central Wisconsin. As the examples we have given show, classification in a DRG is unrelated to the conditions of supply. Many, no doubt most, physicians perform or are capable of performing more than one procedure, and are therefore part of the market even if at present not active in it. If the Clinic overprices a particular procedure, other physicians capable of performing that procedure will have an added incentive to do so, knocking down the excessive price.

CompCare also asked the jury to infer monopoly power directly from the Clinic's high prices, and high rate of return, relative to the prices and rates of return of its competitors. But HN4[¹⁴] when dealing with a heterogeneous [*1412] product or service, such as the full range of medical care, a reasonable finder of fact cannot infer monopoly power just from higher prices--the difference may reflect a higher quality more costly to provide--and it is always treacherous to try to infer monopoly power from a high rate of return. Taking the second point first, not only do measured rates of return reflect accounting conventions more than they do real [14] profits (or losses), as an economist would understand these terms, Susan Rose-Ackerman, "Unfair Competition and Corporate Income Taxation, 34 Stan. L. Rev. 1017, 1025 n. 28, 1031 n. 43 (1982); Michael Boudin, "Forensic Economics," 97 Harv. L. Rev. 835, 837 (1984), but there is not even a good economic theory that associates monopoly power with a high rate of return. Firms compete to become and to remain monopolists, and the process of competition erodes their profits. Conversely, competitive firms may be highly profitable merely by virtue of having low costs as a result of superior efficiency, yet not sufficiently lower costs than all other competitors to enable the firm to take over its market and become a monopolist. As for high prices, one of the complaints against HMOs, remember, is that they skimp on service. One HMO may charge higher prices than other HMOs (and Security does charge higher prices) not because it has a monopoly but because it is offering better service than the other HMOs in its market. CompCare itself stresses the quality of the Marshfield Clinic's doctors, as part of its argument that it cannot succeed unless the Clinic is forced to join it. Generally you must [15] pay more for higher quality.

So Security is not a monopolist of HMO services, because, subject to our earlier qualification, HMOs are not a market; and the Marshfield Clinic, its parent, is not a monopolist either because it does not control its independent contractors and once they are excluded, the Clinic (which is to say the physicians who own and are employed by it--who are the firm, functionally speaking) does not have a monopoly of physician services in the north central region or in any parts of the region other than parts too small to support more than a handful of physicians. If the Marshfield Clinic is a monopolist in any of these areas it is what is called a "natural monopolist," which is to say a firm that has no competitors simply because the market is too small to support more than a single firm. If an entire county has only 12 physicians, one can hardly expect or want them to set up in competition with each other. We live in the age of technology and specialization in medical services. Physicians practice in groups, in alliances, in networks, utilizing expensive equipment and support. Twelve physicians competing in a county would be competing to provide horse-and-buggy medicine. Only as part of a large and [16] sophisticated medical enterprise such as the Marshfield Clinic can they practice modern medicine in rural Wisconsin.

We are mindful that a concept of essential or bottleneck facilities has been used from time to time to require a natural monopolist to cooperate with would-be competitors. E.g., Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973); MCI Communications Corp. v. AT&T Corp., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132-33 (7th Cir. 1983). The principal case remains the old St. Louis terminal case. United States v. Terminal Railroad Ass'n, 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 (1912). A consortium of 14 of the 24 railroads that shipped freight across the Mississippi River at St. Louis got control of the terminal facilities at each side of the river. The Supreme Court, while assuming that the operation of these facilities as a single entity was the most efficient way to operate them (that is, they comprised a natural monopoly), held that the Sherman Act required the consortium to provide access to the terminal facilities to the 10 other railroads on nondiscriminatory terms. The decision, along with the rest of the decisions in the essential-facilities line, has been criticized as having nothing to do with the purposes [17] of antitrust law. E.g., Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy: The Law of Competition and

Its Practice § 7.7 (1994); Phillip Areeda, "Essential Facilities: An Epithet in Need of Limiting Principles," 58 Antitrust L.J. 841 (1990); Scott D. Makar, "The Essential Facilities Doctrine and the Health Care Industry," 21 Fla. St. U.L. Rev. 913 (1994). Had the terminal facilities been owned by a firm unaffiliated with any railroad, the firm could have charged whatever prices it wanted, including prices that discriminated against some of the users (monopolists frequently price discriminate), because the antitrust laws do not regulate [*1413] the prices of natural monopolists.

HN5 A natural monopolist that acquired and maintained its monopoly without excluding competitors by improper means is not guilty of "monopolizing" in violation of the Sherman Act, National Reporting Co. v. Alderson Reporting Co., 763 F.2d 1020, 1023-24 (8th Cir. 1985); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, 148 F.2d at 430, and can therefore charge any price that it wants, Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Ins., Inc., supra, 784 F.2d at 1339; Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 296-98 [18] (2d Cir. 1979), for the antitrust laws are not a price-control statute or a publicutility or common-carrier rate-regulation statute.

And the charging of a high price is, so far as potential competitors are concerned, an attracting rather than an excluding practice. Consumers are not better off if the natural monopolist is forced to share some of his profits with potential competitors, as required by Terminal Railroad Ass'n. Similarly, if the practice of medicine in some sparsely populated county of north central Wisconsin is a natural monopoly, consumers will not be helped by our forcing the handful of physicians there to affiliate with multiple HMOs. Those physicians will still charge fees reflecting their monopoly.

HN6 We are not authorized to abrogate doctrines that have been endorsed and not yet rejected by the Supreme Court--as we acknowledged, indeed emphasized, with specific reference to the "essential facilities" doctrine, in Olympia Equipment Leasing Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 797 F.2d 370, 376 (7th Cir. 1986)--but we do not understand Compcare to be trying to pin the tail on the naturalmonopoly donkey. Its argument is not that the Marshfield Clinic "owns" some tiny [19] natural monopolies scattered throughout its market area, to which it must admit Compcare, but that the Clinic itself is an essential facility that any HMO may demand access to on equal terms, like the excluded railroads in the terminal case. To be an essential facility, however, a facility must be essential. The terminal association controlled 100 percent of a market, assumed to be properly defined, consisting of terminal services at St. Louis. The Clinic does not control 100 percent--or even 50 percent--of any properly defined market. It did have a monopoly market share of the HMO "market," but we have held that that is not a proper market; and likewise the DRGs. Nor can the Clinic's market share be levered up to 100 percent by the argument that the Clinic's reputation is so superb that no one will sign up with an HMO or preferred-provider plan that does not have the Clinic on its roster. The suggestion that the price of being "best" is to be brought under the regulatory aegis of antitrust law and stripped of your power to decide whom to do business with does not identify an interest that the antitrust laws protect. "The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not [20] be turned upon when he wins." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, 148 F.2d at 430.

Since monopoly power was not proved, we need not evaluate the practices by which the Clinic acquired or maintained it. But we will not conceal our skepticism that they are exclusionary in an invidious sense. Compcare argues that the Clinic refused to allow its employees to "cross-cover" with "independent" physicians, in the sense of physicians not employed by or affiliated by contract with the Clinic (that is, agree to care for another physician's patients when that physician is on vacation or otherwise unavailable in exchange for a reciprocal agreement by the other physician), discouraged hospitals that its staff controlled from joining HMOs that compete with Security, and restricted staff privileges at those hospitals of "independent" physicians. All these practices are ambiguous from the standpoint of competition and efficiency. Hospitals are not public utilities, required to grant staff privileges to anyone with a medical license. The Marshfield Clinic's reputation for high quality implies selectivity in the granting of staff privileges at hospitals affiliated with the Clinic. Physicians [21] employed by the Clinic, which has its own HMO, are hardly to be expected to steer their patients to another HMO, as they would be doing if they used their control of hospital staffs to induce the hospital to join another HMO. [*1414] And given the extensive network constituted by the physicians either employed by or contracting with the Clinic, they would have little occasion to "cross-cover" with other physicians and would be reluctant to do so if, as is completely consistent with Compcare's version of the "essential facilities" doctrine, the Clinic maintains a reputation for high quality by being selective about the physicians to whom it entrusts its customers. But the important point is that, even if these practices are as we doubt tortious interferences with Compcare's business, they do not constitute monopolizing in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act in the absence of acceptable proof, here lacking, of monopoly power.

We turn to Blue Cross's case. Blue Cross claims that it was overcharged by the Clinic. Many of the individuals whom Blue Cross insures in north central Wisconsin are customers of the Marshfield Clinic, paying for the services they receive from the Clinic on a fee-for-service [\[22\]](#) basis. (The Clinic's doctors devote only a small part of their time to Security's HMO clientele.) Blue Cross pays the Clinic directly the portion of the fee that Blue Cross has agreed with its insureds to cover. The Clinic seeks to head off Blue Cross's claim at the pass, arguing that since the Clinic's fee-for-service contracts are with the patients themselves--it has no contract with Blue Cross--only the patients have "standing" (a term here not used in the jurisdictional sense, Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n. 31, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\)) to complain about the alleged overcharging.

If the patients paid the entire fees to the Clinic and then were reimbursed in whole or part by Blue Cross, the Clinic would be right: only the patients could sue. The Supreme Court has been emphatic that HNT[↑] only the direct purchaser from an allegedly overcharging defendant has standing to maintain an antitrust suit. Kansas v. Utilicorp United Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 \(1990\); Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\). But here the money went directly from Blue Cross to the Clinic, and although the two entities were not linked by any overarching [\[23\]](#) contract, each payment and acceptance was a separate completed contract. We do not think more is required to establish Blue Cross's right to sue to collect these overcharges. Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n v. Medical Service Ass'n, 815 F.2d 270, 276-77 \(3d Cir. 1987\); Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1455 \(11th Cir. 1991\); cf. Kartell v. Blue Shield of Mass., Inc., 749 F.2d 922, 926 \(1st Cir. 1984\). It would be cumbersome, to say the least, for patients of the Marshfield Clinic to organize into a class action to recover money that the patients never paid and that if they received in a judgment or settlement they would have to share with Blue Cross; for Blue Cross could seek and probably obtain restitution of moneys paid by mistake to the insureds because paid for expenses that the insureds had not in the end incurred. 2 George E. Palmer, The Law of Restitution § 11.2(d), p. 491 (1978); Home Ins. Co. v. Honaker, 480 A.2d 652 \(Del. 1984\); Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Graham, 576 N.E.2d 1332, 1336-37 \(Ind. App. 1991\).

Against this it can be argued that if Blue Cross reimburses an insured for say 80 percent of a $ 100 charge that should have been only $ 50, Blue Cross has lost [\[24\]](#) $ 40 but the insured has lost $ 10 and so there is still a basis for a class action. Still, in this example anyway it is Blue Cross that bears the lion's share of the loss, as well as being able to proceed on its own without the aggregation of separate plaintiffs required for a class action; and the class action would enable a full recovery of the damages inflicted by the defendant only if the class members received a tremendous windfall--only, that is, if the class is allowed to recover $ 40 rather than $ 10 (and the entire $ 50 will of course be trebled). It can further be argued that the insured might pay the whole $ 50, because Blue Cross would reduce the percentage that it reimburses in order to shift the cost of the monopolist's overcharge to the hapless insureds. But the insureds may not be hapless--may in fact be members of the employees' group insurance plan of a large employer with plenty of insurance options. We need not pursue these issues. Blue Cross paid [\[*1415\]](#) Marshfield Clinic directly, in accordance with Blue Cross's contractual obligations to its insureds, and if it paid too much because the Clinic violated the antitrust laws then it ought to be allowed to sue to recover [\[25\]](#) these damages.

We note a tension between Blue Cross's claim and Compcare's. Blue Cross claims that the Clinic overcharged. The higher its prices, the greater the opening for competitors, such as Compcare. Even if Compcare could not get a foothold in the HMO "market," it could, of course, provide medical services through other means, such as a preferred provider plan; and the higher the prices charged by the Marshfield Clinic, the more attractive such a plan offered by Compcare would be to employers and other purchasers of medical plans. To put the point differently, Blue Cross has a dual role in this case, as a buyer of medical services from Marshfield Clinic and, through its Compcare subsidiary, as a competitor of the Clinic. As a competitor its interest is in the Clinic's charging high prices, but as a buyer its interest is in the Clinic's charging low prices. Damages to Compcare are windfalls to Blue Cross, and vice versa. The damages awarded by the jury to the two plaintiffs (since they are economically one entity) should have been netted against each other rather than aggregated.

But that is a detail, since Compcare, for the reasons discussed earlier, was not entitled to recover [26] any damages at all. Forget Compcare, then, and think of Blue Cross solely as a purchaser of medical services. Insofar as it paid high prices because the Marshfield Clinic was a monopolist, its claim must fail because the Clinic was not shown to be an illegal monopolist; a lawful monopolist can charge what it wants. But Blue Cross also claims that the Clinic colluded with competitors to raise prices above competitive levels. That claim is independent of the Clinic's being a monopolist.

Two forms of collusion are charged, with various furbelows and arabasques that can be ignored. The first is collusion between the Clinic and its affiliated (as distinct from employed) physicians. Here the tension between the two plaintiffs' cases again comes to the surface, since it will be recalled that Compcare in its case treats the affiliated physicians as a part of the Clinic, and a firm cannot collude with itself. Forget all that; the only evidence of collusion is that the Clinic, when buying services from the affiliated physicians either directly or through Security, would not pay them more than what these physicians charge their other patients. This is said to set a floor underneath these physicians' [27] prices, since if they cut prices to their other patients their reimbursement from the Clinic will decline automatically. This is an ingenious but perverse argument. "Most favored nations" clauses are standard devices by which buyers try to bargain for low prices, by getting the seller to agree to treat them as favorably as any of their other customers. The Clinic did this to minimize the cost of these physicians to it, and that is the sort of conduct that the antitrust laws seek to encourage. It is not price-fixing. Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2589-90 \(1993\); Hospital Corp. of America v. FTC, 807 F.2d 1381, 1392 \(7th Cir. 1986\); Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hospital Ins., Inc., supra, 784 F.2d at 1338. Perhaps, as the Department of Justice believes, these clauses are misused to anticompetitive ends in some cases; but there is no evidence of that in this case.

The other form of collusion alleged is more troublesome. The Clinic is said to have agreed with some of its competitors, in particular the North Central Health Protection Plan, an HMO that had 37,000 subscribers, HN8 to divide markets, a practice that violates section 1 of the Sherman Act. Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 \(1990\) (per curiam). The analogy between price-fixing and division of markets is compelling. It would be [28] a strange interpretation of antitrust law that forbade competitors to agree on what price to charge, thus eliminating price competition among them, but allowed them to divide markets, thus eliminating all competition among them.

