Loren Data alleges that GXS has conducted "an aggressive campaign" [*35] in the last decade to control and monopolize the EDI communications market and identifies two examples in support: (1) GXS' acquisition of a division of IBM in 2005; and (2) its merger with Inovis in 2010. (ECF No. 1 ¶ 7). Putting aside Loren Data's characterizations, two acquisitions in a ten year period with no allegation of plans for future mergers or acquisitions do not suggest that GXS is on the path to market domination. Loren Data further attempts to characterize GXS' refusal to grant Loren Data an interconnect as the latest iteration of GXS' monopolization goals. The problem with this argument is that Loren Data simultaneously alleges that GXS has granted interconnects to every other VAN, large or small, and that GXS has refused to grant an interconnect to Loren Data for the past ten years. (Id. ¶ 6). GXS is not likely to gain monopoly control over the industry if it refuses to deal with only one of 36 available VAN networks. Moreover the fact that GXS has granted interconnects to so many other VANs makes it unlikely that GXS' denial of an interconnect to Loren Data will have a negative impact on competition in the relevant market.

For all these reasons, Loren Data has not stated [*36] a claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act.

B. Maryland State Law Claims

GXS argues that if the federal claims are dismissed, the state law claims must also be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. GXS argues, first, that Loren Data did not allege supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims and, second, that once the federal antitrust claims are dismissed there is no reason for the court to exercise jurisdiction over the state law claims. (ECF No. 9-1, at 43-44). Loren Data did not respond to these arguments in its opposition.

Counts IV, V, and VI of Loren Data's complaint arise under Maryland state law. Title 28 U.S.C. § 1367 grants federal courts supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims that are related to claims for which the court has original jurisdiction. GXS argues that Loren Data's failure to invoke this statute in its complaint is fatal and precludes the court from exercising jurisdiction over the state law claims. Ordinarily a party should provide "a short plain statement of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends." Pinkley Inc. v. City of Frederick, 191 F.3d 394, 399 (4th Cir. 1999) (citing [*37] Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(1)), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1155, 120 S. Ct. 1161, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1072 (2000). The Fourth Circuit went on to note in Pinkley:

> there is some authority that in the absence of an affirmative pleading of a jurisdictional basis a federal court may find that it has jurisdiction if the facts supporting jurisdiction have been clearly pleaded. 'The pleading can either refer to the appropriate jurisdictional statute or contain factual assertions that, if proved, establish jurisdiction.'

Id. (quoting 2 Moore's Federal Practice § 8.03[3] (3d ed. 1997)). Consequently, Loren Data's failure to invoke 28 U.S.C. § 1367 does not mandate dismissal of its state law claims. Furthermore, although diversity jurisdiction is not referenced in the body of its complaint, Loren Data's civil cover sheet indicates its intent to invoke diversity jurisdiction, identifies the parties as having diverse citizenship, and states a total amount in controversy in excess of $75,000. (See ECF No. 1-1). The complaint also alleges facts to support diversity jurisdiction for some claims. For this reason, the merits of Loren Data's state law claims should be considered.

1. Maryland Antitrust Law Claim

Count IV alleges a violation of Maryland's antitrust [*38] law, Md. Code Ann. § Com. Law §§ 11-204(a)(1)-(3). Sections 11-204(a)(1) and 11-204(a)(2) mirror sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and are interpreted concordantly with the Sherman Act. [3] havePOWER, LLC v. Gen. Elec. Co., 183 F. Supp. 2d 779, 785 n.4 (D.Md. 2002) (recognizing that Md. Code Ann., Com. Law § 11-202(a)(2) expressly states the General Assembly's intent that when construing the antitrust subtitle, courts should "be guided by the interpretation given by the federal courts to the various federal statues dealing with the same or similar matters, including . . . 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 though 7."); Natural Design, Inc. v. Rouse Co., 302 Md. 47, 53 and 67, 485 A.2d 663 (1984) ("Section 11-204(a)(1) of the Maryland Act is essentially the same as § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act" and "Section 11-204(a)(2) is analogous to § 2 of the Sherman Act"). When an antitrust claim fails under federal law, that claim will also fail under the analogous Maryland state antitrust law. Hinkleman v. Shell Oil Co., 962 F.2d 372, 379 (4th Cir. 1992). Accordingly, Loren Data's claims that GXS has violated §§ 11-204(a)(1) and (2) must be dismissed.

Loren Data has not alleged a violation of federal law that directly parallels Md. Code Ann., Com. Law § 11-204(a)(3). This subsection provides that one may not:

> Directly or indirectly discriminate in price among purchasers of commodities or services of like grade and quality, if the effects of the discrimination may:
> (i) Substantially lessen competition;
> (ii) Tend to create a monopoly in any line of trade or commerce; or > (iii) Injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who grants or knowingly receives the benefit of the discrimination or with customers of either of them[.]

---

[3] Md. Code Ann. § Com. Law § 11-204(a)(1) provides that a person may not "[b]y [*39] contract, combination, or conspiracy with one or more other persons, unreasonably restrain trade or commerce." § 11-204(a)(2) provides that a person may not "[m]onopolize, attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with one or more other persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce within the State, for the purpose of excluding competition or of controlling, fixing, or maintaining prices in trade or commerce."

This subsection mirrors section 13(a) of the Robinson Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). See Soth v. Baltimore Sun Co., 4 F. Supp. 2d 417, 420 (D.Md. 1996); Berlyn, Inc. v. Gazette Newspapers, 223 F.Supp.2d 718, 741-42 (D.Md. 2002). [*40] To state a claim for price discrimination under the Robinson Patman Act, a plaintiff must allege that (1) the commodity or service was sold in interstate commerce; (2) the services or goods sold to plaintiff were of the same grade or quality as those sold to others; (3) the defendant discriminated in price between plaintiff and others; and (4) the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition. Texaco, Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 556, 110 S. Ct. 2535, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1990); Mikeron, Inc. v. Exxon Co., 264 F.Supp.2d 268, 275 (D.Md. 2003). The same requirements apply to claims stating a violation of § 11-204(a)(3) of Maryland's antitrust law, absent the requirement of an interstate nexus.

Here, Loren Data has failed to state a claim under § 11-204(a)(3) because it has not alleged a prohibited effect on competition. With respect to this count, Loren Data's allegation is nothing more than a recitation of the statutory language with no additional facts to distinguish this claim from any of the other antitrust violations alleged. And as discussed above, Loren Data has not alleged facts that show that GXS has or is attempting to obtain monopoly power, or that GXS' actions have had or will have a negative effect [*41] on competition. For all these reasons, count IV will be dismissed.

2. Tortious Interference

Count V alleges that GXS tortiously interfered with Loren Data's business relationships. A tortious interference claim under Maryland law requires proof of intentional acts "done with the unlawful purpose to cause . . . damage and loss to the plaintiffs in their lawful business, without right or justifiable cause on the part of the defendants which constitutes malice[.]" Alexander & Alexander Inc. v. B. Dixon Evander & Assocs., Inc., 336 Md. 635, 655, 650 A.2d 260 (1994) (internal quotations omitted). "Wrongful or unlawful acts include common law torts and violence or intimidation, defamation, injurious falsehood or other fraud, violation of criminal law, and the institution or threat of groundless civil suits or criminal prosecutions in bad faith." K & K Mgmt. v. Lee, 316 Md. 137, 166, 557 A.2d 965 (1989) (internal quotations omitted). The tort does not lie simply because the defendant's breach of contract "would foreseeably impinge upon a contracting party's economic relations with others." Alexander & Alexander Inc., 336 Md. at 656.

The complaint does not identify the specific wrongful acts upon which Loren Data is relying [*42] for its claim. GXS contends that the only potential wrongful acts alleged are the antitrust violations and because these claims are being dismissed the tortious interference claim also fails. (ECF No. 9-1, at 46-47). Loren Data concedes that its antitrust allegations were one basis for its wrongful interference claim but argues that the complaint contains other allegations of conduct that could constitute wrongful interference. (ECF No. 14, at 28). Specifically, Loren Data lists: (1) GXS' general denial of the industry standard settlement interconnect; (2) GXS' breach of Loren Data's contract with Inovis by discontinuing Loren Data's interconnect with Tradanet in the United Kingdom; (3) GXS' failure to service IBM's contract with the Department of Defense under which Loren Data was a subcontractor; (4) GXS' interference with Loren Data's client relations; (5) and GXS persistent refusal to grant an appropriately configured interconnect after settlement in the Covisint matter. (Id.). None of these allegations identify conduct that has been recognized as wrongful or unlawful for the purpose of stating a claim for tortious interference. Loren Data's failure to allege a wrongful act is [*43] fatal to its tortious interference claim.

3. Breach of Contract

Finally, count VI alleges that GXS is liable for breach of contract. The original complaint alleged only that GXS "is in breach of its contracts with the Plaintiff both in its long-term relationship and in its current contract with Inovis, Inc." (ECF No. 1 ¶ 45). The supplemental statement of facts in the amended complaint elaborates on this claim and identifies two specific contracts that GXS allegedly breached. (ECF No. 13 ¶ 11). For the first identified contract, Loren Data alleges damages of $24,832.49; no amount of damages is alleged for breach of the second contract.

Assuming that Loren Data has alleged adequate facts to state a claim for breach of contract, it has not alleged adequate damages for the court to exercise independent diversity jurisdiction over this count. 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a) gives federal district courts diversity jurisdiction only for civil actions where the amount in controversy "exceeds the sum or value of $75,000." Count VI alleges an amount of damages significantly below the statutory threshold. Typically claims can be aggregated to satisfy the minimum threshold, but because the remainder of Loren [*44] Data's counts will be dismissed for failure to state a claim, and count VI does not satisfy the minimum threshold on its own, the court merely possesses potential supplemental jurisdiction over this count. Shanaghan v. Cahill, 58 F.3d 106, 109-10 (4th Cir. 1995). As noted therein, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3) provides that "the district courts may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim . . . if . . . the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." Dismissal is favored in cases turning primarily on questions of state law, because "[n]eedless decisions of state law [by federal courts] should be avoided both as a matter of comity and to promote justice between the parties, by procuring for them a surer-footed reading of applicable law." United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966). Particularly in a case, such as this one, before trial or even discovery, has begun, "the balance of factors . . . point[s] toward declining to exercise jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims." Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350, n.7, 108 S. Ct. 614, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720 (1988); see also Taylor v. Giant Food, Inc., 438 F.Supp.2d 576, 580 (D.Md. 2006).

Thus, [*45] the breach of contract count will be dismissed without prejudice for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Loren Data will be free to pursue this claim upon filing suit in an appropriate state court.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss filed by Defendant GXS, Inc. will be granted. A separate order will follow.

/s/ DEBORAH K. CHASANOW

United States District Judge

Black v. JP Morgan Chase & Co.

United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania

August 10, 2011, Decided; August 10, 2011, Filed

Civil Action No. 10-848

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103727 *; 2011 WL 4102802

KARIN J. BLACK, individually and on behalf of the Classes, Plaintiff, v. JP MORGAN CHASE & CO., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Magistrate's recommendation at Black v. JP Morgan Chase & Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99428 (W.D. Pa., Aug. 25, 2011)

Adopted by, Motion granted by, Claim dismissed by, Request denied by Black v. JP Morgan Chase & Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103621 (W.D. Pa., Sept. 14, 2011)

Core Terms

VantageScore, scores, lenders, Bureau, pricing, allegations, consumer, conspiracy, motion to dismiss, terms, customers, personal jurisdiction, Defendants', credit bureau, submits, competitors, recommended, factual allegations, price fixing, letters, credit information, antitrust, consumer credit, anti trust law, website, subsidiary, lending, sharing, argues, credit history

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Special Venue

HN1[] Sherman Act, Claims

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Special Venue

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 22.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. The complaint must be dismissed for failure to state a claim if it does not allege enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when a plaintiff pleads factual content that allows a court to draw the reasonable inference that a defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that the defendant has acted unlawfully. Where the complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with the defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Conclusory or bare-bones allegations will not survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim: threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice. To prevent dismissal, all civil complaints must set out sufficient factual matter to show that the claim is facially plausible. This then allows a court to draw the reasonable inference that a defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. A plaintiff must show that the allegations of his or her complaints are plausible.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A two-prong test is applied by a district court in deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. First, the district court must accept all well-pleaded facts as true and discard any legal conclusions contained in the complaint. Next, the court must consider whether the facts alleged in the complaint sufficiently demonstrate that the plaintiff has a plausible claim for relief. To survive a motion to dismiss, the complaint must show an entitlement to relief through its facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Courts generally consider only the allegations of a complaint, its attached exhibits, and matters of public record in deciding motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Factual allegations within documents described or identified in the complaint may also be weighed if the plaintiff's claims are based upon those documents. A district court may consult those documents without converting a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN7[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

For purposes of a motion to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim, a court assumes all factual allegations to be true.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN8[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes illegal every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Moreover, § 1 prohibits only unreasonable restraints of trade. Thus, because § 1 of the Sherman Act does not prohibit all unreasonable restraints of trade, but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy, the crucial question is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

In determining whether a practice restrains trade in violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a court will apply one of two standards, depending on the nature of the alleged violation: (1) a per se rule or (2) the rule of reason. The accepted standard for determining whether a business practice restrains trade in violation of § 1 is the rule of reason. Under this standard, the court must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect. Another significant consideration is whether the businesses involved have market power. By way of example, the rule of reason standard has been applied to vertical agreements, i.e., allegations of agreements between entities at different market levels that restrain trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

In applying the rule of reason analysis, there are four elements that an antitrust plaintiff asserting a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim must prove: (1) that defendants contracted, combined, or conspired with each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and conduct pursuant to the contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiff was injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN11[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The per se rule applies to a narrow category of restraints of trade that have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for pro-competitive benefit that they are deemed unlawful per se. For example, horizontal restraints, i.e., agreements between competitors at the same level of market structure, such as price fixing agreements and group boycotts, are deemed to be unlawful per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN12[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Resort to per se rules is confined to restraints of trade that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. To justify a per se prohibition a restraint must have manifestly anticompetitive effects, and lack any redeeming virtue. As a consequence, the per se rule is appropriate only after courts have had considerable experience with the type of restraint at issue and only if the courts can predict with confidence that it would be invalidated in all or almost all instances under the rule of reason. Courts express reluctance to adopt per se rules with regard to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious. A departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than upon formalistic line drawing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN13[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

In the situation where the evidence consists of mere exchanges of information, the presumption that price fixing agreements are per se unlawful disappears. Exchanges of information are not considered a per se violation because such practices can in certain circumstances increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive. Consequently, courts evaluate such exchanges of information under a rule of reason analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

The very essence of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 antitrust claim is the existence of an agreement, because § 1 liability is predicated upon some form of concerted action. Unilateral activity by a defendant, no matter the motivation, cannot give rise to a § 1 violation. This is because a business may deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN15[] Sherman Act, Claims

To allege an agreement in restraint of trade between two or more persons or entities, a plaintiff must allege facts plausibly suggesting a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN16[] Sherman Act, Claims

A plaintiff may prove the existence of concerted action in restraint of trade among defendants and other parties by relying on either direct or circumstantial evidence. Direct evidence is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted. However, because direct evidence is often not available, the plaintiff may rely solely on circumstantial evidence, and any reasonable inferences that may be drawn from such evidence, to prove a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN17[] Sherman Act, Claims

One type of circumstantial evidence from which a fact finder may infer an agreement in restraint of trade is parallel conduct or conscious parallelism. While a showing of parallel business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement, it falls short of conclusively establishing agreement or itself constituting a Sherman Act offense. Even conscious parallelism, a common reaction of firms in a concentrated market that recognize their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions, is not in itself unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN18[] Sherman Act, Claims

An allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy in restraint of trade does not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. A statement of parallel conduct, even conduct consciously undertaken, needs some setting suggesting the agreement necessary to make out a § 1 claim; without that further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory. An allegation of parallel conduct is thus much like a naked assertion of conspiracy in a § 1 complaint: it gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN19[] Sherman Act, Claims

Where an antitrust plaintiff intends to prove her 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim based on circumstantial evidence of parallel conduct, she must also plead plus factors. Because parallel conduct is just as likely to be in line with a wide array of rational and competitive business judgments unilaterally prompted by common market perceptions, the courts require the antitrust plaintiff to plead facts suggesting that defendants were not acting independently. Thus, the plaintiff relying on parallel conduct must allege facts that, if true, would establish at least one plus factor, since plus factors are, by definition, facts that tend to ensure that courts punish concerted action--an actual agreement--instead of the unilateral, independent conduct of competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN20[] Sherman Act, Claims

Although not a finite list, three plus factors may nudge the allegations of parallel conduct across the line from a conceivable to a plausible 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 antitrust claim: (1) evidence that a defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. In evaluating the first two factors, the evidence must go beyond indicating that market behavior is interdependent and characterized by conscious parallelism. With regard to the third plus factor, evidence implying a traditional conspiracy consists of noneconomic evidence that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete, which may include proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN21[] Sherman Act, Claims

Examples of parallel conduct allegations that would be sufficient to state a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 antitrust claim include parallel behavior that would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties, or conduct that indicates the sort of restricted freedom of action and sense of obligation that one generally associates with agreement. In addition, complex and historically unprecedented changes in pricing structure made at the very same time by multiple competitors, and made for no other discernible reason, would support a plausible inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN22[] Sherman Act, Claims

Distribution of information as to credit and responsibility of buyers undoubtedly prevents fraud and cuts down to some degree commercial transactions which would otherwise be induced by fraud. But a court cannot regard the procuring and dissemination of information which tends to prevent the procuring of fraudulent contracts or to prevent the fraudulent securing of deliveries of merchandise on the pretense that the seller is bound to deliver it by his contract, as an unlawful restraint of trade even though such information be gathered and disseminated by those who are engaged in the trade or business principally concerned.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN23[] Sherman Act, Claims

The public interest is served by the gathering and dissemination, in the widest possible manner, of information with respect to the production and distribution, cost and prices in actual sales, of market commodities because the making available of such information tends to stabilize trade and industry, to produce fairer price levels and to avoid the waste which inevitably attends the unintelligent conduct of economic enterprise. Free competition means a free and open market among both buyers and sellers for the sale and distribution of commodities. Competition does not become less free merely because the conduct of commercial operations becomes more intelligent through the free distribution of knowledge of all the essential factors entering into the commercial transaction. General knowledge that there is an accumulation of surplus of any market commodity would undoubtedly tend to diminish production, but the dissemination of that information cannot in itself be said to be restraint upon commerce in any legal sense. The manufacturer is free to produce, but prudence and business foresight based on that knowledge influences free choice in favor of more limited production. Restraint upon free competition begins when improper use is made of that information through any concerted action which operates to restrain the freedom of action of those who buy and sell.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN24[] Sherman Act, Scope

It is not the antitrust purpose or the intent of the Sherman Act to inhibit the intelligent conduct of business operations, nor is its purpose to suppress such influences as might affect the operations of interstate commerce through the application to them of the individual intelligence of those engaged in commerce, enlightened by accurate information as to the essential elements of the economics of a trade or business, however gathered or disseminated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN25[] Sherman Act, Scope

Persons who unite in gathering and disseminating information in trade journals and statistical reports on industry, who gather and publish statistics as to the amount of production of commodities in interstate commerce, and who report market prices, are not engaged in unlawful conspiracies in restraint of trade merely because the ultimate result of their efforts may be to stabilize prices or limit production through a better understanding of economic laws and a more general ability to conform to them, for the simple reason that the Sherman Act neither repeals economic laws nor prohibits the gathering and dissemination of information. Sellers of any commodity who guide the daily conduct of their business on the basis of market reports would hardly be deemed to be conspirators engaged in restraint of interstate commerce. They would not be any the more so merely because they became stockholders in a corporation or joint owners of a trade journal, engaged in the business of compiling and publishing such reports.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN26[] Sherman Act, Scope

Trade associations or combinations of persons or corporations which openly and fairly gather and disseminate information as to the cost of their product, the volume of production, the actual price which the product has brought in past transactions, stocks of merchandise on hand, approximate cost of transportation from the principal point of shipment to the points of consumption as did these defendants and who, as they did, meet and discuss such information and statistics without however reaching or attempting to reach any agreement or any concerted action with respect to prices or production or restraining competition, do not thereby engage in unlawful restraint of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN27[] Sherman Act, Scope

The exchange of information between business firms concerning the creditworthiness of customers does not violate the Sherman Act. Unlike exchanges regarding prices, which usually serve no purpose other than to suppress competition and hence fall within the ban of the Sherman Act, the dissemination to competitors of information concerning the creditworthiness of customers aids sellers in gaining information necessary to protect themselves against fraudulent or insolvent customers. Given the legitimate function of such data, it is not a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 to exchange such information, provided that any action taken in reliance upon it is the result of each firm's independent judgment, and not of agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN28[] Sherman Act, Scope

Exchanges of credit information do not constitute an antitrust violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, so long as the information exchanged does not include any recommendations or agreement as to how the exchanged information should be used.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN29[] Sherman Act, Scope

In cases involving the exchange of information, price stabilization may result from factors that do not constitute an antitrust violation, such as obtaining a better understanding of economic laws and a more general ability to conform to them, for the simple reason that the Sherman Act neither repeals economic laws or nor prohibits the gathering and dissemination of information. Thus, the presence of price stabilization alone cannot prove concerted action on the part of the alleged conspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN30[] Sherman Act, Scope

Under the federal antitrust laws, decisions involving credit have always required and produced totally different analyses from those involving prices. This is why decisions regarding agreements pertaining to prices and exchanges of price information are consistently held to violate the Sherman Act, while at the same time the exchange of information between competitors regarding the creditworthiness of customers does not violate any provision of the federal antitrust laws. Distribution of information as to credit and responsibility of buyers undoubtedly prevents fraud and cuts down to some degree commercial transactions which would otherwise be induced by fraud, so it cannot be declared to be an unlawful restraint of trade even though such information be gathered and disseminated by those who are engaged in the trade or business principally concerned. As long as the exchange of credit information is not accompanied by any agreements relating to the extension of credit, such as an agreement to deny credit to one or more of the competitors' customers, no violation of the antitrust laws has occurred.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > Fair Credit Reporting > Consumer Reports

HN31[] Fair Credit Reporting, Consumer Reports

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1681b(a)(3)(A), (B).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN32[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) provides that leave to amend a pleading shall be freely given when justice so requires. Grounds that would justify denying leave to amend include undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, and futility of amendment. The grant or denial of leave to amend is within the sound discretion of the district court; however, failure to provide a reason for denying leave to amend is considered an abuse of that discretion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN33[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(1)(A), (B)

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN34[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

After the expiration of the time set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(1), a party may amend its pleading prior to trial only with the opposing party's written consent or with leave of court. Rule 15(a)(2). Rule 15(a)(2) further provides that leave to amend should be freely given when justice requires.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN35[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Where leave of court is required to amend a complaint, the plaintiff must request leave to amend and attach the proposed amended complaint to the request. Failure to attach the proposed amendment is fatal to the request.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN36[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

It is hardly error for a district court to enter final judgment after granting a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim when the plaintiff has not properly requested leave to amend its complaint.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Existence > Distinct & Separate Legal Entity

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

HN37[] Existence, Distinct & Separate Legal Entity

A parent corporation (so-called because of control through ownership of another corporation's stock) is not liable for the acts of its subsidiaries. Thus, the exercise of the control which stock ownership gives to the stockholders will not create liability beyond the assets of the subsidiary. That control includes the election of directors, the making of by-laws and the doing of all other acts incident to the legal status of stockholders.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Existence > Distinct & Separate Legal Entity

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

HN38[] Sherman Act, Scope

In order to state a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 antitrust claim against parent corporations, a plaintiff must set forth facts establishing the parent corporations' direct and independent participation in an alleged conspiracy. However, assertions that the parent corporations participated in the antitrust conspiracy by giving their assent and approval to a subsidiary's conduct, and through their ownership and control of their subsidiary, amount to nothing more than conduct typical of any parent and subsidiary, and thus are insufficient to state a § 1 claim against the parent corporations.

Business & Corporate Law > Limited Liability Companies > General Overview

HN39[] Business & Corporate Law, Limited Liability Companies

A limited liability company formed under Delaware law is treated for liability purposes like a corporation.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

HN40[] Piercing the Corporate Veil, Alter Ego

Activities that constitute standard parent-subsidiary interactions, such as the parent corporation appointing the subsidiary's officers and directors, influencing executive compensation, approving budgets, gathering information about corporate performance, and receiving distributions of subsidiary profits do not reflect daily, operational control that is the sine qua non of an alter ego relationship.

Business & Corporate Law > Limited Liability Companies > Member Duties & Liabilities

HN41[] Limited Liability Companies, Member Duties & Liabilities

Allegations of ownership or knowledge alone do not confer liability on the individual members/owners of a limited liability corporation.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Challenges

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN42[] In Personam Actions, Challenges

In ruling on a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2), a court is required to accept as true all allegations contained in the complaint and view all factual disputes in the plaintiff's favor. However, the scope of the court's review on a Rule 12(b)(2) motion is not limited to the face of the complaint, but may include affidavits or other competent evidence submitted by the parties.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Challenges

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Preponderance of Evidence

HN43[] In Personam Actions, Challenges

A plaintiff bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, facts sufficient to establish personal jurisdiction over a defendant. If an evidentiary hearing is not held on the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(2) motion, then the plaintiff need only demonstrate a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction at the preliminary stages of litigation. Once a defendant submits contradictory evidence through an affidavit, the plaintiff may not rest on the allegations in the complaint, but must come forward with affidavits or other competent evidence to show that personal jurisdiction is proper. To satisfy this burden, the plaintiff may not rely on bare pleadings, but must produce competent evidence to establish with reasonable particularity the nature and extent of the defendant's contacts with the forum state. Once the plaintiff has sustained this burden, the Rule 12(b)(2) motion will be denied despite any controverting presentation by the defendant.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Challenges

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

HN44[] In Personam Actions, Challenges

In cases where a plaintiff's claim is predicated on a federal statute which authorizes nationwide service of process, courts apply a Fifth Amendment due process analysis to personal jurisdiction challenges.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Corporations

HN45[] Antitrust & Trade Law

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 22.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN46[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Under the requirements of the due process component of the Fifth Amendment, a court must consider whether the maintenance of a suit (i.e., the exercise of personal jurisdiction over a defendant to the suit) offends traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. In assessing whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction comports with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice, the inquiry in the federal court context takes less account of federalism concerns and focuses more on the national interest in furthering the policies of the law(s) under which the plaintiff is suing. Thus, specific personal jurisdiction may be exercised only when the defendant has constitutionally sufficient minimum contacts with the forum, and where subjecting the defendant to the court's jurisdiction comports with 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Long Arm Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Purposeful Availment

HN47[] In Personam Actions, Long Arm Jurisdiction

Under Pennsylvania's long-arm statute, codified at 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 5322 (2004), Pennsylvania courts are authorized to exercise personal jurisdiction over a person who, directly or through an agent, as to a cause of action arising from such person, engages in certain forum related activities. § 5322(a). Personal jurisdiction predicated on § 5322(a) falls within the category of personal jurisdiction known as specific jurisdiction, which arises when a defendant has both purposefully directed its activities at residents of the forum state and the action arises from, or is directly related to, the defendant's actions within the forum state.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Long Arm Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN48[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

The Pennsylvania long-arm statute authorizes the exercise of personal jurisdiction to the fullest extent allowed under the Constitution of the United States and may be based on the most minimum contact with Pennsylvania allowed under the Constitution of the United States. 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 5322(b). Thus, to satisfy due process, the defendant must have certain minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. The minimum-contacts requirement serves the purpose of protecting the defendant against the burdens of litigating in a distant and inconvenient forum by requiring that the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum state be such that the defendant should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there. This framework enables potential defendants to structure their primary conduct with some minimum assurance as to where that conduct will and will not render them liable to suit. Moreover, a plaintiff cannot unilaterally create the necessary contacts between the defendant and the forum; rather, minimum contacts can arise only by some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Consent

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Long Arm Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Substantial Contacts

HN49[] In Personam Actions, Consent

A category of personal jurisdiction under which a plaintiff may establish a court's jurisdiction over a defendant is general jurisdiction. The court's general jurisdiction may be invoked where the nonresident defendant's contacts with the forum are continuous and substantial but are not related to a plaintiff's cause of action. To establish personal jurisdiction over a corporation under Pennsylvania's general jurisdiction statute, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the corporate defendant either: (1) is incorporated under or qualifies as a foreign corporation under Pennsylvania law; (2) consents to jurisdiction; or (3) carries on a continuous and systematic part of its general business within Pennsylvania. 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. § 5301(a)(2).

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Substantial Contacts

HN50[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

A plaintiff must prove significantly more than mere minimum contacts to invoke a court's general jurisdiction over a defendant. Thus, to satisfy due process, the contacts of a nonresident defendant with the form must be continuous and substantial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Trademark Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Doing Business

HN51[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Mere ownership of a registered U.S. trademark does not subject a domestic company to personal jurisdiction in every state throughout the United States. To so hold would run afoul of the mandate of the Due Process Clause or the limits on judicial authority that the Clause ensures. Thus, an approach which does not conduct a forum-by-forum analysis, but relies merely on ownership of a registered U.S. trademark as evidence of interstate commerce, violates the Due Process Clause.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Foreseeability

HN52[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Foreseeability alone is not a sufficient benchmark for personal jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause. The foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis is not the mere likelihood that a product will find its way into the forum state. Rather, it is that a defendant's conduct and connection with the forum state are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Doing Business

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN53[] In Personam Actions, Doing Business

Merely entering into a licensing agreement with a company that delivers products into the stream of commerce is insufficient to support the exercise of personal jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN54[] Preliminary Considerations, Jurisdiction

A plaintiff's request for jurisdictional discovery should be granted if the plaintiff presents factual allegations that suggest with reasonable particularity the possible existence of the requisite contacts between the party and the forum state. The plaintiff may not, however, undertake a fishing expedition based only upon bare allegations, under the guise of jurisdictional discovery.

Counsel: [*1] For KARIN J. BLACK, individually and on behalf of the Classes, Plaintiff: Matthew L. Kurzweg, Pittsburgh, PA.

For JP MORGAN CHASE & CO, Defendant: Arthur H. Stroyd, Jr., Matthew T. Logue, Del Sole Cavanaugh Stroyd LLC, Pittsburgh, PA; Peter E. Greene, Peter S. Julian, PRO HAC VICE, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP, New York, NY.

For BANK OF AMERICA CORPORATION, Defendant: Mark S. Melodia, Reed Smith LLP, Princeton, NJ; Thomas L. Allen, Reed Smith, Reed Smith Centre, Pittsburgh, PA.

For DISCOVER FINANCIAL SERVICES, Defendant: Alan S. Kaplinsky, PRO HAC VICE, Ballard, Spahr, Andrews & Ingersoll, Philadelphia, PA; Burt M. Rublin, PRO HAC VICE, Carl G. Roberts, Ballard Spahr LLP, Philadelphia, PA.

For EXPERIAN INFORMATION SOLUTIONS, INC., Defendant: Mark D. Shepard, LEAD ATTORNEY, Babst, Calland, Clements & Zomnir, Pittsburgh, PA; David H. Suggs, New York, NY; Jack E. Pace, Robert A. Milne, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For TRANSUNION, LLC, Defendant: Dennis A. Watson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Grogan Graffam, P.C., Pittsburgh, PA; James K. Gardner, Neal, Gerber & Eisenberg LLP, Chicago, IL.

For EQUIFAX CREDIT INFORMATION SERVICES, INC., Defendant: George E. Yokitis, DeForest Koscelnik Yokitis [*2] Skinner & Berardinelli, Pittsburgh, PA; Gregory B. Mauldin, Teresa T. Bonder, PRO HAC VICE, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Peter Kontio, PRO HAC VICE, Alston & Bird, LLP, Atlanta, GA.

For FICO, LLC, Defendant: Michael G. Connelly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Spilman, Thomas & Battle, Pittsburgh, PA; Michelle S. Grant, PRO HAC VICE, Dorsey & Whitney LLP, Minneapolis, MN.

For VANTAGESCORE SOLUTIONS, LLC, Defendant: Wendelynne J. Newton, LEAD ATTORNEY, Buchanan Ingersoll & Rooney, Pittsburgh, PA; Bradley J. Kitlowski, Gretchen L. Jankowski, Buchanan Ingersoll & Rooney PC, Pittsburgh, PA.

Judges: LISA PUPO LENIHAN, Chief U.S. Magistrate Judge. Judge David Stewart Cercone.

Opinion by: LISA PUPO LENIHAN

Opinion

ECF Nos. 32, 36, 39 & 42

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

I.RECOMMENDATION

It is respectfully recommended that the Motion of Defendants JP Morgan Chase & Co. and Bank of America Corporation to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 32) be granted with prejudice. It is further recommended that the Motion of Defendant Fair Isaac Corporation to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 36) be granted with prejudice. It is further recommended that the Motion of Defendant VantageScore Solutions LLC to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 39) be granted with prejudice. [*3] It is further recommended that the Motion of Defendants Trans Union, Experian and Equifax to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 42) be granted with prejudice.[1]

In addition, although not separately filed, Plaintiff requested leave to file an amended complaint in her opposition briefs to each of the above motions. It is respectfully recommended that those requests be denied. It is further recommended that Plaintiff's request for jurisdictional discovery, lodged in her opposition brief to VantageScore Solutions LLC's motion to dismiss, also be denied.

II.REPORT

A.Background and Procedural History

Plaintiff, Karin Black, has filed a purported class action complaint, alleging that the Defendants violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1. Generally, Black alleges that the Defendants—consumer lenders ("Lenders"), credit reporting agencies ("Credit Bureaus") and credit scoring companies ("Scoring Cos.")—conspired to restrain the availability of consumer loans and inflate or fix [*4] the price of that credit by sharing credit history information. Plaintiff also alleges a national boycott of consumers who are unable or unwilling to pay monopolistic prices. (Compl. ¶ 67.)

The Defendant Lenders in this case consist of JP Morgan Chase & Co. ("JP Morgan"), Bank of America Corporation ("BOA"), and Discover Financial Services, Inc. ("Discover"). The Defendant Credit Bureaus consist of Experian Information Solutions, Inc. ("Experian"), Trans Union, LLC ("Trans Union"), and Equifax Credit Information Services, Inc., ("Equifax"). The Scoring Cos. named as Defendants consist of FICO, LLC ("FICO") and VantageScore Solutions, LLC ("VantageScore").

Black commenced this action on behalf of herself and three purported classes of individuals: (1) the "Injunctive Relief Class" - all U.S. persons or entities that obtained consumer loans sold by Defendants; (2) "End Purchaser Loan Damages Class" - all U.S. persons or entities that obtained loans sold by Defendants from January 1951 through the conclusion of the trial in this matter ("Class Period"); and (3) "End Purchaser Credit Reporting Class" - all U.S. persons or entities that had their loan information shared among Defendants during [*5] the Class Period (collectively, the "Classes"). She seeks an order declaring that this action be maintained as a class action and declaring Plaintiff as representative of the Classes and her counsel as counsel for the Classes; an order enjoining the Defendants' anti-competitive conduct; and an award of damages for herself and the Classes.

Black invokes this Court's subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, and 28 U.S.C. §§1331 and 1337. She maintains that venue lays in this district under 15 U.S.C. §§15,[2] 22,[3] and 26,[4] and 28 U.S.C. § 1391,

---

[1] The Motion to Compel Arbitration or, in the alternative, Motion to Dismiss the Complaint filed by Discover Financial Services, Inc. (ECF No. 28), will be considered and ruled on in a separately filed Report and Recommendation.

[2] 15 U.S.C. §15(a) provides in relevant part: HN1[] ". . . any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the [*6] United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, ..."

[3] Section 22 provides: HN2[] "Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found." 15 U.S.C. §22.

[4] Section 26 does not confer venue in this district, but rather, provides that a "person . . . shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, . . . ." 15 U.S.C. §26.

because Defendants transact business within this district, thousands of members of the Class reside in this district, a substantial part of the interstate trade and commerce involved and affected by the alleged violations of the antitrust laws was and is carried on in part within this district, and the acts complained of have had, and will have, substantial anti-competitive effects within this district. (Compl. ¶16.)

In response to the Complaint, Defendants have filed several motions to dismiss under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6), arguing that under Twombly and its progeny, Plaintiff has failed to allege sufficient facts to show that her antitrust claims against Defendants are plausible. In addition, Defendant VantageScore seeks dismissal of the complaint against it on the basis that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over it. The motions [*7] have been fully briefed and responded to. On February 10, 2011, the Court held oral argument on all of the pending motions. Thus, the motions are ripe for disposition.

B.Legal Standard – Motion to Dismiss Under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6)

HN3[] A motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure tests the legal sufficiency of a complaint. Kost v. Kozakiewicz, 1 F.3d 176, 183 (3d Cir. 1993). A complaint must be dismissed for failure to state a claim if it does not allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (rejecting the traditional 12(b)(6) standard set forth in Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)); Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1960, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (May 18, 2009) (citing Twombly). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal at 1949 (citing Twombly at 556). The Supreme Court further explained:

> The plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has [*8] acted unlawfully. Where a complaint pleads facts that are "merely consistent with" a defendant's liability, it "stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of 'entitlement to relief.'"

Id. (citing Twombly at 556-57). The court of appeals has expounded on this standard in light of its decision in Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224 (3d Cir. 2008) (construing Twombly in a civil rights context), and the Supreme Court's recent decision in Iqbal:

> HN4[] After Iqbal, it is clear that conclusory or "bare-bones" allegations will no longer survive a motion to dismiss: "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949. To prevent dismissal, all civil complaints must now set out "sufficient factual matter" to show that the claim is facially plausible. This then "allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. at 1948. The Supreme Court's ruling in Iqbal emphasizes that a plaintiff must show that the allegations of his or her complaints are plausible. See Id. at 1949-50; see also Twombly, 505 U.S. at 555, & n. 3.

Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210 (3d Cir. 2009). [*9] In light of Iqbal, the Fowler court then set forth HN5[] a two-prong test to be applied by the district courts in deciding motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim. First, the district court must accept all well-pleaded facts as true and discard any legal conclusions contained in the complaint. Fowler, 578 F.3d at 210-11. Next, the court must consider whether the facts alleged in the Complaint sufficiently demonstrate that the plaintiff has a "plausible claim for relief." Id. at 211. To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must show an entitlement to relief through its facts. Id. (citing Phillips at 234-35).

HN6[] Courts generally consider only the allegations of the complaint, its attached exhibits, and matters of public record in deciding motions to dismiss. Pension Benefit Guar. v. White Consol. Indus., Inc., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993). Factual allegations within documents described or identified in the complaint may also be weighed if the plaintiff's claims are based upon those documents. Id. (citations omitted). A district court may consult those documents without converting a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 (3d Cir. 1997).

C.The [*10] Complaint

HN7[] For purposes of the motion to dismiss, the Court assumes all factual allegations to be true. Many of the allegations in Plaintiff's Complaint, however, are conclusory, and therefore, will not be considered here.[5]

It appears that the focus of Plaintiff's Complaint is on consumer credit card lending, as Black alleges that she holds credit cards issued by JP Morgan, BOA, and Discover.[6] (Compl., ¶3.) Plaintiff asserts [*11] that Defendants JP Morgan, BOA and Discover are among the top ten consumer credit lenders in the United States, and together the top ten lenders control 87.55% of consumer loans.[7] (¶19.) Plaintiff further alleges that Defendants Trans Union, Experian and Equifax constitute the top three credit bureaus that control and store consumer lending information. (Compl. ¶ 20.) Plaintiff contends that together, these Credit Bureaus store and control the credit data of over 85% of all debtors. (Id.) According to Plaintiff, Defendants FICO and VantageScore are credit scoring companies that provide a "score" to lenders which is used to price consumer loans, and together they provide over 85% of the credit scores to lenders in the United States. (Compl., ¶21.)

Plaintiff alleges that there has been no or only marginal growth of consumer lending in the last five years. (Compl., ¶23.) According to Plaintiff, since 2007, market share has not shifted more than two percent among competitors. (Compl., ¶ 24.) However, Plaintiff contends interest rates have actually increased in the economic downturn. (Compl., ¶25.)

Plaintiff also alleges that Defendants loan money to consumers throughout the United States and/or share data on such loans. (Compl. ¶ 22.) In addition, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants share their customer data among themselves to set higher prices by reporting and utilizing credit bureaus to distribute information, and derive large profits from submitting the data to competitors. (Compl., ¶¶ 27, 29.) Customer data, such as consumer credit histories, includes information such as balances owed, credit lines offered, interest rates offered, extent of credit debt, product purchasing history, and payment history for each of the lender's customers. (Compl., ¶27.)

According to Plaintiff, although some of the data collected by credit bureaus is publicly available, the majority [*13] of the data is collected from lenders' private records. (Compl., ¶ 30.) Plaintiff contends that once a single competitor reports a negative event or a high balance, all lenders are immediately notified, so that all lenders can raise rates and adjust credit in unison. (Compl., ¶ 31.) Credit reporting agencies use private and sensitive data among marketplace competitors and they actively promote and derive profit from assisting all of the competitors in the industry. (Compl., ¶ 32.) Credit bureaus act as information clearing houses holding proprietary data on over 1 billion debtors internationally. (Compl., ¶ 33.) Consumers who choose default over paying higher interest rates are excluded from the credit market for at least seven years. (Compl., ¶ 34.) Credit bureaus also assist in the setting of higher prices by sharing database information in real-time. (Compl., ¶ 35.)

Credit scoring companies use the reported information from credit bureaus to create a derivative score which incorporates all of the consumer's credit data as well as the consumer's profitability. (Compl., ¶ 36.) This score is

---

[5] In addition, the Court notes that throughout the complaint, Black continuously refers to "Defendants" without differentiating between which of the Defendants or categories of Defendants allegedly engaged in the specific conduct. It cannot be assumed that all of the Defendants engaged in all of the alleged conduct given that there are distinct differences in their businesses. The Court further notes that many of Plaintiff's allegations do not describe conduct engaged in specifically by the named Defendants in this action, but rather, are stated in more theoretical terms, describing generally conduct engaged in by all consumer lenders, credit bureaus and credit scoring companies. With these caveats in mind, the Court turns to the factual allegations in the Complaint.

[6] Plaintiff does not allege that she holds or held any other type of consumer loan with the Lenders, such as a home mortgage loan or home equity loan or line of credit, and she distinguishes interest rates for consumer lending from interest rates on "lending in other markets including home and business loans." (Compl., ¶ 69.)

[7] According to Plaintiff, the other entities making the list of top ten consumer lenders are Citi, American Express, Capital [*12] One, Wells Fargo, HSBC, U.S. Bank, and USAA Savings. (Compl., ¶ 63.)

then distributed to all lenders, who use the scores to identify the most profitable customers [*14] and fix rates accordingly. (Id.) Customers are allocated into particular risk groups. The higher risk groups are charged more interest ostensibly because the lenders are taking more risk. The availability of insurance and predictability of default rate virtually eliminate this risk. (Compl., ¶38.) Credit scores are actually lowered when consumers pay off credit cards, even though credit risk is reduced by the pay off. (Compl., ¶40.)

All consumer lenders provide loans at a variable interest rate tied to the prime lending rate. (Compl., ¶ 43.) The prime lending rate is a pricing floor which no lender will ever price below, creating a pricing baseline. (Id.) The pricing floor baseline is elevated for customers based on the shared credit information. (Id.) Defendants rate creditworthiness and set prices for consumer debt for at least the prime rate and on average at 14%, which is twice the rate of lending in other markets including home and business loans, with higher consumer rates exceeding 30%. (Compl., ¶ 69.)

Defendants charge penalty fees for various consumer actions such as exceeding the card credit limit or late payments. (Compl., ¶ 44.) Because consumer data is shared among creditors, [*15] the assessment of penalty fees is used to notify the competition that the customer's rate prices can be increased to higher levels. (Id.) Defendants have further attempted to obtain supra-competitive prices by incorporating under the laws of states where there are no usury laws, i.e., no upper limit on loan terms. (Compl., ¶ 45.)

On May 5, 2009, JP Morgan sent Plaintiff two letters regarding her two accounts. (Ex. A to Am. Compl., ECF No. 1-2.) In these letters, JP Morgan notified Plaintiff that it was reducing the credit limit on one of her business accounts, and decreasing the credit line on her other account. (Id.) JP Morgan further indicated in the letters that its reasons for the decision to decrease Plaintiff's credit limit/line were: "Balance owed on revolving accts too high" and "[c]urrent loan amount on all open accounts." Id. With regard to the decrease in her credit line, JP Morgan provided the additional explanation "[s]ufficient credit available with us." Id. The letters go on to explain: "This decision was based in whole or in part on information provided by the reporting agency noted below. Other than providing information, this agency played no part in our decision. [*16] . . ." Id. The reporting agency identified in the May 5, 2009 letters is Equifax. Id.

D.JP Morgan & BOA's Motion to Dismiss

Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Defendants JP Morgan and BOA ("Lenders") move to dismiss the Complaint with prejudice, claiming that Black has failed to plead sufficient facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of an illegal agreement.[8] The crux of Black's complaint against the Lender Defendants is that they conspired in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act to restrain the availability of consumer credit and to inflate or fix the price of that credit by sharing credit history information.

HN8[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes illegal "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. §1. Moreover, the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that §1 prohibits only unreasonable restraints [*17] of trade. Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 885, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (citing State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997)). Thus, "[b]ecause § 1 of the Sherman Act 'does not prohibit [all] unreasonable restraints of trade ... but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy,' Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 775, 104 S.Ct. 2731, 81 L.Ed.2d 628 (1984), '[t]he crucial question' is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct 'stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express,' Theatre Enterprises, 346 U.S., at 540, 74 S.Ct. 257." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 553.

---

[8] Defendants Experian, Trans Union, Equifax, VantageScore and FICO join in the motion to dismiss and supporting brief filed by Defendants JPMorgan and BOA and incorporate their arguments by reference.

HN9[] In determining whether a practice restrains trade in violation of §1, a court will apply one of two standards, depending on the nature of the alleged violation: (1) A per se rule or (2) the rule of reason. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 885-86. The accepted standard for determining whether a business practice restrains trade in violation of §1 is the rule of reason. Leegin, 551 U.S. at 885 (citing Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006)). Under this standard, a court must "decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on [*18] competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect." Khan, 522 U.S. at 10; see also Leegin, 551 U.S. at 885 (citing Khan, supra). Another significant consideration is whether the businesses involved have market power. Leegin, 551 U.S. at 885-86 (citations omitted). By way of example, the rule of reason standard has been applied to vertical agreements, i.e., "allegations of agreements between entities at different market levels that restrain trade[.]" Kasada, Inc. v. Access Capital, Inc., No. 01 Civ. 8893 (GBD), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25257, 2004 WL 2903776, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 14, 2004) (citing Elecs. Commc'ns Corp. v. Toshiba Am. Consumer Prods. Inc., 129 F.3d 240, 243 (2d Cir. 1997) ("Absent price-fixing between a supplier and distributor, vertical restraints are generally subject to 'rule of reason' analysis.")).

HN10[] In applying the rule of reason analysis, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has articulated four elements that an antitrust plaintiff asserting a §1 claim must prove: "(1) that the defendants contracted, combined [*19] or conspired among each other; (2) that the combination or conspiracy produced adverse anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets; (3) that the objects of and conduct pursuant to the contract or conspiracy were illegal; and (4) that the plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of that conspiracy."[9] In re Baby Food Antitrust Litigation, 166 F.3d 112, 118 (3d Cir. 1999) (citing J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1541 (3d Cir. 1990)) (footnote omitted); see also Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 253 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir.2005)).

On the other hand, HN11[] the per se rule applies to a narrow category of restraints that "have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for precompetitive benefit that they are deemed unlawful per se." Khan, 522 U.S. at 10. For example, horizontal restraints, i.e., agreements between competitors at the same level of market structure, such as price fixing agreements and group boycotts, [*20] have been deemed to be unlawful per se by the Supreme Court. Kasada, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25257, 2004 WL 2903776, at *4 (citing Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959) (finding group boycotts unreasonable per se); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940) (finding price fixing unreasonable per se); Michelman v. Clark-Schwebel Fiber Glass Corp., 534 F.2d 1036, 1043 (2d Cir. 1976) (finding that group boycott is unreasonable per se due to its inherently anticompetitive nature, and therefore, always illegal)). Because of the per se rule's limited application, the Supreme Court has provided the following guidance on when to apply it:

> HN12[] Resort to per se rules is confined to restraints . . . "that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." Business Electronics, supra, at 723, 108 S.Ct. 1515 (internal quotation marks omitted). To justify a per se prohibition a restraint must have "manifestly anticompetitive" effects, GTE Sylvania, supra, at 50, 97 S.Ct. 2549, and "lack ... any redeeming virtue," Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S.Ct. 2613, 86 L.Ed.2d 202 (1985) (internal quotation [*21] marks omitted).
>
> As a consequence, the per se rule is appropriate only after courts have had considerable experience with the type of restraint at issue, see Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9, 99 S.Ct. 1551, 60 L.Ed.2d 1 (1979), and only if courts can predict with confidence that it would be invalidated in all or almost all instances under the rule of reason, see Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Soc., 457 U.S. 332, 344, 102 S.Ct. 2466, 73 L.Ed.2d 48 (1982). It should come as no surprise, then, that "we have expressed reluctance to adopt per se rules with regard to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious." Khan, supra, at 10, 118 S.Ct. 275

[9] For purposes of the pending motions to dismiss, only the first and third elements are at issue.

> (internal quotation marks omitted); see also White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 83 S.Ct. 696, 9 L.Ed.2d 738 (1963) (refusing to adopt a per se rule for a vertical nonprice restraint because of the uncertainty concerning whether this type of restraint satisfied the demanding standards necessary to apply a per se rule). And, as we have stated, a "departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based [*22] upon demonstrable economic effect rather than ... upon formalistic line drawing." GTE Sylvania, supra, at 58-59, 97 S.Ct. 2549.

Leegin, 551 U.S. at 886-87.

HN13[] In the situation where the evidence consists of mere exchanges of information, the presumption that price fixing agreements are per se unlawful disappears. In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d at 118 (citing United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441 n. 16, 98 S. Ct. 2864, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854 (1978)). "Exchanges of information are not considered a per se violation because 'such practices can in certain circumstances increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.'" Id. (quoting Gypsum, supra). Consequently, courts will evaluate such exchanges of information under a rule of reason analysis. Id.

In the case at bar, Plaintiff appears to be proceeding under the pro se rule, as she alleges in her complaint that "[t]he agreement among competitors in the lenders' market to share pricing data in the form of credit reports, which are used to coordinate and fix prices as well as promote boycotts is a per se violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §1." (Compl. ¶75.) However, the alleged conspiracy between the Lenders, [*23] Credit Bureaus and Credit Scoring Companies involves a vertical non-price constraint, and therefore, it is questionable whether the demanding standards necessary to apply the per se rule can be met.

Regardless of whether Plaintiffs claim is evaluated under the per se rule or the rule of reason, an essential element of her antitrust claim is that there was an unlawful agreement, or conspiracy, among the Defendants. On this point, the court of appeals has opined:

> HN14[] "[t]he very essence of a section 1 claim ... is the existence of an agreement," because "section 1 liability is predicated upon some form of concerted action." Unilateral activity by a defendant, no matter the motivation, cannot give rise to a section 1 violation. Rossi, 156 F.3d at 465. This is because a business may "deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S.Ct. 1464, 79 L.Ed.2d 775 (1984).

InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 159 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 999 (3d Cir. 1994)); see also In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d at 117 ("The existence of [*24] an agreement is the hallmark of a Section 1 claim.") (citation omitted). HN15[] "To allege such an agreement between two or more persons or entities, a plaintiff must allege facts plausibly suggesting 'a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.'" Dentsply Int'l, 602 F.3d at 254 (quoting Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 771) (other citation omitted).

The court of appeals further explained that HN16[] a plaintiff may prove the existence of concerted action among the defendants and other parties by relying on either direct or circumstantial evidence. InterVest, 340 F.3d at 159. "Direct evidence 'is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted.'" Id. (quoting In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d at 118). However, because direct evidence is often not available, plaintiffs may rely solely on circumstantial evidence, and any reasonable inferences that may be drawn from such evidence, to prove a conspiracy. Id. (citing Rossi, 156 F.3d at 465).

HN17[] One type of circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement is parallel conduct or "conscious parallelism." In Twombly, the Supreme [*25] Court determined the proper standard for pleading an antitrust conspiracy through allegations of parallel conduct in order to survive a motion to dismiss:

> While a showing of parallel "business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement," it falls short of "conclusively establish[ing] agreement or ... itself constitut[ing] a Sherman Act offense." [Theatre Enterprises, 346 U.S.] at 540-541, 74 S.Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273. Even "conscious > parallelism," a common reaction of "firms in a concentrated market [that] recogniz[e] their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions" is "not in itself unlawful." Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 227, 113 S.Ct. 2578, 125 L.Ed.2d 168 (1993); see 6 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 1433a, p. 236 (2d ed.2003) (hereinafter Areeda & Hovenkamp) ("The courts are nearly unanimous in saying that mere interdependent parallelism does not establish the contract, combination, or conspiracy required by Sherman Act § 1"); Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L.Rev. 655, 672 (1962) [*26] ("[M]ere interdependence of basic price decisions is not conspiracy").

550 U.S. at 553-54. The Supreme Court went on to explain:

> HN18[] [A]n allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy will not suffice. Without more, parallel conduct does not suggest conspiracy, and a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality. Hence, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action.
>
> . . .
>
> A statement of parallel conduct, even conduct consciously undertaken, needs some setting suggesting the agreement necessary to make out a § 1 claim; without that further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory. An allegation of parallel conduct is thus much like a naked assertion of conspiracy in a § 1 complaint: it gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility [*27] of "entitle[ment] to relief." Cf. DM Research, Inc. v. College of Am. Pathologists, 170 F.3d 53, 56 (C.A.1 1999) ("[T]erms like 'conspiracy,' or even 'agreement,' are border-line: they might well be sufficient in conjunction with a more specific allegation-for example, identifying a written agreement or even a basis for inferring a tacit agreement, ... but a court is not required to accept such terms as a sufficient basis for a complaint").

Id. at 554, 556-57 (footnote omitted).

In applying these precepts to the facts before it, the Twombly court concluded that the facts adduced did not support an antitrust conspiracy, and therefore, the complaint failed to state a valid §1 claim. Id. at 569. In Twombly, plaintiffs, who represented a putative class of subscribers to local telephone and/or high speed internet service, alleged that the incumbent local exchange carriers (ILECs) or "Baby Bells"[10] unlawfully agreed to prevent market entry by upstart regional telephone companies, referred to as competitive local exchange carriers (CLECs), and to refrain from competing with each other. Id. at 550-51. In examining the factual allegations in the complaint in support of these two theories, the [*28] Supreme Court found that the complaint left no doubt that plaintiffs' §1 claim was predicated on allegations of parallel conduct, and not on any independent allegation of actual agreement among the defendants.[11] Id. at 564. Turning to the allegations of parallel conduct, the Supreme Court observed that "the complaint first takes account of the alleged 'absence of any meaningful competition between [the ILECs] in one another's markets,' 'the parallel course of conduct that each [ILEC] engaged in to prevent competition from CLECs,' 'and the other facts and market circumstances alleged [earlier]'; 'in light of' these, the complaint concludes 'that [the ILECs] have entered into a contract, combination or conspiracy to prevent competitive entry into their . . . markets and have agreed not to compete with one another.'" Id. at 564-65 (quoting complaint, ¶51). The Supreme Court concluded that these allegations failed to allege a plausible suggestion of conspiracy as "nothing in the complaint intimate[d] that the resistance to the upstarts was anything more than the natural, unilateral reaction of each ILEC intent on keeping its regional dominance." Id. at 566. Moreover, the Supreme Court [*29] noted an obvious alternative explanation existed for the ILECs' parallel conduct—"the former Government-sanctioned monopolists were sitting tight, expecting their neighbors to do the same thing." Id. at 567-68. Thus, because the complaint "failed in toto to render plaintiffs' entitlement to relief plausible[,]" the Supreme Court upheld dismissal of the complaint. Id. at 569 & n. 14.

---

[10] "Baby Bells" refers to the regional telephone monopolies created in the wake of the 1984 divestiture of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company. Id. at 548.

[11] The Court disregarded the few stray statements that spoke directly of an agreement, finding that they constituted legal conclusions. Id. at 564.

Turning to the case at bar, Plaintiff argues that she has adequately pled a §1 claim either through: (1) allegations of a specific agreement among Defendants, or (2) allegations of parallel conduct. The Court addresses each of these arguments in turn.

1. Allegations of a Specific Agreement

Initially, Plaintiff submits that she has properly pled a specific agreement in her Complaint. In support, she argues that all she is required to plead, under Third Circuit precedent, is "some form of concerted action," [*30] or a "unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of minds" or "a conscious commitment to a common scheme." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to JP Morgan/BOA Mot. to Dismiss ("Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n") at 18,[12] ECF No. 63 (quoting In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d at 117; In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 357 (3d Cir. 2004) (citation omitted)). Pointing to the allegations in paragraph 36 of the Complaint, Plaintiff submits she has properly alleged an agreement "because all lenders have adopted the same consistent pricing system." She further argues that by adopting a consistent and uniform system, lenders consequently operate with a unity of purpose and common design which necessarily meets the judicial standard of an "agreement." Id. at 18-19. With regard to Defendants' argument that the "Complaint cites no factual allegations to support an inference that defendants have agreed on how to perform [the] evaluation or determine [the] interest rate", Plaintiff submits Defendants' argument is wrong because the complaint clearly alleges that the terms of the price agreement are found in the credit score, which has been adopted as a uniform interpretation of [*31] how to price loans. Id. at 19 (citing Compl., ¶36).

The Court does not find any merit to Plaintiff's argument. First, Plaintiff has misstated the pleading standard for a §1 conspiracy. Contrary to Plaintiff's argument, the court of appeals in Flat Glass did not hold that all a plaintiff is required to plead to survive a motion to dismiss a §1 claim is "some form of concerted action" or a "'unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or meeting of minds.'" Rather, the court of appeals was reiterating the Supreme Court's interpretation of the terms "contract," "combination," or "conspiracy," and did not even address the required showing to establish such concerted action or meeting of minds at the motion to dismiss stage, because Flat Glass involved an appeal regarding the adequacy of plaintiffs' showing at the summary judgment stage. Black's reliance on Baby Food fails for the same reason.

Second, Plaintiff fails to point to any factual allegations in the [*32] Complaint that show or suggest a specific agreement. In support of her position that she has properly pled a specific agreement, Plaintiff relies primarily on the allegations set forth in paragraph 36 of the Complaint:

> Furthering the conspiracy, credit scoring companies use the reported information from credit bureaus to create a derivative score which incorporates all of the consumer's credit data as well as the consumer's profitability. This score is then distributed to all lenders. The lending industry has identified that the most profitable customers are the ones having the lower credit scores. Consequently, by examining credit scores lenders can rapidly identify the most profitable customers and fix rates accordingly. Thus, credit scoring companies assist lenders in effecting a parallel pricing scheme for credit by creating a derivative metric which is an effective proxy for setting uniform price points among competitors.

Clearly, however, paragraph 36 does not contain any factual allegations suggesting a specific agreement to fix prices. In actuality, in paragraph 36, Plaintiff pleads, in general and conclusive terms, parallel conduct allegedly engaged in by the lending industry.[13]

---

[12] The page references to Plaintiff's memoranda in opposition to the Defendants' motions to dismiss are to the ECF page number on the top of the documents, as Plaintiff has failed to number the individual pages of her briefs.

Moreover, a review of the remaining allegations in the Complaint yields a similar conclusion. For example, in paragraph 43, Plaintiff alleges that "Defendants have also schemed to restrain trade by creating pricing floors." In paragraph 44, Plaintiff alleges "Defendants have additionally colluded to charge monopolistic punitive fees . . .." In paragraph 52, Plaintiff asserts "The lenders have acted collectively to increase the interest rates and fees . . .." In paragraph 67, Plaintiff alleges:

> Beginning at least in 1951, the exact date being unknown, Defendants and their co-conspirators have engaged in a continuing combination, conspiracy and common course of conduct in unreasonable restraint of [*34] interstate trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1. As more fully described herein, the combination, conspiracy and common course of conduct including sharing of proprietary consumer information engaged in by the Defendants consisted of a continuing agreement, understanding and concert of action among the Defendants and their co-conspirators, the substantial terms of which were to restrain the availability of consumer loans and then fix and maintain at artificially high and non-competitive levels the prices at which they made loans, as well as nationally boycott consumers unable to unwilling to pay monopolistic prices.

In paragraph 68, Plaintiff alleges "Pursuant to their combination, conspiracy, and concerted actions, Defendants have adopted and adhered to virtually identical and parallel methods of pricing . . .." In paragraph 70, Plaintiff alleges "each Defendant took actions to restrain the availability of consumer credit and fix the prices for consumer lending. Pursuant to the combination, conspiracy, and concerted action, Defendants have consistently adopted and adhered to coordinated parallel-pricing schemes and boycotts." In paragraph 72, Plaintiff asserts [*35] ". . . the letter sent to Plaintiff [by JP Morgan] indicat[es] that the change in position on her credit line was not due to independent market factors, but rather cooperation, understanding, and agreement among competitors." And, in paragraph 75, Plaintiff alleges "The agreement among competitors in the lenders' market to share pricing data in the form of credit reports . . .." Like the complaint in Twombly, here the above statements in Black's Complaint that refer to an "agreement" or some sort of concerted action constitute conclusory allegations or legal conclusions. These allegations must be disregarded in evaluating the sufficiency of the Complaint under Rule 12(b)(6). When the Court examines the remaining factual allegation in the Complaint, it finds nothing suggesting an actual agreement between Defendants to fix the price of loans or to boycott certain consumers.

Next, Plaintiff argues that to the extent Defendants submit that an actual meeting and formal agreement must be alleged, Defendants misconstrue the case law. Plaintiff submits that a conspiracy can be found where there is "'a conscious commitment to a common scheme,'" citing Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 357 (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764). [*36] According to Plaintiff, competitors rarely structure an agreement which is collusive on its face, but rather, use sophisticated systems to hide the nature of the understanding among them. Thus, Plaintiff maintains that the Complaint should not be dismissed simply because Defendants have successfully hidden the pricing terms. This argument likewise lacks merit. First, Defendants are not arguing that an actual meeting and formal agreement are required. Second, as noted above, even under the proper standard, Plaintiff's factual allegations fall short of the mark.[14]

---

[13] With [*33] regard to Plaintiff's allegations of parallel conduct, even if the Court assumes, for purposes of the motion to dismiss, that all lenders have adopted the same consistent pricing system, that fact alone does not nudge the Complaint across the line from possibility to plausibility of entitlement to relief. As explained below, Plaintiff must allege some further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of the minds to fix the price of loans in order to cross that line. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57.

[14] Plaintiff also advances the argument that to the extent Defendants are contending that the Complaint is insufficient for not using the magic language of "agreement," but instead pleads "conspiracy," Defendants ignore the plain meaning of the word conspiracy and, in any event, there is no requirement in the case law that the term "agreement" be used to properly plead an antitrust violation. The Court does not construe Defendants' argument to be making any such distinction. Indeed, Defendants clear up any confusion on this point in their Reply Memorandum. (Reply Mem. of Law in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss ("Lenders' Reply Mem.") [*37] at 2 n. 2, ECF No. 66.)

Plaintiff's final argument on this point responds to the position advanced by Defendant Lenders—that other than alleging that they conspired to restrict the availability of consumer credit and to fix the price of that credit, "[b]eginning at least in 1951, the exact date being unknown," (Compl. ¶67), Black fails to plead any facts to suggest a specific time, place, or the person(s) involved in the alleged conspiracy, or to provide them with some idea as to which of them (much less which of their employees) supposedly agreed, or when or where the illicit agreement occurred. Defendants contend the "sole factual allegations contained in the complaint assert that, for some period of time, [D]efendants have shared consumer credit history information for purposes of evaluating consumer creditworthiness and pricing consumer credit." Mem. of Law in Supp. of Mot. of Defs. JP Morgan & BOA to Dismiss ("Lenders' Mem.") at 10, ECF No. 34. In support, Defendants rely on dictum from Twombly, in which the Supreme Court noted that had the complaint not explained that the claim of agreement rested on allegations of parallel conduct, the mere reference to an agreement among the [*38] defendants would have been insufficient to provide the notice required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8, as alleging merely that the Section 1 violations occurred over a seven-year period, without alleging any "specific time, place or person involved in the alleged conspiracies . . . furnishes no clue as to which of the four ILECs (much less which of their employees) supposedly agreed, or when and where the illicit agreement took place." 550 U.S. at 565 n. 10.

In response to this argument, Plaintiff disagrees with Defendants that she is required to state the specific time, place and persons involved in the conspiracy. Plaintiff argues that because her claim of conspiracy, like Twombly, rests on parallel conduct described in the Complaint, she is not required to mention a specific time, place or person involved in each conspiracy allegation. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 21, ECF No. 63. In support, Plaintiff cites Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entertainment, 592 F.3d 314, 325 (2d Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 901, 178 L. Ed. 2d 803 (2011) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n. 10), in which the court of appeals ruled that Twombly did not require plaintiffs to state a specific time, place or person involved in [*39] each conspiracy allegation. Thus, Plaintiff maintains that notice pleading is the proper standard under Twombly, and under that standard, she has "properly alleged in the complaint how the agreement and understanding operates?adoption of a uniform pricing model in the form of a derivative credit score. (Compl. ¶36)." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 21, ECF No. 63. Because Defendants are on notice as to what actions constitute the basis for her Complaint, Black contends that factual details as to time, place and persons involved are the proper subjects of discovery.

While Plaintiff is correct that the court of appeals in Starr rejected defendants' argument that Twombly requires an antitrust plaintiff to identify the specific time, place and persons related to each conspiracy allegation, the Starr court explained that it was doing so because, as in Twombly, the conspiracy claim rested on allegations of parallel conduct. Starr, 592 F.3d at 325. [*40] However, in the case at bar, Plaintiff has advanced alternative theories of proof of an antitrust conspiracy. In addition to allegations of parallel conduct, Plaintiff contends she has pled a specific agreement through direct evidence in the JP Morgan letters.

Plaintiff contends that two letters dated May 5, 2009 addressed to her and sent by JP Morgan[15] (the "JP Morgan letters") provide "direct evidence of a conspiracy, which operates independently of an alleged 'bare allegation of parallel conduct' that Twombly addressed." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Mot. to Dismiss at 7, ECF No. 63. Specifically, Plaintiff argues that the JP Morgan letters show that "competing lenders are taking coordinated action against their customers based on sharing information about those individuals among themselves." Id. Plaintiff further submits that unlike independent market parallelism, these letters show that action was taken based on communication between the competitors and not independent action, which clearly infers the existence of an agreement or understanding among competitors. Id. In addition, Plaintiff takes issue with Defendants' failure to mention these letters, stating that their "silence on the [*41] issue is deafening." Id. According to Plaintiff, because Defendants' have failed to contest this point, the letters provide evidence of a conspiracy, and the case should be allowed to proceed as proper notice has been given as to the nature, scope, and factual basis for the allegations.

In response, Defendants submit that the two letters from JP Morgan do not contain any direct evidence showing any such agreement. See Lenders' Reply Mem. at 3, ECF No. 66. According to Defendants, the letters indicate that JP Morgan is reducing Plaintiff's credit limit but make no mention at all of Plaintiff's credit score. On this latter point,

---

[15] The letters from JP Morgan are attached to Plaintiff's Complaint as Exhibit A.

Defendants argue, the letters are entirely inconsistent with Plaintiff's theory that lenders rely solely on credit scores and do not independently evaluate other "neutral" credit history information. Id. In addition, Defendants submit that the letters do not contain any facts or information showing that JP Morgan made the decision to reduce Plaintiff's credit limits as part of an agreement with competing lenders, or remotely suggesting that JP Morgan's credit decisions were not the [*42] result of its unilateral exercise of its independent judgment about Plaintiff's creditworthiness and the credit terms it was prepared to offer Plaintiff. Id. Finally, Defendants maintain that Plaintiff has not alleged any facts that would constitute direct evidence of an unlawful agreement. Id.

The Court agrees with Defendants that the letters from JP Morgan do not constitute direct evidence of an agreement or conspiracy. In the letters, JP Morgan stated that its reasons for the decision to decrease Plaintiff's credit limit/line were: "Balance owed on revolving accts too high" and "[c]urrent loan amount on all open accounts." Ex. A to Compl., ECF No. 1-2. With regard to the decrease in her credit line, JP Morgan provided the additional explanation "[s]ufficient credit available with us." Id. The letters go on to explain: "This decision was based in whole or in part on information provided by [Equifax]. Other than providing information, [Equifax] played no part in our decision. . . ." Id. Contrary to Plaintiff's argument, the Court finds that the content of the letters does not show, or even suggest, that JP Morgan made the decision to reduce Plaintiff's credit limits as part of an agreement [*43] with competing lenders. Rather, the letters expressly state that JP Morgan made its decision to reduce Plaintiff's credit limit based on information supplied by Equifax. At best, this suggests a one-way communication, which falls short of the required "meeting of the minds" to infer an agreement. In addition, the letters clearly state that Equifax played no part in JP Morgan's decision to reduce Plaintiff's credit limit. Again, it is unreasonable to infer "agreement" from this statement. Moreover, the letters clearly state independent bases for JP Morgan's decision to decrease Plaintiff's credit limit—too high balance owed on revolving accounts, the current loan amount on all open accounts, and sufficient credit available with JP Morgan. Thus, nothing contained in either letter provides direct evidence of a preceding agreement between competing lenders or between JP Morgan and Equifax to fix loan prices.[16]

Moreover, other than wholly conclusory allegations of an agreement among Defendants, which provide no indication (or inference) as to which of the Defendants or their employees supposedly agreed to fix loan prices, or when and where said agreement took place, the Complaint is devoid of factual allegations of an actual agreement, and therefore, is insufficient to provide the notice required by Rule 8. Nonetheless, because Black is not relying exclusively on independent allegations of an actual agreement to prove her claim, her failure to plead sufficient facts of an actual agreement is not fatal to her §1 claim.

2. Allegations of Parallel Conduct

HN19[] Where, as here, an antitrust plaintiff intends to prove her §1 claim based on circumstantial evidence of parallel conduct, she must also plead plus factors. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 323-24 (3d Cir. 2010). Because the courts have found parallel conduct is just as likely to be in line with a wide array of rational and competitive business judgments unilaterally prompted by common market perceptions, [*45] the courts have required an antitrust plaintiff to plead facts suggesting that defendants were not acting independently. Id. at 321. Thus, "plaintiffs relying on parallel conduct must allege facts that, if true, would establish at least one 'plus factor,' since plus factors are, by definition, facts that 'tend[ ] to ensure that courts punish concerted action—an actual agreement—instead of the unilateral, independent conduct of competitors.'" Id. at 323 (quoting Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360) (other citations omitted). HN20[] Although not a finite list, the court of appeals has delineated three plus factors that may nudge the allegations of parallel conduct across the line from a conceivable to a plausible §1 claim: "'(1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) 'evidence implying a traditional conspiracy.''" Id. at 322 (quoting Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 360 (quoting Petruzzi's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1244 (3d Cir.1993))). In evaluating the first two factors, the court of appeals has cautioned that the evidence must go beyond indicating that market [*46] behavior is interdependent and characterized by conscious parallelism. Id. (citations omitted). With regard to the third plus factor, the court of appeals explained that "'evidence implying a traditional conspiracy,' consists of 'non-economic evidence 'that there was an actual, manifest agreement not to compete," which may include "proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.''" Id. (quoting Flat Glass, 385 F.3d at 361 (quoting In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 661 (7th Cir.2002))) (other citations omitted).

[16] Plaintiff's argument misses the mark for another reason. Direct evidence is evidence which requires no inferences to establish the asserted proposition, but is explicit on its face. InterVest, 340 F.3d at 159 (citation omitted). By asking the Court to infer an agreement from the [*44] text of the letters, Plaintiff appears to be conceding that the letters do not constitute direct evidence of an agreement.

In the case at bar, Plaintiff submits that the "conspirators are acting in parallel based on their communications with each other regarding their customers[.]" Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 8, ECF No. 63. To nudge her §1 claim across the line from conceivable to plausible, Plaintiff proffers evidence which she contends provides the requisite plus factors. This evidence includes the two letters from JP Morgan, information posted on the website of VantageScore, and a statement allegedly contained in FICO's trademark registration [*47] document. Plaintiff contends these documents provide circumstantial evidence from which an agreement can be inferred.

Turning first to the two JP Morgan letters, Plaintiff submits that this evidence shows that "Defendants changed position based on communication with a competitor." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 8, ECF No. 63. Plaintiff further submits that this "negative event impacted [her] credit score[,]" and, as alleged in paragraph 36 of her Complaint, "the 'Credit Score' provides the instructions for the uniform system for pricing loans." Id. According to Plaintiff, this shows that she is a victim of the price fixing conspiracy. Id.

For the reasons stated above, the Court finds that the JP Morgan letters do not show that JP Morgan (or any other named Defendant for that matter) changed positions based on communications with an unidentified competitor. Rather, the letters show that JP Morgan decided to reduce Plaintiff's credit limit based on several factors, one of which was information provided by Defendant Equifax. The Court cannot glean from that statement, or any other statement in the JP Morgan letters, any suggestion of a preceding agreement between competing lenders, or between [*48] JP Morgan and Equifax, to fix the terms of Plaintiff's credit. Moreover, Plaintiff's argument is undermined by the fact that the only communication suggested in the JP Morgan letters is between non-competitors. With regard to Plaintiff's argument in her brief that the reduction in her credit limit impacted her credit score, there is simply no factual support for this statement in the Complaint. The Court concludes, therefore, that the JP Morgan letters do not provide circumstantial evidence of an agreement.

Plaintiff also argues that her case is factually distinguishable from Twombly because in that case, the plaintiff only alleged parallel conduct with nothing more. By contrast here, Black submits it is unarguable that the parallel conduct is due to communications among competitors, with a plausible inference that such communication is based on an understanding among competitors. In fact, Plaintiff contends that such communication and understanding is more than plausible—it is literally true as entered into the evidentiary record and ignored in the Defendants' brief. Id. at 9. Thus, this case should not be dismissed, Plaintiff maintains, because the nature and scope of the communications [*49] and the understanding among competitors regarding such communications are obviously the cause of the parallel conduct. Id.

The Court finds that like Twombly, Plaintiff's factual allegations fall short of showing a preceding agreement. Under Twombly, "allegations of parallel conduct . . . must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement[.]" 550 U.S. at 557.[17] In the case at bar, the relevant context is the consumer lending industry, and in particular, the sharing of customers' credit history information to set credit terms and limits on consumer credit cards. In determining whether Plaintiff has alleged facts suggesting a preceding agreement among the eight named Defendants to fix credit terms of consumer credit cards, the Court examines the Complaint, and any documents incorporated by reference, for factual assertions referencing or suggesting some cooperation, understanding or agreement between Defendants regarding fixing credit terms, such as discussions, meetings, or other communication between the Defendants.[18] When the Court does so, the only reference to or suggestion of communication between any of the Defendants is contained in paragraph 72 of the [*50] Complaint, which references the JP Morgan letters.[19] As previously discussed, however, a close examination of these letters does not reveal any direct or circumstantial evidence that JP Morgan changed Plaintiff's credit terms based on cooperation, understanding or an agreement among competitors, or between JP Morgan and Equifax. Because the JP Morgan letters do not constitute a "tacit invitation . . . to join a coordinated credit policy" directed towards Plaintiff, Michelman, 534 F.2d at 1048-49,[20] no foundation exists for a plausible §1 claim.

---

[17] The Supreme Court in Twombly noted that several commentators provided HN21[] examples of parallel conduct allegations that would be sufficient to state a §1 claim under its newly enunciated plausibility standard, which included "parallel behavior that would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties," or "conduct [that] indicates the sort of restricted freedom of action and sense of obligation that one generally associates with agreement". 550 U.S. at 556 n. 4 (citations omitted). In addition, the

Likewise, Plaintiff's conclusory assertion that JP Morgan used competitively sensitive information obtained from unidentified competitors to set prices, foreclose credit lines, and/or accelerate default, in and of itself, does not suggest a plausible §1 claim. The sharing of consumers' credit history information does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act without some factual allegations suggesting that the lenders have come to some understanding or agreement among themselves on the credit eligibility of consumers with a particular credit score, or the credit limits or interest rates to be offered to such consumers. Here the Complaint is completely devoid of any factual allegations showing or suggesting that JP Morgan, BOA, Discover, and/or any unnamed competitors came to an understanding or agreement to fix eligibility criteria, credit limits, or interest rates to be applied to Plaintiff or any of the putative class members. In addition, there is a legitimate, independent basis for the sharing of consumer credit history information. [*53] Historically, lenders have used credit history information provided by credit bureaus and credit scoring companies to assess risk levels for setting credit terms and interest rates. The practice of sharing consumer credit history information has been lawful under the antitrust laws since at least 1925. Cement Mfrs.' Protective Ass'n v. United States, 268 U.S. 588, 45 S. Ct. 586, 69 L. Ed. 1104 (1925). Thus, without the necessary suggestion of a preceding agreement to fix credit terms/rates, the Court cannot say that JP Morgan's decision to reduce Plaintiff's credit limit was due to anything other than independent market factors.

Additional plus factors proffered by Plaintiff consist of certain statements appearing on the websites maintained by the Credit Scoring Company Defendants, VantageScore and FICO. Specifically, Plaintiff submits that a conspiracy can be inferred from the following statement appearing on VantageScore's website: "Banks, credit card companies, and other lenders use credit scores to assess a borrower's loan eligibility and set loan/credit terms." Ex. B to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n, ECF No. 63-2. In addition, Plaintiff directs the Court to FICO's trademark registration, which allegedly contains the statement [*54] "lenders use their scoring model to set prices." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n 10, ECF No. 63. However, no such document is attached to her memorandum in opposition (ECF No. 63), nor was it attached to any of Plaintiff's other papers and/or memorandums filed in opposition to the motions to dismiss of the other Defendants. Rather, Plaintiff has attached an excerpt from FICO's website relating to FICO® Score Delivery.

---

parties in Twombly, "agree[d] [*51] that 'complex and historically unprecedented changes in pricing structure made at the very same time by multiple competitors, and made for no other discernible reason' would support a plausible inference of conspiracy." Id. In the case at bar, the allegations of parallelism do not describe conduct that falls within any of these examples. Indeed, as noted below, the parallelism asserted here at best resulted from mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties.

[18] The Court's focus on communications between Defendants is appropriate given Plaintiff's argument in her brief to the effect that the parallel conduct of Defendants is based on their communications with each other regarding their customers. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 8, ECF No. 63.

[19] In paragraph 72 of her Complaint, Plaintiff is asserting essentially that the letters she received from JP Morgan indicate JP Morgan changed its position on her credit line due to cooperation, understanding, and agreement among competitors, rather than independent market factors, and thus prove that JP Morgan used competitively sensitive information obtained from other yet to be identified lenders to set prices, foreclose credit [*52] lines, and accelerate default. Compl., ¶ 72.

[20] The court of appeals decision in Michelman is discussed in more detail in Part 3, infra, at 37-38.

See Ex. C to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n, ECF No. 63-3.[21] Plaintiff posits that these statements by the Credit Scoring Company Defendants constitute an admission and recommendation that lenders set their lending terms according to the scoring model, not independent analysis of credit histories and, as such, provide direct evidence of a conspiracy and an overwhelming plus factor required for pleading parallel conduct under Twombly. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 10, ECF No. 63.)

The Court finds no support for Plaintiff's position in the information reported on the websites of VantageScore and FICO. First, the Complaint does not contain any factual allegations regarding the information on the websites or in FICO's trademark registration. Rather, the only place this information appears is in Plaintiff's brief. However, even if these allegations were contained in the Complaint, they fall short of raising the suggestion of a preceding agreement between Defendants to fix the price of loans/credit. The statements appearing on the websites are not directed to any particular persons or entities, and thus, cannot be used to show concerted action or a "meeting of the minds" between Defendants. In addition, there is no indication of when these statements first appeared, and therefore, Plaintiff has not established that they preceded the decision to reduce her credit limit. At best, the information provided on the websites constitutes a one-way communication from the Credit Scoring Company Defendants to potential clients—banks, credit card companies, and [*56] other lenders—recommending certain uses of their credit scores. The Credit Scoring Companies' websites do not instruct potential clients to use their credit scores exclusively to set loan prices. Absent such instruction, it is irrational to infer from the websites that the credit scoring companies have admitted and recommended that lenders refrain from engaging in independent analysis of credit histories in setting their lending terms. It is simply irrational to suggest that the referenced website statements provide direct or circumstantial evidence that the banks, credit card companies, and other lenders entered into an agreement to use the credit scores to fix credit at a certain price.

Finally, Plaintiff contends that further factual evidence exists in the Complaint, which Defendants have ignored. In particular, Plaintiff submits that in paragraphs 41 through 43, the "Complaint properly alleges that anticompetitive pricing terms are present in the scoring model adopted by the lenders, in the form of punishment and pricing floors." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 9, ECF No. 63. When the Court discards the conclusory allegations in paragraphs 41 through 43 of the Complaint, the factual allegations [*57] contained in those paragraphs assert that all consumer lenders provide loans at a variable interest rate tied to the prime lending rate, which is a pricing floor that no lender will ever go below. (Compl., ¶43.) The price floor baseline is elevated for customers based on the shared credit information. Id. However, these factual allegations simply do not support Plaintiff's argument that the Complaint properly alleges that anticompetitive pricing terms are present in the scoring model adopted by the lenders. Indeed, the practice of tying the interest rate to the prime lending rate is not unlawful and has been followed historically in the consumer lending industry. Moreover, elevating the pricing floor or baseline to take into account a particular customer's credit information/risk is also entirely appropriate.

In further support of her argument, Plaintiff cites Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 648, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1980), for the proposition that "credit terms must be characterized as an inseparable part of the price." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 9, ECF No. 63. However, Plaintiff fails to explain how Catalano is relevant to her case. Catalano involved a secret agreement among wholesalers [*58] to terminate the practice of extending short-term interest free credit on beer purchases to plaintiffs, a conditionally certified class of beer retailers. The Supreme Court held that the agreement to fix credit terms was tantamount to an agreement to eliminate discounts which was done to fix the price of beer sales, and thus, was unlawful per se. Id. at 648. In other words, because credit terms are increasingly viewed as an element of price, interference with credit terms necessarily involves interference with price, which is regarded as illegal per se under the Sherman Act. Id. at 648 n. 11 (citations omitted). It is important to note that the Supreme Court in Catalano was not faced with the question of whether an agreement existed in the first instance—that fact had already been determined. Rather, the Supreme Court was faced with the question of whether an agreement to fix credit terms was tantamount to price fixing which is unlawful per se under the Sherman

[21] The excerpt from FICO's website attached as Exhibit C to ECF No. 63 states that the FICO scores give lenders "insight into [their] own customers' risk and revenue potential, and . . . updated scores . . . [can be] us[ed] to make more profitable decisions for credit line management, cross-selling, balance building, pricing, [*55] customer retention, activation, collections resource allocation and point-of-sale authorizations." See ECF No. 63-3.

Act. While the Supreme Court's decision in Catalano certainly supports the principle that an agreement can be unlawful per se where the terms agreed to are something other than price itself, such as credit terms, here, unlike [*59] Catalano, Plaintiff has failed to come forward with facts to show or infer an agreement in the first instance.

Plaintiff further argues that:

> One form of coordinated action dictated by a credit score is the lowering of the credit score where a person pays off a credit card. (Compl. ¶40-41). In other words, all the lenders use the uniformly lowered credit score to act in parallel to increase the price even though such actions by the consumer actually increase creditworthiness and decrease risk to all of the lenders. Further, as the complaint properly alleges, the credit scores are manipulated for loan re-pricing, even though the customer has been previously been deemed creditworthy and the lender is no longer subject to risk, having underwritten the underlying debt in the form of insurance and credit swap derivatives, which results in monopolistic and uniform pricing. (Compl. ¶ 36, 38).

Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 9-10, ECF No. 63. Plaintiff submits that "these factual allegations alone are sufficiently specific and plausible to plead a claim on which relief may be granted." Id. at 10. The Court disagrees. First, many of the statements in paragraphs 36, 38, 40 through 43 are conclusory as opposed [*60] to factual in nature, and thus, must be disregarded for purposes of the motion to dismiss. Second, when the factual allegations in these paragraphs are isolated,[22] the Court finds that none of them provide evidence of any plus factors, as they do not evince a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy or show Defendants were acting against their own self-interests. The factual allegations in those paragraphs do not go beyond suggesting interdependent market behavior and conscious parallelism which, under Twombly, is insufficient to state a §1 claim.

3. Sharing Customers' Credit Information

Next Defendants submit the "sole factual allegations contained in the complaint assert that, for some period of time, [D]efendants have shared consumer credit history information for purposes of evaluating consumer creditworthiness and pricing consumer [*61] credit." Lenders' Mem. at 10, ECF No. 34. However, sharing customer credit history information, even if it were conducted pursuant to an agreement to exchange such information, according to Defendants, is entirely lawful under the antitrust laws. Id. Indeed, Defendants maintain that this practice has been lawful under the antitrust laws since at least 1925, and cite in support Cement Manufacturers, supra. Moreover, Defendants submit the use of consumer credit scoring is wide spread and encouraged by federal bank regulators as a means to expand access to credit, promote competition and improve market efficiency. Lenders' Reply Mem. at 5, ECF No. 66 (citing Bd. of Governors of the Fed. Res. Sys., Report to the Congress on Credit Scoring and Its Effects on the Availability and Affordability of Credit, at 1 (Aug. 2007), http://www.federalreserve.gov/boarddocs/RptCongress/creditscore/creditscore.pdf ("Bd. of Governors").

In Cement Manufacturers, members of the association dispensed monthly reports of all customer accounts which were past due by two months or more, which included the name and address of the delinquent debtors, the amount overdue, any explanation for the delinquency (such [*62] as the debtor claimed an offset or otherwise disputed the debt), and indicated whether the account had been turned over to attorneys for collection. Id. at 599. The Supreme Court reversed the decision of the district court in favor of the government and held that the exchange of credit history information among cement manufacturers relating to the creditworthiness of their customers did not violate the antitrust laws. Id. at 606. In arriving at this conclusion, the Supreme Court reasoned:

> The government neither charged nor proved that there was any agreement with respect to the use of this information or with respect to the persons to whom or conditions under which credit should be extended. The evidence falls far short of establishing any understanding on the basis of which credit was to be extended to customers, or that any co-operation resulted from the distribution of this information, or that there were any consequences from it other than such as would naturally ensue from the exercise of the individual judgment of > manufacturers in determining, on the basis of available information, whether to extend credit or to require cash or security from any given customer.

[22] The factual allegations in those paragraphs can be distilled essentially as follows: Credit scores are lowered when a consumer pays off a credit card. Lenders use the lowered credit score to increase the interest rate (and thus the price), even though such payoffs actually increase a consumers' creditworthiness and decrease risk to all of the lenders.

Id. at 599-600. [*63] The Court noted that in Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 393, 25 S. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518 (1905), it "approved a decree which provided that defendants should not be restrained 'from establishing and maintaining rules for the giving of credit to dealers where such rules in good faith are calculated solely to protect the defendants against dishonest or irresponsible dealers.'" Cement Mfrs., 268 U.S. at 604. The Court then went on to explain:

> HN22[] Distribution of information as to credit and responsibility of buyers undoubtedly prevents fraud and cuts down to some degree commercial transactions which would otherwise be induced by fraud. But for reasons stated more at length in our opinion in United States v. Maple Flooring Association, supra, we cannot regard the procuring and dissemination of information which tends to prevent the procuring of fraudulent contracts or to prevent the fraudulent securing of deliveries of merchandise on the pretense that the seller is bound to deliver it by his contract, as an unlawful restraint of trade even though such information be gathered and disseminated by those who are engaged in the trade or business principally concerned.

Id.

Similarly in Maple Flooring Manufacturers' Ass'n v. United States, 268 U.S. 563, 565-67, 45 S. Ct. 578, 69 L. Ed. 1093 (1925),[23] [*64] the Supreme Court reversed a judgment in favor of the government where the alleged antitrust conspiracy was an agreement to exchange historical cost and sales information among members of an association who were competitors in the business of selling and shipping wood flooring in interstate commerce. The Court pointed out that the government had neither alleged nor proved that any agreement existed among the association's members affecting production, fixing prices, or for price maintenance. Id. at 567. Rather, the government had alleged only that the exchange of information had resulted in the maintenance of practical uniformity in net delivered prices. Id. In rejecting the government's argument, the Supreme Court in Maple Flooring explained:

> It is the consensus of opinion of economists and of many of the most important agencies of government that HN23[] the public interest is served by the gathering and dissemination, in the widest possible manner, of information with respect to the production and distribution, cost and prices in actual sales, of market commodities because the making available of such information tends to stabilize trade and industry, to produce fairer price levels and to [*65] avoid the waste which inevitably attends the unintelligent conduct of economic enterprise. 'Free competition' means a free and open market among both buyers and sellers for the sale and distribution of commodities. Competition does not become less free merely because the conduct of commercial operations becomes more intelligent through the free distribution of knowledge of all the essential factors entering into the commercial transaction. General knowledge that there is an accumulation of surplus of any market commodity would undoubtedly tend to diminish production, but the dissemination of that information cannot in itself be said to be restraint upon commerce in any legal sense. The manufacturer is free to produce, but prudence and business foresight based on that knowledge influences free choice in favor of more limited production. Restraint upon free competition begins when improper use is made of that information through any concerted action which operates to restrain the freedom of action of those who buy and sell.

Id. at 585 (footnote omitted). The Supreme Court went on to explain:

> HN24[] It was not the purpose or the intent of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law to inhibit the intelligent conduct [*66] of business operations, nor do we conceive that its purpose was to suppress such influences as might affect the operations of interstate commerce through the application to them of the individual intelligence of those engaged in commerce, enlightened by accurate information as to the essential elements of the economics of a trade or business, however gathered or disseminated. HN25[] Persons who unite in > gathering and disseminating information in trade journals and statistical reports on industry, who gather and publish statistics as to the amount of production of commodities in interstate commerce, and who report market prices, are not engaged in unlawful conspiracies in restraint of trade merely because the ultimate result of their efforts may be to stabilize prices or limit production through a better understanding of economic laws and a more general ability to conform to them, for the simple reason that the Sherman Law neither repeals economic laws nor prohibits the gathering and dissemination of information. Sellers of any commodity who guide the daily conduct of their business on the basis of market reports would hardly be deemed to be conspirators engaged in restraint of interstate [*67] commerce. They would not be any the more so merely because they became stockholders in a corporation or joint owners of a trade journal, engaged in the business of compiling and publishing such reports.

---

[23] The Supreme Court issued its decision in Maple Flooring the same day it decided Cement Manufacturers.

Id. at 583-84. The Court in Maple Flooring thus held:

> We decide only that HN26[] trade associations or combinations of persons or corporations which openly and fairly gather and disseminate information as to the cost of their product, the volume of production, the actual price which the product has brought in past transactions, stocks of merchandise on hand, approximate cost of transportation from the principal point of shipment to the points of consumption as did these defendants and who, as they did, meet and discuss such information and statistics without however reaching or attempting to reach any agreement or any concerted action with respect to prices or production or restraining competition, do not thereby engage in unlawful restraint of commerce.

Id. at 586.

The Court's analysis in Maple Flooring has been applied by numerous federal courts since its publication eighty-six years ago. In [*68] Michelman v. Clark-Schwebel Fiber Glass Corp., the court of appeals relied on Cement Manufacturers in holding:

> HN27[] The exchange of information between business firms concerning the credit-worthiness of customers has long been held not to violate the Sherman Act. See Cement Manufacturers Protective Association v. United States, 268 U.S. 588, 604, 45 S. Ct. 586, 591, 69 L. Ed. 1104, 1111 (1925). Unlike exchanges regarding prices, which usually serve no purpose other than to suppress competition and hence fall within the ban of the Sherman Act, see United States v. Container Corp. of America, 393 U.S. 333, 89 S.Ct. 510, 21 L.Ed.2d 526 (1969), the dissemination to competitors of information concerning the credit-worthiness of customers aids sellers in gaining information necessary to protect themselves against fraudulent or insolvent customers. See id. at 335, 89 S.Ct. at 511, 21 L.Ed.2d at 528. Cement Manufacturers Protective Assn. v. United States, supra, 268 U.S. at 604, 45 S.Ct. at 591, 69 L.Ed. at 1111. Given the legitimate function of such data, it is not a violation of § 1 to exchange such information, provided that any action taken in reliance upon it is the result of each firm's independent [*69] judgment, and not of agreement.

534 F.2d at 1048. Several other courts have held likewise. See e.g., Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 885-86 (9th Cir. 1982) (rejecting argument that all exchanges of credit information are per se violations of §1 of the Sherman Act, and holding that the exchange of information regarding individual retailers' credit histories and total indebtedness, for the individual use by members of a credit managers' association in determining whether to offer credit, did not constitute a violation of §1 where there was no indication of an agreement to fix credit terms); *Burtch v. Milberg Factors, Inc., Civ. No. 07-556, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26872, 2009 WL 840589, at 10 (D.Del. Mar. 30, 2009) (the alleged sharing of customer credit information among competitors was not the type of information-sharing that has been held to violate federal antitrust laws); *Kasada, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25257, 2004 WL 2903776, at 6 (quoting Michelman, 534 F.2d at 1048) (rejecting garment manufacturers' price fixing and group boycott claims against various credit institutions, predicated on the exchange of credit information, noting that the "'exchange of information between business firms concerning the credit-worthiness of customers [*70] has long been held not to violate the Sherman Act.'"); *Metro Video Dist., Inc. v. Vestron Video, Inc., CIV No. 89-0640 PG, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18739, 1990 WL 58463, at 10 (D. P.R. Feb. 8, 1990) (where no agreements regarding price fixing were ever reached, video software manufacturers credit association's exchange of dealers' historical credit information, which contained no price information, did not violate federal antitrust laws).

In opposing the motion to dismiss, Plaintiff attempts to distinguish Cement Manufacturers from the case at bar. Plaintiff argues that the Supreme Court did not subsequently ratify price fixing arrangements that are tied to such data exchanges. Plaintiff submits that a dispositive fact not present in Cement Manufacturers (or any of the other cases cited by Defendants) is that the defendants did not also adopt a uniform credit score/pricing system based on the customer information exchanged, as in the instant matter. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 16-17, ECF No. 63.) Plaintiff's argument equates the credit score to a pricing model,[24] and posits that by using and promoting a uniform credit score, in addition to raw data, lenders, credit scoring companies, and credit bureaus ignored the guidance [*71] of the Supreme Court in Cement Manufacturers. Consequently, Plaintiff contends the uniformly adopted industry credit score determines and/or provides a guideline for setting the price of loans, and therefore precludes the exercise of individual judgment of the competitors as required by the Supreme Court in Cement Manufacturers. Thus, by linking a pricing model (credit score) to the credit reporting system, Plaintiff concludes that Defendants have coordinated and stabilized pricing, which is clearly outside the scope of the lawful purposes of sharing the credit data.[25]

The Court finds no merit to Plaintiff's argument. The Supreme Court has determined that HN28[] exchanges of credit information similar to those alleged here[26] do not constitute a violation of §1 of the Sherman Act, so long as the information exchanged does not include any recommendations or agreement as to how the exchanged information should be used. Cement Manufacturers, 268 U.S. at 599-600, 606; [*73] Maple Flooring, 268 U.S. at 586. Indeed, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice (the "Department") has consistently approved the exchange of credit information through a third party where the exchange does not involve the terms on which the firms conduct their business or make any recommendations regarding the information exchanged.[27] See, e.g., Experience Info. Bureau, Inc., DOJ Business Review Letter, B.R.L. 92-1, 1990 DOJBRL LEXIS 3, 1992 WL 71827 (D.O.J. Jan. 14, 1992) (approving information clearinghouse for underwriters of credit life and disability insurance); Nat'l Ass'n of Credit Mgmt., DOJ Business Review Letter, B.R.L. 94-3, 1994 DOJBRL LEXIS 12, 1994 WL 70278 (D.O.J. Feb. 16, 1994) (approving association's creation of new department to offer credit information services to businesses in leasing industry); Nat'l Telecomm. Data Exch., Inc., DOJ Business Review Letter, B.R.L. 94-6, 1994 DOJBRL LEXIS 3, 1994 WL 70279 (D.O.J. Mar. 8, 1994) (approving credit information clearinghouse for telecommunications carriers); Mortg. Indus. Data Exch., DOJ Business Review Letter, B.R.L. 94-18, 1994 DOJBRL LEXIS 20, 1994 WL 532704 (D.O.J. Sept. 22, 1994) (approving information clearinghouse for mortgage industry); Telecomm. Data Exch., DOJ Business Review Letter, 1997 WL 543106, 1997 DOJBRL LEXIS 18 (D.O.J. Sept. 3, 1997) [*74] (approving consumer credit information clearinghouse for telecommunications carriers).

---

[24] Plaintiff submits that the "term 'credit score' is simply a euphemism for pricing point", Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 12, ECF No. 63, but fails to cite any authority for this proposition, most likely because none exists.

[25] Plaintiff also attempts to distinguish the Supreme Court's decision in Maple Flooring on the basis that the data exchanged in that case was aggregate statistical data, which did not identify individual customers, much less a pricing score. However, Plaintiff's attempt falls short as no pricing information was exchanged here and the identities of the customers was not dispositive. Plaintiff also cites Container [*72] Corp. in support of her argument that Cement Manufacturers and Maple Flooring are not applicable where "'each defendant on receiving . . . [a price request] usually furnished the data with the expectation that is would be furnished reciprocal information when it wanted it. That concerted action is of course sufficient to establish the combination or conspiracy, the initial ingredient of a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.'" Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 17 n. 3, ECF No. 63 (quoting Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 89 S. Ct. 510, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1969)). Plaintiff's reliance on Container Corp. is misplaced. Unlike the exchange in that case, here there was no exchange of pricing information, a critical fact, nor do the factual allegations here show or suggest an understanding or expectation of a reciprocal exchange of pricing information.

[26] Essentially, the business practice challenged by Plaintiff as violating federal antitrust laws can be summarized as follows. Lenders report negative events (such as late payments, exceeding credit limits/too high balances, default, arrearages, and foreclosures), as they occur in their customers' accounts, to credit bureaus which compile credit histories and provide that information to credit scoring companies, who in turn use that information, along with algorithms, to convert this information into a credit score. The recalculated credit scores are then distributed via the credit bureaus to the lenders, which use the recalculated credit scores to adjust their customers' credit terms/limits.

[27] Upon request, the Antitrust Division will issue a business review letter pursuant to 28 C.F.R. §50.6 stating the Department's antitrust enforcement intentions with regard to the requesting organization's proposed business operation.

Plaintiff concedes, as she must, that the sharing of customer information regarding creditworthiness is lawful under the antitrust laws. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 11, 16-17, ECF No. [*75] 63. Plaintiff further concedes that the use of credit scores to assess a borrower's loan eligibility, i.e., creditworthiness, is a potentially lawful use of the data. Id. at 10. What is not lawful, Plaintiff contends, is the linking of a pricing model (credit score) to the credit reporting system. However, in order for Plaintiff's argument to have any merit, the factual allegations would have to show or suggest that the information exchanged, in particular, the credit scores, included a recommendation or agreement to link loan prices and/or credit terms to certain credit scores, and no such inference can be drawn from the factual assertions in Plaintiff's complaint. At most, those factual assertions show or suggest that lenders unilaterally use credit scores to evaluate and make decisions regarding customers' credit, a perfectly lawful use. In addition, the exchange of credit information and credit scores serves a perfectly legitimate business function—to reduce losses by providing information that aids the unilateral decision-making of the lenders. To this end, it has been reported that said reductions will result in a "pro-competitive effect; it . . . enhance[s] efficiency and lower[s] [*76] operating costs, thereby increasing output." Mortg. Indus. Data Exch., 1994 DOJBRL LEXIS 20, 1994 WL 532704. Therefore, the Court finds that an exchange of such information does not violate §1 where, as here, any action taken in reliance upon it is the result of each Defendant's independent judgment, and not of agreement. Michelman, 534 F.2d at 1048.

Perhaps realizing this infirmity, Plaintiff attempts to prove that concerted action exists by arguing that the effect of the exchange of customers' credit information and use of a uniform credit score is price stabilization, which could only result if Defendants agreed to fix the price of loans based on credit scores. In Maple Flooring, the Supreme Court rejected a similar argument made by the government which maintained that the exchange of information resulted in maintenance of practical uniformity in net delivered prices. 268 U.S. at 567. The Supreme Court opined that "[p]ersons who unite in gathering and disseminating information . . . and statistics . . . as to the amount of production of commodities in interstate commerce, and who report market prices, are not engaged in unlawful conspiracies in restraint of trade merely because the ultimate result of their [*77] efforts may be to stabilize prices or limit production through a better understanding of economic laws and a more general ability to conform to them." Id. at 584 (emphasis added). The Supreme Court found determinative the fact that the government had neither alleged nor proved that any agreement existed among the association's members affecting production, fixing prices, or for price maintenance. Id. at 567.

Moreover, HN29[] in cases involving the exchange of information, price stabilization may result from factors that do not constitute an antitrust violation, such as obtaining "a better understanding of economic laws and a more general ability to conform to them, for the simple reason that the Sherman [Act] neither repeals economic laws or nor prohibits the gathering and dissemination of information." Maple Flooring, 268 U.S. at 585. Thus, the presence of price stabilization alone cannot prove concerted action on the part of the alleged conspirators. Having failed to aver facts to show or suggest an agreement among the Defendants to use credit scores for an improper purpose under the Sherman Act, Plaintiff's Complaint does not state a plausible §1 claim.

Another flaw in Plaintiff's argument [*78] is that the factual allegations in her Complaint do not show or suggest that the information exchanged involved credit terms or pricing used by the lenders in their consumer loan/credit card businesses. Plaintiff admits that "[w]hile actual prices may not be traded in the instant case, a price proxy in the form of a 'credit score' is created. (Compl. ¶ 36)." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 17 n. 3, ECF No. 63. In other words, Plaintiff is attempting to equate the term "credit score" to a "pricing model." This argument is equally unavailing, as there is simply no support in the law or facts for Plaintiff's position. It is clear that credit scores do not contain any pricing elements, such as interest rates or credit terms.[28] As the Federal Reserve Board reported to Congress in 2007, "[c]redit scoring[, which] is a statistical technology that quantifies the credit risk posed by a prospective or current borrower[,] . . . is widely used to evaluate applications for credit, identify prospective borrowers, and manage existing accounts." Bd. of Governors at 1. The Supreme Court's decision in Catalano illustrates this point. In that case, the elimination of discounts was considered a quantitative element [*79] of the price, because the price charged to the beer distributors was increased as a direct result of the elimination of discounts. Consequently, the wholesalers' agreement to eliminate the discounts was found to be an unlawful price fixing agreement. Catalano, 446 U.S. at 648. By contrast here, the same cannot be said of the credit information and credit scores exchanged between the Lenders, Credit Bureaus, and Credit Scoring Cos., as neither the credit information nor scores constitutes a quantitative element of the price of consumer credit. Another important distinction between Catalano and the case at bar is that an agreement to eliminate the discounts had been established in Catalano; no such agreement has been established, or can be inferred, from the facts as pled in this case.

[28] Nor does the credit information provided by the lenders to the credit bureaus constitute "pricing information" or "credit terms." The information provided by lenders consist of events that relate to a customer's creditworthiness—i.e., untimely repayment, high outstanding loan balances, loan default, arrearages, foreclosures, etc. This creditworthiness information is not a pricing point or model.

Significantly, [*80] the distinction between credit information and price was aptly noted by the district court in Metro Video:

> HN30[] [U]nder the federal antitrust laws decisions involving credit have always required and produced totally different analyses from those involving prices. This is why decisions regarding agreements pertaining to prices and exchanges of price information have consistently been held to violate the Sherman Act, while at the same time it has long been held that the exchange of information between competitors regarding the credit worthiness of customers does not violate any provision of the federal antitrust laws. In Cement Manufacturers, the Supreme Court specifically stated that "[d]istribution of information as to credit and responsibility of buyers undoubtedly prevents fraud and cuts down to some degree commercial transactions which would otherwise be induced by fraud," so it cannot be declared to be an unlawful restraint of trade "even though such information be gathered and disseminated by those who are engaged in the trade or business principally concerned." As long as the exchange of credit information is not accompanied by any agreements relating to the extension of credit, such [*81] as an agreement to deny credit to one or more of the competitors' customers, no violation of the antitrust laws has occurred.

*1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18739, 1990 WL 58463, at 9 (internal citations omitted). Thus, for these and the reasons stated above, the Court finds no basis exists for equating "credit scores" to "pricing."

Finally, it bears mentioning that a key factor in the Supreme Court's decision in Cement Manufacturers was the reason for the exchange of customer credit history information—to prevent procurement of fraudulent contracts. 268 U.S. at 604. Similarly here, credit history information, including credit scores, have been exchanged to provide critical information regarding a customer's creditworthiness, to assist lenders in gathering information necessary to protect themselves against fraudulent or insolvent customers or potential customers. Therefore, inasmuch as the exchange of information here does not include any pricing terms or pricing model, the Court finds that Cement Manufacturers controls the outcome here.

In further support of their argument that the exchange of credit information here was entirely lawful, Defendants submit that the lawfulness of exchanges of credit history information is [*82] so fully accepted as a matter of law that the reporting of consumer credit histories to credit reporting agencies and the dissemination of credit reports for the purpose of determining whether to extend credit to individual consumers is permitted, and indeed encouraged, by the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act, 15 U.S.C. §1681 et seq. ("FCRA"). Lenders' Mem. at 13, ECF No. 34. Defendants further submit that in light of federal banking regulations, specifically 12 C.F.R. §7.4008, authorizing the exchange of credit reports containing consumer credit history information, it would be inappropriate to apply the antitrust laws to prohibit lenders, credit reporting bureaus, and credit scoring agencies from sharing consumer credit history information, or to allow a factfinder to infer an unlawful conspiracy from allegations of the lawful sharing of consumer credit history information. Lenders' Mem. at 14, ECF No. 34. According to Defendants, allowing Plaintiff to predicate her antitrust conspiracy claim on factual allegations that Defendants did precisely what Congress has authorized them to do would be plainly repugnant to the language and purpose of the FCRA and federal banking regulations. [*83] Credit Suisse Sec. (USA) LLC v. Billing, 551 U.S. 264, 267-68, 127 S. Ct. 2383, 168 L. Ed. 2d 145 (2007) (where there is a "plain repugnancy" between the antitrust laws and another federal statutory scheme, the other statutory scheme implicitly precludes the application of the antitrust laws to the alleged conduct). Lenders' Mem. at 14-15, ECF No. 34.

In enacting the FCRA, Congress recognized the need for fair and accurate credit reporting in the banking system, respect for consumers' rights to privacy, and the vital role consumer reporting agencies have assumed in collecting and evaluating consumer credit and other information on consumers. 15 U.S.C. §1681(a)(1), (3), & (4). Congress also acknowledged the existence of an elaborate mechanism for "investigating and evaluating the credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, and general reputation of consumers." 15 U.S.C. § 1681(a)(2) (footnote omitted). With these purposes in mind, Congress delineated a finite list of circumstances under which consumer credit information may be disseminated. Of particular relevance to this case are the circumstances set forth in §1681b(a)(3):

> HN31[] [A]ny consumer reporting agency may furnish a consumer report . . . [t]o a person [*84] which it has reason to believe—
>
> (A) intends to use the information in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving the extension of credit to, or review or collection of an account of, the consumer; or
>
> (B) intends to use the information for employment purposes[.]
>
> . . .

15 U.S.C. §1681b(a)(3)(A) & (B). In addition, federal banking regulations governing consumer lending provide that a "national bank shall not make a consumer loan . . . without regard to the borrower's ability to repay the loan. A bank may use any reasonable method to determine a borrower's ability to repay, including, for example, the borrower's current and expected income, current and expected cash flows, net worth, other relevant financial resources, current financial obligations, employment status, credit history, or other relevant factors." 12 C.F.R. § 7.4008(b).

Plaintiff responds that by adding a pricing score to the otherwise neutral credit information in credit reports, the Defendants have engaged in a price fixing scheme that clearly is not a legitimate business use of credit information under the FCRA. According to Plaintiff, price fixing, price [*85] stabilization, or any other form of price manipulation do not fall within one of the five limited and specific circumstances delineated by Congress, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §1681b(a), in which credit information may be provided. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 13, ECF No. 63. Plaintiff's argument is unavailing, as it presumes that credit scores are the equivalent of "pricing," which this Court has already determined to be completely unfounded. In addition, although the Court agrees that price fixing is not one of the circumstances enumerated in §1681b(a), as explained above, the factual allegations in the Complaint do not support the suggestion that credit information and credit scores were disseminated for the improper purpose of fixing prices.

Next, Plaintiff contends that the cited language from §7.4008(b) of the federal banking regulations presumes that each competing bank will make their own independent analysis of the facts, and not adopt a uniform model among competitors for pricing customers. According to Plaintiff, Defendants ignore this limitation because after the determination of creditworthiness is made, lenders then engage in loan re-repricing based on the uniform credit score which [*86] has nothing to do with creditworthiness, since there is no lender risk once the loans are underwritten by insurance such as credit-swap derivatives. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 15, ECF No. 63.

Again, Plaintiff's argument misses the mark. Black has failed to allege any facts showing or suggesting that Defendants adopted a uniform pricing model. Furthermore, there is nothing improper about lenders adjusting credit terms and rates upon receipt of an updated credit score, so long as the adjustment is based on unilateral decision-making by each lender, and nothing in Plaintiff's Complaint suggests otherwise. In addition, the website sources cited by Plaintiff show that the credit score and creditworthiness are related.[29] Indeed, VantageScore's website,

---

[29] At [*87] its very essence, the credit score is a predictor of a borrower's risk of default. It is touted by VantageScore as a "highly predictive, generic consumer credit risk model . . . [that p]redicts the likelihood of future serious delinquencies (90 days late or greater) on any type of account." VantageScore, http://www.vantagescore.com/about/vantagescore_methodology/ (last visited 8/09/11). According to VantageScore's website, credit scores are used by lenders to determine whether to extend credit and the terms of such credit. Id., http://www.vantagescore.com/benefits/consumers/ (last visited 8/09/11). A consumer's VantageScore is derived from a mathematical formula that evaluates a number of credit-related characteristics, including:

quoting Fitch Ratings with regard to the secondary market, states: "VantageScore provides highly predictive evaluations of consumer creditworthiness." VANTAGESCORE, http://www.vantagescore.com/about/marketadoption/ (last visited 8/09/11). Finally, Plaintiff's contention that there is no lender risk once the loans are underwritten by insurance (such as credit-swap derivatives) is wholly conclusory and not supported by the factual allegations.

Next, Plaintiff submits that despite the statute's directive to analyze the facts independently, credit bureaus and credit scoring agencies have collaborated to create a uniform industry pricing model. Plaintiff further submits that "[s]uch industry-wide uniformity for making lending decisions is even touted as an advantage in Credit Score Defendants' product literature: 'VantageScore is the generic credit scoring created by America's three major credit reporting companies [named defendants, Experian, Trans Union, and Equifax]. Our highly predictive model uses an innovative, patent-pending scoring methodology to provide lenders with a consistent interpretation of consumer credit files (emphasis added).'" Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 15, ECF No. 63 (quoting Barrett Burns, President & CEO, VantageScore Solutions LLC, VantageScore Newsletter, Oct. 20, 2010). Plaintiff maintains that this consistent interpretation is intended to, and does, lead to consistent pricing in which lenders lose any competitive advantage in their ability to analyze data, but because the credit score consistently fixes the terms of the loans, lenders can make up [*89] for the loss of competition by adopting the same recommended credit pricing model, which yields monopolistic profits. Id. at 15-16. Thus, Plaintiff submits that Defendants are acting outside the scope of the FCRA, which is the reason the instant Complaint was filed. Id. at 16.

The Court finds no merit to any of these arguments. First, the alleged collaboration between the Credit Bureaus and Credit Scoring Companies to create a uniform industry pricing model is based on the erroneous assumption that the credit score or scoring model is the equivalent of a pricing model. However, as explained above, the credit score and/or scoring models generated by VantageScore and FICO are not pricing models. This is evident from a perusal of the excerpts from VantageScore's and FICO's websites as provided by Plaintiff.[30] Moreover, the Court does not find any "directive" in the FCRA that credit reporting agencies are to independently analyze the facts. Rather, the FCRA requires that the credit reporting agencies accurately and fairly report, collect and evaluate consumer credit information. And it appears from VantageScore's website that its patent-pending scoring model does just that, as it allegedly [*90] reduces the variance between the credit scores of the three credit reporting agencies, and thus, produces a more accurate and consistent score. There is nothing unlawful about the exchange of customers' credit history information between the Credit Bureaus and Credit Scoring Companies so that the latter can generate a scoring model, as opposed to a pricing model, as the former clearly falls within the purview of §1681b(a)(3). Likewise, the Court cannot glean any improper motive from VantageScore's representation on its website that its scoring methodology provides lenders with consistent interpretations of consumer credit files. A review of the website excerpts provided by Plaintiff reveals that the purpose behind VantageScore's scoring model is developing a statistically sound, and therefore reliable and accurate, prediction of a consumer's credit risk or creditworthiness. VantageScore represents that its scoring model is more accurate and reduces the variance in credit scores between credit reporting agencies. It is clear that VantageScore's scoring model is purely a risk assessment. Moreover, it is in complete accord with the purpose of the FCRA—to ensure accuracy and fairness in [*91] credit reporting. 15 U.S.C. §1681. The fact that VantageScore's scoring model may have a stabilizing effect on price does not give rise to a Sherman Act violation without some evidence of an agreement between lenders to offer the same credit terms and interest rates for certain credit scores without any independent evaluation of a consumer's facts and credit history. Maple Flooring, 268 U.S. at 585. And as this Court found above, no such agreement can be inferred from the facts alleged in Plaintiff's Complaint. Accordingly, the Court finds no merit to Plaintiff's argument that Defendants are acting outside the scope of the FCRA.

Payment history, credit utilization, depth of credit, balances, recent credit, and available credit. Id., http://www.vantagescore.com/faqs/consumer/ (last visited 8/09/11). Along with the credit score, lenders also consider a number of other factors including whether a borrower is likely to improve, deteriorate, or remain stable in terms of their credit score by closely examining credit reports, specifically, the amount of credit utilization. The Score, VANTAGESCORE at 5 (Apr. 26, 2011), [*88] http://www.vantagescore.com/docs/newsblast_pdfAPR28.pdf.

[30] See, e.g., Pl.'s Exs. B & C, ECF Nos. 63-2 & 63-3; Pl.'s Exs. D, E, F, & G, ECF Nos. 64-4 - 64-7.

Therefore, because Plaintiff has failed to allege facts that show or suggest that the exchange of credit information and credit scores was accompanied by an agreement to use that information improperly, i.e., to fix the price of credit, the Court finds that the Complaint fails to state a plausible §1 violation under the Sherman Act.

4. Leave to Amend the Complaint

In the alternative, Plaintiff has summarily requested leave to amend her Complaint. For the reasons [*92] set forth below, the Court recommends that Plaintiff's request for leave to amend her complaint be denied.

HN32[] Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that leave to amend a pleading "shall be freely given when justice so requires." In Foman v. Davis, the Supreme Court delineated the grounds that would justify denying leave to amend: "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, [and] futility of amendment". Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962). The grant or denial of leave to amend is within the sound discretion of the district court; however, failure to provide a reason for denying leave to amend is considered an abuse of that discretion. Id.; see also In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d at 1434 (citing Foman, supra).

The proper procedure for amending a complaint, in non-civil rights cases, is set forth in Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(a)(1): HN33[] "A party may amend its pleading once as a matter of course within: (A) 21 days after serving it, or (B) if the pleading is one to which a responsive [*93] pleading is required, 21 days after service of a responsive pleading or 21 days after service of a motion under Rule 12(b), (e), or (f), whichever is earlier." Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(a)(1)(A) & (B) (effective Dec. 1, 2009). However, HN34[] after the expiration of the time set forth in Rule 15(a)(1), a party may amend its pleading prior to trial only with the opposing party's written consent or with leave of court. Fed.R.Civ.P. 15(a)(2). Rule 15(a)(2) further provides that leave to amend should be freely given when justice requires.

HN35[] Where leave of court is required to amend the complaint, the plaintiff must request leave to amend and attach the proposed amended complaint to the request. Fletcher-Harlee Corp. v. Pote Concrete Contractors, Inc., 482 F.3d 247, 252 (3d Cir. 2007) (citing Kelly v. Del. River Joint Comm'n, 187 F.2d 93, 95 (3d Cir. 1951)).[31] Failure to attach the proposed amendment is fatal to the request. Id. at 252-53; see also Ranke v. Sanofi-Synthelabo Inc., 436 F.3d 197, 206 (3d Cir. 2006) (citing Ramsgate Court Townhome Ass'n v. West Chester Borough, 313 F.3d 157, 161 (3d Cir. 2002)).

The Court finds that Plaintiff has not properly requested leave to amend her Complaint. Plaintiff did not file an amended complaint as a matter of course within 21 days after service of Defendants' motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). Therefore, Plaintiff is required to follow the procedure set forth under Rule 15(a)(2), as further delineated in Fletcher-Harlee. This she did not do. On November 18, 2010, Plaintiff summarily requested, in the alternative, leave to amend her Complaint in her responsive brief to Defendants' motion to dismiss. See Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 24, ECF No. 63. However, she has failed to indicate in her responsive brief what additional facts she would allege in her [*95] amended complaint to adequately plead a §1 antitrust claim, nor did she indicate at oral argument on Defendants' motions to dismiss what additional facts she would allege in support of her antitrust claim. Most importantly, she has failed to provide the Court with a proposed amended complaint. This is fatal to her request for leave to amend the complaint. Fletcher-Harlee, 482 F.3d at 252; *see also Burtch v. Milberg Factors, Inc., Civ. A. No. 07-556-JJF-LPS, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48431, 2009 WL 1529861, 3 (D. Del. May 31, 2009) (declining to grant leave to amend the complaint in an antitrust action for failing to present a proper request for leave to amend) (citing Fletcher-Harlee, 482 F.3d at 252). As the court of appeals opined in Fletcher-Harlee, "we hold that in ordinary civil litigation HN36[] it is hardly error for a district court to enter final judgment after granting a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss when the plaintiff has not properly requested leave to amend its complaint."

---

[31] In Fletcher-Harlee, the version of Rule 15 in effect at the time of the court of appeals' decision [*94] was the pre-2009 amendment version, which allowed a plaintiff to amend a complaint once as a matter of right up to the point at which the district court grants the motion to dismiss and enters final judgment, since a motion to dismiss is not a responsive pleading and the time limit applied only to responsive pleadings. After the motion to dismiss is granted and final judgment is entered, a plaintiff may seek to amend the complaint only through Fed.R.Civ.P. 59(e) or 60(b). Id. (citing Kelly, supra).

In addition, and perhaps more importantly, the Court finds that it would be futile to allow Plaintiff to amend her Complaint. Plaintiff has failed to proffer to this Court any additional facts to show a plausible antitrust claim, in particular, [*96] that there was an agreement among the Defendants to engage in unlawful conduct under §1 of the Sherman Act. Moreover, it is clear from Plaintiff's responsive brief and sur-reply that in order to prove the alleged antitrust violation here, she is relying on this Court agreeing with her that "credit scores" are the equivalent of "pricing." Having found against Plaintiff on this legal issue, the Court cannot envision any facts that would show or suggest a plausible §1 antitrust claim.

Therefore, for the reasons set forth above, the Court recommends that Plaintiff's request for leave to amend her complaint be denied.

D.Credit Bureaus' Motion to Dismiss

Defendants Experian Information Solutions, Inc., Trans Union LLC, and Equifax Credit Information Services, Inc. (collectively, the "Bureau Defendants"), have also moved to dismiss the Complaint in its entirety for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). In support of their motion, the Bureau Defendants submit that the Complaint fails to adequately allege an unlawful agreement and plausible conspiracy as required under Twombly. The Bureau Defendants further contend that their actions are lawful and authorized by the FCRA, and that [*97] the FCRA impliedly precludes enforcement of the antitrust laws as sought by Plaintiff. The Court will address each of these arguments below.

1. The Sufficiency of Plaintiff's Allegations As to Bureau Defendants

In her Complaint, Plaintiff sets forth several averments directed specifically to the Bureau Defendants. In this regard, Plaintiff alleges that credit bureaus "act as market associations within the context of antitrust law" because they "use private and sensitive data among marketplace competitors" and "actively promote and derive profit from assisting all of the competitors in the industry." (Compl., ¶32.) Plaintiff posits that "[m]arket associations can be effective tools for monopolizing industries by acting as an information clearing house for coordinating pricing information and boycotts. Credit bureaus act as information clearing houses holding proprietary data on over 1 billion debtors internationally." (Compl., ¶33.)

According to Plaintiff, the credit bureaus "further the price fixing scheme among lenders because they assist and promote parallel action among competitors. Specifically, where one company reports a negative event, the credit bureau(s) alert all of the lenders [*98] to either boycott the debtor by foreclosing access to any further loans or increase interest rates. Thus, consumers are forced to either submit to higher monopolistic prices or default and thereby be excluded from the credit market for at least seven years." (Compl. ¶34.) In addition, Plaintiff alleges that "Credit bureaus also assist in providing instantaneous real-time monopolistic pricing. Because the database information is shared in real time, the lenders can increase prices or institute boycotts with unparalleled efficiency." (Compl., ¶35.)[32]

[32] The Court finds that as to the allegations contained in paragraphs 32-35 of the Complaint, "because they are no more than conclusions, [they] are not entitled to the assumption of truth." Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1950. In some instances, Plaintiff combines a conclusion with a hypothesis or theory not directed to any named defendant. See Compl. ¶33 ("Market associations can be effective tools for monopolizing industries by acting as an information clearing house for coordinating pricing information and boycotts."); see also Compl. ¶35 ("Because the database information is shared in real time, the lenders can increase prices or institute boycotts [*99] with unparalleled efficiency."). Moreover, other than the reference to Equifax in the JP Morgan letters,

The Bureau Defendants submit that Plaintiff's allegations fail to satisfy the pleading requirements of Twombly, and join in and incorporate by reference the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss and memorandum of law in support thereof. The Bureau Defendants also advance two arguments of their own. First, the Bureau Defendants contend that Plaintiff has utterly failed to allege a conspiracy theory [*100] that is plausible as to them. In support, the Bureau Defendants argue that when the proper standard is applied to Plaintiff's Complaint, even a cursory review of the allegations exposes them as inadequate. Second, the Bureau Defendants submit that Plaintiff has failed to allege virtually any facts at all regarding the alleged conspiracy, let alone facts plausibly suggesting that they reached any agreement to take actions they do not even perform, i.e., setting interest rates and other credit terms.

With regard to their argument that Plaintiff has failed to allege a conspiracy theory that is plausible as to them, the Bureau Defendants argue mainly that there are no allegations indicating or suggesting what benefit they would receive from participating in a conspiracy to restrict the supply of loans. The Bureau Defendants submit that if anything, they would have nothing to gain and much to lose from a scheme to shrink their downstream credit-reporting revenue by limiting the availability of credit. The conspiracy as alleged by Plaintiff would decrease the number of loans and thereby decrease the number of credit reports used and sold. Thus, agreeing to restrict loan output, or supporting [*101] such agreement, makes no sense for a credit bureau. Moreover, the Bureau Defendants maintain that Plaintiff fails to provide a credible explanation or even allege why they would agree to participate in a conspiracy to fix the terms of products they do not sell, when clearly they do not receive revenue from interest rates. Because the banking system is dependent upon fair and accurate credit reporting, the Bureau Defendants maintain lenders would purchase credit data from them regardless. By participating in a conspiracy, the Bureau Defendants would needlessly risk antitrust penalties for revenue they would receive anyway. Thus, because Plaintiff has failed to allege a plausible motive for the Bureau Defendants to participate in a conspiracy, the Complaint against them should be dismissed.

In response to the Bureau Defendants' implausibility argument, Plaintiff submits that their argument is factually untrue. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Bureau Defs.' Motion to Dismiss at 7, ECF No. 60 ("Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Bureau Defs."). According to Plaintiff, the Bureau Defendants solely own VantageScore, thus making it their agent, and VantageScore sells credit scores which are used by lenders to set [*102] lending terms. Plaintiff further theorizes that VantageScore's revenues accrue solely to the Bureau Defendants, and therefore, the profitability of the Bureau Defendants rests, at least in part, on lenders adopting the VantageScore "pricing model." Consequently, Plaintiff submits, the Bureau Defendants through their agent, VantageScore, will more than make up for "the lost revenues due to decreased lending by deriving revenues from the lenders who adopt the proprietary, consistent, and uniform pricing system [known as] VantageScore®." Id.

The Court finds that Plaintiff's argument in response is flawed in several respects. Plaintiff does not explain what facts are untrue. Indeed, Plaintiff does not appear to be disputing that a credit bureau would be harmed by a conspiracy to limit the availability of credit, which would reduce the use of credit reports, thereby lowering the credit bureaus' revenue. Rather, Plaintiff argues that the Bureau Defendants "compensate" for these lost revenues "by deriving revenues from lenders who adopt . . . VantageScore scores." This argument ignores the fact (previously admitted) that if lending decreases, there will be less demand for the VantageScore [*103] scores, and therefore, revenue from the sales of VantageScore scores will also decrease. The Court agrees with the Bureau Defendants that it is highly unlikely they would enter into a conspiracy in which they would needlessly risk antitrust penalties and from which they would not benefit. Therefore, the Court finds Plaintiff's conspiracy theory, as it relates to the Bureau Defendants, implausible.

Plaintiff's argument is also flawed to the extent she attempts to establish antitrust liability as to the Bureau Defendants based solely on their ownership of VantageScore. As the Supreme Court recognized:

---

there are no facts alleged in the Complaint suggesting communications between the Bureau Defendants and the other Defendants, that support the allegation in paragraph 34 that the "credit bureau(s) alert all of the lenders to either boycott the debtor by foreclosing access to any further loans or increase interest rates." In addition, the reference to Equifax in the JP Morgan letters does not give rise to the suggestion or inference that the Equifax alerted JP Morgan to boycott Plaintiff by foreclosing access to any further loans or increase interest rates. Rather, the JP Morgan letters indicate that Equifax merely provided credit information to JPMorgan. See discussion, supra, at 22-24.

> It is a general principle of corporate law deeply "ingrained in our economic and legal systems" that HN37[] a parent corporation (so-called because of control through ownership of another corporation's stock) is not liable for the acts of its subsidiaries. Thus, it is hornbook law that "the exercise of the 'control' which stock ownership gives to the stockholders . . . will not create liability beyond the assets of the subsidiary. That 'control' includes the election of directors, the making of by-laws . . . and the doing of all other acts incident to the legal status of stockholders."

United States v. Bestfoods, 524 U.S. 51, 61, 118 S. Ct. 1876, 141 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1998) [*104] (internal citations omitted); see also Pearson v. Component Tech. Corp., 247 F.3d 471, 484 (3d Cir. 2001) (citing Bestfoods, 524 U.S. at 69; other citation omitted) (when the shareholder is another corporation, mere ownership of a subsidiary does not justify the imposition of liability on the parent).[33] This principle has been applied in the context of antitrust cases. In re Pa. Title Ins. Antitrust Litig., 648 F.Supp.2d 663, 687 (E.D.Pa. 2009) (citations omitted) (holding plaintiffs cannot rely merely on parent companies' ownership interest in their respective subsidiaries to maintain a §1 claim against parent defendants). HN38[] Therefore, in order to state a §1 claim against parent corporations, a plaintiff "must set forth facts establishing the parent corporations' direct and independent participation in the alleged conspiracy." Id. at 688 (citing McCray v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 636 F.Supp.2d 322, 334 (D.Del. 2009); In re Pressure Sensitive Labelstock Antitrust Litig., 566 F.Supp. 2d 363, 375-77 (M.D.Pa. 2008); Nobody in Particular Presents, Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, Inc., ("NIPP"), 311 F.Supp. 2d 1048, 1068-69 (D. Colo. 2004)). However, assertions that the parent corporations [*105] participated in the antitrust conspiracy by giving their assent and approval to the subsidiary's conduct, and through their ownership and control of their subsidiary, amount to nothing more than conduct "typical of any parent and subsidiary," and thus, are insufficient to state a §1 claim against the parent corporations. Id. at 688-89 (citing Mitchael v. Intracorp, Inc., 179 F.3d 847, 857 & n. 12 (10th Cir. 1999)). HN39[] A limited liability company formed under Delaware law, such as VantageScore, "is treated for liability purposes like a corporation." Wellman v. Dow Chem. Co., Civ. No. 05-280, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19527, 2007 WL 842084, at *2 (D.Del. Mar. 20, 2007) (citing 6 Del. C. §18-303).

In the case at bar, Plaintiff has not alleged any facts to suggest anything but "circumstances . . . typical of any parent and subsidiary." For example, in paragraph 11 of the Complaint, Plaintiff asserts that "VantageScore is co-owned by Trans Union, Equifax, and Experian."[34] In paragraph 12, Plaintiff alleges: "Defendants, directly or through a division, subsidiary or agent, have had actual knowledge or, have knowingly participated in, the conspiracy to fix loan prices, including the restraint of availability of consumer loans." (Compl., ¶12.) Disregarding for the moment the fact that paragraph 12 contains conclusory [*107] statements which are not considered on a motion to dismiss, Plaintiff alleges nothing more than the Bureau Defendants possessed knowledge of, and/or acquiesced in, the alleged conspiratorial conduct of their subsidiary, VantageScore. As the district court concluded in In re Pennsylvania Title Insurance:

> Because plaintiffs allege that parents merely acquiesced in their subsidiaries' conduct, the complaint lacks the "specific [allegations] of coordinated activity," [Mitchael, 179 F.3d] at 857, that shows that parents directed, controlled, or encouraged their subsidiaries' participation in the [price fixing] scheme, NIPP, 311 F.Supp.2d at 1070. Although plaintiffs need not present detailed allegations, plaintiffs here rely on general statements that [33] However, where it has been demonstrated that the corporate form has been abused, courts will allow the corporate veil to be pierced and liability imposed on the corporation's shareholders. Pearson, 247 F.3d at 484 (citing Publicker Indus., Inc. v. Roman Ceramics Corp., 603 F2d. 1065, 1069 (3d Cir. 1979)). In making this determination, the courts apply the "alter ego" test, which requires an inquiry into whether the subsidiary is little more than a legal fiction, and consideration of the following factors: "gross undercapitalization, [*106] failure to observe corporate formalities, nonpayment of dividends, insolvency of debtor corporation, siphoning of funds from the debtor corporation by the dominant stockholder, nonfunctioning of officers and directors, absence of corporate records, and whether the corporation is merely a facade for the operations of the dominant stockholder." Id. at 484-85 (citing Am. Bell Inc. v. Fed'n of Tel. Workers of Pa., 736 F.2d 879, 886 (3d Cir. 1984)). Plaintiff's Complaint does not contain any factual allegations even remotely suggesting any of the alter ego factors are present here.

---

[34] VantageScore is a Delaware limited liability company, and is owned by the three Bureau Defendants, two of which are corporations (Experian and Equifax), and the other (Trans Union) is a Delaware limited liability company. Compl., ¶¶ 7-9, 11.

> barely rise above mere labels and conclusions and thus hardly raise a right to relief above a speculative level. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

648 F.Supp. 2d at 689; see also In re Pressure Sensitive, 566 F.Supp. 2d at 376 (holding knowledge of the existence of an agreement between the subsidiary and other alleged co-conspirators does not support an inference that the parent company was a co-conspirator). Here too Plaintiff's Complaint lacks specific [*108] allegations of coordinated activity that shows the Bureau Defendants directed, controlled or encouraged VantageScore's participation in the alleged conspiracy.

Plaintiff's attempt to predicate the Bureau Defendants' liability on an alleged agency relationship with VantageScore is equally unavailing. Conclusory allegations of agency based merely on the parent corporation's ownership of a subsidiary without any facts suggesting an agency relationship are insufficient to establish the parent corporation's independent participation in the alleged conspiracy. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd., 513 F. Supp. 1100, 1297 (E.D.Pa. 1981), rev'd in part on other grounds 723 F.2d 238 (3d Cir. 1983), rev'd 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). In Zenith Radio, the plaintiff attempted to establish an antitrust conspiracy between eight principal corporations and their sales subsidiaries based merely on corporate affiliation. Id. at 1297. In rejecting this [*109] argument, the district court noted the principles relevant to deciding whether a subsidiary is the agent of its parent corporation: "'Whether an agency relationship exists between a parent corporation and its subsidiary is normally a question of fact. The central factual issue is control, i.e., whether the parent corporation dominates the activities of the subsidiary.' . . . However, the mere fact that one corporation owns a controlling interest in another does not render the subsidiary the agent of the parent[.]" Id. (quoting Japan Petroleum Co. (Nigeria), Ltd. v. Ashland Oil Co., 456 F.Supp. 831, 840-41 (D.Del. 1978)). The district court further explained: "'A corporation does not become an agent of another corporation merely because a majority of its voting shares is held by the other....' Nor does the fact that a parent and a subsidiary have common officers and directors necessarily indicate an agency relationship." Id. (quoting Japan Petroleum, 456 F.Supp. at 841 (quoting Restatement (Second) of Agency §14 M)). Likewise, HN40[] activities that constitute standard parent-subsidiary interactions, such as the parent corporation appointing the subsidiary's "officers and directors, influenc[ing] [*110] executive compensation, approv[ing] budgets, gather[ing] information about corporate performance, and receiv[ing] distributions of subsidiary profits[,] . . . do not reflect daily, operational control that is the sine qua non of an alter ego relationship." In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 674 F.Supp. 2d 580, 599-600 (M.D.Pa. 2009) (citations and footnote omitted). In the case at bar, other than labeling VantageScore as the "agent" of the Bureau Defendants, Plaintiff has failed to assert any facts suggesting the operational control necessary to raise an inference of an agency relationship between them. Thus, to the extent Plaintiff's antitrust claim against the Bureau Defendants is predicated on an alleged agency relationship with VantageScore, the Complaint fails to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

The Bureau Defendants further argue that Plaintiff fails to allege that they know the credit terms that lenders offer consumers or that they agreed to fix such terms. Other than repeatedly leveling conclusory allegations of "collusion," "agreement," and "conspiracy" against them, the Bureau Defendants submit that Plaintiff has failed [*111] to plead sufficient facts such as a "specific time, place, or person involved in the alleged conspiracies." Rather, the Bureau Defendants submit the closest Plaintiff comes to alleging that they participated in any agreement is to contend that they "further the price fixing scheme among lenders because they assist and promote parallel action among competitors [by] alerting all of the lenders to either boycott the debtor or increase interest rates." However, the Bureau Defendants contend these are merely legal conclusions masquerading as factual allegations, and, in any event, parallel conduct in and of itself is legal. According to the Bureau Defendants, Plaintiff's Complaint describes what a credit bureau does and has always done—collect and distribute credit data—which is expressly authorized by the FCRA, and thus, provides an obvious alternative explanation to participation in a conspiracy to fix loan prices.

In response to the Bureau Defendants' argument that the Complaint does not specifically allege that they themselves set prices, Plaintiff counters that they ignore the fact that the "Defendants together co-own and control VantageScore Solutions, LLC which licenses a credit pricing [*112] model for the lending industry." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Bureau Defs. at 5, ECF No. 60 (citing Compl., ¶¶11, 36). Plaintiff perceives that the Bureau Defendants "are arguing that because they participated in the conspiracy through an agent operating at their sole direction (VantageScore Solutions, LLC), the bureaus themselves should not be liable." Id. Plaintiff contends this perceived argument is misplaced as under antitrust laws, the inquiry is based on the substance of the scheme not the corporate structure used to obfuscate it. Id.

Plaintiff's argument lacks merit. Plaintiff is mistaken in her perception as the Bureau Defendants have not advanced any such argument. Indeed, Plaintiff's argument that the Court should look to the substance of the scheme is actually at odds with the position she is advancing against the Bureau Defendants vis a vis their ownership of VantageScore, which, in effect, asks this Court to elevate form over substance. In any event, as explained above, alleging merely ownership and control of a subsidiary is insufficient to establish a parent company's antitrust liability.

In her sur-reply, Plaintiff argues that the Complaint plainly states that VantageScore [*113] is owned exclusively by the Bureau Defendants, and that they "have direct knowledge [of] the conspiratorial acts." Pl.'s Sur-Reply to Bureau Defs. at 1, ECF No. 72. First of all, the Complaint asserts merely that "VantageScore is co-owned by Trans Union, Equifax and Experian." Compl., ¶11. HN41[] Allegations of ownership or knowledge alone do not confer liability on the individual members/owners of a limited liability corporation. In re Pa. Title Ins., 648 F.Supp. 2d at 688; In re Pressure Sensitive, 566 F.Supp. 2d at 376. Perhaps realizing these infirmities, Plaintiff attempts to argue that the "Bureau Defendants admitted to cooperating closely together in creating the VantageScore Solutions credit pricing model." Pl.'s Sur-Reply at 1-2, ECF No. 72. Plaintiff gleans this so-called admission from an opinion filed in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, Fair Isaac Corp. v. Equifax, Inc., Civil Action No. 06-4112, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71187, on a motion to compel production of VantageScore's credit scoring algorithm, and the software and process used in conjunction with the algorithm to produce a credit score. *Fair Isaac Corp. v. Equifax, Inc., Civ. A. 06-4112, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71187, 2007 WL 2791168, 1 (D. Minn. Sept. 25, 2007). [*114] However, a review of the cited memorandum opinion in Fair Isaac does not reveal any discussion of such an admission.[35] Even if the defendants in Fair Isaac had admitted to cooperating in developing the algorithm, those facts are not alleged in Plaintiff's Complaint, and even if they were, they would not be sufficient to suggest the Bureau Defendants directly and independently participated in the alleged conspiracy. Moreover, nowhere in the Fair Isaac opinion does the court or any party refer to or describe VantageScore's credit scoring algorithm as a credit pricing model. Thus, Plaintiff's argument that the Bureau Defendants were 'substantively involved in developing the pricing system, having direct and intimate knowledge of the [sic] how it is designed and implemented" is contrary to both fact and law.[36]

The remainder of Plaintiff's response in opposition to the Bureau Defendants' motion to dismiss consists of a reiteration of the arguments she made in response to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss, namely, that Plaintiff has pled direct evidence of an agreement,[37] as well as plus factors, in addition to parallel conduct, and that the Bureau Defendants' agent, VantageScore, admits and even recommends that lenders set their terms according to VantageScore's scoring model and not independent analysis of consumer's credit history. See Pl.'s Mem. in [35] Moreover, Fair Isaac is not even relevant to the instant dispute as Fair Isaac did not involve an antitrust claim, but rather, claims of unfair competition, false advertising under Lanham Act, misappropriation of trade secrets, breach of contract, and interference with contract.

---

[36] Plaintiff also quotes from a document she describes as the Bureau Defendants' Response in Opposition [*115] to Plaintiff's Motion to Compel, but no such document is found in the record at Western District of Pennsylvania, Docket No. 2:10-cv-848. Nor does Plaintiff provide a citation for the quoted material. Without a proper cite identify the source of the quote, the Court declines to consider the quoted material.

[37] Plaintiff submits that she has presented actual evidence from which a conspiracy can be inferred with regard to Experian. Plaintiff points to the JP Morgan letters (attached as Exhibit A to the Complaint) which identify Equifax, not Experian, as the credit reporting agency who provided information upon which JP Morgan relied in making its decision to reduce the credit limit on Plaintiff's account. However, as discussed supra with regard to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss, the credit reporting agency's conduct was authorized by the FCRA, and therefore, entirely lawful. Therefore, the [*117] Court finds a conspiracy cannot be inferred from this "actual evidence" against any of the Bureau Defendants.

Opp'n to Bureau Defs. at 6-10, ECF No. 60. These arguments are unavailing for the same reasons stated in the Court's discussion of the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss, namely, the Complaint lacks any factual allegations suggesting an agreement to unlawfully fix the price of consumer loans. See discussion supra at 16-33. In addition, [*116] Plaintiff argues that because the Bureau Defendants own VantageScore and VantageScore admits on its website that it "provide[s] lenders with a consistent interpretation of consumer credit files," the Bureau Defendants are implicated in the alleged price fixing conspiracy. Plaintiff's argument is completely unavailing as the Court has already found neither the Bureau Defendants' ownership of VantageScore, nor VantageScore's admission on its website, suggests unlawful conduct on the part of the Bureau Defendants. See discussion supra at 48-50; see also In re Pa. Title Ins., 648 F.Supp. 2d at 687.

Finally, Plaintiff submits that the relationship between the Bureau Defendants and VantageScore is yet another plus factor that further satisfies the Twombly pleading requirement. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Bureau Defs. at 9-10, ECF No. 60. This argument also fails because the Bureau Defendants' ownership of VantageScore, in and of itself, does not constitute a plus factor, as it does not provide evidence that the Bureau Defendants either had a motive to enter into the alleged conspiracy or acted contrary to their interests, nor does it provide evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d at 322. Accordingly, the Bureau Defendants' ownership in VantageScore does not constitute a "plus factor."

2. Lawfulness of Bureau Defendants' Conduct

In further support of their motion to dismiss, the Bureau Defendants submit that Plaintiff has failed to adequately allege that their concerted actions were illegal. The Bureau Defendants point to the FCRA, which expressly authorizes the conduct allegedly engaged in by the Bureau Defendants, i.e., sharing [*118] of consumer credit data between credit bureaus and lenders. Specifically, the Bureau Defendants point to 15 U.S.C. §1681b(a)(3)(A) (also cited by the Lender Defendants), and §1681s-2 ("Responsibilities of furnishers of information to consumer reporting agencies"). Indeed, the Credit Bureaus argue, the FCRA actually encourages credit bureaus to share credit data, citing Congress' findings and statement of purpose in enacting the FCRA. See e.g., 15 U.S.C. §1681(a)(1) & (3), §1681(b). Finally, the Bureau Defendants submit that the relevant case law, cited by the Lender Defendants in support of their motion to dismiss, puts to rest any lingering doubts about the legality of Defendants' conduct.

In response, Plaintiff acknowledges that sharing of credit history information is lawful under the FCRA, but submits that linking credit histories to pricing models termed "credit scores" is neither lawful nor authorized by the FCRA. Plaintiff further submits that the Bureau Defendants "ignore the fact they control the pricing model through VantageScore." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Bureau Defs. at 11, ECF No. 60. In support, Plaintiff incorporates her response to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss [*119] on this point.

The Court agrees with the Bureau Defendants that their alleged conduct is lawful and authorized by the FCRA. The Court rejects Plaintiff's argument that the Bureau Defendants also engaged in unlawful conduct by linking the credit histories to pricing models, which Defendants refer to as credit scores, for the same reason the Court rejected this argument in opposition to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss—Plaintiff's argument equates the term credit scores with pricing models, which this Court has determined to be completely unfounded. See discussion supra at 39-44. Accordingly, because Plaintiff has failed to allege facts to suggest the Bureau Defendants' alleged conduct is unlawful, the Complaint fails to state a §1 claim against the Bureau Defendants.

3. Implied Preclusion of Plaintiff's Antitrust Claim

For their third and final argument in support of dismissing the Complaint, the Bureau Defendants argue that the FCRA precludes Plaintiff's attempt to use the Sherman Act to dismantle the credit reporting system. The Bureau Defendants note that in her prayer for relief, Plaintiff requests the Court to enjoin Defendants "from sharing their customer data among themselves [*120] and their agencies." (Compl., Prayer for Relief, ¶ vii.) However, according to the Bureau Defendants, the relief Plaintiff seeks is inconsistent with the express authority under FCRA which governs such conduct. For example, the Bureau Defendants submit the FCRA provides when and with whom credit bureaus may share credit data, 15 U.S.C. §1681b, and sets forth penalties for failing to comply with its provisions, 15 U.S.C. §1681s(b). The FCRA vests the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) with the authority to enforce the FCRA with respect to the collection and distribution of credit data by credit bureaus. 15 U.S.C. §1681s(a). In support of their argument, the Credit Bureaus cite United States v. National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., 422 U.S. 694, 719, 95 S. Ct. 2427, 45 L. Ed. 2d 486 (1975), and Credit Suisse Securities (USA) LLC v. Billing, 551 U.S. 264, 275-76, 127 S. Ct. 2383, 168 L. Ed. 2d 145 (2007), for the proposition that conduct authorized by federal law is immune from antitrust liability when the statutory framework governing the conduct in question and the antitrust complaint are "clearly incompatible."

The Supreme Court in Credit Suisse was asked to decide whether the securities law governing the conduct at issue in that case impliedly [*121] precluded the application of the antitrust laws. To decide this issue, the Supreme Court found it necessary to determine whether sufficient incompatibility existed between the securities law and the antitrust complaint, to warrant an implication of preclusion, and identified several critical factors that should be considered, in light of the context and likely consequences: "(1) the existence of regulatory authority under the securities law to supervise the activities in question; (2) evidence that the responsible regulatory entities exercise that authority; and (3) a resulting risk that the securities and antitrust laws, if both applicable, would produce conflicting guidance, requirements, duties, privileges, or standards of conduct." 551 U.S. at 275-76. In addition, the Supreme Court noted a fourth factor—whether "the possible conflict affected practices that lie squarely within an area of financial market activity that the securities law seeks to regulate." Id. at 276. The Bureau Defendants urge this Court to apply the factors enunciated in Credit Suisse to the case at bar, and submit that when the Court does so, all four factors weigh in favor of preclusion. Accordingly, the Bureau [*122] Defendants ask this Court to hold that they may not be sued under the antitrust laws for their conduct at issue here and dismiss the Complaint against them.

In response, Plaintiff disputes that the FCRA impliedly precludes application of the antitrust laws. In support, she initially argues that no conflict exists between the FCRA and the antitrust laws, as they are definitely not repugnant to each other. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Lender Defs. at 22, ECF No. 63.[38] Plaintiff submits the FCRA and Sherman Act are not in conflict because they each promote different policy goals—the FCRA promotes fair use of credit information, while the Sherman Act promotes competition. Thus, Plaintiff maintains, there is simply no need to choose one meritorious policy over another where both policies promote unrelated and mutually beneficial goals. Second, Plaintiff argues that the remedies found in the FCRA and Sherman Act are different, as recovery of actual damages under the FCRA requires proof of fraud while the remedies under the Sherman Act for monopolistic pricing do not. Thus, Plaintiff submits it is entirely possible and probable a plaintiff could incur both forms of damages simultaneously but not [*123] be fully compensated if only a single statutory remedy is applied. Lastly, Plaintiff argues that the FCRA does not authorize or recommend, either expressly or impliedly, the sharing of pricing information. Congress was aware of the antitrust laws when it drafted the FCRA, and could have included a provision granting antitrust immunity, like it did for the exchange of loss information by insurance companies in the McCarren-Ferguson Act,[39] yet Congress failed to include such a provision in the FCRA. Therefore, Plaintiff maintains, "it would be a tortuous analysis . . . to presume that in passing the FCRA, Congress implicitly intended a sweeping antitrust exemption allowing price fixing, but somehow failed to mention it." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Lender Defs. at 23, ECF No. 63. Moreover, Plaintiff submits there is no real conflict here because sharing of pricing information is governed by antitrust law, while sharing of credit history information is governed by the FCRA. Plaintiff contends, therefore, it is unnecessary to undertake an implied preclusion analysis.

---

[38] Plaintiff incorporates her argument on this issue advanced in her brief in opposition to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss. [*124] The Court notes that the Lender Defendants merely cited Credit Suisse for the proposition that allowing Plaintiff to predicate her antitrust conspiracy claim on factual allegations that Defendants did precisely what Congress has authorized them to do would be plainly repugnant to the language and purpose of the FCRA, and thus, did not advance the argument that the FCRA impliedly precluded application of antitrust laws to this case. See discussion supra at 45 (citing Lender' Mem. at 14-15, ECF No. 34). Nonetheless, Plaintiff presented an argument opposing application of an implied antitrust exemption in her memorandum in opposition to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss at 21-23 (ECF No. 63), which she incorporates by reference in her memorandum in opposition to the Bureau Defendants' motion to dismiss.

[39] 15 U.S.C. §§1011-1015.

In reply, the Bureau Defendants counter that Plaintiff's arguments must fail because the proper inquiry is not whether the statutes promote different and conflicting policy goals generally, but rather, whether there is a clear repugnancy between applying antitrust laws to the conduct alleged and the FCRA. Bureau Defs.' Reply Mem. at 5, ECF No. 68. As stated [*125] in their opening memorandum, the Bureau Defendants argue the FCRA precludes antitrust liability for conduct by the Bureaus that is sanctioned by the Act.

The Court agrees with Plaintiff that it is unnecessary to undertake an implied preclusion analysis in this case, but for a different reason. Because this Court has already found that the Bureau Defendants' alleged conduct here is not unlawful under the antitrust laws, it does not need to, nor should it, reach this issue. Credit Suisse, 551 U.S. at 287 (Stevens, J., concurring) (opining that he "would hold, as [the Supreme Court] did in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351-52, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), that the defendants' alleged conduct does not violate the antitrust laws, rather than holding that Congress has implicitly granted them immunity from those laws.").

4. Leave to Amend the Complaint

In the alternative, Plaintiff has summarily requested leave to amend her Complaint. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to Bureau Defs. at 13, ECF No. 60. The Court recommends that Plaintiff's request for leave to amend her complaint be denied for the same reasons set forth with regard to the motion to dismiss filed by the Lender Defendants. See discussion supra at 51-53. In addition, [*126] leave to amend the Complaint against the Bureau Defendants would be futile because her conspiracy theory as to them is simply implausible, and she has failed to proffer to this Court, either in her written briefs or at oral argument, any additional facts to show that the Bureau Defendants engaged in unlawful conduct under §1 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the Court recommends that Plaintiff's Complaint against the Bureau Defendants be dismissed with prejudice.

E. FICO's Motion to Dismiss

Defendant Fair Isaac Corporation ("FICO") has also moved to dismiss the Complaint for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) (ECF No. 36). In support of its motion to dismiss, FICO joins in, and incorporates by reference, the motion to dismiss and the memorandum of law in support thereof filed by the Lender Defendants, as well as Part I.A. of the memorandum of law in support of the Bureau Defendants' motion to dismiss. In addition, FICO submits that the Complaint is devoid of any factual allegations that would support the conclusion that FICO conspired in violation of §1 of the Sherman Act. Moreover, FICO maintains the Complaint is so vague and conclusory that it fails to state a claim against [*127] any Defendant, much less FICO. In this regard, FICO points out that significantly, the Complaint fails to allege that FICO either originates or services consumer loans, is a bank or lender, or that it sets interest rates or credit terms for loans. Mem. of Law in Supp. of FICO's Mot. to Dismiss ("FICO's Mem.") at 3, ECF No. 38. In addition, FICO notes that the Complaint does not contain any allegations that (1) FICO entered into any sort of agreement with any other Defendant other than to "share private data, or (2) that there were communications between FICO and any Defendant, except for allegedly sharing data and "providing a [credit] 'score' to lenders." Id. The most that can be gleaned from these allegations, according to FICO, is that FICO assists lenders by creating a credit score. Id. FICO further submits that the Complaint fails to set forth any facts suggesting that it engaged in anything other than lawful, independent conduct. Thus, FICO maintains, that Plaintiff cannot possibly state a plausible claim for relief under §1 of the Sherman Act against it, and asks that the Complaint against it be dismissed with prejudice.

In response, Plaintiff incorporates her previous arguments [*128] as set forth in opposition to the motions to dismiss of the Lender Defendants and Bureau Defendants. She also advances several arguments specific to FICO, none of which has any merit. Initially, perceiving FICO to be arguing that because it does not sell or service loans it is immune from antitrust allegations, Plaintiff argues that the courts have never recognized a defense to antitrust based on whether a conspirator sold the object of the price fixing scheme. Contrary to Plaintiff's perception, the Court does not perceive FICO to be advancing any such argument. Nor does the Court perceive that FICO is attempting to draw a distinction between companies or organizations that sell products or own facilities, and those that provide only services. FICO merely states in its supporting memorandum that Plaintiff "does not (and cannot) allege that FICO makes loans." (FICO Mem. at 2, ECF No. 38.) Also, Plaintiff relies on two Supreme Court cases[40] in support of her argument that any form of organization, even non-profits that sell nothing whatsoever, can violate the Sherman Act so long as there is cooperation in the price fixing scheme. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to FICO at 5, ECF No. 62. However, [*129] Plaintiff's reliance on the cited Supreme Court cases is misplaced, as neither case addresses the proposition for which it is cited—whether an organization that neither sells nor owns products is liable for violation of §1. In any event, here the Complaint fails to allege any facts to suggest any cooperation or agreement between FICO and the other Defendants to fix interest rates or the terms of loans. Indeed, a review of the Complaint reveals few allegations specifically directed at FICO, which consist of the following:

> FICO and VantageScore are credit scoring companies that provide a "score" to lenders which is used to price consumer loans. Together, FICO and VantageScore provide over 85% of the credit scores to lenders in the United States. (Compl., ¶21.)
>
> The credit scoring industry is dominated by two companies, FICO and VantageScore. (Compl., ¶ 65.)
>
> In order to consolidate and distribute the vast amount of consumer data, an oligopoly of three credit bureaus and two credit scoring companies have emerged as the most efficient method for highly centralized, rapid distribution of competitively sensitive data among competitors. (Compl., ¶ 29.)
>
> Furthering the conspiracy, credit scoring [*130] companies use the reported information from credit bureaus to create a derivative score which incorporates all of the consumer's credit data as well as the consumer's profitability. The score is then distributed to all lenders. The lending industry has identified that the most profitable customers are the ones having the lower credit scores. Consequently, by examining credit scores, lenders can rapidly identify the most profitable customers and fix rates accordingly. Thus, credit scoring companies assist lenders in effecting a parallel pricing scheme for credit by creating a derivative metric which is an effective proxy for setting uniform price points among competitors. (Compl., ¶ 36.)
>
> Defendants also continue to use credit reporting agencies and credit scoring agencies to restrain and control the price of consumer loans. (Compl., ¶71.)

When the Court weeds out the conclusory allegations from the above paragraphs, the remaining allegations of fact suggest that FICO's involvement in the alleged conspiracy consists of (1) providing a "score" to lenders (¶21); (2) distributing competitively sensitive data among competitors (¶29); (3) using information from credit bureaus to create a derivative score (¶36); and assisting lenders by creating a derivative metric (¶36). The Court finds that this alleged involvement by FICO does not support an inference that FICO conspired, agreed or cooperated with any other Defendant to engage in any unlawful acts, or even communicated with the other Defendants to form the basis of an agreement.

The next argument advanced by Plaintiff goes to whether her allegation in the Complaint to the effect that a credit score is really a pricing model, is factual, not conclusory. Plaintiff maintains that it is factual and therefore must be accepted as true. Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to FICO at 5, ECF No. 62. The Court previously addressed this point, finding Plaintiff's statement to be a legal conclusion, [*132] and, in any event, not borne out by Plaintiff's own supporting documents. See discussion supra at 43-44. Also unavailing is Plaintiff's attempt to buttress this argument with FICO's "own admissions . . . in its trademark prosecution file wrapper," that "lenders can use 'it [the FICO® score] for credit line management, cross-selling, balance building, [and] pricing (emphasis added) .....'" Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to FICO at 5, ECF No. 62 (quoting Trademark Registration Ser. No. 76137347 File Wrapper, Specimen deposit, Aug. 28, 2008, attached as Ex. C). First of all, the referenced document is not found anywhere in the record.[41]

---

[40] Nat'l Coll. Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (finding NCAA's plan for televising college football games of its member institutions for 1981-85 seasons constituted horizontal price fixing in violation of §1); United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972) (finding association's scheme of allocating territories [*131] to minimize competition at retail level was horizontal restraint constituting per se violation of §1).

Second, the quoted excerpt does not support Plaintiff's conclusion—that FICO's own literature confirms the truth of Plaintiff's allegation that FICO assists lenders in fixing prices. This point was raised in opposition to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss, and the Court rejects it for the same reasons it rejected it vis a vis the Lender Defendants. Moreover, in light of the Court's conclusion that the statements on FICO's website do not suggest that FICO assists lenders in fixing prices, Plaintiff's argument that the statements on FICO's website constitute [*133] direct evidence of a meeting of the minds, or operate as a "plus" factor, is likewise unavailing.

Finally, the Court finds that the factual allegations directed toward FICO do not suggest that its conduct was unlawful. There are no facts alleged to suggest FICO engaged in any acts other than providing credit scores to credit bureaus and lenders. Nor are there any facts alleged to suggest an agreement between Defendants to use the credit scores to fix interest rates or credit terms. Inasmuch as this Court has already found the credit scores are not pricing models, FICO's conduct is not unlawful.[42]

Thus, for these and the reasons set forth above with regard to the Lender Defendants' and Bureau Defendants' motions to dismiss, the Court finds Plaintiff has failed to state a plausible §1 claim against FICO. Therefore, the Court recommends that the Complaint as to FICO be dismissed [*134] with prejudice.[43]

F.VantageScore's Motion to Dismiss

VantageScore has filed a Motion to Dismiss the Complaint Pursuant to Rules 12(b)(2) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (ECF No. 39). Essentially, VantageScore argues that this Court does not possess personal jurisdiction over it. VantageScore further argues that the Complaint should be dismissed for failure to plead a cognizable §1 claim against it. The Court will address each of these arguments in turn.

1. Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction

As a preliminary matter, VantageScore has moved to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint with prejudice on the basis that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over it under Rule 12(b)(2).

a. Standard of Review – Rule 12(b)(2) Motion

HN42[] In ruling on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(2), the court is required, as with Rule 12(b)(6) motions, to accept as true all allegations contained [*135] in the complaint and view all factual disputes in plaintiff's favor. D'Jamoos v. Pilatus Aircraft Ltd., 566 F.3d 94, 102 (3d Cir. 2009) (citing Miller Yacht Sales, Inc. v. Smith, 384 F.3d 93, 97 (3d Cir. 2004)). Unlike a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, however, the scope of the Court's review on a Rule 12(b)(2) motion is not limited to the face of the complaint, but may include affidavits or other competent evidence submitted by the parties. Patterson v. FBI, 893 F.2d 595, 603-04 (3d Cir. 1990) (citing Time Share Vacation Club v. Atlantic Resorts, Ltd., 735 F.2d 61, 66 n. 9 (3d Cir. 1984)).

HN43[] Ultimately, the plaintiff bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, facts sufficient to establish personal jurisdiction over the defendants. Metcalfe v. Renaissance Marine, Inc., 566 F.3d 324, 330, 51 V.I. 1219 (3d Cir. 2009) (citing Pinker v. Roche Holdings Ltd., 292 F.3d 361, 368 (3d Cir. 2002)). If an evidentiary hearing is not held on the 12(b)(2) motion, then the plaintiff need only demonstrate a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction at the preliminary stages of litigation.[44] Metcalfe, 566 F.3d at 330 (citing O'Connor v. Sandy Lane Hotel Co., 496 F.3d 312, 316 (3d Cir. 2007)); D'Jamoos, 566 F.3d at 102 [*136] (citing Miller Yacht Sales, 384 F.3d at 97). Once a defendant submits contradictory evidence through an affidavit, plaintiff may not rest on the allegations in the complaint, but must come forward with affidavits or other competent evidence to show that personal jurisdiction is proper. In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F.Supp. 2d 538, 556 (M.D.Pa. 2009) (citing Patterson, 893 F.2d at 603-04) (footnote & other citation omitted); Dayhoff Inc. v. H.J. Heinz Co., 86 F.3d 1287, 1302 (3d Cir. 1996) (citations omitted); Time Share Vacation Club, 735 F.2d at 66 n. 9 (citation omitted). To satisfy this burden, the plaintiff "may not rely on bare pleadings, but must produce competent evidence to establish 'with reasonable particularity' the nature and extent of the defendant's contacts with the forum state." Burke v. Quartey, 969 F. Supp. 921, 924 (D.N.J. 1997) (citing Patterson, 893 F.2d at 603-04); see also *Sprague Energy Corp. v. Union Drawn Steel II, Ltd., Civ. A. No. 07-962, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20335, 2008 WL 696911, 2 (W.D.Pa. Mar. 12, 2008) ("because a 12(b)(2) motion requires resolution of factual issues outside the pleadings, the plaintiff may not rely on the pleadings alone to carry its burden [*137] of establishing the jurisdictional facts."). Once the plaintiff has sustained this burden, the 12(b)(2) motion will be denied despite any controverting presentation by defendant. Chocolate Confectionary, 602 F.Supp. 2d at 557 (citing Carteret Sav. Bank, F.A. v. Shushan, 954 F.2d 141, 142 n. 1 (3d Cir. 1992)); Burke, 969 F.Supp. at 924; see also Metcalfe, 566 F.3d at 331.

[41] However, Plaintiff appears to be quoting from FICO's website. See Ex. C to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to FICO, ECF No. 62-2.

[42] The remainder of Plaintiff's arguments in opposition to FICO's motion to dismiss dovetail those raised in opposition to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss, and fail for the reasons stated above.

[43] Plaintiff's request for leave to amend her complaint as to Defendant FICO (Pl's Mem. in Opp'n to FICO Mot. to Dismiss at 8, ECF No. 62), should be denied for the same reasons set forth with regard to the Lender Defendants' and Bureau Defendants' motions to dismiss. See discussion supra at 51-53, 70.

b. Sufficiency of Contacts with the Forum

HN44[] In cases where the plaintiff's claim is predicated on a federal statute which authorizes nationwide service of process, such as the Sherman Act, see 15 U.S.C. §22,[45] courts apply a Fifth Amendment due process analysis to personal jurisdiction challenges. In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 358 F.3d 288, 299 (3d Cir. 2004) (holding that "personal jurisdiction under Section 12 of the Clayton Act is as broad as the limits of due process under the Fifth Amendment") (citing Go-Video, Inc. v. Akai Elec. Co., 885 F.2d 1406, 1415 (9th Cir. 1989)); Pinker, 292 F.3d at 368-69 [*138] (citation omitted) ("In federal court, the exercise of specific jurisdiction must satisfy the requirements of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment."); Chocolate Confectionary, 602 F.Supp. 2d at 557 ("When a statute such as the Sherman Act permits nationwide service of process, the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause guides the court's personal jurisdiction inquiry.") (citing Max Daetwyler Corp. v. R. Meyer, 762 F.2d 290, 295 (3d Cir. 1985)) (other citation and footnote omitted); 4 Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure §1068.1 at 594 (3d ed. 2002) ("it is now clear that the Due Process Clause of the Fifth, rather than the Fourteenth, Amendment applies to the assertion of personal jurisdiction in the federal question context.") (citing Omni Capital Int'l v. Rudolf Wolff & Co., 484 U.S. 97, 108 S. Ct. 404, 98 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1987)).

In Go-Video, the court of appeals explained HN46[] the requirements of the due process component of the Fifth Amendment: "a court must consider whether the maintenance of the suit (i.e. the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendants to the suit) offends traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." 885 F.2d at 1415 (citing Omni Capital Int'l, 484 U.S. at 102-03; Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945)). In assessing whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction comports with "traditional notions of fair

[44] "However, the plaintiff's allegations must be grounded in 'specific facts.'" Decon Labs., Inc. v. Decon Labs. Ltd., 703 F.Supp. 2d 481, 485 (E.D.Pa. 2009) (citing Marten v. Godwin, 499 F.3d 290, 298 (3d Cir. 2007)).

[45] Section 12 of the Clayton Act, codified at 15 U.S.C. §22, provides:

> HN45[] Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; *and all process in such cases may be served in the district [139] of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found.

(Emphasis added.) The nationwide service of process provision in Section 12 of the Clayton Act applies to cases brought pursuant to Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. §12 and Historical & Stat. Notes thereto (defining antitrust laws to include sections 1 through 7 of Title 15, known as the Sherman Act).

play and substantial justice," the inquiry in the federal court context takes "less account of federalism concerns and focus[es] more on the national interest in furthering the policies of the law(s) under which the plaintiff is suing." Pinker, 292 F.3d at 370 (internal citations omitted). [*140] Thus, "specific [personal] jurisdiction may be exercised only when the defendant has constitutionally sufficient 'minimum contacts' with the forum, Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 474, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 (1985) (quoting Int'l Shoe, 326 U.S. at 316), and where subjecting the defendant to the court's jurisdiction comports with 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'" Pinker, 292 F.3d at 369 (quoting Int'l Shoe, 326 U.S. at 316).

Moreover, when the parties challenging personal jurisdiction are alien corporations, the court of appeals for this circuit has held that the relevant forum for analyzing the extent of an alien corporation's contacts is the United States as a whole. Pinker, 292 F.3d at 369; Auto. Refinishing, 358 F.3d at 298. Thus, "a federal court's personal jurisdiction may be assessed on the basis of the [alien] defendant's national contacts when the plaintiff's claim rests on a federal statute authorizing nationwide service of process." Pinker, 292 F.3d at 369 (citations omitted). However, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has not had an opportunity to address the question of whether a national contacts test should be applied to domestic [*141] corporations in an antitrust case, and the other courts of appeals and district courts faced with this issue are in disagreement.[46] Because neither party has advanced any argument for applying a national contacts test here, this Court will refrain from doing so, and thus, will analyze the sufficiency of VantageScore's contacts with Pennsylvania under that state's long-arm statute, and the constitutional due process requirements of the Fifth Amendment.

HN47[🡅] Under Pennsylvania's long-arm statute, codified at 42 Pa.Cons. Stat. Ann. § 5322 (West 2004), Pennsylvania courts are authorized to exercise personal jurisdiction over a person who, directly or through an agent, as to [*143] a cause of action arising from such person, engages in certain forum related activities. 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §5322(a). Personal jurisdiction predicated on §5322(a) falls within the category of personal jurisdiction known as specific jurisdiction, which "arises when a defendant has both purposefully directed its activities at residents of the forum state and the action arises from, or is directly related to, the defendant's actions within the forum state." Dentsply Int'l, 516 F.Supp. 2d at 338 (citing Burger King, 471 U.S. at 472); Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. Step Two, S.A., 318 F.3d 446, 451 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Pinker, 292 F.3d at 368).

HN48[🡅] In addition, the Pennsylvania long-arm statute authorizes the exercise of such personal jurisdiction "to the fullest extent allowed under the Constitution of the United States and may be based on the most minimum contact with [Pennsylvania] allowed under the Constitution of the United States." 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §5322(b). Thus, to satisfy due process, the defendant must have certain "minimum contacts" with the forum state "such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'" Int'l Shoe, 326 U.S. at 316 [*144] (quoting Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463, 61 S. Ct. 339, 85 L. Ed. 278 (1940)) (other citations omitted). The minimum contacts requirement serves the purpose of "protect[ing] the defendant against the burdens of litigating in a distant and inconvenient forum" by requiring that the "defendant's conduct and connection with the forum State [be] such that [a defendant] should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there." World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 291-92, 297, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (1980) (citations omitted). This framework enables "potential defendants to structure their primary conduct with some minimum assurance as to where that conduct will and will not render them liable to suit." Id. at 297. Moreover, a plaintiff cannot unilaterally create the necessary contacts between the defendant and the forum; rather, "minimum contacts" can arise only by "'some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws.'" Burger King, 471 U.S. at 475 (quoting Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 (1958)).

---

[46] Compare Action Embroidery Corp. v. Atl. Embroidery, Inc., 368 F.3d 1174, 1180 (9th Cir. 2004) (applying national contacts test to domestic corporation's contacts in antitrust case & finding defendant's status as a Virginia professional corporation and operating in U.S. constituted sufficient minimum contacts with U.S. to subject it to personal jurisdiction in California); Daniel v. Am. Bd. of Emergency Med., 988 F. Supp. 127, 143-44 (W.D.N.Y. 1997) (worldwide service of process provision of §12 could be used with domestic corporation via 28 U.S.C. §1391(b) & (c)); Icon Indus. Controls Corp. v. Cimetrix, Inc., 921 F.Supp. 375, 376 (W.D.La. 1996) (finding personal jurisdiction existed over domestic corporation based on worldwide service [*142] of process provision in §12 of Clayton Act); with GTE New Media Servs., Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1351, 339 U.S. App. D.C. 332 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (holding worldwide service of process clause in §12 of Clayton Act may only be invoked to establish personal jurisdiction over corporate defendant when venue requirements in §12's first clause have been met) (citing Goldlawr, Inc. v. Heiman, 288 F.2d 579, 581 (2d Cir. 1961), rev'd on other grounds 369 U.S. 463, 82 S. Ct. 913, 8 L. Ed. 2d 39 (1962)); Howard Hess Dental Labs., Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l Inc., 516 F.Supp. 2d 324, 337-38 (D.Del. 2007) (declining to apply national contacts test to domestic corporations in antitrust case), aff'd on other grounds, 602 F.3d 237 (3d Cir. 2010); Cumberland Truck Equip. Co. v. Detroit Diesel Corp., 401 F.Supp. 2d 415, 424 (E.D.Pa. 2005) (holding that where defendants are domestic corporations asserting personal jurisdiction solely under the nationwide service of process clause in §12, venue must also be established pursuant to §12).

HN49[] The other category of personal jurisdiction under which a plaintiff may establish a court's [*145] jurisdiction over a defendant is general jurisdiction. A court's general jurisdiction may be invoked where the non-resident defendant's contacts with the forum are "continuous and substantial" but are not related to the plaintiff's cause of action. Pennzoil Prods. Co. v. Colelli & Assocs., Inc., 149 F.3d 197, 200 (3d Cir. 1998) (citation omitted). To establish personal jurisdiction over a corporation under Pennsylvania's general jurisdiction statute, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the corporate defendant either: (1) is incorporated under or qualifies as a foreign corporation under Pennsylvania law; (2) consents to jurisdiction; or (3) carries on "a continuous and systematic part of its general business" within Pennsylvania. 42 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. §5301(a)(2). As neither the first nor second bases are present in this case, general jurisdiction can only be obtained under the third basis.

The court of appeals for this circuit has held that HN50[] a plaintiff must prove significantly more than mere minimum contacts to invoke a court's general jurisdiction. Provident Nat'l Bank v. California Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 819 F.2d 434, 437 (3d Cir. 1987) (citations omitted). Thus, to satisfy due process, [*146] the contacts of a nonresident defendant with the form must be continuous and substantial. Id. (citations omitted). For example, continuous and substantial contacts were found to exist where the evidence of record showed that defendants transacted business in the forum "[b]y maintaining an office and an agent in [the forum] on an ongoing basis, entering into contractual relationships in [the forum], and designating and maintaining billing and technical contacts within [the forum]," thereby subjecting the non-resident defendants to the general jurisdiction of the forum district. *Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. iCraveTV, Nos. Civ.A. 00-121 and 00-120, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11670, 2000 WL 255989, * 4 (W.D.Pa. Feb.8, 2000)* (citations omitted). With these precepts in mind, the Court will examine the sufficiency of VantageScore's contacts with Pennsylvania.

In the case at bar, VantageScore has submitted the Declaration of Michael J. Dunn, Vice President Strategic Planning & Communications of VantageScore ("Dunn Decl.") (Ex. A to VantageScore's Motion to Dismiss at ¶1, ECF No. 39-1), which shows that VantageScore was formed as a Delaware limited liability company in February 2006, with its principal and only place [*147] of business in Stamford, Connecticut. (Dunn Decl., ¶2.) According to Dunn, "VantageScore was formed for the purposes of owning the intellectual property rights to a credit scoring algorithm; licensing its algorithm solely to Equifax ..., Experian ..., and Trans Union ...; educating government regulators and lenders about the algorithm; and maintaining the algorithm by performing periodic validations." (Dunn Decl., ¶3.)

With respect to VantageScore's contacts with the forum state, Dunn attests that VantageScore does not have any customers or clients in Pennsylvania; does not furnish credit of any type to any person or entity in Pennsylvania; does not maintain credit data, receive credit data or process credit data for purposes of providing any individual consumer or entity with a credit report or credit score in Pennsylvania; does not produce or sell credit scores or credit reports to any person or entity in Pennsylvania; does not provide credit information to any credit reporting agency in Pennsylvania; nor does it produce credit scores to be used by any person or entity in Pennsylvania.[47] (Dunn Decl., ¶4.) Dunn further attests that VantageScore has never transacted business in Pennsylvania; [*148] has not entered into contracts with companies to supply products or services in Pennsylvania; is not licensed or registered to do business in Pennsylvania; does not have a registered agent for service in Pennsylvania; does not direct its business operations to any entities or individuals in Pennsylvania; does not own any real or personal property in Pennsylvania; and does not maintain bank accounts, telephone numbers or addresses in [47] Dunn also attests that VantageScore does not otherwise engage in any of these activities. Dunn Decl., ¶4.

Pennsylvania. (Dunn Decl., ¶5.) According to Dunn, VantageScore's only contact with Pennsylvania occurs once a year during a week-long educational seminar offered by the American Banking Association for banking executives in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. VantageScore has sponsored a social event at this seminar for the attendees for the last four years. (Dunn Decl., ¶6.) Based on this evidence, VantageScore submits that its contacts with Pennsylvania are insufficient for this Court to exercise either specific or general in personam jurisdiction over it.

The Court finds that VantageScore has presented competent evidence to establish that this Court lacks [*149] personal jurisdiction over it. Therefore, Plaintiff has the burden of presenting competent evidence of her own to establish a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction. For the reasons that follow, the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to meet her burden.

Plaintiff argues that all of the "evidence" she was able to obtain show that VantageScore is engaged in business with Pennsylvania residents. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n at 4, ECF No. 64.) This "evidence" consists of her Complaint and excerpts from various public records and websites, but does not include any affidavit(s). Plaintiff's primary focus appears to be on VantageScore's alleged continuous and systematic contacts with Pennsylvania, to support the exercise of this Court's general personal jurisdiction over VantageScore. The Court will examine below each of the documents Plaintiff proffers as "evidence" of such contact.

Plaintiff first refers the Court to allegations in paragraphs 11 and 36 of her Complaint. As noted above, however, Plaintiff may not rely on her Complaint once VantageScore has come forward with an affidavit supporting its argument that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over it. Chocolate Confectionary, 602 F.Supp. 2d at 556 [*150] (citing Patterson, 893 F.2d at 603-04); Dayhoff, 86 F.3d at 1302; Time Share Vacation Club, 735 F.2d at 66 n. 9. Moreover, looking at the substance of Plaintiff's allegations vis a vis VantageScore's contacts with the forum, paragraph 11 of the Complaint states that VantageScore is a Delaware LLC with its principal place of business in Stamford, Connecticut, and alleges in conclusory fashion that VantageScore does business within the Western District of Pennsylvania and elsewhere in the United States. Similarly, paragraph 36 of the Complaint contains only conclusory statements regarding credit scoring companies in general without any mention of specific acts directed toward the forum by VantageScore. Thus, even if Plaintiff could rely on the allegations in the Complaint, they establish only that VantageScore is a non-resident of Pennsylvania, and thus, otherwise lack the specificity required to establish a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over VantageScore in Pennsylvania. Decon Labs., 703 F.Supp. 2d at 485.

In further support of her general jurisdiction argument, Plaintiff offers VantageScore's submission to the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("USPTO") for registration [*151] of its trademark, VantageScore® (Ex. D attached to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore's Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 64-4), as evidence that VantageScore engages in interstate commerce. That, combined with an excerpt from Experian's website inviting the customer to purchase his or her credit score, indicating that the product is a VantageScore® (Ex. E attached to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore's Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 64-5), is, according to Plaintiff, irreconcilable with VantageScore's argument that it sells nothing, has no clients or customers, and derives no significant revenue from Pennsylvanians, who order its product, including Plaintiff. Plaintiff's argument is unavailing for several reasons.

HN51[] First, mere ownership of a registered U.S. trademark does not subject a domestic company to personal jurisdiction in every state throughout the United States. *Love v. The Mail on Sunday, No. CV05-7798 ABCPJWX, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95468, 2006 WL 4046170, at 7 (C.D. Cal. July 14, 2006); Gen. Motors Corp. v. Ignacio Lopez De Arriortua, 948 F.Supp. 656, 666 n. 9 (E.D. Mich. 1996). To so hold would run afoul of "the mandate of the Due Process Clause or the limits on judicial authority that the Clause ensures." J. McIntyre Mach. Co. v. Nicastro, __ U.S. __, 131 S.Ct. 2780, 2789-2791, 180 L. Ed. 2d 765 (2011) [*152] (plurality op.) (holding "personal jurisdiction requires a forum-by-forum, or sovereign-by-sovereign, analysis. . . . Due process protects [an individual's] right to be subject only to lawful authority[,]" and the "authority to subject a defendant to judgment depends on purposeful availment," i.e., an action of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum state.) Thus, an approach which does not conduct a forum-by-forum analysis, but relies merely on ownership of a registered U.S. trademark as evidence of interstate commerce, violates the Due Process Clause.

Second, Plaintiff relies upon Exhibit E, which states "Get Your VantageScore For Only $7.95" (Ex. E, ECF No. 64-5), in support of her position that VantageScore derives revenue from Pennsylvanians purchasing the VantageScore® product through Experian, a co-owner of VantageScore Solutions, LLC. However, Plaintiff appears to ignore the fact that Exhibit E is actually a page from Experian's website, not VantageScore's, an important distinction. At most, Exhibit E demonstrates that consumers may purchase their credit scores from Experian, one of three credit reporting companies. Exhibit E does not establish that VantageScore [*153] made sales to or otherwise had contact with Pennsylvanians. In fact, Dunn's Declaration makes clear that VantageScore is not selling credit scores to any consumers or entities, let alone those residing in Pennsylvania. (Dunn Decl. ¶ 4.) Moreover, mere ownership of a subsidiary company, without more, is not sufficient to show that the subsidiary's revenues from the sale of the its product flow directly to the parent company. See discussion supra at 57-59. Plaintiff fails to cite any facts or legal authority that would justify leaping to such a conclusion.