The charge of a division of markets in this case is backed up by some pretty strong documents. In one of them an executive of the Marshfield Clinic, after noting that "at [*1416] the time in which management of Marshfield Clinic and North Central Health Protection Plan established the Free Flow arrangements, the parties involved purposely chose not to place in writing clear descriptions of their respective Plan service areas so as to minimize any risk in terms of violation of antitrust laws," remarks that some years ago physicians affiliated with the NCHPP "wished to establish a practice in Marshfield and we took the position that the Free Flow agreement did not support that activity"--and they backed off. The implications of this only slightly Aesopian wording are backed up by statistics showing that Security had fewer than 30 percent of the HMO subscribers in the two counties in which NCHPP was active, while in the counties surrounding those two counties on three [29] sides it had more than 90 percent of the HMO subscribers.

We think the evidence of a division of markets, though a little scanty, was sufficient to sustain the jury's verdict on this (and only this) aspect of the case--provided this is not one of those cases in which a division of markets or other cartel-like activity is actually essential to the provision of a lawful service. Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\); National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\); General Leaseways, Inc. v. National Truck Leasing Ass'n, 744 F.2d 588 \(7th Cir. 1984\). The "Free Flow" agreement to which the document from which we quoted refers was an agreement whereby Security's physicians and NCHPP's physicians could refer patients to each other without getting the permission of their superiors. The plan of the physician who rendered the service would bill the other plan for its cost. This was no doubt a valuable service, expanding the range of physicians to whom people enrolled in these two HMOs could turn. But the Clinic has failed to explain why, to provide this service, it was necessary for the two plans to agree not to open offices [30] in each other's territories. We can imagine an argument that would run as follows: if NCHPP, say, opened an office in Marshfield, the doctors staffing that office would constantly be referring patients to the Clinic because it has such a plethora of doctors in Marshfield (remember that it employs all the doctors working in that town). The office would be running a referral business, "free riding" on the reputation and quality of Marshfield's doctors, and perhaps it would be difficult to devise a reimbursement plan under which these doctors would be compensated for these services. It is not a bad argument, but it is not made by the Clinic and it has no support in the record.

We conclude that the jury verdict on liability must stand insofar as the charge of a division of markets is concerned, and therefore the provisions of the injunction (IV(A)(3), (B)(3), (C)(3), (D)(3), and (E)(2), and V(D)(1)--and possibly others; but for the sake of clarity and completeness the injunction ought to be rewritten from scratch in light of our invalidating most of it) that forbid the Clinic to divide markets with competing plans or groups. The rest of the injunction falls with the charges that we have [\[31\]](#) held to be without legal or factual basis. No part of the award of damages or of costs and attorneys' fees can stand, because these items were not segregated by offense. There must be a new trial limited to damages for dividing markets. The burden will be on Blue Cross to show how much less it would have paid the Clinic had the Clinic refrained from that illegal practice.

We have not discussed every contention of the parties, but have said enough to indicate the basis for our decision. As a detail, we urge the bench and bar of this circuit not to imitate the special verdict on liability that went to the jury in this case. The verdict form contained 18 questions. If the jury wanted to find for the plaintiff on every contested point, all it had to do (and all it did do) was write "yes" 18 times. A verdict so configured, like a plea colloquy in which the answer that the defendant is expected to give to every one of the judge's questions is "yes," Castillo v. United States, 34 F.3d 443, 445 \(7th Cir. 1994\), invites rote answers rather than the careful consideration of the structure of the plaintiff's case that the use of a special verdict is intended to foster. Cf. [W.T. Rogers Co. v. \[\\[321\\] Keene, 778 F.2d 334, 346 \\(7th Cir. 1985\\)\]\(#\)](#). None of the purposes ascribed to the giving of a special verdict, [*Stewart & Stevenson Services, Inc. v. Pickard, \[\\[1417\\] 749 F.2d 635, 644 \\(11th Cir. 1984\\)\]\(#\)](#); 9A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2508 (1995), of which probably the most important is to minimize the likelihood or scope of a retrial in a case in which there is more than one independent ground for recovery, are served by a verdict form that does not invite the jurors to use their heads. Given the broad discretion of the trial judge in the formulation of special verdicts, e.g., Hibma v. Odegaard, 769 F.2d 1147, 1157 \(7th Cir. 1985\), and the fact that no objection was made to the form employed here, we do not suggest that this form would have constituted reversible error if the point had been argued; we merely offer for what it is worth our belief that it is not the best possible form, because it does not force the jurors to think before filling it out.

The judgment is affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. Costs on appeal to the appellants.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN [\[33\]](#) PART, AND REMANDED.

Great W. Directories v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

September 20, 1995, Decided

No. 93-1715

Reporter

63 F.3d 1378 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 26749 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,123

GREAT WESTERN DIRECTORIES, INC., Plaintiff-Appellee-Cross Appellant, v. SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY, et al., Defendants-Appellants-Cross Appellees. CANYON DIRECTORIES, INC., Plaintiff-Appellee-Cross Appellant, v. SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY, et al., Defendants-Appellants-Cross Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) As Corrected. Rehearing of Great Western Directories, Inc., Denied and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc and Rehearing of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, et al, Granted in Part January 26, 1996, Reported at: 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 1113.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. D.C. DOCKET NUMBER 2:88-CV-0218 c/w 2:89-0003. JUDGE Mary Lou Robinson.

Core Terms

directory, Telephone, district court, exclusionary, antitrust, prices, injunction, monopoly, advertising, anticompetitive, markets, monopoly power, competitors, damages, increased price, updates, margin, yellow pages, publisher, listings, factors, preparedness, preparation, customers, abandon, costs, telephone directory, no evidence, accomplish, monopolize

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews a district court's refusal to grant a judgment as a matter of law de novo, applying the same standards as the district court.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2 Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

The district court, in entertaining a directed verdict, views the evidence in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is made.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Appeals, Standards of Review

The appellate court must consider the evidence in its strongest light in favor of the party against whom the directed verdict motion was made, and must give him the advantage of every fair and reasonable intendment that the evidence can justify.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Judgment as Matter of Law, Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

A judgment notwithstanding the verdict should be granted by the trial court only when the facts and inferences point so strongly and overwhelmingly in favor of the moving party that a reasonable juror could not arrive at a contrary verdict, while viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmovant and giving that party the advantage of every fair and reasonable inference that the evidence justifies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The offense of monopoly under the Sherman Act § 2 consists of two elements: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as opposed to acquiring market dominance through competitively desirable means or through events beyond its control.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition. Several factors are determinative of a finding of monopoly power: high market share, affirmative actions that have excluded actual or potential competitors, profit levels, and barriers that would thwart entry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN7 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The purpose of the market definition and market power inquiry is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse affects on competition. Proof of actual detrimental effects can obviate the need for the inquiry into market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN8 Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

In addition to establishing the existence of monopoly power under the Sherman Act § 2, it must be demonstrated that appellants "willfully" acquired or maintained their monopoly power. This involves an inquiry as to whether appellants acquired or exploited their monopoly power through competitively undesirable means. Specific intent to maintain a monopoly power is not required; however, it is relevant in determining whether the challenged conduct is exclusionary or anticompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Sherman Act, Claims

An attempted monopoly in violation of the Sherman Act § 2 consists of 3 elements: (1) a showing that the appellants have engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct, (2) proof that the appellants specifically intended to acquire monopoly power in the relevant market, and (3) a dangerous probability that an actual monopoly position will ultimately be achieved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN10 Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Predatory or anticompetitive conduct is that which unfairly tends to be exclusionary or tends to destroy competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Specific intent is the intent to accomplish the forbidden objective, an intent that goes beyond the mere intent to do the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Intent may be inferred by anticompetitive practices or proven by direct evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The dangerous probability of achieving an actual monopoly position is customarily assessed by looking at the appellants' market share. If the appellants possess a large share, it will likely be concluded that appellants' conduct, if undeterred, will result in an actual monopoly. Control of key materials is also determinative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Proof that the appellants' market share is minimal will result in a finding that an actual monopoly is improbable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Under the Sherman Act § 2, both a claim of monopoly and a claim of attempted monopoly, proscribes exclusionary conduct. Injury to competition is not an element of § 2. However, as a practical matter, evidence of an injury must exist if appellees are to obtain damages. Additionally, evidence of injury to competition supports a finding of exclusionary conduct. Nevertheless, the proper inquiry is whether appellants engaged in exclusionary, anticompetitive, or predatory conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Exclusionary conduct is conduct that tends to exclude or restrict competition and is not supported by a valid business reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Exclusionary conduct comprehends behavior that not only tends to impair the opportunities but also does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

An attempt to exclude or actual exclusion is conduct based on something other than efficiency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Antitrust law does not require appellees to prove that appellants' conduct totally eliminated all competition or made it so unprofitable as to eliminate appellees as competitors. The appellees are required to show that the monopolists' unjust conduct handicapped their competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

It is not necessary to exclude competitors to be guilty of monopolization.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

When a firm displays an anticompetitive animus in the operation of an otherwise ambiguous business practice, what the firm seeks to accomplish provides as sure an indicator of the actual effect of the practice on competition as can be found in the shifting sands of antitrust litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

63 F.3d 1378, *1378 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 26749, 1

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN22 [💡] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Where the appellants' acts are motivated by intent to injure the plaintiff, the inferential leap to the finding of fact of damage is not great.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN23 [💡] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To establish a business or property interest protected by the Sherman Act § 4, appellees must show that they intended and were prepared to enter the market they abandoned.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24 [💡] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In assessing a company's preparedness to expand, courts have looked to several factors: the ability of appellees to finance the business and purchase the necessary facilities and equipment, consummation of contracts by appellees, affirmative action by appellees to enter the business, and background and experience in the prospective business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN25 [💡] Private Actions, Standing

There is typically a lack of standing where appellees lack evidence on all the preparedness factors. However, not every appellee in every case must show all four of the factors to merit standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN26 [💡] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

There is lack of preparedness to enter new market when no contracts consummated and no financing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN27 [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Experience in proposed business operation, unaccompanied by contracts and financing, are not enough to establish "business or property" interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN28 [blue document icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Even though antitrust appellees operate a going concern, they must demonstrate their preparedness and intent to expand that business into a new market if they claim that the expansion of that business into a new market has been foreclosed to them by the monopolistic activities of the appellants.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN29 [blue document icon] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

The appellate court reviews the propriety of a district court's decision to issue a permanent injunction for an abuse of discretion. The factual underpinnings are reviewed for clear error, while the application of legal principles is reviewed de novo.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Trials > Bench Trials

HN30 [blue document icon] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A district court that adopts one party's suggested findings essentially verbatim leaves doubt whether it has discharged its duty to review the evidence for itself and reached its decision on the basis of its own evaluation for the evidence rather than that of an advocate.

Counsel: ATTORNEYS FOR APPELLANTS: John W. Kelly, Jr., Bellaire, TX. VINSON & ELKINS, Harry M. Reasoner, John L. Murchison, Jr., Houston, TX. SPROUSE, MOZOLA, SMITH & ROWLEY, Harlow Sprouse, Amarillo, TX.

ATTORNEY FOR APPELLEE: John W. Reeder, Plano, TX. Nancy J. Stone, Amarillo, TX. PHELPS DUNBAR, Luther T. Munford, Todd C. Richter, Jackson, MS.

AMICUS CURIAE: ASSOCIATION OF DIRECTORY PUBLISHERS, WILLKIE, FARR & GALLAGHER, Theodore Case Whitehoue, David Paul Murray, WASH/D.C.

Judges: Before WISDOM, REYNALDO G. GARZA and GARWOOD, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: REYNALDO G. GARZA

Opinion

[*1382] REYNALDO G. GARZA, Circuit Judge:

I. Summary and Procedural History

Plaintiffs-Appellees, Great Western Directories, Inc. (Great Western) and Canyon Directories, Inc. (Canyon), filed suit alleging that Defendants-Appellants, Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, et al. (collectively, "SWB"), violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, violated the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act, violated the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act, and tortiously interfered with business relations. Appellants allegedly orchestrated an "affiliation wide concerted action" to extend the SWB monopoly of the yellow pages market and to eliminate competition by raising the costs of doing business as an independent directory and by reducing the price of advertising in its wholly owned classified directory by 40%.

A jury returned a verdict in favor of Great Western and Canyon. The jury found damages of $ 5 million on Great Western's antitrust claims, $ 50,000 in actual and $ 50,000 in additional damages on its DTPA [2] claims, and $ 50,000 in actual and $ 50,000 in punitive damages for its tortious interference claims. The jury found damages of $ 9,400 on Canyon's antitrust claims, $ 10,000 in actual and $ 10,000 in additional damages under its DTPA claims, and $ 10,000 in actual and $ 10,000 in punitive damages on its tortious interference claims. Both plaintiffs were awarded attorneys' fees.

Following the verdict, Appellants moved for JNOV and for a new trial. On July 27, 1990, the district court entered judgment on the verdict, awarding Great Western $ 15 million and Canyon $ 28,200 in trebled antitrust damages and awarding both plaintiffs attorneys' fees; no damage award was made on the state law claims. On May 8, 1992, the [*1383] district court held a hearing on Appellees' motion for injunctive relief and on Appellants' motions for judgment as a matter of law and new trial. On July 2, 1993, the district court entered a final judgment granting a permanent injunction and denying Appellants' post-trial motions.

On July 9, 1993, Appellants filed a motion to stay the injunction pending appeal. On July 29, 1993, Appellants filed its notice of appeal. On December 7, 1993, the district court entered its [3] final judgment, denied Appellants' motion for stay, and refused to extend its injunction beyond the parties.

II. Parties and Subject Matter

Southwestern Bell Corporation (SWB) is a holding company; Southwestern Bell Telephone Company (Telephone), SWB's wholly owned subsidiary, provides telephone service to its customers in Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Texas. Telephone publishes and provides the "white pages" to its telephone customers. In order to publish the white pages Telephone must compile and maintain a database of names, addresses, and telephone numbers of all its customers. This compilation is known in the telecommunications world as directory listing information (DLI).

Southwestern Bell Yellow Pages (Yellow Pages), another wholly owned subsidiary of SWB, licenses DLI¹ from Telephone for use in publishing its classified, or yellow pages, directory. Telephone licenses DLI to independent publishers, such as Great Western and Canyon. Great Western is based in Amarillo, Texas and publishes a competing yellow pages (classified) directory in eleven cities in Texas and Oklahoma. Canyon publishes a single directory in Canyon, Texas (near Amarillo). Canyon [4] is a "niche" publisher whose directory caters to local advertisers who do not need to advertise outside of their immediate geographic area.

¹ DLI is provided in a variety of formats. One form is known as the "book on the street" paper or "BOS-paper". BOS-paper is a published compilation of names, addresses and telephone numbers, that is, the white pages. Another format is known as "subscriber listing update service" (update service). The update service consists of two components. The first component, the "initial load", is a copy of Telephone's DLI on magnetic tape as of a given date. The second component, the "updates", is a monthly update of the initial load.

III. Facts

Appellants and Appellees paint distinctly different pictures of the facts in this case. However, some facts are uncontested. In June 1988 Yellow Pages improved its classified directories in certain markets and instituted a rate reduction in Amarillo. The rate reduction consisted of a 40% across-the-board reduction in advertising rates [5] as well as various incentives enabling advertisers who maintained existing expenditure levels to receive additional advertising. Effective January 1, 1989, Telephone increased its DLI prices from $ 0.30 to $ 0.50 for the initial load, and the update to $ 1.00.