The last infirmity with Plaintiff's argument regarding the trademark registration documents (Exhibits D and G) is that she concludes, without evidentiary support, that Pennsylvanians, including her, order VantageScore's product. She also presumes, incorrectly, that VantageScore actually sells a "product" to consumers. The record is completely devoid of any evidence showing that Pennsylvanians and/or Plaintiff purchased any VantageScore "product." Nowhere in either of the trademark documents proffered by Plaintiff (Exhibits D and G) is there any indication that VantageScore is offering to sell its credit scoring model/algorithm, let [*154] alone credit scores, to lenders or consumers. A close review of Plaintiff's Exhibit D reveals only that VantageScore is a Delaware LLC, with a registered office in Stamford, Connecticut, and that the goods and services provided consist of "[f]inancial services in the nature of credit modeling, namely, the evaluation of credit and other data as credit risk predictors, credit scoring services, and analytical services, namely, evaluation of credit and other data as credit risk predictors, all for purposes of evaluating credit worthiness." (Ex. D at 1, ECF No. 64-4.) Plaintiff's Exhibit G provides similar information, and additionally, reveals that VantageScore used counsel from Atlanta, Georgia, for its trademark registration work, and includes a specimen consisting of web page advertisements from Trans Union and VantageScore containing the mark and a description of the services. (Ex. G at 1-4, 7-12, ECF No. 64-7.) At most, the web page advertisements indicate that the VantageScore® credit scoring model can be accessed through one of the three credit scoring companies—Trans Union, Experian, or Equifax (Ex. G at 11, ECF No. 64-7)—who are licensees of VantageScore's algorithm (Dunn Decl. [*155] ¶3). Indeed, Dunn's Declaration confirms that VantageScore was formed for the purposes of owning the intellectual property rights to a credit scoring algorithm and licensing said algorithm solely to Equifax, Experian and Trans Union. (Dunn Decl. ¶3.) Thus, Mr. Dunn's declaration stands uncontroverted on this point.

In further support of her general jurisdiction argument, Plaintiff refers the Court to Exhibit F (ECF No. 64-6), which she alleges is her VantageScore® ordered from her computer in Pennsylvania. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore's Mot. to Dismiss at 5, ECF No. 64.) However, Exhibit F does not represent anything ordered by Plaintiff, but rather, is VantageScore's October 20, 2010 issue of its newsletter, The Score. In fact, The Score actually directs lenders and consumers interested in obtaining credit scores calculated using VantageScore® to contact any of the credit reporting companies. (Ex. F at 2, ECF No. 64-6.)[48]

Next, Plaintiff appears to be arguing that because trademarks are used to identify the source of goods and services in the marketplace, it is reasonable to conclude that the source of the VantageScore®, routinely purchased by Pennsylvanians through its agents/licensees, is VantageScore Solutions, LLC, based solely on the appendage of the registered trademark symbol "®" to "VantageScore." Plaintiff's argument is flawed in several respects. First, Plaintiff's argument is based on presumptions that are not supported by competent evidence. For example, there is simply no evidence to show that Pennsylvanians, including Ms. Black, purchased a VantageScore® credit score from VantageScore or, for that matter, from any of its licensees, or that the credit reporting companies are agents of VantageScore.[49] Second, even if Plaintiff had presented evidence showing that she and/or other Pennsylvanians

---

[48] The Court notes that Plaintiff filed a Sur-Reply Brief in Opposition to VantageScore's Motion to Dismiss (ECF No. 76) to which she could have attached documentation of the alleged purchase of her VantageScore® credit score from her home computer in Pennsylvania [*156] or an affidavit, yet she failed to attach any such evidence.

purchased VantageScore® credit scores from Experian, Equifax and/or Trans Union, that still would not establish that VantageScore sold credit scores or that it targeted Pennsylvania. The mere existence a license agreement between VantageScore [*157] and the credit reporting companies is not sufficient in and of itself to establish that VantageScore was directing its business activities to residents of the forum state. As Plaintiff herself concedes, regardless of what the license is used for (trademark intellectual property and/or patent intellectual property), "the outcome of the case would not change because it is the purposeful or expected sale of the product itself in the forum that confers jurisdiction, not the licensing arrangement." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 6, ECF No. 64 (citing World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S. at 298). Here both Dunn's declaration and Plaintiff's "evidence" shows that there was no purposeful or expected sale by VantageScore of any of its products in the forum.

Also, contrary to Plaintiff's assertion, VantageScore's description of its goods and services on its trademark registration documents is not impossible to reconcile with Mr. Dunn's declaration that VantageScore does not have any customers or clients, produce or sell credit scores [*158] to any person or entity, or provide credit information to any credit reporting company. (Dunn Decl. ¶4.) Nothing in the description of its goods and services implies that VantageScore produces or sells credit scores to any person or entity. Plaintiff fails to offer any competent evidence to raise an issue of fact in this regard.

Having considered Plaintiff's "evidence" and concluding that none of it controverts any of the jurisdictional facts asserted in Dunn's declaration, this Court concludes that VantageScore has not engaged in continuous and substantial business activities which would allow this Court to properly exercise general jurisdiction over it. VantageScore is a non-resident company, does not transact any business in Pennsylvania, nor does it own property or maintain an agent for service of process in this forum. Thus, the Court finds that given the absence of business activities in the forum, VantageScore does not appear to derive any revenue from Pennsylvania. The Court further finds that VantageScore's presence in the forum one day a year for general educational purposes unrelated to the litigation does not provide the continuous and systematic contacts required to invoke [*159] this Court's general in personam jurisdiction. See Regan v. Loewenstein, 292 F. App'x 200, 205 (3d Cir. 2008) (defendants' alleged presence in forum during occasional concerts was clearly not a "continuous and systematic" contact). As Plaintiff has failed to come forward with competent evidence to show any continuous and substantial business activities in Pennsylvania, she cannot establish a prima facie case of general in personam jurisdiction over VantageScore.

Perhaps realizing the weakness of her general jurisdiction "evidence" and arguments, Plaintiff also advances a stream of commerce theory to establish specific personal jurisdiction over VantageScore. Plaintiff's attempt, however, falls short of the mark. Initially, Plaintiff argues that personal jurisdiction is not precluded because VantageScore is merely a holding company for intellectual property. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 6, ECF No. 64.) In support, Plaintiff quotes from the court of appeals' decision in Nuance Communications, Inc. v. Abbyy Software House, 626 F.3d 1222 (Fed. Cir. 2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 3091, 180 L. Ed. 2d 912, 2011 U.S. LEXIS 5011, 2011 WL 500233 (2011), which held: "[a]lthough the foreign manufacturer had no license [*160] for doing business in the forum, no assets, employees, or agents for service of process in the forum, and no direct sales in the forum, this court found the exercise of jurisdiction proper because the manufacturer purposefully shipped products through an established distribution channel with the expectation that those products would be sold in the forum." Nuance Commc'ns, 626 F.3d at 1233-34 (citing Beverly Hills Fan Co. v. Royal Sovereign Corp., 21 F.3d 1558, 1564-67 (Fed. Cir. 1994)). Plaintiff then notes that the product in Nuance was covered by a patent license, as opposed to a trademark license, but nonetheless submits that "to the best of [her] knowledge, it appears that in addition to a trademark license, VantageScore Solutions also licenses U.S. Patent No. 7,801,812 entitled 'Methods and systems for characteristic leveling].]'" Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 6, ECF No. 64. Then Plaintiff attempts to argue that her case and Nuance are analogous because both cases involve patent licenses,[50]

---

[49] See discussion supra at 60-61 rejecting Plaintiff's attempt to predicate the Bureau Defendants' liability on an alleged agency relationship with VantageScore.

[50] VantageScore notes in its reply brief that technically it does not license its patent, but rather, it is the assignee of the patent. (VantageScore's Reply Br. at 3, ECF No. 69 & Ex. 1 at 2, ECF No. 69-1.)

"plac[ing] the case law directly on point." Id. However, simply because the defendant in Nuance and VantageScore may have been patent-holders/assignees, that does not make the cases [*161] analogous, especially where, as in Nuance, the court's jurisdictional ruling did not turn on the manufacturer's status as a patent-holder.

In actuality, Nuance is factually distinguishable from the case at bar. In Nuance, evidence showed that the defendant foreign manufacturer actually sold its products to a distributor who in turn sold the manufacturer's products to residents of the forum state. Second, the record in Nuance contained additional facts establishing that the foreign company purposefully directed the sale of its allegedly infringing product, a software program, in California. For example, the agreement in Nuance was between two corporate defendants—commonly owned sister companies, one domestic California company and the other foreign, operating under a global management team—which expressed a desire by the foreign company to "win the whole U.S. market" by issuing its software program in the United States. Also, the foreign manufacturer admitted to distributing its software [*162] to its domestic sister company, a California entity. 626 F.3d at 1232. The record further showed that over 95% of the profits resulting from the sales of the software program flowed to the foreign manufacturer, and under its agreement with the California distributor, the foreign manufacturer retained ownership in the software even after it entered California. Id. at 1233. By contrast here, it is clear from Dunn's declaration that VantageScore is not selling a product (credit scores) to its licensees, Experian, Trans Union, and Equifax, for further distribution to consumers or lenders. Nor do the parties' submissions evidence any intent to target Pennsylvania on the part of VantageScore. Rather, the uncontroverted evidence shows that VantageScore licenses its algorithm exclusively to the three credit reporting companies for their use in calculating consumers' credit scores. Similarly, the public documents submitted by Plaintiff do not show any desire or action on the part of VantageScore to distribute and/or sell its algorithm to consumers or lenders in the state of Pennsylvania. Moreover, because VantageScore does not sell any products to consumers or lenders in Pennsylvania, it cannot, [*163] and does not, derive any revenues from activities in this forum. Thus, the proposition for which Plaintiff cites Nuance is inapposite to this case.

Plaintiff next argues that based on World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S. at 298, the licensing arrangement is not determinative of the outcome vis a vis personal jurisdiction, but rather, what does confer personal jurisdiction is the purposeful or expected sale of the product itself in the forum. Quoting World-Wide Volkswagen, Plaintiff argues "a defendant could purposefully avail itself of a forum by 'deliver[ing] its products into the stream of commerce with the expectation that they will be purchased by consumers in the forum [s]tate.'" Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 7 (quoting World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S. at 298). To establish personal jurisdiction under this theory, Plaintiff attempts to show that VantageScore® "sold to Pennsylvanians does not end up in the forum by accident." Pl.'s Sur-Reply Br. at 3, ECF No. 76. She submits that because VantageScore owns both the trademark and patent to VantageScore®, VantageScore has absolute control over where VantageScore® ends up in the marketplace. Plaintiff maintains that VantageScore [*164] not only introduced VantageScore® into the marketplace, but continued to maintain control over its sale into Pennsylvania by dictating the license terms to retailers such as Experian as to where and to whom the product can be sold. Id. Plaintiff's argument is completely lacking an evidentiary foundation. None of the documents attached to Plaintiff's briefs provide any support for her argument. Indeed, none of her documents show that she or any Pennsylvanians purchased credit scores or any other product from VantageScore. On the other hand, Dunn's declaration establishes that VantageScore was formed for the purposes of owning the intellectual property rights to a credit scoring algorithm, and licensing its algorithm exclusively to Experian, Trans Union, and Equifax, and that VantageScore does not produce or sell credit scores or credit reports to any person or credit reporting agency, in Pennsylvania or otherwise. (Dunn Decl. ¶¶3-4.) Even giving Plaintiff the benefit of the doubt, it simply cannot be logically inferred from the jurisdictional evidence that VantageScore maintained control over the sale of VantageScore® into Pennsylvania when all of the evidence shows that VantageScore [*165] did not sell or produce any products to consumers or lenders in any state.

The stream of commerce theory has been invoked frequently in products liability actions to permit jurisdiction over a non-resident defendant, acting outside the forum, which places a product in the stream of commerce, i.e., traveled through an extensive chain of distribution before reaching the ultimate consumer, that ultimately causes harm inside the forum. Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A. v. Brown, __ U.S. __, 131 S.Ct. 2846, 2855, 180 L. Ed. 2d 796 (2011) (citing 18 W. Fletcher, Cyclopedia of the Law of Corporations §8640.40, p. 133 (rev. ed. 2007); Dayton, Personal Jurisdiction and the Stream of Commerce, 7 Rev. Litig. 239, 262-68 (1988)). The stream of commerce theory has also been applied in antitrust cases. Dayton, 7 Rev. Litig. at 261 & n. 73 (citing Chrysler Corp. v. Gen. Motors Corp., 589 F. Supp. 1182 (D.D.C. 1984); Hitt v. Nissan Motor Co., 399 F. Supp. 838 (S.D.Fla. 1975)). However, the Supreme Court has been unable to reach a consensus on whether the stream of commerce theory requires a showing of "something more" than the mere act of placing a product in the stream of commerce with the expectation it will [*166] be purchased in the forum state. Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court of Cal., 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 (1987); D'Jamoos, 566 F.3d at 105 n. 15. Justice O'Connor, writing for a plurality of four justices in Asahi, concluded that something more was required—"an action of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum state." 480 U.S. at 112 (emphasis in original; citations omitted).[51] In a separate opinion, Justice Brennan, joined by three other justices, concluded that the showing of something more was unnecessary. 480 U.S. at 117.[52] Recently, the Supreme Court attempted to clarify its position on the application of a stream of commerce theory, but unfortunately, only a plurality agreed with Justice O'Connor's "something more" approach, thus rejecting the conclusion reached by Justice Brennan, and leaving the lower courts without clear guidance once again. See J. McIntyre Mach., 131 S.Ct. at 2790. The court of appeals for this circuit has yet to decide the issue as well. D'Jamoos, 566 F.3d at 105 n. 15.

In any event, under either approach, this Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to establish a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over VantageScore under a stream of commerce theory. Contrary to Plaintiff's argument at oral argument,[53] the court of appeals for this circuit has indicated that HN52[] ""foreseeability' alone has never been a sufficient benchmark for personal jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause.'" Id. at 105 (quoting World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S. at 295). [*168] The court of appeals further explained:

> [T]he foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis is not the mere likelihood that a product will find its way into the forum State. Rather, it is that the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum State are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there. [World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S.] at 297, 100 S.Ct. at 567.

D'Jamoos, 566 F.3d at 105. Under this standard, the D'Jamoos court found that the stream of commerce theory did not apply to the facts of that case, as the product there did not follow the regular and anticipated path to Pennsylvania—i.e., "'the regular and anticipated flow of products from manufacture to distribution to retail sale.'" Id. (quoting Asahi, 480 U.S. at 117 (Brennan, J. concurring)).[54]

---

[51] Justice O'Connor explained her application of the stream of commerce theory as follows:

> The "substantial connection" between the defendant and the forum State necessary for a finding [*167] of minimum contacts must come about by an action of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum State. The placement of a product into the stream of commerce, without more, is not an act of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum State.

Asahi, 480 U.S. at 112 (internal citations omitted).

[52] Justice Brennan opined that "jurisdiction premised on the placement of a product into the stream of commerce [without more] is consistent with the Due Process Clause[.]" He went on to explain that "[a]s long as a participant in this process is aware that the final product is being marketed in the forum State, the possibility of a lawsuit there cannot come as a surprise." 480 U.S. at 117 (opinion concurring in part and concurring in judgment).

[53] At oral argument on the motions to dismiss, Plaintiff argued that it was "absolutely foreseeable" that the VantageScore® was going to end up in Pennsylvania. Tr. of Mots. Proceedings on 2/10/11 at 70, ECF No. 82. To the extent her argument is based on a foreseeability test, Plaintiff ignores the court of appeals opinion in D'Jamoos finding that foreseeability alone is insufficient to establish personal [*169] jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause.

[54] The court of appeals further noted that the stream of commerce theory provides no basis for exercising general jurisdiction over a non-resident defendant, but rather only applies to the exercise of specific jurisdiction. D'Jamoos, 566 F.3d at 106 (citing Purdue Research Found. v. Sanofi-Synthelabo, S.A., 338 F.3d 773, 788 (7th Cir. 2003); Bearry v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 818 F.2d 370, 375 (5th Cir. 1987)).

Applying the relevant jurisprudence to the case at bar, this Court finds that the jurisdictional evidence shows that VantageScore's credit scoring algorithm did not follow the regular and anticipated flow of products from manufacture to distribution to retail sale. Indeed, the evidence shows that VantageScore did not sell credit scores to consumers or lenders in Pennsylvania, nor did it sell or distribute credit scores to its licensees, Experian, Trans Union and/or Equifax, let alone distribute such credit scores with the expectation that they would be sold to consumers or lenders in Pennsylvania. Moreover, it is arguable whether VantageScore's intellectual property, the credit scoring algorithm, is indeed a product. See *Primesource Bldg. Prods., Inc. v. Phillips Screw Co., No. 3-07-CV-0303-M, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98971, 2008 WL 779906, at 4 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 25, 2008) [*170] (noting that the defendant did not manufacture or sell any products but merely designed proprietary fastener drive systems and licensed the technology to other companies who manufactured and sold fasteners incorporating defendant's design). As the district court observed in Primesource, HN53[] "merely entering into a licensing agreement with a company that delivers products into the stream of commerce is insufficient to support the exercise of personal jurisdiction." Id. (citing Red Wing Shoe Co. v. Hockerson-Halberstadt, Inc., 148 F.3d 1355, 1360 (Fed. Cir. 1998)).[55] Similarly here, VantageScore's only "product" was its intellectual property—a credit scoring model/algorithm—which [*171] it licensed exclusively to the three credit reporting agencies, for their use in calculating consumers' credit scores. The VantageScore® algorithm was not the final product that was being marketed by the credit reporting agencies for retail sale in Pennsylvania; rather, the credit reporting agencies were offering credit scores for sale, which were calculated by utilizing VantageScore's patented intellectual property.[56] Under these circumstances, the Court cannot conclude that VantageScore could have reasonably anticipated being haled into court in Pennsylvania. Thus, Plaintiff's argument that VantageScore® did not end up in Pennsylvania by accident is based entirely upon conjecture.

Moreover, the jurisdictional facts here stand in stark contrast to those in Nuance, where the court of appeals found that the forum state (California) had personal jurisdiction over the foreign manufacturer under the stream of commerce theory. There, unlike the case at bar, the court of appeals found the foreign manufacturer purposefully shipped the allegedly infringing software products into California through an established distribution channel (a California entity), with the expectation that copies of those products would be sold in California. Id. at 1234. In addition, under its agreement with the California distributor, the foreign manufacturer agreed to furnish the distributor with new versions and updates of its software, as well [*173] as technical support and oral and written consultations. Id. The Nuance court opined that this purposeful activity is the sort of activity the Supreme Court has endorsed as reinforcing the proper exercise of personal jurisdiction. Id. (citing Asahi, 480 U.S. at 112).

Accordingly, for the reasons articulated above, the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to establish a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over VantageScore.[57]

---

[55] The district court in Primesource held that because the defendant did not manufacture or sell any products, but merely gave its licensees the right to sue the patented technology to manufacture their own products under the defendant's brand name without the risk of being sued by defendant, such a covenant not to sue was not a product sold in the stream of commerce. *2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98971, 2008 WL 779906, at 5.

[56] At oral argument, Plaintiff's counsel likened the situation between VantageScore and the credit reporting companies [*172] to that of a manufacturer and distributor, and argued that VantageScore manufactured the score and as owner of the product and ultimately the license, they controlled where the product goes in commerce. Tr. of Mots. Proceedings on 2/10/11 at 70, ECF No. 82. Plaintiff's argument is without merit as the uncontroverted evidence shows that VantageScore is neither the manufacturer nor seller of the credit scores sold by the three credit reporting agencies.

[57] As further support for its argument that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over it, VantageScore points to Judge Conti's ruling during a motion hearing in Schweitzer v. Equifax Information Solutions LLC, Fair Isaac Corporation and VantageScore Solutions LLC, docketed at Civil Action No. 2:08-cv-00478, in this district, where Judge Conti granted VantageScore's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. See Minute Entry dated 7/14/2008, W.D.Pa. Docket No. 2:08-cv-00478. However, without the benefit of an opinion detailing the reasons for Judge Conti's ruling, this Court declines to accord her ruling any weight in this case. And, in any event, this Court is not bound by the decision of another district court judge in an unrelated case. The complaint [*174] in Schweitzer asserted claims against all defendants under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, 15 U.S.C. §1681 et

c. Jurisdictional Discovery & Leave to Amend Complaint

In the alternative, Plaintiff requests leave of court to conduct jurisdictional discovery to determine which one of VantageScore's "mutually exclusive positions is true before briefing a rebuttal to the motion to dismiss." Plaintiff's request is premised on the notion that the Court must first determine whose product she purchased under the VantageScore® mark so that the entity can be served notice of the suit if, as VantageScore asserts, it derives no revenue from Pennsylvanians. She also seeks leave to amend her Complaint to name the entity that derives revenue from the VantageScore® product which is sold to Pennsylvanians. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 7, ECF No. 64.)

VantageScore objects to Plaintiff's request [*175] for jurisdictional discovery, arguing that Plaintiff is in the best position to know where she obtained, if she did at all, her "VantageScore credit score." VantageScore further submits that the three credit reporting companies (Experian, Trans Union, and Equifax) that sell VantageScore credit scores are already parties to this lawsuit. VantageScore submits, therefore, that Plaintiff's request should be denied.

The court of appeals for this circuit has held that HN54[] a plaintiff's request for jurisdictional discovery should be granted "[i]f the plaintiff presents factual allegations that suggest 'with reasonable particularity' the possible existence of the requisite 'contacts between [the party] and the forum state[.]'" Eurofins Pharma US Holdings v. BioAlliance Pharma SA, 623 F.3d 147, 157 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting Mellon Bank PSFS, Nat'l Ass'n v. Farino, 960 F.2d 1217, 1223 (3d Cir. 1992)). "A plaintiff may not, however, undertake a fishing expedition based only upon bare allegations, under the guise of jurisdictional discovery." Id. (citing Belden Techs., Inc. v. LS Corp., 626 F.Supp. 2d 448, 459 (D.Del. 2009).

As discussed above with respect to paragraphs 11 and 36 of her Complaint, Plaintiff [*176] has failed to present factual allegations that suggest with reasonable particularity the possible existence of the requisite contacts between VantageScore and Pennsylvania. Further, none of Plaintiff's other evidence suggests such contacts. Most importantly, Plaintiff failed to provide her own affidavit to counter VantageScore's evidence, or to provide documentation to support her statement that she purchased her VantageScore for $7.95. Plaintiff alone is in the best position to know the details of her alleged purchase of her credit score. Consequently, the Court finds that Plaintiff has not made the requisite showing to suggest the possible existence of the requisite contacts between VantageScore and Pennsylvania. In this Court's opinion, allowing jurisdictional discovery on the bare allegations presented here would result in a fishing expedition. Accordingly, the Court recommends that Plaintiff's request for jurisdictional discovery be denied.

The Court also recommends that Plaintiff's request for leave to amend her Complaint to name the entity that derived revenue from the sale of VantageScore credit scores in Pennsylvania be denied. It is clear from the documents submitted that [*177] the only possible entities who could have derived revenues from the sale of credit scores, including those credit scores calculated using the VantageScore algorithm, are already named parties to this lawsuit. In addition, Plaintiff's request for leave to amend is mooted by the Court's recommendation that her request for jurisdictional discovery be denied.

Accordingly, the Court recommends that the Complaint against VantageScore be dismissed with prejudice for lack of personal jurisdiction.

2. Failure to State a Claim under Rule 12(b)(6)

---

seq., and a state common law negligence claim. The Court notes that unlike the Sherman Act, the Fair Credit Reporting Act does not contain a statutory provision allowing nationwide service of process. *Korzeniowski v. NCO Financial Systems, No. 3:09-cv-1399 (WWE), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10437, 2010 WL 466162, 2 (D. Conn. Feb. 8, 2010).

Even if this Court had found that it could exercise personal jurisdiction over VantageScore, the Court would still recommend granting VantageScore's motion to dismiss on the basis that the Complaint fails to state a claim against VantageScore under Rule 12(b)(6).

Defendant VantageScore has also moved to dismiss the Complaint for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) (ECF No. 39). In support of its 12(b)(6) motion, VantageScore joins in, and incorporates by reference, the motions to dismiss and the memoranda of law in support thereof submitted by the Lender Defendants, as well as the implausibility argument advanced by the Credit Bureau Defendants [*178] in Section I.A. their motion memorandum of law. In addition, VantageScore submits that dismissal of the Complaint is warranted because it is clear from the allegations in the Complaint that Plaintiff's lawsuit focuses on consumer lending. (VantageScore's Mem. of Law in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss at 8, ECF No. 41 (citing Compl. ¶¶1, 18, 22-23, 25, 27, 43-50).) VantageScore further contends that Plaintiff does not allege and cannot allege that it is a consumer lender, and indeed, the Complaint alleges VantageScore is one of two credit scoring companies. (Id. (citing Compl. ¶21).) Therefore, according to VantageScore, paragraphs addressed to Defendants generally that involve consumer lending, i.e. Compl. ¶¶43-45, 48-50, 52) do not apply to VantageScore. (Id. at 9.)

VantageScore also submits that the few allegations directed specifically to VantageScore or to credit scoring companies do not state facts pertaining to wrongful conduct of VantageScore which, under §1 of the Sherman Act, requires the factual averments concerning an illegal agreement. In particular, VantageScore submits neither paragraph 21 nor 29 alleges an illegal agreement. Plaintiff's averment in paragraph 36 to the effect [*179] that credit scoring companies "use the reported information from credit bureaus to create a derivative score which incorporates all of the consumer's credit data as well as the consumer's profitability[,]" does not, according to VantageScore, allege illegal conduct. And although paragraphs 40 and 71 discuss credit scoring, VantageScore submits that neither paragraph alleges an agreement between it and any other Defendant to fix the prices of consumer loans. (Id.)

Finally, VantageScore argues that the Complaint fails to allege it engaged in any parallel conduct with the Lender Defendants to restrict borrowing, let alone facts to support an inference that an illegal agreement existed to which VantageScore was a party. According to VantageScore, Plaintiff's Complaint "'furnishes no clue'" as to details involving when or where VantageScore's purported illegal agreement with the Lender Defendants occurred. (Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n. 10).)

In response, Plaintiff incorporates by reference the previous arguments and legal standards presented in her brief opposing the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss. Plaintiff also advances several arguments specific to VantageScore, none of [*180] which has any merit. First, Plaintiff perceives VantageScore to be arguing that because it is not a lender, it is immune from antitrust liability and should be dismissed from this lawsuit, and responds that the courts have never recognized a defense to antitrust based on whether a conspirator sold the object of the price fixing scheme. In support, Plaintiff cites several cases for the proposition that an entity which does not sell any products can still be held liable for a §1 violation as long as there is cooperation in the price fixing scheme. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 8-9, ECF No. 64.) Thus, Plaintiff maintains, the fact that VantageScore "sells nothing" is irrelevant in determining whether it is liable for engaging in price fixing. This argument is, in essence, the same argument advanced by Plaintiff in response to FICO's motion to dismiss. See Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to FICO at 5, ECF No. 62. The Court finds that Plaintiff's first argument fails for the same reasons as those stated above with regard to FICO's motion to dismiss. See discussion supra at 71-73.

Second, Plaintiff takes issue with VantageScore's argument that she failed to allege anything illegal in the Complaint [*181] sufficient to suggest an agreement. (Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 9, ECF No. 64.) In support, Plaintiff relies on paragraphs 11 and 36 of the Complaint. However, paragraph 11 contains no factual allegations of an agreement, illegal or otherwise, and the factual allegations in paragraph 36, as explained above, suggest VantageScore's involvement in the alleged conspiracy consisted of using information from credit bureaus to create a derivative score, and assisting lenders by creating a derivative metric. The remaining allegations in paragraph 26 consist of unsupported conclusory allegations which are not entitled to any presumption of truth. Plaintiff then claims she has discovered additional factual evidence from which a conspiracy can be inferred—a statement on VantageScore's website to the effect that "credit scores . . . are used by lenders not only to 'assess a borrower's loan eligibility' (i.e., creditworthiness, which is a potentially lawful use of the data) but also [sic] 'set loan/credit terms' (which in situations such as coordinating pricing is an unlawful use of data)." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 9, ECF No. 64. Based on this evidence, Plaintiff contends [*182] the Complaint properly pleads a factual basis for an illegal act by VantageScore. The Court considered this same argument raised by Plaintiff in response to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss, and rejected it. See discussion supra at 29-31. Therefore, the Court rejects Plaintiff's argument that the statement on VantageScore's website provides evidence from which a conspiracy can be inferred for the same reasons articulated above with regard to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss.

Next, Plaintiff submits that VantageScore "has also admitted that [it] provides a uniform model for competing lenders to adopt so that lenders can consistently fix loan terms." Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 9, ECF No. 64. Plaintiff reaches this conclusion based on the following statement appearing in VantageScore's newsletter, The Score, dated October 20, 2010, and authored by VantageScore's president: "VantageScore is the generic credit scoring created by America's three major credit reporting companies. Our highly predictive model uses an innovative, patent-pending scoring methodology to provide lenders with a consistent interpretation of consumer credit files." (Ex. F attached to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 4, [*183] ECR No. 64-6.) Plaintiff argues that this "consistent interpretation" is intended to (and does) lead to consistent, uniform pricing in the lending industry as properly alleged in the Complaint (Compl. ¶¶11, 36), and as demonstrated factually in VantageScore's specimen submitted to the USPTO in its Trademark/Service Mark Statement of Use (Ex. G attached to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore, ECF No. 64-7). In particular, Plaintiff refers to page 11 of Exhibit G, which is entitled "VantageScore Fact Sheet" and focuses on the following excerpt:

> Use of VantageScore assists lenders with decisions in a manual or automated environment:
> • Set a cut-off score strategy to reduce the time to review an application manually.
> • Use the score for tiered offers with multiple cut-off strategies. For example, extend the most favorable offer to the most creditworthy clients while extending appropriately adjusted offers to those consumers that are in the middle segment of credit risk and those consumers that are more risky.

Ex. G at 11 (attached to Pl.'s Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore, ECF No. 64-7).

The Court finds that contrary to Plaintiff's assertion, this evidence does not demonstrate that VantageScore® [*184] is intended to be a consistent model for fixing the price of loans. This Court considered a similar argument in response to the Lender Defendants' motion to dismiss and rejected it. See discussion supra at 50. Simply because VantageScore touts its credit scoring model as being "consistent" does not automatically suggest, in and of itself, that VantageScore has engaged in an agreement with lenders and/or credit reporting companies to fix the price of consumer loans. Previously, this Court found that a review of the excerpts from VantageScore's website revealed that the purpose behind VantageScore's scoring model is developing a statistically sound, and therefore reliable and accurate, prediction of a consumer's credit risk or creditworthiness, which is in complete accord with the purpose of the FCRA—to ensure accuracy and fairness in credit reporting. 15 U.S.C. §1681. See discussion supra at 50. With regard to the excerpt from the VantageScore Fact Sheet, the statements are not directed to any particular persons or entities, and thus, cannot be used to show concerted action or a "meeting of the minds" between Defendants. In addition, there is no indication of when these statements first [*185] appeared, and therefore, Plaintiff has not established that they preceded the decision to reduce her credit limit. At best, the information provided on the VantageScore Fact Sheet constitutes a one-way communication from VantageScore to potential clients—banks, credit card companies, and other lenders—recommending certain uses of VantageScore®. Moreover, VantageScore's website does not instruct potential clients to use its VantageScore® exclusively to set loan prices. Absent such instruction, the excerpted material on the VantageScore Fact Sheet does not provide either direct or circumstantial evidence that the banks, credit card companies, and other lenders entered into an agreement to use the credit scores to fix credit at a certain price. See discussion supra at 30-31.

Thus, for these and the reasons set forth above with regard to the Lender Defendants', Bureau Defendants', and FICO's motions to dismiss, the Court finds Plaintiff has failed to state a plausible §1 claim against VantageScore. Therefore, the Court recommends that the Complaint as to VantageScore be dismissed with prejudice.[58]

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, it is respectfully recommended that the Motion of Defendants JP Morgan Chase & Co. and Bank of America Corporation to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 32) be granted with prejudice. It is further recommended that the Motion of Defendant Fair Isaac Corporation to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 36) be granted with prejudice. It is further recommended that the Motion of Defendant VantageScore Solutions LLC to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 39) be granted with prejudice. It is further recommended that the Motion of Defendants Trans Union, Experian and Equifax to Dismiss the Complaint (ECF No. 42) be granted with prejudice.

In addition, although not separately filed, Plaintiff requested leave to file an amended complaint in her opposition briefs to each of the above motions. It is respectfully recommended that those requests be denied. It is further recommended that Plaintiff's [*187] request for jurisdictional discovery, lodged in her opposition brief to VantageScore Solutions LLC's motion to dismiss, also be denied.

In accordance with the Magistrate Judges Act, 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B) and (C), and Rule 72.D.2 of the Local Rules of Court, the parties shall have fourteen (14) days from the date of service of this Report and Recommendation to file written objections thereto. Any party opposing such objections shall have fourteen (14) days from the date on which the objections are served to file its response. A party's failure to file timely objections will constitute a waiver of that party's appellate rights.

Dated: August 10, 2011

BY THE COURT:

/s/ Lisa Pupo Lenihan

LISA PUPO LENIHAN

Chief U.S. Magistrate Judge

End of Document

[58] In the alternative, Plaintiff summarily requests leave to amend her complaint. (Pl's Mem. in Opp'n to VantageScore at 11, [*186] ECF No. 64.) The Court recommends that Plaintiff's request be denied for the same reasons set forth with regard to the same request in her briefs in opposition to the motions to dismiss filed by the Lender Defendants and Bureau Defendants. See discussion supra at 51-53, 70.

![LexisNexis]

In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

August 11, 2011, Decided; August 11, 2011, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 08-2431 (Direct)

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90075 *; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,565

IN RE: WELLBUTRIN XL ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Subsequent History: Class certification denied by, in part, Class certification granted by, in part In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90697 (E.D. Pa., Aug. 12, 2011)

Prior History: In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 756 F. Supp. 2d 670, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135566 (E.D. Pa., 2010)

Core Terms

generic, purchasers, overcharge, class member, antitrust, damages, branded, extended-release, hydrochloride, defendants', bupropion, prices, anti trust law, indirect, entities, class action, calculations, manufacturer, predominate, drugs, class certification, parties, bypass, numerosity, monopolization, methodology, Shoe, class period, class-wide, wholesaler

Counsel: [*1] For ROCHESTER DRUG CO-OPERATIVE, INC., ON BEHALF OF ITSELF AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiff: DAVID F. SORENSEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; ERIC L. CRAMER, LEAD ATTORNEY, BERGER & MONTAGUE, PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; PETER R. KOHN, LEAD ATTORNEY, FARUQI & FARUQI, LLP, HUNTINGTON VALLEY, PA; ANDREW COYNE CURLEY, BERGER & MONTAGUE PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ARCHANA TAMOSHUNAS, TAUS CEBULASH & LANDAU LLP, NEW YORK, NY; BARRY S. TAUS, PRO HAC VICE, BRETT CEBULASH, TAUS CEBULASH LANDAU LLP, NEW YORK, NY; DANIEL C. SIMONS, BERGER AND MONTAGUE P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID S. NALVEN, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, CAMBRIDGE, MA; JOHN W. DON BARRETT, PRO HAC VICE, DON BARRETT PA, LEXINGTON, MS; JOSEPH F. RODA, RODA & NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; THOMAS M. SOBOL, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, CAMBRIDGE, MA.

For PROFESSIONAL DRUG COMPANY, INC., Plaintiff: ANDREW COYNE CURLEY, BERGER & MONTAGUE PC, PHILADELPHIA, PA; BRIAN KELLY HERRINGTON, DON BARRETT, BARRETT LAW OFFICES, LEXINGTON, MS; DAVID S. NALVEN, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, CAMBRIDGE, MA; JAN R. BARTELLI, PRO HAC VICE, FARUQI & FARUQI LLP, BRONX, NY; JOSEPH F. RODA, RODA & NAST PC, LANCASTER, PA; THOMAS [*2] M. SOBOL, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, CAMBRIDGE, MA.

For BIOVAIL CORPORATION, BIOVAIL LABORATORIES, INC., BIOVAIL LABORATORIES INTERNATIONAL SRL, Defendants: ANDREA MARIE DEVRIES, DANIEL J. BOLAND, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ANDREW M. BERNIE, ANDREW D. LAZEROW, ASHLEY E. BASS, DANIELLE S. BARBOUR, DAVID J. SHAW, HENRY B. LIU, J. MAREN SCHMIDT, JASON C. RAOFIELD, PRO HAC VICE, JOHN W. NIELDS , JR., THOMAS A. ISAACSON, COVINGTON & BURLING LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID F. SORENSEN, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA; THOMAS E. ZEMAITIS, PEPPER, HAMILTON & SCHEETZ, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For SMITHKLINE BEECHAM CORP., GLAXOSMITHKLINE, PLC, Defendants: EDWARD D. ROGERS, LEAD ATTORNEY, BALLARD, SPAHR, ANDREWS AND INGERSOLL, PHILA, PA; LESLIE E. JOHN, LEAD ATTORNEY, JESSICA MOLTISANTI ANTHONY, JOB MICHAEL ITZKOWITZ, BALLARD SPAHR ANDREWS & INGERSOLL LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; STEPHEN J. KASTENBERG, LEAD ATTORNEY, JASON A. LECKERMAN, BALLARD SPAHR ANDREWS & INGERSOLL, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ARTHUR MAKADON, SUSANNA R. GREENBERG, BALLARD SPAHR ANDREWS & INGERSOLL, PHILA, PA; DANIEL J. BOLAND, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; DAVID F. SORENSEN, BERGER & MONTAGUE, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, [*3] PA; MARGARET OSBORNE PADILLA, TAIMARIE NICOLE ADAMS, BALLARD SPAHR LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For ABRIKA, LLLP, ABRIKA PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., ABRIKA, PHARMACEUTICALS, LLLP, Movants: RICHARD P. MCELROY, MEDIA, PA.

Judges: MARY A. McLAUGHLIN, J.

Opinion by: MARY A. McLAUGHLIN

Opinion

MEMORANDUM

McLaughlin, J.

The plaintiff Professional Drug Company ("PDC") is a direct purchaser of Wellbutrin XL, a once-a-day antidepressant, who is suing the producers of Wellbutrin XL (Biovail Corp., Biovail Laboratories, Biovail Laboratories International (together, "Biovail")) and its distributors (SmithKline Beecham Corp. and GlaxoSmithKline PLC (together, "GSK")) for illegally conspiring to prevent generic versions of Wellbutrin XL from entering the American market through the use of sham patent litigation. The plaintiff has moved to certify a class of 35 direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL under federal antitrust law.

The defendants contend that the plaintiff has failed to meet several requirements for class certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. The defendants' primary argument against certification is that common issues do not predominate over individual issues for antitrust impact and damages. The defendants argue that [*4] class members may have economically benefitted from the alleged exclusionary conduct, and individual evidence will be required to demonstrate which, if any, class members suffered actual harm. The defendants also argue that individual proof will be required for several class members who did not purchase generics or purchased generics indirectly from other wholesalers.

The Court concludes that the plaintiff has demonstrated that common issues will predominate and that the Rule 23 requirements for class certification have been met. The Court, however, will exclude from the class definition direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL that did not purchase generic extended-release buproprion hydrochloride after it became available. The Court will therefore grant in part and deny in part the plaintiff's motion.

I. Background and Procedural History

PDC seeks to represent a class of 35 plaintiffs (the "direct purchaser plaintiffs") that purchased Wellbutrin XL directly from the defendants during the period of November 14, 2005 through August 31, 2009. PDC has stated a claim for (1) conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act against GSK and Biovail, (2) monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act [*5] against GSK, and (3) agreement in restraint of trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act against GSK and Biovail. See *In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., No. 08-2431, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21286, 2009 WL 678631, at 9 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 13, 2009) (dismissing substantive monopolization claim against Biovail, but otherwise allowing claims to proceed). The plaintiff's proposed class is:

> All persons or entities in the United States and its territories who purchased Wellbutrin XL directly from any of the Defendants at any time during the period of November 14, 2005 through August 31, 2009 (the "Class Period"). Excluded from the class are Defendants and their officers, directors, management, employees, parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates, and federal government entities.

(Docket No. 306 at 1.)

The plaintiff's complaint alleges that the defendants conducted a four-part scheme to delay the entry of generic equivalents of Wellbutrin XL into the market, primarily by misusing patent litigation. Specifically, the plaintiff alleges that the defendants (1) filed three sham patent litigations, (2) filed a sham listing with the FDA's Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluation (the "Orange Book") (3) filed a baseless [*6] FDA citizen petition and suit against the FDA, and (4) formed agreements with potential generic competitors. PDC contends that the effect of these activities was to delay the market entry of cheaper, generic alternatives to Wellbutrin XL.

On July 10, 2080, Meijer, Inc., Meijer Distribution, Inc. (collectively "Meijer), Rochester Drug Co-Operatrive ("RDC"), and American Sales Company, Inc. filed a consolidated class action complaint. On September 4, 2008, American Sales Company, Inc. voluntarily dismissed its claims pursuant to Rule 41(a)(1)(A)(i). On September 10, 2008, Biovail and GSK each filed motions to dismiss. The Court held a hearing on the motions on February 26, 2009. In a Memorandum and Order dated March 16, 2009, the Court granted Biovail's motion to dismiss as to one count that alleged that Biovail engaged in substantive monopolization under section 2 of the Sherman Act, and the Court denied the motions for all other counts. See *Wellbutrin XL, No. 08-2431, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21286, 2009 WL 678631, at 9 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 13, 2009).

The direct purchaser plaintiffs filed a motion for class certification on December 14, 2009. The parties then engaged in extensive discovery. For a partial overview of the [*7] parties' discovery disputes, see In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 268 F.R.D. 539, 541-43 (E.D. Pa. 2010). On March 17, 2010, the Court granted Meijer's oral motion for voluntary dismissal under Rule 41(a). On May 14, 2010, RDC moved for voluntary dismissal and the direct purchaser plaintiffs moved to substitute Professional Drug Company, Inc. ("PDC") as class representative. On July 21, 2010, the Court granted RDC's motion for voluntary dismissal provided that it comply with its pending discovery obligations and the Court substituted PDC as class representative. In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 268 F.R.D. at 547. Because the three original direct purchaser plaintiffs have voluntarily dismissed their claims, PDC is now the sole remaining named plaintiff seeking to represent direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL.

The Court held a day-long evidentiary hearing on the plaintiff's motion for class certification on April 5, 2011. PDC presented the expert testimony of Dr. Jeffery Leitzinger and the defendants presented the expert testimony of Dr. Andrew Joskow. [1] On July 11, 2011, the defendants' submitted a supplemental memorandum of law in opposition to the plaintiff's motion for class [*8] certification. On July 19, 2011, the plaintiff submitted a rebuttal memorandum.

II. Analysis

To certify a class under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 23, a court must find that the action satisfies all four requirements of Rule 23(a) — numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation — and at least one provision of Rule 23(b). Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 614, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). PDC seeks certification under Rule 23(b)(3). Rule 23(b)(3) requires the court to find that questions of law or fact common to class [*9] members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.

---

[1] Both experts are highly qualified. Dr. Leitzinger has a Ph.D. in economics from the University of California, Los Angeles. He is the president and founder of Econ One Research, Inc. and has offered expert opinions regarding class certification in similar cases that address alleged exclusion of generic competition in the pharmaceutical market. See, e.g., Am. Sales Co. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 274 F.R.D. 127 (E.D. Pa. 2010). Dr. Andrew Joskow has a Ph.D. in economics from Yale University. He was the chief economist for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. He is now Senior Vice President at National Economic Research Associates, Inc.

A proper analysis under Rule 23 requires "rigorous" consideration of all the evidence and arguments offered by the parties. In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 320 (3d Cir. 2008). A court must "consider carefully all relevant evidence and make a definitive determination that the requirements of Rule 23 have been met before certifying a class." Id. at 320. Factual determinations necessary for Rule 23 findings must be made by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. The court must resolve factual or legal disputes relevant to class certification, even if they overlap with the merits. Id. at 307. Furthermore, "[w]eighing conflicting expert testimony at the certification stage is not only permissible; it may be integral to the rigorous analysis Rule 23 demands." Id. at 323. A determination that an expert's opinion is persuasive on a Rule 23 requirement does not preclude a different view at the merits stage of the case. Id. at 324.

The defendants contend that the plaintiff has failed [*10] to satisfy the numerosity, predominance, and superiority requirements. The defendants argue that: (1) the proposed class is insufficiently numerous such that joinder is impracticable, (2) common issues do not predominate over individual issues for antitrust impact and damages, and (3) the superiority requirement has not been met. The Court will address each of the Rule 23(a) and (b) requirements in turn.

A. Rule 23(a)

1. Numerosity

Rule 23(a)(1) requires a finding that the class is so numerous that joinder of all class members is impracticable. Although there is no precise number for establishing numerosity, classes that exceed forty or more class members generally satisfy this prerequisite. See Stewart v. Abraham, 275 F.3d 220, 226-27 (3d Cir. 2001) ("No minimum number of plaintiffs is required to maintain a suit as a class action, but generally if the named plaintiff demonstrates that the potential number of plaintiffs exceeds 40, the first prong of Rule 23(a) has been met.").

In Stewart, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit cited favorably to the Rule 23 numerosity discussion in Moore's Federal Practice. See Stewart, 275 F.3d at 227 (citing 5 James Wm. Moore, et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 23.22[3][a]). [*11] Moore explains that classes with between 21 and 40 members are considered mid-sized classes. These mid-sized classes may or may not meet the numerosity requirement depending on the circumstances of each particular case. See 5 James Wm. Moore, et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 23.22[3][a].

In addition to the number of class members, other factors that are relevant to determining the impracticability of joining all members include (1) judicial economy, (2) geographic dispersion, (3) financial resources of class members, (4) the claimants' ability to institute individual suits, and (5) requests for injunctive relief that could affect future class members. Id.

The Court must determine whether a class of 33 geographically dispersed, direct purchasers is so numerous that joinder of all class members is impracticable. [2] The defendants argue that joinder is practicable in this case because the direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL are large, sophisticated entities with sufficient financial resources to pursue their own claims and that each member could seek significant damages, if the claims are proven on the merits. Although the defendants are correct about the nature of the class members, judicial [*12] economy and geographic dispersion of the parties more heavily favor the use of a class action.

The proposed class includes more than 30 entities that are located across the country. Putative class members are located in California, Illinois, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, South Carolina, Vermont, and West Virginia. The class members' geographic dispersion would cause substantial difficulty for the parties to conduct discovery efficiently and to coordinate the litigation. Furthermore, this complex case has involved numerous discovery disputes [*13] and repeated joint requests for extensions of the case schedule. The Court finds that such delays and other complications would be greatly increased if all direct purchasers were joined in this suit. Judicial economy and geographic dispersion therefore weigh in favor of the numerosity requirement. Because of the complexity and sheer volume of discovery in this case and because the 33 direct purchasers are located across the country, the Court finds that the numerosity requirement is satisfied.

---

[2] PDC seeks to certify a class of 35 members of the putative class. The proposed class members include 34 pharmaceutical wholesalers as well as the Ohio Department of Mental Health. As the Court discusses below, two of these proposed class members, Allied Med Wholesale Drug, Co. and Goodwin Drug Co., did not purchase any generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available. The Court concludes that it is appropriate to limit the class definition to direct purchasers who purchased extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available.

This result is consistent with other courts that have addressed the numerosity requirement for direct purchaser antitrust class actions that allege unlawful delay of generic competition. See *Am. Sales Co. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 274 F.R.D. 127, 2010 WL 4644426, at 4 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (class certification uncontested) (33 class members sufficient); *In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 1419, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118396, 2008 WL 2699390, at 3 (D.N.J. Apr. 14, 2008) (45 class members sufficient); Meijer, Inc. v. Warner Chilcott Holdings Co. III, Ltd., 246 F.R.D. 293, 306 (D.D.C. 2007) (29 class members sufficient).

2. Commonality

Rule 23(a)(2) requires that there must be questions of law or fact common to the class. To [*14] satisfy the commonality requirement, the class's claims must depend upon a common contention. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 2550-51, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011). The common contention must be capable of class-wide resolution. Id. at 2551. A contention is capable of class-wide resolution if determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity the claims "in one stroke." Id. A single common question is sufficient. Id. at 2556-57.

The Court finds that the commonality requirement is met here. PDC alleges that the defendants engaged in a scheme to delay the entry of less expensive generic versions of Wellbutrin XL into the market. The plaintiff contends that this scheme caused 300 mg extended-release bupropion hydrochloride to enter the market in December, 2006 instead of in November, 2005 and that the scheme prevented entry of 150 mg extended-release bupropion hydrochloride until May, 2008. Each class member's claims depend on whether or not the defendants unlawfully engaged in anticompetitive behavior to limit the entry of generic competitors in violation of federal antitrust law.

3. Typicality

Rule 23(a)(3) requires that the claims or defenses of the [*15] representative parties be typical of the claims or defenses of the class. The typicality requirement ensures that the class representatives' interests are aligned with those of the absent class members, so that the representatives work to benefit the class as a whole. In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 311 (3d Cir. 1998). "The concepts of commonality and typicality are broadly defined and tend to merge." Baby Neal v. Casey, 43 F.3d 48, 56 (3d Cir. 1994) (citing 7A Charles A. Wright, et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1764).

If the representative's claims and those of the absent class members arise from the same course of conduct and are based on the same legal theories, the class satisfies typicality, regardless of factual differences underlying the individual claims. Baby Neal v. Casey, 43 F.3d at 57-58. The Court finds that the typicality requirement is met because the claims of PDC arise from the same course of conduct and are based on the same legal theories as those of the absent class members.

4. Adequacy of Representation

Rule 23(a)(4) requires that the proposed class representative will fairly and adequately protect the interests [*16] of the class. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has held that adequacy of representation depends on two factors: (a) the plaintiff's attorney must be qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the proposed litigation, and (b) the plaintiff must not have interests antagonistic to those of the class. New Directions Treatment Servs. v. City of Reading, 490 F.3d 293, 313 (3d Cir. 2007).

The Court is satisfied that this requirement is met here. The plaintiff's counsel are well-qualified to represent the proposed class in this case. They have extensive experience in similar class actions involving delayed generic competition. See, e.g., In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 01-1652, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118396 (D.N.J. Apr. 14, 2008). The plaintiff's counsel also have vigorously and capably prosecuted this action.

The Court also finds that PDC does not have interests that are antagonistic to those of the class. The absence-of-conflict requirement "seeks to uncover conflicts of interest between named parties and the class they seek to represent." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 532 (3d Cir. 2004) (internal quotation marks omitted). This requirement [*17] is not defeated merely "because of a potential conflict of interest that may not become actual." Kohen v. Pac. Inv. Mgmt. Co. LLC, 571 F.3d 672, 680 (7th Cir. 2009). In this case, the plaintiff seeks overcharge damages for purchases made during the class period. If the plaintiff's claims are proven on the merits, each of the class members would likewise be entitled to seek overcharge damages. The named plaintiff has the same incentive as any other class member to recover damages from any illegal overcharges for conduct that has already taken place.

B. Rule 23(b)

Once the requirements of Rule 23(a) are satisfied, a plaintiff must also satisfy one of the three criteria in Rule 23(b). The plaintiff seeks to have this class certified under Rule 23(b)(3). Rule 23(b)(3) requires the court to find (1) that questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members and (2) that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. These are often referred to as the predominance and superiority requirements.

1. Predominance

To establish predominance, the plaintiff must show by a preponderance [*18] of the evidence that the elements of their claim can be proven by evidence common to all in their class. See In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 311-12 (3d Cir. 2008). "If proof of the essential elements of the cause of action requires individual treatment, then class certification is unsuitable." Id. at 311 (quoting Newton, 259 F.3d at 172). The elements of the plaintiff's antitrust claims are (1) a violation of the antitrust laws, (2) individual injury or antitrust impact, and (3) measurable damages. Id. at 311. The Court will discuss each element in turn.

a. Violation of Antitrust Law

The plaintiff has stated a claim for three violations of federal antitrust law: (1) conspiracy to monopolize under § 2 of the Sherman Act against GSK and Biovail, (2) monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act against GSK only, and (3) agreement in restraint of trade under § 1 of the Sherman Act against GSK and Biovail. See *Wellbutrin XL, No. 08-2431, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21286, 2009 WL 678631, at 9 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 13, 2009) (granting Biovail's motion to dismiss for substantive monopolization, and otherwise denying the defendants' motions to dismiss). [3]

[3] The elements of a charge of conspiracy to monopolize under [*19] section 2 of the Sherman Act are (1) an agreement between two or more economic entities; (2) a specific intent to monopolize the relevant market; (3) the commission of an overt act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy; and (4) that there was a dangerous probability of success. *2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21286, [WL] at 4.

The elements of a section 2 monopolization claim are (1) the possession of monopoly power and (2) the willful acquisition and maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development or consequences of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. Crossroads Cogeneration Corp. v. Orange & Rockland Utils., 159 F.3d 129, 141 (3d Cir. 1998).

The elements of restraint of trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman act are (1) the defendant was a party to a "contract, combination ... or conspiracy" and (2) the conspiracy to which the defendant was a party imposed an unreasonable restraint on trade. Toledo Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Mack Trucks, Inc., 530 F.3d 204, 218 (3d Cir. 2008) (internal quotation omitted).

Proof of antitrust violations in this case involve predominantly common issues. If each class member pursued its claims individually, the class member would have to prove the [*20] same antitrust violations using the same documents, witnesses, and other evidence. Furthermore, the issues of relevant market, monopoly power, and exclusionary conduct can be proven using common, class-wide evidence because such issues focus on the defendants' conduct rather than individual class members. See In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 528 (3d Cir. 2004) (noting that liability for anticompetitive conduct focuses on the defendants' actions, not the conduct of individual class members).

b. Antitrust Impact

Antitrust impact, also known as individual injury or antitrust injury, is the second element of each of the plaintiff's causes of action. Antitrust impact requires proof that the plaintiff has suffered an injury that was caused by the defendants' antitrust violation. [4] "[T]o prevail on the merits, every class member must prove at least some antitrust impact resulting from the alleged violation." Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311. The Court of Appeals has observed that antitrust impact often is critically important for the purpose of evaluating the predominance requirement because it is an element of the claim that may call for individual, as opposed to common, [*21] proof. Id.

At the class certification stage, the plaintiff's burden is not to prove the element of antitrust impact. The plaintiff must instead demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is "capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members." Id. at 311-12. The district court must conduct a "rigorous" assessment of the available [*22] evidence and the method or methods by which the plaintiff proposes to use the evidence to prove impact at trial. Id. at 312.

The plaintiff's theory of antitrust impact is that the direct purchaser class members paid an illegal overcharge when they purchased Wellbutrin XL because the defendants excluded cheaper generics from the market. The defendants dispute this theory of overcharge because the price of Wellbutrin XL did not decrease after generic entry. The defendants conclude that because the price of Wellbutrin XL did not go down, the class members did not pay an overcharge.

If there has been no illegal overcharge, the defendants argue that individualized proof will be required to know which direct purchasers, if any, actually suffered economic injury to satisfy the antitrust impact requirement. The defendants also argue that class members do not satisfy the statutory injury requirement of Section 4 of the Clayton Act because they may have economically benefitted from delayed generic entry. The defendants contend that the payment of an overcharge by itself is insufficient to establish statutory injury.

The Court first discusses the parties' divergent theories of illegal overcharge. [*23] The Court then considers the statutory injury requirement of Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Finally, the Court examines the evidence presented to assess whether the plaintiff has demonstrated that antitrust impact is capable of proof through common evidence.

(1) Plaintiff's and Defendants' Overcharge Theories

If a direct purchaser pays an illegal overcharge for a product, it may recover for the full amount of the overcharge. See Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 489, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). As a general matter, "[t]he overcharge usually reflects the difference between the price actually charged and the price that would have prevailed in the absence of the alleged anticompetitive conduct (i.e., the 'but-for' price under the 'counterfactual')." ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Proving Antitrust Damages: Legal and Economic Issues 197 (2d ed. 2010). See also In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 689 (2d Cir. 2009) (finding that direct purchasers of desmopressin acetate tablets had stated a claim and noting that "overcharges are the difference between the defendants' supra-competitive price and the competitive price.").

[4] The Court notes the difference between antitrust impact and the calculation of damages. "In antitrust and securities fraud class actions, '[p]roof of injury (whether or not an injury occurred at all) must be distinguished from calculation of damages (which determines the actual value of the injury).'" Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311 (quoting Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 188 (3d Cir. 2001)). The Supreme Court has explained that plaintiffs under § 4 of the Clayton Act must prove "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, (1977)).

The plaintiff's theory of antitrust impact [*24] is that the class members suffered an illegal overcharge by purchasing branded Wellbutrin XL during the class period when the class could have instead purchased cheaper, generic bioequivalent drugs, but for the defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct. The defendants argue that the price differential between branded and generic Wellbutrin XL is irrelevant for antitrust impact because the products are not fungible in the marketplace. Instead, the defendants urge the Court only to consider whether the price charged for Wellbutrin XL was higher than it would have been in the "but for world." In support of this argument, Dr. Joskow, presented evidence that the price of Wellbutrin XL did not decrease after generic entry. Defs.' Opp'n Ex. 1 ("Joskow Decl.") ¶¶ 42-55; Defs.' Sur-Reply Ex. A ("Joskow Reb. Decl.") ¶¶ 1-7.

The issue presented by this dispute is the appropriate reference point for the but-for "competitive price." The Court must decide whether an illegal overcharge for Wellbutrin XL is based on a comparison between the pre- and post-generic entry price differences for the branded drug itself or whether an overcharge should take into account the difference in prices between the [*25] foreclosed generic and the branded drug. The starting point for any such decision is the landmark Supreme Court case, Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). In Hanover Shoe, a shoe machinery manufacturer, United, refused to sell its machinery to its customers, including Hanover Shoe. Instead, United would lease the machinery to customers. The District Court determined that if United had sold its machines, the cost to Hanover would have been less than the rental paid for leasing the same machines. This overcharge, trebled, was the amount of damages awarded to Hanover.

On appeal before the Supreme Court, United argued that Hanover had not suffered an antitrust injury because it had passed on the illegal overcharge to the end shoe purchasers. The Supreme Court rejected this theory and held that a direct purchaser suing for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act is injured by the full amount of the overcharge, even if the excess cost was passed on to the end purchasers. Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 494.

The Hanover Shoe decision rested on two major policy concerns. First, the Court was concerned with the additional complication that would be required by a pass-on [*26] defense. See id at 492-93. Second, the Court was concerned with the effectiveness of enforcement of the antitrust laws through private actions. The Court explained that end customers might "have only a tiny stake in a lawsuit and little interest in attempting a class action. In consequence, those who violate the antitrust laws . . . would retain the fruits of their illegality because no one was available who would bring suit against them." Id. at 494. "As long as the seller continues to charge the illegal price, he takes from the buyer more than the law allows." Id. at 489.

The defendants argue that the overcharge in Hanover Shoe is distinguishable from the plaintiff's theory of overcharge in this case. In support of this argument, the defendants rely on an indirect purchaser case from the Third Circuit. See Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 424 F.3d 363 (3d Cir. 2005). In Howard Hess, the plaintiffs were dental laboratories who were indirect purchasers of artificial teeth, which are used to make dentures. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant manufacturer foreclosed other competitors' access to intermediary dealers, which are the primary distributors to dental [*27] labs and set the dealers' resale prices. The indirect purchaser plaintiffs argued, among other things, that they had standing to recover lost profits damages caused by their lost opportunities to purchase and resell the defendant's competitors' products. The Court held that they did not. Id. at 376. The Court concluded that Illinois Brick's prohibition on indirect purchaser actions could not be circumvented on a theory of lost profits caused by lost opportunities to purchase and resell the competitors' products. Id.

Howard Hess, the defendants argue, "confirmed that the concept of an overcharge applies where the product itself has an illegally high price." (Defs.' Sur-reply at 7.) The defendants are correct that the price of the goods actually purchased must be illegally high. In Howard Hess, the Court observed that:

> When antitrust violators cause prices to increase through monopolization, a price-fixing conspiracy, or exclusionary conduct, the harm they cause members of the distribution chain comes in two forms: (1) overcharges paid for goods actually purchased; and (2) lost profits resulting from the lost opportunity to buy and resell a greater volume of goods.

Howard Hess, 424 F.3d at 373 [*28] (emphasis added) (footnote omitted). The defendants' reliance on Howard Hess, however, conflates two important issues: (1) whether a plaintiff suffered antitrust impact at all (i.e., by actually purchasing a product with an illegally high price) and (2) the proper reference point for the overcharge. Although the product actually purchased must have an illegally high price, this does not resolve the question as to the proper "but for" competitive market price.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has recognized that an overcharge may be measured with respect to the prices of lower cost competitors. In In re Lower Lake Erie, the Court of Appeals upheld overcharge damages that were based on the difference between the defendants' services and the lower prices the plaintiffs would have paid for more efficient, competing services that were excluded from the market. See In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1169 (3d Cir. 1993) (measuring overcharges as the difference between the amount paid to transport ore and the lower prices that would have been paid for a more efficient, lower cost system).

The services in Lower Lake Erie were not identical, [*29] but rather were substitutes for each other. The defendants in Lower Lake Erie excluded the adoption of self-unloading transport that did not require the use of a hulett, which is a type of manually operated crane. Lower Lake Erie, 998 F.2d at 1153. The difference in cost between use of the two systems was the measure of the overcharge. Id. at 1169. See also In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 200 F.R.D. 297, 311 (E.D. Mich. 2001) ("Antitrust law requires only that the two products at issue be close substitutes for each other.").

The defendants argue that branded and generic Wellbutrin XL are not fungible and that any difference in price between branded and generic Wellbutrin XL is caused in part by factors such as consumer perceptions that the branded drug is safer or more effective. The defendants presented anecdotal reports regarding the quality of Teva Pharmaceuticals' 300 mg version of extended-release bupropion hydrochloride. In the wake of these reports, a consolidated class action has been filed that alleges that Teva's version of 300 mg extended-release bupropion hydrochloride had a more rapid release that made it less effective. See In re Budeprion XL Mktg. & Sales Litig., MDL No. 2107, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51980 (E.D. Pa. May 26, 2010) [*30] (Schiller, J.) (denying defendants' motion to dismiss).

The defendants' expert, Dr. Joskow, observed that such quality perception issues "might" have affected the price of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride. See Pl.'s Opp'n Ex. BB at 32:16-17. The defendants also argue that branded drugs in general have a market value above generics that is in part a reflection of quality assurance that the brand is intended to convey. The defendants conclude that price differences between branded and generic Wellbutrin reflect, at least in part, differences in perceived value. [5]

Although there may be some qualitative differences between branded Wellbutrin XL and its generic equivalents, the FDA's certification of bioequivalence supports the plaintiff's theory of overcharge. "FDA-approved generic drugs are certified by the FDA as bioequivalent to the branded drug whose [New Drug Application] the generic [*31] drug relied upon in its [Abbreviated New Drug Application], and are completely interchangeable with that branded drug." Meijer, Inc., 246 F.R.D. at 297. See also N.T. at 118 (quoting FDA, Generic Drugs: Questions and Answers, http://www.fda.gov/drugs/resourcesforyou/consumers/questionsanswers/ucm100100.htm (last visited Aug. 2, 2011) ("A generic drug is identical — or bioequivalent — to a brand name drug in dosage form, safety, strength, route of administration, quality, performance characteristics and intended use. Although generic drugs are chemically identical to their branded counterparts, they are typically sold at substantial discounts from the branded price.").

---

[5] To the extent that the defendants' quality perception arguments relate to the amount of damages instead of the existence of antitrust impact, the Court will address that issue below. See Joskow Dep. Feb. 15, 2011 at 46-47 (referring to quality perception issues "as mostly a damages issue.").

Almost all states encourage generic competition through laws that allow pharmacists to substitute brand-name drugs with their AB-rated generic equivalents, unless a physician directs otherwise. See N.T. at 55; Meijer, Inc., 246 F.R.D. at 297. Many health insurance plans encourage the substitution of available AB-rated generic drugs for their branded counterparts. Meijer, Inc., 246 F.R.D. at 297 (citations omitted). Market data from the introduction of generic Wellbutrin XL also demonstrates that generic Wellbutrin XL quickly [*32] captured the vast majority of sales volume and that generic Wellbutrin XL is indeed a substitute for branded Wellbutrin XL. See N.T. at 38:10-39:25 ("[D]epending on the time period, 70 to 90 percent of the volume converts to the generic.").

The defendants' approach would also fail to capture the full economic loss caused by the exclusionary conduct during the period when competition was suppressed. Cf. In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 531 (3d Cir. 2004) (certifying settlement class) ("Notably, [indirect purchasers] suffered direct economic harm when . . . they paid supracompetitive prices for Coumadin instead of purchasing lower-priced generic warfarin sodium."). The defendants' narrow view of overcharge is inconsistent with the underlying justification for the direct purchaser rule established by Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick.

The Court concludes that the plaintiff may demonstrate antitrust impact by showing that class members paid an illegal overcharge by purchasing Wellbutrin XL instead of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride as a result of the defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct. This result is consistent with other cases that have addressed [*33] this legal issue. See, e.g., *In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1479, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 26-27 & n.12 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011) (noting that an increase in the price of Neurontin after generic entry is "irrelevant" to antitrust impact); Am. Sales Co. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 274 F.R.D. 127, 136 (E.D. Pa. 2010) ("Delayed generic entry into the market necessarily injures those direct purchasers, because those purchasers are forced to pay for the more expensive branded drugs."); Meijer, Inc. v. Warner Chilcott Holdings Co. III, 246 F.R.D. 293, 310 (D.D.C. 2007) (same). Cf. In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 531 (3d Cir. 2004) ("[I]t [is] well recognized that a purchaser in a market where competition has been wrongfully restrained has suffered an antitrust injury . . . ."). The Court is not aware of any courts that have reached a different conclusion.

(2) Statutory Injury Requirement

Section 4 of the Clayton Act creates a private right of action for "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (emphasis added). The defendants initially conceded that if the direct [*34] purchasers paid an illegal overcharge, then there is no need for the plaintiff to prove actual economic harm from the complained of conduct. See Defs.' Opp'n at 15-16 ("[W]here a direct purchaser pays an overcharged price it may be able to recover damages even though it has suffered no actual economic harm. This is a significant departure from the normal rule in antitrust cases that an antitrust plaintiff must show economic injury in fact to his business or property, as a prerequisite to prevailing in its antitrust suit.") (emphasis in original).

In supplemental briefing, the defendants argued that a recent decision by the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit recognizes that plaintiffs seeking antitrust damages must have suffered some "actual injury." See Defs.' Supp. Opp'n at 1 citing Warren Gen. Hosp. v. Amgen Inc., 643 F.3d 77, 2011 WL 2321393 (3d Cir. 2011). Hanover Shoe, the defendants argue, could not eliminate the statutory injury requirement of Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). Under the defendants' view, direct purchasers are not injured within the meaning of Section 4 if they economically benefitted from the alleged exclusionary conduct. [*35] The defendants argue that because PDC relies on an overcharge theory, it has failed to offer class-wide means of proving "actual injury" to class members.

In Warren General v. Amgen, Warren General Hospital was an indirect purchaser of pharmaceuticals that were manufactured by Amgen and distributed by AmerisourceBergen. Warren General alleged that Amgen violated federal antitrust law by "tying" the purchase of two of its drugs, Neupogen and Neulasta, to the sale of another Amgen drug, Aranesp. The hospital argued that it could assert claims under federal antitrust law against Amgen because it was the entity harmed by Amgen's tying scheme, not AmerisourceBergen. The Court concluded that Warren General could not assert a federal antitrust claim.

> It is a basic tenet of antitrust law that a cause of action will not lie if the plaintiff has not been harmed. However, the hospital's argument conflates the different components of antitrust standing: the statutory requirement contained in Section 4 that the plaintiff be the direct purchaser as set forth in Illinois Brick and the requirement that the plaintiff have suffered a recognizable injury. . . .
>
> The question in this case is whether Warren [*36] General is a direct purchaser under Illinois Brick, and we hold that it is not.

Warren Gen. Hosp. v. Amgen Inc., 643 F.3d 77, 92 (3d Cir. 2011). (citations omitted).

In rejecting the hospital's argument, the Court of Appeals emphasized the logic of the direct purchaser rule because a wholesaler can be injured even though an indirect purchaser bears the majority of the injury. Id. at 94 ("Because of the complicated interplay between market forces, the possibility that the wholesaler was harmed by defendant's actions exists even if the majority of the injury is borne by the indirect purchaser."). The Court explained that consistent application of the direct purchaser rule is necessary to avoid being mired in difficult calculations between direct and indirect purchaser injuries. Id. The injury that direct purchasers suffer is the full extent of the overcharge, even though the overcharge may be absorbed by other parties.

> [O]n balance . . . the legislative purpose in creating a group of private attorneys general to enforce the antitrust laws . . . is better served by holding direct purchasers to be injured to the full extent of the overcharge paid by them than by attempting to apportion the [*37] overcharge among all that may have absorbed a part of it.

Id. at 95 (quoting Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746) (emphasis added).

The Court reads Warren General as reaffirming the longstanding rule that a direct purchaser suffers injury within the meaning of 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) from an overcharge even if "the majority of the injury" is borne by indirect purchasers. Warren General, 643 F.3d at 94-95. If the direct purchaser class members paid an illegal overcharge, they have been injured within the meaning of Section 4 of the Clayton Act. See id. at 92; Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 491 (noting the "general principle" that "the victim of an overcharge is damaged within the meaning of § 4 to the extent of that overcharge.").

(3) Application

The Court concludes that to demonstrate antitrust impact, the plaintiff must first show that the price of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride would have been lower than Wellbutrin XL absent the defendants' anticompetitive conduct. The plaintiff must also show that the class members would have substituted at least some generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride for Wellbutrin XL during the class period. See *Neurontin, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 28 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011).

The [*38] next issue is whether common evidence can demonstrate that generic prices would have been lower than branded prices in the "but for world." The plaintiff's expert, Dr. Leitzinger, presented three types of evidence to support class-based evidence of antitrust injury: (1) economic research and literature relating to the price relationship between branded and generic drugs, (2) the defendants' and generic manufacturers' internal forecasting documents, (3) and empirical data demonstrating that generics did enter the market at lower prices and were rapidly substituted for branded Wellbutrin XL. See N.T. 34-46; Pl.'s Mot. Ex. N ("Leitzinger Decl."); Pl.'s Reply Ex. W ("Leitzinger Reb. Decl.") ¶¶ 4-7.

Dr. Leitzinger presented evidence that the price of extended-release bupropion hydrochloride would have been lower than Wellbutrin XL at all times in the "but for world" absent the defendants' anticompetitive conduct. Dr. Leitzinger explained that economic literature provides an understanding regarding the general effects of generic entry on the market for a branded pharmaceutical. See N.T. at 34-35 ("[The literature has] a common bottom line . . . which is generic drugs save a lot of money.").

Dr. [*39] Leitzinger also presented Biovail's internal forecasting documents, which showed that within 12 months, Biovail forecasted that the branded market share would decrease to around 12%-13%, from 100% in the previous year. N.T. 36-37, Pl.'s Ex. 8. Dr. Leitzinger also presented sales data from five generic manufacturers of extended-release bupropion hydrochloride. Upon initial generic entry, the average price of the generic was approximately 25% below the branded price, which decreased to about 10% of the branded price two years after generic entry. N.T. at 39. Dr. Leitzinger acknowledged that there is some variability in generic prices based upon negotiations with generic manufacturers and other factors, but prices of generics are always cheaper than branded prices. N.T. 43-44. The defendants' rebuttal evidence failed to contradict this point. See N.T. at 122 (Dr. Joskow testifying that prices for generics, whether purchased directly or indirectly from generic manufacturers, were always lower than prices for Wellbutrin XL).

The defendants, however, did present evidence that raises questions regarding whether common proof can be used to demonstrate antitrust impact for class members that [*40] did not purchase extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available and for class members who were indirect purchases of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride.

Two direct purchasers did not purchase extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available, Allied Med Wholesale Drug, Co. and Goodwin Drug Co. N.T. at 40-41. For entities that did purchase extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available, it is a reasonable inference that these entities would have purchased extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in the "but for world," absent the alleged exclusionary conduct. This inference, however, is not persuasive for Allied Med Wholesale Drug, Co. and Goodwin Drug Co. without additional evidence. Proof of antitrust impact for these class members would require individual analysis into the antitrust impact, if any, they suffered from the alleged conduct. The Court finds that the plaintiff has not proven that it can demonstrate antitrust impact with class-wide evidence for these two entities and the Court will exclude them from the class definition. Plaintiffs and courts in other delayed generic entry cases have modified class definitions [*41] to accommodate this concern. See *Neurontin, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 34 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011); *K-Dur, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118396, 2008 WL 2699390, at 21 ("[E]xcluded are persons or entities who have not purchased generic versions of K-Dur 20 after the introduction of generic versions of K-Dur 20.").

Four of the direct purchasers, including the plaintiff PDC, were indirect purchasers of extended-release bupropion hydrochloride. These direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL did not buy generics directly from the generic manufacturer, but rather bought generics indirectly from other wholesalers or distributors.

These indirect purchasers of generics, however, were still direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL under Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick. The relevance of the generic purchases is that a fact finder could infer that these entities would have made generic purchases in the "but for" world, and thereby may have suffered an alleged overcharge for actual purchases of branded Wellbutrin XL. See Howard Hess, 424 F.3d at 373.

These class members' direct branded purchases can be shown through common data applicable to all direct purchasers. The class members' indirect generic purchasers can also be demonstrated through [*42] chargeback data from Teva and sales data from four generic distributors, Top Rx, Masters Pharmaceuticals, Auburn Pharmaceuticals, and Quest Pharmaceuticals. See Leitzinger Reb. Decl. ¶ 36 & n.43. These purchasers may have paid more for extended-release bupropion hydrochloride because they purchased from distributors instead of directly from the manufacturers, but any differences relate to the amount of damages, not fact of damages. N.T. at 44 (Leitzinger testifying) ("[Y]ou may have people that buy [generics] further down the distribution chain . . . [b]ut that doesn't change at all the basic reality that those prices are going to be much lower than the brand would have been."). Because the alleged overcharge for these purchasers can be demonstrated with distributor and manufacturer data that does not depend on individual class members, any individual issues for proof of antitrust impact for these four class members will not predominate over issues common to the class.

The Court concludes that the plaintiff has shown that for the class members that purchased branded Wellbutrin XL during the class period and extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available, these class [*43] members would have converted some purchases of branded Wellbutrin XL to generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in the "but for world." The plaintiff has also shown that evidence of the alleged overcharge can be shown with data that is common to the class. The Court therefore finds the predominance requirement has been satisfied for class members who purchased both extended-release bupropion hydrochloride and Wellbutrin XL. The Court excludes from the class definition direct purchasers who did not purchase extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available.

c. Measurable Damages

The third element for each of the plaintiff's causes of action is measurable damages. At trial, "[i]t is not necessary to show with total certainty the amount of damages sustained." Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 483 (3d Cir. 1998). A jury is permitted to calculate the actual damages suffered using a "reasonable estimate, as long as the jury verdict is not the product of speculation or guess work." Id. at 484 (citations and quotations omitted). See also Lower Lake Erie, 998 F.2d at 1176 ("the relaxed measure of proof is afforded to the amount, not the causation of loss [*44] . . . .") (citations omitted).

At the class certification stage, the plaintiff is not required to prove damages by calculating specific damages figures for each member of the class, but rather they must show that a reliable method is available to prove damages on a class-wide basis. See Bell Atl. Corp. v. AT&T Corp., 339 F.3d 294, 303 (5th Cir. 2003) (noting that section 4 plaintiffs must provide a "just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data."); *Neurontin, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 40 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011).

The Third Circuit has explained that plaintiffs may choose in an antitrust case between either seeking overcharges or lost profits, and in this case, the plaintiff has chosen to pursue overcharges. See Howard Hess, 424 F.3d at 375 (noting that overcharges avoid "the complex netting associated with lost profits") (quoting Roger D. Blair & William H. Page, "Speculative" Antitrust Damages, 70 Wash. L. Rev. 423, 433-34 (1995)). [6]

Dr. Leitzinger's damages methodology is based on the "before and after" method. This methodology produces an aggregate damages estimate that is based on deriving a benchmark for generic prices in the "but for world" based on the actual experience for branded and generic prices after entry. The market data for actual sales is "backcasted" to estimate prices, but for the alleged delay. Dr. Leitzinger proposes to calculate damages as the difference between the weighted-average price that class members paid for all extended-release bupropion hydrochloride products (branded plus generics) and the weighted average that class members would have paid but for the alleged conduct. Dr. Leitzinger then multiplies the difference by the volume of extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in the but-for world to arrive at an aggregate measure of overcharge. See Leitzinger [*46] Decl. at 37-43; Leitzinger Reb. Decl. ¶¶ 38-58; N.T. at 46-59. [7]

The defendants present three main critiques of Dr. Leitzinger's damages model. First, Dr. Joskow argues that the plaintiff's model fails to account for price effects unrelated to the defendants' conduct such as quality differences between generic and name brand Wellbutrin XL. Second, Dr. Joskow faults the model for using a single ratio and average prices to calculate aggregate damages. Third, Dr. Joskow argues that the model is overinclusive because the direct purchasers would have made fewer purchases in the "but for world."

The plaintiffs have adequately rebutted the defendants' argument that the damages model fails to account for the possible price effects of quality perception issues. Dr. Joskow noted that he had not done an empirical analysis to address whether the price of Teva's generics was affected by perception issues, but he opined that a damages model should account for [*47] the difference. See Pl.'s Opp'n Ex. BB at 46. Dr. Leitzinger countered that the data showed that Teva's prices were actually higher than prices charged by other generic manufacturers. See Leitzinger Reb. Decl. ¶ 57. Biovail's internal analysis also concluded that "it seems like the data is showing that the market has not penalized Teva's formulation." Id. Furthermore, Dr. Leitzinger testified that the overcharge model could accommodate this concern, if borne out by the data. N.T. at 56:1-12.

[6] See also id. at 374 (quoting ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Proving Antitrust Damages 193-94 (1996) ("Where a group of suppliers conspires to . . . prevent a more efficient supplier from entering the market . . . purchasers from the [*45] conspirators would also have antitrust claims because they pay higher prices as a result of the exclusionary practice. The purchasers' damages would be based on the overcharge they paid measured by the difference between the price actually paid and the price that would have been paid absent collusion, multiplied by the quantity.").

[7] This methodology has been used in similar cases that allege unlawful delay of generic competition. See, e.g., *Neurontin, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 41 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011); *K-Dur, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118396, 2008 WL 2699390, at 19-20; Cardizem, 200 F.R.D. at 323.

Dr. Leitzinger has also clarified that his methodology does not rely on a single price ratio for the damages period, as Dr. Joskow suggested. Rather, Dr. Leitzinger used a single ratio as an example in his initial declaration because he was modeling data from the first six months of entry when there was only one generic entrant. See Leitzinger Reb. Decl. ¶ 44. Dr. Leitzinger also explained that the use of average prices and price ratios properly accounts for "chargebacks," which result when direct purchasers are reimbursed for sales to contract customers that are priced below the direct purchasers' acquisition price. Dr. Joskow's calculations based on daily price calculations, Dr. Leitzinger observes, [*48] "reflect wild swings day-to-day purely as a result of the inherent mismatch between sales and chargebacks that daily averages produce." Id. ¶ 48. By averaging sales transactions over longer periods of time, the actual price is more accurately reflected. Id. The Court is persuaded that Dr. Leitzinger has set forth a reliable damages methodology.

The defendants also argue that the plaintiff's model is flawed because it fails to account for generic bypass. Generic bypass refers to the situation whereby direct purchasers may lose sales volume because end purchasers often buy generics directly from the generic manufacturer and "cut out the middle man" or "bypass" the wholesaler. The defendants argue that Dr. Leitzinger's methodology calculates total damages based on the total number of tablets that class members actually purchased rather than the number of tablets that the class members would have purchased in the but-for world. The number of tablets in the but-for world would likely be lower because of the generic bypass phenomenon. In response to the defendants' generic bypass arguments, Dr. Leitzinger explained that bypass can be "readily incorporated into my overcharge calculation by [*49] reducing the volumes used in calculating the overcharge by the amount of bypass the occurred following generic entry in the actual world." Leitzinger Reb. Decl. ¶ 42.

In In re Relafen Antitrust Litigation, the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts concluded that reducing damages because of generic bypass argument is inconsistent with Hanover Shoe. See In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 346 F. Supp. 2d 349, 369 (D. Mass. 2004). At this stage, however, the Court need not resolve whether the effects of generic bypass must be deducted from damages because the plaintiff's burden at this stage is to demonstrate a reliable methodology to estimate class-wide damages. The plaintiff has done so here. See *Neurontin, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 42-43 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011) (noting that the plaintiffs offered a reasonable, judicially recognized methodology for calculating damages and have shown that the data needed to make these calculations is available and common to the class). Whether or not generic bypass must be accounted for is a matter that can be accommodated within the methodology proposed by Dr. Leitzinger.

2. Superiority

Lastly, the Court considers whether a class [*50] action is "superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). This "requirement asks the court to balance, in terms of fairness and efficiency, the merits of a class action against those of alternative methods of adjudication." In Re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 316 (3d Cir. 1998). It is meant to ensure that resolution by class action will "achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote . . . uniformity of decision without sacrificing procedural fairness or bringing about other undesirable results." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 615 (quoting Advisory Committee's Note on Fed. R. Civ. P. 23).

The Court finds that the superiority requirement is met here. As discussed above, this action involves numerous complex issues of law and fact that are common to the class. Individual treatment of each class members' claims would require duplicative, expensive litigation, which would come at enormous expense to the parties and judicial economy. Class resolution would also avoid problems of inconsistent resolution. This result is consistent with other courts that have addressed similar [*51] cases. See, e.g., *Neurontin, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 45-47 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011); Meijer, 246 F.R.D. at 313; Relafen, 218 F.R.D. at 346.

III. Conclusion

The Court concludes that the plaintiff has satisfied its burden to certify a class of direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL who also purchased extended-release buproprion hydrochloride after it became available.

An appropriate order will follow separately.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 11th day of August, 2011, upon consideration of the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Docket No. 134), the opposition, reply, sur-reply, supplemental opposition, and supplemental reply thereto, the accompanying expert declarations, the hearing on April 5, 2011, and for the reasons stated in a memorandum of today's date, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the motion is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that:

1. The following direct purchaser litigation class is hereby certified pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) and 23(b)(3): "All persons or entities in the United States and its territories who purchased Wellbutrin XL directly from any of the Defendants at any time during the period of November 14, 2005 through [*52] August 31, 2009 (the 'Class Period'). Excluded from the class are Defendants and their officers, directors, management, employees, parents, subsidiaries, and affiliates, and federal government entities. Further excluded from the class are persons or entities who have not purchased generic versions of Wellbutrin XL during the class period after the introduction of generic versions of Wellbutrin XL."

2. Class claims, issues, and defenses are those incorporated into the Court's memorandum of today's date as well as the affirmative defenses raised in the defendants' answers. See Docket Nos. 83, 84.

3. Professional Drug Company, Inc. is hereby appointed representative of the direct purchaser class.

4. The following firms are hereby appointed as counsel to the direct purchaser class:

Co-lead Counsel
Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro, LLP
Thomas M. Sobol, Esquire
David S. Nalven, Esquire
Berger & Montague, P.C.
David F. Sorenson, Esquire

Liaison Counsel
Rodanast, P.C.
Joseph F. Roda, Esquire
Dianne M. Nast, Esquire
Jennifer S. Snyder, Esquire

Additional Class Counsel
Faruqi & Faruqi, LLP
Peter Kohn, Esquire
Taus, Cebulash, and Landau, LLP
Barry Taus, Esquire
Archana Tamoshounas, Esquire
Don Barrett, P.A.

Don Barrett, [*53] Esquire

5. Within 30 days of the date of this Order, the parties shall submit an agreed upon proposed notice program and forms of notice to class members. If the parties are unable to agree as to the proposed notice program and/or forms of notice, they shall submit separate proposals.

BY THE COURT:

/s/ Mary A. McLaughlin

MARY A. McLAUGHLIN, J.

End of Document

In re Wellpoint Out-Of-Network "UCR" Rates Litig.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

August 11, 2011, Decided; August 11, 2011, Filed

Case No. MDL 09-2074 PSG (FFMx)

Reporter

865 F. Supp. 2d 1002 *; 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89512 ; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,563; 52 Employee Benefits Cas. (BNA) 1371

In re WellPoint, Inc. Out-of-Network "UCR" Rates Litigation

Subsequent History: Dismissed by, in part, Without prejudice, Dismissed by, in part, Motion denied by, in part In re WellPoint, Inc. Out-Of-Network "UCR" Rates Litig., 903 F. Supp. 2d 880, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152498 (C.D. Cal., Sept. 6, 2012)

Dismissed by, in part, Motion denied by, in part In re WellPoint, Inc. Out-of-Network "UCR" Rates Litig., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 208787 (C.D. Cal., July 19, 2013)

Prior History: Samsell v. WellPoint, Inc. (In re Wellpoint, Inc.), 652 F. Supp. 2d 1375, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 124175 (J.P.M.L., Aug. 20, 2009)

Core Terms

Plaintiffs', Defendants', allegations, reimbursements, insurers, database, Provider, motion to dismiss, enterprise, participating, Subscriber, benefits, Sherman Act, Conspirators, pleaded, conspiracy, predicate act, mail, fraudulent, futility, rates, insurance business, depressed, rule of reason, misleading, cause of action, wire fraud, fiduciary, plans, breach of fiduciary duty

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a defendant may move to dismiss a cause of action if the plaintiff fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In evaluating the sufficiency of a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), the courts must be mindful that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require that the complaint contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Nevertheless, judicial precedent instructs that a complaint that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In resolving a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, the court must first accept as true all nonconclusory, factual allegations made in the complaint. Based upon these allegations, the court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. After accepting as true all nonconclusory allegations and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff, the court must then determine whether the complaint alleges a plausible claim to relief. In determining whether the alleged facts cross the threshold from the possible to the plausible, the court is required to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 marks a notable and generous departure from the hyper-technical, code-pleading regime of a prior era, but it does not unlock the doors of discovery for a plaintiff armed with nothing more than conclusions.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN3[] Standing, Elements

U.S. Const. art. III standing is a jurisdictional prerequisite to a federal court's consideration of any claim. A plaintiff in federal court must show three things: (1) injury-in-fact; (2) causation, and (3) redressibility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN4[] Standing, Requirements

For U.S. Const. art. III purposes, an antitrust plaintiff establishes injury-in-fact when he has suffered an injury which bears a causal connection to the alleged antitrust violation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Naked assertions devoid of further factual enhancement cannot withstand a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN6[] Justiciability, Standing

If a challenge to standing is based only on the insufficiency of the allegations in the complaint on their face, the challenge is said to be a facial attack. If, on the other hand, a challenge to standing disputes the truth of the allegations purportedly conferring standing, the challenge is said to be a factual attack.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN7[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court is permitted to review evidence beyond the complaint when resolving a factual attack on jurisdiction. Once the moving party has converted the motion to dismiss into a factual motion by presenting affidavits or other evidence properly brought before the court, the party opposing the motion must furnish affidavits or other evidence necessary to satisfy its burden of establishing subject matter jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN8[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has cautioned that jurisdictional dismissals in cases premised on federal-question jurisdiction are exceptional, and must satisfy the requirements specified in judicial precedent. Dismissal is warranted where the alleged claim under the United States Constitution or federal statutes clearly appears to be immaterial and made solely for the purpose of obtaining federal jurisdiction or where such claim is wholly insubstantial and frivolous. In fact, where the jurisdictional issue and substantive issues are so intertwined, or stated somewhat differently, when a statute provides the basis for both the subject matter jurisdiction of the federal court and the plaintiffs' substantive claim for relief, a factual attack is proper only when the allegations of the complaint are frivolous. If the defendant's challenge to the court's jurisdiction is also a challenge to the existence of a federal cause of action, the proper course of action for the district court is to find that jurisdiction exists and deal with the objection as a direct attack on the merits of the plaintiff's case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The requirements for standing to maintain a civil action under RICO and the antitrust laws are similar. Both provide a private right of action for damages only to those individuals injured in their business or property by reason of a violation of the law's substantive provisions.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Particular Parties

HN10[] Standing, Particular Parties

An abstract concern with issues facing an association's membership is insufficient to confer individual standing upon that association.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Particular Parties

HN11[] Standing, Particular Parties

An association may have representative standing if (1) its members would have standing to sue in their own right, (2) the interests that the association seeks to protect in the litigation are germane to the association's organizational purpose, and (3) the claims and relief will not require the participation of the association's individual members.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN12[] Sherman Act, Claims

15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade. Not every agreement that restrains competition violates the Sherman Act. Rather, the Sherman Act prohibits conspiracies and agreements that unreasonably restrain trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN13[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Claims under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act are evaluated under either a per se analysis or the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN14[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act prohibits some arrangements as a matter of law, and restraints that fall within certain narrow categories are deemed to be per se violations. In order to state a claim for a per se violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs must allege sufficient facts that the defendants (1) entered into an agreement (2) to fix prices, rig bids, or divide a market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN15[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, plaintiffs must offer particular factual allegations that the defendants entered into an illegal agreement. In order to allege a conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must provide the specific time, place, or persons involved in the alleged conspiracy. Mere allegations of parallel conduct will not suffice. See id.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN16[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

While allegations of opportunities to conspire alone are insufficient to infer a conspiracy under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, such opportunities demonstrate how and when the defendants had opportunities to exchange information or make agreements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN17[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

As a general matter, agreements to fix prices among competitors is one of the discrete categories of restraints reserved for per se treatment. Horizontal price fixing is per se unlawful regardless of whether the prices set are minimum or maximum.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN18[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The question of whether a plaintiff's allegations comprise a per se claim is normally a question of legal characterization that can often be resolved by the judge on a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN19[] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Vertical price fixing is not subject to per se analysis and must be evaluated according to the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN20[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

As a general matter, agreements among competitors to exchange information are analyzed under the rule of reason because such exchanges can facilitate competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN21[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

In order to state a rule of reason claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate the following three elements: (1) the persons or entities to the agreement intend to harm or restrain competition; (2) an actual injury to competition occurs; and (3) the restraint is unreasonable as determined by balancing the restraint and any justifications or pro-competitive effects of the restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN22[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

In stating a rule of reason claim under the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must identify a relevant market, which must be defined in terms of both product and geography. In addition to identifying a relevant market, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant has market power within that market; otherwise the defendant's restraint on trade would not have a substantial anticompetitive effect. As the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has observed, there is no requirement that these relevant market and market power elements of the antitrust claim be pled with specificity.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > McCarran-Ferguson Act

HN23[] Federal Regulations, McCarran-Ferguson Act

The McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts from federal antitrust laws all conduct that (1) is part of the business of insurance, (2) is regulated by state law, and (3) is not a boycott, coercion, or intimidation. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-1015.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > McCarran-Ferguson Act

HN24[] Federal Regulations, McCarran-Ferguson Act

In order to constitute part of the business of insurance under the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the practice must (1) have the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk, (2) be an integral part of the policy relationship between the insurer and the insured, and (3) be limited to entities within the insurance industry. Judicial precedent instructs that the McCarran-Ferguson exemption was focused on the relationship between the insurer and its agents and the insured. Moreover, the statute exempts the business of insurance and not the business of insurance companies. Finally, exemptions from antitrust laws under the McCarran-Ferguson Act are to be narrowly construed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN25[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN26[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

For a plaintiff to state a claim under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c), he or she must allege (1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN27[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act is to be read broadly and liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN28[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act defines enterprise in a fairly pedestrian manner: any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(4). This seemingly innocuous definition, however, has commanded much attention, particularly with respect to the meaning of a group of individuals associated in fact. Judicial precedent stepped in early and defined an associated-in-fact enterprise as an ongoing organization whose various associates function as a continuing unit. Though this is not a stringent standard, an associated-in-fact enterprise must have three structural features: (1) a purpose, (2) relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and (3) longevity sufficient to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise's purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN29[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

For purposes of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), an enterprise is not wholly defined by its system of governance or one particular structure. In fact, liability is not limited to those with a formal position in the enterprise, but some part in directing the enterprise's affairs is required. Direction need not come down through a hierarchical structure or a chain of command; decisions may be made on an ad hoc basis and by any number of methods—by majority vote, consensus, a show of strength, etc. Moreover, members of the group need not have fixed roles; different members may perform different roles at different times. And the group need not have a name, regular meetings, dues, established rules and regulations, disciplinary procedures, or induction or initiation ceremonies. Finally, while the group must function as a continuing unit and remain in existence long enough to pursue a course of conduct, nothing in RICO exempts an enterprise whose associates engage in spurts of activity punctuated by quiescence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN30[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

For purposes of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, an associated-in-fact must have a common purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN31[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

It is clear that a hierarchical structure or a chain of command is not required in order for a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) relationship to be present. And, members of the group need not have fixed roles. However, allegations that several individuals, independently and without coordination, engaged in a pattern of crimes listed as RICO predicates are not enough to show membership in an enterprise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN32[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

Liability for participating in the conduct of a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act enterprise extends only to those who have some part in directing the enterprise's affairs. As it is used here, directing has a different meaning than commonly understood. More is required than simply being involved, but a defendant need not be in-charge or have significant control over or within the enterprise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN33[] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

A pattern of racketeering activity requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after 1970 and the last of which occurred within 10 years after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(5).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN34[] Claims, Fraud

Where the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act is asserted against multiple defendants, a plaintiff must allege at least two predicate acts by each defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

HN35[] Claims, Fraud

To state a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), a plaintiff must allege that the conduct complained of qualifies as racketeering activity. Racketeering activity is defined in RICO by reference to certain predicate acts. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961. Included predicate acts are, among others, mail fraud under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1341, wire fraud under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1343, and embezzlement from pension and welfare funds under 18 U.S.C.S. § 664. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(1)(B).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

HN36[] Claims, Fraud

To state a claim for mail and wire fraud, a plaintiff must plead, in addition to the other elements of a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act claim, (1) a scheme or artifice devised with (2) specific intent to defraud and (3) use of the United States mail or interstate telephone wires in furtherance thereof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN37[] Claims, Fraud

Although the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act itself is not subject to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading standards, predicate acts alleging fraud must be pleaded with particularity. At a minimum, this requires that the complaint must state the time, place and specific content of the false representation as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation. The plaintiff must also set forth more than neutral facts necessary to identify the transaction; he must explain why the statement complained of was false or misleading. In the context of a fraud suit involving multiple defendants, a plaintiff must also identify the role of each defendant in the alleged fraudulent scheme. Although the complaint need not identify false statements made by each and every individual, Rule 9(b) does not allow a complaint to merely lump multiple defendants together but requires plaintiffs to inform each defendant separately of the allegations surrounding his alleged participation in the fraud.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

HN38[] Claims, Fraud

To state a claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), the plaintiff is required to show that a RICO predicate offense not only was a but for cause of his injury, but was the proximate cause as well.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > Fraud

HN39[] Claims, Fraud

Judicial precedent does not say that there is no requirement to plead any reliance for purposes of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, but only that first-party reliance is not required.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Theft & Related Offenses > Embezzlement > General Overview

HN40[] Theft & Related Offenses, Embezzlement

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 664.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Theft & Related Offenses > Embezzlement > General Overview

HN41[] Theft & Related Offenses, Embezzlement

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit recognized that embezzlement traditionally encompassed the fraudulent appropriation of the property of another. The court went on, however, to say that embezzlement under 18 U.S.C.S. § 664 goes beyond traditional embezzlement concepts and imposes liability for an intentional breach of special fiduciary duties imposed by other regulatory statutes or governing instruments.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN42[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Conspiring to violate the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act is a separate offense under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(d).

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

HN43[] Causes of Action, Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) was enacted primarily to protect interstate commerce and the interests of participants in employee benefit plans and their beneficiaries, by requiring the disclosure and reporting of financial and other information and to establish standards of conduct, responsibility, and obligation for fiduciaries of employee benefit plans. 29 U.S.C.S. § 1001(b). To meet those goals, Congress empowered participants, beneficiaries, and fiduciaries of qualified ERISA benefit plans, along with the United States Secretary of Labor, to sue for, inter alia, benefits owed. 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a).

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

HN44[] Causes of Action, Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit ruled that claims for benefits under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(1)(B) can be asserted against an entity other than the plan itself or the plan administrator. The Ninth Circuit's ruling expands the set of defendants who may be properly sued under § 1132(a)(1)(B) to include the insurer.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Remedies > Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

HN45[] Remedies, Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

As a general rule, a plaintiff must exhaust administrative remedies under the relevant benefit plan prior to bringing suit under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(1)(B). Federal courts have the authority to enforce the exhaustion requirement in suits under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act, and that as a matter of sound policy they should usually do so. However, the demonstrated futility of administrative appeals constitutes an exception to the prudential exhaustion doctrine. A plaintiff can demonstrate futility by pointing to a similarly situated plaintiff who exhausted administrative remedies to no avail. Bare assertions of futility are not enough to invoke the futility exception. A plan's refusal to pay does not, by itself, show futility.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation > Standing

HN46[] Civil Litigation, Standing

A health care provider with an allegedly valid assignment has the same standing as the beneficiary and may bring suit under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Remedies > Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Civil Litigation > Standing

HN47[] Remedies, Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

Health care providers with valid assignments are not required to bill the patient when seeking an Employee Retirement Income Security Act claim against a defendant.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Breach of Fiduciary Duty

HN48[] Causes of Action, Breach of Fiduciary Duty

29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(2) authorizes plan participants to bring suit for relief under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Breach of Fiduciary Duty

HN49[] Causes of Action, Breach of Fiduciary Duty

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Breach of Fiduciary Duty

HN50[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

For purposes of 29 U.S.C.S. § 1109, the fiduciary relationship is one with the plan as a whole, and individual beneficiaries bringing a breach of fiduciary duty claim must do so for the benefit of the plan, not to recover solely for individual injuries. To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a plaintiff must allege in the complaint that the fiduciary injured the benefit plan or otherwise jeopardized the entire plan or put at risk plan assets. But, after adoption of the Twombly standard, merely alleging that an Employee Retirement Income Security Act breach of fiduciary duty claim is brought on behalf of, and for the benefit of, the plan and all its participants is not enough.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Suits to Recover Annuity Benefits

HN51[] Causes of Action, Suits to Recover Annuity Benefits

29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(3) makes no mention at all of which parties may be proper defendants, and there is no reason to read a limitation into 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(1)(B) that judicial precedent does not perceive in § 1132(a)(3).

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > General Overview

HN52[] Civil Litigation, Causes of Action

Judicial precedent terms an Employee Retirement Income Security Act breach of fiduciary duty cause of action as a catchall provision or a safety net, offering appropriate equitable relief for injuries caused by violations that 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132 does not elsewhere adequately remedy. The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit similarly held that when relief is available under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(1), courts will not allow relief under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a)(3) catchall provision.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Failures to Respond

HN53[] Causes of Action, Failures to Respond

While an insurer can properly be sued under 29 U.S.C.S. §§ 1132(a)(1)(B) and (a)(3), only the plan administrator can be held liable for failing to comply with 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(c). The Employee Retirement Income Security Act specifically defines an administrator as: (1) the person specifically so designated by the terms of the instrument under which the plan is operated; (2) if an administrator is not so designated, the plan sponsor; or (3) in the case of a plan for which an administrator is not designated and a plan sponsor cannot be identified, such other person as the United States Secretary of Labor may by regulation prescribe. 29 U.S.C.S. § 1002(16)(A).

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Failures to Respond

HN54[] Causes of Action, Failures to Respond

With few exceptions, courts in the Ninth Circuit consistently conclude that 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(c) liability cannot attach to a third party insurer that assumes administrative responsibilities under the de facto administrator theory.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > Elements of Contract Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN55[] Breach of Contract Actions, Elements of Contract Claims

A plaintiff who sues on a written contract is not required to attach a copy of the contract to the complaint, but its existence and how it was breached must be identified.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN56[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., prohibits unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising, as well as any act prohibited by California's false advertising statute. An unlawful business act under § 17200 is any business practice that is prohibited by law, whether civil or criminal, statutory or judicially made, federal, state or local. A business act is unfair under § 17200 "if it violates established public policy or if it is immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous and causes injury to consumers which outweighs its benefits. Finally, a fraudulent business practice under § 17200 is one which is likely to deceive the public, and may be based on representations to the public which are untrue, and also those which may be accurate on some level, but will nonetheless tend to mislead or deceive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN57[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Claims under California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., based on fraud are subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Plaintiffs must plead the who, what, when, where, and how of the alleged fraudulent conduct and explain why a statement or omission complained of was false and misleading.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN58[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Under California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., plaintiffs must specifically allege that the fraudulent conduct caused them injury. This is really an issue of a plaintiff's standing to assert a UCL or California's False Advertising Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq., claim and requires a twofold showing: he or she must demonstrate injury in fact and a loss of money or property caused by unfair competition. In cases of fraud, the fraudulent conduct must be an immediate cause of injury and that, but-for the fraudulent statements, the plaintiffs in all reasonable probability would not have engaged in the injury-producing conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN59[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

An unlawful business act under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 is any business practice that is prohibited by law, whether civil or criminal, statutory or judicially made, federal, state or local. A plaintiff can establish that a business practice was unfair by showing that such conduct threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > State Regulation

HN60[] False Advertising, State Regulation

California's false advertising statute makes it unlawful for a business to disseminate any statement which is untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500. The law encompasses not just false statements but those statements which may be accurate on some level, but will nonetheless tend to mislead or deceive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN61[] False Advertising, State Regulation

District courts in California consistently hold that claims under California's False Advertising Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 et seq., are grounded in fraud. Accordingly, the pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) apply.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN62[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 provides a private right of action to any person injured by a business' deceptive act or practice. A plaintiff must prove three elements to recover under § 349: first, that the challenged act or practice was consumer-oriented; second, that it was misleading in a material way; and third, that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act. Furthermore, where there is a simultaneous claim for breach of contract, a plaintiff must plead losses independent of the loss caused by the alleged breach of contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN63[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Courts interpreting New York law find denial of insurance benefits to be actionable under N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN64[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The United States District Court for the Central District of California recognizes that N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 imposes liability for material omissions on coconspirators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN65[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

California's Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq., is designed to promote free competition, and it, like other antitrust laws, is about the protection of competition, not competitors. Individual damage awards are a tool by which these pre-competitive purposes are carried out, even though the main purpose of the law is to protect the public.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Federal Preemption > State Laws

HN66[] Federal Preemption, State Laws

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) preempts state law causes of action and a plaintiff cannot obtain relief by dressing up an ERISA benefits claim in the garb of state law.

Pensions & Benefits Law > ... > Civil Litigation > Causes of Action > Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

HN67[] Causes of Action, Suits to Recover Plan Benefits

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act provides that a civil action may be brought by a participant or beneficiary to recover benefits due to him under the terms of his plan. 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a).

Pensions & Benefits Law > ERISA > Federal Preemption > State Laws

HN68[] Federal Preemption, State Laws

Even state law claims that do not duplicate Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) remedies are preempted because Congress' intent to make the ERISA civil enforcement mechanism exclusive would be undermined if state causes of action that supplement the 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(a) remedies were permitted.

Counsel: [1] For Wellpoint, Inc., Out-of-Network "UCR" Rates Litigation, In Re: E Desmond Hogan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Washington, DC; Julie A Shepard, LEAD ATTORNEY, David R Singer, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Miranda L Berge, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Hogan & Lovells US LLP, Washington, DC.

For Michael Roberts, Plaintiff: Christopher M Burke, LEAD ATTORNEY, Scott & Scott LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Christopher A Seeger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Diogenes Kekatos, James A O'Brien , III, PRO HAC VICE, Seeger Weiss LLP, New York, NY; James Robert Hail, LEAD ATTORNEY, Doyle Lowther, San Diego, CA; John A Lowther , IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Doyle Lowther LLP, San Diego, CA; Joseph P Guglielmo, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, New York, NY; Kristen Marie Anderson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Scott and Scott LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Stephen A Weiss, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Seeger Weiss, New York, NY; William James Doyle , II, LEAD ATTORNEY, Doyle Lowther LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel [2] Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Penelope Abdiel, Scott & Scott LLP, San Diego, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For J.B.W., a minor, by and through Julz W., parent and guardian ad litem, Plaintiff: Lisa M Burger, Mark N Todzo, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Lexington Law Group LLP, San Francisco, CA; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Michael C Eyerly, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For American Medical Association, California Medical Association, Medical Association of Georgia, Connecticut State Medical Society, M.D. James G Schwendig, Plaintiffs: Artin Gholian, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kabeteck Kellner LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Brian S Kabateck, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kabateck Kellner LLP, Los Angeles, CA; D Brian Hufford, Susan J Weiswasser, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Pomerantz Haudek Block Grossman and Gross LLP, New York, NY; Edith M Kallas, Joe R Whatley , Jr, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Whatley Drake & Kallas [3] LLC, New York, NY; Helen E Zukin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Joshua H Haffner, Richard L Kellner, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Kabateck Brown Kellner LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Robert J Axelrod, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Pomerantz Haudeck Block Grossman and Gross LLP, New York, NY; W Tucker Brown, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Whatley Drake & Kallas LLC, Birmingham, AL; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Martha J Fessenden, PRO HAC VICE, Doffermyre Shields Canfield & Knowles, LLC, Atlanta, GA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For North Carolina Medical Society, M.D. Stephen D Henry, Plaintiffs: Artin Gholian, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kabeteck Kellner LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Brian S Kabateck, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kabateck Kellner LLP, Los Angeles, CA; D Brian Hufford, Susan J Weiswasser, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Pomerantz Haudek Block Grossman and Gross LLP, New York, NY; Edith M Kallas, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Whatley Drake & Kallas LLC, New [4] York, NY; Helen E Zukin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Joshua H Haffner, Richard L Kellner, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Kabateck Brown Kellner LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Robert J Axelrod, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Pomerantz Haudeck Block Grossman and Gross LLP, New York, NY; W Tucker Brown, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Whatley Drake & Kallas LLC, Birmingham, AL; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman

& Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Martha J Fessenden, PRO HAC VICE, Doffermyre Shields Canfield & Knowles, LLC, Atlanta, GA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For S. Higashi, Plaintiff: Christopher P Ridout, Devon Marie Lyon, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Ridout & Lyon LLP, Long Beach, CA; David M Sternfield, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Law Offices of David M Sternfield LLC, Chicago, IL; Eric D Freed, LEAD ATTORNEY, Freed & Weiss LLC, Chicago, IL; George K Lang, Jeffrey A. Leon, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Freed & Weiss LLC, Chicago, IL; Richard J Burke, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO [5] HAC VICE, Richard J Burke LLC, St Louis, MO; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Helen E Zukin, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael C Eyerly, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For North Peninsula Surgical Center, L.P., et al., Plaintiff: Ellen M Doyle, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Stember Feinstein Doyle & Payne LLC, Pittsburgh, PA; Janet Lindner Spielberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Janet L Spielberg Law Offices, Los Angeles, CA; Joseph N Kravec , Jr, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Stember Feinstein & Payne, LLC, Pittsburgh, PA; Maury A Herman, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Herman Gerell LLP, Atlanta, CA; Stephen J Herman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Herman Gerel LLP, Atlanta, GA; William T Payne, LEAD ATTORNEY, Stember Feinstein Doyle & Payne, LLC, Pittsburgh, PA; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Helen E Zukin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, [6] CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For K. Unmacht, Plaintiff: Matthew J Zevin, LEAD ATTORNEY, STANLEY IOLA, LLP, San Diego, CA; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For D. Samsell, V. Samsell, M. Cooper, I. Seigle-Epstein, Plaintiffs: Barbara G Quackenbos, Barry M Epstein, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Wilentz Goldman & Spitzer PA, Woodbridge, NJ; Donald E Haviland , Jr, LEAD ATTORNEY, Haviland Hughes LLC, Philadelphia, PA; Kevin P Roddy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilentz Goldman & Spitzer PA, Woodbridge, NJ; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For V. O'Brien, K. O'Brien, Plaintiffs: Brent Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Cohen Milstein Sellers & [7] Toll PLLC, Washington, DC; Kit A Pierson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll PLLC, Washington, DC; Robert J Rohrberger, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Fox Rothschild LLP, Roseland, NJ; Michael C Eyerly, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For I. Rivera-Giusti, Plaintiff: Brent Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll PLLC, Washington, DC; Kit A Pierson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll PLLC, Washington, DC; Robert J Rohrberger, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Fox Rothschild LLP, Roseland, NJ; Andrew S Friedman, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Michael C Eyerly, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For M. Pariser, Plaintiff: Michael D Braun, LEAD ATTORNEY, Braun Law Group PC, Los Angeles, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT; Joseph N Kravec , Jr, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Stember Feinstein [8] & Payne, LLC, Pittsburgh, PA; Matthew J Zevin, STANLEY IOLA, LLP, San Diego, CA; Michael C Eyerly, Maria L Weitz, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For H. Bernard, Plaintiff: Richard B Brualdi, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Brualdi Law Firm, New York, NY; Sue Lee, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, The Brualdi Law Firm, New York, NY; Michael C Eyerly, Kiesel

Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For American Podiatric Medical Association, California Chiropractic Association, Plaintiffs: Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT; Elaine A Ryan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Tonna Kaye Farrar, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, San Diego, CA; Michael C Eyerly, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & [9] Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For California Psychological Association, Plaintiff: Andrew S Friedman, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Elaine A Ryan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Tonna Kaye Farrar, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, San Diego, CA; Michael C Eyerly, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For J. Peck, Plaintiff: Amanda F Lawrence, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT; Elaine A Ryan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, Phoenix, AZ; Tonna Kaye Farrar, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint PC, San Diego, CA; Helen E Zukin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael C Eyerly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kiesel Boucher Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For Hooman M. Melamed, Plaintiff: Anthony D Phillips, [10] Joseph J Tabacco , Jr, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Daniel E Barenbaum, Berman DeValerio, San Francisco, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For Hooman M. Melamed, M.D., Inc., M.D. Hooman Melamed, Plaintiffs: Michael D McLachlan, Michael D McLachlan Law Offices, Los Angeles, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For UnitedHealth Group, Inc., Ingenix, Inc., Defendants: Christopher RJ Pace, LEAD ATTORNEY, Weil Gotshal & Mangels LLP, Miami, FL; Eric Ostroff, Marc A Weinroth, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Brian D'Amico, PRO HAC VICE, Weil Gotshal & Manges LLP, Miami, FL; Elizabeth M Velez, PRO HAC VICE, Weil, Goshal & Manges LLP, Miami, FL; Gregory Daniel Hull, Weil Gotshal & Manges LLP, Redwood Shores, CA; Raymond Paul Boucher, Kiesel Boucher & Larson LLP, Beverly Hills, CA; Amanda F Lawrence, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP, Colchester, CT.

For Ingenix, Defendant: Gregory Daniel Hull, LEAD ATTORNEY, Weil Gotshal & Manges LLP, Redwood Shores, CA; Marc A Weinroth, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Brian D'Amico, PRO HAC VICE, Weil Gotshal & Manges LLP, Miami, FL; Christopher RJ Pace, Weil Gotshal & Mangels LLP, Miami, FL; Elizabeth M Velez, PRO HAC VICE, Weil, Goshal [11] & Manges LLP, Miami, FL.

For WellPoint, Blue Cross of California, doing business as Anthem Blue Cross, Wellchoice Insurance of New Jersey, Inc., Wellchoice, Inc., Wellpoint, Inc., Anthem, Inc., Wellpoint Health Networks, Inc., Empire Blue Cross Blue Shield, Inc., Defendants: E Desmond Hogan, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Craig A Hoover, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Washington, DC; Julie A Shepard, LEAD ATTORNEY, David R Singer, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Miranda L Berge, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Hogan & Lovells US LLP, Washington, DC; Peter R Bisio, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Hogan Lovells LLP, Washington, DC.

For Anthem Blue Cross Blue Shield Partnership Plan, Inc., Empire HealthChoice Assurance, Inc., doing business as Empire Blue Cross Blue Shield, Defendants: David R Singer, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Anthem Health Plans of Virginia, Inc., doing business as Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield, DOES, 1 through 10 inclusive, Defendant: David R Singer, Julie A Shepard, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For UnitedHealth Group, Inc., Defendant: Gregory Daniel Hull, LEAD ATTORNEY, Weil Gotshal & Manges LLP, Redwood Shores, CA; Brian D'Amico, PRO HAC VICE, Weil [12] Gotshal & Manges LLP, Miami, FL; Christopher RJ Pace, Weil Gotshal & Mangels LLP, Miami, FL; Elizabeth M Velez, PRO HAC VICE, Weil, Goshal & Manges LLP, Miami, FL.

For Anthem Blue Cross Life and Health Insurance Company, Defendant: Craig A Hoover, David R Singer, Julie A Shepard, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Washington, DC; E Desmond Hogan, PRO HAC VICE, Craig A Hoover, Hogan Lovells US LLP, Washington, DC.

Judges: Present: The Honorable Philip S. Gutierrez, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Philip S. Gutierrez

Opinion

[*1015] CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (In Chambers) Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Defendants WellPoint, Inc., United HealthGroup, Inc., and Ingenix, Inc.'s Motions to Dismiss

Pending before the Court are Defendants WellPoint, Inc., United HealthGroup, Inc., and Ingenix, Inc.'s Motions to Dismiss the Second Amended Multi-District Litigation Complaint. The Court heard argument on the motions on November 22, 2011. Having read and considered the moving and opposing papers, as well as the arguments presented at the hearing, the Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part the motions to dismiss.

I. Background

This case concerns insurance subscribers and healthcare providers who claim that the nation's [13] largest healthcare insurer failed to properly reimburse them for out-of-network services ("ONS"). They were allegedly promised a "usual, customary, and reasonable" ("UCR") rate of reimbursement, but were underpaid due to flawed UCR data provided by the country's largest database.

A. WellPoint's ONS Coverage

Defendant WellPoint, Inc. ("WellPoint") is the largest health insurer in the United States. WellPoint and its many subsidiaries and affiliates (collectively, the "WellPoint Defendants") [1] offer insurance coverage for medical treatment provided by various healthcare providers, including [*1016] physicians, physician groups, hospitals, clinics, and ambulatory and surgical centers. See Second Consolidated Am. Compl. ("SAC"). ¶ 8, n.1. Healthcare providers are classified as either (a) "in-network" providers who have negotiated discounted rates with WellPoint or (b) out-of-network providers who charge their normal rates. See id. ¶ 8. WellPoint allegedly promises to reimburse subscribers for ONS obtained from out-of-network providers at a percentage of the lesser of either (1) the actual amount of the subscribers' medical bills or (2) the UCR rate charged by providers "in the same or similar geographic [14] area" for "substantially the same service." See id. ¶ 10. The primary concern in this action is whether WellPoint paid the UCR rate when reimbursing ONS. This question turns on how WellPoint determines what reimbursement rate would be "usual, customary, and reasonable" for a given medical procedure in a particular geographic area.

---

[1] The WellPoint Defendants include the following WellPoint subsidiaries and affiliates: Anthem Benefit Administrators, Inc.; Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield Plan Administrator, LLC; Anthem Blue Cross Blue Shield Partnership Plan, Inc.; Anthem Blue Cross Life and Health Insurance Company; Anthem Health Plans of Kentucky, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Anthem Health Plans of Maine, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Anthem Health Plans of New Hampshire, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Anthem Health Insurance Company of Nevada, Inc.; Anthem Health Plans of Virginia, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Anthem Health Plans, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Anthem Insurance Companies , Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Anthem HMO of Nevada; Anthem Life Insurance Company; Anthem Life [15] & Disability Insurance Company; Anthem East, Inc.; Anthem Southeast, Inc.; Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Georgia, Inc.; Blue Cross Blue Shield Healthcare Plan of George, Inc.; Blue Cross Blue Shield of Wisconsin, d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Blue Cross of California, d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross; Blue Cross of California Partnership Plan, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross Partnership Plan; Claim Management Services, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Community Insurance Company, d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Compcare Health Services Insurance Corporation, d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Empire HealthChoice Assurance, Inc. d/b/a Empire Blue Cross Blue Shield; Empire HealthChoice HMO, Inc., d/b/a Empire Blue Cross Blue Shield HMO; Golden West Health Plan, Inc; HealthKeepers, Inc.; HealthLink, Inc.; HealthLink HMO, Inc.; Healthy Alliance Life Insurance Company, d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; HMO Colorado, Inc.; HMO Missouri, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Sheild; Lumenos, Inc.; Machigonne, Inc.; Matthew Thornton Health Plan, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Peninsula Health Care, Inc.;

B. The Genesis of Ingenix

WellPoint contracts with Defendant Ingenix, Inc. ("Ingenix") to obtain ONS reimbursement data. Ingenix is a wholly owned subsidiary of Defendant UnitedHealth Group, Inc. ("UHG") (together with Ingenix, the "UHG Defendants") and maintains a proprietary database, which compiles ONS reimbursement data provided by various health insurance companies and provides billing rates back to those same insurance companies (the "Ingenix Database"). See id. ¶ 117. In 1973, the Health Insurance Association [17] of America ("HIAA"), a trade group for the health insurance industry, developed the Prevailing Health Charges System ("PHCS"), a database used to obtain charging information for various medical procedures. See id. ¶¶ 63(c), 105. [2] HIAA members developed and managed the PHCS database, which eventually became the largest pool of charge data for medical services in the country. See id. ¶ 105. The PHCS was not intended to set UCR rates, and HIAA included a disclaimer that PHCS data was provided "for information purposes only." Id. ¶ 109.

In October 1998, the members of HIAA, including WellPoint, sold the PHCS to Ingenix, which was in the process of acquiring more than 50 medical databases in order to "acquire a dominant position in the market for the provision of data services used to calculate UCR." See id. ¶ 110. [*1017] As part of the PHCS sale, members of HIAA, including WellPoint, were permitted to participate in an ongoing "Ingenix PHCS Advisory Committee," which provided for industry input into how Ingenix acquired and managed its data. See id. [18] ¶ 111. HIAA entered into a 10-year Cooperation Agreement, which guaranteed HIAA's continued input into the management of the Ingenix Database in the form of a joint "Liaison Committee" and provided discounts for HIAA members who contributed data to the Ingenix Database. See id. ¶ 112. Additionally, upon the PHCS sale, the parent of Ingenix (UHG) agreed to become a member of HIAA without having to pay any membership dues during this period.

C. Criticism of the Ingenix Database

Ingenix provides participating insurers with uniform pricing schedules that provide billing ranges for given medical procedures in various geographic locations. See id. ¶ 116. This information is allegedly calculated according to just four data points: (1) the date of service, (2) the Current Procedural Terminology ("CPT") code, (3) the zip code where the service was provided, and (4) the amount billed by the provider. See id. ¶ 119. In addition to this purportedly flawed methodology, Ingenix and the participating insurers allegedly manipulate the data in order to populate the Ingenix Database with deflated UCR figures. First, the participating insurers "scrub" their submissions to Ingenix by removing the highest [19] value claims. See id. ¶ 120. This practice allegedly persisted since 2003, when Ingenix began requiring participant insurers to certify that their submissions were complete. See id. Second,

---

Plan of Georgia, Inc.; Priority Health [16] Care, Inc.; RightCHOICE Managed Care, Inc., d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; Rocky Mountain Hospital and Medical Service, Inc. d/b/a Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield; UNICARE National Services, Inc.; UNICARE Health Insurance Company of Texas; UNICARE Health Insurance Company of the Midwest; UNICARE Health Insurance Company of Kansas, Inc.; UNICARE Health Insurance Company of West Virginia, Inc.; UNICARE Health Insurance Company of Texas, Inc.; UNICARE Health Insurance Company of the Midwest, Inc.; UniCare Life & Health Insurance Company; UNICARE of Texas Health Plans, Inc.; WellChoice Insurance of New Jersey, Inc.; and WellPoint Behavioral Health, Inc. SAC ¶ 60.

[2] In September 2003, HIAA merged with the American Associations of Health Plans ("AHIP"), and now exists under the name "HIAA/AHIP." See SAC ¶ 59(c).

Ingenix pools all of the claims submissions and removes "high-end" values as statistical outliers. See id. ¶ 125. The data provided by Ingenix is further skewed because Ingenix allegedly fails to accurately tabulate data according to geographic area. See id. ¶ 126. Ingenix then produces two cycles of pricing schedules for participating insurers. See id. ¶ 129. WellPoint uploads these schedules onto its computerized claims platform to determine ONS reimbursement rates. See id. ¶ 130. Neither WellPoint nor the other participating insurers independently verify the accuracy of the data received from Ingenix. See id. ¶ 133.

This system of ONS reimbursement has become the subject of an investigation by the New York Attorney General ("NYAG"), and an investigative task force of the NYAG determined that health insurers who participate in the Ingenix data collection have an incentive to provide artificially low claims information and, thus, produce a "garbage in, garbage out" effect. See id. ¶¶ 142-51. On [20] January 13, 2009, the NYAG issued its "Health Care Report: The Consumer Reimbursement System is Code Blue," which concluded that the Ingenix Database was an "industry-wide problem," "a rigged system," "fraudulent," "and critically ill." Id. ¶ 148. In response to the investigation, UHG, WellPoint, and other participating insurers entered into agreements with the NYAG to discontinue use of the Ingenix Database and to establish an independent system to determine UCR reimbursements. See id. ¶ 151. Even the United States Congress became involved, with the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation holding two hearings on how the healthcare industry calculates UCR reimbursements for ONS. See id. ¶¶ 152-55.

E. Procedural History

Since early 2009, subscriber, provider and association plaintiffs (collectively, the "MDL Plaintiffs" or "Plaintiffs")) have filed lawsuits against WellPoint, its subsidiaries, UHG, and Ingenix, challenging WellPoint's [*1018] use of the Ingenix Database and the adequacy of WellPoint's ONS reimbursements. On August 20, 2009, the United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation designated this Court as the transferee court for pretrial proceedings in In re WellPoint, Inc., Out-of-Network "UCR" Rates Litigation, 652 F. Supp. 2d 1375 [21] . Since the transfer, several cases have been consolidated with 652 F. Supp. 2d 1375. [3]

On July 12, 2010, the Plaintiffs of MDL No. 2074 (collectively, "Plaintiffs") filed a Second Consolidated Amended Complaint ("SAC" or "Complaint") against the WellPoint Defendants and the UHG Defendants (collectively, "Defendants"), asserting claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq., the Racketeer [22] Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1962 et seq., and various state laws. In particular MDL Plaintiffs assert the following 13 causes of action: (1) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1; claim for unpaid benefits under group plans governed by ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B); breach of fiduciary duty under ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(2); (4) failure to provide full and fair review as required under ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(3); (5) failure to provide accurate records under ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(c); (6) violation of RICO based on predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c); (7) violation of RICO for predicate acts of embezzlement, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c); (8) conspiracy to violate RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d); (9) breach of contract; (10) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (11) violation of California's unfair and deceptive practices statutes, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200, 17500; (12) violation of the New York General Business Law ("GBL") § 349; and (13) violation of California's Cartwright Antitrust Act.

In asserting their various claims, Plaintiffs are divided into several categories. First, the [23] "Subscriber Plaintiffs" are Michael Roberts ("Roberts") (on behalf of himself and as guardian for his daughter, D. Roberts), J.B.W. (a minor by and through his parent and guardian ad litem), Darryl and Valerie Samsell (the "Samsells"), Mary Cooper

---

[3] 652 F. Supp. 2d 1375 currently includes the following cases: Michael Roberts v. UnitedHealth Group, Inc. et al. (CV 09-1886 PSG (FFMx)), American Medical Association et al. v. WellPoint, Inc. (CV 09-2039 PSG (FFMx)), J.B.W. v. UnitedHealth Group, Inc. et al. (CV 09-2488 PSG (FFMx)), S. Higashi v. Blue Cross of California (CV 09-4223 PSG (FFMx)), North Peninsula Surgical Center, L.P. v. WellPoint, Inc. et al. (CV 09-4510 PSG (FFMx)), Michael Pariser v. WellPoint, Inc. (CV 09-4783 PSG (FFMx)), Darryl and Valerie Samsell v. WellPoint, Inc. et al. (CV 09-6079 PSG (FFMx)), and American Podiatric Medical Association et al. v. WellPoint, Inc. (CV 09-6725 PSG (FFMx)).

("Cooper"), Ivy Seigle-Epstein ("Seigle-Epstein"), and Ivette Rivera-Giusti ("Rivera-Giusti"). See id. ¶¶ 24-29. The Subscriber Plaintiffs each allegedly had an insurance policy with WellPoint or one of its subsidiaries, received ONS medical care, were reimbursed at a depressed rate, and incurred "more out-of-pocket expense than [he or she] would have absent the unlawful conduct alleged." See id.

Second, the "Provider Plaintiffs" are as follows: Dr. Stephen D. Henry is a primary care internist, Dr. James G. Schwendig is a trauma surgeon, Dr. James Peck is a clinical psychologist, Dr. Michael Pariser is a licensed psychologist, Dr. Carmen Kavali is a plastic surgeon, Dr. Stephani Higashi is a chiropractic doctor, and the North Peninsula Surgical Center, L.P. ("NPSC") is an ambulatory surgical center. See id. ¶¶ 30-37. The Provider [*1019] Plaintiffs allegedly provided ONS to WellPoint subscribers, were assigned the policies to be reimbursed, and received [24] deflated UCR reimbursements. See id. ¶ 80.

Third, the "Association Plaintiffs" are the American Medical Association ("AMA"), the California Medical Association ("CMA"), the Medical Association of George ("MAG"), the Connecticut State Medical Society ("CSMS"), the North Carolina Medical Society ("NCMS"), the American Podiatric Medical Association ("APMA"), the California Chiropractic Association ("CCA"), and the California Psychological Association ("CPA"). See id. ¶¶ 38-53. The Association Plaintiffs sue Defendants in their individual and representative capacities to redress injuries sustained by them and their members. See id.

On August 6, 2010, WellPoint Defendants filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6). [4] That same day, UHG Defendants filed their own motion to dismiss, joining WellPoint Defendants' motion to the extent that it relates to the claims against the UHG Defendants and offering some additional insight. See UHG Mot. 1:21-27. On August 31, 2010, Plaintiffs filed an opposition, followed by separate replies filed by the WellPoint Defendants and the UHG Defendants on September 20, 2010.

II. Legal Standard

HN1[] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a defendant may move to dismiss a cause of action if the plaintiff fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In evaluating the sufficiency of a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), the courts must be mindful that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require that the complaint contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader [*1020] is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Nevertheless, the U.S. Supreme Court has instructed that "a complaint that offers 'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S.

---

[4] The WellPoint Defendants offer several [25] declarations and exhibits to accompany their Rule 12(b)(1) factual attack on the pleadings. Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1), a party may move to dismiss a case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. When a defendant brings a factual attack upon subject matter jurisdiction, the Court may consider extrinsic evidence, weigh the evidence, and resolve factual disputes. See Roberts v. Corrothers, 812 F.2d 1173, 1177 (9th Cir. 1987). The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing subject matter jurisdiction. See Valdez v. United States, 56 F.3d 1177, 1179 (9th Cir. 1995). Until the plaintiff proves otherwise, federal jurisdiction is presumed to be lacking. See Stock West, Inc. v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation, 873 F.2d 1221, 1225 (9th Cir. 1989). In their Objections and Request to Strike, Plaintiffs argue that factual attacks can only be entertained after the filing of an answer. See Reply to Opp. to Pls.' Objs. and Request to Strike 2:23-27 (citing Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 892 n.17 (3d Cir. 1977)). However, as noted by WellPoint Defendants, the Mortensen dictum relating to the timing of a Rule 12(b)(1) factual attack has been clearly rejected. [26] See Berardi v. Swanson Mem. Lodge No. 48 of the Fraternal Order of Police, 920 F. 2d 198, 200 (3d Cir. 1990) ("Long before Mortensen, the Supreme Court made clear that a facially sufficient complaint may be dismissed before an answer is served if it can be shown by affidavits that subject matter jurisdiction is lacking."). The gist of these declarations is that the reimbursement rates of several Plaintiffs' ONS were not determined according to UCR rates. As such, the WellPoint Defendants argue that these Plaintiffs lack standing. The Court is satisfied that these declarations were made with personal knowledge, that the exhibits were properly authenticated, see Fed. R. Evid. 901(a), and that the attached insurance policies are not hearsay, see Stuart v. UNUM Life Ins. Co. of Am., 217 F.3d 1145, 1154 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that an insurance policy was "excluded from the definition of hearsay and is admissible evidence because it is a legally operative document that defines the rights and liabilities of the parties in this case"). Accordingly, to the extent that the Court relies upon the declarations offered in support of Defendants' motion, the Court OVERRULES Plaintiffs' objections [27] and DENIES their Motion to Strike.

662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)).

HN2[] In resolving a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court must first accept as true all non-conclusory, factual allegations made in the complaint. See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 164, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1993). Based upon these allegations, the Court must draw all reasonable [28] inferences in favor of the plaintiff. See Mohamed v. Jeppesen Dataplan, Inc., 579 F.3d 943, 949 (9th Cir. 2009). After accepting as true all non-conclusory allegations and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff, the Court must then determine whether the complaint alleges a plausible claim to relief. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950. In determining whether the alleged facts cross the threshold from the possible to the plausible, the Court is required "to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. "Rule 8 marks a notable and generous departure from the hyper-technical, code-pleading regime of a prior era, but it does not unlock the doors of discovery for a plaintiff armed with nothing more than conclusions." Id.

III. Discussion

The Court first addresses the standing issues raised in WellPoint Defendant's motion, followed by an evaluation of the individual claims asserted in the Second Consolidated Amended Complaint ("Complaint").

A. Plaintiffs' Standing

HN3[] Article III standing is a jurisdictional prerequisite to a federal court's consideration of any claim. See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). A plaintiff [29] in federal court must show three things: (1) injury-in-fact; (2) causation, and (3) redressibility. Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750, 104 S. Ct. 3315, 82 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1984). HN4[] "For Article III purposes, an antitrust plaintiff establishes injury-in-fact when he has suffered an injury which bears a causal connection to the alleged antitrust violation." Gerlinger v. Amazon.com Inc., 526 F.3d 1253, 1255 (9th Cir. 2008).

Defendants challenge (1) all Plaintiffs' standing as it relates to "ONS benefit reductions," (2) certain subscriber Plaintiffs' standing generally, and (3) the Association Plaintiffs' standing generally. See Mot. 49:6-53:14. The Court addresses each in the order they are raised.

1. Standing of Plaintiffs to Assert "ONS Benefit Reduction" Claims

Plaintiffs Second Consolidated Amended Complaint includes claims based on ONS benefit reductions unrelated to the Ingenix database or UCRs. See SAC ¶¶ 16-17, 180-90. Specifically, they allege that ONS Benefits were allegedly reimbursed based on "extremely low and unrepresentative Medicare rates," and "use of in-network provider fee schedules," among others. Id. ¶ 16. Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to "allege any facts [30] to establish that they have standing to bring claims for ONS Benefit Reductions, and their allegations regarding ONS Benefit Reductions are conclusory assertions that are not entitled to a presumption of truth." Mot. 49:22-25. The Court agrees. Plaintiffs have failed to identify which individuals were affected by [*1021] the non-Ingenix ONS benefit reductions, and how each was injured. Conclusory statements about faulty reimbursements do not plausibly show that Plaintiffs' have standing to complain about the ONS benefit reductions and the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss claims based on non-Ingenix ONS benefit reductions. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (HN5[] "naked assertions devoid of further factual enhancement" cannot withstand a Rule 12(b)(6) motion).

2. Certain Subscriber Plaintiffs' Standing

Defendants next identify particular subscriber Plaintiffs and argue that they lack standing in whole or in part. See Mot. 50:4-51:25. Specifically, they suggest that Plaintiffs Siegle-Epstein and the Samsells lack standing to assert any claim, and that Plaintiff Cooper lacks standing to seek declaratory and injunctive relief. See Mot. 50:4-51:25.

At the outset, the Court notes that this is a factual, [31] rather than facial, attack on Plaintiffs' standing. HN6[] If a challenge to standing is based only on the insufficiency of the allegations in the complaint on their face, the challenge is said to be a facial attack. See Safe Air for Everyone v. Meyer, 373 F.3d 1035, 1039 (9th Cir. 2004). If, on the other hand, a challenge to standing "disputes the truth of the allegations" purportedly conferring standing, the challenge is said to be a factual attack. See id. (citing Morrison v. Amway Corp., 323 F.3d 920 n.5 (11th Cir. 2003) (jurisdictional challenge was a factual attack where it "relied on extrinsic evidence and did not assert lack of subject matter jurisdiction solely on the basis of the pleadings")). WellPoint Defendants' attack of Siegle-Epstein, the Samsells, and Cooper's standing is factual because they allege that under no set of facts could those Plaintiffs assert the claims in the Complaint. See Mot. 50:4-51:25.

HN7[] A district court is permitted to review evidence beyond the complaint when resolving a factual attack on jurisdiction. See Savage v. Glendale Union High Sch., 343 F.3d 1036, 1039 n.2 (9th Cir. 2003). "Once the moving party has converted the motion to dismiss into a factual [32] motion by presenting affidavits or other evidence properly brought before the court, the party opposing the motion must furnish affidavits or other evidence necessary to satisfy its burden of establishing subject matter jurisdiction." Id.

HN8[] The Ninth Circuit has cautioned, however, that "jurisdictional dismissals in cases premised on federal-question jurisdiction are exceptional, and must satisfy the requirements specified in Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 66 S. Ct. 773, 90 L. Ed. 939 (1946)." Safe Air for Everyone, 373 F.3d at 1039. Bell warrants dismissal "where the alleged claim under the Constitution or federal statutes clearly appears to be immaterial and made solely for the purpose of obtaining federal jurisdiction or where such claim is wholly insubstantial and frivolous." Bell, 327 U.S. at 682-83, 66 S. Ct. 773. In fact, where the "jurisdictional issue and substantive issues are so intertwined," or stated somewhat differently, "when a statute provides the basis for both the subject matter jurisdiction of the federal court and the plaintiffs' substantive claim for relief," a factual attack "is proper only when the allegations of the complaint are frivolous." Safe Air for Everyone, 373 F.3d at 1039-40 [33] (quoting Thornhill Publ'g Co. v. Gen. Tel. Co., 594 F.2d 730, 734 (9th Cir. 1979)). If "the defendant's challenge to the court's jurisdiction is also a challenge to the existence of a federal cause of action, the proper course of action for the district court . . . is to find that jurisdiction exists and deal with the objection as a [*1022] direct attack on the merits of the plaintiff's case." Id. at 1039 n.3 (citations omitted).

At this stage in the litigation, the Court does not dismiss Plaintiffs Seigle-Epstein, Cooper, and the Samsells' claims for lack of standing. Plaintiffs' allege that Seigle-Epstein was insured by WellPoint Defendants and "received . . . artificially depressed reimbursement[s] for ONS." SAC ¶ 28; RICO Case Statement at 22-23. Moreover, those injuries were caused by Defendants' unlawful conduct including breach of contract and an illegal agreement to depress UCRs paid to Seigle-Epstein and others. See SAC ¶ 72-76. As a remedy, Seigle-Epstein seeks compensation for the difference in what she received as reimbursement and what she should have received if the UCRs were computed correctly. See SAC Prayer for Relief, I. Plaintiffs Cooper and the Samsells make similar allegations, [34] see SAC ¶¶ 26-27, 339-40; RICO Case Statement at 20-21, 23-25, and seek similar relief. All have pleaded actual injuries (loss of money), caused by WellPoint Defendants, that can be remedied by the Court (compensation). Thus, Article III is satisfied on the face of the Complaint.

That Article III is satisfied by the facial allegations in the Complaint is of no consequence to WellPoint Defendants' "factual attack," however. WellPoint Defendants submitted declarations from its employees challenging the factual basis of Plaintiffs' complaint. See Dkt. ## 135-41. Notwithstanding the factual attack, it is clear from the Complaint that the merits of the claims are intertwined with the standing issues presented by Defendants. Simply stated, the federal claims asserted, including RICO and the Sherman Act, both provide for jurisdiction and the substantive claim itself. See Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 185 F.3d 957, 963 (9th Cir. 1999) (HN9[] "The requirements for standing to maintain a civil action under RICO and the antitrust laws are similar. Both provide a private right of action for damages only to those individuals injured in their business or [35] property by reason of a violation of the law's substantive provisions." (internal citations omitted)).

To the extent that WellPoint Defendants' declarations contest the factual bases for standing other than the merits, the Court notes that Plaintiffs have not had an adequate opportunity to depose Defendants' declarants and the claims in the Complaint are not clearly "frivolous" or "made solely for the purpose of obtaining federal jurisdiction." See Mortensen v. First Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 896 (3rd Cir. 1977) ("because the facts are not fully developed, subject-matter jurisdiction under [the Sherman Act] cannot be conclusively determined at this stage of the proceedings." (internal citations omitted)). Even if Plaintiffs had produced affidavits to counter Defendants' affidavits, the Court would likely still not grant Defendants' motion at this time. See A. Cherney Disposal Co. v. Chicago & Suburban Refuse Disposal Ass'n, 484 F.2d 751 (7th Cir. 1973) (reversing a dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and stating that: "We hold that such a conclusion can better be determined after a thorough exploration of all evidence that either side can produce, rather [36] than by a motion to dismiss, particularly when based on conflicting affidavits."); see also Berardi, 920 F.2d at 200 (reversing a district court's dismissal under 12(b)(1) because the "the record must clearly establish that after jurisdiction was challenged the plaintiff had an opportunity to present facts by affidavit or by deposition, or in an evidentiary hearing, in support of his jurisdictional contention.").

[*1023] For these reasons, WellPoint Defendants' motion to dismiss the claims of Seigle-Epstein, Cooper and the Samsells for lack of standing is DENIED. [5]

3. Association Plaintiffs

The Association Plaintiffs (the AMA, CMA, APMA, NSPC, CCA, and CPA) assert claims that are (1) direct to injuries they sustained as organizations and (2) derivative of the claims of their members. See SAC ¶ 171. WellPoint Defendants argue that the Association Plaintiffs lack standing to sue in either their individual or representative capacities. See Mot. 51:23-53:14. The Court finds that the Association Plaintiffs have standing.

a. Individual Standing

Defendants' argument focuses on the nature of the injury allegedly suffered by the Association Plaintiffs, claiming that the Association Plaintiffs' "abstract concern" with the issues underlying the complaint and their voluntary expenditures in response to these issues do not rise to a cognizable injury under Article III. The Court finds that the Association Plaintiffs have [38] alleged sufficient injury to themselves as organizations.

The Association Plaintiffs maintain that the alleged scheme has caused "the Association Plaintiffs to expend significant time, energy and money to, inter alia, counsel members on how to counteract the practices at issue, monitor the Insurer Conspirators' practices, advocate on their members' behalf, and/or lobby for legislative or other insurance reform." SAC ¶ 169. They also allege that these costs would not have been incurred "but for" the Defendants' scheme, see id., which suggests that the alleged activities were not wholly voluntary. WellPoint Defendants are right to observe that HN10[] an abstract concern with issues facing an association's membership is insufficient to confer individual standing upon that association. See Simon v. E. Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 96 S. Ct. 1917, 48 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1976) ("Since they allege no injury to themselves as organizations, and indeed could not in the context of this suit, they can establish standing only as representatives of those of their members who have been injured in fact.").

However, the Association Plaintiffs have not alleged an abstract concern with ONS reimbursements; [39] rather, they allegedly suffered a financial injury caused by the need to counsel their members in responding to the ONS reimbursements. [6] See Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363, 369, 102 S. Ct. 1114, 71 L. Ed. 2d 214, (finding that an association adequately alleged an injury in fact where [*1024] "the steering practices of [the defendant] had frustrated the organization's counseling and referral services, with a consequent drain on resources"); In re Managed Care Litig., 298 F. Supp. 2d 1259, 1306 (S.D. Fla. 2003) (holding that medical associations suffered injury caused by "systematic practices regarding payments [that] directly affect[ed] medical associations who must deal with the fallout of such behavior."). Such "general factual allegations of injury" are sufficient at this stage. See In re Managed Care Litig., 298 F. Supp. 2d at 1306 (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992)). Therefore, the Association Plaintiffs have standing to pursue their individual claims.

[5] WellPoint Defendants also argue that the Samsells cannot assert any of the claims in the Complaint because they are contractually time barred. See Mot. 53:16-22. The contract provision attached to Defendants' declaration says that "[n]o action can be brought after three years from the time written proof has been given to [Defendants]." See Ward Decl., Ex. A, Art. VII, ¶ GG. Defendants suggest that the last time the Samsells provided "written proof" was in May 2005, beyond the three year period, Reply 27:14, but it is unclear what "written proof" means in the provision provided. As a result, Defendants' motion to dismiss the Samsells' [37] claims as untimely is DENIED. The Court notes that Plaintiffs raise the issue of fraudulent concealment in response to WellPoint Defendants' argument to dismiss the Samsells' claims as untimely. Opp'n 60:15-16. That argument is limited to Plaintiffs' Opposition, however, and without factual support in the Complaint, the Court cannot consider it.

[6] WellPoint Defendants further contend that the Association Plaintiffs also lack individual standing to pursue their RICO and Sherman Act claims. See Mot. 52:15-20. However, the [40] Association Plaintiffs have alleged a direct injury to their business in the form of increased counseling expenses. SAC ¶ 169.

b. Representative Standing

The Association Plaintiffs also assert their claims on behalf of their members. HN11[] An association may have representative standing if (1) its members would have standing to sue in their own right, (2) the interests that the association seeks to protect in the litigation are germane to the association's organizational purpose, and (3) the claims and relief will not require the participation of the association's individual members. See Hunt v. Wash. State Apple Adver. Comm'n, 432 U.S. 333, 343, 97 S. Ct. 2434, 53 L. Ed. 2d 383 (1977). WellPoint Defendants focus on the third prong, arguing that the representative claims require participation of the individual members to show that they received "valid assignments of benefits, that available administrative remedies had been exhausted for each claim, and that [they] were entitled to additional payments for particular claims." Mot. 53:1-6.

In support of this argument, WellPoint Defendants cite to Am. Med. Ass'n v. United HealthCare Corp., No. CV 00-2800 LMM, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44196, 2007 WL 1771498 (S.D.N.Y. June 18, 2007) ("AMA IV"), where, on a motion [41] for summary judgment, the court determined that the medical association plaintiffs lacked representative standing to pursue ERISA claims on behalf of their members because individual members were required to show that they exhausted their administrative remedies. See *2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44196, [WL] at 21. That same case, however, expressly held that the medical association plaintiffs could proceed on their non-ERISA claims on a representative basis. See 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44196, [WL] at 22 n.23. Moreover, that court, in an earlier opinion, allowed the medical association plaintiffs to proceed with its representation "insofar as it relates to claims for injunctive and declaratory relief only." Am. Med. Ass'n v. United HealthCare Corp., No. CV 00-2800 LMM, 2002 WL 31413668, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. October 23, 2002) ("AMA II"). In this case, the Association Plaintiffs are pursuing prospective relief, see SAC 150:15-24, and they represent to the Court at this time that any particular proof of assignment and exhaustion will be provided after discovery, see Opp'n 59:25-28. Therefore, the Court does not dismiss the Association Plaintiffs' claims on this ground. For these reasons, the Association Plaintiffs have standing to pursue their representative [42] claims on behalf of their members.

B. Antitrust Claims

1. Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Claim 1)

HN12[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Not every agreement that restrains competition violates the Sherman Act. See McDaniel v. Appraisal Inst., 117 F.3d 421, 422 (9th Cir. 1997). Rather, the Sherman Act "prohibits conspiracies and agreements that unreasonably restrain trade." Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak [*1025] Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1373 (9th Cir. 1989). HN13[] Claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act are evaluated under either a per se analysis or the rule of reason. See id. In this case, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants conspired to fix ONS reimbursement rates, and that the alleged conduct "constitutes both a per se and Rule of Reason claim under the Sherman Act." SAC ¶ 84.

1. Whether Plaintiffs State a Per Se Claim under the Sherman Act

HN14[] The Sherman Act prohibits some arrangements as a matter of law, and restraints that fall within certain narrow categories are deemed to be per se violations. See Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 [43] ("The rule of reason does not govern all restraints. Some types 'are deemed unlawful per se.' The per se rule, treating categories of restraints as necessarily illegal, eliminates the need to study the reasonableness of an individual restraint in light of the real market forces at work." (internal citations omitted)). In order to state a claim for a per se violation of the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs must allege sufficient facts that Defendants (1) entered into an agreement (2) to fix prices, rig bids, or divide a market.

a. Allegations of an Agreement

HN15[] Plaintiffs must offer particular factual allegations that Defendants entered into an illegal agreement. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556 ("In applying these general standards to a § 1 claim, we hold that stating such a claim requires a complaint with enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. Asking for plausible grounds to infer an agreement does not impose a probability requirement at the pleading stage; it calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement."). In order to allege a conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must provide [44] the "specific time, place, or person[s]" involved in the alleged conspiracy. See id. at 565 n.10. Mere allegations of parallel conduct will not suffice. See id.

In this case, Plaintiffs have not merely alleged that the WellPoint Defendants and other participating insurers engaged in parallel conduct—i.e., that each participating insurer merely exchanged data with Ingenix and allegedly underpaid ONS reimbursements. More than just identifying WellPoint Defendants' and other insurers possible motivations to use and manipulate the Ingenix database, Plaintiffs also provide dates, players, purposes, and effects. Plaintiffs generally allege a conspiracy to fix ONS reimbursements: "WellPoint reached an agreement with the Insurance Conspirators, who are direct competitors, including UnitedHealth via its alter ego Ingenix to determine maximum UCRs using primarily the Ingenix Database . . . even while knowing that use of the database would result in artificially low reimbursements to Subscriber and Provider Class members." SAC ¶ 85; see also id. ¶ 117 ("All of the [participating insurers] provide raw pricing data to Ingenix and receive UCR pricing data in return. Ingenix uses the billing data [45] provided by the Insurer Conspirators to create False UCR schedules, and those False UCR schedules are used by the Insurer Conspirators to determine how much to reimburse their members for ONS.").

Plaintiffs also allege that the PHCS was designed by HIAA members in 1973, and sold by the HIAA (including WellPoint) to Ingenix in 1998. See id. ¶¶ 105-10. Under the terms of the sale, HIAA members (including WellPoint) served on an ongoing Ingenix PHCS Advisory Committee to [*1026] provide input on what data Ingenix would gather and how that data would be used. See id. ¶ 111. HIAA members and Ingenix also formed a "Liason Committee" to advise and evaluate Ingenix in its management of the Ingenix Database. See id. ¶ 112. Additionally, UHG became a member of the HIAA without having to pay any membership dues during the 10-year Cooperation Agreement. See id. ¶ 113. Ingenix entered into a Confidentiality Agreement to shield the identities of participating insurers who submit information to Ingenix, see id., and participating insurers promised not to provide any UCR data to competing data services, see id. ¶ 96.

In addition to the post-1998 connection between participating insurers and Ingenix, Plaintiffs [46] allege that participating insurers have had "ample opportunities to communicate, and have communicated, among themselves about the conspiracy." Id. ¶ 99. These communications allegedly occurred "routinely" at HIAA/AHIP conferences and board meetings. See id. HN16[] While allegations of opportunities to conspire alone are insufficient to infer a conspiracy, see In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1103 (9th Cir. 1999) (noting that allegations of meetings and telephone conversations between competitors was insufficient "to infer participation in the conspiracy from the opportunity to do so"), such opportunities "demonstrate[] how and when Defendants had opportunities to exchange information or make agreements," In re Static Random Access Memory, 580 F. Supp. 2d 896, 903 (N.D. Cal. 2008). The allegations here amount to more than simple "opportunities to conspire," as Plaintiffs further allege that participating insurers did not compete on ONS reimbursements even though they compete on many other plan provisions, including co-pay levels, deductibles, out-of-pocket maximums, number of covered visits, pre-existing condition coverage, drug benefits, and availability of mental health benefits. [47] See SAC ¶ 101.

The Court finds that all the alleged facts, taken as true, sufficiently allege the existence of a plausible conspiracy among Defendants and other participating insurers to use the Ingenix Database to coordinate maximum ONS reimbursements. The WellPoint Defendants argue that the Complaint fails to specifically identify how an "alleged rate suppression agreement was reached." Mot. 7:24-26. However, no discovery has occurred in this case which would make Plaintiffs' allegations less plausible. In cases of collusion and conspiracy, it is reasonable to expect that discovery will uncover specific answers to Plaintiffs' fact-based allegations. Furthermore, WellPoint Defendants do not offer sufficient authority to conclude that Twombly actually requires concrete answers to each of these questions at the pleadings stage. In light of the Complaint's specific allegations that the participating insurers were involved in the maintenance and design of the Ingenix Database and all maintained depressed levels of ONS reimbursements, Plaintiffs have alleged facts providing circumstantial evidence of a price fixing agreement.

The Court observes that the Southern District of New York found [48] that insurance subscribers and out-of-network providers adequately stated a § 1 claim against other participating insurers, UHG, and Ingenix on the basis of substantially similar allegations:

> Plaintiffs easily satisfy the requisite pleading standard with respect to their allegation of conspiracy. In fact the FAC is replete with factual support—including specific times, places, and persons—for the conspiracies alleged. . . . [T]he FAC alleges that: "an association of health insurance companies created a [*1027] database in 1973 that it expressly disclaimed for use in making UCR determinations"; in turn, "[t]hese health insurers including United Healthcare, use the database for making UCR determinations in direct violation of their contractual requirements to their respective subscribers to pay the lower of the actual charge or the usual and customary charge; the UCR rates are inaccurate and lower than the actual rate due to the use of flawed data; 'supposedly competing health insurers, comprising the HIAA Group . . . had representatives sitting on the HIAA committees overseeing the development . . . of the PHCS database and made decisions to allow data suppliers to submit flawed and inadequate [49] data"; and "in 1998 HIAA allowed a health insurer, United Healthcare, to acquire the PHCS database after it had already acquired the only other competing database."

Am. Med. Ass'n v. United Healthcare Corp., 588 F. Supp. 2d 432, 446-47 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (internal citations omitted). While American Medical Association did not address the pleading requirements of a per se violation because the plaintiffs in that case did not defend their per se claims, see id. at 447 n.6, Defendants do not offer any authority to suggest that the allegations of agreement are subject to more scrutiny in per se cases than in typical rule of reason cases. Therefore, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that Defendants and other participating insurers entered into an agreement.

b. Allegations of a Per Se Violation

HN17[] As a general matter, agreements to fix prices among competitors is one of the discrete categories of restraints reserved for per se treatment. See Leegin, 551 U.S. at 887 ("Restraints that are per se unlawful include horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices . . . ." (citing Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006)). Horizontal price [50] fixing is per se unlawful "regardless of whether the prices set are minimum or maximum," Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2000), and Plaintiffs in this case allege that Defendants and other participating insurers conspired to set maximum ONS reimbursements. That Plaintiffs allege that the Ingenix Database produced "modules" or uniform price schedules specifying a range of ONS reimbursements, see SAC ¶ 116, does not necessarily mean that participating insurers did not "fix" a maximum ONS reimbursement. Furthermore, WellPoint Defendants claim that UCR information is one factor used in calculating a particular ONS reimbursement, but Plaintiffs allege that participating insurers "adopted a standard formula for making UCR determinations, based on a database that is designed and intended to reduce reported charges artificially." Id. ¶ 89.

WellPoint Defendants claim that the alleged conspiracy is inappropriate for per se treatment because Plaintiffs fail to allege a horizontal agreement among competitors that "always or almost always" restrains competition. See Mot. 5:24-25 (citing Leegin, 551 U.S. at 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). [51] Even if the restraint alleged was ancillary to some pro-competitive venture, it would be inappropriate to dismiss the per se claim at this time. See Nat. Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Ok., 468 U.S. 85, 104 n.26, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, ("Indeed, there is often no bright line separating per se from Rule of Reason analysis. Per se rules may require considerable inquiry into market conditions before the evidence justifies a presumption of anticompetitive conduct." [*1028] (emphasis added)). While HN18[] the question of whether a plaintiff's allegations "comprise a per se claim is normally a question of legal characterization that can often be resolved by the judge on a motion to dismiss or for summary judgment," In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 554 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1010 (N.D. Cal. 2008), the Court declines to dismiss the per se claim at this time, especially considering Plaintiffs' allegations that information was falsified by participating insurers providing information to Ingenix and by Ingenix in compiling the data. See SAC ¶¶ 122-24.

In their papers, WellPoint Defendants try to characterize Plaintiffs' allegations as something other than a price fix. At one point in the motion, [52] WellPoint Defendants suggest that the alleged agreement between WellPoint and Ingenix to provide and purchase data is a vertical agreement. See Mot. 5:28. HN19[] Vertical price fixing is not subject to per se analysis and must be evaluated according to the rule of reason. See Leegin, 551 U.S. 877, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623. While Plaintiffs do allege a vertical dimension to the conspiracy—the participating insurers' agreement to purchase UCR data from Ingenix—the gravamen of the allegation is that the participating insurers conspired amongst themselves to fix ONS reimbursements (something that Ingenix was not in the business of paying because Ingenix is not an insurer). See SAC ¶ 85. ("WellPoint reached an agreement with the Insurance Conspirators, who are direct competitors, including UnitedHealth via its alter ego Ingenix to determine maximum UCRs using primarily the Ingenix Database."). Moreover, WellPoint Defendant "cannot escape the per se rule [for certain horizontal restraints of trade] simply because their conspiracy depended upon the participation of a 'middle-man;'" in this case, Ingenix. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 337 (3d Cir. 2010) (citing U.S. v. All Star Indus., 962 F.2d 465, 473 (5th Cir. 1992)) [53] (finding that a conspiracy between pipe distributor bidders that required coordination through a middle-man bid rigger was still a horizontal conspiracy subjected to the per se analysis). Indeed, Plaintiffs clearly allege that the agreement was an "unreasonable horizontal restraint on trade." Id. ¶ 85 (emphasis added).

Additionally, WellPoint Defendants claim that Plaintiffs' allegations are nothing more than an agreement to exchange information, which can have significant pro-competitive effects in an industry. See Mot. 11:28-12:3. For example, WellPoint Defendants suggests that centralizing data collection for determining UCR rates can result in cost savings for participating insurers. See id. 12:12. HN20[] As a general matter, agreements among competitors to exchange information are analyzed under the rule of reason because such exchanges can facilitate competition. See U.S. v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 443 n.16, 98 S. Ct. 2864, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854 (1978) (noting that an exchange of price information among competitors is not a "per se violation of the Sherman Act"). The Court, however, will not read into Plaintiffs' allegations as WellPoint Defendants suggest. For these reasons, the Court [54] DENIES Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's § 1 of the Sherman Act claim for failure to state a per se violation.

2. Whether Plaintiffs State a Sherman Act Claim Under the Rule of Reason

In addition to their per se allegations, Plaintiffs state a Sherman Act claim against Defendants under the rule of reason. HN21[] In order to state a rule of reason claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate the following three elements: "(1) the persons or entities to the agreement intend to [*1029] harm or restrain competition; (2) an actual injury to competition occurs; and (3) the restraint is unreasonable as determined by balancing the restraint and any justifications or pro-competitive effects of the restraint." Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 224 F.3d 942, 947 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting Am. Ad Mgmt. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 789 (9th Cir. 1996)). As discussed with respect to Plaintiffs' per se claim, the Complaint adequately alleges that Defendants and other participating insurers conspired to set maximum ONS reimbursements by using the Ingenix Database. More is required, however, under the rule of reason.

HN22[] In stating a rule of reason claim, a plaintiff must identify a "relevant market," see Tanaka v. University of So. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001), [55] which must be defined in terms of both product and geography, see Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 n.4 (9th Cir. 2008) ("Antitrust law requires allegation of both a product market and a geographic market."). In addition to identifying a relevant market, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant has "market power" within that market—otherwise the defendant's restraint on trade would not have a substantial anticompetitive effect. See Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1044. As the Ninth Circuit has observed, "[t]here is no requirement that these [relevant market and market power] elements of the antitrust claim be pled with specificity." Id. (citing Cost Mgmt. Servs., Inc. v. Wash. Nat. Gas Co., 99 F.3d 937, 950 (9th Cir. 1996)); In re Webkinz Antitrust Litig., 695 F. Supp. 2d 987, 993 (N.D. Cal. 2010).

In this case, Plaintiffs allege that the conspiracy to fix maximum ONS reimbursements occurred in the following "linked" markets:

> The relevant product market is the market for data used to calculate UCRs for reimbursements of claims by health insurance beneficiaries for out-of-network, non-negotiated medical services (the "Data Market"). The Data Market is directly and [56] inextricably linked to the market for ONS (the "Linked ONS Market") in that the Data Market constitutes the primary input to the Linked ONS Market, and the Insurer Conspirators use the Data Market to control and depress amounts reimbursed in the Linked ONS Market.

SAC ¶ 90. Furthermore, Plaintiffs allege that the "relevant geographic market is the United States." Id. ¶ 91.

In their motion, WellPoint Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to adequately identify a "relevant market" and that the market allegations lack factual support. See Mot. 13:12-15:14. The Court disagrees. First, Defendants claim that Plaintiff must have been injured in the relevant market, and cite McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802 (9th Cir. 1988) to support this contention. Defendants, however, misread that case because the McGlinchy plaintiff failed to allege an injury to the market, rather than a mere injury to himself. See id. at 812 ("Thus appellants fail to state an antitrust claim based on defendants' conduct with respect to PB and PB-related products. It is injury to the market or to competition in general, not merely injury to individuals or individual firms that is significant."). Therefore, McGlinchy [57] concerned the requirement of antitrust injury, and Defendants argument appears to be directed at Plaintiffs' standing, though standing to assert the Sherman Act claims is not raised in the papers. WellPoint Defendants fail to offer any authority on point to conclude that the relevant market must be the plaintiff's market and the alleged injury to Plaintiffs was precisely the intended consequence of Defendants' conspiracy. See Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 479, [*1030] 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982) (stating "[w]here the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause") (internal citations omitted).

Second, Defendants claim that Plaintiffs fail to make out the alleged "link" between the Data Market and the Linked ONS Market. While detailed factual allegations are not required in defining the market, see Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045, Plaintiffs extrapolate on how the alleged conspiracy in the Data Market affects their rates of ONS reimbursement in the ONS Market. See SAC ¶¶ 92-98. Plaintiffs allege that WellPoint Defendants [58] and other participating insurers used the Ingenix Database to coordinate depressed UCR rates for ONS reimbursements, and thus "although the Plaintiffs and Classes were not competitors of the Insurer Conspirators in the Data Market when the False UCRs were set by WellPoint and the Conspirators, the injury they suffered was inextricably linked with the competitive harm arising from the Insurer Conspirators' agreement to use False UCRs to depress and set a ceiling for ONS reimbursements." Id. ¶ 92. Plaintiffs were required to pay out-of-pocket to cover the difference between the actual cost and the ONS reimbursement.

Finally, the Court also notes that WellPoint Defendants do not dispute Plaintiffs' allegations of market power. Ingenix is alleged to dominate the Data Market as it has the "majority of major health insurers" contributing data to the Ingenix Database, see id. ¶ 95, including the three largest health insurers in the country, see id. ¶¶ 54, 57, 63. UHG claims that Ingenix's market domination was not a result of any unlawful conspiracy because its market domination was "the result of (a) Ingenix acquiring and combining various competing provider charge databases and (b) natural [59] barriers to entry into the Data Market. UHG Mot. 5:24-28. The cause of Ingenix's dominance of the Data Market, however, is irrelevant to Plaintiffs' allegation that it dominates that market and that the alleged conspiracy harmed competition in that market and Plaintiffs' ONS reimbursements. For these reasons, the Court DENIES Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' rule of reason claim.

3. Whether Plaintiffs' Sherman Act Claim is Barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act

HN23[] The McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts from federal antitrust laws all conduct that (1) is part of the "business of insurance," (2) is regulated by state law, and (3) is not a "boycott, coercion, or intimidation." 15 U.S.C. §§ 1011-15; Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 207 n.1, 99 S. Ct. 1067, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1979) (quoting the text of the McCarran-Ferguson Act). WellPoint Defendants claim that Plaintiffs allegations satisfy each of these elements. See Mot. 12:12-15:2. The Court disagrees.

HN24[] In order to constitute part of the "business of insurance," the practice must (1) have the effect of transferring or spreading a policyholder's risk, (2) be "an integral part of the policy relationship between the [60] insurer and the insured," and (3) be limited to entities within the insurance industry. Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 210. The Supreme Court instructs that the McCarran-Ferguson exemption was focused on the relationship between the insurer and its agents and the insured. See id. at 215-16. Moreover, the statute "exempts the 'business of insurance' and not the 'business of insurance companies.'" Union Lab. Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 129, 102 S. Ct. 3002, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1982) (citation omitted). [*1031] Finally, exemptions from antitrust laws under the McCarran-Ferguson Act are to be narrowly construed. Id. at 126.

This case bears many similarities to the facts in Pireno, and for many of the same reasons, WellPoint Defendants' use and manipulation of the Ingenix database is not part of the "business of insurance." In Pireno, a chiropractor challenged an insurance company's practice of using a peer review committee to determine whether claims submitted were both reasonable and necessary. See Pireno, 458 U.S. at 122-23. The Court evaluated the practice under the three-prong Royal Drug test and held that the referral practice did not transfer risk, but only reduced costs. More specifically, [61] the Court stated that the practice was "logically and temporally unconnected to the transfer of risk accomplished by [the] insurance policies." Id. at 130. The Court agreed with the Second Circuit's determination that the committee determined "only . . . whether the insured's loss falls within the policy limits"— that is, not whether risk of loss was transferred, but only the extent to which it was transferred. Id. The Court also held that the insurer's practice of using the peer review committee was neither integral to the relationship between the insurer and the insured, nor limited to entities within the insurance industry. See id. at 129-33. It was not integral because it was a "separate arrangement between the insurer and third parties not engaged in the business of insurance," and because the arrangement was "obviously distinct from [the insurance company's] contracts with its policyholders." Id. at 131. The Court reached its conclusion by analogizing the facts in Pireno to the facts in Royal Drug, where an arrangement between an insurance company and a pharmacy about drug pricing was said to be a "separate contractual arrangement[]"with a company "engaged in the sale and distribution [62] of goods and services other than insurance." Id. (citing Royal Drug, 440 U.S. at 216).

Plainly, Defendants' use of the Ingenix database does not involve the spreading or underwriting of risk. Like in Pireno, the Ingenix database determines whether and to what extent the "insured's loss falls within the policy limits." See id. at 130. Defendants cannot, and do not, argue that acquiring cost data from the Ingenix database and using it to determine a reasonable reimbursement transfers risk from the insured to the insurer as contemplated by the McCarran-Ferguson Act and Pireno. It is doubtless the case that each reimbursement determination varies the amount of risk incurred by the insurance companies, but it is clear that reduction in costs alone is not sufficient for a practice to fall within the "business of insurance." See id. Defendants' use of an outside tool to determine the reasonableness of charges incurred was insufficient to fall within the "business of insurance" in Pireno and is insufficient to fall within the "business of insurance" here.

Defendants' only argument that the use of Ingenix falls within the business of insurance stems from the Supreme Court's decision in U.S. Dep't [63] of Treasury v. Fabe, which states that "[t]here can be no doubt that the actual performance of an insurance contract falls within the business of insurance." Fabe, 508 U.S. 491, 503, 113 S. Ct. 2202, 124 L. Ed. 2d 449 (1993). Defendants' reliance on Fabe overlooks the fact that the Supreme Court expressly squared Fabe with Royal Drug and Pireno, and involved critically different facts. In Fabe, the question was whether a state law allowing insureds to make claims against bankrupt insurance companies regulated [*1032] the "business of insurance," not whether a particular practice of an insurance company was part of the "business of insurance." Id. at 493-94. If the state law did regulate the business of insurance, then policy holders would have priority over claims against the bankrupt company by others, i.e. the policy holders' contracts would remain enforceable. Id. The distinction between that case and the present facts cannot be overstated. It is a business practice at issue, not a law, and it is the determination of the reasonableness of claim amounts at issue, not the enforceability of a contract as a whole. Defendants' arguments are without merit, and because the use of data from the [64] Ingenix database is not part of the "business of insurance," Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims are not barred by the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

C. RICO Claims

Plaintiffs also allege that WellPoint Defendants' conduct violates sections 1962(c) and 1962(d) of RICO. See 18 U.S.C. §1962(c)-(d). WellPoint Defendants insist that Plaintiffs insufficiently pleaded their RICO claims and that they should be dismissed. See Mot. 17:23.

1. Participation in a RICO Enterprise — 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)

Section 1962(c) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") states that: HN25[] "It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). HN26[] For a plaintiff to state a claim under § 1962(c), he or she must allege "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985); Walter v. Drayson, 538 F.3d 1244, 1247 (9th Cir. 2008). [65] HN27[] "RICO is to be read broadly" and "liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes." Sedima, 473 U.S. at 497-98; Odom v. Microsoft Corp., 486 F.3d 541, 547 (9th Cir. 2007). WellPoint Defendants' attack each of the RICO elements except the "pattern" requirement.

a. Associated-in-Fact Enterprise

HN28[] RICO defines "enterprise" in a fairly pedestrian manner: "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4). This seemingly innocuous definition, however, has commanded much attention, particularly with respect to the meaning of "a group of individuals associated in fact." See Odom, 486 F.3d at 548. The Supreme Court stepped in early and defined an associated-in-fact enterprise as "an ongoing organization" whose "various associates function as a continuing unit." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S. Ct. 2524, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246 (1981). Though this is not a stringent standard, an associated-in-fact enterprise "must have three structural features: (1) a purpose, (2) relationships among those associated with the enterprise, and (3) longevity sufficient [66] to permit these associates to pursue the enterprise's purpose." Boyle v. United States, 556 U.S. 938, 129 S. Ct. 2237, 2244-45, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265 (2009).

HN29[] An enterprise is not wholly defined by its system of governance or one particular structure. In fact, liability is "not limited to those with a formal position in the enterprise," but "some part in directing [*1033] the enterprise's affairs is required." Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 179, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1993). Direction need not come down through a "hierarchical structure or a 'chain of command'; decisions may be made on an ad hoc basis and by any number of methods—by majority vote, consensus, a show of strength, etc." Boyle, 129 S. Ct. at 2245. Moreover, "[m]embers of the group need not have fixed roles; different members may perform different roles at different times." Id. And "[t]he group need not have a name, regular meetings, dues, established rules and regulations, disciplinary procedures, or induction or initiation ceremonies." Id. Finally, "[w]hile the group must function as a continuing unit and remain in existence long enough to pursue a course of conduct, nothing in RICO exempts an enterprise whose associates engage in spurts of activity [67] punctuated by quiescence." Id.

i. Common Purpose

First, HN30[] an associated-in-fact must have a common purpose. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "agreed to utilize the flawed Ingenix Database for their UCR determinations in an effort to depress the prices paid for ONS by the conspiring healthcare companies." SAC ¶ 289; see also RICO Case Stmt. at 120-24. In other words, Defendants controlled and manipulated the Ingenix database in order to pay less to providers and subscribers. WellPoint Defendants' posit that this is ordinary business outside the reach of RICO, but provide no additional argument as to why manipulating the UCR database is an ordinary business practice. See Mot. 19:8-17. To the contrary, Plaintiffs' submit the following allegations, which, if true, establish a common purpose: "the Insurer Conspirators regularly and intentionally excluded certain data points representing higher charges before submitting their data to Ingenix, with the intention and consequence of depressing the resulting UCRs and thus enabling them to under-reimburse for ONS;" and that Ingenix "aggregate[d] and manipulate[d] the data and create[d] False UCR schedules that [were] sold to the same health insurers [68] that provided the data in the first place." SAC ¶¶ 74,

76. This common purpose was in WellPoint Defendants' individual interest because as the UCRs went down, WellPoint Defendants paid less and kept more. Id. ¶ 298. Defendant Ingenix also profited from the alleged enterprise by "enhancing its ability to earn licensing fees through the sale of the Ingenix Database, including other Ingenix products which used WellPoint and United Health data." Id. ¶ 295. Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded that the common purpose of the alleged enterprise was to "reduc[e] the price paid for ONS, and increas[e] the profits of the Enterprise participants and the Insurer Conspirators." Id. ¶ 292.

ii. Relationship Among Enterprise Members

Plaintiffs have also sufficiently pleaded the relationship among the members of the purported enterprise. HN31[] It is clear that a "hierarchical structure or a 'chain of command'" is not required in order for a RICO relationship to be present. Boyle, 129 S. Ct. at 2245. And, "[m]embers of the group need not have fixed roles." Id. However, "allegations that 'several individuals, independently and without coordination, engaged in a pattern of crimes listed as RICO predicates" are [69] not enough to show membership in an enterprise. Id. at 2245 n.4. Here, the allegations plausibly establish that the Defendants and conspirators agreed to depress UCRs, and that they would do so collectively. See SAC ¶ 12 ("WellPoint and [*1034] other health insurance companies agreed to manipulate the rates used to reimburse members for ONS."); ¶ 19 ("WellPoint, Inc. controls the actions of the other WellPoint entities, including those which contribute data to the Ingenix Databases."); ¶ 289 ("WellPoint and UnitedHealth knowingly participated in the formation and maintenance of, purchased and utilized the Ingenix Database"). Together, WellPoint Defendants and conspirators contributed "nearly 60%" of the information in Ingenix, which they could not do acting individually. Id. ¶ 73. Finally, [d]ecision making within the Enterprise...was consensual...and [t]he members of the Enterprise functioned as a continuous unit." Id. ¶ 294. Plaintiffs allegations plausibly show that WellPoint Defendants and conspirators operated together to depress UCRs.

iii. Longevity

WellPoint Defendants do not contest the longevity factor and the Court finds Plaintiffs' assertion that the enterprise began in 1998 sufficient [70] to survive this Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Id. ¶ 288; see also Odom v. Microsoft Corp., 486 F.3d 541, 553 (9th Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 985, 128 S. Ct. 464, 169 L. Ed. 2d 325 (2007) (finding the longevity requirement was met by "[a]n almost two-year time span"); *United States v. Cerna, No. CR 08-0730 (WHA), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35085 , 2010 WL 1459444, at 2 (N.D. Cal. April 9, 2010) (finding sufficient longevity in complaint alleging that an enterprise existed "since at least the mid-1990's, and continuing up through and including the present" (internal citations omitted)).

Plaintiffs' allegations of the enterprise's common purpose, the relationship between the members and the longevity of the enterprise plausibly show the existence of an associated-in-fact enterprise. The next question is whether WellPoint Defendants participated in the associated-in-fact enterprise's conduct.

b. WellPoint Defendants' "Conduct"

WellPoint Defendants also seek dismissal of Plaintiffs' RICO claims because of "Plaintiffs fail[ure] to allege any facts indicating that WellPoint directed the affairs of the alleged Enterprise." Mot. 21:1-2. The Court agrees.

HN32[] Liability for participating in the "conduct" of a RICO enterprise extends only to those who "have some part in [71] directing [the enterprise's] affairs." Reves, 507 U.S. at 179. As it is used here, "directing" has a different meaning than commonly understood. More is required than "simply being involved," Walter v. Drayson, 538 F.3d 1244, 1249 (9th Cir. 2008), but a defendant need not be in-charge or have "significant control over or within [the] enterprise," Reves, 507 U.S. at 179 n.4.

In this case, Plaintiffs allege that WellPoint and UnitedHealth "knowingly participated in the formation and maintenance" of the Ingenix Database. SAC ¶ 289. This is as specific as Plaintiffs get with respect to WellPoint Defendants' RICO conduct. Elsewhere in the complaint are allegations similar to the following: "WellPoint and UnitedHealth participated [in] and conducted the affairs of the enterprise not only by submitting false and incomplete data to Ingenix, but by being involved in decision making regarding the database and by utilizing the flawed data for [the] illicit purpose of determining UCR[s]." Id. ¶ 301. The submission of its own data does not plausibly show that WellPoint controlled the other members in the associated-in-fact enterprise. In fact, all it really establishes is that WellPoint was acting [72] on its own when submitting data to the Ingenix database. And, the existence of a business relationship between WellPoint, Ingenix, and the Insurance [*1035] Defendants without more does not show that WellPoint conducted the enterprise. See Goren v. New Vision Intern., Inc., 156 F.3d 721, 727-28 (7th Cir. 1998) (holding that an established business relationship between the defendants and the enterprise was insufficient to state a claim that the defendants directed the affairs of the alleged fraudulent marketing enterprise). Finally, Plaintiffs' conclusory statement that "WellPoint and UnitedHealth . . . [were] involved in decision making regarding the database" does suggest RICO conduct, but it is too general to satisfy Twombly's pleading instructions. See Kearney v. Foley and Lardner, CV 05-2112 (LSP), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32130, 2011 WL 1119020, at *6 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 28, 2011) (dismissing a RICO claim where the Plaintiff failed to allege facts showing that the defendant law firm's legal services constituted participation in the management of an alleged enterprise). Without more, Plaintiffs have failed to adequately allege that WellPoint Defendants were involved in the "conduct" of the enterprise.

c. Pattern

WellPoint [73] Defendants do not challenge Plaintiffs' allegations with respect to RICO's "pattern" requirement. HN33[] A "pattern of racketeering activity requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after 1970 and the last of which occurred within 10 years after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5). The Court finds that Plaintiffs adequately allege a "pattern" by stating that the enterprise began around 1998 and that the "racketeering activity is related because it involves the same fraudulent scheme, enterprise, common persons, common out-of-network claim practices, common results impacting upon common victims and is continuous because it occurred over several years." SAC ¶ 312; see also H.J. Inc. v. Nw. Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1989) (establishing a pattern requires showing that the racketeering acts "are related" and "amount to or pose the threat of continued criminal activity").

UHG Defendants, however, do challenge Plaintiffs' allegations of a pattern of conduct as it relates exclusively to them. See UHG Mot. 2:4-6. More specifically, UHG Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not adequately [74] pleaded predicate acts related to UHG or Ingenix, and therefore, they have not adequately pleaded a pattern of predicate acts. Id. UHG Defendants are correct. HN34[] Where RICO is asserted against multiple defendants, a plaintiff must allege at least two predicate acts by each defendant. See United States v. Persico, 832 F.2d 705, 714 (2d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1022, 108 S. Ct. 1995, 108 S. Ct. 1996, 100 L. Ed. 2d 227 (1988); Keel v. Schwarzenegger, CV 08-7591 RMT (VBK), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43999, 2009 WL 1444644, at *6 (C.D. Cal. May 19, 2009). As discussed below, the basis of Plaintiffs' mail and wire fraud RICO claims in the Complaint is WellPoint Defendants' practice of making false and misleading statements related to ONS reimbursement. See, e.g., SAC ¶ 78. Moreover, the basis of Plaintiffs' embezzlement RICO claims is that WellPoint Defendants took funds from the individual plans and kept it for themselves. See id. ¶ 319 ("WellPoint benefited from the conversion of assets from its ERISA plans" and "WellPoint improperly withheld such funds and maintained them as part of its own assets for WellPoint's own benefit"). Nowhere, however, do Plaintiffs link WellPoint Defendants' RICO conduct to UHG Defendants' RICO conduct. There is no mention that UHG Defendants' [75] had a role in crafting the false or misleading statements, or any other involvement, and there is no mention that UHG Defendants' had access to the [*1036] health plans' funds, let alone that they converted those funds to their own use. As a result, Plaintiffs have failed to allege at least two acts of the UHG Defendants that qualify as RICO predicate acts.

2. Racketeering Activity

Finally, HN35[] to state a claim under RICO, a plaintiff must allege that the conduct complained of qualifies as racketeering activity. Racketeering activity is defined in RICO by reference to certain predicate acts. See 18 U.S.C. § 1961. Included predicate acts are, among others, mail fraud under 18 U.S.C. § 1341, wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. § 1343, and embezzlement from pension and welfare funds under 18 U.S.C. § 664. See § 1961(1)(B). Plaintiffs' RICO causes of action are based on each of the mentioned predicate acts.

a. Mail and Wire Fraud (Claim 6)

HN36[] To state a claim for mail and wire fraud, a Plaintiff must plead, in addition to the other elements of a RICO claim, "(1) a scheme or artifice devised with (2) specific intent to defraud and (3) use of the United States mail or interstate telephone wires in furtherance thereof." [76] Orr v. Bank of America, 285 F.3d 764, 782 (9th Cir. 2002). HN37[] Although RICO itself is not subject to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)'s heightened pleading standards, predicate acts alleging fraud must be pleaded with particularity. See Edwards v. Marin Park, Inc., 356 F.3d 1058, 1065-66 (9th Cir. 2004). At a minimum, this requires that the complaint must "state the time, place and specific content of the false representation as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Id. The plaintiff must also set forth more than neutral facts necessary to identify the transaction; he must explain why the statement complained of was false or misleading. In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 (9th Cir. 1994) (superseded by statute on other grounds). In the context of a fraud suit involving multiple defendants, a plaintiff must also "identif[y] the role of [each] defendant[ ] in the alleged fraudulent scheme." Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 541 (9th Cir. 1989). Although the complaint need not identify false statements made by each and every individual, "Rule 9(b) does not allow a complaint to merely lump multiple defendants together but [77] requires plaintiffs to . . . inform each defendant separately of the allegations surrounding his alleged participation in the fraud." *Bruhl v. Price WaterhouseCoopers Intern., CV 03-23044, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21885, 2007 WL 997362, at 3 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 27, 2007).