The incidents leading up to the rate reduction and the DLI price increase are hotly contested as are the effects. Appellants and Appellees each give their own economic explanation of the causes and effects of the changes instituted by SWB. Briefly, Appellees contend SWB adopted a strategy to eliminate the competition and slow their declining market share. This was accomplished by a two-prong attack--raising the prices and imposing restrictive conditions on the sale of the DLI, while at the same time improving the quality of telephone directories published by Yellow Pages and reducing the prices charged for the advertisements. Because Great Western operates at a low marginal profit of two percent of its sales, reflecting its emphasis on expansion, the change in DLI prices forced Great Western out of its Richardson market and prevented it from entering its Little Rock market.

Appellants, on the other hand, contend that Yellow [6] Pages' share of the advertising directory market was shrinking, and accordingly made improvements to their directories and instituted a rate reduction of 40% in Amarillo on a trial basis. Pursuant to studies conducted of DLI prices in other markets, Telephone decided to increase its DLI price. Appellees continued to compete; in fact, Appellees' revenues and market shares increased after the DLI price change. Great [*1384] Western's decision to abandon Richardson and not to enter Little Rock was based on their fear that SWB would increase its DLI prices in the future.

IV. Summary of the Law

Standard of Review

HN1[] This Court reviews a district court's refusal to grant a judgment as a matter of law de novo, applying the same standards as the district court. HN2[] The trial court, in entertaining a directed verdict, views the evidence in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is made. HN3[] On appeal, this Court must consider the evidence in its strongest light in favor of the party against whom the motion was made, and must give him the advantage of every fair and reasonable intendment that the evidence can justify.² HN4[] A judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) should [7] be granted by the trial court only when the facts and inferences point so strongly and overwhelmingly in favor of the moving party that a reasonable juror could not arrive at a contrary verdict, [while] viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmovant and giving that party the advantage of every fair and reasonable inference that the evidence justifies.³

Antitrust Law

Appellees raised two Section 2 claims: monopoly and attempted monopoly. They contend that Appellants violated Section 2 under both of these theories by abusing an essential facility and through market leveraging. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Appellees finding that:

(1) defendants monopolized and attempted to monopolize the alleged relevant markets for telephone directory advertising by denying reasonable [8] access to an essential facility, that is, Telephone's DLI;

² Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 696, n. 6, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 1409, n. 6, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 \(1962\).

³ Spuler v. Pickar, 958 F.2d 103, 105 \(5th Cir.1992\).

(2) defendants monopolized the same alleged markets by leveraging monopoly power over DLI in an illegal restraint of competition in the telephone directory advertising markets; and
 (3) defendants attempted to monopolize the alleged telephone directory advertising markets by increasing the price of DLI to Yellow Pages and its competitors while at the same time substantially reducing Yellow Pages' rates for telephone directory advertising and substantially enhancing its directories.

HN5[] The offense of monopoly under Section 2 consists of two elements: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as opposed to acquiring market dominance through competitively desirable means or through events beyond its control.⁴ HN6[] Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition.⁵ Several factors are determinative of a finding of monopoly power: high market share,⁶ affirmative actions that have excluded actual or potential competitors, profit levels, and barriers that would thwart entry.⁷ It should be noted that HN7[] the purpose [9] of the market definition and market power inquiry is to determine whether an arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse affects on competition. Proof of actual detrimental effects can obviate the need for the inquiry into market power.⁸

HN8[] In addition to establishing the existence of monopoly power, it must be [*1385] demonstrated that the defendant "willfully" acquired or maintained its monopoly power. This involves an inquiry as to whether the defendant has acquired or exploited its monopoly [10] power through competitively undesirable means. What are undesirable means? The responses of the courts were to distinguish between those exclusionary effects that are inherent in the forces of free competition and those that are substantially enhanced or made possible by the possession and exploitation of monopoly power. Specific intent to maintain a monopoly power is not required; however, it is relevant in determining whether the challenged conduct is exclusionary or anticompetitive.

HN9[] An attempted monopoly in violation of Section 2 consists of 3 elements: (1) a showing that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct, (2) proof that the defendant specifically intended to acquire monopoly power in the relevant market, and (3) a dangerous probability that an actual monopoly position will ultimately be achieved. HN10[] Predatory or anticompetitive conduct is that which unfairly tends to be exclusionary or tends to destroy competition. HN11[] Specific intent is the intent to accomplish the forbidden objective, an intent that goes beyond the mere intent to do the act. HN12[] Intent may be inferred by anticompetitive practices or proven by direct evidence. HN13[] Dangerous probability of achieving [11] an actual monopoly position is customarily assessed by looking at the defendant's market share. If the defendant possesses a large share, it will likely be concluded that the defendant's conduct, if undeterred, will result in an actual monopoly.⁹ Control of key materials is also determinative.

V. Discussion

Exclusionary Conduct

⁴ United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966).

⁵ United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1005, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

⁶ Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481-83, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2090, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992).

⁷ WILLIAM C. HOLMES, ANTITRUST LAW HANDBOOK, 352-53 (1994 ed.).

⁸ FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986).

⁹ See e.g. Advanced Health Care Serv. v. Radford Comm. Hosp., 910 F.2d 139 (4th Cir.1990) (85 percent); Movie 1 & 2 v. United Artists Communications, Inc., 909 F.2d 1245 (9th Cir.1990) (96 percent); United States v. American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114 (5th Cir.1984). In contrast, HN14[] proof that the defendant's share is minimal will result in a finding that an actual monopoly is improbable. See, e.g., Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d 1413 (6th Cir.1990) (30 percent declining share); C.A.T. Industrial Disposal, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Industries, 884 F.2d 209 (5th Cir.1989) (10 percent market share insufficient as a matter of law).

Appellants [12] argue that under both a monopoly or attempted monopoly theory, Appellees must show that Appellants' conduct was improperly exclusionary, that is, that the conduct caused injury to competition.¹⁰ Because Canyon and Great Western continued to profit after the price increase, and because Great Western could have profitably expanded, Appellants argue there is no evidence to show that Appellants' conduct was exclusionary. This is Appellants' main argument and it is pervasive throughout its brief.

Appellants contend that in order for Appellees to succeed under a Section 2 antitrust claim, they must present evidence of injury to competition. This is not entirely true. [13] Section 2, under HN15¹¹ both a claim of monopoly and a claim of attempted monopoly, proscribes exclusionary conduct. Injury to competition is NOT an element of Section 2. "Proving an injury to competition is not an element of a monopolization-based antitrust claim."¹² However, as a practical matter, evidence of an injury must exist if Appellees are to obtain damages.¹³ Additionally, evidence of injury to competition supports a finding of exclusionary conduct. Nevertheless, the proper inquiry is whether Appellants engaged in exclusionary, anticompetitive, or predatory conduct.

HN16¹⁴ Exclusionary conduct is conduct that tends to exclude or restrict competition and is not supported by a valid business reason. HN17¹⁵ Exclusionary conduct comprehends behavior that not only tends to impair the [*1386] opportunities but also does not further [14] competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way.¹⁶ HN18¹⁷ An attempt to exclude or actual exclusion is conduct based on something other than efficiency, that is, without a valid business purpose. HN19¹⁸ Antitrust law does not require a plaintiff to prove that the defendant's conduct totally eliminated all competition or made it so unprofitable as to eliminate the plaintiff as a competitor. The plaintiff is required to show that a monopolist's unjust conduct handicapped its competitors.¹⁹ HN20²⁰ It is not necessary to exclude competitors to be guilty of monopolization.²¹

[15] Appellants' argument, that the DLI price increase had no adverse effect on competition and was not exclusionary, is not supported by the evidence taken in the light most favorable to Appellees. Appellees identify extensive evidence, if believed by the jury, that precludes a judgment as a matter of law. First, a jury could find that SWB's purpose in raising the DLI price and imposing more restrictive terms was to recapture its market share, to prevent expansion of current independents, and to prevent new independents from entering the market. SWB identified one of its competitive weaknesses as "low start-up costs" for independents. "Competitor's low margin and high risk strategy leaves [them] vulnerable to expense driven attacks."²² The only cost or expense for independents that SWB controlled was the price of DLI. SWB long since recognized that DLI was "vital to the publishing industry" and "without sharing this updated information with competing directory publishers, telephone companies are able to leverage their monopoly position in the telephone service area into the competitive directory market."²³ Most telling is the evidence indicating that Kaufman, Yellow Pages' president, [16] suggested a DLI

¹⁰ Although the jury found Appellant liable under several theories of antitrust law, including monopoly, attempted monopoly, leveraging, and unreasonable denial of an essential facility, the briefs focus on the issue of exclusionary conduct and anticompetitive effect. Because exclusionary conduct is the linchpin in this case, we will focus upon it.

¹¹ Mahone v. Addicks Utility Dist. of Harris County, 836 F.2d 921, 939 (5th Cir.1988).

¹² See id. (recognizing that Section 4 of the Clayton Act comes with a specific injury requirement).

¹³ Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605 n. 32, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 2859 n. 32, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985).

¹⁴ Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S. at 605, 105 S. Ct. at 2858.

¹⁵ Hanover Shoe v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 496, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 2233, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968); see also Poster Exchange v. National Screen Service Corp., 431 F.2d 334, 339 n. 13 (5th Cir.1970) (holding that a monopolist's decision to charge retail prices to competing wholesaler was unlawful if done "to gain a competitive advantage").

¹⁶ Although the planning documents from which these quotes were taken do not specifically recommend increasing the price of DLI, a jury could easily make the inferential hop.

price increase.¹⁸ An expert of economics testified that increasing Yellow Pages' own cost of production was "economically irrational but for its anti-competitive effect [on independents]."¹⁹ Later, Kaufman questioned why the DLI had been raised to $ 1.00 when it could have been even higher so that "we might [be able] to ... get rid of some publishers." A jury could find that by raising the cost of production SWB intended to "get rid of" some of the low margin competitors, and thereby, capture even more of the directory market.

[17] In *Lehrman v. Gulf Oil Corp.*²⁰ this Court discussed the difficulty of determining whether a business's practices are anticompetitive.

Few business practices are anticompetitive on their face.... The circumstances surrounding the use of a particular business practice give strong clues as to what those who employ the practice hope to accomplish by it, and what those individuals hope to accomplish may shed light on whether the practice does in fact have the hoped for ... anticompetitive effect. In short, HN21 when a firm displays an anticompetitive animus in the operation of an otherwise ambiguous business practice, what the firm seeks to [\[*1387\]](#) accomplish provides as sure an indicator of the actual effect of the practice on competition as can be found in the shifting sands of antitrust litigation.

There is some evidence, from studies undertaken by SWB and comments made by Kaufman, that the price [\[18\]](#) increase was intended to restrict the competition. Appellants argue correctly that this is not a substitute for exclusionary conduct or injury to competition. Nevertheless, it is one more "indicator" of SWB's exclusionary conduct the jury can take into account.

Second, there is evidence that other Companies' DLI prices were only one-third of the price Telephone was charging, and that the terms at which SWB offered the listings were restrictive. For small independents, like Canyon, SWB's required purchase of the entire directory even if the publisher only wanted small portions of the listings, substantially increased the fixed costs of operation. Independents were required to purchase both the residential and business updates; independents also had to contract to take updates for a period of two years; and if the publisher stopped taking updates within the two years, the publisher could not obtain listings again for another two years.²¹

[19] Third, the evidence supports a finding that Appellants' conduct had an anti-competitive effect on the market. Both the number of publishers' licensing listings and the number of competitive directories sharply declined. The price increase threatened to put Canyon out of business, forced it to increase prices to advertisers--adversely affecting the consumer, and reduced its number of customers. The change contributed to Great Western's decline in profit margin, forced its withdrawal from Richardson, forced it to abandon its plans to enter Little Rock, and halted its historical pattern of entering two to three markets per year. Canyon's and Great Western's continued survival does not preclude them of a remedy.

¹⁷ Affidavit of former Yellow Pages President A.C. Parsons.

¹⁸ Several individuals testified at trial that Kaufman suggested looking into DLI prices to increase Telephone's revenues.

¹⁹ SWB argues on appeal that by passing this cost on to the independents, it can thereby reduce the amount of basic telephone service to its customers. This was argument was not presented to the jury and the district court found it meritless, as do we. We cannot say as a matter of law that this post-trial explanation accurately stated the true purpose and effect of the DLI price increase.

²⁰ 464 F.2d 26, 38 n. 9 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1077, 93 S. Ct. 687, 34 L. Ed. 2d 665 \(1972\).

²¹ After the district court questioned the two year requirement at a preliminary injunction hearing, SWB reduced the two year obligation to two months. For the two month period, independents had to purchase both business and residential listings; thereafter, they could purchase updates for business only or both.

The crux of Appellants' argument is the contention that Appellees failed to show an antitrust injury. Appellants contend that Great Western not only profited after the DLI price increase, but its profits increased over the previous year. Appellees maintain that the DLI price increased the costs of listings to Great Western as percentage of its sales from 1.87% to 4.56%, exceeding Great Western's 2% profit margin. In other words, Great Western could not maintain its previous increasing [20] rate of expansion and retain its 2% marginal profit. The issue becomes whether this is an injury. Appellees' profits increased in 1989, just not as much as they would have; and for a low profit margin competitor, the price increase halted Great Western's expansion.

*Pierce v. Ramsey Winch Co.*²² is helpful in shedding light upon this issue. In Pierce the plaintiff was a distributor of, among other things, Ramsey cranes. Because Pierce bought the cranes at a substantial discount, due to large purchases made in cash, Pierce was able to sell them individually at a lower price than the manufacturer Ramsey. Therefore, Ramsey refused to supply them to Pierce. Pierce proceeded to buy them from another manufacturer and also focused on other products. After the supply termination, Pierce was able to operate at a profit level even higher than when selling Ramsey cranes. This Court held that despite the increase in profit, Pierce could still establish an antitrust injury by showing it would have earned an even higher profit selling Ramsey cranes but for the actions of Ramsey. Appellees argue analogously that they suffered a similar injury; but for SWB's DLI price increase, Great Western [21] and Canyon would have earned an even higher profit.

The issue before this Court is whether Great Western and Canyon suffered an antitrust injury despite an increase in profit. We find that they did. There is sufficient evidence of exclusionary conduct and intent to exclude. This evidence coupled with the fact that Appellees, low profit margin competitors, [*1388] could have profited more than they did leads this Court to conclude that these actions were sufficient to establish an antitrust injury under Pierce.

Opportunity Lost

Appellants contend the district court erred in denying its motion for directed verdict against Great Western for two reasons. First, Great Western's fear of future price increases is too speculative to support a damage award for abandoning the Richardson market and failing to enter the Little Rock market. Second, Great Western has no standing to sue for its failure to enter Little Rock. We will discuss each in turn.

There is no evidence, Appellants [22] argue, that Great Western could not compete in Little Rock and Richardson at the existing DLI prices. In fact, the district court acknowledged that it was the fear of future price increases, not present DLI prices, that forced Great Western to abandon Richardson and Little Rock. Great Western's claims are not ripe. Appellants contend if Telephone raised DLI prices to exclusionary levels in the future, then Great Western would be entitled to relief.

The court instructed the jury not to award damages unless they were in fact attributable to the alleged wrongful conduct. The jury could find and the court did find that the enhanced investment risk was a material cause of Great Western's abandonment of Richardson and failure to enter Little Rock. Additionally, this Court stated that in cases HN22²³ where the defendant's acts are motivated by intent to injure the plaintiff, the inferential leap to the finding of fact of damage is not great.²³ The district court found "the harm to Great Western and to fair competition was caused by what Defendants did and by what Great Western knew they wanted to do, would do, and could continue doing without legal redress being sought." The evidence reveals [23] that SWB had tripled its DLI prices twice within four years and implemented conditions designed to deter new entry. An expert witness testified that investment decisions necessarily take into account risk. The value of a Little Rock entry before the DLI increase was reasonably certain, but not guaranteed. By increasing the risk to new entrants, SWB raised barriers to entry. Great Western not only had to consider present elevated DLI prices but also the risk of future increases over the three year period it takes to enter the market.

²² 753 F.2d 416, 436 \(5th Cir. 1985\).

²³ Affiliated Capital Corp. v. City of Houston, 735 F.2d 1555, 1565 \(5th Cir. 1984\) (en banc).

Appellant cites several old non-Fifth Circuit cases for the proposition that a plaintiff cannot obtain damages that are to be suffered in the future.²⁴ These cases are distinguishable. The evidence reveals that SWB's conduct elevated the risk of entry into the respective markets now, not in the future, to such a degree that a jury could find the risk of entry prevented Great Western [24] from entering the markets. As the district court stated it was what SWB did and what it could and would continue to do that caused injury.

Appellants' second argument is based on standing. Appellants contend Great Western has no standing to sue for abandoning its plans to enter the Little Rock market unless it can establish HN23[] a business or property interest protected by Section 4.²⁵ To establish this interest, Great Western must show that it intended and was prepared to enter the market. *Jayco Systems, Inc. v. I1389*₁ Savin Business Machines Corp., 777 F.2d 306, 313-314 \(5th Cir.1985\)*, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 816, [25] 107 S. Ct. 73, 93 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1986). Ample evidence exists in the record of Great Western's intent to enter the Little Rock market. Appellee had begun investigations into the market, and had set a 1989 date for publication of a Little Rock directory. However, there is not substantial evidence that Great Western was prepared to enter the Little Rock market.

HN24[] In assessing a company's preparedness [26] to expand, courts have looked to several factors: the ability of the plaintiff to finance the business and purchase the necessary facilities and equipment, consummation of contracts by the plaintiff, affirmative action by the plaintiff to enter the business, and background and experience in the prospective business. *Id.*²⁶

This Circuit has HN25[] typically found lack of standing where a plaintiff lacked evidence on all the preparedness [27] factors. Id. at 315-316 (plaintiff showed no ability to obtain financing); Hayes, 597 F.2d at 974-975 (plaintiff failed to prove ability to finance or contracts made); Martin, 365 F.2d at 634 (plaintiff failed to prove any of the four factors).²⁷ While we do not hold that every plaintiff in every case must show all four of the factors to merit standing, we find Great Western's showing to be insubstantial.

While Great Western has experience, there is no evidence of affirmative steps taken, contracts made or financing arranged in preparation to enter the Little Rock market. The sum total of Great Western's preparation was review of pricing information, two visits to Little Rock by a corporate [28] officer and setting of a publication date. Great Western has only demonstrated that it intended to enter the market, not that it was prepared to do business there.

Great Western urges us to find its situation analogous to that of the plaintiff in Heatransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk A.G. where we found standing in absence of all four of the factors of preparedness for a plaintiff who intended to expand production, not move into a new market. 553 F.2d 964, 988 n. 20 \(5th Cir.1977\).²⁸ The plaintiff in ²⁴ Flintkote v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368, 395 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 835, 78 S. Ct. 54, 2 L. Ed. 2d 46 \(1957\); Connecticut Importing Co. v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 101 F.2d 79, 81 \(2d Cir.1939\); Bailey's Bakery, Ltd. v. Continental Baking Co., 235 F. Supp. 705, 716-17 \(D.Haw.1964\), aff'd, 401 F.2d 182 cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1086, 89 S. Ct. 874, 21 L. Ed. 2d 779 \(1969\).

²⁵ Great Western alleges that SWB never raised the issue of preparedness in any of its motions for directed verdict, thus permitting this Court to review for plain error only. Preparedness, though, is only an element of standing under the antitrust claims. SWB expressly challenged the appellee's standing under antitrust in its motions for directed verdict. SWB also stated in its discussion of Great Western's tortious interference claim that Great Western was unprepared to enter the Little Rock Market. Regardless of the standard of review, Great Western put on no evidence of key aspects of standing as will be discussed.

²⁶ See also Hayes v. Solomon, 597 F.2d 958, 973 \(5th Cir.1979\), cert. denied 444 U.S. 1078, 100 S. Ct. 1028, 62 L. Ed. 2d 761 \(1980\); Martin v. Phillips Petroleum Corp., 365 F.2d 629, 633-34 (5th Cir.), cert. denied 385 U.S. 991, 87 S. Ct. 600, 17 L. Ed. 2d 451 \(1966\); Gas Utilities Co. v. Southern Natural Gas Co., 996 F.2d 282, 283 \(11th Cir.1993\), cert. denied, U.S. __, 114 S. Ct. 687, 126 L. Ed. 2d 654 \(1994\); Curtis v. Campbell-Taggart, 687 F.2d 336, 338 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1090, 103 S. Ct. 576, 74 L. Ed. 2d 937 \(1982\).

²⁷ Accord Gas Utility Co., 996 F.2d at 283 HN26[] (lack of preparedness to enter new market when no contracts consummated and no financing); Curtis, 687 F.2d at 338 HN27[] (experience in proposed business operation, unaccompanied by contracts and financing, not enough to establish "business or property" interest).

Heattransfer had standing in absence of all four factors of preparedness because little preparation was needed. No significant modification of plaintiff's production facilities was necessary for its expansion. Nor did plaintiff need to obtain new contract rights or additional sources of financing. Id.

In contrast, for a plaintiff moving into a new market, such as Great Western, [29] the showing of preparedness is fundamental. We stated that,

HN28[↑] "even though an antitrust plaintiff operates a going concern, he must demonstrate his preparedness and intent to expand that business into a new market if he claims that the expansion of that business into a new market has been foreclosed to him by the monopolistic activities of the defendant." Id.

Great Western was not in the position of the plaintiff in Heattransfer. There were significant barriers to entry to the Little Rock market. Costs to enter the market were estimated at $ 1.6 million. Additionally, Great Western would have had to establish a new customer base and new contracts. Under these facts, Great Western cannot claim that little or no preparation was required.

Great Western argues that "its plans to enter Little Rock were kept secret" to prevent entrenchment in the market by [*1390] SWB. However, this Court's eyes are open only to what is in the record. We will not attempt to divine Great Western's machinations but will look to what the company actually did in preparation. Preparation is an element for standing under Section 4 and Great Western did little. Because Great Western was not prepared to [30] enter the Little Rock market, it had no standing to protect an alleged interest in that market. We reverse and remand to the District Court with instructions to dismiss the Little Rock claim.

Injunction

HN29[↑] We review the propriety of a district court's decision to issue a permanent injunction for an abuse of discretion.²⁹ The factual underpinnings are reviewed for clear error, while the application of legal principles is reviewed de novo.³⁰ For the reasons discussed below, we affirm the district court's decision to issue the permanent injunction.

[31] Appellants contend that the district court erred in granting Appellees' injunctive relief because (a) Appellee failed to show the requisite threatened loss or damage, (b) the evidence was insufficient to support Appellees' claim that the updates were essential and the update prices prohibited new entry, and (3) there is no basis for the 13.5 cent amount. Section 16 of the Clayton Act empowers federal courts to grant an injunction "against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." Appellants' argument is merely more of the same--there is no evidence of a threatened loss. The evidence is sufficient to support a finding that the updates were properly included in the instructions. Testimony from Richard O'Neal, Great Western's founder,³¹ corroborated by SWB business plans³² explained the need to maintain current information through updates. In determining the 13.5 cent price the district court considered the average price per listing charged by other regional Bell operating companies, ²⁸ See also Cable Holdings v. Home Video, 825 F.2d 1559, 1562 n. 3 (11th Cir.1987) (citing Heattransfer with approval).

²⁹ Securities & Exchange Commission v. MacElvain, 417 F.2d 1134, 1137 (5th Cir.1969) (finding that the district court did not abuse its discretion in entering a permanent injunction), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 972, 90 S. Ct. 1087, 25 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1970).

³⁰ The district court apparently adopted Appellee's proposed findings in support of the injunction. Such findings merit heightened scrutiny. Falcon Constr. Co. v. Economy Forms Corp., 805 F.2d 1229, 1232 (5th Cir.1986) HN30[↑] ("A district court that adopts one party's suggested findings essentially verbatim leaves doubt whether it has discharged its duty to review the evidence for itself and reached its decision on the basis of its own evaluation for the evidence rather than that of an advocate.").

³¹ Richard O'Neal stated the updates are essential for the independents to call on new businesses and to distribute new directories.

³² Former Yellow Pages president explained that directory publishers need updated information to develop sales leads and to deliver directories to newly connected users.

the effect it would have on basic telephone ratepayers, and the costs of providing the data to independents. Appellant complains that by imposing such a low price, the district [32] court is in effect forcing telephone customers to subsidize operations of the independent directories. The cost of compiling and maintaining the DLI falls squarely upon the ratepayers, when it should be shared more by independents who pay merely pennies more than the cost of copying the data. However, any regulated business can make the same argument and courts nevertheless have uniformly applied antitrust laws to them.³³ Additionally, the district court could find that the 13.5 cent price provided an adequate margin over costs.

[33] On cross-appeal, Great Western and Canyon argue that the injunction should apply across the five state market and not merely where the plaintiffs are located. Broader relief embraces the public interest served by private antitrust lawsuits,³⁴ while narrow relief places the plaintiffs in a preferred [*1391] status over its competitors.³⁵ Furthermore, Appellees contend that if Great Western could not expand, neither could any other independent.

The district court narrowed its injunction because it found that the evidence in this case did not justify injunctive relief in markets other than where the plaintiffs compete. No evidence of direct harm in these markets was provided. Also, the district court recognized that it can grant injunctive [34] relief to non-parties but only if necessary to give the named plaintiffs the continuing relief to which they are entitled.³⁶ We find no error requiring reversal.

We AFFIRM the court below in every respect with the exception that we REVERSE the claim of Great Western with regard to its entering the Little Rock market. The court below will make the necessary changes in its judgment because of the dismissal by us of the Little Rock claim of Great Western.

End of Document

³³ See e.g., OtterTail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 372-75, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 1027-28, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 \(1973\); Almeda Mall, Inc. v. Houston Lighting & Power Co., 615 F.2d 343, 353-54 \(5th Cir. 1980\).

³⁴ See Wilk v. American Medical Association, 671 F. Supp. 1465 \(N.D.Ill. 1987\), aff'd, 895 F.2d 352 \(7th Cir. 1990\).

³⁵ See Loew's Inc. v. Milwaukee Towne Corp., 201 F.2d 19, 22-23 \(7th Cir. 1952\), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 951, 73 S. Ct. 865, 97 L. Ed. 1374 \(1953\).

³⁶ See Professional Ass'n of College Educators v. El Paso County Community College Dist., 730 F.2d 258, 274 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 881, 105 S. Ct. 248, 83 L. Ed. 2d 186 \(1984\).

Caldwell v. American Basketball Ass'n

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

January 30, 1995, Argued ; September 21, 1995, Decided

Docket No. 94-7147

Reporter

66 F.3d 523 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 27176 ; 150 L.R.R.M. 2321; 130 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P11,416; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,122

JOE L. CALDWELL, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. THE AMERICAN BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, INC.; THE SPIRITS OF ST. LOUIS BASKETBALL CLUB, a limited partnership; OZZIE SILNA; DANIEL SILNA; HARRY WELTMAN; DONALD SCHUPAK; and TEDD MUNCHAK, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] Certiorari denied July 1, 1996, Reported at: 1996 U.S. LEXIS 4293.

Prior History: Appeal from a grant of summary judgment in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Leonard B. Sand, Judge) dismissing a complaint that alleged a conspiracy to prevent appellant from playing professional basketball. Because Caldwell's antitrust claims are precluded by the nonstatutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws and his tort claims are preempted by the National Labor Relations Act, we affirm.