Aside from the RICO elements discussed above, Plaintiffs have adequately pleaded the elements of a RICO mail and wire fraud predicate act, but have failed to adequately plead the minimal degree of reliance for such predicate acts.

i. Subscriber Plaintiffs

The form and substance of the allegations of mail and wire fraud predicate acts for each Plaintiff are similar and the Court will not go through them individually. To illustrate, however, the Court notes that J.B.W. alleges that after submitting a claim to Anthem Blue Cross Life and Health Insurance Company, WellPoint Defendants sent, through the mail, an Explanation of Benefits indicating that J.B.W. would be responsible for the amount in excess of the "reasonable and customary" charges. See RICO Case Statement 15:5-15. That Explanation of Benefits was dated January 26, 2009 and was false or misleading because the reimbursed amount was less than the actual "reasonable and customary" rates. [7] See [*1037] id.; [78] see also SAC ¶ 78. J.B.W. and the other Plaintiffs listed above, state the time, place and content of the fraudulent statements and how they were misled. Moreover, the Complaint alleges that the Defendants had the express purpose—specific intent—of depressing ONS payments. See SAC ¶ 289; see also Odom v. Microsoft Corp., 486 F.3d 541, 554 (9th Cir. 2007) ("the factual circumstances of the fraud itself [must be pleaded] with particularity, [but] the state of mind—or scienter—of the defendants may be alleged generally").

While Plaintiffs Cooper, Seigle-Epstein, and the Samsells have not pleaded the elements [79] of mail fraud as a predicate act with the same degree of particularity as J.B.W., their pleadings are nevertheless sufficient. The only dates alleged by these Plaintiffs are dates of medical treatments and not the time of any specific false or misleading statements by a particular defendant. See RICO Case Statement 20-23. Despite these omissions, the allegations that each sought medical treatment on a particular date and then received false or misleading reimbursement information from WellPoint Defendants is more than enough to notify Defendants of the time and place of the alleged fraud. See Cal. Pharmacy Mgmt., LLC v. Zenith Ins. Co., 669 F. Supp. 2d 1152, 1160 (C.D. Cal. 2009) ("factual specificity as to the time and place of the over 800 alleged objections lodged by Defendants" was unnecessary for plaintiff's claim to survive a Rule 9(b) inquiry because "defendants, as the alleged authors of the communications in question, [we]re well aware of their time and place"); Gonzales v. Lloyds TSB Bank, PLC, 532 F. Supp. 2d 1200, 1211-12 (C.D. Cal. 2006) (omission of specific dates not fatal where fraud occurred over an extended period of time). Allegations that a Plaintiff "underwent [80] surgery" on "June 29, 2006," sought reimbursement, and received explanations in the mail as to the "reasonable and customary charge" for the services are enough to inform Defendants of the particular date and time of their own false or misleading statements. See RICO Case Statement 20-21 (allegations regarding Plaintiff Cooper). As a result, the Subscriber Plaintiffs have pleaded, with particularity, the elements of mail and wire fraud as predicate acts under RICO.

---

[7] In their Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, Plaintiffs argue that even if the statements in the explanation of benefits and other mailed documents were not false or misleading themselves, they still satisfy wire or mail fraud because they were part of the larger fraudulent scheme to depress prices. See Opp'n. 25:9-26:10. The Complaint, however, only alleges that WellPoint Defendants sent subscribers and providers "materially false and misleading" explanations of benefits or other statements. See SAC ¶¶ 305-09. The Court will not read into the Complaint what is not there.

ii. Provider Plaintiffs

Similarly, all of the Provider Plaintiffs have stated, with particularity, the time, place and content of WellPoint Defendants' false or misleading statements. Again, the Court will not explain each Provider Plaintiffs' allegations and why they are sufficient, but will use one to demonstrate the sufficiency of the mail and wire fraud predicate act claims. Dr. Henry provided covered medical services on March 27, 2009 and submitted his claim to WellPoint by electronic wire. See RICO Case Statement 34. On June 17, 2009, Dr. Henry received a letter in response, stating that "[t]his is the amount in excess of the allowed expense for a non-participating provider. The Health Plan is not responsible for any [81] amounts in excess of this allowed expense." Id. According to Provider Plaintiffs, the statement that the reimbursed amount was the actual "allowed expense" is false. See SAC ¶ 78. For the same reasons as above, the Provider Plaintiffs' mail and wire fraud predicate act [*1038] allegations state the time, place and content of the false or misleading statements and survive a Rule 12(b)(6) challenge. [8]

iii. Mail and Wire Fraud Reliance

Nevertheless, the Complaint does not contain proper allegations that anyone relied on and was injured by the racketeering activity. See Hemi Group, LLC v. City of New York, ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 983, 989, 175 L. Ed. 2d 943 (2010) (holding HN38[] to state a claim under RICO "the plaintiff is required to show that a RICO predicate offense 'not [82] only was a 'but for' cause of his injury, but was the proximate cause as well'"). Plaintiffs cite to the Supreme Court's decision in Bridge v. Phoenix Bond & Indem. Co., and state that they "are not required to show any reliance for RICO injury purposes." Opp'n 28:9-23. Plaintiffs' misunderstand the Supreme Court's holding on RICO reliance in that case. HN39[] The Supreme Court did not say that there is no requirement to plead any reliance, but only that "first-party" reliance is not required. See Bridge, 553 U.S. 639, 659, 128 S. Ct. 2131, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (2008). In fact, the Supreme Court went on to hold that, "[o]f course, none of this is to say that a RICO plaintiff who alleges injury 'by reason of' a pattern of mail fraud can prevail without showing that someone relied on the defendant's misrepresentations." Id. (emphasis in original).

Apparently realizing that the allegations are insufficient, Plaintiffs ask this Court to "infer" reliance—something it cannot do without some facts to support an inference. See Opp'n 28:12. Having failed to allege reliance in any form, these RICO claims are insufficiently pleaded.

b. Embezzlement (Claim 7)

Although Plaintiffs have stated a claim for embezzlement [83] as a predicate RICO act, the RICO claim still fails for the reasons stated above. WellPoint Defendants' only argument against Plaintiffs' embezzlement-based RICO claim is that "embezzlement is the act of fraudulently converting another person's property, and Plaintiffs' allegations fail to show how WellPoint converted anyone's assets." Mot. 28:5-6.

Section 664 of Title 18 of the United States Code reads:

> HN40[] "Any person who embezzles, steals, or unlawfully and willfully abstracts or converts to his own use or to the use of another, any of the moneys, funds, securities, premiums, credits, property, or other assets of any employee welfare benefit plan or employee pension benefit plan, or of any fund connected therewith, shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

[8] The other Provider Plaintiffs provide similarly detailed factual allegations of the alleged false or misleading statements. See RICO Case Statement 27-114. Further, the Association Plaintiffs also assert RICO claims, but neither the WellPoint nor UHG Defendants' make any argument as to why the RICO mail and wire fraud predicate act allegations are insufficient as to them. Thus, the Court need not consider that issue in this Order.

18 U.S.C. § 664. The statute does not read as restrictively as Defendants' suggest and the case cited by Defendants cuts against them. In United States v. Andreen, HN41[] the Ninth Circuit recognized that embezzlement traditionally encompassed "the fraudulent appropriation of the property of another." 628 F.2d 1236, 1241 (9th Cir. 1980). The court went on, however, to say that embezzlement under 18 U.S.C. § 664 [84] "goes beyond traditional [embezzlement] concepts . . . and imposes liability for an intentional breach of special fiduciary duties imposed by other regulatory statutes or governing instruments." Id.

[*1039] In this case, Plaintiffs have alleged breach of fiduciary duties imposed by ERISA. See SAC ¶ 383 (Third Claim for Relief). To the extent that ERISA Plaintiffs are asserting claims under RICO with embezzlement as the predicate acts, the Defendants' motion is DENIED. It must be noted, however, that Plaintiffs have not provided any response to Defendants' argument with respect to the Plaintiffs not asserting ERISA breach of fiduciary duty claims. Without opposition, the Court grants Defendants' motion related to the embezzlement-based RICO claims asserted by the non-ERISA Plaintiffs.

3. RICO Conspiracy (Claim 8)

HN42[] Conspiring to violate RICO is a separate offense under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). Defendants insist that there is no plausible allegation that WellPoint Defendants and others agreed to conduct a criminal enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activities. Mot. 29:23-27. More specifically, Defendants argue that "for the same reason that their antitrust conspiracy claim fails," their RICO [85] conspiracy claim fails. Id. 29:10-13. As the Court has already found that Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged an agreement to fix prices, Defendants' argument linking the two must fail.

In sum, the Court GRANTS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND Defendants' motions to dismiss based on Plaintiffs' failure to adequately allege RICO conduct, a RICO pattern as to UHG Defendants, and the minimal degree of reliance necessary for a mail or wire fraud predicate act.

C. ERISA Claims

1. Claim for Plan Benefits under 29 U.S.C. §1132(a)(1)(B) (Claim 2)[9]

HN43[] The Employee Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA") was enacted primarily to "protect interstate commerce and the interests of participants in employee benefit plans and their beneficiaries, by requiring the disclosure and reporting . . . of financial and other information" and to establish "standards of conduct, responsibility, and obligation for fiduciaries of employee benefit plans." 29 U.S.C. § 1001(b). To meet those goals, Congress empowered participants, beneficiaries, and fiduciaries of qualified ERISA benefit plans, along with the Secretary of Labor, to sue for, inter alia, benefits owed. See 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a).

The [86] ERISA Plaintiffs (Roberts, Cooper, Rivera-Giusti, Henry, Schwendig, Peck, Pariser, Kavali, the North Peninsula Surgical Center L.P., and members of the Association Plaintiffs (collectively, "ERISA Plaintiffs")) assert claims against WellPoint for failure to provide benefits under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B). See SAC ¶¶ 376-82. Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' § 1132(a)(1)(B) claims should be dismissed because Plaintiffs fail to allege facts that: (1) Defendants are "administrators" under ERISA; (2) demonstrate the plan provisions at issue; (3) Plaintiffs exhausted their administrative remedies; and (4) the Provider Plaintiffs have ERISA standing. See Mot. 31:8-37:15. The Court addresses each of the Defendant's arguments separately.

a. Whether WellPoint can be sued as an Insurer

Defendants argue that claims for benefits under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B) may only be brought against "the plan itself" or "plan administrators in their official capacities" and that Plaintiffs fail to adequately allege that WellPoint is either a plan administrator or the plan itself. Since the pending motions were filed, however, HN44[] the Ninth Circuit ruled that claims [*1040] for benefits under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B) [87] can be asserted against "an entity other than the plan itself or the plan administrator." Cyr v. Reliance Standard Life Ins. Co., 642 F.3d 1202,

[9] The parties also refer to this as ERISA §502(a)(1)(B).

1204 (9th Cir. 2011) (en banc). The Cyr ruling "expands the set of defendants who may be properly sued under § 1132(a)(1)(B) to include the insurer" and overrules Ford v. MCI Commc'ns Health & Welfare Plan, 399 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2005), a case on which WellPoint relies. See Forest Ambulatory Surgical Assocs. v. United Healthcare Ins. Co., No. CV 10-04911 (EJD), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75433, 2011 WL 2748724, at *6 (N.D. Cal. July 13, 2011). Because WellPoint is an insurer and falls within the class of potential defendants in a § 1132(a)(1)(B) case, Defendants' argument fails. The Court notes, however, that the WellPoint Defendants are entitled to raise the Cyr case at the appropriate time in the future.

b. Plan Provisions at Issue

Defendants also assert that "[a] plaintiff who brings a claim for benefits under ERISA must identify a specific plan term that confers the benefit in question" and that Plaintiffs have failed to do so. See Mot. 33:18-20 (citing Steelman v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., No. CV 06-2746, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30149, 2007 WL 1080656, at *7 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 4, 2007)). Plaintiffs sufficiently [88] identify specific plan terms promising medical reimbursement benefits for ONS at the lesser of the billed charged or the UCR, benefits which were denied by Defendants. See SAC ¶¶ 9-10 ("Plaintiffs, pay higher premiums in exchange for the flexibility and right to obtain out-of-network benefits" and "WellPoint, promise[s] to reimburse for out-of-network services at a percentage of the lesser of either (i) the actual amount of their medical bills or (ii) the usual, customary and reasonable rate."); SAC ¶ 69 ("However, the Insurer Conspirators actually reimburse their members . . . [and] healthcare providers, at a rate that is much lower than the UCR for the services rendered."); SAC ¶ 181 ("Although WellPoint healthcare plans represent that ONS will be reimbursed based on UCR determinations, WellPoint does not base its determinations on the usual, reasonable, and customary rates . . . . Instead, WellPoint employs ONS Benefit Reductions to reimburse ONS based on an undisclosed percentage of extremely low and unrepresentative Medicare rates.").

The cases cited by Defendant challenging Plaintiffs' ERISA claim are distinguishable. In Midwest Special Surgery, No. CV 09-646, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16403, 2010 WL 716105 (E.D. Mo. Feb. 24, 2010), [89] the court found that the plaintiff failed to allege a specific plan term conferring a benefit when the complaint sought general "reimbursement for medical services provided to Defendants' plan participants under numerous health plans which qualify as employee welfare benefit plans as defined by ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1002." 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16403, 2010 WL 716105, at *2. In McDonough v. Horizon Blue Cross Blue Shield of N.J. Inc., No. CV 09-571 (SRC), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93642, 2009 WL 3242136 (D.N.J. Oct. 7, 2009), the court dismissed the plaintiff's ERISA claim containing the conclusory allegation that the defendant relied on a "flawed database" "that cannot satisfy the contractual definition of UCR." 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93642, 2009 WL 3242136, at *2 (quotations omitted). Unlike the plaintiffs in Midwest Special Surgery and McDonough, Plaintiffs have identified specific plan terms conferring reimbursement benefits and have alleged sufficient facts demonstrating how Defendants deprived Plaintiffs of full UCR medical benefits by supplying Ingenix with flawed and "scrub[bed]" data. See SAC ¶ 10, 122. As a result, the Court rejects Defendants' argument and notes that the allegations in the Second Amended Complaint [*1041] go well beyond the general allegations in Midwest Special [90] Surgery and McDonough.

c. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

WellPoint Defendants also seek dismissal of Plaintiffs' ERISA claim for benefits because they failed to exhaust administrative remedies and failed to adequately allege that it would have been futile to do so. See Mot. 35:5-8. HN45[] As a general rule, a plaintiff must exhaust administrative remedies under the relevant benefit plan prior to bringing suit under § 1132(a)(1)(B). See Diaz v. United Agric. Employee Welfare Benefit Plan & Trust, 50 F.3d 1478, 1483 (9th Cir. 1995). "[F]ederal courts have the authority to enforce the exhaustion requirement in suits under ERISA, and that as a matter of sound policy they should usually do so." Amato v. Bernard, 618 F.2d 559, 568 (9th Cir. 1980). However, the demonstrated futility of administrative appeals constitutes "an exception[] to the prudential exhaustion doctrine." Noren v. Jefferson Pilot Financial Ins. Co., 378 Fed. Appx. 696, 698 (9th Cir. 2010). A plaintiff can demonstrate futility by pointing to a similarly situated plaintiff who exhausted administrative remedies to no avail. See In re Managed Care Litig., 595 F. Supp. 2d 1349, 1353-54 (S.D. Fla. 2009) (finding class plaintiffs [91] demonstrated the futility of administrative appeals because another plaintiff had unsuccessfully exhausted administrative remedies). The Court notes, however, that "bare assertions of futility" are not enough to invoke the futility exception, Diaz v. United Agric. Emp. Welfare Benefit Plan & Trust, 50 F.3d 1478, 1485 (9th Cir. 1995), and that "a Plan's refusal to pay does not, by itself, show futility." *Foster v. Blue Shield of Cal., No. CV 05-03324 (DDP), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46619, 2009 WL 1586039, at 5 (C.D. Cal. June 3, 2009). In this case, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have alleged enough facts demonstrating that Plaintiffs' administrative appeals would be futile.

Defendants claim that two ERISA Subscriber Plaintiffs (Cooper and Rivera-Giusti) and four ERISA Provider Plaintiffs (Henry, Pariser, Kavali, and NPSC) are bared from filing ERISA claims because they have failed to exhaust administrative remedies. Mot. 35:5-8. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, claim that seeking any administrative remedy would be futile based on the experience of at least one Subscriber Plaintiff. SAC ¶¶ 271-83. Plaintiffs allege in detail the experiences of Subscriber X, who was under reimbursed for ONS surgery based on flawed Ingenix [92] UCR data, who appealed the denial of benefits to both her employer and WellPoint multiple times, who requested additional information regarding WellPoint's calculation of UCR, and who was ultimately denied reconsideration of her benefits. Id. Plaintiffs conclude from Subscriber X's experience that "it is clear that the pursuit of an administrative appeal to WellPoint of its UCR determinations would be futile." Id. at ¶ 283. Plaintiffs also contend that Provider Plaintiffs' administrative appeals would be futile. For example, they allege that Provider Plaintiff Dr. Peck appealed a UCR determination in writing and by phone and Defendant denied his appeal stating the "decision is final and all levels of [its] appeal process have been exhausted." Id. at ¶ 237.

The Court finds that the Complaint alleges enough information demonstrating futility for both the Subscriber and the Provider Plaintiffs. See In re Managed Care Litig., 595 F. Supp. 2d 1349, 1353-54 (S.D. Fla. 2009) (finding that a plaintiff's appeal to WellPoint, denial of the appeal, and lack of further instruction from WellPoint to file an additional appeal was "sufficient to satisfy the exhaustion of administrative [*1042] remedies under [93] ERISA" and therefore "any attempts to file additional appeals by any of the Class Plaintiffs would indeed be futile"). In In re Managed Care Litigation, a class of dentists who provided ONS to WellPoint subscribers sued WellPoint for ONS underpayment using data from a flawed Ingenix database. Id. at 1350. The In re Managed Care Litigation court found that the exhaustion of administrative remedies by one party demonstrated futility for the other class plaintiffs. Id. at 1354. And, as noted by the In re Managed Care Litigation Court, this is not WellPoint's last chance to challenge Plaintiffs' futility allegations: "if further discovery reveals that [Plaintiff] failed to follow proper administrative appeals procedures under the plan, the remaining Plaintiffs' excuse for not filing such appeals will fail on a motion for summary judgment." Id. Likewise, if Defendants can demonstrate that either the Subscriber or Provider Plaintiffs failed to adequately allege futility or follow proper procedures for exhaustion of administrative appeals, Defendants may challenge this later in the litigation.

d. Whether Provider Plaintiffs have ERISA Standing

HN46[] "A health care provider with an allegedly valid [94] assignment has the same standing [as the beneficiary]" and may bring suit under ERISA. Davidowitz v. Delta Dental Plan, Inc., 946 F.2d 1476, 1477 (9th Cir. 1991). Defendants argue that the Provider Plaintiffs have not alleged sufficient facts demonstrating valid assignments from the Subscriber Plaintiffs. Mot. 36:15-19. The Court disagrees. Plaintiffs allege specific facts regarding the assignment of benefits from beneficiaries to the Provider Plaintiffs: "To facilitate direct payment from insurers, Dr. Henry's patients sign a form assigning their health benefits to him before treatment." SAC ¶ 215. Furthermore, Plaintiffs contend that "Dr. Peck, like other Class Members, obtained assignments from his patients, through which he was paid directly by WellPoint for providing healthcare to its insureds." SAC ¶ 232. The alleged facts, when taken as true, demonstrate that the Provider Plaintiffs received valid assignments from beneficiaries.

WellPoint Defendants also argue Provider Plaintiffs lack standing because they have not suffered injuries in fact as evidenced by their failure to bill patients for alleged under-payments by WellPoint. Mot. 36:25-37:9. However, HN47[] healthcare providers with [95] valid assignments are not required to bill the patient when seeking a claim against a defendant. See Simon v. Value Behavior Health, Inc., 208 F.3d 1073, 1081 (9th Cir. 2000). Defendants rely on two cases to support their contention that billing a patient for an insurance company's under-payment is required for a Provider Plaintiff to suffer injury in fact, but these cases do not directly apply. See Mot. 37:10-15 (citing American Med. Ass'n v. United Healthcare Corp., No. CV 00-2800, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44196, 2007 WL 1771498 (S.D.N.Y. June 18, 2007); Owen v. Regence Bluecross Blueshield of Utah, 388 F. Supp. 2d 1318 (D. Utah 2005)). In American Medical Association, the court found that provider plaintiffs suffered no injury in fact when the provider "expressly excused the patient from paying the remainder of the claim" through writing off an underpayment and excusing a fellow physician from being billed. *American Med. Ass'n, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44196, 2007 WL 1771498, at 18-19, n.18. In Owen, the court held that a subscriber lacked standing because she did not suffer an injury in fact when there was no evidence that the ONS provider attempted to collect payment from her. Owen, 388 F. Supp. 2d at 1326. Here, Plaintiffs' alleged assignments [96] are sufficient to withstand dismissal [*1043] under Rule 12(b)(6), but this in no way precludes a challenge to the assignments later as the facts develop.

Based on the foregoing, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs ERISA § 1132(a)(1)(B) claim.

2. Breach of Fiduciary Duties under ERISA § 1132(a)(2) (Claim 3)[10]

In addition to the ERISA claim for benefits, Plaintiffs also assert claims for breach of fiduciary duties under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(2). See SAC ¶¶ 383-87.

a. Relief for the Individual v. Relief for the Plan

HN48[] Section 1132(a)(2) authorizes plan participants to bring suit for relief under section 1109, which provides:

> HN49[] Any person who is a fiduciary with respect to a plan who breaches any of the responsibilities, obligations, or duties imposed upon fiduciaries by this subchapter shall be personally liable to make good to such plan any losses to the plan resulting form each such breach, and to restore to such plan any profits of such fiduciary which have been made through the use of assets of the plan by the fiduciary, and shall be subject to such other equitable or remedial relief as the court may deem appropriate, including [97] removal of such fiduciary.

29 U.S.C. § 1109. HN50[] The fiduciary relationship is one with the plan as a whole, and individual beneficiaries bringing a breach of fiduciary duty claim must do so for the benefit of the plan—not to recover solely for individual injuries. See LaRue v. DeWolff, Boberg & Assocs., Inc., 552 U.S. 248, 254, 256, 128 S. Ct. 1020, 169 L. Ed. 2d 847 (2008) (29 U.S.C. § 1109 "does not provide a remedies for individual injuries distinct from plan injuries"); Wise v. Verizon Communs, Inc., 600 F.3d 1180, 1189 ("The claim for fiduciary breach gives a remedy for injuries to the ERISA plan as a whole, but not for injuries suffered by individual participants."). To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a plaintiff must allege in the complaint that "the fiduciary injured the benefit plan or otherwise jeopardized the entire plan or put at risk plan assets." Wise, 600 F.3d at 1189. But, after Twombly, merely alleging that an ERISA breach of fiduciary duty claim "is brought on behalf of, and for the benefit of, the plan and all its participants" is not enough. Id. (affirming the district court's dismissal of a breach of fiduciary duty claim because plaintiff failed to plead [98] a "plan-wide injury" or that any member other than plaintiff was injured).

As an initial matter, Defendants do not contest their status as fiduciaries. Moreover, Plaintiffs more than adequately plead their fiduciary breach claim. While Plaintiffs do make the bald assertion that the claim is brought "on behalf of plaintiffs and their plans," see SAC ¶ 383 (Third Claim for Relief heading), they make up for it elsewhere. Plaintiffs allege a systematic effort by WellPoint Defendants to conceal the depressed UCR and ONS benefits and to knowingly using the depressed rates in Ingenix to compute those benefits. See id. ¶¶ 178, 383-85. These actions allegedly injure all plan subscribers by forcing them to pay more for ONS medical services than they would have if a correct UCR was applied. See id. ¶ 78. In addition, Defendants' conduct injures all ONS plan providers because they lose patients who cannot pay the inflated out-of-pocket costs, thereby reducing ONS benefits to plan subscribers seeking them, and because providers are often "unable to collect the balance of their market-based fee for services." See id. ¶ 80. These theories clearly show harm to more than just the [*1044] individuals bringing [99] suit, and while they are novel they are not conclusory. See Spinedex Physical Therapy USA, Inc. v. United Healthcare of Arizona, 661 F. Supp. 2d 1076, 1092 (D. Ariz. 2009). Finally, although Plaintiffs seek monetary relief for their individual breach of fiduciary duties claims, they also seek injunctive relief which would "inure to the benefit" of the plan and not only the individual Plaintiffs. See Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 515, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (1975).

---

[10] The parties also refer to this as ERISA §502(a)(2).

b. Duplicative Claims

Furthermore, WellPoint Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' § 1132(a)(2) breach of fiduciary duty claim should be dismissed because it is "duplicative of the 1132(a)(1)(B) claim for benefits." Mot. 38:8-9. There is no Ninth Circuit case law on point and WellPoint Defendants turn to a Third Circuit case for the proposition that "[a] claim for breach of fiduciary duty is actually a claim for benefits where the resolution of the claim rests upon an interpretation and application of an ERISA-regulated plan rather than upon an interpretation and application of ERISA." Id. 38:9-12 (quoting Harrow v. Prudential Ins. Co., 279 F.3d 244, 254 (3d. Cir. 2002). WellPoint's argument fails for three reasons.

First, [100] Plaintiffs' claim that WellPoint Defendants breached their fiduciary duties of "loyalty and prudence" by, among others, failing to disclose information about the UCRs. See SAC ¶ 385. WellPoint Defendants provide no argument as to why this duty hinges upon the individual plans rather than ERISA itself. Second, Defendant's reliance on Third Circuit law is incomplete. Another case from within the Third Circuit allows plaintiffs to bring § 1132(a)(1)(B) claims for benefits and § 1132(a)(2) claims for breach of fiduciary duties in the alternative, even if the claims are "essentially...for benefits." See Bamgbose v. Delta-T Group, Inc., 638 F. Supp. 2d 432, 442 (E.D. Pa. 2009). Third, WellPoint Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs' claim for benefits under § 1132(a)(1)(B) should be dismissed negates the current duplicity argument. Plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim for a breach of fiduciary duties under § 1132(a)(2).

The Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' ERISA § 1132(a)(2) claim.

3. Breach of Fiduciary Duties under ERISA § 1132(a)(3) (Claim 4)[11]

WellPoint Defendants also challenge Plaintiffs' § 1132(a)(3) claim [101] on the grounds that they are not "plan administrators" and that a cause of action seeking redress for a breach of fiduciary duty is only proper if no other § 1132 cause of action is applicable. See Mot. 38:8-9. For the same reasons that the Court rejected WellPoint Defendants' "plan administrator" argument under § 1132(a)(1)(B), the Court rejects the "plan administrator" argument here. See Cyr, 642 F.3d at 1204-06 (HN51[] "[Section 1132(a)(3)] makes no mention at all of which parties may be proper defendants," and there is "no reason to read a limitation into § 1132(a)(1)(B) that the Supreme Court did not perceive in § 1132(a)(3)" (citing Harris Trust & Savings Bank v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 530 U.S. 238, 246, 120 S.Ct. 2180, 147 L. Ed. 2d 187 (2000)).

WellPoint Defendants' generalized assertion that this § 1132(a)(3) claim is only proper if no other § 1132 cause of action exists is correct, but their argument comes too early in the litigation. HN52[] The Supreme Court has termed an ERISA [*1045] breach of fiduciary duty cause of action as a "catchall" provision or a "safety net, offering appropriate equitable relief for injuries caused by violations that [§ 1132] [102] does not elsewhere adequately remedy." Varity Corp. v. Howe, 516 U.S. 489, 515, 116 S. Ct. 1065, 134 L. Ed. 2d 130 (1996). The Ninth Circuit similarly held that "when relief is available under § 1132(a)(1), courts will not allow relief under § 1132(a)(3) catch-all provision." Johnson v. Buckley, 356 F.3d 1067, 1077-78 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Varity, 516 U.S. at 515). Because WellPoint is an insurer and falls within the scope of defendants that can be sued under § 1132(a)(3), complete dismissal of Plaintiffs' § 1132(a)(3) claim is inappropriate at this stage. Rule 12(b)(6) tests only the sufficiency of the pleaded claims, not necessarily the actual availability of relief. See *Ehrman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35124, 2007 WL 1288465, at 4; see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 (allowing parties to plead in the alternative).

Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' ERISA § 1132(a)(3) claim is DENIED.

4. Failure to Provide Accurate Evidences of Coverage and Summary Plan Descriptions under § 1132(c) (Claim 5)[12]

[11] The parties also refer to this as ERISA §502(a)(3).

[12] The parties also refer to this as ERISA §502(c).

HN53[] While an insurer can properly be sued under § 1132(a)(1)(B) and § 1132(a)(3), "only the plan administrator can be held liable for failing to comply with [§ 1132(c)]." Vaught v. Scottsdale Healthcare Corp. Health Plan, 546 F.3d 620, 633 (9th Cir. 2008); [103] 29 U.S.C. § 1132(c) ("[a]dministrator's refusal to supply requested information."). ERISA specifically defines an "administrator" as: "(i) the person specifically so designated by the terms of the instrument under which the plan is operated; (ii) if an administrator is not so designated, the plan sponsor; or (iii) in the case of a plan for which an administrator is not designated and a plan sponsor cannot be identified, such other person as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe." 29 U.S.C. § 1002(16)(A). Here, WellPoint Defendants are not properly alleged as "administrators" under § 1132(c).

Plaintiffs do not state in the Complaint that the WellPoint Defendants are designated by the operative instruments as ERISA-defined plan administrators. In fact, all that Plaintiffs have alleged is that the WellPoint Defendants assumed "the role of 'Plan Administrator' as that term is defined in ERISA" or, alternatively, that the WellPoint Defendants have "acted as the 'de facto' Plan Administrator" by evaluating claims, interpreting and applying plan terms, and making reimbursement determinations. See SAC ¶¶ 175-76. These allegations are insufficient to state a claim under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(c). [104] HN54[] With few exceptions, courts in this circuit have consistently concluded that liability cannot attach to a third party insurer that assumes administrative responsibilities under the de facto administrator theory. See Griffith v. Sun Life Assur. Co. of Canada, 143 Fed. Appx. 8, 10 (9th Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (finding no de facto administrator where an insurance company "handled all aspects of enrollment, claim processing, and other tasks an administrator typically is responsible for"); Turnipseed v. Educ. Mgmt. LLC's Employee Disability Plan, No. CV 09-03811 (MHP), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2660, 2010 WL 140384, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 13, 2010) ("Ford effectively closed the door on de facto administrator theory"); Larson v. Providence Health Plan, CV 08-929 (JO), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19038, 2009 WL 562815, at *5 (D. Or. March 2, 2009). The Ninth Circuit has all but slammed the door [*1046] on the de facto administrator theory advanced by Plaintiffs in this case and it is not alone. See Ford, 399 F.3d at 1081-82; see also Brown v. J.B. Hunt Transp. Servs., Inc., 586 F.3d 1079 (8th Cir. 2009); Mondry v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 557 F.3d 781 (7th Cir. 2009); Gore v. El Paso Energy Corp. Long Term Disability Plan, 477 F.3d 833 (6th Cir. 2007).

Plaintiffs' [105] allegations that WellPoint Defendants acted as de facto administrators are thorough and non-conclusory. Those allegations, however, do not defeat the fact that a de facto administrator is not liable as an actual administrator under ERISA. As a result, Plaintiffs have not stated a claim for WellPoint Defendants' alleged failure to provide accurate Evidences of Coverage and Summary Plan Descriptions under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(c), and their § 1132(c) claim is DISMISSED WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND.

D. Breach of Contract (Claim 9)

WellPoint Defendants seek dismissal of Plaintiffs' Ninth Claim for relief for breach of contract because the Complaint "fails to identify (i) the contracts and the contractual provisions that allegedly were breached and (ii) the conduct that allegedly breached them." Mot. 41:23-26.

HN55[] A plaintiff who sues on a written contract is not required to attach a copy of the contract to the complaint, but its existence and how it was breached must be identified. See Securimetrics, Inc. v. Hartford Cas. Ins. Co., CV 05-0917 (CW), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44893, 2005 WL 1712008, at *5-6 (N.D. Cal. July 21, 2005) ("The forms appended to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure note that 'plaintiff may set forth the contract [106] verbatim in the complaint or plead it, as indicated, by exhibit, or plead it according to its legal effect.'") (citing Fed. R. Civ. P. 84, Official Form 3, 12); see also 2 Moore's Federal Practice, § 10.05[4] (Matthew Bender 3d ed.). Plaintiffs' breach of contract allegations are sufficient to defeat WellPoint Defendants' motion.

Paragraph 328 of the Complaint asserts that "[t]he Agreements are uniform contracts that utilize the same definitions across different health plans." SAC ¶ 328. In the very next paragraph, those definitions are fleshed out. For example, the Agreements promise that for ONSs, "the maximum covered expense for services provided by a non-PPO provider or other healthcare provider will always be the lesser of the billed charge or[,] for a physician, the customary and reasonable charge." Id. ¶ 329. And, the customary and reasonable charge is defined as "a charge which falls within the common range of fees billed by a majority of physicians for a procedure in a given geographic region." Id. Those are the terms that WellPoint Defendants allegedly breached by paying the intentionally depressed Ingenix UCRs rather than objective "customary and reasonable charges." See, [107] e.g., id. ¶ 335.

If Plaintiffs' allegations are factually incorrect, WellPoint Defendants can prove that later in the litigation. At this stage, however, the question is not whether Plaintiffs' are correct, but rather whether they have pleaded a plausible claim. The Court answers that question in the affirmative and DENIES WellPoint Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' breach of contract claims. [13]

E. Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing (Claim 10)

Related to the breach of contract claim is the claim that Defendants' breached implied [*1047] covenants of good faith and fair dealing. See SAC ¶¶ 438-47. WellPoint Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs have failed to state an implied covenant claim is confusing and inconsistent. In their Motion, WellPoint Defendants maintain that the "breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim fails under the applicable state law." Mot. 43:14-20 (emphasis added). The motion then perfunctorily explains why the laws [108] of California, Virginia, New York and Georgia prohibit Plaintiffs' claim. See Mot. 43:23-44:10. As the Court would expect, Plaintiffs oppose Defendants' motion on the grounds Defendants presented. See Opp'n. 44:20-45:12. In the Reply, however, Defendants' curiously insist that Plaintiffs' argument "is besides the point" because it is not state law, but "[f]ederal case law [that] requires Plaintiffs to identify the specific policy provisions from which the covenant allegedly arises." Reply 21:10-14 (emphasis in original). The Court will not address arguments made for the first time in reply and because the state law issues have not been briefed, the Court DENIES the motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim.

F. California Unfair Competition and False Advertising Claims (Claim 11)

In the eleventh claim for relief, a single subscriber plaintiff, six provider plaintiffs and five association plaintiffs assert claims against WellPoint under each of the three prongs (fraudulent, unfair, and unlawful) of California's Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 ("UCL"), and under California's False Advertising Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 [109] ("FAL").

1. Unfair Competition

HN56[] The UCL prohibits "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising," as well as any act prohibited by California's false advertising statute. See Ariz. Cartridge Remanufacturers Ass'n v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 421 F.3d 981, 985 (9th Cir. 2005) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200). An "unlawful" business act under § 17200 is any business practice that is prohibited by law, whether "civil or criminal, statutory or judicially made . . . , federal, state or local." McKell v. Washington Mutual, Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1474, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227 (2006) (citations omitted). A business act is "unfair" under § 17200 "if it violates established public policy or if it is immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous and causes injury to consumers which outweighs its benefits." See id. at 1473. Finally, a "fraudulent" business practice under § 17200 is "one which is likely to deceive the public," and "may be based on representations to the public which are untrue, and also those which may be accurate on some level, but will nonetheless tend to mislead or deceive." See id. at 1471. HN57[] UCL claims [110] based on fraud are subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). See Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124-25 (9th Cir. 2009). Plaintiffs must plead "the who, what, when, where, and how of the alleged fraudulent conduct" and explain "why [a] statement or omission complained of was false and misleading." *In re Actimmune Mktg. Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103408, 2009 WL 3740648, at 13 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 6, 2009).

In addition, HN58[] Plaintiffs must specifically allege that the fraudulent conduct caused them injury. See In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 327, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009). This is really an issue of a plaintiff's standing to assert a UCL or FAL claim and requires a "twofold showing: he or she must demonstrate [*1048] injury in fact and a loss of money or property caused by unfair competition." Peterson v. Cellco P'ship, 164

[13] The Parties do not address the extent to which state law differs with respect to the breach of contract claim. Because WellPoint Defendants do not move to dismiss on those grounds, the Court does not address them.

Cal. App. 4th 1583, 1590, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316 (2008). In cases of fraud, the fraudulent conduct must be an "immediate cause" of injury and that, but-for the fraudulent statements, "the plaintiffs in all reasonable probability would not have engaged in the injury-producing conduct." In re Tobacco II, 46 Cal. 4th at 326.

In this case, Plaintiffs' claims sound in fraud, [111] requiring them to be pleaded with particularity. This Plaintiffs do not do. All that Plaintiffs assert are conclusory allegations that do not plausibly show reliance. For example, the Complaint states: "Plaintiffs each relied upon WellPoint to reimburse them the appropriate amount for their services in compliance with WellPoint's legal and contractual obligations." See SAC ¶ 449. Nowhere, however, does the complaint allege that any statement about the ONS and UCRs induced reliance.

It should be noted that Plaintiffs are generally correct in their assertion that "where . . . a plaintiff alleges exposure to a long-term advertising campaign, the plaintiff is not required to plead with an unrealistic degree of specificity that the plaintiff relied on particular advertisements or statements." Opp'n 46:11-16 (quoting In re Tobacco II, 46 Cal. 4th at 328). Notwithstanding that assertion, Plaintiffs wholly fail to allege a long-term advertising campaign. In fact, the closest they get is in paragraph 460 where they state that "WellPoint has disseminated, and continue[s] to disseminate advertising, and other materials to potential customers, their insured and healthcare providers, which they [112] know or should reasonably know is false and misleading." SAC ¶ 460. Even if they had adequately pleaded a long-term advertising campaign, it, standing alone, would be insufficient to plead the degree of reliance required in federal court by Rule 9(b). See In re Actimmune Marketing Litigation, No. CV 08-2376, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103408, 2009 WL 3740648, at *13 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 6, 2009) ("Tobacco II cannot rescue plaintiffs' claims under the UCL fraudulent prong" because "the circumstances of the fraud must be stated with particularity"); see also Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1126 (citing Rule 9(b) and affirming dismissal because Plaintiff failed to identify "what the television advertisements or other sales material specifically stated . . . when [plaintiff] was exposed to them . . . which ones he found material . . . [and] which sales material he relied upon in making his decision to buy").

That said Plaintiffs' separate claim that "they would not even have purchased had they been adequately informed of [the plans'] true cost," is sufficient to plead the reliance element of a UCL claim, but the earlier UCL pleading shortcomings are fatal as Plaintiffs do not specifically identify what they relied on before purchasing the [113] plans, rather than after. See SAC ¶ 463; Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court (Benson), 51 Cal. 4th 310, 246 P.3d 877, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741 (Cal. 2010). Without alleging a fraudulent UCL claim with the degree of specificity required by Rule 9(b), the suggestion that Plaintiffs would "not even have purchased" the insurance is an unfounded conclusion. Thus, Plaintiffs' have failed to state a fraud-based UCL claim.

Plaintiffs' failure to plead a fraud-based UCL claim does not necessarily sink their unfair or unlawful UCL claims, however. As discussed, HN59[] an "unlawful" business act under § 17200 is any business practice that is prohibited by law, whether "civil or criminal, statutory or judicially made . . . , federal, state or local." McKell, 142 Cal. App. 4th at 1474. [*1049] A plaintiff can establish that a business practice was "unfair" by showing that such conduct "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Byars v. SCME Mortgage Bankers, Inc., 109 Cal. App. 4th 1134, 1147, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 796 (2003) (emphasis added). Because Plaintiffs [114] have adequately stated a claim under the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs have also stated a claim under the UCL's unfair and unlawful prongs.

Thus, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' fraud-based UCL claim WITH LEAVE TO AMEND, but DENIES Defendants' motion as to Plaintiffs' unfair or unlawful UCL claim.

2. False Advertising

HN60[] California's false advertising statute makes it unlawful for a business to disseminate any statement "which is untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading." See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500. "The law encompasses not just false statements but those statements which may be accurate on some level, but will nonetheless tend to mislead or deceive." Ariz. Cartridge Remanufacturers Ass'n v. Lexmark Int'l Inc., 421 F.3d 981, 985 (9th Cir. 2005) (internal quotations omitted). HN61[] "District courts in California have consistently held . . . that claims under California's FAL are grounded in fraud." *Yumul v. Smart Balance, Inc., 733 F. Supp. 2d 1117, 2010 WL 3359663, at 3 (C.D. Cal. May 24, 2010). Accordingly, the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) apply. See id.

Plaintiffs' [115] FAL claim is based on the same allegedly untrue or misleading concerning ONS and UCRs as the UCL claim. For the same reasons set forth above, the claim fails to plead with particularity how Plaintiffs were injured as a result of WellPoint Defendants' untrue or misleading statements. The Court GRANTS the motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' FAL claim WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

G. New York General Business Law § 349 (Claim 12)

HN62[] New York's General Business Law § 349 provides a private right of action to any person injured by a business' deceptive act or practice. See Riordan v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 977 F.3d 47, 51 (2d Cir. 1992). A plaintiff must prove three elements to recover under § 349: "first, that the challenged act or practice was consumer-oriented; second, that it was misleading in a material way; and third, that the plaintiff suffered injury as a result of the deceptive act." Stutman v. Chem. Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 731 N.E.2d 608, 611, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892 (N.Y. 2000). Furthermore, where there is a simultaneous claim for breach of contract, a plaintiff must plead losses "independent of the loss caused by [the] alleged breach of contract." Spagnola v. Chubb Corp., 574 F.3d 64, 74 (2d Cir. 2009).

WellPoint Defendants do not [116] contest the first two elements but state that the § 349 fails because "when conclusory allegations of 'unfair' or 'deceptive' conduct are properly disregarded, [the] claim boils down" to a breach of contract claim. Mot. 46:24-47:4. Defendants' overlook the other injuries alleged by Plaintiffs. For example, Plaintiffs allege injuries such as having to "forego such ONS entirely to avoid" the added expense of faulty UCRs. See SAC ¶ 350. Moreover, HN63[] courts interpreting New York law have found denial of insurance benefits to be actionable under § 349. See, e.g., [*1050] *Kurschner v. Massachusetts Cas. Ins. Co., No. CV 08-0011, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16623, 2009 WL 537504, at 4-5 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 3, 2009); *Binder v. Nat'l Life of Vt., No. CV 02-6411 GEL, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8431 , 2003 WL 21180417, at 6 (S.D.N.Y. May 20, 2003) ("[t]he allegation that the insurer makes a practice of inordinately delaying and then denying a claim without reference to its viability may be said to fall within the parameters of" § 349). As a result, WellPoint Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 claim is DENIED.

UHG Defendants' separate motion to dismiss the § 349 claim, however, is not denied part-in-parcel with WellPoint Defendants' motion. Pertaining [117] to the § 349 claim specifically, UHG Defendants argue that Plaintiffs do not "allege that Ingenix or UHG made any statements to Plaintiffs, let alone any materially false statements that caused them injury, as required by [N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law] § 349." UHG Mot. 6:22-23. HN64[] The Court recognizes that § 349 "imposes liability for material omissions on co-conspirators," Opp'n 49:7-8 (citing Batas v. Prudential Ins. Co., 281 A.D.2d 260, 724 N.Y.S.2d 3, 5 (N.Y. App. Div. 2001), but Plaintiffs' § 349 claim fails to even mention UHG Defendants and expressly disavows any "rel[iance] upon the conspiracy allegations" made earlier in the Complaint. SAC ¶ 466. Plaintiffs have thus failed to state a N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 claim against UHG Defendants, and UHG Defendants motion to dismiss this claim is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

E. California's Cartwright Act Claim (Claim 13)

1. The Cartwright Act claim by ERISA Plaintiffs

Those Plaintiffs whose claims are based on ERISA plans cannot assert claims under California's Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720, et seq. HN65[] The Cartwright Act was designed to promote free competition, and it, like other antitrust laws, is "about [118] the protection of competition, not competitors." See Clayworth v. Pfizer, Inc., 49 Cal. 4th 758, 783, 111 Cal. Rptr. 3d 666, 233 P.3d 1066 (2010). Individual damage awards are "a tool by which these precompetitive purposes are carried out," even though the main purpose of the law is to protect the public. Id. In this case, Plaintiffs Roberts, Henry, Schwendig, Peck, Pariser and Kavali complain about WellPoint Defendants' conduct related to qualified ERISA plans. See SAC ¶¶ 377, 379. HN66[] ERISA, however, preempts state law causes of action and a plaintiff cannot "obtain relief by dressing up an ERISA benefits claim in the garb of" state law. See Cleghorn v. Blue Shield of California, 408 F.3d 1222, 1225 (9th Cir. 2005) (citation omitted).

Although the Cartwright Act focuses primarily on anticompetitive conduct while ERISA focuses on benefit plans, it is the nature of the relief sought in this case that is determinative for preemption purposes. HN67[] ERISA provides that "a civil action may be brought . . . by a participant or beneficiary . . . to recover benefits due to him under the terms of his plan." 29 U.S.C. § 502(a). Plaintiffs have done just that in their ERISA claims for relief, see SAC ¶¶ 381, 387, 389, [119] but also seek the same relief under the Cartwright Act, see id. ¶ 479. The Supreme Court has ruled out Plaintiffs' alternative bases for recovery. HN68[] Even state law claims that do not "duplicate ERISA remedies" are preempted because "Congress' intent to make the ERISA civil enforcement mechanism exclusive would be undermined if state causes of action that supplement the ERISA § 502(a) remedies were permitted." Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila, 542 U.S. 200, 216, 124 S. Ct. 2488, 159 L. Ed. 2d 312 (2004); see also Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux, 481 U.S. 41, 54, 107 S. Ct. 1549, 95 L. Ed. 2d 39 [*1051] (1987) ("[P]olicy choices reflected in the inclusion of certain remedies and the exclusion of others under the federal scheme would be completely undermined if ERISA-plan participants and beneficiaries were free to obtain remedies under state law that Congress rejected in ERISA."); Elliot v. Fortis Benefits Ins. Co., 337 F.3d 1138, 1147 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that state claims that "seek[] non-ERISA damages for what are essential claim processing causes of action[]" are preempted). Plaintiffs' allegations that the subscribers "paid more for ONS services" and that providers "received less for providing [120] ONS services" are claims for benefits under ERISA plans that are preempted by federal law. SAC ¶ 479. WellPoint Defendants motion to dismiss the ERISA Plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claim is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

2. The Cartwright Act Claim by non-ERISA Plaintiffs

Defendants seek dismissal of the non-ERISA Plaintiffs' Cartwright Act claim "for the same three reasons Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim should be dismissed." Mot. 47:23-24; see also UHG Mot. 7:9-18. WellPoint Defendants base that argument on the Ninth Circuit's holding that analysis under the Cartwright Act "mirrors analysis under federal law because the Cartwright Act . . . was modeled after the Sherman Act." County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001). For the reasons stated above, the non-ERISA Plaintiffs' have adequately pleaded a Sherman Act violation, and they have also adequately pleaded a Cartwright Act violation. In this respect, Defendants' motion is DENIED.

IV. Conclusion

The Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendants' Motions to Dismiss as follows:

1.) GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Plaintiffs' lack of standing to assert claims for non-Ingenix ONS Benefits

2.) DENIES [121] Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for lack of standing for all other claims

3.) DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims

4.) GRANTS WellPoint Defendants and UHG Defendants Motions to Dismiss Plaintiffs' RICO claims

5.) DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' ERISA § 1132(a)(1)(B), § 1132(a)(2), and § 1132(a)(3) claims.

6.) GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' ERISA § 1132(c) claim.

7.) DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Breach of Contract claims

8.) DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing claims

9.) GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' fraud-based California Unfair Competition and False Advertising claims

10.) DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' unfair and unlawful California Unfair Competition claims

11.) DENIES WellPoint Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 claim

12.) GRANTS UHG Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 349 claim

13.) DENIES WellPoint Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' California [*1052] Cartwright Act claim for Non-ERISA Plaintiffs

14.) GRANTS WellPoint Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' [122] California Cartwright Act claim for ERISA Plaintiffs

All dismissed claims are dismissed WITH LEAVE TO AMEND, except for Plaintiffs' ERISA § 1132(c) claim, which is dismissed WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND. Plaintiffs must file a Third Amended Complaint within 60 days of the date of this Order. This Order renders the Motion for Partial Stay of Discovery Limited to Non-Ingenix Issues Pending Resolution of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss MOOT. See Dkt. #147.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

End of Document

RealPage, Inc. v. Yardi Sys.

United States District Court for the Central District of California, Western Division

August 11, 2011, Decided; August 11, 2011, Filed

Case No. CV 11-00690 ODW (JEMx)

Reporter
2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90095 *; 2011 WL 3565112

RealPage, Inc., Counter-Claimant, v. Yardi Systems, Inc., Counter-Defendant.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, Motion denied by, in part, Objection overruled by Yardi Sys. v. RealPage, Inc., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164790 (C.D. Cal., Sept. 6, 2011)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part, Claim dismissed by RealPage, Inc. v. Yardi Sys., 852 F. Supp. 2d 1215, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17281 (C.D. Cal., Feb. 13, 2012)

Core Terms

intentional interference, software, alleges, cloud, prospective economic advantage, antitrust, host, tying arrangement, fails, bid, motion to dismiss, computing, interfere, economic relations, antitrust claim, instant motion, trade secret, Counterclaim, disruption, argues

Counsel: [*1] For Yardi Systems, Inc., a California company, Plaintiff, Counter Defendant: Chad Russell, Gabrielle Daneeka Hann, Geoffrey M Howard, Bingham McCutchen LLP, San Francisco, CA; James B Lewis, Bingham McCutchen, East Palo Alto, CA.

For RealPage, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Defendant, Counter Claimant: David R Eberhart, O'Melveny and Myers LLP, San Francisco, CA; James Michael Pearl, O'Melveny and Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Sharon M Bunzel, O'Melveny & Myers, San Francisco, CA; Mark Alan Samuels, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For DC Consulting, Inc., a Washington, D.C. corporation, Defendant: Allan Gabriel, Sidney Christopher Winter, LEAD ATTORNEY, Dykema Gossett LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

Judges: HON. OTIS D. WRIGHT, II, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: OTIS D. WRIGHT, II

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART COUNTER-DEFENDANT'S MOTION DISMISS PURSUANT TO FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6) [40] [Filed 06/16/11]

I. INTRODUCTION

Pending before the Court is Counter-Defendant Yardi Systems, Inc.'s ("Yardi") Motion to Dismiss Counter-Claimant RealPage, Inc.'s ("RealPage") First Amended Counterclaim ("FACC") pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). (Dkt. No. 40.) RealPage filed an Opposition [*2] to the instant Motion, to which Yardi filed a Reply. (Dkt.

Nos. 44, 51.) Having carefully considered the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the instant Motion, the Court deems the matter appropriate for decision without oral argument. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; L.R. 7-15. For the following reasons, Yardi's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED in PART and DENIED in PART.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

RealPage and Yardi are competitors in the real property management and accounting business. (FACC ¶¶ 1, 2.) Perhaps Yardi's greatest success has been its popular Voyager software — a computer program used to integrate property management functions and accounting. (FACC ¶¶ 2, 39.) Voyager can be installed on a computer — known as the "on-premises" approach — or clients can remotely access their version of the program stored on Yardi's servers via the Internet — known as the Application Service Provider ("ASP") approach. (Id.) RealPage, on the other hand, markets a version of cloud computing it calls Software-as-a-Service (the "SaaS"), whereby it offers "vertically-integrated" systems and support designed specifically to address the needs of multifamily real estate owners and property managers throughout [*3] the United States. (FACC ¶ 3.) The SaaS allows RealPage clients to aggregate applications from multiple software providers into a single system, which is stored on RealPage's servers and can be remotely accessed by the client via the Internet. (FACC ¶ 4.) Both the ASP approach and SaaS require clients to pay an additional fee for the service. (FACC ¶¶ 2, 4.) RealPage claims the greatest benefit of the SaaS is that it involves only a single version of software code accessed by all clients, thus requiring developers of third-party applications to maintain only one version of their code and causing the cost of ownership to be reduced. (FACC ¶ 5.) Yardi's ASP approach requires a different code stream for each client resulting in higher-end costs. (Id.)

RealPage alleges that rather than innovate and invest in a superior cloud system, Yardi sought to impede and sabotage the growth of the SaaS in an effort to stay competitive with, and not lose business to, RealPage. (FACC ¶ 12.) One way in which Yardi allegedly sought to impede and sabotage RealPage was by and through Joe Hendrix ("Hendrix"), an employee of a significant client of both Yardi and RealPage ("Client X"). (FACC ¶ 30.) While at [*4] Client X, Hendrix moved the company's data center to the SaaS. (FACC ¶¶ 29, 30.) Recognizing Client X would no longer have need for his services after its IT department was outsourced to RealPage, Hendrix interviewed for and was hired as the Chief Information Officer at RealPage. (FACC ¶ 30.) Per Client X's request, Hendrix was permitted to wind down his responsibilities with Client X while also working for RealPage, but he was subject to the provisions of a Mutual Confidentiality Agreement. (FACC ¶¶ 30, 31.) This agreement indicated that Hendrix was forbidden to disclose any propriety information regarding RealPage's business model, strategy, or current and prospective clients for two year from the date of the contract. (FACC ¶ 31.)

RealPage further alleges that, at this same time and with Yardi's knowledge, Hendrix was acting as a mole for Yardi. (FACC ¶ 32.) As such, Hendrix provided Yardi with: (a) RealPage data center and disaster recovery architecture; (b) RealPage technology used to monitor and improve the operation of third-party applications; (c) RealPage process methods for change, problem, and release management; (d) detailed and proprietary descriptions of the SaaS; and [*5] (e) the confidential details of RealPage's bids for large Yardi clients. (FACC ¶¶ 32, 33.) Furthermore, after participating in sales calls, strategy discussion, and receiving information regarding RealPage hardware and software, Hendrix abruptly announced he had accepted a position with Yardi to expand its Texas operations. (FACC ¶ 32.) Then, within three weeks of Hendrix departure from RealPage, Yardi began offering a vertically-integrated service called Yardi Cloud Services, allegedly modeled on the SaaS. (FACC ¶ 34.)

RealPage also claims Yardi initiated a campaign to force its Voyager clients, through threats and intimidation, into anti-competitive exclusionary contracts, the terms of which allegedly stated that unless clients agreed not to use the SaaS, they would face termination of their licencing agreements. (FACC ¶ 39.) Moreover, because Voyager is a critical back-office application without a suitable alternative program, businesses faced high switching costs if they were to terminate their license agreements with Yardi and change platforms. (Id.) Examples of this misconduct was allegedly manifested in relation to five RealPage clients ("Clients 1-5," respectively).

Client 1, [*6] a large property management firm and user of Voyager, entered into a Letter Agreement for Interim Services with RealPage (the "Letter Agreement"). (FACC ¶ 42.) The Letter Agreement indicated, among other things, that Client 1's affiliate would continue to support any Yardi applications until RealPage and Client 1 entered into an additional agreement, called the Cloud Service Agreement, at a later date. (Reply, Exh. 1 at 2, 6.) RealPage alleges that Yardi would not modify its licensing agreement to allow Client 1 to use Voyager on the SaaS; rather it "advised Client 1 that it could not continue with the Letter Agreement for Interim Services or any future contemplated agreements with RealPage." (Id.) Subsequently, Client 1 announced that it could not use the SaaS, and RealPage was deprived of over $100,000 annually. (Id.)

Client 2, a top ten property management firm and user of Voyager, moved to RealPage's SaaS for most of its IT needs, including the hosting of Voyager. (FACC ¶ 43.) Although Yardi had initially refused to bid for Client 2's third party hosting and outsourcing of related IT services, Hendrix, who had participated in sales calls to Client 2 and acquired substantial confidential [*7] information including detailed bid information, strongly encouraged Yardi to recapture Client 2's business. (FACC ¶¶ 43, 44.) Yardi consequently aggressively bid for Client 2's business. [1] (Id.) Additionally, Clients 2-A and 2-B, both customers of Client 2, were affected by Yardi's campaign against RealPage in that Yardi would not allow RealPage to implement Client 2-A's software interface, nor would Yardi allow RealPage to support Client 2-B's upgraded software. (FACC ¶ 46.)

Client 3, another multifamily and commercial real estate owner, agreed to move its data center to the SaaS. (FACC ¶ 47.) During the migration, however, Yardi allegedly demanded that Client 3 not use the SaaS, nor associate itself with RealPage. (Id.) Subsequently, Client 3 decided not to use the SaaS to host its Voyager software and RealPage lost the revenue it would have generated managing that application. (Id.)

RealPage also alleges Yardi repeatedly interfered with RealPage's subsidiary consulting company, EverGreen, and EverGreen's relationships with its existing and prospective consulting [*8] clients. (FACC ¶ 48.) One such instance occurred when EverGreen was in the process of negotiating a consulting contract with Client 4. (Id.) Negotiations were supposedly interrupted, however, when Yardi told Client 4 that it would not work with EverGreen, and Client 4 — not wanting to "be a casualty in" a strained relationship between the two companies — decided not to enter into the consulting contract. (Id.)

Finally, RealPage alleges Yardi interfered with Client 5's ability to transition from Voyager to RealPage's SaaS property management software, OneSite. (FACC ¶ 49.) Yardi allegedly accomplished this by changing its practice of allowing transitioning clients to maintain read-only access to historical data on Voyager, and supposedly intending to cut off Client 5's access in the future. (Id.)

In response to Yardi's January 24, 2011 Complaint, RealPage filed a Counterclaim on March 28, 2011, followed by the FACC on May 18, 2011. The FACC proceeds on six claims: (1) misappropriation of trade secrets; (2) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act; (3) violation of the California Cartwright Act; (4) intentional interference with a contract; (5) intentional interference with [*9] a prospective economic advantage; and (6) unfair competition in violation of the California Business and Professions Code section 17200, also known as the Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"). Subsequently, Yardi filed the instant Motion to Dismiss on June 16, 2011.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

"To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), a complaint generally must satisfy only the minimal notice pleading requirements of Rule 8(a)(2)." Porter v. Jones, 319 F.3d 483, 494 (9th Cir. 2003). Rule 8(a)(2) requires "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). For a complaint to sufficiently state a claim, its "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) can be based on "the lack of a cognizable legal theory" or "the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696,

[1] The FACC does not indicate whether Yardi was successful at recapturing Client 2's business or if Client 2 remained with RealPage.

699 (9th Cir. 1990). Mere "labels and conclusions" or a "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. [*10] Rather, to overcome a 12(b)(6) motion, "a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement of relief." Id. (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).

When considering a 12(b)(6) motion, a court is generally limited to considering material within the pleadings and must construe "[a]ll factual allegations set forth in the complaint . . . as true and . . . in the light most favorable to [the plaintiff]." See Lee v. City of L.A., 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing Epstein v. Washington Energy Co., 83 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1996)). A court is not, however, "required to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001). [*11] [2]

IV. DISCUSSION

Yardi argues that five of RealPage's counterclaims fail to state any claim upon which relief can be granted. [3] First, Yardi contends RealPage's antitrust claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act and the California Cartwright Act fail to: (a) properly allege per se tying, (b) define the relevant market affected by Yardi's alleged conduct, (c) allege market power, (d) allege harm to competition, and (e) identify any agreement in restraint of trade. Second, Yardi argues RealPage's claim for intentional interference with a contract does not allege an actual breach or disruption of any contract between RealPage and a third party. Third, Yardi contends that the claims for intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage [*12] and unfair competition fail to the extent they rely on RealPage's flawed antitrust and contractual interference claims. The Court addresses each argument in turn.

A. REALPAGE'S ANTITRUST CLAIMS

RealPage brings two claims under federal and state antitrust statutes: (1) 15 U.S.C. § 1 (" § 1"), or the Sherman Antitrust Act; and (2) the California Cartwright Act — section 16727 of the California Business and Professions Code. [4] While § 1 prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . ," the Supreme Court has narrowed its definition to only prohibit unreasonable restraints of trade. See State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). In this case, Yardi challenges RealPage's antitrust claims on the ground that RealPage [*13] fails to allege either a "rule of reason" or a per se tying agreement. (Mot. at 6-7; Reply at 2-3, 6, 12.)

Both § 1 and section 16727 prohibit illegal tying arrangements. Blough v. Holland Realty, Inc., 574 F.3d 1084, 1088 (9th Cir. 2009); Nicolosi Distrib., Inc. v. BMW of N.A., No. 10-03256, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44544, 2011 WL

---

[2] To the extent the Court relies on any documents not attached directly to the FACC, those documents are mentioned in the FACC and are thereby incorporated by reference. Furthermore, "[a] trial court may presume that public records are authentic and trustworthy," Gilbrook v. City of Westminster, 177 F.3d 839, 858 (9th Cir. 1999), and, thus, fall within the purview of Federal Rule of Evidence 201. See Lee v. City of L.A., 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001).

[3] Yardi does not bring any argument in the instant Motion against RealPage's first claim for misappropriation of trade secrets. In light of the allegations levied against Yardi for willfully and maliciously misappropriating RealPage's trade secrets by means of Hendrix, (see FACC ¶¶ 51-57), and because Yardi failed to provide any argument to the contrary, this claim survives the Motion to Dismiss.

[4] While the FACC merely states in a head note that RealPage is bringing its third counterclaim under the California Cartwright Act, it does not allege any specific section under the Act. (FACC at 28.) Therefore, the Court is forced to rely upon RealPage's Opposition which makes reference to section 16727. (Opp'n at 5.)

1483424, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 19, 2011). "A tying arrangement is 'an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product, or at least agree that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier.'" Image Technical Service, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 903 F.2d 612, 615 (9th Cir. 1990) (quoting Northern Pac. Ry. Co. V. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958)); Blough, 574 F.3d at 1088 (a tying arrangement is where a party ties "two products or services together, whereby 'the seller conditions the [*14] sale of one product (the tying product) on the buyer's purchase of a second product (the tied product).'") (quoting Cascade Health Solution v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 912 (9th Cir. 2008)).

Before the Court attempts to analyze the five different ways Yardi argues RealPage failed to state an antitrust claim, it must first determine if there is a tying arrangement such that Yardi's conduct would be subject the aforementioned antitrust statutes. RealPage asserts that the tying product, Yardi's Voyager software, is tied to Yardi's "anticompetitive exclusionary agreements," which preclude Yardi clients from using Voyager on the SaaS. (FACC ¶ 59.) Based solely upon these criteria, Yardi's Voyager program and its exclusionary licensing agreement appear to fall within bounds of an illegal tying agreement. The Court, however, cannot overlook the full definition of a tied product. As explained above, for an illegal tying arrangement to exist, the sale of the Voyager software must be conditioned upon the purchase of cloud computing, or at least the non-purchase of cloud computing from RealPage. Yet, the facts indicate that Voyager software does not have to be used with any cloud computing services. [*15] (FACC ¶¶ 2, 39.) Indeed, clients can elect to use the on-premise approach whereby they can install the software on their own computers and manage it themselves. (Id.) Thus, because Yardi does not tie the sale of Voyager with a tied product, i.e. the purchase of cloud computing or the non-purchase of cloud computing from RealPage, the facts as pleaded do not fit the definition of a tying arrangement. Therefore RealPage fails to allege that Yardi engaged in an illegal tying arrangement. Consequently, RealPage's antitrust claims against Yardi fail and Yardi's Motion is GRANTED as to these claims.

B. REALPAGE'S CLAIMS FOR INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH A CONTRACT AND FOR INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH A PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC ADVANTAGE

As an initial matter, the only contract at issue in this case is the Letter Agreement between RealPage and Client 1. Indeed, RealPage does not allege there was a valid contract between it and Clients 2, 2-A, 2-B, 3, 4, 5, or that such a contract was breached by Yardi's actions. RealPage does, however, allege that Yardi interfered with the prospective economic advantage as to all Clients. The Court first addresses the issues as they relate to Client 1.

The elements [*16] of an action for intentional interference with a contract are "'(1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage.'" Hahn v. Diaz-Barba, 194 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1197, 125 Cal. Rptr. 3d 242 (2011) (quoting Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 19 Cal. 4th 26, 55, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709, 960 P.2d 513 (1998)). "A refusal to deal is one means by which a person may induce another to commit a breach of his contract with a third person." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 766 cmt. k (1979). A claim for intentional interference with a prospective economic advantage is comprised of the same elements as intentional interference with a contract in that it requires evidence of an economic relationship with a probability of future economic benefit, but some additional wrongful conduct other than the alleged interference is required. J.A. Savage v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., 21 Cal. App. 4th 434, 448, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 (Ct. App. 1994); Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1153, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003).

The Letter Agreement [*17] provides that RealPage will not host the Yardi software, but that an affiliate of Client 1 will provide these hosting services. (Reply, Exh. 1 at 2.) While the Letter Agreement further states that RealPage will begin to host these services upon the execution of an additional agreement called the Cloud Service Agreement, the prospective Cloud Service Agreement never materialized. Thus, although contemplated, RealPage and Client 1 never had an actual agreement whereby RealPage would host any Yardi applications. Indeed, the contract only provides that Client 1's affiliate will host these services. None of Yardi's alleged actions interfere with Client 1's affiliate's ability to host these services. Consequently, RealPage's claim for intentional interference with a contract fails. Moreover, to the extent that RealPage argues that Yardi's failure to modify the licensing agreement constitutes intentional interference with a contract, in light of the foregoing, this argument also fails. In essence, the prospective Cloud Service Agreement cannot be said to be an actual contract. Rather, it is a prospective economic advantage.

For Yardi to have interfered with RealPage's prospective economic [*18] advantage as to Clients 1, 2, 2-A, 2-B, 3, 4, and/or 5, not only must the FACC properly plead the above mentioned elements for this tort, but RealPage must also "allege an act that is wrongful independent of the interference itself." CRST Van Expedited, Inc. v. Werner Enterprises, Inc., 479 F.3d 1099, 1108 (9th Cir. 2007). Here, RealPage alleges Yardi's conduct was independently tortious or unlawful because Yardi restrained trade and competition in violation of the aforementioned antitrust law. (FACC ¶ 79.) Moreover, RealPage also claims Yardi acted wrongfully when it "used RealPage's own trade secrets, obtained unlawfully by Yardi, to unfairly compete against RealPage and to interfere with RealPage's client relationships." (Id.)

To the extent RealPage bases Yardi's wrongful conduct upon violation of antitrust law, the Court has already determined those claim to be improperly pleaded. Therefore, the Court finds any reliance upon them to be unavailing. To the extent RealPage RealPage claims Yardi used the proprietary information unlawfully provided to it by Hendrix as to interfere with any prospective economic advantage, it does so only as to Client 2. (FACC ¶ 43.) No such allegations [*19] exist as to Clients 1, 2-A, 2-B, 3, 4, and 5. Therefore, the Court need only to look at whether Yardi acted wrongfully in its alleged attempt to interfere with the prospective economic advantage between RealPage and Client 2, and whether RealPage has properly alleged all the elements of this tort against Yardi as to Client 2.

RealPage claims that its prospective economic relationship with Client 2 was damaged when, at Hendrix's encouragement and with Hendrix's possession of proprietary information, Yardi began to bid for Client 2's third-party hosting services. The Court has already acknowledged that RealPage's claim for misappropriation of trade secrets has not been challenged in the context of the instant Motion. Thus, for purposes of the instant Motion, the Court presumes that the FACC properly asserts Yardi acted wrongfully as to Client 2. It is also true that RealPage asserts a valid expectation between it and Client 2, and that Yardi was aware of this expectation and intentionally sought to disrupt or interfere with the relationship. (See FACC ¶¶ 43-44, 77-78.) Yet, the FACC falls short of alleging any actual disruption or breach of the prospective economic relationship between [*20] RealPage and Client 2.

RealPage only alleges Yardi attempted to interfere with the prospective economic relationship between RealPage and Client 2 by using the unlawful proprietary information to aggressively bid for Client 2's business. The FACC remains vague and ambiguous as to whether Yardi's aggressive bids toward Client 2 had any effect upon the potential economic relationship or if it caused Client 2 to walk away from a potential contract with RealPage. Moreover, the FACC does not allege any damages caused to RealPage by Yardi's actions towards Client 2. Rather, the FACC implies that Yardi's attempts to intimidate Client 2 failed. (See FACC ¶ 46). Consequently, RealPage fails to properly plead the final two elements for intentional interference of a prospective economic advantage — actual breach and resulting damage. Accordingly, Yardi's Motion is GRANTED as to both intentional interference claims.

C. REALPAGE'S UCL CLAIM

UCL section 17200, indicates that a claim may be brought against a party for any "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice . . . ." "An act is 'unlawful' under section 17200 if it violates an underlying state or federal statute or common law . . [*21] . . An act is 'unfair' if the act threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law . . . . A practice is 'fraudulent' if members of the public are likely to be deceived . . . ." *Quintero Family Trust v. OneWest Bank, F.S.B., No. 09-CV-1561-IEG, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6618, 2010 WL 392312, at 12 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 27, 2010).

Yardi argues that because RealPage's other claim fail, the UCL claim fails to the extent that it relies upon the other claims. RealPage's claim for misappropriation of trade secrets, however, has not been challenged. Therefore, it provides a sufficient foundation for RealPage's UCL claim against Yardi. Consequently, Yardi's Motion is DENIED as to this claim.

V. CONCLUSION

For of the foregoing reasons, RealPage's claims against Yardi for misappropriation of trade secrets and violation of the UCL survive Yardi's Motion to Dismiss. Accordingly, Yardi's Motion to Dismiss is DENIED as to these claims. As to its antitrust and intentional interference claims, however, RealPage fails to properly state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Accordingly, Yardi's Motion [*22] to Dismiss is GRANTED as to these claims. If it so chooses, RealPage may amend these claims if it can, in good faith, allege facts to support them. Any amended counterclaim must be filed within thirty (30) days of the date of this Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

August 11, 2011

/s/ Otis D. Wright, II

HON. OTIS D. WRIGHT, II

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

LexisNexis

In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

August 12, 2011, Decided; August 15, 2011, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 08-2433 (Indirect)

Reporter

282 F.R.D. 126 *; 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90697 ; 2011 WL 3563835

IN RE: WELLBUTRIN XL ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Subsequent History: Summary judgment granted by, in part In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66312 (E.D. Pa., May 11, 2012)

Prior History: In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90075 (E.D. Pa., Aug. 11, 2011)

Core Terms

generic, purchases, antitrust, hydrochloride, bupropion, branded, overcharge, class member, extended-release, prices, entities, class certification, named plaintiff, plaintiffs', defendants', parties, consumer protection, damages, transactions, indirect, choice of law, substitution, class representative, class period, class-wide, class action, methodology, predominate, intervene, but-for

Counsel: [1] For PLUMBERS AND PIPEFITTERS LOCAL 572 HEALTH AND WELFARE FUND, INDIVIDUALLY AND ON BEHALF OF ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiff: AMBER M. NESBITT, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, KENNETH A. WEXLER, LEAD ATTORNEY, JUSTIN N. BOLEY, PRO HAC VICE, WEXLER WALLACE LLP, CHICAGO, IL; DANIEL E. GUSTAFSON, KARLA M. GLUEK, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, GUSTAFSON GLUEK PLLC, MINNEAPOLIS, MN; DAVID J. COHEN, LEAD ATTORNEY, KOLMAN ELY PC, PENNDEL, PA; J. GERARD STRANCH, IV, JOE P. LENISKI, JR., LEAD ATTORNEYS, JAMES G. STRANCH, III, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, BRANSTETTER STRANCH & JENNINGS PLLC, NASHVILLE, TN; PATRICK HOWARD, SALTZ MONGELUZZI BARRETT & BENDESKY, PHILADELPHIA, PA; PETER ST. PHILLIP, LOWEY DANNENBERG COHEN & HART, P.C., WHITE PLAINS, NY.

For BIOVAIL CORPORATION, BIOVAIL LABORATORIES, INC., Defendants: ANDREA MARIE DEVRIES, DANIEL J. BOLAND, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ANDREW M. BERNIE, ANDREW D. LAZEROW, ASHLEY E. BASS, DANIELLE S. BARBOUR, DAVID J. SHAW, HENRY B. LIU, J. MAREN SCHMIDT, JASON C. RAOFIELD, PRO HAC VICE, JOHN W. NIELDS, JR., THOMAS A. ISAACSON, COVINGTON & BURLING LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; THOMAS E. ZEMAITIS, PEPPER, HAMILTON & SCHEETZ, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For [2] BIOVAIL LABORATORIES INTERNATIONAL SRL, Defendant: ANDREA MARIE DEVRIES, DANIEL J. BOLAND, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ANDREW M. BERNIE, ANDREW D. LAZEROW, ASHLEY E. BASS, DANIELLE S. BARBOUR, DAVID J. SHAW, HENRY B. LIU, J. MAREN SCHMIDT, JASON C. RAOFIELD, PRO HAC VICE, JOHN W. NIELDS, JR., THOMAS A. ISAACSON, COVINGTON & BURLING LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; THOMAS E. ZEMAITIS, PEPPER, HAMILTON & SCHEETZ, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For SMITHKLINE BEECHAM, doing business as GLAXOSMITHKLINE, PLC, Defendant: EDWARD D. ROGERS, LEAD ATTORNEY, BALLARD, SPAHR, ANDREWS AND INGERSOLL, PHILA, PA; LESLIE E. JOHN, STEPHEN J. KASTENBERG, JASON A. LECKERMAN, JESSICA MOLTISANTI ANTHONY, JOB MICHAEL ITZKOWITZ, BALLARD SPAHR ANDREWS & INGERSOLL LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; ARTHUR MAKADON, SUSANNA R. GREENBERG, BALLARD, SPAHR, ANDREWS & INGERSOLL, PHILA, PA; MARGARET OSBORNE PADILLA, LEAD ATTORNEY, TAIMARIE NICOLE ADAMS, BALLARD SPAHR LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA; DANIEL J. BOLAND, PEPPER HAMILTON LLP, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For AETNA HEALTH OF CALIFORNIA, INC., Movant: AMBER M. NESBITT, KENNETH A. WEXLER, WEXLER WALLACE LLP, CHICAGO, IL; GERALD LAWRENCE, JR., LOWEY DANNENBERG COHEN PC, WEST CONSHOHOCKEN, PA; KAREN IANNACE, [3] PRO HAC VICE, LOWEY DANNENBERG COHEN HART PC, WHITE PLAINS, NY; PETER ST. PHILLIP, RICHARD W. COHEN, LOWERY DANNENBERG COHEN & HART, P.C., WHITE PLAINS, NY.

Judges: MARY A. McLAUGHLIN, J.

Opinion by: MARY A. McLAUGHLIN

Opinion

[*131] MEMORANDUM

McLaughlin, J.

The plaintiffs are a group of indirect purchasers of Wellbutrin XL, a once-a-day antidepressant, who are suing the producers of Wellbutrin XL (Biovail Corp., Biovail Laboratories, and Biovail Laboratories International (together, "Biovail")), and its distributors (SmithKline Beecham Corp. and GlaxoSmithKline PLC (together, "GSK")), for illegally conspiring to prevent generic versions of Wellbutrin XL from entering the American market. The plaintiffs seek to certify a class of end-purchasers and third-party payors ("TPPs") under the antitrust and/or consumer protection laws of six states.

The defendants contend that the plaintiffs have failed to meet several requirements for class certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. The defendants' primary argument against certification is that common issues do not predominate over individual issues for antitrust impact and damages. The defendants argue that antitrust impact may not be inferred for TPPs without individualized [4] evidence. The defendants also argue that individual proof will be required for measuring damages because different class members paid different amounts for Wellbutrin XL and its generic equivalents. Class certification, the defendants argue, will also require a choice of law analysis to determine if named plaintiffs have claims under the six states at issue in this case.

The Court concludes that the plaintiffs have demonstrated that common issues will predominate and that the Rule 23 requirements for class certification have been met. The Court, however, will exclude from the class definition entities that did not purchase generic extended-release buproprion hydrochloride in a class state after it became available. The Court will therefore grant in part and deny in part the plaintiffs' motion.

I. Background and Procedural History

This case is brought by several "employee welfare benefit plans" and "employee benefit plans" [1] and Aetna Health of California (collectively, "indirect purchaser plaintiffs" or "plaintiffs"). On March 26, 2009, the plaintiffs filed their first amended complaint seeking treble damages for the defendants' alleged unlawful exclusion of generic versions of Wellbutrin [5] XL through the filing of sham patent litigation.

---

[1] These plans include Plumbers and Pipefitters Local 572 Health and Welfare Fund ("Local 572"), IBEW-NECA Local 505 Health and Welfare Plan ("Local 505"), Painters District Council No. 30 Health and Welfare Fund ("D&C 30"), Mechanical Contractors-United Association Local 119 Health and Welfare Plan ("Local 119"), and Bricklayers and Masons Union Local Union No. 5 Ohio Health and Welfare Fund ("Local Union No. 5")

On July 30, 2009, the Court granted in part and denied in part the defendants' motions to dismiss. At the motion to dismiss stage, the Court concluded that it must address issues of standing prior to class certification. See Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. 143, 151 (E.D. Pa. 2009). The Court concluded that the named plaintiffs have standing "in those states where the named plaintiffs are located or their members reside or in which the named plaintiffs reimbursed purchases of Wellbutrin XL made by its members." See Wellbutrin XL, 268 F.R.D. 539, 541 (E.D. Pa. 2010).

The Court's formulation of standing was intended to encompass the full scope of the plaintiffs' standing under Article III of the Constitution and prudential limitations. See [6] Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 152. By the terms of the decision, the Court did not purport to address whether the named plaintiffs would have claims under choice-of-law principles. See id. at 155 n.5 ("[T]he issue of . . . standing to assert a particular claim [*132] . . . does not depend on choice of law or on class certification.").

The Court subsequently denied Aetna Inc.'s motion to intervene on behalf of the entire proposed class, but allowed the subsidiary Aetna Health of California Inc. ("Aetna") to intervene for California claims. See In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 268 F.R.D. 539, 547 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (denying Aetna, Inc.'s motion to intervene on behalf of the entire proposed class); Sept. 21, 2010 Order (Docket No. 200) (granting Aetna Health of California Inc.'s motion to substitute as a class representative for California claims).

On December 22, 2010, the Court granted the plaintiffs leave to amend their complaint to assert a claim under New York's Donnelly Act in light of the Supreme Court decision, Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010). See In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 756 F. Supp. 2d 670, 682 (E.D. Pa. 2010). The plaintiffs [7] submitted a second amended complaint on January 7, 2011.

The plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the defendants conducted a four-part scheme to delay the entry of generic equivalents of Wellbutrin XL into the market, primarily by misusing patent litigation. Specifically, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants (1) filed three sham patent litigations, (2) filed a sham listing with the FDA's Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluation (the "Orange Book") (3) filed a baseless FDA citizen petition and suit against the FDA, and (4) formed agreements with potential generic competitors. The plaintiffs contend that the effect of these activities was to delay the market entry of cheaper, generic alternatives to Wellbutrin XL. The plaintiffs contend that this scheme caused 300 mg generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride to enter the market in December, 2006 instead of in November, 2005 and that the scheme prevented entry of 150 mg generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride until May, 2008.

The plaintiffs have successfully pled antitrust claims arising under the laws of California, New York, Nevada, Tennessee and Wisconsin, and consumer protection claims arising [8] under the laws of California and Florida. See Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 168; Wellbutrin XL, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 682. [2]

The plaintiffs argue that class members have been injured by the defendants' alleged exclusionary conduct in two ways. First, the plaintiffs argue that they overpaid for each purchase of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride. According to the plaintiffs' expert, prices for generic drugs decrease rapidly after they enter the market. The plaintiffs argue that each actual generic purchase would have cost less if generics had entered the market earlier. The Court will refer to this theory as the "generic overcharge theory."

Second, the plaintiffs assert that TPPs were overcharged if they purchased Wellbutrin XL prior to generic [9] entry. The TPPs theory of impact for purchases of branded Wellbutrin XL is that TPP class members paid an illegal overcharge when they purchased Wellbutrin XL because they would have substituted some branded purchases for cheaper generics, but for the alleged exclusionary conduct. The Court will refer to this theory as the

---

[2] The statutes are often referred to as "Illinois Brick-repealers." In Illinois Brick, the Supreme Court prohibited federal antitrust suits by indirect purchasers. Ill. Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 728, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). Following Illinois Brick, a number of states passed "Illinois Brick repealers," which established the right of an indirect purchaser to bring an antitrust claim under state law. See Wellbutrin XL, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 676 n.1.

"branded overcharge theory." Under this theory, the plaintiffs include both entities that purchased generic Wellbutrin XL and entities that did not purchase generic Wellbutrin XL after it became available. [3]

On September 30, 2010, the Honorable Lawrence F. Stengel denied class certification [*133] in a case that alleged unlawful delay of generic entry for another bupropion product, Wellbutrin SR. Judge Stengel expressed several concerns regarding whether antitrust impact could be proven with common [10] evidence, particularly for individuals who would continue to purchase branded drugs after generic entry (so-called "brand loyalists") and individuals who paid the same co-pay for branded and generic drugs (so-called "flat co-payers"). See *Wellbutrin SR, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105646, 85-87 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2010). [4]

In response to the Wellbutrin SR class certification decision, on October 28, 2010, the indirect purchasers submitted an amended class definition in this case to address some of Judge Stengel's concerns. See Docket No. 217. The plaintiffs' revised class definition purported to exclude all end-payors that did not purchase generic XL (thereby eliminating so-called "brand loyalists") as well as "flat co-payers." This revision, however, had the effect of excluding several named TPP plaintiffs that had not made generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride purchases in class states. On November 30, 2010, [11] the plaintiffs then submitted a "corrected" revised class definition to reincorporate TPPs whether or not they had purchased generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride. See Docket No. 226. The current proposed class is:

> All persons or entities who purchased an AB-rated generic bioequivalent of Wellbutrin XL ("generic XL") at any time during the "Class Period" (hereafter defined) and all entities that purchased 150 mg or 300 mg Wellbutrin XL before an AB-rated generic bioequivalent was available for such dosages, and resided or had their place of business, or purchased the drug in California, Florida, Nevada, New York, Tennessee and Wisconsin. For purposes of the Class definition, persons and entities purchased Wellbutrin XL or generic XL if they paid some or all of the retail purchase price.
> Excluded from the Class are "flat co-payers" meaning natural persons whose only purchases of generic XL were made pursuant to contracts with third party payers ("TPP") whereby the amount paid by the natural person for generic XL was the same regardless of the retail purchase price.
>
> The Class Period begins November 14, 2005 and ends on the earlier of the date of judgement or the date (to be determined) [12] when the price of generic XL reached or reaches "steady state," i.e. the price was no longer higher than it would have been on that date but for the delayed availability of generic XL caused by Defendants' alleged illegal conduct.

Pls.' Second Am. Compl. ¶ 184 (Docket No. 249). The plaintiffs' counsel notified the Court that they intended the class period to end on April 29, 2011. See Notes of Testimony, Class Certification Hr'g, April 29, 2011 ("N.T.") at 13 (Docket No. 317).

The Court held a day-long evidentiary hearing on the plaintiffs' motion for class certification on April 29, 2011. The plaintiffs presented the testimony of Professor Meredith Rosenthal and the defendants presented the testimony of Dr. Andrew Joskow. [5] On May 27, 2011, the Court held oral argument on the plaintiffs' motion. The parties then submitted two rounds of supplemental briefing to address choice of law and other issues.

---

[3] The plaintiffs have excluded individual purchasers from the "branded overcharge theory" to avoid problems with showing impact to individuals who continue to purchase branded Wellbutrin XL after generic entry or individuals who are subject to the same co-pay for either branded or generic drugs. See *Wellbutrin SR, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105646, at 85-87 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2010).

[4] The Court notes that it does not disagree with the Wellbutrin SR court's denial of class certification. The plaintiffs in Wellbutrin SR failed to demonstrate that class-wide evidence was available to show antitrust impact for a substantial portion of the proposed class.

[5] Both experts are highly qualified. Professor Meredith Rosenthal has a Ph.D. in health policy from Harvard University and she is Professor of Health Economics and Policy at the Harvard School of Public Health. Dr. Andrew Joskow has a Ph.D. in economics

A related law suit has been filed by direct purchasers of Wellbutrin XL for violations of federal antitrust law. The Court granted in part and denied in part the plaintiff's motion for class certification. See In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litigation, No. 08-2431 (direct) (Docket Nos. 368, 369).

[*134] II. Choice of Law Analysis

After the Court's decisions on the motion to dismiss, Aetna's motion to intervene, and the addition of New York as a potential class state, there were six states under which the named plaintiffs potentially had claims. These were states where the named plaintiffs either had their principal place of business or paid for purchases at pharmacies in the state. Aetna had been explicitly allowed to intervene to represent California so California was the only state for which Aetna was, at that point, a class representative. The states and potential class representatives were:

State	Entity
Florida	Local 505
Nevada	Painters No. 30
New York	Local 505
Wisconsin	Painters No. 30
California	Aetna
Tennessee	Local 572

The defendants contend that at the class [14] certification stage, the Court must do a choice of law analysis to decide if the named plaintiff designated to represent a certain state has a claim under that state's law and can be a class representative. The defendants argue that the law of the location of the named plaintiff should govern with the result that the only two states with class representatives who have principal places of business in those states are California (Aetna) and Tennessee (Local 572). The plaintiffs contend that the location of the pharmacy where the prescriptions were filled should control and the law of that state should govern. [6] That would lead to six states with class representatives except that the designated class representatives for Wisconsin and New York did not make any generic purchases in that state and under the Court's analysis below, they do not have a claim. In that situation, the plaintiffs seek to have Aetna represent not just California but also Wisconsin and New York where Aetna has paid for purchases of generic drugs.

Although the parties do discuss this issue as choice of law and, therefore, the Court will conduct such an analysis, another way to frame the issue is whether an out-of-state plaintiff would have a claim under the law of the particular state under consideration. To put it another way, could Aetna state a claim under New York law for purchases it made in New York even though it is a resident of California?

The Court, exercising diversity jurisdiction, must apply the choice of law rules of Pennsylvania, the forum in which it sits. Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., 313 U.S. 487, 496-97, 61 S. Ct. 1020, 85 L. Ed. 1477 (1941). The first step in a choice of law analysis under Pennsylvania law is to determine whether an actual or true conflict exists between the laws of the competing states. If no conflict exists, further analysis is unnecessary. If there is a conflict, the court must conduct a choice of law analysis using [16] Pennsylvania choice of law principles.

In deciding whether there is a true conflict, the Court must determine whether there is a conflict between the substance of the laws of each respective potential forum. Here, for TPPs, the potentially applicable laws that have been proposed are that of the TPP's home state, and the states in which it and its members purchased Wellbutrin XL. Conflicts may exist between and among the laws of the relevant states for a given TPP. For example, the home from Yale University. He was the chief [13] economist for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. He is now Senior Vice President at National Economic Research Associates, Inc.

---

[6] The parties have not argued that the law of the location of the defendants' conduct (e.g., where the defendants filed patent suits) should apply. The parties have also not [15] addressed the location of individual consumers because no individual consumers are named plaintiffs. In considering the law to apply to TPPs, however, the Court also considers the law to apply to individual consumers. For both groups, the Court concludes that the law of the place of purchase applies.

state of Local 505 (Alabama) does not recognize the plaintiffs' claims whereas the states in which Local 505 purchased Wellbutrin XL (New York and Florida) could provide a basis for recovery on these allegations.

In a putative class action in which the plaintiffs assert that a TPP should be able to bring claims under the laws of the location of purchase, and those claims are not cognizable [*135] under the laws of the TPP's home state, there will be actual conflicts between the antitrust and consumer protection laws of the relevant states. The Court, therefore, finds that there is an actual or true conflict here and will apply Pennsylvania's choice of law principles to this matter. [7]

Pennsylvania applies a "flexible rule which permits analysis of the policies and interests underlying the particular issue before the court" and directs courts to apply the law of the state with the "most interest in the problem." Hammersmith v. TIG Ins. Co., 480 F.3d 220, 227 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Griffith v. United Air Lines, Inc., 416 Pa. 1, 203 A.2d 796, 805-06 (Pa. 1964)). The Court must consider each state's contacts as set forth in the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws as well as a qualitative appraisal of the relevant states' policies. Id. at 231.

The Supreme Court has observed that "antitrust violations are essentially tortious acts . . . ." Associated Gen. Contractors v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 547, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (quotations omitted). For actions that sound in tort, the Restatement directs courts to consider the following contacts: (a) the place where the injury occurred, (b) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred, (c) the domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation and place of business of the parties, and [18] (d) the place where the relationship, if any, between the parties is centered." Rest. 2d Conflicts § 145(2). See also Griffith, 203 A.2d at 802. Section 158(2) of the Restatement notes that "[t]he applicable law will usually be the local law of the state where the injury occurred." Rest. 2d Conflicts § 158(2).

The parties dispute where the alleged injury occurs for TPPs. The plaintiffs argue that the injury occurs at the point of sale because the pharmacy is paid in part by the insurer, much like a credit card transaction. The defendants counter that a TPP may have little or no direct connection with the place of purchase because it may use an intermediate payment agent or pharmacy benefits manager ("PBM"). The defendants also argue that none of the alleged exclusionary conduct is alleged to have taken place in New York, Nevada, Florida, or Tennessee.

The home state of a TPP undeniably has a strong interest in transactions that affect the TPP. The place of purchase likewise is a significant contact in this calculation. The place of purchase is where the relationship between the parties is centered; it is where the transaction with the alleged overcharge actually occurs. A place-of-purchase [19] rule protects justified expectations because an in-state transaction will be governed by the antitrust laws and/or consumer protection laws of that state and not by the chance location of the TPP's principal place of business, the location of the TPP's PBM, or an individual purchaser's residence. This approach will also provide consistent results because all purchases within a state will be treated uniformly.

At oral argument, the Court discussed a hypothetical tourist visiting New York to see a Broadway Show who fills a prescription at a pharmacy in New York. See Tr. at 34. For that pharmaceutical purchase, as well as the tourist's purchase of theater tickets, rental of a hotel room, purchase of souvenirs, etc., that tourist is a consumer in New York. The tourist's insurance company likewise is a consumer in New York when it contributes to the payment for pharmaceuticals in New York. The Court of Appeals of New York, for example, has recognized that its consumer protection laws do not depend on the residency of the parties but rather on the location of the transactions. See Goshen v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 98 N.Y.2d 314, 325, 774 N.E.2d 1190, 746 N.Y.S.2d 858 (2002) ("[O]ur General Business Law analysis does not turn on [20] the residency of the parties. . . . [The intent of the statute] is to protect consumers in their transactions that take place in New York State. . . . [The statute was not] intended to function as a per se bar to out-of-state plaintiffs' claims of deceptive acts leading to transactions within the state.").

---

[7] When one considers Aetna, [17] however, there may not be a true conflict because Aetna's home state of California does provide a potential basis for recovery.

The statutory language of the laws at issue here contain no prohibitions that would indicate [*136] that a state has a policy of only covering transactions that involve in-state citizens, rather than in-state transactions. See Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 158-167 (discussing, among others, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700, et seq., Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, Fla. Stat. §§ 501.201, et seq., Nev. Rev. Stat. § 598A.060, et seq., N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law §§ 340, et seq., Tenn. Code. Ann. §§47-25-101, et seq., Wis. Stat. §§ 133.01-133.18).

The defendants cite a Florida District Court of Appeals case for the proposition that Florida's consumer protection statute bars claims by out-of-state consumers. See Coastal Physician Servs. of Broward County v. Ortiz, 764 So. 2d 7, 8 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1999) (stating that "non-Florida residents cannot make claims under . . . the Deceptive and Unfair Trade [21] Practices Act"). Other Florida cases have reached the opposite conclusion. See Millennium Communs. & Fulfillment, Inc. v. Office of the Attorney Gen., 761 So. 2d 1256, 1260-61 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000) (holding that the FDUTPA does apply to commercial transactions involving non-resident consumers); Renaissance Cruises Inc. v. Glassman, 738 So. 2d 436, 437-440 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1999) (affirming trial court's class certification that applied the FDUTPA to a class that included many non-Florida residents).

This Court has previously held that "[t]he FDUTPA contains no language that would deny relief to either non-Florida residents, or limit its reach to only in-state plaintiffs or Florida businesses." Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 162. The Court in Flonase reached a similar conclusion. See In re Flonase Antitrust Litig., 692 F. Supp. 2d 524, 537-38 (E.D. Pa. 2010).

The defendants also argue that TPPs do not have detailed transaction-level records in the ordinary course of business. Class notice, the defendants argue, is more effective if the reader can quickly determine whether one is a member of the class. The defendants explain that TPPs will need to obtain records from their PBMs [22] to learn where pharmacy transactions occurred. This consideration, however, does not factor heavily in the ease of the application of the law to be applied, but rather addresses a party's own burden to determine if it has a claim. [8]

Upon review of the relevant state policies and contacts, the Court finds that the weight of the relevant factors in this case favors applying the law of the place of purchase to govern the transaction. The Court will therefore limit the class definition to include only purchases made within the respective states for each class state.

III. Rule 23 Analysis

To certify a class under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 23, a court must find that the action satisfies all four requirements of Rule 23(a) and at least one provision of Rule 23(b). Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 614, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). The plaintiffs seek certification under Rule 23(b)(3). Rule 23(b)(3) requires the court to find that questions of law or fact common to class members [24] predominate over any questions affecting only individual members and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy.

---

[8] Case law applying other states' choice of law rules go both ways on this issue. In In re Relafen, the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts concluded that the more significant contact in an indirect purchaser antitrust case is the location of the sales to end payor plaintiffs. See In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 221 F.R.D. 260, 277-78 (D. Mass. 2004) ("[T]he Court considers the more significant contact in this context to be the location of the injury — that is, the location of the sales to the end payor plaintiffs.").

In K-Dur, Special Master Orlofsky, applying New Jersey's government interest analysis, concluded that individual plaintiffs' claims are governed by their state of residence and TPP's claims are governed by their principal places of business. See *In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 1419, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113310, 2008 WL 2660783, at 5 (D.N.J. Mar. 19, 2008). See also In re Rezulin Prods. Liab. Litig., 392 F. Supp. 2d 597, 611 n.85 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) [23] (concluding that the TPP's loss occurred in its home state). In In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia concluded that Illinois' antitrust law applied for the TPP's reimbursements for purchases made in other states. In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 295 F. Supp. 2d 30, 50 (D.D.C. 2003) (applying Illinois law to an Illinois TPP's payments for purchases subscribers made in other states).

[*137] A proper analysis under Rule 23 requires "rigorous" consideration of all the evidence and arguments offered by the parties. In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 320 (3d Cir. 2008). A court must "consider carefully all relevant evidence and make a definitive determination that the requirements of Rule 23 have been met before certifying a class." Id. at 320. Factual determinations necessary for Rule 23 findings must be made by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. The court must resolve factual or legal disputes relevant to class certification, even if they overlap with the merits. "[W]eighing conflicting expert testimony at the certification stage is not only permissible; it may be integral to the rigorous analysis Rule 23 demands." Id. at 323. A determination that an expert's opinion is persuasive on a Rule 23 requirement does not preclude a different view at the merits stage of the case. Id. at 324.

A. Rule 23(a)

1. Numerosity

Rule 23(a)(1) requires a finding that the class is so numerous [25] that joinder of all class members is impracticable. Although there is no precise number for establishing numerosity, classes that exceed forty or more class members generally satisfy this prerequisite. See Stewart v. Abraham, 275 F.3d 220, 226-27 (3d Cir. 2001) ("No minimum number of plaintiffs is required to maintain a suit as a class action, but generally if the named plaintiff demonstrates that the potential number of plaintiffs exceeds 40, the first prong of Rule 23(a) has been met."). This requirement is easily met in this case because the plaintiffs seek to certify a class of hundreds of thousands of consumer class members and thousands of TPP class members. See, e.g., *Sheet Metal Workers Local 441 Health & Welfare Plan v. Glaxosmithkline, PLC, No. 04-5898, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105646, at 20-21 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2010) ("Wellbutrin SR").

2. Commonality

Rule 23(a)(2) requires that there must be questions of law or fact common to the class. To satisfy the commonality requirement, the class's claims must depend upon a common contention. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, ___ U.S. ___, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374, 389 (2011). The common contention must be capable of class-wide resolution. Id. at 390. [26] A contention is capable of class-wide resolution if determination of its truth or falsity will resolve a central issue to the validity of the claims "in one stroke." Id. A single common question is sufficient. Id. at 395.

The Court finds that commonality requirement is met here. The plaintiffs allege that the defendants engaged in a scheme to delay the entry of less expensive generic versions of Wellbutrin XL into the market. The plaintiffs contend that this scheme caused 300 mg bupropion hydrochloride to enter the market in December, 2006 instead of in November, 2005 and that the scheme limited entry of 150 mg generic Wellbutrin until May, 2008. Each class member's claims depend on whether or not the defendants unlawfully engaged in anticompetitive behavior to limit the entry of generic competitors in violation of each state's respective antitrust and/or consumer protection laws. See, e.g., In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 528 (3d Cir. 2004) (certifying settlement class) ("[P]roof of liability for DuPont's conduct under § 2 of the Sherman Act and the Delaware Consumer Fraud statute depends on evidence which is common to the class members . . . ."). Although this [27] action is brought under the law of six different states, proof of the essential elements of these statutes will also require common proof. The antitrust laws and consumer protection laws for these six states do not differ in material respects. See Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 158-68 (discussing plaintiffs' remaining claims).

3. Typicality

Rule 23(a)(3) requires that the claims or defenses of the representative parties be typical of the claims or defenses of the class. The typicality requirement ensures that the class representatives' interests are aligned with those of the absent class [*138] members, so that the representatives work to benefit the class as a whole. In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 311 (3d Cir. 1998). "The concepts of commonality and typicality are broadly defined and tend to merge." Baby Neal v. Casey, 43 F.3d 48, 56 (3d Cir. 1994) (citing 7A Charles A. Wright, et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1764).

If the representative's claims and those of the absent class members arise from the same course of conduct and are based on the same legal theories, the class satisfies typicality, regardless of factual differences underlying [28] the individual claims. Baby Neal v. Casey, 43 F.3d at 57-58. The Court finds that the typicality requirement is met here because the representatives' claims arise from the same course of conduct and are based on the same legal theories. See, e.g., *Wellbutrin SR, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105646, at 22-23 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2010) ("[T]he typicality requirement is met because GSK's alleged conduct gives rise to all of their claims.").

4. Adequacy of Representation

Rule 23(a)(4) requires that the proposed class representative will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has held that adequacy of representation depends on two factors: (a) the plaintiff's attorney must be qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the proposed litigation, and (b) the plaintiff must not have interests antagonistic to those of the class. New Directions Treatment Servs. v. City of Reading, 490 F.3d 293, 313 (3d Cir. 2007).

The Court finds that the first prong is satisfied. Counsel for the plaintiffs are well-qualified to represent the proposed class in this case. They have extensive experience in similar class actions involving [29] delayed generic competition. See, e.g., In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litigation, 391 F.3d 516 (3d Cir. 2004). The plaintiffs' counsel also have vigorously and capably prosecuted this action.

The absence-of-conflict requirement "seeks to uncover conflicts of interest between named parties and the class they seek to represent." Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 532 (internal quotation marks omitted). This requirement is not defeated merely "because of a potential conflict of interest that may not become actual." Kohen v. Pac. Inv. Mgmt. Co. LLC, 571 F.3d 672, 680 (7th Cir. 2009).

The defendants contest the absence-of-conflict requirement in two ways. First, the defendants argue that no named plaintiff is an adequate representative for Florida, Nevada, New York, or Wisconsin because no named plaintiff, other than Aetna, made generic purchases in these states and Aetna was allowed to intervene only as a potential class representative for California. Second, the defendants argue that the plaintiffs have antagonistic interests to some absent class members because of the pending suit regarding the quality of one generic manufacturer's version of 300 mg bupropion hydrochloride. See In re Budeprion XL Mktg. & Sales Litig., MDL No. 2107, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51980 (E.D. Pa. May 26, 2010) [30] (Schiller, J.) (denying defendants' motion to dismiss).

As to the first argument, the Court agrees, as explained below in the antitrust impact section, that a plaintiff that did not make generic purchases in a class state cannot demonstrate antitrust impact with common evidence and, therefore, cannot be a class representative. But the Court will allow Aetna to be substituted as a representative states in which the current named plaintiff did not make an in-state generic purchase. [9]

The defendants argue that the Court permitted Aetna to intervene only for claims under the laws of California and that decision [*139] is the law of the case. "The doctrine of the law of the case dictates that when a court decides upon [31] a rule of law, that rule should continue to govern the same issues in subsequent stages in the litigation." Deisler v. McCormack Aggregates, Co., 54 F.3d 1074, 1086 (3d Cir. 1995) (internal quotations omitted). If the doctrine of the law of the case does not foreclose intervention, the defendants argue that substitution of Aetna would be prejudicial.

The Court is not persuaded that the law of the case doctrine forecloses Aetna from representing claims in the other class states. This issue was not directly decided previously. The Court's reasoning in granting Aetna's motion was that it would not be unfair for the plaintiffs to pursue claims that have already been subject to discovery. See Sept. 21, 2010 Order at 2 (Docket No. 200) ("Although the Court was unwilling to allow Aetna to intervene to assert a wide swath of new claims, the intervention requested herein applies only to claims the plaintiffs and defendants have already been litigating.").

[9] This substitution applies to New York, Wisconsin, and Nevada. The defendants note that Painters No. 30's Nevada purchase was actually transacted in Illinois. The defendants also argue that Local 505 made purchases in Florida through a mail order facility. Defs.' Opp'n at 38-41; Pls.' Supp. Reply at 11-13 n.8, 11. Although Local 505's generic mail order purchases appear to the Court to be a Florida transaction, Aetna's purchases are also sufficient to state a claim under Florida law.

Courts may allow class counsel to identify new class representatives who meet Rule 23(a) requirements. See Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 21.26 ("[C]ourts generally allow class counsel time to make reasonable efforts to recruit and [32] identify a new representative who meets the Rule 23(a) requirements. The Court may permit intervention by a new representative or may simply designate that person as a class representative in the order granting class certification.").

The defendants oppose this substitution and cite *In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., No. 07-86, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59491, 2010 WL 2332081, at 17 (N.D. Cal. June 9, 2010). In Flash Memory, the plaintiffs proposed substituting nine new plaintiffs in place of the twelve currently-named plaintiffs. Id. Aetna's requested substitution would not cause the prejudice of the substitution in Flash Memory. Aetna is a single entity that has already been actively involved in this case as a named plaintiff. Aetna has also produced discovery for each of the six proposed class states.

As to the second argument of the defendants, the Court finds that the Budeprion XL litigation does not create a conflict that would defeat class certification because these two law suits address different, compatible issues. Absent class members who are pursuing damages from allegedly inferior extended-release bupropion hydrochloride would still benefit as much as any other class member from an adjudication that [33] they are entitled to overcharge damages for the purchases that they did make.

The Court is satisfied that the named plaintiffs, as modified to allow Aetna to represent states in which other named plaintiffs have not purchased bupropion hydrochloride, will adequately represent the interests of absent class members.

B. Rule 23(b)

Once the requirements of Rule 23(a) are satisfied, a plaintiff must also satisfy one of the three criteria in Rule 23(b). The plaintiff seeks to have this class certified under Rule 23(b)(3). Rule 23(b)(3) requires the court to find (1) that questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members and (2) that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. These are often referred to as the predominance and superiority requirements. The Court addresses each requirement in turn.

1. Predominance

To establish predominance, the plaintiffs must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the elements of their claims can be proven by evidence common to all in their class. See In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 311-12 (3d Cir. 2008). [34] "If proof of the essential elements of the cause of action requires individual treatment, then class certification is unsuitable." Id. at 311 (quoting Newton, 259 F.3d at 172). The elements of the plaintiff's claims are (1) a violation of the state antitrust laws and/or state consumer protection laws, (2) individual injury, and (3) measurable damages. See id. at 311. The Court will address whether the plaintiff has shown that its claims can be proven with common evidence [*140] for each of these three elements. The primary issue of contention is whether the plaintiffs can demonstrate antitrust impact to all putative class members, particularly TPPs who did not purchase generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available.

a. Violation of State Antitrust and Consumer Protection Laws

The plaintiffs have successfully pled antitrust claims arising under the laws of California, New York, Nevada, Tennessee and Wisconsin, and consumer protection claims arising under the laws of California and Florida. See Wellbutrin XL, 260 F.R.D. at 168; Wellbutrin XL, 756 F. Supp. 2d at 682.

Proof of antitrust violations and consumer protection laws in this case involve predominantly common [35] issues. If each class member pursued its claims individually, the class member would have to prove the same antitrust and consumer protection violations using the same documents, witnesses, and other evidence. The issues of relevant market, monopoly power, and exclusionary conduct can be proven using common, class-wide evidence because such issues focus on the defendants' conduct rather than individual class members. See In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 528 (3d Cir. 2004) (noting that liability for anticompetitive conduct focuses on the defendants' actions, not the conduct of individual class members).

b. Antitrust Impact

The plaintiffs must also demonstrate that antitrust impact, also known as individual injury or antitrust injury, can be proven with common evidence. [10] "[T]o prevail on the merits, every class member must prove at least some antitrust impact resulting from the alleged violation." Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311. The Court of Appeals has observed that antitrust impact often is critically important for the purpose of evaluating the predominance requirement because it is an element of the claim that may call for individual, as opposed to common, [36] proof. Id.

At the class certification stage, a plaintiff's burden is not to prove the element of antitrust impact. The plaintiff must instead demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is "capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members." Id. at 311-12. The district court must conduct a "rigorous" assessment of the available evidence and the method or methods by which the plaintiff proposes to use the evidence to prove impact at trial. Id. at 312.

The Court will first discuss whether the plaintiffs have shown that antitrust impact can be demonstrated for purchasers of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride ("the generic overcharge"). Second, the court considers [37] whether antitrust impact can be demonstrated for entities who purchased Wellbutrin XL (the "branded overcharge"). This group includes both entities that did and did not purchase generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available. Third, the Court briefly considers direct-to-consumer advertising, which the defendants argue will prevent class-wide treatment. Fourth, the Court discusses whether the plaintiffs must show that an illegal overcharge is "passed through" to the end purchasers.

(1) Impact to Generic Purchasers

The Court first turns to the plaintiffs' theory of generic overcharge. The Court must address whether common evidence can demonstrate that generic prices in the but-for world would have been lower than they were in the real-world. Professor Rosenthal proposes to use the "yardstick" methodology to demonstrate that the prices of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in the real world were higher for actual purchases than they would have been, but for the defendants' alleged exclusionary conduct. Professor Rosenthal concludes that [*141] class members suffered an overcharge for each generic purchase because prices for generic extended-release bupropion [38] hydrochloride quickly decrease after market entry. If extended-release bupropion hydrochloride had entered the market sooner, prices would have been correspondingly lower for every purchase. N.T. at 68-69.

Professor Rosenthal relies on empirical data from IMS Health for actual transactions of extended-release bupropion hydrochloride and then "backcasts" the data to the "but for" generic entry date. N.T. at 45. The methodology examines what actually happened after generic entry to conclude that prices for generics would have been lower if they had entered the market sooner. Professor Rosenthal supports this conclusion with data showing a rapid erosion in generic prices after market entry. See N.T. at 46 ("I construct my yardsticks by . . . in effect, rolling back in time the actual marketing events. . . . I observed . . . the price erosion was also rapid after that first six-month period. So, the price discount for the generic was initially, approximately 15 percent. And, in my data that goes to 40 percent price discount, again relative to the pre-launch brand price. So, both substitution and price effects were fairly dramatic.").

---

[10] As an initial matter, the Court notes the difference between antitrust impact and the calculation of damages. "In antitrust and securities fraud class actions, '[p]roof of injury (whether or not an injury occurred at all) must be distinguished from calculation of damages (which determines the actual value of the injury).'" Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311 (quoting Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 188 (3d Cir. 2001)).

The defendants' expert Dr. Joskow criticizes the plaintiffs' [39] methodology for generic overcharge by noting that some entities paid lower prices in the actual world than Professor Rosenthal's average "but for" price for the same time period. For example, named plaintiff D&C 30 made generic purchases in Florida that were below Professor Rosenthal's average "but for" generic price. Professor Rosenthal explained, however, that this example fails to show that D&C was not impacted. Dr. Joskow's analysis of specific transactions drew conclusions based on contemporaneous prices. These comparisons did not account for the fact that if the generic entered the market a year and a half earlier, earlier entry would have affected contemporaneous prices. D&C's actual generic purchase price, though lower than the "but for" average, would likely have been even lower because of the downward trend in generic prices over time. See N.T. at 58. The Court concludes that class-wide evidence is available to show antitrust impact in the form of a generic overcharge.

(2) Impact to Purchasers of Wellbutrin XL

(a) Entities That Did Not Purchase Generics

The plaintiffs assert that TPPs suffered antitrust impact for purchases of Wellbutrin XL even if they did not purchase generic [40] extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available because of the high substitution rate from branded drugs to generic drugs. The plaintiffs argue that in a but-for world, each TPP would have converted some branded purchases to generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride and thereby incurred antitrust injury. The defendants counter that there is no way to differentiate which TPPs would continue to make only branded purchases even after generics entered the market and thereby suffer no impact.

Professor Rosenthal relies on a probability analysis to conclude that TPPs suffered antitrust impact without considering generic purchases. She calculates the likelihood that any potential class member would have no generic claims based on the average generic substitution rate of 86% for the 300 mg dosage. See Rosenthal Reb. Decl. ¶ 23. Professor Rosenthal notes that "most third party payors will have large numbers of claims for either the brand or generic Wellbutrin XL during the class period. . . ." Id. But even for a TPP with only 10 claims for Wellbutrin XL 300 mg tablets during the period prior to generic entry, Professor Rosenthal calculates the probability that the TPP [41] would have no generic claims in the but-for world as 3 in one billion. Professor Rosenthal opines that "even if a potential Class member presents with only one Wellbutrin XL claim during the first year of the Class Period . . . it is still more likely than not that such a claim would have been switched to a generic." Id.

The defendants argue that Professor Rosenthal mistakenly assumes that each purchase is an independent event. Dr. Joskow argues that each individual prescription is not necessarily an independent event because people often fill multiple prescriptions at a [*142] time and TPPs may be subject to formularies that prefer certain branded versions. For example, named plaintiff Local 505's members made 13 consecutive purchases of branded Wellbutrin XL in the two year period after generic entry, during which time it made no corresponding purchases of generic. See Defs.' Hr'g Ex. 3.

The example of Local 505 demonstrates the influence of formularies or preferred drug lists on individuals' purchasing behavior. Professor Rosenthal testified that Local 505 contracted with Blue Cross Blue Shield of Alabama for pharmacy benefits. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Alabama has preferred drug lists, [42] and it did not remove Wellbutrin XL from its preferred drug lists until the entry of 150 mg generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in 2008. N.T. at 64-65. Local 505's members correspondingly continued to purchase branded Wellbutrin XL for nearly two years after initial generic entry.

The experience of Local 505 suggests that there may be significant individual issues for class members regarding whether an individual TPP suffered antitrust impact if it did not actually purchase generics. Professor Rosenthal conceded that many TPPs had very few purchases in the six class states, and that such purchases are not fully independent. N.T. 85, 90, 94. These admissions undermine the reliability of her method to demonstrate antitrust impact for TPPs without showing that the TPP purchased extended-release bupropion hydrochloride.

The Court is not persuaded that the plaintiffs have shown by a preponderance of the evidence that antitrust impact under a given state's law can be demonstrated for every TPP class member without showing that the TPP purchased generics in that state after generics became available. In this case, it is unclear how many TPPs made small purchases of Wellbutrin XL [43] in class states without making any generic purchases. The example of Local 505 suggests that individual issues, such as formulary preference or brand loyalty, may impact whether a particular TPP would have switched from branded Wellbutrin XL to generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in the but-for world, if a TPP did not actually purchase any generics. The Court concludes that the plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that antitrust impact can be shown with common evidence without showing that the TPP purchased generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride after it became available.

(b) Entities That Did Purchase Generics

For entities that did purchase extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in a class state after it became available, it is a reasonable inference that these entities would have purchased extended-release bupropion hydrochloride in the "but for world," absent the alleged exclusionary conduct. Professor Rosenthal presented evidence that brand-to-generic switching following generic entry is a demonstrable and recurrent phenomenon. Professor Rosenthal used IMS market data and data from GSK to conclude that the substitution from generic was "rapid." N.T. at 44. [44] The price discount between branded and generic is approximately 15% off-brand after generic entry. As more generic competitors enter the market, the discount increases. N.T. at 47.

The defendants' expert, Dr. Joskow, argued that TPPs were not necessarily overcharged when they purchased branded drugs instead of generics. He cites the example that Aetna, immediately after generics came on to the market, actually paid more for generics than for branded for several transactions. The defendants explain that upon generic entry, rebates from the branded manufacturer to TPPs largely disappear. Joskow Decl. ¶¶ 79-80. For payors like Aetna, this can cause the net cost of a generic drug to exceed the net cost of the branded drug for a period of time.

Professor Rosenthal rebutted this argument by explaining that Dr. Joskow's analysis inappropriately compared contemporaneous transactions to conclude that the price of generics were higher than the price of branded Wellbutrin XL. Professor Rosenthal noted that if generics had entered the market earlier, the price of generics would have already decreased. To demonstrate overcharge, Professor Rosenthal explained, one must compare [*143] the but-for generic [45] price to the actual branded price. N.T. at 47.

The Court concludes that the plaintiffs have shown class-wide evidence is available to demonstrate that the price of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride would have been lower than Wellbutrin XL absent the defendants' anticompetitive conduct. Because the court limits the availability of the branded overcharge theory to entities that purchased generic Wellbutrin XL in a class state, the plaintiff has also shown that the class members would have substituted at least some generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride for Wellbutrin XL during the class period. Cf. In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 531 (3d Cir. 2004) (certifying settlement class) ("Notably, TPPs . . . suffered direct economic harm when . . . they paid supracompetitive prices for Coumadin instead of purchasing lower-priced generic warfarin sodium.").

(3) Direct-to-Consumer Advertising

The defendants argue that there are many individuals who purchased Wellbutrin XL due to GSK's advertising campaign who would not have purchased it in the "but for world" because GSK would not have continued its advertising campaign after generic entry. Professor [46] Rosenthal credibly testified that she had not seen any evidence of an effect for direct-to-consumer advertising in this case. N.T. at 37. Professor Rosenthal's damage methodology, discussed below, is also designed to account for any decreased volume associated with the defendants' promotional activities. See Rosenthal Reb. Decl. ¶ 42 ("I calculated a yardstick reflecting the actual market volume trend in the actual world after actual generic launch, thus capturing any decrease in sales due to the cessation of promotional spending by Defendants."). The Court is persuaded that the possible effect of direct-to-consumer advertising is insufficient to bar class certification.

(4) Pass Through

The parties dispute whether the plaintiffs must demonstrate that an illegal overcharge has been "passed through" to indirect purchasers, rather than simply showing that the price actually paid for either branded or generic Wellbutrin

XL was higher than the price the plaintiffs would have paid for generic Wellbutrin XL. Prior cases that addressed delayed generic entry for indirect purchasers have not required an analysis of whether an overcharge has been "passed through" because other techniques are available [47] to demonstrate overcharge to indirect purchasers. See, e.g., In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 200 F.R.D. 326, 344 (E.D. Mich. 2001) ("[A]n indirect purchaser must estimate only the 'but for' price that it should have paid, which is a far less exacting exercise than apportioning the overcharge throughout the entire chain of distribution.") (quoting Roger D. Blair & Jeffrey L. Harrison, Reexamining the Role of Illinois Brick in Modern Antitrust Analysis, 68 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 1, 29 (1999)).

Professor Rosenthal presented evidence that the pricing structure in the pharmaceutical industry is based on formulaic markups. See Rosenthal Reb. Decl. ¶¶ 27-32; N.T. 41-42. Generic overcharges, Professor Rosenthal notes, can also be demonstrated as the difference in generic list prices. See id. ¶ 33 ("[G]eneric pricing overcharges . . . for direct and indirect purchases would be caused by a single mechanism: differences between generic list prices . . . in the actual and but-for scenarios."). See also N.T. at 106. This case is distinguishable from component cases that may involve much more complicated questions about the effect that a supracompetitive component had on the final purchase price [48] for an end user. Cf. *In re Flash Memory Antitrust Litig., No. 07-0086, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59491, 44 (N.D. Cal. March 31, 2010); In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig., 253 F.R.D. 478, 502 (N.D. Cal. 2008).

The Court concludes that Professor Rosenthal has set forth a viable method to demonstrate antitrust impact for generic and branded overcharges. See In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 200 F.R.D. 326, 344 (E.D. Mich. 2001) (concluding pass-through variations are not necessary to demonstrate antitrust impact). Cf. In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 531 (3d Cir. 2004) ("[I]t [is] well recognized that a purchaser in a market where competition has [*144] been wrongfully restrained has suffered an antitrust injury, and in this case, TPPs are such purchasers.").

The plaintiffs have demonstrated that antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members for generic overcharges. Professor Rosenthal has presented class-wide evidence to demonstrate the existence of both a generic and branded overcharge.

c. Measurable Damages

At the class certification stage, the plaintiffs are not required to prove [49] damages by calculating specific damages figures for each member of the class, but rather they must show that a reliable method is available to prove damages on a class-wide basis. See *In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., MDL No. 1479, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, at 40 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011); Bell Atl. Corp. v. AT&T Corp., 339 F.3d 294, 303 (5th Cir. 2003) (noting that antitrust plaintiffs must provide a "just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data.").

The plaintiffs' proposed methodology for calculating damages relies on the use of "yardsticks" as discussed above. The plaintiffs' expert, Professor Rosenthal, explains that this methodology uses actual prices and quantities from the market to derive "yardsticks" to simulate the prices and quantities that would have occurred but for the anticompetitive activity. These prices and quantities are used to estimate the total and average overcharge damages to the class. See Rosenthal Supp. Dec. ¶ 14.

This methodology was criticized in the Wellbutrin SR decision because it relies on average pricing data. See *Wellbutrin SR, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105646, at 101-102 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 30, 2010) ("Just because an average price was [50] increased or decreased by the alleged foreclosure does not mean that all members of the proposed class paid supra-competitive prices or that any damage for an individual end-payor could be calculated in a formulaic way by common proof.").

Dr. Joskow likewise suggested that the use of average yardsticks may gloss over meaningful differences, and a yardstick should be developed for each class member. The plaintiffs counter that the defendants' expert recognizes that it is "possible" to use averages and sampling to assess claims and that the defendants' approach is impractical. Aetna alone paid 138,000 extended release bupropion hydrochloride claims in California during the class period. Under Dr. Joskow's approach, to assess impact for just Aetna's claims under California law would require analysis of each of the 138,000 transactions. The plaintiffs note that Dr. Joskow acknowledged that "there may be ways to do it within each individual class member that doesn't require you to do it 138,000 times . . . ." Pls.' Reply at 21.

The Court agrees that the use of averages may not always be appropriate, particularly in indirect purchaser actions. See generally ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Econometrics: [51] Legal, Practical, and Technical Issues 220 (2005). In this case, however, Professor Rosenthal has demonstrated that after generics became available, the actual prices for generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride were higher than the corresponding prices would have been in the but-for world and that "but-for" generic prices would be lower than branded prices. N.T. at 60-61; 69-71. The use of averages in this case does not mask meaningful variations in overcharges, and it provides a reliable method to provide a reasonable estimate of the damages based on relevant purchase data. The Court concludes that the plaintiffs have set forth a satisfactory methodology to estimate class-wide damages resulting from the alleged generic overcharges.

2. Superiority

The Court considers whether a class action is "superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). This "requirement asks the court to balance, in terms of fairness and efficiency, the merits of a class action against those of alternative methods of adjudication." In Re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 316 (3d Cir. 1998). It [*145] [52] is meant to ensure that resolution by class action will "achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote . . . uniformity of decision without sacrificing procedural fairness or bringing about other undesirable results." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 615 (quoting Advisory Committee's Note on Fed. R. Civ. P. 23).

The Court finds that the superiority requirement is met here. Although the plaintiffs wish to proceed under the laws of six different states, the Court concludes that variations among the laws at issue here do not "present the types of insuperable obstacles which render class action litigation unmanageable." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 529 (3d Cir. 2004). Individual treatment of each class members' claims would require duplicative, expensive litigation, which would come at enormous expense to the parties and judicial economy. Class resolution would also avoid problems of inconsistent resolution.

IV. Conclusion

The Court concludes that the plaintiffs have satisfied their burden to certify a class of indirect purchasers of generic extended-release bupropion hydrochloride under the antitrust laws of California, Nevada, New York, Tennessee, and Wisconsin, [53] and the consumer protection laws of California and Florida.

An appropriate order will follow separately.

ORDER

AND NOW, this 12th day of August, 2011, upon consideration of the Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Docket No. 109), the opposition, reply, sur-reply, supplemental opposition, supplemental reply, the accompanying expert declarations, supplemental choice of law briefs, the hearing on April 29, 2011, oral argument on May 27, 2011, and for the reasons stated in a memorandum of today's date, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the motion is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that:

1. The following indirect purchaser litigation class is hereby certified pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) and 23(b)(3):

(1) All persons or entities who purchased an AB-rated generic bioequivalent of Wellbutrin XL ("generic XL") at any time during the "Class Period" (hereafter defined) in California, Florida, Nevada, New York, Tennessee and Wisconsin; and

(2) All entities that purchased 150 mg or 300 mg Wellbutrin XL before an AB-rated generic bioequivalent was available for such dosages AND purchased generic XL in the same state after generic XL became [54] available in California, Florida, Nevada, New York, Tennessee and Wisconsin.

For purposes of the Class definition, persons and entities purchased Wellbutrin XL or generic XL if they paid some or all of the retail purchase price.

Excluded from the Class are "flat co-payers" meaning natural persons whose only purchases of generic XL were made pursuant to contracts with third party payers ("TPP") whereby the amount paid by the natural person for generic XL was the same regardless of the retail purchase price.

The Class Period begins November 14, 2005 and ends on April 29, 2011.

2. Class claims, issues, and defenses are those incorporated into the Court's memorandum of today's date as well as the affirmative defenses raised in the defendants' answers. See Docket Nos. 266, 268.

3. The following entities are hereby appointed as class representatives for claims under the following states' laws:

State	Entity
California	Aetna
Florida	Local 505 and Aetna
Nevada	Aetna
New York	Aetna
Tennessee	Local 572
Wisconsin	Aetna

[*146] 4. The following firms are hereby appointed as co-lead counsel to the indirect purchaser class:

Lowey Dannenberg Cohen & Hart, P.C.
Richard Cohen, Esquire
Peter D. St. Phillip, Jr., Esquire

Wexler Wallace [55] LLP
Kenneth A. Wexler, Esquire
Amber M. Nesbitt, Esquire
Branstetter, Stranch, & Jennings
Jim G. Stranch, Esquire
Joe P. Leniski, Esquire

5. Within 30 days of the date of this Order, the parties shall submit an agreed upon proposed notice program and forms of notice to class members. If the parties are unable to agree as to the proposed notice program and/or forms of notice, they shall submit separate proposals.

BY THE COURT:

/s/ Mary A. McLaughlin

MARY A. McLAUGHLIN, J.

End of Document

LexisNexis

Silicon Econs., Inc. v. Fin. Accounting Found.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

August 17, 2011, Decided; August 18, 2011, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 11-163

Reporter
2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92322 *

SILICON ECONOMICS. INC., Plaintiff, v. FINANCIAL ACCOUNTING FOUNDATION, and FINANCIAL ACCOUNTING STANDARDS BOARD, Defendants.

Prior History: Silicon Econ., Inc. v. Fin. Accounting Found. & Fin. Accounting Stds. Bd., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130989 (N.D. Cal., Nov. 24, 2010)

Core Terms

Invention, allegations, motion to dismiss, Website, factual allegations, ownership interest, commerce, accounting standards, anti trust law, patent, challenged conduct, injury-in-fact, antitrust, comments, concrete, contends, license, parties, amend, declaratory relief, antitrust claim, reputation, pleadings, facial

Counsel: [*1] For Silicon Economics Inc., a California Corporation, Plaintiff: Sean T. O'Kelly, LEAD ATTORNEY, O'Kelly & Ernst, LLC, Wilmington, DE; Perry J. Narancic, PRO HAC VICE.

For Financial Accounting Foundation, Defendant: Richard L. Horwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jonathan A. Choa, Potter Anderson & Corroon, LLP, Wilmington, DE; Garrard R. Beeney, Gary A. Greene, Yvonne S. Quinn, PRO HAC VICE.

For Financial Accounting Standards Board, Defendant: Richard L. Horwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jonathan A. Choa, Potter Anderson & Corroon, LLP, Wilmington, DE.

Judges: Michael M. Baylson, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Michael M. Baylson

Opinion

MEMORANDUM ON MOTION TO DISMISS

Baylson, J.

Silicon Economics, Inc. ("SEI") filed this action seeking damages and clarification of its ownership interest in its invention, "EarningsPower Accounting." which is the subject of U.S. Patent 7,620,573 (the "Invention"). SEI claims that the Financial Accounting Foundation ("FAF") and the Financial Accounting Standards Board ("FASB." collectively with FAF, "Defendants"), have unlawfully claimed a royalty-free license in the Invention and refuse to release any ownership interest in the Invention. SEI claims violations of federal antitrust law and California's [*2] Unfair Competition Law. SEI also seeks declaratory relief under California law.

Defendants have moved to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) for lack of standing and under Rule 12(b)(6) for insufficient pleading of each claim. (Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 18.) After careful consideration of Defendants' Motion and the parties' briefing and oral argument on August 11. 2011, the Court will grant Defendants' Motion, allowing SEI leave to amend the Complaint.

I. Factual and Procedural History

According to the Complaint in this matter, FASB is "the principal organization in the private sector for establishing standards of financial accounting which govern the preparation of financial statements by public companies in the United States." (Compl., ECF No. 1 ¶ 9.) FAF is a private, non-governmental. non-profit foundation that governs FASB. (Id. ¶ 4.)

SEI alleges that FASB "has at least 90% of the market for establishing and decreeing financial accounting standards in the United States," and the remainder of the market consists of individuals, academics, government bodies, corporations, and accounting firms that articulate accounting standards, as well as the International Accounting [*3] Standards Board. (Id. ¶ 10.)

SEI is one of these other participants and is attempting to establish more effective accounting standards in direct competition with FASB. (Id. ¶ 13.) To that end. SEI developed the Invention, an equation that "improv[es] the accuracy of net income measurement and embraces mark-to-market accounting of asset and liability values [to] yield[] accurate and current balance sheets." (Id. ¶ 19.) SEI contends the Invention resolves the fundamental accounting problem, i.e. either the balance sheet or the income sheet can be accurate and useful, but not both. (Id. ¶¶ 14. 19.)

Pertinent to this litigation, on July 6. 2006. FASB requested public comments "concerning the most basic objects for financial reporting and how to accomplish such objects." (Id. ¶ 20.) FASB's invitation also staled that "all comments received by the FASB are considered public information. Those comments will be posted to the FASB's website and will be included in the project's public record." (Id. ¶ 21.) SEI provided comments, including briefing on the Invention. (Id. ¶ 22.) SEI then participated in a roundtable discussion and SEI's founder, Joel Jameson ("Jameson"), privately met with the FASB [*4] regarding the Invention. (Id.)

Several months later. Jameson became aware of certain terms and conditions on FASB's website, namely:

> "Any information or material you transmit . . . by . . . sending an e-mail . . . including information such as personal data, comments and suggestions (whether in response to a specific query or otherwise) will be treated as non-confidential and non-proprietary . . . . Unless we agree in writing in advance, anything you transmit, whether electronically or in hard copy may be used by the FAF/FASB and its affiliates for any purpose. including. but not limited to. reproduction. disclosure, transmission, publication, broadcast and posting. This means that the FAF/FASB may use the ideas, concepts, know-how or techniques you transmit . . . ."

(Id. ¶ 23) (the "Website Terms"). Unaware of the Website Terms prior to submitting his comments in July 2006. Jameson contacted FASB to clarify and confirm FASB did not claim any ownership interest in the Invention. (Id. ¶ 24.) After receiving no response for more than two years. Jameson again contacted FASB through legal counsel. (Id. ¶ 25.) In response, FASB "claimed that it ha[s] a royally-free ownership interest in the [*5] SEI Invention . . . and categorically refused to release any such interest." (Id.)

After another few months passed, SEI filed suit in California federal court, but the complaint was dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction over Defendants. (Id. ¶ 26); see *Silicon Econ., Inc. v. Fin. Accounting Found., No. 10-1939, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130989, 2010 WL 4942468, at 7 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 24, 2010). During the course of that litigation, however, counsel for Defendants expressly disavowed a license to practice the Invention or any claim or ownership interest therein, and affirmed Defendants have no intention of claiming any ownership interest. (Compl. ¶ 27.) "Despite these admissions. [Defendants have] refused to release [their] purported ownership claims in the [Invention]." (Id.)

Still seeking clarity, SEI filed the instant Complaint asserting claims for restraint of trade and monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2; a claim for declaratory relief under California law; and a claim for unfair competition under California law. (Compl. ¶¶ 28-44.) On April 29, 2011, Defendants filed the instant Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint With Prejudice for lack of jurisdiction and for failure to state [*6] a claim upon which relief can be granted. SEI also filed a Motion for a Preliminary Injunction (Mot., ECF No. 6). but agreed the Court should first rule on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (Order. ECF No. 16).

II. Jurisdiction and Standard of Review

A. Jurisdiction

The Court has jurisdiction over SEI's antitrust claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337, and supplemental jurisdiction over its California law claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a). SEI contends venue is proper pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 22. Defendants have not objected to venue in this District.

B. Standard of Review

A Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction presents either a facial attack or a factual attack. CNA v. United States, 535 F.3d 132, 139 (3d Cir. 2008); see Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1). A facial attack concerns an alleged pleading deficiency, whereas a factual attack concerns the actual failure of a plaintiff's claim to comport factually with the jurisdictional prerequisites. CNA, 535 F.3d at 139.

On a facial attack, the Court must consider the allegations of the complaint as true. Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 891 (3d Cir. 1977). In contrast, there are three important [*7] consequences of a factual attack: (1) there is no presumption of truthfulness; (2) the plaintiff bears the burden of proving subject matter jurisdiction: and (3) the Court has authority to make factual findings on the issue, and can look beyond the pleadings to do so. CNA, 535 F.3d at 145. Defendants appear to be making a facial attack against SEI's complaint. In their Opening Brief, Defendants assume the veracity of SEI's allegations and challenge the sufficiency of those allegations. (Opening Br., ECF No. 19 at 7-9); see also Danvers Motor Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 432 F.3d 286. 292 (3d Cir. 2005) (evaluating sufficiency of plaintiff's factual allegations in complaint on standing challenge).

As for Defendants' Motion pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations and must construe them in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 228 (3d Cir. 2008).

According to the Third Circuit, Twombly v. Bell Atlantic Corp., 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009), establish a three-pronged approach for evaluating the sufficiency of pleadings in all civil actions: first, [*8] the court must identify the elements the plaintiff must plead to state a claim; second, the court asks whether the complaint sets forth factual allegations or conclusory statements; third, if the complaint sets forth factual allegations, the court must assume their veracity and draw reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party, but then must determine whether the factual allegations plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief. See Santiago v. Warminster Twp., 629 F.3d 121, 130 & n.7 (3d Cir. 2010); see Iqbal 129 S. Ct. at 1950, 1953. For the second step, the court should separate the factual and legal elements of the claims, must accept the well-pleaded facts as true, and may disregard any legal conclusions. Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210-11 (3d Cir. 2009).

The plaintiff's complaint must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 98 (3d Cir. 2010). The complaint must state factual allegations that, taken as a whole, render the plaintiff's entitlement to relief plausible. Id. This does not impose a probability requirement, but instead calls for enough facts [*9] to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of the necessary elements. Id. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to reasonably infer that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Gelman v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 583 F.3d 187. 190 (3d Cir. 2009).

"[J]udging the sufficiency of a pleading is a context-dependent exercise. Some claims require more factual explication than others to state a plausible claim for relief." UPMC, 627 F.3d at 98 (reversing district court's application of heightened scrutiny in antitrust context) (citation omitted).

Accordingly, the Court considers the factual allegations in SEI's complaint as true for all purposes of Defendants' Motion.

III. Discussion

Defendants argue the Court should dismiss SEI's Complaint because SEI lacks standing under Article III and has failed to sufficiently plead its claims for relief. Defendants also argue the Court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over SEI's state law claims if the Court dismisses SEI's federal claims.

A. Standing

Defendants contend that SEI has failed to establish an actual case or controversy exists [*10] in this matter because it cannot satisfy the "injury-in-fact" and "fairly traceable" elements of constitutional standing. As such, they argue the Court lacks jurisdiction over this case. SEI opposes Defendants' Motion and argues its claims are justiciable because Defendants' refusal to release its claimed ownership interest in SEI's patent has created uncertainty regarding SEI's ownership interest. In reply, Defendants contend any alleged harm is only theoretical because they have not made any use of the Invention and that SEI has failed to sufficiently allege any harm. The Court agrees with Defendants.

In its Opposition, SEI conflates Defendants' Article III and California declaratory relief arguments, but California law regarding declaratory relief is inapposite to the question of Article III standing. Article III of the Constitution limits the exercise of federal judicial power to adjudication of actual cases or controversies. Toll Bros., Inc. v. Twp. of Readington, 555 F.3d 131, 137 (3d Cir. 2009). This limitation is enforced through several justiciability doctrines, including, standing, mootness. ripeness, the political-question doctrine, and the prohibition on advisory opinions. [*11] Id.

Perhaps the most important of these doctrines is standing. Id. The "irreducible constitutional minimum" of Article III standing consists of three elements: (1) the plaintiff must have suffered a concrete, particularized injury-in-fact, which must be actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury must be fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant, and not the result of independent action of some third party not before the Court: and (3) the plaintiff must also establish that a favorable decision would likely redress the alleged injury. Id. at 137-38. Defendants argue SEI has failed to establish the first two elements.

SEI, as the party invoking federal jurisdiction, bears the burden of establishing these elements. See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). Each element must be supported in the same way as any other matter on which SEI bears the burden of proof, i.e. "with the manner and degree of evidence required at the successive stages of the litigation." Id. On a motion to dismiss, allegations may suffice because they are assumed true. Id. Thus, to state an injury-in-fact sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss, SEI must [*12] sufficiently plead that it has suffered some concrete harm because of Defendants' conduct. See *N.J. Physicians, Inc. v. President of the United States, 653 F.3d 234, No. 10-4600, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 15899, 2011 WL 3366340, at 3 (3d Cir. Aug. 3, 2011) (noting "standing cannot be inferred argumentatively from averments in the pleadings bu rather must affirmatively appear in the record") (quotations omitted).

To satisfy the injury-in-fact element, the plaintiff must have suffered a palpable and distinct harm that affects the plaintiff in a personal and individual way. 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 15899, [WL] at *3; Toll Bros., 555 F.3d at 138. In an action for declaratory relief, the plaintiff need not suffer the full harm expected, so long as there is a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant issuance of a declaratory judgment. Khodara Envtl., Inc. v. Blakey, 376 F.3d 187, 193-94 (3d Cir. 2004); St. Thomas-St. John Hotel & Tourism Ass'n v. Virgin Islands, 218 F.3d 232, 240 (3d Cir. 2000).

The injury must be concrete and particularized, and actual or imminent. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 564 n.2; N.J. Physicians, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 15899, 2011 WL 3366340, at *3 (stating plaintiff must sufficiently allege [*13] both elements to establish standing). Intentions, without concrete plans, do not support a finding of actual or imminent injury. Lujan, 504 U.S. at 564 n.2 If there is no actual injury, the injury must be at least imminent. Id. Although an elastic concept, it cannot be stretched beyond its purpose which is to ensure the alleged injury is not too speculative but is "certainly impending." Id. Allegations of injury are insufficient when the plaintiff alleges injury at some future time and the acts necessary to make the injury happen are at least partly within the plaintiff's control. Id. Nonetheless, "[i]njury-in-fact is not Mount Everest." Danvers, 432 F.3d at 294. The contours of the requirement, though not precisely defined, are very generous, requiring only allegations of some specific, identifiable trifle of injury. Id. (citing Bowman v. Wilson, 672 F.2d 1145, 1151 (3d Cir. 1982)).

In its Complaint. SEI alleges Defendants have created uncertainty regarding SEI's exclusive rights in the Invention, which has harmed SEI's reputation and goodwill. (Compl. ¶ 32.) SEI raises two other alleged injuries in its Opposition – SEI's dispute with Defendants has impeded its ability to seek financing [*14] and has had "substantial and immediate impact on the business of SEI" – but "[i]t is axiomatic that the complaint may not be amended by the briefs in opposition to a motion to dismiss." (Opp'n at 5, 7); see Pennsylvania ex rel. Zimmerman v. Pepsico, Inc., 836 F.2d 173, 181 (3d Cir. 1988) (quotations omitted).

Injury to reputation, including commercial reputation, may constitute a cognizable injury-in-fact for Article III standing. See Foretich v. United States, 351 F.3d 1198, 1211, 359 U.S. App. D.C. 54 (D.C. Cir. 2003) (citing Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 473-77, 107 S. Ct. 1862, 95 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1987)); GTE Sylvania Inc. v. Consumer Prod. Safety Comm'n, 404 F. Supp. 352. 366 (D. Del. 1975). As for the alleged "uncertainty," the Court finds a decision from the Eastern District of Virginia instructive on the issue.

In Robishaw Engineering, Inc. v. United States, a patent-holder, who was negotiating a license agreement with the United States Army, filed suit against the United States claiming that the Army's assertion of a royalty-free license put a cloud on the patent and diminished its market value. 891 F. Supp. 1134, 1137 (E.D. Va. 1995). Judge Ellis acknowledged that patents represent legal rights, namely the right to exclude parties other [*15] than the government. Id. at 1149. He also recognized the "simple truism that the value of any legal right depends on the likelihood of successfully enforcing it." Id. Thus, any cloud or uncertainty regarding enforceability diminishes the property's market value, and any party who seeks a judicial declaration to eliminate that uncertainty can point to the diminution in value as an injury-in-fact. Id. But if that uncertainty is always deemed sufficient, standing would become a meaningless requirement. Id.

To exclude the possibility of rendering standing meaningless, Judge Ellis determined that standing requires the cloud or uncertainty to consist of a sufficiently immediate, definite, and concrete threat to the legal right at issue. Id. Thus, the question is whether the defendant has taken definite and concrete steps to assert a claim or has at least threatened to assert a claim adverse to the plaintiff's interests. Id. at 1150. In Robishaw, the Army took no firm position, only suggesting that it may have a royalty-free license. Id. Therefore, Judge Ellis concluded the plaintiff had failed to sufficiently allege an injury-in-fact based on a cloud on its patent. Id. SEI has similarly failed [*16] to sufficiently allege an injury in fact.

As for the alleged harm to reputation and goodwill, SEI offers only bald assertions of injury. SEI has not offered any factual allegations on which it bases its contention it has suffered harm to reputation or goodwill. Failing to meet its burden of alleging standing at this stage of the litigation, the Court will dismiss SEI's Complaint without prejudice to SEI amending its Complaint.[1]

B. Antitrust Claims

Defendants offer two arguments in favor of dismissal of SEI's antitrust claims. First. they contend they are not engaged in trade or commerce and, therefore, [*18] the Sherman Act does not apply to them. Defendants also argue SEI has failed to sufficiently plead a relevant product market because no market exists; it has not sufficiently pled an antitrust injury because Defendants and SEI do not compete; Defendants maintain a monopoly through the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") not any anti-competitive conduct in violation of § 2: and Defendants have engaged in unilateral conduct, not any combination in violation of § 1.

In response, SEI focuses on establishing that Defendants' non-profit status is not dispositive of the trade or commerce issue. Further. SEI contends there is commerce involved because Defendants allegedly misappropriated SEI's patent and SEI is a commercial entity. As for the substance of the claims, SEI argues it sufficiently pled antitrust injuries of reduced innovation and excluded competition. As for the relevant market. SEI argues the Court must also consider potential markets, and SEI could potentially compete with Defendants. For its § 2 claim, SEI contends Defendants are unlawfully maintaining their monopoly by taking SEI's property, and for the § 1 claim. SEI argues the Websitc Terms may form an agreement in [*19] restraint of trade and both parties to an agreement need not share anti-competitive intent.

In reply, Defendants argue they are not engaged in trade or commerce because their accounting standards are freely available to anyone in the world and are available without charge and without payment to Defendants, save for sales of bounded volumes and unrelated licensing arrangements. They further contend that the challenged conduct, i.e. adoption of and adherence to the Website Terms, is not motivated by commercial objectives or advantages despite receipt of government funds. In addition, Defendants argue they are not participants in the commercial market for accounting standards and SEI only alleges injuries to itself rather than to competition. Further, Defendants maintain they did not engage in concerted action, but unilaterally adopted the Website Terms.

1. "Trade or Commerce"

The purpose of antitrust law is to regulate commerce, which entails determining the applicability of antitrust laws by considering the nature of the activity being challenged, not the nature of the organization engaged in the activity. 1B Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 260, at 158, 161 (3d ed. [*20] 2006); see Apex

---

[1] The cases SEI relies on do not persuade the Court otherwise. In Leonard Carder, LLP v. Patten, Faith & Sandford, the California Court of Appeals found an actual controversy justifying jurisdiction over the claim for state-law declaratory relief. 189 Cal. App. 4th 92, 116 Cal. Rptr. 3d 652, 653 (Cal. Ct. App. 2010). Two law firms were disputing the allocation of legal fees from settlement of a class action. Id. at 654. The money was held in trust and the defendant claimed it was owed forty percent based on a prior agreement. Id. The plaintiff disputed the existence of the agreement and sent a check for the significantly lower lodestar amount, with a note that the payment was in "final settlement." Id. Before cashing the check, the defendant amended the memo line to reflect the payment [*17] was "credit toward final settlement." Id. Unlike in this case, each party had taken a firm position on the amount due the defendant, which created an ongoing controversy warranting declaratory relief. See id. at 656-57.

In Principal Life Insurance Co. v. Robinson, the Ninth Circuit concluded an actual dispute existed regarding the calculation of rent under a lease agreement. 394 F.3d 665, 668 (9th Cir. 2005). The plaintiff had previously attempted to sell its interest in the lease. but the dispute regarding the rent calculation undermined the deal. Id. The Ninth Circuit found this past difficulty suggested the plaintiff would continue to have difficulty, which warranted declaratory relief. Id. at 672. SEI, however, has not alleged any such past difficulties or experiences with the Invention, making only conclusory assertions that its title is uncertain and that is has suffered harm to reputation and goodwill. Without more facts, SEI's circumstances are distinguishable from those in Leonard Carder and Principal Life.

Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 493 n.15, 495, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 (1940); see also United States v. Brown Univ., 5 F.3d 658, 665 (3d Cir. 1993) (finding antitrust laws apply to non-profit organizations engaged in commerce). Thus, the threshold issue is whether the antitrust laws even apply to the challenged conduct. Brown Univ., 5 F.3d at 665.

It is axiomatic that antitrust laws regulate only transactions that are commercial in nature. Id. Courts classify a transaction as commercial in nature based on the nature of the challenged conduct in light of the totality of the surrounding circumstances. Id. at 666; see Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra ¶ 262a. at 177 (endorsing objective test which asks whether antitrust defendants are likely to receive direct economic benefit as a result of any reduction in competition in market in which target firms operate). An effect on prices is not essential. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213 n.7, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). The Third Circuit's approach does not encompass restraints that result in incidental economic effects. See Pocono Invitational Sports Camp, Inc. v. NCAA, 317 F. Supp. 2d 569. 584 (E.D. Pa. 2004) (Brody, J.).

On a motion to dismiss, [*21] the Court should determine whether the challenged conduct is commercial based on the factual allegations in the complaint. See Hamilton Chapter of Alpha Delta Phi. Inc. v. Hamilton Coll., 128 F.3d 59, 66 (2d Cir. 1997). In this case. SEI is challenging Defendants' adoption of and adherence to the Website Terms, particularly the reservation of rights to use any submitted ideas for any purpose, and subsequent refusal to release any ownership interest. (Compl. ¶¶ 20, 27.)[2] SEI alleges that Defendants have unlawfully claimed a proprietary interest for the purpose of excluding SEI as a competitor in the market for establishing accounting standards in the United States. (Id. ¶ 37.) SEI contends Defendants' conduct lessens competition, discourages public comment, discourages innovation, and entrenches Defendants' monopoly. (Id. ¶¶ 38, 40.)

It is important at the outset to define the apparent scope of SEI's antitrust claims against Defendants. SEI is not challenging [*22] FASB's conduct in setting standards, which is a more common subject of antitrust review. Instead, SEI is challenging Defendants' Website Terms which apply to voluntary submissions of solicited comments.

Federal courts have experience with the "trade or commerce" issue, particularly in the context of the NCAA's regulation of student athletics. Courts have concluded that when the challenged conduct consists of academic rules or player-eligibility requirements, the conduct is non-commercial in nature. E.g., Smith v. NCAA, 139 F.3d 180, 185-86 (3d Cir. 1998) (holding Sherman Act does not apply to NCAA rules and eligibility requirements that primarily seek to ensure fair competition in collegiate sports, not to provide the NCAA with a commercial advantage), rev'd on other grounds, NCAA v. Smith, 525 U.S. 459, 119 S. Ct. 924, 142 L. Ed. 2d 929 (1999); Pocono Invitational, 317 F. Supp. 2d at 583-84 (concluding rules relating to recruitment at summer camps are like eligibility rules and were enacted in spirit of promoting amateurism in keeping with NCAA's general goals): College Athletic Placement Serv. Inc. v. NCAA, No. 74-1144, 1974 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7050, 1974 WL 998, at *4-5 (D.N.J. Aug. 22, 1974) (finding NCAA policy against for-profit companies [*23] that find athletic scholarships for student-athletes was motivated by intent to ensure academic standards and amateurism, not by anti-competitive motive or intent).

But when the challenged conduct restrains revenue, output, or salaries, the rules are almost always commercial. E.g., NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 113, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (finding NCAA's television plan amounted to unlawful horizontal restraint on members' ability to sell television rights to their games because it operated to raise prices and reduce output); Law v. NCAA, 134 F.3d 1010, 1012 (10th Cir. 1998) (affirming injunction against NCAA's enforcement of rule that limited salaries of entry-level coaches as unlawful horizontal restraint on trade). The Court finds these cases useful in this case because they suggest a spectrum of conduct to evaluate Defendants' alleged conduct.

Compared to this range of conduct. SEI has not sufficiently alleged that Defendants' conduct is commercial in nature. Considering the totality of circumstances and SEI's allegations, FASB sought voluntary comments from the public in an effort to establish and promulgate accounting standards for public companies within the United States, [*24] which is FASB's exclusive prerogative.[3] Defendants also adopted the Website Terms to reserve FASB's right to use any submissions for any purpose, including reproduction, disclosure, and publication. SEI's allegations do not suggest conduct that is commercial in nature – there is no sale, no exchange. and no production. Compare, e.g., Brown Univ., 5 F.3d at 668 (determining financial assistance for students is part and parcel of price-setting process and, thus, is a commercial transaction), with, e.g., Apex Hosiery, 310 U.S. at 501-02 (concluding labor union strike intended to compel company to accede to demands not trade or commerce despite delaying interstate shipment of goods); Marjorie Webster Junior Coll., Inc. v. Middle States Ass'n of Colls. & Secondary Schs., 432 F.2d 650, 654-55, 139 U.S. App. D.C. 217 (D.C. Cir. 1970) (finding non-profit organization's decision to deny accreditation to for-profit school not commercial absent intent or purpose to affect commercial aspects).

---

[2] As noted below, Defendants' counsel's unconditional recantation of an ownership interest at oral argument must be given some weight in assessing Plaintiff's allegations, which will presumably be clarified in an amended complaint.

SEI contends FASB's conduct is commercial because SEI itself is a commercial enterprise and Defendants misappropriated its patented Invention. But it is the nature of the conduct that controls, not the nature of the organizations. The alleged conduct enables FASB to solicit voluntary submissions of accounting-standard proposals, and then perform its function of establishing and promulgating those standards without being hamstrung by subsequent intellectual property claims. Any economic consequence is an indirect by-product of these efforts. SEI has not alleged that Defendants derive any economic benefit from the Website Terms – it does not allow them [*26] to control production, innovation, or quality by asserting an exclusive right in submitted concepts and it does not permit them to set a price. All the Website Terms appear to do is facilitate FASB's consideration and promulgation of appropriate accounting standards for public companies in the United States. SEI's allegations suggest nothing more.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that SEI has failed to sufficiently allege that Defendants are subject to antitrust scrutiny because it has failed to allege facts showing the challenged conduct is commercial in nature. The Court will grant SEI leave to amend its complaint to address these deficiencies. The Court reserves decision on certain other legal arguments made by Defendants until SEI has amended its Complaint.

C. California Law Claims

The Court will reserve decision on exercising supplemental jurisdiction until SEI has the opportunity to amend those claims over which the Court has original jurisdiction. The Court will determine at that time whether to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over SEI's California law claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a), (c).

IV. Court's Review of Discussion at Oral Argument

Prior to oral argument, the [*27] Court posed questions in a letter to counsel, including whether the parties would agree to expedite the hearing on the declaratory judgment aspect of the case and stay the antitrust claims. Plaintiff's counsel indicated that Plaintiff was interested in such a proposal. Defendants would prefer a decision on the grounds stated in its Motion to Dismiss before entertaining such an agreement.

---

[3] The SEC has recognized FASB as the only entity whose work-product can be recognized as "generally accepted" for the purpose of public companies' financial reporting. Commission Statement of Policy Reaffirming the Status of the FASB as a Designated Private-Sector Standard Setter, 68 Fed. Reg. 23,333, 23,333-34 (May 1, 2003); [*25] see Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-204, § 108, 116 Stat. 745, 768-69 (codified at 15 U.S.C. § 77s). Congress also ensured FASB would remain independent from the targets of its standards by creating an independent source of funding for FASB so that it no longer had to depend on voluntary contributions or sales of its standards. Donna M. Nagy, Playing Peekaboo with Constitutional Law: The PCAOB and Its Public/Private Status, 80 Notre Dame L. Rev. 975, 987-89 (2005); see Sarbanes-Oxley Act § 109 (codified at 15 U.S.C. § 7219).

After discussing whether Plaintiff sufficiently pleaded its claims, it became obvious to the Court that Plaintiff would welcome the chance to amend the complaint, if only to provide more factual allegations, as now required by Twombly and Iqbal. The Court indicated it would grant that relief.

The argument contained many good points about the value of standard-setting organizations having an open mind to suggestions and ideas put forward by segments of the industry the organization serves. Defendants assert vigorously that it must have the ability to learn from submissions, such as those made by Plaintiff, and to consider and possibly use them in evolving formulations of industry standards. The Court believes that this is sound public policy and that the antitrust laws were not designed to interfere with [*28] such a process.

It also become clear that Plaintiff, as of yet, has not tried to gain commercial value from its patent, but understandably reserved the right to do so in the future.

At the argument, defense counsel unconditionally renounced any ownership interest by Defendants in Plaintiff's Invention. After the argument, the Court indicated it would grant leave to Plaintiff to amend its Complaint. The Court also noted that the positions of the parties should be amenable to a settlement of this dispute, and that a prolonged litigation over such issues as standing, relevant markets, and anti-competitive intent do not seem to be necessary for Defendants to continue their work, and for Plaintiff to, if it so desires. use its patent in a commercial setting. The Court encouraged the parties to work towards a written agreement and, if requested, the undersigned will be available after September 18th to meet with counsel, assuming they have made some progress towards agreement on a written statement and both are desirous of completing the agreement as a means of settling this case.

For the above reasons, Plaintiff is granted leave to file an amended complaint by September 30, 2011.

V. Conclusion

For [*29] the foregoing reasons, the Court will grant in part and deny in part Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. The Court will grant SEI leave to amend its Complaint in conformity with this Memorandum by September 30, 2011.

An appropriate Order will follow.

ORDER

AND NOW, on this 17th day of August, 2011, upon careful consideration of Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (ECF No. 18). the parties' briefing, and oral argument on the Motion, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. Defendants' Motion is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part in accordance with the accompanying Memorandum.
2. Plaintiff Silicon Economics, Inc. is granted leave to file an amended complaint to cure the deficiencies identified in the accompanying Memorandum by September 30, 2011.
3. Defendants shall have twenty-one (21) days from service of an amended complaint to answer, move, or otherwise plead.
4. Plaintiff shall respond to any defense motion or other pleading within twenty-one (21) days of service of such motion or pleading.
5. Defendants shall reply, if at all, within fourteen (14) days of service.

BY THE COURT:

/s/ Michael M. Baylson

Michael M. Baylson, U.S.D.J.

End of Document

City of New York v. Group Health Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

May 4, 2011, Argued; August 18, 2011, Decided

Docket No. 10-2286-cv

Reporter

649 F.3d 151 *; 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 17116 ; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,569

CITY OF NEW YORK, Plaintiff-Appellant, --v.-- GROUP HEALTH INCORPORATED, HIP FOUNDATION, INC., and HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN OF GREATER NEW YORK, Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Richard J. Sullivan, Judge) granting summary judgment to Defendants-Appellees and dismissing the complaint. The City of New York argues that the district court erred by concluding that the market pled in its antitrust complaint is legally insufficient and by denying the City's motion to amend its complaint. We conclude that summary judgment was appropriate and that it was within the district court's discretion to deny leave to amend. We therefore AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

City of New York v. Group Health, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196 (S.D.N.Y., May 11, 2010)

Core Terms

district court, merger, relevant market, health benefits, Pricing, employees, antitrust, argues, motion to amend, discovery, insurance provider, plans, insurance plan, providers, coverage, select, amend, premiums, merged, health insurance, summary judgment, interchangeability, municipal, compete

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

Appellate courts review an award of summary judgment de novo, affirming only if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and if the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN2[] Clayton Act, Claims

To state a claim under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-2, and the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(1), a plaintiff must allege a plausible relevant market in which competition will be impaired. The relevant market must be defined as all products reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes, because the ability of consumers to switch to a substitute restrains a firm's ability to raise prices above the competitive level. Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A single purchaser's preferences cannot define a market.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN4[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Appellate courts review a district court's denial of a motion to amend under the abuse of discretion standard. A district court abuses its discretion when it bases its ruling on an incorrect legal standard or on a clearly erroneous assessment of the facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN5[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2) provides that the court should freely give leave to amend the complaint when justice so requires. The rule in the Second Circuit is to allow a party to amend its complaint unless the nonmovant demonstrates prejudice or bad faith.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN6[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Leave to amend may be denied on grounds of futility if the proposed amendment fails to state a legally cognizable claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN7[] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

An amendment may be prejudicial when, among other things, it would require the opponent to expend significant additional resources to conduct discovery and prepare for trial or significantly delay the resolution of the dispute.

Counsel: ALAN H. KLEINMAN, Assistant Corporation Counsel (Michael A. Cardozo, Corporation Counsel of the City of New York, June R. Buch, John R. Low-Beer, Richard J. Costa, Assistant Corporation Counsel, on the brief), New York, N.Y., for Plaintiff-Appellant City of New York.

STEPHEN M. AXINN (Michael L. Keeley, on the brief), Axinn, Veltrop & Harkrider LLP, New York, N.Y., for Defendant-Appellee Group Health Incorporated.

BRUCE H. SCHNEIDER (Derek I.A. Silverman, on the brief), Stroock & Stroock & [2] Lavan LLP, New York, N.Y., for Defendants-Appellees Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York and HIP Foundation, Inc.

Judges: Before: MINER, WALKER, and WESLEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: JOHN M. WALKER, JR.

Opinion

[*153] JOHN M. WALKER, JR., Circuit Judge:

Plaintiff-Appellant City of New York appeals from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Richard J. Sullivan, Judge) granting summary judgment to Defendants-Appellees Group Health Incorporated ("GHI"), HIP Foundation, Inc., and Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York (together, "HIP"), and dismissing the City's antitrust complaint without leave to amend.

The City sued health insurance providers GHI and HIP under federal and New York State antitrust laws, seeking to prevent the companies from merging. The district court granted summary judgment to GHI and HIP, holding that the market definition the City alleged as the basis of its claims is legally deficient. It also denied the City's motion to amend its complaint to allege a new market definition. The City challenges these conclusions on appeal.

We agree with the district court that the alleged relevant market is legally deficient, and conclude that its denial of leave [3] to amend was not an abuse of discretion. We therefore AFFIRM the district court's judgment.

BACKGROUND

I. New York City's Health Benefits Program and the Proposed Merger

The City and several related entities obtain health insurance for their employees and their employees' dependents through the City's Health Benefits Program. Approximately 1.2 million individuals are insured through the Program. The City's Office of Labor Relations administers the Program jointly with the Municipal Labor Committee, an association of about 50 unions that represent the employees.

As a result of collective bargaining agreements and municipal law requirements, the City offers its employees several types of health insurance plans. Employees can select coverage through a Health Maintenance Organization ("HMO") plan, a Participating Provider Organization ("PPO") plan, or a Point of Service ("POS") plan.

The City periodically issues Requests for Proposals ("RFPs") inviting insurers to propose plan designs and associated premiums. Insurance providers compete to be selected during each procurement round.

Employees choose among the plans that the City selects. Those who do not receive Medicare benefits can choose among [4] thirteen plans, and Medicare participants can choose among fifteen.

GHI and HIP offer the two least expensive and most popular plans. GHI offers a PPO plan and HIP offers an HMO plan. The majority of City employees and non-Medicare retirees select coverage from [*154] GHI's or HIP's plan, with only a small minority choosing the plan with the third largest share of enrollment.

Under municipal law and by agreement between the City and the Municipal Labor Committee, the City pays the entire premium for employees who enroll in either the HIP plan or the GHI plan. Employees who select more expensive coverage from another carrier must pay any excess in the cost of that coverage over the cost of the HIP plan.

In September 2005, GHI and HIP announced their intent to merge and to convert from non-profit to for-profit status. The United States Department of Justice and the New York State Attorney General investigated the antitrust implications of the proposed merger and decided not to challenge it. The New York State Departments of Health and Insurance granted approval for GHI and HIP to combine their operations as an interim step pending approval of an acceptable plan of conversion to a publicly owned [5] company and, thereafter, a formal merger.

II. Procedural History

On November 13, 2006, the City filed this action seeking an injunction to block the merger. The complaint challenges the merger under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, and the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. L. § 340(1), New York's antitrust law. It alleges that because GHI's and HIP's plans cover a vast majority of the employees in the City's Health Benefits Program, the merger of the carriers will substantially reduce competition, and will result in monopolization of the relevant market and an increase in the premiums that the City is required to pay. The complaint defines the relevant market as the "low-cost municipal health benefits market." This market includes only those insurance plans that are inexpensive and that the City selects for inclusion in the Health Benefits Program.[1]

When the City filed its complaint, it moved for a temporary restraining order blocking the merger. Judge Karas, to whom the case was initially assigned, denied the motion. He explained that "there are substantial questions about the market definition analysis that the plaintiff has adopted here. It appears to be focused on what the City is paying for, and not so much on the market of insurance coverage. . . . I think the products . . . are the same, whether they're offered to the City or they're offered to a private large employer."

On December 4, 2009, after several years of discovery, GHI and HIP moved for summary judgment dismissing the City's complaint. They argued (1) that the market the City alleged in its complaint is insufficient as a matter of law because it is based on the City's preferences and ignores the market of insurance providers that compete for the City's business, and (2) that the City could not demonstrate a relevant antitrust injury [7] because any increased premiums would result from GHI's and HIP's conversion to for-profit entities, not from their merger.

On January 20, 2010, nine days before its opposition papers were due, the City [*155] sought leave to file a motion to amend its complaint to add alternative market definitions. The City sought to add two alternative markets: (1) all insurance plans the City selected for inclusion in the Health Benefits Program, not only the inexpensive plans; and (2) the market for all commercial medical benefits in downstate New York. The City also sought to base its claim on the "Upward Pricing Pressure" test, which analyzes the effect of a merger on the merged firm's pricing incentives. The City contended that the Upward Pricing Pressure test could establish the anticompetitive effect of the merger without the need to define a relevant market.

---

[1] The complaint alleges that this relevant market also includes the health insurance program that the New York City Transit Authority administers. Because the parties did not address this aspect of the alleged market in their briefing before the district court, the district court did not consider [6] it in resolving the summary judgment motions. See *City of New York v. Group Health Inc., No. 06 Civ. 13122 (RJS), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196, 2010 WL 2132246, at 3 n.3 (S.D.N.Y. May 11, 2010). The parties do not raise this aspect of the alleged market on appeal.

The district court granted GHI and HIP's summary judgment motion and denied the City's motion to amend. *City of New York v. Group Health Inc., No. 06 Civ. 13122 (RJS), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196, 2010 WL 2132246, at 7 (S.D.N.Y. May 11, 2010). It concluded that the market the City alleged in its complaint is legally insufficient because it was defined by the preferences [8] of a single purchaser: the City. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196, [WL] at 4-5. Judge Sullivan, to whom the case had been reassigned, denied the City's motion to amend on the basis that (1) the City exhibited undue delay because it was on notice of its potentially deficient market definition at least as early as Judge Karas's denial of its request for a temporary restraining order more than three years earlier, and (2) the amendments would prejudice GHI and HIP by forcing them to conduct substantial additional discovery after three and a half years of defending a lawsuit premised on the City's narrow market definition. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196, [WL] at 5-7.

The City appealed.

DISCUSSION

I. Sufficiency of the Alleged Market

HN1[] We review an award of summary judgment de novo, affirming "only if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and if the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Allianz Ins. Co. v. Lerner, 416 F.3d 109, 113 (2d Cir. 2005).

HN2[] To state a claim under § 7 of the Clayton Act, §§ 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act, or New York's Donnelly Act, a plaintiff must allege a plausible relevant market in which competition will be impaired. See, e.g., United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593, 77 S. Ct. 872, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057 (1957) ("Determination [9] of the relevant market is a necessary predicate to a finding of a violation of the Clayton Act because the threatened monopoly must be one which will substantially lessen competition within the area of effective competition." (internal quotation marks omitted)); Chapman v. New York State Div. for Youth, 546 F.3d 230, 238 (2d Cir. 2008) (Sherman Act); Benjamin of Forest Hills Realty, Inc. v. Austin Sheppard Realty, Inc., 34 A.D.3d 91, 823 N.Y.S.2d 79, 83 (App. Div. 2006) (Donnelly Act). The relevant market must be defined "as all products 'reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes,' because the ability of consumers to switch to a substitute restrains a firm's ability to raise prices above the competitive level." Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs. Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 496 (2d Cir. 2004) (quoting E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377 at 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 2d 1264). "[W]here the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, [10] the relevant market is legally insufficient." Chapman, 546 F.3d at 238 (quoting *Queen City [156] Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997)).

Here, the district court correctly concluded that the market alleged in the City's complaint is legally insufficient because it is defined by the City's preferences, not according to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand. The market alleged in the City's complaint ignores the competition existing among insurance providers for the City's business, as well as the health insurance market for other large employers in the region. The City does not allege any factor that would prevent insurance companies other than those it selects for the Health Benefits Program from proposing competitive products should the merged firm raise its premiums to supracompetitive prices.

The arguments the City raises on appeal are unavailing. The City first argues that the insurance plans it approves constitute a unique market because they reflect the City's "sound policy choices." HN3[] A single purchaser's preferences, however, cannot define a market. We faced a similar argument in Hack v. President and Fellows of Yale [11] College, in which the plaintiffs complained that Yale was illegally tying dormitory housing to their education and alleged that Yale, because of its uniqueness, constituted its own market for education. 237 F.3d 81, 86-87 (2d Cir. 2000), abrogated on other grounds by Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002). We rejected this contention, holding that, although Yale is "unique, . . . in a collegiate sense," it does not constitute its own tying market because "there are many institutions of higher learning providing superb educational opportunities." Id. at 86. Here, although the approved insurance plans may have been particularly suitable to the City's needs, the City does not allege any reason why other similar insurance plans are unsuitable or why the numerous insurance providers in the area could not or would not design suitable plans to compete with those that the City selected.

The City next argues that its proposed market is distinct from a "single-purchaser market" because the employees who select their insurance coverage also constitute purchasers. However, the employees choose health coverage only from the plans that the City has already selected for inclusion in the [12] Health Benefits Program. The employees' ability to choose among the plans in the Health Benefits Program does not change the fact that the competition among insurance providers for the business of the City and other large employers would constrain the ability of the merged firm to set its premium above a competitive price. It thus cannot save the City's artificially narrow market definition.

Finally, the City argues that the district court erred in failing to consider its expert report, which, it argues, establishes the harm to competition that would result from the merger. The district court, however, granted summary judgment on the basis that the alleged relevant market is legally insufficient. The City's expert report was thus irrelevant.

II. Denial of the City's Motion to Amend

HN4[] "[W]e review a district court's denial of a motion to amend under the abuse of discretion standard." Gorman v. Consol. Edison Corp., 488 F.3d 586, 592 (2d Cir. 2007). A district court abuses its discretion when it "bases its ruling on an incorrect legal standard or on a clearly erroneous assessment of the facts." Bronx Household of Faith v. Bd. of Educ., 331 F.3d 342, 348 (2d Cir. 2003).

[*157] HN5[] Rule 15(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure [13] provides that "[t]he court should freely give leave [to amend the complaint] when justice so requires." The rule in our circuit is to allow a party to amend its complaint unless the nonmovant demonstrates prejudice or bad faith. AEP Energy Servs. Gas Holding Co. v. Bank of Am., N.A., 626 F.3d 699, 725 (2d Cir. 2010) (citing Block v. First Blood Assocs., 988 F.2d 344, 350 (2d Cir. 1993)).

During the course of briefing on GHI and HIP's summary judgment motion, the City moved to amend its complaint. It sought to add two additional market definitions: first, all insurance providers participating in the City's Health Benefits Program, not just the low-cost providers, and, second, all providers of commercial medical benefits in downstate New York. It also sought to add an alternative basis for its antitrust claims, the Upward Pricing Pressure Test, which, the City explains, "predicts the likely competitive impact of a proposed merger based on how a merger is likely to alter the merged firm's pricing incentives."[2] The City argues that the Upward Pricing Pressure test can be used instead of "the traditional approach of defining relevant markets."

In denying the City's motion to amend, the district court held that the City had exhibited undue delay and that the proposed amendment would prejudice GHI and HIP. City of New York v. Group Health Inc., No. 06 Civ. 13122 (RJS), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196, 2010 WL 2132246, at *5-7 (S.D.N.Y. May 11, 2010). The district court noted that the City was aware of the flaws in its complaint at least since Judge Karas questioned the City's market > measures the effect of two opposing forces resulting from a merger. First, the upward pricing pressure induced by the merger is measured by the diversion ratio, the sales that would otherwise be lost by a price increase, but that get[] recaptured by the diversion of those sales to the larger, merged entity. The second, countervailing downward price pressure is measured by efficiencies that would reduce the merged firm's marginal cost.

---

[2] The City explains that the Upward Pricing Pressure [14] test

definition in denying its motion for a temporary restraining order more than three years earlier. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196, [WL] at 6. In addition, the district court explained that allowing the amendment would unduly prejudice GHI and HIP by requiring them to conduct substantial additional discovery on a different and much broader market. Id. The district court also rejected [15] the Upward Pricing Pressure Test. It noted that "its research has not revealed a single decision of a federal court adopting this test," which, "[i]n light of the case law's clear requirement that a [p]laintiff allege a particular product market in which competition will be impaired, . . . is hardly surprising." *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60196, [WL] at 6 n.6.

The City argues that the district court abused its discretion by misapplying the standards that govern a motion to amend. First, it argues that its addition of the market comprising all insurance providers in the Health Benefits Program does not require an amendment because that market represents only a "slight change" from the market pled in the City's initial complaint. Whether or not the City's addition of a market consisting of all insurance providers in the Health Benefits Program requires a formal amendment, this market suffers from the same legal deficiency as the market in the City's initial complaint. As discussed above, a market limited to the providers participating in the Health Benefits Program is not -- as is required -- defined by the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand. It ignores the market of health insurance [16] providers in downstate New York that compete for the business of the City and other large employers. It [*158] thus cannot form the basis of the City's antitrust claims and its addition to the complaint would be futile. See AEP Energy Servs. Gas Holding Co., 626 F.3d at 726 (HN6[] "Leave to amend may be denied on grounds of futility if the proposed amendment fails to state a legally cognizable claim.").

The City next argues that GHI and HIP did not demonstrate undue prejudice because they did not show that the amendment would require them to redo, or discard, discovery already conducted. The need to redo or discard discovery, however, is not the only form of undue prejudice we have recognized. HN7[] An "[a]mendment may be prejudicial when, among other things, it would require the opponent to expend significant additional resources to conduct discovery and prepare for trial or significantly delay the resolution of the dispute." AEP Energy Servs. Gas Holding Co., 626 F.3d at 725-26 (internal quotation marks omitted). Here, the City's amendment would, at a minimum, require additional discovery from large employers other than the City in the downstate New York area and from the health insurance providers [17] that compete for their business. It was not clearly erroneous for the district court to conclude that the need to obtain this discovery would delay proceedings and require substantial additional expense.

In addition, as the district court explained, the City waited more than three years to seek an amendment, and did so only after confronted with a motion for summary judgment challenging its market definition. The City argues that it cannot be faulted for the delay because GHI and HIP went along with discovery, also waiting more than three years to challenge the City's market definition. While GHI and HIP could have sought dismissal of the City's complaint earlier in the litigation, their failure to do so does not necessarily mitigate the City's delay. Although the City's delay in seeking amendment may not be evidence of bad faith, we do not think it was an abuse of discretion for the district court to find that this delay, together with the prejudice that would result from the amendment, warranted denial of the City's motion to amend.

Finally, we find no error or abuse of discretion in the district court's rejection of the Upward Pricing Pressure test. As the district court explained, [18] and as we discussed above, the applicable case law requires plaintiffs asserting a claim under the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, or the Donnelly Act to allege a market in which the challenged merger will impair competition. While the City explains the Upward Pricing Pressure test's usefulness in assessing the impact of a merger, it does not explain how the test can substitute for a definition of the relevant market in the pleadings. Cf. Carl Shapiro, Deputy Ass't Attorney Gen. for Economics, Antitrust Division, U.S. Dep't of Justice, Update from the Antitrust Division, at 15 (Nov. 18, 2010), http://www.justice.gov/atr/public/speeches/264295.pdf (recognizing need to define relevant market in any antitrust challenge). Whether or not the Upward Pricing Pressure test -- and its results in this case as explained by the City's expert -- would, as the City argues, be admissible as evidence of impaired competition is not relevant to the adequacy of the pleadings.

As such, we find no abuse of discretion and affirm the district court's denial of the City's motion to amend.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

End of Document

LexisNexis®

Doe v. Williams

Superior Court of Maine, Kennebec County

August 18, 2011, Decided

CV-06-113

Reporter
2011 Me. Super. LEXIS 162 *

JOHN DOE et al. v. COL. ROBERT WILLIAMS, et al.[1] In his capacity as Chief of Maine State Police

Prior History: Doe v. Fowle, 2006 Me. Super. LEXIS 241 (Me. Super. Ct., Nov. 16, 2006)

Core Terms

registrants, offenders, plaintiffs', sentenced, registration requirement, registry, sex offender, punitive, verification, convicted, lifetime, fundamental rights, quotations, in-person, appears, summary judgment motion, parties, ex post facto, defendants', provisions, cases, retroactive application, bureau, challenges, register, relieved, factors, privacy, courts, classification

Judges: [*1] Michaela Murphy, SUPERIOR COURT JUSTICE.

Opinion by: Michaela Murphy

Opinion

ORDER ON CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Before the court is a motion for summary judgment brought on behalf of plaintiffs John Doe I, III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, X, XIII, XVI, XVIII, XXIV, and XLIII, represented by the office of Attorney Jim Mitchell, and joined by John Doe XIV, represented by Attorney Walt McKee, and John Doe XIX and XXIII, represented by Attorney Ron Bourget The plaintiffs' motion challenges the constitutionality of 34-A M.R.S. §11201-11256 (2010), Maine's Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act of 1999 (SORNA). The state defendants, represented by Deputy Attorney General Paul Stern, Assistant Attorney General Laura Yustak-Smith, and Assistant Attorney General Ron Lupton object to the motion and have cross-moved for summary judgment upholding the constitutionality of the statute, as amended. In addition to the parties' motions for summary judgment, the court also considers at this time the plaintiffs' motion for attorneys' fees, the state defendants' objection, and the plaintiffs' response.

CASE HISTORY AND BACKGROUND

[1] Colonel Patrick Fleming was the original named defendant, but Colonel Robert Williams has succeeded him in the post of Chief of the State Police. As the party is a defendant in his official, rather than individual, capacity, the court has made the substitution after receiving the new information from the state defendants.

The case was brought originally in 2006, and it has a complex history, both procedurally [*2] and substantively. The initial complaint was filed on April 28, 2006 on behalf of John Doe I. His complaint was dismissed by Justice Kirk Studstrup on November 16, 2006, for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. On October 12, 2007, the Maine Supreme Court vacated the dismissal in Doe v. DA, 2007 ME 139, 932 A.2d 552, and remanded the case to the Superior Court of Kennebec County for "further factual development." Id. at ¶ 1, 932 A.2d at 554. The case was assigned to Justice Nancy Mills on December 29, 2007, and reassigned to the undersigned Justice on April 1, 2008. On July 14, 2008, a temporary restraining order was issued on behalf of five other John Does, who were as of that date among nineteen John Does who had filed complaints in the Kennebec County Superior Court challenging the constitutionality of SORNA. Eventually, cases consolidated in this matter have involved as many as forty-seven John Does. In addition to the John Doe cases, there remain pending approximately four other cases, both civil and criminal, which have been sent for decision along with the John Does to the undersigned Justice at the direction of the Chief Justice of the Superior [*3] Court.

In 2008, before the issuance of the temporary restraining orders staying prosecutions of the plaintiffs for failure to register, the case was put on hold due to legislative activity in the spring of that year. LD 446, An Act to Improve the Use of Information Regarding Sex Offenders to Better Ensure Public Safety and Awareness, was passed by both houses of the Maine Legislature. It would have mooted out many, if not all, of the claims pending at that time. It would have relieved between 500 and 600 persons convicted of sex offenses between 1982 and 1992 from having to register under SORNA. When the court and parties became aware of the pending legislation it was agreed by all, in deference to that process, that all pending cases would be informally stayed. However, any hope that the legislation would relieve the court of the obligation to pass on the constitutionality of Maine's SORNA was dashed when Governor Baldacci announced on April 30, 2008, that he would not sign the bill.

The parties commenced discovery, and more plaintiffs joined. The parties and the court soon became aware of an appeal by the State from a decision of the Lewiston District Court (Stanfill, J.), which found [*4] Maine's SORNA statute facially unconstitutional as violative of a criminal defendant's right to be free from ex post facto laws. The Court then became aware of Justice Fritszche's decision in State v. A. L.., 2008 Me. Super LEXIS 164, along with decisions from other jurisdictions based upon state constitutions, including Doe v. State of Alaska, 189 P. 3d 999 (Alas. 2008). In light of these decisions, and for other considerations, this Court provided limited temporary relief to certain John Does, allowing them to remain off of the registry during the pendency of the legal action. Then, in State v. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, 985 A.2d 4, the Maine Supreme Court agreed that certain portions of Maine's SORNA violated the prohibition against ex post facto laws. The Law Court stayed issuance of its mandate for ninety days to give the Maine Legislature an opportunity to address the constitutional violations found in Letalien. The Legislature responded by enacting P.L. 2009, Chapter 570 (124th Leg., LD 1822) which was signed into law by Governor Baldacci on March 30, 2010. This legislative response to Letalien is a primary focus of the motions before the court.

After the bill became law, the court [*5] conferred with all parties to discuss the course of future proceedings. Eventually, twenty-four of the forty-seven plaintiffs dismissed their complaints.[2] This court further decided that certain of the pending cases should proceed to decision through dispositive cross-motions. A briefing schedule was issued, and the so-called "Mitchell Does" were joined in their arguments by the three other John Does represented by Attorneys Walter McKee and Ron Bourget. Other plaintiffs elected to proceed separately, some of them having joined much later than the plaintiffs at issue here.[3]

---

[2] John Does II, IX, XI, XII, XV, XX, XXI, XXII, XXV, XXVI, XXVII, XXVIII, XXIX, XXX, XXXI, XXXII, XXXIV, XXXV, XXXVI, XXXVIII, XXXIX, XL, XLI, and XLII have been dismissed from this action. John Doe XI was previously knows as John Doe, Jr. and originated in York County. John Doe XII was previously known as Richard Rowe I, See Order for Consolidation dated July 22, 2008. John Doe XV was previously known as Richard Rowe II. There remains another "Richard Rowe" case which is actually a criminal matter transferred to Kennebec County from York County on Sept. 10, 2010.

[3] Among the plaintiffs who did not join in this motion [*6] for summary judgment, one is a criminal defendant who has filed a motion to dismiss, one is a Rule 80(c) appeal, and one case, that of John Doe XXXVII, is factually distinguishable from the John Does who are the subject of this order.

With respect to all the cases currently handled by the undersigned Justice, including the ones that are not the subject of this order, nearly all[4] are ineligible to come off the SORNA registry in the wake of Letalien and the enactment of Chapter 570, with the exception of nine of the Mitchell Does (I, IV, VI, VII, VIII, XIII, XVI, XVIII, XXIV) who press on with their constitutional claims here, despite qualifying for statutory or automatic removal from the registry.

The most recent complaint addressing multiple plaintiffs was the Ninth Amended Complaint, filed by the Mitchell Law Firm on June 29, 2009.[5] The court specifically excused the filing of a tenth amended complaint on behalf of the Mitchell plaintiffs, allowing plaintiffs to argue with respect to the amendments without amending [*7] pleadings.

On October 30, 2009, this court dismissed the plaintiffs' claims for damages brought pursuant to Section 1983 and the Maine Civil Rights Act against all state defendants, finding that the counts had failed to state a claim. By order dated October 14, 2010, the court granted an agreed-upon motion to sever, removing all county and municipal defendants, as well as plaintiff John Doe XXXVII, from this case. The primary purpose of the severance was to allow this court, with the agreement of the parties, to decide the claims advanced by Mitchell Does against the state defendants—including ex post facto arguments that remain unresolved for a number of plaintiffs in the wake of the Letalien decision and the corresponding legislative response—in order that the Maine Supreme Court could ultimately address the core constitutional issues generated. Depending on the Law Court's [*8] review of this order, it was agreed, the plaintiffs' claims against the other defendants could be narrowed or eliminated.

Of the plaintiffs who have joined in this motion for summary judgment, six—John Doe I, IV, VI, VII, VIII, and XVI—were once on the registry and successfully petitioned for removal pursuant to the statutory amendments. Three, John Doe XIII, XVIII, and XLIII, were never on the registry, having been granted a stay from any litigation to enforce the registration requirements pending the statutory amendments. One, John Doe XXIV, filed his initial registration papers, but was protected by a temporary restraining order from having his information fully processed and displayed on the Internet and other notification sites, and has since successfully petitioned to terminate his registration requirements. Thus, nine of the plaintiffs who have joined in this motion (I, IV, VI, VII, VIII, XIII, XVI, XVIII, XXIV) qualify for statutory or automatic removal from the registry.[6] Six of the plaintiffs who have joined this motion for summary judgment thus remain on the registry: John Doe III, V, X, XIV, XIX and XXIII.[7]

The counts remaining pending before the court from the Ninth Amended Complaint are as follows:

IV: Unconstitutionality of SORNA under the Constitution of the United States;
V: Unconstitutionality of SORNA under the Constitution of Maine;
VIII: Improper use of guilty pleas;
IX: Denial of trial by jury;
X: Violation of the Maine Civil Rights Act ("MCRA"); and

XI: Violation of 42 U.S.C. §1983.

---

[4] It appears that John Doe V will be eligible to petition for termination of his registration requirements in the near future, under the current version of 34-A M.R.S. §11202-A.

[5] John Doe XLIII was considered to have joined in the Ninth Amended Complaint. John Doe XLIV, represented by Samuel Cohen, filed a separate complaint dated on or about October 1, 2010. John Doe XLIII is participating the current motion for summary judgment; John Doe XLIV does not appear to have joined in the motion.

[6] Although John Doe XLIII is not currently on the registry due to [*9] this court's granting a stay from any registration enforcement litigation, should the stay be lifted, he would be ineligible to petition for termination of his registration requirements because he does not meet the provisions of the current 34-A M.R.S. § 11202-A(1)(C).

[7] The remaining John Does who did not join this motion for summary judgment are: XXXIII, represented by Attorney Francis Griffin, whose case was severed by order dated October 14, 2010; and John Doe XLIV, represented by Attorney Samuel Cohen.

The new challenges generated, subsequent to the Ninth Amended Complaint, by the enactment of Chapter 570 and the addition of John Doe XLIII include a request to add further facts for the court's analysis, as well as a challenge to 34-A M.R.S. §11221(1)(G) on the grounds that it is void for vagueness and [*10] for numerous violations of rights guaranteed by the Maine and federal Constitutions, and an argument that Chapter 570 is unconstitutional for failing to remedy the punishment declared unconstitutionally ex post facto in State v. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, 985 A.2d 4, as well as the application of the plaintiffs' remaining counts to Chapter 570. The state defendants have responded sequentially to the plaintiffs' arguments in their cross-motion for summary judgment.

The court will address the issues according to the plaintiffs' organization, which combines the counts remaining from the Ninth Amended Complaint and the new arguments related to Chapter 570, and includes the state defendants' argument that the plaintiffs who have been removed from the registry lack standing. That order is as follows, in addition to the ex post facto argument after the Law Court's ruling in Letalien: (1) Justiciability (including the standing issue); (2) Constitutionality of 34-A M.R.S. §11221(1)(G); (3) Equal protection; (4) Void for vagueness; (5) Procedural due process; (6) Substantive due process; (7) Cruel and unusual punishment; (8) Maine's Declaration of Rights, Article I, section 1 of the Maine Constitution; [*11] (9) Improper use of guilty plea; (10) Right to jury trial; and (11) Violation of Maine's Civil Rights Act.[8]

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment is appropriate when the court's review of the parties' statements of material fact and cited record evidence indicates there are no genuine issues of disputed material fact, and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Dyer v. DOT, 2008 ME 106, ¶14, 951 A.2d 821, 825. A fact is material if it can affect the outcome of the case. Id. An issue of fact is genuine if "there is sufficient evidence to require a fact-finder to choose between competing versions of the truth at trial." Inkel v. Livingston, 2005 ME 42, ¶ 4, 869 A.2d 745, 747.

"Although no longer an extreme remedy, summary judgment is 'not a substitute for trial.'" Cookson v. Brewer School Dep't, 2009 ME 57, ¶ 12, 974 A.2d 276, 280 (quoting Arrow Fastener Co. v. Wrabacon, Inc., 2007 ME 34, ¶ 18, 917 A.2d 123, 127). "Thus, 'even when one party's version of the facts appears more credible and persuasive to the court, a summary judgment [*12] is inappropriate if a genuine factual dispute exists that is material to the outcome,' in which case 'the dispute must be resolved through fact-finding,' regardless of the nonmoving party's likelihood of success." Id. (quoting Arrow Fastener Co., 2007 ME 34, ¶ 17, 917 A.2d at 126-27). The nonmoving party may not rely on "conclusory allegations, improbable inferences, and unsupported speculation" to oppose summary judgment. Dyer, 2008 ME 106, ¶ 14, 951 A.2d at 825 (quoting Vives v. Fajardo, 472 F.3d 19, 21 (1st Cir. 2007)). "A court may properly enter a summary judgment in a case when the parties are not in dispute over the facts, but differ only as to the legal conclusions to be drawn from those facts." Tondreau v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 638 A.2d 728, 730 (Me. 1994) (citing Chadwick-BaRoss, Inc. v. T. Buck Constr., Inc., 627 A.2d 532, 534 (Me. 1993)).

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

As a threshold issue, the plaintiffs seek to add further facts to the record for the court to consider in evaluating the motions for summary judgment. Prior to the Law Court's decision in State v. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, 985 A.2d 4, the parties engaged in considerable discovery. After Letalien, this court halted discovery [*13] due to the Law Court's holding that "the determination of the constitutionality of the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 depends on a facial examination of the statute, and not on an as-applied analysis as we previously suggested in Doe v. DA, 2007 ME 139, 932 A.2d 552." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 1, 985 A.2d 4, 7. The plaintiffs now seek to introduce evidence based upon the previously-conducted discovery for the court to consider in evaluating their challenges to SORNA based upon grounds other than an allegation that it is in violation of the ex post facto clause. In response, the state defendants cite Letalien, and point out that the plaintiffs' decision to plead in pseudonym, to which the state defendants objected, results in the state defendants' inability to adequately challenge the plaintiffs' stated facts.

[8] It is unclear to what extent the plaintiffs continue to advance their parallel argument under 42 U.S.C. §1983.

The court recognizes the state defendants' argument that the plaintiffs may gain an unfair advantage in a factual inquiry by pleading in pseudonym. Both parties, however, have submitted extensive statements of undisputed facts, and many of the John Does have been deposed. If the court finds that the facts to which the parties explicitly agree support an [*14] as-applied challenge, the court will consider those agreed-upon facts. Likewise, those counts to which the plaintiffs' challenge is facial can proceed based upon minimal or no fact-finding. The court will consider briefly which of the plaintiffs' challenges are to be evaluated facially and which proceed "as applied," thus requiring the court to determine if the parties explicitly agree on the facts underlying the claim. Any claims which are analyzed "as applied," and as to which the parties' facts do not agree closely enough to allow the court to consider them are not appropriate for summary judgment.

1. Ex Post Facto

"The prohibition on ex post fact laws in the Maine Constitution, Me. Const, art. I, β 11, is coextensive with the corresponding prohibition in the United States Constitution, U.S. Const. art. I, β 10, cl. 1." State v. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 63, 985 A.2d at 26. "[T]he determination of the constitutionality of the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 depends on a facial examination of the statute, and not on an as-applied analysis as we previously suggested in Doe v. DA, 2007 ME 139, 932 A.2d 552." Id. at ¶ 1, 985 A.2d at 7; see also id. at ¶ 63, 985 A.2d at 26 [*15] ("For ex post facto purposes, SORNA of 1999 is properly evaluated on its face, and not in relation to how it has been applied against any individuals. Our suggestion to the contrary in Doe v. DA, 2007 ME 139, 932 A.2d 552, is overruled.").

Because the court's analysis is based upon a facial reading of the statute alone, the court need not consider the parties' factual allegations.

2. Justiciability:

> One who seeks to initiate or continue proceedings in federal court must demonstrate, among other requirements, both standing to obtain the relief requested, see Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-561, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992), and, in addition, an "ongoing interest in the dispute" on the part of the opposing party that is sufficient to establish "concrete adverseness." Camreta v. Greene, 563 U.S. 701, 693, 131 S. Ct. 2020, 179 L. Ed. 2d 1118, 1125 (2011) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. 211, 217, 131 S. Ct. 2355, 2361, 180 L. Ed. 2d 269 (2011). Though the plaintiffs plead their case before the Maine courts rather than the federal courts, standing and a case and controversy are requirements of this court as well. See, e.g., Collins v. State, 2000 ME 85, ¶¶ 5-6, 750 A.2d 1257, 1260 [*16] ("A party must assert a personal stake in the outcome of the litigation and present a real and substantial controversy touching on the legal relations of parties with adverse legal interests. . . . [A] party must show they suffered an injury that is fairly traceable to the challenged action and that is likely to be redressed by the judicial relief sought. . . . Further, the injury must be particularized.") (quotations and citations omitted). In order to determine the plaintiff Does' "ongoing interest in the dispute," the court will need to consider facts to evaluate whether each individual plaintiff has alleged a concrete injury, caused by SORNA of 1999 and redressable by invalidation of that statute. See Bond, 131 S. Ct. at 2361. The court will examine the parties' statements of material fact to ensure that both parties agree to the facts constituting the alleged injuries.

3. Constitutionality of 34-A M.R.S. §11221 (1)(G)

The plaintiffs' challenge to the statute is facial; the court need not consider any facts.

4 Equal protection

> The equal protection clause of the Maine Constitution provides that "[n]o person shall . . . be denied the equal protection of the laws . . . ." ME. CONST, art. I, § 6-A. [*17] The United States Constitution provides similarly, and the two clauses provide co-extensive protection. See U.S. CONST, amend. XIV, § 1; Sch. Admin. Dist. No. 1 v. Comm'r, Dep't of Educ., 659 A.2d 854, 857 (Me. 1995). We apply a two-step test to determine whether a statute violates the equal protection clause. First, the party challenging the statute must show that similarly situated persons are not treated equally under the law. See Mahaney v. State, 610 A.2d 738, 743 (Me. 1992). Where this step is met, the Court must then determine what level of scrutiny to apply. See Sch. Admin. Dist. No. 1, 659 A.2d at 857. Where, as here, the challenged legislation does not involve a fundamental right or a suspect class, the test under this step is whether the statute is rationally related to a legitimate state interest. Id.

Town of Frye Island v. State, 2008 ME 27, ¶ 14, 940 A.2d 1065, 1069.

An inquiry involving a determination of whether similarly situated persons are treated equally under the law must proceed on the basis of facts presented by the party challenging the statute (here, the plaintiffs). The court will consider the facts presented, to the extent they are agreed to by the state defendants, [*18] in evaluating the parties' motions for summary judgment. However, if the court can determine the statute's validity based upon the second step only, then the state defendants may be entitled to summary judgment without reference to the equal treatment of similarly situated persons.

5. Void for vagueness

By definition, this argument attacks the statute facially, and consideration of particular facts would be inappropriate in evaluating whether the statute itself is unconstitutionally vague.

6. Procedural due process

"The due process rights guaranteed by the Maine Constitution, Me. Const, art. I, § 6-A, are coextensive with those guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution." Northup v. Poling, 2000 ME 199, ¶ 9 n.5, 761 A.2d 872, 875 n.5.

> The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Maine Constitution, article I, section 6-A protect individuals from deprivations of life, liberty, or property by the State without due process of law. U.S. Const, amend. XIV § 1; Me. Const, art. I, § 6-A. See also Me. Const, art. I, § 19 (providing a right to redress for injuries). To find a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, therefore, there must be (1) state action; [*19] (2) a deprivation of a life, liberty, or property interest; and (3) inadequate process.

Botting v. Dep't of Behavioral & Developmental Servs., 2003 ME 152, ¶ 23, 838 A.2d 1168, 1176.

While the parties agree that SORNA of 1999 represents state action, analysis of the deprivation of the plaintiffs' alleged interests, and of the process they received in relation to the process due, requires the consideration of certain facts. The court will consider them to the extent the parties agree to the facts at issue.

7. Substantive due process

The Law Court has "repeatedly held that federal and Maine due process rights are coextensive." State v. Milliken, 2010 ME 1, ¶16, 985 A.2d 1152, 1157-58.

> The doctrine of substantive due process "does not protect individuals from all governmental actions that infringe liberty or injure property in violation of some law. Rather, substantive due process prevents 'governmental power from being used for purposes of oppression,' or 'abuse of government power that shocks the conscience,' or 'action that is legally irrational in that it is not sufficiently keyed to any legitimate state interests.'"

PFZ Properties, Inc. v. Rodriguez, 928 F.2d 28, 31-32 (1st Cir. 1991) [*20] (quoting Committee of U.S. Citizens in Nicaragua v. Reagan, 859 F.2d 929, 943, 273 U.S. App. D.C. 266 (D.C. Cir. 1988)) (brackets omitted).

The Supreme Court has identified two primary features of its established method of substantive due process analysis:

> First, we have regularly observed that the Due Process Clause specially protects those fundamental rights and liberties which are, objectively, "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition," [Moore v. East Cleveland, 431 U.S. 494, 503, 97 S. Ct. 1932, 52 L. Ed. 2d 531 (1977)] (plurality opinion); Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 105, 54 S. Ct. 330, 78 L. Ed. 674 (1934) ("so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental"), and "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty," such that "neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed," Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325, 326, 58 S. Ct. 149, 82 L. Ed. 288 (1937). Second, we have required in substantive-due-process cases a "careful description" of the asserted fundamental liberty interest. [Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 302, 113 S. Ct. 1439, 123 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1993); Collins v. Harker Heights, 503 U.S. 115, 125, 112 S. Ct. 1061, 117 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1992); Cruzan v. Director, Mo. Dept. of Health, 497 U.S. 261, 277-78, 110 S. Ct. 2841, 111 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1990)].

Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720-21, 117 S. Ct. 2258, 117 S. Ct. 2302, 138 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1997); Green v. Comm'r of Mental Health & Mental Retardation, 2000 ME 92, ¶ 13, 750 A.2d 1265, 1270. [*21] "[T]he Fourteenth Amendment 'forbids the government to infringe . . . 'fundamental' liberty interests at all, no matter what process is provided, unless the infringement is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest.'" Glucksberg, 521 U.S. at 721 (quoting Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 302, 113 S. Ct. 1439, 123 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1993)). However, "[w]hen the State exercises its police power to regulate for the general welfare and a fundamental right is not at issue, statutes are subjected to rational basis review." State v. Haskell, 2008 ME 82, ¶ 5, 955 A.2d 737, 739. "Great deference is given to social and economic regulations, and reasonableness is presumed because it is the job of the Legislature, not the courts, to balance competing interests. Consequently, the party challenging a statute has the burden of proving its constitutional deficiency." Id. (citation omitted). "In order to prevail, a party 'must establish the complete absence of any state of facts that would support the need for [the statute's] enactment.'" Id. (quoting Aseptic Packaging Council v. State, 637 A.2d 457, 461 (Me. 1994)).

> The contention that a statute enacted as a purported exercise of a state's police power is unconstitutional, as violative [*22] of substantive due process of law, precipitates three inquiries: (1) whether the objective of the exercise of the police power is legitimately within the scope of police power action; (2) whether the means employed are appropriate to the achievement of the objective; and (3) whether the manner in which the power is exercised is arbitrary or capricious.

State v. National Advertising Co.., 409 A.2d 1277, 1288 (Me. 1979). "[T]he statute's justification need not be expressly articulated or readily apparent 'so long as a court can divine some rational purpose.'" Ngo v. State, 2008 ME 71, ¶ 14, 946 A.2d 424, 429 (quoting United States v. Neal, 46 F.3d 1405, 1409 (7th Cir. 1995)).

Because the plaintiffs, in order to invalidate the statute, must establish either a fundamental right and the absence of narrow tailoring to a compelling state interest, OR the complete absence of any state of facts that would support the need for the statute's enactment, the court may consider the facts presented. However, it appears that a substantive due process challenge in fact extends beyond the facts presented by the parties, as a statute that does not infringe upon fundamental rights will be upheld, regardless of the [*23] legislature's cited facts, so long as a court can divine some rational purpose.

8. Cruel and unusual punishment

> Article I of the Maine Constitution is a declaration of rights enjoyed by Maine citizens. Section 9 sets limits on the State's power to punish: "Sanguinary laws shall not be passed; all penalties and punishments shall be proportioned to the offense; excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel nor unusual punishments inflicted." Me. Const, art. I, β 9.

State v. Gilman, 2010 ME 35, ¶ 12, 993 A.2d 14, 18. "[W]e hold that the clause, 'all penalties and punishments shall be proportioned to the offense,' means what its plain language says, and does not require consideration of the individual circumstances of each offender." Id. at ¶ 21, 993 A.2d at 21.

This count therefore does not require the court to consider any individualized facts other than the offense or offenses of which each plaintiff was convicted.

9. Maine's Declaration of Rights

The argument under Article I, Section 1 of the Maine Constitution is somewhat akin to a due process argument—the plaintiffs assert that this provision makes the rights that it guarantees Mainers "fundamental" rights [*24] for the purposes of a substantive due process analysis. Because the court will consider the facts agreed upon in its substantive due process analysis, it will consider the same agreed-upon facts for its determination under the Maine Declaration of Rights.

10. Improper use of guilty plea

The plaintiffs agree that their argument regarding the post hoc imposition of additional requirements based upon a guilty plea is in essence an ex post facto argument, in that for the state to "expand the consequences [of the plea] violates those [plea] agreements to the extent the expansion is punishment." (Reply Memo, of Mitchell Firm Pis. and Opp. to State Defs. Cross-Mot. for Summ. J. at 22.) Because the parties agree that the analysis of this count is the ex post facto analysis under State v. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, 985 A.2d 4, and Letalien clearly states that such analysis is facial rather than as-applied (id. at ¶ 1, 985 A.2d at 7), the court need not consider factual submissions in analyzing this claim.

11. Right to jury trial

The plaintiffs acknowledge, "The state defendants are correct that if plaintiffs are entitled to no hearing on dangerousness, they are not entitled to a jury trial." (Reply [*25] Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. and Opp. to State Defs. Cross-Mot. for Summ. J. at 22.) The basis for their argument of entitlement to a jury trial on the issue of dangerousness stems from an allegation that Maine's registration system has become offender-based rather than offense-based, and that a hearing on dangerousness is therefore required. This appears to be a facial challenge to the statute within the procedural due process framework, and will require no consideration of additional factual submissions.

12. Violation of the MCRA

The parties' arguments are limited to the recovery of restitution from the state, following this court's dismissal of the claims for damages under the MCRA and 42 U.S.C. §1983 on September 20, 2009. The court need not consider facts regarding the individual plaintiffs in making its determination of the availability of restitution under the MCRA.

Having determined which of the plaintiffs' claims require the court to consider the parties' agreed-upon facts, the court will turn to the substantive analysis of the issues. For the sake of efficiency, the court inverts the order of the ex post facto and justiciability analysis, as the determination of the number of [*26] plaintiffs who stand to gain from this action will permeate the analysis of all of the other claims.

I. Justiciability

As noted above, justiciability requires that the plaintiffs establish both standing to obtain the relief requested, and a case and controversy, including an "'ongoing interest in the dispute' on the part of the opposing party that is sufficient to establish 'concrete adverseness.'" Bond v. United States, 564 U.S. at 217, 131 S. Ct. at 2361 (quoting Camreta v. Greene, 563 U.S. at 693, 179 L. Ed. 2d at 1125). The State has argued that those plaintiffs who have been removed from the registry pursuant to Chapter 570 have no further interest in the dispute, so the court lacks jurisdiction absent a claim upon which these plaintiffs could recover. The plaintiffs counter that even those plaintiffs who are no longer on the registry have a remedy to recover in this lawsuit, including restitution under their MCRA and 42 U.S.C. §1983 claims, and a declaratory judgment that the law under which they registered is unconstitutional, and that these claims are sufficient to ensure their ongoing presence in this action.

The court discusses the MRCA and 42 U.S.C. §1983 arguments below, but [*27] for the purposes of justiciability must reveal that the plaintiffs do not prevail on those arguments. Therefore, the "ongoing interest in the dispute" that the plaintiffs who are no longer on the registry allege is limited to a declaratory judgment that the law under which they registered, since modified by Chapter 570, is unconstitutional. The plaintiffs' logic appears to be circular. They assert that, "to support the restitution, the plaintiffs no longer on the registry are entitled to a declaration that the prior law under which they were registered is unconstitutional, a finding essentially mandated by Letalien even though they were not sentenced to registration as he was." The purpose of requesting this declaratory judgment is that restitution cannot be awarded against the state as a retroactive remedy, but only as an award ancillary to a prospective remedy. See, e.g., Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 278, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986) (relief that is "tantamount to an award of damages for a past violation of . . . law, even though styled as something else," is barred by sovereign immunity). So the plaintiffs' argument for justiciability is that they still have a valid case and controversy because they [*28] can recover restitution ancillary to a prospective declaratory judgment regarding illegality of their original registration requirements.

However, declaratory judgment actions in fact have the same requirements regarding a valid and not moot case or controversy as other actions. See, e.g., Preiser v. Newkirk, 422 U.S. 395, 402, 95 S. Ct. 2330, 45 L. Ed. 2d 272 (1975) ("this Court, noting the difficulty in fashioning a precise test of universal application for determining whether a request for declaratory relief had become moot, held that, basically, 'the question in each case is whether the facts alleged, under all the circumstances, show that there is a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment.'") (quoting Maryland Cas. Co. v. Pacific Co., 312 U.S. 270, 273, 61 S. Ct. 510, 85 L. Ed. 826 (1941)); Wagner v. Secretary of State, 663 A.2d 564, 567 (Me. 1995) ("The declaratory judgment statute is 'operative only in cases where a genuine controversy exists.'") (quoting National Hearing Aid Ctrs., Inc. v. Smith, 376 A.2d 456, 458 (Me. 1977)); Hodgdon v. Campbell, 411 A.2d 667, 670 (Me. 1980) ("All courts require the declaratory plaintiff to [*29] show jurisdiction, a justiciable controversy and the joinder of necessary parties.").

The court believes that the issue here is not ripeness, which both parties explicitly addressed, but mootness. "Mootness 'is the doctrine of standing set in a time frame: The requisite personal interest that existed at the commencement of litigation (standing) must continue throughout its existence (mootness).'" Ten Citizens of the Town of Biddeford v. Town of Biddeford, 2003 ME 59, ¶ 5, 822 A.2d 1196, 1199 (quoting Halfway House, Inc. v. City of Portland, 670 A.2d 1377, 1379 (Me. 1996)), Courts analyze "mootness by examining the record to determine 'whether there remain sufficient practical effects flowing from the resolution of the litigation to justify the application of limited judicial resources.'" Id. (quoting Lewiston Daily Sun v. Sch. Admin. Dist. No. 43, 1999 ME 143, ¶ 14, 738 A.2d 1239, 1243). "A dispute loses its controversial vitality when a decision by this court would not provide [a litigant] any real or effective relief." Id. at ¶ 6, 822 A.2d at 1199 (quoting Int'l Paper Co. v. United Paperworkers Int'l Union, 551 A.2d 1356, 1360-61 (Me. 1988)). "The Declaratory Judgments Act, 14 M.R.S. [*30] A. ββ 5951-5963 (2003), also does not authorize their claim in the absence of injury. We have consistently held that the Act may only be invoked when there is a genuine controversy." Id. at ¶ 7, 822 A.2d at 1200.

There is no relief that this court could provide the plaintiffs who have already been removed from the registry. Their petition for a declaratory judgment seeks a judgment on an alleged wrong (the registration and associated costs for those plaintiffs currently free of registration requirements) that is no longer present, so the declaratory judgment action is moot. They cannot collect restitution from the state in the absence of a prospective claim, so that claim does not avail them.[9] Because the court could not provide "any real or effective relief" to those plaintiffs who have already had their registration obligations terminated, their claims are moot. The state defendants' motion for summary judgment to this effect is GRANTED; the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment as to their continued vitality is DENIED.

II. Ex post facto

1. The parties' [*31] arguments and the court's task after Letalien

The plaintiffs contend that the imposition of any registration requirement on any plaintiff sentenced before 1991 constitutes an unconstitutional ex post facto act, and therefore seek to reargue several arguments struck down in Letalien as to registrants who were sentenced after 1991, when Maine's first sex offender registration law took effect. They ultimately focus on the three elements that the Letalien court identified as posing a constitutional problem—lifetime registration, quarterly in-person verification, and the absence of a waiver procedure, see Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 62, 985 A.2d at 26—and apply the Mendoza-Martinez factors to those three elements in light of the legislative changes of Chapter 570 and the status of the plaintiffs as having been sentenced prior to 1992.[10]

The plaintiffs also focus on clear language in Letalien that suggests to them that any statutory scheme that fails to provide some opportunity for an offender, any offender, to petition for termination of SORNA obligations at some point in his or her lifetime violates the mandate of that case. Indeed, the holding of Letalien is as follows:

> Specifically, we hold that the retroactive application of the lifetime registration requirement and quarterly in-person verification procedures of SORNA of 1999 to offenders originally sentenced subject to SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995, without, at a minimum, affording those offenders any opportunity to ever be relieved of the duty as was permitted under those laws, is punitive. As to these offenders, the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 is an unconstitutional ex post facto law because it makes more burdensome the punishment for a crime after its commission.

Id, at ¶ 62, 985 A.2d at 26 (quotations omitted). Unsurprisingly, the plaintiffs conclude that SORNA of 1999, as revised, is unconstitutionally ex post facto as applied to them because the statutory amendments make it impossible, [*33] based on legislative categorization of offenders, to ever be free of the requirements of SORNA.

SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995 did in fact provide an opportunity to be relieved of SORNA's requirements to all offenders subject to the provisions of those laws. SORA of 1991 provided that its registration requirements could be waived under four circumstances: (1) vacating of the conviction; (2) granting of a full and free pardon; (3) issuance of a certificate of rehabilitation by a licensed counselor certified by the Forensic Evaluation Unit at the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation that deals with sex offenders; or (4) waiver of the registration requirement by the sentencing court for good cause shown. 34-A M.R.S § 11003 (1992), repealed by P.L. 2001, ch. 439, §

---

[9] This proposition, and the precedent supporting it, is discussed in more detail in connection with the plaintiffs' MCRA claim below.

[10] Doe V was convicted in 1993, but was not subject to sex offender registration until the 2001 amendments to SORNA of 1999. See Doe v. DA, 2007 ME 139, ¶14, 932 A.2d 552, 556 ("In 2001, the Legislature amended SORNA to apply retroactively to sex offenders sentenced on or after June 30, 1992. See P.L. 2001, ch. 439, β OOO-7 (effective Sept. 21, [*32] 2001) (codified at 34-A M.R.S.A. β 11202 (Supp. 2001)).")

OOO-5 (effective Sept. 1, 2001). It was amended in 1993 by P.L. 1993, chapter 193 §3, which repealed the provision for waiver upon issuance of a certificate of rehabilitation, and provided instead for waiver if:

> The Superior Court, upon the petition of the sex offender, waives the registration requirement.
>
> A sex offender may not petition for waiver of the registration requirement until at least 5 years after the sex [*34] offender is first required to register.
> A sex offender may petition once a year for waiver of the registration requirement.
> Before waiving the registration requirement, the court must determine that the sex offender has shown a reasonable likelihood that registration is no longer necessary and waiver of the registration requirement is appropriate. The court shall consider the sex offender's progress in treatment and may request an independent forensic evaluation provided through the State Forensic Service. If the court orders an independent forensic evaluation, the court shall reimburse the State Forensic Service for the cost of the evaluation and order the sex offender to reimburse the court for the cost of the evaluation . . . .

34-A M.R.S. §11003 (C-1) (1993), repealed by P.L. 2001, ch. 439, §OOO-5 (effective Sept. 21, 2001). SORNA of 1995 maintained the 1993 amendments. 34-A M.R.S. §§11003, 11121 (1996), repealed by P.L. 2001, ch. 439 §OOO-5 (effective Sept. 21, 2001).

The fact that the Law Court's holding in Letalien points specifically to the waiver provisions of SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995, together with the clear language, "without at a minimum, affording those offenders any [*35] opportunity to ever be relieved of the duty as was permitted under those laws," Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 62, 985 A.2d at 26 (emphasis added), suggests to this court that the Law Court was in fact concerned about any statutory scheme which imposed retroactive lifetime obligations on offenders without providing any opportunity to be relieved of those obligations.

The court also recognizes the plaintiffs' argument that the legislature sought to add an individualized waiver scheme to Chapter 570, and that the only reason an individualized waiver scheme was not included was that it would cost too much money for the judicial branch. The plaintiffs point to the summary of H.P. 1305, L.D, 1822, the bill that was signed into law as P.L. 2009, ch. 570, which provides in pertinent part: "An additional waiver scheme that authorized registrants to petition the court for relief from the duty to register was not included in the bill at this juncture due to a substantial fiscal note from the judicial branch, but may be considered again in the next legislative session." (Mitchell Pls. S.M.F. 20, quoting L.D. 1822, Summary (124th Legis. 2010)).

Turning to the state defendants' arguments, they contend [*36] that the Law Court's holding in Letalien that SORNA of 1999 was unconstitutionally ex post facto as applied to those sentenced under SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995 was based upon the combination of four factors: (1) the fact that the original registration requirements were part of the offender's sentence; (2) the increase of registration time to a lifetime requirement; (3) new quarterly in-person verification requirements; and (4) removal of the opportunity to be relieved from the registration requirements. Because Letalien was grounded in the combination of these factors, the state defendants argue, the legislature's modifications to these requirements under Chapter 570, including reduction of the in-person verification requirements and allowing large classes of registrants to petition for relief from registry verification requirements, relieve the burden that was found in the aggregate to be unconstitutionally ex post facto.

The state defendants contend that the plaintiffs are in a different position than Letalien in that they were not sentenced under SORA or SORNA, so that the requirements of SORNA of 1999, imposed upon the majority of these plaintiffs in 2005,[11] did not modify their [*37] sentences and thus cannot constitute an ex post facto punishment. The state points to the language in Letalien which focused on the "unique history of the development of sex offender registration laws in Maine," together with the conclusion that "[b]ecause sex offender registration was required to be part of Letalien's criminal sentence, the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999's requirements to Letalien modified and enhanced a portion of his sentence." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶¶ 39, 43, 985 A.2d at 19, 20 (emphasis added). This court finds that argument to be quite unpersuasive. The court believes that the Law Court was using this analysis to conclude that Letalien was subject to punishment by the enactment of SORNA of 1999 in its removal of a waiver provision, and not as a suggestion that any offender sentenced before the enactment of SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995 would be ineligible to even argue that he or she ought to be protected from imposition of an ex post facto law.

---

[11] See Doe v. District Attorney, 2007 ME 139, ¶ 14, 932 A.2d 552, 556 ("in 2001, the Legislature amended SORNA to apply retroactively to sex offenders sentenced on or after June 30, 1992. See P.L. 2001, ch. 439, β OOO-7 (effective Sept. 21, 2001) (codified at 34-A M.R.S.A. β 11202 (Supp. 2001)). . . . The Legislature amended SORNA in 2005 to apply retroactively to all sex offenders sentenced as of January 1, 1982. P.L. 2005, ch. 423, β 1 (effective Sept. 17, 2005) (codified at 34-A M.R.S. β 11202 (2006)).''). Doe V was convicted in 1993, but was not subject to sex offender registration until the 2001 amendments [*40] to SORNA of 1999. Does III, X, XIV, XIX, XXIII, and XLIII became subject under the 2005 amendments.

> The presumption against the retroactive application of new laws is an essential thread in the mantle of protection that the law affords the individual citizen. That presumption "is deeply rooted in our jurisprudence, [*38] and embodies a legal doctrine centuries older than our Republic." Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 265, 128 L. Ed. 2d 229, 114 S. Ct. 1483 (1994). This doctrine finds expression in several provisions of our Constitution. [12] The specific prohibition on ex post facto laws is only one aspect of the broader constitutional protection against arbitrary changes in the law. In both the civil and the criminal context, the Constitution places limits on the sovereign's ability to use its lawmaking power to modify bargains it has made with its subjects. The basic principle is one that protects not only the rich and the powerful, United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 839, 135 L. Ed. 2d 964, 116 S. Ct. 2432 (1996), but also the indigent defendant engaged in negotiations that may lead to an acknowledgment of guilt and a suitable punishment.
>
> [12] "The Ex Post Facto Clause flatly prohibits retroactive application of penal legislation. . . . The Due Process Clause also protects the interests in fair notice and repose that may be compromised by retroactive legislation . . . ." Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. at 266 (footnote omitted).

Lynce v. Mathis, 519 U.S. 433, 439-40, 117 S. Ct. 891, 137 L. Ed. 2d 63 (1997). "The [*39] bulk of [the Supreme Court's] ex post facto jurisprudence has involved claims that a law has inflicted 'a greater punishment, than the law annexed to the crime, when committed.'" Id. at 441 (quoting Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386, 3 Dall. 386, 390, 1 L. Ed. 648 (1798)). "[S]uch laws implicate the central concerns of the Ex Post Facto Clause: 'the lack of fair notice and governmental restraint when the legislature increases punishment beyond what was prescribed when the crime was consummated.'" Id. (quoting Weaver v. Graham, 450 U.S. 24, 30, 67 L. Ed. 2d 17, 101 S. Ct. 960 (1981)).

"To fall within the ex post facto prohibition, a law must be retrospective--that is, 'it must apply to events occurring before its enactment'—and it 'must disadvantage the offender affected by it,' by altering the definition of criminal conduct or increasing the punishment for the crime." Id. (quoting Weaver, 450 U.S. at 29, and citing Collins v. Youngblood, 497 U.S. 37, 50, 110 S. Ct. 2715, 111 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1990)). The sex offense convictions serving as the predicate for the plaintiffs' registration requirements occurred before the enactment of SORNA of 1999. And the registration and verification requirements do "disadvantage" the plaintiffs, in that their convictions, already a matter of public record, are made easily available by the registry, and in that they must report to law enforcement and provide information to law enforcement on a regular basis, in some cases for the duration of the offender's lifetime.

The state defendants' assertion that any number of requirements, no matter how onerous, may be heaped onto the plaintiffs based upon their convictions without "increasing the punishment for the crime" because [*41] the plaintiffs were sentenced prior to the existence of any sex offender registry defies logic, and is constitutionally unsound. The court has already ascertained that a retrospective law disadvantaged the plaintiffs; it is a matter of delicate balancing pursuant to the intent-effects test (see Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 168-169, 83 S. Ct. 554, 9 L. Ed. 2d 644 (1963), discussed below) to determine whether that retrospective law had effects so punitive that it must be considered a criminal sanction rather than the civil categorization the legislature intended. The analysis of whether SORNA of 1999, as amended, increased the punishment for the plaintiffs' crimes is thus completely independent of their original sentences; it is the convictions, rather than the sentences, which serve as the predicate for the applicability of SORNA of 1999, and the Mendoza-Martinez intent-effects test which will help the court to determine whether SORNA of 1999 goes beyond disadvantageous and into unconstitutionally retrospectively punitive.

This court conceives the task before it to be fundamentally different from the framework proposed by both the plaintiffs and state defendants. The court rejects, in part, the notion [*42] that there are four factors which worked in combination to make SORNA of 1999 unconstitutional, as the court has found highly unpersuasive the state's argument that the plaintiffs are not eligible to challenge Chapter 570 because they were not sentenced under SORA or SORNA. However, the court does agree that it must consider the state defendants' argument that the Law Court in Letalien found SORNA of 1999 to be unconstitutional based upon a combination of factors, but finds that there are three and not four factors to be considered. Those factors are, as the plaintiffs also highlight: (1) the increase of registration to a lifetime requirement; (2) new quarterly in-person verification requirements; and (3) removal of the opportunity to be relieved from the registration requirements. The state defendants' argument is that, since Letalien was grounded in the combination of these factors, the legislative response to Letalien is constitutional because Chapter 570 reduced the in-person verification requirements and allowed large classes of registrants to petition for relief from registry verification requirements, thus relieving two of the three factors in some measure. The plaintiffs emphasize [*43] the language from the holding of Letalien, discussed above, which they asserts render the legislative response constitutionally inadequate because, among other reasons, there remain large numbers of offenders who can never be relieved from obligations imposed by SORNA.

The tasks before the court include a reconciliation, to the extent possible, of the language in Letalien suggesting that the provisions of SORNA of 1999 imposing, after sentence, lifetime registration and verification obligations for offenders without an opportunity for the offenders ever to relieved of those obligations was constitutionally unacceptable, with other language from the case that may suggest that it was a combination of the three factors described above that was constitutionally unacceptable. The primary focus of the court's decision, however—at least this much is clear from Letalien—must be application of the Mendoza-Martinez intent-effects test to the legislative response to the Law Court's decision in that case.

2. Application of the Mendoza-Martinez intent-effects test

The United States Constitution provides that "[n]o State shall. . . pass any . . . ex post facto Law." U.S. Const, art. I, § 10, cl. 1. [*44] The Maine Constitution likewise provides, "The Legislature shall pass no . . . ex post facto law." Me. Const, art. I, § 11. "[T]he ex post facto clauses of the Maine and United States Constitutions are interpreted similarly and are coextensive." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 25, 985 A.2d at 14. A "statute which punishes as a crime an act previously committed, which was innocent when done; which makes more burdensome the punishment for a crime, after its commission, or which deprives one charged with crime of any defense available according to law at the time when the act was committed," is an ex post facto law. Id. at % 17, 985 A.2d at 12 (quoting Collins v. Youngblood, 497 U.S. 37, 42, 110 S. Ct. 2715, 111 L. Ed. 2d 30 (1990)).

In analyzing ex post facto challenges to SORNA of 1999, the Law Court has consistently followed "the two-step 'intent/effects' test employed by the United States Supreme Court in [Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 92, 123 S. Ct. 1140, 155 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2003)], and Hudson v. United States, 522 U.S. 93, 99, 118 S. Ct. 488, 139 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1997)." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 29, 985 A.2d at 16 (citing State v. Haskell, 2001 ME 154, ¶¶ 8-22, 784 A.2d 4, 8-16, and Doe, 2007 ME 139, ¶¶ 22-28, 32, 36, 932 A.2d at 559-63). "If SORNA measures are [*45] deemed civil rather than criminal in nature . . . they do not implicate the Ex Post Facto Clause." Haskell, 2001 ME 154, ¶ 7, 784 A.2d at 8.

> Whether a particular punishment is criminal or civil is, at least initially, a matter of statutory construction. A court must first ask whether the legislature, in establishing the penalizing mechanism, indicated either expressly or impliedly a preference for one label or the other. Even in those cases where the legislature has indicated an intention to establish a civil penalty, we have inquired further whether the statutory scheme was so punitive either in purpose or effect as to transform what was clearly intended as a civil remedy into a criminal penalty. In making this latter determination, the factors listed in Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 168-169, 83 S. Ct. 554, 567-568, 9 L. Ed. 2d 644 (1963), provide useful guideposts, including: (1) "whether the sanction involves an affirmative disability or restraint"; (2) "whether it has historically been regarded as a punishment"; (3) "whether it comes into play only on a finding of scienter"; (4) "whether [*46] its operation will promote the > traditional aims of punishment-retribution and deterrence"; (5) "whether the behavior to which it applies is already a crime"; (6) "whether an alternative purpose to which it may rationally be connected is assignable for it"; and (7) "whether it appears excessive in relation to the alternative purpose assigned." It is important to note, however, that "these factors must be considered in relation to the statute on its face," id. at 169, 83 S. Ct. at 568, and only the clearest proof will suffice to override legislative intent and transform what has been denominated a civil remedy into a criminal penalty.

Id. at ¶ 8, 784 A.2d at 8 (quoting Hudson v. United States, 522 U.S. 93, 99-100, 118 S. Ct. 488, 139 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1997)). "[T]he Supreme Court has intimated . . . that the most significant question under the effects stage of the analysis is whether the law, 'while perhaps having certain punitive aspects, serves important non punitive goals.'" Id. at ¶ 9, 784 A.2d at 9 (quoting United States v. Ursery, 518 U.S. 267, 290, 116 S. Ct. 2135, 135 L. Ed. 2d 549, (1996)).

The law court has repeatedly held that SORNA of 1999 "was intended by the Legislature to be a civil regulatory statute," noting "the Legislature's express statement [*47] that SORNA of 1999 is intended to 'protect the public from potentially dangerous registrants by enhancing access to information concerning those registrants,'" and that the Legislature "placed SORNA of 1999 entirely outside of the Criminal Code." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 30, 985 A.2d at 16 (quoting 34-A M.R.S. § 11201 (2008)); see also State v. Cosgro, 2008 ME 64, ¶ 3, 945 A.2d 1221 n.l, 2008 ME 64, 945 A.2d 1221, 1223; Doe, 2007 ME 139, ¶ 27, 932 A.2d at 560; Haskell, 2001 ME 154, ¶ 12, 784 A.2d at 10. Given that the law court's analysis is clear on this factor, the plaintiffs' burden is also clear-cut: "one challenging a statute as imposing ex post facto punishment must demonstrate by the clearest proof that the statute is so punitive in purpose or effect as to overcome the Legislature's civil intent." Cosgro, 2008 ME 64, ¶ 2, 945 A.2d at 1222 (quotations omitted). With this standard in mind, the court turns to the analysis of the seven Mendoza-Martinez factors.

i. Affirmative disability or restraint

As to the first factor, "affirmative disability or restraint" (see Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. at 168), the Law Court held in Letalien that "quarterly, in-person verification of identity and location of home, school, [*48] and employment at a local police station, including fingerprinting and the submission of a photograph, for the remainder of one's life, is undoubtedly a form of significant supervision by the state," constituting a "disability or restraint that is neither minor nor indirect." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 37, 985 A.2d at 18. The Letalien court distinguished Maine's then-applicable registration scheme from cases where the sex offender registration laws had been held not to impose a restraint "because the relevant laws afforded offenders the opportunity to seek the early termination of the registration requirement." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 37 n. 9, 985 A.2d at 18 n.9 (citing Doe v. Pataki, 120 F.3d 1263, 1284-85 (2d Cir. 1997), amended on other grounds by 120 F.3d 1263, 1285 (2d Cir. 1997) (addressing a duty to register in person every ninety days for a minimum of ten years); Doe v. Poritz, 142 N.J. 1, 662 A.2d 367, 378 (N.J. 1995) (noting that the statute's lifetime registration requirements could be terminated early if an offender is offense-free for fifteen years and "can persuade the court that he or she is not likely to pose a threat to the safety of others")). The Letalien court went [*49] on to note that a third case, Doe v. Otte, 259 F.3d 979, 987 (9th Cir. 2001), had been reversed by the United States Supreme Court in Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 106, 123 S. Ct. 1140, 155 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2003), wherein the Supreme Court noted that the Ninth Circuit opinion, which had ruled that lifelong quarterly in-person verification did create an affirmative disability, had mistakenly construed the Alaska statute as requiring in-person updates. Smith, 538 U.S. at 101; see also Doe v. District Attorney, 2007 ME 139, ¶ 32, 932 A.2d at 562.

The Law Court's analysis of this factor supports the state defendants' argument that Letalien stands for the proposition that the requirements imposed by SORNA of 1999, taken cumulatively, amounted to an unconstitutional ex post facto punishment. By distinguishing cases where the burden of in-person registration requirements was ameliorated by an opportunity to seek termination of the registration requirement, the court believes the Law Court gives some indication of the meaning of its oft-quoted sentence: "[W]e hold that the retroactive application of the lifetime registration requirement and quarterly in-person verification procedures of SORNA of 1999 to offenders originally sentenced [*50] subject to SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995, without, at a minimum, affording those offenders any opportunity to ever be relieved of the duty as was permitted under those laws, is punitive." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 62, 985 A.2d at 26.

However, the question remains as to whether the requirements of SORNA of 1999, as revised by Chapter 570, constitute an affirmative disability and restraint as to registrants convicted of crimes prior to 1991. The Law Court specifically found that the in-person verification procedures constituted a significant and direct disability and restraint, noting, "These provisions, which require lifetime registrants, under threat of prosecution, to physically appear at their local law enforcement agencies within five days of receiving a notice by mail, place substantial restrictions on the movements of lifetime registrants and may work an 'impractical impediment that amounts to an affirmative disability.'" Id. at ¶ 37, 985 A.2d at 18 (citing Doe, 2007 ME 139, ¶ 32, 932 A.2d at 562). Chapter 570 has reduced the frequency of registrants' in-person verification requirements, such that a lifetime registrant may verify his or her information in writing quarterly and [*51] in person every five years, or when law enforcement has reason to believe his or her appearance has changed significantly; a ten-year registrant verifies in writing annually and in person every five years or when law enforcement has reason to believe his or her appearance has changed significantly. 34-A M.R.S. §11222(4-A) and (4-B) (2011). These amendments affect in-person registration requirements for those sentenced between January 1, 1982 and September 18, 1999, including the plaintiffs. Id.

In addition, Chapter 570 added several exceptions to the registration requirement of 34-A M.R.S. § 11202-A (2009). These amendments allow several groups of lifetime registrants to petition for removal from the registry, including (1) registrants sentenced in Maine between January 1, 1982 and June 30, 1992, who were finally discharged from the correctional system at least 10 years prior to their petition for removal; (2) registrants sentenced in Maine on or after June 30, 1992 and prior to September 18, 1999, who were finally discharged from the correctional system at least 10 years prior to their petition for removal; (3) registrants who were sentenced in another jurisdiction, were finally discharged [*52] from the correctional system at least 10 years prior to their petition for removal, and who have been in compliance with the registration duties as a resident required under subchapter 2 since September 12, 2009; and (4) registrants sentenced in Maine on or after September 18, 1999 and prior to July 30, 2004 for a violation of former Title 17A, section 252 who were finally discharged from the correctional system at least 10 years prior to their petition for removal; any of whom must not have been convicted of more than one Class A sex offense, who must not have been convicted of a sex offense or a sexually violent offense prior to the registrable offense, and who must not have been convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term of one year or more subsequent to the registrable sex offense. 34-A M.R.S. §11202-A (2011).

The Chapter 570 modifications do significantly ease the burdens that the Law Court found punitive in Letalien. However, the statute continues to impose "restraints," on its registrants, albeit more "indirect" and "minor" than those at issue in Letalien. While the ability to seek relief from registration requirements is a boon to those who can benefit from it, [*53] many registrants cannot, including several of the plaintiffs. Cf. Doe v. District Attorney, 2007 ME 139, ¶ 35, 932 A.2d at 563 ("[T]he fact that a sex offender never has the ability to escape the registration requirements of the current SORNA, regardless of behavior, consequences, or contributions following the conviction, strikes us as having the capability to be excessive and as diverging from the purpose of protecting the public").

Likewise, while a reduction in the frequency of in-person verification may lighten the onus of the verification requirement in theory, in practice, the statute still compels "registrants, under threat of prosecution, to physically appear at their local law enforcement agencies within five days of receiving a notice by mail, place[s] substantial restrictions on the movements of... registrants and may work an 'impractical impediment that amounts to an affirmative disability.'" Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 37, 985 A.2d at 18 (citing Doe, 2007 ME 139, ¶ 32, 932 A.2d at 562). It is thus more restrictive than the statute approved by the United States Supreme Court in Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 101, 123 S. Ct. 1140, 155 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2003) ("[T]he record contains no indication that an in-person appearance [*54] requirement has been imposed on any sex offender subject to the Act,"). The provision allowing additional in-person verification requirements "if there is a reason to believe the [registrant's] appearance has changed significantly," 34-A M.R.S. §11222(4-A)(C), (4-B)(C), is also significantly intrusive. Rather than in-person verification submissions based upon a set period of time, this provision compels registrants to "physically appear at their local law enforcement agencies within five days of receiving a notice by mail" without advance notice to allow registrants to anticipate such verification procedures. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 37, 985 A.2d at 18. This is a significant governmental intrusion. It may be one that is sustainable under the remaining factors of the Mendoza-Martinez analysis, but the "affirmative disability or restraint" factor weighs in favor of a finding that the statute is punitive, even once Chapter 570's mitigating provisions are taken into account.

ii. Historical interpretation as punishment

Turning to the second Mendoza-Martinez factor, whether retroactive application of the law has historically been regarded as a punishment (see Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. at 168), [*55] the Letalien court reached two separate conclusions. First, citing Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 97-99, 123 S. Ct. 1140, 155 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2003), the law court held that that "Internet posting pursuant to SORNA of 1999 is not punitive in purpose or effect." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 38, 985 A.2d at 19. The Law Court then considered Maine's unique legislative history and concluded that "retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 to offenders who were sentenced on or after June 30, 1992, and before September 18, 1999, should be regarded as punishment." Id. at ¶ 39, 985 A.2d at 19. This conclusion was due to the fact that the versions of the sex offender registration statutes in place between June 30, 1992 and September 18, 1999, "authorized sentencing judges, as part of the sentencing process, to waive an offender's duty to register," (id.), whereas SORNA of 1999 eliminated this exercise of judicial discretion. Id. at ¶¶ 42-43, 985 A. 2d at 20.

As discussed above, the state defendants argue that Letalien's holding does not apply to the plaintiffs, since that case noted, "Because sex offender registration was required to be part of Letalien's criminal sentence, the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999's requirements to Letalien [*56] modified and enhanced a portion of his criminal sentence," and therefore, "the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 makes more burdensome the punishment for a crime after its commission," ultimately finding that, "SORNA of 1999 is punitive as applied to those offenders who were originally made subject to SORA of 1991 or SORNA of 1995." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 43, 985 A.2d at 20-21 (quotations omitted).

The plaintiffs, however, counter that the essence of an ex post facto law is that punishment becomes more burdensome after the commission of a crime, and that therefore, their being subject to SORNA of 1999 is even more troublesome than that of Letalien and his class of registrants, since the Letalien class of registrants originally had some registration requirement which then became more onerous, but the plaintiffs ended up facing all of the onerous requirements of Letalien, with no notice that they would ever be required to meet its specifications. Or as plaintiffs state in their argument regarding lifetime registration: "For plaintiffs, the journey is not from fifteen years to lifetime but from no years to lifetime." The plaintiffs then argue that insofar as their situation is [*57] different from Letalien's and they were not notified that there would be a registration requirement, the internet publication that was approved in Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 38, 985 A.2d at 19, may still be unconstitutionally ex post facto as to them.

There now appears to be a multi-jurisdictional consensus that the internet registration requirement is not punitive, even as applied to those who were not originally subject to it. See, e.g., Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. at 91, 99; A.A. ex rel. M.M. v. New Jersey, 341 F.3d 206 (3d Cir. 2003); Femedeer v. Haun, 227 F.3d 1244, 1248, 1253 (10th Cir. 2000); A.A. v. State, 384 N.J. Super. 481, 895 A.2d 453 (N.J. Super. 2006); State v. Gragg, 143 Idaho 74, 137 P.3d 461, 464-65 (Idaho Ct. App. 2005); People v. Cornelius, 213 Ill. 2d 178, 821 N.E.2d 288, 292, 307, 290 Ill. Dec. 237 (111. 2004); Haislop v. Edgell, 215 W. Va. 88, 593 S.E.2d 839, 845-46 (W. Va. 2003); In re W.M.., 851 A.2d 431, 446 (D.C. App. 2004). Even if this were not the case, this court is bound by the determinations of the Supreme Court as to the Federal constitution, and of the Law Court as to the Maine Constitution, and both courts have plainly and clearly ruled that internet posting is not punitive for purposes of an ex post facto analysis. See Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. at 98-99 [*58] ("In contrast to the colonial shaming punishments, however, the State does not make the publicity and the resulting stigma an integral part of the objective of the regulatory scheme. . . . These facts do not render Internet notification punitive. The purpose and the principal effect of notification are to inform the public for its own safety, not to humiliate the offender."); Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 38, 985 A.2d at 19 ("[W]e conclude that Internet posting pursuant to SORNA of 1999 is not punitive in purpose or effect."). This court is bound by those determinations, which do not make a distinction based upon whether registration was part of the offender's original sentence or whether it was imposed separately and subsequent to his or her conviction.

Having rejected both the plaintiffs' argument that the Internet registration requirement is unconstitutionally ex post facto as to them and the state defendants' argument that the plaintiffs are ineligible for ex post facto protection in Maine because they were not sentenced under SORA of 1991 or SORNA of 1995, the court turns to the question of whether sex offender registration, apart from Internet registration, is historically considered [*59] punishment. Letalien held that retroactive registration was historically considered punishment, that is, that the second Mendoza-Martinez factor suggested that SORNA of 1999 was punitive as to registrants originally sentenced under either SORA of 1991 or SORNA of 1995, that is, when the registration was ordered as part of a sex offender's sentence unless waived by judicial decree. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, 42-43, 985 A.2d at 20-21. The court notes that Letalien limited its analysis to the case before it in that the case only dealt with a situation in which the registration requirements of SORNA of 1999 were applied retroactively to sex offenders who were convicted and sentenced of sex crimes under either SORA of 1991 or SORNA of 1995.

Analysis of the same factor for those registrants convicted of sex offenses between 1982 and 1991 requires that the court consider more generally what the term "punishment" means for those registrants convicted and sentenced before the enactment of any registration law. See Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 61, 985 A.2d at 25; cf. P.L. 2003, ch. 771, § B-13 (eff. July 30, 2004) (codified at 17-A M.R.S. § 1152(2-C) (2006) (modifying SORNA of 1999 to remove the provision [*60] stating that registration should be ordered "as part of the sentence" and to substitute, "At the time the court imposes a sentence"). Letalien noted, "[W]hen sex offender registration is made a part of an offender's criminal sentence, it necessarily constitutes a part of the punishment administered by the State in response to that offender's criminal conviction," Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 61, 985 A.2d at 25. When the legislature first enacted sex offender registration in Maine, it enacted those requirements as part of the offender's sentence—and therefore "part of the punishment administered by the State in response to that offender's criminal conviction." Id. Even after the legislature had amended SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995, the registration requirement remained part of the offender's sentence—and thus, punishment, at least in part— until P.L. 2003, ch. 771, § B-13 (effective July 30, 2004), codified at 17-A M.R.S. § 1152(2-C) (2005). See State v. Johnson, 2006 ME 35, ¶ 14, 894 A.2d 489, 492. While the Legislature has since recast SORNA of 1999 as part of a civil regulatory scheme, rather than part of a sex offender's sentence, the Law Court emphasized the importance of "[t]he [*61] unique history of the development of sex offender registration laws in Maine . . . to the question of whether the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 . . . should be regarded as punishment." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 39, 985 A.2d at 19. Examination of the registry's history shows the closeness of its association with punishment. The court recognizes that the plaintiffs' connection to the "sentencing" and therefore punishment provisions of the registration scheme are slightly more attenuated than those of the Letalien class, who were sentenced to registration, but notes that the burdens imposed by retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 to the plaintiffs—including but not limited to the initial registration process, the quarterly written requirements, the in-person verification every 5 years, and the inability to ever petition for removal from the registry— impose duties upon the plaintiffs, in perpetuity, of more that their initial sentences (or "punishment") required. "[B]ecause the purpose of the ex post facto prohibition is rightfully considered to be at its apex when a law's retroactive application is more punitive than the punishment that was actually imposed against an offender [*62] as part of a sentence," Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 61, 985 A.2d at 25-26, the court considers this factor to weigh in favor of a finding that the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999 to the plaintiffs is punitive.

iii. Scienter

"The third factor asks whether the obligation to register according to SORNA is triggered only on a finding of scienter. In Haskell we concluded that it is not and that this factor supports SORNA being viewed as non-punitive." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 44, 985 A.2d at 21 (citing Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. at 168; Haskell, 2001 ME 154, ¶ 17, 784 A.2d at 12).

iv. Promotion of retribution and deterrence

"The fourth factor requires consideration of whether SORNA of 1999 promotes retribution and deterrence, the traditional aims of punishment" Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 45, 985 A.2d at 21 (citing Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. at 168). In Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 102, 123 S. Ct. 1140, 155 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2003), the United States Supreme Court found that Alaska's SORNA was not punitive merely because the statute might deter future crimes, nor was it retributive, even though it was applied based upon the extent of the wrongdoing rather than the extent of the risk posed. In its analysis of Maine's SORNA, the law [*63] court considered this factor to be "neutral" as to its determination of whether SORNA is punitive. Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 46, 985 A.2d at 21. In the law court's view, the record before it provided little basis on which to assess the reasonableness of SORNA of 1999's disparate treatment categorizing some offenders as lifetime registrants and others as ten-year registrants, or on which to determine "whether Maine's requirement of lifetime registration is reasonably related to the danger of recidivism." Id.

This court considers that the legislative provisions of Chapter 570 help to mitigate this disparity as to offenders who are categorized as lifetime registrants based upon actions undertaken prior to the effective date of SORNA of 1999, previously given no opportunity to petition for removal from the registry, regardless of their likelihood lo reoffend. The amendments allow several groups of lifetime registrants to petition for removal from the registry, as discussed in connection with the court's analysis of whether SORNA of 1999, as amended, constitutes an affirmative disability or restraint. Those categories of registrants eligible to petition for removal from the registry have [*64] in common an absence of multiple offenses, whether sex offenses or felony offenses, and a "[final] discharge[] from the correctional system at least 10 years prior to submitting documentation to the bureau" seeking removal from the registry. 34-A M.R.S. §11202-A (2011).

While SORNA of 1999, like the Alaska statute considered in Smith, "differentiates between individuals convicted of aggravated or multiple offenses and those convicted of a single nonaggravated offense," Smith, 538 U.S. at 102, the United States Supreme "Court recognized in Smith that 'the broad categories, however, and the corresponding length of the reporting requirement, are reasonably related to the danger of recidivism, and this is consistent with the regulatory objective.'" Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 45, 985 A.2d at 21 (quoting Smith, 538 U.S. at 102) (brackets omitted).

It appears that the legislature, in amending the statute to create these exceptions, was attempting to create greater congruence between a registrant's likelihood to reoffend and the registrant's lifetime registration requirement. There remain broad categories of offenders whose lifetime registration requirement is not ameliorated by these legislative [*65] categories, and who do not have an opportunity to present evidence of their non-dangerousness in order to pursue removal from the registry. However, in light of the Law Court's finding that SORNA of 1999 was neutral as to this factor when it did not allow any registrants to petition for removal, the court finds that the statute remains neutral as to its promotion of the traditional aims of punishment, retribution and deterrence.

v. Application based upon conviction of a crime

The fifth Mendoza-Martinez factor requires the court to consider whether the behavior to which SORNA of 1999 applies is already a crime. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. at 168.

> Because registration under SORNA of 1999 only applies to offenders who were convicted of specified crimes, does not arise based on individualized assessment of an offender's risk of recidivism, and cannot be waived based on proof that an offender poses little or no risk, SORNA of 1999 applies exclusively to behavior that is already a crime. It is punitive in effect in this respect.

Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 48, 985 A.2d at 22 (citing Smith, 538 U.S. at 112-13 (Stevens, J., dissenting); Doe v. Alaska, 189 P.3d 999, 1015 (Alaska 2008)). The Chapter [*66] 570 amendments do not alter this analysis, and so this factor continues to weigh in favor of a finding that SORNA of 1999 is punitive.

vi. Connection to non-punitive purpose

The court next considers the sixth Mendoza-Martinez factor, whether SORNA of 1999 has a rational connection to a non-punitive purpose. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. at 168-69. The Supreme Court has intimated, in other cases, that this is the most significant question under the effects stage of the analysis: whether the law, "while perhaps having certain punitive aspects, serves important non punitive goals." Haskell, 2001 ME 154, ¶ 9, 784 A.2d at 9-10 (citing United States v. Ursery, 518 U.S. 267, 290, 116 S. Ct. 2135, 135 L. Ed. 2d 549 (1996); Moore v. Avoyelles Corr. Ctr., 253 F.3d 870, 873 (5th Cir. 2001) ("The most significant question under [the effects] stage of the 'intent-effects' analysis is whether the law[,] while perhaps having certain punitive aspects, serves important nonpunitive goals.") (quotations and brackets omitted); Russell v. Gregoire, 124 F.3d 1079, 1091 (9th Cir. 1997), cert, denied, 523 U.S. 1007, 118 S. Ct. 1191, 140 L. Ed. 2d 321 (1998)); see also Smith, 538 U.S. at 102 ("The Act's rational connection to a nonpunitive purpose is a 'most significant' factor in [*67] our determination that the statute's effects are not punitive.") (quoting Ursery, 518 U.S. at 290). "There is no doubt that SORNA of 1999 serves a valid governmental purpose separate from punishment. The Legislature declared that SORNA of 1999 is intended 'to protect the public from potentially dangerous registrants by enhancing access to information concerning those registrants.'" Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 50, 985 A.2d 22 (quoting 34-A M.R.S. §11201 (2008)). "Protecting the public from potentially dangerous sex offenders is, without question, a compelling state interest in furtherance of the state's police powers . . . . The protection advanced by SORNA is among the most basic obligations state government owes its people--ensuring their safety." Id. SORNA advances these safety concerns "by alerting the public to the risk of sex offenders in their community." Smith, 538 U.S. at 103 (quotation omitted). This factor weighs against a conclusion that SORNA is punitive.

vii. Proportionality in relation to non-punitive purpose

The seventh and final Mendoza-Martinez factor addresses whether SORNA of 1999 "appears excessive in relation to the alternative purpose assigned." Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. at 169. [*68] "The excessiveness inquiry of our ex post facto jurisprudence is not an exercise in determining whether the legislature has made the best choice possible to address the problem it seeks to remedy. The question is whether the regulatory means chosen are reasonable in light of the nonpunitive objective." Smith, 538 U.S. at 105: see also Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 51, 985 A.2d at 22. "Reasonableness is an objective standard." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 51, 985 A.2d at 22.

The law court treated this factor as neutral in its evaluation of SORNA of 1999 prior to the Chapter 570 amendments, finding that the court lacked sufficient information upon which "to gauge whether the regulatory means chosen—in particular, increasing the registration period from fifteen years [as it would have been under the prior version of SORNA] to life without the possibility of a waiver, and increasing the verification from infrequent notices to quarterly in-person reporting and fingerprinting at a police station—are reasonable in light of the law's non-punitive purpose." Id. at ¶ 52, 55, 985 A.2d at 23, 24. In conducting its analysis, the law court focused upon "the increased burdens resulting from SORNA of 1999's [*69] retroactive application to individuals who were originally subject to a fifteen-year registration period under SORA of 1991 or SORNA of 1995, but who are now subject to lifetime registration and quarterly in-person verification." Id. at ¶ 51, 985 A.2d at 22-23. The Letalien court balanced the registry's over-inclusiveness and the stigma that registration imparted even to those registrants who had worked to successfully rehabilitate themselves, id. at ¶ 53, 985 A.2d at 23-24, with the benefit to public safety of "ready access to information for a longer period regarding a group of individuals who, at least as a class of persons, pose a public safety risk," noting, "Even in the absence of individualized risk assessments of registrants, information concerning the conviction history and current whereabouts of every sex offender benefits public safety." Id. at ¶ 54, 985 A.2d at 24.

Despite the court's tendency to "lean toward the view that the increased regulatory scheme of SORNA of 1999 appears excessive when applied to registered offenders previously" subject to no registration requirement at all "because there is no consideration of the individual circumstances or rehabilitation of each [*70] offender," see id. at ¶ 55, 985 A.2d at 24, the court cannot categorically state that SORNA of 1999 is excessive or unreasonable in relation to its purpose of promoting public safety by collecting and making available already public information regarding sex offense convictions—particularly given the slight reduction in onerousness of the registration requirements and the possibility of removal from the registry for some offenders brought about by Chapter 570. Accordingly, the court treats this factor as neutral.

The Letalien court synthesized its review of the Mendoza-Martinez factors as follows:

> [T]he retroactive application of the lifetime registration requirement and quarterly in-person verification procedures of SORNA of 1999 to offenders originally sentenced subject to SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995, without, at a minimum, affording those offenders any opportunity to ever be relieved of the duty as was permitted under those laws, is punitive.

Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 62, 985 A.2d at 26. Because of the pains the Law Court took to distinguish those cases where registrants were subject to some of the punitive elements but not others, see id. at ¶ 37 n.9, 985 A.2d at 18 n.9, the court [*71] is persuaded that the Law Court found the combination of burdensome factors to be punitive in effect, rather than each factor individually. In response to Letalien, the legislature lightened the burden of in-person registration by making the in-person verification requirements less frequent, and offered classes of offenders an opportunity to seek removal from the registry. The overall effect of SORNA of 1999, as amended, is therefore lighter for the plaintiffs now than it was for Letalien when his case came before the Law Court, despite the fact that the plaintiffs suffered from greater surprise than Letalien by their addition to the registry. The law court's observation in Letalien that quarterly, in-person, lifetime registration constitutes a "substantial disability or restraint on the free exercise of individual liberty," Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 58, 985 A.2d at 24-25, remains valid, but the legislative amendment allowing many registrants to petition for removal from the registry lightens the impairment of liberty that the Letalien court found.

> It is not our role to ask whether the Legislature could achieve its goals through alternative means. Indeed, we properly exercise restraint [*72] in our review of a legislative effort to apply retroactively a civil regulatory scheme intended to address a complex public safety issue. We proceed with care so as not to interfere with innovative legislative efforts intended to advance the public interest, unless required otherwise by constitutional mandates.

Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 56, 985 A.2d at 24.

Whether the plaintiffs are correct as to the meaning of Letalien's holding, only the Law Court can clarify. It may be that any statutory scheme must, in order to withstand constitutional scrutiny, provide offenders with an individualized opportunity to be relieved of SORNA obligations, particularly when the obligations must be endured by the offender until the day the offender dies. In other words, it may be that the "opportunity" provided to the plaintiffs is an individualized one that must be provided to each offender, depending on how they have lived their lives after conviction. Alternatively, the Law Court may find that "opportunity" satisfied by the Legislature's determinations of classes of offenders who are eligible to be relieved of the obligations, and others who will never be eligible. SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995 provided [*73] opportunities for individual offenders to prove rehabilitation, as did the original version of Chapter 570—until a fiscal note became affixed to it. See L.D. 1822, Summary (124th Legis. 2010)).

However, the plaintiffs' burden here cannot be underestimated. "A statute is presumed to be constitutional and the person challenging the constitutionality has the burden of establishing its infirmity." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 15, 985 A.2d at 12 (quoting Kenny v. Dep't of Human Servs., 1999 ME 158, ¶ 7, 740 A.2d 560, 563). "We must assume that the Legislature acted in accord with constitutional requirements if the statute can reasonably be read in such a way, notwithstanding other possible unconstitutional interpretations of the same statute." Id. (quoting Haskell, 2001 ME 154, ¶ 4, 784 A.2d at 7). SORNA of 1999 is intended to be a "civil regulatory statute." Id. at ¶ 30, 985 A.2d at 16. "[A] statute that is intended to be civil will be found to be an ex post facto law only if the 'party challenging the statute provides 'the clearest proof that 'the statutory scheme [is] so punitive either in purpose or effect as to negate [the State's] intention' to deem it 'civil.'" Id.at ¶ 31, 985 A.2d at 16 [*74] (quoting Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346, 361, 117 S. Ct. 2072, 138 L. Ed. 2d 501 (1997)).

Because the plaintiffs have not demonstrated by the clearest proof that SORNA of 1999, as amended, is punitive and therefore a criminal law, their assertion that it is an ex post facto law must fail. Their motion for summary judgment on this ground is DENIED. The state defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED as to the ex post facto argument.

III. Constitutionality of 34-A M.R.S. §11221(1)(G)

The plaintiffs argue that 34-A M.R.S. §11221(1)(G), allowing the sex offender registry to obtain "any other information the bureau determines important," might allow police to seek information that would violate the Fourth, Fifth, or Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and their analogues under the Maine Constitution, or be void for vagueness. The state defendants counter that the argument is not ripe, as the statute has not been used to request any information at all, so that there is nothing for the plaintiffs to challenge.[12]

The provision to which the plaintiffs object provides: "The bureau shall establish and maintain a registry of persons required to register pursuant to this subchapter. The registry must include the following information on each registrant: . . . G. Any other information the bureau determines important." 34-A M.R.S. §11221(1)(G) (2011).

"The void-for-vagueness doctrine incorporated within due process rests on the assumption that the law must provide reasonable and intelligible standards to guide the future conduct of individuals and to allow the courts and enforcement officials to effectuate the legislative intent in applying these laws." Shapiro Bros. Shoe Co., Inc. v. Lewiston-Auburn Shoeworkers Protective Ass'n, 320 A.2d 247, 253 (Me. 1974); see also Gun Owners' Action League, Inc. v. Swift, 284 F.3d 198, 205 (1st Cir. 2002) [*76] ("When citizens cannot determine what conduct a law proscribes, the law's vagueness may raise constitutional due process concerns.") "A statute is void for vagueness when it sets guidelines which would force men of general intelligence to guess at its meaning, leaving them without assurance that their behavior complies with legal requirements and forcing courts to be uncertain in their interpretation of the law." Shapiro Bros., 320 A.2d at 253. "Such an unacceptable statute would often be so vague and indefinite as really to be no rule or standard at all." Id. (quotation omitted). "The principle underlying the doctrine is that no man shall be held criminally responsible for conduct which he could not reasonably understand to be proscribed." Gun Owners' Action League, 284 F.3d at 205 (quotation omitted).

> Alleging that the Act is unconstitutionally vague, the plaintiffs complain about the threat of enforcement, but not any particular instances of enforcement. Such facial challenges raise special justiciability concerns. Particularly relevant here is the doctrine of ripeness, which "asks whether an injury that has not yet happened is sufficiently likely to happen" to warrant judicial review. [*77] 13A Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller, and Edward H. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure, B 3531.12, at 50 (2d ed. 1984) (citing Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 499 n.10, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343, 95 S. Ct. 2197 (1975)) (defining ripeness inquiry as "whether the harm asserted has matured sufficiently to warrant judicial intervention.")). The requirement of ripeness is "particularly relevant in the context of actions for preenforcement review of statutes," because it "focuses on the timing of the action." Navegar, Inc. v. United States, 322 U.S. App. D.C. 288, 103 F.3d 994, 998 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

Id. "In determining ripeness, we apply a familiar test: 'the question in each case is whether . . . there is a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment.'" Id. (quoting Lake Carriers' Ass'n v. MacMullan, 406 U.S. 498, 506, 92 S. Ct. 1749, 32 L. Ed. 2d 257 (1972)). "Nevertheless, threats of enforcement of a vague statute can support a facial challenge to a statute when certain conditions are met." Id. at 206. "To determine whether the threat of enforcement of an allegedly vague statute is ripe for judicial review, we [*78] examine 'the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration.'" Id. (quoting Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 149, 87 S. Ct. 1507, 18 L. Ed. 2d 681 (1967)).

---

[12] The state defendants go on to distinguish the cases upon which the plaintiffs rely (Doe v. Nebraska, 2010 WL 3259366 (D. Neb. 2010); Doe v. Pros., Marion County, Ind., 566 F.Supp.2d 862 (S.D. Ind. 2008); [*75] and United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 221, 23 L. Ed. 563 (1876)) but the court does not find it necessary to make this distinction in any detail, as the plaintiffs' pre-enforcement objection to the statute does not raise any concrete case or controversy and is thus not ripe for judicial consideration. See, e.g., Gun Owners' Action League, Inc. v. Swift, 284 F.3d 198 (1st Cir. 2002).

"'Fitness typically involves subsidiary queries concerning finality, definiteness, and the extent to which resolution of the challenge depends upon facts that may not yet be sufficiently developed, whereas hardship typically turns upon whether the challenged action creates a direct and immediate dilemma for the parties.'" Id. (quoting Rhode Island Ass'n of Realtors, Inc., v. Whitehouse, 199 F.3d 26, 33 (1st Cir. 1999)). "In all of the vagueness counts, the main hardship alleged by the plaintiffs is the threat of prosecution. A threatened prosecution is only immediate enough to satisfy the hardship prong of the ripeness inquiry when 'the challenged action creates a 'direct and immediate' dilemma for the parties.'" Id. (quoting W.R. Grace & Co. v. United States Envtl. Prot. Agency, 959 F.2d 360, 364 (1st Cir., 1992)).

> Such a dilemma exists when threatened prosecution puts the party seeking preenforcement review between a rock and a hard place—absent the availability of preenforcement review, [they] [*79] must either forego possibly lawful activity because of [their] well-founded fear of prosecution, or willfully violate the statute, thereby subjecting [themselves] to criminal prosecution and punishment.

Id. (quotation omitted).

The plaintiffs' claim fails at this point. There is no threatened prosecution. The plaintiffs allege that the immediate hardship they suffer is the authority provided to bureau to request information and publicize it, which "could present Fourth or Fifth Amendment issues." (Reply Memo, of Mitchell Firm Pis. and Opp. to State Defs. Cross-Mot. for Summ. J. at 17.) The bureau has not requested any such information. At the time that the bureau requests information to which it, arguably, is not constitutionally entitled, then the plaintiffs' pre-enforcement challenge may conceivably be ripe. At this time, when the bureau has not requested any information to which they are even arguably not entitled, there is no "direct and immediate" dilemma for the parties. There is no lawful activity they must forgo to avoid prosecution; nor is there any way in which they could willfully violate the statute and incur prosecution. The challenge is therefore not ripe for review.[13]

Even if this point did not conclude the court's analysis in favor of the state defendants, the court would point out the second dimension of the analysis likewise does not support the plaintiffs' contention. "The fitness component of ripeness addresses whether the factual and legal dimensions of the challenge to the Act are developed enough to permit adjudication of the plaintiffs' claim." Id. at 207-208. The First Circuit noted in Gun Owners' Action Association that the statute at issue in that case "empowers an agency of the Commonwealth . . . to promulgate regulations [*81] clarifying its meaning and to publish a list of weapons proscribed by the statute" (id. at 208), thereby reducing the vagueness that was the subject of the plaintiffs' attacks - on the statute. Likewise, in this case, the statute allows the bureau to request additional information that "it determines important" from registrants; the information will not be collected in the absence of a statement of what information the bureau finds important, thereby clarifying the vagueness the plaintiffs find objectionable.

The court cannot find 34-A M.R.S. §11221(1)(G)(2011) unconstitutional at this time, so the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment seeking such a judgment is DENIED; the state defendants' motion for summary judgment on this count is GRANTED.

IV. Equal protection

---

[13] The [*80] plaintiffs' reference to Cutshall v. Sundquist, 193 F.3d 466 (6th Cir. 1999) is unavailing. In that case, the Sixth Circuit noted, the "statute is written in such a manner that the release of registry information can take place at any time law enforcement officials have determined that release is necessary to protect the public." Cutshall, 193 F.3d at 472. Here, law enforcement does not have the information at its disposal; the greatest risk to the plaintiffs that the statute would allow would be for the bureau to request information from the registrants, at which point they could bring a challenge which would then be ripe.

"The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids any state from denying 'to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,' U.S. CONST, amend. XIV, § 1, and requires, generally, that persons similarly situated be treated alike." Anderson v. Town of Durham, 2006 ME 39, ¶ 29, 895 A.2d 944, 953 (citing Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 216, 102 S. Ct. 2382, 72 L. Ed. 2d 786 (1982)). Article I, § 6-A of the Maine Constitution [*82] likewise provides, "No person shall be . . . denied the equal protection of the laws, nor be denied the enjoyment of that person's civil rights or be discriminated against in the exercise thereof." The protections of the state and federal constitutional provisions are coextensive. Town of Frye Island v. State, 2008 ME 27, ¶ 14, 940 A.2d 1065, 1069.

> If government action that is challenged on equal protection grounds infringes on a fundamental constitutional right, or involves an inherently suspect classification such as race, it is subject to analysis under the strict scrutiny standard. Sch. Admin. Dist. No. I v. Comm'r, Dep't of Educ., 659 A.2d 854, 857 (Me. 1995). Strict scrutiny requires that the challenged action be narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling governmental interest. See Butler v. Supreme Judicial Court, 611 A.2d 987, 992 (Me. 1992). If the government action does not implicate either a fundamental right or a suspect class, "different treatment accorded to similarly situated persons need only be rationally related to a legitimate state interest." Sch. Admin. Dist. No. 1, 659 A.2d at 857. When a statute is reviewed under the rational basis standard, it bears a strong presumption [*83] of validity. See id. Under the rational basis standard, the burden is on the party challenging the government action to demonstrate that "there exists no fairly conceivable set of facts that could ground a rational relationship between the challenged classification and the government's legitimate goals." Eulitt [v. State of Me., Dep't of Educ., 386 F.3d 344, 356 (1st Cir. 2004)].

Anderson, 2006 ME 39, ¶ 29, 895 A.2d at 953-54.

Sex offenders are not a suspect class. Doe v. Moore, 410 F.3d 1337, 1346 (11th Cir. 2005) (citing United States v. LeMay, 260 F.3d 1018, 1030 (9th Cir. 2001)). Nor do the various subclassifications among sex offenders, which the plaintiffs point to as unsustainable because of their diverging responsibilities and opportunities to petition for removal under SORNA of 1999, as amended, implicate a suspect class. Therefore, in order to determine whether to apply strict scrutiny or rational basis review, the court must analyze whether the plaintiffs have pled the existence of a fundamental right. They do not allege a fundamental right in their equal protection arguments, but they do so argue in their substantive due process line of reasoning. In order to avoid disrupting [*84] that analysis, the court will leave it under the heading where the plaintiffs have pled it, but for the purposes of our equal protection analysis, it suffices to state that the court has not found a fundamental right to be at issue. The court's assignment of rational basis review to this issue is bolstered by the fact that the Law Court has held, "Only classifications involving a suspect or quasi-suspect class, or impacting certain fundamental constitutional rights, are subject to heightened scrutiny. Other classifications, like those presented by SORNA, need only be rationally related to a legitimate government goal." State v. Haskell, 2001 ME 154, ¶ 16 n.10, 784 A.2d at 11 n.10 (citations omitted). Since "the government action does not implicate either a fundamental right or a suspect class, different treatment accorded to similarly situated persons need only be rationally related to a legitimate state interest." See Anderson, 2006 ME 39, ¶ 29, 895 A.2d at 953.

"[R]ational-basis review in equal protection analysis 'is not a license for courts to judge the wisdom, fairness, or logic of legislative choices.'" Heller v. Doe, 509 U.S. 312, 319, 113 S. Ct. 2637, 125 L. Ed. 2d 257 (1993) (quoting FCC v. Beach Communications., 508 U.S. 307, 313, 113 S. Ct. 2096, 124 L. Ed. 2d 211 (1993)). [*85] "For these reasons, a classification neither involving fundamental rights nor proceeding along suspect lines is accorded a strong presumption of validity." Id. "Such a classification cannot run afoul of the Equal Protection Clause if there is a rational relationship between the disparity of treatment and some legitimate governmental purpose." Id. (citing Nordlinger v. Hahn, 505 U.S. 1, 11, 112 S. Ct. 2326, 120 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1992); [New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 303, 96 S. Ct. 2513, 49 L. Ed. 2d 511 (1976) (per curiam)].

"Further, a legislature that creates these categories need not 'actually articulate at any time the purpose or rationale supporting its classification.'" Id. (quoting Nordlinger, 505 U.S. at 15). See also, e. g., United States Railroad Retirement Bd. v. Fritz, 449 U.S. 166, 179, 66 L. Ed. 2d 368, 101 S Ct. 453 (1980); Allied Stores of Ohio, Inc. v.

Bowers, 358 U.S. 522, 528, 3 L. Ed. 2d 480, 79 S. Ct. 437, 82 Ohio Law Abs. 312 (1959). "Instead, a classification 'must be upheld against equal protection challenge if there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the classification.'" Id. (quoting Beach Commc'ns, 508 U.S. at 313. Further, "those attacking the rationality of the legislative classification have [*86] the burden to negative every conceivable basis which might support it." Beach Commc'ns, 508 U.S. at 314. And since courts "never require a legislature to articulate its reasons for enacting a statute, it is entirely irrelevant for constitutional purposes whether the conceived reason for the challenged distinction actually motivated the legislature," and "the absence of legislative facts explaining the distinction on the record has no significance in rational-basis analysis." Id. at 315 (quotations and citations omitted).

Because "[a] statute is presumed constitutional, . . . and 'the burden is on the one attacking the legislative arrangement to negative every conceivable basis which might support it,' whether or not the basis has a foundation in the record," the court looks to the plaintiffs' arguments to determine whether they have successfully shown that there is absolutely no conceivable basis to support the distinctions the legislature has drawn. Heller, 509 U.S. at 320-21 (quoting Lehnhausen v. Lake Shore Auto Parts Co., 410 U.S. 356, 364, 93 S. Ct. 1001, 35 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1973)). The plaintiffs allege "several suspect inequalities," including "the fact of registration vs. non-registration for the Does previously [*87] all treated alike before ch. 570; [and] the difference between ten year and lifetime registrants; sex offenders generally vs. other perpetrators of heinous crimes." (Reply Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. and Opp. to State Defs. Cross-Mot. for Summ. J. at 18.) They also point to a submission by their expert, Dr. Brian Rines, which they allege supports a finding that the legislative categories do not predict dangerousness. (Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. at 8.) The plaintiffs' memo also includes a version of their ex post facto argument regarding the arbitrariness of treating pre-1991 convictions as harshly as or more harshly than those registrants for whom Letalien provided relief, which argument the court need not address after the extensive consideration given to both parties' ex post facto arguments above. The plaintiffs also argue that the law is not narrowly tailored, in that the plaintiffs fall into different categories with no discernable justification, and that the category into which a registrant falls could easily be a matter of prosecutorial discretion; "Particularly if all charges relate to a single incident, possibly repeated, the prosecutor could bargain them down to one to secure [*88] a guilty plea. Thus one's duty to register may devolve to luck or accident." (Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. at 9.)

The court can comfortably reject all of the plaintiffs' arguments save the last. However, his opinion does not "negative every conceivable basis" for the legislative distinctions among and between registrants. Given the proper deference, almost all of the legislature's distinctions, including those between sex offenders and other forms of criminals,[14] easily withstand rational basis review.

As to the argument regarding offenders whose status as lifetime registrants, even after the modifications of Chapter 570, arose from multiple pre-SORA or SORNA convictions which may have arisen from a single incident, however, the court has serious reservations as to whether the law would rational basis review. Cf. State v. Heald, 382 A.2d 290, 301 (Me. 1978) [*89] ("It is well established that a reasonable prosecutorial discretion in the enforcement of criminal laws is inherent in our criminal justice system . . ."). Were any of the plaintiffs participating in this motion for summary judgment unable to petition for termination of the registration requirements because of multiple convictions, which convictions stemmed from the same transaction, that would potentially present a level of arbitrariness sufficient to provide the extraordinary case on which a law may not withstand rational basis review. If two identical offenders committed identical crimes, but one district attorney charged every incident of an interaction separately, for example, charging for each incident of penetration, or for the sexual contact leading up to that point, and the other district attorney charged once for the overall occurrence, then the two offenders would have significantly different possibilities for removal from the registry under SORNA of 1999, as amended. That difference of registration effect for two identical crimes might be unsustainable, as it does not bear a rational relationship to the state's legitimate interest of protecting the public and increasing [*90] awareness regarding convicted sex offenders. Because SORNA of 1999, as amended, does not provide for individualized review of registrants' dangerousness or even their underlying convictions, there is a the potential for an equal protection violation under a different case or cases.

---

[14] See, e.g., McKune v. Lile, 536 U.S. 24, 33, 122 S. Ct. 2017, 153 L. Ed. 2d 47 (2002) ("When convicted sex offenders reenter society, they are much more likely than any other type of offender to be rearrested for a new rape or sexual assault. See Sex Offenses 27; U.S. Dept. of Justice, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Recidivism of Prisoners Released in 1983, p. 6 (1997)).

However, the plaintiffs have not presented the court with such a case as would implicate these concerns. While Doe V pled guilty to two counts of unlawful sexual contact in 1993[15] it appears that he will be able to petition for termination of his registration requirements once the required ten-year period following his probation has passed, which the State suggest will be in 2012. 34-A M.R.S. §11202-A(1)(A) (2011). The court agrees with the plaintiffs that it is the retroactive lifetime quality of the registration requirements that triggers further review (see the court's analysis of the plaintiffs' claims under Maine's Declaration of Rights, below). The other plaintiffs' records reveal either that their convictions stemmed from multiple incidents, or their record reflects other disqualifications that would prevent them from seeking termination of their registration requirements pursuant to §11202-A.

Therefore, since neither a fundamental right nor a suspect class is implicated, and since none of the plaintiffs has shown that SORNA of 1999, as amended, has established "different treatment accorded to similarly situated persons" which is not "rationally related to a legitimate state interest," see Sch. Admin. Dist. No. 1, 659 A.2d at 857, the plaintiffs' equal protection claims must fail. The plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment is DENIED; the state defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED.

V. Void for vagueness

The plaintiffs allege that Chapter 570's modifications to the verification procedures for registrants sentenced between 1982 and 1999, intended to alleviate the quarterly in-person verification requirements found unconstitutionally punitive in Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶¶ 37, 62, 985 A.2d 4, 18, 26, are void for vagueness and may indeed require [*92] more frequent intrusions into registrants' lives than the statute held unconstitutional in Letalien, The state defendants disagree.

The provisions at issue, 34-A M.R.S. §§11222(4-A)(C) and 11222(4-B)(C), are substantially similar, save that the provision of sub-section 4-A applies to ten-year registrants and sub-section 4-B applies to lifetime registrants. The provision states:

> In lieu of mailing the completed verification form under paragraph B, the . . . registrant shall take the completed verification form and a current photograph of the . . . registrant to the law enforcement agency having jurisdiction once every 5 years after the anniversary of the . . . registrant's initial registration or, if there is a reason to believe the [offender's] [lifetime registrant's][16] appearance has changed significantly, the law enforcement agency having jurisdiction or the bureau may instruct the . . . registrant in writing:
>
>> 1) To appear in person at the law enforcement agency having jurisdiction with a current photograph or to allow a photograph to be taken; or
>>
>> 2) If authorized in writing by the law enforcement agency having jurisdiction for the bureau, to submit a new photograph without appearing [*93] in person.

34-A M.R.S. §§11222(4-A)(C); (4-B)(C) (2011).

The state defendants assert that the plaintiffs lack standing to bring a void for vagueness challenge to this statute as to §11221(1)(G), in that none of the plaintiffs have been subject to enforcement under this statute or have been required to verify their appearances more frequently than every five years under the provision cited above. They cite State v. Witham, 2005 ME 79, ¶11, 876 A.2d 40, 43 (quotations omitted), for the proposition that, "In response to a void for vagueness challenge, the sufficiency of the language of [a] statute is properly tested in the circumstances of the case at bar," and that the sufficiency of this statute thus cannot be tested by these plaintiffs, as they have not been arrested under it. The court disagrees. Unlike in the case of § 11221(1)(G), here the plaintiffs' contentions are ripe for review.

---

[15] Although [*91] SORA of 1991 was in effect at the time, it only required registration for a very small class of crimes, not including the crimes to which Doe V pled. He was required to register by the 2001 amendments to SORNA of 1999. See P.L. 2001, ch. 439, B OOO-7 (effective Sept. 21, 2001) (codified at 34-A M.R.S.A. β 11202 (Supp. 2001)).

[16] 34-A M.R.S. §11222(4-A)(C) contains the word "offender"; 34-A M.R.S. §11222(4-B)(C) uses the term "lifetime registrant."

The court notes once again that "threats of enforcement of a vague statute can support a facial challenge to a statute when certain conditions are met." Gun Owners' Action League, 284 F.3d at 206. [*94] "To determine whether the threat of enforcement of an allegedly vague statute is ripe for judicial review, we examine 'the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration.'" Id. (quoting Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 149, 87 S. Ct. 1507, 18 L. Ed. 2d 681 (1967)). "'Fitness typically involves subsidiary queries concerning finality, definiteness, and the extent to which resolution of the challenge depends upon facts that may not yet be sufficiently developed, whereas hardship typically turns upon whether the challenged action creates a direct and immediate dilemma for the parties,'" Id. (quoting Rhode Island Ass'n of Realtors, Inc., v. Whitehouse, 199 F.3d 26, 33 (1st Cir. 1999)).

Unlike the plaintiffs' challenge to the provision granting the bureau authority to request additional information it deems necessary, which objection was based upon the risk of prosecution in case of noncompliance with potentially unconstitutional demands by the bureau, here, the plaintiffs' allegations of hardship are based upon the statute's grant to law enforcement of the power to require frequent in-person verification. The court did not have any evidence of what theoretical [*95] information requests permitted by §11221(1)(G) might be contemplated; this court noted that the seeking of constitutionally inappropriate information might trigger review provisions. In contrast to that uncertainty, §11222(4-A)(C) and (4-B)(C) do state the powers granted to law enforcement, namely, to require registrants to submit to in-person verification procedures upon a reasonable belief that the registrant's appearance has significantly changed. Also unlike the theoretical information requests under $11221(1)(G), in-person verification every ninety days has already been held unconstitutionally punitive for registrants sentenced between 1982 and 1999 in the absence of an opportunity to seek removal from the registry. See Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶¶37, 62, 985 A.2d 4, 18, 26. The court thus turns to the merits of the void-for-vagueness analysis.

"The Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Article I, section 6-A of the Maine Constitution require that criminal defendants be given 'fair notice of the standard of conduct to which they can be held accountable.'" State v. Witham, 2005 ME 79, ¶7, 876 A.2d 40, 42 (quoting State v. Weeks, 2000 ME 171, ¶7, 761 A.2d 44, 46) [*96] (brackets omitted). "To satisfy due process, 'a penal statute must define the criminal offense [1] with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited and [2] in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement.'" Skilling v. United States, 561 U.S. 358, 364, 130 S. Ct. 2896, 2927-28, 177 L. Ed. 2d 619, 656 (quoting Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 357, 103 S. Ct. 1855, 75 L. Ed. 2d 903 (1983)) (brackets omitted). "A statute is unconstitutionally vague when it fails to define the criminal offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited and in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement." Witham, 2005 ME 79, ¶7, 876 A.2d at 42 (quotations omitted). "A statute may be void for vagueness when people of common intelligence must guess at its meaning." Id.

The plaintiffs' challenge thus appears to target the second half of the vagueness analysis, arguing that the statute may lead to "arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement" and potentially frequent in-person verification of law-abiding registrants.

However, the court notes that "[i]n examining [*97] the sufficiency of statutory language, 'objective quantification, mathematical certainty, and absolute precision are not required.'" Id. (quoting Town of Baldwin v. Carter, 2002 ME 52, ¶7 n.2, 794 A.2d 62, 66). "In light of the fundamental precept that we will, if possible, construe statutes 'so as to avoid a danger of unconstitutionality, . . . legislation should not be held invalid on the ground of uncertainty if susceptible of any reasonable construction that will support it.'" Id. (quoting State v. Davenport, 326 A.2d 1, 5-6 (Me. 1974)) (brackets omitted).

In light of the requirement that the court avoid invalidating a statute as unconstitutional as long as the statute is "susceptible of any reasonable construction that will support it" Witham, 2005 ME 79, ¶7, 876 A.2d at 42 (quotations omitted), the court is unpersuaded by the plaintiffs' assertion that the statute is unconstitutionally vague because it fails to clarify the "reason to believe," and who might have the reason, how he or she might report it, or to where. Rather, the court finds that the plain language of the statute charges the "law enforcement agency having jurisdiction or the bureau" with determining whether the [*98] evidence provided, by tip or otherwise, constitutes "reason to believe" that the registrant's "appearance has changed significantly," in which case that law enforcement agency or the bureau may instruct the registrant to provide evidence of his or her current appearance, whether in person or by sending an updated photograph. 34-A M.R.S. §§11222(4-A)(C); (4-B)(C).

"[R]easonable grounds to believe . . . must depend upon the totality of the circumstances and include consideration of not only the nature and specificity of available information but also the credibility of the source of that information and the basis of the source's knowledge." In re Trever I, 2009 ME 59, ¶24, 973 A.2d 752, 759 (quotation omitted) (discussing "reason to believe" in the context of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978); see also State v. Vaughan, 2009 ME 63, ¶¶11-12, 974 A.2d 930, 933-34 (admitting evidence that the arresting "officer had an objective, reasonable belief, under the totality of the circumstances," that the defendant was in violation of the law, and providing that even an anonymous tip may be a reliable basis for an officer's reasonable belief if the officer corroborates the tip through verifying [*99] "details such as the physical description and location of the suspect") (quotation omitted). See also Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 27, 88 S. Ct. 1868, 20 L. Ed. 2d 889 (1968) (allowing "stop and frisk" based on law enforcement officer's reasonable belief of danger); cf. Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 360-61, 103 S. Ct. 1855, 75 L. Ed. 2d 903 (1983) (comparing objective standard of Terry with unconstitutionally vague statutory provision which would allow police to detain a person pending the person's submission of "credible and reliable" identification to the officer's satisfaction).

Law enforcement and related agencies in Maine are frequently entrusted with decisionmaking under the "reason to believe" or "reasonable belief" standard. See, e.g., 4 M.R.S. § 960 (2011) ("Whenever the Attorney General has reason to believe that a person in the State has engaged in or is engaging in activities that violate this section, the Attorney General may initiate an action in the Superior Court to enforce this section."); 5 M.R.S. §4660-A (2011) ("Whenever a law enforcement officer has reason to believe that a person has been a victim of harassment, the officer shall immediately use all reasonable means to prevent further harassment"); 17-A M.R.S. §303 (2011) ("For [*100] purposes of this subsection, 'reasonable belief a child has been taken, retained or enticed in violation of this section' includes, but is not limited to, a determination by a law enforcement officer, based on the officer's review of the terms of a certified copy of the most recent court decree granting custody of the child, that the parent who is exercising control over the child is not the person authorized to have custody under terms of the decree."); 19-A M.R.S. § 2203 (2011) (permitting the Department of Health and Human Services to issue an order to seize and sell real property in order to satisfy a support lien, which carries the same effect as a writ of execution from the District Court or the Superior Court, as long as the department "know[s] or ha[s] reason to believe the obligor has a substantial ownership interest in the property identified in the order"); 22 M.R.S. §2159 (2011) ("Whenever a duly authorized agent of the Commissioner of Agriculture, Food and Rural Resources finds or has reason to believe that any food is adulterated, or so misbranded as to be dangerous or fraudulent, within the meaning of this subchapter, he may issue an order . . . "); 22 M.R.S. § 2519-A [*101] (2011); 25 M.R.S. § 3501 (2011) ("This chapter shall apply to all personal property of which possession is transferred to a police department or other law enforcement agency of the State or any political subdivision thereof, under circumstances supporting a reasonable belief that such property was abandoned, lost or stolen, or otherwise illegally possessed . . ."); 24-A M.R.S. § 2101 (2011) ("If the superintendent has reason to believe that any insurer or other person is acting in violation of this section or section 404, the superintendent shall commence proceedings in accordance with sections 12-A and 404."); 26 M.R.S. § 777 (2011) ("Whenever there is reason to believe that a work permit was improperly signed, the director, deputy director or agent shall notify the local superintendent of schools of the place in which the certificate was signed."); 35-A M.R.S. § 3203 (2011) ("If the commission has reason to believe that any competitive electricity provider or transmission and distribution utility has violated any provision of law for which criminal prosecution is provided and would be in order or any antitrust law of this State or the United States, the commission shall notify the [*102] Attorney General. The Attorney General shall promptly institute any actions or proceedings the Attorney General considers appropriate.").

The statutory provision charging the law enforcement agency with jurisdiction over the registrant or the bureau itself with verifying the registrant's appearance if there is reason to believe his or her appearance has changed thus meets the constitutional due process requirement of '"fair notice of the standard of conduct to which they can be held accountable."' State v. Weeks, 2000 ME 171, ¶7, 761 A.2d 44. 2000 ME 171, 761 A.2d 44, 46 (quoting United States v. Robinson, 137 F.3d 652, 653 (1st Cir. 1998)). The plaintiffs do not challenge the public policy underlying this provision—to ensure that those seeking to identify convicted offenders have access to accurate depictions of them. The legislature's limitation of the verification requirement to those appearance changes which are "significant" both serves to support that public policy, in that it ensures that a registrant's photo will be updated when his or her appearance has changed to the extent that he or she would be difficult to recognize from the former photo, and serves as a limitation against arbitrary enforcement, [*103] requiring registrants to verify their appearances based on minimal changes. The court therefore finds that the statute is sustainable against a vagueness challenge as it '"define[s] the criminal offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited and in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement."' Weeks, 2000 ME 171, ¶7, 761 A.2d 44, 46 (quoting Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. at 357). The plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment to the contrary is therefore DENIED, while the state defendants motion for summary judgment on this count is GRANTED.

VI. Procedural due process

The plaintiffs assert that the registration requirements of SORNA of 1999, as amended, violate their procedural due process rights because they lacked "notice of the issues, an opportunity to be heard, the right to introduce evidence and present witnesses, the right the respond to claims and evidence, and an impartial fact-finder" prior to their placement on the registry. See In re Chelsea C., 2005 ME 105, ¶16, 884 A. 2d 97, 102 (listing requirements of due process where significant rights are at stake).

This question has been settled by the [*104] United States Supreme Court in Connecticut Department of Public Safety v. Doe, 538 U.S. 1, 123 S. Ct. 1160, 155 L. Ed. 2d 98 (2003). There, the Court held that, "even assuming, arguendo, that [the registrant] has been deprived of a liberty interest, due process does not entitle him to a hearing to establish a fact that is not material under the Connecticut statute," and that "the fact that [the registrant] seeks to prove — that he is not currently dangerous — is of no consequence under Connecticut's [sex offender registration and notification] Law," because "the law's requirements turn on an offender's conviction alone — a fact that a convicted offender has already had a procedurally safeguarded opportunity to contest." Conn. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 538 U.S. at 7. Because Maine's constitutional due process protections are coextensive with those of the federal constitution, see, e.g., Botting v. Dep't of Behavioral & Developmental Servs., 2003 ME 152, ¶23, 838 A.2d 1168, 1176, this is dispositive of the court's analysis.

The plaintiffs' attempts to argue that additional process is due because SORNA of 1999, as amended, implies that registrants are currently dangerous is unavailing. They cite State v. Briggs, 2008 UT 83, 199 P.3d 935, 946 (Utah 2008) [*105] for the proposition that an implication of current dangerousness requires a due process hearing—but in fact, that case supports the court's analysis that no such process is due. In Briggs, the court ruled:

> As to Briggs's procedural due process argument, we hold that the provisions of the registration statute requiring him to register and requiring the DOC to publish information related to his prior convictions, current address, appearance, and other similar information do not violate his right to procedural due process. . . . However, we hold that the provision in the registration statute that requires the DOC to publish his primary and secondary targets, implying that he is currently dangerous, violates his right to procedural due process unless the DOC provides him with notice and an opportunity to be heard as to whether he is currently dangerous.

Briggs, 199 P.3d at 938. This case supports the distinction that many courts have made, including the United States Supreme Court in Connecticut Department of Public Safety, between statutes which require registration based solely upon the fact of conviction, and those which contain a finding of dangerousness. See, e.g., Montana v. Samples, 2008 MT 416, 347 Mont. 292, 198 P.3d 803, 808 (Mont. 2008) [*106] (distinguishing Connecticut Department of Public Safety because "[i]n Montana, facts other than conviction are used to make the designation, and the designation leads to varying requirements for an offender"); State v. Guidry, 105 Haw. 222, 96 P.3d 242, 251-52 (Haw. 2004) ("The Supreme Court's due process analysis highlights a seeming distinction between Connecticut's registration statute and the Hawai'i registration statute."); Noble v. Bd. of Parole & Post-Prison Supervision, 327 Ore. 485, 964 P.2d 990, 995-96 (Or. 1998) (finding that determination that a person is a predatory sex offender implicates a liberty interest, reasoning that when an agency gathers and synthesizes evidence in making such a determination the interest of the person to be labeled goes beyond mere reputation and includes an interest in avoiding ostracism, loss of employment opportunities, and likely verbal or even physical harassment).[17] The plaintiffs' attempt to distinguish Connecticut Department of Public Safety on the ground that the statutory purpose of SORNA of 1999, as amended, implies a finding of dangerousness on the part of its registrants because the statute provides, "The purpose of this chapter is to protect the public from [*107] potentially dangerous registrants and offenders by enhancing access to information concerning those registrants and offenders," 34-A M.R.S. §11201 (2011), has already been addressed and struck down by the Sixth Circuit in Fullmer v. Michigan Department of State Police, 360 F.3d 579 (6th Cir. 2004). In that case, > the plaintiff point[ed] to a provision in the Michigan registration act to the effect that "the legislature has determined that a person who has been convicted of committing an offense covered by this act poses a potential serious menace and danger to the health, safety, morals, and welfare of the people" and that "the registration requirements of this act are intended to provide law enforcement and the people an effective means to monitor those persons who pose such a potential danger." Mich. Comp. Laws β 28.721a (2003). He contend[ed] that this language in the statute, even though it did not appear in the information presented on the website, deprive[d] him of his "constitutionally protected interest in not being falsely labeled as a dangerous sex offender" and [would be] sufficient to invalidate the act despite the holding in Connecticut Department of Public Safety v. Doe.

Fullmer, 360 F.3d at 582 [*108] (ellipses omitted). The Sixth Circuit rejected this argument, noting, "Regardless of the language in the statute, the information on the registry's website makes it clear to anyone accessing the registry that all sex offenders convicted after a certain date are listed, without exception," and that "there is nothing on the website to Indicate that the state has made an individual determination as to a registrant's dangerousness." Id. Likewise, there is nothing on Maine's Sex Offender Registry website that indicates that the state has made an individual determination of a registrant's dangerousness. On the contrary, the disclaimer on the website, highlighted in yellow in a text box above the button that a reader would click to search the registry, reads as follows:

> The information provided on this web site is intended to be used for public safety and community awareness purposes only. The Maine State Bureau of Identification has not considered or assessed the specific risk of re-offense with regard to any individual prior to his or her inclusion on this web site and has made no determination that any individual included on this web site is currently dangerous. Individuals included on [*109] the web site are included solely by virtue of their conviction record and Maine state law. The primary purpose of providing this information is to make the information easily available and accessible, not to warn about any specific individual. Use of this information to threaten, intimidate, or harass any registrant or any other person may result in criminal prosecution.

Maine Sex Offender Registry Online Search Service, Me. State Police web site (visited July 31, 2011). Although the statute recognizes that the registrants are "potentially dangerous," cf. Conn. Dep't of Pub. Safety, 538 U.S. at 4

---

[17] The plaintiffs' emphasis on the necessity of a hearing for lifetime registrants appears to be an implicit reference to State v. Guidry, 105 Haw. 222, 96 P.3d 242 (Haw. 2004), which held "that the lifetime [*110] registration component of the Hawai'i sex offender registration statute implicates a protected liberty interest under the Hawai'i State Constitution, article I, section V and requires that minimum requirements of due process—notice and the opportunity to be heard—be afforded to convicted sex offenders." Id. at 244. The court noted that it had "provided broader due process protection under the Hawai'i Constitution" id. at 251, and that due process required the opportunity to present evidence "material to a state's statutory scheme and we independently hold so under the Hawai'i Constitution." Id. The Guidry analysis therefore does not guide this court, as the Law Court has explicitly held that the Maine Constitution does not afford greater due process protections than the Constitution of the United States. See, e.g., State v. Milliken, 2010 ME 1, ¶16, 985 A.2d 1152, 1157-58.

("Sex offenders are a serious threat in this Nation . . . and when convicted sex offenders reenter society, they are much more likely than any other type of offender to be re-arrested for a new rape or sex assault") (quotations and citations omitted), the public searching the registry is clearly informed that registration is not based on a finding of dangerousness, or any criteria apart from conviction.

Because dangerousness is not a consideration under Maine's statute, SORNA of 1999, as amended, does not fall afoul of procedural due process protections. The plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on this ground is accordingly DENIED, while the state defendants' motion is GRANTED.

VII. Substantive due process

The [*111] plaintiffs also assert that the application to them of SORNA of 1999, as amended, violates their rights to substantive due process, a question specifically left open in Connecticut Department of Public Safety v. Doe. They argue that privacy is a fundamental right, which extends, in Maine, to the acquisition and possession of property and the pursuit of happiness. Because SORNA of 1999, as amended, infringes on these rights through its interference with the plaintiffs' employability and is not narrowly tailored, they assert that it fails strict scrutiny and is unconstitutional.

The Law Court has established a three-part test to determine whether a statute is invalid because it infringes upon due process rights.[18]

> The requirements of due process in the exercise of the State's police power are as follows:
>
> 1. The object of the exercise must be to provide for the public welfare.
>
> 2. The legislative means employed must be appropriate to the achievement of the ends sought.
>
> 3. The manner of exercising the power must not be unduly arbitrary or capricious.
>
> In order to successfully challenge the constitutionality of a statute on due process grounds, a party "must establish the complete absence of any [*112] state of facts that would support the need for its enactment."

Aseptic Packaging Council v. State, 637 A.2d 457, 461 (Me. 1994) (quoting State v. Eaton, 577 A.2d 1162, 1165-66 (Me. 1990)) (brackets omitted); see also State v. Haskell, 2008 ME 82, ¶¶ 5-6, 955 A.2d 737, 739.

1. Object of the exercise

In applying this test, the court first examines the objective of SORNA of 1999. "The purpose of [SORNA of 1999] is to protect the public from potentially dangerous registrants and offenders by enhancing access to information concerning those registrants and offenders." 34-A M.R.S. § 11201 (2009). The first requirement of the due process test therefore supports the statute's validity.

2. Legislative means employed

In evaluating the second factor of the test, the propriety of the legislative means in light of the ends sought and the process alleged to be due, the court considers federal jurisprudence under the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S.

---

[18] Article 1, Section 6-A of the Maine Constitution provides in pertinent part, "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law . . . ."

Constitution.[19] "[F]ederal and Maine due process rights are coextensive." State v. Milliken, 2010 ME 1, ¶ 16, 985 A.2d 1152, 1157-58.

> Our [*113] established method of substantive-due-process analysis has two primary features: First, we have regularly observed that the Due Process Clause specially protects those fundamental rights and liberties which are, objectively, deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition, and implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, such that neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed. Second, we have required in substantive-due-process cases a careful description of the asserted fundamental liberty interest.

Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 720-21, 117 S. Ct. 2258, 117 S. Ct. 2302, 138 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1997) (quotations and citations omitted). "[T]he Fourteenth Amendment forbids the government to infringe 'fundamental' liberty interests at all, no matter what process is provided, unless the infringement is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest." Id. at 721 (quotations, emphasis and ellipses omitted). Thus, "by establishing a threshold requirement—that a challenged state action implicate a fundamental right—before requiring more than a reasonable relation to a legitimate state interest to justify the [legislative] action, it avoids the need for complex balancing of competing interests in every case." [*114] Id. at 722.

The fundamental rights that have been upheld by the Supreme Court as "liberty" interests protected by the Due Process Clause include, "in addition to the specific freedoms protected by the Bill of Rights," Washington, 521 U.S. at 720, "the rights to marry, to have children, to direct the education and upbringing of one's children, to marital privacy, to use contraception, to bodily integrity, and to abortion." Id. (citing Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S. Ct. 1817, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1010 (1967), Skinner v. Oklahoma ex rel. Williamson, 316 U.S. 535, 62 S. Ct. 1110, 86 L. Ed. 1655 (1942), Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 43 S. Ct. 625, 67 L. Ed. 1042 (1923); Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S. Ct. 571, 69 L. Ed. 1070 (1925), Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1965), Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 92 S. Ct. 1029, 31 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1972), Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165, 72 S. Ct. 205, 96 L. Ed. 183 (1952), Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pa. v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 851, 112 S. Ct. 2791, 120 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1992)). Courts must take care in interpreting assertions of fundamental [*115] rights; the Supreme Court has "always been reluctant to expand the concept of substantive due process because guideposts for responsible decisionmaking in this unchartered area are scarce and open-ended." Id. (quotations omitted). "By extending constitutional protection to an asserted right or liberty interest, we, to a great extent, place the matter outside the arena of public debate and legislative action." Id. "We must therefore exercise the utmost care whenever we are asked to break new ground in this field, lest the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause be subtly transformed into the policy preferences of the members of this Court," rather than the elected legislature. Id. (quotations and citations omitted).

The court's review of whether the legislative means are appropriate to the achievement of the ends sought accordingly depends upon whether the asserted right is a fundamental right, in which case the legislation requires more than a "reasonable relation to a legitimate state interest" to withstand a due process challenge. The court should "analyze a substantive due process claim by first crafting a careful description of the asserted right." Doe v. Moore, 410 F.3d 1337, 1343 (11th Cir. 2005) [*116] (quotations omitted). "Second, [the court] must determine whether the asserted right is "one of those fundamental rights and liberties which are, objectively, deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition, and implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, such that neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed.'" Id. (quoting Williams v. Attorney Gen. of Alabama, 378 F.3d 1232, 1239 (11th Cir. 2004), cert, denied, Williams v. King, [543 U.S. 1152, 125 S. Ct. 1335, 161 L. Ed. 2d 115] (2005)).

"'Substantive due process' analysis must begin with a careful description of the asserted right, for 'the doctrine of judicial self-restraint requires us to exercise the utmost care whenever we are asked to break new ground in this field.'" Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 302, 113 S. Ct. 1439, 123 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1993) (quoting Collins v. City of Harker

---

[19] The Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution provides in pertinent part, "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law . . . . "

Heights, 503 U.S. 115, 125, 112 S. Ct. 1061, 117 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1992)). The "fundamental rights" that the plaintiffs assert are the right to privacy and the pursuit of happiness, and potentially reputation, under New Jersey's interpretation of a similar constitutional provision. "Despite [the plaintiffs'] broad framing of their rights in this case, however, we must endeavor to create a more careful description of the asserted right in order [*117] to analyze its importance." Doe v. Moore, 410 F.3d at 1343. "Although the Supreme Court has recognized fundamental rights in regard to some special liberty and privacy interests, it has not created a broad category where any alleged infringement on privacy and liberty will be subject to substantive due process protection," Id. at 1343-44. The court finds that the specific right the plaintiffs seek is the right of a person, convicted of one or more sex-based offenses, to refuse subsequent registration of his or her personal information with Maine law enforcement and prevent publication of such information on Maine's Sex Offender Registry website. See id. at 1344.

Having determined this narrow description, the court next asks whether this right is "deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition, and implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, such that neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed." Id., see also Green v. Comm'r of Mental Health & Mental Retardation (quoting Washington, 521 U.S. at 720-21). Other courts which have evaluated this question concluded that it was not such a right. See, e.g., Doe v. Moore, 410 F.3d at 1345 ("[W]e can find no history [*118] or tradition that would elevate the issue here to a fundamental right. In fact, the case law we have found supports the contrary conclusion."); Doe v. Tandeske, 361 F.3d 594, 597 (9th Cir. 2004) (per curiam) ("[P]ersons who have been convicted of serious sex offenses do not have a fundamental right to be free from . . . registration and notification requirements."); Gunderson v. Hvass, 339 F.3d 639, 643 (8th Cir. 2003) (sex offender registration statute did not infringe the fundamental right to a presumption of innocence; Paul P. v. Verniero, 170 F.3d 396, 404, 405 (3d. Cir. 1999) (holding that sex offender registration did not infringe fundamental right of family relationships, and although the registration of offenders' home addresses invaded the fundamental right to privacy, the state had a compelling interest to prevent future sex offenses).

In evaluating the appropriateness of the legislative means to the ends sought, the court looks to the actual provisions of the statute itself, to determine to what extent they infringe upon allegedly protected rights. SORNA of 1999, as amended, provides the following information on the internet:

1) The [*119] registrant's name, date of birth and photograph;
2) The registrant's city or town of domicile and residence;
3) The registrant's place of employment and college or school being attended, if applicable, and the corresponding address and location; and
4) The statutory citation and name of the offense for which the registrant was convicted.

34-A M.R.S. §11221(9)(A) (2011). Upon written request containing the name and date of birth of a registrant, the following information is accessible:

1) The registrant's name, aliases, date of birth, sex, race, height, weight, eye color, mailing address and physical location of domicile and residence;
2) The registrant's place of employment and college or school being attended, if applicable, and the corresponding address and location;
3) A description of the offense for which the registrant was convicted, the date of conviction and the sentence imposed; and
4) The registrant's photograph.

34-A M.R.S. §11221(9)(B) (2011). The information that SORNA of 1999 makes public is therefore information intended to inform the public about the potential risk posed by the registrant and to allow the public the information necessary to recognize the registrant. The statute [*120] does not reveal information in which courts have recognized a potential privacy interest, such as financial or medical information. Compare Borucki v. Ryan, 827 F.2d 836, 840-49 (1st Cir. 1987) (reviewing cases and noting circuit split regarding right to privacy in psychiatric records) with Cutshall v. Sundquist, 193 F.3d 466, 480-81 (6th Cir. 1999) (rejecting a constitutional right to non-disclosure of private information).

The plaintiffs do not cite any authority for the proposition that disclosure of a matter of public record, the fact of their convictions, and of their identifying characteristics in order to render that status meaningful to the public, constitutes the infringement of a fundamental right. Moreover, in the context of sex offender registration laws, persuasive precedent exists suggesting that the disclosure of information sufficient for the public to identify a convicted sex offender does not implicate any fundamental right to privacy on the part of the registrant. See A. A. v. New Jersey, 341 F.3d 206, 211-13 (3rd Cir. 2003) ("this case begins with the understanding and, indeed, the requirement that what might otherwise be private information be made public . . . [*121] it is clear that a registrant's right to privacy in his or her home address gives way to the State's compelling interest to prevent sex offenses"); see also Smith, 538 U.S. at 101 (acknowledging the potential adverse effect of disclosure, but explaining that "consequences flow not from the Act's registration and dissemination provisions, but from the fact of conviction, already a matter of public record. The State makes the facts underlying the offenses and the resulting convictions accessible so members of the public can take the precautions they deem necessary before dealing with the registrant. . ."). Even under a more protective constitutional interpretation than our own, that of the Illinois Constitution, the Supreme Court of Illinois found "that [a registrant] does not have a cognizable privacy interest in his sex offender registry information." People v. Cornelius, 213 Ill. 2d 178, 821 N.E.2d 288, 300, 290 Ill. Dec. 237 (2004). The court reasoned that the registrant "engaged in conduct that lowered the privacy bar as his acts spawned a criminal prosecution culminating in a public record that contains the challenged information," and "[a]ccordingly, [the registrant] cannot argue that the compilation and dissemination [*122] of truthful information that is already, albeit less conveniently, a matter of public record constitutes a legitimate privacy interest." Id. (quotations and citations omitted). Nor does a person have an expectation of privacy in a photograph of his or her face. See United States v. Emmett, 321 F.3d 669, 672 (6th Cir 2003) ("In addition, we think it clear that a person has no expectation of privacy in a photograph of his face. See United States v. Doe, 457 F.2d 895, 898 (2d Cir. 1972) ("There is no 'reasonable expectation of privacy' about one's face.")").

Given the Supreme Court's warning against expanding the universe of federal "fundamental rights" and the absence of precedent supporting a registrant's right to privacy in his or her identifying information, as well as SORNA of 1999's limitation of disclosed information to that which members of the public would need in order to take precautions, the court concludes that the plaintiffs do not have a fundamental liberty interest in nondisclosure of their registry information.

Because the plaintiffs have not established that SORNA of 1999, as amended, infringes upon any recognized fundamental right or liberty interest, the legislative [*123] means employed will be considered appropriate to the achievement of the ends sought as long as they are reasonably related to a legitimate state interest. See Aseptic Packaging, 637 A.2d at 461; Glucksberg, 521 U.S. at 720-21. The interest of public safety is reasonably related to the statute's provisions making available information about convicted sex offenders in order that families and the public may take appropriate precautions. The second factor of the test therefore supports upholding the statute.

3. Manner of exercising police power

The third and final factor of the due process inquiry is whether the statute's implementation is arbitrary and capricious. "[A] court, in performing a rational-basis analysis, is not limited to the face of the statute and may go beyond its face in determining whether any conceivable state of facts exists to support a statute." Aseptic Packaging, 637 A.2d at 460. "It is for the legislature, not the courts, to judge the wisdom of legislative action and to evaluate legislative facts." Id. "The State has no burden to come forward with such conceivable state of facts, but rather, it is the contestant who retains the burden of proving that no conceivable [*124] state of facts exists." Id. (quotations omitted). "When a statute does not implicate fundamental rights, we must ask whether it is rationally related to legitimate government interests. The rational basis standard is highly deferential and we hold legislative acts unconstitutional under a rational basis standard in only the most exceptional circumstances." Doe v. Moore, 410 F.3d at 1345 (quotations and citation omitted). "Almost every statute subject to the very deferential rational basis . . . standard is found to be constitutional." Id. at 1346-47.

The court agrees with other courts which have addressed this issue that "protecting the public from sexual abuse" by allowing the public to "use the registration to determine whether any sex offenders live in their neighborhood, make an individual assessment of the risk, and take any precautions appropriate under the circumstances" is a legitimate state interest, and that SORNA of 1999 bears a rational relationship to that interest. The plaintiffs have not met their burden of establishing an absence of facts that could support this statute.

Because the plaintiffs have not met their burden, their motion for summary judgment asserting that [*125] SORNA of 1999, as amended, should be overturned on substantive due process grounds is DENIED. The state defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED.

VIII. Cruel and unusual punishment

The Eighth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides, "Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." Article 1, Section 9 of the Maine Constitution similarly provides, "Sanguinary laws shall not be passed; all penalties and punishments shall be proportioned to the offense; excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel nor unusual punishments inflicted."

Because the court has determined that the registration requirements of SORNA of 1999, as amended, are not punitive as applied to persons sentenced after the statute's effective date, these constitutional provisions are not implicated. *See, e.g., Thun v. State of Maine, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66670 at 53 (D. Me. 2009) ("Thun has no viable Eighth Amendment challenge to his registration . . . requirements.") (citing Cutshall v. Sundquist, 193 F.3d 466, 477 (6th Cir. 1999) ("We have already concluded that the Act does not impose punishment; [*126] it is regulatory in nature. Therefore, it does not violate the Eighth Amendment's prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment."); Johnson v. Terhune, 184 Fed. Appx. 622, 624 (9th Cir. 2006) ("Requiring appellant to register as a sex offender did not violate the Ex Post Facto Clause, Double Jeopardy Clause or Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause because sex offender registration is not punishment.")); see also Snyder v. State, 912 P.2d 1127, 1131 (Wyo. 1996) ("Our determination that registration is not punishment is dispositive of Snyder's claim that it is cruel and unusual punishment. . . ."). The two state court cases the plaintiffs cites in favor of their proportionality argument, People v. Dipiazza, 286 Mich. App. 137, 778 N.W.2d 264 (Mich. App. 2009) and People v. Carmony, 127 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 365 (Cal. Ct. App. 2005) therefore do not inform this court's analysis, since Dipiazza's "cruel and unusual punishment" analysis proceeded from its finding that the application of the sex offender registration requirements constituted punishment, 778 N.W.2d at 273[20]; and the Carmony court never addressed the issue of whether registration requirements constituted punishment[21] because it found that a prison term of [*127] twenty-five years to life, imposed under California's "Three Strikes" recidivism law, for failure to provide duplicate sex offender registration information was an unconstitutionally cruel and unusual sentence. Carmony, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 369, 370.

Because registration does not constitute punishment, it cannot be cruel and unusual punishment.[22] The plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on this ground is accordingly DENIED. The state defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED.

---

[20] The court would also note that Dipiazza's holding has subsequently been strongly limited by the Michigan Court of Appeals. See *State v. TD (In re TD), 292 Mich. App. 678, 823 N.W.2d 101, 2011 Mich. App. LEXIS 954 at 18 ("We note that the majority of the binding precedent holds that the SORA does not cause punishment, and the Dipiazza Court's holding to the contrary appears confined to the specific facts of that case.").

[21] And explicitly did not address the defendant's ex post facto claim, Carmony, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 370 n.6.

[22] The court also analyzed the proportionality of the registration requirements in its determination that SORNA of 1999, as amended, did not constitute punishment, see 11(7), supra.

IX. Maine's Declaration of Rights

The [*128] plaintiffs acknowledge that they "have woven" the rights guaranteed by Article I, Section 1 of the Maine Constitution into their due process arguments, but nonetheless assert this provision as an independent basis for a finding that SORNA of 1999, as amended, is "unconstitutional because it violates these rights disproportionately and without proven efficacy or justification." (Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. at 32.)

"We have traditionally exercised great restraint when asked to interpret our state constitution to afford greater protections than those recognized under the federal constitution." Bagley v. Raymond Sch, Dep't, 1999 ME 60, ¶ 13, 728 A. 2d 127, 132 (quoting State v. Buzzell, 617 A.2d 1016, 1018 n.4 (Me. 1992)). A review of recent state constitutional challenges brought by individual Maine citizens suggests that in many respects individual provisions guaranteed to all Maine citizens by the founders of our state have been interpreted extremely narrowly by the Law Court. Indeed, it might be argued that certain provisions of Maine's constitution have been rendered practical nullities as a result. Though it was difficult for this court to discern a consistent principle or principles [*129] at work in these decisions which would enable it to analyze Maine's Declaration of Rights to determine whether it provides unique protections to the plaintiffs in this case, it appears that the Law Court has looked both to the plain language of the constitutional provision and its location within the constitutional framework in determining whether Maine's Declaration of Rights provides greater or parallel protection to that available, under the federal constitution.

For example, in State v. Gilman, 2010 ME 35, 993 A.2d 14, the Court looked to the plain language of Article I, Section 9 of the Maine Constitution as a primary reason to interpret Maine's provision as providing no greater protection than that afforded citizens under the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The Court noted, "The plain language of section 9 requires that 'punishments shall be proportioned to the offense,'" while the provision "says nothing about the individual offender." Gilman, 2010 ME 35, ¶ 16, 993 A.2d at 20 (quoting Me. Const. art, I, § 9). Thus, despite the differences between the Maine and federal provisions, see, e.g., Harmelin v. Michigan, 501 U.S. 957, 985, 111 S. Ct. 2680, 115 L. Ed. 2d 836 (1991) ("We think it enough [*130] that those who framed and approved the Federal Constitution chose, for whatever reason, not to include within it the guarantee against disproportionate sentences that some State Constitutions contained."), and its recognition that "federal authority does not control our interpretation of our State Constitution," the Law Court analogized to federal jurisprudence, which "has not required an individualized determination that a mandatory punishment is appropriate except in death penalty cases." Gilman, 2010 ME 35, ¶ 18, 993 A.2d at 20-21. The Law Court thus effectively declined to interpret the Maine Declaration of Rights as providing greater protection than the federal constitution, without explicitly stating that the state and federal provisions barring cruel and unusual punishment were coextensive.

In Letalien, the majority noted that the wording of the federal and state ex post facto provisions was virtually the same, and then went on to consider where in the respective constitutions those provisions were located before determining that location of the provisions was essentially of no consequence: "The location of the federal and Maine ex post facto prohibitions within their respective [*131] constitutions is a function of history and the manner in which each constitution was developed, and does not establish that the Maine prohibition was intended to afford greater or different protection than the federal prohibition." Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 24, 985 A.2d at 14. Justice Silver pointed out in his concurring opinion, however, that

> The location of a provision within a constitution bears as much significance as the provision's text itself. Chief Justice Marshall recognized this point when construing the Necessary and Proper Clause in McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 419-20, 4 L. Ed. 579 (1819). Rebuffing Maryland's argument that the clause limited Congress's power to enact legislation, the Chief Justice deftly pointed to the clause's placement "among the powers of Congress, not among the limitations on those powers." Id. at 419. Had the framers intended "by this clause, to restrain the free use of means which might otherwise have been implied, that intention would have been inserted in another place." Id. at 420 (emphasis added).

Id. at ¶ 70, 985 A.2d at 28.

However, the Maine Constitution does retain individuality and vitality in one area. The Law Court over the last few [*132] decades has expanded protection for Maine citizens under the Maine Constitution in the area of voluntariness of confessions. Beginning with State v. Collins, 297 A.2d 620 (Me. 1972), the Maine Supreme Court recognized that federal constitutional authority "prescribed a mandatory minimum standard," and that "the States are free, pursuant to their own law, to adopt a higher standard. They may indeed differ as to the appropriate resolution of the values they find at stake." Collins, 297 A.2d at 626 (quotations omitted). Ten years later, in State v. Caouette, 446 A.2d 1120 (Me. 1982), Justice Wathen explored "[t]he relationship between federal and state control," reiterating "that federal decisions do not serve to establish the complete statement of controlling law but rather to delineate a constitutional minimum or universal mandate for the federal control of every State" and that "the States are free, pursuant to their own law, to adopt a higher standard." Caouette, 446 A.2d at 1122 (quotations omitted). The Caouette court noted "that the privilege exists in this case by virtue of the Maine Constitution" and that the federal constitutional provisions provide "a limitation upon the federal [*133] government and [have] no direct reference to state action except to the extent incorporated as a requirement of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment." Id. Since the federal constitutional provision provides only the minimum of permissible protections, "The maximum statement of the substantive content of the privilege and the requirements of [the constitutional provision] must be decided by this Court — as a matter of Maine law." Id. The majority in State v. Rees, 2000 ME 55, 748 A.2d 976, upheld Maine's more stringent standard of proof for establishing the voluntariness of statements established in Collins and Caouette, even after the federal precedent had explicitly held otherwise, reasoning, "Although we may look to the construction of federal constitutional provisions in U.S. Supreme Court cases and apply the same construction as far as possible, we are not confined to that construction when, as in Caouette, a more protective standard is warranted under Maine law." Rees, 2000 ME 55, ¶ 9, 748 A.2d at 979. The dissent, authored by current Chief Justice Saufley, agreed with the majority's assertion "that it is free to provide broader protections than those provided under the [*134] federal constitution," but qualified that agreement: "the Court may not create concepts in the Maine Constitution that are not actually included within its terms." 2000 ME 55, ¶ 40, 748 A.2d at 988; see also id. at ¶ 30, 748 A.2d at 985.

Given the potential for the Law Court to find greater protection for the individual under the Maine Constitution than that which has been found in the Federal Constitution, the court returns to the questions left unanswered in Doe v. District Attorney, 2007 ME 139, 932 A.2d 552. There, Justice Caulkins, writing for the majority, found that State v. Haskell, 2001 ME 154, 784 A.2d 4, did not foreclose re-analysis of SORNA of 1999 under the Mendoza-Martinez intent-effects factors, see Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 83 S. Ct. 554, 9 L. Ed. 2d 644, and that such analysis was not foreclosed by the United States Supreme Court's decision in Smith v. Doe, 123 S. Ct. 1140, 538 U.S. 84, 155 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2003). Doe, 2007 ME 139, ¶¶ 26, 35, 932 A.2d 552, 560, 563. The Law Court majority in Doe concluded that, given the significant changes to SORNA between 2001, when it had decided Haskell, and 2007, re-analysis was appropriate, and remanded the case to this court for factual development. Although the majority did [*135] explicitly find, "We do not have cause to reconsider our equating the Ex Post Facto Clause in the Maine Constitution with the same clause in the United States Constitution," id. at ¶ 26 n.6, 932 A.2d at 560 n.6, it also appeared to be troubled by the difference between SORNA as applied to Haskell, and the version of SORNA of 1999 at issue in 2007, which did not contain the provisions for "for waiver from registration 'for good cause shown,' 34-A M.R.S.A. § 11121(6)(D) (Supp. 1999), and, after five years, upon a showing of 'a reasonable likelihood that registration is no longer necessary and waiver . . . is appropriate.' 34-A M.R.S.A. § 11121(6)(C) (Supp. 1999)." Doe, 2007 ME 139, ¶ 35, 932 A.2d at 563.

> Doe would appear to have been a good candidate for the second waiver provision because, according to the complaint, he has been a productive citizen, a family man, and has no other arrests or convictions for sex offenses. Although the Supreme Court in Smith v. Doe was not troubled by the fact that the Alaska Act was not narrowly drawn, 538 U.S. at 102, the fact that a sex offender never has the ability to escape the registration requirements of the current SORNA, regardless of behavior, [*136] consequences, or contributions following the conviction, strikes us as having the capability to be excessive and as diverging from the purpose of protecting the public. Doe should be given the opportunity to develop the record and to prove, if he can, the excessiveness of SORNA in relationship to its stated goal of protecting the public from potentially dangerous registrants.

Id. (emphasis added).

Justices Alexander and Silver, concurring in the judgment, agreed that "review of the 1999 and subsequent amendments to the Sex Offender Registration and Notification Act (SORNA) . . . needs further development of the facts," but wrote separately to suggest that Maine's history, precedent, and Constitution would suggest a result different from that reached federally or in other states. Id. at ¶¶ 38-39, 932 A.2d at 563. Most significantly, these two justices took issue with the same alteration to SORNA of 1999 that had concerned the majority, the absence of a possibility for termination of registration requirements, but they found that it raised additional concerns in light of the unique construction of the Maine Constitution's Declaration of Rights:

> [T]he Maine Constitution's Declaration of [*137] Rights not only ensures the right of "enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing and protecting property," it also protects the right of "pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness." ME. CONST., art. I, § 1. This clause, which does not appear in the Federal Constitution, demonstrates our State's commitment to providing citizens, even those who have committed heinous acts, the possibility of a secure and content existence. For lifetime registrants, the SORNA takes away that possibility and the prospect of redemption.

Id. at ¶ 63, 932 A.2d at 570.

If the Law Court were to revisit this argument and find such a right exists under the Maine Constitution's Declaration of Rights, it would be in good company. New Jersey's constitution, like Maine's, provides, "All persons are by nature free and independent, and have certain natural and unalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and of pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness." N.J. Const., Art. I, Para. 1 (2011). New Jersey's highest court, balancing the protection of the public from sex offenders with the individual rights guaranteed [*138] by the constitution, noted; > [Laws limiting the amount of notification information available on registrants based upon their likelihood to reoffend] do not represent the slightest departure from our State's or our country's fundamental belief that criminals, convicted and punished, have paid their debt to society and are not to be punished further. . . . The laws represent a conclusion by the Legislature that those convicted sex offenders who have successfully, or apparently successfully, been integrated into their communities, adjusted their lives so as to appear no more threatening than anyone else in the neighborhood, are entitled not to be disturbed simply because of that prior offense and conviction; but a conclusion as well, that the characteristics of some of them, and the statistical information concerning them, make it clear that despite such integration, reoffense is a realistic risk, and knowledge of their presence a realistic protection against it.

Doe v. Poritz, 142 N.J. 1, 662 A.2d 367, 372-73 (N.J. 1995). Thus, another state has given meaning to its constitutional provision by requiring individualized risk assessment in order to best balance public safety and individual rights and [*139] privileges. See also, e.g., State v. Guidry, 105 Haw. 222, 96 P.3d 242, 250 (Haw. 2004) (finding, under the Hawaii Constitution, "absent a meaningful opportunity for dispensation, the subjection of offenders, who have already served their criminal sentences, to lifetime requirements is beyond the scope of permissible regulation. Thus, we hold that requiring lifetime registration of all sex offenders without qualification, noncompliance with which is punishable by criminal penalties, implicates a liberty interest that cannot be curtailed absent procedural protections"); cf. Poe v. Sex Offender Registry Bd., 456 Mass. 801, 926 N.E.2d 187, 195 n. 10 (Mass. 2010) ("The [statutory amendment providing indigent sex offenders a statutory right to counsel in board classification hearings] followed several decisions of this court holding parts of the Sex Offender and Community Notification Act unconstitutional for failing to comport with due process requirements. Taken together, these decisions required the board to provide sex offenders with individualized, evidentiary hearings before requiring registration or assigning a final classification level.") (citing Doe v. Attorney Gen., 430 Mass. 155, 715 N.E.2d 37, 40 (1999) (individualized [*140] hearing required for persons adjudicated delinquent or convicted under G. L. c. 265, § 23, before obligation to register as sex offender could be imposed); Doe, Sex Offender Registry Bd. No. 972 v. Sex Offender Registry Bd., 428 Mass. 90, 697 N.E.2d 512, 516-17, 520 (1998) (classification hearing to be held before board, rather than Superior Court; board must show appropriateness of classification by preponderance of evidence and make specific findings supporting classification); Doe v. AG., 426 Mass. 136, 686 N.E.2d 1007, 1012-14 (1997) (presumptive level one sex offender entitled to evidentiary hearing before registration requirement imposed and private information disclosed)). Other states have found protections for registering sex offenders under various provisions within their state constitutions as well. See, e.g., Blakemore v. State, 925 N.E.2d 759 (Ind. 2010) (ex post facto as to plea bargain); Doe v. Alaska, 189 P.3d 999 (Alas. 2008) (ex post facto).

The reasons supporting a finding of a right to an individualized determination, like the "opportunity to . . . be relieved of the duty as was permitted under" SORA of 1991 and SORNA of 1995, Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 62, 985 A.2d at 26, are numerous. [*141] The plaintiffs have made many of those arguments under the other headings of their memorandum, in areas of law where the court has been constrained by the coextensive nature of Maine and federal precedent, resulting in a narrowly defined analysis. The plaintiffs include several individuals who claim to have been rehabilitated and some of whom have gone years or decades without re-offense, some of whom pled guilty and waived their rights to a determination of their guilt without the idea that they would be subject to registration without the opportunity to establish rehabilitation and without the opportunity to rejoin their communities after having served their criminal sentences. This court would also note the obvious concern with the spectacle of aged, and even demented, registrants finding their way to the appropriate law enforcement agencies to comply with this law.

The court finds the plaintiffs' argument compelling in regards to Maine's Declaration of Rights. This unique state constitutional provision may require an individualized opportunity for lifetime sex offender registrants to prove their rehabilitation and achieve civic redemption, or to petition for termination of the registration [*142] requirements once an offender reaches a certain stage of life. However, given the challenges presented in analyzing coextensiveness, and the incomplete explication in recent decisions from the Law Court about this specific provision, this court declines to declare that such a right exists. The Law Court must determine if Justices Alexander and Silver were correct in their interpretation of this extraordinary provision in our state's constitution. See Doe v. District Attorney, 2007 ME 139, ¶¶ 42, 63-64, 932 A.2d at 564, 570.

The Law Court may indeed find that the language in Article 1 Section 1 is so extraordinary in its plain language (Gilman) and its location (Letalien (Silver, J., concurring)), that such a right should be recognized, and that such a right is a concept not simply being "created" by the Court from terms not contained within the Maine Constitution (Rees (Saufley, J., dissenting)). This court declines, for reasons stated above, to recognize or define this right to strive toward rehabilitation and redemption, or one that might "provide the possibility of a secure and content existence." *But cf. In Re: Joseph v. Gardner, 1987 Me. Super. LEXIS 233 at *22-37 (finding, originating [*143] at the superior court level, that Maine's Declaration of Rights, "especially as contained in our 'Natural rights' enumerated in the very first section encompass[es] a person's right to make decisions effecting his person and life," including, ultimately, the right to end life-sustaining medical treatment).[23]

The Court therefore denies plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment under Article 1, Section 1 of the Maine Constitution, and grants State defendants' motion [*144] under this same state constitutional provision.

X. Improper use of guilty plea

"[A] plea bargain is contractual in nature and is subject to contract-law standards." United States v. Partida-Parra, 859 F.2d 629, 633 (9th Cir. 1988) (quotation omitted); see also State v. Murphy, 2004 ME 118, ¶ 8, 861 A.2d 657, 661 ("Plea agreements are contracts and contract principles apply when interpreting them."). However, it is also true that a "voluntary and intelligent plea of guilty by an accused is a self-supplied conviction precluding trial of the issue of guilt or innocence and authorizing in and of itself the imposition of the punishment fixed by law. It is an efficient waiver of all defenses other than those jurisdictional in nature." State v. Huntley, 676 A.2d 501, 503 (Me. 1996) (quoting Dow v. State, 275 A.2d 815, 818 (Me. 1971)).

[23] The privacy rights that the Joseph court found to sustain its decision regarding the right to die under the Maine Declaration of Rights do not affect this court's analysis that the plaintiffs here have no privacy right in the information that the registry makes publicly available through its website. While Joseph's analysis of the right to privacy concerned autonomy over one's own body and stemmed from the authority of Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 484-485, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1965) and cases following it, the plaintiffs here have not offered any precedent to support their alleged right to privacy and counter the weight of authority upholding internet posting of a registrant's identifying information in the interest of public safety.

The plaintiffs agree that this argument is, in fact, a recasting of their ex post facto argument, in that they assert that expanding the consequences of a plea violates the plea agreements to the extent the expansion constitutes punishment. (Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. and Opp. to State Defs. Cross-Mot. for Summ. J. at 22.) The plaintiffs do not appear to argue [*145] for the opportunity to withdraw their pleas under a voluntariness analysis; indeed, withdrawal would not be a great advantage to them, as they have already served the sentence for the crime to which they have pled. Cf. Price v. State, 2010 ME 66, ¶¶ 14-16, 1 A.3d 426 (Alexander, J., concurring) ("The relief afforded a post-conviction petitioner who successfully challenges a conviction through a claim of inadequate advice about potential consequences of the conviction is to vacate the conviction, not to dismiss the charge. . . . With the conviction vacated, the underlying case returns to the active criminal trial docket, and the petitioner is placed in the same position he or she was in immediately before the plea proceeding . . . . If the petitioner is again convicted after either a trial or another plea, he or she is subject to a renewed sentence, but . . . [h]aving successfully attacked the conviction and the resulting sentence, the petitioner loses the benefit of any bargain with the prosecution or the court that led to the original conviction and sentence.").

"The longstanding test for determining the validity of a guilty plea is whether the plea represents a voluntary and intelligent [*146] choice among the alternative courses of action open to the defendant." Laferriere v. State, 1997 ME 169, ¶ 8, 697 A.2d 1301, 1305 (quotations omitted). "A plea is valid if it is made voluntarily with knowledge of the elements of the crime, the penalty that might be imposed and the constitutional rights relinquished by foregoing trial." Id. at ¶ 10, 697 A.2d at 1306 (quotations omitted). "There is no requirement under Rule 11 that the court inform the defendant of each and every collateral consequence of his plea and the resulting sentence." Wellman v. State, 588 A.2d 1178, 1181 (Me. 1991), Collateral consequences arising from a criminal conviction can be very burdensome indeed, ranging from an inability to secure certain employment or occupational licensing, to forfeiture of property, presumptions of jeopardy in child protective proceedings, or even deportation from the United States. State v. Blakesley, 2010 ME 19, ¶¶ 26-29, 989 A.2d 746, 753.

The court has ruled above that, despite the potentially significant burdens that the plaintiffs must endure under SORNA of 1999, as amended, the court cannot conclude that the statute is so punitive in effect as to overcome its intent as civil [*147] police power legislation. Blakemore v. State, 925 N.E.2d 759, 762-63 (Ind. App. 2010) does not affect this court's analysis, as the Indiana Constitution apparently offers greater protection than our own, which remains coextensive with the federal provision. See Letalien, 2009 ME 130, ¶ 63, 985 A.2d at 26. As it is not punitive, the registration obligation under SORNA of 1999 represents a collateral consequence, rather than a direct consequence, of the plaintiffs' pleas.

Because the plaintiffs' plea argument is dependent upon the ex post facto argument[24] wherein the court has determined that the retroactive application of SORNA of 1999, as amended, to the plaintiffs does not constitute punishment, the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on this ground is DENIED; the state defendants' motion on this ground is GRANTED.

XI. Right to jury trial

The plaintiffs agree that if they are entitled to no hearing on dangerousness, then they are likewise not entitled a jury trial on the issue. (Reply Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. and Opp. to State Defs. Cross-Mot. for Summ. J. at 22.) As the court has analyzed the plaintiffs' procedural due process arguments before concluding that their arguments were foreclosed by Connecticut Department of Public Safety v. Doe, 538 U.S. 1, 123 S. Ct. 1160, 155 L. Ed. 2d 98 (2003) and the structure of Maine's law and sex offender registry, no further analysis is necessary on this point. The plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on the jury trial issue is DENIED; the state defendants motion for summary judgment on this point is GRANTED.

[24] Although the analysis was focused on the plaintiffs' ex post facto argument, the court notes that an argument potentially more compelling for a discrete and finite class of plaintiffs who pled guilty before a registry was even contemplated, is one of fundamental fairness under Maine's Declaration of Rights—a fairness and a right which this court has, above, acknowledged [*148] is for the Law Court alone to determine.

XII. Violation of the MCRA

On October 30, 2009, this court dismissed the plaintiffs' counts pursuing damages under the Maine Civil Rights Act (MCRA), 5 M.R.S. §§4681 - 4685, and under 42 U.S.C. §1983 against the State defendants in their official capacities. The court ruled that the plaintiffs had failed to state a claim because neither the MCRA nor §1983 permits recovery of damages from an action against the State. The plaintiffs assert, however, [*149] that the order failed to address the equitable relief to which all the plaintiffs, including those who have been removed from the registry, are entitled, including the restitution for the fees and costs relating to registration (including travel to and from the registration or verification location, passport photos, and time away from work) or to removal from the registry, which relief was not foreclosed by the court's order.

The state defendants counter that the plaintiffs have no right to recover, whether the recovery is deemed restitution or damages, against the State, and that qualified immunity or prosecutorial immunity would protect officers sued in their individual capacities. The state defendants advance a number of cases addressing the qualified immunity issue, despite the fact that the plaintiffs explicitly "seek their relief from the state defendants in their representative capacities, and in those capacities, they will not have to pay money out of their own pockets." (Reply Memo. of Mitchell Firm Pls. and Opp. to State Defs. Cross-Mot. for Summ. J. at 23.)

The MCRA provides a private right of action for breach of a constitutional right as follows:

> Whenever any person, whether [*150] or not acting under color of law, intentionally interferes or attempts to intentionally interfere by physical force or violence against a person, damage or destruction of property or trespass on property or by the threat of physical force or violence against a person, damage or destruction of property or trespass on property with the exercise or enjoyment by any other person of rights secured by the United States Constitution or the laws of the United States or of rights secured by the Constitution of Maine or laws of the State or violates section 4684-B, the person whose exercise or enjoyment of these rights has been interfered with, or attempted to be interfered with, may institute and prosecute in that person's own name and on that person's own behalf a civil action for legal or equitable relief.

5 M.R.S. §4682(1-A) (2011). The statutory scheme also provides for recovery of attorneys' fees and costs: "In any civil action under this chapter, the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party, other than the State, reasonable attorney's fees and costs, and the State shall be liable for attorney's fees and costs in the same manner as a private person." 5 M.R.S. §4683 (2011). [*151] 42 U.S.C. §1983 (2011) similarly provides:

> Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress, except that in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such officer's judicial capacity, injunctive relief shall not be granted unless a declaratory decree was violated or declaratory relief was unavailable. For the purposes of this section, any Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a statute of the District of Columbia.

Attorneys' fees are also potentially available for violations of §1983, as provided by 42 U.S.C. § 1988(b):

> In any action or proceeding to enforce a provision of sections . . . [42 USCS §§ 1981-1983, . . . the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party, other [*152] than the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs, except that in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such > officer's judicial capacity such officer shall not be held liable for any costs, including attorney's fees, unless such action was clearly in excess of such officer's jurisdiction.

The court has already ruled that the plaintiffs cannot recover damages under either statute. This court has previously thoroughly evaluated the possibility of obtaining financial relief from a state entity under § 1983:

> [A] narrow exception to Eleventh Amendment immunity for certain suits seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against unconstitutional actions taken by state officers in their official capacities exists, where the award sought is prospective in nature. See Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 278, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986); Green v. Mansour, 474 U.S. 64, 68-69, 106 S. Ct. 423, 88 L. Ed. 2d 371 (1985); Dirrane v. Brookline Police Dep't, 315 F.3d 65, 71 (1st Cir. 2002) ("Yet in the sovereign immunity context, the Supreme Court has repeatedly said that an official who acts unconstitutionally can be enjoined even though the state is immune from damages."); Henrietta D. v. Bloomberg, 331 F.3d 261, 287 (2d Cir. 2003) [*153] ("The Eleventh Amendment, however, does not preclude suits against state officers in their official capacity for prospective injunctive relief to prevent a continuing violation of federal law."). This exception appears to apply in the state sovereign immunity context.[25] See, e.g., [Moody v. Comm'r, Dep't of Human Servs., 661 A.2d 156, at 158-159 (Me. 1995)] (recognizing that where an award can "lead to no relief that is prospective, but only to monetary awards from the state treasury for past violations of federal law[,]" sovereign immunity applies); Wellman v. Department of Human Services., 574 A.2d 879, 884 n. 11 (Me. 1990) (precluding, on grounds of sovereign immunity, anything but prospective relief). The doctrine applies only against state officials sued in their official capacities, not against states or state agencies. Larsen v. State Employees' Ret. Sys., 553 F. Supp. 2d 403, 412 (M.D. Pa. 2008).
>
> The United States Supreme Court has recognized that the difference between retrospective and prospective relief "will not in many instances be that between day and night." Edelman [v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 667, 94 S. Ct. 1347, 39 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1974)]. The pivotal question is whether the relief "serves directly to bring an [*154] end to a present violation of federal law," by governing an officer's future conduct. Whalen v. Mass. Trial Court, 397 F.3d 19, 29 (1st Cir. 2005), If so, relief is not barred "even though accompanied by a substantial ancillary effect on the state treasury." Papasan, 478 U.S. at 278. However, relief that is "tantamount to an award of damages for a past violation of. . . law, even though styled as something else," is barred by sovereign immunity. Id.

Reed v. Bd. of Trs.., 2008 Me. Super. LEXIS 214, at *14-*16. See also Wyman v. Secretary of State, 625 A.2d 307, 310 (Me. 1993) ("Although claims for damages against states or state officials acting in their official capacity are not authorized by section 1983, Will v. Michigan Dep't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 71, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 109 S. Ct. 2304 (1989) (states are not 'persons' for purposes of section 1983), claims for injunctive and ancillary relief pursuant to section 1983 and section 1988 may be maintained against state officials acting in their official capacity.") (quoting Will, 491 U.S. at 71 n.10; Lett v. Magnant, 965 F.2d 251, 255 (7th Cir. 1992); Committee for the First Amendment v. Campbell, 962 F.2d 1517, 1519 n.1 (10th Cir. 1992)). [*155] In Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 98 S. Ct. 2565, 57 L. Ed. 2d 522 (1978), the Supreme Court explored the boundaries of what would constitute prospective relief in terms of a monetary award. The Court awarded attorneys' fees as an enforcement ancillary to prospective relief (id. at 691-92), and also awarded costs, reasoning;

> Unlike ordinary "retroactive" relief such as damages or restitution, an award of costs does not compensate the plaintiff for the injury that first brought him into court. Instead, the award reimburses him for a portion of the expenses he incurred in seeking prospective relief. (An award of costs will almost invariably be incidental to an award of prospective relief, for costs are generally awarded only to prevailing parties, see Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 54 (d), and only prospective relief can be successfully pursued by an individual in a suit against a State.)

---

[25] This analysis is distinct, since "the Eleventh Amendment does not apply in state courts." Will v. Michigan Dep't of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 63-64, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45 (1989) (quoting Maine v. Thiboutot, 448 U.S. 1, 9, n. 7, 100 S. Ct. 2502, 65 L. Ed. 2d 555 (1980)). "Although the Eleventh Amendment is not directly applicable to state courts, the doctrine of sovereign immunity similarly [*156] protects the states from actions [in] state courts." Moody v. Comm'r, Dept. of Human Servs., 661 A.2d 156, 158 n.3 (Me. 1995).

Id. at 695 n.24.

The court is thus clearly limited to awarding prospective relief, "serv[ing] directly to bring an end to a present violation of federal law," by governing an officer's future conduct, and only if the restitution the plaintiffs seek is ancillary to that relief will it be approved, since "[r]elief that is 'tantamount to an award of damages for a past violation of federal law, even though styled as something else,' is barred." Whalen, 397 F.3d at 29 (quoting Papasan, 478 U.S. at 278 (1986). The plaintiffs have not articulated any prospective relief to which they are entitled, any action that this court should take to "bring an end to a present violation of federal law." Instead, their action appears to seek compensation for a past violation. They ask the court to rule that SORNA of 1999—at the time of Letalien, prior to the Chapter 570 amendments—was an unconstitutional law, and this purported declaratory judgment is the prospective relief to which their restitution claims are ancillary. The court does not see a prospective remedy in the plaintiffs' requests. They [*157] request an award "tantamount to an award of damages for a past violation of federal law," which the court cannot grant. Because the analysis under the MCRA is equivalent to the analysis under §1983, see Jenness v. Nickerson, 637 A.2d 1152, 1158 (1994), the plaintiffs' motions for summary judgment under both the MCRA and the § 1983 counts are DENIED, and the state defendants' motions for summary judgment on both counts are GRANTED.

CONCLUSION

The court recognizes that there is much at stake for both the plaintiffs and defendants in this matter. The history of SORNA in Maine is one in which all branches of government have acted in an attempt to find constitutional ways to protect the public, especially children, from sex offenders. Clearly, the State of Maine has significant and legitimate reasons in monitoring the whereabouts and activities of sex offenders who reside throughout Maine. At the same time, the plaintiffs understandably argue that traditional notions of rehabilitation and civic redemption should be available to them at some point after they complete their sentences, particularly if they have gone on to become productive and law-abiding members of the community. Most of the [*158] plaintiffs in this matter were convicted in the 1980s. They served their sentences, then, decades later, suddenly came into unanticipated and onerous consequences from that conviction. The sting of injustice felt by those registrants is understandable, even more than for Letalien and his compatriots, who at least knew that registration would be a consequence of their convictions. However, in the absence of a finding of retroactive punitiveness or other specific constitutional violation, a regulation made for the public good under the legislature's police power must be upheld. The court owes the legislature that deference under the balance of powers. See State v. Haskell, 2008 ME 82, ¶ 5, 955 A.2d 737, 739 ("Great deference is given to social and economic regulations, and reasonableness is presumed because it is the job of the Legislature, not the courts, to balance competing interests.").

The plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment is DENIED as to all counts.

The state defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED as to all counts.

This Order shall be noted on the Docket as incorporated by reference pursuant to Rule 79(a) of the Maine Rules of Civil Procedure.

8/18/11

DATE

/s/ Michaela [*159] Murphy

SUPERIOR COURT JUSTICE

End of Document

[Emilia No Bolanos v. Alter]

United States District Court for the Southern District of California

August 19, 2011, Decided; August 19, 2011, Filed

CASE NO. 11-CV-00934-H (BGS)

Reporter
2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 166658 *

EMILIA NO BOLANOS; GLORIA BOLLENOS, Plaintiffs, vs. RICHARD C. ALTER; WEST 11th AVENUE TRUST #356; and HSBC FINANCIAL, Defendants.

Core Terms

allegations, accounting, debt collector, Rosenthal Act, violations, cause of action, unfair, motion to dismiss, Collection, detainer

Counsel: [*1] For Emillano Bolanos, Gloria Bollenos, Plaintiffs: Michael T Pines, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pines & Associates, Carlsbad, CA.

For Richard C. Alter, Defendant: Jean M Heinz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Heinz and Feinberg, San Diego, CA.

Judges: MARILYN L. HUFF, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: MARILYN L. HUFF

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND

On June 3, 2011, Defendant Richard C. Alter ("Defendant") filed a motion to dismiss Plaintiffs Emilia No Bolanos and Gloria Bollenos ("Plaintiffs")'s complaint. (Doc. No. 5.) On July 27, 2011, the Court determined this matter to be appropriate for resolution without oral argument and submitted it on the parties' papers pursuant to Local Civil Rule 7.1(d)(1). (Doc. No. 7.) On July 27, 2011, the Court also ordered Plaintiffs to file an opposition to Defendant's motion by August 8, 2011. (Id.) To date, Plaintiffs have not filed an opposition to Defendant's motion to dismiss.[1] For the reasons below, the Court GRANTS Defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint without prejudice.

Background

On April 30, 2011, Plaintiffs filed a class action complaint against Defendants Richard C. Alter, West 11th Avenue Trust #356, and HSBC Financial, alleging causes of action for (1) violations of the [*2] Federal Debt Collection Practices Act ("FDCPA"), 15 U.S.C. § 1692 ; (2) violations of California Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

[1] In addition, the Court notes that Plaintiffs' attorney, Michael T. Pines, has been deemed ineligible to practice law. (See Doc. No. 8.) On July 29, 2011, the Court ordered Mr. Pines to file a substitution of attorney or, in the alternative, for Plaintiff to appear pro se by August 8, 2011. (Id.) To date, no substitution has been filed.

("Rosenthal Act"), California Civil Code § 1788, et seq.; (3) violations of California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), California Business & Professions Code §§ 17200, et seq.; (4) to set aside trustee's sale; (5) to cancel trustee's deeds; (6) quiet title; (7) accounting. (Doc. No. 1.)

The Court takes judicial notice under Federal Rule of Evidence 201, of the following public documents: (1) Trustee's Sale Deed recorded May 13, 2010 as Doc. No. 2010-0242529 in the San Diego County Recorder's office (Doc. No. 6, Request for Judicial Notice ("RJN") Ex. 1); (2) Complaint filed on July 8, 2010 in Superior Court Case No. 37-2010-00039109-CL-UD-NC (Id. Ex. 2); (3) Complaint filed on July 8, 2010 in Superior Court Case No. 37-2010-00039110-CL-UD-NC (Id. Ex. 2); (4) Request for Default entered on July 15, 2010 in Superior Court case No. 37-2010-00039109-CL-UD-NC (Id. Ex. 3); (5) Request for Default entered on July 15, 2010 in Superior Court case No. 37-2010-00039110-CL-UD-NC (Id. Ex. 3); (6) Judgment entered on July 15, 2010 in Superior Court case No. 37-2010-00039109-CL-UD-NC (Id. Ex. 4); (7) Judgment entered on July 15, 2010 in Superior Court case No. 37-2010-00039110-CL-UD-NC (Id. [*3] Ex. 4); and (8) Notice of Ruling filed December 21, 2010 in Superior Court Case Nos 37-2010-00039109-CL-UD-NC and 37-2010-00039110-CL-UD-NC. (Id. Ex. 5.)

On May 12, 2010, Plaintiffs' property was sold at a trustee's sale to Defendant HSBC Financial as the foreclosing beneficiary for an undisclosed amount. (Doc. No. 6, RJN Ex. 1.) On July 8, 2010, Defendant Richard C. Alter instituted two unlawful detainer actions on behalf of West 11th Avenue Trust #356 and HSBC Financial in state court against the two Plaintiffs. (Id. Ex. 2.) On July 15, 2011, the state court entered judgment in the two cases in favor of West 11th Avenue Trust #356 and HSBC Financial and against the two Plaintiffs in this suit, Emilia No Bolanos and Gloria Bollenos. (Id. Ex. 4.)

Discussion

I. Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)

A motion to dismiss a complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in the complaint. Navarro v. Black, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001). Rule 8(a)(2) requires that a pleading stating a claim for relief contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." The function of this pleading requirement is to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." [*4] Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. A complaint does not "suffice if it tenders 'naked assertion[s]' devoid of 'further factual enhancement.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (citing 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1216, pp. 235-36 (3d ed. 2004)). "All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff. However, conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim." Epstein v. Wash. Energy Co., 83 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1996); see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

II. Plaintiffs' Complaint

A. Violations of the FDCPA and the Rosenthal Act

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant violated the FDCPA and the Rosenthal Act. (Doc. No. 1 ¶¶ 60-74.) Defendant argues that Plaintiffs' two causes of action should be dismissed because those two Acts do not apply to him since he is not a "debt collector." [*5] (Doc. No. 5-1 at 4, 7.)

"To be held liable for violation of the FDCPA, a defendant must-as a threshold requirement-fall within the Act's definition of 'debt collector.'" Izenberg v. ETS Services, LLC, 589 F. Supp. 2d 1193, 1198 (C.D. Cal. 2008) (citing Heintz v. Jenkins, 514 U.S. 291, 294, 115 S. Ct. 1489, 131 L. Ed. 2d 395 (1995)); see also, e.g., Romine v. Diversified Collection Servs., 155 F.3d 1142, 1146 (9th Cir.1998). The federal FDCPA defines "debt collector" as one who collects consumer debts owed to another. 15 U.S.C. § 1692(a)(6)(A).

Similarly, the Rosenthal Act defines a "debt collector" as "any person who, in the ordinary course of business, regularly, on behalf of himself or herself of others, engages in debt collection." Cal. Civ. Code § 1788.2(c). In addition, the Rosenthal Act specifically excludes attorneys from its definition of debt collectors. Id. ("the term 'debt collector' . . . does not include any attorney or counsel at law").

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant is a "debt collector" under both the FDCPA and the Rosenthal Act. (Doc. No. 1 ¶ 32.) However, Plaintiffs provide no factual allegations to support this legal conclusion. Plaintiffs do not allege that Defendant collects consumer debts owed to another. Plaintiffs only allege that Defendant instituted an unlawful detainer action against them, which is insufficient by itself to make Defendant a "debt collector" under the FDCPA. See Cook v. Hamrick, 278 F. Supp. 2d 1202, 1204 (D. Colo. 2003). In addition, as an attorney Defendant is specifically [*6] exempted from the definition of "debt collector" under the Rosenthal Act. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1788.2(c). Accordingly, based on the allegations in the complaint, Defendant does not qualify as a "debt collector" under the FDCPA or the Rosenthal Act, and the Court GRANTS Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' FDCPA Act and Rosenthal Act claims.

B. Violations of the UCL

Plaintiff alleges a cause of action for violation of California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §17200, et seq. (Doc. No. 1, Compl. ¶¶ 62-65.) Defendant argues that this claim should be dismissed because his participation in the eviction process was not unfair, unlawful, or fraudulent. (Doc. No. 5-1 at 8-9.)

The UCL prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §17200. Under the UCL, conduct is deceptive or misleading if it is likely to deceive an ordinary consumer. Williams v. Gerber Products Co., 552 F.3d 934, 938 (9th Cir. 2008). An act is "unlawful" if it violates an underlying state or federal statute or common law. Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). An act is "unfair" if it "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly [*7] threatens or harms competition." Id. at 187.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)'s heightened pleading standards apply to claims for violation of the UCL that are grounded in fraud. Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009). Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9, a plaintiff must plead fraud with particularity. "Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirement applies to state-law causes of action." Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103 (9th Cir. 2003). "Averments of fraud must be accompanied by 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." Id. at 1106 (quoting Cooper v. Pickett, 137 F.3d 616, 627 (9th Cir.1997)).

Plaintiffs' allegations only provide a conclusory statement that Defendant violated the UCL, (Doc. No. 1 ¶ 9), and they are insufficient to establish a claim for violation of the UCL. Plaintiffs do not state which of the three prongs they are bringing their claim under. However, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' allegations are insufficient under any of the three prongs. Plaintiffs do not state what, if any, fraudulent statements were made by Defendant or provide the who, what, when, where, and how of any such statements. These allegations fall well short of Rule 9's heightened pleading standards. Plaintiffs also do not allege what unlawful practices Defendant engaged in. Plaintiffs only allege that Defendant instituted an unlawful detainer action against them, (Doc. No. 1 ¶ 33.) which is a lawful practice [*8] under California Code of Civil Procedure section 1161, et seq. Finally, Plaintiffs also do not allege what conduct Defendant engaged in that was unfair, and or how it was unfair under the UCL. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiff's UCL claim.

C. Accounting

Plaintiffs allege a claim against Defendant for accounting. (Doc. No. 1 ¶¶ 92-95.) Defendant argues that Plaintiffs' claim for accounting should be dismissed because there is no fiduciary relationship between an unlawful detainer attorney and a tenant. (Doc. No. 5-1 at 9-10.)

"A cause of action for an accounting requires a showing that a relationship exists between the plaintiff and defendant that requires an accounting, and that some balance is due the plaintiff that can only be ascertained by an accounting." Teselle v. McLoughlin, 173 Cal. App. 4th 156, 179, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 (2009). In the complaint, Plaintiffs do not allege that any relationship existed between Plaintiffs and Defendant that would require an accounting. In addition, Plaintiffs do not allege that there is some balance due to them. Plaintiffs only allege they do not owe Defendants the amounts claimed in the unlawful detainer action. (Doc. No. 1 ¶¶ 93-94.) Plaintiffs may not bring an action for accounting absent an allegation that [*9] Defendant owes them money. See Teselle, 173 Cal. App. 4th at 179; *Kulberg v. Wash. Mut. Bank, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40458, at 18 (S.D. Cal. 2011). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' accounting claim.

Conclusion

For the reasons above, the Court GRANTS Defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint without prejudice. The Court grants Plaintiffs 30 days from the date of this order to amend or cure the deficiencies—if they can—in an amended complaint. The Clerk of Court is instructed to send a copy of this order to Plaintiffs personally at their last known address, noted in the complaint: 356 West 11th Ave., Escondido, California, 92025.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: August 19, 2011

/s/ Marilyn L. Huff

MARILYN L. HUFF, District Judge

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

End of Document

FTC v. Lundbeck, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

June 16, 2011, Submitted; August 19, 2011, Filed

No. 10-3458/3459

Reporter
650 F.3d 1236 *; 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 17231 ; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,570

Federal Trade Commission; State of Minnesota, by and through its Attorney General, Lori Swanson, Plaintiffs - Appellants, v. Lundbeck, Inc., Defendant - Appellee, Ben Venue Laboratories, Inc., Intervenor Below.American Antitrust Institute; States of Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas, Iowa, Maryland, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, and West Virginia, Amici Curiae on behalf of Appellants.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota.

FTC v. Lundbeck, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95365 (D. Minn., Aug. 31, 2010)

Core Terms

relevant market, neonatologists, drugs, district court, consumers, cross-elasticity, fact-findings, constrain, marginal, prices, clearly erroneous, antitrust, generic

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN1[ ] Market Definition, Relevant Market

The determination of the relevant market in an antitrust case is an issue for the trier of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Civil Procedure > Trials > Bench Trials

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Questions of Fact & Law

HN2[ ] Market Definition, Relevant Market

After a bench trial in an antitrust case, a court of appeals reviews for clear error the district court's fact-findings supporting its ultimate determination of the existence of a relevant market.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Bench Trials

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Questions of Fact & Law

HN3[] Trials, Bench Trials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a) does not purport to exclude certain categories of factual findings from the clearly erroneous standard of review. It does not divide findings of fact into those that deal with "ultimate" and those that deal with "subsidiary" facts. Where there are two permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous. If the district court's fact-findings are plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety, they must be affirmed, regardless of how a court of appeals might have weighed the evidence in the first instance. When a factual finding is supported by substantial evidence, it is not clearly erroneous.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > US Federal Trade Commission

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

To prevail on an antitrust claim, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) bears the burden of identifying a relevant market. The relevant product market is a question of fact, which the plaintiff bears the burden of proving. The determination of a relevant market is a necessary predicate to the finding of an antitrust violation. The relevant market is a threshold determination under the FTC Act and the Clayton Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Minnesota antitrust law is generally interpreted consistently with federal antitrust law.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

HN6[] Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

An unjust enrichment claim requires allegations that a party was unjustly enriched in the sense that the "unjustly" could mean illegally or unlawfully.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN7[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

Without a well-defined relevant market, a court cannot determine the effect that an allegedly illegal act has on competition. Antitrust claims often rise or fall on the definition of a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN8[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

For purposes of an antitrust claim, a relevant market consists of both a geographic market and a product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN9[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

For purposes of an antitrust claim, the outer boundaries of a product market can be identified by the reasonable interchangeability, or cross-elasticity of demand, between the product and possible substitutes for it. Determining a product market requires identifying the choices available to consumers, focusing on whether consumers will shift from one product to the other in response to changes in their relative cost. Market definition focuses solely on demand substitution factors--i.e., possible consumer responses.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Cross-price elasticity is essential to market definition in an antitrust case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN11[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

In determining the relevant market in an antitrust case, a district court need not consider a hypothetical market, especially where the plaintiff offers no evidence about such a hypothetical market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN12[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

For purposes of an antitrust claim, functionally similar products may be in separate product markets, depending on the facts of the case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN13[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

For purposes of determining the relevant market in an antitrust case, whether there are enough marginal consumers to constrain prices is a factual question that requires analyzing consumer-demand and profit-margins. Marginal consumer substitution and profit-margins must be supported with more than "common sense."

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Evidence > ... > Expert Witnesses > Credibility of Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Weight & Sufficiency

HN14[] Jury Trials, Province of Court & Jury

The question of an expert's credibility and the weight to be accorded the expert testimony are ultimately for the trier of fact to determine.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Reversible Errors

Evidence > ... > Expert Witnesses > Credibility of Witnesses > General Overview

HN15[] Standards of Review, Reversible Errors

A court of appeals will not disturb a district court's decision to credit the reasonable testimony of one of two competing experts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN16[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Industry recognition is a factor in a product market definition in an antitrust case. A submarket may be identified by a number of a factors, including industry or public recognition of its separate economic character. It is not, however, dispositive.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN17[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

If there are two permissible views of evidence, the factfinder's choice between them is not clearly erroneous.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN18[] Appeals, Standards of Review

It is precisely the job of a district court to consider the evidence offered by both sides and render a judgment. Whether a court of appeals would come to the same conclusion is irrelevant.

Counsel: For State of Minnesota, Plaintiff - Appellant (10-3458): Mark S. Hegedus, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Washington, DC; Karen Diane Olson, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Benjamin Velzen, Assistant Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, St. Paul, MN.

For Lundbeck, Inc., Defendant - Appellee (10-3458): Ashley M. Bauer, Anamika Ghista, Alfred C. Pfeiffer, Jr., Scott D. Russell, Karen E. Silverman, LATHAM & WATKINS, San Francisco, CA; Sean M. Berkowitz, LATHAM & WATKINS, Chicago, IL; Steve Gaskins, FLYNN & GASKINS, Minneapolis, MN.

For Ben Venue Laboratories, Inc., Intervenor below (10-3458, 10-3459): Dana M. Lenahan, NILAN & JOHNSON, Minneapolis, MN.

For American Antitrust Institute, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3459): W. Joseph Bruckner, LOCKRIDGE & GRINDAL, Minneapolis, MN; Christopher L. Sagers, CLEVELAND STATE UNIVERSITY, Cleveland, OH.

For State of Illinois, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Lisa Madison, Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Chicago, IL.

For State of Arkansas, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Dustin McDaniel, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Little [2] Rock, AR.

For State of Iowa, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Tom Miller, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Des Moines, IA.

For State of Maryland, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Douglas F. Gansler, Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Baltimore, MD.

For State of Nevada, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Catherine Cortez Masto, Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Carson City, NV.

For State of New Mexico, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Gary King, Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Santa Fe, MN.

For State of North Dakota, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Wayne Stenehjem, Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Bismarck, ND.

For State of South Dakota, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Marty J. Jackley, U.S. Attorney, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Pierre, SD.

For State of West Virginia, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Darrell V. McGraw, Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Charleston, WV.

For State of Missouri, Amicus on Behalf of Appellant (10-3458, 10-3459): Andrew M. Hartnett, Anne E. Schneider, Assistant Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S [3] OFFICE, Jefferson City, MO; Gary King, Attorney General, ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, Santa Fe, MN.

For Federal Trade Commission, Plaintiff - Appellant (10-3459): Robert S. Canterman, John F. Daly, Deputy General Counsel, Mark S. Hegedus, Markus H. Meier, Jon J. Nathan, Martha Oppenheim, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Washington, DC.

For Lundbeck, Inc., Defendant - Appellee (10-3459): Ashley M. Bauer, Alfred C. Pfeiffer, Jr., Scott D. Russell, Karen E. Silverman, LATHAM & WATKINS, San Francisco, CA; Sean M. Berkowitz, LATHAM & WATKINS, Chicago, IL; Steve Gaskins, FLYNN & GASKINS, Minneapolis, MN.

Judges: Before COLLOTON and BENTON, Circuit Judges, and KOPF[1] District Judge. KOPF, District Judge, concurring.

Opinion by: BENTON

Opinion

[*1238] BENTON, Circuit Judge.

The Federal Trade Commission and Minnesota (collectively the FTC) sued Lundbeck, Inc., alleging its acquisition of the drug NeoProfen violated the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, the Minnesota Antitrust Law of 1971, and unjustly enriched Lundbeck. After a bench trial, the district court[2] ruled for Lundbeck based on the FTC's failure [4] to identify a relevant market.

Patent ductus arteriosus (PDA) is a life-threatening heart condition that primarily affects low-birth-weight, usually premature, babies. There are two primary treatments: pharmacological and surgical. Pharmacological treatment (a drug) is the first-line treatment; surgical ligation is considered after other treatments are ineffective. Approximately 30,000 cases of PDA are treated with drugs in the U.S. yearly.

When this case was brought, there were two FDA-approved drugs for PDA: Indocin IV and NeoProfen. (In 2010, two generic alternatives to Indocin IV were introduced by Bedford Laboratories and APP Pharmaceuticals, LLC.) Indocin IV-an off-patent, injectable drug with the active ingredient indomethacin-has been FDA-approved for PDA since 1985. NeoProfen-a patented injectable drug with the active ingredient ibuprofen lysine-has been FDA-approved for PDA since 2006. Because their active ingredients differ, Indocin IV and NeoProfen are not bioequivalents and have different side effects.

Lundbeck purchased the rights to Indocin IV from Merck & Co. in 2005, and the rights [5] to NeoProfen from Abbott Laboratories in 2006 (before it was put on the market). Until generics appeared in 2010, Lundbeck owned all the drugs for PDA.

When Lundbeck purchased Indocin IV, Merck charged $77.77 per treatment. Lundbeck immediately raised the price of Indocin IV. Two days after acquiring the rights to NeoProfen, Lundbeck raised the price thirteen-fold. By 2008, the price of Indocin IV settled at $1614.44. When Lundbeck introduced NeoProfen in 2006, it charged $1450 per NeoProfen treatment, and its price eventually settled at $1522.50.

Both Indocin IV and NeoProfen are hospital-based drugs dispensed and used in inpatient care. Most hospitals assemble a formulary-a list of recommended drugs-to streamline purchasing. The formulary-listed drugs are chosen by pharmacy and therapeutics committees who often seek input from specialist physicians. Some hospitals use closed formularies (special approval is required to prescribe non-listed drugs). Others apply open formularies (physicians can prescribe non-listed drugs at their discretion). Hospitals use inclusion in the formulary to extract better prices from sellers of clinically-substitutable drugs.

[*1239] After a bench trial, the district [6] court determined that the FTC did not meet its burden to prove that Indocin IV and NeoProfen were in the same product market and thus failed to identify a relevant market.

HN1[] "The determination of the relevant market is an issue for the trier of fact." Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Servs., 823 F.2d 1215, 1232 (8th Cir. 1987). See also General Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 805 (8th Cir. 1987). HN2[] After a bench trial, this court reviews for clear error the district court's fact-findings supporting its ultimate determination of the existence of a relevant market. See Community Publishers, Inc. v. DR

[1] The Honorable Richard G. Kopf, United States District Judge for the District of Nebraska, sitting by designation.

[2] The Honorable Joan N. Ericksen, United States District Judge for the District of Minnesota.

Partners, 139 F.3d 1180, 1183-84 (8th Cir. 1998)*; see also Pullman-Standard v. Swint, 456 U.S. 273, 287, 102 S. Ct. 1781, 72 L. Ed. 2d 66 (1982)* (noting that HN3[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a) does not "purport to exclude certain categories of factual findings" from the clearly erroneous standard of review. "[I]t does not divide findings of fact into those that deal with 'ultimate' and those that deal with 'subsidiary' facts"). "Where there are two permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous." Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 574, 105 S. Ct. 1504, 84 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1985). If the district court's [7] fact-findings are "plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety," they must be affirmed, regardless of how this court might have weighed the evidence in the first instance. Moore v. Forrest City Sch. Dist., 524 F.3d 879, 884 (8th Cir. 2008) (quotations omitted). When a factual finding is supported by substantial evidence, it is not clearly erroneous. Dixon v. Crete Med. Clinic, P.C., 498 F.3d 837, 847 (8th Cir. 2007)*.

The FTC argues that this court should review the district court's judgment de novo because the court "applied an incorrect legal standard" by failing to "examin[e] all the pertinent factors" determining a relevant market. United States v. Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d 296, 303, 304 (8th Cir. 1976)*. See also Universal Title Ins. Co. v. United States, 942 F.2d 1311, 1314 (8th Cir. 1991)*, quoting Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of United States, Inc., 466 U.S. 485, 501, 104 S. Ct. 1949, 80 L. Ed. 2d 502 (1984)* (despite Rule 52(a), a court can correct "a finding of fact that is predicated on a misunderstanding of the governing rule of law"). Contrary to the FTC's argument, the district court examined the pertinent factors determining a relevant market, including the "readiness and ability of consumers [8] to turn to reasonable alternatives to the product in question." Empire Gas Corp., 537 F.2d at 303*. Though cloaked as a legal argument, the FTC really challenges the district court's weighing of the relevant market factors, which this court reviews for clear error.

HN4[] To prevail, the FTC bears the burden of identifying a relevant market. See HDC Med., Inc. v. Minntech Corp., 474 F.3d 543, 547 (8th Cir. 2007)* ("The relevant product market is a question of fact, which the plaintiff bears the burden of proving."); see also FTC v. Tenet Health Care Corp., 186 F.3d 1045, 1051 (8th Cir. 1999)* ("The determination of a relevant market is a necessary predicate to the finding of an antitrust violation."); FTC v. Freeman Hosp., 69 F.3d 260, 268 (8th Cir. 1995)* (relevant market is a threshold determination under the FTC Act and the Clayton Act); Lorix v. Crompton Corp., 736 N.W.2d 619, 626 (Minn. 2007)* (HN5[] "Minnesota antitrust law is generally interpreted consistently with federal antitrust law."); First Nat'l Bank of St. Paul v. Ramier, 311 N.W.2d 502, 504 (Minn. 1981)* (HN6[] an unjust enrichment claim requires allegations "that a party was unjustly [1240] enriched in the sense that the 'unjustly' could mean illegally [9] or unlawfully"). HN7[] "Without a well-defined relevant market, a court cannot determine the effect that an allegedly illegal act has on competition." Southeast Missouri Hosp. v. C.R. Bard, Inc., 642 F.3d 608, 613 (8th Cir. 2011). "Antitrust claims often rise or fall on the definition of a relevant market." Bathke v. Casey's Gen. Stores, Inc., 64 F.3d 340, 345 (8th Cir. 1995). HN8[] A relevant market consists of both a geographic market and a product market. Little Rock Cardiology Clinic PA v. Baptist Health, 591 F.3d 591, 596 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 130 S. Ct. 3506, 177 L. Ed. 2d 1092 (2010). The parties agree that the geographic market is the United States, but dispute the product market.

HN9[] The outer boundaries of a product market can be identified by the reasonable interchangeability, or cross-elasticity of demand, between the product and possible substitutes for it. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). Determining a product market requires identifying the choices available to consumers, focusing on "whether consumers will shift from one product to the other in response to changes in their relative cost." SuperTurf, Inc. v. Monsanto Co., 660 F.2d 1275, 1278 (8th Cir. 1981); see also Horizontal Merger Guidelines § 1, 57 Fed. Reg. 41552 (1992) [10] ("Market definition focuses solely on demand substitution factors-i.e., possible consumer responses.").

In its fact-findings, the district court credited the testimony of five clinical pharmacists, representing approximately 43 hospitals throughout the country. The pharmacists uniformly stated that while they make drug recommendations, the neonatologists decide which drug a patient receives. The court also credited the testimony of seven neonatologists who said that treatment decisions are based solely on perceived clinical advantages/disadvantages of Indocin IV versus NeoProfen. The neonatologists' preferences differed (some prescribe Indocin IV, others NeoProfen), but each echoed the same concept: The relative price of the drugs does not factor into the choice of drug treatment. The court was not persuaded by the testimony of one neonatologist (cited often by the FTC and its experts), who believed the drugs to be equally safe, implying he was comfortable using either one for PDA.

Based on this evidence, the court determined that the neonatologists "ultimately determine the demand for Indocin IV and Neoprofen," and that these treatment [11] decisions are made "without regard to price." Thus, an increase in the price of Indocin IV would not drive a hospital to purchase NeoProfen, and vice versa. Considering these facts, as well as testimony by Lundbeck's expert whom the court found "persuasive," the court ruled that there is low cross-elasticity of demand between Indocin IV and Neoprofen, and thus the drugs are not in the same product market. See H.J., Inc. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp*., 867 F.2d 1531, 1538, 1540 (8th Cir. 1989)* (holding that HN10[] cross-price elasticity is essential to market definition. Plaintiff did not identify a relevant market because it offered only "casual statements, not made as part of a serious market analysis" and there was "no market data concerning sales . . . nor was there any testimony describing the degree of cross-elasticity").