Core Terms

bargaining, players, teams, basketball, collective bargaining, collective bargaining agreement, antitrust claim, Sherman Act, negotiations, principles, antitrust, employees, unfair labor practice, Relations, exemption, anti trust law, federal court, multiemployer, nonstatutory, remedies, bargaining representative, basketball player, state law claim, suspension, football, expired, merger, season, terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1 [blue icon] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, and view the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN2 [down] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Federal Preemption

States are preempted from regulating conduct that even "arguably" constitutes an unfair labor practice under National Labor Relations Act § 8. 29 U.S.C.S. § 158.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > Jurisdiction

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Federal Preemption

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN3 [down] Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

The National Labor Relations Board has exclusive jurisdiction to adjudicate conduct that arguably violates National Labor Relations Act § 8. 29 U.S.C.S. § 158.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 [down] Sherman Act, Defenses

Employers who are horizontal competitors for labor are barred by antitrust laws from acting collusively in setting terms and conditions of employment absent justification under the Rule of Reason or some defense. When antitrust claims would subvert fundamental principles of federal labor policy, they are barred by the so-called nonstatutory exemption.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

HN5 Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Duty to Bargain

The inception of a collective bargaining relationship between employees and employers irrevocably alters the governing legal regime.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN6 Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Duty to Bargain

Under Section 8(a)(5) of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA), employers are obligated to bargain collectively with a union selected by a majority of employees in an appropriate unit. 29 U.S.C.S. § 158\(a\)\(5\). Once a union has been selected as a collective bargaining representative, the NLRA extinguishes the individual employee's power to order his own relations with his employer and creates a power vested in the chosen representative to act in the interest of all employees. Congress has seen fit to clothe the bargaining representative with powers comparable to those possessed by a legislative body both to create and restrict the rights of those whom it represents. Only the union may contract the employee's terms and conditions of employment. Indeed, it is an unfair labor practice for an employer to seek to bargain with individual employees absent the union's consent.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

Contracts Law > ... > Negotiable Instruments > Negotiations > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Right to Organize

HN7 Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Duty to Bargain

Once an exclusive representative has been selected, the individual employee is forbidden by federal law from negotiating directly with the employer absent the representative's consent, even though that employee may actually receive less compensation under the collective bargain than he or she would through individual negotiations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Football

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Impasse Resolution

HN8 [down arrow] Sports, Football

The extinguishing of the employee's right to seek the best bargain begins once a mandatory collective bargaining relationship is established and continues throughout the relationship.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Impasse Resolution

HN9 [down arrow] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Duty to Bargain

The National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 151 et seq., makes clear that federal labor policy focuses on collective bargaining as a process, rather than collective bargaining agreements alone.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

HN10 [down arrow] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Bargaining Subjects

Once an exclusive bargaining representative has been selected, the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 151 et seq., provides unions, employers, and employees with a "soup-to-nuts array" of rules, tribunals and remedies to govern that process. As a specialized tribunal, the National Labor Relations Board is established to enforce these and other obligations. Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act provides that collective agreements may be enforced in federal courts. 29 U.S.C.S. § 185\(a\). Unions are obligated to bargain fairly on behalf of employees in the bargaining unit, an obligation enforceable in federal courts.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Labor Arbitration > Discipline, Layoffs & Terminations

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty of Fair Representation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Union Violations, Union Refusal to Bargain

An employer's refusal to bargain in good faith over a proposed restriction on the right to hire and fire is an unfair labor practice that the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) is empowered to adjudicate and to remedy. 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 158\(a\)\(5\), \(b\)\(3\), \(d\). A discharge of an employee for engaging in union activity is another unfair labor practice enforceable by the NLRB. 29 U.S.C.S. § 158\(a\)\(3\). Once an agreement is reached, a discharged employee may seek to enforce restrictions on discharges through the union, or individually in the federal courts under National Labor Relations Act § 301. 29 U.S.C.S. § 185. If the union acts arbitrarily in not enforcing an agreement or in allowing an employee to be discharged, the employee may bring an action against it in federal court under the duty of fair representation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Right to Organize

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

HN12 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Multiemployer bargaining groups do not violate the antitrust laws although they plainly involve horizontal competitors for labor acting in concert to set and to implement terms of employment. A worker's employment rights are to be determined by the union and the employer. The fact that the employer is a multiemployer organization thus does not alter the fact that there is no right to bargain individually, nor does it create an antitrust claim where none existed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A wholly unprincipled, judge-made exception for professional athletes should not be created.

Counsel: PHILIP J. SHEA, Phoenix, Arizona, (Shea & Wilks, Phoenix, Arizona, of counsel), for Plaintiff-Appellant.

JACK DAVID, New York, New York, (Steven Finell, David C. Berg, Siller, Wilk & Mencher, New York, New York, of counsel), for Defendants-Appellees The Spirits of St. Louis Basketball Club, Daniel Silna and Donald Schupak.

HERBERT TEITELBAUM, New York, New New York, (Teitelbaum, Hiller, Rodman, Paden & Hibsher, P.C., of counsel), for Defendant-Appellee Tedd Munchak.

Judges: Before: MESKILL, WINTER, and McLAUGHLIN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: WINTER

Opinion

[*525] WINTER, Circuit Judge:

Joe L. Caldwell appeals from Judge Sand's grant of summary judgment, Caldwell v. American Basketball Ass'n, 825 F. Supp. 558 (S.D.N.Y. 1993), dismissing his complaint. [2] The complaint alleged that the various appellees violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., by conspiring to prevent him from playing professional basketball and by attempting to monopolize the market for professional basketball services. It further alleged that appellees The Spirits of St. Louis Basketball Club, Donald Shupak, and Daniel Silna committed intentional or prima facie torts under New York law. Because Caldwell's antitrust claims are barred by the nonstatutory labor exemption and his state law claims are preempted by the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA"), 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq., we affirm.

BACKGROUND

In 1970, Caldwell signed a five-year contract to play basketball for the Carolina Cougars, a member team of the appellee American Basketball Association ("ABA"). In the same year, pursuant to the NLRA, the ABA Players' Association (the "Union") became the exclusive collective bargaining representative for all ABA players. Caldwell served as vice-president and later president of the Union and as the Union's player representative for the Cougars. Caldwell, 825 F. Supp. at 560-61.

During Caldwell's first four seasons with the Cougars, he performed ably [3] and was elected to the All-Star team during two of the four years. He also became team captain of the Cougars. After Caldwell's fourth season, the owner of the Cougars, appellee Tedd Munchak, sold the team and became commissioner of the ABA. A group headed by appellees Ozzie and David Silna became the new owners of the Cougars. The Cougars subsequently moved to St. Louis and were renamed "The Spirits of St. Louis." Id. at 561-62.

On November 20, 1974, Marvin Barnes, a star player for the Spirits, failed to appear [*526] for an important game. Barnes's dissatisfaction with his contract with the Spirits had prompted him to "jump" the team as a negotiating tactic. When the Spirits' coach asked Caldwell where Barnes was, Caldwell denied having any knowledge of Barnes's whereabouts. Although Barnes returned to the team soon thereafter, the Spirits (as assignee from the Cougars) suspended Caldwell pursuant to certain terms in his individual contract, because they believed that he had been involved in planning the incident. Id. at 562.

Caldwell appealed his suspension, with the aid of the Union, to the ABA commissioner. However, Caldwell decided not to pursue internal remedies in the ABA [4] but rather to litigate the suspension. Accordingly, in February 1975 Caldwell brought a contract action in a federal district court in Georgia against Munchak, who was a guarantor of his individual contract. After a bench trial, Caldwell recovered his full 1974-75 salary of $ 220,000, plus interest, costs and expenses. Id. at 563.

Caldwell never played professional basketball again. His contract with the Spirits would have expired, or did expire, on October 29, 1975, but Caldwell alleges that he "was never told that his suspension was lifted, or that the Spirits had terminated his contract, or that other teams were free to negotiate with him." Id. at 562. After merger negotiations with the NBA succeeded, the ABA and the Spirits ceased operations after the 1975-76 season. Id. at 564.

Caldwell filed the instant lawsuit in early 1975. It was placed on the district court's suspense calendar pending resolution of the Georgia action but was not reactivated for eighteen years due to Caldwell's bankruptcy proceedings. Id. at 563. Caldwell alleged in his complaint that the defendants: (i) "combined and conspired to blacklist him and deprive him of the opportunity to continue [5] his career as a professional basketball player" in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act; (ii) conspired and attempted to monopolize the market for professional basketball services in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act; and (iii) acted tortiously and maliciously when they suspended Caldwell "indefinitely." Id. at 564, 574, 576.

Caldwell asserted that appellees and the National Basketball Association ("NBA") desired to keep him out of professional basketball during the 1974-76 period in order to exclude him from the ABA-NBA merger negotiations that were then taking place. Caldwell claimed that he had achieved "notoriety" a year earlier when, as acting president of the Union, he had refused to approve the terms of a collective bargaining agreement.

Appellees offered evidence that Caldwell's physical limitations accounted for his inability to secure employment as a professional basketball player after 1975. In that regard, the record shows that: (i) Caldwell was 33 years old at the time of his suspension and less than two percent of NBA players during the five basketball seasons between 1976 and 1981 were 34 years old or older; (ii) Caldwell had sustained a torn ligament [\[6\]](#) during the 1971 season; and (iii) Caldwell had sustained an additional injury in an automobile accident in January, 1975. Id. at 564. Moreover, all but four of the ABA's teams ceased operations after the merger, resulting in a decreased demand for basketball players.

The district court granted summary judgment in favor of appellees on the ground that Caldwell's physical limitations were the sole cause of his failure to secure another position as a professional basketball player. Caldwell, 825 F. Supp. at 570. We affirm, but on different grounds.

DISCUSSION

HN1[!\[\]\(b9c230eec721196b452e6849ca5630bc_img.jpg\)](#) We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, Aslanidis v. United States Lines, Inc., 7 F.3d 1067, 1072 \(2d Cir. 1993\), and view the evidence in the light most favorable to Caldwell. See Prunier v. City of Watertown, 936 F.2d 677, 679 \(2d Cir. 1991\).

A. State Law Claims

We take the unusual step of addressing Caldwell's state law claims first because our resolution of those claims sheds light upon the disposition of his federal antitrust claims.

Caldwell asserts that the refusal of ABA teams to hire him was the result of a [\[*527\]](#) stance he had earlier taken as Union president in opposing [\[7\]](#) a new collective bargaining agreement and because of appellees' resultant desire to exclude him from any role in the ABA-NBA merger negotiations. The essence of his factual claim thus is that the ABA refused him employment because he had engaged in union activities that are protected by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act. If true, these facts would constitute an unfair labor practice under NLRA §§ 8(a)(1) and (3). 29 U.S.C. § 158\(a\)\(1\),\(3\).

HN2[!\[\]\(b1682f4ff2f24a71e73fc76cd4b31abf_img.jpg\)](#) States are preempted from regulating conduct that even "arguably" constitutes an unfair labor practice under NLRA § 8. San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 244-45, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775, 79 S. Ct. 773 \(1959\). In Amalgamated Ass'n of Street, Elec. Ry. and Motor Coach Employees of Am. v. Lockridge, 403 U.S. 274, 29 L. Ed. 2d 473, 91 S. Ct. 1909 \(1971\), the Supreme Court applied the Garmon preemption doctrine in the context of a state judgment based on a breach of contract theory and on facts that arguably constituted a violation of NLRA §§ 8(b)(2) and (a)(1),(3). Id. at 293. It noted that concurrent state court and federal administrative jurisdiction over such conduct bristled with potential conflicts between rules of substantive law, methods of administering that law, [\[8\]](#) and remedies for its violation. Id. at 287-88. Both the comprehensiveness of the NLRA and the assignment of jurisdiction to a specialized federal agency, the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB"), led the court to hold that HN3[!\[\]\(388286273bdba56ce1efff4bc3865d73_img.jpg\)](#) the NLRB has exclusive jurisdiction to adjudicate conduct that arguably violates Section 8.

Caldwell's state law claims must thus be dismissed. The conduct that he alleges is at least arguably an unfair labor practice and is subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board. Were his state law claims allowed to proceed, a federal court would have to find facts, determine whether the state law relied upon is consistent with the substantive provisions of the NLRA, and fashion a remedy to redress a violation. However, each of these tasks is the exclusive responsibility of the NLRB.

B. Antitrust Claims

1. Introduction

Although the Garmon doctrine of exclusive jurisdiction appears not to have been used as a defense in antitrust actions brought by unions or by players who are represented by a union, it is nevertheless relevant by analogy to our discussion of the so-called nonstatutory labor exemption, which bars Caldwell's [9] antitrust claims.

Invoking antitrust principles that prohibit price (wage) fixing, see Anderson v. Shipowners Assoc., 272 U.S. 359, 71 L. Ed. 298, 47 S. Ct. 125 (1926), and joint boycotts, see Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Ass'n v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951 (1914), Caldwell alleges that appellees agreed to blacklist him and thereby prevented him from continuing to play professional basketball. He bases his antitrust claim on two interrelated propositions: first, he asserts a right to seek the best terms for his labor as a professional basketball player; second, he asserts a right not to have teams that might compete for his skills agree collusively upon the terms upon which he will or will not be hired.

In National Basketball Association v. Williams, 45 F.3d 684 (2d Cir. 1995), we stated that HN4[[↑]] employers who are horizontal competitors for labor are barred by antitrust laws from acting collusively in setting terms and conditions of employment "absent justification under the Rule of Reason or some defense." Id. at 687. We will assume for purposes of analysis that absent a collective bargaining relationship, the conduct alleged by Caldwell would state a claim under the Sherman Act. Nevertheless, [10] because Caldwell's antitrust claims would "subvert fundamental principles of federal labor policy," Wood v. National Basketball Ass'n, 809 F.2d 954, 959 (2d Cir. 1987), they are barred by the so-called nonstatutory exemption.

2. Applicable Principles

HN5[[↑]] "The inception of a collective bargaining relationship between employees and employers irrevocably alters the governing legal regime." Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 50 F.3d 1041, 1054 [528] (D.C. Cir. 1995). It does so in two ways pertinent to Caldwell's claims. First, the employee loses the right to bargain for the best price for his or her labor. Subject, of course, to federal statutes specifically overriding the NLRA, such as the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq., or the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq., the terms of the individual's employment are left exclusively to the union and the employer to determine through processes and rules mandated by the NLRA. Second, employers are allowed to act jointly when they have a collective bargaining relationship with a common union. This joint conduct is nothing more than the quite familiar institution of multiemployer bargaining. We now examine [11] these principles in some detail.

HN6[[↑]] Under Section 8(a)(5) of the NLRA, employers are obligated to bargain collectively with a union selected by a majority of employees in an appropriate unit. 29 U.S.C. § 158(a)(5). Once a union has been selected as a collective bargaining representative, the NLRA "extinguishes the individual employee's power to order his own relations with his employer and creates a power vested in the chosen representative to act in the interest of all employees." NLRB v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 388 U.S. 175, 180, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1123, 87 S. Ct. 2001 (1967); see also NLRB v. Insurance Agents' Int'l Union, 361 U.S. 477, 484, 4 L. Ed. 2d 454, 80 S. Ct. 419 (1960) (the duty to bargain takes effect when the employees have selected their representative). "Congress has seen fit to clothe the bargaining representative with powers comparable to those possessed by a legislative body both to create and restrict the rights of those whom it represents." Id. (quotation and citation omitted); see also J.I. Case Co. v. NLRB, 321 U.S. 332, 88 L. Ed. 762, 64 S. Ct. 576 (1944) (private contracts invalid when in conflict with collective bargaining agreement or NLRA's procedures). "Only the union may contract the employee's terms and conditions of employment." Allis-Chalmers, [121] 388 U.S. at 180. Indeed, it is an unfair labor practice for an employer to seek to bargain with individual employees absent the union's consent. See Medo Photo Supply Corp. v. NLRB, 321 U.S. 678, 683, 88 L. Ed. 1007, 64 S. Ct. 830 (1944).

To be sure, in sports leagues, unionized players generally engage in individual bargaining with teams. However, it must be emphasized that such individual bargaining is not an exercise of a right to free competition under the antitrust laws; rather, it is an exercise of a right derived from collective bargaining itself. As we noted in Wood, 809 F.2d at 959, HN7[[↑]] "once an exclusive representative has been selected, the individual employee is forbidden by federal law from negotiating directly with the employer absent the representative's consent, even though that employee may actually receive less compensation under the collective bargain than he or she would through individual negotiations." (citing Allis-Chalmers, 388 U.S. at 180 & J.I. Case, 321 U.S. at 338-39).