The FTC contends that the district court relied too much on the testimony of the neonatologists, and ignored evidence demonstrating that Indocin IV and NeoProfen [*1241] are in the same product market.[3] Challenging the court's reliance on the neonatologists' testimony, the FTC argues that the hospitals, not the neonatologists, are the consumers, and the hospitals would [12] switch between Indocin IV and NeoProfen based on price differences. The FTC offers no evidence that hospitals would disregard the preferences of the neonatologists and make purchasing decisions based on price. The district court did not err in finding more persuasive the testimony of the pharmacists and most neonatologists, compared to the one neonatologist favorable to the FTC.

According to the FTC, the district court (and the neonatologists) ignored [13] the fact that Indocin IV and NeoProfen are practicable alternatives, relying instead on stated consumer preference. In fact, the practicable alternatives here are clear, were the subject of testimony by the neonatologists, and were considered by the district court. When the case was tried, Indocin IV and NeoProfen were the two drug treatments available for PDA. Aware of the drug options—the "practicable alternatives"-the neonatologists preferred one treatment or the other (without regard for cost), which the court credited as persuasive evidence of low cross-elasticity.

In a variation of the "practicable alternatives" argument, the FTC asserts that functionally similar products must be in the same product market. To the contrary, HN12[] functionally similar products may be in separate product markets, depending on the facts of the case. Compare Henry v. Chloride, Inc*., 809 F.2d 1334, 1342-43 (8th Cir. 1987)* (batteries sold through route-truck distribution was a separate market from identical batteries sold through warehouses), United States v. Archer-Daniels-Midland Comp*., 866 F.2d 242, 248 (8th Cir. 1988)* (functionally interchangeable sweeteners were separate product markets because "a small [14] change in the price of [one] would have little or no effect on the demand for [the other]"), Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs. Inc*., 386 F.3d 485, 496 (2d Cir. 2004)* (bioequivalent, functionally-interchangeable branded and generic drugs were in separate product markets), and SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co*., 575 F.2d 1056, 1064 (3d Cir. 1978)* (despite a certain degree of functional interchangeability among antibiotics, specific class of antibiotics was separate product market based on court's finding that there was a lack of price sensitivity and cross-elasticity of demand), with HDC Med., Inc*., 474 F.3d at 547-48* (rejecting argument that dialyzers with identical uses can be separated into two product markets based solely on a price differential), and H.J., Inc*., 867 F.2d at 1538-40* (holding that a new product and the product it was meant to supercede were in same product market because competitor did not produce evidence sufficient to establish low cross-elasticity of demand).

[3] The FTC asserts that the district court failed to examine a hypothetical market where Indocin IV and NeoProfen were owned separately. HN11[] In determining the relevant market, the district court need not consider a hypothetical market, especially here where the FTC offered no evidence about such a hypothetical market. See Yamaha Motor Co., Ltd. v. FTC*, 657 F.2d 971, 977 (8th Cir. 1981)* (examining a hypothetical market, absent the challenged conduct, in order to determine whether a violation occurred, not to determine the relevant market); United States v. Microsoft*, 253 F.3d 34, 78-79, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001)* (examining the market before the anticompetitive conduct in order to determine whether a violation occurred, not to determine the relevant market).

Further attacking the district court's reliance on consumer preference, the FTC argues that the court ignored the ability of marginal customers to constrain prices. [*1242] HN13[] Whether there are enough marginal [15] consumers to constrain prices is a factual question that requires analyzing consumer-demand and profit-margins. See Tenet Health Care Corp., 186 F.3d at 1050-51, 1054* (marginal consumer substitution and profit-margins must be supported with more than "common sense." This court pointed to the "compelling and essentially unrefuted [critical loss analysis] evidence that the switch to another [product] by a small percentage of [consumers] would constrain a price increase" as evidence of marginal consumer's ability to constrain prices in a broader geographic market); see also United States v. Engelhard Corp., 126 F.3d 1302, 1306 (11th Cir. 1997)* (requiring evidence in order to evaluate the possibility that losing marginal customers responsible for high-margin purchases may constrain prices). The FTC offered testimony of one expert explaining that "marginal customers"-neonatologists who are ambivalent between prescribing Indocin IV or NeoProfen-may constrain prices on either drug. Although not addressing this testimony in its fact-findings, the district court did state that it generally found the FTC expert unpersuasive. See Fox v. Dannenberg, 906 F.2d 1253, 1256 (8th Cir. 1990)* (HN14[] "The question [16] of the expert's credibility and the weight to be accorded the expert testimony are ultimately for the trier of fact to determine."). Critically, the district court did credit Lundbeck's expert who stated that the number of neonatologists willing to switch between the drugs based on price was insufficient to exercise price constraint. See Pioneer Hi-Bred Int'l v. Holden Found. Seeds, Inc., 35 F.3d 1226, 1238 (8th Cir. 1994)* (HN15[] "[This court] will not disturb the district court's decision to credit the reasonable testimony of one of two competing experts."). Lundbeck's expert was clear that even those neonatologists who might be willing to switch in response to a price difference would do so only if there was a very significant price decrease, indicating that the level of cross-elasticity was low.

Finally, the FTC contends that the district court ignored its own findings about Lundbeck's internal documents, claiming they indicate Indocin IV and NeoProfen are in the same market. True, HN16[] industry recognition is a factor in a product market definition. See Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325* (a submarket may be identified by a number of a factors, including industry or public recognition of its separate [17] economic character). It is not, however, dispositive. See C.R. Bard, Inc., 642 F.3d at 614, 617* (holding that a hospital did not identify a relevant market even though there was evidence of industry recognition). According to Lundbeck's internal documents, it anticipated that a dramatic price increase of Indocin IV would draw generic competitors into the market. As a result, it ceased promoting Indocin IV, focusing instead on increasing the market share of NeoProfen-as a superior PDA treatment. The FTC argues that this business strategy-to market NeoProfen as better than Indocin IV-means that Lundbeck viewed NeoProfen as a direct competitor to Indocin IV, and thus the drugs must be in the same product market. However, Lundbeck's strategy to discontinue promoting Indocin IV in favor of NeoProfen can also be interpreted to mean that while Indocin IV was vulnerable to generics, NeoProfen was not, and thus the products are not interchangeable. HN17[] If there are two permissible views of evidence, the factfinder's choice between them is not clearly erroneous. Anderson, 470 U.S. at 574*.

In the end, the FTC disagrees with the district court's weighing of the facts applicable to the relevant market [18] determination. The district court reached its decision [1243] after "careful consideration based upon the entire record." United States v. Cont'l Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 449, 453, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1964) (holding that metal and glass containers were in the same relevant market based on the facts, which demonstrated a "general confrontation between metal and glass containers and competition between them for the same end uses which [was] insistent, continuous, effective, and quantitywise, very substantial . . . ." lasting "over the long run"). HN18[] It is precisely the job of the district court to consider the evidence offered by both sides and render a judgment. See Sloan v. Hartford Life & Accident Ins. Co., 475 F.3d 999, 1005-006 (8th Cir. 2007)* (even though appellant could identify evidence in support of its case theory, the district court's ultimate finding was not erroneous). Whether this court would come to the same conclusion is irrelevant. The district court's fact-finding was not clearly erroneous.

The judgment is affirmed.

Concur by: KOPF

Concur

KOPF, District Judge, concurring.

When defining the product market, and considering the issue of cross-elasticity of demand, the district court relied heavily upon the testimony of doctors [19] that they would use Indocin or NeoProfen without regard to price. Admittedly, those doctors had no responsibility to pay for the drugs or otherwise concern themselves with cost. Thus, the doctors had scant incentive to conserve the scarce resources that would be devoted to paying for the medication. Why the able and experienced trial judge relied upon the doctors' testimony so heavily is perplexing. In an antitrust case, it seems odd to define a product market based upon the actions of actors who eschew rational economic considerations. See, e.g., F.T.C. v. Tenet Health Care Corp., 186 F.3d 1045, 1054 & n.14 (8th Cir. 1999) (observing that "market participants are not always in the best position to assess the market long term" and that is particularly so where their testimony is "contrary to the payers' economic interests and thus is suspect"). That oddity seems especially strange where, as here, there is no real dispute that (1) both drugs are effective when used to treat the illness about which the doctors testified and (2) internal records from the defendant raise an odor of predation.

The foregoing having been said, the standard of review carries the day in this case as it does [20] in so many others. As a result, I fully concur in Judge Benton's excellent opinion.

End of Document

U.S. Ring Binder L.P. v. World Wide Stationery Mfg. Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division

August 19, 2011, Decided; August 19, 2011, Filed

Case No. 3:10 CV 2556

Reporter

804 F. Supp. 2d 588 *; 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93035 **

U.S. Ring Binder L.P., Plaintiff, -vs- World Wide Stationery Manufacturing Co., Ltd., Defendant.

Core Terms

Ring, commodity, products, monopoly power, allegations, patent, manufacturers, binderies, barriers, anti-competitive, tying product, prices, tying agreement, market power, monopolization, competitors, substitutes, antitrust, compete, relevant market, infringement, customers, markets, geographic, consumer, metals, factual allegations, market share, conclusory, monopolist

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Demurrers

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Demurrers

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 demands that a pleading contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. The pleading standard does not require detailed factual allegations, but it demands more than an unadorned legal accusation. A pleading that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Such conclusory allegations must be rejected, and only a complaint containing well-pleaded factual allegations that plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief will survive demurrer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a claim arising from a competitor's alleged monopolization, a claimant must adequately allege that the claimant attained monopoly power in the product market through anticompetitive or exclusionary means as compared to the lawful accretion of monopoly power through, for example, superior products. To survive a motion to dismiss with respect to an attempted monopolization claim, the claimant must adequately allege that the competitor engaged in anticompetitive practices with the specific design to establish a monopoly, and that such conduct poses a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

For § 2 claims under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a claimant must plausibly allege the existence of geographic and product markets in which the accomplished monopolist maintains monopoly power, or in which the claimant competes with the aspiring monopolist. The failure to allege a plausible product or geographic market necessarily would doom § 2 claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN4[] Sherman Act, Claims

The geographic market constitutes the area of effective competition in which consumers of a product or service can turn for alternative sources of supply. Determining the product market requires allegations identifying products that are identical to, or substitutes for, a monopolist's products. This interchangeability analysis turns on an assessment of the product uses and cross-elasticity of demand, consumer sensitivity to price levels at which the consumer elects substitutes for the monopolists's product or service.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

A claimant bears the burden of alleging a plausible, reasonably defined market affected by a monopolist's alleged anticompetitive behavior.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN6[] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Whether a pleading standard is heightened, and therefore improper when applied to allegations subject to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, depends on the baseline from which the pleading standard's rigor is assessed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

HN7[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

A complaint must contain enough factual content to allow a court to draw the reasonable inference of a defendant's liability. But it is not enough for a court to draw any inference from a complaint whose allegations could provide relief on some quantum of proven facts. Rather, a complaint's nonconclusory, factual allegations must demonstrate facial plausibility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Circumstantial Evidence

HN8[] Sherman Act, Claims

A claimant must plausibly allege that through anticompetitive conduct, a monopolist has attained, or is reaching for, monopoly power in the relevant product market. Monopoly power is the ability to control prices or exclude competition. A plaintiff can establish monopoly power either through direct evidence of the exercise of actual control over prices or the actual exclusion of competitors, or circumstantial evidence showing the monopolist possesses a high share of the relevant market. But a high degree of market share alone is not enough to establish the existence of monopoly power. Considerations of market share are only the starting point for monopoly power analysis. The key question a court must resolve when faced with circumstantial evidence of monopoly power is whether the monopolist has the ability to control prices in, or exclude competitors from, the relevant market. At the early pleading stage, the inquiry becomes whether the dynamics of the alleged market plausibly could support the existence and exercise of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

The question for monopoly power analysis is not whether charging supra-competitive prices or excluding competitors through anticompetitive practices would harm competition, but whether a purported monopolizer has, or could have, the ability to thus harm competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

The lack of entry barriers is relevant in market power analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN11[] Sherman Act, Claims

The presence or absence of entry barriers is an important factor in determining whether a complaint plausibly alleges the possibility of monopoly power existing in a given market. Indeed, in some circuits, the absence of entry barriers can bar a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN12[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

A seller employs a tying agreement when he sells one product (the tying product) but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product. But merely conditioning one product's sale on another's does not violate federal antitrust law. Instead, a defendant must employ the market power it possesses in the tying product market to force the purchase of a product that, but for the tying agreement, a buyer would have sought elsewhere or on different terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN13[] Sherman Act, Claims

Claims under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 which are rooted in alleged tying agreements are only actionable under a rule of reason analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

In cases involving a tying arrangement, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant has market power in the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN15[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Like a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim, a tying product market's boundaries are determined by those products that are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes as the tying product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN16[] Sherman Act, Claims

In general, a manufacturer's own products do not themselves comprise a relevant product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN17[] Sherman Act, Claims

A product market definition provides the context for, among other things, assessing the degree of market power a defendant exercises in that market. Therefore, the fewer substitute products included in a market definition, all things being equal, the more likely a defendant's influence in that market will approach monopoly power. However, it is not the mere control each firm maintains over its own product's price that constitutes illegal monopoly power, but rather the effect of each firm's conduct on competition within the relevant market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN18[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

At the pleading stage, a court only may accept nonconclusory averments supported by factual allegations as true.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN19[] Defenses, Misuse

Patent misuse as an affirmative defense to a patent infringement claim.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN20[] Remedies, Injunctions

Injunctive relief is, as the name suggests, a remedy, not a standalone claim.

Counsel: [1] For U.S. Ring Binder L.P., Plaintiff: Jay Harris, LEAD ATTORNEY, Harris, Reny & Torzewski, Toledo, OH; Stephanie H. To, LEAD ATTORNEY, Anthony G. Simon, Timothy M. Cronin, Timothy E. Grochocinski, Simon Law Firm - St. Louis, St. Louis, MO.

For World Wide Stationery Manufacturing Co., Ltd., Defendant: Emily D. Throop, Hugh F. Bangasser, J. Timothy Hobbs, K&L Gates - Seattle, Seattle, WA; Michael A. Pavlick, K&L Gates - Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, PA.

For United States of America, Interested Party: Guillermo J. Rojas, Office of the U.S. Attorney - Toledo, Northern District of Ohio, Toledo, OH.

Judges: JACK ZOUHARY, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JACK ZOUHARY

Opinion

[*591] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

INTRODUCTION

This matter is before the Court on the Motion of Defendant World Wide Stationery Manufacturing Co., Ltd. ("World Wide") to Dismiss Plaintiff U.S. Ring Binder L.P.'s ("U.S. Ring") Amended Complaint ("Complaint") for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted (Doc. No. 26). The matter has been fully briefed (Doc. Nos. 27, 34 & 36).

As part of its Motion to Dismiss, World Wide filed a Notice of Constitutional Question with the U.S. Attorney General ("the Government") (Doc. No. 30). The Government [2] intervened, pursuant to Federal Civil Rule 5.1(c) (Doc. No. 47), and opposed the Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 48), defending the constitutionality of 35 U.S.C. § 292 ("False Markings Act"). World Wide replied (Doc. No. 49). Thereafter, the parties stipulated to stay consideration of the constitutional challenge and related arguments until the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit ("Federal Circuit") disposes of a case in which the statute's constitutionality is likewise challenged (Doc. No. 52). The constitutional question, however, is dismissed as moot because World Wide's Motion to Dismiss the Complaint is granted on other grounds.

THE COMPLAINT

The Complaint advances the following allegations in support of a variety of federal and state law claims.

U.S. Ring manufactures ring metals ("rings") for use in looseleaf binders (Doc. No. 11 at ¶ 7). World Wide, a Hong Kong-based firm with its primary U.S. office in Fremont, Ohio (id. at ¶¶ 3—4), is the dominant manufacturer of rings, controlling 80 percent of the domestic ring industry as compared to U.S. Ring's 15 percent share (id. at ¶ 8).

Ring manufacturers sell their products to binderies, which incorporate the rings into notebooks [3] or looseleaf binders for sale to retailers (id. at ¶¶ 9—10). Both the ring and bindery markets support a limited number of competitors (id. at ¶ 11); indeed, U.S. Ring is World Wide's "sole direct competitor[]" (id. at ¶ 20). By contrast, binderies sell to many retailers, which, in turn, sell binders and notebooks to end consumers (id. at ¶¶ 10—11).

The Complaint divides rings into two relevant product markets (id. at ¶ 17), distinguishing between unique or patented products versus commodity rings (id. at ¶ 12). Commodity rings is the relevant market for antitrust analysis (id. at ¶ 17). As the name implies, demand for commodity rings is price-driven (id. at ¶ 13). The Complaint defines the geographic market for both unique and commodity rings as the United States (id. at ¶ 16).

U.S. Ring alleges that World Wide exploits its dominant position in the market to pressure binderies into "less than ideal, unethical, and illegal contracts" in violation of federal antitrust law (id. at ¶ 22). Specifically, World Wide only sells two of its unique ring products — the One Touch Ring and the One Touch 2 Ring (collectively "the One Touch Ring products") — to binderies that agree to purchase a certain [4] portion of their commodity ring requirements from World Wide regardless of price (id. at ¶ 43). U.S. Ring claims it experienced a significant decrease in commodity ring orders from customers subjected to World [*592] Wide's allegedly illegal tying agreements (id. at ¶ 45). Such agreements, according to U.S. Ring, violate Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act under a per se theory (id. at ¶¶ 69, 82) or, in the alternative, the agreements unreasonably restrain competition under a rule of reason analysis (id at ¶¶ 80, 93).

In addition, World Wide is accused of "willfully acquir[ing] and maintain[ing]" monopoly power in the commodity ring market (id. at ¶¶ 61—62), and that World Wide's strategy is driven by a specific intent to monopolize the commodity ring market, an outcome that has a "dangerous probability" of success if U.S. Ring and other manufacturers are eliminated (id. at ¶¶ 65—66).

Furthermore, U.S. Ring alleges World Wide misuses patents and abuses the patent process by introducing small variations into existing ring metal products, patenting the modified product, and then representing to customers that World Wide possesses patent rights to both the new and old (unmodified) ring metal [5] technologies (id. at ¶¶ 24—25). Based on these representations, customers purchase products incorporating the new and old technologies solely from World Wide, under the mistaken belief that World Wide maintains exclusive right to sell both products (id. at ¶ 26). World Wide further allegedly abuses the patent process by labeling certain of its products as patented technologies when, in fact, World Wide holds no patent for the product (id. at ¶ 51), a practice that violates the False Markings Act and harms World Wide's competitors (id. at ¶¶ 52—53). U.S. Ring offers the events leading to Hong Kong Stationery Manufacturing Co., Ltd.'s exit from the U.S. ring market as an example of World Wide's misuse and abuse of the patent process (id. at ¶¶ 28—32).

U.S. Ring also claims World Wide's conduct during and after two previous lawsuits, in which U.S. Ring was the opposing party, demonstrates World Wide's anti-competitive conduct. In 2001, World Wide filed a counterclaim against U.S. Ring for patent infringement (id. at ¶ 34), only to abandon this counterclaim and agree to a settlement of U.S. Ring's claims after U.S. Ring shared evidence of prior art. This evidence demonstrated World Wide's [6] asserted patent was invalid (id. at ¶¶ 35—36). Thereafter, World Wide "corruptly and unethically utilizi[ed] the Chinese government to forcefully injure" U.S. Ring (id. at ¶ 38). Specifically, World Wide induced the Chinese government to shutter the Chinese facility that produced rings for U.S. Ring, and was the subject of World Wide's baseless patent infringement counterclaim (id. at ¶¶ 37—38).

Six years later, World Wide again filed claims against U.S. Ring for allegedly infringing two patents — claims U.S. Ring answered by proving the supposed World Wide patents were, in fact, invalid (id. at ¶¶ 54—56). During trial, World Wide's claims were demonstrated as groundless after World Wide's own uncontested evidence established the improper inventorship of the disputed patents (id. at ¶ 57). Further, World Wide produced scant evidence on its infringement claims and no evidence to rebut U.S. Ring's invalidity counterclaims (id.). Finally, World Wide caused delays through poor litigation management and pursued a willful infringement claim that, as a matter of law, had no chance of success (id.). Such unwarranted claims were allegedly pursued with the intent of damaging U.S. Ring's business [7] by, among other things, indicating to U.S. Ring's customers that the firm's products infringed on World Wide patents (id. at ¶ 58).

In addition to claims for violations of federal antitrust and patent law, U.S. Ring advances the following claims:

- [*593] • Violations of state antitrust statues in "the various states where World Wide and U.S. Ring do business" (id. at ¶ 100);

• Unfair competition resulting from deceptive acts harming competition in the Relevant Market for Sales (id. at ¶¶ 106—08);

• A "count" labeled "injunctive relief" (id. at ¶¶ 111—13);

• Tortious interference with prospective economic advantage resulting from World Wide disrupting and capturing U.S. Ring's relationships with current and future customers (id. at ¶¶ 114—21);

• Common law and statutory unfair competition (id. at ¶¶ 122—24);

• Tortious interference by causing binderies to breach contracts they have entered into with U.S. Ring (id. at ¶¶ 125—31); and

• Relief for damage caused by World Wide's "sham litigation" (id. at ¶¶ 141—44).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Federal Civil Rule 8 demands that a pleading contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." The pleading standard does not [8] require "detailed factual allegations," but it demands more than an unadorned legal accusation. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). A pleading that offers "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. Such conclusory allegations must be rejected, and only a complaint containing well-pled factual allegations that plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief will survive demurrer. Id. at 1950.

DISCUSSION

The Complaint contains six counts explicitly linked to Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("the Act"). U.S. Ring alleges World Wide has monopolized, or is attempting to monopolize, "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. U.S. Ring also invokes the prohibition of "[e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States," 15 U.S.C. § 1, with respect to the alleged tying agreements under both per se and rule of reason analysis.

Section 2 Claims

U.S. Ring argues World Wide has monopolized, or is attempting to monopolize, the commodity ring market. HN2[] To state a claim arising from World Wide's alleged monopolization, U.S. [9] Ring must adequately allege World Wide attained monopoly power in the commodity ring market through "anti-competitive or exclusionary means" as compared to the lawful accretion of monopoly power through, for example, superior products. Conwood Co., L.P. v. U.S. Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 782 (6th Cir. 2002). To survive this Motion to Dismiss with respect to its attempted monopolization claim, U.S. Ring must adequately allege that World Wide engages in anti-competitive practices with the specific design to establish a monopoly, and that such conduct poses a "dangerous probability of success." Spirit Airlines, Inc. v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 431 F.3d 917, 932 (6th Cir. 2005).

Geographic and Product Markets

HN3[] For both Section 2 claims, U.S. Ring must plausibly allege the existence of geographic and product markets in which the accomplished monopolist maintains monopoly power, or in which Plaintiff competes with the aspiring monopolist. Id.; see also Potters Med. Cent. v. City Hosp. [*594] Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 574 (6th Cir. 1986). The failure to allege a plausible product or geographic market necessarily would doom U.S. Ring's Section 2 claims. See Found. for Interior Design Educ. Research v. Savannah Coll. of Art & Design, 244 F.3d 521, 530—31 (6th Cir. 2001) [10] (affirming dismissal of complaint that failed to properly allege, inter alia, product market).

HN4[] The geographic market constitutes the area of "effective competition" in which "consumers of a product or service can turn for alternative sources of supply." Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1016 (6th Cir. 1999). Determining the product market requires allegations identifying products that are identical to, or substitutes for, the defendant's products. White & White, Inc. v. Am. Hosp. Supply Corp., 723 F.2d 495, 500 (6th Cir. 1983). This interchangeability analysis turns on an assessment of the product uses and cross-elasticity of demand, "consumer sensitivity to price levels at which [the consumer] elect[s] substitutes for the defendant's product or service." Ky. Speedway, LLC v. Nat'l Ass'n of Stock Car Auto Racing, Inc., 588 F.3d 908, 917 (6th Cir. 2009).

For its Sherman Act claims, U.S. Ring describes the United States as the relevant geographic market for both commodity and unique rings (Doc. No. 11 at ¶ 16). World Wide dismisses this alleged geographic market as conclusory. This Court disagrees. U.S. Ring specifically alleges that World Wide and U.S. Ring compete [11] throughout the United States (id. at ¶ 18). When accepted as true, this Court cannot label as implausible an allegation that two firms, controlling 95 percent of a certain market, compete nationwide.

Next, the Complaint alleges distinct product markets for the sale of commodity and unique rings (id. at ¶ 15), but selects commodity rings as the relevant market for antitrust analysis (id. at ¶ 17). Thus, U.S. Ring alleges that World Wide has achieved, or is striving toward, monopoly power in the commodity ring market. World Wide argues that because U.S. Ring advances no allegations with respect to either the use of commodity rings or cross-elasticity of demand, this alleged product market is facially unsustainable. According to World Wide, no facts are alleged describing the uses of, or available substitutes for, commodity rings, much less the effect of product price increases on a consumer's likelihood to elect a substitute. World Wide further contends U.S. Ring does not describe why unique and commodity rings should be treated as discrete product markets, as no allegations are advanced concerning the degree of competition or substitutability, if any, between the two purported product [12] markets.

U.S. Ring responds by arguing commodity rings are clearly defined as "not wholly unique to any one manufacturer" (id. at ¶ 12). In other words, the circle U.S. Ring draws around the commodity ring market ends where it meets unique rings, like World Wide's One Touch Ring products.

But such allegations are not sufficient to make out a product market. Nowhere in the Complaint does U.S. Ring allege the absence of reasonable substitutes for commodity rings, or that barriers to creating such substitutes are substantial (id. at ¶¶ 71, 85). The Complaint is silent whether other products are not substitutes for commodity rings such that if World Wide were to attempt to use anti-competitive means to raise the price of commodity rings, binderies could not then purchase potentially less expensive unique rings from U.S. Ring or others.

Moreover, the Complaint references U.S. Ring's production of "custom ring metals" (id. at ¶ 7). No further mention is made of this specific product or other potential products, which this Court finds [*595] particularly significant because the Complaint also does not definitively divide the ring industry into only two "categories." Rather, among the "different product [13] categories" in which ring manufacturers compete, "one category" consists of unique rings, while "another category" contains commodity rings (id. at ¶ 12). This enumeration of product categories does not purport to be exhaustive.

HN5[] U.S. Ring bears the burden of alleging a plausible, reasonably defined market affected by World Wide's alleged anti-competitive behavior. Worldwide Basketball and Sport Tours, Inc. v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Assoc., 388 F.3d 955, 962 (6th Cir. 2004). This Court has been told what commodity rings are not, i.e., patented rings, but such an assertion would be of little value to this Court when called upon to assess the anti-competitive effects of, for instance, World Wide's alleged exclusionary behavior in the commodity rings "market."

U.S. Ring counters that should this Court find that U.S. Ring failed to, among other things, properly define the relevant product market, such a finding would constitute the application of a "heightened" pleading standard (Doc. No. 34 at 8). However, HN6[] whether a pleading standard is "heightened," and therefore improper when applied to allegations subject to Federal Civil Rule 8, depends on the baseline from which the pleading standard's [14] rigor is assessed.

Having located U.S. Ring's proffered baseline, this Court concludes it is U.S. Ring's favored pleading standard that is inappropriate. In setting forth the so-called legal standard for reviewing this Motion to Dismiss, U.S. Ring specifically employs the "no set of facts" standard rejected by the Court in Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 546, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) ("The 'no set of facts' language has been questioned, criticized, and explained away long enough by courts and commentators, and is best forgotten as an incomplete, negative gloss on an accepted pleading standard: once a claim has been stated adequately, it may be supported by showing any set of facts consistent with the allegations in the complaint") (emphasis added). U.S. Ring does reference Iqbal, but only for the adage that HN7[] a complaint must contain enough factual content to allow a court to draw the reasonable inference of a defendant's liability. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1949. But it is not enough for this Court to draw any inference from a complaint whose allegations could provide relief on some quantum of proven facts. Rather, a complaint's non-conclusory, factual allegations must demonstrate facial plausibility. [15] See id. Plaintiff's description of the relevant pleading standard calls for less, and is thus rejected.

Market Power Analysis

Even assuming on re-pleading U.S. Ring could properly allege a relevant market, U.S. Ring's actual and attempted monopolization claims must fail. As discussed above, HN8[] U.S. Ring must plausibly allege that through anti-competitive conduct, World Wide has attained, or is reaching for, monopoly power in the commodity ring market. Monopoly power is the ability to "control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). A plaintiff can establish monopoly power either through direct evidence of "the exercise of actual control over prices or the actual exclusion of competitors," or circumstantial evidence showing the defendant possesses a high share of the relevant market. Re/Max Int'l, Inc., 173 F.3d at 1016. But a high degree of market share alone is not enough to establish the existence of monopoly power. Considerations of market [*596] share are only the starting point for monopoly power analysis. Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc. ("Am. Council I"), 185 F.3d 606, 623 (6th Cir. 1999). [16] The key question a court must resolve when faced with circumstantial evidence of monopoly power is whether the defendant has the ability to control prices in, or exclude competitors from, the relevant market. Conwood Co., L.P., 290 F.3d at 783 n.2. At the early pleading stage, the inquiry becomes whether the dynamics of the alleged market plausibly could support the existence and exercise of monopoly power.

World Wide argues a high share of the commodity ring market does not directly lead to the potential existence of monopoly power; rather, other factors, such as market competitiveness, barriers to entry, or the number of market competitors, must accompany "commanding market share" to establish monopoly power. In this case, World Wide argues certain features of the commodity ring market, described in the Complaint, render implausible World Wide's actual or potential exercise of monopoly power. Of particular note is the absence of market entry barriers which precludes a firm from charging supra-competitive prices and thereby injuring competition. If World Wide artificially inflated its prices, either U.S. Ring or an upstart firm could undercut the supposed monopolist by selling commodity [17] rings at prices in tune with natural market forces.

U.S. Ring reiterates that because World Wide is the dominant manufacturer of rings, "elimination of [U.S. Ring] from the ring market in the U.S. would create a monopoly for [World Wide]" (Doc. No. 34 at 11).

However, U.S. Ring ignores the implausibility of monopoly power existing in the ring market described by U.S. Ring. Among other things, the Complaint describes a ring market containing large volume sellers and acutely price-sensitive buyers (Doc. No. 11 at ¶ 13). "As little as 1/8 to 1/4 of a cent difference between the different manufacturers' prices can dictate whether or not a deal is made" (id.). In this market, it is the binderies, not the ring manufacturers, who hold the upper hand. Whereas binderies sell to a "quite large" number of retailers, a ring manufacturer's loss of even one bindery's business could spell failure (id. at ¶ 11). There even appears to be room for small manufacturers, a term that presumably refers to firms other than U.S. Ring, to enter the market and win contracts for the sale of commodity rings through "merit and prices" (id. at ¶ 13).

This description directly conflicts with later conclusory paragraphs [18] alleging "[i]f World Wide suddenly decided to stop selling ring metals to [binderies], their businesses would be endangered" because binderies depend on the availability of World Wide products (id. at ¶ 21). This assumes, of course, that U.S. Ring, other small manufacturers of rings, or new entrants to the ring market could not fill the gap left by World Wide in this scenario. But the Complaint does not sufficiently allege existing or future sources of rings lack the capacity to expand output in response to World Wide's refusal to sell.

Coupled with the Complaint's description of a sharply competitive marketplace, the allegation that monopoly power does or could exist in the commodity ring market is not plausible. The allegation that "[i]f a large manufacturer were to extinguish [through anti-competitive means U.S. Ring's or] a smaller manufacturer's ability to sell commodity rings to specific customers, the action would prove highly detrimental to the small manufacturer and to competition in general" (id. at ¶ 14) is a mere truism. HN9[] The question for [*597] monopoly power analysis is not whether charging supra-competitive prices or excluding competitors through anti-competitive practices would [19] harm competition, but whether the purported monopolizer has, or could have, the ability to thus harm competition. Conwood Co., L.P., 290 F.3d at 783 n.2.

In reaching this conclusion, this Court does not, and need not, accept World Wide's assertion that the absence of barriers to entry in the commodity ring market alone is enough to doom U.S. Ring's claim. World Wide cites to Am. Council I for the proposition that "even a firm holding a commanding percentage of the market cannot charge a price above the competitive price, for once it does, competitors will enter the market and undercut the firm's price." 185 F.3d at 623. This Court, of course, agrees with this statement, but notes that the court in Am. Council I prefaces this point by referring to HN10[] the lack of entry barriers as "relevant" in market power analysis. Id.; see also Rodney v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 146 F. App'x 783, 789 (6th Cir. 2005) (describing entry barriers as among the "probative factors" of monopoly power).

Still, HN11[] the presence or absence of entry barriers is an important factor in determining whether a complaint plausibly alleges the possibility of monopoly power existing in a given market. See Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 381 (3d Cir. 2005) [20] ("Plaintiffs relying on market share as a proxy for monopoly power must plead and produce evidence of a relevant product market, of the alleged monopolist's dominant share of that market, and of high barriers to entry"); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 82, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (holding that a firm cannot possess monopoly power in a market unprotected by barriers to entry); Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Res., Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 366 (9th Cir. 1988) ("A firm with a high market share may be able to exert market power in the short run, but substantial market power can persist only if there are significant and continuing barriers to entry") (quotations omitted); Moecker v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 144 F. Supp. 2d 1291, 1308 (M.D. Fla. 2001) ("[W]here entry barriers are low, market share does not accurately reflect the party's market power") (quoting United States v. Waste Mgmt., Inc., 743 F.2d 976, 982—83 (2d Cir. 1984)). Indeed, in some circuits, the absence of entry barriers can bar a Section 2 claim. See, e.g., Am. Prof'l Testing Serv., Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal and Prof'l Publ'ns, 108 F.3d 1147, 1154 (9th Cir. 1997).

Because this Court concludes U.S. Ring fails to [21] allege with sufficient particularity the relevant product market, and fails to plausibly allege the potential exercise of monopoly power in the commodity rings market, this Court need not reach the question of whether World Wide acquired, or is striving toward, monopoly power through unlawful, exclusionary conduct. Counts I and II are dismissed.

Section 1 Claims

U.S. Ring alleges World Wide's use of tying agreements unlawfully restrains trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. HN12[] A seller employs a tying agreement when he "sell[s] one product [(the tying product)] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product." N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5—6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). But merely conditioning one product's sale on another's does not violate federal antitrust law. Instead, a defendant must employ the market power it possesses in the tying product market to force the purchase of a product that, but for the tying agreement, a buyer would have sought elsewhere or on different terms. Ill. Tool Works Inc. v. [*598] Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 34—35, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006).

Here, U.S. Ring alleges that, for certain World Wide customers, purchase of commodity rings are [22] tied to the purchase of two World Wide unique ring products — the One Touch Ring and One Touch 2 Ring. U.S. Ring characterizes the One Touch Ring as profitable, without reasonable substitutes, available only from World Wide, and hemmed in from competition from other manufacturers by "substantial" barriers for creating substitute products (Doc. No. 11 at ¶¶ 71, 85). According to U.S. Ring, World Wide refuses to sell either One Touch Ring product to a bindery unless the bindery agrees to purchase a certain percentage of its commodity rings from World Wide, regardless of the price charged for the tied commodity rings (id. at ¶ 43). U.S. Ring provides Avery Dennison Corp. as one example of a firm subjected to World Wide's alleged tying agreements (id. at ¶ 44). U.S. Ring posits that World Wide's alleged tying agreements violate Section 1 under a per se, or, in the alternative, a rule of reason analysis.

HN13[] Section 1 claims rooted in alleged tying agreements are only actionable under a rule of reason analysis, and therefore the per se Counts III and V are dismissed. Citing a string of cases after the Supreme Court's rejection of the presumption that all tying agreements worked anti-competitive [23] effects in U.S. Steel Corp. v. Fortner Enter., Inc., 429 U.S. 610, 97 S. Ct. 861, 51 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1977), the Court in Illinois Tool Works Inc. explicitly held that, HN14[] in cases involving a tying arrangement, "the plaintiff must prove that the defendant has market power in the tying product." Ill. Tool Works Inc., 547 U.S. at 46. Moreover, in light of legislative amendments repealing the statutory "patent-equals-market-power presumption," the Court rejected the view that a patent necessarily confers upon the patent holder market power in a given product market. Id. at 44—45.

In addition to the previously discussed critique of the Complaint's commodity ring market definition, World Wide argues U.S. Ring's tying product market definition is also improper. Specifically, World Wide contends U.S. Ring cannot limit the tying market to one product without additional factual allegations plausibly suggesting such a limitation is appropriate. World Wide also challenges the "unique" characterization of the One Touch Ring products as insufficiently pled because U.S. Ring offers no description of product uses or why the product lacks reasonable substitutes.

HN15[] Like a Section 2 claim, a tying product market's boundaries are determined [24] by those products that are "reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes" as the tying product. Ky. Speedway, LLC, 588 F.3d at 916 (emphasis added). Necessarily then, to restrict each tying product market to a single One Touch Ring product, U.S. Ring must plausibly allege that a consumer could not reasonably use any other product for the same purpose served by the One Touch Ring product.

For good reason, "[s]ingle brand products are, at a minimum, extremely rare." Apple Inc. v. Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1190, 1198 (N.D. Cal. 2008); see also Green County Food Mkt., Inc. v. Bottling Grp., LLC, 371 F.3d 1275, 1282 (10th Cir. 2004) (HN16[] "In general, a manufacturer's own products do not themselves comprise a relevant product market."). HN17[] A product market definition provides the context for, among other things, assessing the degree of market power a defendant exercises in that market. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d at 81. Therefore, the fewer substitute products included in a market definition, all things being equal, the more [*599] likely a defendant's influence in that market will approach monopoly power. However, it is not the mere control each firm maintains over its own product's [25] price that constitutes illegal monopoly power, but rather the effect of each firm's conduct on competition within the relevant market. See E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 393 ("[O]ne can theorize that we have monopolistic competition in every nonstandardized commodity with each manufacturer having power over the price and production of his own product. However, this power . . . is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Illegal power must be appraised in terms of the competitive market for the product.").

U.S. Ring's description of the relevant unique ring market suffers certain deficiencies much like the description of the commodity ring market. Aside from naming the One Touch Ring products and defining what these products are not, i.e., commodity rings, the Complaint fails to provide any description of the product's functionality. Nor does the Complaint provide factual allegations supporting the conclusory assertion that the One Touch Ring products lack any reasonable substitutes. The Complaint does not allege, for instance, any features of the One Touch Ring products that prevent other rings from serving the same purpose. Without further factual refinement, this [26] Court will not allow U.S. Ring to proceed to discovery on a conclusory market sketch that confers upon World Wide the unlawful ability to control prices in, and exclude competition from, an implausibly narrow product market containing only a product World Wide, presumably, has been granted the sole ability to sell. [1]

Yet the Complaint also alleges U.S. Ring and World Wide do compete in the product market containing the One Touch Ring products. According to the Complaint, ring manufacturers "compete in different product categories" (Doc. No. 11 at ¶ 12). Among these different product categories are "innovative and unique products," as well as "[a]nother category [of] so-called commodity ring metals, which are not wholly unique to any one manufacturer" (id.). Both "categories" are later designated as "distinct product market[s]" (id. at ¶ 15). The One Touch Ring products [27] belong to the former category, or unique rings (id. at ¶ 43). Thus, the Complaint alleges in conclusory terms both that U.S. Ring — or any other firm, for that matter — does not compete with World Wide in the tying product market and that U.S. Ring and World Wide do compete in the unique ring market, which includes the tying products. Therefore, U.S. Ring's tying product market definitions are not only implausible, but also are self-contradictory.

HN18[] At the pleading stage, this Court only may accept non-conclusory averments supported by factual allegations as true. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1940. Accordingly, "[b]ecause [U.S. Ring has] not nudged [its Section 1] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible" with allegations this Court can accept as true, these claims must be dismissed. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

U.S. Ring's Request for Leave to Re-Plead Federal Claims

U.S. Ring has requested leave to re-plead "with additional specificity" any claims this Court deems insufficiently pled (Doc. No. 37 at ¶ 3). This Court denies U.S. Ring's request for leave to re-plead [*600] the federal law claims. Even assuming U.S. Ring could cure the defects in its definition of the commodity ring market under [28] the Sherman Act, the Complaint's description of that market's competitive dynamics cannot be amended to render plausible the possibility of monopoly power being exercised in that market without directly contradicting portions of the current Complaint. Likewise, removing allegations that U.S. Ring and World Wide directly compete in the "product category" and "distinct product market" that includes the One Touch Ring is necessary to even begin the process of plausibly alleging a single-brand product market. Leave to re-plead would allow U.S. Ring the opportunity to supplement, not redact, the Complaint. As a result, no Sherman Act claim can be salvaged through further Complaint amendments.

Claims Providing No Independent Grounds for Relief

Despite U.S. Ring's reference to its patent misuse claim as a "cause of action" in both the Complaint (Doc. No. 11 at ¶¶ 94—98) and its opposition brief (Doc. No. 34 at 15), World Wide correctly notes that each case relied on by U.S. Ring refers to patent misuse as an affirmative defense (Doc. No. 36 at 9 n.12). U.S. Ring provides no case accepting patent misuse as an independent grounds for relief, and this Court finds no such case. See, e.g., Princo Corp. v. Int'l Trade Comm'n, 616 F.3d 1318, 1323 (Fed Cir. 2010) [29] (describing HN19[] patent misuse as an affirmative defense to a patent infringement claim). Not having filed a responsive pleading, World Wide, of course, has not asserted a patent infringement claim in this case.

Rather, U.S. Ring's patent misuse claim is offered, like the sham litigation claim, as an example of the alleged anti-competitive conduct by which World Wide violates federal antitrust law. (See Doc. No. 11 at ¶ 23) ("World Wide has a history of promoting anti-competitive and monopolistic behavior through its misuse of patents"); (see also id. at ¶ 59) ("The baseless litigation brought against U.S. Ring by World Wide is yet another example of World Wide's history of behavior meant to weaken and remove its competitors from the ring metal industry in order to create a monopoly in the Relevant Market for Sales."). [30] Because this Court concludes U.S. Ring does not sufficiently plead the relevant product markets, and cannot plausibly plead the potential exercise of monopoly power in either product market, this Court does not, and need not, reach the sufficiency of allegations offered as a demonstration of World Wide's supposed exclusionary behavior. Therefore, Counts VII and XV are dismissed.

---

[1] Though the Complaint does not specifically allege the One Touch Ring products are patented, they are classified as unique rings, a product market that "involves inventing and patenting innovative and unique products that the manufacturer would then have the exclusive right to sell to the binderies" (Doc. No. 11 at ¶ 12).

Finally, Count X of the Complaint is styled "injunctive relief" (id. at ¶¶ 111—13). Despite World Wide's treatment of this "count" (Doc. No. 27 at 11 n.4), U.S. Ring in opposition does not reference an injunctive relief "claim." This Court need not cite to authority supporting the elementary proposition that HN20[] injunctive relief is, as the name suggests, a remedy, not a standalone claim. Moreover, U.S. Ring properly requests injunctive relief elsewhere in the Complaint (Doc. No. 11 at 28). Count X of the Complaint is also dismissed.

Supplemental Jurisdiction and Remaining Claims

Lastly, having dismissed U.S. Ring's federal claims, the Court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over U.S. Ring's state law claims and dismisses the state claims without prejudice. United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966). [31] This case is at the earliest stage and there is no judicial efficiency or economy in retaining those claims. Furthermore, because there is otherwise no remaining live case or controversy [*601] other than the stayed constitutional False Markings Act claim, that claim too is dismissed as moot, without prejudice.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, World Wide's Motion to Dismiss is granted. The Complaint is dismissed without prejudice.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

/s/ Jack Zouhary

JACK ZOUHARY

U. S. DISTRICT JUDGE

August 19, 2011

End of Document

Yakima Valley Mem. Hosp. v. Wash. State Dep't of Health

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

March 10, 2011, Argued and Submitted, Seattle, Washington; August 19, 2011, Filed

No. 10-35497, No. 10-35543

Reporter
654 F.3d 919 *; 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 17222 ; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,577

YAKIMA VALLEY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, a Washington nonprofit corporation, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. WASHINGTON STATE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH; MARY C. SELECKY, in her official capacity as Secretary of the Washington State Dept. of Health, Defendants-Appellees.YAKIMA VALLEY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, a Washington nonprofit corporation, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. WASHINGTON STATE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH; MARY C. SELECKY, in her official capacity as Secretary of the Washington State Dept. of Health, Defendants-Appellants.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by Yakima Valley Mem'l Hosp. v. Wash. State Dep't of Health, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161610 (E.D. Wash., Dec. 20, 2011)

Prior History: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington. D.C. No. 2:09-cv-03032-EFS, D.C. No. 2:09-cv-03032-EFS. Edward F. Shea, District Judge, Presiding.

Yakima Valley Mem. Hosp. v. Wash. State Dep't of Health, 717 F. Supp. 2d 1159, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51897 (E.D. Wash., May 25, 2010)

Disposition: AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, REMANDED.

Core Terms

regulations, certificate, authorization, unilateral, elective, incumbent, dormant, interstate commerce, private party, hybrid, anticompetitive, barrier, Sherman Act, repealed, preemption, license, district court, licensees, planning, provider, planning area, licensing requirements, restraint of trade, antitrust, projected, delegate, promulgated, prices, power to regulate, saving clause

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

HN1[] Business Administration & Organization, Facility & Personnel Licensing

Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-705(4) defines "percutaneous coronary intervention" as including, but not limited to, seven mechanical procedures and devices used by cardiologists for the revascularization of obstructed coronary arteries.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > Personnel Licensing

HN2[] Business Administration & Organization, Facility & Personnel Licensing

Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-705(2) defines "elective" percutaneous coronary intervention to mean an elective percutaneous coronary intervention performed on a patient with cardiac function that has been stable in the days or weeks prior to the operation, which is usually scheduled at least one day prior to the surgical procedure. The licensing requirement only applies to "adult" procedures, Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-700, which includes only those performed on the planning area residents over fifteen years of age, Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-745(10) (Step 1b).

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

HN3[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

The concept of certificate of need regimes, which many states enforce, is to avoid private parties making socially inefficient investments in health-care resources they might make if left unregulated. A certificate of need program corrects the market by requiring preapproval for certain investments and, in theory, thereby ensures that providers will make only necessary investments in health care. One type of investment the state of Washington regulates is the capacity to perform tertiary health services, which are specialized health-care services including percutaneous coronary interventions. Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.105(4)(f). In the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974 (NHPRDA). Congress intended to assist in preventing overinvestment in and maldistribution of health facilities. The NHPRDA conditioned federal funding on enforcement of certificate of need regimes as part of the congressional effort to reduce health-care inflation and achieve an adequate supply and distribution of health resources. In response, Washington enacted its current certificate of need framework in 1979. Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.015. Although Congress repealed the NHPRDA in 1986, leaving states free to abandon their certificate of need programs, Washington has continued its program.

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > Personnel Licensing

HN4[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

In 2007, the Washington legislature passed a law directing the Washington State Department of Health to promulgate regulations requiring a certificate of need for elective percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI). Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.128. The Department responded in 2008 by promulgating PCI regulations. Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-700-755. The PCI regulations(a) require that a licensed hospital perform at least 300 elective PCI procedures per year; and (b) provide that the Department shall issue a certificate of need only if projected demand in an applicant's geographic market exceeds the capacity of incumbent certificate holders by at least 300 procedures.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN5[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

On review of a judgment on the pleadings under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) the appellate court assumes the facts alleged in the complaint are true and reviews de novo whether the plaintiff stated a claim.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN6[] Appeals, Standards of Review

In reviewing the dismissal of a complaint, the appellate court inquires whether the complaint's factual allegations, together with all reasonable inferences, state a plausible claim for relief.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN7[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo whether the plaintiff has standing.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN8[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

Judgment on the pleadings is limited to material included in the pleadings. Otherwise, the proceeding is converted to summary judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN9[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

The district court has discretion not to convert a motion for judgment on the pleadings into a summary judgment motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN11[] Sherman Act, Claims

There are two primary modes of analysis under Sherman Act § 1: The U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that by the language of the Sherman Act, Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints. Most antitrust claims are analyzed under a "rule of reason," according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors. Some types of restraints, however, have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for procompetitive benefit, that they are deemed unlawful per se. Such restraints are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. The blanket condemnation of per se analysis applies only where the challenged practice has manifestly anticompetitive effects and lacks any redeeming virtue. Otherwise, the rule of reason is the default mode of analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN12[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The distinction between the rule of reason and per se analysis is important for federal preemption, which requires an irreconcilable conflict between the federal and state regulatory schemes. The Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, preempts state law only when the conduct contemplated by the state statute is in all cases a per se violation — without per se illegal conduct, there can be no certainty that the regulation conflicts with the Sherman Act. Conduct contemplated by the regulation is that which it mandates, authorizes, or places irresistible pressure on a private party to commit. Importantly, a state regulation is not preempted simply because it has anticompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN13[] Sherman Act, Scope

To determine whether a regulation facially conflicts with Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, an appellate court first considers whether the challenged regulation involves: (1) unilateral action by the state and is thus not subject to preemption (because there is no concerted action); or (2) a hybrid of state and private action and is thus potentially subject to preemption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

A hybrid regulation is only potentially preempted because the private discretionary conduct it incorporates may not in all cases be a per se violation. To be preempted as a per se illegal, hybrid restraint, a regulation must involve a delegation of market power to private parties that is per se illegal because otherwise, the hybrid restraint could not be attacked as facially invalid. Where regulations lack the element of concerted action needed before they can be characterized as a per se violation, there can be no preemption. Not all delegations of discretion will amount to per se illegal restraints of trade — for example, the delegation might resemble a vertical non-price restraint uniformly analyzed under the rule of reason. Even a per se illegal hybrid restraint may be saved from preemption by the state action immunity doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN15[] Sherman Act, Scope

A regulation is a unilateral restraint of trade when no further action is necessary by the private parties because the anticompetitive nature of the restraint is complete upon enactment. Public officials determine the nature and extent of the resulting consumer injury, with no degree of discretion delegated to private actors. Consequently, any anticompetitive effects are the logical and intended result of the state's action, rather than the result of private parties being empowered to dictate market conditions to others. Because the state acts alone in creating the restraint, there is no concerted action to be evaluated for consistency with Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. In contrast, a hybrid restraint may be attacked under Sherman Act § 1 as per se unreasonable. The hallmark of a hybrid restraint is the delegation of discretion to private actors. The key distinction is that the regulation leaves a gap in the restraint of trade for private parties to fill at their discretion. A regulation is not hybrid solely because it produces an effect that could not be produced by agreement of private parties without violating the antitrust laws. Rather, hybrid regulations merely enforce private marketing decisions, granting a degree of private regulatory power to the regulated parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN16[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

General statements that a restraint is hybrid because the federal antitrust laws preempt state laws authorizing or compelling private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior, or because regulations creating unsupervised private power in derogation of competition are subject to preemption, must be understood in context. Not all potentially anticompetitive conduct creates an irreconcilable conflict with federal law, either because it is subject to the rule of reason or because it is unilateral action by private parties covered by the fact-specific analysis Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. A regulation akin to a non-price vertical restraint would be analyzed under the rule of reason.

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > Personnel Licensing

HN17[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

The Washington legislature has ordered the Washington State Department of Health to promulgate a certificate of need requirement for elective percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) addressing, at a minimum, factors related to access to care, patient safety, quality outcomes, costs, and the stability of Washington's cardiac care delivery system and of existing cardiac care providers. Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.128 (2007). In response, the Department promulgated regulations setting forth a variety of requirements for an elective PCI certificate of need. Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-700-755. Memorial challenges only the PCI regulations' methodology for calculating a community's need for an additional elective PCI provider. Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-745. As is apparent from the regulations, once the Department grants a hospital a certificate of need to perform elective PCI, the requirement that there be an unmet demand for 300 procedures before granting another certificate of need creates a barrier to entry for potential competing hospitals.

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > Personnel Licensing

HN18[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

For purposes of Washington's percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) licensing regulations, the Washington State Department of Health calculates need based on dividing the state into 14 geographical markets (planning areas). Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246- 310-705(5), -745(10). A hospital applies for a certificate of need to serve a particular planning area. The Department then forecasts whether the planning area will have unmet demand for elective PCI procedures within five years. Wash. Admin. Code § 246- 310-745(10) (explaining a five-step numeric methodology). A planning area needs another provider of elective PCI only if projected demand exceeds current capacity by 300 procedures.

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > Personnel Licensing

HN19[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

For purposes of Washington's percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) licensing regulations, projected demand is based on the planning area's current use rate (procedures per 1,000 residents) in the base year and the planning area's estimated population in the forecast year, five years into the future. Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-745 (1), (3), (5) & (10) (Steps 1-2). Assuming a constant use rate, the Washington State Department of Health projects demand in the forecast year. That is, the projected demand is the current use rate multiplied by the forecasted population. If the projected demand sufficiently exceeds the planning area's current capacity, the Department will issue a certificate of need.

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > Personnel Licensing

HN20[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

For purposes of Washington's percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) licensing regulations, current capacity is based on the volume of procedures performed by the planning area's existing certified PCI providers in the base year. The planning area's current capacity is assumed to remain constant over the forecast period. Wash. Admin. Code § 246- 310-745(10) (Step 3). The Washington State Department of Health calculates the planning area's net need for an additional provider by subtracting the current capacity from the projected demand. Wash. Admin. Code § 246- 310-745(10) (Step 4). If the difference exceeds 300 procedures, the Department will issue one certificate of need for every 300 excess procedures. That is, if there is excess demand from 301 to 599 procedures, the Department will issue only a single additional certificate of need. Similarly, if there is excess demand up to 299 procedures, the Department will not issue any new certificates. Wash. Admin. Code § 246- 310-745(10) (Step 5). The regulations' limitation on when hospitals may offer elective PCI procedures serves as a barrier to market entry for hospitals who, but for the certificate of need requirement, would begin offering elective PCI procedures and competing for those patients.

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > Personnel Licensing

HN21[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

For purposes of Washington's percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) licensing regulations, the Washington State Department of Health licenses the first certificate of need holder in a planning area to perform as many PCI procedures as it wishes. The logical and intended result of the PCI regulations is that the Department will issue a second certificate of need only if the incumbent does not expand its capacity to meet growing demand. The PCI regulations create market power, but that is different from a hybrid regulation that delegates regulatory power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN22[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Responsiveness to private activity does not amount to a hybrid restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN23[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

At worst, capacity expansion, if motivated by a specific intent to monopolize with a dangerous probability of success, might be attempted monopolization under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, but that cannot be decided on a facial challenge and thus could not warrant preemption. An allegation of monopolization or attempted monopolization would go beyond the scope of a facial preemption challenge. Congress intentionally subjected unilateral, private conduct to a less demanding standard under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. §2, than agreements under Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN24[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Horizontal market division is a classic per se antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

HN25[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Where a case deals with a barrier to entry into the market, the case law on hybrid and unilateral restraints involving price-fixing is instructive. For instance, horizontal price fixing is per se illegal. Agreements to post and hold prices have been found to be such prohibited horizontal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN26[] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Vertical resale price maintenance is no longer per se illegal, Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 889 (2007) overturned the per se rule against vertical resale price maintenance announced in Dr. Miles Med. Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373 (1911).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN27[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

In a post-and-hold regime, the restraint of trade is that private parties hold to their prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN28[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Identification of per se illegal restraints is a question of law.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Tests

HN29[] Commerce Clause, Interstate Commerce

Even laws that are applied evenhandedly and impose only an incidental burden on interstate commerce can be unconstitutional. Actions are within the domain of the Commerce Clause if they burden interstate commerce or impede its free flow. Where a law only incidentally burdens interstate commerce, it will be upheld unless the burden imposed on interstate commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN30[] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

The Commerce Clause of the Constitution explicitly grants Congress authority to regulate interstate commerce. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. As a corollary, the Commerce Clause implicitly limits the regulatory authority of the states over interstate commerce. This inference is commonly referred to as the dormant Commerce Clause.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN31[] Justiciability, Standing

Standing includes two components: Article III constitutional standing and prudential standing. Prudential standing requires that the plaintiff's complaint must fall within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute or constitutional guarantee in question. The zone-of- interests test denies a right of review if the plaintiff's interests are marginally related to or inconsistent with the purposes implicit in the relevant constitutional provision.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN32[] Justiciability, Standing

Article III standing is jurisdictional and can neither be waived by the parties nor ignored by the court.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Stimulation of Commerce

HN33[] Interstate Commerce, Prohibition of Commerce

The chief purpose underlying the Commerce Clause is to limit the power of the States to erect barriers against interstate trade. The intent is to promote a national market and the free flow of goods and services through the several states; it is the economic interest in being free from trade barriers that the clause protects. The ultimate question, therefore, is whether the plaintiff's claims bear more than a marginal relationship to claims addressing a state or county's effort to erect barriers to interstate commerce.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN34[] Justiciability, Standing

As the name implies, the "zone of interests" test turns on the interest sought to be protected, not the harm suffered by the plaintiff. Any alleged injury must somehow be tied to a barrier imposed on interstate commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN35[] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

The Commerce Clause protects the vitality of the national market for goods and services, not the location of a particular participant, and thus a state burdens the rights of its own residents as well as those of other states when it burdens interstate commerce. Although the dormant Commerce Clause primarily targets discrimination against out-of-state economic activity, under Pike it prohibits all unjustifiable burdens on interstate commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN36[] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

It is well established that Congress may authorize the States to engage in regulation that the Commerce Clause would otherwise forbid. Congressional authorization must be unmistakably clear and unambiguous. Congress must clearly evince its intent to alter the limits of state power otherwise imposed by the Commerce Clause. Congressional authorization is a defense that the state must prove.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

HN37[] Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

For more than a century, the general rule has been that when an act of the legislature is repealed, it must be considered, except as to transactions past and closed, as if it never existed. Even in a pending action, no judgment could be rendered after the repeal of the act under which it was brought and prosecuted. A statute that Congress snuffed out of existence by repeal leaves no residual clear statement of authorization.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

HN38[] Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Savings clauses can be used to preserve state authority from implied preemption when Congress passes a statute. By the same token, Congress could enact a savings clause to avoid the natural implication of repealing an act.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Public Health & Welfare Law > General Overview

HN39[] Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

See Pub. L. No. 99-660, tit. VII, § 701, 100 Stat. 3743, 3799 (1986).

Counsel: James L. Phillips (argued), Miller Nash, LLP, Seattle, Washington, for the appellant and cross-appellee.

Richard A. McCartan, Assistant Attorney General, Michael Steven Tribble(argued), Assistant Attorney General, Washington State Office of the Attorney General, Olympia, Washington, for the appellee and cross-appellant.

Judges: Before: Raymond C. Fisher, Ronald M. Gould and Richard C. Tallman, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Fisher.

Opinion by: Raymond C. Fisher

Opinion

[*923] FISHER, Circuit Judge:

The Washington State Department of Health (Department) will not license Yakima Valley Memorial Hospital (Memorial) to perform certain procedures known as elective percutaneous coronary interventions (PCI), which are used to treat diseased arteries of the heart. Examples of such procedures include stent implantation and laser angioplasty.[1] Although Memorial already performs PCI in emergencies (no license required), it cannot perform "elective" procedures without a license that is required as part of the [2] state's broader "certificate of need" regulatory regime. See Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-700.[2] According to the Department, the community Memorial serves does not need another PCI provider.

HN3[] The concept of certificate of need regimes, which many states enforce, is to avoid private parties making socially inefficient investments in health-care [3] resources they might make if left unregulated. A certificate of need program corrects the market by requiring preapproval for certain investments and, in theory, thereby ensures that providers will make only necessary investments in health care. One type of investment the state of Washington regulates is the capacity to perform "tertiary health services," which are specialized health-care services including PCI. See Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.105(4)(f).[3] Congress made certificate of need regimes part of the federal government's national [*924] health planning policy in the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974 (NHPRDA). See Nat'l Gerimedical Hosp. & Gerontology Ctr. v. Blue Cross, 452 U.S. 378, 384, 101 S. Ct. 2415, 69 L. Ed. 2d 89 (1981) (noting that Congress intended to "assist in preventing overinvestment in and maldistribution of health facilities").[4] The NHPRDA conditioned federal funding on enforcement of certificate of need regimes as part of the congressional effort to reduce health-care inflation and achieve an adequate supply and distribution of health resources. See id. at 385-86; 42 U.S.C. § 300k (1976); see also Walgreen Co. v. Rullan, 405 F.3d 50, 52 (1st Cir. 2005). In response, Washington [4] enacted its current certificate of need framework in 1979. See Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.015.[5] Although Congress repealed the NHPRDA in 1986, leaving states free to abandon their certificate of need programs, Washington has continued its program. Cf. Rullan, 405 F.3d at 53 (noting that after 1986 "several states followed suit by repealing their certificate of need laws").

HN4[] In 2007, the Washington legislature passed a law directing the Department to promulgate regulations requiring a certificate [5] of need for elective PCI. See Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.128. The Department responded in 2008 by promulgating the PCI regulations Memorial now challenges. See Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-700-755. The PCI regulations, which are explained in detail below, (a) require that a licensed hospital perform at least 300 elective PCI procedures per year; and (b) provide that the Department shall issue a certificate of need only if projected demand in an applicant's geographic market exceeds the capacity of incumbent certificate holders by at least 300 procedures. Under this formula, Memorial has no hope of receiving a certificate of need in the near

---

[1] See HN1[] Wash. Admin Code § 246-310-705(4) (defining PCI as including, but not limited to, seven "mechanical procedures and devices that are used by cardiologists for the revascularization of obstructed coronary arteries"); see also id. § 246-310-745(4) (defining PCI by reference to "diagnosis related groups" developed under a Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services contract).

[2] See HN2[] Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-705(2) (defining "elective" to mean "a PCI performed on a patient with cardiac function that has been stable in the days or weeks prior to the operation," which is "usually scheduled at least one day prior to the surgical procedure"). The licensing requirement only applies to "adult" procedures, See id. § 246-310-700, which includes only those "performed on the planning area residents over fifteen years of age," Id. § 246-310-745(10) (Step 1b).

[3] For a statement of purpose, see Wash. Rev. Code §§ 70.38.015(2), 115; Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-001; Overlake Hosp. Ass'n v. Dep't of Health, 170 Wn.2d 43, 239 P.3d 1095, 1098-99, 1101 (Wash. 2010) (en banc) (¶¶ 9, 18). For a description of tertiary health services, see Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.025(14); Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-010(58), -020(1)(d).

[4] See Pub. L. 93-641, 88 Stat. 2225, §§ 1-3 (1975) (formerly codified at 42 U.S.C. § 300k-300n-5) (repealed by Pub. L. 99-660, title VII, § 701(a), 100 Stat. 3743, 3799 (1986)).

[5] Washington, along with 23 other states, had a certificate of need program prior to 1979. However, Washington enacted its current program in direct response to Congress' enactment of the NHPRDA.

future. Memorial operates a single nonprofit hospital in Yakima, Washington. The surrounding market is already served by the for-profit Yakima Regional Medical and Cardiac Center, which holds an elective PCI certificate and is the only competing hospital in the city of Yakima. The Department does not contest Memorial's assertion that the market's "need" will not exceed 300 procedures until 2022.

Memorial sued the Department after it promulgated the PCI regulations, arguing that the certificate of need requirement violates the dormant Commerce Clause [6] by unreasonably burdening interstate commerce. Memorial also claimed that the Department's methodology for defining "need" is anticompetitive and preempted by § 1 of the Sherman Act because it allows incumbent certificate holders to expand their capacity and preclude new certificates. The Department moved to dismiss the case for failure to state a claim and lack of standing to raise a dormant Commerce Clause challenge. Although the district court held that Memorial had standing, it dismissed the case on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c). See Yakima Valley Mem'l Hosp. v. Wash. State Dept. of Health, 717 F. Supp. 2d 1159 (E.D. Wash. 2010).

The district court held that Memorial failed to state a claim of antitrust preemption, holding that the PCI regulations were a unilateral restraint of trade not barred by the Sherman Act. With regard to the dormant Commerce Clause, the district [*925] court found Memorial had standing because it alleged it would participate in an interstate market for PCI patients, doctors and supplies. Nevertheless, the district court found that any burden on Memorial's interstate commercial activity was expressly authorized by Congress' approval [7] of certificate of need regimes, making a dormant Commerce Clause violation impossible. Memorial appeals the judgment, and the Department cross-appeals the ruling on standing. We agree that Memorial failed to state a claim of antitrust preemption because the PCI regulations are a unilateral licensing requirement rather than an agreement in restraint of trade. We also agree that Memorial has standing under the dormant Commerce Clause, but we reverse the district court's judgment on that claim because the Department failed to prove congressional authorization for the PCI regulations.

Discussion

HN5[] The district court ruled on the pleadings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), so we assume the facts alleged in the complaint are true and review de novo whether Memorial stated a claim under the Sherman Act or dormant Commerce Clause. See United States ex rel. Cafasso v. Gen. Dynamics C4 Sys., Inc., 637 F.3d 1047, 1053 (9th Cir. 2011).[6] HN6[] "In reviewing the dismissal of a complaint, we inquire whether the complaint's factual allegations, together with all reasonable inferences, state a plausible claim for relief." Id. at 1054 (citing Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949 —50 (2009)). [8] HN7[] We also review de novo whether the plaintiff has standing. See *Sierra Forest Legacy v. Sherman, 646 F.3d 1161, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10655, 2011 WL 2041149, at 9 (9th Cir. May 26, 2011); Barnum Timber Co. v. EPA, 633 F.3d 894, 905 n.3 (9th Cir. 2011).

A. The Sherman Act

1. Antitrust Preemption Requires a Per Se Violation

[6] In granting the Rule 12(c) motion, the district court declined to consider two expert reports submitted by Memorial months after briefing and argument on the motion had concluded, because the reports were outside of the pleadings. Memorial appeals that decision, but the argument merits little discussion. HN8[] Judgment on the pleadings is limited to material included in the pleadings. See Schneider v. California Dep't of Corrections, 151 F.3d 1194, 1197 n.1 (9th Cir. 1998); see also Ranch Realty, Inc. v. DC Ranch Realty, LLC, 614 F. Supp. 2d 983, 987-88 (D. Ariz. 2007). Otherwise, the proceeding is converted to summary judgment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d). HN9[] The district court had discretion not to convert the motion for judgment on the pleadings into a summary judgment motion, see Hamilton Materials, Inc. v. Dow Chem. Corp., 494 F.3d 1203, 1207 (9th Cir. 2007), and did not abuse its discretion here. To the extent Memorial's expert reports contain factual information, the [9] district court reasonably found them unhelpful when submitted after the hearing on the motion to dismiss.

Memorial argues that the PCI regulations are preempted by Sherman Act § 1, which declares HN10[] "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade . . . to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN11[] There are two primary modes of analysis under Sherman Act § 1:

> The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized that by the language of the Sherman Act, "'Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints.'" Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006) (quoting State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997)). "[M]ost antitrust claims are analyzed under a 'rule of reason,' according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of [*926] factors. . . ." State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10. . . .
>
> "Some types of restraints, however, have such predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect, and such limited potential for procompetitive benefit, that they are deemed unlawful per se." State Oil, 522 U.S. at 10. [10] Such restraints "'are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.'" Nw. Wholesale Stationers[, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery and Printing Co.], 472 U.S. [284,] 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 [(1985)](quoting N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958)).

*California ex rel. Harris v. Safeway, Inc.,651 F.3d 1118, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 14259, 2011 WL 2684942 at 11 (9th Cir. 2011) (en banc). The blanket condemnation of per se analysis applies only where the "challenged practice [has] 'manifestly anticompetitive' effects and lack[s] 'any redeeming virtue.'" Id. (quoting Con'l T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977)). Otherwise, the rule of reason is the default mode of analysis. See id.

HN12[] The distinction between the rule of reason and per se analysis is important for federal preemption, which requires "an irreconcilable conflict between the federal and state regulatory schemes." Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 659, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982). Sherman Act § 1 preempts state law only "when the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation" — without per se illegal conduct, there can be no [11] certainty that the regulation conflicts with the Sherman Act. Id. at 661 (quoted by Sanders v. Brown, 504 F.3d 903, 910-11 (9th Cir. 2007)). Conduct "contemplated" by the regulation is that which it "mandates," "authorizes," or "places irresistible pressure" on a private party to commit. Id; Sanders, 504 F.3d at 910 (quoting Rice); see also Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Maleng, 522 F.3d 874, 885-86 (9th Cir. 2008) ("[T]o be struck down, the regulation or restraint must effect a per se violation of the Sherman Act."). Importantly, a state regulation is not preempted simply because it has anticompetitive effects. See Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 264, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986).

HN13[] To determine whether a regulation facially conflicts with Sherman Act § 1, we first consider whether the challenged regulation involves (1) unilateral action by the state and is thus not subject to preemption (because there is no concerted action), See id. at 266-67 (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984))[7]; or (2) a hybrid of state and private action and is thus potentially subject to preemption, See id. at 267-69.[8] See also Costco, 522 F.3d at 887-89 (distinguishing between unilateral [12] and hybrid regulations).

---

[7] See also Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 567-68, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984) ("When the conduct is that of the sovereign itself, . . . the danger of unauthorized restraint of trade does not arise."); Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943) ("We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature.").

[8] HN14[] A hybrid regulation is only potentially preempted because the private discretionary conduct it incorporates may not "in all cases [be] a per se violation." Sanders, 504 F.3d at 910-11; see also id. at 919 (holding that to be preempted as a per se illegal "hybrid restraint," a regulation must involve "a delegation of market power to private parties that is per se illegal" because "[o]therwise, the hybrid restraint could not be attacked as facially invalid"); Fisher, 475 U.S. at 270 (holding that where regulations lacked "the element of concerted action needed before they can be characterized as a per se violation," there could

[*927] HN15[] A regulation is a unilateral restraint when "[n]o further action is necessary by the private parties because the anticompetitive nature of [the] restraint is complete upon enactment." Costco, 522 F.3d at 890. "[P]ublic officials determine[ ] the nature and extent of the resulting consumer injury, with no degree of discretion delegated to private actors." Id. Consequently, any anticompetitive effects are the "logical and intended result" of the state's action, rather than [14] the result of private parties being empowered to "'dictate market conditions to others.'" Id. at 887 (quoting Sanders, 504 F.3d at 918). Because the state acts alone in creating the restraint, there is no concerted action to be evaluated for consistency with Sherman Act § 1. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 267.

In contrast, a hybrid restraint "may be attacked under [Sherman Act] § 1" as per se unreasonable. 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 345 n.8, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987) (quoting Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268) (quotation marks omitted). The "hallmark" of a hybrid restraint is the "delegation of discretion to private actors." Costco, 522 F.3d at 898 n.20. The key distinction is that the regulation leaves a gap in the restraint of trade for private parties to fill at their discretion. A regulation is not hybrid "solely because it produces an effect that could not be produced by agreement of private parties without violating the antitrust laws." Id. at 889 (emphasis added). Rather, hybrid regulations "merely enforce private marketing decisions," granting "a degree of private regulatory power" to the regulated parties. Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268 (citing Rice, 458 U.S. at 665 [15] (Stevens, J., concurring in judgment)).[9]

In light of the foregoing principles, we must decide whether the PCI regulations go beyond the anticompetitive tendencies of a licensing requirement and actually delegate a degree of regulatory power to incumbent licensees.[10] Memorial argues [*928] that the PCI regulations grant regulatory power to incumbent licensees by calculating the need for a new certificate based in part on the [16] number of PCI procedures they per- form, thereby allowing the incumbent licensees to manipulate the number of PCIs they perform so as to exclude competing hospitals from the elective PCI market. We disagree, for reasons explained below. We begin with an analysis of the regulations.

2. The PCI Regulations Impose a Barrier to Entry

HN17[] The Washington legislature ordered the Department to promulgate a certificate of need requirement for elective PCI addressing, "at a minimum, factors related to access to care, patient safety, quality outcomes, costs, and the stability of Washington's cardiac care delivery system and of existing cardiac care providers." Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.128 (2007). In response, the Department promulgated regulations setting forth a variety of requirements for an elective PCI certificate of need. See Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-700-755. Memorial be no preemption). Not all delegations of discretion will amount to per se illegal restraints of trade — for example, [13] the delegation might resemble a vertical non-price restraint uniformly analyzed under the rule of reason. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 661-62; Costco, 522 F.3d at 891 n.11.

---

Even a per se illegal hybrid restraint may be saved from preemption by the "state action" immunity doctrine. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 265 (citing Parker, 317 U.S. at 341). We do not need to reach the question of stateaction immunity, and thus our opinion should not be construed as an analysis of the state's supervision of PCI providers, despite the suggestion in Costco that state-action immunity and unilateral action analyses can be conflated. See 522 F.3d at 887 (citing Snake River Valley Elec. Ass'n v. PacifiCorp, 238 F.3d 1189, 1192 n.8 (9th Cir. 2001)).

[9] HN16[] General statements that a restraint is hybrid because "the federal antitrust laws pre-empt state laws authorizing or compelling private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior," 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 345 n.8, or because regulations "creating unsupervised private power in derogation of competition are subject to preemption," Costco, 522 F.3d at 889, must be understood in context. Not all potentially anticompetitive conduct creates an irreconcilable conflict with federal law, either because it is subject to the rule of reason or because it is unilateral action by private parties covered by Sherman Act § 2's fact-specific analysis. See id. at 891 n.11 (recognizing that a regulation "akin to a non-price vertical restraint" would be analyzed under the rule of reason).

[10] See Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1439 & n.11 (1995) ("It is well known that some of the most insuperable barriers in the great race of competition are the result of government regulation." (quoting United States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 673 (9th Cir. 1990) (quotation marks omitted))).

challenges [17] only the PCI regulations' methodology for calculating a community's need for an additional elective PCI provider. See Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-745. As is apparent from the regulations, once the Department grants a hospital a certificate of need to perform elective PCI, the requirement that there be an unmet demand for 300 procedures before granting another certificate of need creates a barrier to entry for potential competing hospitals.

HN18[] The Department calculates need based on dividing the state into 14 geographical markets (planning areas). See id. §§ 246-310-705(5), -745(10). A hospital applies for a certificate of need to serve a particular planning area. The Department then forecasts whether the planning area will have unmet demand for elective PCI procedures within five years. See id. § 246-310-745(10) (explaining a five-step numeric methodology). A planning area "needs" another provider of elective PCI only if projected demand exceeds current capacity by 300 procedures. See id. (Steps 4-5).[11]

HN19[] Projected demand is based on the planning area's current "use rate" (procedures per 1,000 residents) in the "base year" and the planning area's estimated population in the "forecast year," five years into the future. Id. §§ 246-310-745 (1), (3), (5) & (10) (Steps 1-2). Assuming a constant use rate, the Department projects demand in the forecast year. That is, the projected demand is the current "use rate" multiplied by the forecasted population. If the projected demand sufficiently exceeds the planning area's current capacity, the Department will issue a certificate of need.

HN20[] Current capacity is based on the volume of procedures performed by the planning area's existing certified PCI providers in the base year. The planning area's current capacity is "assumed to remain constant over the forecast period." Id. § 246-310-745(10) (Step 3). The Department calculates the planning area's net need for an additional provider by subtracting the current capacity from the projected demand. See id. (Step 4). If the difference exceeds 300 procedures, the Department will issue one certificate of need for every 300 excess procedures. That is, if there is excess demand from 301 to 599 procedures, [19] the Department will issue only a [*929] single additional certificate of need. Similarly, if there is excess demand up to 299 procedures, the Department will not issue any new certificates. See id. (Step 5). The regulations' limitation on when hospitals may offer elective PCI procedures serves as a barrier to market entry for hospitals who, but for the certificate of need requirement, would begin offering elective PCI procedures and competing for those patients.

3. The PCI Regulations are a Unilateral Restraint Not Subject to Preemption

Memorial's challenge focuses on Step 3, which relies on incumbent certificate holders' "current capacity" to define whether need exists for an additional licensee. Memorial argues that, because incumbent hospitals can expand their current capacity to meet demand, they can forestall entry of a competing PCI provider.

Memorial mistakes the barrier to entry created by the licensing requirement, and its attendant anticompetitive effects, for a hybrid restraint. HN21[] The Department licenses the first certificate of need holder in a planning area to perform as many PCI procedures as it wishes. The logical and intended result of the PCI regulations is that the Department [20] will issue a second certificate of need only if the incumbent does not expand its capacity to meet growing demand. The PCI regulations create market power, but that is different from a hybrid regulation that delegates regulatory power.

That the Department leaves open the number of procedures that an incumbent licensee may perform does not mean it delegates regulatory power to licensees. The restraint of trade is the licensing requirement — a barrier to entry — and it is complete upon enactment. The state imposes the licensing requirements. The state decides what the licensing requirements will be and whether they are met. The state does not delegate any aspect of need calculation to private parties. Admittedly, the state takes notice of whether incumbent providers are meeting the needs of the planning area, but that*HN22*[] responsiveness to private activity does not amount to a hybrid restraint. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 269 (holding that despite the power of tenants to trigger enforcement of a regulated rent ceiling, the rent levels were set exclusively by the state and the ceiling thus was a unilateral restraint).

[11] See also Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-010(58), -715(2). If a planning area's net need is negative, the Department may revoke existing certificates of need. See Wash. Admin. Code §§ 246-310-715(2), [18] -755(a).

Rather, the Department has decided that monopoly is preferable in the market [21] for elective PCI; otherwise it would grant a second certificate when a planning area's demand exceeded 600 procedures annually ? that is, when the market would support two competing providers both able to perform the minimum 300 procedures annually. That a licensee meets the Department's expectation and supplies all demand is the logical and intended consequence of the PCI regulations, not a delegation of regulatory power to the incumbent. Entry is prohibited by the Department's decision to grant an unlimited license and then withhold additional licenses until the incumbent can no longer meet demand, not the incumbent's natural inclination to capitalize on the market power the licensing requirement creates.

Moreover, an incumbent provider's discretion to increase supply unilaterally to meet demand is neither per se illegal nor recognizable as an element of a per se illegal agreement.[12] The only facet [*930] of the PCI regulations that could be equated with a per se illegal agreement is the division of the state into planning areas, but the licensees have no role in drawing the dividing lines.[13] It is true that within a planning area the incumbent certificate holders might conspire to jointly [22] keep current capacity within 300 procedures of projected demand, but the PCI regulations neither require, encourage nor condone collusion. In short, nothing about the PCI regulations involves private discretion to engage in per se anticompetitive conduct.

HN25[] Although this case deals with a barrier to entry, the case law on hybrid and unilateral restraints involving price-fixing is instructive. For instance, horizontal [23] price fixing is per se illegal. See Dagher, 547 U.S. at 5. Agreements to post and hold prices have been found to be such prohibited horizontal conduct. See Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 649-50, 100 S. Ct. 1925, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1980) (discussing Sugar Inst. v. United States, 297 U.S. 553, 601-02, 56 S. Ct. 629, 80 L. Ed. 859 (1936)). Thus, we held in Costco that a state regulation requiring competing wholesalers to post their prices and hold to those posted prices for a fixed period was a hybrid restraint. Such regulatory post-and-hold requirements do not mandate, authorize or compel the concerted action necessary to make a private post-and-hold system per se illegal. But the regulations do have the effect of delegating to private parties the discretion to set the posted price to be held — an anticompetitive arrangement they could not achieve legally by explicit agreement. See Costco, 522 F.3d at 895-96; see also 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 345 n.8 ("Our decisions reflect the principle that the federal antitrust laws pre-empt state laws authorizing . . . private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior.").[14]

---

[12] HN23[] At worst, capacity expansion, if motivated by a specific intent to monopolize with a dangerous probability of success, might be attempted monopolization under Sherman Act § 2, but that could not be decided on a facial challenge and thus could not warrant preemption. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 270 n.2 (holding that an allegation of monopolization or attempted monopolization would "go[ ] beyond the scope of the facial [preemption] challenge presented here"); Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 774-75 (explaining Congress intentionally subjected unilateral, private conduct to a less demanding standard under Sherman Act § 2 than agreements under Sherman Act § 1).

[13] HN24[] Horizontal market division is a "classic per se antitrust violation." United States v. Brown, 936 F.2d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 1991).

[14] The Supreme Court reached a similar result in holding preempted a regulation that compelled vertical resale price [24] maintenance but allowed wholesalers to fix the price. See 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 341-42 (discussing Cal. Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 102-03, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980)); Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268-69 (same); Rice, 458 U.S. at 659 (same). HN26[] Although vertical resale price maintenance is no longer per se illegal, Midcal remains instructive. See Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 889, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (overturning the per se rule against vertical resale price maintenance announced in Dr. Miles Med. Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 (1911)).

If the state fixes the price, however, the requirement that private parties adhere to the fixed price is a unilateral restraint. For example, in Fisher, the Supreme Court held that a regulation requiring private landlords to adhere to a maximum rent ceiling fixed by the state was a unilateral restraint. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 269 ("Not just the controls themselves but also the rent ceilings they mandate have been unilaterally imposed on the landlords by the city."). The anticompetitive effects were the same as if the landlords had conspired, but the extent of the harm to competition was decided by the state [25] and complete upon enactment of the regulation.

Memorial argues that incumbent certificate holders' control over their PCI capacity makes them like the wholesalers in Costco (who were free to set their own [*931] prices), not the landlords in Fisher (for whom rent was fixed by regulation). Memorial fails to recognize that HN27[] in a post-and-hold regime the restraint of trade is that private parties hold to their prices, whereas here the restraint is not that licensees are allowed to expand their capacity, but rather that the Department requires licenses and doles them out based on a standard skewed toward monopoly.

We made a similar distinction in Costco, which in addition to holding that a post-and-hold regulation was a hybrid restraint, held that a regulation requiring wholesalers to charge at least a 10-percent mark-up was a unilateral restraint. Although the minimum mark-up regulation "gave" private parties discretion to mark up higher than the minimum, the state did not create that discretion. Wholesalers could already mark up their prices unilaterally. The regulation simply created a floor on price competition without allowing private parties any role in setting what the floor would be. The [26] regulated market was less competitive, but the restraint of trade was complete upon enactment of the regulation. Significantly, the state did not grant "to private parties a means to manipulate, and therefore control, the pricing decisions of other firms," in contrast to post-and-hold regulations. Costco, 522 F.3d at 899.

In sum, "[t]he distinction between unilateral and concerted action is critical here" because the state unilaterally imposes the barrier to entry and unilaterally determines when to issue a new PCI license. Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266. Any anticompetitive effect from allowing the first licensee the option of holding a monopoly in the planning area is "part-and#x2D;parcel of the state-imposed licensing scheme." Costco, 522 F.3d at 890. There is neither a per se illegal agreement nor its functional equivalent to turn the PCI regulations into a hybrid restraint. Absent a hybrid restraint or other per se violation of the antitrust laws, there is no preemption and the district court properly granted judgment on the pleadings.[15]

B. The Dormant Commerce Clause

Memorial's complaint alleges that the PCI regulations violate the dormant Commerce Clause by placing an undue burden on interstate commerce.[16] If it were not for the licensing requirement, Memorial would offer elective PCI to out-of-state patients, as well as hire out-of-state doctors and import medical supplies from out-of-state to perform the procedures. There is no allegation of intentional discrimination against interstate commerce, but HN29[] "[e]ven laws that are applied evenhandedly and impose only an incidental burden on interstate commerce can be unconstitutional." Shamrock Farms Co. v. Veneman, 146 F.3d 1177, 1179 (9th Cir. 1998); see also C&A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, 511 U.S. 383, 389, 114 S. Ct. 1677, 128 L. Ed. 2d 399 (1994) ("It is [*932] well settled [28] that actions are within the domain of the Commerce Clause if they burden interstate commerce or impede its free flow."). Where a law only incidentally burdens interstate commerce, it "will be upheld unless the burden imposed on interstate commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits." Dep't of Revenue of Ky. v. Davis, 553 U.S. 328, 338-39, 128 S. Ct. 1801, 170 L. Ed. 2d 685 (2008) (quoting Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 90 S. Ct. 844, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1970)) (quotation marks and alteration omitted).

[15] Memorial complains that by rejecting its allegation that the PCI regulations are a hybrid restraint of trade, the district court did not construe the [27] facts alleged in the complaint in its favor. Whether a regulation is a hybrid restraint of trade is a question of law, see Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, vol. XI ¶ 1909b (2d ed. 2000) (explaining that HN28[] identification of per se illegal restraints is a question of law, citing Arizona v. Maricopa Cnty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 337 n.3, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982)), so there was no need to construe that allegation in Memorial's favor.

[16] HN30[] The Commerce Clause of the Constitution explicitly grants Congress authority to regulate interstate commerce. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. As a corollary, the Commerce Clause implicitly limits the regulatory authority of the states over interstate commerce. This inference is commonly referred to as the dormant Commerce Clause. See Nat'l Ass'n of Optometrists & Opticians LensCrafters, Inc. v. Brown, 567 F.3d 521, 523 (9th Cir. 2009).

We must decide whether Memorial has standing to raise a dormant Commerce Clause challenge under Pike, and if so, whether the PCI regulations are immunized by congressional authorization. The ultimate question of whether the PCI regulations survive Pike scrutiny is not before [29] us.

1. Memorial has standing to raise a dormant Commerce Clause challenge

HN31[] Standing includes two components: Article III constitutional standing and prudential standing. See City of L.A. v. Cnty. of Kern, 581 F.3d 841, 845 (9th Cir. 2009). The Department challenges only Memorial's prudential standing.[17] As relevant here, prudential standing requires that "the plaintiff's complaint must 'fall within the zone of interests to be protected or regulated by the statute or constitutional guarantee in question.'" Individuals for Responsible Gov't, Inc. v. Washoe Cnty., 110 F.3d 699, 702-03 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Ams. United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 474, 102 S. Ct. 752, 70 L. Ed. 2d 700 (1982)). The zone-of- interests test "denies a right of review if the plaintiff's interests are . . . marginally related to or inconsistent with the purposes implicit in the relevant constitutional provision." Id. at 703 (quoting Wyoming v. Oklahoma, 502 U.S. 437, 469, 112 S. Ct. 789, 117 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1992) (Scalia, J., dissenting)) (omission in original) (quotation marks and alteration omitted). Thus, we must first identify the purpose of the dormant Commerce Clause.

HN33[] "The chief purpose underlying [the Commerce] Clause is to limit 'the power of the States to erect barriers against interstate trade.'" Washoe Cnty., 110 F.3d at 703 (quoting Dennis v. Higgins, 498 U.S. 439, 446, 111 S. Ct. 865, 112 L. Ed. 2d 969 (1991)). The intent is to promote a national market and "the free flow of goods and services through the several states; it is the economic interest in being free from trade barriers that the clause protects." S.D. Myers, Inc. v. City & Cnty. of S.F., 253 F.3d 461, 471 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing C&A Carbone, 511 U.S. at 390; On the Green Apartments L.L.C. v. City of Tacoma, 241 F.3d 1235, 1238 (9th Cir. 2001)). The ultimate question, therefore, is whether Memorial's claims "bear more than a marginal relationship to claims addressing a state or county's effort to erect barriers to interstate commerce." Cnty. of Kern, 581 F.3d at 847 (quotation marks omitted).

HN34[] "As the name implies, the zone of interests test turns on the interest sought to be protected, [31] not the harm suffered by the plaintiff." Id. at 848. Any alleged injury "must somehow be tied to a barrier imposed on interstate commerce." Id. Here, the barrier to interstate commerce is the requirement of a certificate of need to offer elective PCI to all patients, in-state [*933] or out-of-state. By virtue of the certificate of need requirement, the Department prevents Memorial from soliciting out-of-state patients and competing in an interstate market to offer elective PCI services, activities that clearly involve interstate commerce. See Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 329-30, 111 S. Ct. 1842, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366 (1991). Under Pike such incidental effects on interstate commerce are an unconstitutional barrier to trade if they are "clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits." Pike, 397 U.S. at 142.

The Department contends that Memorial lacks standing because it operates only an in-state hospital. HN35[] The Commerce Clause, however, protects the vitality of the national market for goods and services, not the location of a particular participant, and thus a state burdens the rights of its own residents as well as those of other states when it burdens interstate commerce. Although the dormant Commerce Clause [32] primarily targets discrimination against out-of-state economic activity, under Pike it prohibits all unjustifiable burdens on interstate commerce. See Kleenwell Biohazard Waste and Gen. Ecology Consultants, Inc. v. Nelson, 48 F.3d 391, 392, 398-99 (9th Cir. 1995)

[17] Recognizing that HN32[] Article III standing is jurisdictional [30] and can neither be waived by the parties nor ignored by the court, we are independently satisfied that Memorial has Article III standing under Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992). See Cnty. of Kern, 581 F.3d at 845.

(reviewing a facially neutral licensing regime under Pike where the plaintiff was an in-state "corporation with all of its facilities located within the state"). Memorial's alleged injury is thus tied to an alleged violation of the dormant Commerce Clause. The district court correctly held that prudential standing is satisfied.

2. Congress has not authorized the 2008 PCI regulations

HN36[] "It is well established that Congress may authorize the States to engage in regulation that the Commerce Clause would otherwise forbid." Maine v. Taylor, 477 U.S. 131, 138, 106 S. Ct. 2440, 91 L. Ed. 2d 110 (1986) (citing S. Pac. Co. v. Ariz. ex rel. Sullivan, 325 U.S. 761, 769, 65 S. Ct. 1515, 89 L. Ed. 1915 (1945)); see Ne. Bancorp, Inc. v. Bd. of Governors of the Fed. Reserve Sys., 472 U.S. 159, 174, 105 S. Ct. 2545, 86 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1985). Congressional authorization must be "'unmistakably clear'" and "unambiguous." Taylor, 477 U.S. at 139 (quoting South-Central Timber Dev. Inc. v. Wunnicke, 467 U.S. 82, 91, 104 S. Ct. 2237, 81 L. Ed. 2d 71 (1984)). Congress must clearly evince [33] its intent "to alter the limits of state power otherwise imposed by the Commerce Clause." Id. (quotation marks omitted) (quoting United States v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n of Cal., 345 U.S. 295, 304, 73 S. Ct. 706, 97 L. Ed. 1020 (1953); see South-Central Timber, 467 U.S. at 91 (requiring clear evidence that Congress "affirmatively contemplate[d] otherwise invalid state legislation"). Congressional authorization is a defense that the state must prove. See Wyoming, 502 U.S. at 458.

The district court granted judgment on the pleadings to the Department because it concluded Congress had authorized certificate of need programs in the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act of 1974 (NHPRDA). See supra n.4. Although recognizing that the NHPRDA had been repealed in 1986 before the Department promulgated the challenged regulations in 2008, the district court accepted the repealed statute as a prima facie authorization and erroneously put the burden on Memorial to prove the significance of repeal. We reverse because the Department has failed to show that the NHPRDA, a statute repealed without a savings clause, provides the requisite clear statement of authorization for the 2008 PCI regulations.[18] We do not decide [34] whether the NHPRDA is sufficient [*934] authorization for certificate of need requirements established prior to repeal.

The Department argues that the NHPRDA was a clear statement of authorization for certificate of need regimes because the statute made them a condition of federal funding. Memorial disputes whether this suffices as a sufficiently clear statement of authorization, but we need not decide the question. Whatever the NHPRDA authorized prior to 1986, after Congress repealed the statute there was no NHPRDA left to authorize a regulation promulgated in 2008. HN37[] For more than a century, "the general rule . . . [has been] that when an act of the legislature is repealed, it must be considered, except [35] as to transactions past and closed, as if it never existed." Ex Parte McCardle, 74 U.S. 506, 514, 19 L. Ed. 264 (1868) (quotation marks omitted). Even in a pending action, "no judgment could be rendered . . . after the repeal of the act under which it was brought and prosecuted." Id. A statute that Congress snuffed out of existence by repeal leaves no residual clear statement of authorization.

Had Congress meant to perpetuate its alleged authorization for certificate of need programs, it could have included a savings clause in the repeal.[19] The savings clause would then itself be an unmistakably clear statement of

---

[18] The burden did not fall on Memorial to rebut the alleged clear statement in the NHPRDA because there was no NHPRDA in force to make a clear statement. A different situation arose in Central Valley Chrysler- Jeep v. Witherspoon, 456 F. Supp. 2d 1160 (E.D. Cal. 2006), which put the burden on the plaintiff to prove that an apparently clear statement of authorization had in fact been implicitly revoked by subsequent legislation. See id. at 1185. Here, there is no doubt the NHPRDA was repealed.

[19] The repeal stated:

> HN39[] Sec. 701. Repeal of Title XV
>
> (a) Repeal — Title XV of the Public Health Services Act is repealed effective January 1, 1987.
>
> (b) Funds — The repeal made by subsection (a) shall not affect any funds obligated for the purposes of title XV of the Public Health Service Act before January 1, 1987.

authorization. HN38[] Savings clauses can be used to preserve state authority from implied preemption when Congress passes a statute. See, e.g., Telesaurus VPC, LLC v. Power, 623 F.3d 998, 1010 (9th Cir. 2010); Qwest Corp. v. Ariz. Corp. Comm'n, 567 F.3d 1109, 1117-18 (9th Cir. 2009). By the same token, Congress could enact a savings clause to avoid the natural implication of repealing an act. Cf. Daghlian v. DeVry Univ., Inc., 574 F.3d 1212, 1213 (9th Cir. 2009) (order) (dismissing for lack of jurisdiction because the California statute under which the plaintiff sued "was repealed without a savings [36] clause" to preserve pending claims). Instead, Congress repealed the NHPRDA with terse language that, at best, leaves it ambiguous whether Congress affirmatively contemplated the fate of state certificate of need programs.

To the extent there is ambiguity, the Department offers no legislative history to inform our interpretation of it. The district court relied on President Reagan's signing statement, but even if a presidential signing statement could establish an unmistakably clear legislative intent, President Reagan's opinion does not amount to an unmistakably clear statement of authorization for the Department's PCI regulations. See Statement of President Ronald Reagan upon Signing S. 1744, 22 Weekly Comp. Pres. Doc. 1565, 1566 (Nov. 14, 1986).[20] Ultimately, the Department is reduced [*935] to arguing that we can infer [37] authorization from congressional silence — that Congress could not have meant to pull the rug out from under the states after inducing their transition to certificate of need programs, so Congress must have meant to leave undisturbed its authorization for certificates of need. As the district court's agreement demonstrates, that may be a reasonable inference. Congressional silence is not a clear statement, however. See Sossamon v. Texas, ___ U.S. ___, 131 S. Ct. 1651, 1660, 179 L. Ed. 2d 700 (2011). Accordingly, we hold that the repealed NHPRDA does not provide congressional authorization for the 2008 PCI certificate of need regulation.

CONCLUSION

We hold that there is no antitrust preemption because the PCI regulations are a unilateral restraint of trade not subject to preemption. We also hold that Memorial has standing to raise a dormant Commerce Clause challenge under Pike, because the PCI regulations burden the free flow of commerce to Memorial's financial detriment. We reverse judgment on the dormant Commerce Clause claim, however, because the Department failed to prove congressional authorization for its PCI certificate of need regulations. We remand for further proceedings on Memorial's dormant Commerce Clause claim consistent with this opinion. The parties shall bear their own costs.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, REMANDED.

End of Document

Pub. L. No. 99-660, tit. VII, § 701, 100 Stat. 3743, 3799 (1986).

[20] President Reagan said:

> It is also with great pleasure that I can finally lay to rest the Federal health planning authorities. I have sought their repeal since I assumed office. These authorities, while perhaps well-intentioned when they were enacted in the 1970's, have only served to insert the Federal Government into a process that is best reserved to the marketplace. Health planning has proved to be a process that was costly to the Federal Government, in the last analysis without benefit, and even detrimental to the rational allocation of economic resources for health [38] care.

Behrend v. Comcast Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

January 11, 2011, Argued; August 23, 2011, Filed

No. 10-2865

Reporter

655 F.3d 182 *; 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 17524 ; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,575; 80 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 394

CAROLINE BEHREND; STANFORD GLABERSON; JOAN EVANCHUK-KIND; ERIC BRISLAWN v. COMCAST CORPORATION; COMCAST HOLDINGS CORPORATION; COMCAST CABLE COMMUNICATIONS, INC.; COMAST CABLECOMMUNICATIONS HOLDINGS, INC.; COMCAST CABLE HOLDINGS, LLC, Appellants

Subsequent History: Summary judgment granted, in part, summary judgment denied, in part by, Count dismissed at Behrend v. Comcast Corp., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51889 (E.D. Pa., Apr. 12, 2012)

US Supreme Court certiorari granted by, in part Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, 133 S. Ct. 24, 183 L. Ed. 2d 673, 2012 U.S. LEXIS 4754 (U.S., 2012)

Reversed by Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, 2013 U.S. LEXIS 2544 (U.S., Mar. 27, 2013)

Prior History: [1] On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. (D.C. No. 2-03-cv-06604). District Judge: Honorable John R. Padova.

Behrend v. Comcast Corp., 264 F.R.D. 150, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1049 (E.D. Pa., 2010)

Core Terms

damages, overbuilding, district court, antitrust, geographic, prices, clustering, penetration, screen, franchise, calculation, class-wide, cable, class certification, Plaintiffs', merits, benchmark, methodology, predominance, overbuilt, market share, clearly erroneous, certification, anticompetitive, conditions, proven, anticompetitive conduct, national average, contends, class member

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN1[] Sherman Act, Scope

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN2[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Entities, Cable Systems

"Clustering" refers to a strategy whereby cable Multi-System Operators (MSOs) concentrate their operations in regional geographic areas by acquiring cable systems in regions where the MSO already has a significant presence, while giving up other holdings scattered across the country. This strategy is accomplished through purchases and sales of cable systems, or by system swapping among MSOs. An "overbuilder" is a company that builds and offers customers a competitive alternative where a telecommunications company already operates.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Appellate Review

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN4[] Class Actions, Appellate Review

A circuit court of appeals reviews a class certification order for abuse of discretion, which occurs if the district court's decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law or an improper application of law to fact. It reviews de novo whether an incorrect legal standard has been used.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN5[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

For a district court's finding of fact to be clearly erroneous, the standard is high. "Clearly erroneous" has been interpreted to mean that a reviewing court can upset a finding of fact, even if there is some evidence to support the finding, only if the court is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. This means that it is the responsibility of an appellate court to accept the ultimate factual determination of the fact-finder unless that determination either (1) is completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility, or (2) bears no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN6[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

The "clearly erroneous" standard plainly does not entitle a reviewing court to reverse the finding of the trier of fact simply because it is convinced that it would have decided the case differently. In applying the clearly erroneous standard to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo. If the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety, the court of appeals may not reverse it even though convinced that had it been sitting as the trier of fact, it would have weighed the evidence differently. Where there are two permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN7[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 allows a class action if certain requirements are met. First, the class must meet the prerequisites of Rule 23(a): numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy. Second, the class must fit one of the Rule 23(b) types of classes. Rule 23(b)(3) requires (1) that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and (2) that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. Rule 23(b)(3). These requirements are known as predominance and superiority.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN8[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A district court must conduct a rigorous analysis of the evidence and arguments in making the class certification decision. The analysis requires a thorough examination of the factual and legal allegations and may include a preliminary inquiry into the merits. The requirements set out in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 are not mere pleading rules. The court may delve beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements for class certification are satisfied. An overlap between a class certification requirement and the merits of a claim is no reason to decline to resolve relevant disputes when necessary to determine whether a class certification requirement is met. The class determination generally involves considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action. A merits inquiry that is not necessary to determine a Rule 23 requirement is precluded. Accordingly, at the class certification stage, courts are precluded from addressing any merits inquiry unnecessary to making a Rule 23 determination. Further, any findings for the purpose of class certification do not bind the fact-finder on the merits.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Preponderance of Evidence

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN9[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Plaintiffs bear the burden of establishing each element of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 by a preponderance of the evidence. To certify a class the district court must find that the evidence more likely than not establishes each fact necessary to meet the requirements of Rule 23.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN10[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A court must examine critically expert testimony on both sides and may be persuaded by either side as to whether a certification requirement has been met. Indeed, weighing conflicting expert testimony at the certification stage is not only permissible; it may be integral to the rigorous analysis Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 demands.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN11[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

Predominance tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation. It is a test readily met in certain cases alleging consumer or securities fraud or violations of the antitrust laws, but a court may not relax its certification analysis as to each element of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. To assess whether common or individual issues predominate, a district court must examine the nature of the evidence and formulate some prediction as to how specific issues will play out.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN12[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

Individual injury, also known as antitrust impact, is critically important for the purpose of evaluating Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement because it is an element of the claim that may call for individual, as opposed to common, proof. At the class certification stage, a plaintiff's burden is to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN13[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The relevant geographic market is a component of substantive antitrust law. For antitrust claims analyzed through the rule of reason, plaintiffs must demonstrate that the defendant possessed market power in the relevant geographic market. For per se claims, plaintiffs need not establish a geographic market. Some prohibited practices can be conclusively presumed to unreasonably restrain competition. Additionally, direct proof of monopoly power does not require a definition of the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN14[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

Defining the relevant geographic market is an issue of the merits. At the class certification stage, a court need only be satisfied that issues—including the definition of a geographic market—will be capable of proof through evidence common to the class. If the plaintiffs allege per se claims, they may still need to persuade the district court that, in the event defining the relevant geographic market becomes necessary, it is capable of common proof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN15[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

Identification of the relevant geographic market is a matter of analyzing competition. Defining it is a question of fact to be determined in the context of each case in acknowledgment of the commercial realities of the industry being considered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN16[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The geographic market selected must both correspond to the commercial realities of the industry and be economically significant. Thus, although the geographic market in some instances may encompass the entire Nation, under other circumstances it may be as small as a single metropolitan area.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

HN17[] Private Actions, Sherman Act

Plaintiffs' burden at the class certification stage is not to prove the element of antitrust impact, although in order to prevail on the merits each class member must do so. Instead, the task for plaintiffs at class certification is to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Appellate Review

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN18[] Class Actions, Appellate Review

When facts are at issue, a district court exceeds its discretion in certifying a class only if its findings are clearly erroneous. The defendant bears a heavy burden in convincing a circuit court of appeals that the district court's factual findings were clearly erroneous. If the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety, the court of appeals may not reverse it. It is the responsibility of an appellate court to accept the ultimate factual determination of the fact-finder unless that determination either (1) is completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility, or (2) bears no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN19[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Expert theory is not a substitute for market facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN20[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Courts must look to the monopolist's conduct taken as a whole rather than considering each aspect in isolation.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Preponderance of Evidence

HN21[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A district court may inquire into the merits only insofar as it is necessary to determine whether a class certification requirement is met. Any further inquiry is precluded. The question is not whether the plaintiff or plaintiffs will prevail on the merits, but rather whether the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 are met. Courts allow preliminary merits inquiries when necessary for Rule 23 because of the potentially decisive effect on litigation of a certification decision, but those inquiries remain limited and non-binding on the merits at trial. Nothing requires plaintiffs to prove their case at the class certification stage; to the contrary, they must establish by a preponderance that their case is one that meets each requirement of Rule 23.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN22[] Remedies, Damages

If allowed to proceed to trial, the class must establish that the injury it suffered from the violation of the antitrust laws is measurable. Proof of injury (whether or not an injury occurred at all) must be distinguished from calculation of damages (which determines the actual value of the injury). The usual measure in an overcharge case is the difference between the illegal price that was actually charged and the price that would have been charged but for the violation multiplied by the number of units purchased. Given the inherent difficulty of identifying a "but-for world," courts do not require that damages be measured with certainty, but rather that they be demonstrated as a matter of just and reasonable inference. While the damages may not be determined by mere speculation or guess, it will be enough if the evidence show the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN23[] Remedies, Damages

The inquiry for a district court at the class certification stage is whether the plaintiffs have demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that they will be able to measure damages on a class-wide basis using common proof. Some variation of damages among class members does not defeat certification. For antitrust class certification, it uniformly has been held that differences among the members as to the amount of damages incurred does not mean that a class action would be inappropriate. Complex and individual questions of damages, however, weigh against finding predominance. At the class certification stage, the district court must ensure that the plaintiffs' presentation of their case will be through means amenable to the class action mechanism. Courts are looking here not for hard factual proof, but for a more thorough explanation of how the pivotal evidence behind plaintiff's theory can be established. If there is no realistic means of proof, many resources will be wasted setting up a trial that plaintiffs cannot win.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN24[] Remedies, Damages

The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect of their amount.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN25[] Remedies, Damages

At the class certification stage courts do not require that plaintiffs tie each theory of antitrust impact to an exact calculation of damages, but instead that they assure the court that if they can prove antitrust impact, the resulting damages are capable of measurement and will not require labyrinthine individual calculations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Appellate Review

HN26[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Appeals taken pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f) do not furnish the proper vehicle to address the merits of a plaintiffs' antitrust claims.

Counsel: Darryl J. May, BALLARD SPAHR LLP, Philadelphia, PA; Michael S. Shuster [ARGUED], Sheron Korpus, KASOWITZ, BENSON, TORRES & FRIEDMAN LLP, New York, NY, Attorneys for Appellants.

Samuel D. Heins, Vincent J. Esades, David R. Woodward, Jessica N. Servais, HEINS MILLS & OLSON, P.L.C., Minneapolis, Minnesota; Anthony J. Bolognese, Joshua H. Grabar, BOLOGNESE & ASSOCIATES, LLC, Philadelphia, PA; Barry C. Barnett [ARGUED], Daniel H. Charest, Stephen L. Shackelford, Jr., SUSMAN GODFREY L.L.P., Dallas, Texas; Joseph Goldberg, FREEDMAN BOYD HOLLANDER GOLDBERG & IVES, Albuquerque, NM, Attorneys for Appellees.

Judges: Before: FISHER, JORDAN and[*] ALDISERT, Circuit Judges. JORDAN, Circuit Judge, concurring in the judgment part and dissenting in part.

---

[*] Subsequent to oral argument, Judge Aldisert replaced Judge Ambro on the panel. The case was not reargued because the replacement Judge exercised his right to decide the case on the basis of the brief, the record and a transcript of the original oral argument.

Opinion by: ALDISERT

Opinion

[*185] OPINION OF THE COURT

ALDISERT, Circuit Judge.

In [2] 2008 this Court handed down the seminal case of In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litigation, 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008), which outlines the standards a district court should apply in deciding whether to certify a class. This appeal by Comcast requires us to decide if the District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania properly satisfied Hydrogen's directions in determining that questions of fact or law common to class members predominate sufficiently to satisfy Rule 23(b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Appellants contend that the District Court exceeded a proper exercise of discretion and that its findings of fact were clearly erroneous. For the reasons that follow, we hold that the Court did not exceed its permissible discretion in determining that Plaintiffs established by a preponderance of evidence that they would be able to prove through common evidence (1) class-wide antitrust impact (higher cost on non-basic cable programming), and (2) a common methodology to quantify damages on a class-wide basis. Accordingly, we will affirm.

I.

A.

> "For the rational study of the law the black-letter man may be the man of the present, but the man of the future is the man [3] of statistics and the master of economics."
>
> Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., The Path of the Law, 10 Harv. L. Rev. 457, 469 (1897).

Beginning in 1998, Defendants Comcast Corporation, Comcast Holdings Corporation, Comcast Cable Communications, Inc., Comcast Cable Communications Holdings, Inc., and Comcast Cable Holdings, LLC (collectively "Comcast") engaged in a series of transactions that increased Comcast's share of the multichannel video programming distribution services offered in the Philadelphia Designated Market Area ("Philadelphia DMA").[1] Comcast contracted with competing cable providers to either acquire them or to "swap" cable systems it owned in areas outside the Philadelphia DMA for cable systems within the Philadelphia DMA. These transactions form the "Cable System Transactions," involving the "Transaction parties."[2] As a [*186] result of the Cable System

---

[1] "A DMA is a specific [4] media research area that is used by Nielsen Media Research to identify television stations whose broadcast signals reach a specific area and attract the most viewers. DMA boundaries are widely accepted and used by all types of companies to target and keep track of advertising." Steak N Shake Co. v. Burger King Corp., 323 F. Supp. 2d 983, 986 n.2 (E.D. Mo. 2004).

[2] The District Court set forth the Cable System Transactions:

- The April 1998 acquisition of Marcus Cable and its 27,000 cable subscribers located in Harrington, Delaware, which is part of the Philadelphia DMA.
- The June 1999 acquisition of Greater Philadelphia Cablevision, Inc., a subsidiary of Greater Media, Inc., and its 79,000 cable subscribers located in Philadelphia.
- The January 2000 acquisition of Lenfest Communications, Inc. and more than 1.1 million cable subscribers located in Berks, Bucks, Chester, Delaware, and Montgomery counties in Pennsylvania, and New Castle County in Delaware.

Transactions, Comcast's share of subscribers in the Philadelphia DMA allegedly increased from 23.9 percent in 1998 to 77.8 percent by 2002, settling at 69.5 percent in 2007. See Behrend v. Comcast Corp., 264 F.R.D. 150, 160 (E.D. Pa. 2010) (setting forth Plaintiffs' expert's calculations as to Comcast's market share).

Plaintiffs, six non-basic cable television programming services customers of Comcast, brought a class action antitrust suit against Comcast in 2003. They alleged violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, for "imposing horizontal territory, market and customer allocations by conspiring with and entering into and implementing unlawful swap agreements, arrangements or devices," and section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, on theories of monopolization and attempted monopolization.[3] App. 00232-243 (Third Am. Compl.). The Complaint alleged anticompetitive conduct in the Philadelphia area and the Chicago area. As only the alleged conduct in Philadelphia is before us, we focus on the nature of the class and the allegations in Philadelphia.

The proposed class included: "All cable television customers who subscribe or subscribed at any time since December 1, 1999, to the present to video programming services (other than solely to basic cable services) from Comcast, or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates in Comcast's Philadelphia cluster." App. 00217; see id. (excluding from the class "governmental entities, Defendants, Defendants' subsidiaries and [*187] affiliates and this Court"). The Philadelphia cluster is composed "of the areas covered by Comcast's cable franchises, or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates, located in the following counties: Berks, Bucks, Chester, Delaware, Montgomery and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Kent and New Castle, Delaware; and Atlantic, Burlington, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Gloucester, Mercer and Salem, New Jersey." See Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 191.[4]

The Complaint alleged that Comcast had perpetrated an anticompetitive "clustering scheme." To clarify its contentions we pause to define two key terms. HN3[] "Clustering" refers to a "strategy whereby cable [Multi-System Operators ("MSOs")] concentrate their operations in regional geographic areas by acquiring cable systems

---

- The January 2000 acquisition of Lenfest's ownership interests in Garden State Cablevision L.P. and its 212,000 customers located in Atlantic, Burlington, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Gloucester, Mercer, and Salem counties in New Jersey, [5] which is part of the Philadelphia DMA.
- The December 2000 swap agreement with AT & T, wherein Comcast obtained cable systems and approximately 770,000 subscribers, including subscribers located in Eastern Pennsylvania (Berks and Bucks counties) and New Jersey. In exchange, AT & T obtained cable systems and approximately 700,000 Comcast subscribers located in Chicago and elsewhere around the country.
- The January 2001 swap agreement with Adelphia Communications Corp., wherein Comcast obtained cable systems and approximately 464,000 subscribers located primarily in the Philadelphia area and adjacent New Jersey areas. In exchange, Adelphia received Comcast's cable systems and subscribers located in Palm Beach, Florida and Los Angeles, California.
- The April 2001 swap agreement with AT & T, wherein Comcast obtained cable systems and approximately 595,000 subscribers, including subscribers located in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.
- The August 2006 swap agreement with Time Warner in connection with the Adelphia bankruptcy, wherein Comcast obtained cable systems and approximately 41,000 subscribers in the Philadelphia DMA.
- The August 2007 acquisition of Patriot Media and its 81,000 cable subscribers [6] located in New Jersey, within the Philadelphia DMA.

Behrend v. Comcast Corp., 264 F.R.D. 150, 156 n.8 (E.D. Pa. 2010).

[3] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states: HN1[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 2 states: HN2[] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, [7] or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . ." Id. § 2.

[4] The "Philadelphia cluster" and the "Philadelphia DMA" are separate terms. The Philadelphia DMA includes the cluster counties as well as the counties [8] of Lehigh and Northampton, Pennsylvania. See App. 03614, 03795.

in regions where the MSO already has a significant presence, while giving up other holdings scattered across the country. This strategy is accomplished through purchases and sales of cable systems, or by system 'swapping' among MSOs." Implementation of the Cable Television Consumer Prot. & Competition Act of 1992, 22 F.C.C. Rcd. 17791, 17810 n.134 (2007) (citation omitted). An "overbuilder" is a company that builds and offers customers a competitive alternative where a telecommunications company already operates. According to the Complaint, Comcast eliminated competition by (1) acquiring competitors in the Philadelphia market and (2) swapping with competitors cable systems and subscribers outside of the Philadelphia market for cable systems and subscribers within the Philadelphia market. The Complaint also [9] alleged that Comcast engaged in conduct intended to exclude competition from overbuilder RCN Telecom Services, Inc. ("RCN"), by denying it access to "Comcast Sportsnet," requiring contractors to enter non-compete agreements, and inducing potential customers to sign up for long contracts with special discounts and penalty provisions in the areas where RCN intended to overbuild. App. 00235-239.

As a result of its clustering, Comcast allegedly harmed the class by eliminating competition, raising entry barriers to potential competition, maintaining increased prices for cable services at supra-competitive levels, and depriving subscribers of the lower prices that would result from effective competition. App. 00241-242. In other words, Comcast subscribers allegedly pay too much for their non-basic video programming cable service.

B.

On May 3, 2007, after extensive motions practice, see App. 00148-172 (listing 194 docket entries prior to certification), the District Court certified the proposed class. App. 00354. It determined that Plaintiffs had met the requirements of Rule 23(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy). App. 00366-372. It [10] held also that Plaintiffs had met the predominance and superiority requirements of Rule 23(b). App. 00373-387. We denied on June 29, 2007, Comcast's 23(f) petition seeking interlocutory review.

The Court also certified the Chicago class's claims, but stayed them pending the outcome of the Philadelphia class. App. 00177, 00179.[5]

[*188] Following our decision in Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d 305, the District Court granted in part Comcast's motion to reconsider its Philadelphia certification decision (the Court denied without prejudice consideration of the Chicago class certification, again pending the outcome in Philadelphia). App. 00437-439. It vacated only the portion of the certification decision that addressed Rule 23(b)'s predominance requirement. The Court scheduled a hearing on the issue of predominance as it related to (1) antitrust impact, and (2) methodology of damages.

The District Court held an evidentiary hearing on October [11] 13-15 and 26, 2009. During the four-day hearing, the Court heard live testimony from fact and expert witnesses, considered 32 expert reports, and examined deposition excerpts, as well as many other documents. Following the hearing, the Court issued to the parties a series of questions related to antitrust impact and damages methodology, and heard argument on November 16, 2009, to address its specific questions.

On January 7, 2010, the District Court recertified the Philadelphia class, and issued an amended class certification order on January 13, 2010. The Court reaffirmed and incorporated its May 2007 certification as to numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy (Rule 23(a)), as well as superiority (Rule 23(b)(3)). App. 00029. On the disputed issue of predominance, the Court held that Plaintiffs had demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that: (1) questions of law and fact common to the members of the class predominated; (2) the relevant geographic market could be the Philadelphia Designated Market Area; (3) the class could establish antitrust impact on the theory that Comcast's clustering through the swaps and acquisitions deterred overbuilder competition; (4) the [12] models and analyses of Plaintiffs' damages expert, Dr. James McClave, were common evidence

---

[5] Plaintiffs' counsel also filed a complaint in the District of Massachusetts on behalf of a "Boston cluster." That case was transferred to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and has been stayed pending resolution of the Chicago cluster claims. See App. 00179.

available to measure and quantify damages on a class-wide basis; and (5) the class could establish antitrust impact through common evidence applicable to all class members. App. 00030. In certifying the class, however, the District Court narrowed the class's various theories of class-wide impact to a single theory:

> Proof of antitrust impact relative to such claims shall be limited to the theory that Comcast engaged in anticompetitive clustering conduct, the effect of which was to deter the entry of overbuilders in the Philadelphia DMA.

App. 00032.

The Court accompanied its order with an 81-page memorandum opinion containing its analysis of the evidence presented at the evidentiary hearing. Behrend v. Comcast Corp., 264 F.R.D. 150 (E.D. Pa. 2010). The Court summarized its opinion as follows:

> Having rigorously analyzed the expert reports, as well as the testimony presented by the parties during a four-day evidentiary hearing, we conclude that the class has met its burden to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather [13] than individual to its members, and that there is a common methodology available to measure and quantify damages on a class-wide basis.

Id. at 154.

Comcast filed a Rule 23(f) petition to appeal on January 27, 2010. While that petition was pending, Comcast moved for summary judgment. The class responded, and Comcast filed a reply on June 4, 2010. We granted Comcast permission to appeal on June 9, 2010. The motion for summary judgment remains pending in the District Court.

[*189] II.

The District Court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337. We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(e) and Rule 23(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

HN4[] "We review a class certification order for abuse of discretion, which occurs if the district court's decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law or an improper application of law to fact." Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 312 (citation and quotations omitted). We review de novo whether an incorrect legal standard has been used. Id. (citation omitted).

HN5[] For a district court's finding of fact to be clearly erroneous, the standard is high. "Clearly erroneous" has been interpreted to mean that a reviewing [14] court can upset a finding of fact, even if there is some evidence to support the finding, only if the court is "left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S. Ct. 525, 92 L. Ed. 746 (1948). This means that "[i]t is the responsibility of an appellate court to accept the ultimate factual determination of the fact-finder unless that determination either (1) is completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility, or (2) bears no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data." Krasnov v. Dinan, 465 F.2d 1298, 1302 (3d Cir. 1972). Especially pertinent to the issue before us, the Supreme Court has explained:

> HN6[] This standard plainly does not entitle a reviewing court to reverse the finding of the trier of fact simply because it is convinced that it would have decided the case differently. . . . In applying the clearly erroneous standard to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo. If the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed [15] in its entirety, the court of appeals may not reverse it even though convinced that had it been sitting as the trier of fact, it would have weighed the evidence differently. Where there are two permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous.

Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 573-574, 105 S. Ct. 1504, 84 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1985) (quotations and citations omitted); accord PA Prison Soc'y v. Cortes, 622 F.3d 215, 231 (3d Cir. 2010).

III.

Comcast raises three principal arguments on appeal, urging us to overturn the District Court's certification order on the grounds that: (1) the Court's finding that the class can establish class-wide antitrust impact through common evidence was incorrect for various reasons; (2) the District Court exceeded its discretion in accepting Plaintiffs' proposed methodology for damages calculation; and (3) the Court's certification of a per se antitrust claim was clear error. In response, Plaintiffs defend in all respects the District Court's certification decision. We first outline the Rule 23 legal framework and then analyze each of Comcast's contentions.

HN7[] Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allows a class action if certain requirements [16] are met. First, the class must meet the "prerequisites" of Rule 23(a): numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy. Second, the class must fit one of the Rule 23(b) types of classes. Here, Plaintiffs seek certification under Rule 23(b)(3), which requires (1) "that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions [*190] affecting only individual members," and (2) "that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Rule 23(b)(3). These requirements are known as predominance and superiority.

HN8[] The district court must conduct a "rigorous analysis" of the evidence and arguments in making the class certification decision. Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 318. The analysis requires "a thorough examination of the factual and legal allegations" and "may include a preliminary inquiry into the merits." Id. at 317 (quoting Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 166, 168 (3d Cir. 2001)). We explained in Hydrogen Peroxide the permissible extent of any inquiry into the merits:

> [T]he requirements set out in Rule 23 are not mere pleading rules. The court may delve beyond the pleadings [17] to determine whether the requirements for class certification are satisfied. . . . An overlap between a class certification requirement and the merits of a claim is no reason to decline to resolve relevant disputes when necessary to determine whether a class certification requirement is met. Some uncertainty ensued when the Supreme Court declared in Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732 (1974), that there is "nothing in either the language or history of Rule 23 that gives a court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action." Only a few years later, in addressing whether a party may bring an interlocutory appeal when a district court denies class certification, the Supreme Court pointed out that "the class determination generally involves considerations that are 'enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action.'" [Coopers & Lybrand v.] Livesay, 437 U.S. [463,] 469, 98 S. Ct. 2454, 57 L. Ed. 2d 351 [(1978)] (quoting Mercantile Nat'l Bank v. Langdeau, 371 U.S. 555, 558, 83 S. Ct. 520, 9 L. Ed. 2d 523 (1963)). As we explained in Newton, 259 F.3d at 166-69, Eisen is best understood to preclude only a merits inquiry [18] that is not necessary to determine a Rule 23 requirement. Other courts of appeals have agreed.

552 F.3d at 316-317 (quotations and citations omitted).[6] Accordingly, at the class certification stage, we are precluded from addressing any merits inquiry unnecessary to making a Rule 23 determination. Id. Further, any findings for the purpose of class certification "do not bind the fact-finder on the merits." Id. at 318.

HN9[] Plaintiffs bear the burden of establishing each element of Rule 23 by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. at 320 ("[T]o certify a class the district court must find that the evidence more likely than not establishes each fact necessary to meet the requirements of Rule 23.") (citation omitted). HN10[] The court must also examine critically expert testimony on both sides and may be persuaded by either side as to [19] whether a certification requirement has been met. Id. at 323. Indeed, "[w]eighing conflicting expert testimony at the certification stage is not only permissible; it may be integral to the rigorous analysis Rule 23 demands." Id.

---

[6] The Supreme Court confirmed our interpretation of the Rule 23 inquiry in Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011). See id. at 2551, 2552 n.6 (stating that "[f]requently [the Rule 23] 'rigorous analysis' will entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim," but Eisen still prohibits "a merits inquiry for any other pretrial purpose").

[*191] The parties dispute whether Plaintiffs have met the predominance requirement. HN11[] Predominance "tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation." Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). It "is a test readily met in certain cases alleging consumer or securities fraud or violations of the antitrust laws," id. at 625, but a court may not relax its certification analysis as to each element of Rule 23, see Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 322. To assess whether common or individual issues predominate, a district court must examine the nature of the evidence and "formulate some prediction as to how specific issues will play out . . . ." Id. at 311 (quotations and citations omitted).

Reviewing a district court's certification of a class, we examine the elements of the class's claims "through the prism" of Rule 23. Id. (quoting Newton, 259 F.3d at 181). The elements of the claims before us are (1) a violation [20] of the antitrust laws (here, sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act), (2) individual injury resulting from that violation, and (3) measurable damages. See id. HN12[] Individual injury, also known as antitrust impact, "is critically important for the purpose of evaluating Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement because it is an element of the claim that may call for individual, as opposed to common, proof." Id. At the class certification stage, Plaintiffs' burden is "to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members." Id. at 311-312.

IV.

Comcast devotes much of its energy to contending that the District Court exceeded its discretion in holding that Plaintiffs had established common evidence of antitrust impact. It attacks this issue in two ways: first, that the District Court failed to apply the correct legal standard for determining the relevant geographic market, and, second, that the District Court made clearly erroneous factual findings by relying on Plaintiffs' expert for proof of class-wide antitrust impact. We address each contention in turn.

A.

Before the District Court, Plaintiffs [21] contended that the relevant geographic market was the Philadelphia Designated Market Area, whereas Comcast countered that it was each individual's household. The District Court agreed with Plaintiffs. Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 160. Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Michael Williams, provided seven bases to support the conclusion that the relevant geographic market was the Philadelphia DMA. The District Court set forth each basis, as well as Comcast's counterarguments. 264 F.R.D. at 157-160. The Court stated that Comcast's focus on the individual household was not supported by the record, and that setting such a small market would be "impractical and inefficient." 264 F.R.D. at 160. Instead, the Court noted that the alleged conduct centered on Comcast's attempt to acquire substantially all of the cable systems in the Philadelphia DMA, and that the Federal Communications Commission aggregates relevant geographic markets in which customers face "similar competitive choices." 264 F.R.D. at 160. The Court concluded, "[T]he record evidence shows that consumers throughout the DMA can face similar competitive choices and suffer the same alleged antitrust impact resulting from Comcast's clustering conduct [22] in the Philadelphia DMA." 264 F.R.D. at 160.

Comcast contends that the Court failed to articulate or apply the correct legal [*192] standard. According to Comcast, the geographic market is defined in terms of consumer demand substitutability—the area in which a buyer may look for the goods or services he seeks. Because an individual can choose only among providers offering video programming services to his household, Comcast asserts that the geographic market must be the household. Comcast contends additionally that the Court improperly credited Dr. Williams's seven bases for the geographic market because it later rejected three of the seven theories, and that the Court's two stated reasons for accepting the geographic market were irrelevant and erroneous.

Plaintiffs respond at three levels. First, they contend that they need not define the relevant geographic market: per se claims do not require defining the geographic market, and they offered direct evidence of market power, thereby relieving them of the obligation to define the relevant geographic market. Second, Plaintiffs state that the District Court used the commercial realities test to determine the relevant geographic market and did [23] not ignore demand substitutability. Third, according to Plaintiffs, Comcast cannot demonstrate clear error in the Court's factual determination that "consumers throughout the [Philadelphia] DMA can face similar competitive choices." See Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 160.

B.

We will affirm the District Court's conclusion that the Philadelphia DMA is a relevant geographic market "susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class." 264 F.R.D. at 160.

HN13[] The relevant geographic market is a component of substantive antitrust law. For antitrust claims analyzed through the rule of reason, plaintiffs must demonstrate that the defendant possessed market power in the relevant geographic market. See Pa. Dental Ass'n v. Med. Serv. Ass'n of Pa., 745 F.2d 248, 260 (3d Cir. 1984). For per se claims, plaintiffs need not establish a geographic market. See In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 316-317 (3d Cir. 2010) (explaining that some prohibited practices can be conclusively presumed to unreasonably restrain competition). Additionally, "direct proof of monopoly power does not require a definition of the relevant market." See Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 307 n.3 (3d Cir. 2007).

HN14[] Defining [24] the relevant geographic market, however, is an issue of the merits. See, e.g., Borough of Lansdale v. Phila. Elec. Co., 692 F.2d 307 (3d Cir. 1982) (addressing on appeal whether jury verdict should be set aside because of allegedly erroneous definition of relevant geographic market). At the class certification stage, a court need only be satisfied that issues—including the definition of a geographic market—will be capable of proof through evidence common to the class. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311; IIA Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law ¶ 398b (3d ed. 2007) (describing that at the class certification stage the plaintiffs' expert typically concludes that "any significant economic issues underlying the class representative's antitrust claims, including but not limited to issues regarding market definition . . . will be analyzed and proven through the use of common data and evidence that would be used to prove the claims of the other members of the proposed Class") (emphasis added). If the plaintiffs allege per se claims, they may still need to persuade the district court that, in the event defining the relevant geographic market becomes necessary, it is capable of common [25] proof. See Areeda et al., supra, ¶ 398b.

The inquiry before the District Court, therefore, was whether Plaintiffs [*193] could demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that they would be able to establish a relevant geographic market capable of proof common to the class. The District Court concluded it was: "We conclude that Dr. Williams' geographic market definition is susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class." 264 F.R.D. at 160. The parties dispute whether the District Court properly defined the relevant geographic market—Comcast contends it erred as a matter of law, and Plaintiffs respond they need not establish a geographic market. These are merits arguments, which are not properly before us. Our review is limited to whether the Court exceeded its discretion in determining that the class could establish through common proof that the relevant geographic market could be the Philadelphia DMA. We conclude it did not, legally or factually.

C.

First, we perceive no legal error in the District Court's reasoning. Procedurally, it conducted the required "rigorous analysis" by examining in depth the expert opinions on both sides and setting forth its conclusions. [26] See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 317, 320. Substantively, the Court determined that "the record evidence shows that consumers throughout the DMA can face similar competitive choices and suffer the same alleged antitrust impact resulting from Comcast's clustering conduct in the Philadelphia DMA." 264 F.R.D. at 160. Comcast contends that the Court failed to apply the consumer demand substitutability test, which defines the relevant geographic market as "that area in which a potential buyer may rationally look for the goods or services he seeks." Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp.., 423 F.3d 184, 212 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Pa. Dental Ass'n, 745 F.2d at 260). We determine otherwise: the Court's analysis of the relevant geographic market for purposes of class certification comported with our precedent.

HN15[] "[I]dentification of the relevant geographic market is a matter of analyzing competition." Borough of Lansdale v. Phila. Elec. Co., 692 F.2d 307, 311 (3d Cir. 1982). Defining it "is a question of fact to be determined in the context of each case in acknowledgment of the commercial realities of the industry being considered." Gordon, 423 F.3d at 212 (quoting Borough of Lansdale, 692 F.2d at 311). In [27] these decisions of our Court, one of which has commanded our attention for almost thirty years, we relied on two Supreme Court cases to develop this standard: United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 576, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966), which held that the relevant geographic market under the Sherman Act was "not the several local areas which the individual stations serve, but the broader national market that reflects the reality of the way in which they built and conduct their business," and Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 332, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961), which defined the relevant geographic area for § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 3, as "the market area in which the seller operates, and to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies" or as the area in which suppliers "effectively compete." In another Clayton Act case, the Supreme Court stated: HN16[] "The geographic market selected must, therefore, both correspond to the commercial realities of the industry and be economically significant. Thus, although the geographic market in some instances may encompass the entire Nation, under other circumstances it may be as small as a single metropolitan area." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 336-337, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) [28] (quotations and citations omitted); see Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 572 [*194] (citing Brown Shoe as analogous to determining the relevant market for the Sherman Act).

D.

The District Court's determination—that consumers "face similar competitive choices" in the Philadelphia DMA as a result of Comcast's alleged clustering conduct—is consistent with the above standards because it considers both where a buyer may rationally look for goods and the commercial reality of the industry. Comcast's insistence that the geographic market must be the individual household (as the only place where a consumer can "comparison shop") ignores that the geographic market must be "economically significant," Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 336-337, and may be premised on "the commercial realities of the industry being considered," Borough of Lansdale, 692 F.2d at 311, the area where suppliers "effectively compete," Tampa Electric Co., 365 U.S. at 332, or the broader market reflecting the reality of conducting business, Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 576.[7] We therefore discern no legal error in the District Court's analysis.

E.

Second, we recognize ample evidence in the record supporting the District Court's factual [30] findings underpinning its market determination, which precludes us from reversing those findings as clearly erroneous. See, e.g., EBC, Inc. v. Clark Bldg. Sys. Inc., 618 F.3d 253, 273 (3d Cir. 2010) ("We will not reverse '[i]f the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety' even if we would have weighed that evidence differently." (quoting Anderson, 470 U.S. at 573-574)). The Court cited Dr. Williams's seven bases for drawing the geographic market as the Philadelphia DMA. Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 157-160. Although it rejected three of those bases, the remaining four tended to show that Comcast's clustering had anticompetitive effects in the Philadelphia DMA by deterring overbuilders from entering the Designated Market Area, and that the industry itself used DMAs to focus its competition. Additional evidence in the record, reviewed in detail below, demonstrated that [7] We note additionally the tension between the concept of a "geographic market" and Comcast's conclusion that "the [29] relevant geographic market . . . is each class member's residence." Appellants' Br. 15. As of 2009, Philadelphia County alone had over 560,000 households. See U.S. Census Bureau, Philadelphia County QuickFacts, http://quickfacts.census.gov/qfd/states/ 42/42101.html. Nationwide, in 2010 there were over 117 million households. See U.S. Census Bureau, America's Families and Living Arrangements: 2010, http://www.census.gov/population/www/socdemo/hh-fam/cps2010.html (Table AVG1). Taken at face value, Comcast's assertion that there are millions of geographic markets in the Philadelphia DMA (or over one hundred million geographic markets nationwide for multichannel video programming distributors) renders the phrase "geographic market" nonsensical. Perhaps for this reason, our research revealed no case—nor does Comcast provide one—in which a geographic market has been set at the individual household level. Cf. Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 337 ("Thus, although the geographic market in some instances may encompass the entire Nation, under other circumstances it may be as small as a single metropolitan area.").

---

clustering results in fewer competitors and higher cable prices for the entire market. This evidence belies Comcast's claim that there is no change at the individual level when Comcast aggregates surrounding franchises.

Simply put, the District Court determined by a preponderance [31] of the evidence that, when addressed on the merits, the class may be able to prove through common evidence that the relevant geographic [*195] market is the Philadelphia DMA. This determination did not exceed the Court's permissible discretion. To the extent Comcast reads the Court's opinion as actually fixing the relevant geographic market, we note that its determination was made solely for the purposes of class certification and will not be binding on the merits. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 318.[8]

V.

Comcast hinges [33] its next line of arguments on the District Court's final certification: "Proof of antitrust impact relative to such claims shall be limited to the theory that Comcast engaged in anticompetitive clustering conduct, the effect of which was to deter the entry of overbuilders in the Philadelphia DMA." App. 00032. According to Comcast, the District Court made clearly erroneous findings of fact by relying on Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Williams, in support of the certified theory of antitrust impact.

The District Court considered in great detail the arguments presented by both sides. It rejected three of Plaintiffs' four theories of class-wide impact. Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 166 (rejecting theory of direct broadcast satellite ("DBS") foreclosure); id. at 177-178 (rejecting benchmark theory); id. at 181 (rejecting bargaining power theory). Nonetheless, it accepted that Plaintiffs could establish class-wide antitrust impact on the theory of clustering and its impact on overbuilder competition. After detailing the evidence put forth by both sides, id. at 166-174, the Court concluded that "the Class has met its burden to demonstrate that the anticompetitive effect of clustering on overbuilder competition [34] is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class," id. at 174. The Court found that through the model of Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Williams, and the empirical studies conducted by governmental agencies and private researchers, the class had shown that the presence of an overbuilder constrains cable prices, and that Comcast engaged in conduct designed to deter the entry of overbuilders in the Philadelphia DMA. Id. at 174. It found unpersuasive the conclusions of Comcast's expert, Dr. David J. Teece, that overbuilding is not a successful business model. Id. at 174-175.

[*196] A.

---

[8] The Concurring and Dissenting Opinion ("Concurrence-Dissent") faults the parties, the District Court and this Opinion for using "equivocally" the phrase "relevant geographic market." Slip Concurring-Dissenting Op. at 8. Specifically, it asserts that this Opinion "assumes . . . that the class is properly defined to cover the Philadelphia DMA . . . ." Id. at 10. The Concurrence-Dissent misunderstands an important distinction: as noted supra footnote 4, Plaintiffs have alleged a "class region" (to borrow from the Concurrence-Dissent's terminology) of a "Philadelphia cluster," which is distinct from the contested relevant geographic market of the "Philadelphia DMA." Our "assumption" concerning [32] the "class region" is an uncontested piece of Plaintiffs' case: Comcast appeals only the precise issue of whether the District Court applied a correct legal standard in determining that the substantive antitrust geographic market could be established by evidence common to the class, not whether the "Philadelphia cluster" is an appropriate "class region." See Appellants' Br. at 15 (labeling the issue as: "The District Court Failed To Apply The Correct Legal Standard In Its Ruling On Plaintiffs' Geographic Market Definition"); id. at 20 (summarizing that "the alleged geographic market accepted by the district court is wholly divorced from the legal standard for determining the correct geographic market"). Accordingly, when the Concurrence-Dissent states, "A compelling argument could be made . . .," Slip Concurring-Dissenting Op. at 11 (emphasis added), it goes beyond our role as a reviewing court by raising and addressing an argument not before us. See, e.g., AT & T v. F.C.C., 582 F.3d 490, 495 (3d Cir. 2009) ("An appellant waives an argument in support of reversal if he does not raise that argument in his opening brief."), rev'd on other grounds, 131 S. Ct. 1177, 179 L. Ed. 2d 132 (2011).

On appeal, Comcast constructs a four-tiered argument to support its objections. First, it contends that Plaintiffs cannot show class-wide antitrust impact based on potential overbuilding by any of the "Transaction parties."[9] According to Comcast, the evidence demonstrated there was no actual competition between the Transaction parties; Plaintiffs therefore must show that the challenged conduct eliminated potential competition. In Comcast's view, the record evidence reflects that no Transaction parties had taken any affirmative steps to overbuild and, consequently, there was no potential competition [35] to eliminate. Second, Comcast contends that Plaintiffs identified only RCN Telecom Services, Inc., as attempting to overbuild in the Philadelphia DMA. The evidence establishes, according to Comcast, that RCN was not going to overbuild as a result of its own financial woes, not as a result of any alleged activity on the part of Comcast. Third, as the argument goes, because there was no record evidence demonstrating actual or potential competition, the theoretical opinions indicating otherwise rendered by Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Williams, were clearly erroneous. Comcast disputes at many levels Dr. Williams's methodology and results in his "market structure" and "market performance" opinions. Summed up, Comcast contends that theoretical expert opinions are no replacement for market facts, the record evidence showed no actual or potential overbuilding (as addressed in the first two contentions), and therefore any reliance on the expert opinions for evidence of anticompetitive behavior was clearly erroneous. Fourth, Comcast adds that any evidence of anticompetitive conduct specific to Delaware County could not serve as evidence of class-wide impact for the Philadelphia cluster.

B.

Plaintiffs respond to each level of Comcast's position. First, citing many portions of the record, they assert that there is "overwhelming" record evidence that Comcast's clustering of the Philadelphia DMA deterred and reduced overbuilding competition, resulting in antitrust impact (higher cable prices) for all class members. According to the class, the record demonstrates: clustering deters overbuilding, the swaps and acquisitions eliminated competition, Multi-System Operators ("MSOs") actually do overbuild one another, Comcast and other MSOs look to one another's prices to set their own, and the MSOs chose affirmatively not to compete. The class adds that Comcast is raising a merits argument by asking the Court to consider the "potential competition" doctrine. Second, Plaintiffs contend that Comcast raises a merits issue by asking the Court to examine whether Comcast's conduct in fact prevented RCN [37] from overbuilding in more areas than it did. In any event, they state that the record evidence demonstrates RCN had the intent and capital to overbuild the Philadelphia market. Third, Plaintiffs state that Dr. Williams's theoretical model plainly shows common evidence of class-wide impact; Comcast's contention that Dr. Williams's opinions do not prove antitrust impact is one for the jury to decide on the merits. Fourth, the evidence related to Delaware County "adds to and illustrates" the common evidence of Comcast's anticompetitive clustering conduct.

[*197] VI.

We begin the analysis of these contentions by focusing on the precise inquiry:

> HN17[] Plaintiffs' burden at the class certification stage is not to prove the element of antitrust impact, although in order to prevail on the merits each class member must do so. Instead, the task for plaintiffs at class certification is to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members.

Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311-312 (emphasis added). Many of Comcast's contentions ask us to reach into the record and determine whether Plaintiffs actually have [38] proven antitrust impact. This we will not do. Instead, we inquire whether the District Court exceeded its discretion by finding that Plaintiffs had demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that they could prove antitrust impact through common evidence at trial.

---

[9] As detailed [36] supra note 2, the "Transaction parties" are the parties that Comcast acquired or with which it swapped cable systems, which include: Marcus Cable; Greater Philadelphia Cablevision, Inc.; Lenfest Communications, Inc.; AT&T; Adelphia Communications Corp.; Time Warner; and Patriot Media.

This dispute therefore is evidentiary. HN18[] When facts are at issue, the District Court exceeds its discretion in certifying a class only if its findings are clearly erroneous. Id. at 312. Comcast bears a heavy burden in convincing us that the District Court's factual findings were clearly erroneous. See Anderson, 470 U.S. at 573-574 ("If the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety, the court of appeals may not reverse it . . . ."); Krasnov, 465 F.2d at 1302 ("It is the responsibility of an appellate court to accept the ultimate factual determination of the fact-finder unless that determination either (1) is completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility, or (2) bears no rational relationship to the supportive evidentiary data.").

Comcast has not carried its burden. Plaintiffs provided evidence at the certification hearing that tended [39] to show that Comcast's clustering (through swaps and acquisitions) reduced competition, deterred the entry of overbuilders, and resulted in higher cable prices for the entire class. This evidence displays "some hue of credibility" and bears a rational relationship to the Court's finding. See Krasnov, 465 F.2d at 1302.

For example, one of Plaintiffs' experts, Dr. Williams, concluded after a detailed analysis that, inter alia, Comcast's clustering increased its market share and, consequently, its market power, thereby raising barriers to entry for other multichannel video programming distributors and resulting in higher cable rates for all members of the class. App. 03599-3600; see also Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 166-171 (providing in great detail the analyses, evidentiary support, and conclusions of Dr. Williams). Dr. Williams also cited to Federal Communications Commission reports, Government Accountability Office reports, and academic research, all of which indicated that reducing competition by clustering leads to higher cable rates. App. 03663-3668. Another expert, Dr. Hal Singer, used extensive record evidence to analyze how Comcast's clustering denied overbuilders access to the Philadelphia [40] DMA. App. 03501-3529. Dr. Singer concluded that Comcast's actions allowed it to foreclose competitors and elevate prices. App. 03450. He also referenced multiple studies—both governmental and private, some of which overlapped with those referenced by Dr. Williams—that concluded that cable prices are lower when overbuilder competition is present. App. 03537-3548. Also in the record are specific instances of Multi-System Operators attempting to overbuild one another around the country. See Appellees' Br. 27 n.17 (citing 13 distinct examples in the record of MSOs overbuilding one another).

[*198] All of this evidence demonstrates that Comcast's alleged clustering conduct indeed could have reduced competition, raised barriers to market entry by an overbuilder, and resulted in higher cable prices to all of its subscribers in the Philadelphia Designated Market Area. Based on this evidence, we determine that the antitrust impact Plaintiffs allege is "plausible in theory" and "susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class." Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 325; see also In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 305 F.3d 145, 158 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that common issues predominated [41] sufficient for class certification when plaintiffs allegedly "were all affected by the increased price" they paid for linerboard). We are satisfied that the District Court's findings were supported by the evidence and were not clearly erroneous.

Comcast protests that the record demonstrates that there was no actual or potential competition among the Transaction parties. In light of the above record evidence, however, Comcast's interpretation of the evidence does not render the District Court's findings clearly erroneous. Comcast remains free to make these arguments to the jury.

VII.

Comcast's other contentions are equally unpersuasive. There is conflicting evidence as to the role Comcast played in RCN Telecom Services, Inc.'s decision to not overbuild further in the Philadelphia DMA. Plaintiffs highlight record evidence that RCN had the intent and capital necessary to overbuild the Philadelphia market. Appellees' Br. 34-35. Comcast contends instead that RCN faced financial woes, as a result of which it abandoned its plans to overbuild. Appellants' Br. 24-28. The District Court credited Plaintiffs' explanation: "What Dr. Teece considers 'unlikely,' Dr. Singer considers to be the common [42] evidence of antitrust impact, namely that RCN was stymied in its efforts by Comcast's predatory behavior." Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 175. Again, we are satisfied that the District Court's finding was not clearly erroneous. "Where there are two permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous." Anderson, 470 U.S. at 574. Here there are two permissible views of the evidence and we will not disturb the District Court's finding.

Similarly, Comcast contends that Dr. Williams's analysis and methodology was flawed for various reasons, including the allegation that it was unsupported by any actual evidence. We disagree. As detailed above, there was ample evidence that clustering conduct can deter entry of overbuilders and result in higher cable prices. Dr. Williams and Dr. Singer examined evidence specific to Comcast's activities in the Philadelphia market, as well as numerous independent studies on the effects of cable clustering, to reach their conclusions. Comcast cites various cases for the proposition that HN19[] "expert theory is not a substitute for market facts." See, e.g., Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 242, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) [43] (expert opinion rendered unreasonable by indisputable record facts); In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 27 (1st Cir. 2008) (expert analysis unfinished and "purely conclusory"); In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 135 (3d Cir. 1999) ("An expert opinion based on . . . meager superficial information . . . is highly speculative, unreliable, and of dubious admissibility."). Although expressing a correct legal precept, those cases addressed situations in which the experts largely failed to tie their theories to any evidence; the precept therefore does not apply to this case in [*199] which the experts' theories were based on and correlated to other record evidence.

Comcast also asserts that every individual had one or two options from which to choose cable and that consequently only the name of the provider changed, not the number of options. This assertion completely overlooks the nature of the claims of the class: by clustering, Comcast was able to deter the entry of overbuilders, which resulted in higher prices for all non-basic Comcast subscribers. And Plaintiffs provided evidence that clustering can have this effect. In short, the District Court's [44] task was to weigh expert testimony and make a determination, Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 323, and we discern no error in the Court's determination that Dr. Williams's analysis demonstrated that class-wide antitrust impact was susceptible to common proof.

As to Comcast's remaining contention that the District Court erred by crediting as evidence of class-wide impact the alleged conduct targeted at RCN Telecom Services, Inc., in Delaware County, we agree with the class that the alleged conduct is relevant to establishing class-wide impact. We have explained that HN20[] "courts must look to the monopolist's conduct taken as a whole rather than considering each aspect in isolation." LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 162 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc) (citing Cont'l Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962)). Alleged specific conduct aimed at preventing the entry of an overbuilder anywhere in the Philadelphia DMA supports Plaintiffs' allegations of Comcast's ability to maintain supra-competitive prices for the entire market.

VIII.

At bottom, Comcast misconstrues our role at this stage of the litigation. Comcast would have us decide on the merits whether there was actual or potential [45] competition among the Transaction parties, the reason RCN Telecom Services, Inc., abandoned the Philadelphia market, and whether Plaintiffs' experts proved antitrust impact. We are not the jury. Although in Hydrogen Peroxide we heightened the inquiry a district court must perform on the issue of class certification, nothing in that opinion indicated that class certification hearings were to become actual trials in which factual disputes are to be resolved. Indeed, as we explained in Hydrogen Peroxide, HN21[] a district court may inquire into the merits only insofar as it is "necessary" to determine whether a class certification requirement is met. 552 F.3d at 316. Eisen still precludes any further inquiry. See Eisen, 417 U.S. at 178 ("[T]he question is not whether the plaintiff or plaintiffs . . . will prevail on the merits, but rather whether the requirements of Rule 23 are met." (quoting Judge Wisdom's holding in Miller v. Mackey Int'l, Inc., 452 F.2d 424, 427 (5th Cir. 1971))); Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 317 ("Eisen is best understood to preclude only a merits inquiry that is not necessary to determine a Rule 23 requirement."). We allow preliminary merits inquiries when necessary for [46] Rule 23 because of the potentially "decisive effect on litigation" of a certification decision, Newton, 259 F.3d at 167, but those inquiries remain limited and non-binding on the merits at trial, Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 318. Nothing in Hydrogen Peroxide requires plaintiffs to prove their case at the class certification stage; to the contrary, they must establish by a preponderance that their case is one that meets each requirement of Rule 23. To require more contravenes Eisen and runs dangerously close to stepping on the toes of the Seventh Amendment [*200] by preempting the jury's factual findings with our own.[10]

In sum, we hold that the District Court's determination—that Plaintiffs have demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that they can establish class-wide antitrust impact through common evidence—did not exceed its discretion.

IX.

To satisfy another portion of the predominance requirement, Plaintiffs must establish that the alleged [48] damages are capable of measurement on a class-wide basis using common proof. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311, 325-326; cf. Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 187 (3d Cir. 2001) (stating that the "Herculean task" of calculating individual damages from hundreds of millions of different transactions "counsels against finding predominance"). The District Court concluded that Plaintiffs, through their expert Dr. McClave, provided a damages model based on a common methodology available to measure and quantify damages on a class-wide basis. 264 F.R.D. at 191. Comcast assails that determination as an abuse of discretion.

A.

The District Court examined the methodology, conclusions, and criticisms of the experts on both sides, before providing its conclusions. 264 F.R.D. at 181-191. (Comcast does not contest that the Court performed the "rigorous analysis" required by Hydrogen Peroxide.) Because on appeal Comcast renews the arguments it made to the District Court, we set forth each side's position in the District Court and the Court's response.

Plaintiffs' damages expert, Dr. McClave, concluded that the prices in the Philadelphia market were consistently [49] and substantially higher than the prices in areas of effective competition. 264 F.R.D. at 181. His econometric analysis demonstrated that the alleged antitrust impact was class-wide, because the prices were elevated above competitive levels across all class members and for the entire time period. Id. For his methods, Dr. McClave constructed "but-for" prices against which to compare the prices Comcast charged in the Philadelphia DMA. "But-for" prices are those that would have existed absent the alleged anticompetitive conduct. To construct the "but-for" prices, he first selected comparable "benchmark" counties around the country by applying two "screens" to determine whether the counties [*201] represented a level of competition similar to what Comcast would have faced in the Philadelphia market absent its alleged anticompetitive conduct. It is important to understand these two screens. The first screen—the "market share screen" or "40% screen"—required that the county have a Comcast subscriber penetration rate of less than 40%. App. 03410. Dr. McClave chose 40% because it represented the approximate midpoint of Comcast's penetration rate in the Philadelphia DMA (between approximately 20% [50] in 1998 and 60% from 2003 through 2008). He chose this number also because it allowed for growth during the class period but focused on markets where Comcast was likely to have less market power than it does in the Philadelphia market. Id. The second screen—the "Direct Broadcast Satellite screen", or "DBS screen"—required that the county be in a Designated Market Area where the penetration level for Alternative Delivery Systems (which essentially includes DBS, but also master antenna systems and multipoint distribution systems) was at or higher than the national average of Alternative Delivery Systems penetration rates in Comcast markets.[11] Using data from the counties that fit the two screens, Dr. McClave performed a multiple regression analysis to compare actual prices in the Philadelphia DMA to the estimated "but-for" prices. He then applied the overcharge percentage to the relevant revenue obtained by Comcast for expanded basic service in the Philadelphia market during the class period to reach a final conservative estimated overcharge value: $875,576,662.

---

[10] Indeed, recent scholarship uniformly has expressed concern over the trend towards converting certification decisions into mini trials. See Joshua P. Davis & Eric L. Cramer, Antitrust, Class Certification, and the Politics of Procedure, 17 Geo. Mason L. Rev. 969, 970 (2010) (contending that the "judicial tendency to impose requirements at class certification" serves no legitimate purpose and risks violating the Seventh Amendment); Michael J. Kaufman & John M. Wunderlich, The Unjustified Judicial Creation of Class Certification Merits Trials in Securities Fraud Actions, 43 U. Mich. J.L. Reform 323, 323 (2010) [47] (stating that judicial resolution of merits at the certification stage precludes victims from obtaining redress, infringes on the Seventh Amendment, and serves no legitimate policy concerns); Steig D. Olson, "Chipping Away": The Misguided Trend Toward Resolving Merits Disputes as Part of the Class Certification Calculus, 43 U.S.F. L. Rev. 935, 940 (2009) (intensifying the Rule 23 analysis is inconsistent with the Rule itself and highly inefficient); J. Douglas Richards & Benjamin D. Brown, Predominance of Common Questions ? Common Mistakes in Applying the Class Action Standard, 41 Rutgers L.J. 163, 169 (2009) (contending, inter alia, that requiring the district court to determine by a preponderance whether plaintiffs' proposed proof is actually correct or incorrect would "substitute a court's own evaluation of key merits questions for that of the jury").

Comcast's experts, Dr. Teece and Dr. Tasneem Chipty, contested several parts of Dr. McClave's methodology, and questioned his results. 264 F.R.D. at 183. First, they challenged both benchmark screens used by Dr. McClave. Regarding the "DBS screen," Dr. Teece asserted that Dr. McClave erroneously chose the higher national Direct Broadcast Satellite penetration rate, instead of the lower regional rate predicted by Plaintiffs' experts Dr. Singer and Dr. Williams. The District Court rejected the critique, stating that Dr. McClave "used his national average DBS penetration screen as a descriptor of typical competitive market conditions," and was not attempting to predict the Direct Broadcast Satellite penetration rate of the Philadelphia DMA. Id. at 184. [52] Regarding the "market share screen," Dr. Chipty contended that because Comcast was present in only a few counties in 1999, its actual market share was much higher in the counties where it was and 0% where it was not; as a result, the less-than-40% penetration rate provided an inappropriate screen. App. 03833. The District Court rejected the criticism as unsupported by the record, stating that Dr. Chipty should have presented evidentiary data to show that 40% was an incorrect midpoint estimate or average rate. 264 F.R.D. at 184. The Court also noted that the 40% screen was supported by the evidence as Comcast's approximate share of the Philadelphia DMA at the midpoint of the class period. Id. at 184 n.43.

Second, Dr. Chipty faulted Dr. McClave's model for failing to consider properly demographic variables among the [*202] counties: specifically, for omitting the variables of population density and the number and type of households. The District Court credited as well-supported Dr. McClave's response as to why he omitted population density: it is correlated with medium household income (which he included) and using it as well as household income would create confounding and unreliable results. [53] 264 F.R.D. at 185-186. Additionally, according to Dr. McClave, adding it would mask the effects of anticompetitive influences because higher population density results in lower costs per subscriber. Id. at 185. The Court noted that Dr. Chipty's use of population density as a variable resulted in it being positive and statistically significant in one model but negative and statistically significant in another. Id. at 186. Moreover, the Court added that Federal Communications Commission and Government Accountability Office studies included population density but found it was not a statistically significant variable. Id.

Third, Dr. Chipty criticized Dr. McClave's model for comparing list prices for expanded basic cable in the Philadelphia DMA against the benchmark counties. She opined that Dr. McClave's model did not take into account the significant number of promotions and discounts offered to Comcast customers. Id. at 187. Dr. Chipty offered several rebuttal models that included population density and discounted prices, which resulted in significantly lower or even negative damages. The Court rejected Dr. Chipty's models as "suffer[ing] significant flaws." Id. at 188, 189. It stated [54] that Dr. McClave's model accounted for discount prices in the formula (not model) when he multiplied anticompetitive overcharge by Comcast's relevant revenues (because Comcast receives revenue only for prices charged, the revenue side of the formula by definition includes discount prices). Accordingly, by adding discount prices to the model as well, Dr. Chipty's model doubly counted the discount. The Court also noted that, as Dr. McClave explained, more than 80% of Comcast's customers pay list price for expanded basic cable, and discounts from list prices are temporary (after which they return to list price). As to another of Dr. Chipty's models, which calculated damages through direct calculations instead of multiple regression, the Court rejected it in the words of Dr. McClave as a "novel and non-standard formula for calculating damages." Id. at 189.

---

[11] Dr. McClave used Alternative Delivery Systems penetration rates as a proxy to measure Direct Broadcast Satellite penetration [51] rates. App. 03410 n.11. Comcast's expert, Dr. Chipty, referred to the screen as the "DBS screen," and as measuring DBS penetration rates. App. 03834. The parties and District Court have continued using the DBS terminology. Although the screen technically measured Alternative Delivery Systems penetration rates, we will use the parties' terminology and refer to it as the "DBS screen" and as measuring Direct Broadcast Satellite penetration rates.

Fourth, the District Court rejected Dr. Chipty's attempt to impeach Dr. McClave's model by using it to calculate damages for basic cable prices, instead of expanded basic cable. Id. at 190. The Court explained that Dr. McClave's model aimed to analyze only expanded basic cable, because Comcast alters its prices at the expanded level, [55] so "any application of the McClave model to [basic cable prices] explains nothing." Id. Comcast does not contest that ruling.

Fifth and finally, the Court asked the parties after the hearing how to interpret Dr. McClave's damages model if it credited at least one, but not all, of Dr. Williams's four theories of antitrust impact. Id. It determined that Dr. McClave's damages model was still viable, even if it rejected some theories of antitrust impact, explaining that Dr. McClave selected benchmarks to isolate the effect of anticompetitive conduct, and that his use of the DBS screen was "entirely unrelated" to Dr. Williams's DBS foreclosure theory. Id. The Court concluded that Dr. Williams's theories of antitrust impact were not relevant to Dr. McClave's methods of choosing benchmarks because "[a]ny anticompetitive conduct is reflected in the Philadelphia DMA price, not in the selection of the comparison counties." Id. at 191.

[*203] B.

Comcast contends that the District Court exceeded its discretion in accepting Plaintiffs' proposed damages calculation methodology. Its arguments are recast versions of those rejected by the District Court. First, Comcast contends that Dr. McClave's damages theory [56] was based on all of Plaintiffs' alleged anticompetitive effects, but the District Court rejected three of Plaintiffs' four theories. Because Dr. McClave stated that his model was based on the cumulative effect and could not isolate damages for individual theories of harm, according to Comcast the District Court erred in accepting the damages model. Second, Comcast asserts that the economic assumptions underlying the damages model lack foundation in the record evidence. According to Comcast, both screens employed by Dr. McClave are factually unsupported and economically unsound: the "DBS penetration screen" because the Court rejected Dr. Williams's Direct Broadcast Satellite foreclosure theory, and the "market share screen" because it bears no relation to the conditions that would have existed in the Philadelphia region but for the complained-of conduct. Third, Comcast contends that the damages model is flawed because it fails to include population density as a variable, and because it calculates damages based on list prices, which fails to consider the discounted prices that some subscribers actually pay.[12]

Plaintiffs remind us that the District Court already thoroughly considered and rebutted each of the points that Comcast now raises. As to the specific contentions, first, the class asserts that the District Court explicitly held that Dr. McClave's model was suitable for calculation of damages on all or individual theories of liability. Second, the class emphasizes that the damages model provides a methodology that can establish damages on a class-wide basis using common proof, and that Comcast ignores the proper inquiry at class certification and instead prematurely attacks the merits of the model. As a result, Comcast's arguments concerning the benchmarks miss the point. Third, the class asserts that Dr. McClave had ample justification to omit population density as a variable, and that the damages model [58] incorporates discount prices.

X.

We pause to identify the forest for the trees. HN22[] If allowed to proceed to trial, the class must establish that the injury it suffered from the violation of the antitrust laws is measurable. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311; see also Newton, 259 F.3d at 188 ("Proof of injury (whether or not an injury occurred at all) must be distinguished from calculation of damages (which determines the actual value of the injury)."). The usual measure in an overcharge case "is the difference between the illegal price that was actually charged and the price that would have been charged 'but for' the violation multiplied by the number of units purchased." Areeda et al., supra, ¶ 392a. Given the inherent difficulty of identifying a "but-for world," we do not require that damages be measured with certainty, but rather that they be demonstrated as "a matter of just and reasonable inference." *Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 563, [204] 51 S. Ct. 248, 75 L. Ed. 544 (1931) ("[W]hile the damages may not be determined by mere speculation or guess, it will be enough if the evidence show the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference . . . ."); see also [59] Stelwagon Mfg. Co. v. Tarmac Roofing Sys., Inc., 63 F.3d 1267, 1273 (3d Cir. 1995) (citing Story Parchment and explaining that "damage issues in these cases are rarely susceptible to the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts").

[12] Following the Supreme Court's decision in Wal-Mart, Comcast added that Dr. [57] McClave's damages model, like the expert model in Wal-Mart, could be "safely disregard[ed]." See Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2554. We disagree. The factual and legal underpinnings of Wal-Mart—which involved a massive discrimination class action and different sections of Rule 23—are clearly distinct from those of this case. Wal-Mart therefore neither guides nor governs the dispute before us.

HN23[] The inquiry for a district court at the class certification stage is whether the plaintiffs have demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that they will be able to measure damages on a class-wide basis using common proof. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 325. Some variation of damages among class members does not defeat certification. See 7AA Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1781 (3d ed. 2005) (stating for antitrust class certification that "it uniformly has been held that differences among the members as to the amount of damages incurred does not mean that a class action would be inappropriate."). Complex and individual questions of damages, however, weigh against finding predominance. Compare Newton, 259 F.3d at 187 (reasoning that having to examine proof of the circumstances of hundreds of millions of individual transactions counseled against finding predominance), with Linerboard, 305 F.3d at 157-158 [60] (determining that, in contrast to Newton, all purchasers were affected by the increased price). As the Court of Appeals for the First Circuit explained:

> It is true that the validity of plaintiffs' theory is a common disputed issue. It will be for the fact finder to decide whether this theory is persuasive. At the class certification stage, however, the district court must still ensure that the plaintiffs' presentation of their case will be through means amenable to the class action mechanism. We are looking here not for hard factual proof, but for a more thorough explanation of how the pivotal evidence behind plaintiff's theory can be established. If there is no realistic means of proof, many resources will be wasted setting up a trial that plaintiffs cannot win.

In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 29 (1st Cir. 2008) (citation omitted); see also Areeda et al., supra, ¶ 331 (explaining for the issue of damages that "courts will not permit class actions unless they can devise a practical means for their litigation").[13]

[*205] On appeal, the inquiry narrows. Because the District Court held that Plaintiffs had established they could measure damages through common proof, we examine whether that determination was beyond the Court's discretion. Having identified the forest of law, we proceed to scrutinize the timber that Comcast faults as rotted.

A.

---

[13] In response to the Concurrence-Dissent's position that Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), applies at [61] the stage of class certification, see Slip Concurrence-Dissent Op. at 16, we make two observations. First, as the Opinion acknowledges, "in neither the District Court nor before us" did Comcast raise this issue, id. at 17 n.18, and it is therefore not properly before us. Second, although the Supreme Court recently hinted that Daubert may apply for evaluating expert testimony at the class certification stage, it need not turn class certification into a mini-trial. Wal-Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2553-54. We understand the Court's observation to require a district court to evaluate whether an expert is presenting a model which could evolve to become admissible evidence, and not requiring a district court to determine if a model is perfect at the certification stage. This is consistent with our jurisprudence which requires that at class certification stage, we evaluate expert models to determine whether the theory of proof is plausible. Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 324. "[I]f such impact is plausible in theory, it is also susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class. When the latter issue is genuinely disputed, the district court must resolve it after considering [62] all relevant evidence." Id. at 325. When plaintiffs present multiple models created by expert witnesses that can show common evidence and those models are based on data, a district court does not have to determine which model should be used at the time of class certification. Linerboard, 305 F.3d at 155. Here, the District Court likely determined that Dr. McClave's model could be refined between the time when class certification was granted and trial so as to comply with Daubert.

Comcast contends that Dr. McClave's model cannot isolate damages for individual theories of harm, and that it therefore cannot distinguish between lawful and unlawful competition. Comcast cites Coleman Motor Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 525 F.2d 1338, 1353 (3d Cir. 1975), and Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1057 (8th Cir. 2000). In both cases, following adverse jury verdicts, [63] the courts held that the experts' theories of damages were "speculation"—not "just and reasonable inferences"—because the models did not distinguish between the effects of lawful and unlawful competition. In Coleman, we quoted the guidepost of Story Parchment: HN24[] "The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong, not to those damages which are definitely attributable to the wrong and only uncertain in respect of their amount." Coleman, 525 F.2d at 1353 (quoting Story Parchment, 282 U.S. at 562).

We are not persuaded by Comcast's argument. To measure damages, Dr. McClave used screens to select and average benchmark counties against which to compare the actual Philadelphia market. The screens themselves were not intended to calculate damages, but instead to construct an estimated competitive "but-for" Philadelphia market (a market absent the alleged anticompetitive conduct). For example, although the screens incorporated Direct Broadcast Satellite penetration rates, those rates were included to estimate typical competitive market conditions, not to calculate liability for the foreclosure of DBS competitors.[14] The model [64] then calculates damages by comparing actual prices to the constructed "but-for" market. Differences between actual prices and "but-for" prices reflect anticompetitive impact. In other words, the model calculates supra-competitive prices regardless of the type of anticompetitive conduct. Further, the model uses standard econometric methodology to calculate damages. See generally Areeda et al., supra, ¶ 394 (detailing the basic steps in calculating antitrust damages). Indeed, as Dr. McClave highlighted, Comcast's expert Dr. Chipty employed the same methodological approach—identify a suitable benchmark and employ multiple regression analysis to control for differences—to estimate damages on a class-wide basis. App. 04041 ("Dr. Chipty and I agree that the application of multiple regression analysis to compare Philadelphia to a suitable benchmark is an appropriate methodology that can be applied on a classwide basis to quantify the amount of economic damages in this case.").

As a result, if the class proves at trial that Comcast engaged in anticompetitive [*206] behavior, it can use the constructed "but-for" market to measure the anticompetitive impact on the class members. HN25[] At the class certification stage we do not require that Plaintiffs tie each theory of antitrust impact to an exact calculation of damages, but instead that they assure us that if they can prove antitrust impact, the resulting damages are capable of measurement and will not require labyrinthine individual calculations. Cf. Newton, 259 F.3d at 187. We are satisfied that Plaintiffs' damages model meets this burden.[15]

Additionally, the cases that Comcast offers are distinguishable on multiple grounds. Most to the point, those cases considered the merits of experts' theories following adverse jury verdicts; here, we address only whether Plaintiffs have provided a method to measure and quantify damages on a class-wide basis. We have not reached the stage

---

[14] The Concurrence-Dissent misreads this observation as addressing the on-the-merits validity of the DBS screen. Slip Concurring-Dissenting Op. at 25-27. We address Comcast's contention regarding the merits of the DBS [65] screen, however, infra Part X. This observation indicates simply that the exclusion of the DBS foreclosure theory of liability does not render Dr. McClave's damages methodology incapable of calculating damages on a class-wide basis if the class can prove that Comcast engaged in anticompetitive behavior.

[15] The Concurrence-Dissent states that Dr. McClave's damages theory can establish damages only in the five counties where RCN attempted to overbuild. This concern misses the central theory of Plaintiffs' case: by deterring the entry of overbuilders through clustering, Comcast allegedly [66] maintained higher prices across the entire market area. Dr. McClave's damages model appropriately reflected a "but-for" world by accounting for overbuilding only in the five counties where RCN attempted to overbuild, and his resulting calculations showed that—taking the limited actual overbuilding into account—"the Philadelphia DMA market prices were elevated above the but-for prices in every county-year combination." App. 03412. Additionally, the Concurrence-Dissent apparently takes up the mantle of an additional Comcast expert and raises multiple arguments against Dr. McClave's damages model not addressed by Comcast's experts at the District Court level nor advanced by Comcast on appeal. We must limit our review to the issues presented by Appellants and Appellees. We are not permitted to embark on an intellectual adventure of our own.

of determining [67] on the merits whether the methodology is a just and reasonable inference or speculative. And, to the extent Comcast worries about distinguishing between lawful and unlawful conduct, Dr. McClave's damages methodology does not suffer from the defects present in those cases because it constructs a competitive "but-for" world that includes lawful competition, not a hypothetical one bereft of both lawful and unlawful competition. See Concord, 207 F.3d at 1056-1057 (model was "mere speculation" because it ignored inconvenient evidence, failed to account for external market events, and did not incorporate economic reality of market); Coleman, 525 F.2d at 1352-1353 (model premised on hypothetical world without even lawful competition).[16]

B.

Comcast's remaining arguments contest specific parts of Dr. McClave's damages methodology. These contentions are a renewal of those it made to the District Court, each of which the Court rejected. For those determinations to be beyond the Court's discretion, Comcast must convince us that the Court's acceptance of the pieces of Dr. McClave's methodology was clearly erroneous.

At the outset, we agree with the class that the heart of Comcast's arguments are [*207] attacks on the merits of the methodology that have no place in the class certification inquiry. Even if we were to overrule as clearly erroneous the District Court's findings on all four contested pieces of Dr. McClave's methodology—i.e., modify both of Dr. McClave's screens,[17] add population density as a variable, and incorporate Dr. Chipty's proposed method for calculating discounts—only the final amount of estimated damages would change. See App. 03082 (Hr'g Ex.) (chart demonstrating differing damages amounts based on different model specifications, including Dr. Chipty's [69] suggested specifications); App. 04557 (Dr. McClave Supplemental Decl.) (damages remain class-wide and substantial even using Dr. Chipty's proposed methodology, after correcting for two obvious errors). Comcast's assertions do not impeach the District Court's ultimate holding that damages are capable of common proof on a class-wide basis. See Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 191; see also In re Scrap Metal Antitrust Litig., 527 F.3d 517, 535 (6th Cir. 2008) ("Indeed, we have never required a precise mathematical calculation of damages before deeming a class worthy of certification."). All of the cases Comcast proffers examine damages models on their merits following adverse jury verdicts. For reasons explained above, these cases do not address the question at the class certification stage. Because Comcast's contentions do not cast doubt on the District Court's holding that Plaintiffs will be able to measure class-wide damages through a common methodology, we decline to consider them further. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 317 (describing the Supreme Court's rule prohibiting consideration of the merits if not "necessary" for purposes of Rule 23) (citing Eisen, 417 U.S. at 177).

Plaintiffs have provided a common methodology to measure and quantify damages on a class-wide basis. The District Court acted within its discretion in so finding.[18]

---

[16] Comcast adds that because overbuilding occurs at the franchise level, Dr. McClave's county-to-county metric cannot calculate damages if the jury finds that only some (if any) franchises were impacted. First, Dr. McClave indicated that franchises within counties often have identical or nearly identical pricing, which assuages Comcast's concern. See App. 03409. Second, Comcast is attempting again to redefine the relevant market: inasmuch as Plaintiffs have [68] established that the relevant geographic market can be the Philadelphia DMA, see supra Part IV.A, their damages model passes muster at this stage of the proceedings.

[17] The Concurrence-Dissent—unlike [70] Comcast's experts, Comcast's lawyers and the District Court—identifies a "third screen." Slip Concurring-Dissenting Op. at 22. Again, this "screen" was not raised by the parties before us and we do not address it (we doubt additionally that it is a screen: the two screens were used to select benchmark counties, whereas the presence of overbuilders was an identification attached to the already-selected benchmark counties for purposes of performing a multiple regression analysis, see App. 03412, 03421 (Corrected McClave Decl.)).

[18] The Concurrence-Dissent expresses its additional concern over using mathematical averages across the Philadelphia DMA, given the potential variation among the franchise areas. Once again, this concern is notably absent from Comcast's briefing (except as already addressed above regarding the screens and demographic variables). Nor does the Concurrence-Dissent grapple with the abuse-of-discretion standard of review we must apply to the District Court's acceptance of Dr. McClave's damages model. We also [71] note in passing that the Concurrence-Dissent overstates the degree of dissimilarity among the franchise areas. It recognizes that Dr. McClave's model examines actual prices on a county-by-county level, see Slip

[*208] XI.

The District Court certified the class for resolution of four claims. Comcast contends that the District Court erred by certifying the following claim:

> Whether Defendants conspired with competitors, and whether Defendants entered into and implemented agreements with competitors, to allocate [73] markets, territories, and customers for cable television services; and whether such conduct is a per se violation, or whether it constitutes a restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

App. 00031 (emphasis added). According to Comcast, the District Court lacked any legal authority to certify a per se claim based on the class's allegations.

This is a merits issue beyond the scope of our Rule 23(f) jurisdiction. Comcast misconstrues the District Court's certification order. The Court certified the class and stated that one of the questions to be litigated is whether there has been a per se violation. It did not declare that a per se violation had occurred. HN26[] Appeals taken pursuant to Rule 23(f) do not furnish the proper vehicle to address the merits of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. See McKowan Lowe & Co. v. Jasmine, Ltd., 295 F.3d 380, 390 (3d Cir. 2002) (describing the "scrupulous" limits of Rule 23(f) jurisdiction). Comcast appeals from the District Court's determination that questions of law or fact common to class members predominate, which was the only issue before the District Court. See App. 00029 (District Ct. Certification Order) ("The only [74] class certification element that remained in dispute was the requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) that common issues of law and fact predominate."). Comcast itself stipulated as much. See App. 00436 (Comcast Letter to the District Ct., Mar. 25, 2009) ("With respect to the issues to be addressed in a new class certification motion, Comcast is prepared to stipulate that the only issues to be resolved are those of antitrust impact and methodology of damages . . . ."). Comcast's request to have us declare on the merits that Plaintiffs cannot establish a per se antitrust violation is beyond the scope of the certification decision from which Comcast appeals pursuant to Rule 23(f). Accordingly, we do not reach this contention.

* * * *

We have considered carefully all the contentions presented by the parties. Plaintiffs have demonstrated that this case can proceed as a class action. Comcast has not carried its burden to convince us otherwise. Accordingly, we will AFFIRM in all respects the District Court's Order certifying the class.

Concur by: JORDAN (In Part)

Dissent by: JORDAN (In Part)

Concurring-Dissenting Op. at 39-40 n.36, but fails to note, as Dr. McClave explained: "Many franchises within counties often have identical or nearly identical pricing. More price variability, and thus from an econometric perspective more information about prices and their determinants, is obtained by aggregating prices at the county level." App. 03409 (Corrected McClave Decl.). Not even Comcast's expert contested this reasoning. See App. 03831 (Chipty Decl.); App. 03954 (Chipty Rebuttal Report). Finally, to the extent the Concurrence-Dissent questions the appropriateness of using county-level statistics to measure damages across the entire Philadelphia DMA, we observe that this question was contested strenuously and repeatedly by the experts on both sides at the District Court level. See App. 03410 (Corrected McClave Decl.) (explaining choice of market share screen); App. 03833 (Chipty Decl.) (contesting market share screen); App. 04066 (McClave Rebuttal Decl.) (defending market [72] share screen); App. 03961 (Chipty Rebuttal Report) (disputing screen again); App. 04262 (McClave Reply Decl.) (responding to Dr. Chipty's criticisms of screen). After reviewing the reports and hearing careful examination of the experts on this point, the District Court found that Dr. McClave's 40% county-level market-share screen was "supported by the evidence" and that Dr. Chipty's rebuttal was not supported by appropriate data. 264 F.R.D. at 184. Through a clearly erroneous lens, we may not reverse a District Court's factual finding if we would weigh the evidence differently; instead, the Court's finding must be implausible in light of the record, Anderson, 470 U.S. at 573-574, or completely devoid of minimum evidentiary support displaying some hue of credibility, Krasnov, 465 F.2d at 1302. The Concurrence-Dissent breezes past this formidable standard of review to reach its own factual finding.

Dissent

JORDAN, Circuit Judge, concurring in the judgment part and dissenting in part

I agree with the Majority's conclusion, though not [75] its reasoning, with respect to the question of antitrust impact, and I therefore join in holding that the District [*209] Court did not abuse its discretion when it determined that Plaintiffs could establish antitrust impact through evidence common to a class comprising Comcast cable television customers in the Philadelphia DMA.[1] But because I conclude that damages cannot be proven using evidence common to that entire class, I would vacate the certification order to the extent it provides for a single class as to proof of damages, and I would remand the case to the District Court to consider whether the class can be divided into subclasses for the purpose of proving damages. I therefore respectfully dissent in part.[2]

As the Majority explains, Plaintiffs' claims have three elements, (1) an antitrust violation, (2) antitrust impact, and (3) damages (see Slip Op. at 17 (citing In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 311 (3d Cir. 2008)).[3] In pursuing its motion to decertify the initial class, however, Comcast effectively conceded that there was predominance with respect to the element of an antitrust violation, stipulating that it was contesting only "the Rule 23(b) issues of predominance of the common issues of (1) antitrust impact and (2) methodology of damages." (App. at 438.) When the District Court granted Comcast's [77] motion,[4] it accepted that stipulation and instructed the parties that, moving forward, they "need only address these discrete issues." (Id.) On appeal, after the District Court once more certified a class, Comcast has again limited its arguments to addressing predominance as to impact and damages. We are therefore faced with two related questions: First, whether the District Court abused its discretion by holding that, as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3), common issues of law or fact predominate with respect to the question of antitrust impact, and, second, whether the District Court abused its discretion by likewise holding that common issues of law or fact predominate with respect to the question of damages.[5]

---

[1] I adopt the defined terms, such as "DMA," as used in the Majority opinion.

[2] Although the Majority opinion decides the question of certification for a single class comprising Comcast customers in the Philadelphia DMA, it should be noted that its decision will become a template for resolving similar class certification questions pending in cases involving the Chicago and Boston media markets (see Slip Op. at 10 & n.5), and in all likelihood it will be cited in other lawsuits against [76] cable television service providers (cf. App. at 3652 (Williams Dec.) (explaining that, as part of Comcast's swaps and acquisitions, "Adelphia received Comcast's cable systems and subscribers located in Palm Beach, Florida and Los Angeles, California")). Thus, the problems in the Majority's reasoning will have practical repercussions far beyond this case. I therefore write not only because I cannot join the Majority in permitting Plaintiffs to pursue damages on a class-wide basis, but also to provide a counterpoint to the Majority's analysis for future consideration.

[3] Plaintiffs make separate claims for violation of both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act, but each of those claims contains the three elements described above, with only the nature of the particular antitrust violation differing. Compare Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311 (listing the elements of a § 1 claim as "(1) a violation of the antitrust laws — here, § 1 of the Sherman Act, (2) individual injury resulting from that violation, and (3) measurable damages"), [78] with Am. Bearing Co. v. Litton Indus., 729 F.2d 943, 948 (3d Cir. 1984) (listing the elements of a § 2 claim as "(1) an antitrust violation, in this case a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) fact of damage or injury; and (3) measurable damages").

[4] Because Comcast had moved to decertify the class entirely before stipulating to all issues other than the predominance questions described above, the District Court, which construed the motion to decertify as a motion for reconsideration, granted the motion only with respect to those predominance issues and denied it with respect to all other issues. (App. at 437.)

[5] While not expressed, the requirement that there must be predominance with respect to both antitrust impact and damages appears to be accepted by the parties and the Majority, and I likewise accept that predominance is issue specific. See, e.g., Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d 305 at 311 ("We examine the elements of plaintiffs' claim through the prism of Rule 23," to determine whether "proof of the essential elements of the cause of action requires individual treatment." (internal quotation marks omitted)); Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 172 (3d Cir. 2001) [79] ("To determine whether the claims alleged by the putative class meet the requirements for class certification, we must first examine the

[*210] The Majority opinion skillfully [80] lays out the legal requirements for predominance and the standard under which we must review the District Court's decision, and there is no need to repeat that legal background. I emphasize, however, the instruction from Hydrogen Peroxide that the question of predominance hinges on whether the elements of a class claim are "capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members." 552 F.3d at 311-12. With that requirement in mind, I address the contested elements in turn.