HN8 [↑] The extinguishing of the employee's right to seek the best bargain begins once a mandatory collective bargaining relationship is established and continues throughout the relationship. See Williams, 45 F.3d at 692-93 (non-statutory labor exemption precludes antitrust challenge to terms and conditions of employment implemented after CBA expired and parties reached impasse). Accord, Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 50 F.3d 1041, 1056 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (same). In Brown, the National Football League ("NFL") unilaterally imposed a fixed salary on a category of players after a collective bargaining agreement had expired and the NFL and NFL Players Association had bargained to an impasse. The Players Association asserted that the NFL had violated the Sherman Act and that the nonstatutory labor exemption "applies only where a union has manifested its consent to a restraint on trade by signing a collective bargaining agreement." Id. at 1049. The court rejected this argument,¹ [*529] holding that the NFL's actions were part of the collective bargaining process and therefore within the nonstatutory exemption. Id. at 1053-54 ("employer's unilateral implementation after impasse of a term encompassed within its pre-impasse proposals" is a "unilateral but lawful aspect[] of the collective bargaining process established by the NLRA"). Although the collective bargaining agreement had [14] expired, the court concluded that HN9 [↑] "the NLRA makes clear that federal labor policy focuses on collective bargaining as a process, rather than collective bargaining agreements alone." Id. at 1051. We agree.

[15] HN10 [↑] Once an exclusive bargaining representative has been selected, the NLRA provides unions, employers, and employees with a "soup-to-nuts array" of rules, tribunals and remedies to govern that process. Williams, 45 F.3d at 693; see generally, ROBERT A. GORMAN, BASIC TEXT ON LABOR LAW, UNIONIZATION AND COLLECTIVE BARGAINING (1976). For example, the parties must bargain in good faith over mandatory subjects of bargaining. 29 U.S.C. §§ 158\(a\)\(5\), 158\(b\)\(3\); NLRB v. Wooster Div. of Borg-Warner Corp., 356 U.S. 342, 2 L. Ed. 2d 823, 78 S. Ct. 718 \(1958\); see generally, GORMAN, supra at 496-502. Caselaw requires the provision of information during bargaining, NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co., 351 U.S. 149, 100 L. Ed. 1027, 76 S. Ct. 753 \(1956\); see generally, GORMAN, supra at 409-18, and otherwise regulates the bargaining process during and between collective agreements. See GORMAN, supra at 399-400. Certain other practices by unions and employers are designated as illegal unfair labor practices. 29 U.S.C. § 158. As a specialized tribunal, the NLRB is established to enforce these and other obligations. See generally GORMAN, supra at 7-18. Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act provides that collective agreements [16] may be enforced in federal courts. 29 U.S.C. § 185\(a\). Finally, unions are obligated to bargain fairly on behalf of employees in the bargaining unit, Vaca v. Sipes, 386 U.S. 171, 177, 17 L. Ed. 2d 842, 87 S. Ct. 903 \(1967\), an obligation enforceable in federal courts. National Labor Relations Board v. Local 282, Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 740 F.2d 141, 146 \(2d Cir. 1984\).

Thus, a mandatory subject of bargaining pertinent in the instant matter is the circumstances under which an employer may discharge or refuse to hire an employee. HN11 [↑] An employer's refusal to bargain in good faith over a proposed restriction on the right to hire and fire is an unfair labor practice that the NLRB is empowered to adjudicate and to remedy. 29 U.S.C. §§ 158\(a\)\(5\), \(b\)\(3\), \(d\). A discharge of an employee for engaging in union activity is another unfair labor practice enforceable by the NLRB. 29 U.S.C. § 158\(a\)\(3\). Once an agreement is reached, a discharged employee may seek to enforce restrictions on discharges through the union, Vaca, 386 U.S. at 183-85, or individually in the federal courts under NLRA § 301. 29 U.S.C. § 185; Vaca, 386 U.S. at 184-85. If the union acts arbitrarily in not enforcing an agreement or in allowing [17] an employee to be discharged, the employee may bring an action against it in federal court under the duty of fair representation. Local 282, Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 740 F.2d at 146.

¹ The district court in the instant case held that the nonstatutory labor exemption did not apply to appellees because the dispute did not implicate a then-existing collective bargaining agreement. Noting that Caldwell's suspension "was not predicated on the suspension provisions of the Collective Bargaining Agreement [first entered in 1972] or the Association by-laws," the district court stated that "this controversy may be entirely resolved without any reference whatsoever to the Collective Bargaining Agreement." National Basketball Ass'n v. Williams, 45 F.3d 684 \(2d Cir. 1994\), has since applied the nonstatutory exemption in circumstances in which no collective bargaining agreement existed, as did Brown v. Pro Football Inc., 50 F.3d 1041, 1052-54 (D.C. Cir. 1995), which held that the nonstatutory exemption applies whenever there is a collective bargaining relationship regardless of whether a collective bargaining agreement is in force.

We turn now to the question of whether an employee's antitrust claim is somehow bolstered by an allegation that employers acted jointly in refusing employment. It is not. As we held in Williams, 45 F.3d at 688, and as reaffirmed in Brown, 50 F.3d at 1056, HN12¹ multiemployer bargaining groups do not violate the antitrust laws although they plainly involve horizontal competitors for labor acting in concert to set and to implement terms of employment. Multiemployer bargaining existed prior to the Sherman Act, Williams, 45 F.3d at 691, and its legality was expressly considered by Congress when it passed the Taft-Hartley Act. See *NLRB v. Truck Drivers Local Union No. 449 ("Buffalo [530] Linen"), 353 U.S. 87, 95-96, 1 L. Ed. 2d 676, 77 S. Ct. 643 \(1957\). A worker's employment rights are, as noted, to be determined by the union and the employer. The fact that the employer is a multiemployer organization thus does not alter the fact that there is no right to bargain individually, nor does it create an antitrust claim where none existed. 18 See Williams, 45 F.3d at 693.

3. Applying the Principles

Once the ABA became obligated to recognize the ABA Players Association as the exclusive bargaining representative of the ABA players, therefore, Caldwell lost the right to seek the best bargain from individual ABA teams. Moreover, those teams became exempt from any antitrust rule that might have compelled them to compete individually for players represented by the Union. If the ABA and the Union had agreed in a collective agreement that Caldwell should be paid a fixed wage, or could be discharged for any reason not specifically prohibited by a federal law such as Title VII, he could not have challenged that agreement under the antitrust laws. See Wood, 809 F.2d at 962 n.4. Moreover, as noted, even in the absence of a collective bargaining agreement,² Caldwell's right to challenge a discharge by the ABA had to be founded on labor rather than antitrust law.

19 Unlike the claim in Wood, Caldwell's claim regarding his discharge is not directly inconsistent with substantive federal labor law. Nevertheless, allowing Caldwell to proceed with his action would "subvert fundamental principles of our federal labor policy as set out in the National Labor Relations Act." Wood, 809 F.2d at 959. Caldwell alleges that the ABA refused him employment because of a position he had taken earlier as Union president and its resultant desire to exclude him from the NBA-ABA merger negotiations. The ABA claims that it refused him employment because of his physical limitations. This dispute is the familiar case of an employee asserting a discharge based on union activities, a violation of NLRA § 8(a)(3), and an employer claiming that the discharge was for cause. See, e.g., Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. NLRB, 379 U.S. 203, 217, 13 L. Ed. 2d 233, 85 S. Ct. 398 \(1964\); J.P. Stevens & Co. v. NLRB, 380 F.2d 292, 300 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1005, 19 L. Ed. 2d 600, 88 S. Ct. 564 \(1967\). Caldwell, however, choose not to pursue his claim under the NLRA. Instead, he sought relief under the Sherman Act.

As noted in preemption and sports labor/antitrust cases, it was Congress's determination that 20 federal labor policy required a specialized agency equipped to find facts, to apply the NLRA, and to impose particular remedies. See Amalgamated, 403 U.S. at 285-86, Brown, 50 F.3d at 1045. By contrast, the present matter must be adjudicated by federal courts, which are, if Caldwell prevails, directed to award treble damages and attorney's fees, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) -- remedies not available under the NLRA. Indeed, if Caldwell is allowed to proceed with the present action, employees in similar circumstances will either never resort to the NLRB or will institute parallel administrative and antitrust proceedings with the risk of inconsistent adjudications. Every employee who is locked out by a multiemployer group, every striker who is not reinstated, and every employee who is discharged could bring an antitrust action similar to Caldwell's. Clearly, Congress had no such intention. As noted, the NLRA offers "an array of rules and remedies . . . and . . . application of antitrust principles to a collective bargaining relationship would disrupt collective bargaining as we know it." Williams, 45 F.3d at 693.

² 2. However, the parties to a collective agreement are required to observe the terms of an expired collective agreement until they have bargained to an impasse. NLRB v. Katz, 369 U.S. 736, 8 L. Ed. 2d 230, 82 S. Ct. 1107 \(1962\). In a sports league, if a collective agreement that authorized individual bargaining expired but the status quo was being maintained, individual bargains could take place in the absence of a collective agreement. This exception to the general rule stated in the text does not affect the analysis.

The discussion above sets out principles that have been familiar to, [21] and accepted by, the nation's workers for all of the NLRA's fifty years in every industry except professional sports. There is no precedent outside sports for ever initiating this genre of litigation. Indeed, as we noted in Williams, over a century had passed since the Sherman Act [*531] was amended before a worker or union challenged multiemployer bargaining under the antitrust laws, as did the NBA Players' Association in that case. 45 F.3d at 689. Nevertheless, although professional athletes are a barely discernible fraction of the nation's unionized employees, similar litigation involving athletes abounds. See Brown, 50 F.3d 1041 (football); Powell v. NFL, 930 F.2d 1293 \(8th Cir. 1989\)(football); McCourt v. California Sports, Inc., 600 F.2d 1193 (6th Cir. 1979)(hockey); Smith v. Pro Football, Inc., 193 U.S. App. D.C. 19, 593 F.2d 1173 \(D.C. Cir. 1979\)(football); Mackey v. NFL, 543 F.2d 606 \(8th Cir. 1976\), cert. dismissed, 434 U.S. 801 (1977)(football). However, we adhere to what we said in Wood, namely that HN13[] "a [22] wholly unprincipled, judge-made exception . . . for professional athletes" should not be created. 809 F.2d at 961.

We therefore affirm.

End of Document

Moore ex rel. Mississippi v. Abbott Lab.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, Jackson Division

September 22, 1995, Decided ; September 22, 1995, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 3:95-CV-78BN

Reporter

900 F. Supp. 26 *; 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13989 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,157

MIKE MOORE, ATTORNEY GENERAL ex rel. STATE OF MISSISSIPPI, PLAINTIFF VS. ABBOTT LABORATORIES, INC., BRISTOL-MYERS SQUIBB CO. AND MEAD JOHNSON & CO., DEFENDANTS

Core Terms

Defendants', real party in interest, state court, infant formula, removal, cause of action, asserts, diversity jurisdiction, state law, antitrust statute, attorney general, parens patriae, federal court, federal law, federal question, anti trust law, conspiracy, immunity, fraudulent joinder, plaintiff's claim, violations, diversity, purposes

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

HN1 [] Removal, Specific Cases Removed

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1441\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > General Overview

HN2 [] Removal, Specific Cases Removed

In removing an action from state to federal court, the removing party bears the burden of establishing federal jurisdiction. Whether a case is removable must be determined by reference to the allegations made in the original pleadings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

900 F. Supp. 26, *26 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13989, 13989

HN3 Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

See U.S. Const., amend. XI.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN4 Federal & State Interrelationships, State Sovereign Immunity

An unconsenting state is immune from suits brought by her own citizens as well as citizens of another state.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > Removability

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > State Immunity

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

HN5 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

Since the immunity granted by the Eleventh Amendment, U.S. Const., amend. XI, is an immunity from being made an involuntary party to an action in federal court, it should apply equally to the case where the state is a plaintiff in an action commenced in state court and the action is removed to federal court by the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-7 (rev. 1991).

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Citizenship > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > Diversity Jurisdiction

900 F. Supp. 26, *26 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13989, 13989

Civil Procedure > Parties > Real Party in Interest > General Overview

HN7 [down] Diversity Jurisdiction, Citizenship

A state is not considered a citizen for the purposes of diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1332.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Fraudulent Joinder

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > Fraudulent Joinder

Civil Procedure > Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > Joinder of Claims

HN8 [down] Joinder of Parties, Fraudulent Joinder

The removing party bears the burden of demonstrating fraudulent joinder. To prove fraudulent joinder, a defendant must establish that the plaintiff has no possibility of establishing a cause of action against them in state court. In evaluating fraudulent joinder claims, the court must initially resolve all disputed questions of fact and all ambiguities in the controlling state law in favor of the nonremoving party. The court then must determine whether that party has any possibility of recovery against the party whose joinder is questioned. The court does not decide whether the plaintiff will actually or even probably prevail on the merits, but look only for a possibility that he may do so. If that possibility exists, then a good faith assertion of such an expectancy in a state court is not a sham and is not fraudulent in fact or in law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > Substantial Questions

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

HN9 [down] Federal Questions, Substantial Questions

Federal jurisdiction extends over only those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal law. Under the well-pleaded complaint rule, the federal question must be present on the face of the complaint, and jurisdiction cannot be based on the existence of a federal defense. For federal question jurisdiction to exist, the federal law must be a direct element in the plaintiff's claim and it is not enough that it comes in remotely or indirectly.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

HN10 [down] Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

State antitrust indirect purchaser statutes are not preempted by federal law.

Counsel: [1] For MIKE MOORE, Attorney General ex rel. State of Mississippi, plaintiff: John W. Barrett, Edward Sanders, BARRETT LAW OFFICES, Lexington, MS.

For ABBOTT LABORATORIES, defendant: Ross F. Bass, Jr., Michael B. Wallace, PHELPS DUNBAR, Jackson, MS. For BRISTOL-MYERS SQUIBB AND COMPANY, defendant: William F. Goodman, Jr., Lynn Plimpton Risley, WATKINS & EAGER, Jackson, MS. For MEAD JOHNSON & CO., defendant: Ross F. Bass, Jr., Michael B. Wallace, PHELPS DUNBAR, JACKSON, MS. William F. Goodman, Jr., Lynn Plimpton Risley, WATKINS & EAGER, Jackson, MS.

Judges: William H. Barbour, Jr., CHIEF JUDGE

Opinion by: William H. Barbour, Jr.

Opinion

[*28] OPINION AND ORDER

This cause is before the Court on the following motions: (1) Plaintiff's Motion to Remand; (2) Defendants' Motion for Leave to File Surreply Memorandum; and (3) Plaintiff's Application for Review and Objections to Magistrate Judge's Order Denying Motion to Quash and for Protective Order. Having considered the Motions, Responses, all attachments to each and supporting and opposing memoranda, the Court finds that (1) Plaintiff's Motion to Remand is well taken and should be granted; (2) Defendants' Motion for Leave to File Surreply Memorandum is [2] well taken and should be granted; and (3) Plaintiff's Application for Review and Objections to Magistrate Judge's Order Denying Motion to Quash and for Protective Order is moot and therefore denied.