I. Whether Antitrust Impact Can Be Proven Using Evidence Common To The Class

In seeking class certification, Plaintiffs initially presented four theories of antitrust impact.[6] The District Court rejected three of them,[7] leaving Plaintiffs with only a single theory of antitrust impact: that Comcast's clustering reduced overbuilding[8] and, therefore, increased prices. [*211] Like the Majority, I see no abuse of discretion in the District Court's holding that antitrust impact may be proven using evidence that clustering reduced overbuilding and so caused increased prices. Thus, I agree with my colleagues in the Majority that the element of antitrust impact is at least capable [81] of proof on behalf of some class of consumers. The more complicated question, as I see it, is whether antitrust impact is capable of proof for a class encompassing all Comcast customers in the Philadelphia DMA, through the use of common evidence.[9] On that issue too I agree with the Majority's holding that the District Court was within its discretion to conclude that the Philadelphia DMA is the appropriate geographic region within which antitrust impact can be proven with common evidence. I do not agree, however, with the Majority's reasoning in support of that conclusion.

---

underlying cause of action ... . If proof of the essential elements of the cause of action requires individual treatment, then class certification is unsuitable.") Of course, where only some elements of a claim require individual treatment, while others can be litigated collectively, it may be appropriate to certify a class for those elements that can be treated collectively, while certifying subclasses or requiring individual treatment for those that cannot. See, e.g., Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(4), advisory committee's notes (explaining that application of Rule 23(c)(4)'s provision allowing "that an action may be maintained as a class action as to particular issues only" may be appropriate where, for instance, liability can be proven class wide, but damages cannot); In re Nassau Cnty. Strip Search Cases, 461 F.3d 219, 231 (2d Cir. 2006) (remanding to district court with instructions to certify a class for liability and to consider whether to also certify for damages or to, alternatively, certify subclasses for damages).

[6] Those theories were: (1) that Comcast's high market share resulting from clustering made it profitable for Comcast to deny Comcast SportsNet to DBS providers, which lowered DBS penetration rates and allowed Comcast to raise prices; (2) that Comcast's clustering reduced "benchmark competition" (the ability of customers to compare service and prices among competing providers), which allowed Comcast to raise prices; (3) that Comcast's market power increased its bargaining power vis-à-vis content providers, which allowed it to raise prices for its services; and (4) that Comcast's clustering deterred competition from overbuilders, [82] allowing Comcast to raise prices.

[7] The District Court rejected the theory that clustering reduced DBS penetration because it found that Comcast's denial of Comcast SportsNet to DBS providers predated and was unrelated to clustering. It rejected the theory that clustering reduced benchmark competition because Plaintiffs had provided no evidence that television consumers actually engaged in benchmark competition. It rejected as "wholly unsupported" the theory that increased bargaining power vis-à-vis content providers increased prices.

[8] "Overbuilding," as the Majority explained, is where a second cable provider — the "overbuilder" — "builds and offers customers a competitive alternative where a telecommunications company already operates." (Slip Op. at 9.) The existing provider is often referred to as the "incumbent" provider.

[9] The geographic scope of the class is actually defined as Comcast's Philadelphia cluster, which, as noted by the Majority, excludes the DMA counties of Lehigh and Northampton. As Dr. Chipty explains, those are the two counties in which Comcast has no presence (see App. at 3795 & n.12 (Chipty Reply Dec.)), and, therefore, they would be excluded from the class regardless [83] of its geographic scope. For ease of reference, I refer to the class as encompassing the Philadelphia DMA, rather than the Philadelphia Cluster, recognizing that those DMA counties in which there are no Comcast customers are not included in the class.

Much confusion has been caused in this case by the conflation of two distinct concepts: the antitrust concept of "relevant geographic market," which has traditionally been defined as the smallest area within which a monopolist can exercise market power,[10] and the class action concept of a "class definition," which gives the parameters of a set of plaintiffs as to whom the elements of a claim can be proven using common evidence.[11] Because, in this case, the class definition includes a geographic component, the term "relevant geographic market" has been used equivocally by the parties, the District Court, and the Majority to describe both the area affected by antitrust impact and the area within which potential class members reside — the latter area being what I will call, for lack of a better term, the "class region."[12] The problem with that equivocal usage is that [*212] the relevant geographic market and the class region are not necessarily [84] coterminous. Even if we assume that, within the Philadelphia DMA, there are many distinct geographic markets that are relevant for antitrust purposes, as Comcast argues, that does not mean that Plaintiffs cannot prove, by common evidence, that Comcast's acts caused antitrust impact within all of them. As a theoretical matter, class proof can cover multiple relevant geographic markets, and, indeed, other Courts of Appeals have so held. See, e.g., In re Sugar Antitrust Litig., 559 F.2d 481, 483-84 (9th Cir. 1977) (rejecting the argument that a class could not be certified "where the antitrust claims involve a variety of geographic and product markets"); Windham v. Am. Brands Inc., 539 F.2d 1016, 1018 (4th Cir. 1976) (holding that a district court abused its discretion in refusing to certify an antitrust class that encompassed "11 different geographic markets").

While the relevant geographic market and the class region are conceptually distinct,[13] the Majority, like the District Court, initially attempts to identify the class region in terms of the relevant geographic market. Unlike the District Court, however, the Majority decides that because "[d]efining the relevant geographic market ... is an issue of the merits," the question of the relevant geographic market is "not properly before us." (Slip Op. at 20-21.)

The Majority is correct [87] that defining the relevant geographic market is not a task we need to undertake at this stage, but that is not because the task takes us into the merits. It is rather because, regardless of whether there are one or many relevant geographic markets associated with the Philadelphia DMA, the question before us at this juncture is whether there is some class, in this case defined geographically, that can be shown, through common evidence, to have experienced elevated prices as a result of reduced overbuilding because of Comcast's clustering. Should that region include only those franchise areas involved in the Cable System Transactions?[14] Should it

---

[10] For example, the Federal Trade Commission defines "relevant geographic market" as the region in which a hypothetical monopolist "would impose at least a [small but significant nontransitory price increase] on some customers in that region" without "this price increase [being] defeated by substitution away from the relevant product [85] or by ... customers in the region travelling outside it to purchase the relevant product." FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, HORIZONTAL MERGER GUIDELINES 14-15 (2010). Cf. PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, FUNDAMENTALS OF ANTITRUST LAW § 5-30 (2010) ("[T]he relevant inquiry" for identifying a geographic market is "how far [customers] are willing to travel in order to avoid paying the defendant monopoly prices.").

[11] See In re DVI, Inc. Secs. Litig., 639 F.3d 623, 639 n.22 (3d Cir. 2011) (explaining that, pursuant to Rule 23(c)(1)(B), the class definition describes both "which individuals and entities are included" and the "claims, issues or defenses to be treated on a class basis"). While Rule 23(c)(1)(B) does not expressly state that the class should include only those for whom the defined claims can be proven by common evidence, it is apparent that any class must be defined in a manner consistent with all Rule 23 requirements, including commonality and predominance. Cf. id. at 639 & n.22 (explaining that the question of whether there was predominance when it was alleged that some members of a proposed class "would be unable to demonstrate loss causation," was an issue of "which individuals [86] and entities are included in the putative class ... primarily relevant to class definition").

[12] The class region will not necessarily be the same with respect to each element of a class's claims. In fact, even in this case, the class region differs with respect to antitrust impact and damages because, for the reasons I identify infra Part II(B), antitrust impact can be proven using common evidence across a wider region than damages can be.

[13] That is not to say that a class region and a relevant geographic market will always be different. An antitrust violation may often affect people in only a single geographic market, in which case the relevant geographic market and the class region would be in essence the same.

include only those franchise areas in which RCN was licensed to overbuild, but did not? Should it encompass the Philadelphia DMA or some lesser or greater area? The Majority does not ask those questions, but, instead, after determining that Plaintiffs can attempt to prove that the relevant geographic market is the Philadelphia DMA, the Majority assumes that that also means that the class is properly defined to cover the Philadelphia DMA and, therefore, that Plaintiffs can prove by common evidence that clustering reduced overbuilding and increased [88] prices throughout the DMA. (See, e.g., Slip Op. at 51-52 n.16 (dismissing Comcast's argument that overbuilding should be analyzed at the franchise level because "Plaintiffs have established that the relevant geographic market can be the Philadelphia DMA").) Fortunately, what the Majority assumes, namely that the Philadelphia DMA is the appropriate class region for proving antitrust impact, is supportable.

A compelling argument could be made that the class should consist only of those people living in franchise areas where RCN was licensed to overbuild, because [*213] only those franchise areas that would otherwise have been overbuilt could have been affected by the elimination of that overbuilding.[15] Because RCN was licensed to overbuild only five of the eighteen Philadelphia DMA counties (see, e.g., App. at 3640 (Williams Dec.); App. at 4284-85 (Singer Reply Dec.)), [89] that would suggest limiting the class region to those five counties.[16] Nonetheless, both Dr. Williams and Dr. Singer opined that, had RCN successfully overbuilt the five counties in which it was already licensed, it would have continued overbuilding into the remainder of the Philadelphia DMA. (App. at 4285 (Singer Reply Dec.) ("[H]ad RCN entered the five counties that it intended to ... it is likely that RCN would have expanded its footprint beyond those five counties into geographically contiguous areas throughout the Philadelphia DMA."); App. at 4306 (Williams Reply Dec.) ("RCN likely would have continued to pursue its strategy of building into other areas in the Philadelphia DMA adjacent to its existing cable infrastructure, beyond the five counties.").) The District Court relied on those statements in holding that Plaintiffs had shown that the anticompetitive effects of clustering could be proven throughout the Philadelphia DMA. Behrend v. Comcast Corp., 264 F.R.D. 150, 174-75 (E.D. Pa. 2010). Though one may be skeptical that RCN would have overbuilt even the five counties in which it was licensed, let alone the remainder of the Philadelphia DMA, it was not clearly erroneous for [90] the District Court to accept that the prospect of overbuilding throughout the DMA was capable of proof. Consequently, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to hold that Plaintiffs could show, by common evidence, the antitrust impact of clustering throughout the Philadelphia DMA. Accordingly, while I do not agree with the Majority's reasoning, I agree that the District Court was within its discretion in determining that an appropriate class region for proving antitrust impact is the Philadelphia DMA.[17]

---

[14] The Cable System Transactions are, as described by the Majority, the transactions through which Comcast "clustered" its franchise areas by "contract[ing] with competing cable providers to either acquire them or to 'swap' cable systems it owned in areas outside the Philadelphia DMA for cable systems within the Philadelphia DMA." (Slip. Op. at 5.)

[15] At least, Plaintiffs have provided no evidence that persons outside of franchise areas that would otherwise have been overbuilt can be affected by the elimination of that overbuilding. Dr. Williams opines that, where some parts of a franchise area are overbuilt, the overbuilding can affect prices in other parts of that same franchise area that are not overbuilt. (App. at 3704-14 (Williams Dec.) (explaining that where competing cable companies have "alternating franchise areas," overbuilding by one company into portions of the competitor's adjacent franchise area can affect prices in the portion of the overbuilt franchise area "that remain monopolized").) As a theoretical [91] matter, it is also plausible that, when one franchise area has been overbuilt, the threat of further expansion by that overbuilder could put downward pressure on prices in nearby franchise areas. If such an effect is described in the multitude of expert opinions, however, the parties have not identified it. Moreover, even if there is such an effect, it would likely be attenuated by distance. It seems doubtful that overbuilding in, for instance, Bucks County, Pennsylvania would influence prices in Kent County, Delaware.

[16] Given that the Class's whole theory is rooted in the premise that Comcast's clustering deterred overbuilding, it is no small matter that RCN — the only entity licensed to overbuild anywhere in the Philadelphia DMA — was licensed to overbuild in just five of the eighteen counties.

[17] The Majority responds to my efforts to identify the class region by stating that I have "misunderst[ood] an important distinction," namely that Plaintiffs have identified a "'class region' ... of a 'Philadelphia cluster' which is distinct from the contested relevant geographic market of the '"Philadelphia DMA."' (Slip Op. at 26 n.8.) I do acknowledge that distinction. However, that does not [92] speak to the point because, in spite of that distinction, there remains an equivocal use of the term "relevant geographic market." That equivocation is evidenced by the Majority's statement — in response to Comcast's suggestion that franchise areas

[*214] II. Whether Damages Can Be Proven Using Evidence Common To The Class

I part ways with the Majority entirely, however, when it comes to class-wide proof of [96] damages. The only evidence supporting Plaintiffs' claim that damages can be proven using evidence common to the class is the expert opinion of Dr. McClave. But, as detailed hereafter, Dr. McClave's testimony [*215] is incapable of identifying any damages caused by reduced overbuilding in the Philadelphia DMA. Consequently, his testimony is irrelevant and should be inadmissible at trial, pursuant to Federal Rule of Evidence 702 and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), as lacking fit. Thus, it cannot constitute common evidence of damages.[18] might be the appropriate class region for damages — that "Comcast is attempting to redefine the relevant market: inasmuch as Plaintiffs have established that the relevant geographic market can be the Philadelphia DMA ... their damages model passes muster." (Slip. Op. at 51-52 n.16.)

---

The Majority also asserts that there is no question about the class region because Comcast does not dispute the class region but disputes only the relevant geographic market. (Slip Op. at 26 n.8) That is not correct. While Comcast does not use the term "class region," Comcast and its experts plainly argue that the scope of the class is too broad, and they dispute the District Court's conclusion that antitrust impact can be proven by common evidence across the Philadelphia DMA. (See, e.g, App. at 3923 (Teece Reply Dec.) ("[E]ven if RCN would have overbuilt all five counties entirely in the but-for world, this would not be sufficient to conclude that the impact [93] of the challenged conduct would have affected all Comcast customers in the Philadelphia DMA."); id. at 3922 ("I have seen no evidence that RCN ever intended to build out the entire Philadelphia DMA."); Appellants Br. at 33 (arguing that Dr. Williams's models do not show that clustering "deterred overbuilding ... in a manner affecting all class members"); id. at 24-25 (noting that RCN was licensed in only five counties and arguing that Plaintiffs cannot prove that RCN would have entered the Philadelphia DMA). While I do not agree with Comcast's effort to define the class region by reference to the relevant geographic market (any more than I agree with the Majority's conflating of those concepts), to say that Comcast does not dispute the contours of the class region is not accurate, as the foregoing citations indicate.

However, even if Comcast had not disputed the class region, it would still be appropriate for us to address it. The Majority faults me for, in its view, addressing problems not raised by Comcast, which the Majority asserts are, therefore, waived. (See, e.g., slip op. at 43-44 n.15 ("[T]he Concurrence-Dissent ... raises multiple arguments ... not addressed by Comcast's expert [94] ... . We must limit our review to the issues presented by Appellants and Appellees."). But "there can be no waiver ... of the Judge's duty to apply the correct legal standard. ... This is particularly true in the class action context, where "the district court acts as a fiduciary who must serve as a guardian of the rights of absent class members."' In re Cmty. Bank of N. Virginia, 622 F.3d 275, 302 n.20 (3d Cir. 2010) (quoting United States v. Ali, 508 F.3d 136, 144 n.9 (3d Cir. 2007) and In re General Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 785 (3d Cir. 1995)). Thus, where Comcast has raised the issues of whether there is predominance with respect to antitrust impact and damages, we are required to "apply the correct legal standard," — which is to determine whether those elements can, in fact, be proven using evidence common to the class — even if that requires us '"to conduct [our] own thorough [R]ule 23[b] inquiry."' Id. (quoting Stirman v. Exxon Corp., 280 F.3d 554, 563 n.7 (5th Cir. 2002)). By disregarding the problems I have endeavored to identify, the result is an overly broad class definition and, to the extent any legitimate claims are proven, [95] a likely dilution of recovery. Our fiduciary responsibility to absent class members requires that we ensure compliance with the provisions of Rule 23, especially those '"designed to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions."' Id. at 291 (quoting Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 620, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997)); cf. Tri-M Group, LLC v. Sharp, 638 F.3d 406, 416 (3d Cir. 2011) ("[T]he waiver principle is only a rule of practice and may be relaxed whenever the public interest or justice so warrants.").

Moreover, we must be cognizant of "the pivotal status of class certification in large-scale litigation," which is "often the defining moment in class actions (for it may sound the 'death knell' of the litigation on the part of plaintiffs, or create unwarranted pressure to settle nonmeritorious claims on the part of defendants)." Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 310 (internal quotation marks omitted). Pointing out analytical problems central to the certification question is no frolic and detour. It is our obligation.

[18] Although we have never explicitly held that expert testimony must satisfy Daubert at the class certification stage, it is implicit in both Supreme Court precedent and our precedent. In Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, the Supreme Court recently expressed its "doubt" about a district court's conclusion that "Daubert did not apply to expert testimony at the certification stage of class-action proceedings." 131 S. Ct. 2541, 2553-54, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011). In Hydrogen Peroxide, we explained that "opinion testimony should not be uncritically accepted as establishing a Rule 23 requirement merely because the court holds the testimony should [*216] Our precedent explains that Rule 702 and Daubert impose three requirements for admission of expert testimony: the expert must be qualified, the expert's methodology must be reliable, and the expert's proffered testimony must fit the particular case. See United States v. Schiff, 602 F.3d 152, 172 (3d Cir. 2010). Testimony fits when it "'is sufficiently tied to the facts of the case that it will aid the jury in resolving a factual dispute.'" Id. at 173 (quoting United States v. Downing, 753 F.2d 1224, 1242 (3d Cir. 1985)). Like any relevancy determination, the question of fit is reviewed for abuse of discretion. United States v. Ford, 481 F.3d 215, 217-18. Here, Dr. McClave's opinion fails the requirement of "fit" because it is disconnected from Plaintiffs' only viable theory of antitrust impact, i.e., reduced overbuilding, and, thus, the proffered expert testimony cannot help the jury determine whether reduced overbuilding caused damages.[19] It was, consequently, an abuse of discretion for the District Court to consider Dr. McClave's opinion as demonstrating that damages could be proven using evidence common to [101] the class.

As explained by the Majority, Dr. McClave arrived at his damages calculation by comparing actual cable prices in the Philadelphia DMA to prices in benchmark counties outside the Philadelphia DMA. By making those comparisons, Dr. McClave sought to identify the "but for" price of cable — that is the price that would have prevailed in the Philadelphia DMA but for the alleged anticompetitive conduct of Comcast. (App. at 3407 (McClave Dec.).) For that comparison to be relevant, however, Dr. McClave's benchmark counties must reflect the conditions that would have prevailed in the Philadelphia DMA in the absence of any impact from that conduct. (Cf. App. at 719 (McClave Cross) (stating that the goal of his bechmarking model was to identify "counties that reflect characteristics that one would find absent ... the effects of [Comcast's alleged anticompetitive] conduct").) And because the only not be [97] excluded, under Daubert or for any other reason." 552 F.3d at 323. Inherent in that statement is the conclusion that a court could, at the class certification stage, exclude expert testimony under Daubert.

---

Even without the guidance of Dukes and Hydrogen Peroxide, simple logic indicates that a court may consider the admissibility of expert testimony at least when considering predominance. A court should be hard pressed to conclude that the elements of a claim are capable of proof through evidence common to a class if the only evidence proffered would not be admissible as proof of anything.

I recognize, of course, that in neither the District Court nor before us did Comcast describe its challenge to certification as a challenge to the admissibility of Dr. McClave's testimony. Nonetheless, while it did not use the language of Daubert, the substance of Comcast's challenge was that Dr. McClave's damages testimony was irrelevant and, therefore, did not fit the case. (See, e.g., Appellants' Br. at 37 ("Dr. McClave admitted that his damages model takes all of the anticompetitive effects of all of the complained-of conduct as a whole, and therefore cannot isolate damages attributable to specific [98] conduct or effects."); id. at 42 ("Dr. McClave's DBS penetration screen is substantively invalid because it bears no relation to the competitive conditions that would have prevailed in the Philadelphia region."); id. at 43 ("Dr. McClave's 'market share' screen is likewise invalid because it bears no relation to the competitive conditions that would have prevailed in the Philadelphia region."). The Majority protests my invocation of Daubert, but, regardless of whether we frame the issue as a question of fit under Daubert or simply ask whether the District Court abused its discretion by relying on irrelevant evidence, we are effectively asking the same question. I have chosen the terminology of Daubert because it is particularly apt for describing the difficulty created by the change in Plaintiffs' theory of impact and the consequent disconnect between that altered theory and Dr. McClave's expert report. The short of it is, Dr. McClave's model no longer fits the case. This observation is not, as the Majority fears, either an invitation or a demand for mini-trials in conjunction with class certification motions.

I note here as well my disagreement with the Majority's claim that, at the [99] class certification stage, we need only "evaluate expert models to determine whether the theory of proof is plausible." (Slip Op. at 47 n.13.) The Majority supports that position by quoting Hydrogen Peroxide's statement that "'if such impact is plausible in theory, it is also susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class.'" (Id. (quoting Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 325).) That quotation is better understood, however, if one includes the first half of the quoted sentence, which states that "the question at class certification is whether, if such impact is plausible in theory, it is also susceptible to proof at trial through available evidence common to the class." 552 F.3d at 325 (emphasis added). Thus, Hydrogen Peroxide does not suggest that we need only "evaluate expert models to determine whether the theory of proof is plausible," as the Majority claims. To the contrary, Hydrogen Peroxide instructs that, even where a theory is plausible, "the question at class certification is whether" that plausible theory is susceptible to common proof. Id. If the only common proof offered is inadmissible expert testimony, then Plaintiffs have not met their burden [100] of showing that the theory — plausible or not — is capable of common proof.

[19] I need not, and do not, question whether Dr. McClave is qualified as an expert or whether his methodology is reliable.

surviving theory of antitrust impact is that clustering reduced overbuilding, for Dr. McClave's comparison to be relevant, his benchmark counties must reflect the conditions [102] that would have prevailed in the Philadelphia DMA but for the alleged reduction in overbuilding. In all respects unrelated to reduced overbuilding, the benchmark counties should reflect the actual conditions in the Philadelphia DMA, or else the model will identify "damages" that are not the result of reduced overbuilding, or, in other words, that "are not the certain result of the wrong." Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 562, 51 S. Ct. 248, 75 L. Ed. 544 (1931); see also, e.g., Coleman Motor Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 525 F.2d 1338, 1353 (3d Cir. 1975) ("'The rule which precludes the recovery of uncertain damages applies to such as are not the certain result of the wrong.'" (quoting Story Parchment, 282 U.S. at 562)); Amerinet, Inc. v. Xerox Corp., 972 F.2d 1483, 1494 (8th Cir. 1992) (same); Broan Mfg. Co. v. Associated Distrib., Inc., 923 F.2d 1232, 1235 (6th Cir. 1991) (same).

Dr. McClave's benchmark counties fail in that regard because he formulated his model at a time when Plaintiffs had four separate theories of antitrust impact, and so he did not select his benchmark counties to isolate the impact of reduced overbuilding. He chose them, as one would expect, to reflect the impact [103] of other conditions in addition to reduced overbuilding. Consequently, as described in greater detail [*217] below, once the District Court rejected Plaintiffs' other theories of antitrust impact — leaving only the reduced-overbuilding theory — Dr. McClave's model no longer fits Plaintiffs' sole theory of antitrust impact and, instead, produces damages calculations that "are not the certain result of the wrong." Story Parchment, 282 U.S. at 562.[20]

A. Dr. McClave's Benchmark Counties Do Not Reflect "But For" Conditions in the Philadelphia DMA

To identify his benchmark counties, Dr. McClave used three "screens." First, he screened for counties where Comcast's market share was "less than 40%," because that figure identified "markets where Comcast is likely to have less market power than it has acquired in the Philadelphia market." (App. at 3410 (McClave Dec.).) Second, he screened for counties where DBS penetration[21] was "at or above the national average" because "DBS ... penetration was allegedly constrained by the anticompetitive [104] behavior of Comcast." (Id.) Third, having identified counties in which Comcast's share was less than 40 percent and DBS penetration was above the national average, Dr. McClave screened for overbuilding, identifying "each of the benchmark counties ... as either overbuilt or not overbuilt." (App. at 3411-12 (McClave Dec.).) While those screens might, if properly employed, have helped identify relevant benchmark counties in a case involving antitrust impacts beyond limited overbuilding, they fail to identify the "but for" conditions that are relevant to what is now the only impact of Comcast's allegedly anticompetitive conduct, namely the deterrence of overbuilding. They, therefore, cannot help identify damages caused by that impact. I examine the screens in reverse order.

1. The Overbuilt Counties Screen

While there are several problems in Dr. McClave's [105] opinion that reflect the lack of fit, nothing demonstrates it with more certainty than this: For thirteen of the eighteen counties in the Philadelphia DMA, Dr. McClave's opinion does not even attempt to show that there were elevated prices resulting from reduced overbuilding. In fact, he assumes that there was no such effect.

As noted above, after identifying his benchmark counties using the market share and DBS penetration screens, Dr. McClave used a third screen to divide those counties into two groups, identifying "each of the benchmark counties ... as either overbuilt or not overbuilt."[22] (App. [*218] at 3411-12 (McClave Dec.).) Having done so, Dr. McClave estimated "but for" competitive prices, by comparing, on a county by county basis, prices in the eighteen actual Philadelphia DMA counties to prices in either the "overbuilt" or "not overbuilt" benchmark counties, and — crucially — he did so "assum[ing] that only the five counties that RCN indicated it planned to enter as an overbuilder would have been overbuilt." (App. at 3412 (McClave Dec.).) At the outset, therefore, it is clear that Dr. McClave assumed that elevated prices resulting from reduced overbuilding would be present in only [106] five of the eighteen Philadelphia counties. Dr. McClave then explained that, after making his calculations, "the overbuilt factor indicate[d] lower prices [in his model] in counties where the overbuilding factor [was] present." (App. at 3422 (McClave Dec.) (emphasis added).) Thus, Dr. McClave's model assumes that elevated prices from reduced overbuilding could be present only in the five counties "that RCN indicated it planned to enter," and the model did, in fact, identify elevated prices from reduced overbuilding only in those counties. (App. at 3412, 22 (McClave Dec.).) For the remaining counties, while there may be some uncertainty as to what exactly caused any elevated prices, this much is certain: the elevated prices identified by Dr. McClave in those thirteen counties were, according to Dr. McClave himself, the result of something other than reduced overbuilding. Consequently, any "damages" identified by Dr. McClave with respect to those thirteen counties are "uncertain damages ... [that] are not the certain result of [reduced overbuilding]," and "may be substantially attributable to lawful competition." Coleman Motor, 525 F.2d at 1353 (quoting Story Parchment, 282 U.S. at 562).

[20] Whether Dr. McClave's opinion would have fit had the District Court allowed Plaintiffs to pursue all four of their theories of antitrust impact is irrelevant at this point.

[21] As noted by the Majority, "DBS" stands for "direct broadcast satellite" television service. (Slip Op. at 27.) Dr. McClave actually used penetration rates for all alternative delivery systems ("ADS"), rather than just DBS systems. He opined, however, and the parties seem to agree, that "ADS is a proxy for DBS penetration rates." (App. at 3410.)

Because Plaintiffs have been limited by the District Court to an overbuilding [108] theory of antitrust impact, any price elevation resulting from a source other than reduced overbuilding is simply irrelevant. Thus, not only have Plaintiffs failed to show that damages can be proven using evidence common to the class, they have failed to show, for thirteen counties in the Philadelphia DMA, that damages can be proven using any evidence whatsoever — common or otherwise. Perhaps, in those other counties, there is a way to show damages resulting from reduced overbuilding, but, if so, Plaintiffs have not identified it. As the burden lies with Plaintiffs to establish predominance, that alone should compel us to vacate the District Court's certification order with respect to class-wide proof of damages.[23]

[*219] 2. The DBS Penetration Screen

Dr. McClave screened for counties where DBS penetration was at or above the national average because "DBS ... penetration was allegedly constrained by the anticompetitive behavior of Comcast." (App. at 3410 (McClave Dec.).)

---

[22] The [107] Majority notes that the overbuilding screen is not mentioned by the parties or the District Court. (Slip Op. at 52 n.17.) While it is true that the parties do not use the terminology "overbuilding screen," the District Court did indeed describe the concept to which I have given that label. See Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 182 ("Once a county qualified as a benchmark for a particular year by satisfying [the DBS penetration and market share screens], it was examined to determine whether or not it had been significantly overbuilt."). Whether one uses the "screen" terminology is not what is important. Dr. McClave, in fact, does not describe any of the benchmarking criteria as "screens," which is a term that appears to have been only later applied to his methods.

Regardless of the terminology, the fact remains that Dr. McClave did screen for overbuilding in an attempt to account for elevated prices resulting from reduced overbuilding. Thus, that screen cannot be ignored in any "rigorous analysis," Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 318, of whether damages resulting from reduced overbuilding can be proven by common evidence.

[23] The Majority states that, in criticizing Dr. McClave's model for identifying overbuilding damages in only five counties, I have "misse[d] the central theory of Plaintiffs' case: by deterring the entry of overbuilders through clustering, Comcast allegedly maintained higher prices across the entire market area." (Slip Op. at 50-51 n.15.) This misperceives my reasoning. I understand Plaintiffs' theory but have pointed out that the theory, as altered by the District Court's [109] ruling, no longer matches Dr. McClave's opinion. More precisely, Plaintiffs' claim is that by reducing overbuilding "Comcast allegedly maintained higher prices across the entire market area," (id.) whereas Dr. McClave attempts to show that, by reducing overbuilding, Comcast maintained higher prices in only the "five counties that RCN indicated it planned to enter as an overbuilder," (App. at 3412 (McClave Dec.)). The Majority notes that this particular problem with Dr. McClave's damages theory was not identified by Comcast, but we ought note overlook significant problems with the class certification simply because they are ones we have identified rather than ones to which our attention has been directed.

Using that screen would have been appropriate if, as Plaintiffs originally argued and as Dr. McClave was originally informed, DBS penetration had been constrained by Comcast's anticompetitive conduct. But, as the District Court explicitly [110] held, Plaintiffs failed to tie "Comcast's clustering activity in the Philadelphia DMA to reduced DBS penetration." Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 165. Consequently, there is no evidence in the record suggesting that DBS penetration in the Philadelphia DMA was in any way affected by Comcast's allegedly anticompetitive conduct. Rather, the District Court found that, while DBS penetration in Philadelphia was well below the national average, the cause of that reduced penetration — Comcast's refusal to distribute Comcast SportsNet through DBS providers — "occurred prior to the class period," is "unrelated to clustering," is "based upon valid business considerations" and is "specifically permitted" by the FCC. Id.

Therefore, while DBS penetration in the Philadelphia DMA is below the national average, the cause of that reduced rate predated and is unrelated to Comcast's clustering and, thus, even in the absence of Comcast's allegedly anticompetitive conduct, DBS penetration in the Philadelphia DMA would be no different than the below average rate that has actually prevailed. As a result, any benchmark county used to identify "but for" conditions should use the actual DBS penetration rate from the [111] Philadelphia DMA. Dr. McClave, nonetheless, used the much higher national average rate,[24] which identified benchmark counties in which cable prices were lower than in counties having DBS penetration similar to that in the Philadelphia DMA.[25] Because Dr. McClave then calculated damages by comparing prices in those benchmark counties (with national average DBS penetration and, therefore, lower prices) to actual prices in the Philadelphia counties (with below national average DBS penetration and, therefore, higher prices), at least a portion of Dr. McClave's damages calculation results from the Philadelphia DMA having below national average DBS penetration. Since the cause of the below national average DBS penetration in the Philadelphia DMA is "unrelated to clustering," is "based upon valid business considerations," and is "specifically permitted" by the FCC, id., that reduced DBS penetration is the result of lawful competition, and, it follows, "[t]he damage figures advanced by [Dr. McClave] may be substantially attributable to lawful competition." Coleman Motor, 525 F.2d at 1353.

The Majority responds to this flaw only by stating that the DBS penetration screen was "included to estimate typical competitive market conditions, not to calculate liability for the foreclosure of DBS competitors." (Slip Op. at 49.) That explanation misses the mark. In identifying benchmark counties for use in a damages analysis, the goal is not to identify "typical competitive market conditions." The goal is, and must be, to identify the conditions that would have existed "but for" Comcast's alleged anticompetitive conduct. In this case, even in the "but for" hypothetical [*220] world, the Philadelphia DMA would not have been typically competitive. Rather, given the District Court's findings, there is no question that, as a result of Comcast's lawful competition, DBS penetration in the Philadelphia DMA would have been well below that present in a typical competitive market. Thus, by comparing Philadelphia to benchmark counties having [113] the much higher national average DBS penetration, Dr. McClave's model wrongly "calculate[s] liability for the foreclosure of DBS competitors," (id.) imposing damages based on the prices that would have prevailed had Comcast not lawfully foreclosed DBS competition.

3. The Market Share Screen

Dr. McClave screened for counties where Comcast's market share was "less than 40%," because that figure represented the midpoint between Comcast's 20 percent share before the class period and its 60 percent share during the class period and so identified "markets where Comcast is likely to have less market power than it has acquired in the Philadelphia market." (App. at 3410 (McClave Dec.).) Under Plaintiffs last viable theory of antitrust impact, however, while Comcast's market share is relevant to the question of whether there has been any reduction in overbuilding, it is not relevant — at least not in isolation — to determining the damages caused by that reduction. Instead, the relevant market share is the share that would have been held by any incumbent in the "but for" hypothetical world.

---

[24] According to Dr. McClave, national average DBS penetration during the six year period for which he calculated [112] damages averaged 24.17%, whereas actual DBS penetration in the Philadelphia DMA averaged 12.77%. (App. at 3411 (McClave Dec.).)

[25] The District Court discussed extensively the evidence that "DBS competition constrains cable prices." Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 163-65.

As an illustration of that point, consider a hypothetical county with two equally sized franchise areas. Assume [114] that, prior to the class period, Comcast had a 100 percent share of one franchise area and that AT&T had a 100 percent share of the other, so that each had a 50 percent share of the county as a whole. Assume further that, as part of its clustering efforts, Comcast acquired AT&T's franchise area so that, today, Comcast has a 100 percent share of the entire county. To test the theory that clustering reduces overbuilding, a comparison between Comcast's current 100 percent share of the county and the 50 percent share that Comcast would have had but for its clustering would surely be relevant in determining whether clustering effected any reduction in overbuilding.

Next, assume that, after making that comparison, Plaintiffs could show that, had no clustering taken place, RCN would have overbuilt 20 percent of each of the two franchise areas, so that, in the "but for" world, RCN would have a 20 percent share in each franchise area, and Comcast and AT&T would each have an 80 percent share in their respective franchise area. Pursuant to Plaintiffs' only theory — that increased overbuilding decreases prices — any damages in that scenario arise solely from the difference between RCN's 20 percent [115] share in the "but for" franchise areas and RCN's zero percent shares in the current franchise areas. The damages resulting from that foregone overbuilding are the same whether, in the "but for" world, the remaining 80 percent of the franchise in question would have been controlled by Comcast or by AT&T. It follows, therefore, that once the antitrust impact of Comcast's clustering — i.e., the reduction in overbuilding — has been identified and accounted for as part of an overbuilding screen, any market share screen applied to isolate the "but for" conditions that would have prevailed in the Philadelphia DMA should screen not just for Comcast's share, but for the share of whatever incumbent would have been present but for the clustering.[26]

[*221] Because Dr. McClave's model already assumes that there has been a reduction in overbuilding and screens for it, the relevant market share for damages purposes is the share of the market maintained by any incumbent — regardless of the identity of the particular incumbent. By calculating the appropriate market share screen using only Comcast's average share throughout the [117] Philadelphia DMA, Dr. McClave has ignored any market share that, in the "but for" hypothetical world, would have been maintained by an incumbent other than Comcast. For franchise areas where Comcast was not present prior to the class period, Dr. McClave should have calculated damages by comparing Comcast's current share to the "but for" share that would have been held by any incumbents Comcast replaced. Because he instead effectively calculated damages by comparing Comcast's current share to Comcast's zero percent share prior to the class period,[27] he unfairly suppressed the relevant incumbent share and artificially inflated the damages calculation.

---

[26] Again, this is not to say that Comcast's market share, in particular, will never be relevant. As just discussed, it is highly relevant for determining antitrust impact. Moreover, it might have been relevant to damages had the District Court not excluded three of Plaintiffs' theories of antitrust impact. In fact, the market share screen appears to be another relic of the Plaintiffs' having initially presented four theories of impact. One of those theories [116] was that Comcast's increased market share increased its bargaining power and allowed it to reduce prices, Behrend, 264 F.R.D. at 178-81, and a second was that Comcast's increased market share reduced the ability of consumers to engage in benchmark pricing by comparing Comcast's prices to the prices of other cable providers in the region, id. at 175-78. Had either of those theories survived the class certification process, it might have made sense for Dr. McClave to screen for Comcast's market share, because, under those theories, Comcast's market share directly impacted price. But the District Court rejected those theories, allowing Comcast to proceed only on a theory that clustering reduced overbuilding. Under that theory, what is relevant is the market share of all incumbent cable providers vis-a-vis overbuilders.

[27] I say he "effectively calculated damages" that way because Dr. McClave did not actually make a franchise by franchise comparison, which, as discussed infra Part II(B), is itself problematic. He instead calculated Comcast's market share by averaging its share throughout the Philadelphia DMA. But, because he included in that average Comcast's zero percent share in the franchises in which it had not been present prior to the class period, instead of including the share held by the incumbent Comcast replaced, it is fair to say that he effectively [118] calculated damages by comparing Comcast's actual share in those franchise areas to Comcast's zero percent share prior to the class period.

Because none of Dr. McClave's screens reflect the conditions that would have prevailed in the Philadelphia DMA "but for" any reduction in overbuilding, the damages Dr. McClave calculated are "not the certain result of the wrong," Story Parchment, 282 U.S. at 562. Accordingly, Dr. McClave's opinion cannot help a jury determine damages, and so would be inadmissible at trial for lacking fit. Because Dr. McClave's opinion is the only evidence Plaintiffs have offered to meet their burden of showing that damages can be proven using evidence common to the class, I would vacate the District Court's class certification with respect to class-wide proof of damages.[28]

[*222] B. Damages Are Not Capable of Being Proven By Evidence Common to the Entire Class

While my thoughts thus far have focused on why Plaintiffs have not met their burden of showing that damages can be proven using evidence common to the class, none of the problems I have noted are necessarily irreparable. That is, Dr. McClave could conceivably redesign his model to address overbuilding throughout the Philadelphia DMA, to use actual DBS penetration rates, and to screen for the market share of all incumbents, not just Comcast. Nevertheless, there remains an intractable problem with any model purporting to calculate damages for all class members collectively.

Central to Dr. McClave's damages model is the conclusion that the price of cable television service in any given franchise area is affected by the relative market shares of at least three entities: overbuilders, DBS providers, and incumbent cable providers. All else being equal, for example, areas that are overbuilt will have lower prices than areas [121] that are not overbuilt, and areas with high DBS penetration will have lower prices than areas with low DBS penetration. For that reason, Dr. McClave's model identifies benchmark counties by screening for the relative market shares of those three entities.[29] While I do not accept the manner in which Dr. McClave has measured the relative shares of those entities in the "but for" Philadelphia DMA, I accept the premise that the relative shares have significant influence on the price of cable television service.

If price does vary with the changes in relative share within a franchise area, however, it is hard to see how those 650 franchise areas[30] can simply be treated as average for purposes of proving damages. The record indicates that, on the contrary, the "but for" market shares of overbuilders, DBS providers, and incumbent providers would vary, sometimes significantly, from franchise area to franchise area.

---

[28] The Majority suggests that any problems with Dr. McClave's screens are "attacks on the merits of the methodology that have no place in the class certification inquiry," because, "[e]ven if we were to overrule as clearly erroneous the District Court's findings on all four contested pieces of Dr. McClave's methodology — i.e., modify both of Dr. McClave's screens ... only the final amount of estimated [119] damages would change." (Slip Op. at 52.) I disagree. First, the problems I have identified with Dr. McClave's screens call into question not only the amount of damages but also whether there are any means of proving damages at all in thirteen of the eighteen Philadelphia DMA counties. See supra Part II(A)(1). Second, if Dr. McClave's model does not presently constitute a relevant means of calculating class-wide damages, to say that the model might be fixed, for example by "modify[ing] both of Dr. McClave's screens," (Slip Op. at 52), is no better than saying that Plaintiffs have made "a threshold showing" of predominance or shown a sufficient "intention to try the case in a manner that satisfies the predominance requirement" — both of which are insufficient under Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 321 (internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs have the burden of establishing predominance and, until they have actually proffered a model that shows how damages can be calculated on a class-wide basis, they have not met that burden — particularly when the only evidence they have offered should be entirely inadmissible. The Majority's willingness to overlook the debilitating flaws in Dr. [120] McClave's model in an effort to avoid an "attack on the merits," is precisely the kind talismanic invocation of "concern for merits-avoidance" that Hydrogen Peroxide forbids. Id. at 317 n.17.

[29] Or, at least, he screens for overbuilders, DBS providers, and a single incumbent provider — Comcast. I have already identified, supra Part II(A)(3), why he should instead screen for incumbent share.

[30] Dr. Besen, one of Comcast's experts, reports that there are 649 unique franchise [122] areas in the Philadelphia DMA. (App. at 3782 (Besen Reply Dec.).)

Addressing overbuilding first, RCN — the only party licensed to overbuild any part of the Philadelphia DMA — was licensed to overbuild in only five counties. (App. at 3640 (Williams Dec.); App. at 4284-85 (Singer Reply Dec.).) While Plaintiffs' experts have opined that, had RCN successfully overbuilt those five counties, it would have continued overbuilding elsewhere, (App. at 4284-85 (Singer Reply Dec.)), any overbuilding into the other parts of the Philadelphia DMA would, it seems clear, have come later than the overbuilding of the five licensed counties. Thus, while some franchise areas might have been overbuilt early in the class period, other franchise areas would [*223] likely never have been overbuilt at all or have been overbuilt only later in the class period. There might, for instance, in the "but for" world be some franchise areas that were 50 percent overbuilt for the entire class period and other franchise areas that were only 5 percent overbuilt and only for a single year, or perhaps not overbuilt at all. That means that, both throughout the Philadelphia DMA and throughout the class period, there would probably [123] be very significant variation in the "but for" level of overbuilding from franchise area to franchise area.

Consider next DBS penetration. Dr. McClave testified that the DBS penetration rate he used for the Philadelphia DMA was an average for the DMA, but he also said that it was his understanding that "DBS penetration varies across the cluster here" and that it was "possible that some of the counties in the Philadelphia DMA in fact have penetration that's above the national median." (App. at 729-30 (McClave Cross).) Thus, according to Dr. McClave, not only does DBS penetration vary across the Philadelphia DMA, but the variation is pronounced enough that some parts of the Philadelphia DMA have above national average DBS penetration despite the fact that the Philadelphia DMA, as a whole, has DBS penetration at only half the national average. Because DBS penetration was unaffected by Comcast's alleged anti-competitive conduct, see supra Part II(A)(2), DBS penetration in the "but for" Philadelphia DMA would likewise vary significantly from one franchise area to another.

Finally, with respect to the incumbents' market share, the record gives little information regarding what the share of [124] any non-Comcast incumbent would be in the "but for" world. We do know, though, that Comcast's share prior to clustering varied markedly from franchise area to franchise area. (See, e.g., App. at 3833 (Chipty Dec.) (stating that Comcast "had a zero percent share of housing units in the majority of counties" and, therefore, that "Comcast's share in the counties in which it was present was substantially higher than [its average market share]"); App. at 733 (McClave Cross) (testifying that, at the beginning of the class period, Comcast was present in "maybe half, maybe less of the counties" and that its share "in the counties where [it was] present" was probably higher than its average share)). And, where the other two components of market share — DBS penetration and overbuilding[31] — vary from one franchise area to another, it becomes a near mathematical certainty that the remaining portion of the franchise held by incumbent cable providers must likewise vary.[32]

The wide variation in the relative market shares evidenced by the record makes it hard to imagine a means of calculating class-wide damages. Even if Dr. McClave's benchmarks were not problematic, to say that Comcast's "but for" share of the market throughout the Philadelphia DMA would be, on average, 40% is about as meaningful as saying that "with one foot on fire and the other on ice, I am, on average, comfortable."[33] Given that the three major factors identified as influencing [*224] price — overbuilding, DBS penetration, and incumbent share — vary widely within the franchise areas across the DMA, and given further that Comcast prices its cable service at the franchise level, (see App. at 716), I have difficulty accepting that it is appropriate to ignore those differences and take an average across the counties of the DMA.[34]

---

[31] While there may be other "alternative delivery systems" that have a limited share of the market, Dr. McClave includes those providers in his DBS penetration screen, see supra note 21, and they are, therefore, accounted for.

[32] It [125] is possible, of course, that the variation in DBS and overbuilder shares could be such that the combined total of the two is the same in different franchise areas, and, therefore, it is not a true mathematical certainty that incumbent share must also vary. That that would occur across the 650 franchise areas, however, seems implausible in the extreme.

[33] Sometimes attributed [126] to Mark Twain, the actual source of this quote is unknown.

[34] The Majority asserts that "concern over using mathematical averages across the Philadelphia DMA ... is notably absent from Comcast's briefing ...." (Slip Op. at 53-54 n.18.) But it is not absent. In fact, Comcast criticizes Dr. McClave's screens by explaining that:

This primary flaw in Dr. McClave's methodology — using a single set of assumptions for the entire Philadelphia DMA — cannot [127] be fixed merely by altering his model. It seems to me that no model can calculate class-wide damages because any damages — such as they may be — are not distributed on anything like a similar basis throughout the DMA.[35] Rather, where some class members might reside in a franchise area that would have been 50 percent overbuilt for the entire class period and other class members might reside in a franchise area that would have been only 5 percent overbuilt and only for a single year, or not overbuilt at all, it strains credulity to believe that the damages suffered by those individuals would all be the same as a result of reduced overbuilding. Yet Dr. McClave's model treats them as though they are the same,[36] [*225] as would any model attempting to calculate damages on an average class-wide basis.

The variation in conditions within the nearly 650 franchise areas in the Philadelphia DMA means that the issue of damages is more fractured than a single class can accommodate. I do not suggest that there necessarily would need to be 650 subclasses. It may well be that subclasses could be created encompassing groups of multiple franchise areas having similar demographics. See, e.g., Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 391 F.2d 555, 566 (2d Cir. 1968) (explaining that where "differences among the class members bear only on the computation of damages," it "can be adequately handled ... [by] divid[ing] the class into appropriate subclasses"). Whether that would necessitate the creation of so many subclasses as to defeat the benefit of class treatment is something I do not > prior to the Transactions[,] Comcast did not operate in the majority of franchise areas in the DMA. By contrast, in the franchise areas where Comcast did operate, it is undisputed that Comcast's market share was significantly higher than 40%. Thus, the pre-class "20%" market share Dr. McClave employed in the creation of his screen is a mirage, arrived at solely through the artifice of averaging Comcast's greater-than-40% share of markets where it did operate with its "0% share" in hundreds of markets where it was not even present.

---

(Appellants Br. at 43.) That criticism precisely mirrors my own. Because of the significant variation in the market makeup from franchise area to franchise area, DMA-wide averages are not reliable. See also infra n.35.

[35] This is not simply a case where there might be some variation in the amount of damages from one class member to another that can be ignored in order to gain the benefit of class treatment. Instead, due to the wide variations in the market makeup of the franchise areas across the DMA, proving damages will require some factual inquiry into the relative market shares of overbuilders, DBS providers, [128] and incumbents in individual franchise areas (or perhaps, as subsequently noted in this dissent, groups of franchise areas). The Majority, quoting Wright's Federal Practice and Procedure, suggests that those differences in damages should not affect the certification process because "'it uniformly has been held that differences among the members as to the amount of damages incurred does not mean that a class action would be inappropriate.'" (Slip. Op. at 45-46 (quoting CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 1781 (3d ed. 2005)).) I agree with the quoted statement, but would point also to the following quote from the same treatise: "Rather, the question of damages can be severed from that of liability and tried on an individual basis." Id. Thus, neither Wright — nor any authority I can find — suggests that where there are wide differences in damages from one class member to another, those differences can be ignored. Wright suggests instead that those differences can be accounted for by considering liability on a class-wide basis but damages on a more individualized basis — consistent with what I propose.

[36] I recognize that Dr. McClave's model does not treat all franchise [129] areas exactly the same, because he uses actual prices on a county-by-county level and, as a result, calculates a separate "but for" price for each county. (App. at 3424-26 (McClave Dec.).) But, while he uses actual prices on a county-by-county level, he calculates the "but for" prices using the same benchmark counties for the entire Philadelphia DMA (again, excepting Lehigh and Northampton, where Comcast has no presence). He treats the DMA as though the "but for" conditions would have been the same throughout.

The Majority states that this criticism "overstates the degree of dissimilarity among the franchise areas" because I fail to note that "[m]any franchise areas within counties often have identical or nearly identical pricing." (Slip Op. at 54 n.18 (quoting App. 3409 (McClave Dec.).) It may well be that there are similarities allowing for grouping of franchise areas, as I note in suggesting the possibility of subclasses. More fundamentally, however, the problem with Dr. McClave's opinion is not that it fails to account for variations in actual prices in the Philadelphia DMA, but that it fails to account for variations in the "but for" conditions that would have existed within the [130] Philadelphia DMA. By so doing, the model is unable to distinguish between persons living in areas that may have been highly overbuilt and who, thus, would have suffered substantial damages, and persons living in areas that may never have been overbuilt and who, thus, would have suffered no damages.

venture to conclude on this record. But I would remand the case to the District Court for consideration of the feasibility of [131] subclasses.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, I would vacate the District Court's certification order to the extent it provides for a single class as to proof of damages and remand the case for the District Court to address whether Dr. McClave's model could, in fairness, be revised to accurately reflect the conditions that would have existed in the Philadelphia DMA in the absence of any reduction in overbuilding caused by clustering. I would further ask the District Court to consider whether the class certified for proving antitrust impact can be divided into appropriate subclasses for purposes of proving damages.

End of Document

[Eastman Kodak Co. v. Epson Imaging Devices Corp. (In re TFL-LCD Antitrustlitigation)]

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

August 23, 2011, Decided; August 23, 2011, Filed

No. M 07-1827 SI; MDL No. 1827; No. C 10-5452 SI

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95053 *; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,580

IN RE: TFT-LCD (FLAT PANEL) ANTITRUSTLITIGATION;This Order Relates To: EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. EPSON IMAGING DEVICES CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by SB Liquidation Trust v. AU Optronics Corp. (In re TFT-LCD Antitrust Litig.), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95054 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 23, 2011)

Prior History: In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90730 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 12, 2011)

Core Terms

allegations, defendants', motion to dismiss, conspiracy, purchases

Counsel: [*1] Martin Quinn, Special Master, Pro se, San Francisco, CA.

Mr. Daniel Weinstein, Special Master, Pro se, JAMS, Inc., San Francisco, CA.

For Giles Patricia, 07-3078, Plaintiff: Samuel W. Lanham, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Lanham & Blackwell, Bangor, ME; Ian Otto.

For Gina Cerda, 07-1339, Linda Klare, 07-1339, Plaintiffs: Mario Nunzio Alioto, LEAD ATTORNEY, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For ATS Claim, LLC, 09-1115, Plaintiff: David Paul Germaine, LEAD ATTORNEY, Chicago, IL; David Paul Germaine, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Daniel L. Warshaw, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny LLP, Sherman Oaks, CA; Eric B. Fastiff, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Hilary Kathleen Ratway, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hausfeld, LLP, Washington, DC; Andrew Scirica Kingsdale, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA; Brendan Patrick Glackin, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hewlett-Packard Company, Interested Party (5/19/09), 10-5577, Plaintiff: [*2] Beatrice B. Nguyen, Gregory D. Call, Esq., LEAD ATTORNEYS, Suzanne E. Rode, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bryan Leach, Fred H. Bartlit, Jr., Karma Micaela Giulianelli, Lester Houtz, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Denver, CO; Mark E Ferguson, Barlitt Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Chicago, Il; Mark S. Ouweleen, Attorney at Law, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL.

For BellSouth Telecommunications, Inc., 09-4997, Pacific Bell Telephone Company, 09-4997, Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, 09-4997, Plaintiff: Christopher T. Leonardo, Kenneth L. Adams, R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Joshua C. Stokes, Crowell & Moring

LLP; Liaison Counsel for Direct Aciton Plaintiffs, Washington, DC; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA.

For Nokia Corporation, 09-5609, Nokia Inc., 09-5609, Plaintiff: Brian Parker Miller, Donald MacKaye Houser, Joann Elizabeth Johnston, Kacy Christine McCaffrey, Lisa Kathleen Bojko, Matthew D. Richardson, Peter Konito, Valarie Cecile Williams, [*3] PRO HAC VICE, Donald MacKaye Houser, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Matthew Scott Orrell, Atlanta, GA; Randall Lee Allen, Alston and Bird, Menlo Park, CA; Richard W. Stimson, Alston & Bird LLP, Dallas, TX.

For AT & T Corp., 09-4997, AT & T Datacomm, Inc., 09-4997, AT & T Mobility LLC, 09-4997, AT & T Operations, Inc., 09-4997, AT & T Services, Inc., 09-4997, Plaintiff: Christopher T. Leonardo, Kenneth L. Adams, R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Joshua C. Stokes; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA.

For Motorola, Inc., 09-5840, Plaintiff: Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA; R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC.

For Electrograph Systems, Inc., 10-117, Electrograph Technologies, Corp., 10-117, Plaintiff: Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Philip J Iovieno, William A. Isaacson; Philip J. Iovieno, Boies, Schiller [*4] & Flexner LLP, Albany, NY.

For Dell Inc., 10-1064, Dell Products, L.P., 10-1064, Plaintiff: Andrew Jacob Tuck, Debra Dawn Bernstein, Elizabeth Helmer Jordan, Matthew David Kent, Michael P. Kenny, Rodney J Ganske, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Steven Daniel Hemminger, Alston & Bird LLP, Menlo Park, CA.

For Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Joseph M. Alioto, Sr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Daniel R. Shulman, Derek G. Howard; Michael Morteza Kowsari, Attorney at Law, Los Angeles, CA; Stephen Gerard Larson, Girardi & Keese, Los Angeles, CA; Steven J Foley, Hellmuth and Johnson PLLC, Edina, MN Unites Sta; Gregory W. Landry, LaMarca & Landry, P.C.; Marvin A. Miller, Miller Law LLC.

For State of Oregon, 10-4346, ex rel. John Kroger, Attorney General, Plaintiff: Blake Lee Harrop, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, IL; Brady R. Johnson, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Michael E. Haglund, Michael K. Kelley, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilde LLP, Portland, OR; Tim David Nord, Oregon Department of Justice, Financial Fraud/Consumer Protection, Salem, OR.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Joseph Richard Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY; Aaron M. Sheanin, Girard [*5] Gibbs LLP, San Francisco, CA; Andrew Scirica Kingsdale, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA; Brendan Patrick Glackin, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Eric B. Fastiff, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Richard Martin Heimann, Lieff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA.

For Tracfone Wireless, Inc., 10-3205, Plaintiff: David Bedford Esau, James Blaker Baldinger, Carlton Fields, P.A., West Palm Beach, FL; Robert L. Ciotti, Carlton Fields, Tampa, FL.

For State of Missouri, 10-3619, ex rel. Chris Koster, Attorney General, Plaintiff: Anne E. Schneider, Attorney General of Missouri; Liaison Counsel for the State Actions, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jefferson City, MO.

For State of Arkansas, 10-3619, ex rel. Dustin McDaniel, Attorney General, Plaintiff: David A. Curran, Assistant Attorney General, Little Rock, AR.

For State of Michigan, 10-3619, ex rel. Michael A. Cox, Attorney General, Plaintiff: Mary Elizabeth Lippitt, Michigan Attorney General, Assistant Attorney General, Lansing, MI.

For State of Missouri, 10-3619, ex rel. Chris Koster, Attorney [*6] General, Plaintiff: Andrew McNally Hartnett, Office of the Missouri Attorney General, Jefferson City, MO; Anne E. Schneider, Attorney General of Missouri, Consumer Protection, Jefferson City, MO.

For State of West Virginia, 10-3619, ex rel Darrell McGraw, Attorney General, Plaintiff: Douglas Lee Davis, Attorney General, Consumer Protection and Antitrust, Charleston, WV; Jill L. Miles, Assistant Attorney General, Charleston, WV.

For State of Wisconsin, 10-3619, ex rel J.B. Van Hollen, Attorney General, Plaintiff: Gwendolyn J. Cooley, Wisconsin Attorney General, Madison, WI.

For State of Florida, Office of the Attorney General, Department of Legal Affairs, 10-3517, Plaintiff: Eli Friedman, Nicholas J. Weilhammer, Office of the Attorney General, State of Florida, Tallahassee, FL; Lizabeth Ann Leeds Brady, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Division, Tallahassee, FL; Liaison Counsel for the State Actions, Tallahassee, FL; Robert Scott Palmer, Office of the Attorney General, Anititrust Division, State of Florida, Tallahassee, FL.

For Best Buy Co., Inc., 10-4572, Best Buy Enterprise Services, Inc., 10-4572, Best Buy Purchasing LLC, 10-4572, Best Buy Stores, L.P., 10-4572, Magnolia Hi-Fi, [*7] Inc., 10-4572, Plaintiff: David Martinez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi L.L.P., Los Angeles, CA; Matthew David Taggart, LEAD ATTORNEY, Attorney at Law, Robins Kaplan Miller and Ciresi LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Elliot S. Kaplan, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi, Minneapolis, MN; K. Craig Wildfang, Attorney at Law, Minneapolis, MN; Roman M. Silberfeld, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi L.L.P., Los Angeles, CA.

For Target Corp., 10-4945, Kmart Corp, 10-4945, Sears, Roebuck and Co., 10-4945, Good Guys, Inc., 10-4945, Newegg Inc., 10-4945, Old Comp Inc., 10-4945, Radioshack Corp., 10-4945, Plaintiff: Christopher T. Leonardo, Kenneth L. Adams, R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA.

For Eastman Kodak Company, 10-5452, Plaintiff: John R. Foote, Karl David Belgum, Nixon Peabody LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For SB Liquidation Trust, 10-5458, Plaintiff: Allan Diamond, Jason Paul Fulton, Jim McCarthy, Diamond McCarthy LLP, Dallas, TX; Erica W. Harris, Susan Godfrey LLP, Houston, TX; Marc M. Seltzer, [*8] Ryan Christopher Kirkpatrick, Steven Gerald Sklaver, Susman Godfrey LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Costco Wholesale Corp., 11-0058, Plaintiff: Cori G. Moore, Noah G. Purcell, Perkins Coil LLP, Seattle, WA; David J. Burman, Perkins Coie LLP, Seattle, WA; Troy Philip Sauro, Perkins Coie LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Sony Computer Entertainment America, LLC, 10-5616, (10-5620 - voluntery dismissa), Sony Electronics, Inc., 10-5616, (10-5620 - voluntery dismissal), Plaintiff: David Mark Goldstein, Esq., Shannon Christine Leong, Stephen V. Bomse, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA; Richard James Mooney, Robert L. Stolebarger, Holme Roberts & Owen LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Alfred H. Siegel, 10-5625, as Trustee of the Circuit City Stores, Inc. Liquidating Trust, Plaintiff: David Humberto Orozco, Marc M. Seltzer, Susman Godfrey LLP, Los Angeles, CA; H. Lee Godfrey, Kenneth S. Marks, Susman Godfrey LLP, Houston, TX; Jordan Connors, Parker C. Folse, III, Susman Godfrey LLP, Seattle, WA.

For State of New York, 11-0711, Plaintiff: Geralyn Jeanette Trujillo, Richard L. Schwartz, Office of the Attorney General, State of New York, New York, NY; Jeremy R. Kasha, New York State Office of the [*9] Attorney General (NYC), New York, NY; John Andrew Ioannou, New York State Attorney General's Office, Antitrust Bureau, New York, NY.

For MetroPCS Wireless Inc., 11-0829, Plaintiff: Philip J Iovieno, LEAD ATTORNEY, William A. Isaacson; Anne M. Nardacci, Boies Schiller & Flexner LLP, Albany, NY; Lewis Titus LeClair, Mike McKool, Jr., Scott R Jacobs, McKool Smith, P.C., Dallas, TX; Philip J. Iovieno, Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Albany, NY.

For LG Display Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115) formerly known as LG Philips LCD Co., LTD., Defendant: Michael Robert Lazerwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton, Washington, DC; Arman Oruc, Jane Lee, Jonathan Lin, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP, Washington, DC; Jeremy James Calsyn, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP, Washington, DC.

For Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Samsung Electronics America, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Steven D Sassaman, Timothy C. Hester, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel M Suleiman, Derek Ludwin, Neil K. Roman, Robert D. Wick, Theodore Paul Metzler, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC.

For Sharp Corporation, (D, I, [*10] 09-1115), Sharp Electronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Jacob R. Sorensen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Anne Benton Kaldor, Erin Alysa Smart, Kristen A. Palumbo, Bingham McCutchen LLP, San Francisco, CA; Colin C. West, McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enersen, LLP, San Francisco, CA; John M. Grenfell, Lindsay A. Lutz, Ryan Takemoto, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw PittmanLLP, San Francisco, CA; Kenneth I. Schacter, Richard S. Taffet, Bingham McCutchen LLP, New York, NY; Jon R. Roellke, Bingham McCutchen.

For Toshiba Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Toshiba Mobile Display Co., Ltd., Toshiba America Electronics Components, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendants: Christopher M. Curran, Kristen Jentsch McAhren, LEAD ATTORNEYS, White & Case LLP, Washington, DC; John H. Chung, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Toshiba Matsushita Display Technology Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: John H. Chung, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wayne A. Cross, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Hitachi Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Hitachi Displays, Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Kent Michael Roger, Michelle Minju Kim-Szrom, [*11] Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA; John Clayton Everett, Jr., PRO HAC VICE, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP, Washington, DC.

For Hitachi Electronic Devices (USA), Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Kent Michael Roger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michelle Minju Kim-Szrom, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA; Courtney Lynn Landis; John Clayton Everett, Jr., PRO HAC VICE, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP, Washington, DC.

For AU Optronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Christopher Alan Nedeau, LEAD ATTORNEY, Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Bryan B. Barnhart, Carl Lawrence Blumenstein, Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jessica Rae Madrigal, Nossaman Guthner Knox Elliott, San Francisco, CA; Kirk Christopher Jenkins, Sedgwick Detert Moran Arnold, Chicago, IL; Michael F. Healy, Esq., Sedwick Detert Moran & Arnold LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For AU Optronics Corporation America, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: John C. McGuire, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sedgwick, Detert, Moran & Arnold, Newark, NJ; Matthew Clark Lovell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sedgwick LLP, San Francisco, CA; Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Bryan B. Barnhart, Carl Lawrence Blumenstein, Christopher Alan Nedeau, Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jason Haruo [*12] Wilson, Willenken Wilson Loh & Lieb LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jessica Rae Madrigal, Nossaman Guthner Knox Elliott, San Francisco, CA; Kirk Christopher Jenkins, Sedgwick Detert Moran Arnold, Chicago, IL; Michael F. Healy, Esq., Sedwick Detert Moran & Arnold LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics USA, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Nathan Loy Walker, LEAD ATTORNEY, WilmerHale, Palo Alto, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Brent J. Gurney, Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Steven F. Cherry, Therese Lee, PRO HAC VICE, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Wilmer Cutler, Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For Chunghwa Picture Tubes Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Joel Calcar Willard, Joel Steven Sanders, Rachel S. Brass, Rebecca Justice Lazarus, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; William S Farmer, Collette Erickson Farmer & O'Neill LLP, San Francisco, CA; Robert W. [*13] Tarun, Roxane C. Busey, Baker & McKenzie LLP.

For Hannstar Display Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Christoher M. Wyant, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hugh Frederick Bangasser, Julie Anne Halter, Ramona M. Emerson, K&L Gates LLP, Seattle, WA; Mark K. Davis, PRO HAC VICE, Donald H. Mullins, Badgley Mullins Law Group PLLC, Seattle, WA; Hugh Frederick Bangasser, K&L

Gates, Seattle, WA; Ismail Jomo Ramsey, Mary Kelly Persyn, Ramsey & Ehrlich LLP, Berkeley, CA; Jeffrey L. Bornstein, K&L Gates LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung Semiconductor, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Steven D Sassaman, Timothy C. Hester, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel M Suleiman, Derek Ludwin, Robert D. Wick, Theodore Paul Metzler, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC; Neil K. Roman, Covington & Burling, Washington, DC; Tyler Mark Cunningham, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton, San Francisco, CA.

For CMO Japan Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Nexgen Mediatech, Inc. ("Nexgen"), (D, 09-1115), Defendants: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Wilmer [*14] Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA.

For Chi Mei Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA.

For Nexgen Mediatech USA Inc, (D, 09-1115), Defendant: Caren K. Khoo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale & Dorr, New York, NY; John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Brent J. Gurney, Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Therese Lee, PRO HAC VICE, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra [*15] D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Wilmer Cutler, Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Defendant: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA.

For IPS Alpha Technology, LTD., (D), dismissed from IP amended complaint on 2/21/08, Defendant: Kent Michael Roger, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Epson Electronics America, Inc., (D), Dismissed as a indirect purchaser defendant on 4/1/08, Defendant: Jeffrey E. Faucette, LEAD ATTORNEY, Derek Francis Foran, Kimberly Linnell Taylor, Stephen E. Taylor, Stephen P. Freccero; Kevin C. McCann, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul Hastings Janofsky & Walker LLP, San Francisco, CA; Melvin R. Goldman, Morrison & Foerster, San Francisco, CA; Sean David Unger, Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker LLP, San Francisco, CA; David Lawrence Meyer, Morrison & Foerster, Washington, DC [*16] United Sta.

For Tatung Company of America, Inc. ("Tatung America"), (D, 09-1115), Defendant: Bruce H. Jackson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker & McKenzie, San Francisco, CA; Joel Steven Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joel Calcar Willard, Rebecca Justice Lazarus, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Karen Sewell, Roxane C. Busey, PRO HAC VICE, Baker & McKenzie LLP, Chicago, Il; Nancy Chung Allred, Robert Walter Tarun, Baker & McKenzie LLP, San Francisco, CA; Patrick J. Ahern, PRO HAC VICE, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL.

For LG Display America, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115) formerly known as LG Philips LCD America, Inc., Defendant: Michael Robert Lazerwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton, Washington, DC; Arman Oruc, Jane Lee, Jonathan Lin, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP, Washington, DC; Katerina S Colitti, PRO HAC VICE, Jeremy James Calsyn, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP, Washington, DC.

For Au Optronics Corporation America, Inc, 09-4997, Defendant: Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mitsui & Co. (Taiwan), Limited, (D), Defendant: Lisa Cox Ghannoum, Michael Edward Mumford, Baker Hostetler LLP, Cleveland, OH; Peter Wethrell James, Baker Hostetler, Los [*17] Angeles, CA; Ernest E. Vargo, Baker & Hostetler LLC; Tracy Lynn Cole, Baker & Hostetler LLP.

For Sanyo Consumer Electronics Co., Ltd., (D), Defendant: Allison Ann Davis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sam N. Dawood, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA; Nick Steven Verwolf, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, Bellevue, WA.

For Samsung SDI America, Inc., Samsung SDI Co., Ltd., Defendant: Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chimei Innolux Corp., Defendant: Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA.

For Philips Electronics North America Corporation, Defendant: Brendan P. Cullen, Sullivan & Cromwell, Palo Alto, CA.

For Tatung Company, Defendant: Joel Steven Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Patrick J. Ahern, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL.

For Apple Inc., Interested Party: Caroline Nason Mitchell, Robert Allan Mittelstaedt, LEAD ATTORNEYS, [*18] Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For State of California, Amicus: Adam Miller, LEAD ATTORNEY, CA Dept of Justice, San Francisco, CA; Emilio Eugene Varanini, IV, State Attorney General's Office, San Francisco, CA.

For United States Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, Intervenor: Peter K. Huston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA; Alexandra Jill Shepard, David J. Ward, Heather S. Tewksbury, Michael L. Scott, U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA.

For State of Illinois, Intervenor: Blake Lee Harrop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, IL; Brady R. Johnson, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Michael E. Haglund, Michael K. Kelley, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilde LLP, Portland, OR.

For State of Washington, 10-5711 (plaintiff), Intervenor: Brady R. Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jonathan A Mark, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Blake Lee Harrop, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, IL; Michael E. Haglund, Michael K. Kelley, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & [*19] Wilde LLP, Portland, OR; Tina E. Kondo, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Seattle, WA.

For NEC LCD Technologies, Ltd., Intervenor: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: SUSAN ILLSTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SUSAN ILLSTON

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS KODAK'S FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT

Now before the Court is defendants' joint motion to dismiss the first amended complaint ("FAC") of plaintiff Eastman Kodak Company ("Kodak"). Pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7-1(b), the Court finds this matter suitable for decision without oral argument and therefore VACATES the hearing currently scheduled for August 26, 2011. Having considered the arguments presented in the moving papers, the Court hereby GRANTS IN PART defendants' motion.

BACKGROUND

Kodak sells digital still cameras to customers throughout the United States, including cameras that utilize thin-film transistor liquid crystal display panels ("LCD panels"). FAC at ¶1. Through this antitrust action, Kodak seeks to recover for an international price-fixing conspiracy that had "the purpose and effect of fixing, raising, stabilizing, and maintaining prices for LCD panels." FAC at ¶2. [*20] Kodak's FAC includes claims under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the antitrust laws of California, Nevada, and New York. FAC at ¶¶96-128. It names as defendants entities from three corporate families: Epson,[1] Toshiba,[2] and AU Optronics ("AUO").[3] FAC at ¶16-26.

On July 22, 2011, defendants filed a joint motion to dismiss Kodak's FAC under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Defendant's motion raises just two grounds for dismissal. First, defendants claim that Kodak's FAC fails to provide an adequate description of the involvement of each defendant in the price-fixing conspiracy. Second, defendants claim that Kodak's claim under California's Cartwright Act must be dismissed to the extent Kodak's purchases were not made in California.

LEGAL STANDARD

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint that fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) [*21] motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). This "facial plausibility" standard requires the plaintiff to allege facts that add up to "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). While courts do not require "heightened fact pleading of specifics," a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 544, 555.

In deciding whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief may be granted, the Court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). However, the Court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).

DISCUSSION

As mentioned above, defendants' motion challenges only two aspects of Kodak's complaint: (1) Kodak's [*22] use of "group pleading"; and (2) and Kodak's attempt to recover under California antitrust law for LCD panel purchases that it made outside of California.

I. Adequacy of Group Pleading

Defendants claim that Kodak's FAC should be dismissed because it does not allege facts particular to each defendant. They argue that the complaint fails to allege "which defendant sold TFT-LCD Panels in what locations, or how any particular defendants' 'business activities' substantially affected interstate commerce." Motion at 5. Further, defendants assert that the FAC impermissibly groups defendants together by corporate family, and does

---

[1] Epson Imaging Devices Corporation and Epson Electronics Corporation America, Inc.

[2] Toshiba Corporation, Toshiba America Electronics Components, Inc., and Toshiba Mobile Display Technology Co., Ltd.

[3] AU Optronics Corporation and AU Optronics Corporation America, Inc.

not sufficiently allege "that each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it." Id. at 6; see also, e.g., FAC at ¶18 ("Defendants AUO and AUOA are referred to collectively herein as 'AU Optronics.'"); FAC at ¶¶ 21, 25.

This Court has previously evaluated a similar challenge to "group pleading" allegations in this multi-district litigation. In In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d 1179 (N.D. Cal. 2009), the Court found that the direct-purchaser plaintiffs and the indirect-purchaser plaintiffs had both stated valid claims [*23] against defendants, despite their use of group pleading. Id. at 1184.

Kodak's FAC, filed well after the Court issued the above order, bears a predictable resemblance to the direct- and indirect-purchaser complaints. The FAC alleges that the conspiracy was organized at the highest level of the defendant organizations and carried out by both executives and subordinate employees. FAC at ¶36; see also In re TFT LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1184-85. The FAC alleges that the conspiracy was implemented by subsidiaries and distributors within a corporate family, and that "individual participants entered into agreements on behalf of, and reported these meetings and discussions to, their respective corporate families." FAC at ¶ 26; In re TFT LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1184-85. Kodak also alleges that "the individual participants in conspiratorial meetings and discussions did not always know the corporate affiliation of their counterparts, nor did they distinguish between the entities within a corporate family." FAC at ¶26; In re TFT LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1184-85.

In addition to these general allegations, Kodak's [*24] FAC contains substantial detail concerning the subsidiary corporations' actions in furtherance of the conspiracy. For example, the FAC alleges that Epson Imaging Devices "participated in the conspiracy through meetings, conversations, and communications with competitors in Japan and the United States." FAC at ¶61. It also alleges that Epson's American subsidiary, Epson Electronics Corporation America, "was an active, knowing participant in the alleged conspiracy," both by acting as Epson Imaging Device's agent and by "engag[ing] in bilateral discussions with other defendants and co-conspirators." FAC, ¶63; see also FAC at ¶65-66 (alleging that "AUO senior level employees instructed AUOA employees in the United States to contact employees of other LCD Panel manufacturers" to discuss pricing); FAC at ¶71 (alleging that Toshiba Corporation instructed Toshiba's American subsidiary to communicate with competitors in the United States).

The Court finds that the allegations in Kodak's FAC are sufficient to put the defendants on notice of the charges against them. Accordingly, it DENIES defendants' motion to dismiss based on Kodak's use of group pleading.

II. Cartwright Act Claims

Kodak's FAC [*25] includes two claims under the Cartwright Act: its second claim for relief seeks to recover under the Cartwright Act for all U.S. purchases of price-fixed LCD products; while its third claim for relief only seeks to recover for those purchases made in California. FAC ¶¶102-17. Defendants argue that Kodak's second claim must be dismissed because due process forbids application of California antitrust law to purchases that occurred outside of California.

In June 2010, this Court addressed this issue in the context of claims brought by AT&T Mobility LLC. See Order Granting Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss and Granting Plaintiffs Leave to Amend, Master Docket No. 1823 (June 28, 2010). The Court concluded that, "in order to invoke the various state laws at issue, plaintiffs must be able to allege that 'the occurrence or transaction giving rise to the litigation' – plaintiffs' purchases of allegedly price-fixed goods – occurred in the various states." Id. at 5.

Kodak acknowledges this Court's prior ruling; it seeks only to preserve this claim in the event the Ninth Circuit reverses this Court's order in the pending interlocutory appeal. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS defendants' motion to [*26] dismiss Kodak's second claim for relief.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART defendants' motion to dismiss the first amended complaint. Docket No. 25 in 105452; Docket No. 3251 in 07-1827.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: August 23, 2011

/s/ Susan Illston

SUSAN ILLSTON

United States District Judge

End of Document

Ethypharm S.A. France v. Abbott Labs.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

August 23, 2011, Decided

Civ. No. 08-126-SLR

Reporter

805 F. Supp. 2d 59 *; 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93879 **

ETHYPHARM S.A. FRANCE, Plaintiff, v. ABBOTT LABORATORIES, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Vacated by, in part, Remanded by Ethypharm S.A. Fr. v. Abbott Labs., 2013 U.S. App. LEXIS 1567 (3d Cir. Del., Jan. 23, 2013)

Prior History: Ethypharm SA France v. Abbott Labs., 271 F.R.D. 82, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120544 (D. Del., 2010)

Core Terms

patents, Products, minutes, fenofibrate, rights, sham, dissolution, license, antitrust, argues, Granulate, Entities, infringement, counterclaims, inequitable conduct, anticompetitive, sublicense, parties, sales, summary judgment, data set, pharmaceutical company, testing, summary judgment motion, matter of law, divestiture, ambiguous, immunity, capsule, genuine

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

A court shall grant summary judgment only if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party bears the burden of proving that no genuine issue of material fact exists. Facts that could alter the outcome are material, and disputes are genuine if evidence exists from which a rational person could conclude that the position of the person with the burden of proof on the disputed issue is correct. If the moving party has demonstrated an absence of material fact, the nonmoving party then must come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Rule 56(e).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

In deciding a motion for summary judgment, a court will view the underlying facts and all reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. The mere existence of some evidence in support of the nonmoving party, however, will not be sufficient for denial of a motion for summary judgment; there must be enough evidence to enable a jury reasonably to find for the nonmoving party on that issue. If the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case with respect to which it has the burden of proof, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN3[] Settlements, Consent Judgments

A district court analyzing the anticompetitive effects of a settlement agreement may begin its analysis under either antitrust law (by applying a rule of reason approach to evaluate the agreement's anticompetitive effects) or patent law (by analyzing the right to exclude afforded by the patent); the essence of either inquiry is whether the Settlement Term Sheet restricts competition beyond the exclusionary zone of the patents. A patent is, of course, a carefully-crafted exception to the general rule against monopolies.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN4[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Disputes involving the interpretation of unambiguous contracts are resolvable as a matter of law. Clear and unambiguous language in a contract should be given its ordinary and usual meaning.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

HN5[] Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

Where contract language is ambiguous, parol evidence is properly considered to determine the intent of the parties. In construing an ambiguous contractual provision, a court may consider evidence of prior agreements and communications of the parties as well as trade usage or course of dealing.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Intent

HN6[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Issues of intent and contract interpretation, when arising out of the ambiguous use of language, are rarely amenable to summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN7[] Private Actions, Sherman Act

Antitrust injury is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. The antitrust-injury requirement helps ensure that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN8[] Remedies, Damages

It is not necessary to show with total certainty the amount of damages sustained, just that an antitrust violation caused an antitrust injury suffered by the plaintiff. Damage issues in antitrust cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts. The factfinder may conclude as a matter of just and reasonable interference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN9[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

A patent owner asserting its rights through patent infringement litigation is generally immune from antitrust liability. Commonly referred to as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, this immunity extends to persons who petition all types of government entities, including legislatures, administrative agencies, and courts. Noerr-Pennington immunity, however, is subject to an exception for sham litigation. In this regard, the U.S. Supreme Court outlines a two-part test to determine whether the sham litigation exception applies. As an objective first part, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, then the suit does not qualify as sham litigation and is immunized under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The subjective second part of the definition arises only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless. In such a case, the court must decide whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. To invoke the sham exception, plaintiffs must prove, by clear and convincing evidence, that defendant's activities were not really efforts to vindicate its rights in court.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Doctrine of Equivalents > General Overview

HN10[] Infringement Actions, Doctrine of Equivalents

The doctrine of equivalents is not unlimited, and it cannot be used to ignore the actual language of a patent. However, the doctrine of equivalents may apply to claims containing specific numeric ranges, regardless of whether the claim also contains words of approximation. The proper inquiry is whether the accused value is insubstantially different from the claimed value.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

HN11[] Inequitable Conduct, Burdens of Proof

To prove inequitable conduct, a plaintiff must ultimately show, by clear and convincing evidence, that the defendant knew information, knew that it was material, and made a deliberate decision to withhold this information from the Patent and Trademark Office.

Counsel: [1] Gregory B. Williams, Esquire and Austen C. Endersby, Esquire of Fox Rothchild LLP, Wilmington, Delaware. Counsel for Plaintiff. Of Counsel: Dwight P. Bostwick, Esquire and Carlos T. Angulo, Esquire of Zuckerman Spaeder LLC.

David J. Margules, Esquire and Sean M. Brennecke, Esquire of Bouchard Margules & Friedlander, P.A., Wilmington, Delaware. Counsel for Defendant. Of Counsel: William F. Cavanaugh, Jr., Esquire, Chad J. Peterman, Esquire, Thomas W. Pippert, Esquire, and Edward R. Tempesta, Esquire of Patterson Belknap Webb & Tyler LLP; Jeffrey I. Weinberger, Esquire, Stuart N. Senator, Esquire and Mark R. Conrad, Esquire of Munger, Tolles & Olson LLP; Thomas W. Pippert, Esquire and Timothy A. Waters, Esquire of Patterson Belknap Webb & Tyler, LLP.

Judges: Sue L. Robinson, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Sue L. Robinson

Opinion

[*60] MEMORANDUM OPINION

/s/ Sue L. Robinson

ROBINSON, District Judge

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Ethypharm S.A. France ("Ethypharm") brought this action against defendant Abbott Laboratories ("Abbott") on March 3, 2008. (D.I. 1) Both parties are manufacturers of pharmaceutical drugs, more specifically, fenofibrate. Ethypharm alleges that Abbott has interfered with Ethypharm's licensee from [2] marketing and selling Ethypharm's fenofibrate product under an exclusive licensing agreement with a United States distributor. Ethypharm brought antitrust claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, as well as several common law claims and a claim for sham litigation. On February 20, 2009, the court granted Abbott's motion to dismiss with respect to Ethypharm's common law restraint of trade claim (count six) and denied Abbott's motion to dismiss all other counts of the amended complaint. (D.I. 39) Discovery has been completed and trial is scheduled to commence on September 30, 2011. Currently before the court are Abbott's motions for summary judgment: (1) on counts one through five regarding its alleged "anticompetitive conduct" (D.I. 176); and (2) on count seven and Ethypharm's allegations of "sham litigation" (D.I. 180).

II. BACKGROUND

Ethypharm is a privately-held French pharmaceutical company that develops, formulates and manufactures numerous drug products, including a fenofibrate product called Antara®. (D.I. 26 at ¶¶ 4, 6, 37) Antara® is not a generic product; it is a branded drug marketed directly to [*61] physicians. (Id. at ¶ 53) Ethypharm does not directly sell or distribute [3] Antara® in the United States; it contracted with an American company, Reliant Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Reliant"), to market and distribute the drug. (Id. at ¶¶ 5, 6)

Abbott is a pharmaceutical company that manufactures, markets and sells a brand name fenofibrate drug product called TriCor® in the United States. (Id. at ¶ 2) Abbott licenses the exclusive rights to manufacture and sell TriCor® in the United States from a French company called Laboratoires Fournier ("Fournier"). (Id.) Abbott and Fournier have been involved in extensive antitrust litigation in this district regarding TriCor®. Civ. No. 02-1512 (lead case).

Ethypharm gave Reliant an exclusive license in 2001, termed the "Development, License, and Supply Agreement" ("the DLS Agreement"), through which Reliant licensed Ethypharm's intellectual property rights and agreed to seek FDA approval for Antara® and market Antara® in the United States. (D.I. 179, pt.1 at ex. 2)

Reliant did not file a Paragraph IV certification[1] for the patents that Abbott had identified in the Orange Book for TriCor®. Rather, Reliant elected to market Antara® immediately upon FDA approval. In light of the risk of exposure to infringement claims by Abbott, [4] Reliant filed suit in this court on June 1, 2004, seeking a declaration of non-infringement vis a vis four Fournier fenofibrate patents: U.S. Patent Nos. 6,074,670 ("the '670 patent"); 6,277,405 ("the '405 patent"); 6,589,552 ("the '552 patent"); and 6,652,881 ("the '881 patent"). Civ. No. 04-350 ("the Abbott/Reliant action") Reliant also sought a declaration that the foregoing TriCor® patents are unenforceable due to inequitable conduct.[2] Abbott filed a counterclaim for infringement of the '405 and '881 patents. According to Ethypharm, the counterclaims were a sham and further restrained Antara®'s sales prospects in the United States.

Reliant's NDA for Antara® was filed pursuant to Section 505(b)(2) of the Federal Food Drugs and Cosmetics Act. That is, Reliant did not present its own safety and efficacy studies for Antara®, but presented [5] data showing that patients taking Antara® would attain similar blood concentrations of fenofibrate as would patients taking TriCor® 200, and relied on Abbott's studies showing the safety and efficacy of TriCor® 200. (D.I. 179, pt. 1 at ex. 3) Antara® received FDA approval in November of 2004, and Reliant began marketing Antara® in February 2005.

Ethypharm states that Antara®'s net sales totaled $23.5 million in 2005. (D.I. 1 at ¶ 55) According to Reliant documents, sales of Antara® exceeded expectation in April and May 2005, but came short of projection in June 2005. (D.I. 192, pt. 2 at ex. 9, RLNTE00062604) Notwithstanding, sales of Antara® increased during this period, while sales of TriCor® decreased.[3] (Id. at RLNTE00062604, RLNTE00062608) According to the complaint, Antara® earned $18.9 million in net sales in the first half of 2006. (D.I. 1 at ¶ 56)

[*62] On April 3, 2006, Abbott and Reliant settled the Abbott/Reliant action and executed a "Settlement Term Sheet" embodying the terms of their agreement (the "STS").[4] The STS permits Reliant to sell Antara® without the risk of infringement. [6] That is, the STS grants Reliant a nonexclusive license to the '670, '405, '552, and '881 patents (the "Stamm patents"), as well as U.S. Patent No. 4,895,726 ("the '726 patent"), another Fournier

---

[1] See 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(2)(A)(vii)(IV). The filing of a Paragraph IV certification under the Hatch-Waxman Act is itself an act of patent infringement. See 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(2)(A).

[2] At this time, Abbott was simultaneously defending another charge of inequitable conduct in the context of litigation in this court with Impax Laboratories, Inc. (Civ. No. 03-120)

[3] Other competitors in the market included Lofibra®, Triglide®, gemfibrozil, Lopid® and fenofibrate.

[4] The STS is docketed at D.I. 179 (pt. 1), ex. 1; hereinafter, the court will cite "STS §_" for ease of reference. The parties did not subsequently negotiate a definitive agreement.

fenofibrate patent (collectively hereinafter, the "Fournier patents"). (STS §§ 1(q); 2) The Reliant products subject to the license were defined as > the 43 mg, 87 mg and 130 mg fenofibrate capsule products that are the subject of Reliant's New Drug Application 21-695, as supplemented and/or amended from time to time. Reliant Products do not include (i) any pharmaceutical products where fenofibrate is not the sole active ingredient, (ii) any combination therapy products or (iii) any products in a form other than a 43 mg, 87 mg or 130 mg fenofibrate capsule.

(STS § 1(o)) The license also extended to "any continuations, continuations-in-part or divisional applications and patents thereof and any reissued or reexamined version(s)" of the Stamm patents. (STS § 1(q))

As consideration, Reliant agreed to a 7% royalty on net [7] sales of the Reliant Products. (STS § 3(a)) The royalty would increase, however, to 10% of net sales under specified conditions relating to a change of control, e.g., acquisition of Reliant or any portion of its business relating to the Reliant Products. (STS §§ 3(a), (d), (e)) The parties dispute the proper interpretation of Section 8(ii) of the STS, providing as follows.

> Other Licensing Terms. The license would contain additional customary terms and conditions including, without limitation, the following: (i) reports and audits and (ii) no assignment, sublicense or other transfer of any rights relating to the Reliant Products (including the right to market and promote the Reliant Products) except: . . . (e) to acquirers . . . of any portion of Reliant [or its business] relating to the Reliant Products other than pursuant to a Change of Control, provided that any assignment, sublicense or other transfer of rights granted pursuant to Section 8(ii)(e), (A) to a Restricted Entity or Affiliate thereof, shall require the prior written consent of Abbott and (B) to any entity other than a Restricted Entity or Affiliate thereof shall be limited to [the '726, '670, '405, '552 and '881 patents] [8] unless Abbott consents to the assignment, sublicense or other transfer (in which case, Reliant's rights to all of the Stamm Patents may be included).

Schedules I and II to the STS identify the Restricted Entities under that agreement: about 20 large pharmaceutical companies, 10 generic companies and a few specialty pharmaceutical companies. Reliant was also permitted under the STS to "authorize Contract Sales Organizations[5] to market the Reliant products" on its behalf. (STS § 8(ii)(b))

[*63] On or about July 24, 2006, Reliant sold the exclusive rights to market and sell Antara® to Oscient Pharmaceutical Company ("Oscient"), a smaller, specialty pharmaceutical company not listed in schedules I or II of the STS. (D.I. 179, pt.1 at ex. 27; D.I. 192, pt. 5 at ex. 66) Oscient paid $78 million plus the cost of the existing Antara® [9] inventory. (D.I. 179, pt.1 at ex. 6, § 3.1) The DLS provided Ethypharm a right of first offer with respect to the divestiture of Antara®. (Id., ex. 2 at § 12.4) Ethypharm executed a document approving the sale. (Id., ex. 4) Abbott did not consent to the transfer of Reliant's rights to any later-issued patents in the Stamm patent family, and Reliant and Oscient entered into a separate agreement addressing any risk that Abbott may sue Oscient in this regard. (Id., ex. 40)

In the summer of 2009, Oscient discontinued its sales force promotion of Antara® and filed for bankruptcy. (D.I. 192, pt. 5 at exs. 76, 77) This is, in Ethypharm's characterization, directly related to Reliant's sale of Antara® to Oscient, a company with "limited resources and a relatively small sales force" that "[did] not have the capacity to promote and develop Antara® in the marketplace to compete with TriCor® effectively." (D.I. 1 at ¶ 11) Ethypharm asserts that the 7% royalty to Abbott weakened the profitability of Antara® and raised the cost of its promotion, sales and distribution. (Id. at ¶ 74) Ethypharm argues that the STS restricts its abilities to develop new fenofibrate formulations or combination products, [10] or by adding to the indications for which physicians can prescribe Antara®. (Id. at ¶ 75) Ethypharm characterizes the STS as equivalent to an "output restraining agreement" in these regards. (Id. at ¶ 78)

Ethypharm brings antitrust claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and also alleges violations of the common laws of unfair competition; tortious interference with contract; tortious interference with prospective

---

5 Defined as "a pharmaceutical sales and marketing organization that is not a Restricted Entity [listed on schedules I and II to the STS] and whose principal business is the marketing and sale of pharmaceutical products for third parties (for example, Innovex), engaged by a Reliant Licensed Entity to detail the Reliant Products on a fee-for-service basis." (STS § 1(f)) economic advantage; that Abbott committed a common law restraint of trade; and that Abbott's infringement counterclaim in the Abbott/Reliant action constituted sham litigation in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. On Abbott's motion to dismiss, the court found that Ethypharm had standing vis a vis its Sherman Act claims.[6] See Ethypharm S.A. France v. Abbott Labs., 598 F. Supp. 2d 611, 618 (D. Del. 2009). The court also held that Ethypharm articulated the essential elements of its unfair competition and tortious interference claims under Delaware law. Id. at 619-20. The court granted Abbott's motion with respect to Ethypharm's common law restraint of trade claim, however, insofar as such actions (pursuant to 6 Del. C. § 2103) may only be brought by Delaware's Attorney General. [11] Id. at 620.

III. STANDARD

HN1[] A court shall grant summary judgment only if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party bears the burden of proving that no genuine issue of material fact exists. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 n.10, 106 S. Ct. [*64] 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). "Facts that could alter the outcome are 'material,' and disputes are 'genuine' if evidence exists from which a rational person could conclude that the position of the person with the burden of proof on the disputed issue is correct." Horowitz v. Fed. Kemper Life Assurance Co., 57 F.3d 300, 302 n.1 (3d Cir. 1995) [12] (internal citations omitted). If the moving party has demonstrated an absence of material fact, the nonmoving party then "must come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)). HN2[] The court will "view the underlying facts and all reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Pa. Coal Ass'n v. Babbitt, 63 F.3d 231, 236 (3d Cir. 1995). The mere existence of some evidence in support of the nonmoving party, however, will not be sufficient for denial of a motion for summary judgment; there must be enough evidence to enable a jury reasonably to find for the nonmoving party on that issue. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). If the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case with respect to which it has the burden of proof, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Counts Relating to Reliant's Alleged "Anticompetitive Agreement"[7]

Abbott moves to dismiss Ethypharm's claims on several bases. First, Abbott argues that it has the right to refuse to license a patent. (D.I. 177 at 11-13) Secondly, Abbott argues that the STS did not prohibit Reliant's divestiture of Antara® to anyone it saw fit; only the Stamm patent rights were subject to a condition precedent (Abbott's consent). (D.I. 177 at 13, 15) Finally, Abbott argues that Ethypharm has no direct evidence of antitrust injury, insofar as it cannot demonstrate (with any reasonable certainty) that another company (other than Oscient) would have bought Antara® and made that product a commercial success. (Id. at 17-20)

1. Scope of the patent test

---

[6] The court characterized the question posed by Abbott's motion as "whether a foreign name-brand drug manufacturer, which does not itself market and distribute its product in the United States but does so through an exclusive United States distributor, is entitled to avail itself of the protection of the antitrust laws for the purpose of challenging the conduct of a manufacturer of a competing brand name drug."

[7] All asserted claims but for Ethypharm's allegations that Abbott [13] engaged in sham litigation.

The first inquiry at bar is the legality of the STS. The Federal Circuit has stated that HN3[] a district court analyzing the anticompetitive effects of a settlement agreement may begin its analysis under either antitrust law (by applying a rule of reason approach to evaluate the agreement's anticompetitive effects) or patent law (by analyzing the right to exclude afforded by the patent); the essence of either inquiry is "whether the [STS] restrict[s] competition beyond the exclusionary zone of the [Stamm [14] patents]."[8] In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 544 F.3d 1323, 1336 (Fed. Cir. 2008). The parties at bar present their arguments under the "scope of the patent" framework (D.I. 141 at 11; D.I. 177 at 11), and the court agrees that it must discern whether the STS grants greater rights than those conferred under the Stamm patents. Cf. King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc. v. Cephalon, Inc., 702 F. Supp. 2d 514 (E.D. Pa. 2010).

2. Contract interpretation

The parties dispute the interpretation of the STS. Ethypharm argues that Section [*65] 8(ii) of the STS is a general prohibition on Reliant's divestiture of Antara®. (D.I. 191 at 1) Abbott, on the other hand, reads the STS as prohibiting the future transfer of the intellectual property rights licensed under the STS absent Abbott's consent. (D.I. 177 at 13)

The threshold inquiry is whether the contract is ambiguous. See, e.g., GB Biosciences Corp. v. Ishihara Sangyo Kaisha, Ltd., 270 F. Supp. 2d 476, 481 (D. Del. 2003) (HN4[] "[D]isputes involving the interpretation of unambiguous contracts are resolvable as a matter of law"); Johnston v. Tally Ho, Inc., 303 A.2d 677, 679 (Del. Super. 1973) [15] (clear and unambiguous language in a contract should be given its ordinary and usual meaning). The court answers this question in the affirmative.

Section 2 of the STS provides that "Abbott and Fournier would grant Reliant a non-exclusive license (subject to the provisions of Section 8) under the Stamm Patents (the "License") to exploit the Reliant Products in the United States and its territories and possessions[.]" (STS § 2) While the STS also contemplates that the future License would contain "additional customary terms and conditions," these specifically include "no assignment, sublicense or other transfer of any rights relating to the Reliant Products (including the right to market and promote the Reliant Products)." (STS § 8)(emphasis added) As noted above, Reliant Products are narrowly defined as the 43 mg, 87 mg and 130 mg fenofibrate capsule products that are the subject of Reliant's NDA, and exclude all other product forms, including "any combination therapy products" or other products having fenofibrate as their sole active ingredient. (STS § 1(o)) The restriction on permissible activities is broad, however, encompassing "any rights" relating to these named products. (STS § 8)

The [16] inquiry does not end here, however. In its subsections, STS § 8 subsequently flip-flops in focus from the Reliant Products to intellectual property rights. STS § 8(ii)(e), containing exceptions to the "no transfer" clause, provides that an exception is made if a "transfer of rights" "relating to the Reliant Products" is made to a Restricted Entity with Abbott's consent. Alternatively, this section provides that transfer of rights under the '726, '670, '405, '552 and '881 patents may be made without Abbott's consent, while transfer to "all of the Stamm patents" may only occur with Abbott's consent. (STS § 8(ii)(e)(B)) In sum, the STS is ambiguous insofar as it inconsistently restricts the right to sell Reliant Products with the right to sublicense rights under Abbott's patents.

The remaining question is whether, in view of the parole evidence of record, a genuine issue of material fact exists as to the parties' interpretation of the STS. See, gen., Nova Chemicals, Inc. v. Sekisui Plastics Co., Ltd., 579 F.3d 319, 323 (3d Cir. 2009) (HN5[] where contract language is ambiguous, parol evidence is properly considered to determine the intent of the parties) (citation omitted); Eagle Industries, Inc. v. DeVilbiss Health Care, Inc., 702 A.2d 1228, 1233 (Del. Supr. 1997) [17] ("In construing an ambiguous contractual provision, a court may consider evidence of prior agreements and communications of the parties as well as trade usage or course of dealing."). In this regard, Abbott argues that all of Reliant's witnesses have testified that they neither understood nor intended STS § 8 to have the meaning Ethypharm now ascribes to it. For example, Reliant's "architect" of the STS, Joe

---

[8] A patent is, of course, a carefully-crafted exception to the general rule against monopolies.

Zakrzewski ("Zakrzewski"), testified that he read the STS to mean that Reliant "had the ability to deal with anybody on [the Restricted Entity] list [ ] with or without Abbott's consent." (D.I. 179, pt. 2, ex. K at 167:9-168:5, 341:20-343:14) John Poulos [*66] ("Poulos"), Abbott's counterpart "architect" of the STS (D.I. 191 at 7), testified that Abbott did not want sublicensing, while Reliant did, and STS § 8(ii)(e) was the resulting compromise. (D.I. 179, pt. 2, ex. E at 181:3-182:16) Poulos stated that the deal "had nothing to do with restricting [the right to sell] Antara® or the sale of the company[; t]his was only . . . on a sublicense right of the Stamm patents. We weren't restricting [the right to sell] Antara® or the sale of the company at all." (Id.) Fournier's 30(b)(6) witness [18] testified that his personal understanding of the purpose of including Restricted Entities was that, "in the event Reliant decide[d] to sublicense its rights to one of these compan[ies] and if one of these compan[ies] want[ed] to have our license on our Stamm patents or on the patents covered by this agreement, they would have to ask us for consent." (Id., ex. L at 69:7-16)

In response, Ethypharm points to a presentation from a June 2006 Reliant Board of Directors Meeting contrasting Reliant's divestiture of a drug called InnoPran EL, for which Reliant stated it was "contacting more than 100 pharma/biotech companies," with Antara®, for which Reliant was "surgically approaching select companies." (D.I. 192, pt. 4, ex. 60) Ethypharm argues that Reliant's approach of contacting "a small handful of companies on a discrete basis" evidences Reliant's view that it was severely restricted by the STS. (Id.) Ethypharm also points to a July 10, 2006 email from Poulos to Mary Szela of Abbott indicating that Abbott was concerned with "Oscient's financial status." (Id., ex. 81) Poulos stated that, if Abbott consents, it "should strengthen the change of control provision that Oscient will assume." [19] (Id.) In July 2006, Zakrzewski expressed concern about Abbott's response to the potential divestiture of Antara® as follows:

> I think the verbatim goes that Poulos gave us his word Abbott would not stand in [the] way of [a] small company when we did [the] deal in April.
>
> Now [a] small company is a problem and it really doesn't feel right. They state concerns about what [a] small company would do to [the] market. I think we hit them frontal with the antitrust implications.

(Id., ex. 65)[9]

The foregoing parol evidence does not resolve the "product" versus "patent" differentiation at the core of the contract dispute. While Poulos testified that he did not believe the STS restricted Reliant's right to divest Antara®, this interpretation is directly contrary to certain language used in the STS itself. HN6[] Issues of intent and contract interpretation, when arising out of the ambiguous use of language, are rarely amenable to summary judgment. *See Peck v. Donovan, Civ. No. 07-5500, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118269, 2010 WL 4628198, 2 (D.N.J. Nov. 4, 2010). The court would not take the decision of whether the STS exceeds the scope of the patents away from the jury [20] on this record.

3. Injury

The court next addresses Abbott's argument that judgment should be entered in its favor because Ethypharm has not sufficiently alleged antitrust injury.

a. Standards

HN7[] Antitrust injury is "an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." *Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 [67] L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). "The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Id. "The antitrust-injury requirement helps ensure 'that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for . . . damages.'" West

[9] This is an email from Zakrzewski to an Ernest Mario dated July 25, 2006.

Penn Allegheny Heath Sys. Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 101 (3d Cir. 2010) (citing Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990)).

b. Discussion

The court agrees with Abbott that Ethypharm has not proffered evidence of a "causal connection between the [alleged] antitrust violation and actual damage suffered." See Callahan v. A.E.V., Inc., 182 F.3d 237, 250 (3d Cir. 1999) [21] (citations and internal brackets omitted). In its opposition papers to Abbott's motion, Ethypharm describes its injury (without citation to record evidence) as follows:

> First, Abbott itself licensed Ethypharm's technology for just this purpose [of competing against TriCor®] in Latin America. Second, Ethypharm initially approached certain Restricted Entities who expressed interest in purchasing Antara®. Third, AstraZeneca, one of the Restricted Entities, partnered with Abbott in an effort to develop a fenofibrate/statin combination just after the STS. Ethypharm's product was equally, if not better, positioned with a lower dose of fenofibrate to do so. Finally, a jury is entitled to exercise its common sense and ask: if Abbott did not believe these 36 companies would be interested in purchasing the Antara® Rights, what possible reason did Abbott have to include them on a Restricted Entities list?

(D.I. 191 at 20) At oral argument, Ethypharm directed the court to a 2009 Abbott Latin America "Executive Summary" on fenofibrate licensing, describing the competitive landscape for ControLip®, the Latin American version of Antara®. (D.I. 192, pt. 3, ex. 36) That document states that "[Ethypharm's] [22] ControLip® 130mg would provide Abbott with a new and innovative next generation fenofibrate product[,] thus staying one step ahead of the generic competition and protecting its fenofibrate market from possible new competitors." (Id.) Ethypharm also pointed to a 2006 Abbott presentation regarding TriCor® competition; in the context of Reliant's sale to Oscient, Abbott stated that "[t]he sale of Antara® was not a surprise, however Oscient is[.]" (Id., ex. 26 at 17) Abbott believed at that time that "Oscient's lack of resources, coupled with a small, non-specialty sales force, are unlikely to pose significant competition to TriCor®." (Id.)

Ultimately, it is Ethypharm's position that "Abbott can't restrict 36 companies from bidding on the Antara® Rights and then argue that Ethypharm has no specific proof that any of these 36 companies was interested." (D.I. 191 at 19) It is true that HN8[] "[i]t is not necessary to show with total certainty the amount of damages sustained, just that the antitrust violation caused the antitrust injury suffered by the plaintiff." Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 483 (3d Cir. 1998). As the Supreme Court has held, > damage issues in [antitrust] cases are [23] rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts. . . [T]he factfinder may conclude as a matter of just and reasonable interference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the [*68] decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.

J. Truett Payne Co., Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 565, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981) (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123-24, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969) (internal quotations omitted)). Ethypharm, however, does not cite evidence from which a jury could infer a "decline in [ ] profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes." Id.

The crux of Ethypharm's argument is that Oscient did not have the ability to effectively compete from the outset. (D.I. 191 at 19-20) Even if the court were to assume that the Restricted Entities were better equipped to market Antara® (due to, for example, having larger sales forces and more expendable resources), there is no factual basis from which the court (or a jury) could [24] infer that such a company would have had success with Antara® where Oscient failed. Put simply, there are many market influences that may have contributed to Oscient's failure with Antara®. Ethypharm's arguments are speculative and, absent more, Ethypharm has not evidenced any causal connection to an antitrust injury. Abbott's motion for summary judgment is granted on this ground.

B. Sham Litigation

Ethypharm asserts two sham litigation theories, focusing on: (1) Abbott's counterclaims of infringement (as to the '405 and '881 patents in the Reliant action); and (2) Abbott's supposed knowledge of inequitable conduct by a Fournier employee (Reginault). Abbott moves for summary judgment on each claim.[10]

1. Standard for Noerr-Pennington immunity

HN9[] A patent owner asserting its rights through patent infringement litigation is generally immune from antitrust liability. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); [25] United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). Commonly referred to as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, this immunity extends to persons who petition all types of government entities, including legislatures, administrative agencies, and courts. California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972). Noerr-Pennington immunity, however, is subject to an exception for "sham" litigation. In this regard, the Supreme Court has outlined a two-part test to determine whether the "sham litigation" exception applies. See Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Ind., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). As an objective first part, "the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Id. at 60. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, then the suit does not qualify as sham litigation and is immunized under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Id. The subjective second part of the definition arises only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless. In such a case, the court must decide [*69] whether the "baseless [26] lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor.'" Id. at 60-61. To invoke the "sham" exception, plaintiffs must prove, by clear and convincing evidence, that defendant's activities were not really efforts to vindicate its rights in court. See C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Systems, Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1368-69 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("sham litigation requires more than a failed legal theory") (quoting Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 743 F.2d 1282, 1288 (9th Cir. 1984)); MCI Communications v. Am. Telephone and Telegraph Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1155 (7th Cir. 1983).

2. Sham litigation based on infringement

Claim 1 of the '405 patent and claim 37 of the '881 patent are representative of the asserted claims in the Abbott/Reliant action:

> 1. A composition comprising a hydrosoluble carrier and micronized fenofibrate having a dissolution of at least 10% in 5 minutes, 20% in 10 minutes, 50% in 20 minutes and 75% in 30 minutes, as measured using the rotating blade method at 75 rpm according to the European Pharmacopoeia, in a dissolution medium constituted by water with 2% by weight polysorbate 80 or with 0.025M sodium lauryl sulfate.
>
> 37. A granulate comprising [27] micronized fenofibrate, wherein the granulate has a dissolution of at least 10% in 5 minutes, 20% in 10 minutes, 50% in 20 minutes and 75% in 30 minutes, as measured using the rotating blade method at 75 rpm according to the European Pharmacopoeia, in a dissolution medium constituted by water with 2% by weight polysorbate 80 or a dissolution medium constituted by water with 0.025 M sodium lauryl sulfate.

(emphasis added) It is not disputed that, before filing its counterclaims, Abbott received from Reliant the full Antara® NDA, which included testing data showing that Antara® does not dissolve close to the "at least 10% in 5

[10] Abbott also moved for judgment on Ethypharm's former allegation that Abbott lacked a reasonable basis to believe that any Stamm patent was valid; Ethypharm expressly abandons this theory in their answering brief. (D.I. 189 at 1, n.2) Judgment, therefore, should be entered for Abbott on this particular claim.

minutes" level required by the patents. (D.I. 189 at 3; D.I. 181 at 8; D.I. 190 at ex. 7, p.3) Specifically, the Antara® NDA shows that Antara®'s dissolution at 5 minutes is 1.2-2.5%.

a. Abbott's infringement theories

Abbott argues that its counterclaims were premised upon two theories of infringement with respect to Antara®: the "Granulate Theory;" and the "10% in 6 minutes" DOE theory. As noted above, claim 37 of the '881 patent claims "[a] granulate comprising micronized fenofibrate, wherein the granulate has a dissolution of at least 10% in 5 minutes, 20% in 10 [28] minutes, [etc.]" The Granulate Theory is that the granulates within Antara® literally meet the "at least 10% in 5 minutes" limitation. The Granulate Theory is based on the belief of Abbott's expert, Dr. Robert O. Williams III ("Williams"), that, because granulates dissolve more quickly than the capsule product, one can "reasonably expect" that the granulates achieve 10% dissolution at or near five minutes.[11] (D.I. 181 at 11-12; D.I. 190, ex. 10 at ¶ 39) Abbott argues that, because Reliant's NDA does not disclose the dissolution rate for the granulates within capsules of Antara®, there is no data contradicting its theory.

The "10% in 6 minutes DOE Theory" is also supported by Williams, who opines that reaching 10% in 6 minutes is equivalent [*70] under the DOE to 10% in 5 minutes. Abbott argues that Antara® reaches a dissolution rate of at least 10% in 6 minutes and, therefore, infringes under the doctrine of equivalents. The parties do not dispute that the NDA shows a rapid [29] rise in dissolution for Antara® between 5 and 10 minutes. For example, one batch went from 3% at 5 minutes to 64.5% in 10 minutes. Thus, Abbott argues, Antara® must "pass through" the 10% point sometime between 5 and 10 minutes.[12] (D.I. 197 at 3; D.I. 190, ex. 10 at ¶ 43)

b. Discussion

Neither party to the Reliant action did scientific testing to either verify or discredit the Granulate Theory or 10% in 6 minutes DOE Theory. After Abbott proffered its counterclaims on the '405 and '881 patents on January 7, 2005, the parties entered into settlement discussions which culminated in a settlement agreement in April 2006. The Reliant action was dismissed on April 19, 2006 prior to the close of discovery.

Ethypharm argues that Abbott's DOE theories were shams in two regards. First, Ethypharm asserts that, because Williams did not rely on actual testing, his opinion cannot be reasonable.[13] However, Ethypharm does not cite, and the court is not aware of, caselaw suggesting that Williams was required to do actual testing (as compared to mathematical estimation) [30] in support of his DOE theory before Abbott filed its compulsory counterclaims.

Ethypharm also argues that Abbott's theory is invalid as a matter of law, insofar as it vitiates the "at least 10% in 5 minutes" limitation. It is certainly true that HN10[] the doctrine of equivalents is not unlimited, and it cannot be "used to ignore the actual language of the patent." See K-2 Corp. v. Salomon S.A., 191 F.3d 1356, 1366-67 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (cited by Ethypharm at D.I. 189 at 15). However, the Federal Circuit has specifically determined that the doctrine of equivalents may apply to claims containing specific numeric ranges, regardless of whether the claim also contains words of approximation. See Adams Respiratory Therapeutics, Inc. v. Perrigo Co., 616 F.3d 1283, 1291, 1293 (Fed. Cir. 2010) (vacating district court's grant of summary judgment of noninfringement on the doctrine of equivalents, as plaintiff introduced sufficient evidence [31] from which the jury could conclude that a mean response (AUC) value of 3493.38 hr*ng/mL is insubstantially different from the claimed value of "at least 3500 hr*ng/mL"). "The proper inquiry is whether the accused value is insubstantially different from the claimed value." Id.

[11] Ethypharm's 30(b)(6) witness admitted that, if the granulates were tested without the capsule, the dissolution results "could be slightly superior probably" over testing the intact capsule. (D.I. 182, ex. 19 at 117:7-23)

[12] Ethypharm's expert stated it is not "impossible" that Antara® dissolves at 10% in 6 minutes. (D.I. 181 at 10) (further citation omitted)

[13] Williams estimated the dissolution at 6 minutes by "approximat[ing] by interpolation" the 5- and 10-minute data in the Antara® NDA, and relied on his beliefs that granulates dissolve more quickly than do capsules. (D.I. 189 at 12; D.I. 190, ex. 9 at 104:5-9; 96:14-97:14)

Because the Reliant action settled expeditiously, neither the court nor the jury is in the position to judge the veracity of Abbott's position in this regard. Ethypharm does not point to anything in the prosecution history of the '405 and '881 patents that would preclude Abbott's arguments, which are not demonstrably invalid as a matter of law. For these reasons, there is insufficient evidence of record from which a reasonable jury could conclude that Abbott's DOE theories were a sham, and the court grants Abbott's motion for summary judgment of no sham [*71] litigation on its infringement counterclaims.

3. Sham litigation based on inequitable conduct

Ethypharm also argues that Abbott lacked a reasonable basis to believe that the Stamm patents were enforceable because Abbott was aware that Fournier committed inequitable conduct before the PTO. Ethypharm's theory of inequitable conduct in this regard is that Fournier's [32] chief scientist, Philippe Reginault ("Reginault"), violated his duty of candor by not informing the PTO in 2003 that a curve corresponding to "Lot 2177" of Fournier's Lipanthyl 200 fenofibrate product, which Fournier relied on to show the improved dissolution of its new fenofibrate formulation, was "inherently unreliable." (D.I. 189 at 17) The Lot 2177 data set was incorporated into the '405 and '881 patents as figure 1 of those patents, wherein it provided a contrast to the dissolution percentage of the tablet of the "invention."

It is Ethypharm's position that Abbott relied exclusively on the Lot 2177 data during prosecution of the Stamm patents without confirmation of the data from other sources, and despite 16 other Lipanthyl 200 dissolution data sets using either of the two dissolution media included in the patents (0.025M SLS or "Tween"). (Id. at 7-8) These 16 data sets were: (1) obtained in 1997; (2) "homogenous" (D.I. 190, ex. 16 at 88:11); (3) indicative of a faster dissolution of Lipanthyl 200 than that reported to the PTO by the Lot 2177 curve (id., ex. 10, ¶ 61);[14] (4) incorporated into a 2005 declaration to the PTO; but (5) not disclosed to the PTO during prosecution of [33] the Stamm patents.

The court need only address one aspect of Ethypharm's theory to resolve the motion at bar: specific intent. In this regard, Ethypharm stresses Reginault's testimony that the results of a single lot are not indicative of a sample's dissolution range, which can be comprised of variable results.[15] (D.I. 189 at 17 (citing D.I. 190, ex. 16 at 86:22-87:12, 93:3-94:16)) Ethypharm also argues that Abbott's characterization of the Lipanthyl 200 testing in prior litigation with Teva Pharmaceuticals USA, Inc. ("Teva") demonstrates Abbott's understanding that the Lot 2177 curve was inconsistent with other Lipanthyl 200 data. (D.I. 189 at 19) Specifically, Abbott previously dismissed Teva's argument that it committed inequitable conduct by failing to identify the 16 Lipanthyl 200 data sets to the PTO, by arguing that two inconsistent data sets were insufficient to demonstrate the falsity of the data supplied [34] to the PTO against a backdrop of hundreds of tests overall. See Teva Pharmaceuticals USA, Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 580 F. Supp. 2d 345, 366 (D. Del. 2008) (hereinafter, "Teva").[16] At oral argument, Ethypharm argued that the number of withheld results – 16, rather than "hundreds" – also demonstrates specific intent by Reginault. (D.I. 205 at 44-46)

---

[14] In other words, the 16 other data sets provide a similar dissolution profile to the invention, rendering the contrast between the plot for the invention and for Lipanthyl 200 moot. Ethypharm provides a colored chart of these plots in its opposition papers. (D.I. 189 at 8)

[15] Reginault stated that "the regularity standards for these tests are that the range is 20 percent minimum. So traditionally, it is known that results will vary, and this applies to any product." (D.I. 190, ex. 16 at 96:14-19)

[16] With respect to inequitable conduct, this court in Teva ultimately held that the record lacked evidence that Reginault recalled, and knowingly withheld, the two inconsistent data sets three years after receiving the data. 580 F. Supp. 2d at 345.

[*72] On this record, Ethypharm cannot clear the high hurdle of proving that Abbott's counterclaims were objectively baseless based on inequitable conduct. HN11[] To prove inequitable conduct, Ethypharm must ultimately show, by clear and convincing evidence, that Reginault[17] "knew of the [unreliability of the Lot 2177 curve], knew that it was material, and made a deliberate decision to withhold" [35] this information from the PTO. *See Therasense, Inc. v. Becton, Dickinson & Co., 649 F.3d 1276, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 10590, 2011 WL 2028255, 9 (Fed. Cir. May 25, 2011). Ethypharm has simply suggested that Reginault's omission was grossly negligent or negligent under a "should have known" standard, which is not sufficient.[18] Id. Reginault's testimony that several data sets make up a dissolution curve is too attenuated from the proposition that the Lot 2177 data was "unreliable." If it is true as a scientific principle, as Reginault testified, that one data set can never provide a complete portrait of the relevant information, the PTO would have taken this into account in its consideration of figure 1. Regardless, there is no evidence that Reginault deliberately set out to deceive the PTO in the manner suggested.[19] Abbott's motion for summary judgment of no sham litigation is granted.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Abbott's motions for summary judgment of no anticompetitive conduct and no sham litigation are granted. An appropriate order shall issue.

ORDER

At Wilmington this 23rd day of August, 2011, consistent with the memorandum opinion issued this same date;

IT IS ORDERED that:

1. Defendant's motion for summary judgment on counts one through five regarding its alleged "anticompetitive conduct" (D.I. 176) is granted.

2. Defendant's motion for summary judgment on count seven and plaintiff's allegations of "sham litigation" (D.I. 180) is granted.

3. The Clerk of Court shall enter judgment for defendant and against plaintiff.

4. No party may file a motion for reconsideration absent prior leave of court.

/s/ Sue L. Robinson

United States District Judge

End of Document

[17] Reginault is the only named person at Abbott specifically alleged to have committed inequitable conduct. Ethypharm couches many of its arguments in terms of what "Abbott" knew or intended; such allegations are too general to withstand scrutiny.

[18] The Therasense decision issued two days prior to defendant's motion for summary judgment; [36] Ethypharm does not address it in its answering papers.

[19] For example, as Abbott points out, there is no indication that Reginault was asked "when he came to this alleged understanding about inherent unreliability and [he] was never asked whether he had that understanding in mind when he submitted his 2003 declaration in connection with prosecution of the '881 patent." (D.I. 197 at 9, n.9) (emphasis in original)

[Gorospe v. New Century Mortg. Corp.]

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

August 23, 2011, Decided; August 23, 2011, Filed

CV. NO. 10-00505 DAE-BMK

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93992 *; 2011 WL 3734230

MAURO C. GOROSPE and CAROLINA GOROSPE, as individuals, Plaintiffs, vs. NEW CENTURY MORTGAGE CORPORATION; DEUTSCHE BANK NATIONAL TRUST COMPANY, as Trustee under Pooling and Servicing Agreement dated July 1, 2004, Morgan Stanley ABS Capital I Inc., Trust 2004-HE5 Mortgage Pass-Through Certificates Series 2004-HE5; BARCLAY CAPITAL REAL ESTATE, INC., d/b/a/ HOMEQ SERVICING; and DOES 1 through 20 inclusive, Defendants.

Core Terms

antitrust, amended complaint, allegations, anti trust law, mortgage, leave to amend, cause of action, assertions, emotional distress, motion to dismiss, relevant market, Violations, pleading requirements, conspiracy, misrepresentation, circumstances, conclusory, fraudulent, Practices, disclose, unfair, vague, constitute fraud, deceptive act, anticompetitive, particularity, quotations

Counsel: [*1] For Mauro C. Gorospe, Carolina Gorospe, Plaintiffs: James H. Fosbinder, LEAD ATTORNEY, Ivey Fosbinder Fosbinder LLLC, A Limited Liability Law Company, Wailuku, HI.

For Old Republic Title & Escrow of Hawaii, a Business Entity, form unknown, Defendant: Jade L. Ching, LEAD ATTORNEY, Alston Hunt Floyd & Ing, Honolulu, HI; Shellie K. Park-Hoapili, LEAD ATTORNEY, Alston Hunt Floyd & Ing Honolulu, Honolulu, HI.

For Deutsche Bank National Trust Company, as Trustee under Pooling and Servicing Agreement dated July 1, 2004, Morgan Stanley ABS Capital I Inc., Trust 2004-HE5 Mortgage Pass-Through Certificates Series 2004-HE5, Defendant: Robert J. Martin, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul Alston, Alston Hunt Floyd & Ing, Honolulu, HI.

Judges: David Alan Ezra, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: David Alan Ezra

Opinion

ORDER: (1) GRANTING DEUTSCHE BANK'S MOTION TO DISMISS; (2) DISMISSING COMPLAINT WITHOUT PREJUDICE AS AGAINST ALL DEFENDANTS; AND (3) GRANTING PLAINTIFFS LEAVE TO AMEND

On August 22, 2011, the Court heard Defendant Deutsche Bank National Trust Company, as Trustee under Pooling and Servicing Agreement dated July 1, 2004, Morgan Stanley ABS Capital I Inc., Trust 2004-HE5 Mortgage Pass-Through Certificates Series 2004-HE5 ("Deutsche [*2] Bank")'s Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint. James H. Fosbinder, Esq., appeared at the hearing telephonically on behalf of Plaintiffs Mauro C. Gorospe and Carolina Gorospe ("Plaintiffs"), Robert J. Martin, Esq., appeared at the hearing on behalf of Deutsche Bank. After reviewing the motion and the supporting and opposing memoranda, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. # 37), DISMISSES Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint as against all Defendants, and GRANTS Plaintiffs leave to amend.

BACKGROUND

On September 1, 2010, Plaintiffs Mauro C. Gorospe and Carolina Gorospe ("Plaintiffs") filed a Complaint against Defendants New Century Mortgage Corporation ("New Century"), Deutsche Bank, Barclay Capital Real Estate, Inc., d/b/a/ HomEq Servicing ("Barclay"), and Does 1 through 20 inclusive (collectively, "Defendants"), alleging that Plaintiffs had been lured into a predatory mortgage loan. ("Compl.," Doc # 1.) On February 22, 2011, Plaintiffs filed a First Amended Complaint ("FAC") against Defendants. ("FAC," Doc. # 31.) Specifically, Plaintiff's FAC alleges the following Counts:

- Count I: Violations of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act (FAC ¶¶ 66-73.)
- Count II: Violations [*3] of the Hawaii Anti-Trust/Anti-Monopoly Acts (Id. ¶¶ 74-77.)
- Count III: Civil Conspiracy (Id. ¶¶ 78-82.)
- Count IV: Fraudulent Misrepresentation (Id. ¶¶ 83-90.)
- Count V: Unfair and Deceptive Acts or Practice. (Id. ¶¶ 91-103.)
- Count VI: Breach of Fiduciary Duty (Id. ¶¶ 104-111.)
- Count VII: Unjust Enrichment (Id. ¶¶ 112-117.)
- Count VIII: Mistake (Id. ¶¶ 118-119.)
- Count IX: Unconscionability (Id. ¶¶ 120-128.)
- Count X: Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress (Id. ¶¶ 129-133.)
- Count XI: Violations of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (Id. ¶¶ 134-139.)
- Count XII: Breach of the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing (Id. ¶¶ 140-143.)
- Count XIII: Complaint to Quiet Title (Id. ¶¶ 144-149.)
- Count XIV: Negligence (Id. ¶¶ 150-156.)

Plaintiffs are residents of the County of Maui, State of Hawaii. (Id. ¶ 21.) Plaintiffs executed a mortgage with Defendant New Century on March 18, 2004, which was recorded as Document No. 2004-071671 in the State of Hawaii Bureau of Conveyances on April 8, 2004. (Id. ¶ 28.) The real property at issue in this loan transaction is located at 60 Wilikona Place, Wailuku, Hawaii 96793 (the "Subject Property"). (Id. ¶ 29.)

Plaintiffs allege that the Subject [*4] Property was intended as a rental property until such time as Plaintiffs would relocate and move into the Subject Property. (Id. ¶ 37.) Plaintiffs claim they put their trust and confidence in Defendant New Century to properly qualify them for a loan (id. ¶ 40), but that at the time of closing on the loan, they were not provided with time to review the loan application or other associated documents and were not afforded the opportunity to have legal counsel review the detailed documents. (id. ¶¶ 44-45). Plaintiffs further state that Defendant New Century failed to provide timely notice of various legally required disclosures including, but not limited to, the HUD settlement statement and notification of Plaintiffs' other consumer rights. (Id. ¶ 46.) Finally, Plaintiffs assert various allegations regarding the assignment of the mortgage to Defendant Deutsche Bank. (Id. ¶¶ 50-54.)

On April 28, 2011, Deutsche Bank filed the instant Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint ("Motion"). ("Mot.," Doc. # 37.) On June 15, 2011, Plaintiffs filed their Memorandum in Opposition ("Opposition"). ("Opp'n," Doc. # 44.) On July 12, 2011, Deutsche Bank filed a Reply in support of its Motion. (Reply, [*5] Doc. # 45.)

STANDARD OF REVIEW

I. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)

Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("Rule"), a motion to dismiss will be granted where the plaintiff fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Review is limited to the contents of the complaint. See Clegg v. Cult Awareness Network, 18 F.3d 752, 754 (9th Cir. 1994). A complaint may be dismissed as a matter of law for one of two reasons: "(1) lack of a cognizable legal theory, or (2) insufficient facts under a cognizable legal claim." Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 534 (9th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted). Allegations of fact in the complaint must be taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005).

A complaint need not include detailed facts to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. See Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555-56, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). In providing grounds for relief, however, a plaintiff must do more than recite the formulaic elements of a cause of action. See id. at 556-57; see also McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 810 (9th Cir. 1988) [*6] ("[C]onclusory allegations without more are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.") (citation omitted). "The tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions," and courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (internal quotations and citations omitted). Thus, "bare assertions amounting to nothing more than a formulaic recitation of the elements" of a claim "are not entitled to an assumption of truth." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009) ("[T]he non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief.") (internal quotations and citations omitted).

A court looks at whether the facts in the complaint sufficiently state a "plausible" ground for relief. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. A plaintiff must include enough facts to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence and may not just provide a speculation of a right to relief. Id. at 586. When [*7] a complaint fails to adequately state a claim, such deficiency should be "exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court." Id. at 558 (citation omitted). If a court dismisses the complaint or portions thereof, it must consider whether to grant leave to amend. Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that leave to amend should be granted "if it appears at all possible that the plaintiff can correct the defect") (internal quotations and citations omitted).

II. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) requires that "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Under Ninth Circuit law, "Rule 9(b) requires particularized allegations of the circumstances constituting fraud." In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1547-48 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc), superseded on other grounds by 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4.

In their pleadings, plaintiffs must include the time, place, and nature of the alleged fraud; "mere conclusory allegations of fraud are insufficient" to satisfy this requirement. Id. at 1548 (quoting [*8] Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 540 (9th Cir. 1989)). "[T]he circumstances constituting the alleged fraud [must] 'be specific enough to give defendants notice of the particular misconduct . . . so that they can defend against the charge and not just deny that they have done anything wrong.'" Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Bly-Magee v. California, 236 F.3d 1014, 1019 (9th Cir. 2001)); see also Moore, 885 F.2d at 540 (finding that Rule 9(b) requires a plaintiff to attribute particular fraudulent statements or acts to individual defendants). However, "[m]alice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); see also In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d at 1547 ("We conclude that plaintiffs may aver scienter . . . simply by saying that scienter existed."); Walling v. Beverly Enter., 476 F.2d 393, 397 (9th Cir. 1973) (finding that Rule 9(b) "only requires the identification of the circumstances constituting fraud so that the defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations" (citations omitted)).

A motion to dismiss for failure to plead with particularity [*9] is the functional equivalent of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1107 (9th Cir. 2003). In considering a motion to dismiss, the court is not deciding the issue of "whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974) overruled on other grounds by Davis v. Scherer, 468 U.S. 183, 104 S. Ct. 3012, 82 L. Ed. 2d 139 (1984).

DISCUSSION

Deutsche Bank contends that the First Amended Complaint is vague and conclusory and therefore should be dismissed for failure to comply with Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8(a), 9(b) and 12(b)(6). The Court agrees.

I. Count I: Violation of the Clayton Antitrust Act

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "engaged in predatory conduct or anticompetitive conduct" by "monopolizing or attempting to monopolize the mortgage lending and servicing market" in violation of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12, et seq. (FAC ¶¶ 67-68, 73.) Plaintiffs seek monetary relief for this violation, presumably pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15.

Regardless of the provision purportedly violated, [*10] an antitrust plaintiff must demonstrate that the injury in question is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." [1] Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. Indeed, the antitrust laws "were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Id. at 488 (quoting Brown, 370 U.S. at 320); see also Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 901-02 (recognizing the Supreme Court's "long and consistent adherence to the principle that the antitrust laws protect the process of competition, and not the pursuits of any particular competitor").

A plaintiff seeking damages pursuant to Section 4 of the Clayton Act must show causal antitrust injury, and to obtain injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16 of the Clayton Act, a plaintiff must allege threatened antitrust injury. [2] Cargill, 479 U.S. at 109-13. The purpose of the antitrust injury requirement is to "ensure[] that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either damages or equitable relief." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum, Inc., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). As such, "[t]o show antitrust injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anticompetitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior [because] it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages [*12] for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition." Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 334); see also Cascade Health Solutions, 515 F.3d at 902 ("'Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.'") (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489).

---

[1] This is different from antitrust standing. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110-11 nn. 5-6, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) (noting that antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under Section 4 and that the standing analysis under Section 16 may differ from that for Section 4); see also Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Counsel of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535-46, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (articulating factors that courts should consider when determining whether a plaintiff has standing under Section 4); Lucas Auto. Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1232-37 (9th Cir. 1998) [*11] (examining whether a plaintiff had standing to assert claims for damages and injunctive relief under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act); Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1506-07 (9th Cir. 1996) (summarizing the factors relevant to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to pursue a damages claim under Section 4).

[2] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides treble damages to "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. Section 16 of the Clayton Act provides that "[a]ny person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief . . . against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 26.

In addition to antitrust injury, antitrust plaintiffs must also properly allege a relevant market. See Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 (9th Cir. 2008) [*13] (finding that to state a claim under either Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must sufficiently allege a relevant market). The Ninth Circuit recently addressed the legal principles that govern definition of a relevant market, and it reaffirmed that a complaint may be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) if its relevant market definition is "facially unsustainable." Id. at 1045 (citing Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436-37 (3d Cir. 1997)). The relevant market includes both the product market and the geographic market. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962); Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 n.4. As to the product market, it must "encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product." Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 (citing Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325). It must therefore include "the group of sellers or producers who have the 'actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business.'" Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1476 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1374 (9th Cir. 1989)); see also Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325 [*14] ("The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it."). "In limited settings, however, the relevant product market may be narrowed beyond the boundaries of physical interchangeability and cross-price elasticity to account for identifiable submarkets or product clusters." Thurman Indus., 875 F.2d at 1374 (citation omitted). To establish the existence of a legally cognizable submarket, "the plaintiff must be able to show (but need not necessarily establish in the complaint) that the alleged submarket is economically distinct from the general product market." Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045; see also Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325 (listing several "practical indicia" of an economically distinct submarket).

Here, contrary to the abundant weight of authority, Plaintiffs devoted merely five words of its sixty-one page complaint to defining the relevant market. Plaintiffs assert that the relevant market is the "mortgage lending and servicing market" (FAC ¶ 68), but the complaint is utterly devoid of any explanation or elaboration to support this contention. For [*15] instance, the complaint does not contain any allegations concerning economic substitutes for the proposed product market, and it is entirely unclear to the Court why Plaintiffs defined the relevant market in the way that they did. Moreover, the complaint does not even specify a relevant geographic market.

The Court is also concerned by the vagueness of Plaintiffs' allegations in support of the antitrust claim. As noted, Plaintiffs allege that "Defendants and each of them, have engaged in predatory conduct or anticompetitive conduct in an attempt to monopolize the mortgage lending and servicing market." (FAC ¶ 68.) The complaint, however, utterly fails to set forth any specific factual or legal allegations or to link those allegations to particular statutory violations. Instead, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "worked to create the collapse of the mortgage market, which in turn created an economic collapse unprecedented since the Great Depression." (FAC ¶ 71.) Such sweeping statements fail to apprise Defendants of their alleged wrongdoings.

The Supreme Court acknowledged, in a case involving an alleged Sherman Antitrust Act violation, that "a district court must retain the power to [*16] insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 528 n.17; see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558 ("[I]t is one thing to be cautious before dismissing an antitrust complaint in advance of discovery . . . , but quite another to forget that proceeding to antitrust discovery can be expensive."); Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1046-47 (9th Cir. 2008) (concluding that the Supreme Court clarified antitrust pleading requirements in Twombly "because discovery in antitrust cases frequently causes substantial expenditures and gives the plaintiff the opportunity to extort large settlements even where he does not have much of a case") (citing Twombly, 550

U.S. at 558-59). Because Plaintiffs have provided nothing more than legal conclusions in support of the antitrust claim, this claim must be dismissed.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss as to Count I of the First Amended Complaint.

II. Count II: Violations of the Hawaii Antitrust/Anti-Monopoly Acts

In Count II of the First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs rely on the factual allegations contained in Count I to [*17] assert violations of state antitrust laws. Plaintiffs state generally that "[m]ortgage lending and servicing in Hawaii is an activity in or affecting interstate commerce. . . ." (FAC ¶ 75.) Plaintiffs then allege that Defendants have violated "the Hawaii Anti-Trust Act, Hawaii Revised Statutes § 480-13, and the Hawaii Monopolization Act, Hawaii Revised Statutes § 480-9." (FAC ¶ 76.)

The close relationship between federal antitrust law and Hawaii antitrust law has been long established. See, e.g., Robert's Haw. Sch. Bus v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., Inc., 91 Haw. 224, 982 P.2d 853, 881 n.29 (Haw. 1999) (noting the similarities between Section 2 of the Sherman Act and Hawaii Revised Statute section 480-9.) Indeed, the "[l]egislative history of Hawaii's antitrust law clearly indicates that the state laws are to be interpreted and construed in harmony with analogous federal antitrust laws." Island Tobacco Co., Ltd. v. R. J. Reynolds Indus., Inc., 513 F. Supp. 726, 738 (D. Haw. 1981). Similar to federal law, therefore, Hawaii courts require plaintiffs in antitrust proceedings to plead the "nature of the competition" to "ensure that the injury results from a competition-reducing aspect of the defendant's [*18] behavior." Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 228 P.3d 303, 325 (Haw. 2010) (citing and relying on federal law).

As with Plaintiffs' Clayton Act claim, Plaintiffs' state antitrust claim is vague and conclusory and fails to set forth sufficient factual allegations to withstand a motion to dismiss. Broad assertions of state antitrust law violations of the type presented here simply do not give Defendants an opportunity to properly defend themselves. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 ("A pleading that offers labels and conclusions or a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do."). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss as to Count II of the First Amended Complaint.

III. Count III: Civil Conspiracy

Count III alleges that the Defendants "agreed, between and among themselves, to engage in actions and a course of conduct designed to further an illegal act or accomplish a legal act by unlawful means, and to commit one or more overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy to defraud the Plaintiffs." (FAC ¶ 79.) According to Plaintiffs, Defendants had a "common purpose of accruing economic gains for themselves at the expense of and detriment to the [*19] Plaintiffs." (Id. ¶ 80.)

This Count is dismissed because Hawaii does not recognize an independent cause of action for "civil conspiracy"—such theories of potential liability are derivative of other wrongs. See, e.g., Chung v. McCabe Hamilton & Renny Co., 109 Haw. 520, 128 P.3d 833, 843 (Haw. 2006); Weinberg v. Mauch, 78 Haw. 40, 890 P.2d 277, 286 (Haw. 1995). Here, in contravention of this principle, Plaintiffs did not link the claim of civil conspiracy with another cause of action. [3] Further, to the extent that this count is premised at least in part on fraud, Plaintiffs must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b) in alleging a conspiracy. See Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 765 (9th Cir. 2007) ("Rule 9(b) imposes heightened pleading requirements where the object of the conspiracy is fraudulent." (citation and internal quotations omitted)). The bald assertions contained in this claim do not satisfy Rule 9(b)'s pleading standard.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss as to Count [*20] III of the First Amended Complaint.

[3] Plaintiffs acknowledge as much in the Opposition. (See Opp'n at 8 (recognizing that "Plaintiffs may not have tied their claim of civil conspiracy to any particular cause of action . . .").)

IV. Count IV: Fraudulent Misrepresentation

Plaintiffs next allege that Defendants "knowingly and intentionally concealed material information from Plaintiffs which was required by Federal statutes and regulations to be disclosed to the Plaintiffs both before and at the time of closing." (FAC ¶ 84.) Plaintiffs also assert that Defendants "materially misrepresented or failed to disclose material information to the Plaintiffs with full knowledge by Defendants that their affirmative representations were false, fraudulent and misrepresented the truth at the time said representations were made or were omissions of material fact." (Id. ¶ 85.)

Plaintiffs' vague assertions are insufficient to satisfy Rule 9(b)'s rigorous pleading requirements, which apply to allegations of fraud or mistake. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) ("In alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake."). As noted, a plaintiff "must state the time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Alan Neuman Prods., Inc. v. Albright, 862 F.2d 1388, 1393 (9th Cir. 1988). [*21] Fraud allegations must also include the "who, what, when, where, and how" of the misconduct, and set forth "more than the neutral facts necessary to identify the transaction." See Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1124 (9th Cir. 2009).

Here, with the exception of Paragraph 86, the allegations of misconduct related to this claim are overly broad and general in nature. These assertions do not distinguish between Defendants and are plainly insufficient to meet Plaintiffs' burden under Rule 8, much less the more rigorous requirements of Rule 9(b) applicable here.

Paragraph 86, the lone paragraph that provides any clarity to the fraudulent misrepresentation claim, is similarly deficient. In this paragraph, Plaintiffs allege several instances of concealment and misrepresentation, but the complaint does not identify who specifically made these misrepresentations or how material facts were concealed from Plaintiffs. Nor do Plaintiffs specify how these representations were false. [4] Without more, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiffs' vague assertions satisfy Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirement.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss as to Count IV of the First Amended Complaint.

V. Count V: Unfair and Deceptive Acts or Practices

Plaintiffs also contend that Defendants have engaged in unfair or deceptive acts and practices in violation of Hawaii Revised Statute sections 480-2(a) and 481A-3. (FAC ¶¶ 91-103.)

Section 480-2(a) provides that "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(a). "Two distinct causes of action have emerged under [section] 480-2(a): (1) claims alleging unfair methods of competition; [*23] and (2) claims alleging unfair or deceptive acts or practices." [5] Haw. Med. Ass'n v. Haw. Med. Serv. Ass'n, Inc., 113 Haw. 77, 148 P.3d 1179, 1207 (Haw. 2006); see also Star Markets, Ltd. v. Texaco, Inc., 945 F. Supp. 1344, 1346 (D. Haw. 1996). Section 481A-3 similarly prohibits "deceptive trade practice[s]." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 481A-3.

---

[4] As to Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants "[f]alsely represented that [New Century] [*22] transferred its interest in the Mortgage to Defendants [New Century, Deutsche Bank, and Barclay]" (FAC ¶ 92(j)), this contention also fails to meet Rule 9(b)'s requirement that fraud be pleaded with particularity. In this allegation, Plaintiffs are presumably referring to the assignment from New Century to Deutsche Bank, but the complaint is completely devoid of any factual allegations to support Plaintiffs' argument that New Century did not have authority to assign the mortgage. Accordingly, this contention cannot withstand a motion to dismiss.

[5] Although "[a]ny person" may bring an action for unfair methods of competition in violation of section 480-2, only consumers, the attorney general, or the director of the office of consumer protection may bring an action for unfair or deceptive acts or practices in violation of section 480-2. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(d), (e); see also Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel, Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 228 P.3d 303, 307 (Haw. 2010). A "consumer" is a "natural person who, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, purchases, attempts to purchase, or is solicited to purchase goods or services or who commits money, property, or services in a personal investment." Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-1.

Plaintiffs contend that Defendants violated these statutes by: (1) targeting financially unsophisticated and otherwise vulnerable consumers for inappropriate credit products; (2) failing to adequately disclose [*24] the true costs and risks of the subject loan and its inappropriateness for Plaintiffs; (3) failing to disclose that the lender approved the subject loan based on financial documents required by Defendants such as tax returns and pay stubs without regard to Plaintiff' ability to sustain the loan with any reasonable means test; (4) falsely representing or failing to fully and completely disclose the amounts Plaintiffs were required to pay; (5) issuing a defective mortgage loan that resulted in little net benefit to Plaintiffs with the primary objective of generating fees; and (6) entering into the public record a materially false document. (FAC ¶ 96.)

Once again, Plaintiffs provide only labels and conclusions to support this claim. For instance, Plaintiffs have utterly failed to allege any facts to suggest that Defendants were targeting financially unsophisticated or otherwise vulnerable consumers. Nor have Plaintiffs proffered facts with respect to Defendants' failure to adequately disclose "the true costs and risks of the subject loan." There are also no factual allegations to suggest that the lender failed to disclose that it approved loans "without regard to Plaintiffs [sic] ability [*25] to sustain the loan with any reasonable means test." (Id.) Moreover, Plaintiffs' assertion that Defendants created a defective mortgage loan that resulted in little net economic benefit to Plaintiffs is so utterly lacking in factual basis that it cannot possibly satisfy federal pleading requirements.

Additionally, Plaintiffs' contentions that Defendants falsely represented the amount Plaintiffs were required to pay, and that Defendants caused to be recorded a materially false document purporting to convey an interest in the Subject Property, sound in fraud. These assertions, couched as legal conclusions, are insufficient to meet Plaintiffs' burden under Rule 8, much less the more rigorous requirements of Rule 9(b) that apply to allegations of fraud or mistake. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) (requiring a party to state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake).

In sum, the instant claim consists entirely of conclusory allegations and vague assertions, which do not satisfy federal pleading requirements and are insufficient to put Defendants on notice of the basis for Plaintiffs' claims. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (finding that a complaint does not "suffice if it [*26] tenders naked assertions devoid of further factual enhancement") (citation and quotation signals omitted). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss as to Count V of the First Amended Complaint.

VI. Count X: Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Plaintiffs next assert a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs specifically contend that they "suffered emotional distress in the form of lost sleep, constant worry and grief from the loss of their property. . . ." (FAC ¶ 132.)

"Under Hawaii law, the elements of IIED are '(1) that the act allegedly causing the harm was intentional or reckless, (2) that the act was outrageous, and (3) that the act caused (4) extreme emotional distress to another.'" Enoka v. AIG Haw. Ins. Co., 109 Haw. 537, 128 P.3d 850, 872 (Haw. 2006) (quoting Hac v. Univ. of Haw., 102 Haw. 92, 73 P.3d 46, 60-61 (Haw. 2003)). The Hawaii Supreme Court defines the term "outrageous" as conduct "'without just cause or excuse and beyond all bounds of decency.'" Enoka, 128 P.3d at 872 (quoting Lee v. Aiu, 85 Haw. 19, 936 P.2d 655, 670 n.12 (Haw. 1997)). "Moreover, 'extreme emotional distress' constitutes, inter alia, mental suffering, mental anguish, nervous [*27] shock, and other 'highly unpleasant mental reactions.'" Id. (quoting Hac, 73 P.3d at 60).

Here, Plaintiffs fail to allege any facts to support an inference that Defendants acted in an intentional or reckless manner or that they engaged in outrageous conduct or caused him to suffer severe mental and emotional distress. Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations are once again insufficient to state a claim for relief. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 ("Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.").

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss as to Count X of the First Amended Complaint.

VII. Count XIV: Negligence

Finally, Plaintiffs assert a cause of action for Negligence, stating first that Defendant New Century was negligent in its execution of the Assignments of Mortgage. (FAC ¶ 151.) Plaintiffs further state that Defendant Deutsche Bank owes Plaintiffs, as the borrower, a duty, and was negligent in its processing of the foreclosure on Plaintiffs' home because Defendant knew or should have known, amongst other things, that proper notices were not served for the sale of the property, that there is a lack of [*28] standing on the part of the foreclosing entity, and that proper licensing and registration procedures have not been followed. (Id. ¶¶ 153-54.) Plaintiffs also allege that as a result of the negligent acts, they have suffered emotional distress and attorneys fees and costs. (Id. ¶ 156.)

"It is well-established that, in order for a plaintiff to prevail on a negligence claim, the plaintiff is required to prove all four of the necessary elements of negligence: (1) duty; (2) breach of duty; (3) causation; and (4) damages. Cho v. State, 115 Haw. 373, 168 P.3d 17, 23 n. 11 (Haw. 2007) (citing Takayama v. Kaiser Found. Hosp., 82 Haw. 486, 923 P.2d 903, 915-16 (1996)). Thus, the elements of duty and breach of duty are essential elements of a negligence claim under Hawaii law.

Defendant Deutsche Bank argues that no duty exists between Plaintiffs and Defendants. (Mot. at 12-13; Reply at 7.) Indeed, "[c]ourts generally hold that lenders do not owe their borrowers a duty of care sounding in negligence." *Caraang v. PNC Mortg., F. Supp. , 795 F. Supp. 2d 1098, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65421, 2011 WL 2470637, at 23 (D. Haw. June 20, 2011) (citing *McCarty v. GCP Mgmt., LLC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122585, 2010 WL 4812763, at 6 (D. Haw. Nov. 17, 2010) (citing Champlaie v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP, 706 F. Supp. 2d 1029, 1061 (E.D. Cal. 2009) [*29] ("[A]s a matter of law, [a] lender does not owe a duty in negligence not to place borrowers in a loan even where there was a foreseeable risk borrowers would be unable to repay.")(some citations omitted))). In the instant case, Plaintiffs fail to allege facts showing that their relationship with either New Century or Deutsche Bank was anything other than a borrower-lender relationship. For that reason, Plaintiffs have not alleged facts showing that New Century or Deutsche Bank owed them a duty of care sounding in negligence. Further, to the extent Plaintiffs mentions emotional distress in their negligence claim, such a claim also fails.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss as to Count XIV.

VIII. Remaining Claims and Leave to Amend

Plaintiffs concede that the causes of action for Mistake (Count VIII), Breach of Fiduciary Duty (Count VI), Unconscionability (Count IX), Unjust Enrichment (Count VII), Violation of the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing (Count XII), Violations of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (Count XI), and Complaint to Quiet Title (Count XIII), "are unlikely to prevail as written." (Opp'n at 14.) Plaintiffs therefore request leave [*30] to amend these claims and any others that the Court finds to be deficient.

Pursuant to Rule 15(a)(2), courts should "freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires." Further, "requests for leave should be granted with extreme liberality." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 972 (9th Cir. 2009). "Dismissal without leave to amend is improper unless it is clear . . . that the complaint could not be saved by an amendment." Id. "However, 'liberality in granting leave to amend is subject to several limitations.'" Cafasso v. Gen. Dynamics C4 Sys., 637 F.3d 1047, 1058 (9th Cir. 2011) (quoting Ascon Props., Inc. v. Mobil Oil Co., 866 F.2d 1149, 1160 (9th Cir. 1989)). "Those limitations include undue prejudice to the opposing party, bad faith by the movant, futility, and undue delay." Id. (citing Ascon Props, 866 F.2d at 1160). "Further, '[t]he district court's discretion to deny leave to amend is particularly broad where plaintiff has previously amended the complaint.'" Id. (quoting Ascon Props, 866 F.2d at 1160).

Due to the deferential standard for amended complaints in this Circuit, the Court will provide Plaintiffs the opportunity to amend the complaint consistent [*31] with this Order. Accordingly, the First Amended Complaint is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE as against all Defendants in this action with leave to amend no later than 30 days from the filing of this Order. [6] Failure to file an amended complaint and to cure the pleading deficiencies will

---

[6] The Court notes that Defendant Deutsche Bank requested that Plaintiffs not be allowed to amend their antitrust claims because they are allegedly time barred. (Reply at 8.) The Court fails to reach this issue, however, as it is not entirely clear on what date result in dismissal of this action with prejudice. Plaintiffs are advised that the amended complaint must clearly state how each of the named defendants have injured them, and it must also clearly identify the statutory provisions, if any, under which Plaintiffs' claims are brought. Moreover, the Court does not here limit Plaintiffs' amended pleading only to the causes of action presently contained in the complaint—Plaintiffs may allege new theories of liability, provided that they are supported by the proper factual and legal basis.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Court GRANTS Deutsche Bank's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. # 37), DISMISSES Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint as against all Defendants, and GRANTS Plaintiffs leave to amend.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: Honolulu, Hawaii, August 23, 2011.

/s/ David Alan Ezra

David Alan Ezra

United States District Judge

End of Document

Plaintiffs antitrust claims arose. Further, because Deutsche Bank's request is first mentioned in its Reply, both parties [*32] have not had the opportunity to fully brief the issue.

LexisNexis

Delong v. TaxMasters, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

August 24, 2011, Decided; August 24, 2011, Filed

CV 11-01431-ODW (AGRx)

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94883 *; 2011 WL 3715251

Jeffrey Delong, et al. v. TaxMasters, Inc., et al.

Core Terms

consumer, refund, arbitration, allegations, customers, terms, bank account, cancel, notice, credit card, violations, practices, damages, unfair

Counsel: [*1] Attorneys Present for Plaintiffs: Not present.

Attorneys Present for Defendants: Not present.

Judges: The Honorable Otis D. Wright II, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Otis D. Wright II

Opinion

CIVIL MINUTES

Proceedings (In Chambers): ORDER GRANTING in Part and DENYING in Part Defendants's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs's Second Amended Complaint. (Dkt. No. 19.)

I. INTRODUCTION

Currently before the Court is Defendants TaxMasters, Inc. and TMIRS Enterprises, LTD's (collectively "Defendants"), Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs Jeffery Delong and Dennis Holmes's Second Amended Complaint ("SAC"), pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). In particular, the Motion seeks to dismiss only claims three through seven of the SAC. Plaintiffs have since filed an Opposition. Having carefully considered all the papers filed both in support of and in opposition to the instant Motion, the Court deems the matter appropriate for decision without oral argument. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; L.R. 7-15. For the following reasons, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED in PART and DENIED in PART.

II. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Jeffery Delong ("Delong") and Dennis Holmes ("Holmes") (collectively "Plaintiffs") were customers [*2] of TaxMasters, Inc. ("TaxMasters"), a company that performs tax relief services for individuals with federal and state tax debt problems and liabilities. (SAC ¶¶ 6, 14.) TaxMasters does not have any "brick and mortar" stores, but relies upon potential customers to call its telephone number after viewing its nationwide advertisement on television, radio, and internet. (SAC ¶¶ 15, 16.)

Individuals who call the telephone number are connected to a "representative who proposes a solution to the consumer's tax problems and then closes the deal by obtaining the consumer's credit card or bank account information. (SAC ¶ 17.) TaxMasters typically charges between $1500 to $10,000 for its services; consumers can either pay the entire fee up front or use an installment plan that usually requires a down payment. (SAC ¶ 22.) Allegedly, if a consumer asks to receive a written description of the service prior to purchasing TaxMasters's services, they are told it is not possible to generate the documents without first inputting a payment method into TaxMasters's system. (SAC ¶ 21.) Rather, Plaintiffs claim that before TaxMasters sends a consumer any written materials or contract, it charges the customer's [*3] credit card or bank account. (SAC ¶ 24.) Furthermore, Plaintiffs aver TaxMasters refuses to refund any fees collected during the initial phone call, even when asked within twenty-four hours of said phone call or when no service has been performed. (SAC ¶¶ 27, 28.)

When consumers do receive paperwork, Plaintiffs allege it contains numerous previously undisclosed terms and conditions that substantively limit and change the services described during the initial call. (SAC ¶ 25.) Terms include: a minimum charge of the retainer and/or any work preformed if a consumer wishes to cancel; work will not be preformed until full payment is made to TaxMasters; additional charges may be imposed at TaxMasters's discretion; TaxMasters may unilaterally cancel the contract without a refund should they feel a consumer is uncooperative or abusive; consumers waive any right to sue any undisclosed third party subcontracted by TaxMasters. (SAC ¶¶ 26, 29, 31.) Additionally, the paperwork contains a binding arbitration agreement, stating customers must submit to arbitration in Houston, Texas, and pay any fees associated with the arbitration. (SAC ¶ 31.) TaxMasters, on the other hand remains free to sue customers [*4] in a forum of their own choosing. (Id.)

With regard to Delong, on October 20, 2008, he contacted TaxMasters and agreed to pay $3000 for help with a tax dispute. (SAC ¶ 52.) Delong was allegedly told he could not receive the written contract until he had first authorized TaxMasters to charge his bank account. (SAC ¶ 53.) On October 21, 2008, he returned the executed engagement agreement to TaxMasters, however, he subsequently discovered the terms of the initial telephone conversation had been altered, including that the $3000 may not have been payment in full. (SAC ¶ 55.) Although he tried to cancel the contract via an October 24 fax and email, Delong received a package from TaxMasters on November 6, 2006, saying that it was moving forward with his case; Delong alleges TaxMasters back dated the letter to October 23 in an attempt to deceive him and retain his payment. (SAC ¶¶ 55, 56.) In addition, Delong claims TaxMasters refused to directly refund his $3000. (SAC ¶ 58.)

Holmes had a similar experience. He contacted TaxMasters on or about May 1, 2009, seeking help for a dispute with the IRS. (SAC ¶ 60.) Holmes was told he would be charged $3150 for TaxMasters services, which he agreed [*5] to pay on an instalment plan. (SAC ¶ 62.) A $1600 deposit was deducted from his bank account that same day. (Id.) On May 15, 2009, Holmes contacted TaxMasters to cancel his contract; at this time TaxMasters had allegedly performed no substantive work on Holmes's behalf. (SAC ¶¶ 65, 68.) TaxMasters, however, refused to provide any refund and charged Holmes an additional $1550 on July 1, 2009. (SAC ¶¶ 66, 69.)

In light of the foregoing, Plaintiffs filed a Complaint on February 16, 2011. (Dkt. No. 1.) A SAC was filed on May 9, 2011, which proceeds on seven claims: (1) recession of contract; (2) unlawful/void contract for sale of legal services; (3) injunctive relief for violation of the Consumer Legal Remedies Act ("CLRA") under California Civil Code section 1750; (4) damages for violation of CLRA; (5) violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17200 by way of section 17538; (6) violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17200 by way of CLRA; and (7) violation of the California Business and Professions Code section 17200 by way of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("DTPA") section 17.46(b)(23). (Dkt No. 16.) Defendants subsequently filed the [*6] instant Motion on June 13, 2011, seeking to dismiss claims three through seven.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

Under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a claim may be dismissed if the plaintiff fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. To overcome dismissal, the plaintiff must prove that the complaint complies with Rule 8(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure by including a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Additionally, "[the] complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face' . . . . A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged . . . . [Thus] it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)) (citations omitted) (emphasis added) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Mere "labels and conclusion" or a "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949.

"[The [*7] Court is] not, however, required to accept as true allegations that contradict exhibits attached to the complaint or matters properly subject to judicial notice, or allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." Daniels-Hall v. National Educ. Ass'n, 629 F.3d 992, 998 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Manzarek v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 519 F.3d 1025, 1031-32 (9th Cir. 2008)).

Additionally, when considering a 12(b)(6) motion, a court is generally limited to considering materials within the pleading and must construe "[a]ll factual allegations set forth in the complaint . . . as true and . . . in light most favorable to [the plaintiff]." Lee v. City of L.A., 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing Epstein v. Washington Energy Co., 83 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1996)). However, the court may consider under the "incorporation by reference doctrine" any "documents 'whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the [plaintiff's] pleading.'" Knievel v. ESPN, 393 F.3d 1068, 1076 (9th Cir. 2005) (emphasis added) (quoting In re Silicon Graphics Inc. Sec. Litigation, 183 F.3d 970, 986 (9th Cir. 1999)). [*8] Therefore, the Court will only take notice of those documents referred to in the FAC, which Plaintiffs have not contested authenticity and upon which the Court relies upon in its discussion.

IV. DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs's claims, with regard to those at issue in the instant Motion, can be broken up into two categories: (1) claims arising under CLRA, and (2) claims arising under the California Business and Professions Code section 17200, otherwise known as the Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"). The Court will address each in turn.

A. CLAIMS ARISING UNDER CLRA

Claims three, four, and six of the SAC involve allegations stemming from violations of CLRA. CLRA declares unlawful a variety of "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices" used in the sale of services to a consumer. See Cal. Civ. Code § 1770(a). A plaintiff bringing a CLRA claim must have been exposed to both an unlawful conduct, practice, or misrepresentation on behalf of the defendant, and suffered some type of damage. Meyer v. Sprint Spectrum L.P., 45 Cal. 4th 634, 641, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 859, 200 P.3d 295 (2009); Wilens v. TD Waterhouse Grp., Inc., 120 Cal. App. 4th 746, 754, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 271 (Ct. App. 2003).

In order to maintain a claim for damages under CLRA, [*9] a plaintiff must provide a defendant with a written notice that identifies the "methods, acts, or practices declared unlawful . . . . thirty days prior to the commencement of an action for damages." Cal. Civ. Code § 1782(a), (a)(1). Defendants argue Plaintiffs failed to comply with this statute because the only written notice they received explaining the alleged CLRA violations was a February 14, 2011 certified letter from Delong, sent only two days before the Complaint was filed.

Plaintiffs aver that Delong complied with section 1782 in that "[o]nly after Defendant[s] failed to respond and rectify their practices within 30 days" of the February 14 letter "did [Delong] file the First Amended Complaint (FAC) on March 23, 2011[,] adding a claim for damages under the CLRA." (Opp'n at 21.) While it may be true that the third claim in the Complaint arose under CLRA, Plaintiffs specifically limit the claim to "injunctive and other equitable relief." (Compl. ¶¶ 91, 92.) Importantly, a claim for injunctive relief does not need to meet the stringent notice requirement of section 1782(a) See Cal. Civ. Code § 1782(d). Indeed, because Plaintiffs initially limited themselves to injunctive relief [*10] and amended the Complaint to include damages only after thirty days had passed since the February 14 letter was delivered to Defendants, Defendants's argument of insufficient notice under CLRA is unavailing.

With regard to the actual elements of the claim, Plaintiffs contend Defendants intended to trick consumers into purchasing its product through "bait and switch tactics," part of which was misrepresenting the terms and up-front fees through substantively and procedurally unconscionable clauses in its standard-form contracts. [1] (SAC ¶¶ 100-01, 121, 130, 132.) Here, the engagement agreement includes a clause for binding arbitration to be held in Houston, Texas-also where the headquarters of TaxMasters is located-with all costs to be paid by the consumer, no matter the outcome of the arbitration. (Compl. Exh. A at 8.) Not only does the consumer have no opportunity to negotiate the terms of the contract before payment is made, as they allegedly do not receive the contract until after TaxMasters charges their credit card or bank account, but the Court finds that the arbitration agreement lacks at least "a modicum of bilaterality," id. at 998, because it does not require Defendants to [*11] use arbitration in settling its disputes nor do Defendants bear any burden for the costs of arbitration. Thus the court finds the arbitration agreement both procedurally and substantively unconscionable.

CLRA section 1780(b) makes the insertion of unconscionable provisions into a contract unlawful pursuant to section 1770(a)(19). Moreover, Plaintiffs allege Defendants intentionally omitted the fact they do not have a refund policy, and had Plaintiffs known that the retainer was not refundable, they would not have provided Defendants with their credit card and/or electronic funds transfer information. (SAC ¶¶ 103-08.) Viewed in this light, the Court finds that Plaintiffs properly identified an unlawful act, conduct, and/or misrepresentation that caused damages when Defendants refused to refund consumers' money after consumers canceled their contracts. Defendants's Motion is DENIED as to these claims.

B. CLAIMS ARISING UNDER THE UCL

Claims five and seven involve allegations stemming from violations of the UCL. California Business and Professions Code section 17200 indicates that a claim may be brought against a defendant for any "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice . . . ." Additionally, Plaintiffs must sufficiently allege that (1) they have lost money or property sufficient to constitute an injury in fact under Article III of the Constitution, [*13] and (2) there is a causal connection between Defendant's alleged UCL violation and Plaintiff's injury in fact. See Rubio v. Capital One Bank, 613 F.3d 1195, 1203-04 (9th Cir. 2010).

"An act is 'unlawful' under section 17200 if it violates an underlying state or federal statute or common law . . . . An act is 'unfair' if the act threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law . . . . A practice is 'fraudulent'

---

[1] Although Defendants do not argue their contract terms are conscionable, the Court finds it prudent in its analysis to review whether or not some of the terms in the contract are unconscionable, particularly the arbitration agreement. Under California law, an arbitration agreement is unenforceable if it is both procedurally and substantively unconscionable. Davis v. O'Melveny & Myers, 485 F.3d 1066, 1072 (9th Cir. 2007). A clause is procedurally unconscionable when it is oppressive-when there is inequality in bargaining power between the parties to a contract, resulting in no real opportunity to negotiate the terms of the contract and the absence of meaningful choice. Pokorny v. Quixtar, Inc., 601 F.3d 987, 996 (9th Cir. 2010). To determine if a clause is substantively unconscionable, "the focus of the inquiry is whether the term is one-sided and will have an overly harsh effect on the disadvantaged party. . . . Thus, mutuality is the 'paramount' consideration when assessing substantive [*12] unconscionability." Id. at 997 (citation omitted).

if members of the public are likely to be deceived . . . ." *Quintero Family Trust v. OneWest Bank, F.S.B., No. 09-CV-1561-IEG, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6618, 2010 WL 392312, at 12 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 27, 2010). Allegations of fraudulent conduct under section 17200 must satisfy the heightened pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) ("Rule 9(b)"). See Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103-05 (9th Cir. 2003). Rule 9(b) demands that "averments of fraud must be accompanied by 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." Id. at 1106 (citation omitted).

Defendants's argue ad nauseum that the SAC fails because it does not properly allege [*14] the heightened pleading requirements of fraud. (See Mot. at 6-12.) While Plaintiffs's claim for fraud under section 17200 may be exiguously plead under Rule 9(b), the Court cannot overlook Plaintiffs's concurrent argument that Defendants's conduct was unlawful and unfair because they failed to comply with UCL section 17538. (See SAC ¶¶ 138, 160.)

Section 17538(a), states,

> It is unlawful in the sale . . . of goods or services, for any person conducting sales [] [] by telephone, the Internet or other electronic means of communication . . . to accept payment from or for a buyer . . . and then permit 30 days, unless otherwise conspicuously stated in the offering or advertisement, or unless a shorter time is clearly communicated by the person conducting the sale or lease, to elapse without doing any one of the following things:
> (1) Shipping, mailing, or providing the goods or services ordered.
>
> (2) Mailing a full refund or, if payment was made by means of a transfer from an account, (A) crediting the account in the full amount of the debit, or (B) if a third party is the creditor, issuing a credit memorandum to the third party, who shall promptly credit the account in the full amount of the [*15] debit.

Additionally, under section17538(d), a company doing business through the internet or any other electronic means is required to notify consumers of its refund policy in writing before accepting payment.

In this case, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants have violated multiple aspects of section 17538 through their practices and contract terms. More pointedly, Plaintiffs allege Defendants charged customers credit cards or bank accounts for future services, yet failed to provide a full refund within thirty days after customers asked for the agreement to be canceled; even when the request was made within twenty-four hours of the initial phone call and charge. Moreover, Plaintiffs claim terms agreed to during the initial phone call with Defendant were substantively different than the terms laid out in the written contract, making the terms obscure, unclear, and unconscionable. Accepting these facts as true, which the Court must do at this stage of the litigation, it becomes apparent that Plaintiffs properly allege Defendants's conduct violated Section 17538(a)(2). In turn, Defendants acted unlawfully and caused damages to Plaintiffs when the money was not refunded and/or interest was [*16] lost on said money during the time it was unlawfully held. Plaintiffs, therefore, properly allege a claim for an unlawful breach of section 17200. It is unnecessary at this time for the Court to determine whether or not Defendants failed to comply with sections 17538(a)(1), (d), as alleged by Plaintiffs. (See SAC ¶¶ 29, 143, 148-52.) Defendants's Motion is DENIED as to these claims.

2. The Texas DTPA

Finally, the Court cannot entertain Plaintiffs's claim for a violation of California Business and Professions Code section 17200 by way of the Texas DTPA section 17.46(b)(23). Under the Erie Doctrine, a federal court sitting in diversity must apply the substantive law of the forum state. Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938) ("Except in matters governed by the Federal Constitution or by Acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the State."). There is no choice-of-law clause apparent in the engagement agreement. Thus, in this diverse federal action where the forum state is California, any substantive law the Court is to consider must be that of California. See, e.g., Bridge Fund Capital Corp. v. Fastbucks Franchise Corp., 622 F.3d 996, 1002 (9th Cir. 2010) [*17] (holding California law should be applied to a diversity action brought in a California federal court rather than Texas law, even when there was a choice-of-law provision in the contract). This fatal error cannot be cured. Defendant's motion is GRANTED as to the seventh cause of action WITH PREJUDICE.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that Plaintiffs properly alleged claims under CLRA and section 17200, except as to the Texas DTPA. Consequently, Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED in PART without leave to amend and DENIED in Part.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

End of Document

In re TFT-Lcd Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

August 24, 2011, Decided; August 24, 2011, Filed

No. M 07-1827 SI, MDL No. 1827; No. C 10-4945 SI

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97466 *; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,590; 2011 WL 3738985

IN RE: TFT-LCD (FLAT PANEL) ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Order Relates To: TARGET CORPORATION, et al., Plaintiffs, v. AU OPTRONICS CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by Jaco Elecs., Inc. v. AU Optronics Corp. (In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig.), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96738 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 26, 2011)

Prior History: In re TFT-Lcd Antitrust Litig., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97465 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 24, 2011)

Core Terms

purchasers, allegations, defendants', motion to dismiss, indirect, retroactive, conspiracy, damages, anti trust law, antitrust, courts, indirect-purchaser

Counsel: [*1] Martin Quinn (3:07-md-01827-SI), Special Master, Pro se, San Francisco, CA.

Mr. Daniel Weinstein (3:07-md-01827-SI), Special Master, Pro se, San Francisco, CA.

For Giles Patricia, 07-3078 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Samuel W. Lanham, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Lanham & Blackwell, Bangor, ME; Ian Otto, Straus & Boies LLP, Fairfax, VA.

For Gina Cerda, 07-1339 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Linda Klare, 07-1339, Plaintiffs: Mario Nunzio Alioto, Trump Alioto Trump & Prescott LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For ATS Claim, LLC, 09-1115 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: David Paul Germaine, LEAD ATTORNEY, David Paul Germaine, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Chicago, IL; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Daniel L. Warshaw, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny LLP, Sherman Oaks, CA; Eric B. Fastiff, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Hilary Kathleen Ratway, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hausfeld, LLP, Washington, DC; Andrew Scirica Kingsdale, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA; Brendan Patrick Glackin, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson, [*2] Simon, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hewlett-Packard Company, Interested Party (5/19/09), 10-5577 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Beatrice B. Nguyen, Gregory D. Call, Esq., LEAD ATTORNEY, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bryan Leach, Fred H. Bartlit, Jr., Karma Micaela Giulianelli, Lester Houtz, PRO HAC VICE, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Denver, CO; Mark E Ferguson, Barlitt Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott, Chicago, Il; Mark S. Ouweleen, Attorney at Law, Bartlit Beck Herman Palenchar & Scott LLP, Chicago, IL; Suzanne E. Rode, Crowell & Moring LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For BellSouth Telecommunications, Inc., 09-4997, Pacific Bell Telephone Company, 09-4997, Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, 09-4997 (3:07-md-01827-SI), AT & T Corp., 09-4997, AT & T Datacomm, Inc., 09-4997, AT &

T Mobility LLC, 09-4997, AT & T Operations, Inc., 09-4997, AT & T Services, Inc., 09-4997, Plaintiff: Christopher T. Leonardo, Kenneth L. Adams, R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC; Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Crowell & Moring LLP, Liaison Counsel for [*3] Direct Aciton Plaintiffs, Washington, DC; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA; Joshua C. Stokes, Crowell & Moring LLP.

For Nokia Corporation, 09-5609, Nokia Inc., 09-5609 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Brian Parker Miller, Donald MacKaye Houser, Joann Elizabeth Johnston, Kacy Christine McCaffrey, Lisa Kathleen Bojko, Matthew D. Richardson, Peter Konito, Valarie Cecile Williams, PRO HAC VICE, Donald MacKaye Houser, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Matthew Scott Orrell, Atlanta, GA; Randall Lee Allen, Alston and Bird, Menlo Park, CA; Richard W. Stimson, Alston & Bird LLP, Dallas, TX.

For Motorola, Inc., 09-5840 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jeffrey H. Howard, PRO HAC VICE, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Crowell & Moring LLP, Liaison Counsel for Direct Aciton Plaintiffs, Washington, DC; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA; R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC.

For Electrograph Systems, Inc., 10-117, Electrograph Technologies, Corp., 10-117 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Jason C. Murray, Crowell & Moring LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Philip J. Iovieno, Boies, [*4] Schiller & Flexner LLP, Albany, NY; William A. Isaacson, Boies Schiller & Flexner, Washington, DC.

For Dell Inc., 10-1064, Dell Products, L.P., 10-1064 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Andrew Jacob Tuck, Debra Dawn Bernstein, Elizabeth Helmer Jordan, Matthew David Kent, Michael P. Kenny, Rodney J Ganske, Alston & Bird LLP, Atlanta, GA; Steven Daniel Hemminger, Alston & Bird LLP, Menlo Park, CA.

For Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Joseph M. Alioto, Sr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Alioto Law Firm, San Francisco, CA; Daniel R. Shulman, Gray, Plant, Mooty, Mooty & Bennett, P.A., Minneapolis, MN; Derek G. Howard, Minami Tamaki LLP, San Francisco, CA; Michael Morteza Kowsari, Attorney at Law, Los Angeles, CA; Stephen Gerard Larson, Girardi & Keese, Los Angeles, CA; Steven J Foley, Hellmuth and Johnson PLLC, Edina, MN Unites Sta; Gregory W. Landry, LaMarca & Landry, P.C.; Marvin A. Miller, Miller Law LLC.

For State of Oregon, 10-4346, ex rel. John Kroger, Attorney General (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Blake Lee Harrop, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, IL; Brady R. Johnson, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Michael E. Haglund, Michael K. Kelley, [*5] Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilde LLP, Portland, OR; Tim David Nord, Oregon Department of Justice, Financial Fraud/Consumer Protection, Salem, OR.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Joseph Richard Saveri, Lieff, Cabraser, Heiman & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Aaron M. Sheanin, Girard Gibbs LLP, San Francisco, CA; Andrew Scirica Kingsdale, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA; Brendan Patrick Glackin, Eric B. Fastiff, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Richard Martin Heimann, Lieff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA.

For Tracfone Wireless, Inc., 10-3205, (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: David Bedford Esau, James Blaker Baldinger, Carlton Fields, P.A., West Palm Beach, FL; Robert L. Ciotti, Carlton Fields, Tampa, FL.

For State of Missouri, 10-3619, ex rel. Chris Koster, Attorney General (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Anne E. Schneider, Attorney General of Missouri; Liaison Counsel for the State Actions, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jefferson City, MO.

For State of Arkansas, 10-3619, ex rel. Dustin McDaniel, Attorney General (3:07-md-01827-SI), [*6] Plaintiff: David A. Curran, Assistant Attorney General, Little Rock, AR.

For State of Michigan, 10-3619, ex rel. Michael A. Cox, Attorney General (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Mary Elizabeth Lippitt, Michigan Attorney General, Assistant Attorney General, Lansing, MI.

For State of Missouri, 10-3619, ex rel. Chris Koster, Attorney General (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Andrew McNally Hartnett, Office of the Missouri Attorney General, Jefferson City, MO; Anne E. Schneider, Attorney General of Missouri, Consumer Protection, Jefferson City, MO.

For State of West Virginia, 10-3619, ex rel Darrell McGraw, Attorney General (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Douglas Lee Davis, Attorney General, Consumer Protection and Antitrust, Charleston, WV; Jill L. Miles, Assistant Attorney General, Charleston, WV.

For State of Wisconsin, 10-3619, ex rel J.B. Van Hollen, Attorney General (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Gwendolyn J. Cooley, Wisconsin Attorney General, Madison, WI.

For State of Florida, Office of the Attorney General, Department of Legal Affairs 10-3517 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Eli Friedman, Nicholas J. Weilhammer, Office of the Attorney General, State of Florida, Tallahassee, FL; Lizabeth Ann [*7] Leeds Brady, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Division, Tallahassee, FL; Liaison Counsel for the State Actions, Tallahassee, FL; Robert Scott Palmer, Office of the Attorney General, Anititrust Division, State of Florida, Tallahassee, FL.

For Best Buy Co., Inc., 10-4572, Best Buy Enterprise Services, Inc., 10-4572, Best Buy Purchasing LLC, 10-4572, Best Buy Stores, L.P., 10-4572, Magnolia Hi-Fi, Inc., 10-4572 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: David Martinez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi L.L.P., Los Angeles, CA; Matthew David Taggart, LEAD ATTORNEY, Attorney at Law, Robins Kaplan Miller and Ciresi LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Elliot S. Kaplan, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi, Minneapolis, MN; K. Craig Wildfang, Attorney at Law, Minneapolis, MN; Roman M. Silberfeld, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi L.L.P., Los Angeles, CA.

For Target Corp., 10-4945, Kmart Corp, 10-4945, Sears, Roebuck and Co., 10-4945, Good Guys, Inc., 10-4945, Newegg Inc., 10-4945, Old Comp Inc., 10-4945, Radioshack Corp., 10-4945 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Christopher T. Leonardo, Kenneth L. Adams, R. Bruce Holcomb, Adams Holcomb LLP, Washington, DC; Jason C. Murray, Jeffrey H. Howard, Crowell & Moring LLP, [*8] Washington, DC; Jerome A. Murphy, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC; Joshua Courtney Stokes, Crowell & Moring, Los Angeles, CA.

For Eastman Kodak Company, 10-5452 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: John R. Foote, Karl David Belgum, Nixon Peabody LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For SB Liquidation Trust, 10-5458 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Allan Diamond, Jason Paul Fulton, Jim McCarthy, Diamond McCarthy LLP, Dallas, TX; Erica W. Harris, Susan Godfrey LLP, Houston, TX; Marc M. Seltzer, Ryan Christopher Kirkpatrick, Steven Gerald Sklaver, Susman Godfrey LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Costco Wholesale Corp., 11-0058 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Cori G. Moore, Noah G. Purcell, Perkins Coil LLP, Seattle, WA; David J. Burman, Perkins Coie LLP, Seattle, WA; Troy Philip Sauro, Perkins Coie LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Sony Computer Entertainment America, LLC, 10-5616, (10-5620 - voluntery dismissa), Sony Electronics, Inc., 10-5616, (10-5620 - voluntary dismissal) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: David Mark Goldstein, Esq., Shannon Christine Leong, Stephen V. Bomse, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA; Richard James Mooney, Robert L. Stolebarger, Holme Roberts & Owen LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For [*9] Alfred H. Siegel, 10-5625, as Trustee of the Circuit City Stores, Inc. Liquidating Trust (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: David Humberto Orozco, Marc M. Seltzer, Susman Godfrey LLP, Los Angeles, CA; H. Lee Godfrey, Kenneth S. Marks, Susman Godfrey LLP, Houston, TX; Jordan Connors, Parker C. Folse, III, Susman Godfrey LLP, Seattle, WA.

For State of New York, 11-0711 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Geralyn Jeanette Trujillo, Richard L. Schwartz, Office of the Attorney General, State of New York, New York, NY; Jeremy R. Kasha, New York State Office of the Attorney General (NYC), New York, NY; John Andrew Ioannou, New York State Attorney General's Office, Antitrust Bureau, New York, NY.

For MetroPCS Wireless Inc., 11-0829 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Plaintiff: Philip J. Iovieno, LEAD ATTORNEY, Philip J. Iovieno Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Albany, NY; Anne M. Nardacci, Boies Schiller & Flexner LLP, Albany, NY; Lewis Titus LeClair, Mike McKool, Jr., Scott R Jacobs, McKool Smith, P.C., Dallas, TX; William A. Isaacson, Boies Schiller & Flexner, Washington, DC.

For LG Display Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115) formerly known as LG Philips LCD Co., LTD. (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Michael Robert Lazerwitz, [*10] LEAD ATTORNEY, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton, Washington, DC; Arman Oruc, Jane Lee, Jonathan Lin, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP, Washington, DC; Jeremy James Calsyn, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP, Washington, DC.

For Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Samsung Electronics America, Inc. (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Steven D Sassaman, Timothy C. Hester, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel M Suleiman, Derek Ludwin, Neil K. Roman, Robert D. Wick, Theodore Paul Metzler, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC.

For Sharp Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115), Sharp Electronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Jacob R. Sorensen, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Anne Benton Kaldor, Kristen A. Palumbo, Erin Alysa Smart, Bingham McCutchen LLP, San Francisco, CA; Colin C. West, McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enersen, LLP, San Francisco, CA; John M. Grenfell, Lindsay A. Lutz, Ryan Takemoto, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw PittmanLLP, San Francisco, CA; Kenneth I. Schacter, Richard S. Taffet, Bingham McCutchen LLP, New York, NY; Jon R. Roellke, [*11] Bingham McCutchen.

For Toshiba Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Toshiba America Electronics Components, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115), Toshiba Mobile Display Co., Ltd., Defendants: Christopher M. Curran, Kristen Jentsch McAhren, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case LLP, Washington, DC; John H. Chung, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Toshiba Matsushita Display Technology Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: John H. Chung, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case LLP, New York, NY; Wayne A. Cross, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Hitachi Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115), Hitachi Displays, Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Kent Michael Roger, Michelle Minju Kim-Szrom, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA; John Clayton Everett, Jr., PRO HAC VICE, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP, Washington, DC.

For Hitachi Electronic Devices (USA), Inc., (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Kent Michael Roger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michelle Minju Kim-Szrom, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA; Courtney Lynn Landis, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, San Francisco, CA; John Clayton Everett, Jr., PRO HAC VICE, [*12] Morgan, Lewis & Bockius LLP, Washington, DC.

For AU Optronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Christopher Alan Nedeau, LEAD ATTORNEY, Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Bryan B. Barnhart, Carl Lawrence Blumenstein, Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jessica Rae Madrigal, Nossaman Guthner Knox Elliott, San Francisco, CA; Kirk Christopher Jenkins, Sedgwick Detert Moran Arnold, Chicago, IL; Michael F. Healy, Esq., Sedwick Detert Moran & Arnold LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For AU Optronics Corporation America, (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: John C. McGuire, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sedgwick, Detert, Moran & Arnold, Newark, NJ; Matthew Clark Lovell, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sedgwick LLP, San Francisco, CA; Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Bryan B. Barnhart, Carl Lawrence Blumenstein, Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Christopher Alan Nedeau, Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Jason Haruo Wilson, Willenken Wilson Loh & Lieb LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Jessica Rae Madrigal, Nossaman Guthner Knox Elliott, San Francisco, CA; Kirk Christopher Jenkins, Sedgwick Detert Moran Arnold, Chicago, IL; Michael F. Healy, Esq., Sedwick Detert Moran & Arnold LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics [*13] USA, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Nathan Loy Walker, LEAD ATTORNEY, WilmerHale, Palo Alto, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Brent J. Gurney, Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Steven F. Cherry, Therese Lee, PRO HAC VICE, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Wilmer Cutler, Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For Chunghwa Picture Tubes Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Joel Steven Sanders, Joel Calcar Willard, Rachel S. Brass, Rebecca Justice Lazarus, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; William S Farmer, Collette Erickson Farmer & O'Neill LLP, San Francisco, CA; Robert W. Tarun, Roxane C. Busey, Baker & McKenzie LLP.

For Hannstar Display Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Christoher M. Wyant, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hugh Frederick Bangasser, Julie Anne Halter, Ramona M. Emerson, K&L Gates LLP, Seattle, WA; Donald H. Mullins, [*14] Badgley Mullins Law Group PLLC, Seattle, WA; Hugh Frederick Bangasser, K&L Gates, Seattle, WA; Ismail Jomo Ramsey, Ramsey & Ehrlich LLP, Berkeley, CA; Jeffrey L. Bornstein, K&L Gates LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mark K. Davis, PRO HAC VICE, Badgley Mullins Law Group PLLC, Seattle, WA; Mary Kelly Persyn, Ramsey & Ehrlich LLP, Berkeley, CA.

For Samsung Semiconductor, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jeffrey Michael Davidson, Steven D Sassaman, Timothy C. Hester, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel M Suleiman, Derek Ludwin, Neil K. Roman, Robert D. Wick, Theodore Paul Metzler, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC; Tyler Mark Cunningham, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton, San Francisco, CA.

For CMO Japan Co., Ltd., (D, I, 09-1115) Nexgen Mediatech, Inc. ("Nexgen"), (D, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendants: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and [*15] Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA.

For Chi Mei Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA.

For Nexgen Mediatech USA Inc, (D, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Caren K. Khoo, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale & Dorr, New York, NY; John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Brent J. Gurney, Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Steven F. Cherry, Therese Lee, PRO HAC VICE, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra [*16] D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Wilmer Cutler, Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics Corporation, (D, I, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: John Lyle Williams, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Manchester, Williams & Seibert, San Jose, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA.

For IPS Alpha Technology, LTD., (D), dismissed from IP amended complaint on 2/21/08 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Kent Michael Roger, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Epson Electronics America, Inc., (D), Dismissed as a indirect purchaser defendant on 4/1/08 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Jeffrey E. Faucette, LEAD ATTORNEY, Taylor & Company Law Offices, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Kevin C. McCann, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul Hastings Janofsky & Walker LLP, San Francisco, CA; Derek Francis Foran, Morrison & Foerster LLP, San Francisco, CA; Kimberly Linnell Taylor, Carr, McClellan, Ingersoll, Thompson & Horn, Burlingame, CA; Melvin R. Goldman, [*17] Morrison & Foerster, San Francisco, CA; Sean David Unger, Paul, Hastings, Janofsky & Walker LLP, San Francisco, CA; Stephen P. Freccero, Morrison & Foerster LLP, San Francisco, CA; Stephen E. Taylor, Taylor & Company Law Offices, LLP, San Francisco, CA; David Lawrence Meyer, Morrison & Foerster, Washington, DC United Sta.

For Tatung Company of America, Inc. ("Tatung America"), (D, 09-1115) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Bruce H. Jackson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker & McKenzie, San Francisco, CA; Joel Steven Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joel Calcar Willard, Rebecca Justice Lazarus, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Karen Sewell, PRO HAC VICE, Baker & McKenzie LLP, Chicago, Il; Nancy Chung Allred, Robert Walter Tarun, Baker & McKenzie

LLP, San Francisco, CA; Patrick J. Ahern, PRO HAC VICE, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL; Roxane C. Busey, PRO HAC VICE, BAker & McKenzie LLP, Chicago, IL.

For LG Display America, Inc., (D, I, 09-1115) formerly known as LG Philips LCD America, Inc. (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Michael Robert Lazerwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton, Washington, DC; Arman Oruc, Jane Lee, Jonathan Lin, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP, Washington, DC; Jeremy [*18] James Calsyn, Katerina S Colitti, PRO HAC VICE, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP, Washington, DC.

For Au Optronics Corporation America, Inc, 09-4997 (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Allison Marie Dibley, Esq., Nossaman LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mitsui & Co. (Taiwan), Limited, (D) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Lisa Cox Ghannoum, Michael Edward Mumford, Baker Hostetler LLP, Cleveland, OH; Peter Wethrell James, Baker Hostetler, Los Angeles, CA; Ernest E. Vargo, Baker & Hostetler LLC; Tracy Lynn Cole, Baker & Hostetler LLP.

For Sanyo Consumer Electronics Co., Ltd., (D) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Allison Ann Davis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA; Sam N. Dawood, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA; Nick Steven Verwolf, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, Bellevue, WA.

For Samsung SDI America, Inc., Samsung SDI Co., Ltd., Defendant: Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chimei Innolux Corp. (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Leon B. Greenfield, Stephanie K. Wood, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC; Samantha [*19] Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Adam Michael Raviv, Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP, Washington, DC.

For Philips Electronics North America Corporation (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Brendan P. Cullen, Sullivan & Cromwell, Palo Alto, CA.

For Tatung Company (3:07-md-01827-SI), Defendant: Joel Steven Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Patrick J. Ahern, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL.

For Apple Inc. (3:07-md-01827-SI), Interested Party: Caroline Nason Mitchell, Robert Allan Mittelstaedt, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For State of California (3:07-md-01827-SI), Amicus: Adam Miller, LEAD ATTORNEY, CA Dept of Justice, San Francisco, CA; Emilio Eugene Varanini, IV, State Attorney General's Office, San Francisco, CA.

For United States Antitrust Division,Department of Justice (3:07-md-01827-SI), Intervenor: Peter K. Huston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA; Alexandra Jill Shepard, David J. Ward, Heather S. Tewksbury, Michael L. Scott, U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA.

For State [*20] of Illinois (3:07-md-01827-SI), Intervenor: Blake Lee Harrop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, IL; Brady R. Johnson, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Michael E. Haglund, Michael K. Kelley, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilde LLP, Portland, OR.

For State of Washington, 10-5711 (plaintiff) (3:07-md-01827-SI), Intervenor: Brady R. Johnson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Blake Lee Harrop, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, IL; Jonathan A Mark, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Michael E. Haglund, Michael K. Kelley, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilde LLP, Portland, OR; Tina E. Kondo, Senior Assistant Attorney General, Seattle, WA.

For NEC LCD Technologies, Ltd. (3:07-md-01827-SI), Intervenor: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Best Buy Co., Inc. (3:10-cv-04572-SI), Best Buy Purchasing LLC, Best Buy Enterprise Services, Inc., Best Buy Stores, L.P., Magnolia Hi-Fi, Inc., Plaintiffs: David Martinez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Roman M. Silberfeld, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi L.L.P., Los Angeles, CA; Elliot S. Kaplan, PRO HAC VICE, Lauren E. [*21] Wood, PRO HAC VICE, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi L.L.P., Minneapolis, MN; K. Craig Wildfang, Attorney at Law, Minneapolis, MN.

For BestBuy.com, L.L.C. (3:10-cv-04572-SI), Plaintiff: David Martinez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi L.L.P., Los Angeles, CA.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics Corp., Chi Mei Optoelectronics, USA, Inc., CMO Japan Co., Ltd., Defendants: Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Micah Galvin Block, Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk and Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Sandra D West, Davis Polk Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA.

For Chunghwa Picture Tubes, LTD. (3:10-cv-04572-SI), Defendant: Rachel S. Brass, Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Hannstar Display Corp. (3:10-cv-04572-SI), Defendant: Christopher M. Wyant, K&L Gates LLP, Seattle, WA; Ramona M. Emerson, K&L GATES, Seattle, WA.

For LG Display Co., Ltd., (3:10-cv-04572-SI), LG Display America, Inc., Defendants: Michael Robert Lazerwitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton, Washington, DC.

Judges: SUSAN ILLSTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SUSAN ILLSTON

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS TARGET'S FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT

Now before the [*22] Court is defendants' joint motion to dismiss the first amended complaint ("FAC") of plaintiffs Target Corporation; Sears, Roebuck and Co.; Kmart Corporation; Old Comp Inc.; Good Guys, Inc.; Radioshack Corporation; and Newegg Inc. (collectively, "Target"). Pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7-1(b), the Court finds this matter suitable for decision without oral argument and therefore VACATES the hearing currently scheduled for August 26, 2011. Having considered the arguments presented in the moving papers, the Court hereby GRANTS IN PART defendants' motion.

BACKGROUND

Target filed this antitrust action in 2010, seeking to "recover the damages [it] incurred as a result of a long-running conspiracy by manufacturers of liquid crystal display panels ('LCD Panels')." FAC at ¶1. The FAC alleges that "[d]efendants and their co-conspirators formed an international cartel illegally to restrict competition in the United States in the market for LCD Panels." Id. at ¶2. The FAC includes claims under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and under the laws of a number of different states. FAC at ¶¶218-55. It names as defendants entities from nine corporate families: AU Optronics [1] ("AUO"); Chi Mei [2]; Chunghwa [*23] Pictures Tubes [3]; Epson [4]; Hannstar [5]; LG [6]; Samsung [7]; Sharp [8]; and Toshiba [9].

[1] AU Optronics Corporation and AU Optronics Corporation America.

[2] Chi Mei Corporation, Chi Mei Optoelectronics Corporation, Chi Mei Optoelectronics USA, Inc., CMO Japan Co. Ltd., Nexgen Mediatech, Inc., and Nexgen Mediatech USA, Inc.

[3] Chunghwa Pictures Tubes Ltd. and Tatung Company of America, Inc.

[4] Epson Imaging Devices Corporation and Epson Electronics America, Inc.

[5] Hannstar Display Corporation.

[6] LG Display Co. Ltd. and LG Display America, Inc.

On July 5, 2011, defendants filed a joint motion to dismiss Target's FAC. Defendants' motion takes issue with three aspects of the FAC. First, defendants claim that the FAC impermissibly relies on group pleading and fails to describe each defendant's role in the conspiracy. Second, defendants argue that the FAC does not adequately identify the purchases of LCD panels [*24] that Target made directly from defendants. Third, defendants assert that Target may not recover under the antitrust laws of New York, Nebraska, and Nevada for LCD purchases it made before those states granted standing to indirect purchasers.

LEGAL STANDARD

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint that fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). This "facial plausibility" standard requires the plaintiff to allege facts that add up to "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). While courts do not require "heightened fact pleading of specifics," a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 544, 555.

In deciding whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief may be granted, the Court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences [*25] in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). However, the Court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).

DISCUSSION

As mentioned above, defendants' motion challenges only three aspects of Target's complaint: (1) Target's use of "group pleading"; (2) Target's allegations of direct-purchaser claims; and (3) Target's attempt to recover under the antitrust laws of New York, Nevada, and Nebraska for the full time period of the alleged conspiracy.

I. Adequacy of Group Pleading

Defendants claim that Target's FAC should be dismissed because it does not allege facts particular to each defendant. They argue that the FAC "lump[s] together two dozen parent and subsidiary companies" in an attempt to "bring the entire corporate family into the case as one amalgamated defendant." Motion at 7; see also, e.g., FAC at ¶46 ("Defendants AU Optronics Corporation and AU Optronics Corporation America, Inc. are referred to collectively herein as 'AU Optronics.'"); FAC at ¶¶ 53 (same for Chi Mei entities), [*26] 56 (Chunghwa), 59 (Epson), 63 (LG), 67 (Samsung), 70 (Sharp), 75 (Toshiba).

This Court has previously evaluated similar "group pleading" allegations in this multi-district litigation. In In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d 1179 (N.D. Cal. 2009), the Court found that the direct-purchaser plaintiffs and the indirect-purchaser plaintiffs had both stated valid claims against defendants, despite their use of group pleading. Id. at 1184.

---

[7] Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd., Samsung Semiconductor, Inc., and Samsung Electronics America, Inc.

[8] Sharp Corporation and Sharp Electronics Corporation.

[9] Toshiba Corporation, Toshiba America Electronics Components, Inc., Toshiba Mobile Display Technology Co., Ltd, and Toshiba America Information Systems, Inc..

Target's FAC, filed well after the Court issued the above order, bears a predictable resemblance to the direct- and indirect-purchaser complaints. The FAC alleges that the alleged conspiracy was organized at the highest level of the defendant organizations and carried out by both executives and subordinate employees. FAC at ¶104; see also In re TFT LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1184-85. It alleges that the conspiracy was implemented by subsidiaries and distributors within a corporate family, and that "individual participants entered into agreements on behalf of, and reported these meetings and discussions to, their respective corporate families." FAC at ¶156; In re TFT LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1184-85. [*27] Target also alleges that "the individual participants in conspiratorial meetings and discussions did not always know the corporate affiliation of their counterparts, nor did they distinguish between the entities within a corporate family." FAC at ¶156; In re TFT LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 599 F. Supp. 2d at 1184-85. In addition, Target's FAC contains a detailed description of actions taken in furtherance of the conspiracy both by defendants and their American subsidiaries. See FAC at ¶¶103-124, 125-34.

The Court finds that the allegations in Target's FAC are sufficient to put the defendants on notice of the charges against them. Accordingly, it DENIES defendants' motion to dismiss based on Target's use of group pleading.

II. Federal Claims

Defendants also argue that Target's claims for damages under federal law should be dismissed. They assert that Target lacks standing to pursue its federal claims because federal law does not allow indirect purchasers to recover damages. See Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). Target does not contest this point, but asserts that it brings "federal antitrust claims for [its] purchases of finished products containing price-fixed [*28] LCD panels directly from Defendants and their corporate affiliates." Pl. Opp'n at 9; see also FAC at ¶200 ("In some cases, Plaintiffs purchased LCD Products directly from defendants at prices that were artificially inflated as a result of the conspiracy . . . .").

Defendants seek dismissal of Target's direct-purchaser claims as well, arguing that Target's FAC does not provide adequate detail about its direct purchases. Reply at 6 ("Plaintiffs fail to identify . . . the 'Defendants and their corporate affiliates' from which they directly purchased finished products . . . ."). Defendants did not raise this argument until their reply brief; it is therefore waived. In any event, Target's complaint alleges that it made direct purchases from one or more of the defendants. That is sufficient to satisfy the notice-pleading requirements of the federal rules. The details defendants seek are best left to the discovery process.

III. Retroactive Effect of Illinois Brick Repealer Statutes

Finally, defendants move to dismiss in part Target's antitrust claims under the laws of New York, Nebraska, and Nevada. Defendants claim that these states did not allow indirect-purchasers to bring suit until the [*29] states amended their antitrust laws. Defendants argue that the amendments were not made retroactive, and that therefore Target may not recover for any damages sustained prior to their enactment.

A. New York

New York's legislature amended the Donnelly Act to permit claims by indirect purchasers on December 23, 1998. See N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(6). Courts have held that the amendment was not retroactive, and plaintiffs do not assert otherwise. See, e.g., *In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15109, 2000 WL 1511376, at 5 (D.D.C., Oct. 6, 2000); Lennon v. Philip Morris Cos., 189 Misc. 2d 577, 734 N.Y.S.2d 374, 382 (Sup. Ct. 2001) ("[C]ourts interpreting provisions of the General Business Law have rejected retroactive application of amendments creating new private rights of action."). Accordingly, Target's Donnelly Act claims are DISMISSED to the extent they arose before December 23, 1998.

B. Nebraska

Prior to July 20, 2002, Nebraska's Junkin Act allowed "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property" by an antitrust violation to bring a suit for damages. Neb. Rev. Stat. § 59-821 (2000). On July 20, 2002, the Nebraska legislature amended the Junkin Act to permit suit "whether such injured person dealt [*30] directly or indirectly with the defendant." 2002 Neb. Laws L.B. 1278; see also Neb. Rev. Stat. § 59-821 (2011). Defendants argue that the amendment does not apply retroactively and that this Court should therefore dismiss any claims that arise from purchases made before July 20, 2002. Nebraska courts generally do not give retroactive effect to substantive statutes "unless the Legislature has clearly expressed an intention that the new statute is to be applied retroactively." Soukop v. ConAgra, Inc., 264 Neb. 1015, 653 N.W.2d 655, 657 (Neb. 2002). [10]

The Court disagrees with defendants' interpretation of the Nebraska statute, and concludes that, even prior to the 2002 amendment, indirect-purchaser suits were permitted under Nebraska law. In Arthur v. Microsoft Corp., 267 Neb. 586, 676 N.W.2d 29 (Neb. 2004), [*31] the Nebraska Supreme Court considered whether indirect purchasers could bring suit under Nebraska's Consumer Protection Act, a closely related statute to the Junkin Act. The court concluded that indirect purchasers had standing to sue, rejecting the argument that the Consumer Protection Act should be harmonized with the Supreme Court's Illinois Brick decision. Id. at 597-98 ("Giving the language of the Act its plain and ordinary meaning while construing its provisions in pari materia to determine the intent of the Legislature, we conclude that the Act allows any person who is injured by a violation of §§ 59-1602 to 59-1606 which directly or indirectly affects the people of Nebraska to bring a civil action to recover damages."); see also id. at 594 (stating that a state-law provision requiring harmonization with federal law "does not require us to hold that indirect purchasers have no standing under the Act if to do so would not support the Act's purpose"). In reaching this conclusion, the Nebraska Supreme Court relied heavily on an Iowa Supreme Court decision that allowed indirect purchasers to bring suit under Iowa's antitrust laws. Id. at 597 ("The [Iowa] court concluded that . . [*32] . the harmonization provision of Iowa law was not aimed at defining who can sue under state antitrust law, but was designed to achieve uniform application of the state and federal laws prohibiting monopolistic practices.").

In light of Arthur, the Court concludes that the Nebraska Supreme Court would likely hold that the Junkin Act permitted indirect-purchaser suits even before the 2002 amendment. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss is DENIED with respect to the Nebraska claims.

C. Nevada

Finally, defendants argue that Target's claims under Nevada's Unfair Trade Practices Act ("UTPA") must also be dismissed in part. Prior to October 1, 1999, the UTPA permitted suit by "any person injured in his business or property." Nev. Rev. Stat. § 598A.210 (1998). Effective October 1, 1999, the UTPA was amended to permit suit by "any person injured or damaged directly or indirectly in his business or property." Nev. Rev. §598A.210 (2011). Two courts have determined that the 1999 amendment was a "clarification" to Nevada's antitrust law that did not amount to a substantive change in the law. See Pooler v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 2001 WL 403167, at *1 (Nev. Dist. Ct., Apr. 4, 2001); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litigation, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131002, 2010 WL 5094289 at *5 (N.D. Cal., Dec. 8, 2010). [*33] Other courts have reached the opposite conclusion. See, e.g., In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., 738 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1025 (N.D. Cal. 2010).

The Court agrees with defendants that, prior to the 1999 amendment, Nevada law did not allow indirect purchasers to recover for antitrust violations. The UTPA provides that it "shall be construed in harmony with prevailing judicial interpretations of the federal antitrust statutes." Nev. Rev. Stat. § 598A.050. Given this directive, the Court

---

[10] In a different MDL pending in this District, the question whether the Junkin Act amendment was retroactive was raised by defendants. The Court in that case did not discuss the issue, but appears to have concluded that the amendment did not have retroactive effect. See In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litig., 738 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1025 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (dismissing claims under Nebraska law based on sales made prior to July 20, 2002).

concludes that the Nevada Supreme Court would have interpreted the UTPA "in harmony" with the Illinois Brick decision. Absent a more definitive statement from Nevada's appellate courts, the Court will abide by the plain language of this provision. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' Nevada claims that are based on purchases that occurred before October 1, 1999.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' first amended complaint. Docket No. 45 in 10-4945; Docket No. 3027 in 07-1827.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: August 24, 2011

/s/ Susan Illston

SUSAN ILLSTON

United [*34] States District Judge

End of Document

Sineitti v. Conoco Phillips Co.

Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, Division Two

August 24, 2011, Filed

A127485

Reporter

2011 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 6455 *; 2011 WL 3759684

GINA O. EL SINEITTI, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. CONOCO PHILLIPS CO., Defendant and Respondent.

Notice: NOT TO BE PUBLISHED IN OFFICIAL REPORTS. CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT, RULE 8.1115(a), PROHIBITS COURTS AND PARTIES FROM CITING OR RELYING ON OPINIONS NOT CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED, EXCEPT AS SPECIFIED BY RULE 8.1115(b). THIS OPINION HAS NOT BEEN CERTIFIED FOR PUBLICATION OR ORDERED PUBLISHED FOR THE PURPOSES OF RULE 8.1115.

Prior History: [*1] San Francisco County Super. Ct. No. CGC-06-458663.

Core Terms

station, geographic, customers, zone, prices, relevant market, gasoline, declarations, summary judgment, price discrimination, discovery, markets, expert testimony, trial court, documents, branded, present evidence, purchasers, retail, competitive market, interrogatories, antitrust, fuel, buy, triable issue of fact, cause of action, service station, initial burden, deposition, favored Judges: Kline, P.J.; Haerle, J., Richman, J. concurred.

Opinion by: Kline

Opinion

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Gina El Sineitti appeals from a judgment of the San Francisco Superior Court, dismissing defendant ConocoPhillips Co. (ConocoPhillips) from her action against defendants ConocoPhillips and Tower Energy Group (Tower) for alleged price discrimination under California Business and Professions Code sections 17045 and 21200. [1] Dismissal followed the court's grant of summary judgment in favor of defendant ConocoPhillips. El Sineitti contends she raised triable issues of fact as to her section 21200 price discrimination claim. [2] We shall conclude the trial court did not err in granting summary judgment as to this claim on the ground that El Sineitti cannot prove the competitive market that she asserts as the basis for her claim. We shall therefore affirm the judgment.

---

[1] All statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code, unless otherwise indicated.

[2] El Sineitti does not challenge the court's grant of summary judgment as to her claim under section 17045. Tower did not move for summary judgment and is not a party to this appeal.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND[3]

El Sineitti was the sole proprietor and operator of a gasoline service station located at 1490 Ocean Avenue in San Francisco. From 2001 through 2007, El Sineitti's station sold Union 76-branded gasoline under an agreement with ConocoPhillips, a refiner and distributor of petroleum fuel products. El Sineitti began leasing her station from ConocoPhillips in 2001. She purchased the station in January 2006. While she was leasing the station from 2001 through 2005, ConocoPhillips supplied El Sineitti with Union 76-branded gasoline for resale at her station. When she purchased the station, El Sineitti agreed to remain a Union 76 station and to purchase her Union 76 fuel exclusively from Tower, an independent wholesaler and distributor. On December 31, 2007, El Sineitti terminated the agreements with ConocoPhillips and Tower, debranded as a Union 76 station, and began purchasing gasoline from independent suppliers.

On December 12, 2006, El Sineitti filed a complaint against Tower, asserting [*3] price discrimination claims under sections 17045 and 21200. On June 4, 2008, she filed her first amended complaint naming ConocoPhillips as a defendant. The first amended complaint asserts the same price discrimination claims against ConocoPhillips as she had asserted against Tower: namely, that El Sineitti was unlawfully charged higher prices for gasoline than other Union 76-branded stations. Her claims were premised on the theory that, from 2005 through 2007, her station competed with—and therefore should have been charged the same as—all Union 76 stations located within five miles of her station. [4]

ConocoPhillips answered on July 21, 2008. Thereafter, ConocoPhillips [*4] propounded extensive written discovery in the form of interrogatories and document requests and it took El Sineitti's deposition. On April 10, 2009, ConocoPhillips moved for summary judgment, or alternatively for summary adjudication as to each of the causes of action and claims for damages asserted by El Sineitti in the first amended complaint. ConocoPhillips asserted that El Sineitti had failed to raise a triable issue of material fact because she could not show the following essential elements of her section 21200 cause of action: (1) that her relevant competitive market included any station that allegedly received more favorable pricing, (2) that ConocoPhillips gave any of her competitors a "major" or "substantial" pricing advantage that was sustained over a significant period of time, or (3) that her business was injured as a result of ConocoPhillips's alleged acts. [5]

In May and June 2009, El Sineitti [*5] deposed two ConocoPhillips representatives and a third-party former employee. ConocoPhillips also made extensive document productions to El Sineitti in connection with those depositions. In June 2009, El Sineitti filed her opposition to ConocoPhillips's summary judgment motion and ConocoPhillips submitted its reply papers.

After a hearing on the motion, the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of ConocoPhillips, finding that ConocoPhillips had presented affirmative admissions by El Sineitti during discovery as to the factual basis of her claims and had identified needed evidence that she did not possess and could not reasonably obtain. Specifically, the court concluded that ConocoPhillips had satisfied its initial burden on summary judgment by producing evidence

---

[3] The [*2] facts and procedural background statement is taken in large part from the court's statement of decision, which contains an accurate summary. Additional facts are contained in the discussion, where relevant.

[4] In her answer to ConocoPhillips's interrogatories, El Sineitti stated that her station "competes for the sale of gasoline with all Union 76-branded stations within a five (5) mile radius." She identified 14 Union 76 stations supplied by Tower as within this five-mile radius. She further stated on information and belief that she "does not contend other non-Union 76 branded retail dealers are within [the first amended complaint's] competitive market definition for purposes of the price discrimination alleged in this action."

[5] The summary judgment motion also alleged El Sineitti could not show that ConocoPhillips gave any of her competitors a "secret payment or allowance"—a required element for a section 17045 cause of action. El Sineitti does not dispute the court's summary judgment grant as to this claim.

that El Sineitti did not possess and could not reasonably obtain evidence from which a reasonable juror could conclude she had sustained her burden as to each of the three elements—definition of the relevant competitive market, substantial or major price differentials over time, and actual injury to El Sineitti proximately caused by ConocoPhillips's alleged conduct. Consequently, the burden shifted to El Sineitti to [*6] set forth specific facts showing a triable issue of material fact as to each of these elements. The court concluded that El Sineitti had failed to make this showing.

On November 19, 2009, the court filed its statement of decision granting ConocoPhillips's summary judgment motion. Judgment was entered that day, dismissing ConocoPhillips from the action. This timely appeal followed.

I. Summary Judgment Standard of Review

"'A trial court properly grants a motion for summary judgment only if no issues of triable fact appear and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. [Citations.] The moving party bears the burden of showing the court that the plaintiff "has not established, and cannot reasonably expect to establish, a prima facie case . . . ." [Citation.]' [Citation.] '[O]nce a moving defendant has "shown that one or more elements of the cause of action, even if not separately pleaded, cannot be established," the burden shifts to the plaintiff to show the existence of a triable issue; to meet that burden, the plaintiff "may not rely upon the mere allegations or denials of its pleadings . . . but, instead, shall set forth the specific facts showing that a triable issue [*7] of material fact exists as to that cause of action. . . ." [Citation.]' [Citation.]" (Lyle v. Warner Brothers Television Productions (2006) 38 Cal.4th 264, 274; see also Nazir v. United Airlines, Inc. (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 243, 252-253 (Nazir).)

""'"[W]e take the facts from the record that was before the trial court when it ruled on that motion,"" and we ""'"review the trial court's decision de novo, considering all the evidence set forth in the moving and opposing papers except that to which objections were made and sustained."'"" (Hughes v. Pair (2009) 46 Cal.4th 1035, 1039, quoting Lonicki v. Sutter Health Central (2008) 43 Cal.4th 201, 206.)" (Tverberg v. Fillner Construction, Inc. (2010) 49 Cal.4th 518, 522 (Tverberg).) Where the trial court has failed to rule upon evidentiary objections made in writing before a summary judgment hearing or orally at the hearing, the objection is preserved on appeal. (Reid v. Google, Inc. (2010) 50 Cal.4th 512, 517, 531-532. [6]) "We also ""liberally construe the evidence in support of the party opposing summary judgment and resolve doubts concerning the evidence in favor of that party."" [Citations.]" (Tverberg, at p. 522; see Nazir, supra, 178 Cal.App.4th at p. 254.)

II. Price Discrimination

In 1975, the California Legislature passed section 21200 to regulate price discrimination by major distributors of motor fuel. (Shell Oil Co. v. Younger (9th Cir. 1978) 587 F.2d 34, 35.) In language paralleling section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U.S.C. § 13(a) (1970)), section 21200 prohibits price discrimination where the effect of such discrimination is to lessen competition. (Ibid.) [7] It provides in relevant part: "It is unlawful for any refiner,

---

[6] "[I]f [*8] the trial court fails to rule expressly on specific evidentiary objections, it is presumed that the objections have been overruled, the trial court considered the evidence in ruling on the merits of the summary judgment motion, and the objections are preserved on appeal." (Reid v. Google, Inc., supra, 50 Cal.4th at p. 534.)

[7] The parties agree that because California price discrimination law closely parallels the Robinson-Patman Act, and is based upon the same policy considerations, case law under the act is considered persuasive authority by California courts. (Cf. ABC Internat. Traders, Inc. v. Matsushita Electric Corp. (1997) 14 Cal.4th 1247, 1261 [The prohibition on unearned discounts, codified as section 17045, of the Unfair Practice Act (§ 17000 et seq.), was designed to prohibit similar types of business conduct as the federal Robinson-Patman Act]; G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. (1983) 147 Cal.App.3d 256, 271 [Unfair Practice Act closely parallels, and is based upon same policies as, Robinson-Patman Act]; Petroleum Sales, Inc. v. Valero Refining Co. (N.D. Cal. 2006) 2006 WL 3708062, p. *21 [applying Robinson-Patman Act analysis and the requirement that plaintiff show it was in actual competition with a favored purchaser at the time of the price differential to section 21200 claim of price discrimination].)

distributor, manufacturer, or transporter of motor vehicle fuels or oils engaged in business in this state, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of motor vehicle fuels or oils of like grade and quality, where the effect of such discrimination is to lessen competition, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either [*9] grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

"Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been such discrimination [10] in price, the burden of rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section." (§ 21200*.)

"Mindful of the purposes of the Act and of the antitrust laws generally, [the United States Supreme Court has] explained that Robinson-Patman does not 'ban all price differences charged to different purchasers of commodities of the grade and quality,' [citation]; rather, the Act proscribes 'price discrimination only to the extent that it threatens to injure competition,' [citation]. Our decisions describe three categories of competitive injury that may give rise to a Robinson-Patman Act claim: primary line, secondary line, and tertiary line. Primary-line cases entail conduct—most conspicuously, predatory pricing—that injures competition at the level of the discriminating seller and its direct competitors. [Citations.] Secondary-line cases, of which this is one, involve price discrimination that injures competition among the discriminating seller's customers . . . ; cases in this category typically refer to 'favored' and 'disfavored' purchasers. [Citations.] Tertiary-line cases involve injury to competition at the level [*11] of the purchaser's customers. [Citation.]" (Volvo Trucks North America, Inc. v. Reeder-Simco GMC, Inc. (2006) 546 U.S. 164, 176.)

Secondary-line discrimination can be direct or indirect. "Direct discrimination occurs when a seller charges different prices to different buyers. [Citation.] Indirect discrimination occurs 'when one buyer receives something of value not offered to other buyers,' such as free goods. [Citation.]" (Lewis v. Philip Morris Inc. (6th Cir. 2004) 355 F.3d 515, 521.) Here, El Sineitti claims that the higher gasoline prices to her constituted direct discrimination.

In order to establish secondary-line discrimination, the plaintiff who is the disfavored purchaser must establish the element "that the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition. . . . The 'prohibited effect on competition' element of the prima facie case requires that the discrimination have caused an actual injury to the disfavored purchaser. Causation is established by examining whether the favored and disfavored buyers were in actual competition with each other and proof of injury. Actual competition requires that the plaintiff prove a relevant product and geographic market to be defined." [*12] (Water Craft Management, L.L.C. v. Mercury Marine (M.D. La.2004) 361 F.Supp.2d 518, 538, third and fourth italics added (Water Craft); see also George Haug Co. Inc. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars (2nd Cir. 1998) 148 F.3d 136, 142 ["[T]o satisfy this 'competitive nexus' requirement, 'it must . . . be shown that, as of the time the price differential was imposed, the favored and disfavored purchasers competed at the same functional level, i.e., all wholesalers or all retailers, and within the same geographic market.' [Citation.]"].) [8]

"The relevant geographic market . . . is 'the area in which buyers or sellers of the relevant product effectively compete.' [Citation.]" (Berlyn, Inc. v. Gazette Newspapers, Inc. (D.C. Md. 2002) 223 F.Supp.2d 718, 726 (Berlyn); see TYR Sport, Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwearn, Inc. (C.D. Cal. 2010) 709 F.Supp.2d 802, 816 (TYR Sport) [relevant

[8] "Thus, in summary, to establish illegal secondary-line price discrimination between purchasers, a plaintiff must prove the following elements: (1) sales made in interstate commerce; (2) the commodities sold to purchaser were of the same grade and quality as those sold to other purchasers; (3) that the seller discriminated in price between purchasers; and (4) that the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition. A price discrimination within the meaning of §13(a) is an actual price difference. The 'prohibited effect on competition' element of the prima facie case requires that the discrimination have caused an actual injury to the disfavored purchaser. [*13] Causation is established by examining whether the favored and disfavored buyers were in actual competition with each other and proof of injury. Actual competition requires that the plaintiff prove a relevant product and geographic market to be defined. Proof of injury to competition is established prima facie by proof of a 'substantial' price discrimination between competing purchasers over time." (Water Craft, supra, 361 F.Supp.2d at p. 538, italics added.)

geographic market is the area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply].) [9] "For purposes of [s]ection 21200, two stations 'compete' with each other only if they engage in substantial, rather than minimal, competition with each other. [Citations.]" (Madani v. Equilon Enterprises LLC (C.D. Cal. 2009) 2009 WL 2148664, *13, citing Lewis v. Philip Morris Inc., supra, 355 F.3d at p. 533 [*14] [sellers who have ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business]; Universal-Rundle Corporation v. F.T.C. (7th Cir. 1967) 382 F.2d 285, 287 [evidence must show a substantial degree of existing as opposed to minimal or sporadic competition].)

In Hamro v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1982) 674 F.2d 784, the Ninth Circuit affirmed an order granting a directed verdict on the plaintiff's claim of unlawful price discrimination in violation of section 21200, [*15] where the plaintiff failed to offer substantial evidence that he was in competition with the more favored customers. (Id. at pp. 786, 790.) "Shell admitted that from January 1, 1976 through December 1979 it sold gasoline to up to ten independent retailers at a price below that charged to Hamro. However, section 21200 prohibits price discrimination by a seller only 'where the effect of such discrimination is to lessen competition, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.' [Citation.] However, a review of the record reveals that Hamro failed to offer any evidence from which a reasonable person could conclude that Hamro was in competition with Shell's more favored customers." (Id. at p. 790; accord, Cain v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (D.Ore. 1991) 757 F.Supp.1120, 1123 [granting summary judgment under Oregon statute nearly identical to § 21200 and stating "plaintiff must establish that he was in actual and substantial competition with a favored purchaser"], affd. 972 F.2d 1337 (9th Cir. 1992); see also England v. Chrysler Corp. (9th Cir. 1974) 493 F.2d 269, 271-272 [*16] (England) [advantaged and disadvantaged parties must be shown to be "competing customers" at or near the time of the alleged price discrimination].)

"It is well settled that the relevant . . . geographic markets must be defined with some degree of precision to enable the trier of fact to determine if . . . antitrust laws have been violated." (Water Craft, supra, 361 F.Supp.2d at p. 541.) This is because the geographic market can be the entire nation or an area containing only a small percentage of business activity. (Ibid.) "The factors to consider in determining the economic significance of the relevant geographic market include the size, cumbersomeness, and other characteristics of the relevant product; regulatory constraints impeding the free flow of competing goods into the area; perishability of products; and transportation barriers. The economic significance of the relevant geographic market does not depend on singular elements such as population, income, political boundaries, or geographic extent. Rather, it depends on the relationship between these elements and the characteristics of competition in the relevant product market within a particular area." (Id. at pp. 541-542, fns. [*17] omitted, italics added.) For this reason "Courts consistently require that expert testimony adequately define the relevant geographic and product markets in antitrust cases." (Id. at p. 542, italics added; see, e.g., United Food Mart, Inc. v. Motiva Enterprises, LLC (S.D. Fla. 2005) 404 F.Supp.2d 1344, 1348 [granting motion to exclude the plaintiff's expert testimony that the defendant's two Shell stations were in the same relevant geographic market as the plaintiff's Shell station because the expert performed neither of two analyses generally accepted in the economics community for determining whether products or businesses compete with one another].)

III. ConocoPhillips Satisfied Its Initial Burden of Producing Evidence

El Sineitti first contends that ConocoPhillips did not meet its initial burden of producing evidence that El Sineitti "does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence" to enable her to create a triable issue of material fact as to the particular element to be proven. (Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal.4th 826, 854 (Aguilar).) "Summary judgment law in this state . . . continues to require a defendant moving for summary judgment

---

[9] "In determining that the favored and disfavored purchasers are 'competitors,' the most obvious set of criteria that come to mind are those for defining relevant geographic and product markets. Under those criteria two sellers are in the same market if they (1) compete for sales to the same customers and (2) one seller's competition is sufficient to restrain the other's ability to set price above the competitive level. But the Robinson-Patman inquiry typically differs from the general relevant market inquiry in that the second part of the question is unnecessary. As a general matter, it need be shown only that the two sellers compete for the same customers." (XIV Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law (2d ed. 2004) ¶ 2333b, p. 97, fns. omitted.)

to present [*18] evidence, and not simply point out that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence. In this particular at least, it still diverges from federal law. For the defendant must 'support[]' the 'motion' with evidence including 'affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice' must or may 'be taken.' (Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (b).) The defendant may, but need not, present evidence that conclusively negates an element of the plaintiff's cause of action. The defendant may also present evidence that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence—as through admissions by the plaintiff following extensive discovery to the effect that he has discovered nothing." (Aguilar, at pp. 854-855, fns. omitted.)

El Sineitti argues that ConocoPhillips failed to meet this threshold because "it presented no evidence, other than deposition testimony of El Sineitti, one interrogatory response (No. 8), a few documents selected from El Sineitti's document production, and a deed to the [El] Sineitti Station." We disagree. The evidence presented by ConocoPhillips was sufficient [*19] to satisfy its initial burden so as to shift the burden of proof to El Sineitti to show the existence of a triable issue of material fact.

In Andrews v. Foster Wheeler LLC (2006) 138 Cal.App.4th 96, we addressed the question whether the plaintiff's nonresponsive answers to comprehensive discovery were sufficient to meet the defendant's burden of production when the defendant moves for summary judgment. We concluded that the discovery propounded by the defendant was sufficiently comprehensive and the responses to it so devoid of facts, "as to lead to the inference that plaintiffs could not prove causation upon a stringent review of the direct, circumstantial and inferential evidence contained in their interrogatory answers and deposition testimony." (Id. at p. 107.) We therefore concluded that the defendant had met its initial burden of presenting evidence sufficient to make a prima facie showing that a triable issue of fact did not exist regarding the element of causation and the burden of production shifted to plaintiffs to establish a triable issue of fact regarding that element of the cause of action. (Ibid.) "When defendants conduct comprehensive discovery, plaintiffs cannot play [*20] 'hide the ball.'" (Id. at p. 106.) If the plaintiffs respond "to comprehensive interrogatories seeking all known facts with boilerplate answers that restate their allegations, or simply provide laundry lists of people and/or documents, the burden of production will almost certainly be shifted to [the plaintiffs] once defendants move for summary judgment and properly present plaintiffs' factually devoid discovery responses." (Id. at p. 107, fn. omitted.)

In this case, ConocoPhillips took extensive discovery from El Sineitti through written discovery and deposition testimony. It submitted the following evidence from her deposition in support of its assertion that El Sineitti was unable to establish her area of effective competition: Her admission that her only support for her definition of her competitive market as all Union 76 stations within five miles of her station came from her own belief and conversations with 10 to 12 or 10 to 15 customers about their purchasing practices with Union 76 stations and their willingness to buy gasoline at another Union 76 station if it is cheaper. She could name only two such customers. She had no documents supporting her contention that specific customers [*21] were price sensitive to the purchase of gas at her station. Neither she nor anyone under her direction had ever analyzed the geographic disbursement of her customers. She admitted she had no documents to support her competitive market definition. She admitted she had no economic studies or empirical evidence to support the price sensitivity of customers. ConocoPhillips also presented evidence of El Sineitti's answers to specially prepared interrogatories wherein she was asked to specifically identify "each instance" that she lost business to other Union 76-branded retail gas stations supplied by ConocoPhillips and Tower. She responded on information and belief with the names of only two customers of her station who had told her during the time of the alleged price discrimination they would drive to another Union 76 station that was offering better retail prices. She also asserted that other customers had expressed the same position. Statements by two (or even 15) customers that they would drive to another Union 76 station that was offering better retail prices is insufficient to provide substantial evidence of the relevant competitive geographic market. (See, e.g., U.S. v. Oracle (N.D. Cal. 2004) 331 F.Supp.2d 1098, 1167.)

Nor [*22] do we accept El Sineitti's claim that defendant failed to satisfy its initial burden of proof by producing discovery responses that did not exclude the possibility that El Sineitti might reasonably obtain evidence to establish her claim. As the trial court observed in its statement of decision, El Sineitti never contended that needed evidence was still undiscovered or in possession of ConocoPhillips or third parties, nor did she move for a continuance of the motion on such grounds pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure section 437c, subdivision (h). [10] ConocoPhillips moved for summary judgment in April 2009, nearly a year after El Sineitti had first named it as a defendant in the action and more than two years after she filed her initial complaint for price discrimination against Tower. She had ample time to initiate discovery and she in fact did conduct discovery after ConocoPhillips had moved for summary judgment. Although not identical to the "state all facts" interrogatories propounded by defendant in Andrews v. Foster Wheeler LLC, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at pages 104-106, the questions ConocoPhillips propounded to El Sineitti at her deposition and in interrogatories constituted "comprehensive [*23] discovery" by ConocoPhillips sufficient to elicit from her all facts that she possessed or expected to obtain to support her claim. Her responses were so devoid of facts as to lead to the inference that she could not prove her competitive geographic market and so could not show ConocoPhillips had engaged in price discrimination in favor of her competitors. (Id. at p. 106.)

The evidence presented by ConocoPhillips in support of its summary judgment sufficed to satisfy its initial burden on summary judgment by showing through El Sineitti's deposition and response to discovery that she [*24] did not possess, and could not reasonably obtain, needed evidence to support her claim. (Aguilar, supra, 25 Cal.4th at p. 854; Andrews v. Foster Wheeler LLC, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th at p. 106.) Consequently, ConocoPhillips made a prima facie showing that a triable issue of fact did not exist regarding El Sineitti's claimed competitive geographic market and the burden of production shifted to El Sineitti to establish a triable issue of fact regarding that element of her section 21200 price-discrimination cause of action. (Ibid.)

We reject El Sineitti's claim that she presented a prima facie case of price discrimination under section 21200 by producing evidence of a difference in prices in the sale of like goods having the requisite effect on competition. El Sineitti suggests the burden shifting provision of section 21200 "trumps" Code of Civil Procedure section 437c, and asserts that this "is a case of first impression." The assertion that the burden-shifting provision of section 21200 trumps summary judgment law was never raised in the trial court and was therefore waived. (See generally, Eisenberg et al., Civil Appeals and Writs (The Rutter Group 2010) ¶ 8:229, p. 8-155.) Moreover, [*25] under the plain language of section 21200, before the burden shifts to defendant to justify price discrimination, the plaintiff must first prove price discrimination at a hearing. [11] Proof of the prima facie case under section 21200, as under the Robinson-Patman Act, requires a showing of actual competition, which in turn requires a showing of the relevant geographic market. (See XIV Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, supra, ¶ 2331, pp. 91, 93 [vast majority of courts and the Federal Trade Commission interpret section 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act "as meaning that the burden shifts after all of the various elements of a price discrimination offense outlined in [section] 2(a), including the injury requirement, have been made out." Thus, the plaintiff has the burden of showing the requisite competitive injury]; see, e.g., Water Craft, supra, 361 F.Supp.2d at p. 538 ["actual competition requires that the plaintiff prove a relevant product and geographic market].) In this case, the trial court properly determined El Sineitti did not and could not make the necessary showing.

IV. El Sineitti Failed to Establish a Triable Issue of Fact That She Actually and Substantially Competed With Union 76 Stations Within Five Miles

---

[10] "If it appears from the affidavits submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication or both that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented, the court shall deny the motion, or order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or discovery to be had or may make any other order as may be just. The application to continue the motion to obtain necessary discovery may also be made by ex parte motion at any time on or before the date the opposition response to the motion is due." (Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (h).)

[11] "Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been such discrimination in price, [26] the burden of rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section." (§ 21200*.)

In opposition to ConocoPhillips's summary judgment motion, El Sineitti offered the following evidence to support her assertion that the relevant geographic market was all Union 76 stations within a five-mile radius of her station or, at least the single station located at 101 South Mayfair, Daly City:

(1) declarations from four alleged customers who stated they would travel five or more miles to purchase gasoline if El Sineitti's prices were too high;

(2) a declaration from El Sineitti's accountant, Albert J. Martig (whom El Sineitti identifies as an industry expert), that El Sineitti characterizes as opining that there is cross-elasticity of demand for gasoline between stations in near proximity and those that may be five to 10 miles away or further; and

(3) evidence discovered from ConocoPhillips that El Sineitti contends inferentially supported a five-mile radius geographic market. El [*27] Sineitti characterizes this evidence as:

(a) evidence that ConocoPhillips has used a varying number of price zones in the San Francisco area, from microzoning single stations to four or five zones in 2002, to a single zone for all of San Francisco and northern San Mateo County in 2008;

(b) evidence that ConocoPhillips has used data and software from Marketing Planning Solutions, Inc. (MPSI), and employed "MPSI tactics," a competition model employing software to show how much volume stations in a price zone will lose to a particular station that raises its price;

(c) evidence demonstrating that El Sineitti's station was run in an MPSI tactic showing that it was in a competitive area with other stations;

(d) evidence that stations in the "price zone" next to El Sineitti's, including the station at 101 South Mayfair in Daly City, were run in an MPSI tactic with stations as far away as 7.8 miles;

(e) evidence that the 101 South Mayfair station was taken out of the northern San Mateo County price zone and moved into a price zone in the Sunset area of San Francisco (Bay Area Zone 9), further away from El Sineitti's price zone (Bay Area Zone 32).

A. Customer declarations

The court properly found [*28] the customer declarations deficient. The four individuals, hand-picked by plaintiff, [12] did not constitute a scientific or representative market sample of customers for her proposed economic market. As Judge Vaughn Walker has observed: "Drawing generalized conclusions about an extremely heterogeneous customer market based upon testimony from a small sample is not only unreliable, it is nearly impossible. [Citation.]" (U.S. v. Oracle Corp., supra, 331 F.Supp.2d 1098, 1167 [finding responses from five customers insufficient to establish market definition in a case involving challenge to a merger under the Clayton Act]; see also FTC v. Freeman Hospital (W.D.Mo. 1995) 911 F.Supp. 1213, 1220 [in defining relevant geographic markets, "anecdotal evidence concerning the marketplace [is] no substitute for solid economic analysis"], affd. 69 F.3d 260 (8th Cir. 1995).) There is no evidence that this sample was sufficiently large or sufficiently representative to constitute a statistically valid sample.

Further, the customer declarations themselves fall far short of providing substantial evidence for El Sineitti's [*29] proposed market definition. The customers state that price per gallon is the most important factor in their decision as to where to buy gasoline. [13] All four bought gasoline from El Sineitti when her station was a Union 76

[12] The four customer declarants are: William Mayta, Mark Gin, Joe Koman and Kathryn McGarey.

[13] Various individualized circumstances described in the customers' declarations also impact where they purchase gasoline, including the station's proximity to the declarant's residence, proximity to a family member's residence, proximity to work, whether he or she is traveling to shop at Costco, or whether traveling on business.

station and have continued to buy from her even after it became a non-branded station. All four have had repair work at her service station. Although all four state that if the price of gasoline at the Union 76 station at 999 Ocean Avenue or the station at 101 South Mayfair Street in Daly City is $.01 to $.02 per gallon less than El Sineitti's station they "would buy" or "would probably buy" from the lower priced station, all four customers also state that if they became aware that the price at another station—not identified as a Union 76 station—was significantly less per gallon, they would buy gas from the lower priced station, even if it were up to five miles away. [14] El Sineitti's proposed relevant market includes only Union 76-branded stations, not all gas stations selling all brands of fuel. El Sineitti admitted in answer to an interrogatory that she "does not contend other non-Union 76 branded retail dealers are within [her] competitive market definition for [*30] purposes of the price discrimination alleged in this action." However, the customer declarations do not indicate that they would limit the brands of gasoline that they would purchase, given a price difference they deemed significant. Potential customer purchases from non-Union 76 stations are irrelevant to establishing El Sineitti's proposed market. Those stations do not purchase branded fuel from ConocoPhillips, and therefore could not have received more favorable pricing from ConocoPhillips than El Sineitti. (See, e.g., England, supra, 493 F.2d at pp. 271-272 ["the advantaged and disadvantaged parties must be shown to be competing customers of the giver in order for there to be discrimination"]; Richard Short Oil Co., Inc. v. Texaco, Inc. (8th Cir. 1986) 799 F.2d 415, 421 [plaintiff dealer failed to present evidence of "lost sales to any competing Texaco station as the result of the difference in prices"].) Further, the declarations also do not indicate whether a customer would necessarily drive up to five miles to purchase from another Union 76 station, regardless of whether a non-Union 76-branded station within a shorter distance was also charging lower prices than El Sineitti. [*31] (See *Madani v. Equilon Enterprises LLC, supra, 2009 WL 2148664, pp. 12, 14 [denial of claim for equitable relief under section 21200 where plaintiff failed to account for the fact that alleged lost volume "likely 'went to competitors of all sorts'" including other brands such as Chevron, Arco, and Unocal].) Indeed, here all four customers continued to buy gasoline from El Sineitti's station even after she debranded as a Union 76 station.

The trial court correctly found that "by failing to account for the brand of gasoline, [El Sineitti's] customer declarations ignore a fundamental aspect of [p]laintiff's claims and proposed market definition, not to mention the other numerous and complicated factors that affect a relevant market definition."

B. Martig declaration

El Sineitti offered the declaration of her personal accountant, Albert [*33] J. Martig, whom she identified as an industry expert. Martig provides financial and marketing services, and tax work for individuals and businesses, including a large number of service stations. He has worked in that field for 39 years, including periods working as marketing representative for Mobil Oil Corporation and BP Oil Company. He specializes in service station marketing and finances and has worked with oil company owned stations and private owner-operators for both branded and independent stations. He had prepared El Sineitti's taxes for her service station for six years preceding the litigation.

With respect to identification of the geographically relevant market, Martig opined: "It is well known in the oil business that the retail price of gasoline at the pump significantly affects the volumes purchased from a particular [14] Mayta would travel over five miles from his home to obtain a price savings of $.05 to .10 per gallon.) He states: "If a station where I am buying gasoline raises its price above another station with which I am familiar and is reasonably near to my house, I will stop and buy gasoline from the lowest priced station when I need gasoline." He would "probably" buy from a Union 76 station such as the 999 Ocean Avenue station or [*32] the 101 South Mayfair Street station if its price were $.01 to .02 per gallon less than El Sineitti's station. He also travels on business and would purchase gasoline at a station over five miles from El Sineitti's station if its price were $.05 to .10 per gallon less than El Sineitti's. Finally, he has a second home in Forestville, California, where the price differential is often significant and he tries to buy gasoline there.

---

Gin states he has bought gasoline from "ARCO stations, including some located at distances over 5 miles from [Gin's business]."

Koman has purchased gasoline from a South San Francisco Costco station, located seven and one-half miles from his residence.

McGarey has purchased gasoline from an Olympian station in San Francisco, located about three miles from her residence.

service station. A service station that has higher gasoline prices than stations that its customers might buy from will lose customers to the lower price station. Stations in near proximity with lower gasoline prices at the pump than one with higher prices are the most likely stations to which customers will switch. However, customers that make trips in their [*34] car, whether to go to work, to go to school, to shop, [or] to visit relatives will switch to stations near to their destinations or on their way which may be 5 to 10 miles away or further if the station where they normally purchase gasoline has higher prices at the pump." (Italics added.) He also opined that when El Sineitti is charged a price that is higher than that given to stations to which her customers might switch, if she maintains the same profit margins as she has charged in the past, and raises prices, she will lose customers and sales and her volumes of gasoline pumped will go down.

Martig's declaration does not indicate that he either conducted or considered any market analysis. He does not identify any factual data upon which his conclusions are based, nor does he identify any economic basis for his conclusory statements as to how gasoline consumers behave generally, other than his assertion that "[i]t is well known" that price at the pump affects volume sold. The court found that "Mr. Martig's declaration does not present credible evidence to support [p]laintiff's proposed relevant market definition." We agree.

First, we reject El Sineitti's repeated contention that her [*35] competitive market is simple to discern and easily understood by all. Courts have recognized that, in the retail gasoline market, "proximity does not per se show actual competition." (Shell Co. (Puerto Rico) Ltd. v. Los Frailers Service Station (1st Cir. 2010) 605 F.3d 10, 26 [summary judgment for defendant affirmed on Robinson-Patman Act claims where the plaintiff "presumed" competition with three other Shell stations within two miles].) In United Food Mart, Inc. v. Motiva Enterprises, LLC, supra, 404 F.Supp.2d 1344, the court excluded the declaration of plaintiff's expert on defendant petroleum company's summary judgment motion. The court found the expert's declaration opining that the plaintiff operator's station was within the same relevant geographic market as two nearby service stations was inadmissible because it was based upon unreliable methodology. The expert did not perform a cross-price elasticity analysis or determine whether a positive correlation existed between retail prices, but merely visually observed the physical proximity of the stations and performed a comparative sales volume analysis. (Id. at pp. 1349-1350, 1352.) As the trial court here stated, "the Court cannot [*36] accept Plaintiff's proposed relevant market definition simply because Plaintiff says it is so."

In arguing that ConocoPhillips "waived" any objection to Martig's testimony, El Sineitti suggests the court refused to credit Martig's testimony because it found him unqualified on the issue of geographic markets. The court did not reject Martig's declaration on the ground that he was not qualified to testify as an expert as to the definition of the relevant geographic market. [15] Rather, the court recognized in its statement of decision that even when properly qualified, expert opinion that is "'purely conclusory because . . . unaccompanied by a reasoned explanation connecting the factual predicates to the ultimate conclusion . . . has no evidentiary value.'" (Jennings v. Palomar Pomerado Health Systems, Inc. (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 1108, 1117.)

El Sineitti argues the court erroneously required expert economic testimony to define "the relatively simple market of consumers buying gas from retail stations," requiring her to provide a professional economic analysis to survive

[15] We believe the court could have excluded Martig's opinion on the basis that he was not qualified to render an opinion on customer behavior or the relevant geographic market as he had no degree or training in economics, had not studied consumer purchasing behavior or patterns in El Sineitti's proposed market or in any market, and had never testified [*37] previously in an antitrust matter. (Cf, Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd. (9th Cir. 1991) 924 F.2d 1484, 1490 [non-economic witness was unqualified "to opine on a highly technical economic question" of defining a relevant geographic market; Western Parcel Exp. v. United Parcel Service (N.D.Cal. 1998) 65 F.Supp.2d 1052, 1058-1060 (Western Parcel), affd. 190 F.3d 974 [summary judgment for defendant where plaintiff's experts had no background in antitrust economics or antitrust law and had not offered opinions on market definitions in previous litigation].) ConocoPhillips asserted Martig was unqualified in writing in its reply to plaintiff's opposition and again orally at the summary judgment hearing, when counsel argued that Martig was "not qualified to give an opinion" regarding whether El Sineitti was in competition with other Union 76 stations in the antitrust economic sense. ConocoPhillips has not "waived" such objection on appeal. (Reid v. Google, Inc., supra, 50 Cal.4th 512, 526-527, 531-532 [evidentiary objection in summary judgment proceedings was made in writing before the hearing or raised orally at the hearing, the trial court's failure to rule on the objection [*38] does not waive the objection for purposes of appellate review].)

summary judgment. Of the evidence that El Sineitti did submit, none was from an expert or involved studies or other analysis defining a relevant geographic market so as to raise a triable issue as to causation by showing that she was in competition with the alleged favored buyers.

We agree with El Sineitti that whether her Union 76 station was in actual competition with other Union 76 stations within a five-mile radius is an inherently factual question. (F.T.C. v. Tenet Health Care Corp. (8th Cir. 1999) 186 F.3d 1045, 1052 ["Determination of the relevant geographic market is highly fact sensitive"]; see TYR Sport, supra, 709 F.Supp.2d at p. 816, fn. 17.) But we disagree with her argument that expert testimony is unnecessary because a jury can use its "common sense" to decide the issue.

It appears that courts are divided as to whether plaintiff must introduce expert testimony to establish the relevant [*39] market. (Coast to Coast Entertainment, LLC v. Coastal Amusements, Inc. (D.C. NJ 2005) 2005 U.S.Dist.LEXIS 26849, *56 and fn. 21 (Coast to Coast Entertainment).) Courts finding expert testimony necessary include: Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., supra, 924 F.2d 1484, 1490 [principals in the case were not experts "qualified to opine on a highly technical economic question" of the definition of the relevant market]; Bailey v. Allgas, Inc. (11th Cir. 2002) 284 F.3d 1237, 1239; Water Craft, supra, 361 F.Supp.2d 518, 542; Berlyn, supra, 223 F.Supp.2d 718, 727 and fn. 3; Virginia Vermiculite v. W.R. Grace & Co.-Conn. (W.D.Va. 2000) 108 F.Supp.2d 549, 576, n. 16.) Courts stating that expert testimony is not always required to define the relevant product market include the United States Supreme Court in Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. (1993) 509 U.S. 209, 242 ["Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them" [16]]; Coast to Coast Entertainment, supra, 2005 U.S.Dist.LEXIS 26849, *56 and fn. 21; Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc. (S.D.N.Y. 1997) 958 F.Supp. 895, 904 ["experts are not always essential [*40] to defining the relevant market"]; see also Victus, Ltd. v. Collezione Europa U.S.A., Inc. (M.D.N.C. 1998) 26 F.Supp.2d 772, 786-787 (Victus) ["Testimony from an economist is not necessary; however, some evidence of the effects of price increases on the proposed market, and an analysis of consumer reactions to such a scenario, would make [plaintiff's] argument more plausible"].) [17]

---

[16] See also United States v. Pabst Brewing Co.(1966) 384 U.S. 546, 549 [government need not prove "by an army of expert witnesses what constitutes a relevant 'economic' or 'geographic' market"].

[17] Those cases observing that expert testimony is not always required do not support El Sineitti's claim that "common sense" and anecdotal evidence of the type she has submitted suffice to provide evidence from which a jury could determine the relevant market.

El Sineitti asserts that in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc. (1992) 504 U.S. 451, 467, the Supreme Court found without any expert testimony, that there existed a triable issue as to whether there was a relevant product market for parts and services for Kodak equipment. (Id. at pp. 481-482 ["The relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined [*41] by the choices available to Kodak equipment owners"].) The court did not discuss whether expert testimony was necessary and nothing in the case suggests that expert testimony was not necessary to define the relevant market.

In Victus, supra, 26 F.Supp.2d 772, 787, the court stated: "Economic experts may not be required, but [the plaintiff] has not provided affidavits of any witnesses who can address such questions, even if their opinions are based solely on their experience in the industry. No reasonable jury could find that a relevant market, as described by [the plaintiff], exists; therefore, summary judgment must be entered against [the plaintiff]." (Fn. omitted.)

In Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., supra, 509 U.S. 209, 242, the court stated: "Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but not as a substitute for them." However, expert testimony was presented by the parties and the court made this statement in the context of rejecting the testimony of the expert. The court explained, "When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, . . . it cannot support a jury's verdict." (Ibid.)

In TYR Sport, supra, 709 F.Supp.2d 802, [*42] the district court overruled the defendant's objection to lay testimony of the plaintiff's executive vice president who had worked in the performance swimwear industry for 34 years and whose testimony regarding barriers to competition in the international market supported the plaintiff's geographical market as the United States, rather than the international market. The court distinguished Morgan, Strand, Wheeler & Biggs v. Radiology, Ltd., supra, 924

Nevertheless, as observed in Lopatka and Page, Economic Authority and the Limits of Expertise in Antitrust Cases, 90 Cornell L.Rev. 617 (2005) (Lopatka and Page), "In antitrust litigation, the factual complexity and economic nature of the issues involved require the presentation of economic expert testimony in all but a few cases." (Id. at p. 617.) "Courts now recognize that market definition requires the sophisticated use of data and theory—a process that typically requires expert testimony. [18]" (Lopatka and [*44] Page, supra, at pp. 659-660 & fn. 265.)

We agree with the district court in Berlyn, supra, 223 F.Supp.2d at page 727, that whether or not expert testimony is required as a matter of law as a predicate to finding a market definition, nevertheless, "as a practical matter, . . . it would seem impossible to prove such a complex economic question without the assistance of a qualified expert, viz., an economist." The Berlyn court granted summary judgment, concluding that the newspaper publisher plaintiffs had failed to identify the relevant product and geographic markets on their antitrust claims. (Id. at pp. 726-729, 742.) Noting that it is "unclear whether expert testimony, as a matter of law, is a necessary predicate to finding a market definition" (id. at p. 727, fn. 3), the court, nevertheless, explained: "Because they bear the burden of proving relevant market, to survive summary judgment on their antitrust claims, the plaintiffs must offer admissible evidence sufficient for a jury to find that the proposed relevant markets are accurate. See Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548 [(1986)]. Defining markets for antitrust analysis is an extremely complex task. See, e.g., [*46] Cogan v. Harford Memorial Hosp., 843 F.Supp. 1013, 1020 (D.Md.1994) (characterizing the issue of relevant geographic market as a 'highly technical economic question'); Victus, Ltd. v. Collezione Europa U.S.A., Inc., [supra,] 26 F.Supp.2d 772, 786 . . . (noting that defining relevant product markets is a 'difficult economic question'). Relevant market cannot be proved through generalizations about any given industry, but instead must be based on the economic and commercial realities of the particular market studied. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., [supra,] 504 U.S. 451, 467, 112 S.Ct. 2072, 119 L.Ed.2d 265 . . . ; Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 335, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962). Thus, to prove relevant market, expert testimony is of utmost importance, and that testimony, or any other evidence, must be based on specific facts pertaining to the proposed market." (Berlyn, at pp. 726-727, fn. omitted, italics added.) Because the Berlyn court had determined the plaintiffs' proposed economic expert was "not qualified to offer his opinion as to the relevant product or geographic markets," it recognized that "plaintiffs bear the difficult, if not impossible, [*47] burden of proving the outer boundaries of a relevant market and market power without the aid of an economic expert." (Id. at p. 727.)

F.2d at page 1490, in which the Ninth Circuit concluded lay witness testimony on the technical subject of the relevant geographic market was impermissible. In contrast, the executive vice president in TYR Sport "testifie[d] only as to factual characteristics of the geographic market, which [was] within his competency as an industry veteran. He [did] not give a conclusory opinion on market definition, unlike the witnesses in Morgan." (TYR Sport, at p. 816, fn. 17.)

In Coast to Coast Entertainment, Inc., supra, 2005 U.S.Dist.LEXIS 26849, the court concluded that even were it to consider the information provided in plaintiff's non-expert declarations, the plaintiff had failed to demonstrate the relevant product market. (*Id. at p. 56.) The [*43] court also recognized that "a plaintiff cannot prove the relevant market through generalizations about any particular industry, but instead must demonstrate the economic and commercial realities of the particular market studied. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 467, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)." (Coast to Coast Entertainment, at pp. *51-52.)

In Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., supra, 958 F.Supp. 895, 904, the plaintiff did submit the declaration and cross-elasticity reports of an expert economist "to satisfy its burden relating to market definition." Yet, the court concluded plaintiff had failed to satisfy that burden. (Id. at p. 903.)

[18] "See, e.g., Am. Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 (11th Cir. 1985) (holding that '[c]onstruction of a relevant economic market or a showing of monopoly power in that market cannot . . . be based upon lay opinion testimony'); Va. Vermiculite, Ltd. v. W.R. Grace & Co., [supra,] 108 F. Supp. 2d 549, 576[, fn.] 16 . . . (holding expert testimony practically necessary for market definition); Drs. Steuer & Latham, P.A. v. Nat'l Med. Enters., Inc., 672 F. Supp. 1489, 1512[, fn.] 25 (D.S.C. 1987) ('Failure to adduce expert testimony on competitive issues such as market definition augurs strongly in favor of granting summary judgment against an antitrust plaintiff'), affd., 846 F.2d 70 (4th Cir. 1988) (Table). Although the court in Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., [supra,] 958 F. Supp. 895 . . . , affd., 130 F.3d 1101 (2d Cir. 1997), stated that 'experts are not always essential to defining the relevant market,' id. at 904, it cited for this proposition United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., [supra,] 384 U.S. 546, 549 . . . , which dates from an era in which market definition was not conducted on economic grounds." (Lopatka and Page, [*45] supra, 90 Cornell L.Rev. at p. 660, fn. 265.)

"In practice, economists provide the court with expert testimony to explain the relevant market and to measure the impact of the allegedly illegal conduct. [Citation.]" (Western Parcel, supra, 65 F.Supp.2d 1052 at p. 1058.) "On summary judgment, this court is not to weigh the credibility of the evidence presented, but rather decide whether the evidence presents a genuine issue of fact. But assertions in expert declarations do not automatically create genuine issues of fact. [Citation.] When expert opinions are not supported by sufficient facts, or when the indisputable record contradicts or otherwise renders the opinions unreasonable, they cannot be relied upon. Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 242, 113 S.Ct. 2578, 2598, 125 L.Ed.2d 168. '[E]xpert opinion evidence . . . has little probative value in comparison with the economic factors' that may dictate a particular conclusion. Matsushita [Electric Industrial Co. Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp. (1986)] 475 U.S. [574,] 594[, fn.] 19, 106 S.Ct. at 1360[, fn.] 19. Expert declarations [*48] may be useful as a guide in interpreting market facts, but they are not a substitute for competent economic evidence. Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 242, 113 S.Ct. at 2598. The opinion of [plaintiffs'] experts do not create genuine fact issues about the definition of the relevant market." (Western Parcel, at p.1060, italics added.)

El Sineitti's assertion that Martig's declaration demonstrates "cross-elasticity of demand for gasoline" is unpersuasive. Martig never even used the phrase "cross-elasticity." More importantly, Martig's declaration reveals that he never performed any cross-elasticity calculation or analysis of El Sineitti's proposed geographic market. He fails even to specify how much higher he believes prices must be before consumers will travel "5 to 10 miles away or further." He does not consider brand of fuel, traffic patterns, or any other of the many factors that affect El Sineitti's actual competitive market. Moreover, his belief that consumers will purchase fuel somewhere else along their route appears to describe the "minimal" and "sporadic" type of competition that section 21200 does not encompass. (*Madani v. Equilon Enterprises LLC, supra, 2009 WL 2148664 at p. 8.)

As [*49] we stated in Andrews v. Foster Wheeler LLC, supra, 138 Cal.App.4th 96, "'It is not enough to produce just some evidence. The evidence must be of sufficient quality to allow the trier of fact to find the underlying fact in favor of the party opposing the motion for summary judgment.' [Citation.] Notably, '[p]laintiffs cannot manufacture a triable issue of fact through use of an expert opinion with self-serving conclusions devoid of any basis, explanation or reasoning.' [Citation.] '[A]n expert's opinion rendered without a reasoned explanation of why the underlying facts lead to the ultimate conclusion has no evidentiary value because an expert opinion is worth no more than the reasons and facts on which it is based.' [Citation.]" (Id. at p. 108.)

Neither Martig nor the conclusions stated in his declaration provide the admissible evidence from which a jury reasonably could find the relevant geographic market was that claimed by El Sineitti.

C. Discovery from ConocoPhillips concerning "price zones"

As the trial court found, El Sineitti relied also upon documents and deposition testimony concerning ConocoPhillips's price zones. However, she "failed to articulate how the cited documents and [*50] testimony support her proposed relevant market of all Union 76-branded stations within five miles of her station." [19] The use of price zones are "commonplace in the petroleum business and constitutes a reasonable trade practice." (Cain v. Chevron U.S.A., supra, 757 F.Supp. at p. 1125.)

Initially, we note that, in her answers to ConocoPhillips's interrogatories, El Sineitti stated on information and belief that pricing zones did not correspond to relevant competitive geographic markets. She states: "Pricing zones for gasoline established by oil companies have been found not to correspond to geographic relevant markets in which there is competition between dealers. Pricing zones established by CONOCO PHILLIPS, in which the same prices are charged to all dealers within that zone, do not correspond to geographic [*51] relevant markets for retail gasoline purchases within which relevant markets there is a reasonable possibility that Union 76 customers would drive to another Union 76 branded station if the first Union 76 branded dealer raised its prices above that of another Union 76 branded dealer." This response seems antithetical to her attempt to use ConocoPhillips price zones to support her market definition.

---

[19] On appeal, El Sineitti points to a broad range of pages, rather than to specific page cites, to support her claims. This makes our task more difficult. Nevertheless, we have reviewed all the exhibits cited by plaintiff and find the court correctly determined that she failed to articulate the link between these documents and deposition testimony and her claimed geographic market.

In any event, that ConocoPhillips has used a varying number of price zones in the San Francisco area over the past 10 years does not further El Sineitti's claim to be in competition with all Union 76 stations within a five-mile radius. ConocoPhillips account representative William Buerster testified there would be "as many as three or four zones in San Francisco from 2002 to the present."

ConocoPhillips employee David Hinds's deposition testimony was that in 2002 there were two and possibly three zones in San Francisco. El Sineitti's station was in the San Francisco South Zone. The South San Francisco market tended to be volatile, so sometimes the zone would be "feathered" to avoid a significant price drop from one zone to the next. In July 2008, in response to changing competitive market [*52] conditions that did not previously exist, namely major competitors Chevron and Shell consolidating ownership of their branded stations and transitioning their price structure accordingly, the number of price zones was decreased and San Francisco and most of San Mateo were consolidated into a single wholesale price zone. This evidence does nothing to support El Sineitti's claimed geographic market, as consolidation into a single zone occurred in 2008, after her claimed damages period, beginning in 2005 and ending in 2007, when she de-branded as a Union 76 station.

Nor is the fact that ConocoPhillips used MPSI data and software to gauge localized competitive conditions helpful to El Sineitti, as she did not explain how the use of MPSI demonstrates a five-mile competitive market for her station. In her opening brief, appellant argues that her station "was run in an MPSI tactic showing that it was in a competitive area with other stations." (Italics added.) She does not limit this statement to "all other Union 76 stations within five miles of her station." At the summary judgment hearing, counsel for El Sineitti pointed to the price zone map produced by ConocoPhillips, and identified it [*53] as "showing various price zones that existed at the end of 2003 and the beginning of 2004." Again, this time period was outside the period during which she claimed price discrimination and damages.

El Sineitti submitted a document appearing to show that her station was analyzed against other stations in price zone No. 32 by estimating volume changes that would result from a five-percent price change. As the court pointed out in its statement of decision, this report showed El Sineitti's station grouped with only one other ConocoPhillips Union 76-branded station located in San Francisco—not all other Union 76 stations within five miles. Moreover, this document run date was listed as November 19, 2004—again outside plaintiff's alleged period of price discrimination.

El Sineitti also relies upon a document purporting to show that ConocoPhillips ran an MPSI competitive analysis for a station located at 101 South Mayfair Avenue in Daly City with another station as far away as 7.8 miles. This document is completely irrelevant to the question of El Sineitti's competitive geographic market. It was conceded that the 101 South Mayfair station was never in the same price zone as El Sineitti's station. [*54] Rather, as the court found, the 101 South Mayfair station had been in a zone next to El Sineitti's. So, too, that Conoco Phillips moved the Daly City station into a different price zone, or "feathered" prices across its zones, does not provide evidence that plaintiff actually competed with all Union 76 stations within five miles of her own.

Finally, these documents were not relied upon by Martig and no knowledgeable witness testified that these documents supported El Sineitti's claimed geographic market or explained how they supported an economic analysis of the geographic market.

The court in Berlyn, supra, 223 F.Supp.2d 718, rejected the plaintiffs' claim that other evidence supported their market definitions. The court found the documents relied upon by the plaintiffs were "insufficient to support their proposed market definitions, as they are either inadmissible or irrelevant." (Id. at p. 727.) These documents included internal documents of the defendant Washington Post and deposition excerpts that did "not directly speak to outer geographical boundaries and lines of competition for antitrust purposes." (Id. at p. 728.) The Washington Post documents were probative only in that they [*55] listed business statistics by county, the plaintiffs' claimed geographic market. The deposition excepts were statements of non-experts as to what the geographical lines of competition were. (Ibid.) In rejecting this evidence as sufficient evidence from which a jury could accept plaintiff's definitions of relevant market on each of the plaintiffs' antitrust claims, including a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, the court stated: "Plaintiffs' reliance on studies conducted by the defendants is also misplaced, absent a showing that these studies dealt specifically with the markets alleged here or that they were aimed at defining relevant market for antitrust purposes." (Id. at p. 729.)

D. Court did not improperly "weigh" the evidence

El Sineitti also argues that the court improperly "weighed" the evidence presented by the customer declarations and by Martig's declaration when it determined that these declarations did "not present credible evidence to support [her] proposed relevant market definition." (See Nazir, supra, 178 Cal.App.4th at p. 286, fn. 22 [noting criticism that some courts granting summary judgment in title VII and age discrimination employment cases "weigh the evidence, [*56] frequently draw inferences in favor of the moving party employer, and seemingly make credibility determinations"].) Appellant is mistaken. Although the trial court unfortunately used the term "credible evidence" in finding the declarations of the customers and of Martig to be deficient, it is apparent from the statement of decision as a whole that the court did not "weigh" the evidence in the sense we criticized in Nazir, but rather was exercising its traditional function by determining this evidence to be without sufficient weight to allow a reasonable juror to find that the plaintiff satisfied her burden of persuasion on the geographical market issue.

As our Supreme Court recognized in Aguilar, supra, 25 Cal.4th 826, "[E]ven though the court may not weigh the plaintiff's evidence or inferences against the defendants' as though it were sitting as the trier of fact, it must nevertheless determine what any evidence or inference could show or imply to a reasonable trier of fact. . . . In so doing, it does not decide on any finding of its own, but simply decides what finding such a trier of fact could make for itself. [Citations.]" (Id. at p. 856, fn. omitted.) The court noted its agreement [*57] with Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, that "[a]ssessing the sufficiency of the evidence to determine whether a reasonable juror could find that the plaintiff has satisfied his burden of persuasion is a traditional judicial function . . . ." (2 Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law (3d ed. 2007) ¶ 308, p. 136.) (See Aguilar, at p. 856, fn. 26.)

"[Plaintiff] argues that the definition of the relevant market is an issue for the jury, and thus it is not appropriate for the court to rule on the relevant market in this motion. See Image Tech. Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1203 (9th Cir.1997) ('Ultimately what constitutes a relevant market is a factual determination for the jury'). However, as with any issue of fact, if no genuine issue exists, or if plaintiff has failed to carry its burden of going forward with the evidence, summary judgment is appropriate. See Morgan, [Strand, Wheeler & Biggs, v. Radiology, Ltd., supra,] 924 F.2d at 1489-90; [citation]. It is therefore proper for this court to examine the record and the law, to decide if there are genuine fact issues concerning the relevant market." (Western Parcel, supra, 65 F.Supp.2d at p. 1058.) We have done so [*58] here and have determined that ConocoPhillips met its initial burden of presenting evidence sufficient to shift the burden of production on the issue of the relevant geographic market to El Sineitti. El Sineitti failed to establish a triable issue of fact regarding the element of causation, as she failed to produce relevant and admissible evidence of her claimed relevant geographic market such that a reasonable juror could find that the favored and disfavored stations were in actual competition with each other.

Because we affirm the trial court's grant of summary judgment on this basis, we need not address the alternative and additional bases upon which the court granted summary judgment on El Sineitti's price discrimination cause of action. [20]

---

[20] The trial court recognized that having found El Sineitti had failed to raise a triable issue of material fact as to the definition of her relevant competitive market, it "need go no further." Nevertheless, it proceeded to address the parties' remaining arguments. As to the section 21200 price discrimination cause of action, the court concluded that El Sineitti also "failed to present a triable issue of fact as to whether she received substantial [*59] price differentials over a significant period of time that resulted in competitive harm," and that she "failed to show a triable issue of fact as to whether she suffered any injury caused by ConocoPhillips."

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. ConocoPhillips is awarded its costs on this appeal.

Kline, P.J.

We concur:

Haerle, J.

Richman, J.

End of Document

Cahn v. Oversee

United States District Court for the Central District of California

August 25, 2011, Decided; August 25, 2011, Filed

No. CV 11-03800-SVW (AGRx)

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164904 *

Cahn v. Oversee.net, et al.

Subsequent History: Claim dismissed by, Without prejudice, Motion granted by Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164901 (C.D. Cal., Nov. 9, 2011)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164903 (C.D. Cal., Nov. 29, 2011)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164900 (C.D. Cal., Dec. 6, 2011)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164906 (C.D. Cal., Dec. 6, 2011)

Motion granted by Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164902 (C.D. Cal., Dec. 20, 2011)

Summary judgment denied by Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164911 (C.D. Cal., Dec. 29, 2011)

Motion denied by, in part, Motion denied by, in part, Without prejudice Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 200028 (C.D. Cal., Jan. 4, 2012)

Later proceeding at Cahn v. Oversee, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 200031 (C.D. Cal., Jan. 5, 2012)

Claim dismissed by, Motion denied by, in part, Motion denied by Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 200029 (C.D. Cal., Jan. 6, 2012)

Findings of fact/conclusions of law at Cahn v. Oversee, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15224 (C.D. Cal., Feb. 6, 2012)

Motion denied by Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 200033 (C.D. Cal., Apr. 19, 2012)

Partial summary judgment granted by Cahn v. Oversee.net, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 200035 (C.D. Cal., Apr. 19, 2012)

Core Terms

alleges, argues, Defendants', plaintiff's claim, conversion, fraudulent, unfair, inducement, Reply, fails, motion to dismiss, motion to strike, domain name, fair dealing, good faith, breach of contract claim, misrepresentation claim, punitive damages, particularity, earn, intentional misrepresentation, alleged misrepresentation, breach of contract, Misrepresentation, promises, responds, business practice, representations, contractual, Prayer

Counsel: [*1] For Monte Cahn, an individual, Plaintiff: John L Barber, Shawna Rasul, Shawna Rasul, Lewis Brisbois Bisgaard and Smith LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Kenneth D Watnick, Anderson McPharlin & Conners LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Oversee.net, a California corporation, Jefff Kupietzky, an individual, Lawrence Ng, an individual, Defendants: William A Delgado, LEAD ATTORNEY, Willenken Wilson Loh & Delgado LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Leemore Kushner, Ervin Cohen & Jessup LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Michael C Lieb, Ervin Cohen and Jessup LLP, Beverly Hills, CA.

Judges: STEPHEN V. WILSON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: STEPHEN V. WILSON

Opinion

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: IN CHAMBERS ORDER re MOTION TO DISMISS PURSUANT TO RULE 12(b)(6), MOTION TO STRIKE PURSUANT TO RULE 12(e) [12]

I. INTRODUCTION

On May 3, 2011, Plaintiff Monte Cahn filed a Complaint against Defendants Oversee.net, Jeff Kupietzky, and Lawrence Ng alleging a total of ten claims: (1)-(3) three separate breach of contract claims; (4) breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (5) breach of fiduciary duty; (6) an accounting; (7) intentional misrepresentation; (8) negligent misrepresentation; (9) conversion; and (10) unfair competition under California Business and Profession Code § 17200. (Complaint ¶¶ 28-93). On June 1, 2011, Defendants [*2] filed a Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) and a Motion to Strike pursuant to Rule 12(e).[1] On June 22, 2011, Plaintiff filed a First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), eliminating the claim for breach of fiduciary duty. On July 15, 2011, Defendant filed a Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) and Motion to Strike pursuant to Rule 12(f) ("MTD"). On July 25, 2011, Plaintiff filed an Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss and Motion to Strike ("Opposition"). On August 1st, 2011, Defendants filed a Reply in support of their Motion Dismiss and Motion to Strike ("Reply").

For the reasons set forth in this Order, Defendants' Motions are hereby GRANTED.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

According to the FAC, in 1999, Plaintiff Cahn, a pioneer in the field of internet domain name selling and valuing, formed Domain Systems, Inc. d/b/a Moniker.com ("Moniker"). (FAC ¶¶ 8-9). Moniker provided services including sales, brokerage, registration and management of internet domain names. (Id.). Cahn managed Moniker until 2005, at which time he sold Moniker to Seevast Corp. (Id. at ¶ 10). Cahn remained CEO of Moniker and managed the business until 2007, at which point Defendant Oversee allegedly approached Seevast and Cahn [*3] with an offer to purchase Moniker. (Id. at ¶ 12). According to the FAC, Oversee insisted that Cahn join Oversee for a period of at least three years as an explicit condition of the agreement to purchase Moniker. (Id.).

[1] Specifically, Defendants sought dismissal of Plaintiff's Second Claim for Breach of Contract, Fifth Claim for Breach of Fiduciary Duty, Seventh and Eight Claims for Intentional and Negligent Misrepresentation, Ninth Claim for Conversion, and Tenth Claim for violation of Business & Professions Code Section 17200. Defendants further moved to strike Plaintiff's prayer for punitive damages on the grounds that Plaintiff failed to plead a claim that would entitle him to punitive damages.

Plaintiff further alleges that Defendants Jeff Kupietzky and Lawrence Ng were "primarily responsible" for negotiating on behalf of Oversee, and that Kupietzky and Ng made a series of statements and promises in or around 2007 designed to induce Plaintiff to join Oversee after its acquisition of Moniker. (Id. at ¶ 13-16). Plaintiff alleges that, as an additional inducement for Plaintiff to join Oversee, Oversee proposed a "Management Incentive Plan" ("MIP") under which Plaintiff could earn up to $13,000,000 if certain performance goals were met. (Id. at ¶ 19). Plaintiff further alleges that Ng and Kupietzky were "primarily responsible" for making false representations designed to assure Plaintiff that he would be able to earn the $13,000,000 in payments under the MIP (Id. at ¶ 20). Plaintiff alleges that, as a result, he was induced to forego other lucrative business opportunities, and that the parties reached a mutual agreement regarding the sale of Moniker to Oversee [*4] on or around December 14, 2007. (Id. at ¶ 22). Plaintiff further alleges that he believes that, at some time on or around December 2007, Defendants formed the intent to conceal their intentions to benefit from "Moniker's great public reputation" while interfering with Plaintiff's ability to manage Moniker, thus making it impossible for Plaintiff to obtain the $13,000,000 in payments under the MIP. (Id. at ¶¶ 22-23).

Plaintiff alleges that, subsequent to the acquisition of Moniker by Oversee, Defendants engaged in a series of affirmative actions for the purpose of denying Plaintiff the ability to obtain benefits under the MIP. (Id. at ¶ 24A-M). Specifically, among other allegations, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants: gave Plaintiff additional responsibilities without modifying the performance goals under the MIP; improperly diverted revenues and profits from Moniker; cut Plaintiff's staff at Moniker in spite of promises to provide Moniker with sufficient resources to combat prior staffing issues; improperly reported Moniker's expenses, creating the false impression that Moniker was underperforming; restrained Moniker's marketing budget; denied Moniker the opportunity to cross-market [*5] to other Oversee subsidiaries in spite of promises to the contrary; and failed to obtain a California escrow license for Moniker that would have allowed Moniker to legally perform domain name auctions in California, where Over was based. (Id.). Plaintiff alleges that Defendants' conduct caused customers to leave Moniker, thus negatively affecting Plaintiff's ability to achieve the performance goals under the MIP. (Id. at ¶ 24N).

Plaintiff alleges that, on or around June 4, 2010, Oversee offered additional compensation through a Commission Plan under which Plaintiff was to receive a pre-determined percentage payment of certain individual sales transaction. (Id. at ¶ 28). Plaintiff alleges that Defendants denied him full compensation under the Commission Plan through improper diversion of revenue and accounting errors. (Id. at ¶ 29). Plaintiff's employment with Defendant Oversee expired on December 31, 2010. (Id. at ¶ 31).

Plaintiff's FAC alleges the following claims for relief: (1) Breach of Contract - 2007 Management Incentive Plan; (2) Breach of Contract - Commission Plan 2010; (3) Breach of Contract - Restaurants.com; (4) Breach of the Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing; [*6] (5) Accounting; (6) Intentional Misrepresentation; (8) Negligent Misrepresentation; (9) Conversion; (10) Unfair Competition under Cal. Business & Professions Code § 17200.[2]

Defendant has filed a Motion to Dismiss certain Claims for Relief in the First Amended Complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), arguing that Plaintiff fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Specifically, Defendants argue that the Fourth, Sixth, Eight Ninth and Tenth Claims for Relief all fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Defendants further argue that the Sixth and Eighth Claims for Relief fail to plead fraud with particularity as required by Rule 9(b). Additionally, Defendant has filed a Motion to Strike Plaintiff's prayer for punitive damages pursuant to Rule 12(f), arguing that Plaintiff has failed to plead a claim entitling him to punitive damages.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

[2] Plaintiff's FAC does not include a 7th claim for relief.

A. Motion to Dismiss

On a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff's complaint "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 547, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. "Dismissal [*7] is improper unless 'it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'" Love v. United States, 915 F.2d 1242, 1245 (9th Cir. 1989) (quoting Gibson v. United States*, 781 F.2d 1334, 1337 (9th Cir. 1986))*.

Claims for fraud must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Rule 9(b). Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Rule 9(b) provides that "[i]n all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). The Ninth Circuit clarified the requirements of Rule 9(b) in In re Glenfed Inc. Securities Litigation, 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc). When pleading fraud, a complaint "must adequately specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiff contends the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements." Id. at 1548 n. 7 (quoting J.W. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 9.03, at 9-19-21 (2d. ed. 1994)). Moreover, "Rule 9(b) does not allow a complaint to merely lump multiple defendants together but require[s] plaintiffs to differentiate their allegations . . . and inform each defendant separately of the allegations surrounding his alleged participation in the fraud." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764-65 (9th Cir. 2007) (citation and quotation omitted).

B. Motion to Strike

Rule 12(f) permits a court to strike from a pleading "any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or [*8] scandalous matter" either on its own or upon a party's motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). "[T]he function of a 12(f) motion to strike is to avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial . . . ." Sidney-Vinstein v. A.H. Robins Co., 697 F.2d 880, 885 (9th Cir.1983). Immaterial matter is that which has no important relationship to the claim, and impertinent matter that which does not pertain and is unnecessary to the issues in question. Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 984 F.2d 1524, 1527 (9th Cir. 1994) (quoting 5 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure § 1382, at 706-07 (1990)), rev'd on other grounds, 510 U.S. 517, 534-35, 114 S. Ct. 1023, 127 L. Ed. 2d 455 (1994).

III. DISCUSSION

Defendants have not moved to dismiss any of Plaintiff's three breach of contract claims, nor Plaintiff's claim for an accounting. (MTD at 5-6). Rather, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's remaining claims are all legally improper efforts to restate basic contract claims, and should be dismissed on that basis. (Id. at 6).

Furthermore, it should be noted that while Plaintiff's Oversee Employment Agreement contains a Florida choice of law provision, the MIP states that its terms are governed by California law. (Id. at 4). Therefore, Defendants contend that claims arising out of the MIP are governed by California law, while all other claims are governed [*9] by Florida Law. (Id.). Defendants contend that both choice of law provisions are reasonable and enforceable because Plaintiff is a Florida resident, Oversee is a California corporation with its principal place of business in Los Angeles, and Plaintiff alleges that a substantial part of the events giving rise to Plaintiff's claims occurred in the Central District of California. (Id. at 5). Plaintiff does not appear to contest Defendant's argument regarding applicable law.

A. Plaintiff's Fourth Claim: Breach of the Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

1. The MIP and California Law.

Defendants argue that plaintiff's claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing fails under California law because Plaintiff alleges that both the MIP were reduced to written agreements that supersede all prior negotiations. (Id. at 6, citing Cal. Civ. Code § 1625 ("The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument."). Therefore, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claims that Oversee misled him regarding the amounts he would earn pursuant to the MIP and Commission [*10] Plan are inadmissible because Plaintiff alleges that both agreements are integrated writings. (Id., citing Banco do Brasil v. Latian, 234 Cal. App. 3d 973, 1000, 285 Cal. Rptr. 870 (1991) ("[W]here the parties to a contract have set forth the terms of their agreement in a writing which they intend as the final and complete expression of their understanding, it is deemed integrated and may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of a contemporaneous oral agreement.")).

Plaintiff responds that, under California law, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in every contract "not only imposes upon each contracting party the duty to refrain from doing anything which would render performance of the contract impossible by any act of his own, but also the duty to do everything that the contract presupposes that he will do to accomplish its purpose." (Opposition at 4 (citing Harm v. Frasher, 181 Cal. App. 2d 405, 417, 5 Cal. Rptr. 367 (1960)). Plaintiff argues that, pursuant to the MIP, Plaintiff's compensation was based on attainment of certain performance goals. (Id. at 5.) Accordingly, Plaintiff argues that Defendants had a duty to refrain from doing anything that would impair Plaintiff's ability to meet those goals as well as an affirmative duty to do everything that the MIP presupposes Oversee would do to accomplish the purpose [*11] of the MIP. (Id.). Plaintiff argues that the litany of post-merger conduct referenced above constitutes a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing because such conduct was targeted at impairing Plaintiff's ability to receive benefits under the MIP. (Id. at 6; FAC ¶¶ 24A-M).

Defendants reply that, rather than allege a failure to comply with implied contractual obligations, Plaintiff's Fourth Claim actually alleges fraudulent inducement. (Reply at 1). Accordingly, defendants argue that, to the extent that this claim is a fraudulent inducement claim, it should be dismissed for failure to plead with the requisite particularity. (Id.). Additionally, Defendants reiterate their argument that Plaintiff's Fourth Claim relies on the same allegations as Plaintiff's breach of contract claims. (Id.).

Accordingly, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's Fourth Claim is superfluous, and should therefore be dismissed.

2. The Commission Plan and Florida law

Defendants argue that, under Florida law, a party cannot state a tort claim that relies on alleged breaches of contract. (MTD at 7-8). Defendants argue that Plaintiff merely alleges that he failed to receive payment due under the Commission Plan. (Id. at 8). Therefore, [*12] Defendants argue that, because this claim is not extraneous to the contract, Plaintiff is limited to his contract claims. (Id. (citing HTP, Ltd. V. Lineas Aereas Costarricenses, S.A., 685 So.2d 1238, 1239-40 (Fla., 1996) ("The distinction between fraud in the inducement and other kinds of fraud is the same as the distinction drawn by a New Jersey federal district court between fraud extraneous to the contract and fraud interwoven with the breach of contract. With respect to the latter kind of fraud, the misrepresentations relate to the breaching party's performance of the contract and do not give rise to an independent cause of action in tort.").

Plaintiff responds that, under Florida law, an action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing "is not an independent cause of action, but attaches to the performance of a specific contractual obligation." (Opposition at 7 (quoting Centurion Air Cargo v. UPS Co., 420 F.3d 1146, 1151-52 (11th Cir. 2005). Plaintiff argues that the litany of post-merger conduct referenced above constituted deliberate interference with Plaintiff's ability to manage the business, thus impairing his rights under the Commission Plan. (Id.). Accordingly, Plaintiff argues that he has pled a viable claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing under the Commission Plan.

Defendants reply that Florida [*13] law dose not recognize a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing "where the allegations underlying the claim for breach of the implied covenant are duplicative of those which support the claim for breach of contract." (Reply at 3 (quoting *Enola Contracting Services, Inc. v. URS Group, Inc., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33441, 2008 WL 1844612 3 (N.D. Fla. April 23, 2008). Defendants further argue that Plaintiff's Fourth Claim arises solely under the MIP, and thus arises only under California law. (Id.). Specifically, Defendants note that Plaintiff relies solely on paragraph 24 of the FAC in support of his claim, and that paragraph 24 of the FAC solely concerns allegations regarding the MIP, not the Commission Plan. (Id.). Accordingly, Defendants argue that: (1) Plaintiff's Fourth Claim does not invoke Florida law; and (2) under Florida law, Plaintiff's Fourth Claim is invalid because it is duplicative of Plaintiff's breach of contract claims. (Id. at 4).

3. Conclusion

Defendants are correct that Plaintiff's Fourth Claim relies on the same factual allegations as Plaintiff's breach of contract claims. Furthermore, in Freeman & Mills, Inc. v. Belcher Oil Co., 11 Cal.4th 85, 102, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 420, 900 P.2d 669 (1995) the California Supreme Court established "a general rule precluding tort recovery for noninsurance contract breach, at least in the absence of violation of 'an independent duty arising [*14] from principles of tort law' than the bad faith denial of the existence of, or liability under, the breached contract." (Internal citation omitted). Any duties owed by Defendants to Plaintiff arose from the parties' contractual relationship. Furthermore, it is unclear from Plaintiff's FAC the extent to which Plaintiff's Fourth Claim relies on California and/or Florida law. Accordingly, Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED regarding Plaintiff's Fourth Claim.

B. Plaintiff's Sixth and Eighth Claims: Intentional and Negligent Misrepresentation

Defendant argues that Plaintiff's claims for Intentional and Negligent Misrepresentation are actually allegations that Oversee breached the MIP by failing to comply with its terms, and/or by impairing Plaintiff's ability to earn bonuses under the MIP. (MTD at 8-9). Defendants further argue that Plaintiff has failed to plead his misrepresentation claims with the particularity required under Rule 9(b). (Id.). Specifically, Defendants argue that Plaintiff makes a conclusory allegation that Defendants "represented to Cahn that he would have the ability to earn up to $13,000,000 in payments under the MIP" but fails to specify where, when and by what means each of the Defendants [*15] made any alleged misrepresentation. (Id. at 10; FAC ¶¶ 63, 71). Furthermore, Defendants argue that Plaintiff fails to allege why any such representations were false. (Id.).

Additionally, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's misrepresentation claims are restatements of his breach of contract claims because "the only fraud asserted against Oversee is an alleged false promise to perform the contractual duties at issue." (Id. at 11-12). Finally, Defendants argue that the alleged misrepresentations regarding Plaintiff's ability to earn up to $13,000,000 in bonuses were statements regarding future events, and are thus non-actionable opinions. (Id. at 12; Tarmann v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co., 2 Cal. App. 4th 153, 158, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 (1991) ("Predictions as to future events, or statements as to future action by some third party, are deemed opinions, and not actionable fraud.")).

Plaintiff responds that he has pled his misrepresentation claims with the requisite particularity, noting that a pleading "is sufficient under Rule 9(b) if it identifies the circumstances constituting fraud so that the defendant can prepare an adequate answer from the allegations." (Opposition at 9 (quoting Neubronner v. Milken, 6 F.3d 666, 671-72 (9th Cir. 1993)). Plaintiff argues that he has met this burden because the FAC makes specific allegations regarding the various alleged misrepresentations made by Defendants [*16] Kupietzky and Ng as well as why those alleged misrepresentations were false. (Id. at 9-10; citing FAC ¶¶ 13-21, 24A-M, 67, 76).

Plaintiff further notes that, subsequent to filing his complaint, Plaintiff became aware of a contract between Defendant Oversee and Google. (Id. at 10-11). Plaintiff contends that the acquisition of Moniker by Oversee violated Oversee's alleged contract with Google. (Id.). Accordingly, Plaintiff argues that Defendants knew that Plaintiff could never reach the performance goals under the MIP, and therefore Plaintiff could not possibly earn the $13 million in bonus payments under the MIP. (Id.). Plaintiff thus characterizes his misrepresentation claims as "[a]n action for promissory fraud," alleging that Defendants induced Plaintiff to enter into his employment agreement and the MIP via the above-referenced misrepresentations. (Id. at 11).

Additionally, Plaintiff responds that his misrepresentation claims are not restatements of his contract claims. (Id.). Plaintiff argues that California courts have allowed tort damages in contract cases "where the contract was fraudulently induced." (Id. at 11-12 (quoting Erlich v. Menezes, 21 Cal. 4th 543, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978 (1999)). Plaintiff argues that, but for Defendants' alleged false representations, Plaintiff [*17] would not have entered into the MIP. (Id. at 12; citing Robinson Helicopter Co., Inc. v. Dana Corp., 34 Cal.4th 979, 990-991, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 (2004)). Accordingly, Plaintiff argues that Defendants' alleged misrepresentations are independently actionable. (Id.).

Finally, Plaintiff argues that Oversee's argument that predictions of future events are not actionable is only partially correct. (Id. at 13). Plaintiff notes that a "promise of future conduct is actionable as fraud only if made without a present intent to perform." (Id., (quoting Magpali v. Farmers Group, Inc., 48 Cal. App.4th 471, 481, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225 (1996)). Plaintiff argues that because Defendants were aware during the 2007 negotiations that Plaintiff would never be able to meet the performance goals necessary to trigger payment under the MIP, Defendants' alleged "promise" to pay Plaintiff up to $13,000,000 in bonuses constitutes actionable fraud. (Opposition at 13-14).

Defendants reply that Plaintiff's Opposition makes it clear that the allegedly fraudulent statements cited by Plaintiff in his misrepresentation claims are also incorporated into Plaintiff's breach of contract claims. (Reply at 4). Accordingly, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's misrepresentation claim is actually a breach of contract claim, improperly restated. (Id.).

Defendants further argue that, if Plaintiff is actually attempting to establish the elements of fraud [*18] in the inducement, then the proper remedy is rescission of the MIP. (Id. at 5; Ford v. Shearson Lehman/American Express, Inc., 180 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1028, 225 Cal. Rptr. 895 (1986) ("In the usual case of fraud, where the promisor knows what he is signing but his consent is induced by fraud, mutual assent is present and a contract is formed, which, by reason of the fraud, is voidable. In order to escape from its obligations the aggrieved party must rescind, by prompt notice and offer to restore the consideration received, if any.") (Emphasis in original; internal citations omitted)).

Additionally, Defendants reiterate their arguments that: (1) Plaintiff's misrepresentation claims were not pled with the requisite particularity; and (2) any alleged representations by Kupietzky and Ng concerning the MIP merged into the MIP pursuant to Cal. Civ. Code § 1625. (Id. at 8). Finally, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' reliance on Magpali is misplaced because Magpali "does not allow a plaintiff to support a fraud claim by relying on representations about future contractual performance." (Id. at 8-9). Because all of the alleged misrepresentations relate to contractual performance, Defendants argue that Plaintiff should be limited to his contract claims, and his fraud claims should thus be dismissed. (Id.).

Plaintiff's claims for misrepresentation [*19] do not meet the particularity requirements of Rule 9. Furthermore, Plaintiff's allegations all relate to representations regarding Defendants' future performance of its obligations under the MIP. Therefore, Defendants' motion is GRANTED regarding Plaintiff's Sixth and Eighth Claims..

C. Plaintiff's Ninth Claim: Conversion

The elements of a claim for conversion are: "(1) plaintiffs' ownership or right to possession of property at the time of the conversion; (2) defendants' conversion by a wrongful act or disposition of plaintiffs' property rights; and (3) damages." Messerall v. Fulwider, 199 Cal. App. 3d 1324, 1329, 245 Cal. Rptr. 548 (1988). Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claim for conversion fails because Plaintiff fails to allege that "Oversee knowingly and intentionally asserted wrongful control over Cahn's domain names." (MTD at 14). Because Plaintiff's FAC merely alleges a "mix up," as opposed to an intentional act, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claim for conversion fails. (Id.).

Plaintiff responds that a conversion claim "rests upon the unwarranted interference by defendant with the dominion over the property of the plaintiff." (Plaintiff's Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss at 14 (quoting Burlesci v. Petersen, 68 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 1065, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 704 (1998)). Plaintiff notes that his FAC alleges that Oversee "exercised possession [*20] of approximately 4,500 domain names which [Plaintiff] personally owned." (Id. at 15). Accordingly, Plaintiff argues that, so long as Defendants intended to assert control over Moniker's domain names, Defendants' alleged ignorance that a number of domain names that Plaintiff personally owned were "mixed in" with Moniker's is irrelevant. (Id.).

Defendants reply that, while they acknowledge that conversion is a strict liability tort, Plaintiff has failed to allege any intentional act by Defendants in support of his conversion claim. (Reply at 9-10). Specifically, Defendants note that Plaintiff argues that he discovered that 4,500 of his domain names were "mixed up" with Moniker's domain names, and that Defendant Oversee was receiving revenue from those domain names. (Id. at 10). However, Defendants note that at no point does Plaintiff's FAC allege a specific intentional act by Defendants. (Id.). Accordingly, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claim for conversion should be dismissed.

Defendants are correct that Plaintiff's conversion claim fails to allege any intentional act by Defendants. Therefore, Defendant's motion is GRANTED regarding Plaintiff's Ninth Claim.

D. Plaintiff's Tenth Claim: Unfair Competition [*21] under Cal. Business & Professions Code § 17200

Defendants argue that Plaintiff's claim for Unfair Competition fails because it fails to allege a valid claim under Cal. Business & Professions Code § 17200 ("UCL"), and it fails to allege entitlement to a remedy available under the UCL (MTD at 15). Specifically, defendants argue that a plaintiff must sufficiently allege unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practices. (Id.). Defendants further note that the complaint "must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation." Silicon Knights, Inc. v. Crystal Dynamics, Inc., 983 F. Supp. 1303, 1316 (N.D. Cal. 1997). Defendants argue that Plaintiff's FAC fails to allege any unfair, unlawful or fraudulent business practice, and that Plaintiff cannot meet the requirements of any of the three prongs of a UCL claim. (Id.). Defendants further argue that Plaintiff improperly seeks general and punitive damages pursuant to his UCL claim. (Id. at 16; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203). Defendants acknowledge that Plaintiff's Prayer for Relief requests "restitution of all wrongfully withheld amounts and disgorgement of ill-gotten profits." (Id. at 17). However, Defendant argues that this allegation fails because the UCL only allows restitution to recover money or assets taken from Plaintiff by Defendant. (Id.; See Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1146, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003)). Defendants argue that Plaintiff is not seeking money he paid to Oversee, [*22] but is requesting damages. (Id.). Accordingly, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's UCL claim should be dismissed.

Plaintiff responds that his FAC states a cognizable UCL claim because it alleges conduct constituting both unfair and fraudulent business practices. (Opposition at 15). Plaintiff notes that the UCL's scope is broad, encompassing "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent practice" even where the practice at issue is not proscribed by law. (Id. at 16; see Schnall v. Hertz Corp., 78 Cal. App.4th 1144, 1153-54, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 (2000)).

An unfair business practice occurs when it "offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 93 Cal. App. 4th 700, 719, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 (2001) (internal citation omitted). Plaintiff argues that Defendants engaged in an unfair business practice by making intentional misrepresentations that induced Plaintiff to enter into his employment agreement and the MIP. (Opposition at 16-17). Plaintiff further argues that the public was harmed because Plaintiff communicated Defendants' allegedly false promises to his customers. (Id. at 17). In addition, Plaintiff for the first time alleges that Defendants' conduct was unfair because that conduct also violated antitrust law.[3] (Id. at 17).

---

[3] "When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's 'unfair' act or practice invokes section 17200, the word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly

Plaintiff also argues that he has properly pled fraudulent conduct under the [*23] UCL. (Id. at 18). Plaintiff notes that the "fraudulent" prong of the UCL only requires a showing that members of the public "are likely to be deceived." (Id., see Bank of the West v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 1254, 1267, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 538, 833 P.2d 545 (1992)). Plaintiff argues that his FAC states that Moniker's employees and customers were misled as a result of Defendants' alleged misrepresentations. (Id.). Accordingly, Plaintiff argues that he has stated a claim under the "fraudulent" prong of the UCL.

Finally, Plaintiff argues that his FAC seeks an appropriate remedy because the Prayer for Relief explicitly requests restitution. (Id. at 19). Plaintiff argues that he is seeking restoration of money acquired through unfair practices. (Id., see Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1147-48, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003)).

Defendant replies that Plaintiff fails to state a valid claim under the UCL because Plaintiff is actually alleging that he, not the Defendants, misled Moniker customers. (Defendants' Reply Memorandum at 10). Furthermore, Defendants argue that Plaintiff the Court in Korea Supply explained that an order for restitution under the UCL is one "compelling a UCL defendant to return money obtained through an unfair business practice to those persons in interest from whom the money was taken." (Id. at 11; Korea Supply Co., 29 Cal. 4th at 1149). Defendants therefore argue that Plaintiff's claim that Defendants [*24] frustrated his expectation to future earnings is not a valid claim for restitution under the UCL. (Id.).

Finally, Defendants note that Plaintiff's antitrust violation theory is not articulated in the FAC, characterizing this assertion as a desperate attempt by Plaintiff to salvage his UCL claim. (Id.).

Plaintiff has failed to identify a remedy available to him under the UCL. Accordingly, Plaintiff's 10th Claim is DISMISSED.

E. Plaintiff's Prayer for Punitive Damages

Defendants argue that, because Plaintiff's claim for Intentional Misrepresentation lacks merit, Plaintiff's prayer for punitive damages should thus be stricken. (Defendants' Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint at 18; see Wilkerson v. Butler, 229 F.R.D. 166, 172 (E.D. Cal. 2005) ("A motion to strike is appropriate to address requested relief, such as punitive damages, which is not recoverable as a matter of law.").

Plaintiff responds that he has stated a viable claim for Intentional Misrepresentation. (Opposition at 19). Plaintiff further argues that, because he has pled facts demonstrating willful, unlawful and malicious conduct by the Defendants, he is entitled to seek exemplary damages. (Id., see Cal. Civ. Code § 3294(a) ("In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where it is proven by clear and convincing evidence [*25] that the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damages, may recover damages for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant.").

Whether Plaintiff can seek punitive damages necessarily depends on whether Plaintiff can state a valid claim for intentional misrepresentation. Therefore, because Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED regarding Plaintiff's Sixth and Eighth Claims, Defendant's Motion to Strike is GRANTED regarding Plaintiff's prayer for punitive damages.

IV. CONCLUSION

The essence of Plaintiff's claims at issue is an attempt to plead a breach of contract claim in tort. Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) and Motion to Strike pursuant to Rule 12(f) are hereby threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 186-187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

---

GRANTED. Plaintiff's Fourth, Sixth, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth Claims are therefore DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE with leave to amend. Should Plaintiff refile his claim for intentional misrepresentation/fraudulent inducement, that claim must be pled with particularity pursuant to Rule 9(b).

End of Document

Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

August 25, 2011, Decided; August 25, 2011, Filed

No. C 10-03098 JSW

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 155157 *

SAMSUNG ELECTRONICS CO., LTD., Plaintiff, v. PANASONIC CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Complaint dismissed at, Judgment entered by Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 180282 (N.D. Cal., Jan. 3, 2012)

Motion granted by, Without prejudice Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 205509, 2016 WL 11781870 (N.D. Cal., Sept. 26, 2016)

Motion granted by, Without prejudice Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 205511 (N.D. Cal., Sept. 26, 2016)

Motion granted by, Without prejudice, Stay granted by, Without prejudice Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 205510 (N.D. Cal., Sept. 26, 2016)

Motion granted by, Stay granted by, Motion denied by, Without prejudice Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 205512 (N.D. Cal., Sept. 26, 2016)

Motion granted by, in part, Without prejudice Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 205513 (N.D. Cal., Sept. 26, 2016)

Sanctions disallowed by Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160192 (N.D. Cal., Feb. 20, 2019)

Motion granted by Samsung Elecs. Co. v. Panasonic Corp., 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160183, 2019 WL 4439489 (N.D. Cal., Mar. 6, 2019)

Core Terms

Card, License, patent, antitrust, alleges, patent misuse, royalties, memory, motion to dismiss, statute of limitations, Specification, Defendants', manufacturers, competitor, cause of action, overt act, technologies, supplier, amend, flash

Counsel: [*1] For Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd., a Korean corporation, Plaintiff: Simon J. Frankel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Covington & Burling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Aldo A. Badini, Winston & Strawn LLP, New York, NY; Derek Ludwin, PRO HAC VICE, Jonathan Gimblett, PRO HAC VICE, Monique Mendez O'Donoghue, PRO HAC VICE, Covington & Burling LLP, Washington, DC; Evan Robert Cox, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA; Jennifer Maren Schmidt, PRO HAC VICE, Covington and Burling LLP, Washington, DC; Timothy C. Hester, PRO HAC VICE, Covington & Burling, Washington, DC.

For Panasonic Corporation, a Japanese corporation, Panasonic Corporation of North America, a Delaware corporation, Defendants: Aldo A. Badini, James F. Lerner, Jeffrey L. Kessler, Susannah P. Torpey, Winston & Strawn LLP, New York, NY; Christopher Rankin Clark, PRO HAC VICE, Dewey and LeBoeuf LLP, New York, NY; David S. Turetsky, PRO HAC VICE, Dewey and LeBoeuf LLP, Washington, D.C., Washington, DC; Ian L Papendick, PRO HAC VICE, Winston & Strawn LLP, San Francisco, CA; Matthew McDonnell Walsh, Dewey and LeBoeuf LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For SD-3C LLC, a Delaware limited liability company, Defendant: Aldo A. Badini, Winston & Strawn LLP, New York, NY; [*2] Christopher B. Hockett, Neal Alan Potischman, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Rajesh S. James, PRO HAC VICE, Davis Polk and Wardwell LLP, New York, NY; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA.

Judges: JEFFREY S. WHITE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JEFFREY S. WHITE

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS THE FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT WITH LEAVE TO AMEND

Now before the Court is the joint motion of Defendants Panasonic Corporation ("Panasonic"), Panasonic Corporation of North America ("PNA"), and SD-3C, LLC ("SD-3C") (collectively, "Defendants") to dismiss the First Amended Complaint ("FAC") filed by Plaintiff Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd. ("Plaintiff"). Having carefully reviewed the parties' papers and considering their arguments and the relevant authority, and good cause appearing, the Court hereby GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss.

BACKGROUND

This antitrust action challenges an alleged patent licensing arrangement to control the availability and pricing of Secure Digital Memory Card ("SD Card") technologies and thereby restrain trade. SD Cards are flash memory cards used in various devices such as digital cameras and cell phones. (FAC ¶¶ 14-21.) SD-3C licenses patents are [*3] essential to practicing the SD Card Specification (the "Specification") developed by Panasonic, SanDisk Corporation, and Toshiba Corporation (the "SD Group"). (Id. ¶¶ 2, 4, 38, 46.) On August 25, 1999, Panasonic, SanDisk, and Toshiba announced that they would "jointly develop and promote a next generation flash memory card." (Id. ¶¶ 37, 38.) The Specification incorporated "additional functionality," including "advanced security and copyright protection features," not found in prior flash memory card formats. (Id. ¶¶ 38, 39.) In March 2000, Panasonic, SanDisk, and Toshiba publicly issued the Specification. (Id. ¶ 46.) The SD Group promoted the SD Card format by offering device manufacturers "royalty-free licenses to incorporate SD Card functionality into their products ... and by promising to make SD Cards backwardly compatible with the [MultiMediaCard ("MMC")] format." (Id. ¶ 41.) Since the SD Card was launched in 2000, no significant alternative to the SD Card format has been introduced. (Id. ¶ 112.) By 2009, SD Cards allegedly "accounted for more than 80 percent of all flash memory cards sold worldwide." (Id. ¶ 111.)

Following the creation of the Specification, the SD Group formed [*4] an open membership body called the SD Association and formed SD-3C to make available patent pool licenses to essential SD Card technology. (FAC ¶¶ 2, 52.) Companies that wish to manufacture SD Cards are required to enter into an SD Card License with SD-3C. (Id. ¶ 65.) The SD Card License remains for all practical purposes the exclusive means by which the SD Group members license their SD Card Technology. (Id. ¶ 66.)

On September 24, 2003, Samsung entered into an SD Memory Card License Agreement (the "SD Card License") with SD-3C which became effective November 11, 2003. (Id. ¶¶ 68-70.)

Samsung filed this action on July 15, 2010. Defendants filed an initial motion to dismiss on September 24, 2010. Samsung filed the FAC on October 14, 2010. Defendants moved again to dismiss the FAC on December 1, 2011. On March 31, 2011, this Court vacated the hearing on the motion and took the matter under submission.

The Court shall address specific additional facts in the remainder of this Order.

LEGAL STANDARD

A motion to dismiss is proper under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) where the pleadings fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The complaint is construed in the light most [*5] favorable to the non-moving party and all material allegations in the complaint are taken to be true. Sanders v. Kennedy, 794 F.2d 478, 481 (9th Cir. 1986). However, even under the liberal pleading standard of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2), "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)).

Pursuant to Twombly, a plaintiff must not merely allege conduct that is conceivable but must instead allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a probability requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully.... [*6] When a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57) (internal quotation marks omitted). If the allegations are insufficient to state a claim, a court should grant leave to amend, unless amendment would be futile. See, e.g., Reddy v. Litton Indus., Inc., 912 F.2d 291, 296 (9th Cir. 1990); Cook, Perkiss & Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv., Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 246-47 (9th Cir. 1990).

ANALYSIS

A. Antitrust Causes of Action Are Barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. section 15b, private antitrust claims are subject to a four-year statute of limitations. See Hennegan v. Pacifico Creative Serv., Inc., 787 F.2d 1299, 1300 (9th Cir. 1986). "A civil cause of action under the [antitrust laws] arises at each time the plaintiff's interest is invaded to his damage, and the statute of limitations begins to run at that time." AMF, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 591 F.2d 68, 70 (9th Cir. 1979) (quoting Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 512 F.2d 1264, 1270 (9th Cir. 1975).

In this [*7] matter, Plaintiff alleges that the SD Group committed various antitrust violations when they "agreed to develop the SD Card in August 1999... to devise a modification of the existing MMC specification to serve as the first version of the SD Card specification." (FAC ¶ 4.) Plaintiff alleges that this original agreement > did not produce material procompetitive efficiencies in the development of a standard for a high-speed secure flash memory card. Instead, it served instead as the means by which these companies, acting in concert with 3D-3C, could secure for themselves a dominant market position. The anticompetitive agreement and conduct of Defendant, SanDisk and Toshiba that are the subject of this complaint seek to maintain and exploit that unlawfully acquired dominance.

(Id.)

Plaintiff continues to allege in the complaint that the agreements between Defendants and SanDisk and Toshiba suppress competition in violation of Sections 1and 2 of the Sherman Act. (Id. ¶ 5.) These parties issued the first version of the SD Card Specification in March 2000. (Id. ¶ 46.) On September 24, 2003, Plaintiff signed the SD Memory Card License ("2003 License") in the form offered by 3D-3C. (Id. ¶ 70.) The [*8] 2003 License was then signed by officials of Panasonic, San Disk and Toshiba, on behalf of 3D-3C, effective November 11, 2003.

In September 2006, officials with 3D-3C and Plaintiff met to discuss an amendment ("2006 Amendment") to the 2003 License, but Plaintiff refused to sign the 2006 Amendment.

This case was filed on July 15, 2010, past the expiration of the four year statute of limitations. Although generally a cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations begins to run at the time a defendant commits an action that injures plaintiff's business, in the context of a continuing conspiracy, this has been construed to mean that "each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover damages caused by that act and that, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act." AMF, 591 F.2d at 71. In this way, the continuing violations doctrine can save an otherwise barred claim. In antitrust law, "[a] continuing violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of action arises each time the plaintiff is injured." Pace Industries, Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 237 (9th Cir. 1987) [*9] (citation omitted). It is clear, however, that "a continuation of harm to plaintiffs alone will not keep the cause of action alive without some overt act or continuing conduct of defendants during the limitations period." Electroglas, Inc. v. Dynatex Corp., 497 F. Supp. 97, 105 (N.D. Cal. 1980). [1] "When a continuing violation exists, the limitations period runs from the 'last overt act' by the defendant, which must be (1) a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous decision that (2) inflicts a 'new and accumulating' injury on the plaintiff." Red Lion Medical Safety Inc. v. Ohmeda, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 2d 1218, 1223 (E.D. Cal. 1999) (citing Pace Industries, 813 F.2d at 238).

In this case, Plaintiff asserts that "Defendants have committed numerous overt acts" that have injured Plaintiff both as a competitor and as a supplier. (Opp. Br. at 23-24.) As a competitor, Plaintiff alleges it has suffered continued injury as a result of Defendants' requirement that it pay a royalty, their refusal to provide logo guidelines unless Plaintiff accepted the 2006 Amendment, their refusal to identify the essential patents, and the renewal of the joint licensing scheme in 2007. (See FAC ¶¶ 72, 81, 83, 85-88, 107.) As a supplier, Plaintiff alleges it continues to suffer injury as a result of Defendants' introduction of the 2006 Amendment, which, although unsigned by Plaintiff, was coercive to other manufacturers and/or assemblers of SD Cards, all of whom are actual or potential customers of Plaintiff as a supplier. (See id. ¶¶ 73, 74, 92.) Plaintiff argues that the introduction of the 2006 Amendment caused new injury to Plaintiff as it incrementally limits Plaintiff's ability to expand its business because its customers are injured in their ability [*11] to compete.

The Court finds that the multiple contentions that Defendants carried out the terms of their original 2003 Agreement do not constitute "new and independent" acts. Indeed, they are merely a reaffirmation of a previous decision. See Red Lion, 63 F. Supp. 2d at 1223. This alleged conduct is the implementation of the contract terms originally agreed to by the parties in 2003. See Pace, 813 F.2d at 238 (holding that acts after the execution of a contract relating to its continued implementation do not constitute "overt acts" that restart the statute of limitations period because they are not "new and independent" acts that inflict new injury). Plaintiff alleges in the First Amended Complaint that the cross-licensing agreement among the three major competitors in the SD Card industry allowed those competitors "to enjoy a permanent cost advantage over other competing manufacturers and sellers of CD Cards." (FAC ¶ 110). The complaint also alleges that the "combination" gave the SD Group a "permanent advantage." (See id. ¶¶ 1, 14, 113, 114, 124.) The continued alleged injuries incurred as a result of Defendants' original standards setting conduct

---

[1] Any harm that accrues after the tolling of the statute of limitations periods but that is associated with an overt act that occurred prior to the limitations period is not remediable. However, "each separate cause of action that so accrues [during the statute of limitations period] entitles a plaintiff to recover not only those damages which he has suffered at the date of accrual, but also those which he will suffer in the future from the particular invasion, including what he has suffered [*10] during and will predictably suffer after trial." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338-39, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971).

were, as currently alleged, "permanent [*12] at initiation" and therefore "were 'but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations action.'" AMF, 591 F.2d at 72. After repeatedly alleging that the original cross-licensing agreement reached by the members of the SD Card Group members gave them a permanent cost advantage, Plaintiff now alleges that subsequent overt acts generated new and independent damage.

In this regard, Plaintiff alleges that it suffered injury based on the new and independent act of Defendants' introduction of the 2006 Amendment. The Court notes, however, that Plaintiff did not sign the Amendment and, according to its own theory of liability, stood to profit from the further restriction of competition to competitors in the same field. See American Ad Management, Inc. v. General Telephone Co. of California, 190 F.3d 1051, 1056 (9th Cir. 1999) ("There can be no antitrust injury if the plaintiff stands to gain from the alleged unlawful conduct.") [2] Plaintiff argues that it may state a claim for injury caused by the proposed 2006 Amendment as a supplier of the SD Card products. Plaintiff contends in its opposition to the motion to dismiss that it may have incurred damages by virtue of the restricted ability [*13] of those unidentified competing manufacturers who signed the 2006 Amendment to have sold more SD Cards and in turn those companies might have purchased more SD Card components from Plaintiff as inputs for those cards it may have sold. According to this theory, the inability of those competing manufacturers to have sold more cards after signing the 2006 Amendment would ostensibly inure to the benefit of Plaintiff as a competitor of the parts, but would simultaneously disadvantage Plaintiff as a supplier of the same parts. The Court does not find this theory of liability expressed plausibly in the complaint and does not find the injury postulated to be a direct monetary loss as required by governing law. See American Ad Management, 190 F.3d at 1059, 1060. The Court finds that, as currently pled, Plaintiff's theory of damages is too attenuated, indirect and remote to constitute a cognizable antitrust injury. See Airweld, Inc. v. Airco, Inc., 742 F.2d 1184, 1190 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding that claim is time barred where plaintiff failed to demonstrate that defendants' acts not only caused injury, but caused a cognizable antitrust injury to the plaintiff during the limitations period).

In addition, Plaintiff's state antitrust claims fall outside the statute of limitations period for all of the same reasons applicable to its federal antitrust claims. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750.1; Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc., 4 Cal.3d 842, 852-53, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953 (1971) (Cartwright Act interpreted consistently with Sherman Act).

Although the Court finds, as currently pled, the antitrust causes of action are barred by the passage of the statute of limitations period, the Court does not find that it would be futile to allow Plaintiff an opportunity to amend the complaint. It is feasible that Plaintiff may be able, without contradicting the allegations already set out in the first and second iterations of the complaint, to state a claim that Defendants were engaged in subsequent overt acts that caused them to suffer new antitrust injury during the four year period preceding the filing of this case. [3] As amendment would not be futile [*15] as a matter of law, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss the antitrust claims, with leave to amend.

B. Patent Misuse Claim is Dismissed.

Plaintiff asserts a claim for declaratory judgment for patent misuse on the theory that a patentholder engaged in patent misuse when it charges a royalty on an unlicensed good or the unlicensed component of a good. (FAC ¶ 156.) Plaintiff contends that the calculation of royalties based on a percentage of the net sales price of the entire SD

---

[2] Based [*14] in part on the briefing of this issue in the reply, Plaintiff moved for leave to file a sur-reply. Defendants objected and filed a sur-response. Although the Court finds neither to be necessary, it has reviewed all of the filings before the Court.

[3] The Court notes the allegation in the First Amended Complaint that "even if the combination among the SD Group members could have been justified 10 years ago when the SD Card was first produced, the continued and ongoing agreements among three major competitors to maintain a dominant position in the SD Card and related markets cannot be justified today, given the absence of current efficiencies that could outweigh the combination's ongoing anticompetitive effects." (FAC ¶ 57.) Should Plaintiff opt to amend it complaint for a third time, the Court exhorts Plaintiff to pinpoint a specific time at which Defendants' conduct allegedly became an unjustified violation of antitrust principles.

Card, including the [*16] unlicensed memory capacity, together with the coercive nature of the royalty provision, constitutes patent misuse. Defendants move to dismiss this cause of action on the basis that it challenges the lawful practice of calculating patent royalties based on a percentage of a licensed product's sales price and falls outside of the only two categories of patent misuse recognized by the Federal Circuit. (See Motion at ii, 27 (citing Princo Corp. v. ITC, 616 F.3d 1318, 1329 (Fed. Cir. 2010).)

The Federal Circuit has held that a claim for patent misuse may be stated only where "the conduct in question restricts the use of that patent and does so in one of the specific ways that have been held to be outside of the otherwise broad scope of the patent grant." Princo, 616 F.3d at 1329. The Princo court confined the patent misuse doctrine to licensing agreements that either have "the effect of extending the life of the patent beyond the statutory period," or contain "tying" requirements that require "as [a] condition of license that unpatented materials used in connection with the invention ... be purchased only from the licensor." Id. at 1327, 1342. Although it is clear that the allegations by [*17] Plaintiff in this matter do not fall within those two narrow exceptions, Plaintiff contends that the conduct violates Supreme Court law, regardless of the standards delineated by the Federal Circuit for stating a claim for patent misuse.

Plaintiff argues that the Supreme Court in Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., set out the requirements for stating a claim for patent misuse. 395 U.S. 100, 139-140, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969). The Zenith Court held that it is patent misuse for a patentholder to use its "monopoly to coerce an agreement to pay a percentage royalty on merchandise not employing the discovery which the claims of the patent define." Id. at 140. Unlike in this matter, the royalties in Zenith were based "on the licensee's total radio and television sales, irrespective of whether the licensed patents were actually used in the products manufactured." Id. at 134. The holding by the Supreme Court was that the leveraging of the patent to garner a percentage share of receipts from sales of products that did not even employ the patented technology was going beyond the scope of the patent grant, and constituted misuse. Id. at 136-37. This case is readily distinguishable, as even Plaintiff [*18] concedes that the SD Cards here, regardless of memory capability, employ the technologies presented in the SD Card license. (See FAC ¶¶ 50-51, 64-65.)

The practice of charging royalties based on a percentage of the total price of a finished product is a widely accepted method for calculating patent royalties where the final product includes, but is not limited to, parts or components that are covered by other patents or are unpatented. See, e.g., Hull v, Brunswick Corp., 704 F.2d 1195, 1199 (10th Cir. 1983); Western Electric Co. v. Stewart-Warner Corp., 631 F.2d 333, 339 (4th Cir. 1980) ("basing royalties on the sales of finished semiconductor devices instead of the fair market value of the chips" is not patent misuse, but rather a "much easier way to ascertain the selling price of the finished product than the fair market value of one of its components."); see also Bose Corp. v. JBL, Inc., 274 F.3d 1354, 1361 (Fed. Cir. 2001) (royalty base calculated based on the entire value of the product, incorporating the patented materials, even though they only comprised a small component of the full system). Accordingly, the charged conduct does not amount to patent misuse and claim six is dismissed.

C. [*19] Section 17200 is Dismissed.

Plaintiff alleges a claim for unfair competition under California Business and Professions Code § 17200 ("Section 17200") which prohibits unfair competition, including "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Plaintiff claims to have suffered injury from a competitor's unlawful business act or practice. (FAC ¶ 161.) An action based on Section 17200 "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices. Chabner v. United Omaha Life Ins. Co., 225 F.3d 1042, 1048 (9th Cir. 2000).

The "unlawful" prong of Section 17200 prohibits "any practices forbidden by law, be it civil criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994) (internal quotation omitted). Because the Court has concluded that Plaintiff has failed to state a claim under any independent law, the Court similarly finds that Plaintiff has failed to state a claim under Section 17200 for unlawful business practices and dismisses the claim with leave to amend.

In addition, Defendants move to dismiss the Section 17200 claim on the basis that the California unfair competition law [*20] "does not apply to actions occurring outside of California that injure non-residents." *Ice Cream Distributors of Evansville, LLC v. Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52985, 2010 WL 2198200, 9 (N.D. Cal. May 28, 2010). Plaintiff is a corporation organized under Korean law with its principal place of business in Korea. (FAC, ¶ 7.) Plaintiff does not specifically allege any conduct by Defendants that occurred in or emanated from California. However, in response to the motion to dismiss, Plaintiff argues that other members of the alleged antitrust combination are California-based and Defendants are equally liable for their conduct. (Opp. Br. at 28.) In order for co-conspirator liability to attach, Plaintiff must allege that Defendants owe a duty to Plaintiff recognized by law and allege that Defendants are potentially subject to liability for breach of that duty. Standfacts Credit Services, Inc. v. Experian Information Solutions, Inc., 405 F. Supp. 2d 1141, 1148 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (citing Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia, Ltd., 7 Cal. 4th 503, 511, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994)). As currently pled, the complaint does not state such elements for co-conspirator liability against Defendants Panasonic or PNA. Accordingly, [*21] this claim is dismissed for this additional reason, with leave.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss. Plaintiff shall file an amended complaint by no later than September 16, 2011. Defendants shall have 20 days thereafter to file their response. If no amended complaint is filed by September 16, 2011 in compliance with this Order, this case shall be dismissed for failure to state a claim.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: August 25, 2011

/s/ Jeffrey S. White

JEFFREY S. WHITE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

United States ex rel. Bunk v. Birkart Globistics GmbH & Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, Alexandria Division

August 26, 2011, Decided; August 26, 2011, Filed

No. 1:02cv1168 (AJT/TRJ); No. 1:07cv1198 (AJT/TRJ)

Reporter
2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158057 *

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ex rel. Kurt Bunk and Daniel Heuser, Plaintiffs/Relators, v. BIRKART GLOBISTICS GmbH & CO., et al., Defendants.UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ex rel. Ray Ammons, Plaintiff/Relator, v. THE PASHA GROUP, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion for new trial granted by, in part, Motion for new trial denied by, in part, Motion granted by United States ex rel. Bunk v. Birkart Globistics Gmbh & Co., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120721 (E.D. Va., Oct. 19, 2011)

Prior History: United States ex rel. Bunk v. Birkart Globistics Gmbh, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168839 (E.D. Va., July 5, 2011)

Core Terms

channels, transportation, immunity, rates, Shipping, freight, forwarders, defendants', cycle, bids, prime rate, carriers, exemption, segment, inland, anti trust law, local agent, ocean, fraudulent, false claim, conspiracy, freight forwarder, household goods, destination, antitrust, me-too, common carrier, price fixing, course of conduct, marine terminal

Counsel: [*1] For Kurt Bunk, United States ex rel. (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Plaintiff: Mark Hanna, LEAD ATTORNEY, Renee Marie Gerni, Murphy Anderson PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Gosselin Worldwide Moving N.V., Gosselin Group N.V., Marc Smet (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Defendants: Kerri Lynn Ruttenberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Washington, DC.

For Viktoria International Spedition (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Defendant: Barry Coburn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coburn & Greenbaum PLLC, Washington, DC; Jeffrey Carll Coffman, Kimberly Jane Jandrain, Coburn & Coffman PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Government Logistics N.V. (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Defendant, Intervenor Defendant: William Francis Coffield, IV, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coffield Law Group LLP, Washington, DC.

For Gosselin Worldwide Moving, N.V., Marc Smet (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Consolidated Defendant: Kerri Lynn Ruttenberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Washington, DC.

For Ray Ammons, ex rel., United States (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Consolidated Plaintiff: Mark Hanna, LEAD ATTORNEY, Murphy Anderson PLLC, Washington, DC.

For United States of America (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Intervenor Plaintiff: Gerard J. Mene, Richard W. Sponseller, LEAD ATTORNEYS, United States Attorney's Office, [*2] Alexandria, VA; Steven Eric Gordon, LEAD ATTORNEY, US Attorney's Office (Alexandria), Alexandria, VA; Meredith Lynne Toole, US Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

For Gosselin Worldwide Moving N.V., Gosselin Group N.V., Marc Smet (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Intervenor Defendants: Kerri Lynn Ruttenberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Washington, DC.

For Viktoria International Spedition (1:02-cv-01168-AJT-TRJ), Intervenor Defendant: Barry Coburn, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coburn & Greenbaum PLLC, Washington, DC; Kimberly Jane Jandrain, Coburn & Coffman PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Ray Ammons, ex rel., United States (1:07-cv-01198-AJT-TRJ), Plaintiff: Mark Hanna, LEAD ATTORNEY, Murphy Anderson PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Gosselin Worldwide Moving, N.V., Marc Smet (1:07-cv-01198-AJT-TRJ), Defendants: Kerri Lynn Ruttenberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jones Day, Washington, DC.

For United States of America (1:07-cv-01198-AJT-TRJ), Interested Party: Steven Eric Gordon, LEAD ATTORNEY, US Attorney's Office (Alexandria), Alexandria, VA; Richard W. Sponseller, United States Attorney's Office, Alexandria, VA.

Judges: Anthony J. Trenga, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Anthony J. Trenga

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION

The trial of this case began on July 18, [*3] 2011 with a jury. On July 27, 2001, the government rested its case in chief and the defendants moved for judgment as a matter of law pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a), which on July 28, 2011, the Court orally granted in part, denied in part, and reserved on several issues.[1] On August 1, 2011, the government moved for reconsideration with respect to the Court's ruling, which the Court orally denied the same day; and the Court issues this written memorandum opinion in further support of its rulings of July 28, 2011 that certain of defendants' conduct is exempt from antitrust challenges under the Shipping Act of 1984, 46 U.S.C. app. §§ 1701-1719 (2000), currently codified at 46 U.S.C. §§ 40301-40307 (2006),[2] and therefore cannot form the basis of a False Claims Act ("FCA") violation under 31 U.S.C. § 3729.

---

[1] Following the plaintiffs' case in chief, the Court granted defendants' Rule 50 motion as to both liability and damages as to all ITGBL claims pertaining to all channels other than those related to the 14 channels for which the carrier Covan International set the prime rate for IS01 (referred to as the "Covan Channels") and the 12 channels for which the carrier Cartwright International [*4] set the prime rate for IS02 (referred to as the "Cartwright Channels"). The Court also granted defendants' motion as to the plaintiffs' common law claims. The Court reserved with respect to whether the plaintiffs presented sufficient evidence for a jury to determine the number of false claims that defendants caused to be filed as to both the Covan Channels and the Cartwright Channels. The Court denied defendants' Rule 50 motion as to the Direct Procurement Method ("DPM") claim. Following the close of all of the evidence, the Court again denied defendants' Rule 50 motion as to the DPM claims but again reserved as to the sufficiency of the evidence for a jury to determine the number of false claims that defendants caused to be filed, expressing substantial doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence in that regard, including the sufficiency of the evidence with respect to certain summary charts and related exhibits, and the exclusion of those exhibits under Fed. R. Civ. P. 37 and otherwise. On August 4, 2011, the jury returned a verdict in the defendants' favor as to the Covan Channels and in the plaintiffs' favor as to the Cartwright Channels and the DPM claim. The jury further found [*5] that defendants caused to be filed 4,351 false claims as to the Cartwright Channels and the parties stipulated that in the event of liability as to the DPM claim, the defendants filed 9,136 invoices under the DPM contract. Re. Ex. 296. The Court ordered that any post-trial motions, including those pertaining to the issues on which the Court reserved, be filed on or before August 29, 2011.

[2] The Shipping Act of 1984 was amended effective October 6, 2006. The Court applies the version of the statute in effect during defendants' conduct, 46 U.S.C. app. §§ 1701-1719 (2000).

BACKGROUND

This action is brought by the United States, Relator Kurt Bunk, and Relator Ray Ammons (collectively "plaintiffs"). On July 18, 2008, the United States intervened as to all claims relating to the International Through Government Bill of Lading ("ITGBL") program. Those claims allege that the defendants Gosselin Worldwide Moving N.V., Gosselin Group N.V. (together "Gosselin"), and Marc Smet (collectively with Gosselin "defendants"), among others, formed a single, overarching bid-rigging and price-fixing conspiracy on November 14, 2000 that successfully raised the rates charged for packing and unpacking U.S. military [*6] household goods within Germany by German moving companies, known as German local agents. Based on these allegations, plaintiffs assert causes of actions for violations of the FCA, 31 U.S.C. § 3729, common law fraud, common law conspiracy to defraud the United States, and unjust enrichment.

Although the United States intervened as to the ITGBL claims, the United States did not intervene as to the claim referred to as the Direct Procurement Method contract, or DPM claim, brought by Relator Bunk. Relator Bunk alleges that the defendants violated the FCA by filing a false Certificate of Independent Price Determination in connection with their bid for the DPM contract, under which defendants certified that the prices in their offer had been arrived at independently, when in fact, they and other potential bidders had entered into a price fixing agreement and territory allocations.

STATEMENT OF FACTS [3]

A.

The United States selects American freight forwarding companies, also known as carriers, to transport the household goods of military personnel who are posted to a foreign country through the [*7] ITGBL program. The ITGBL program is administered through the Surface Deployment and Distribution Command ("SDDC"), formerly known as the Military Traffic Management Command ("MTMN"), of the Department of Defense ("DOD"). The SDDC solicits bids for "through rates" from these American freight forwarding companies. A through rate is composed of all of the costs involved in a door-to-door move of household goods. Carriers submit through rates biannually that cover a six-month period for a particular year, and are referred to as International Summer or International Winter cycle followed by the year; thus IS01 refers to the International Summer 2001 cycle and IW01 refers to the International Winter 2001 cycle. For each seasonal cycle, there are separate transportation routes, called channels, that correspond roughly with a transportation route to and from each state, with some states having more than one channel, so that between Germany and the United States in 2001 and 2002, the years at issue, there was a total of 52 channels in each direction for each of the two seasons in each year.

The bidding takes place according to a two-step process. In the first step, also known as the initial [*8] filing, freight forwarders who wish to participate file a bid for a particular channel based on a through rate per hundred pounds of weight transported. For this reason, a freight forwarder could file as many as 104 separate through rates, one for each of the 104 channels in the IS cycle and then again for the IW cycle. During the years relevant in this case, 2001 and 2002, the freight forwarder would file its initial bids in November for the IS cycle and in May for the IW cycle. The low bid that emerges from this process is referred to as the "prime through rate" or simply the "prime rate." Under this bidding system, the freight forwarder who filed the prime rate for a particular channel was guaranteed at least 10% of the volume for that channel.

Once the freight forwarders filed their initial rates, the DOD would publish the lowest five rates and give the other participating carriers who had not filed at the prime rate an opportunity to indicate whether they would agree to ship at one of the five published rates. This second step of the process is called the "me-too" round of bidding. As with the carrier that had filed the prime rate, the DOD guaranteed that any carrier that filed [*9] a "me-too" at the prime rate would receive a certain percentage of the volume for that channel; and it was generally believed that most, if not all, of the volume for a particular channel would be assigned to the carriers that had agreed to ship at the prime rate, although there were instances where the government would use carriers who had agreed to ship only at one of the higher rates, primarily because the prime rate carriers had insufficient capacity to handle all the volume that needed to be transported in that channel.

[3] The Statement of Facts is based on the evidence presented during plaintiffs' case in chief at trial.

With limited exceptions, the freight forwarders' filed rates cover all costs associated with a "door-to-door" delivery. The components of a move include: the local (either U.S. or foreign) origin agent services, which primarily include packing of household goods; the origin line haul, which is the motor transportation of the household goods from a person's home to the origin port of shipment; origin port services; ocean transport services; destination port services; the destination line haul, which is the motor transportation of the household goods from the port to the person's new home; and destination local agent services, which primarily include the unpacking [*10] of the household goods. Generally, freight forwarders subcontract components of the move to subcontractors like the defendants who perform the services overseas. Freight forwarders must consider each component when they file rates with the DOD for each channel. The freight forwarder obtains payment for the move based on a government bill of lading ("GBL") which is submitted through a public voucher or invoice. Only the freight forwarder submits invoices for payment and only the freight forwarder is paid directly by the government, specifically, by the Defense Finance and Accounting Service.

B.

On November 14, 2000, in Sonthofen, Germany, the defendants entered into an agreement that came to be known as the Sonthofen Agreement, under which the signatories agreed to adhere to the "landed rate" system for the transportation of military household goods in the ITGBL program.[4] The landed rate system adopted in the Sonthofen Agreement bundled into one price the packing and unpacking destination services of the German local agents and the German line haul services, charges which the German agents controlled and set, along with the port agents' services, together with the trans-Atlantic ocean [*11] transportation services, which the German agents did not control or set.[5] Among the signatories to that agreement, in addition to Marc Smet on behalf of Gosselin, was ITO Mobel Transport GmbH ("ITO"), Andreas Christ Spedition & Mobeltransport GmbH, Birkhart Globistics AG, Victoria Gruppe, and E.N. Duerling GmbH.

In addition to acting as local agents, Gosselin and ITO acted as general agents and sold the bundled landed rate to freight forwarders, collected payment from the freight forwarders and paid the German local agents for their services. The local agents' central purpose for this agreement was to get paid higher rates for their packing and unpacking destination services by preventing the freight [*12] forwarders from negotiating directly with local German agents and thereby curb the ability of freight forwarders to negotiate directly for a reduced rate.

Following the Sonthofen Agreement, on November 17, 2000, Gosselin through Marc Smet advised the freight forwarders for whom Gosselin served as general agent, including Covan International ("Covan"), Airland, Sentinel, and Jet Forwarding, that the rates had increased, that the German local agents were not going to handle business at the lower rates and that the larger local agents had already agreed to work only under the landed rate system. Subsequent communications took place among the German local agents, including a follow-up meeting on November 29, 2000 in Limburgerhoff, Germany in which they confirmed their agreement to work only under the landed rate system and the actual rates that they would receive for their packing and unpacking services.

In April 2001, another round of similar communications took place among the German agents with respect to the IW01 rate cycle, again led by Marc Smet of Gosselin, followed again by similar communications for the IS02 cycle. By April of 2001, the Pasha Group, an American landed rate provider, [*13] joined in the agreement and on April 25, 2001, Smet e-mailed the Pasha Group the rates Smet proposed be paid to German local agents under the

---

[4] The Sonthofen Agreement stated in its entirety: "We, the undersigned companies agree that as of 4/1/2001 we will be using 'landed rates' for the U.S. Military business." Gov. Ex. 14.

[5] Prior to the Sonthofen Agreement, Gosselin had used a "landed rate" system with the freight forwarders since the late 1990s, which the government does not challenge. The Sonthofen Agreement for the first time infused into the landed rate system the alleged collusion of the German local agents to act in concert.

landed rate with respect to their request for fixed rates in IW02. Although not all the German agents signed or agreed to the Sonthofen Agreement, the evidence was that approximately 70-80% of the German agents did agree to abide by the Sonthofen Agreement, although some, including some of the actual signatories, did work for and negotiate individual rates lower than the landed rate. The freight forwarders would use the landed rate in calculating what rates to bid for the entire door-to-door move, and it is a fair inference that to the extent the landed rate was higher than what could have been negotiated otherwise with the local German agents, that increase was reflected in higher bids to the DOD for the overall door-to-door move.

Following the Sonthofen Agreement, the defendants were involved in two separate efforts to influence the actual bids that were filed by freight forwarders, one in the IS01 cycle and the other, in the IS02 cycle. In that regard, after the prime rate was set by Covan International ("Covan"), an American freight forwarder, [*14] for certain channels for the IS01 rate cycles, the German local agents determined that those identified prime rates were too low to cover all their charges for the local destination and line haul services that they had set for themselves and that, as a result, Covan and any other carriers that filed a me-too rate to those prime rates might fail to pay the German local agents after they performed their services, as other prime rate carriers had done in the past.[6] They therefore decided that they would not handle any business for carriers that filed a me-too rate in the fourteen channels in which Covan set the prime rate (the "Covan Channels"). In addition, the carriers were told that efforts were being made to have Covan cancel its prime rate and to have other carriers me-too only the second low rate. Similar events occurred with respect to the IS02 cycle, but this time, in connection with a prime rate that had been filed by another American freight forwarder, Cartwright International Van Lines, Inc ("Cartwright"). In that regard, by an agreement dated January 8, 2002, Smet and other local German agents agreed that they would not handle business for freight forwarders in the twelve [*15] westbound channels for which Cartwright had filed the prime rate (the "Cartwright Channels") unless the freight forwarders submitted a me-too bid at the second low rate or above.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

On a motion for judgment as a matter of law, the Court is to consider whether "there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find for the party on that issue." Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a)(1). In evaluating a motion for judgment as a matter of law, the Court must view the evidence and draw all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Lack v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 240 F.3d 255, 259 (4th Cir. 2001). In considering the evidence presented at trial, the district court does "not make credibility determination or weigh the evidence," as "[c]redibility determination, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences [*16] from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge." Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Prods., Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 150, 120 S. Ct. 2097, 147 L. Ed. 2d 105 (2000).

ANALYSIS

The United States alleges three separate claims under the FCA, 31 U.S.C. § 3729: (1) that the defendants knowingly presented or caused to be presented to the United States government a false or fraudulent claim for payment or approval under § 3729(a)(1); (2) that the defendants knowingly made, or caused to be made or used a false record or statement to get a false claim paid or approved by the government under § 3729(a)(2); and (3) that the defendants conspired to defraud the United States by getting a false or fraudulent claim allowed or paid under § 3729(a)(3).

Each of these separate and distinct claims has different elements, but common to all of them is the government's theory of why the claims presented and paid by the United States were false. On that point, the United States contends that the claims were false because they were filed in connection with contracts whose issuance by the [6] In the years preceding the Sonthofen Agreement, several freight forwarders that had set the prime rates had filed for bankruptcy, with the result that many of the German local agents, including Gosselin and the other signatories to the Sonthofen Agreement, had not been paid millions of dollars for their services.

United States was fraudulently induced when the defendants and other German local agents, who collectively provide a large portion of origin and destination services [*17] in Germany, entered into a price fixing or bid-rigging agreement by agreeing to adhere to the landed rate system. The government further contends that the agreement to use the landed rate system had the effect of increasing the price that the United States paid for the transportation of military household goods in Germany under the ITBGL program in all 104 channels (52 channels eastbound and 52 channels westbound) in each of the four rate cycles that occurred in 2001 and 2002. The government claims that because bid-rigging or price fixing is a fraudulent course of conduct, all claims for payment resulting from that conduct are false as a matter of law. This theory of falsity derives from United States ex rel. Marcus v. Hess, 317 U.S. 537, 63 S. Ct. 379, 87 L. Ed. 443 (1943), in which the Supreme Court assumed, without deciding, that the FCA covered a fraudulent course of conduct in connection with a government contract, specifically, bid-rigging. Other lower court cases, including the Fourth Circuit have explicitly adopted that theory of falsity. See United States ex rel. Harrison v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., 352 F.3d 908 (4th Cir. 2003). This Court will, therefore, apply that theory of falsity to the facts [*18] of this case.

In this case, the defendants' conduct on which the government relies to prove that false claims were filed pursuant to a fraudulent course of conduct falls into two distinct categories:

(1) the defendants' various agreements, formal and informal, that began with the Sonthofen Agreement, to use the landed rate system. Included in this category is the agreement among the defendants and other local German agents that they would work for American freight forwarders only under the landed rate system and also certain activities that defendants used to implement the landed rate system, including an agreement not to work for carriers who do not use the landed rate, and communicating that position to various carriers; and

(2) the defendants' efforts, and the efforts of those with whom they acted in concert, to influence the actual rates that various freight forwarders or carriers bid in connection with the Covan Channels and the Cartwright Channels. Included in this category are the communications between the defendants or their alleged coconspirators with freight forwarders in which they stated that the local German agents would not work for any freight forwarder in any channel [*19] that did not me-too at least the second low rate, as opposed to the prime rates set by Covan in the IS01 cycle and Cartwright in the IS02 cycle, coupled with efforts to have Covan and Cartwright, and those carriers that filed a me-too bid to their prime rates, cancel their rates.

The defendants argue that neither course of conduct can result in the filing of false claims because the underlying conduct was not illegal under antitrust laws, either because the conduct was immune under the Shipping Act's exemptions or because the conduct, even if not covered by that immunity, was not unlawful under the antitrust law or otherwise, particularly given the very specific market place and regulatory environment in which the defendants operated, including predatory pricing and other practices that plagued the local German agents. The United States, on the other hand, argues that the conduct is not immune or otherwise protected under the antitrust laws, but even if it were, it is irrelevant whether or not defendants' conduct violated the antitrust laws because the defendants still engaged in a collusive, fraudulent course of conduct for the purposes of the FCA.

In order to rule on defendants' Rule 50 [*20] motion, the Court must decide whether defendants' price fixing and other collusive conduct is exempt from the antitrust laws under the Shipping Act and if so, whether that conduct can still be deemed a fraudulent course of conduct for the purposes of the FCA. This issue appears to be one of first impression; the Court has not found any case that has considered whether price fixing conduct that is not unlawful under the antitrust laws can still subject a person to liability under the FCA.

The Shipping Act of 1984, 46 U.S.C. app. § 1706(a)(4) (2000), provides that the antitrust laws do not apply to "any agreement or activity concerning the foreign inland segment of through transportation that is part of transportation provided in a United States import or export trade."[7] The statute defines "through transportation" as "continuous transportation between origin and destination for which a through rate is assessed and which is offered or performed by one or more carriers, at least one of which is a common carrier, between a United States point and a foreign point or port." Id. at § 1702(24).

[7] The amended version of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C. § 40307(a)(5), states that the antitrust laws do [*21] not apply to "an agreement or activity relating to the foreign inland segment of through transportation that is part of transportation provided in a United States import or export trade."

The government first contends that the immunity does not apply because it does not apply to any "conspiratorial conduct." The government's position, if accepted, would read the immunity out of the Shipping Act because the immunity, by its terms, applies to "any agreement or activity" and every conspiracy is necessarily based on an agreement and concerted activity. Likewise, to say that the immunity does not apply to a conspiracy even where the only conduct that would make the agreement an actionable conspiracy is covered by the immunity provided under the statute, necessarily eliminates the immunity, contrary to the clear language of the statute.

The government next contends that the immunity does not apply where the foreign conduct "affects United States commerce." This position appears to be based on § 1706(a)(3) of the Shipping Act, which provides an immunity from antitrust law "unless the agreement or activity [pertaining to transportation within or between foreign countries] has a direct, substantial, [*22] and reasonably foreseeable effect on the commerce of the United States." The government's position is without merit. While it is true that certain immunities under the Shipping Act are so qualified, such as the immunity provided by § 1706(a)(3), the immunity at issue here is set forth in § 1706(a)(4), which has no such limitation. Moreover, there is no evidence that would support the conclusion that the German agent rates charged in Germany affect United States commerce. While those rates may affect the amount of the bid submitted by American freight forwarders under the ITGBL program, there is no evidence to suggest that those rates affect in any way the cost of providing services within the American portion of the transportation route. The evidence is that the landed rate was only used as a component of an overall rate filed with the United States, not as the basis for the pricing of domestic activities involved in through transportation. There was no evidence that it had any effect, let alone a direct effect, on commerce within the United States.

The government also argues that the defendants cannot claim any benefit from the Shipping Act exemption pertaining to "a foreign inland [*23] segment" because the exemption applies only to "ocean common carrier agreements" or "marine terminal operator agreements," and their Sonthofen Agreement was not such an agreement. Thus, the government contends, the defendants' conspiracy to increase rates for local German agent services using landed rates does not fall under the Shipping Act because it was not an agreement "between or among" any ocean common carriers [8] and/or marine terminal operators. The government bases this argument on § 1703(a) of the Shipping Act, which states that "[t]his chapter applies to agreements by or among ocean common carriers to ... discuss, fix, or regulate transportation rates, including through rates, cargo space accommodations and other conditions of service" and on § 1703(b) which provides "[t]his chapter applies to agreements among marine terminal operators and among one or more marine terminal operators and one or more ocean common carriers to ... discuss, fix, or regulate rates or other conditions of service."

Contrary to the government's argument, and as the Ninth Circuit concluded in United States v. Tucor International Inc., the plain language of the Shipping Act "does not compel the conclusion that agreements among ocean common carriers or marine terminal operators are the only agreements within the scope of the Shipping Act's exemptions." United States v. Tucor Int'l. Inc., 189 F.3d 834, 837 (9th Cir. 1999). The plain language of the exemption, § 1706(a)(4), is not limited to such agreements. Rather, the language of § 1706(a)(4) applies not just to "an agreement" by or among ocean common carriers or marine terminal operators, but to "any agreement or activity" — without limitation—concerning the foreign inland segment of through transportation. The scope of this exemption contrasts with the narrower scope of § 1706(a)(2), which is limited to "any activity or agreement within the scope of this chapter," evidencing that Congress knew how to limit an exemption when it intended to do so. Moreover, certain exemptions under the Shipping Act extend to conduct [*25] far broader than the ocean segment transportation activities typically engaged in by ocean common carriers. See id. at § 1703(a)(3) (exempting from antitrust law certain agreements that relate to transportation services "within ... foreign countries").

---

[8] Pursuant to the act, "'ocean common carrier' means a vessel-operating common carrier" and "'common carrier' means a person holding itself out to the general public to provide transportation [*24] by water of passengers or cargo between the United States and a foreign country for compensation ..." 46 U.S.C. app. § 1702(6), (16).

The government also argues based on legislative history that the antitrust exemptions apply only to activities that are subject to Federal Maritime Commission regulation and filing requirements. However, again, nothing in the language of the exemption itself would support such a narrow reading. See Van Alstyne v. Electronic Scriptorium, Ltd., 560 F.3d 199, 207 (4th Cir. 2009) ("When statutory language is plain and unambiguous, there is no need for recourse to legislative history"); see also Tucor, 189 F.3d at 837 (considering and rejecting a similar argument about legislative intent under the Shipping Act). In addition, such arguments based on legislative history are difficult to embrace in light of the congressional amendments to the Shipping Act in 2006, after the Tucor decision, which did not amend Section 1706(a)(4) to limit its application, as the government urges this Court to do. Compare 46 U.S.C.A. § 40307(a)(5)(formerly 46 U.S.C. app. § 1706(a)(4))(exemption [*26] not limited)) with § 40307(a)(3)(formerly 46 U.S.C. app. § 1706(a)(2) (exemption applies to "an agreement or activity within the scope of this part")).

In deciding whether defendants' conduct is immune, the Court has also considered, as the government urges, the Fourth Circuit's decision in United States v. Gosselin World Wide Moving N.V., 411 F.3d 502 (4th Cir. 2005), the criminal proceeding against Gosselin World Wide Moving N.V. and The Pasha Group based on some of the same conduct at issue in this case, specifically, defendants' attempt to cancel or influence the prime rates for the twelve westbound channels set by Cartwright in the IS02 cycle. There, the defendants claimed that the Shipping Act immunity extended to the entire scheme to influence the Cartwright bids. Id. at 509. The Fourth Circuit ruled that the statutory exemption did not extend that far. Id. at 510. In reaching its decision, the Fourth Circuit clearly analyzed the conduct at issue, not as a unitary undifferentiated whole, but in terms of the purpose of the particular conduct, focusing on the statute's requirement that the agreement or activity must concern the foreign inland segment and the parties' intention [*27] that their behavior causes a consequence in the foreign inland segment. Id. In that regard, the Court observed that "[i]t is true that defendants' original agreement with the German local agents may had the relationship to a 'foreign inland segment' that the statute requires." Id. The Fourth Circuit held, however, that defendants' conduct extended beyond the foreign inland segment and concerned the entire through transportation market because the defendants directed and influenced the actual bids that were submitted to the DOD. Id. at 510-11. Specifically, the Fourth Circuit concluded that defendants desire to have Cartwright cancel its prime rates and the agreements defendants secured from other U.S. freight forwarders to file bids at or above the second low rate had little to do with the foreign inland segment, but rather were aimed at the entire through transportation market. Id. at 511.

Given the appellate decision in Gosselin, the question for the Court is whether defendants' behavior had in mind some consequence for the foreign inland segment such that their conduct sufficiently concerned the foreign inland segment of through transportation. Here, the evidence was clear and undisputed [*28] that the Sonthofen Agreement pertained to the origin and destination services, which concern exclusively the German inland segment. The fact that the Sonthofen Agreement, as implemented, included a landed rate that included ocean freight costs does not change this fact. The price of moving ocean freight was not part of the Sonthofen Agreement itself and is nevertheless immune under the Shipping Act.

For the above reasons, the Court must conclude, when viewing the evidence most favorably to the government, that the defendants' Sonthofen Agreement and the landed rate falls squarely within the scope of the Shipping Act immunity under § 1706(a)(4). The Court also concludes that other related conduct within the first category described above, such as communicating the rate, or refusing to work for a carrier that does not agree to pay that rate, is also an agreement or activity that concerns the inland segment and is therefore within the scope of the immunity.

With respect to the second category of conduct that serves as the basis for the government's claim of falsity, the conduct directed to the bidding in the Covan Channels, the Court must conclude under the Fourth Circuits' opinion in Gosselin, [*29] that such conduct is not within the scope of the immunity because it is directed not to the foreign inland segment but to rates that apply to the entire through transportation route. As with the Cartwright Channels in IS02, the defendants sought to have Covan cancel the fourteen westbound prime rates and have other freight forwarders me-too at the second lowest rate or higher — conduct that the Fourth Circuit found to concern the entire through transportation service, rather than the inland portion of the move. Thus, the Court concludes that this conduct is not immunized by the Shipping Act.

Having concluded that the conduct the government relies on with respect to the Sonthofen Agreement is immune, the Court must now consider whether it can still serve as the basis for liability under the FCA. Overall, the government contends that the theory of recovery under the FCA embraced in Marcus v. Hess, and the cases based on it, applies to all bid-rigging agreements, regardless of whether the conduct is independently actionable. Similarly, the government argues, based in part on the Court's prior rulings, that because the United States has not asserted causes of action based on the antitrust [*30] laws, it need not prove a per se or other antitrust violation, or indeed any other legally enforceable actual claim against the defendants, in order to establish that the filed claims for payment were false or fraudulent by virtue of the defendants' conspiracy, citing as support Harrison v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., 176 F.3d 776, 778 (4th Cir. 1999) (quoting United States v. Neifert White Co., 390 U.S. 228, 233, 88 S. Ct. 959, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1061 (1968)) ("The False Claims Act 'reaches beyond 'claims' which might be legally enforced, to all fraudulent attempts to cause the Government to pay out sums of money.'"). Neither contention supports the government's position that conduct immune under the antitrust laws can serve as fraudulent conduct for the purposes of the FCA. In Marcus v. Hess, and those cases that followed, the courts either expressly or implicitly assumed that the underlying collusive conduct was not legally sanctioned or protected. Likewise, the government's position that it need not prove an antitrust claim or any other cognizable claim begs the question whether bid-rigging conduct that is statutorily lawful and specifically exempt from liability under the antitrust laws can nevertheless be the [*31] basis for liability under the FCA.

In a similar vein, the government argues that the claimed antitrust immunities are completely irrelevant to proving the elements of a FCA violation, based in large part on this Court's decision in United States v. Gosselin World Wide Moving N.V., 333 F. Supp. 2d 497 (E.D. Va. 2004), the now completed criminal case against some of the defendants, as well as the Fourth Circuit's decision in the appeal of that case, 411 F.3d 502 (4th Cir. 2005). The conduct at issue in the criminal case pertained to the Cartwright Channels in the IS02 cycle; and the Court ruled that this conduct did not support a criminal conviction under the Sherman Act because of the statutory antitrust exemption under the Shipping Act for agreements that concern the foreign inland segment of through transportation. See Gosselin, 333 F. Supp. 2d at 507. It also ruled, however, that this conduct was sufficient to support criminal liability for conspiracy to defraud the government under 18 U.S.C. § 371. Id. at 512. In making those rulings, the Court did not consider the specific issue in this case but merely held that under a Blockburger analysis, the two offenses, one under the Sherman [*32] Act and one under the federal conspiracy to defraud statute, had different elements. Gosselin, 333 F. Supp. 2d at 511-12. On appeal, the Fourth Circuit reversed in part, concluding that the antitrust immunity under the Shipping Act did not extend to defendants' conduct pertaining to the Cartwright Channels. Significant for the purposes of this case is that the Fourth Circuit specifically reserved on whether the immunity under the Shipping Act extends to anti-competitive behavior that is also actionable under a conspiracy to defraud theory. Gosselin, 411 F.3d at 515.

The United States' position that defendants' conduct can be the basis for a false claim, notwithstanding its immunity from antitrust liability, is also difficult to reconcile with its unwillingness to argue that FCA liability also results from the immunized price fixing involved in the predetermined rates for the ocean transport segment. Those fixed rates, which are negotiated between the International Shippers' Association ("ISA") and the Trans-Atlantic American Flag Liner Operators ("TAAFLO"), are also incorporated into the bids submitted by freight forwarders as part of the ITGBL program. See 46 U.S.C. §§ 40303, 40307, [*33] formerly 46 U.S.C.A. app. §§ 1704, 1706. Under the government's theory, a claim for payment submitted under the ITGBL program based on bids that incorporate those TAAFLO-ISA fixed prices would also be a false claim, a position the government itself has not embraced or suggested.

The Court concludes that a false claim under the FCA cannot be predicated on price fixing conduct that enjoys a statutory immunity from the antitrust laws. The Court, therefore, concludes that the defendants' landed rate agreement, and other related conduct immune from antitrust liability under the Shipping Act cannot be the basis for a false claim under the FCA.

Based on the statement of facts and plea agreement from the criminal proceeding, the Court previously entered judgment as to liability with respect to defendants' conduct as it relates to the Cartwright Channels. With respect to the other channels in the 2001 and 2002 rate cycles, other than the Covan Channels and the Cartwright Channels, the only conduct relied on by the government to establish liability relates to the landed rate agreement. There is no evidence that the defendants engaged in or directed any of their activities to the actual amount [*34] of the bids that would be submitted for those channels or in any way directed activities to attempt to have a freight forwarder cancel its rates. As discussed above, the activities pertaining to the Sonthofen Agreement itself and the use of a landed rate do not alone establish falsity and therefore cannot establish liability under the FCA. The Court, therefore, concludes that defendants' conduct as to these remaining channels concerns only the inland segment of the through transportation process and is therefore immune under the Shipping Act.

Because the defendants' conduct is immune with respect to all ITGBL channels other than the Covan Channels and the Cartwright Channels, the government's evidence is also insufficient to establish with respect to those channels an agreement to achieve an illegal purpose or an agreement to achieve a lawful objective through illegal means and therefore cannot serve as the basis for the government conspiracy to defraud claim under 31 U.S.C. § 3729(a)(3). Likewise, the use of the landed rate did not result in the filing of a false claim and, therefore, there is no evidence to establish that the defendants presented or caused to be presented a false [*35] claim with respect to those channels in violation of § 3729(a)(1) as to those channels. Nor did the landed rate agreements result in the making, using or causing to be made or used a false record or statement to get a false or fraudulent claim paid or approved by the government in violation of § 3729(a)(2).

CONCLUSION

For the above reasons and those stated in open court, the Court has granted defendants' motion pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a) as to all ITBGL channels other than the Covan Channels in the IS01 rate cycle and the Cartwright Channels in the IS02 rate cycle.

The Clerk is directed to forward copies of this Memorandum Opinion to all counsel of record.

/s/ Anthony J. Trenga

Anthony J. Trenga

United States District Judge

Alexandria, Virginia

August 26, 2011

End of Document

Electrograph Sys., Inc. v. Epson Imaging Devices Corp. (In re: TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig.)

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

August 29, 2011, Decided; August 29, 2011, Filed

No. M 07-1827 SI; MDL No. 1827; No. C 10-0117 SI

Reporter
2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96739 *; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,596

IN RE: TFT-LCD (FLAT PANEL) ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Order Relates To: ELECTROGRAPH SYSTEMS, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. EPSON IMAGING DEVICES CORP., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part, Claim dismissed by Costco Wholesale Corp. v. AU Optronics Corp. (In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig.), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96741 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 29, 2011)

Prior History: Jaco Elecs., Inc. v. AU Optronics Corp. (In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig.), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96738 (N.D. Cal., Aug. 26, 2011)

Core Terms

subsidiary, personal jurisdiction, entity, allegations, contacts, products, integrated, argues, pleadings, panels, prices, Compl, conspiracy, meetings

Counsel: [*1] Martin Quinn, Special Master, Pro se, San Francisco, CA.

For Martin Quinn, Special Master: Martin Quinn, JAMS, San Francisco, CA.

Mr. Daniel Weinstein, Special Master, Pro se, San Francisco, CA.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Daniel L. Warshaw, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny LLP, Sherman Oaks, CA; Eric B. Fastiff, LEAD ATTORNEY, Andrew Scirica Kingsdale, Brendan Patrick Glackin, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Hilary Kathleen Ratway, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hausfeld, LLP, Washington, DC; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Joseph M. Alioto , Sr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Alioto Law Firm, San Francisco, CA; Daniel R. Shulman, Gray, Plant, Mooty, Mooty & Bennett, P.A., Minneapolis, MN; Derek G. Howard, Jack Wing Lee, Minami Tamaki LLP, San Francisco, CA; Robert William Finnerty, Girardi Keese, Los Angeles, CA; Steven J Foley, Hellmuth and Johnson PLLC, Edina, MN, United States; Gregory W. Landry, LaMarca & Landry, P.C.; Marvin A. Miller, Miller Law LLC.

For Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: Joseph Richard Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lieff, Cabraser, Heiman & Bernstein, [*2] LLP, San Francisco, CA; Aaron M. Sheanin, Girard Gibbs LLP, San Francisco, CA; Andrew Scirica Kingsdale, Brendan Patrick Glackin, Eric B. Fastiff, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Bruce Lee Simon, Pearson, Simon, Warshaw & Penny, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Richard Martin Heimann, Lieff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA.

For NEC LCD Technologies, Ltd., (D, I), Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For NEC Electronics America, Inc., (D, I), Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA; Edward G. Biester , III, Duane Morris LLP, Philadelphia, PA.

For NEC Electronic America, Inc., Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For NEC Display Solutions of America, Inc., Defendant: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, George Dominic Niespolo, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Toshiba Mobile Display Co., Ltd., Defendant: Christopher M. Curran, Kristen Jentsch McAhren, LEAD ATTORNEYS, White and Case LLP, Washington, DC; John H. Chung, LEAD ATTORNEY, White & Case LLP, New York, NY.

For Mitsui & Co. (Taiwan), Limited, (D), Defendant: Erin [*3] Murdock-Park, Cleveland, Oh; Lisa Cox Ghannoum, Michael Edward Mumford, Ernest E. Vargo , Jr., Baker Hostetler LLP, Cleveland, OH; Paul P Eyre, Tracy Lynn Cole, Baker Hostetler LLP, New York, NY; Peter Wethrell James, Baker Hostetler, Los Angeles, CA.

For Sanyo Consumer Electronics Co., Ltd., (D), Defendant: Allison Ann Davis, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sam N. Dawood, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA; Nick Steven Verwolf , Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, Bellevue, WA.

For Samsung SDI America, Inc., Samsung SDI Co., Ltd. , Defendant: Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Chimei Innolux Corp., Defendant: Bradley R. Hansen , Jonathan D. Martin, Davis Polk and Wardwell LLP, New York, NY; Christopher B. Hockett, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Micah Galvin Block, Davis Polk and Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Michael Jacob Ewart, Michael Ramsey Scott, Hillis Clark Martin Peterson, Seattle, WA; Neal Alan Potischman, Samantha Harper Knox, Sandra D West, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA.

For Philips Electronics North America Corporation, Defendant: Brendan P. Cullen, Sullivan & Cromwell, Palo Alto, CA.

For Tatung Company, Defendant: Joel [*4] Steven Sanders, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP, San Francisco, CA; Patrick J. Ahern, LEAD ATTORNEY, Baker & McKenzie.

For Chi Mei Optoelectronics Japan Co Ltd, Defendant: Christopher B. Hockett, Davis Polk & Wardwell, Menlo Park, CA; Micah Galvin Block, Davis Polk and Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Samantha Harper Knox, Davis Polk & Wardwell LLP, Menlo Park, CA; Jonathan D. Martin , Davis Polk and Wardwell LLP, New York, NY.

For Apple Inc., Interested Party: Caroline Nason Mitchell, Robert Allan Mittelstaedt, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA.

For State of California, Amicus: Adam Miller, LEAD ATTORNEY, CA Dept of Justice, San Francisco, CA; Emilio Eugene Varanini , IV, State Attorney General's Office, San Francisco, CA.

For United States Antitrust Division,Department of Justice, Intervenor: Peter K. Huston, LEAD ATTORNEY, Department of Justice, Antitrust Division, San Francisco, CA; Alexandra Jill Shepard, Heather S. Tewksbury, E. Kate Patchen, David J. Ward, Micah Lanielle Wyatt, Michael L. Scott, U.S. Department of Justice, San Francisco, CA.

For State of Illinois, Intervenor: Blake Lee Harrop, LEAD ATTORNEY, Office of the Attorney General, Antitrust Bureau, Chicago, [*5] IL; Brady R. Johnson, Attorney General of Washington, Seattle, WA; Michael E. Haglund, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilder, LLP, Portland, OR; Michael K. Kelley, Haglund Kelley Horngren Jones & Wilde LLP.

For NEC LCD Technologies, Ltd., Intervenor: Stephen Holbrook Sutro, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Samsung SDI America, Inc. , Samsung SDI Co., Ltd., Intervenor: Michael W. Scarborough, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Tyler Mark Cunningham, Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton, San Francisco, CA.

For Philips Electronics North America Corp., Intervenor: Brendan P. Cullen, Sullivan & Cromwell, Palo Alto, CA.

For Sanyo Consumer Electronics Co., Ltd., Intervenor: Allison Ann Davis, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: SUSAN ILLSTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SUSAN ILLSTON

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT MITSUI TAIWAN'S MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS AND FOR DISMISSAL

On August 26, 2011, the Court heard argument on defendant Mitsui & Co. (Taiwan), Ltd.'s ("Mitsui Taiwan") motion for judgment on the pleadings and for dismissal. Having considered the arguments of the parties and the papers submitted, and for good cause appearing, the [*6] Court hereby GRANTS defendant's motion.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs Electrograph Systems, Inc. and Electrograph Technologies Corp. (collectively, "Electrograph") filed this action in November 2009, seeking to recover for a "long-running conspiracy . . . to fix, raise, stabilize, and maintain prices for Thin-Film Transistor Liquid Crystal Display ("TFT-LCD") panels." Compl. at ¶1. Electrograph's complaint alleges that "[d]efendants and their co-conspirators formed an international cartel" to fix prices of TFT-LCD panels. Id. The complaint names as defendants entities from eleven corporate families: Epson, Hitachi, Sharp, Toshiba, Sanyo, LG, Samsung, AU Optronics, Chi Mei, Chunghwa Picture Tubes, and Hannstar. Complaint at ¶¶29-65. In addition, the complaint names as a defendant Mitsui & Co. (Taiwan), Ltd. ("Mitsui Taiwan"). Id. at ¶66. According to the complaint, Mitsui Taiwan is "a wholly-owned subsidiary" of co-conspirator Mitsui & Co., Ltd. ("Mitsui"), a Japanese company headquartered in Japan. Id.; see also Declaration of Philip J. Iovieno in Support of Electrograph's Opposition ("Iovieno Decl."), Exh. 1. The complaint alleges that Mitsui Taiwan "manufactured, sold and distributed TFT-LCD [*7] Products to customers throughout the United States and elsewhere." Id.

On June 9, 2011, Mitsui Taiwan filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings and for dismissal of Electrograph's complaint. Mitsui Taiwan asserts that, contrary to Electrograph's allegations, it has never manufactured LCD panels. Instead, it claims that it is a "trading company that buys and sells various products primarily in Asia." Motion at 2. Mitsui Taiwan argues that it "is headquartered in and organized under the laws of Taiwan, has no physical presence in the United States, and lacks the 'minimum contacts' with the United States necessary to justify haling [it] before this Court." Id. Thus, it seeks its dismissal from this lawsuit for lack of personal jurisdiction. Alternatively, Mitsui Taiwan asserts that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over Electrograph's claims against it.

LEGAL STANDARD

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), "[a]fter the pleadings are closed — but early enough not to delay trial — a party may move for judgment on the pleadings." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). The legal standard for Rule 12(c) is virtually identical to the standard for a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). See [*8] Dworkin v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 867 F.2d 1188, 1192 (9th Cir. 1989).

For a motion under either rule, the question presented is not whether the plaintiff will prevail in the action, but whether the plaintiff is entitled to offer evidence in support of the claim. See Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974). In answering this question, the Court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987).

While Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure does not expressly provide for partial judgment on the pleadings, neither does it bar them; it is common to apply Rule 12(c) to individual causes of action. See Moran v. Peralta Community College Dist., 825 F. Supp. 891, 893 (N.D. Cal. 1993). When a court finds the pleadings deficient, it must then decide whether to grant leave to amend. In general, leave to amend is only denied if it is clear that amendment would be futile and "that the deficiencies of the complaint could not be cured by amendment." Broughton v. Cutter Laboratories, 622 F.2d 458, 460 (9th Cir. 1980) (per curiam).

DISCUSSION

As mentioned [*9] above, Mitsui Taiwan moves for dismissal on the grounds that this Court lacks both personal jurisdiction and subject matter jurisdiction.

I. Personal Jurisdiction

Mitsui Taiwan argues that the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution forbids it from being subjected to this Court's jurisdiction. In order for a court to exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, the defendant must have the requisite minimum contacts with the forum such that the exercise of jurisdiction "does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945). In this instance, the relevant forum for this minimum contacts analysis is the United States. Go-Video, Inc. v. Akai Elec. Co., Ltd., 885 F.2d 1406, 1415-16 (9th Cir. 1989).

There are two forms of personal jurisdiction: "specific" and "general." "A court may exercise specific jurisdiction where the cause of action arises out of or has a substantial connection to the defendant's contacts with the forum." Glencore Grain Rotterdam B.V. v. Shivnath Rai Harnarain Co., 284 F.3d 1114, 1123 (9th Cir. 2002) (citing Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 251, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 (1958)). "Alternatively, a defendant [*10] whose contacts are substantial, continuous, and systematic is subject to a court's general jurisdiction even if the suit concerns matters not arising out of his contacts with the forum." Id. (citing Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 415 n.9, 104 S. Ct. 1868, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404 (1984)).

The plaintiff has the burden of establishing the district court's personal jurisdiction over a defendant. Doe I v. Unocal Corp., 248 F.3d 915, 922 (9th Cir. 2001) (per curiam). However, a district court should not act on the defendant's motion to dismiss without first holding an evidentiary hearing. Harris Rutsky & Co. Ins. Servs. v. Bell & Clements Ltd., 328 F.3d 1122, 1128-29 (9th Cir. 2003). Therefore, the plaintiff need only make a prima facie showing of jurisdiction to avoid the defendant's motion to dismiss. Id.; cf. Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Tech. Assocs., Inc., 557 F.2d 1280, 1285 (9th Cir. 1977). Unless directly contravened, a plaintiff's version of the facts is taken as true, and "conflicts between the facts contained in the parties' affidavits must be resolved in [plaintiff's] favor for purposes of deciding whether a prima facie case for personal jurisdiction exists." Unocal, 248 F.3d at 922 (quoting [*11] AT & T v. Compagnie Bruxelles Lambert, 94 F.3d 586, 588 (9th Cir. 1996)); see also Bancroft & Masters, Inc. v. Augusta Nat'l, Inc., 223 F.3d 1082, 1087 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that "[b]ecause the prima facie jurisdictional analysis requires us to accept the plaintiff's allegations as true, we must adopt [plaintiff's] version of events for purposes of this appeal").

Mitsui Taiwan argues that this Court may not exercise either general or specific jurisdiction over it. It argues that general jurisdiction is lacking because it has virtually no contacts with the United States. According to an affidavit from Makoto Ichikawa, the General Manager of Mitsui Taiwan, Mitsui Taiwan is headquartered in and organized under the laws of Taiwan, has no presence in the United States, and has never sold or distributed TFT-LCD panels anywhere in the United States. Id. at ¶2-6; see also id. at ¶6 (stating that Mitsui Taiwan's "sales of TFT-LCD panels and products have been limited to Taiwan and few other countries outside North America."); id. at ¶9 ("[Mitsui Taiwan's] only sales in the United States have been of products not related to TFT-LCD products[,] occurred in a single year from 2002 to 2006 [and] [*12] constituted less than 1 percent of [Mitsui Taiwan's] income for that year . . . ."). Similarly, Mitsui Taiwan argues that its lack of contacts is fatal to any claim of specific jurisdiction. It argues that it has never "purposefully availed" itself of the privilege of conducting TFT-LCD business in the United States, and that Electrograph's claims therefore cannot "arise out of" any U.S.-related activities. See Ichikawa Decl., ¶7 (stating that Mitsui Taiwan has never "billed or invoiced," "negotiated," "received revenue," "shipped," or otherwise "entered into any agreements for the sale or distribution of TFT-LCD panels or products in the United States"); id. at ¶10 ("[Mitsui Taiwan] has never had any meetings or discussions with any other defendant or alleged coconspirator in the United States regarding any issue related to TFT-LCD panels or products.").

Electrograph does not dispute any of the facts asserted in this declaration, and thus apparently concedes that, standing alone, Mitsui Taiwan is not subject to the personal jurisdiction of this Court. Electrograph nonetheless argues that this Court may exercise jurisdiction over Mitsui Taiwan because it is a member of the Mitsui corporate [*13] enterprise, which Electrograph refers to as a "single integrated entity." See Opp'n at 5. This enterprise consists of the Japanese parent, Mitsui, and its wholly owned subsidiaries Mitsui Taiwan and Mitsui USA. Compl. at ¶ 66; Iovieno Decl., Exh. 1. [1] Electrograph argues that the Court may impute the collective contacts that Mitsui and Mitsui USA have with the United States to Mitsui Taiwan. See Opp'n at 11 ("Mitsui Taiwan does not and cannot in good faith contest that the Court has jurisdiction over Mitsui. Given that Mitsui acts as a single integrated entity . . . the Court may exercise personal jurisdiction over Mitsui Taiwan.").

On occasion, courts have exercised personal jurisdiction over a foreign corporation based upon its close relationship with a United States affiliate. Usually this occurs in the context of a foreign parent and its American subsidiary. The general rule is that "[t]he existence of a relationship between a parent company and its subsidiaries is not sufficient to establish personal jurisdiction over the parent on the basis of the subsidiaries' minimum contacts with the forum." Unocal, 248 F.3d at 925. [*14] The Ninth Circuit, however, recognizes two exceptions to this general rule: the "alter ego" exception and the "agency" exception. Bauman v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 644 F.3d 909, 920 (9th Cir. 2011).

The alter ego exception "is predicated upon a showing of parental control over the subsidiary" and requires:

> (1) that there is such unity of interest and ownership that the separate personalities of the two entities no longer exist and (2) that failure to disregard their separate identities would result in fraud or injustice. The first prong of this test has alternately been stated as requiring a showing that the parent controls the subsidiary to such a degree as to render the latter the mere instrumentality of the former.

Id. (quoting Unocal, 248 F.3d at 926). The agency exception "is predicated upon a showing of the special importance of the services performed by the subsidiary" and is satisfied by:

> a showing that the subsidiary functions as the parent corporation's representative in that it performs services that are sufficiently important to the foreign corporation that if it did not have a representative to perform them, the corporation's own officials would undertake to perform substantially [*15] similar services.

Id. (quoting Unocal, 248 F.3d at 928); see also Unocal, 248 F.3d at 926 ("Nonetheless, if the parent and subsidiary are not really separate entities, or one acts as an agent of the other, the local subsidiary's contacts with the forum may be imputed to the foreign parent corporation." (internal quotation marks omitted)).

Although these cases generally involve parent-subsidiary relationships, on occasion courts have applied their principles to broader corporate relationships. This Court, for example, previously found specific personal jurisdiction over a foreign parent corporation and its foreign subsidiaries based upon their close relationship to an American company, as well as the foreign corporations' direct involvement in the events leading to the litigation. Concat LP v. Unilever, PLC, 350 F. Supp. 2d 796, 812 (N.D. Cal. 2004) ("Unilever's own literature explains that the companies within the group act as 'a single entity with a single management team,' that they co-operate in all areas, and — of signal importance — that they exchange all relevant business information.").

---

[1] The Court GRANTS Electrograph's unopposed request for judicial notice.