I. Factual Background and Procedural History

Plaintiff filed this action on January 18, 1995, in the Circuit Court of Holmes County, Mississippi.¹ Defendants are pharmaceutical companies that manufacture and sell infant formula nationally, including in the State of Mississippi. According to the Plaintiff, Defendants share approximately eighty percent of the Mississippi infant formula market. Plaintiff further asserts the following:

For over twelve years, from 1980 through 1992, defendants abused their overwhelming dominance of the infant formula market by independent action and agreement among themselves, whereby they grossly overcharged Mississippi consumers for infant formula. Complaint at P 15.

The substantial terms of defendants' conspiracy consisted of an agreement to fix the wholesale price of infant formula sold throughout the United States, including that sold in Mississippi. Complaint at P 20. Defendants' illegal conspiracy and [*29] agreement caused the price of infant [*3] formula to increase over 120 percent during the last ten years, while the price of milk, infant formula's principal ingredient, rose only 36 percent. Complaint at P 16. Because retailers determine their prices based on defendants' wholesale prices, the retail price of infant formula is directly affected by the wholesale prices charged by defendants. Complaint at P 13. Therefore, as a direct result of defendants' illegal conspiracy, plaintiffs and class members paid more for infant formula than they would have absent defendants' illegal conduct. Complaint at P 27-28.

Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiff's Motion to Remand at 1-2.

¹ Contrary to Defendants' assertion, this litigation did not begin on October 7, 1993. On that date, some of the same counsel who are prosecuting this suit filed a class action suit in this Court alleging that Defendants were engaged in an interstate conspiracy to raise, fix, maintain and stabilize at artificially high levels the wholesale prices of infant formula sold in the United States. Cothran v. Abbott Laboratories, et al., Civil Action No. 3:93-CV-626LR (Oct. 7, 1993). The plaintiffs in that case voluntarily dismissed the case on November 8, 1993. The Court finds that these two cases, although related in subject matter, are not the same case for the purposes of the current Motion to Remand.

[4] The Plaintiff in this matter is the Attorney General of the State of Mississippi who is suing on behalf of the State and as parens patriae on behalf of Mississippi citizens injured by Defendants' alleged misconduct. On behalf of the State, the Attorney General claims that Defendants' actions had the effect of requiring the State to pay artificially high prices for infant formula for the Mississippi Women, Infants and Children (WIC) Program. Plaintiff asserts that Defendants have thus violated certain provisions of the Mississippi antitrust statute, specifically Miss. Code Ann. §§ 75-21-1 and 75-21-3. Plaintiff seeks recovery for such violations under Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-7, which sets forth certain penalties for violation of the Mississippi antitrust laws, and Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-9, seeking a penalty of $ 500 for each instance of injury to the State.

Plaintiff also alleges violations of the Mississippi Consumer Protection Act, specifically Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-5, asserting that Defendants have engaged in unfair competition and unfair or deceptive trade practices. As a result of Defendants' alleged wrongful actions, Plaintiff asserts that the State and the citizens [5] of the State have paid more for infant formula than they would have paid in the absence of Defendants' alleged unlawful conduct. Plaintiff asserts a right to recover damages pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-15, in his capacity as parens patriae for the Mississippi citizens who have been injured by Defendants' alleged wrongful conduct.²

[6] On February 17, 1995, Defendants removed this action to this Court on grounds of diversity of citizenship and federal question jurisdiction. Each of Defendants is a foreign corporation organized and existing under the laws of a state other than Mississippi. Defendants assert that the State of Mississippi, on whose behalf Mike Moore brought this suit, is not the real party in interest, and that the Attorney General has no parens patriae authority to bring suit on behalf of the citizens of the State. The real parties in interest, according to Defendants, are the private individuals who bought infant formula between 1980 and 1992, and these are the persons whose citizenship matters for the purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Defendants further assert that Plaintiff has engaged in artful pleading to avoid federal jurisdiction, and that Plaintiff's claims are not cognizable under Mississippi law.

II. Analysis

HN1 [↑] 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\) provides in relevant part as follows:

Any civil action brought in a State court of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction, may be removed by the defendant or defendants, to the district court of the United States [7] for the district and division embracing the place where such action is pending.

28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\). "The HN2 [↑] removing party bears the burden of establishing federal jurisdiction." Laughlin v. Prudential Ins. Co., 882 F.2d 187, 190 (5th Cir. 1989) (citation omitted). Whether a case is removable must be determined by reference to the allegations [*30] made in the original pleadings. Wheeler v. Frito-Lay, Inc., 743 F. Supp. 483, 485 (S.D. Miss. 1990).

A. Eleventh Amendment Immunity

HN3 [↑] The Eleventh Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that "the Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State." The United States Supreme Court has interpreted this amendment on many occasions to determine when a suit is one against the State. See, e.g., Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 79 L. Ed. 2d 67, 104 S. Ct. 900 (1984).

²The Court notes that Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-15 was amended in 1994 and the provision regarding attorneys' fees was removed from the statute. Plaintiff asserts a general right to recovery of attorneys' fees if successful on the merits of this suit. Defendants assert that Miss. Code Ann. § 75-24-19 now governs the recovery of attorneys' fees and only allows recovery to the Plaintiff when a violation of section 75-24-5 is knowing and willful. Defendants further assert that Mississippi law only allows the recovery of attorneys' fees when provided by statute. Stokes v. Board of Directors of La Cava Improvement Co., 654 So. 2d 524, 1995 WL 242266 (Miss. 1995). The Court need not address this issue as it is not necessary for a decision on the Motion to Remand.

That Court has held that "an HN4[[↑]] unconsenting State is immune from suits brought by her own citizens as well as citizens of another state." Id. at 81 100 (quoting Employees v. Missouri Dept. of Public Health & Welfare, 411 U.S. 279, 280, 36 L. Ed. 2d 251, 93 S. Ct. 1614 \(1973\)). The Plaintiff in this matter asserts that "the proscriptions of the Eleventh Amendment apply with equal force to a suit brought against a state in federal court, and a suit brought by a state in state court which is removed to federal court." Memorandum in Support at 16-17. Defendants do not directly address the issue of the Eleventh Amendment in their submissions to this Court.³

The Court has extensively researched this question and has found only a few federal court cases which even mention this issue. The Court has found only one case, however, which actually bases its ruling [9] on the Eleventh Amendment issue. In California v. Steelcase, Inc., 792 F. Supp. 84 \(C.D. Cal. 1992\), the court addressed the issue of Eleventh Amendment immunity where the plaintiff is the state and the case has been removed by the defendants. The court first concluded that the state is not a citizen of itself for diversity purposes. Id. at 86 (citing Moor v. County of Alameda, 411 U.S. 693, 717, 36 L. Ed. 2d 596, 93 S. Ct. 1785 \(1973\)). The court then addressed the Eleventh Amendment immunity issue:

Defendant, relying on the literal wording of the Eleventh Amendment, contends that this is not a "suit . . . against one of the United States . . ." (emphasis added) because the State is the plaintiff. However, HN5[[↑]] since the immunity granted by the Eleventh Amendment is an immunity from being made an involuntary party to an action in federal court, it should apply equally to the case where the state is a plaintiff in an action commenced in state court and the action is removed to federal court by the defendant.

The statute under which this action was removed requires, for an action to be removable, that the district courts "have original jurisdiction" over the action. [10] 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\). Because of the jurisdictional bar of the Eleventh Amendment, the district courts would not have original jurisdiction over this action, absent the consent of the State. The State does not consent to removal. Therefore, subject matter jurisdiction is lacking, at least as to the claim under the unfair competition statute.

792 F. Supp. at 86; but see South Dakota State Cement Plant Comm'n v. Wausau Underwriters Ins. Co., 778 F. Supp. 1515, 1522 \(D.S.D. 1991\) (declining to address the Eleventh Amendment claim with the State as the plaintiff in a motion to remand concluding that "the contention that the Eleventh Amendment nevertheless has bearing upon this Court's jurisdiction is not supported by any authority cited by either party").

The Court finds the reasoning of the Steelcase court to be sound. By removing this matter to federal court, Defendants have involuntarily subjected the State of Mississippi to the jurisdiction of this Court. Because the State does not consent to this removal, the Court finds that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction over this action due to the Eleventh Amendment proscription, provided that the [*31] State of Mississippi is the real [11] party in interest in this matter.

B. Real Party in Interest and Diversity Jurisdiction

The real party in interest issue is relevant to the Eleventh Amendment immunity question as well as to a proper determination of diversity of citizenship. Because the Court has previously found that the Eleventh Amendment precludes the removal of this suit to federal court if the Plaintiff is the real party in interest, the Court will address the issues of real party in interest and diversity of citizenship together because the questions pertaining to each are somewhat intertwined.

Plaintiff asserts that the State of Mississippi is the real party in interest with regard to the parens patriae claims brought under the Mississippi antitrust statute and consumer fraud statute. Plaintiff further asserts that even if the Court determines that the State has no independent interest in the parens patriae claims, the State is still a real party in interest with regard to the statutory penalty and WIC claims. Therefore, according to Plaintiff, because the State is the real party in interest, there is no diversity in this matter because a state is not a citizen for the purposes of diversity jurisdiction [\[12\]](#) under 28 U.S.C. § 1332.

³ While Defendants assert that the State is not the real party in interest in this lawsuit, Defendants fail to address whether the Eleventh Amendment prohibits the State, if it is the real party in interest, from being brought into federal court through the removal process as an involuntary plaintiff.

Defendants assert that "the Attorney General is acting as the nominal party for a group of lawyers who want to mask what is in fact a private class action on behalf of Mississippi consumers of infant formula that would otherwise be barred by Mississippi law." Defendants' Joint Memorandum in Opposition at 3. Defendants further assert that Plaintiff's non-parens patriae claims have been fraudulently joined to defeat diversity jurisdiction. Therefore, according to Defendants, the State of Mississippi is not a real party in interest to this litigation, and diversity jurisdiction exists with regard to the Defendants and the true plaintiffs.

The Court need not decide whether the State of Mississippi has the authority to pursue parens patriae claims in the manner asserted in this case in order to dispose of this issue. HN6  Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-7 (rev. 1991) provides as follows:

Any person, corporation, partnership, firm or association of persons and the officers and representatives of the corporation or association violating any of the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit not less than one hundred dollars ($ 100.00) nor more than two thousand dollars [\[13\]](#) ($ 2,000.00) for every such violation. Each month in which such person, corporation or association shall violate this chapter shall be a separate violation, the forfeiture and penalty in such case to be recovered alone by suit in the name of the state on the relation of the attorney general and by the consent of the attorney general suits may be brought by any district attorney, such suits to be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Id. (emphasis added). This statute clearly gives the Attorney General of the State the authority to bring suit in the name of the State for violations of Mississippi antitrust law. Furthermore, the Attorney General bringing suit in this capacity is merely the alter ego of the State, and the State is therefore the real party in interest. See Tradigrain v. Mississippi State Port Authority, 701 F.2d 1131, 1132 (5th Cir. 1983).

In this case, the State is the real party in interest, therefore diversity jurisdiction does not exist. HN7  A state is not considered a citizen for the purposes of diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Moor v. County of Alameda, 411 U.S. 693, 717, 36 L. Ed. 2d 596, 93 S. Ct. 1785 (1973); Tradigrain, [\[14\]](#) 701 F.2d at 1132. Because the State of Mississippi is the real party in interest and is not a citizen for the purposes of diversity jurisdiction, removal on the basis of diversity jurisdiction was improper.

Defendants assert, however, that Plaintiff's statutory penalty claim was fraudulently joined by the Plaintiff in that such a claim cannot succeed as a matter of Mississippi law. This argument is not persuasive. HN8  The removing party bears the burden of demonstrating fraudulent joinder. Carriere v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 893 F.2d 98, 100 (5th Cir.) (citing Laughlin v. Prudential Ins. Co., 882 F.2d 187, 190 (5th Cir. 1989)), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 817, 111 S. Ct. 60, 112 [\[*32\]](#) L. Ed. 2d 35 (1990). To prove fraudulent joinder, Defendants must establish that Plaintiff has no possibility of establishing a cause of action against them in state court. Dodson v. Spiliada Maritime Corp., 951 F.2d 40, 42 (5th Cir. 1992).

In evaluating fraudulent joinder claims, we must initially resolve all disputed questions of fact and all ambiguities in the controlling state law in favor of the nonremoving party. We are then to determine whether that party has any possibility of recovery against the party whose joinder [\[15\]](#) is questioned. . . . We do not decide whether the plaintiff will actually or even probably prevail on the merits, but look only for a possibility that he may do so. . . . If that possibility exists, then "a good faith assertion of such an expectancy in a state court is not a sham . . . and is not fraudulent in fact or in law."

Id. at 42-43 (citations omitted); see also Jernigan v. Ashland Oil Inc., 989 F.2d 812, 815-16 (5th Cir.) (concluding that all factual allegations must be viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff in determining the issue of fraudulent joinder), cert. denied, 126 L. Ed. 2d 150, 114 S. Ct. 192 (1993).

The Court finds that Defendants have failed to establish fraudulent joinder in this matter.⁴ Defendants argue vehemently that Mississippi antitrust law is limited to intrastate conspiracies. Defendants argue legislative history, cite Mississippi cases regarding legislative intent and quote from authoritative treatises to support their argument. Curiously absent from Defendants' argument, however, is any decision by the Mississippi Supreme Court concerning whether the Mississippi antitrust statute is limited in application to intrastate [16] conspiracies. The Court finds that Plaintiff has stated an arguably valid claim on the face of the Complaint, pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. §§ 75-21-1, 75-21-3 and § 75-21-7, the penalty provision of the antitrust statute. Even if that claim is ambiguous under state law, the Mississippi state courts are the proper forum for determining this issue of state law which has not yet been decided by the highest court in Mississippi.

Defendants can therefore only secure removal of this case, based upon diversity jurisdiction, by proceeding under 28 U.S.C. § 1441(c) which permits the removal of a claim joined to a nonremovable claim if it is "separate and independent" from the nonremovable claim. McKay v. Boyd Constr. Co., 769 F.2d 1084, 1087 (5th Cir. 1985). The McKay court concluded that section 1441(c) must be construed narrowly "to reduce [17] the number of cases removable from state to federal court." Id. at 1087 (citation omitted).

Thus, "where there is a single wrong to plaintiff, for which relief is sought, arising from an interlocked series of transactions, there is no separate and independent claim or cause of action under § 1441(c)." Id. (quoting American Fire & Casualty Co. v. Finn, 341 U.S. 6, 71 S. Ct. 534, 540, 95 L. Ed. 702 (1951)).

The Court finds that Defendants have failed to meet the section 1441(c) standard of showing that the other claims asserted in Plaintiff's Complaint are separate and independent from Plaintiff's claims under the Mississippi antitrust statute. As stated previously, Defendants merely argue that Plaintiff has no valid state law antitrust claim. The Court finds that this claim, along with all others asserted in Plaintiff's Complaint, should be decided by the state courts because the antitrust claim is a state law claim which is interlocked with and interdependent upon Plaintiff's remaining claims in the Complaint.

C. Federal Question Jurisdiction

Defendants assert that Plaintiff is using artful pleading to avoid federal jurisdiction. According to Defendants, Plaintiff [18] has no cause of action under state law because Plaintiff alleges an interstate conspiracy which should properly be brought as an alleged violation of the federal Sherman Act. Plaintiff asserts that this cause of action is valid under state law, and that Defendants [*33] have failed to prove the necessary elements for the artful pleading doctrine.

HN9 Federal jurisdiction extends over "only those cases in which a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal law creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal law." Franchise Tax Board of California v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 27-28, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420, 103 S. Ct. 2841 (1983). Under the well-pleaded complaint rule, the federal question must be present on the face of the complaint, Gully v. First National Bank, 299 U.S. 109, 113, 81 L. Ed. 70, 57 S. Ct. 96 (1936), and jurisdiction cannot be based on the existence of a federal defense. Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Mattox, 897 F.2d 773, 787 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 926, 112 L. Ed. 2d 261, 111 S. Ct. 307, 111 S. Ct. 308 (1990). "For federal question [19] jurisdiction to exist, the federal law must be a direct element in the plaintiff's claim and . . . it is not enough that it comes in remotely or indirectly." 13B Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 3562 (1984).

The Court finds that Defendants have failed to show that Plaintiff's claims are only cognizable, if at all, under federal law. As noted previously, Plaintiff has stated, on the face of the Complaint, an arguably valid cause of action under Miss. Code Ann. §§ 75-21-1, 75-21-3 and § 75-21-7, the penalty provision of the antitrust statute. Defendants' argument that the facts set forth in the Complaint do not state a valid cause of action under that statute is an argument which should be made to the state courts in a motion to dismiss once this case is remanded. Defendants have failed to offer any Mississippi case which has held that the Mississippi antitrust statute applies only to intrastate, as opposed to interstate, violations of the statute. Until the state courts have so ruled, this Court will not speculate concerning this area of state law, especially in deciding a Motion to Remand.⁵

⁴ The Court is assuming in making this determination that there can be fraudulent joinder of claims, as Defendants assert, as opposed to fraudulent joinder of persons.

[20] The only exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule, which might be applicable to this case,⁶ is whether federal antitrust law completely preempts state antitrust law such that Plaintiff could not maintain an action in state court. The United States Supreme Court has specifically ruled that HN10[↑] state antitrust indirect purchaser statutes are not preempted by federal law. California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 102, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 \(1989\). Therefore, Plaintiff's claims are not preempted by federal law.

The Court finds that there is no apparent federal question on the face of Plaintiff's Complaint, and [21] that Plaintiff has asserted only state law causes of action in the Complaint. Furthermore, federal antitrust law does not preempt the state statutes at issue in this case. Removal based upon federal question jurisdiction is therefore improper.

III. Conclusion

The Court finds that Plaintiff's Motion to Remand should be granted. Plaintiff has asserted, on the face of the Complaint, a valid cause of action pursuant to Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-7 (rev. 1991). The Court makes no finding regarding the other causes of action asserted by the Plaintiff or whether such causes of action are cognizable under state or federal law. These claims cannot be separated pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(c\). The Court will therefore remand the entire case to state court. See McKay, 769 F.2d at 1087.

Because the Court has considered the Surreply Memorandum, the Court will grant Defendants' Motion to File Surreply Memorandum. The Plaintiff's Application for Review is now moot because this case is being remanded [*34] to state court and is therefore denied.

Plaintiff has requested an award of attorneys' fees incurred in opposing this removal. Plaintiff asserts that Defendants have acted egregiously in removing [22] this case when they knew it should remain in state court. The Court finds that the legal arguments presented by Defendants to support their opposition to Plaintiff's Motion to Remand were not frivolous nor presented solely for delay, and that an award of attorneys' fees is therefore not proper in this matter.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that Plaintiff's Motion to Remand should be and hereby is granted. This matter is hereby remanded to the Circuit Court of Holmes County, Mississippi.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiff's request for attorneys' fees is hereby denied.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendants' Motion for Leave to File Surreply Memorandum should be and hereby is granted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Plaintiff's Application for Review and Objections to Magistrate Judge's Order Denying Motion to Quash and for Protective Order is moot and therefore denied.

SO ORDERED this the 22nd day of September, 1995.

⁵ The Court is not required to make an Erie guess in the context of a Motion to Remand concerning how the Mississippi state courts would rule on this issue of state law. The Court will not usurp the function of the state court in determining the meaning of the Mississippi antitrust statute in a case instituted in a state court.

⁶ Although Plaintiff raises the res judicata exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule, there is no federal judgment which would act as a bar to Plaintiff's state law claims. See Federated Dept. Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 \(1981\); Powers v. South Cent. United Food & Commercial Workers Unions, 719 F.2d 760, 766 \(5th Cir. 1983\).

900 F. Supp. 26, *34 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13989, 22

William H. Barbour, Jr.

CHIEF JUDGE

End of Document

Serfecz v. Jewel Food Stores

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

May 11, 1995, Argued ; September 26, 1995, Decided

Nos. 94-3211, 94-4017, 95-1201

Reporter

67 F.3d 591 *; 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 27500 ; 1995-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,128

JOSEPH SERFECZ and FIRST CHICAGO TRUST, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. JEWEL FOOD STORES, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) As Amended April 11, 1997.

Prior History: United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 92 C 4171. John F. Grady, Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED

Core Terms

Mall, retail, grocery, competitor, antitrust, lease, conspiracy, shopping center, anti trust law, grocery store, space, district court, monopolize, injuries, Skates, defendants', consumers, motive, anticompetitive, conspired, summary judgment, anchor tenant, sublease, special injury, plaintiffs', premises, damages, rental space, supplier, restraint of trade

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

67 F.3d 591, *591 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 27500, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN1 [down] Sherman Act, Penalties

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits anticompetitive activities designed to restrain unreasonably trade and bans every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. Section 2 prohibits monopolistic practices and provides sanctions for every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2 [down] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN4 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

The language of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, has been construed to limit the parties who may bring an antitrust action to (1) those who have suffered the type of injury that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and (2) those whose injuries are a result of defendant's unlawful conduct. The Supreme Court, focusing on Congress' intent to have antitrust laws construed in light of the common law, also has read 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 to contain a proximate cause element, denying standing to plaintiffs whose injuries are indirect or secondary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Standing

The United States Supreme Court has identified several factors to be considered in determining whether a plaintiff is the proper party to bring a private action under the antitrust laws: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the plaintiff's injury; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's injury and the relationship between the plaintiff's injury and the type of activity sought to be redressed under the antitrust laws; and (3) the speculative nature of the plaintiff's claim for damages and the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews de novo the district court's grant of summary judgment and evaluates the evidence in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN7 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is appropriate when the pleadings and supplemental materials present no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). To survive a defendant's motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff must present sufficient evidence to show the existence of each element of its case on which it will bear the burden at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > ... > General Premises Liability > Types of Premises > Stores

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

In order to maintain an antitrust action under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, plaintiffs must establish that they (1) have suffered an antitrust injury and (2) are the proper plaintiffs to maintain an antitrust action with respect to the relevant markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause. This test focuses on the connection between the purpose of the antitrust laws (protecting market competition) and the alleged injury. When the plaintiff's injury is linked to the injury inflicted upon the market, such as when consumers pay higher prices because of a market monopoly or when a competitor is forced out of the market, the compensation of the injured party promotes the designated purpose of the antitrust law -- the preservation of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Real Property Law > Landlord & Tenant > Landlord's Remedies & Rights > Rent Recovery

HN10 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Suppliers to direct market participants typically cannot seek recovery under the antitrust laws because their injuries are too secondary and indirect to be considered antitrust injuries.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Private Attorneys General

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN11 [] Standing, Clayton Act

From the class of injured persons suffering an antitrust injury only those who can most efficiently vindicate the purposes of the antitrust laws have antitrust standing to maintain a private action under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. The existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement diminishes the justification for allowing a more remote party to perform the office of a private attorney general, particularly when denying standing is not likely to leave a significant antitrust violation undetected or unremedied. An appropriate balance between the interest in deterrence through private antitrust enforcement and avoidance of excessive treble damages litigation is achieved by granting standing only to those who, as consumers or competitors, suffer immediate injuries with respect to their business or property, while excluding persons whose injuries were more indirectly caused by the antitrust conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN12 [] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, plaintiffs must provide evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the defendants. When a plaintiff relies on circumstantial evidence, as is very often the case, he must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inference of independent action. Because there is often only a fine line separating unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices, conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN13 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In the U.S. Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, to evaluate the legal sufficiency of the evidence in antitrust conspiracy cases the court first reviews the evidence of conspiracy submitted by the plaintiff. Next, the court examines whether the defendants have offered evidence that tends to show that the conduct that forms the basis of the plaintiff's complaint is as compatible with the legitimate business activities of the defendant as it is with illegal conspiracy. Finally, if the court determines that this analysis leaves the evidence of conspiracy ambiguous, the court determines whether the plaintiff can point to any evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing their legitimate independent interests.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN14 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Although a lack of motive may be evidence that parties did not conspire, the presence of an economic motive is of very little probative value. Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy. The mere existence of mutual economic advantage, by itself, does not tend to exclude the possibility of independent, legitimate action and supplies no basis for inferring a conspiracy. The mere confluence of economic interests between the parties does not establish, standing alone, the existence of a conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN15 [] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Although, at the summary judgment stage, the court must evaluate the record so as to give the nonmoving party the benefit of the doubt on all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from that record, the court is not permitted to allow a case built on a metaphysical doubt to go to the jury.

Torts > ... > Malicious Prosecution > Elements > Favorable Termination

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN16 [] Elements, Favorable Termination

The Illinois courts have long disfavored actions for malicious prosecution and have sought to encourage a policy of open access to the courts. In order to establish malicious prosecution, a claimant must show that: (1) the action was terminated in plaintiff's favor; (2) the action was brought maliciously and without probable cause; and (3) the plaintiff suffered special injury or special damage beyond the usual expense, time or annoyance in defending a lawsuit.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Provisional Remedies > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN17 [blue icon] Remedies, Provisional Remedies

Under Illinois common law, special injury for purposes of a malicious prosecution claim is usually identified with an arrest or seizure of property or some constructive taking or interference with the person or property. A showing of interference with property is satisfied only if a court issues a provisional remedy such as attachment, an order of arrest or an injunction. In Illinois, the court's focus rests upon the peculiar effect of the suit upon plaintiff's right to use the property; special injury in civil cases will not be found unless the injuries emanate directly from the impact of the issues allegedly wrongfully litigated.

Counsel: For JOSEPH SERFECZ, FIRST CHICAGO TRUST COMPANY OF ILLINOIS, Trustee of Trust No. 684, Plaintiffs - Appellants (94-3211, 94-4017, 95-1201): Wayne E. Dekens, Lynda J. Khan, KHAN & ASSOCIATES, Chicago, IL.

For JEWEL FOOD STORES, INCORPORATED, a New York corporation, AMERICAN STORES PROPERTIES, INCORPORATED, a Delaware corporation, Defendants - Appellees (94-3211): David Marx, Jr., Anne R. Pramaggiore, David B. Bayless, Christine M. Drylie, McDermott, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, IL.

For JEWEL FOOD STORES, INCORPORATED, a New York corporation, Defendants - Appellees (94-4017): David Marx, Jr., Anne R. Pramaggiore, McDermott, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, IL.

For JEWEL FOOD STORES DIVISION OF JEWEL COMPANIES, INCORPORATED, a New York corporation, AMERICAN STORES PROPERTIES, INCORPORATED, a Delaware corporation, Defendants - Appellees (95-1201): David Marx, Jr., Anne R. Pramaggiore, McDermott, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, IL.

For PATRICK F. DALY, PATRICK F. DALY & ASSOCIATES, LIMITED, an Illinois corporation, DEI INCORPORATED, an Illinois Corporation, DALAN/JUPITER INCORPORATED, an Illinois corporation, Defendants - Appellees (94-3211): Steven H. Cohen, Henry C. Krasnow, Jeremy W. Hobbs, KRASNOW, SANBERG & COHEN, Chicago, IL.

For PATRICK F. DALY, PATRICK F. DALY & ASSOCIATES, LIMITED, an Illinois corporation, DEI INCORPORATED, an Illinois Corporation, DALAN/JUPITER INCORPORATED, an Illinois corporation, Defendants - Appellees (95-1201): Henry C. Krasnow, KRASNOW, SANBERG & COHEN, Chicago, IL.

For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, INCORPORATED, an Ohio corporation, Defendant - Appellee (95-1201): James P. Chapman, CHAPMAN & ASSOCIATES, Chicago, IL. Robert A. Chapman, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Before CUDAHY, ESCHBACH and RIPPLE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: RIPPLE

Opinion

[*594] RIPPLE, Circuit Judge. Joseph Serfecz and First Chicago Trust Company of Illinois ("First Chicago Trust") have ownership interests in the Grove Mall in Elk Grove Village, Illinois. They claim that Jewel Food Stores ("Jewel"), American Stores Properties, Inc. ("American Properties"), and the developers of competing Elk Cross ing Mall have conspired to run Grove Mall out of business and to monopolize the retail grocery and shopping center markets in Elk Grove Village. They brought this action alleging defendants violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. They also alleged supplemental state law claims of malicious prosecution and breach of lease. The district court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment with regard to the antitrust and malicious prosecution claims and granted a partial summary judgment with regard to the breach of lease claim. Mr. Serfecz and First Chicago Trust now appeal that judgment.¹ For the reasons set forth below, we affirm the judgment of [2] the district court.

I

BACKGROUND

A. Facts

In 1963, Jewel entered into a lease for retail space in Grove Mall. Jewel's lease ran until 1986 and provided Jewel with three five-year options to renew. In 1977, Mr. Serfecz purchased Grove Mall and assumed all existing leases including the Jewel lease. [3] In 1986, Jewel exercised its first option to renew and in 1991 it exercised its second option. Jewel's current lease expires in 1996 and, based upon the remaining five-year option, may be extended until 2001.

From 1963 until 1987, Jewel owned and operated a grocery store in its leased premises at Grove Mall. In October 1987, Jewel vacated the premises and moved its grocery operation across the street to the newly constructed Elk Crossing Mall. Since its move, Jewel has continued to pay rent and has exercised its second option to renew the lease. Jewel has refused to give up its leasehold interest in the premises and its retail space has remained unoccupied. Jewel proposed to sublet the space to United Skates of America ("United Skates") for use as a roller skating rink. Mr. Serfecz objected to this proposed sublease because he believed occupancy by United Skates would ruin Grove Mall as a retail center and increase his insurance liability. In 1990, Jewel filed an action in state court that sought a declaratory judgment regarding its right to sublet. The Illinois trial court ruled against Jewel; it held that the express provisions of the lease gave Mr. Serfecz the right to refuse any [4] sublet that would increase his insurance rates. The appellate court affirmed.