Although there is some support for Electrograph's "single integrated entity" theory of jurisdiction, [*16] the Court finds that the exercise of jurisdiction would not be appropriate here. The primary problem with Electrograph's theory is that no "single integrated entity" allegations appear in its complaint. Rather, the complaint's allegations about the Mitsui corporate family are limited to the allegations (1) that Mitsui Taiwan is a subsidiary of Mitsui, compl. at ¶66; (2) that Mitsui Taiwan attended a series of bilateral meetings with LCD manufacturers, where it "acted as an agent of Sanyo Consumer and reached agreements with other competitors about prices for TFT-LCD Products sold in the United States and elsewhere," compl. at ¶126; and (3) that Mitsui "had at least one bilateral meeting" in 2001 where it acted as "an agent for defendant Epson Japan," compl. at ¶129. The complaint does not treat the Mitsui corporate family as a "single integrated entity." Indeed, the complaint does not even mention Mitsui USA.

Electrograph argues that its complaint reflects its theory of jurisdiction in a provision that states: "[w]hen Plaintiffs refer to a corporate family or companies by a single name in their allegations of participation in the conspiracy, it is to be understood that the Plaintiffs [*17] are alleging that one or more employees or agents of entities within the corporate family engaged in conspiratorial meetings on behalf of every company in that family." Compl. at ¶ 134. Given the extremely limited references to Mitsui and Mitsui Taiwan in the complaint, however, this general provision cannot save Electrograph's allegations.

In light of the dearth of allegations regarding Mitsui's corporate structure, Electrograph has provided the Court with a number of items of extrinsic evidence purporting to establish that Mitsui acts as a "single integrated entity." The evidence it has provided, however, is inadequate to support this theory. To begin with, little of this information concerns Mitsui's relationship with Mitsui Taiwan; the bulk of it relates to Mitsui USA. See, e.g., Iovieno Decl., Exh. 1 at 55 (stating that Mitsui USA carries out business activities "in collaboration with the operating segments of the head office in Japan"); Exh. 2 at 6 (Mitsui USA "has significant transactions with Mitsui Japan and its subsidiaries and affiliates"); Exh. 2 at 24 (noting overlap between management personnel of Mitsui and Mitsui USA).

The evidence Electrograph has provided that relates [*18] to Mitsui Taiwan is not convincing evidence of a "single integrated enterprise." For example, Electrograph points to Mitsui's SEC filings, which identify Mitsui Taiwan and Mitsui USA as "overseas offices." They also state that Mitsui's subsidiaries "provide market information to each other and cooperate in developing various business opportunities." Iovieno Decl., Exh. 1 at 22; see also id. at 60 ("We are a global general trading company and we conduct our business with our subsidiaries and associated companies."). The Ninth Circuit has made clear, however, that "references [in public filings] to subsidiaries or chains of subsidiaries as divisions of the parent company do not establish the existence of an alter ego relationship." Unocal, 248 F.3d at 928. Other items Electrograph has provided are consistent with its single integrated entity theory, but do little to establish that Mitsui actually operated in an integrated fashion. See Iovieno Decl, Exh. 12 (contract between High Tech Computer Corporation ("HTC") and Mitsui in which HTC agrees to purchase LCD modules "from the Seller (or any of the Seller or its subsidiary including [Mitsui Taiwan]) . . . ."); Exh. 13 (Sanyo presentation [*19] touting its "World Wide Sales & Support Network" and identifying Mitsui, Mitsui USA, and Mitsui Taiwan as parts of that network).

By far the most compelling evidence that Electrograph has provided is evidence that both Mitsui Taiwan and Mitsui USA participated in the conspiracy. For example, Electrograph relies on one document produced in this litigation by Chunghwa memorializing a meeting with Mitsui Taiwan. The document suggests that Mitsui Taiwan shared customer and pricing information with Chunghwa. Id., Exh. 14; see also id., Exh. 10 at ¶2 ("Between 2001 and 2004, [Chunghwa] employees met and exchanged information with employees of . . . Mitsui Busan (the Taiwanese agent for Sanyo Epson)."). Other evidence produced in discovery suggests that Mitsui USA held discussions with a Samsung representative in the United States. Id., Exh. 9 (stating that Samsung representative discussed "pricing, volume, current status, as far as shipments, things of that nature . . . ."). Such evidence may suggest that the Mitsui entities participated in the conspiracy as a single unit, but it is entirely speculative to conclude that Mitsui Taiwan and Mitsui USA acted in a coordinated manner. There is [*20] no evidence that the Mitsui entities worked together, as opposed to independently carrying out duties requested by Sanyo. Cf. Concat (finding that personal jurisdiction existed over foreign subsidiary in part because patent at issue originated from foreign subsidiary).

The Court finds that Electrograph has failed to plead or otherwise make out a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over Mitsui Taiwan. Accordingly, it GRANTS Mitsui Taiwan's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. The Court also GRANTS Electrograph leave to amend its complaint to set forth its theory of jurisdiction over Mitsui Taiwan. Its amended complaint must be filed by September 23, 2011.

II. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Mitsui Taiwan next moves to dismiss the complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. [2] It claims that the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1984 ("FTAIA") bars Electrograph's claims against Mitsui Taiwan. The FTAIA sets forth a "general rule placing all (nonimport) activity involving foreign commerce outside the Sherman Act's reach. It then brings such conduct back within the Sherman Act's reach provided that the conduct both (1) sufficiently affects American commerce, [*21] i.e., it has a 'direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on American domestic, import, or (certain) export commerce, and (2) has an effect of a kind that antitrust law considers harmful, i.e., the 'effect' must 'giv[e] rise to a [Sherman Act] claim.'" F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. v. Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. 155, 162, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1), (2)) (emphasis in original). Mitsui Taiwan claims that its conduct was entirely foreign in nature and therefore cannot fall under this "domestic injury" exception to the FTAIA. The Court disagrees.

Electrograph asserts claims against Mitsui Taiwan based on its alleged role as agent for Sanyo in the antitrust conspiracy. For example, the complaint alleges that Mitsui Taiwan "participated in multiple bilateral meetings . . . and [*22] agreed on prices and supply levels for TFT-LCD Products. . . . At that and other meetings [Mitsui Taiwan] acted as an agent of Sanyo Consumer and reached agreements with other competitors about prices for TFT-LCD Products sold in the United States and elsewhere." Complaint at ¶ 126.

Given that Sanyo's conduct is alleged to have caused domestic injury, Electrograph's claims fall within the domestic-injury exception to the FTAIA. Because jurisdiction exists over those claims, Mitsui may be held liable for its participation on Sanyo's behalf.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and for good cause shown, the Court hereby GRANTS defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings and for dismissal. Plaintiffs may file an amended complaint by September 23, 2011 Docket No. 70 in 10-0117; Docket No. 2892 in 07-1827.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: August 29, 2011

/s/ Susan Illston

SUSAN ILLSTON

United States District Judge

End of Document

---

[2] Although the Court concludes that it lacks personal jurisdiction over Mitsui Taiwan, it reaches the question of subject matter jurisdiction to ensure that Electrograph's request to amend its complaint would not be futile. See Broughton, 622 F.2d at 460 (holding that leave to amend should be granted unless amendment would be futile and "the deficiencies of the complaint could not be cured by amendment.").

Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert, LLC v. Century Theatres, Inc.

Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division One

August 31, 2011, Filed

B211597

Reporter

198 Cal. App. 4th 1366 *; 131 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 ; 2011 Cal. App. LEXIS 1150 ***

FLAGSHIP THEATRES OF PALM DESERT, LLC, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. CENTURY THEATRES, INC., et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Notice: As modified Sept. 29, 2011.

Subsequent History: Modified and rehearing denied by Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert, LLC v. Century Theatres, Inc., 2011 Cal. App. LEXIS 1248 (Cal. App. 2d Dist., Sept. 29, 2011)

Review denied by Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert LLC v. Century Theatres, Inc., 2011 Cal. LEXIS 12202 (Cal., Nov. 30, 2011)

Related proceeding at Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert, LLC v. Century Theatres, Inc., 2015 Cal. LEXIS 2173 (Cal., Apr. 15, 2015)

Decision reached on appeal by Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert, LLC v. Century Theatres, Inc., 2016 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 3812, Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) P 79647, 2016 WL 3091192 (Cal. App. 2d Dist., May 24, 2016)

Decision reached on appeal by, Dismissed by, in part, As moot Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert v. Century Theatres, 2020 Cal. App. LEXIS 841 (Cal. App. 2d Dist., Sept. 2, 2020)

Prior History: [1] APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No SC090481, Linda K. Lefkowitz, Judge.

Disposition: Reversed with directions.

Core Terms

film, antitrust, theaters, defendants', clearances, trial court, discovery, licensing, distributors, theatres, sealing, Cartwright Act, rule of reason, parties, monopoly power, competitors, compete, anti trust law, confidential, monopoly, license agreement, Sherman Act, market power, effects, cases, summary judgment motion, anticompetitive, bidding, clerk's transcript, designation

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews the trial court's ruling on a motion for summary judgment de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN2[] Private Actions, State Regulation

See Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16726.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, subd. (a), of the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., defines the term "trust" as a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for certain enumerated anticompetitive purposes, including to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. That prohibition is analogous to the catchall language of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, which prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. Thus, although the Cartwright Act was not patterned after the Sherman Act, federal case law interpreting the Sherman Act is often a useful aid in interpreting the Cartwright Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN4[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Under the case law interpreting both the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., and the Sherman Act, some restraints of trade are treated as per se unlawful, while others are analyzed under the rule of reason standard. In general, only unreasonable restraints of trade are prohibited. However, there are certain agreements or practices, which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue, are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Among these per se violations is the concerted refusal to deal with other traders, or, as it is often called, the group boycott. Under the rule of reason, the challenged conduct is unlawful only if its anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

HN5[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

A clearance is an exclusive right that a film distributor grants to a theater in connection with the licensing of a film. It prohibits the distributor from licensing the film for exhibition at certain other theaters, either identified by name or located within a specified geographic region, while the film is being shown at the theater that obtained the clearance. Federal case law applying the Sherman Act has treated clearances as vertical nonprice restraints that are evaluated under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN6[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The case law contains no general definition of prohibited circuit dealing, but it is generally characterized as the pooling of the purchasing power of an entire circuit in bidding for films, which undermines the competitive process of bidding for film licenses theatre by theatre.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

One type of prohibited circuit dealing is a form of monopoly leveraging, that is, a monopolist's use of power in one market to gain an advantage in a related market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Formula deals are an independent basis on which a film licensing agreement that covers multiple theaters within a circuit (i.e., a circuit deal) can constitute an antitrust violation regardless of whether it involves monopoly leveraging.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Briefs

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN9[] Appeals, Appellate Briefs

In general, an appellate court reviews only the trial court's ultimate decision, not the reasoning on which it was based, and it may affirm the decision on any valid theory. In an appeal from a summary judgment, however, the appellate court is statutorily prohibited from affirming the judgment on a ground not relied on by the trial court unless it first affords the parties an opportunity for supplemental briefing on the issue. Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (m)(2).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN10[] Private Actions, Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

For plaintiffs to recover damages for antitrust violations, they must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN11[] Private Actions, State Regulation

California case law holds that the requirement that plaintiff must prove antitrust injury to recover damages for antitrust violations applies to claims under the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN12[] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust injury requirement applies to cases alleging conduct that is per se unlawful as well as to cases governed by the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN13[] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust injury requirement does not require an antitrust plaintiff to show actual harm to competition. The antitrust injury requirement does not mean that an antitrust plaintiff must prove an actual lessening of competition in order to recover.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Conduct that is otherwise forbidden by the antitrust laws is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that its destruction makes little difference to the economy. Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businesses, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The Sherman Act has consistently been read to forbid all contracts and combinations which tend to create monopoly, whether the tendency is a creeping one or one that proceeds at full gallop.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN16[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Under the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., an anticompetitive practice is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that its destruction makes little difference to the economy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN17[] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust injury requirement means that an antitrust plaintiff must show that it was injured by the anticompetitive aspects or effects of the defendant's conduct, as opposed to being injured by the conduct's neutral or even procompetitive aspects. But to make that showing, the plaintiff need not show that the market has actually become less competitive than it would have been without the defendant's conduct - if the market contains numerous participants and is consequently competitive, and the plaintiff is a relatively small player whose injury or elimination would not materially affect market conditions, then the plaintiff is not thereby foreclosed from recovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN18[] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust injury requirement means that in order to prevail on its antitrust claims, the plaintiff must show that its loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

HN19[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

Appellate courts must keep liberal policies of discovery statutes in mind when reviewing decisions denying or granting discovery. Absent a showing that substantial interests will be impaired by allowing discovery, liberal policies of discovery rules will generally counsel against overturning a trial court's decision granting discovery and militate in favor of overturning a decision to deny discovery. Discovery rulings are reviewed for abuse of discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN20[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

The United States Supreme Court cases describe circuit dealing as, for example, a theater circuit's use of monopoly power in certain locations to acquire exclusive privileges in a city where the circuit has competitors. The Supreme Court has condemned as unlawful circuit dealing certain master agreements that cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit or covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres. The sole California case concerning circuit dealing describes it in similar terms and on the basis of the same authorities. Circuit dealing is prohibited because it enables a powerful circuit to gain advantages for itself and impose restrictions on its competitors which otherwise would not have been possible. It is both an abuse of monopoly power and a means for stifling competition by diverting the cream of the business to the large operators.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN21[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq., contains no provision parallel to the Sherman Act's prohibition against monopolization, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and the Cartwright Act applies only to a "combination" involving two or more persons, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, not to unilateral conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN22[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Licensing agreements covering two or more theaters in a circuit are unlawful under the Sherman Act because they eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

Plaintiff, the owner of a 10-screen movie theater, filed an antitrust action against defendants, two larger movie theater companies, alleging, inter alia, circuit dealing claims for restraint of trade in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.). The lead defendant owned a 15-screen movie theater in a neighboring community. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment and entered judgment against plaintiff. (Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No SC090481, Linda K. Lefkowitz, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment, directed the trial court to enter a new and different order denying defendants' motion for summary judgment, and remanded the case for further proceedings. The court concluded that the trial court abused its discretion in granting defendants' requests to limit discovery to the geographic area that defendants claimed was the geographic market in which the parties' theaters competed. The essence of plaintiff's claim was that the lead defendant had used its power outside the geographic market to influence competition within the geographic market. In order to gather evidence to support its circuit dealing claim, plaintiff had to be permitted to engage in discovery concerning the lead defendant's theater circuit and film licensing practices outside the market in which the parties' theaters competed. Plaintiff could not gather evidence in support of its claim if it was limited to collecting evidence within the geographic market. The trial court's imposition of such a geographical limitation on plaintiff's discovery was consequently erroneous. The court rejected defendants' contention that unlawful circuit dealing is limited to licensing agreements that cover all of the theaters in a circuit. The court declined to decide whether plaintiff's circuit dealing claim should be analyzed under the per se rule or the rule of reason standard. (Opinion by Rothschild, J., with Mallano, P. J., and Johnson, J., concurring.) [*1367]

Headnotes

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS HEADNOTES

CA(1)[] (1)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Definitions—Trust.

Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, subd. (a), part of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), defines the term “trust” as a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for certain enumerated anticompetitive purposes, including to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. That prohibition is analogous to the catchall language of section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1), which prohibits every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. Thus, although the Cartwright Act was not patterned after the Sherman Act, federal case law interpreting the Sherman Act is often a useful aid in interpreting the Cartwright Act.

CA(2)[] (2)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 7—Cartwright Act—Per Se Violations—Rule of Reason—Group Boycotts.

Under the case law interpreting both the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), and the Sherman Act, some restraints of trade are treated as per se unlawful, while others are analyzed under the rule of reason standard. In general, only unreasonable restraints of trade are prohibited. However, there are certain agreements or practices, which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue, are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use. Among these per se violations is the concerted refusal to deal with other traders, or, as it is often called, the group boycott. Under the rule of reason, the challenged conduct is unlawful only if its anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects.

CA(3)[] (3)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Sherman Act—Film Distribution—Clearance—Vertical Nonprice Restraint—Rule of Reason.

A clearance is an exclusive right that a film distributor grants to a theater in connection with the licensing of a film. It prohibits the distributor from licensing the film for exhibition at certain other theaters, either identified by name or located within a specified geographic region, while the film is being shown at the theater that obtained the clearance. Federal case law applying the Sherman Act has treated clearances as vertical nonprice restraints that are evaluated under the rule of reason.

CA(4)[] (4)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Film Distribution—Circuit Dealing.

The case law contains no general definition of prohibited circuit dealing, but it is generally characterized as the pooling of the purchasing power of an entire circuit in bidding for films, which [*1368] undermines the competitive process of bidding for film licenses theatre by theatre.

CA(5)[] (5)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Film Distribution—Circuit Dealing—Monopoly Leveraging.

One type of prohibited circuit dealing is a form of monopoly leveraging, that is, a monopolist's use of power in one market to gain an advantage in a related market.

CA(6)[] (6)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Film Distribution—Circuit Dealing—Formula Deals.

Formula deals are an independent basis on which a film licensing agreement that covers multiple theaters within a circuit (i.e., a circuit deal) can constitute an antitrust violation, regardless of whether it involves monopoly leveraging.

CA(7)[] (7)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Damages—Antitrust Injury.

For the plaintiffs to recover damages for antitrust violations, they must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

CA(8)[] (8)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Damages—Antitrust Injury—Cartwright Act.

California case law holds that the requirement that plaintiff must prove antitrust injury to recover damages for antitrust violations applies to claims under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.).

CA(9)[] (9)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Antitrust Injury—Per Se Violations—Rule of Reason.

The antitrust injury requirement applies to cases alleging conduct that is per se unlawful as well as to cases governed by the rule of reason.

CA(10)[] (10)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Antitrust Injury—Harm to Competition.

The antitrust injury requirement does not require an antitrust plaintiff to show actual harm to competition. The antitrust injury requirement does not mean that an antitrust plaintiff must prove an actual lessening of competition in order to recover.

CA(11)[] (11)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 3—Prohibited Conduct—Victim—Single Merchant.

Conduct that is otherwise forbidden by the antitrust laws is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that its destruction makes little difference to the economy. Monopoly can as surely thrive by the [*1369] elimination of such small businesses, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups.

CA(12)[] (12)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Sherman Act—Interpretation.

The Sherman Act has consistently been read to forbid all contracts and combinations which tend to create a monopoly, whether the tendency is a creeping one or one that proceeds at full gallop.

CA(13)[] (13)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Anticompetitive Practice—Victim—Single Merchant.

Under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), an anticompetitive practice is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that its destruction makes little difference to the economy.

CA(14)[] (14)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Damages—Antitrust Injury—Anticompetitive Effect.

The antitrust injury requirement means that an antitrust plaintiff must show that it was injured by the anticompetitive aspects or effects of the defendant's conduct, as opposed to being injured by the conduct's neutral or even procompetitive aspects. But to make that showing, the plaintiff need not show that the market has actually become less competitive than it would have been without the defendant's conduct?if the market contains numerous participants and is consequently competitive, and the plaintiff is a relatively small player whose injury or elimination would not materially affect market conditions, then the plaintiff is not thereby foreclosed from recovery.

CA(15)[] (15)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 5—Antitrust Injury—Anticompetitive Effect.

The antitrust injury requirement means that in order to prevail on its antitrust claims, the plaintiff must show that its loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior.

CA(16)[] (16)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Film Distribution—Circuit Dealing—Geographic Market—Discovery.

In a case in which plaintiff, the owner of a 10-screen movie theater, filed an antitrust action against defendants, two larger movie theater companies, alleging, inter alia, claims for restraint of trade in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), the trial [*1370] court abused its discretion in granting defendants' requests to limit discovery to the geographic area that defendants claimed was the geographic market in which the parties' theaters competed. The essence of plaintiff's claim was that the lead defendant had used its power outside the geographic market to influence competition within the geographic market. In order to gather evidence to support its circuit dealing claim, plaintiff had to be permitted to engage in discovery concerning the lead defendant's theater circuit and film licensing practices outside the market in which the parties' theaters competed. Plaintiff could not gather evidence in support of its claim if it was limited to collecting evidence within the geographic market. The trial court's imposition of such a geographical limitation on plaintiff's discovery was consequently erroneous.

[Cal. Forms of Pleading and Practice (2011) ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.70; 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Contracts, §§ 555, 598.]

CA(17)[] (17)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Film Distribution—Circuit Dealing.

United States Supreme Court cases describe circuit dealing as, for example, a theater circuit's use of monopoly power in certain locations to acquire exclusive privileges in a city where the circuit has competitors. The Supreme Court has condemned as unlawful circuit dealing certain master agreements that cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit or covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres. The sole California case concerning circuit dealing describes it in similar terms and on the basis of the same authorities. Circuit dealing is prohibited because it enables a powerful circuit to gain advantages for itself and impose restrictions on its competitors which otherwise would not have been possible. It is both an abuse of monopoly power and a means for stifling competition by diverting the cream of the business to the large operators.

CA(18)[] (18)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 6—Cartwright Act—Combination—Two or More Persons.

The Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) contains no provision parallel to the Sherman Act's prohibition against monopolization (15 U.S.C. § 2) and the Cartwright Act applies only to a “combination” involving two or more persons (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720) not to unilateral conduct.

CA(19)[] (19)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Sherman Act—Film Distribution—Licensing Agreements.

Licensing agreements covering two or more theaters in a circuit are unlawful under the Sherman Act [*1371] because they eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators.

Counsel: Perkins Coie, Thomas L. Boeder, Jessica E. Eiting and Melora M. Garrison for Plaintiff and Appellant.

Blecher & Collins, Maxwell M. Blecher, David W. Kesselman and Theo G. Arbucci for Defendants and Respondents.

Judges: Opinion by Rothschild, J., with Mallano, P. J., and Johnson, J., concurring.

Opinion by: Rothschild

Opinion

[522] ROTHSCHILD, J.—This is an antitrust action concerning the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert, LLC (Flagship), owns a movie theater called the “Cinemas Palme d'Or” (the Palme) with 10 screens. Flagship owns no other theaters. Century Theatres, Inc. (Century), owns a nearby movie theater called the “Century 15 at the River” (the River) with 15 screens. Century owns a large theater circuit of over 1,000 screens, and in 2006 Century was acquired by Cinemark USA, Inc. (Cinemark), resulting in a combined circuit of several thousand screens. Many of Century's theaters are in noncompetitive markets.

Flagship filed this antitrust action against Century and two film distributors, alleging that Century has used the power deriving [2] from both the size of its theater circuit and its many theaters in noncompetitive [523] markets to undermine the competitive process through which theaters bid for and obtain licenses to exhibit first-run films. According to Flagship, under previous ownership the River and the Palme obtained roughly equal numbers of first-run films, but under Century the River now obtains licenses for far more first-run films than the Palme, the few that are left to the Palme are commercially inferior, and the imbalance is not based on the relative merits of the Palme's and the River's bids. On the contrary, according to Flagship, superior bids by the Palme are often rejected in favor of inferior bids by the River as a result of Century's abuse of the power of its circuit.

After Flagship voluntarily dismissed the distributors and amended its pleadings to add Cinemark as a defendant, Century and Cinemark (collectively defendants) moved for summary judgment. They argued, inter alia, that [*1372] Flagship could not show antitrust injury and could not show that Century had market power in the market in which the Palme and the River compete. The trial court agreed and entered judgment against Flagship. We reverse.

BACKGROUND

Flagship [3] operates the Palme, a 10-screen movie theater in Palm Desert, California. Century operates the River, a 15-screen movie theater in the neighboring community of Rancho Mirage, California. The Palme and the River are located less than two miles apart on Highway 111, a major thoroughfare running through the Coachella Valley. Previously, when the Palme and the River were being operated by Flagship's and Century's predecessors, film distributors granted “clearances” to the River and the Palme with respect to each other, meaning that a distributor licensing a film to the River would agree not to license the same film to play at the Palme at the same time, and vice versa.

Century began operating the River in approximately July 2002 and continued its predecessor's practice of requesting clearances for the River with respect to the Palme. Before being acquired by Cinemark in 2006, Century operated movie theaters at 80 locations across 12 states, featuring a total of more than 1,000 screens.[1] Flagship introduced evidence that as of 2006, only approximately 12 to 14 of Century's 80 theaters were in competitive markets.

Flagship's only theater is the Palme, which Flagship acquired in 2003. Two of Flagship's founders previously formed another business entity, Flagship Theatre Corporation, which operates only one theater, located in a noncompetitive market.

In July 2006, Flagship filed the instant lawsuit against Century and two film distributors. The complaint alleged claims for restraint of trade in violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.),[2] unfair competition in violation of the unfair competition law (§ 17200 et seq.; hereafter UCL), and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. Flagship later filed a first amended complaint and a second amended complaint, alleging similar claims and adding Cinemark as a defendant. Flagship also eventually dismissed the distributor defendants.

[524] Flagship alleged that before Century began to operate the River, film distributors licensed roughly equal numbers of first-run films to the River [5] and [*1373] the Palme, with the Palme “generally receiving the larger share.” After Century began operating the River, however, distributors licensed roughly three times as many first-run films to the River as to the Palme, and the films licensed to the Palme were generally “inferior films” that were expected to “generate far lower box office revenue than those licensed to Century.” Flagship alleged that Century obtained such favorable treatment for the River, to the detriment of the Palme, by using the bargaining power deriving from both the size of Century's circuit and its operation of numerous theaters in noncompetitive markets. Flagship alleged that Century's conduct constituted unlawful “circuit dealing,” which violates the long-standing antitrust law requirement that “films be licensed on a theater by theater, film by film basis.”

In 2008, defendants moved for summary judgment. Defendants argued that Flagship's antitrust claim under the Cartwright Act failed because (1) the clearances Century obtained for the River against the Palme were lawful, (2) Century did not have sufficient market power in the geographic market in which the Palme and the River compete—which defendants contended [6] was the entire Coachella Valley?to cause competitive harm in that market, and (3) Flagship could not demonstrate antitrust injury. Defendants further argued that because the Cartwright Act claim failed, Flagship's UCL and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage claims failed as well.

Flagship filed opposition and, in the alternative, requested a continuance in order to complete outstanding discovery. Flagship argued that defendants' motion was based on “the false assumption that this is just a case about clearances” and contended to the contrary that the case is based on Century's methods of negotiating with and licensing films from distributors, which deprived the Palme “of the opportunity to fairly compete to license any but a handful of first-run films.”

The trial court granted defendants' motion and entered judgment against Flagship. The court agreed with defendants that Flagship failed to create a disputed issue of material fact regarding (1) antitrust injury, (2) the contention that the geographic market in which the Palme and the River compete is the entire Coachella Valley, and (3) the contention that Century lacks market power in that market. Flagship timely [7] appealed.

---

[1] Flagship introduced evidence that as of June 2008, the resulting Cinemark theater [4] circuit operated theaters with 3,483 screens at 270 locations and was the third largest theater circuit in the United States.

[2] All subsequent statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code unless otherwise indicated.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] We review the trial court's ruling on a motion for summary judgment de novo. (Buss v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal.4th 35, 60 [65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 366, 939 P.2d 766].)
[*1374]

DISCUSSION

I. Summary of Principles of Antitrust Law and Overview of Claims

CA(1)[] (1) The Cartwright Act states that HN2[] "[e]xcept as provided in this chapter, every trust is unlawful, against public policy and void." (§ 16726.) HN3[] Section 16720 defines the term "trust" as "a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons" for certain enumerated anticompetitive purposes, including "[t]o create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce." (§ 16720, subd. (a).) That prohibition is analogous to the catchall language of section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1), which prohibits "[e]very contract, combination … , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." (See Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal.4th 826, 838 [107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493] (hereafter [525] Aguilar).) Thus, although the Cartwright Act was not patterned after the Sherman Act (State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. (1988) 46 Cal.3d 1147, 1164 [252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385], superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Stop Youth Addiction, Inc. v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal.4th 553, 570 [71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731, 950 P.2d 1086]), [8] federal case law interpreting the Sherman Act is often a useful aid in interpreting the Cartwright Act (SC Manufactured Homes, Inc. v. Liebert (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 68, 84 [76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 73]).

HN4[] CA(2)[] (2) Under both Cartwright Act and Sherman Act case law, some restraints of trade are treated as per se unlawful, while others are analyzed under the "rule of reason." "In general, only unreasonable restraints of trade are prohibited. [Citation.] However, 'there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.' [Citation.] Among these per se violations is the concerted refusal to deal with other traders, or, as it is often called, the group boycott. [Citations.]" (Marin County Bd. of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson (1976) 16 Cal.3d 920, 930–931 [130 Cal. Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833] (hereafter Marin County).) Under the rule of reason, the challenged conduct is unlawful only if its anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects. (See, e.g., Exxon Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 Cal.App.4th 1672, 1680–1681 [60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 195].)[3]
[*1375]

CA(3)[] (3) Because the parties' characterizations of Flagship's claims differ considerably, we briefly summarize them here before turning to analysis of the parties' arguments on the merits. According to defendants, Flagship's claims are essentially challenges to Century's practice of obtaining clearances from film distributors. ("[Flagship] is really complaining about Century's clearance requests.") HN5[] A clearance is an exclusive right that a film distributor grants to a theater in connection with the licensing of a film. It prohibits the distributor from licensing the film for exhibition at certain other theaters, either identified by name or located within a specified geographic region, while the film is being shown at the theater that obtained the clearance. (See, e.g., *Soffer v. National Amusements Inc. (D.Conn., Jan. 10, 1996, Civ. No. 3:91CV472 (AVC)) 1996 U.S.Dist. Lexis 19751, p. 6; Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp. (E.D.Pa. 1994) 862 F.Supp. 1378, 1386, fn. 10.) [10] Federal case law applying the Sherman Act has treated clearances as vertical nonprice restraints that are evaluated under the rule of reason.[4] (See Theee Movies

[3] Flagship has also alleged [9] a claim under the UCL. The UCL does not proscribe specific practices. Rather, it defines "unfair competition" to include "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." (§ 17200.)

[4] Vertical restraints are restraints embodied in agreements between parties at different levels of the distribution chain (for example, between a wholesaler and a retailer).

of Tarzana v. Pacific Theatres, Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 828 F.2d 1395, 1398 (hereafter Theee Movies).) There are no published California cases evaluating the legality of clearances under the Cartwright Act.

CA(4)[] (4) According to Flagship, this is a "circuit dealing" case, not a case challenging clearances in the absence of circuit dealing. HN6[] The case law contains no general definition of prohibited circuit dealing, but it is generally characterized as "the pooling of the [526] purchasing power of an entire circuit in bidding for films," which undermines the competitive process of bidding for film licenses "theatre by theatre." (United States v. Paramount Pictures (1948) 334 U.S. 131, 154 [92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915] (hereafter Paramount Pictures).)

HN7[] CA(5)[] (5) One type of prohibited circuit dealing is a form of monopoly leveraging, that is, "a monopolist's use of power in one market to gain an advantage in a related [11] market." (Sullivan & Grimes, The Law of Antitrust: An Integrated Handbook (2000) § 3.4b1, p. 106.) For example, one of the United States Supreme Court cases concerning circuit dealing addressed certain "master agreements" between distributors and movie theater circuits that "lumped together towns in which the [circuits] had no competition and towns in which there were competing theaters." (United States v. Griffith (1948) 334 U.S. 100, 102–103 [92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941] (hereafter Griffith).) The court explained the anticompetitive character of this kind of circuit dealing as follows: "A [circuit] with a monopoly of theatres in any one town commands the entrance for all films into that area. If [the circuit] uses that strategic position to acquire exclusive privileges in a city where [it] has competitors, [it] is employing [its] monopoly power as a trade weapon against [the [*1376] circuit's] competitors. It may be a feeble, ineffective weapon where [the circuit] has only one closed or monopoly town. But as those towns increase in number throughout a region, [the circuit's] monopoly power in them may be used with crushing effect on competitors in other places. [The circuit] need not be as crass as the exhibitors in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co. [(1944) 323 U.S. 173 [89 L. Ed. 160, 65 S. Ct. 254]] [12] in order to make [its] monopoly power effective in [its] competitive situations. Though [the circuit] makes no threat to withhold the business of [its] closed or monopoly towns unless the distributors give [it] the exclusive film rights in the towns where [it] has competitors, the effect is likely to be the same where the two are joined. When the buying power of the entire circuit is used to negotiate films for … competitive as well as … closed towns, [the circuit] is using monopoly power to expand [its] empire. … [¶] The consequence of such a use of monopoly power is that films are licensed on a non-competitive basis in what would otherwise be competitive situations." (Griffith, supra, 334 U.S. at pp. 107–108.)

CA(6)[] (6) Another United States Supreme Court case, however, discerned HN8[] a second and independent basis on which a film licensing agreement that covers multiple theaters within a circuit (i.e., a "circuit deal") can constitute an antitrust violation regardless of whether it involves monopoly leveraging. (Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at pp. 153–155.) The case discussed certain "formula deals"—namely, "licensing agreement[s] with a circuit of theatres in which the license [13] fee of a given feature is measured, for the theatres covered by the agreement, by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross"—and "master agreements"—namely, film licensing agreements "that cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit." (Id. at pp. 153–154.) The court explained that "[t]he formula deals and master agreements are unlawful restraints of trade in two respects." (Id. at p. 154.) First, the combination of "closed towns" with "competitive situations" constituted "a misuse of monopoly power" (i.e., unlawful monopoly leveraging). (Id. at pp. 155, 154.) Second, licensing agreements covering multiple theaters within a particular circuit are unlawful because "they eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way [527] they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators." (Id. at p. 154.)

Circuit dealing in either of these forms has been held per se unlawful under the Sherman Act (Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at pp. 153–155; [14] Griffith, supra, 334 U.S. at pp. 106–109), but the most recent United States [*1377] Supreme Court cases to so hold were decided in 1948.[5] No California Supreme Court case addresses the

[5] Griffith acknowledged that "[l]arge-scale buying is not, of course, unlawful per se" and "may yield price or other lawful advantages to the buyer." (Griffith, supra, 334 U.S. at p. 108.) But the opinion went on to state that large-scale buying "may not, however, be used to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize interstate trade or commerce. Nor … may it be used to stifle legality of circuit dealing under the Cartwright Act. The sole California Court of Appeal case on the issue is Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 200 Cal.App.3d 687 [248 Cal. Rptr. 189] (hereafter Redwood Theatres).[6] It acknowledged that the United States Supreme Court held circuit dealing per se unlawful under the Sherman Act but also recognized that both federal antitrust law and the structure of the film industry have undergone considerable development since the late 1940's. (Redwood Theatres, at pp. 697–698.) Redwood Theatres also recognized that the federal case law distinguishes two grounds for finding circuit dealing illegal, one that involves "misuse of monopoly power" and another that would apply "even where all of the markets within a circuit were competitive." (Id. at p. 696.) The court then observed that "[i]n the present case, the issue of abuse of monopoly power is no longer raised." (Ibid.) The court proceeded to survey antitrust law in several related areas, including boycotts and vertical restraints, [15] and ultimately concluded that the plaintiff's circuit dealing claim (which was not a monopoly leveraging claim) was subject to rule of reason analysis under the Cartwright Act. (Redwood Theatres, at p. 713.)

II. Antitrust Injury

Our analysis necessarily begins with the grounds on which the trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment.[7] The trial court agreed with defendants' argument that Flagship could not show antitrust injury. On appeal, [528] Flagship argues that the trial court erred, and we agree. Defendants' [*1378] argument is based on a legally erroneous conception of the antitrust injury requirement, so defendants failed to carry their initial burden on the issue.

The antitrust injury requirement [17] originates in a case decided by the United States Supreme Court under federal antitrust law, Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc. (1977) 429 U.S. 477 [50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690] (hereafter Brunswick). In that case, the plaintiff bowling alleys challenged the defendant corporation's acquisition of several competitor bowling alleys that otherwise would have gone out of business. The plaintiffs' alleged damages were the profits they had lost by being forced to compete with the acquired bowling alleys. (Id. at pp. 480–483.) Thus, the issue presented for review was "whether antitrust damages are available where the sole injury alleged is that competitors were continued in business, thereby denying [the plaintiffs] an anticipated increase in market shares." (Id. at p. 484.)

CA(7)[] (7) The Supreme Court concluded that antitrust damages are not available under those circumstances. The court described the plaintiffs' case as complaining that by acquiring the failing bowling alleys, the defendant "preserved competition, thereby depriving [the plaintiffs] of the benefits of increased concentration." (Brunswick, supra, 429 U.S. at p. 488.) Thus, the damages the plaintiffs sought were "designed to provide them with the profits [18] they would have realized had competition been reduced. The antitrust laws, however, were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors,' [citation]. It is inimical to the purposes of these laws to award damages for the type of injury claimed here." (Ibid.) Accordingly, the court held that HN10[] for the plaintiffs to recover damages for antitrust violations, they "must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws competition by denying competitors less favorably situated access to the market." (Ibid.) Given the court's per se condemnation of circuit dealing on both the monopoly leveraging theory and the elimination of theater-by-theater bidding theory, we conclude that the court's recognition that not all large-scale buying is unlawful per se was not meant to imply that circuit dealing in particular is subject to rule of reason analysis.

---

[6] Our search of all federal and state court case law found only a handful of cases even potentially touching on the issue. Redwood Theatres was the only state court case, and the remaining post-1940's [16] cases contained no useful discussion of the issue.

[7] HN9[] In general, an appellate court reviews only the trial court's ultimate decision, not the reasoning on which it was based, and we may affirm the decision on any valid theory. (J.B. Aguerre, Inc. v. American Guarantee & Liability Ins. Co. (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th 6, 15–16 [68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 837].) In an appeal from a summary judgment, however, we are statutorily prohibited from affirming the judgment on a ground not relied on by the trial court unless we first afford the parties an opportunity for supplemental briefing on the issue. (Code Civ. Proc., § 437c, subd. (m)(2).) Our analysis accordingly focuses at the outset on the trial court's grounds for its decision.

were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." (Id. at p. 489; see generally 2A Areeda et al., Antitrust Law (3d ed. 2007) ¶ 337, pp. 82–96.)

CA(8)[] (8) Brunswick was an antimerger case decided under the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 12 et seq.), but subsequent federal case law makes clear that the antitrust injury requirement also applies to other federal antitrust violations. (See, e.g., MetroNet Services Corp. v. Qwest Corp. (9th Cir. 2004) 383 F.3d 1124, 1130.) HN11[] California case law holds that the requirement applies to Cartwright Act claims as well. (See, e.g., Morrison v. Viacom, Inc. (1998) 66 Cal.App.4th 534, 548 [78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133].)

CA(9)[] (9) In addition, HN12[] the antitrust injury requirement applies to cases alleging conduct that is per se unlawful as well as to cases governed by the rule of reason. In Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co. (1990) 495 U.S. 328 [109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884] [19] (hereafter Atlantic Richfield), the United States Supreme Court explained the point as follows: "Actions per se [*1379] unlawful under the antitrust laws may nonetheless have some procompetitive effects, and private parties might suffer losses therefrom. [Citations.] Conduct in violation of the antitrust laws may have three effects, often interwoven: In some respects the conduct may reduce competition, in other respects it may increase competition, and in still other respects effects may be neutral as to competition. The antitrust injury requirement ensures that a plaintiff can recover only if the loss stems from a competition-reducing aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior. The need for this showing is at least as great under the per se rule as under the rule of [529] reason."[8] (495 U.S. at pp. 342–344, fn. omitted.)

HN13[] CA(10)[] (10) The antitrust injury requirement does not, however, require an antitrust plaintiff to show actual harm to competition. The United States Supreme Court made the point explicit in Brunswick, the very case in which the antitrust injury requirement originated. As the court stated, the antitrust injury requirement does not mean that an antitrust plaintiff "must prove an actual lessening of competition [20] in order to recover." (Brunswick, supra, 429 U.S. at p. 489, fn. 14.)

CA(11)[] (11) That point was also a central holding of Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores (1959) 359 U.S. 207 [3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705] (hereafter Klor's). In that case, the plaintiff household appliance retailer alleged that a major department store chain had induced 10 appliance manufacturers and their distributors not to sell to the plaintiff, or to sell to it "only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms." (Id. at p. 209.) The defendants submitted evidence that "there were hundreds of other household appliance retailers, some within a few blocks of [the plaintiff] who sold many competing brands of appliances, including those the defendants refused to sell to [the plaintiff]." (Id. at pp. 209–210.) On that basis, the defendants argued that the plaintiff could not recover, because nothing they were alleged to have done could have injured competition—the market was competitive and would remain so even if the plaintiff were entirely eliminated from it. The Supreme Court noted that the defense position would mean "that unless opportunities for customers to buy in a competitive market are reduced, a group of powerful businessmen may act in concert [21] to deprive a single merchant, like [the owner of the plaintiff corporation], of the goods he needs to compete effectively." (Id. at p. 210.) The court rejected the defense position, holding that HN14[] conduct that is otherwise forbidden by the antitrust laws "is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his [*1380] destruction makes little difference to the economy." (Id. at p. 213.) The court further observed that "[m]onopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at a time, as it can by driving them out in large groups. CA(12)[] (12) In recognition of this fact HN15[] the Sherman Act has consistently been read to forbid all contracts and combinations 'which "tend to create a monopoly," ' whether 'the tendency is a creeping one' or 'one that proceeds at full gallop.' [Citation.]" (Id. at pp. 213–214.)

[8] We note that some lower courts have not used the term "antitrust injury" consistently, sometimes employing it "comprehensively to include injury-in-fact caused by the defendant" or the "impact on competition" of the defendant's alleged conduct. (2A Areeda et al., Antitrust Law, supra, ¶ 337a, p. 83; see generally id., pp. 83–84 & fns. 3, 4 [collecting cases].) We, however, "use that term in the precisely focused sense of Brunswick." (Id., pp. 83–84.)

CA(13)[] (13) Klor's has never been overruled on that point (or any other), and the California Supreme Court has applied the Klor's rule to claims under the Cartwright Act. HN16[] "An anticompetitive practice 'is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the [22] economy.'" (Marin County, supra, 16 Cal.3d at p. 935, quoting Klor's, supra, 359 U.S. at p. 213.)

CA(14)[] (14) In sum, HN17[] the antitrust injury requirement means that an antitrust plaintiff [530] must show that it was injured by the anticompetitive aspects or effects of the defendant's conduct, as opposed to being injured by the conduct's neutral or even procompetitive aspects (as in Brunswick). But to make that showing, the plaintiff need not show that the market has actually become less competitive than it would have been without the defendant's conduct—if the market contains numerous participants and is consequently competitive, and the plaintiff is a relatively small player whose injury or elimination would not materially affect market conditions, then the plaintiff is not thereby foreclosed from recovery.[9]

Both in the trial court and on appeal, defendants' antitrust injury argument has relied on the reasoning that was rejected by the United States Supreme Court in Klor's and by the California Supreme Court in Marin County. According to defendants, Flagship must show that Century's conduct actually rendered the relevant market uncompetitive (or less competitive), which might be evidenced by higher prices or lower supply. Thus, according to defendants, if Century's conduct has not yet "had an anticompetitive effect on consumers," then the market in which the Palme and the River compete must still be at least as competitive as it would have been without Century's conduct, so Flagship cannot show antitrust injury.
[*1381]

The argument fails because, as a matter of law, Flagship may be able to prevail without showing that the market has become less competitive. No other conclusion is possible under Klor's and Marin County.

CA(15)[] (15) Rather, HN18[] the antitrust injury requirement means that in order to prevail on its antitrust claims, Flagship must show that its "loss stems from a competition-reducing [24] aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior." (Atlantic Richfield, supra, 495 U.S. at p. 344.) Defendants have not introduced any evidence (or even argued) that Flagship does not have, or cannot reasonably obtain, sufficient evidence to make that showing, so defendants did not carry their initial burden in moving for summary judgment on this issue. (Aguilar, supra, 25 Cal.4th at pp. 854–855.)

For all of the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the trial court erred by granting summary judgment in favor of defendants on the basis of the antitrust injury requirement.

III. Clearances and Market Power

As noted earlier, a clearance is an exclusive right that a film distributor grants to a theater in connection with the licensing of a film, prohibiting the distributor from licensing the film for exhibition at certain other theaters while the film is being shown at the theater that obtained the clearance. (See pt. I., ante.) In their motion for summary judgment, defendants stated that the Palme and the River "have had a long history of clearances under prior ownership" and that Century "has requested, and continues to request, clearances for [the River]." Defendants asserted that Flagship's [25] lawsuit "is really complaining about Century's clearance requests," and defendants argued that Century's clearances are lawful under the standards articulated in anti [531] trust case law. The trial court noted the argument but did not rule on its merits, instead granting summary judgment on the basis of defendants' arguments concerning antitrust injury and market definition. Defendants renew the argument

---

[9] To prove an antitrust claim subject to the rule of reason, however, a plaintiff must prove that the anticompetitive effects of the defendant's conduct outweigh its procompetitive effects, which might require the plaintiff to prove that the market has actually become less competitive. That is irrelevant to our point here, which is that the antitrust injury requirement, which applies to cases under the [23] rule of reason and the per se rule alike, does not require the plaintiff to show that the market has become less competitive.

concerning clearances in various forms on appeal, contending, for example, that the River's clearances are vertical nonprice restraints with procompetitive effects that render the clearances lawful under the rule of reason.

We have reviewed Flagship's original, first amended, and second amended complaints, as well as its opposition to defendants' summary judgment motion and its briefs on appeal, and we conclude that Flagship has never contended that defendants' clearances are unlawful independent of defendants' alleged circuit dealing. We therefore do not discuss defendants' argument except to note that clearances are vertical nonprice restraints governed by the rule of reason. (Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc. (1977 [*1382] ) 433 U.S. 36, 57–59 [53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549] [vertical nonprice restraints are governed [26] by the rule of reason]; Theee Movies, supra, 828 F.2d at p. 1398 [clearances are vertical nonprice restraints governed by the rule of reason].)

For the same reasons, we do not discuss defendants' arguments concerning market power and market definition. According to defendants, in order to show that the River's clearances with respect to the Palme are unlawful under the rule of reason, Flagship must show that defendants have market power in the market in which the Palme and the River compete. Defendants' contention that Flagship must show that defendants have market power in the market in which the Palme and the River compete—and that Flagship accordingly must define the boundaries of that market—is thus based on defendants' contention that Flagship's lawsuit is merely a challenge to defendants' clearances. Defendants have not argued that such a showing of market power is required in the context of a circuit dealing case (as opposed to a clearance case), so we do not discuss the issue either.

IV. Circuit Dealing and Related Discovery

Flagship's original, first amended, and second amended complaints all alleged that Century has engaged in circuit dealing in [27] violation of the Cartwright Act. Defendants' memorandum of points and authorities in support of their motion for summary judgment devoted a single paragraph to the issue, asserting that Flagship "has proffered no evidence of any kind to support" the circuit dealing claim and citing evidence purporting to show that the two dismissed defendant distributors have licensed their films to the River rather than the Palme because they were convinced the River "was the higher grossing theater."

The trial court recognized that defendants' motion "only briefly discuss[ed]" circuit dealing, even though Flagship had "from the initiation of the instant action, both in its papers and before the court, described this as a 'circuit dealing case.' " The court went on to conclude that defendants' antitrust injury argument was fatal to Flagship's circuit dealing claim. That conclusion was erroneous because defendants' antitrust injury argument was legally unsound, as we have already explained. (See pt. II., ante.) But the trial court also ruled that Flagship failed to introduce sufficient evidence to create any disputed issues of material fact concerning the circuit dealing claim.
[*1383]

On appeal, Flagship argues [28] that the court's ruling on this issue must be overturned [532] as well because the court abused its discretion by making discovery rulings that impermissibly curtailed Flagship's efforts to gather evidence of circuit dealing. We agree.

HN19[] "Appellate courts must keep liberal policies of discovery statutes in mind when reviewing decisions denying or granting discovery. [Citation.] Absent a showing that substantial interests will be impaired by allowing discovery, liberal policies of discovery rules will generally counsel against overturning a trial court's decision granting discovery [citation] and militate in favor of overturning a decision to deny discovery. [Citation.]" (Forthmann v. Boyer (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 977, 987 [118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 715].) Discovery rulings are reviewed for abuse of discretion. (Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Superior Court (2009) 47 Cal.4th 725, 733 [101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 758, 219 P.3d 736].)

The trial court granted defendants' requests to limit discovery to the geographic area of the Coachella Valley, which defendants claim is the geographic market in which the Palme and the River compete. Because of the nature of Flagship's circuit dealing claim, those rulings constituted error.

CA(16)[] (16) Flagship's circuit dealing claim alleges that (1) Century's [29] theater circuit outside of the market in which the Palme and the River compete is of such a size and nature as to give Century considerable power, and (2) Century has used that power to Flagship's detriment in the market in which the Palme and the River compete. Thus, in order to gather evidence to support its circuit dealing claim, Flagship must be permitted to engage in discovery concerning Century's theater circuit and film licensing practices outside the market in which the Palme and the River compete. The essence of Flagship's claim is that Century has used its power outside the Palme/River market to influence competition within the Palme/River market. Flagship cannot gather evidence in support of that claim if it is limited to collecting evidence within the Palme/River market. The trial court's imposition of such a geographical limitation on Flagship's discovery was consequently erroneous.

In so holding, we do not tie the trial court's hands with respect to the management of discovery in this action. On remand, if the parties seek to limit or structure discovery in a particular manner—such as by conducting it in phases or stages—the court may grant any such requests as are reasonable. [30] We hold only that the court's limitation of discovery to the Coachella Valley was too narrow.

On appeal, defendants' arguments in support of the trial court's discovery rulings are based on defendants' claim that Flagship could not prevail on any [*1384] of its claims without first showing that "Century possessed sufficient market power in a properly defined geographic market [(namely, the market in which the Palme and the River compete)] to have caused actual anticompetitive effect—injury to consumers—in that market." Thus, according to defendants, the limitations on discovery were proper because the trial court was merely streamlining discovery "to allow for potentially case dispositive issues to be litigated at an early stage." Defendants' arguments fail for the reasons explained in parts II. and III., ante.

Because we conclude that the trial court's ruling on the circuit dealing claim must be reversed on the basis of the court's erroneous discovery rulings, we need not decide whether defendants carried their initial burden of either conclusively negating an element of the claim or showing that Flagship lacked and could not obtain evidence of prohibited circuit [533] dealing.[10] But because it will be [31] relevant to the proceedings on remand, we wish to clarify one point of law raised by defendants' arguments. On appeal, defendants contend that circuit deals are agreements " 'whereby exhibitors use their monopoly power (or near monopoly power) in one or more areas to negotiate blanket exclusive agreements with distributors covering all of their theaters, including areas where they may have competition.' " (Quoting Reading Internat. v. Oaktree Capital Management LLC (S.D.N.Y. 2003) 317 F.Supp.2d 301, 318, fn. 9, italics added by defendants.) On that basis, defendants argue that without evidence of at least one blanket licensing agreement that includes all of Century's theaters, Flagship cannot prove prohibited circuit dealing.

CA(17)[] (17) We disagree. HN20[] The United States Supreme Court cases describe circuit dealing as, for example, a theater circuit's use of monopoly power in certain locations "to acquire exclusive privileges in a city where [the circuit] has competitors." (Griffith, supra, 334 U.S. at p. 107.) The court also condemned as unlawful circuit dealing certain "master agreements that cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit" or "covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres." (Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at p. 154.) The sole California case concerning circuit dealing describes it in similar terms and on the basis of the same authorities. (Redwood Theatres, supra, 200 Cal.App.3d at p. 695 [a prohibited master agreement "covered exhibition in several theatres in a particular circuit"].) Nothing in the discussion in any of those cases suggests that prohibited circuit dealing is [*1385] limited to agreements that cover all of the theaters in a circuit. Rather, they suggest that it is not so limited.

The case law explains that circuit dealing is prohibited because it enables a powerful circuit to gain "advantages for itself and impose[] [33] restrictions on its competitors which otherwise would not have been possible." (Schine Theatres v. United States (1948) 334 U.S. 110, 114 [92 L.Ed. 1245, 68 S.Ct. 947].) It is both an abuse of monopoly power and a means for "'stifling competition'" by "'diverting the cream of the business to the large operators.'"

---

[10] The trial court's ruling on defendants' summary judgment motion does not state that defendants carried their initial burden on those points. Rather, after rejecting the circuit dealing claim on the ground that Flagship failed to show antitrust injury, the court stated that Flagship had presented "no evidence whatsoever to raise a triable issue of fact supportive of a true circuit dealing issue in this case." But the court did not first assess whether defendants had [32] carried their initial burden on that issue.

(Redwood Theatres, supra, 200 Cal.App.3d at pp. 695–696, quoting Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at p. 154.) Given those reasons for the prohibition against circuit dealing, defendants' proposed rule—which would make a blanket licensing agreement lawful as long as it omitted at least one of the circuit's theaters—makes no sense. When a dominant theater circuit uses its overall size or its monopoly power in certain locations (or both) to obtain more favorable film licensing treatment in competitive locations than it otherwise could have obtained, the circuit's conduct may have the same effects regardless of whether the resulting licensing agreements cover all of the theaters in the circuit or only some of them. For example, a licensing agreement for a "commercial" film might exclude all of the "art house" theaters in the circuit, but the agreement might still be anticompetitive and a prohibited circuit [34] deal.

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the summary judgment as to Flagship's [534] circuit dealing claim must be reversed because the trial court abused its discretion by limiting discovery to the Coachella Valley. We also reject defendants' contention that unlawful circuit dealing is limited to licensing agreements that cover all of the theaters in a circuit.

V. The Rule of Reason, the Per Se Rule, and Circuit Dealing

Flagship contends that circuit dealing is per se unlawful under the Sherman Act, cites cases such as Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. 131, and Griffith, supra, 334 U.S. 100, and urges us to hold that circuit dealing is per se unlawful under the Cartwright Act as well. Defendants contend that "[u]nder California law, circuit dealing agreements are vertical, non-price restraints evaluated under the rule of reason," citing Redwood Theatres, supra, 200 Cal.App.3d 687.

[*1386]

As our [35] analysis in the foregoing parts of this opinion demonstrates, in order to decide this appeal we need not determine whether circuit dealing is subject to the per se rule or the rule of reason under the Cartwright Act. Regardless of which rule applies, the trial court erred when it granted defendants' motion for summary judgment.

It might nonetheless seem advisable for us to decide the issue so as to provide guidance to the trial court for the proceedings on remand. We conclude, however, that we cannot decide it, because it implicates too many unbriefed legal issues and too many factual and legal indeterminacies.

CA(18)[] (18) For example, as defendants themselves acknowledged in the trial court, Flagship appears to allege that Century has engaged in prohibited circuit dealing in the form of monopoly leveraging. (See generally pt. I., ante [describing this form of prohibited circuit dealing].) But, as defendants also mentioned, HN21[] the Cartwright Act contains no provision parallel to the Sherman Act's prohibition against monopolization (15 U.S.C. § 2), and the Cartwright Act applies only to a "combination" involving "two or more persons" (§ 16720), not to unilateral conduct. (See Bondi v. Jewels by Edwar, Ltd. (1968) 267 Cal.App.2d 672, 677–678 [73 Cal. Rptr. 494].) [36] One question, then, is whether Century's agreements with distributors are sufficient to show a "combination" within the meaning of the Cartwright Act for purposes of a circuit-dealing-as-monopoly-leveraging claim. If so, then a separate question is whether such a claim is cognizable under the Cartwright Act. The parties have briefed none of these issues.

CA(19)[] (19) Putting aside the monopoly leveraging theory, other questions about Flagship's circuit dealing [37] claim remain. Paramount Pictures held that HN22[] licensing agreements covering two or more theaters in a circuit were unlawful under the Sherman Act because "they eliminate the possibility of bidding for films theatre by theatre. In that way they eliminate the opportunity for the small competitor to obtain the choice first runs, and put a premium on the size of the circuit. They are, therefore, devices for stifling competition and diverting the cream of the business to the large operators." (Paramount Pictures, supra, 334 U.S. at p. 154.) What are the elements of such a claim? Apart from defendants' erroneous contention that prohibited circuit deals are limited to licensing agreements that cover all of the theaters in a circuit, the parties have not briefed this issue either.

The type of circuit dealing claim at issue might influence the analysis of whether the per se rule or the rule of reason should apply, because it might make certain authorities or analogies more relevant than others. Redwood Theatres, for example, [535] says nothing about whether circuit dealing as monopoly leveraging is subject to the per se rule rather than the rule of reason, [*1387] because "the issue of abuse of monopoly power" [38] was not presented in that case. (Redwood Theatres, supra, 200 Cal.App.3d at p. 696.) And depending on the precise contours of Flagship's circuit dealing claim, group boycotts might (or might not) present a close analogy. (See id. at pp. 699–703 [discussing the analogy between circuit dealing and boycotts]; see also Nynex Corp. v. Discon, Inc. (1998) 525 U.S. 128, 135 [142 L. Ed. 2d 510, 119 S. Ct. 493] [holding that the Klor's rule of per se illegality for boycotts applies only "to cases involving horizontal agreements among direct competitors"].)

In the absence of greater factual and legal development of Flagship's claims and the parties' arguments, we cannot say definitively whether Flagship's circuit dealing claim should be analyzed under the per se rule or the rule of reason. We accordingly do not decide the issue.

VI. The Sealed Briefs and the Sealed Portions of the Record

Early in this litigation, the trial court entered a stipulated protective order that authorized the parties to designate as "confidential" or "confidential: attorney's eyes only" any "document, thing, material, testimony or other information derived therefrom." (The distinction between "confidential" and "confidential: attorney's eyes only" is of [39] no significance for our discussion, so we will henceforth use "confidential" to cover both.) The "confidential" designation meant that the information so designated "has not been made public and … concerns or relates to the confidential business, commercial, financial, or other similarly sensitive information concerning the parties' business operations and the subject matter of the present litigation." Any party making such a designation was thereby "certifying to the Court that there is a good faith basis in law and in fact for the designation, and that there exists an overriding interest in confidentiality that overcomes any right of public access to the record." The stipulated protective order further provided that if any confidential material was included in any papers to be filed with the court "for purposes of adjudication," the parties would follow the procedures of the California Rules of Court, rules 2.550 and 2.551, concerning sealed records.

The parties went on to designate various materials as confidential. The parties then used some of the confidential materials in connection with certain discovery motions and defendants' motion for summary judgment. In some instances [40] the parties filed applications to file the relevant papers under seal, while in others the parties lodged the papers conditionally under seal and [*1388] moved for an order sealing them. The trial court ultimately entered an order sealing all of the records at issue.

On appeal, the parties moved in this court for an order sealing the portions of the clerk's transcript that contained documents sealed by the trial court, and also for orders sealing the unredacted versions of the parties' appellate briefs. We granted the motions.

As [41] a result, the parties filed both redacted and unredacted versions of their appellate briefs, with the unredacted versions filed under seal. The superior court clerk likewise prepared both a 12-volume redacted clerk's transcript, a five-volume redacted supplemental clerk's transcript containing documents inadvertently omitted from the original 12-volume redacted clerk's transcript, and a four-volume unredacted supplemental clerk's transcript, filed under seal, containing the documents that had been both designated for inclusion [536] in the record on appeal and sealed by the trial court. The redactions in the parties' briefs and the clerk's transcripts are substantial.

Upon reviewing the merits of the appeal, we concluded that there appeared to be no basis for sealing most, if not all, of the redacted text in the parties' briefs. Pursuant to rule 2.551(h)(3) of the California Rules of Court, we notified the parties that we proposed to unseal the unredacted versions of their briefs, as well as a passage in the unredacted supplemental clerk's transcript that we had identified as potentially necessary to our analysis. In our notice, we stated that any party wishing to oppose the unsealing [42] of the records at issue should file opposition by a date we specified.

No party filed any opposition. That is, no party undertook to defend the sealing of even a single line of the pages of text that were redacted in the publicly accessible versions of their briefs.

By separate order, we are unsealing the unredacted versions of the parties' briefs. Because of the possibility that some portion of the records sealed by the trial court actually ought to remain sealed, we are not vacating the trial court's sealing orders. We do, however, direct the trial court to revisit the issue on remand. Pursuant to rule 2.551(h)(3) of the California Rules of Court, the trial court shall inform the parties that it proposes to unseal all of the records it previously sealed and that any party wishing to oppose the unsealing must file written opposition by a deadline to be specified by the trial court (subject, of course, to any requests for extensions of time, which the trial court may grant or deny in its discretion), and that parties may also file replies to the oppositions, also by deadlines specified by the trial court.

[*1389]

DISPOSITION

The judgment is reversed, the superior court is directed to enter a new [43] and different order denying Century and Cinemark's motion for summary judgment, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. Appellant shall recover its costs of appeal.

Mallano, P. J., and Johnson, J., concurred.

A petition for a rehearing was denied September 29, 2011, and the opinion was modified to read as printed above. Respondents' petition for review by the Supreme Court was denied November 30, 2011, S197136.

End of Document

Agnew v. NCAA

United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division

September 1, 2011, Decided; September 1, 2011, Filed

1:11-cv-0293-JMS-MJD

Reporter
2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98744 *; 2011 WL 3878200

JOSEPH AGNEW, et al., Plaintiffs, vs. NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Affirmed by Agnew v. NCAA, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 12256 (7th Cir., June 18, 2012)

Core Terms

amended complaint, bachelor's degree, motion to dismiss, allegations, athletic, relevant market, sports, institutions, geographic, antitrust, labor market, anti-competitive, student-athletes, athletics-based, discounts, football, tuition, procompetitive, bylaws, deliberately, discernible, enrolled, amateur, parties, argues, amend

Counsel: [*1] For JOSEPH AGNEW, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, PATRICK COURTNEY, Plaintiffs: Shana E. Scarlett, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP, Berkeley, CA; Brad A. Catlin, Joseph N. Williams, William N. Riley, PRICE WAICUKAUSKI & RILEY, Indianapolis, IN; Jennifer L. Murray, Stuart McKinley Paynter, PRO HAC VICE, THE PAYNTER LAW FIRM PLLC, Washington, DC; Leonard W. Aragon, PRO HAC VICE, HAGEN BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, Phoenix, AZ; Robert B. Carey, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, Phoenix, AZ; Steve W. Berman, PRO HAC VICE, HAGENS BERMAN SOBOL SHAPIRO LLP, Seattle, WA.

For NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION, Defendant: Gregory L. Curtner, Robert James Wierenga, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Jessica A. Sprovtsoff, Kimberly Lynn Scott, Suzanne Wahl, PRO HAC VICE, Kimberly K. Kefalas, Miller Canfield Paddock and Stone, PLC, Ann Arbor, MI; Jason Alex Geller, Long & Levit LLP, San Francisco, CA; Kathy Lynn Osborn, BAKER & DANIELS - Indianapolis, Indianapolis, IN.

Judges: Hon. Jane Magnus-Stinson, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Jane Magnus-Stinson

Opinion

ORDER ON NCAA'S MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFFS' AMENDED COMPLAINT

Presently pending before the Court is Defendant National Collegiate [*2] Athletic Association's (the "NCAA") Motion to Dismiss. [Dkt. 91.] The NCAA argues that Plaintiffs Joseph Agnew and Patrick Courtney's Amended Complaint, [dkt. 84], must be dismissed because it fails to state a claim on which relief can be granted. See Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 12(b)(6). For the following reasons, the Court agrees and dismisses Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint with prejudice.

I.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure impose a notice-pleading requirement for complaints. Thus, "[s]pecific facts are not necessary; the [plaintiff] need only 'give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007) (quoting Bell Atlantic v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Nonetheless, "a complaint may be so sketchy that the complaint does not provide the type of notice of the claim to which the defendant is entitled." Airborne Beepers & Video, Inc. v. AT&T Mobility LLC, 499 F.3d 663, 667 (7th Cir. 2007) (synthesizing Erickson and Twombly). In that circumstance, a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) is proper. A motion filed under that rule asks whether the complaint "contain[s] sufficient [*3] factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929). For the purposes of that rule, the Court will ignore legally conclusory allegations. Id. at 1949-50 ("Although for the purposes of a motion to dismiss we must take all of the factual allegations in the complaint as true, we are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation."). The Court will, however, give the complaint the benefit of reasonable inferences from all non-conclusory allegations. See id.

II.

BACKGROUND

This case was initially filed in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, [dkt. 1], but the NCAA filed a Motion to Transfer to this Court, [dkt. 22]. Contemporaneously with the transfer motion, the NCAA also filed a motion to dismiss. [Dkt. 24.] The parties fully briefed the motion to dismiss, but the Northern District of California declined to rule on that motion after it granted the NCAA's motion to transfer Plaintiffs' case to this Court. [Dkt. 64.]

After transfer, Plaintiffs and the NCAA agreed to a schedule for re-briefing [*4] the NCAA's motion to dismiss in light of Seventh Circuit law. [Dkts. 77; 81.] Plaintiffs filed an Amended Complaint in March 2011 with the NCAA's consent, [dkt. 81], and alleged a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, [dkt. 84 at 20].[1]

Plaintiffs allege that this action "arises out of a blatant price-fixing agreement and restraint between member institutions of the NCAA." [Dkt. 84 at 1 ¶ 1.] Plaintiffs challenge two of the NCAA's bylaws: 1) the one-year scholarship limit, which prohibits NCAA member institutions from offering multi-year athletics-based discounts to student-athletes (NCAA Bylaw 15.3.3.1), and 2) the cap on the number of athletic-based discounts a school can offer per sport each year (see, e.g., NCAA Bylaw 15.5.4). [Dkt. 84 at 10 ¶¶ 28-29.]

---

[1] Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is styled as a class action and asserts certain "class allegations" in addition to the allegations specific to the named Plaintiffs. [See, e.g., dkt. 84 at 18-20.] To date, however, Plaintiffs have not filed a motion to certify a class. Because the Court ultimately finds that Plaintiffs' claims must be dismissed and no motion to certify a class is pending, "the suit must be dismissed because no one besides the plaintiff has a legally protected interest in the litigation." Wiesmueller v. Kosobucki, 513 F.3d 784, 786 (7th Cir. 2008); see also Sheridan v. Marathon Petroleum Co., LLC, 530 F.3d 590, 592, 596 (7th Cir. 2008) (affirming trial court's dismissal of "entire suit" for failure to state a claim before motion to certify class was filed); Banks v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 977 F.2d 1081, 1085-86, 1094 (7th Cir. 1992) (dismissing entire suit because named plaintiff failed to allege antitrust claim and no class [*5] certification ruling to appeal). Because no motion to certify is pending, the Court will focus on the allegations specific to the named Plaintiffs.

Mr. Agnew enrolled at Rice University in 2006 after receiving an athletic scholarship to play football "equal to the yearly cost of his bachelor's degree." [Dkt. 84 at 2 ¶ 5.] Mr. Agnew received formal offers from at least three other schools. [Id.] Mr. Agnew was injured during his sophomore season and was told prior to his junior year that his scholarship would not be renewed. [Dkt. 84 at 14 ¶ 47.] He successfully appealed the non-renewal of his scholarship and ultimately "receiv[ed] a full year's tuition despite no longer [*6] being a member of the Rice football team." [Id. at 14-15 ¶ 47.] Mr. Agnew did not receive tuition for his senior year of college and had to pay tuition and boarding expenses out-of-pocket in order to receive his degree. [Dkt. 84 at 14-15 ¶ 47.]

Mr. Courtney enrolled at North Carolina A&T in 2009 after receiving an athletic scholarship to play football "equal to the yearly cost of his bachelor's degree." [Dkt. 84 at 3 ¶ 6.] He injured himself during training camp prior to his freshman season and ultimately was told that his athletic scholarship would not be renewed for his sophomore year. [Dkt. 84 at 15 ¶¶ 48-50.] Mr. Courtney left North Carolina A&T and is currently enrolled in another educational institution where he is paying tuition out-of-pocket. [Dkt. 84 at 15 ¶ 50.]

Plaintiffs allege that without the NCAA Division I bylaws at issue they would have received multi-year athletic scholarships sufficient to cover the entire cost of their bachelor's degrees.[2] [Dkt. 84 at 15 ¶ 51.] Instead, however, Plaintiffs allege that the "NCAA's wholly artificial caps on the number and distribution of athletics-based discounts reduces the overall supply of athletics-based discounts available to student-athletes [*7] thereby forcing them to overpay for bachelor's degrees . . . ." [Dkt. 84 at 15-16 ¶ 53.] Likewise, Plaintiffs allege that the NCAA's prohibition on multi-year athletics-based scholarships injures student-athletes by causing them to pay more in tuition when their athletics-based scholarships are reduced or not renewed. [Id. at ¶ 54.]

The NCAA filed a Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, which the parties subsequently briefed. [Dkts. 91; 93; 96; 97.] The Court held oral argument on the NCAA's motion. [Dkt. 116.]

III.

Discussion

The NCAA's primary contention [*8] is that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a relevant product market, geographic market, or anti-competitive effect on a relevant market to survive a motion to dismiss. The parties dispute whether Plaintiffs were required to allege a relevant market and, if they were required to do so, whether their allegations are sufficient to survive the NCAA's motion to dismiss. Additionally, the NCAA alleges that Plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to challenge the bylaws at issue.

A. Antitrust Law and Amateur College Sports

The purpose of the Sherman Act is to rectify injury to consumers caused by diminished competition. Banks v. National Collegiate Athletic Association, 977 F.2d 1081, 1087-88 (7th Cir. 1992). Therefore, a plaintiff must allege not only an injury to himself but an injury to the market as well. Id. A successful claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires proof of three elements: (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) a resultant unreasonable restraint of trade in the relevant market; and (3) an accompanying injury. Denny's Marina v. Renfro Prods., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 (7th Cir. 1993).

---

[2] Different NCAA bylaws govern Division I, II, and III sports. [Dkt. 93 at 25.] There is no dispute that Plaintiffs received scholarships to play sports at Division I schools. Despite this undisputed fact, as the NCAA points out, the Amended Complaint references Division II and Division III financial aid rules that Plaintiffs were not bound by and could not have been injured by. [Dkt. 93 at 25.] Plaintiffs do not respond to this argument; therefore, the Court construes Plaintiffs' silence as an acceptance of its merit and will not construe the Amended Complaint as stating any claim regarding Division II and III financial rules.

The parties agree that National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984), [*9] is the seminal case governing antitrust law in the context of amateur college sports. [Dkt. 96 at 13.] At issue in Board of Regents was whether the NCAA's control over the number of football games a university could televise violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The Supreme Court recognized that the horizontal restraint at issue typically would be presumed unreasonable and illegal per se without inquiry into the particular market context; however, "what is critical is that this case involves an industry in which horizontal restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all." Id at 101. Therefore, the Supreme Court applied the Rule of Reason analysis "to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint."[3] Id. at 103. A conclusion that a restraint is unreasonable may be based on either the nature or character of the contracts or the surrounding circumstances giving rise to the inference or presumption that they were intended to restrain trade and enhance prices. Id.

In Board of Regents, the Supreme Court ultimately concluded that, despite the NCAA's proffered justifications, the NCAA had engaged in unjustified anticompetitive conduct by restraining the number of football games universities could televise. The Supreme Court emphasized, however, that its holding was not a prohibition on the majority of the NCAA's regulations because the NCAA must implement rules to preserve the character and quality of its product:

> What the NCAA and its member institutions market in this case is competition itself -- contests between [*11] competing institutions. Of course, this would be completely ineffective if there were no rules on which the competitors agreed to create and define the competition to be marketed. A myriad of rules affecting such matters such as the size of the field, the number of players on a team, and the extent to which physical violence is encouraged or proscribed, all must be agreed upon, and all restrain the manner in which institutions compete. . . . In order to preserve the character and quality of the "product," athletes must not be paid, must be required to attend class, and the like. And the integrity of the "product" cannot be preserved except by mutual agreement; if an institution adopted such restrictions unilaterally, its effectiveness as a competitor on the playing field might soon be destroyed. Thus, the NCAA plays a vital role in enabling college football to preserve its character, and as a result enables a product to be marketed which might otherwise be unavailable. In performing this role, its actions widen consumer choice -- not only the choices available to sports fans but also those available to athletes -- and hence can be viewed as procompetitive.
> * * *
>
> It is reasonable to assume [*12] that most of the regulatory controls of the NCAA are justifiable means of fostering competition among amateur athletic teams and therefore procompetitive because they enhance public interest in intercollegiate sports. The specific restraints on football telecasts that are challenged in this case do not, however, fit into the same mold as do rules defining the conditions of the contest, the eligibility of participants, or the manner in which members of a joint enterprise shall share the responsibilities and the benefits of the total venture.
> ***
> The NCAA plays a critical role in the maintenance of a revered tradition of amateurism in college sports. There can be no question but that it needs ample latitude to play that role, or that the preservation of the student-athlete in higher education adds richness and diversity to intercollegiate athletics and is entirely consistent with the goals of the Sherman Act.

---

[3] The Supreme Court recently reaffirmed the application of the Rule of Reason to restraints on competition that are essential if the product is to be available at all. American Needle, Inc. v. National Football League, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 2216, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010) [*10] (citing Board of Regents, 468 U.S. at 101). Although the Court need not conduct the applicable analysis at this stage in the proceedings, for purposes of context, the Rule of Reason tests whether a restraint merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it may instead suppress or even destroy competition. American Needle, 130 S. Ct. at 2217 n. 10 (citation omitted). To analyze that question the Court must typically consider "the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint is imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable." Id.

Id. at 101-102, 117, 120.

The Court also finds the Seventh Circuit's opinion in Banks to be binding.[4] In Banks, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed a district court's decision to grant the NCAA's motion to dismiss a plaintiff's complaint regarding the no-agent and no-draft [*13] rules. 977 F.2d at 1081. At issue in Banks were rules prohibiting college athletes from participating in intercollegiate sports if they agreed to be represented by an agent or asked to be placed on the draft list of a professional league. Id. at 1083-84.

Relying on Board of Regents, Banks concludes that "allegations that the NCAA rules restrain trade or commerce may not be viewed as per se violations of the Sherman Act, but must be addressed under the 'Rule of Reason.'" 977 F.2d at 1088 (quoting Board of Regents, 468 U.S. at 85). Thus, the Seventh Circuit held that in order for a plaintiff's complaint [*14] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, "it must allege anti-competitive effects on a discernible market." Banks, 977 F.2d at 1088.

Banks also emphasizes that the Court "is not able to review what [plaintiff] could have alleged, but is called upon to review only what he actually alleged." Id. at 1087. The complaint must contain "either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory." Id. at 1093 (original emphasis) (citation omitted). A plaintiff may not evade the pleading requirements merely by asserting bare legal conclusions; instead, the facts must outline a violation of the Sherman Act—the plaintiff "will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Id. at 1093 (quoting Car Carriers v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984)). Additionally, a plaintiff must tie his alleged antitrust injury to the rule's allegedly anti-competitive impact. Banks, 977 F.2d at 1094 n.20.

B. What Plaintiffs Are Required to Plead

Applying the pleading standards detailed above, the Court turns to the parties' arguments regarding the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' allegations.

The [*15] NCAA points to three alleged deficiencies with Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint: 1) failure to plead a relevant market; 2) failure to allege facts sufficient to show that the NCAA's alleged wrongdoing has injured competition as a whole in the relevant market; and 3) failure to allege facts connecting the NCAA rules at issue to their alleged injuries. [Dkt. 93 at 8.]

Plaintiffs contend that the Court should apply the "quick look" version of the Rule of Reason, which Plaintiffs do not believe requires them to plead a relevant market. [Dkt. 96 at 20, 22.] Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that because they have alleged that the NCAA's rules regarding athletics-based discounts constitute "a naked restraint of trade and commerce," [dkt. 84 at 11 ¶ 33], they are not required to plead market power and the burden shifts to the NCAA to provide a competitive justification for its restraint, which the Plaintiffs claim the NCAA has not done, [dkt. 96 at 19].

Plaintiffs' argument ignores the Seventh Circuit's clear holding in Banks that because the Rule of Reason applies to challenges to NCAA regulations, a plaintiff's complaint "must allege anti-competitive effects on a discernible market" to survive [*16] a motion to dismiss. Banks, 977 F.2d at 1088. Although Plaintiffs describe Banks as a "rambling" opinion and ask the Court to disregard it, [dkt. 116 at 28], this Court is in no position to overrule, disregard, or limit Banks, see Gacy v. Welborn, 994 F.2d 305, 310 (7th Cir. 1993) (emphasizing that district courts are not permitted to disregard Seventh Circuit authority because "[o]urs is a hierarchical judiciary, and judges of inferior courts must carry out decisions [of higher courts]"). Accordingly, it will adhere to Banks as applicable Seventh Circuit precedent

---

[4] Plaintiffs urge the Court to reject Banks and apply Chicago Professional Sports Limited Partnership v. National Basketball Association, 961 F.2d 667 (7th Cir. 1992). [Dkt. 116 at 29.] The Court disagrees with Plaintiffs that CPSLP is binding authority in this context. Banks, which is more recent, directly addressed an NCAA bylaw in the amateur sports context, while CPSLP addressed television broadcast rights in the professional sports context. Therefore, the Court finds the Seventh Circuit's interpretation of Board of Regents and its general discussion of NCAA bylaws to be controlling.

and analyze the Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint to determine whether it alleges anti-competitive effects on a discernible market.[5]

The Court also rejects Plaintiffs' argument that the NCAA was required to set forth procompetitive justifications for its regulations at this stage in the proceedings.[6] [Dkt. 96 at 15.] While the Court agrees with Plaintiffs that the NCAA may be required to set forth procompetitive [*17] justifications on summary judgment or at trial if Plaintiffs were to meet their initial burden, see Board of Regents, 468 U.S. at 95 (decision issued "[a]fter a full trial"), at this stage in the proceedings the Court focuses on the allegations in Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, Banks, 977 F.2d at 1088; see also Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (holding that a motion to dismiss asks whether the complaint "contain[s] sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face'") (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929). Therefore, Plaintiffs' argument that the NCAA has failed to meet its "heavy burden of establishing that its conduct is procompetitive" fails, [dkt. 96 at 15], and the Court will not consider the NCAA's proffered procompetitive justifications.[7]

In sum, through the lens of binding Seventh Circuit precedent, the Court will analyze the Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint to determine whether it alleges anti-competitive effects on a discernible market. If it fails to do [*19] so, the Court must grant the NCAA's motion to dismiss.

C. Plaintiffs' Allegations Regarding a Relevant Geographic Market

The NCAA contends that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a relevant geographic market. [Dkt. 93 at 11.] Plaintiffs allege that they have adequately pled the United States as the relevant geographic market. [Dkt. 96 at 26-27.]

When the Rule of Reason applies, as the Seventh Circuit has held it does here, the plaintiff must show that the challenged restraint has an adverse impact on competition in the relevant market, which includes defining a geographic market. Bi-Rite Oil Co. v. Indiana Farm Bureau Coop. Ass'n, 908 F.2d 200, 203 (7th Cir. 1990). Identifying a geographic market requires both careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates and to which the purchaser can practicably turn to for supplies. Republic Tobacco Co. v. N. Atl. Trading Co., 381 F.3d 717, 738 (7th Cir. 2004).

The Court rejects the NCAA's argument that the Amended Complaint does not plead a relevant geographic market. Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint references the United States three times. [See, e.g., dkt. 84 at 4 ("There is no major college sports program in the United States that [*20] is not an NCAA member, abiding by the NCAA rules.").] Even more importantly, however, the NCAA does not dispute that its member institutions, which abide by its rules, are located throughout the United States and recruit student-athletes from throughout the United States. It is, after

---

[5] The parties, particularly Plaintiffs, cite numerous out-of-Circuit cases that they believe support their arguments. Because the Court finds applicable Seventh Circuit precedent to be controlling, it will not address those cases.

[6] At oral argument, the NCAA argued that the one-year scholarship rule makes athletic-based scholarships equivalent to academic scholarships, which typically operate on a year-to-year basis. [Dkt. 116 at 5.] Additionally, the NCAA contended that the one-year scholarship rule takes "some of the potential abuse" out of the recruiting process, which promotes amateurism. [Id.] The NCAA's proffered procompetitive [*18] justification for the cap on the number of available scholarships is "competitive balance and competitive equity." [Id. at 7.] Without such a cap, the NCAA believes that some schools would offer extra scholarships to stockpile players so that those players would be unable to play for a competitor. [Id. (referencing Gary Shaw, Meat on the Hoof: The Hidden World of Texas Football (1972)).] The NCAA also made a cogent argument that the bylaws at issue are not anti-competitive because output remains constant. For example, if a student-athlete's scholarship is not renewed, the school will offer that spot to another individual, thereby maintaining output in the market. As detailed below, however, the Court will not address the NCAA's proffered justifications because they are beyond the scope of evaluating Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint.

[7] Likewise, the Court will not address the NCAA's argument that its rules are entitled to a presumption of reasonableness. [Dkt. 93 at 19-22.]

all, the National Collegiate Athletic Association. Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs adequately pled a relevant geographic market.

D. Plaintiffs' Allegations Regarding a Relevant Product Market

The NCAA also argues that Plaintiffs failed to plead a relevant product market. Specifically, the NCAA emphasizes that although Plaintiffs' initial complaint alleged that the relevant market at issue was for "bachelor's degrees from accredited colleges and/or universities," [dkt. 93 at 10-11 (citing dkt. 1 at 5 ¶ 15)], Plaintiffs removed that allegation from their Amended Complaint. Even if Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint implicitly alleges a product market for bachelor's degrees, the NCAA argues that such a market doesn't exist because colleges do not simply sell degrees to anyone willing to pay. [Dkt. 93 at 10.]

In response to the NCAA's motion, Plaintiffs argue that their Amended Complaint sufficiently [*21] alleges two product markets: "the market for the sale of bachelor's degrees and the labor market for the purchase of student athlete services." [Dkt. 96 at 22 (original emphases).]

The Court will analyze each of the proposed markets to determine if the Plaintiffs have alleged a relevant product market.[8] In doing so, the Court will disregard Plaintiffs' antitrust terms of art, such as "naked restraint of trade and commerce," that do not contain an adequate factual basis. See Car Carriers, 745 F.2d at 1106 (emphasizing that plaintiff "will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust").

i. Labor Market

Plaintiffs cite two paragraphs from their Amended Complaint that they claim allege a labor market:

> From Paragraph 16: "NCAA member institutions compete with each other to attract and enroll highly skilled athletes to their institutions for obtaining bachelor's degrees." [Dkt. 84 at 6 ¶ 16.]
>
> From Paragraph 22: "Students with athletic ability often are given athletics-based discounts, i.e., 'grants-in-aid' or 'athletic scholarships,' that may sometimes equal the yearly cost of a bachelor's degree. In effect, these students who receive full or partial athleticbased discounts are paying-in-kind, either in whole or in part, for their bachelor's degrees." [Dkt. 84 at 8 ¶ 22.]

A search of Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint reveals that it does not contain the word "labor" or the words "labor market." This is problematic, given the fact that the Seventh Circuit [*23] has admonished courts to review only what is actually alleged. See Banks, 977 F.2d at 1087 (instructing that the Court "is not able to review what [plaintiff] could have alleged, but is called upon to review only what he actually alleged").

Even if the Court reads between the lines and infers that Plaintiffs sufficiently alleged a labor market in their Amended Complaint, controlling precedent undercuts Plaintiffs' claim. As the NCAA points out, the Seventh Circuit, in upholding the grant of a motion to dismiss, has already rejected the claim that NCAA member schools could be purchasers of labor because the NCAA eligibility and recruiting requirements "prohibit member colleges from engaging in price competition for players." Id. at 1091. Specifically, the Seventh Circuit disagreed with the contention that NCAA colleges could "purchase labor through the grant-in-aid athletic scholarships offered to college players when the value of the scholarship is based upon the school's tuition and room and board, not by the supply and demand for players." Id. Therefore, even if the Court accepts that Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint actually pleads a labor market, that market fails as a matter of law [*24] because the Seventh Circuit has already rejected the idea of a labor market in the amateur college sports context.

[8] Although Plaintiffs challenge two NCAA bylaws—the one-year scholarship limit and the cap on the number of athletic-based discounts a school can offer—they do not differentiate between those bylaws when addressing the alleged labor and bachelor's degree markets. The Court presumes that Plaintiffs know what is best for their case and structured their opposition to the NCAA's motion accordingly. See Greenlaw v. United States, 554 U.S. 237, 243-44, 128 S. Ct. 2559, 171 L. Ed. 2d 399 (2008) ("[W]e rely on the parties to frame the issues for decision and assign to courts the role of neutral arbiter of matters the parties [*22] present . . . . Our adversary system is designed around the premise that the parties know what is best for them, and are responsible for advancing the facts and arguments entitling them to relief.") Therefore, the Court will address each of the markets the Plaintiffs allege without distinguishing between the challenged bylaws.

ii. Market for Bachelor's Degrees

a. Plaintiffs' Allegations in Amended Complaint

Plaintiffs' original complaint contained a heading titled "Relevant Market" and alleged that "[b]achelor's degrees from accredited colleges and/or universities constitute a distinct product market." [Dkt. 1 at 5 ¶ 15.] Plaintiffs removed that heading and allegation from their Amended Complaint, which the NCAA argues is a "deliberately evasive pleading strategy" to avoid addressing the relevant market issue. [Dkt. 93 at 15.] In response to the NCAA's motion, Plaintiffs confirm that they deliberately removed that language from their Amended Complaint "to clarify the legal point that no detailed allegations defining a relevant market were necessary." [Dkt. 96 at 25.]

Plaintiffs' decision to deliberately remove the relevant product market language from their Amended Complaint to clarify their (erroneous) belief that they were not required to plead a relevant market was a gamble, especially given the directly relevant authority in this Circuit. Moreover, Plaintiffs could have amended their pleading [*25] as a matter of course in response to the NCAA's motion to dismiss, which highlighted this deficiency and directed Plaintiffs to Banks. Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 15(a)(1). Plaintiffs chose not to do so "because pleading [a] market in antitrust cases is a complicated and often time-consuming matter" and they wanted the Court's insight "given the complexity of the economics involved in these cases." [Dkt. 116 at 39; see also dkt. 116 at 37 ("[T]o be honest with you, we didn't spend a lot of time in the complaint on the market definition.").] This was another gamble because the Court does not provide insight or advisory opinions. It rules on the issues the parties present and moves on to the next case. See *Brownstone Publ'g, LLC v. AT&T, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25485 7 (S.D. Ind. 2009) ("Motion practice is not an exercise in trial and error or maybe-maybe not where a party can reserve arguments to present later if earlier ones fail.").

Given the Seventh Circuit's admonition to review only what Plaintiffs actually allege in antitrust cases and Plaintiffs' admission that they deliberately removed the relevant market allegation from their Amended Complaint because they didn't believe they needed [*26] to plead it, [dkt. 96 at 25], the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to plead a relevant product market for bachelor's degrees as a matter of law.

b. Plausibility of the Market for Bachelor's Degrees

Despite their admission that they purposefully removed the language regarding the relevant market for bachelor's degrees from their Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs contend that their Amended Complaint still adequately pleads "the market for the sale of bachelor's degrees." [Dkt. 96 at 22 (original emphasis).] Plaintiffs cite various paragraphs from their Amended Complaint to support their contention, specifically quoting the following:

> "The vast majority of salaried positions in the United States require the applicant to possess a bachelor's degree. No reasonable substitute exists for a bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university. Accredited colleges and universities compete for customers, i.e. students on a variety of dimensions including but not limited to price, reputation, job placement, and course offerings. A hypothetical entity that had a monopoly on bachelor's degrees would be able to raise the price of bachelor's degrees significantly for a non-transitory period [*27] of time without losing customers."

[Dkt. 96 at 23 (quoting dkt. 84 at 7 ¶ 19).]

The NCAA argues that Plaintiffs' market for the sale of bachelor's degrees fails because colleges and universities do not simply sell degrees to anyone willing to pay tuition. [Dkt. 93 at 10.] Instead, even if a student gains admission to the school and obtains a scholarship, he or she still must earn a bachelor's degree by satisfying the school's particular requirements for grades, credit hours, etc. [Dkt. 93 at 15 n.5.]

To survive the NCAA's Motion to Dismiss, the Amended Complaint must contain "either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory." _Banks, 977 F.2d at 1093_ (original emphasis); see also _Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949_ (the complaint must "contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face'") (quoting _Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929_) (emphasis added).

The Court agrees with the NCAA that the "market" for bachelor's degrees is implausible as a matter of law because people cannot simply purchase bachelor's degrees at Division I colleges and universities. Notwithstanding [*28] pop culture lyrics to the contrary, you can't just "mess around and get [a] college degree." Bruno Mars, "Lazy Song," Doo-Wops & Hooligans, Atlantic Records (2011). Instead, earning a bachelor's degree requires the student to attend class, take required courses, and maintain certain grades, among many other things. See _Banks, 977 F.2d at 1090_ ("NCAA student-athletes are required to attend class, maintain a minimum grade point average, and enroll and complete a required number of courses to obtain a degree."). Plaintiffs do not dispute that bachelor's degrees cannot be bought or sold outright. [Dkt. 116 at 30, 37.] Because student-athletes still must fulfill certain academic requirements to obtain a degree, and the degree itself cannot be bought or sold outright, Plaintiffs' alleged market for the sale of bachelor's degrees is implausible.

As a final point, the heart of Plaintiffs' claim is speculation that but for the NCAA bylaws at issue they would have successfully negotiated for a four-year, unconditional athletic scholarship. That unconditional scholarship would have given them the opportunity to attend their university tuition-free, regardless of their ability to continue to play [*29] sports. Plaintiffs who receive that opportunity would then have the opportunity to earn a tuition-free bachelor's degree by meeting the academic requirements to do so. Contrary to Plaintiffs' proposed "market for the sale of bachelor's degrees," earning a degree does not automatically result from receiving the four-year unconditional scholarships Plaintiffs desire. Consequently, Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint does not contain allegations necessary to sustain recovery under a viable legal theory.[9]

For the reasons detailed herein, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint fails to state a discernible market. Therefore, the Court grants the NCAA's motion to dismiss and dismisses Plaintiffs' entire action.[10]

E. Dismissal With Prejudice

The NCAA requests that the Court dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint with prejudice. [Dkt. 93 at 26.] Plaintiffs request that they be given another opportunity to re-plead their claim if the Court grants the NCAA's motion. [Dkt. 116 at 38.]

---

[9] Because the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a relevant product market, it need not address the NCAA's argument that Plaintiffs have failed to allege injury to competition. [Dkt. 93 at 18-19.] Additionally, the Court rejects the NCAA's standing argument that the Amended Complaint does not allege that the Plaintiffs were injured by the NCAA Division I bylaws at issue. [Dkt. 93 at 22-25.] Plaintiffs allege that they initially received an athletic scholarship to attend their respective universities but that those scholarships were not renewed after they could no longer play sports, causing them to pay tuition through other means. [Dkt. 84 at 14-15 ¶¶ 43-50.] They further allege [*30] that had they been free to negotiate a four-year scholarship, they would have avoided those costs. Those allegations are sufficient to establish antitrust standing at this stage in the proceedings.

[10] As detailed in footnote one, supra, the Court must dismiss the entire action because no one besides the named Plaintiffs have a legally protected interest in the litigation at this time. _Wiesmueller, 513 F.3d at 786_; _Sheridan, 530 F.3d at 592, 596_; _Banks, 977 F.2d at 1085-86_.

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a)(1)(B), a plaintiff may amend its complaint as a matter of course in response to a motion to dismiss. *Brown v. Bowman, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34894 53-54 (N.D. Ind. 2011). The 2009 notes [*31] to that rule emphasize that this amendment "will force the pleader to consider carefully and promptly the wisdom of amending to meet the arguments in the motion. A responsive amendment may avoid the need to decide the motion or reduce the number of issues to be decided, and will expedite determination of issues that otherwise might be raised seriatim."

If a plaintiff does not or cannot amend its complaint as a matter of course, Rule 15(a)(2) provides that it may amend its pleading again only with the opposing party's written consent or with the Court's leave. Rule 15(a)(2) further provides that the Court should give leave "when justice so requires." The Court is not required to give Plaintiffs another chance to plead their claim if they have already had multiple attempts to cure deficiencies in their pleadings. Emery v. Am. Gen. Fin., 134 F.3d 1321, 1323 (7th Cir. 1998). If an amended complaint does not differ significantly from an original complaint, it presumably represents the plaintiff's best effort to state a claim against the defendant. Katz v. Household Int'l, 91 F.3d 1036, 1038 n.2 (7th Cir. 1996).

Plaintiffs have already had two opportunities to plead their claim against the [*32] NCAA, and their first opportunity to re-plead followed a fully briefed motion to dismiss that, among other things, challenged Plaintiffs' product market allegations. [Dkt. 24 at 17.] The NCAA consented to Plaintiffs request to re-plead their complaint after the claim was transferred to this Court, [dkt. 81 at 1], but subsequently filed another motion to dismiss, [dkt. 91]. Plaintiffs chose not to exercise their right to amend their pleading as a matter of course pursuant to Rule 15(a)(1)(B) in response to the NCAA's new responsive pleading and, instead, chose to brief the motion to dismiss and adjudicate the issues. Plaintiffs also acknowledge making the deliberate choice to remove specific allegations as to a relevant market from their Complaint.

The Court is not required to give Plaintiffs another chance to plead their claim because they have already had multiple attempts to cure deficiencies in their pleadings. See Emery, 134 F.3d at 1323. Further, Plaintiffs have not given any indication that they could, in fact, successfully amend their complaint to cure the defects identified above, even if given the opportunity to do so. Considering the procedural history of this case, particularly [*33] the fact that Plaintiffs have already had the opportunity to re-plead their allegations after a fully briefed motion to dismiss, the Court, in its discretion, dismisses Plaintiffs' claim with prejudice.

IV.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons detailed herein, the Court GRANTS the NCAA's Motion to Dismiss, [dkt. 91], and DISMISSES Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint WITH PREJUDICE. Given this ruling, the NCAA's Motion for Protective Order, [dkt. 114], and Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Discovery, [dkt. 121], are DENIED AS MOOT. Final judgment shall issue accordingly.

09/01/2011

/s/ Jane Magnus-Stinson

Hon. Jane Magnus-Stinson, Judge

United States District Court

Southern District of Indiana

LexisNexis®

Sterling Merch., Inc. v. Nestlé, S.A.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

September 1, 2011, Decided

No. 10-1925

Reporter

656 F.3d 112 *; 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 18214 ; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,586

STERLING MERCHANDISING, INC., Plaintiff, Appellant, v. NESTLÉ, S.A., PAYCO FOODS CORPORATION, AND NESTLÉ PUERTO RICO, INC., Defendants, Appellees.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF PUERTO RICO. Hon. Salvador E. Casellas, U.S. District Judge.

Sterling Merch., Inc. v. Nestle, S.A., 724 F. Supp. 2d 245, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62814 (D.P.R., 2010)

Core Terms

merger, ice cream, antitrust, market share, distributors, percent, sales, prices, retail, anticompetitive, competitor, consumers, output, district court, products, brand, discount, monopolization, merged, impairments, consumer price, manufacturer, damages, antitrust violation, anti trust law, per-unit, largest, monopoly power, contracts, argues

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A court of appeals' review of a grant of summary judgment is de novo, taking all facts and reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN2[] Standing, Requirements

The United States Supreme Court has articulated a six-factor test that governs whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action. The relevant factors are: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws (antitrust injury); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. Although a court technically balances the six factors to determine if standing is appropriate, the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit has emphasized the causation requirement. Additionally, the absence of antitrust injury will generally defeat standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN3[] Private Actions, Remedies

A plaintiff bears the burden of proving antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4[] Private Actions, Remedies

Antitrust injury is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause, and should therefore reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. The plaintiffs must show not only that they were injured as a result of the defendant's actions and that those actions constituted an antitrust violation, but also that their injury is the type of injury the antitrust violation would cause to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN5[] Private Actions, Remedies

A competitor may suffer injury even when there is no injury to competition or to consumers, and so lack standing to bring an antitrust claim. Even if a competitor is hurt because the merger of its rivals makes them more efficient or able to compete more aggressively, that harm is not an antitrust violation, and the competitor lacks standing. Further, unlike consumers, competitors have incentives to bring antitrust suits for purposes which are anti-competitive, for example to induce the defendant competitor to moderate their competition. As a result, there is reason for courts to be properly skeptical of many rivals' suits, particularly when the practices are not obviously "exclusionary."

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

Injury to competition is usually measured by a reduction in output and an increase in prices in the relevant market. The antitrust injury doctrine requires every plaintiff to show that its loss comes from acts that reduce output or raise prices to consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7[] Private Actions, Remedies

It is axiomatic that antitrust laws are concerned with protecting against impairments to a market's competitiveness and not impairments to any one market actor. It is also true that an antitrust plaintiff's post-violation successes do not necessarily preclude compensation for damages proximately caused by an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8[] Private Actions, Remedies

Even if a plaintiff makes an adequate showing of harms to competition through increased consumer prices or reduced output, the plaintiff has to show those market impairments were the result of antitrust violations in order to demonstrate antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

Because vertical exclusive dealing agreements can achieve legitimate economic benefits (reduced cost, stable long-term supply, predictable prices), no presumption against such agreements exists today. Given their capacity to enable markets to operate more efficiently and benefit consumers, such agreements are not subject to per se treatment, but are instead subject to rule of reason analysis. Indeed, courts tend to be skeptical of such claims because it is not in the long-term interest of the company that grants the "exclusive deal" to drive out of business competitors of the grantee.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN10[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The rule of reason calculus requires that an antitrust plaintiff make a burdensome showing that (1) the agreements in question involved the exercise of power in a particular economic market, (2) that this exercise impaired the competitiveness of the market, and (3) that those impairments outweighed efficiencies or other economic benefits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN11[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

In applying the rule of reason calculus to exclusive dealing arrangements, foreclosure levels are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent, and while high numbers do not guarantee success for an antitrust claim, low numbers make dismissal easy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

HN12[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

For purposes of determining whether an antitrust violation arises from exclusive dealing arrangements, short contract terms and low switching costs generally allay most fears of injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

It is not easy to think of a rule of reason antitrust analysis that does not depend on showing adverse effects on competition in a properly defined relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN14[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

Once a firm has integrated vertically into distribution by acquiring one or more existing distributors, it may reduce costs by dealing only with its wholly owned distributors. A distributor terminated for this reason might certainly suffer injury-in-fact, but it would not suffer antitrust injury as long as there were alternative sources of the product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

HN15[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

To prevail on a monopolization claim, a plaintiff must show that the defendant (1) has monopoly power in the market, and (2) has engaged in impermissible "exclusionary" practices with the design or effect of protecting or enhancing its monopoly position.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN16[] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

Whether a defendant has monopoly power depends on the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN17[] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

Where a plaintiff remains profitable and in fact has expanded its market share since allegedly anticompetitive conduct has begun, it faces an uphill battle in proving such a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN18[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

Under First Circuit law, attempted monopolization claims are presumptively implausible where the challenged conduct has been in place for at least two years and the remaining market remains robustly competitive as evidenced by ongoing entry, profitability of rivals, and stability of their aggregate market share.

Counsel: Daniel L. Goldberg, with whom Alicia L. Downey, Bingham McCutchen LLP, Jeffrey M. Williams, David C. Indiano, Seth A. Erbe, Indiano & Williams, PSC, Kevin J. O'Connor, David J. Gilles, Godfrey & Kahn, SC, and Javier A. Morales-Ramos were on brief, for appellant.

Carmine R. Zarlenga, with whom Mayer Brown LLP, Wm. Bradford Reynolds, Erik T. Koons, Howrey LLP, Luis A. Oliver, Roberto A. Cámara-Fuertes, and Fiddler González & Rodríguez, PSC were on brief, for appellees.

Judges: Before Lynch, Chief Judge, Lipez and Thompson, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: LYNCH

Opinion

[*115] LYNCH, Chief Judge. Sterling Merchandising, Inc., sued Nestlé Puerto Rico, Inc. (Nestlé PR), and a group of Nestlé corporations including Nestlé, S.A., Nestlé Holdings, Inc. and Payco Foods Corporation (Payco). The suit alleges various federal Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 12-27, and Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7, antitrust violations and pendent Puerto Rico law claims stemming from Nestlé PR's 2003 merger with Payco and later activities. Payco had been both Sterling's and Nestlé PR's competitor in the Puerto Rico ice cream distribution [2] market.

The district court granted summary judgment on all of the federal antitrust claims on the grounds that Sterling lacked standing because its evidence failed to demonstrate, inter alia, that it had suffered a cognizable antitrust injury. See Sterling Merch., Inc. v. Nestle, S.A.., 724 F. Supp. 2d 245 (D.P.R. 2010). As an alternative holding, the district court also granted summary judgment on the merits of Sterling's antitrust causes of action. Id. The pendent claims were then dismissed. Sterling appeals. We affirm on the ground of Sterling's lack of standing, particularly its failure to show antitrust injury.

I.

Nestlé, S.A. is the largest ice cream manufacturer in the world and operates in Puerto Rico through its sales and marketing subsidiary, Nestlé PR. Nestlé PR entered the ice cream distribution market in 1998. After Nestlé PR merged with Payco, another ice cream distributor, in June 2003, Nestlé PR and Sterling were the two largest ice cream distributors in Puerto Rico, though there were several other distributors and some retailers bypassed Puerto Rico distributors altogether.

Sterling, the smaller distributor, sued the larger, Nestlé PR, alleging Nestlé PR engaged in anti-competitive [3] practices from June 2003 through at least October 2009, when the evidence closed.

A. The Pre-2003 Merger Ice Cream Distribution Market in Puerto Rico

Sterling was founded in 1993 as a Puerto Rico ice cream distributor. It immediately became the island-wide exclusive distributor of Edy's brand ice cream, the most popular brand in Puerto Rico. Other distributors in the ice cream market included Payco Foods Corporation, and Mantecados Nevada, Inc. In 1998, five years after Sterling's formation, Nestlé PR joined the distribution market by buying Mantecados Nevada's assets.

From 1998 until the 2003 merger of Payco and Nestlé PR, the ice cream distribution market in Puerto Rico was competitive, and neither Payco, Nestlé PR, nor Sterling dominated the market. Sterling maintained Edy's as its flagship brand, which Sterling received from the Dreyer's ice cream manufacturing company. In the late 1990s, Dreyer's began giving Sterling a per-unit discount, tying the discount to Sterling's previous-year sales. Before the merger at issue, Sterling and Dreyer's negotiated a $0.75 per unit promotional support for Edy's. Sterling says this was done to improve its position in competing with Payco and Nestlé [4] PR/Nevada. In 2003, Dreyer's also assigned to Sterling its new "Skinny Cow" products. Despite the competitive market and its exclusive distribution rights to Edy's, Sterling's financial performance declined from 2001 until 2003. During that period, Sterling's sales dropped from $8.07 million to $7.01 million.

Nestlé PR also suffered from poor financial performance before its 2003 merger. It had roughly $8 million in losses as of May 2002, and sought ways to improve its financial outlook. It contemplated merger, including with Sterling, as a route to profitability, [*116] and eventually did merge with Payco.

B. The 2003 Nestlé PR/Payco Merger and the Separate Nestlé Acquisition of Dreyer's

In June 2003, Nestlé PR acquired 50 percent of Payco, which was only in the distribution business. Nestlé did not acquire the remaining 50 percent of Payco's shares until September 2005. The merger was reviewed by the Puerto Rico Office of Monopolistic Affairs (PROMA), which approved the merger conditioned on particular stipulations, none of which is alleged to have been subsequently breached, and which continue to be effective. For example, one stipulation is that Nestlé may not transfer Edy's to another distributor [5] without the approval of PROMA unless Sterling has, in the interim, acquired distribution rights to either Breyer's or Blue Bunny ice cream.

Separately, but also in June 2003, Nestlé, S.A., Nestlé PR's parent, acquired a controlling interest in Dreyer's, the manufacturer of Edy's brand ice cream products. Nestlé, S.A. acquired 100 percent ownership of Dreyer's in January 2006. Sterling has remained Edy's exclusive distributor despite Nestlé, S.A.'s acquisition of Dreyer's. The end result is that Nestlé, S.A. manufactures Edy's, which is the most lucrative of Sterling's distribution products and its flagship brand, while Nestlé PR, Nestlé, S.A.'s subsidiary, is Sterling's largest competitor at the distribution level.

C. The Post-Merger Market

The merger of Nestlé PR and Payco appears to have had significant costs to the defendant merged companies. Immediately after the 2003 merger, the merged Nestlé PR (including Payco) had an 85 percent market share in the ice cream distribution market; that share fell to 70 percent by 2007. The merged entities have also lost a number of their major exclusive arrangement retail customers to Sterling.

Shortly after the 2003 merger, for example, Sterling [6] acquired exclusive rights to distribute ice cream products to Puerto Rico retail customers Grande and Pitusa, both of which were Payco customers prior to the merger. In 2007, Supermercados Econo, Inc., the largest retail seller of ice cream in Puerto Rico and formerly a retail customer of Payco, also signed exclusivity agreements with Sterling and others. Supermercados Econo's agreements have resulted in the merged Nestlé PR losing its sales with Econo stores. Further, the merger itself caused at least one of Payco's product lines, Wells' Dairy Inc.'s Blue Bunny brand, to terminate its distribution agreement with the merged Nestlé PR/Payco on the grounds that the merger constituted a material breach of the Blue Bunny distribution agreement and would, in Wells' Dairy Inc.'s view, negatively affect the distribution of Blue Bunny products.

As the district court found, "some products distributed by Nestlé PR/Payco lost market share and access to important locations," and during the first six months of joint Nestlé PR/Payco operations the merged company lost $5 million in revenue to Sterling and other competitors. Id. at 260. That trend has continued beyond the initial six-month period following [7] the merger.

By contrast, Sterling's market share and sales, which were stagnant before the Nestlé PR/Payco merger, have significantly improved since the merger. Before the merger, Sterling's net sales had declined from $8.07 million in 2001 to $7.59 million in 2002, and to $7.01 million in 2003. After the merger of its competitors, Sterling's sales rose year over year from 2003 through 2008, at an average of 11 percent [*117] a year. Sterling's profits and operating revenue rose commensurately with sales.

Both before and after the merger, Sterling acquired distribution rights to other retailers and rights to distribute other brands, including Good Humor, J & J Snacks, Rich's Ice Cream, and Turkey Hill. Puerto Rico is not a market where only a small number of brands are sold. Rather, as Sterling's acquisitions of distribution rights to new brands demonstrate, there are a number of manufacturers of ice cream available to distributors in Puerto Rico. And during this period, on Sterling's own evidence, the overall sales of ice cream products in dollar terms increased in Puerto Rico.

Sterling put only limited evidence into the record of its market share, but its expert did acknowledge that "[i]t's [8] grown over the 2003 to the present" time period. The record evidence shows that Sterling's share of the market has risen from 14.7 percent in 2003 to more than 22 percent in 2008. This data also shows a steady increase in Sterling's market share during the entire period of alleged monopolistic behavior by defendants.

Sterling's strong financial performance has led it to increase the size of its facilities and upgrade. Since the 2003 Nestlé PR/Payco merger, it has constructed a new warehouse with twice the square footage of its previous warehouse. Due both to the increased size of the facility and to technology upgrades, the new warehouse could increase Sterling's distribution capacity by as much as eight times over the previous warehouse.

Sterling has maintained its exclusive distribution agreement with Edy's after both Nestlé PR's merger with Payco, and Nestlé, S.A.'s acquisition of Dreyer's, Edy's manufacturer. In 2004, Dreyer's (already having been acquired by Nestlé, S.A.) reduced Sterling's per-unit discount from $0.75 to $0.60, citing increased costs of raw materials. Also in 2004, Dreyer's took the line of "Skinny Cow" products from Sterling, but not the Edy's brand, and now distributes [9] the Skinny Cow line through Nestlé PR.

Faced with the obvious problem that its growing success after the merger makes it difficult to show injury to itself, Sterling alleged that in a but-for-2003-merger world, it would have thrived even more than it did. Sterling presented a two-part injury and damages theory to explain how it would have been even better off absent Nestlé PR's allegedly anticompetitive behavior.

First, it alleged that Nestlé PR's post-merger exclusivity agreements with a large number of grocery stores, by foreclosing Sterling from those stores, cost it $21-29 million in sales it otherwise would have made. Second, Sterling argued that absent this market foreclosure, it would have earned higher profits on those sales it actually made because its increased market share would have allowed it to be a more efficient operation. Sterling also alleged it lost sales when Dreyer's took the "Skinny Cow" product line away from Sterling and assigned it to Payco a year after the Nestlé PR/Payco merger, and lost profits on actual sales when Dreyer's reduced its per-unit discount on Edy's products. These allegations are not supported by Sterling's expert's damages model, which does [10] not specifically discuss damages from these alleged violations.

II.

The district court granted summary judgment on all counts largely because it found Sterling, on the undisputed evidence, had not demonstrated any antitrust injury.

As to injury to competition during the post-merger period, the district court concluded the Puerto Rico ice cream distribution [*118] market had in fact expanded. Id. The court found no evidence that the Nestlé PR/Payco merger or the merged companies' activities had resulted in restricted output. Nor did the court find any evidence that prices to consumers had in fact been raised in this period, much less that the raise could be tied to illegal anticompetitive behavior. Id. The court noted that no price study had been done by Sterling's experts, and that what little information there was available regarding pricing showed that consumer prices on some products had in fact decreased during the relevant period. Id.

The district court found that Sterling's claims of any injury to itself "either by [Nestlé PR's] exclusives or by product price increases" were severely undermined by its "increased profits, sales, and market share" in the post-merger period. Id. at 259.

The [11] court concluded that in light of these facts, Sterling could not show that any antitrust injury resulted from Nestlé PR/Payco's behavior.

The district court also rejected Sterling's damages model. Id. at 262. That model attempted to extrapolate from Sterling's 42-50 percent market share in two small slivers of the market to the conclusion that Sterling would have had a 42-50 percent market share throughout Puerto Rico absent Nestlé PR's purportedly anticompetitive actions. The court held that the model failed to meet Sterling's burden of proving damages for two reasons. First, the model adopted sub-markets with no exclusive agreements whatsoever as the benchmark for comparison, but this was an inaccurate point of comparison as exclusivity agreements are not per se illegal and have long been a lawful part of the ice cream distribution market in Puerto Rico. Id. at 260-62. Second, Sterling's market share was not anywhere near 42-50 percent before the merger, "and it is unrealistic to posit that the company's sales and market presence would have grown four-fold had the Nestlé PR/Payco merger never occurred." Id. at 262.

The court further concluded that even had Sterling shown any injury [12] to itself, it had not shown any antitrust injury, that is, that it was injured by anticompetitive activity and that its injury was "sufficiently direct, nonspeculative, and measurable to the extent that causality is not in doubt." Id. at 258. The court found that Sterling failed to demonstrate that any of the allegedly anticompetitive activity charged by Sterling--purportedly illegal use of exclusivity agreements to excessively foreclose the market, a price squeeze from reducing Dreyer's per-unit discount to Sterling, and allegedly illegal foreclosure from distribution contracts for new Dreyer's products-had been proven to injure Sterling.

As to exclusivity contracts, the district court found that they had been used in Puerto Rico since the 1990s, that Nestlé PR's reliance on them had actually decreased in the years after the 2003 merger,[1] and that the agreements themselves did not have any anticompetitive hallmarks such as long duration, below-cost pricing, or excessive foreclosure of the market. Id. at 260-61, 264-66. The court noted [*119] that in the post-merger period, Sterling had acquired new distribution rights to new retail markets to which, before the merger, either Nestlé PR or [13] Payco had exclusive access. The court also observed that the entry of additional distributors to the market since the 2003 merger indicated that Nestlé PR's exclusivity contracts have not served to impair the competitive structure of the market. Id. at 264.

As to Sterling's claims of a price squeeze after Nestlé PR acquired Dreyer's, the manufacturer of Edy's, the district court found that while Sterling's concerns were "legitimate from a business point of view, they do not involve any overt anti-competitive act" because the per-unit cost to Sterling had [14] not "significantly increased." Id. at 261. It

[1] Rates of market foreclosure by Payco exclusive accounts rose from 28.2 percent in 2004 to 30.8 percent in 2005, but declined to 29.4 percent in 2006 and 19.5 percent in 2007; the agreements were mostly for one to two years. Sterling argued that foreclosure rates were higher than these figures in certain sub-regions of Puerto Rico. The district court rejected this attempt at "gerrymandering of markets . . . to artificially show high levels of foreclosure" given that Sterling had identified the relevant market as the entirety of Puerto Rico in its complaint. Sterling Merch., Inc. v. Nestle, S.A.., 724 F. Supp. 2d 245, 265 (D.P.R. 2010).

further reasoned that sales volume had increased and consumer prices stayed "stable," "strongly suggesting that the competitive structure of the market has not been harmed, thus precluding antitrust injury." Id.

As to the allegations that new Nestlé PR/Payco products had been denied to Sterling, the district court found Sterling could not show any "tangible damages" because it had expanded its sales and increased its market share following the merger despite the fact that it "was not in rapid expansion before the merger." Id. The court further reasoned that, in any event, Nestlé PR had no legal duty to offer its brands, such as the "Skinny Cow" line, to Sterling. Id. at 270. It also observed that Sterling had not been terminated as a distributor of Edy's brand ice cream even after Nestlé PR acquired Dreyer's and became Edy's manufacturer. Id. at 271-72. Nor had Nestlé PR taken "any steps to make distributing Edy's unprofitable for Sterling." Id. at 272.

Finally, the court also rejected Sterling's monopolization and attempted monopolization claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act on the merits because Sterling had failed to show, as it must, either [15] that Nestlé PR wielded monopoly power, or that there was a "dangerous probability" that Nestlé PR would acquire such power. Id. at 266-72.

Finally, the court also rejected Sterling's monopolization and attempted monopolization claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act on the merits because Sterling had failed to show, as it must, either that Nestlé PR wielded monopoly power, or that there was a "dangerous probability" that Nestlé PR would acquire such power. Id. at 266-72.

III.

HN1[] Our review of the grant of summary judgment is de novo, taking all facts and reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to Sterling, the nonmoving party. See White v. R.M. Packer Co., 635 F.3d 571, 575 (1st Cir. 2011).

Sterling argues that its evidence sufficed to show that Nestlé PR has put a "stranglehold" on the Puerto Rico ice cream distribution market by: (1) acquiring its former competitor, Payco; (2) entering into "strategically deployed exclusivity contracts" that lock up lucrative and geographically efficient grocery stores albeit without foreclosing more than 30 percent of the market; and (3) acquiring Dreyer's, the manufacturer of Sterling's star product line, and causing Dreyer's to reduce from 75 cents [16] to 60 cents the discount it once gave Sterling on its wholesale price. Sterling argues these practices have "harmed interbrand competition" and also "injured Sterling by foreclosing it from sales it would have made in the absence of exclusive dealing contracts and increasing Sterling's input and operational costs" by reducing the wholesale discount it once received and "forcing route structure inefficiencies."

Sterling insists it has demonstrated antitrust injury because it would have done even better for itself than it has were it not for the merger, the removal of a portion of Dreyer's wholesale discounts on Edy's products, and Nestlé PR's post-merger exclusivity arrangements. Sterling argues that in such a but-for world, purchasers would have been offered more choices in more locations at more competitive prices, and Sterling would have gained [*120] more market share. Sterling also argues that it would have been able to use more efficient delivery routes, thereby lowering its per-unit costs.[2] Sterling attributes its actual increased sales to the fact that Wells' Dairy Inc.'s Blue Bunny product and distribution line was "driven out" of the market after the Nestlé PR/Payco merger, which [17] has benefitted Sterling in the short term.[3]

---

[2] Sterling also claims that Nestlé PR's post-merger exclusivity agreements were "unremunerative," but Sterling does not develop the argument or cite to evidence to support this allusion to predatory pricing, and did not adequately raise this argument to the district court.

[3] Sterling also attributes its financial performance to the fact that the pendency of both this litigation and an investigation of Nestlé by the Department of Justice has caused Nestlé PR and its subsidiaries to "restrain themselves from unleashing the full brunt of their power to completely destroy competition."

Nestlé PR responds [18] that Sterling has failed to show either that it had suffered any injury or that Nestlé PR's allegedly anticompetitive actions had caused such injury. Nestlé PR cites the lack of evidence of injury to competition or consumers, Sterling's post-2003 financial performance, the evidence of Sterling's entry into outlets previously controlled by Payco, the merged Nestlé PR's declining use of exclusivity agreements, and the unrealistic and speculative economic forecast Sterling used as its but-for scenario.

Nestlé PR also argues that whatever Sterling might show about the effect of Nestlé PR's actions on Sterling, the case law requires Sterling to show that its loss comes from acts that reduce output and/or raise prices to consumers. Sullivan v. Nat'l Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1096-97 (1st Cir. 1994). Nestlé PR points out that while Sterling claims in its amended complaint that consumers saw "increased retail prices and constricted retail options," it never actually produced evidence to support either reduced output or increased prices to consumers. Sterling's expert, Dr. Overstreet, acknowledged in testimony that he had done no analysis of consumer pricing, or of any potential causes [19] of any increased prices, preventing Sterling from proving that any increased price either existed or resulted from anticompetitive conduct by Nestlé PR. Nor did Sterling produce any evidence of reduced output. In fact, Nestlé argues, there was evidence to the contrary of increased output and reduced prices.

HN2[] The Supreme Court has articulated a six-factor test that governs whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action. The relevant factors are:

> (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

RSA Media, Inc. v. AK Media Grp., Inc., 260 F.3d 10, 14 (1st Cir. 2001) (quoting [*121] Serpa Corp. v. McWane, Inc., 199 F.3d 6, 10 (1st Cir. 1999)); see also Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 537-45, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). [20] "Although we technically balance the six factors to determine if standing is appropriate, this Court has emphasized the causation requirement." RSA Media, 260 F.3d at 14 (citation omitted). Additionally, "the absence of 'antitrust injury' will generally defeat standing." Id. Sterling has not satisfied these tests and particularly has not shown antitrust injury.

HN3[] The plaintiff bears the burden of proving antitrust injury. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). HN4[] Antitrust injury is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id. The injury should be "the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause," id. (alteration in original) (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 125, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969)), and should therefore "reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation," id. Plaintiffs must show not only that they were injured as a result of the defendant's actions and that those actions constituted an antitrust violation, but also that their injury is the type of injury [21] the antitrust violation would cause to competition.

HN5[] A competitor may suffer injury even when there is no injury to competition or to consumers, and so lack standing. Even if a competitor is hurt because the merger of its rivals makes them more efficient or able to compete more aggressively, that harm is not an antitrust violation, and the competitor lacks standing. See 2 Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 348a, at 387 (2d. ed. 2000). Further, unlike consumers, competitors have incentives to bring antitrust suits for purposes which are anti-competitive, for example to induce the defendant competitor to

---

At oral argument, Sterling raised for the first time the argument that the real danger of Nestlé PR's conduct is the injury that might come to pass in the future, whether or not it has suffered injury now, such as to entitle it to injunctive relief. No such argument was raised in the appellate briefs or in the district court. We decline to address this new argument that Sterling need not show antitrust injury to obtain injunctive relief. This argument has been doubly waived. See Cortés-Rivera v. Dep't of Corr. & Rehab, 626 F.3d 21, 27 (1st Cir. 2010).

moderate their competition. Id. As a result, there is reason for courts to be "properly skeptical of many rivals' suits, particularly when the practices are not obviously 'exclusionary.'" Id.

HN6[] Injury to competition is "usually measured by a reduction in output and an increase in prices in the relevant market." Sullivan, 34 F.3d at 1097 (emphasis in original); see also Stamatakis Indus., Inc. v. King, 965 F.2d 469, 471 (7th Cir. 1992) ("The [Supreme Court's] antitrust injury doctrine . . . 'requires every plaintiff to show that its loss comes from acts that reduce output or raise prices [22] to consumers.'" (quoting Chi. Prof'l Sports Ltd. P'ship v. Nat'l Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667, 670 (7th Cir. 1992))).

The overriding theme of Sterling's case is that, as a result of its merger with Payco, Nestlé PR has monopoly power in the Puerto Rico ice cream distribution market, and has exercised that power. What the undisputed facts demonstrate is that, together, Payco and Nestlé PR had an 85 percent share of the distribution market at the time of their 2003 merger, but that the market share of the merged entity has since fallen to 70 percent. This was not surprising; Nestlé PR's ice cream distribution division had been suffering heavy losses, and hoped the merger would give it viable ice cream distribution business. Still, a 70 percent market share is considerable. Nonetheless, we conclude, as did the district court, that Sterling has not shown the market has suffered a reduction in output or an increase in consumer prices. It has not shown an impairment of competition or antitrust injury from the sum of its theories.

[*122] Sterling failed to provide evidence that consumer prices increased during the relevant period. Its main economic expert, Dr. Overstreet, asserted, without evidentiary [23] support, that Nestlé PR's acquisition of Payco allowed it to "maintain prices above . . . levels that likely would be found in a more competitive market." Dr. Overstreet testified, however, that he did not undertake an analysis of consumer ice cream prices in Puerto Rico, and he stated that there is "probably some dearth of consistent and reliable information about it." Sterling's attempt to show increased prices to consumers was unsupported by basic evidence such as price studies for the Puerto Rico ice cream market, and is unavailing.[4]

In fact, the evidence suggests that, if anything, consumer prices decreased during the relevant period. Evidence suggests that both Sterling and Blue Bunny adopted a strategy of reducing prices in order to entice retailers to break away from [Nestlé PR's] exclusive contracts. While there was no evidence offered of what happened to retail prices islandwide, there is reason to believe consumers benefitted from these price wars. And independent evidence at least shows that, in some supermarkets, the retail cost of Edy's was lowered. Further, the [25] evidence is that, while inflation in Puerto Rico averaged 11.9 percent annually between 2003 and 2007, the consumer prices for both Blue Bunny and Edy's ice cream were lower in 2007 than they were in 2001.

The evidence regarding output is similar. Sterling did not set forth any evidence from which an inference can be drawn that there was a reduction in output within the relevant market during the relevant period, let alone a reduction attributable to Nestlé PR's alleged violations, or that Sterling consumers were "forced to choose between less preferred brands or visit[] another store" as a result of anti-competitive actions.

The lack of evidence of antitrust injury in the form of either increased consumer prices or reduced output is consistent with the lack of evidence that Sterling itself has been negatively affected by Nestlé PR's purported violations. HN7[] It is axiomatic that antitrust laws are concerned with protecting against impairments to a market's competitiveness and not impairments to any one market actor. See Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 224, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993). It is also true that "an antitrust plaintiff's post-violation successes do not necessarily [26] preclude compensation for damages proximately caused by an antitrust violation." Pierce v. Ramsey Winch Co., 753 F.2d 416, 436 (5th Cir. 1985). Nonetheless, that Sterling's [*123] sales, profits, and market share have increased during the relevant period provides further indication that no antitrust injury exists here.[5]

[4] At oral argument, Sterling pointed for the first time to evidence that purportedly shows consumer ice cream prices in Puerto Rico increased during the relevant period. Sterling had not cited these documents in its appellate brief. In any event, they do not show consumer prices increased. Sterling points to deposition testimony of its president, which indicates that Sterling had, at one time in 2006, increased prices by 15 percent to some of its retailers. But Sterling's president explicitly stated that the increase was limited, and that he "held pricing back at key retailers through 'roll backs.'" In any case, there is no evidence that the limited [24] number of price increases to retailers were ever passed on to consumers. Sterling also points to a July 24, 2003 email from a Payco officer that opaquely refers to aligning Nestlé PR prices with Payco prices following the 2003 merger, but this evidence does not show such a price increase actually occurred, and again speaks only to prices to retailers, not consumers. The only evidence Sterling cites that actually relates to consumer prices is a chart detailing pricing of various ice cream brands at Econo supermarkets from June 2003 until August 2006. But that chart shows consumer prices remained relatively constant during the three year period.

Sterling tries to sidestep these deficiencies by arguing [27] that the types of harm it alleges suffice as alternatives to the classic evidence of antitrust injuries. However, the cases Sterling cites as recognizing alternate types of antitrust injuries actually discuss behavior that would obviously result in higher prices and lower output. See JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., 190 F.3d 775, 778-79 (7th Cir. 1999) (total denial of an essential input, in service of a cartel that would raise prices and reduce output); Engine Specialties, Inc. v. Bombardier Ltd., 605 F.2d 1, 12-15 (1st Cir. 1979) (termination of an exclusive distributorship by competitors who had conspired to divide a retail market between them, which is per se illegal behavior designed to raise prices and reduce output). This case is nothing like the cases cited.

HN8[] Even had Sterling made an adequate showing of harms to competition through increased consumer prices or reduced output, Sterling would have to show those market impairments were the result of antitrust violations in order to demonstrate antitrust injury. But Sterling has failed to show that any of Nestlé PR's conduct violates antitrust provisions.

We first reject Sterling's argument that Nestlé PR's exclusive [28] dealing agreements have impaired competition in the market or caused any injury to Sterling. HN9[] Because vertical exclusive dealing agreements "can achieve legitimate economic benefits (reduced cost, stable long-term supply, predictable prices), no presumption against such agreements exists today." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 373 F.3d 57, 65 (1st Cir. 2004). Given their capacity to enable markets to operate more efficiently and benefit consumers, such agreements are not subject to per se treatment, but are instead subject to rule of reason analysis. Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961); Stop & Shop Supermarket, 373 F.3d at 62; 11 Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶¶ 1802-07 (2d. ed. 2005). "Indeed, courts tend to be skeptical of such claims because it is not in the long-term interest of the company that grants the 'exclusive deal' to drive out of business competitors of the grantee." Stop & Shop Supermarket, 373 F.3d at 66.

HN10[] The rule of reason calculus requires that Sterling make a burdensome showing that (1) the agreements in question involved the exercise of power in a particular economic market, (2) that this exercise impaired [29] the competitiveness of the market, and (3) that those impairments "outweighed efficiencies or other economic benefits." Id. at 61. Sterling's argument fails under this test for a number of reasons.

As a practical matter, HN11[] in applying the rule of reason calculus to exclusive [*124] dealing arrangements, "foreclosure levels are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent," and while high numbers do not guarantee success for an antitrust claim, "low numbers make dismissal easy." Id. at 68. It is undisputed that Nestlé PR/Payco's rates of market foreclosure through exclusivity arrangements with Puerto Rico retailers rose to a high of 30.8 percent for a single year, 2005, and have otherwise remained below 30 percent.

---

[5] Despite its increased sales, profits, and market share, Sterling argues it suffered damages because it would have earned far more were it not for Nestlé PR's exclusive agreements. It points to its 42 percent and 50 percent market share in retail stores that have no exclusive agreements as plausible benchmarks for what its market-wide performance would be in the absence of exclusive agreements. But this damages model assumes that the proper "but-for" market is one without any exclusive agreements. That assumption is erroneous, as these agreements are often efficient and pro-competitive, have been in use in Puerto Rico since before the merger, and, as discussed below, are not illegal in this case. In a market devoid of any exclusivity agreements, Sterling may perform better, but Sterling is not entitled to such a market.

Significantly, the Nestlé PR/Payco agreements are almost all of one or two year duration, and there is turnover. HN12[] "Short contract terms and low switching costs generally allay most fears of injury to competition." 11 Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶ 1802, at 94. Sterling points to Nestlé PR's five-year, 90 percent exclusive contract with Ralph's as support for its claim. But that agreement is not entirely exclusive; it allows other distributors at least limited [30] access. In any event, its duration is aberrational, and is on its own insufficient to sustain Sterling's claim.

HN13[] "It is not easy to think of a rule of reason analysis that does not depend on showing adverse effects on competition in a properly defined relevant market." Stop & Shop Supermarket, 373 F.3d at 69. Sterling has not shown that Nestlé PR's exclusive agreements have yielded adverse effects on competition. Sterling and Nestlé PR and other distributors compete to obtain such exclusivity agreements with retail vendors; such agreements have been present in the Puerto Rico market since at least the 1990s. Sterling was able to win over several of Nestlé PR's largest customers, including the large chains Grande and Pitusa, and in 2007, the largest retail seller of ice cream, Supermercados Econo, Inc., switched distributors and defendants lost all of their sales in those stores. It is also significant that there are other avenues of distribution available, and new competitors entering the market. And, as noted, Sterling's own market share has increased during the relevant market period.

There is no evidence that the challenged exclusivity agreements impair competition, nor that any such [31] impairment outweighs gained market efficiencies. See E. Food Servs., Inc. v. Pontifical Catholic Univ. Servs. Ass'n, 357 F.3d 1, 9 (1st Cir. 2004) (rejecting distributor's antitrust claim regarding competitor's exclusive agreements because distributor failed to show "that so many potential outlets are foreclosed to it or other competitors by long-term exclusive dealing contracts or other tactics that survival or new entry is infeasible").

As to Dreyer's price support for Edy's, Sterling provides no authority supporting its argument that Dreyer's was required to maintain Sterling's $0.75 per-unit discount in perpetuity simply because Dreyer's had been purchased by Nestlé, S.A. There is no basis to conclude that Dreyer's would have continued the discount in perpetuity, whether or not it was acquired by Nestlé. Sterling attempts to analogize its case to JTC Petroleum to impose a stricter duty on Dreyer's now that it is a Nestlé subsidiary. But in that case the defendant successfully prevented the plaintiff's suppliers from selling it any of the needed input. See JTC Petroleum, 190 F.3d at 778-79. The $0.15 reduction in Sterling's discount is hardly analogous. Dreyer's stated legitimate [32] business reasons not to continue this temporary arrangement. And as the district court pointed out, the net present price of Edy's to Sterling is 10 percent less than it was in 2000, despite an annual inflation rate that averaged 11.9 percent between 2003 and 2007.

Further, we have previously noted that HN14[] "once a firm [like Nestlé PR] has integrated vertically into distribution by acquiring [*125] one or more existing distributors [like Payco], it may reduce costs by dealing only with its wholly-owned distributors. A distributor terminated for this reason might certainly suffer injury-in-fact, but it would not suffer antitrust injury as long as there were alternative sources of the product."[6] Serpa Corp., 199 F.3d at 11. (quoting 2 Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 381c, at 114 (Supp. 1999)) (internal quotation marks omitted). Given that, it is difficult to conceive how it could be illegal for Dreyer's to reduce a negotiated $0.75 per-unit discount to $0.60. This rationale disposes of Sterling's next argument as well: there is no antitrust violation lurking in Nestlé, S.A.'s reassignment of certain Dreyer's product lines from Sterling to Nestlé PR.

---

[6] Alternative sources exist here. The parent [33] company of Nestlé PR is Nestlé, S.A. The major competitor of Nestlé, S.A. on the manufacturing level is Unilever, which has used Sterling as a distributor in Puerto Rico during some of the time period at issue.

We note that the Puerto Rico Office of Monopolistic Affairs (PROMA) approved the 2003 Nestlé PR/Payco merger upon Nestlé PR's agreement to seek PROMA's approval before transferring the distribution rights to Edy's ice cream (but not any other Dreyer's brand) from Sterling to another competitor unless Sterling had, in the interim, acquired distribution rights to either Breyer's or Blue Bunny ice cream.

Our conclusion that Sterling has failed to show it has suffered the requisite injury to maintain this suit also encompasses its monopolization and attempted monopolization claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

HN15[] To prevail on its monopolization claim, Sterling must show that Nestlé PR (1) has monopoly power in the Puerto Rico ice cream distribution market, and (2) "has engaged in impermissible 'exclusionary' practices with the design or effect of protecting or enhancing its monopoly position." Coastal Fuels of P.R., Inc. v. Caribbean Petroleum Corp., 79 F.3d 182, 195 (1st Cir. 1996) [34] (quoting Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust § 6.4a (1994)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN16[] Whether a defendant has monopoly power depends on the defendant's "ability to lessen or destroy competition" in the relevant market. Id. at 196 (quoting Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)). Despite Nestlé PR's significant market share, Sterling has failed to demonstrate Nestlé PR has such an ability, or that it has engaged in impermissible practices causing the required injury. If anything, the undisputed facts--that Nestlé PR's own market share is decreasing, that Sterling's market share is steadily on the rise, and that consumer prices have not increased--evidence the opposite conclusion.

Sterling nonetheless argues there are high barriers to entry which enhance Nestlé PR's ability to engage in market foreclosure. Although distribution businesses do not commonly involve high barriers to entry, Sterling says many exist here, including: the cost of establishing a Direct Store Delivery system; the substantial capital required to purchase trucks and freezers, particularly because ice cream products must be kept at minus 20 degrees Fahrenheit; and the difficulty of establishing [35] route density. Sterling acknowledges that there have been new entries to distribution of ice cream in Puerto Rico, but says the new businesses, such as Palm Industries, Inc., are not successful.

However, there is other evidence of successful new entries. As the district court noted, Gianni New York, LLC, has entered the market since Nestlé PR's 2003 merger with Payco, distributing to Supermercados Amigo, Inc., one of the largest supermarket chains in Puerto Rico, as [*126] well as to two other large chains, Wal-Mart and Supermercados SuperMax. Also, retailers can import ice cream products directly from the United States, bypassing distributors. Both the United States military bases in Puerto Rico and Supermercados Econo, Inc. have adopted that practice. And some suppliers of ice cream in Puerto Rico have their own distribution operation, helping to ensure consumer access and choice.

Regarding the attempted monopolization claim, Sterling "must prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456. Sterling alleges that Nestlé PR's [36] market share, coupled with its corporate parent's control of Edy's brand ice cream, Sterling's largest product line, create a dangerous probability that it will achieve monopoly power. But HN17[] where a plaintiff remains profitable and in fact has expanded its market share since the allegedly anticompetitive conduct has begun, it faces an uphill battle in proving such a dangerous probability exists. See Springfield Terminal Ry. Co. v. Canadian Pac. Ltd., 133 F.3d 103, 110 (1st Cir. 1997) (rejecting attempt to monopolize claim on basis of plaintiff's strong financial performance).

HN18[] Under our circuit law, attempted monopolization claims are "presumptively implausible" where, as is the case here, "the challenged conduct has been in place for at least two years and the remaining market remains robustly competitive as evidenced by ongoing entry, profitability of rivals, and stability of their aggregate market share." Id. (quoting Areeda & Hovenkamp, 3A Antitrust Law ¶ 807f, at 360-61). That rule applies here. More than six years have passed since the Nestlé PR/Payco merger, and Sterling has been unable to establish any injury to itself or the competitiveness of the market.[7] [7] Given our conclusions, [37] we need not consider the statements of Nestlé PR's officers that Sterling argues evidences Nestlé PR's specific intent to monopolize.

---

We add that there was no abuse of discretion in the district court's striking of untimely sections of Sterling's expert's report. See Macaulay v. Anas, 321 F.3d 45, 51-53 (1st Cir. 2003) (finding no abuse of discretion where district court excluded "supplemental" expert report after close of lengthy discovery period).

IV.

Summary judgment was properly granted. We affirm.

End of Document

LexisNexis®

United States v. Comcast Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

September 1, 2011, Decided; September 1, 2011, Filed

Civil Case No. 11-106 (RJL)

Reporter

808 F. Supp. 2d 145 *; 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98448 ; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,584

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF CALIFORNIA, STATE OF FLORIDA, STATE OF MISSOURI, STATE OF TEXAS, and STATE OF WASHINGTON, Plaintiffs, v. COMCAST CORP., GENERAL ELECTRIC CO., and NBC UNIVERSAL, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Judgment entered by United States v. Comcast Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116381 (D.D.C., Sept. 1, 2011)

Prior History: In re Comcast Corp., 25 F.C.C.R. 2133, 2010 FCC LEXIS 1431 (F.C.C., 2010)

Core Terms

arbitration, public interest, parties, compliance, provisions, violations, Antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Consent Judgments

HN1[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Before entering any consent judgment offered by the United States in an antitrust action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e), a district court must determine whether entry of the judgment is in the public interest. To make that determination, the court shall consider: (A) the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations, provisions for enforcement and modification, duration of relief sought, anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered, whether its terms are ambiguous, and any other competitive considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment that the court deems necessary to a determination of whether the consent judgment is in the public interest; and (B) the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets, upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint including consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of the issues at trial. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(e).

Counsel: [1] For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff: Hillary B. Burchuk, Yvette F. Tarlov, LEAD ATTORNEYS, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Antitrust Division, Washington, DC.

For STATE OF CALIFORNIA, Plaintiff: Jonathan Michael Eisenberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, OFFICE OF THE CALIFORNIA ATTORNEY GENERAL, Antitrust Law Section, Los Angeles, CA.

For STATE OF FLORIDA, Plaintiff: Eli Andrew Friedman, LEAD ATTORNEY, FLORIDA OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, Antitrust Division, Tallahassee, FL.

For STATE OF MISSOURI, Plaintiff: Anne E. Schneider, LEAD ATTORNEY, OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, STATE OF MISSOURI, Jefferson City, MO.

For STATE OF TEXAS, Plaintiff: John Thomas Prud'homme, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL/TX, Austin, TX.

For STATE OF WASHINGTON, Plaintiff: David M. Kerwin, LEAD ATTORNEY, WASHINGTON STATE ATTORNEY GENERAL, Seattle, WA.

For COMCAST CORPORATION, Defendant: Arthur Joseph Burke, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, DAVIS, POLK & WARDWELL, New York, NY; Michael Norman Sohn, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVIS, POLK & WARDWELL, Washington, DC; Joe Sims, Kathryn Marie Fenton, JONES DAY, Washington, DC.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, NBC UNIVERSAL, INC., Defendants: Deborah L Feinstein, Justin P. Hedge, William [2] Joseph Baer, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ARNOLD & PORTER, Washington, DC.

Judges: RICHARD J. LEON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: RICHARD J. LEON

Opinion

[*146] MEMORANDUM ORDER

BACKGROUND

This case is before the Court on the United States' Motion to Enter Final Judgment [Dkt. #25]. In January 2011, plaintiffs United States of America ("the Government") and the States of California, Florida, Missouri, Texas, and Washington ("plaintiffs"), brought a civil anti-trust [1] action to permanently enjoin a proposed joint venture and related transactions, purportedly worth $30 billion, between defendant Comcast Corporation ("Comcast" or "defendant") and General Electric Company ("GE" or "defendant") that would allow Comcast, the largest cable company in the United States, to control, among other [*147] things, popular video programming which included NBC Television Network ("NBC broadcast network") and the cable networks of NBC Universal, Inc. ("NBCU" or "defendant"). Complaint ("Compl."), Jan. 18, 2011 [Dkt. #1]. The Government simultaneously issued a Competitive Impact Statement contending that under the proposed merger, Comcast would obtain majority control of highly valued video programming that would prevent rival video-distribution [3] companies from competing against the post-merger entity. See Competitive Impact Statement at 1, Jan. 18, 2011 [Dkt. #4].

On February 20, 2011, this Court signed a Stipulation and Order [Dkt. #21], pursuant to which the defendants agreed to abide by the provisions of a proposed Final Judgment that would allow the merger to go forward, while also putting into place certain remedies for what the Government alleged was anti-competitive behavior. Defendants also agreed to comply with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act ("APPA"), 15 U.S.C. § 16, including publishing — at defendants' expense — newspaper notice of the merger, a summary of its terms, and a copy of the proposed Final Judgment. Stipulation and Order at ¶¶ 2-3; see also P1. United States' Response to Public Comments, June 6, 2011 [Dkt. #23]. On April 18, 2011, defendants filed a Report and Certification of Compliance with Tunney [4] Act Requirements ("Report") [Dkt. #22], in which they certified compliance with Section 2(g) of the APPA and detailed communications by or on behalf of defendants with the United States regarding the Final Judgment. See Report at 1. On June 6, 2011, the Government filed a Response to Public Comments ("Response") [Dkt. #23] in which it summarized and responded to the eight public comments filed after the sixty-day notice required by the APPA. Resp. at 2. After analyzing the public comments, the United States professed a continued "belie[f] that the proposed Final Judgment will provide an effective and appropriate remedy for the antitrust violations alleged in the Complaint." Id. at 1.

[1] The Government brought suit under Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 25, to "prevent and restrain [defendants] from violating Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18." Compl. ¶ 11. Plaintiff states brought suit under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. Id.

Then, on June 29, 2011, the Government filed a Certificate of Compliance with Provisions of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalty Act [Dkt. #24], wherein it certified compliance with all requirements of APPA Sections 16(b)-(h) and requested that the Court make the necessary public-interest determinations required by 15 U.S.C. § 16(e) and, ultimately, enter the proposed Final Judgment.

This Court held a fairness hearing on July 27, 2011. See Minute Entry, Case 11-cv-106, July 27, 2011. The parties were given [5] the opportunity to present oral argument and to answer the Court's questions. Upon conclusion of the fairness hearing, the Government filed a Supplemental Statement In Support of Entry of the Final Judgment ("Supp. Stmt."), Aug. 5, 2011 [Dkt. #26], in which it further explained the proposed Final Judgment and renewed its request for this Court to enter Final Judgment.

Upon review of the pleadings, the record, and the applicable law, the Court determines that entry of the proposed Final Judgment is in the public interest and therefore GRANTS the Government's Motion for Entry of Final Judgment [Dkt. #25]. However, given a number of potential uncertainties regarding the Final Judgment's implementation, and consistent with this Court's "jurisdiction to issue orders and directions necessary and appropriate to carry out or construe any provision of the Final Judgment and to 'enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions,'" Supp. Stmt. at 6 (quoting Final Judgment § IX), I hereby order that certain future steps, described herein, be [*148] taken for no less than two years to ensure that the public interest continues to be served.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] Before entering any consent judgment [6] offered by the United States under 15 U.S.C. § 16(e), this Court must determine whether entry of the judgment "is in the public interest." To make that determination, the Court shall consider:

> "(A) the competitive impact of such judgment, including termination of alleged violations, provisions for enforcement and modification, duration of relief sought, anticipated effects of alternative remedies actually considered, whether its terms are ambiguous, and any other competitive considerations bearing upon the adequacy of such judgment that the court deems necessary to a determination of whether the consent judgment is in the public interest; and
>
> (B) the impact of entry of such judgment upon competition in the relevant market or markets, upon the public generally and individuals alleging specific injury from the violations set forth in the complaint including consideration of the public benefit, if any, to be derived from a determination of the issues at trial." 15 U.S.C. § 16(e).

ANALYSIS

On July 27, 2011, the Court held a public hearing during which the Government and defendants presented arguments as to why entry of Final Judgment was in the public interest. In essence, both sides relied [7] upon their assessment that the Final Judgment was carefully crafted by all parties to facilitate a merger, consistent with the existing antitrust laws, that carefully protected the public's interest by maintaining the competitive equilibrium of the emerging online-video market.

While asking the parties questions at that hearing, however, I grew increasingly concerned that the Government's non-appealable arbitration mechanism for online video distributors ("OVDs") did not serve the public interest. See, e.g., Fairness Hearing Transcript ("Tr."), July 27, 2011, at 23. Moreover, I was unsure whether the proposed Final Judgment adequately empowered the Department of Justice to enforce the terms of the agreement. See, e.g., id. at 5-6.

Not surprisingly, the Government filed a Supplemental Statement after the hearing in which it described, in detail, the dual-track arbitration mechanism OVDs may use to acquire Comcast and NBCU content under certain conditions. [2] See Supplemental Statement ("Supp. Stmt.") [Dkt. #26]. To start, the Government clarified that OVDs have two options for arbitration: the FCC process, and the new process outlined in the proposed Final Judgment. Id. at 2. Arbitration [8] under the FCC Order, they stressed, is a matter of right, see Supp. Stmt. at 4 (citing FCC Order, App. A, §§ IV.A.3, VII.A, VII.C), and is appealable, whereas arbitration under the proposed Final Judgment is not. [3] Id. at 4-5. And although an OVD which is dissatisfied with its result in an FCC arbitration may not then take a second bite at the apple by requesting arbitration under the proposed Final Judgment, an OVD whose requested arbitration under the proposed [*149] Final Judgment is denied [4] by the Department of Justice may still proceed as a matter of right with arbitration under the FCC Order. See Supp. Stmt. at 5.

Of course, the Government contends that because the "FCC is the expert communications industry regulator . . . OVD requests will ordinarily proceed through the FCC [arbitration] process." Supp. Stmt. at 5; see also id. at 2. Even if this is true, however, the Government concedes that there is still "some uncertainty about the ability of OVDs to obtain timely relief under the FCC Order." Id. at 5. Thus, it remains to be seen how well the FCC arbitration process will work for OVDs, and how many of the OVDs who request — and are denied — arbitration under the new streamlined approached created by the proposed Final Judgment will pursue relief under the FCC Order.

Moreover, because of the way the Final Judgment is structured, the Government's ability to "enforce" the Final Judgment, and, frankly, this Court's ability to oversee it, are, to say the least, limited. Indeed, notwithstanding [10] the fact that the Final Judgment vests the Government with the "responsibility" to investigate and report to the Court the complaint of an OVD alleging "fraud or malfeasance" in the proposed arbitration process, Supp. Stmt. 6 (citing Final Judgment § IX); see also Tr. at 5-6, 8-9, the Government, at the public hearing, freely admitted that "[w]e can't enforce this decree." Tr. at 11:14. In addition, it is undisputed that neither the FCC nor the Department of Justice has any experience yet in administering either course of arbitration in the online-video-distribution context. See, e.g., Supp. Stmt. at 5; see also Tr. at 10:8 (Government's admission that "this is a nascent market" and that "[t]hese are nascent competitors"). And despite the Government's assurances that "this Court retains jurisdiction to issue orders and directions necessary and appropriate to carry out or construe any provision of the Final Judgment," Supp. Stmt. at 6, and "to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions," id. (citing Final Judgment § IX), I am not completely certain that these safeguards, alone, will sufficiently protect the public interest in the years ahead.

---

[2] The Government's Supplemental Statement also offers a helpful and satisfactory explanation of the logistics and benefits of "baseball-style" arbitration. See Supp. Stmt. at 3 n.4.

[3] The Government contends, however, that arbitration under the proposed Final Judgment offers a valuable tradeoff: expedited and final resolution. See, e.g., Supp. Stmt. at 2, 5-6.

[4] Under the arbitration proposed in the Final Judgment, an OVD must first seek permission from the United States to arbitrate under this "alternative" yet "complementary" mechanism. Supp. Stmt. at 4-5 (citing Proposed Final [9] Judgment § VII.C). If the Government allows arbitration to move forward, any arbitration award is non-appealable. Id. at 4. If the Government denies an OVD's request to arbitrate, the OVD may still initiate arbitration under the FCC Order, which is available as a matter of right and is appealable. Id. at 3-4.

Accordingly, since neither [11] the Court nor the parties has a crystal ball to forecast how this Final Judgment, along with its arbitration mechanisms, will actually function, see Tr. at 22, I believe that certain additional steps are necessary to monitor implementation of the Final Judgment to ensure that it satisfies the public-interest requirement mandated by statute. See 15 U.S.C. § 16(e). Therefore, pursuant to the authority Section IX of the Final Judgment vests in this Court, and to ensure that the Final Judgment is, and continues to be, in the public interest, it is hereby ORDERED that for no less than two years, the parties shall create and maintain a report which details (a) how many OVDs initiate arbitration under the FCC Order and the result of those arbitrations; (b) how many times OVDs appeal the result of their arbitration, and to which judicial bodies, if any, they appeal; (c) how many OVDs seek permission from the Department [*150] of Justice to arbitrate under the Final Judgment and how many are granted permission; and (d) how many times the United States denies an OVD's request to initiate arbitration under the Final Judgment, and how many of those denied subsequently elect to initiate arbitration under [12] the FCC Order. It is further

ORDERED that the United States shall prepare this report and share it with all parties in advance of a yearly hearing before this Court; and it is further ORDERED that the parties shall convene for an annual hearing with this Court to explain and discuss the report and any other non-arbitration-related issues that may have arisen during the previous year to ensure that the Final Judgment does, and continues to, satisfy the public interest.

SO ORDERED.

/s/ Richard J. Leon

RICHARD J. LEON

United States District Judge

End of Document

LexisNexis

United States v. Comcast Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Columbia

September 1, 2011, Decided; September 1, 2011, Filed

CASE: 1:11-cv-00106

Reporter
2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116381 *; 2011-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P77,585; 2011 WL 5402137

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF CALIFORNIA, STATE OF FLORIDA, STATE OF MISSOURI, STATE OF TEXAS, and STATE OF WASHINGTON, Plaintiffs, v. COMCAST CORP., GENERAL ELECTRIC CO., and NBC UNIVERSAL, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Modified by, Judgment entered by United States v. Comcast Corp., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132001 (D.D.C., July 31, 2013)

Prior History: United States v. Comcast Corp., 808 F. Supp. 2d 145, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98448 (D.D.C., 2011)

Core Terms

Programming, Video, Network, arbitration, Broadcast, Cable, Affiliate, terms, Comparable, provisions, consumers, negotiate, local television station, Channel, Offers, documents, business day, distribute, commence, furnish, rights, joint venture, conditions, commercial arbitration, television, receives, Communications, retransmission, Partnerships, Subsidiaries

Counsel: [*1] For UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff: Hillary B. Burchuk, Yvette F. Tarlov, LEAD ATTORNEYS, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Antitrust Division, Washington, DC.

For STATE OF CALIFORNIA, Plaintiff: Jonathan Michael Eisenberg, LEAD ATTORNEY, OFFICE OF THE CALIFORNIA ATTORNEY GENERAL, Antitrust Law Section, Los Angeles, CA.

For STATE OF FLORIDA, Plaintiff: Eli Andrew Friedman, LEAD ATTORNEY, FLORIDA OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, Antitrust Division, Tallahassee, FL.

For STATE OF MISSOURI, Plaintiff: Anne E. Schneider, LEAD ATTORNEY, OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, STATE OF MISSOURI, Jefferson City, MO.

For STATE OF TEXAS, Plaintiff: John Thomas Prud'homme, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL/TX, Austin, TX.

For STATE OF WASHINGTON, Plaintiff: David M. Kerwin, LEAD ATTORNEY, WASHINGTON STATE ATTORNEY GENERAL, Seattle, WA.

For COMCAST CORPORATION, Defendant: Arthur Joseph Burke, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, DAVIS, POLK & WARDWELL, New York, NY; Michael Norman Sohn, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVIS, POLK & WARDWELL, Washington, DC; Joe Sims, Kathryn Marie Fenton, JONES DAY, Washington, DC.

For GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, NBC UNIVERSAL, INC., Defendants: Deborah L Feinstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, ARNOLD [*2] & PORTER, Washington, DC; Justin P. Hedge, William Joseph Baer, LEAD ATTORNEYS, ARNOLD & PORTER LLP, Washington, DC.

Judges: Richard J. Leon, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Richard J. Leon

Opinion

FINAL JUDGMENT

WHEREAS, Plaintiffs, the United States of America and the States of California, Florida, Missouri, Texas, and Washington, filed their Complaint on January 18, 2011, alleging that Defendants propose to enter into a joint venture that will empower Defendant Comcast Corporation to block competition from video programming distribution competitors in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 18, and Plaintiffs and Defendants, by their respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law, and without this Final Judgment constituting any evidence against or admission by any party regarding any issue of fact or law;

AND WHEREAS, Defendants agree to be bound by the provisions of this Final Judgment pending its approval by the Court;

AND WHEREAS, Plaintiffs require Defendants to agree to undertake certain actions and refrain from certain conduct for the purpose of remedying the loss of competition alleged [*3] in the Complaint;

AND WHEREAS, Defendants have represented to the United States that the actions and conduct restrictions can and will be undertaken and that Defendants will later raise no claim of hardship or difficulty as grounds for asking the Court to modify any of the provisions contained below;

NOW THEREFORE, before any testimony is taken, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law, and upon consent of Defendants, it is ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED:

I. JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of and each of the parties to this action. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against Defendants under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 18.

II. DEFINITIONS

As used in this Final Judgment:

A. "AAA" means the American Arbitration Association.

B. "Affiliated" means directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with a Person.

C. "Broadcast Network" means The Walt Disney Company (ABC), CBS Inc. (CBS), News Corporation (FOX), NBCU (NBC and Telemundo), or any other Person that provides live or recorded Video Programming for broadcast over a group of local television stations.

D. "Broadcast [*4] Network Peer" means (1) CBS Inc. (CBS), News Corporation (FOX), or The Walt Disney Company (ABC); or (2) any of the top four Broadcast Networks, measured by the total annual net revenue earned by the Broadcast Network from the broadcast of live or recorded Video Programming over a group of local television stations. Defendants are not Broadcast Network Peers, even if they are one of the top four Broadcast Networks.

E. "Business Model" means the primary method by which Video Programming is monetized (e.g., ad-supported, subscription without ads, subscription with ads, electronic sell through, or pay per view/transactional video on demand).

F. "Cable Programmer" means Time Warner, Inc., The Walt Disney Company, News Corporation, Viacom, Inc., NBCU, or any other Person that provides Video Programming for distribution through MVPDs. A Person that provides Video Programming to MVPDs solely as a Broadcast Network or as a Network Affiliate, O&O, or local television station operating within its licensed territory is not a Cable Programmer.

G. "Cable Programmer Peer" means (1) News Corporation, Time Warner, Inc., Viacom, Inc., or The Walt Disney Company; or (2) any of the top five Cable Programmers, [*5] measured by the total annual net revenue earned by the Cable Programmer from its cable networks, as reported by SNL Kagan (or another source commonly relied upon in the television industry), excluding revenues earned from regional sports networks. Defendants are not Cable Programmer Peers, even if they are one of the top five Cable Programmers.

H. "Comcast" means Comcast Corporation, a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal place of business in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, its successors and assigns, and its Subsidiaries (whether partially or wholly owned), divisions, groups, Partnerships, and Joint Ventures, and their directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees.

I. "Defendants" means Comcast, General Electric, and NBCU, acting individually or collectively, as appropriate. Where the Final Judgment imposes an obligation to engage in or refrain from engaging in certain conduct, that obligation shall apply to each Defendant individually and to any Joint Venture established by any two or more Defendants.

J. "Department of Justice" means the United States Department of Justice Antitrust Division.

K. "Experimental Deal" means an agreement between an OVD and a Peer for a term of [*6] six months or less.

L. "Film" means a feature-length motion picture that has been theatrically released.

M. "Final Offer" means a proposed contract identifying the Video Programming Defendants are to provide to OVDs pursuant to Section IV.A or IV.B of this Final Judgment and containing the proposed price, terms, and conditions on which Defendants will provide that Video Programming.

N. "General Electric" means General Electric Company, a New York corporation with its principal place of business in Fairfield, Connecticut, its successors and assigns, and its Subsidiaries (whether partially or wholly owned), divisions, groups, Partnerships, and Joint Ventures, and their directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees.

O. "Hulu" means Hulu, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company with its headquarters in Los Angeles, California, its successors and assigns, and its Subsidiaries (whether partially or wholly owned), divisions, groups, Partnerships, and Joint Ventures, and their directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees.

P. "Internet Access Service" means a mass-market retail communications service by wire or radio that provides the capability to transmit data to and receive data [*7] from all or substantially all Internet endpoints, including any capabilities that are incidental to and enable the operation of the communications service, but excluding dial-up Internet access service. Internet Access Service does not include virtual private network services, content delivery network services, multichannel video programming services, hosting or data storage services, or Internet backbone services (if those services are separate from Internet Access Services).

Q. "MVPD" means a multichannel video programming distributor as that term is defined on the date of entry of this Final Judgment in 47 C.F.R. § 76.1200(b).

R. "NBCU" means NBC Universal, Inc., a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in New York, New York, its successors and assigns, and its Subsidiaries (whether partially or wholly owned), divisions, groups, Partnerships, and Joint Ventures, and their directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees.

S. "Network Affiliate" means a local television station that broadcasts some or all of the Video Programming of Defendants' Broadcast Networks (i.e., [*8] NBC or Telemundo). A Network Affiliate is owned and operated by Persons other than Defendants.

T. "O&O" means a local television station owned and operated by Defendants that broadcasts the Video Programming of one of Defendants' Broadcast Networks (i.e., NBC or Telemundo).

U. "OVD" means any Person that distributes Video Programming in the United States by means of the Internet or another IP-based transmission path provided by a Person other than the OVD. This definition (1) includes an MVPD that offers Video Programming by means of the Internet or another IP-based transmission path outside its MVPD footprint as a service separate and independent of an MVPD subscription; and (2) excludes an MVPD that offers Video Programming by means of the Internet or another IP-based transmission path to homes inside its MVPD footprint as a component of an MVPD subscription.

V. "Peer" means any Broadcast Network Peer, Cable Programmer Peer, or Production Studio Peer, its successors, assigns, and any Person that is managed or controlled by any Broadcast Network Peer, Cable Programmer Peer, or Production Studio Peer. Defendants are not Peers.

W. "Person" means any natural person, corporation, company, [*9] partnership, joint venture, firm, association, proprietorship, agency, board, authority, commission, office, or other business or legal entity, whether private or governmental.

X. "Plaintiff States" means the States of California, Florida, Missouri, Texas, and Washington.

Y. "Production Studio" means Time Warner, Inc. (Warner Bros. Television and Warner Bros. Pictures), News Corporation (20th Century Fox Television and 20th Century Fox), Viacom, Inc. (Viacom's television production subsidiaries and Paramount Pictures), Sony Corporation of America (Sony Pictures Television and Sony Pictures Entertainment), The Walt Disney Company (Disney-ABC Studios and the Walt Disney Motion Pictures Group), NBCU (Universal Pictures, Focus Films, and Universal Studios), and any other Person that produces Video Programming for distribution through Broadcast Networks or Cable Programmers.

Z. "Production Studio Peer" means (1) News Corporation, Viacom, Inc., Sony Corporation of America, Time Warner, Inc., or The Walt Disney Company; or (2) any of the top six Production Studios, measured by the total annual net revenue earned by the Production Studio from the sale or licensing of Video Programming. Defendants [*10] are not Production Studio Peers, even if they are one of the top six Production Studios.

AA. "Qualified OVD" means any OVD that has an agreement with a Peer for the license of Video Programming to the OVD (other than an agreement under which an OVD licenses only short programming segments or clips from the Peer), where the OVD is not Affiliated with the Peer.

BB. "Specialized Service" means any service provided over the same last-mile facilities used to deliver Internet Access Service other than (1) Internet Access Services, (2) services regulated either as telecommunications services under Title II of the Communications Act or as MVPD services under Title VI of the Communications Act, or (3) Defendants' existing VoIP telephony service.

CC. "Subsidiary," "Partnership," and "Joint Venture" refer to any Person in which there is partial (25 percent or more) or total ownership or control between the specified Person and any other Person.

DD. "Value" means the economic value of Video Programming based on, among other factors, the Video Programming's ratings (as measured by The Nielsen Company or other Person commonly relied upon in the television industry for television ratings), affiliate [*11] fees, advertising revenues, and the time elapsed since the Video Programming was first distributed to consumers by a Broadcast Network or Cable Programmer.

EE. "Video Programming" means programming provided by, or generally considered comparable to programming provided by, a Broadcast Network or Cable Programmer, regardless of the medium or method used for distribution, and includes programming prescheduled by the programming provider (also known as scheduled programming or a linear feed); programming offered to viewers on an on-demand, point-to-point basis (also known as video on demand); pay per view or transactional video on demand; short programming segments related to other full-length programming (also known as clips); programming that includes multiple video sources (also known as feeds, including camera angles); programming that includes video in different qualities or formats (including high-definition and 3D); and Films for which a year or more has elapsed since their theatrical release. For purposes of this Final Judgment, Video Programming shall not include programming over which General Electric possesses ownership or control that is unrelated to its ownership interest [*12] in NBCU.

III. APPLICABILITY

This Final Judgment applies to Defendants and all other Persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV. REQUIRED CONDUCT

Provision of Economically Equivalent Video Programming Terms to OVDs

A. At the request of any OVD, Defendants shall provide, for distribution to consumers through a linear feed (plus any associated video-on-demand rights), all Video Programming they provide to any MVPD in the United States with more than one million subscribers, on terms that are Economically Equivalent to the terms on which Defendants provide Video Programming to that MVPD.

For purposes of this Section IV.A:

1. "Economically Equivalent" means the price, terms, and conditions that, in the aggregate, reasonably approximate those on which Defendants provide Video Programming to an MVPD, and shall take account of, among other things, any difference in advertising revenues earned by Defendants through OVD distribution and those earned through MVPD distribution; any limitation of Defendants' legal rights to provide Video Programming as a linear feed over the Internet or other IP-based [*13] transmission path; any generally applicable, market-based requirements regarding minimum subscriber and penetration rates; and any other evidence concerning differences in revenues earned by Defendants in connection with the provision of Video Programming to the OVD rather than to an MVPD.

2. Defendants shall provide to any requesting OVD all Video Programming subject to Defendants' management or control and all Video Programming, including Video Programming owned by another Person, over which Defendants possess the power or authority to negotiate content licenses.

3. At the request of the OVD, Defendants shall provide any bundle of channels, and all quality formats (e.g., high definition, 3D) and video-on-demand rights that Defendants provide to any MVPD in the United States with more than one million subscribers.

4. Subject to other provisions of this Section IV.A, Defendants shall not apply to an OVD any terms or conditions contained in Defendants' agreements with MVPDs that would not be technically or economically practicable if applied generally to Video Programming distributed by OVDs (e.g., that the OVD distribute Video Programming over an MVPD system).

5. In any agreement they [*14] enter into with an OVD under this Section IV.A, Defendants may require that the OVD not distribute Defendants' Video Programming to consumers (a) if Defendants' Video Programming constitutes more than 45 percent of the OVD's Video Programming (measured by hours available to subscribers), and (b) until at least one Peer has agreed to provide Video Programming to the OVD (including, if the Defendants agree to provide NBC Video Programming to the OVD, at least one Broadcast Network Peer).

6. Defendants may condition their provision of Video Programming to an OVD under this Section IV.A on the OVD's (a) agreement not to distribute the Video Programming to consumers through a website promoting or communicating the availability or accessibility of pornography, gambling, or unlawful activities; (b) reasonable demonstration of its ability to meet its financial obligations; (c) demonstration of its ability to satisfy reasonable quality and technical requirements for the display and secure protection of Defendants' Video Programming; (d) agreement to limit the distribution of an O&O's Video Programming linear feed solely to that O&O's designated market area or "DMA"; or (e) agreement to limit [*15] the distribution of Defendants' Video Programming to the territory of the United States.

Provision of Comparable Video Programming to OVDs

B. At the request of any Qualified OVD, Defendants shall provide Comparable Video Programming to the Qualified OVD on terms that are Economically Equivalent to the price, terms, and conditions on which the Qualified OVD receives Video Programming from a Peer.

For purposes of this Section IV.B:

1. "Economically Equivalent" means price, terms, and conditions that, in the aggregate, reasonably approximate those on which the Peer provides Video Programming to the Qualified OVD, and shall take account of, among other things, any difference between the Value of the Video Programming the Qualified OVD seeks from Defendants and the Value of the Video Programming it receives from a Peer.

2. "Comparable" Video Programming means Defendants' Video Programming that is reasonably similar in kind and amount to the Video Programming provided by the Peer, considering the volume (i.e., number of channels or shows) of Video Programming and its Value.

3. The following, among other types of Video Programming, are not Comparable:

a. first-day Video Programming and Video Programming [*16] distributed after Defendants' first-day distribution of that Video Programming to consumers;

b. repeat, prior-season Video Programming and original, first-run Video Programming;

c. non-sports Video Programming and sports Video Programming;

d. broadcast Video Programming and cable Video Programming;

e. Video Programming directed to children and Video Programming not directed to children;

f. local news Video Programming and Video Programming that is not local news;

g. Film and non-Film Video Programming; and

h. Film between one and five years from initial distribution and Film over five years from initial distribution.

4. In any agreement they enter into with an OVD under this Section IV.B, Defendants shall not be required to include exclusivity provisions for Comparable Video Programming even if the Qualified OVD's Peer agreement includes exclusivity provisions, provided that the price, terms, and conditions on which Defendants provide Video Programming to the Qualified OVD shall be adjusted so that, in the aggregate, they reasonably approximate the price, terms, and conditions on which the Peer provides Video Programming to the Qualified OVD.

5. If a Qualified OVD receives Video Programming [*17] from two or more Peers in any single Peer category (i.e., Broadcast Network Peers, Cable Programmer Peers, or Production Studio Peers) and pursuant to the same Business Model, Defendants shall provide, pursuant to this Section IV.B, Video Programming Comparable to the Video Programming of one Peer in that category selected by the Qualified OVD. If a Qualified OVD receives Video Programming from a Peer in two or more Peer categories, Defendants shall provide Video Programming Comparable to the Peer in both or all categories. If a Qualified OVD receives Video Programming from two or more Peers in the same Peer category but pursuant to different Business Models, Defendants shall provide Video Programming Comparable to each Peer pursuant to the Business Model specified in each Peer contract.

6. In responding to a request from a Qualified OVD to which Defendants have provided Video Programming under this Section IV.B, Defendants shall not be required to provide additional Video Programming unless the Qualified OVD enters into a Video Programming agreement with (a) a Peer in a different Peer category (i.e., Broadcast Network Peers, Cable Programmer Peers, or Production Studio Peers), (b) [*18] the same Peer under a different Business Model, or (c) the same Peer for additional Video Programming pursuant to the same Business Model.

7. At the request of an OVD with which Defendants have an agreement to provide Video Programming that subsequently becomes a Qualified OVD, Defendants shall provide additional or different Video Programming so the Video Programming Defendants provide to the Qualified OVD (including any Video Programming the Defendants have previously agreed to provide to the OVD) is Comparable to that which the Qualified OVD receives from the Peer.

8. Defendants may require the Qualified OVD to distribute Video Programming obtained from Defendants pursuant to the Business Model under which the Qualified OVD distributes the Peer's Video Programming.

9. The number of Experimental Deals to which Defendants, at the request of Qualified OVDs, must respond by providing Comparable Video Programming is limited to the maximum number of Experimental Deals any single Peer has entered into with OVDs.

10. If a Cable Programmer Peer provides substantially all of its cable channels to a Qualified OVD for distribution to consumers through a linear feed, Defendants may meet their obligation [*19] under this Section IV.B to provide Comparable Video Programming by providing to the Qualified OVD and requiring the Qualified OVD to distribute substantially all of Defendants' channels.

OVD Rights to Commercial Arbitration

C. If, after negotiations, in which Defendants shall participate in good faith and with reasonable diligence, Defendants and any OVD fail to agree on appropriate Economically Equivalent terms on which Defendants must provide Video Programming under Sections IV.A or IV.B of this Final Judgment or on Comparable Video Programming under Section IV.B of this Final Judgment, the OVD may apply to the Department of Justice (but not to the Plaintiff States) for permission to submit its dispute with Defendants to commercial arbitration in accordance with Section VII of this Final Judgment. For so long as commercial arbitration is available for the resolution of such disputes in a timely manner under the Federal Communications Commission's rules and orders, the Department of Justice will ordinarily defer to the Federal Communications Commission's commercial arbitration process to resolve such disputes; provided that the Department of Justice reserves the right, in its sole discretion, [*20] to permit arbitration under this Final Judgment to advance the competitive objectives of this Final Judgment. Nothing in this Section IV.C shall limit the right of the United States to apply to this Court, pursuant to Section IX of this Final Judgment, either before or in place of commercial arbitration under Section VII of this Final Judgment, for an order enforcing Defendants' compliance or punishing their noncompliance with their obligations under Sections IV.A and IV.B of this Final Judgment.

Disposition of Control Over Hulu

D. Within ten days after entry of this Final Judgment, Defendants shall (1) delegate any voting and other rights they hold pursuant to their ownership interest in Hulu in a manner that directs and authorizes Hulu to cast any votes related to such ownership interest in an amount and manner proportional to the vote of all other votes cast by other Hulu owners; and (2) relinquish any veto right or other right to influence, control, or participate in the governance or management of Hulu; provided that such delegation and relinquishment shall terminate upon Defendants' complete divestiture of their ownership interests in Hulu.

E. Defendants shall not read, receive, [*21] obtain, or attempt to obtain any confidential or competitively sensitive information concerning Hulu or influence, interfere, or attempt to influence or interfere in the management or operation of Hulu. Notwithstanding the foregoing, Defendants may request and receive from Hulu regularly prepared, aggregated financial statements and information reasonably necessary for Defendants to exercise their rights to purchase advertising inventory from Hulu and to comply with their obligations under Section IV.G of this Final Judgment.

F. Defendants shall not obtain or acquire any ownership interest in Hulu beyond that which it possessed on January 1, 2011. Nothing in this Section IV.F shall prohibit Defendants from receiving a proportional or less than proportional distribution of Hulu equity securities in connection with any future conversion of Hulu into a corporation, provided that Defendants' economic share in Hulu may not increase in connection with such distribution.

G. Defendants shall continue to provide Video Programming to Hulu of a type, quantity, ratings, and quality comparable to that of the Broadcast Network owner of Hulu providing the greatest quantity of Video Programming to Hulu. [*22] Provided that the other current Broadcast Network owners of Hulu renew their agreements with Hulu, Defendants also either shall continue to provide Video Programming to Hulu on substantially the same terms and conditions as were in place on January 1, 2011, or shall enter into agreements with Hulu on substantially the same terms and conditions as those of the Broadcast Network owner whose renewed agreement is the most economically advantageous to Hulu.

Clear Delineation of Rights

H. Any agreement Defendants enter into with any Production Studio concerning Defendants' distribution of the Production Studio's Video Programming shall include, unless inconsistent with common and reasonable industry practice and subject to any agreements not prohibited by Section V.B of this Final Judgment, either (1) an express grant by the Production Studio to Defendants of the right to provide the Video Programming to OVDs, or (2) an express retention of that right by the Production Studio.

Document Retention and Disclosures

I. Comcast and NBCU shall furnish to the Department of Justice and the Plaintiff States quarterly electronic copies of any communications with any MVPD, OVD, Broadcast Network, Cable [*23] Programmer, or Production Studio containing allegations of Defendants' noncompliance with any provision of this Final Judgment.

J. Comcast and NBCU shall collect and maintain one copy of each of the following agreements, currently in effect or established after entry of this Final Judgment:

1. each affiliation agreement between Defendants and any Network Affiliate;

2. each agreement under which a Network Affiliate authorizes Defendants to negotiate on its behalf for carriage or retransmission on MVPDs;

3. each agreement for the carriage or retransmission of an O&O's or a Network Affiliate's (to the extent Defendants possess the power or authority to negotiate on behalf of the Network Affiliate) Video Programming on an MVPD; and

4. each syndication agreement under which Defendants provide Video Programming to an O&O or Network Affiliate for distribution to consumers.

K. Comcast and NBCU shall collect and maintain each document in their possession, custody, or control discussing an O&O's or a Network Affiliate's denial or threat to deny Video Programming to an MVPD or OVD. Defendants shall notify the Department of Justice and the Plaintiff States within 30 days of learning that an O&O or a [*24] Network Affiliate has denied or threatened to deny Video Programming to any MVPD or OVD.

L. Comcast and NBCU shall collect and maintain documents sufficient to show the compensation each O&O and each Network Affiliate (about which Comcast or NBCU possesses information) receives from any MVPD or OVD.

M. Comcast and NBCU shall collect and maintain complete copies of any final agreement or unsigned but operative agreement (1) under which Defendants provide Video Programming (other than short programming segments or clips) to any MVPD or OVD, and (2) for Defendants' carriage or retransmission on their MVPD of Video Programming from a Network Affiliate, a local television station, a Broadcast Network, or a Cable Programmer. For any ongoing negotiations that have not yet produced a final or operative agreement, Comcast and NBCU shall also collect and maintain electronic copies of the most recent offer made to Defendants by an MVPD or OVD seeking Video Programming or by a Network Affiliate, local television station, Broadcast Network, or Cable Programmer seeking carriage or retransmission on Defendants' MVPD, and Defendants' most recent response or offer to any such Persons.

N. Comcast and NBCU [*25] shall identify for the Department of Justice and the Plaintiff States semiannually

1. the name of each Person that in writing has requested or submitted to Defendants a contractual offer for Video Programming (other than short programming segments or clips) for distribution to consumers, the date of such Person's most recent written request or contractual offer, and the date of Defendants' most recent response or offer to such Person; and

2. the name of each Person that in writing has requested or submitted a contractual offer for carriage or retransmission of the Person's Video Programming on Defendants' MVPD, the date of such Person's most recent written request or contractual offer, and the date of Defendants' most recent response or offer to such Person.

O. Comcast and NBCU shall collect and maintain each document sent to or received from General Electric relating to (1) Defendants' provision of Video Programming to any MVPD or OVD, (2) any OVD's distribution of any Person's Video Programming to consumers, (3) carriage or retransmission of any Person's Video Programming on Defendants' MVPD, or (4) Defendants' compliance or noncompliance with the terms of this Final Judgment.

V. PROHIBITED [*26] CONDUCT

Discrimination and Retaliation

A. Defendants shall not discriminate against, retaliate against, or punish (1) any Broadcast Network, Cable Programmer, Production Studio, local television station, or Network Affiliate for providing Video Programming to any MVPD or OVD, or (2) any MVPD or OVD (i) for obtaining Video Programming from any Broadcast Network, Cable Programmer, Production Studio, local television station, or Network Affiliate, (ii) for invoking any provisions of this Final Judgment, (iii) for invoking the provisions of any rules or orders concerning Video Programming adopted by the Federal Communications Commission, or (iv) for furnishing information to the United States or the Plaintiff States concerning Defendants' compliance or noncompliance with this Final Judgment.

Contractual Provisions

B. Defendants shall not enter into any agreement pursuant to which Defendants provide Video Programming to any Person in which Defendants forbid, limit, or create economic incentives to limit the distribution of such Video Programming through OVDs, provided that, nothing in this Section V.B shall prohibit Defendants from entering into agreements consistent with common and reasonable [*27] industry practice. Evidence relevant to determining common and reasonable industry practice may include, among other things, Defendants' contracting practices prior to December 3, 2009, and the contracting practices of Defendants' Peers. Notwithstanding any other provision in this Section V.B, in providing Comparable Video Programming to a Qualified OVD under Section IV.B of this Final Judgment, Defendants may include exclusivity provisions only to the extent those provisions are no broader than any exclusivity provisions in the Qualified OVD's agreement with a Peer.

C. Defendants shall not enter into or enforce any agreement for Defendants' carriage or retransmission on their MVPD of Video Programming from a local television station, Network Affiliate, Broadcast Network, or Cable Programmer under which Defendants forbid, limit, or create incentives to limit the local television station's, Network Affiliate's, Broadcast Network's, or Cable Programmer's provision of its Video Programming to one or more OVDs, provided that, nothing in this Section V.C shall prohibit Defendants from

1. entering into and enforcing an agreement under which Defendants discourage or prohibit a local television [*28] station, Network Affiliate, Broadcast Network, or Cable Programmer from making Video Programming for which Defendants pay available to consumers for free over the Internet within the first 30 days after Defendants first distribute the Video Programming to consumers;

2. entering into and enforcing an agreement under which the local television station, Network Affiliate, Broadcast Network, or Cable Programmer provides Video Programming exclusively to Defendants, and to no other MVPD or OVD, for a period of time of not greater than 14 days; or

3. entering into and enforcing an agreement which requires that Defendants are treated in material parity with other similarly situated MVPDs, except to the extent application of other MVPDs' terms would be inconsistent with the purpose of this Final Judgment.

Control or Influence Over Other Persons

D. Except as permitted by Section V.B of this Final Judgment, Defendants shall not require, encourage, unduly influence, or provide incentives to any local television station or Network Affiliate to

1. deny Video Programming to (a) any MVPD that provides Video Programming to consumers in any zip code in which Comcast also provides Video Programming to consumers [*29] or (b) any OVD; or

2. provide Video Programming on terms that exceed its Value.

E. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Final Judgment, including the definitions of "Defendant," "Comcast," "NBCU," "General Electric," "Subsidiary," "Partnership," or "Joint Venture," unless Comcast, NBCU, or General Electric possesses or acquires control over The Weather Channel, TV One, FearNet, the Pittsburgh Cable News Channel, or Hulu, or the right or ability to negotiate for any of those Persons or to influence negotiations for the provision of any such Person's Video Programming to MVPDs or OVDs, such Person is not a Defendant subject to the obligations of this Final Judgment.

F. Defendants shall not exercise any rights under any existing management or operating agreement with The Weather Channel to participate in negotiations for the provision of any of The Weather Channel's Video Programming to any MVPD or OVD, to advise The Weather Channel concerning any such negotiations, or to approve or obtain any information (other than aggregated financial reports) about any agreement between The Weather Channel and any MVPD or OVD. If, in the future, Defendants acquire the right to negotiate for The [*30] Weather Channel or to exercise any control or influence over The Weather Channel's negotiation of agreements with MVPDs or OVDs, Defendants shall provide The Weather Channel Video Programming to OVDs when required to do so under Sections IV.A or IV.B of this Final Judgment.

Practices Concerning Comcast's Internet Facilities

G. Comcast shall abide by the following restrictions on the management and operation of its Internet facilities:

1. Comcast, insofar as it is engaged in the provision of Internet Access Service, shall not unreasonably discriminate in transmitting lawful network traffic over a consumer's Internet Access Service. Reasonable network management shall not constitute unreasonable discrimination. A network management practice is reasonable if it is appropriate and tailored to achieving a legitimate network management purpose, taking into account the particular network architecture and technology of the Internet Access Service.

2. If Comcast offers consumers Internet Access Service under a package that includes caps, tiers, metering, or other usage-based pricing, it shall not measure, count, or otherwise treat Defendants' affiliated network traffic differently from unaffiliated [*31] network traffic. Comcast shall not prioritize Defendants' Video Programming or other content over other Persons' Video Programming or other content.

3. Comcast shall not offer a Specialized Service that is substantially or entirely comprised of Defendants' affiliated content.

4. If Comcast offers any Specialized Service that makes content from one or more third parties available to (or that otherwise enables the exchange of network traffic between one or more third parties and) its subscribers, Comcast shall allow any other comparable Person to be included in a similar Specialized Service on a nondiscriminatory basis.

5. Comcast shall offer Internet Access Service that is sufficiently provisioned to ensure, in DOCSIS 3.0 or better markets, that an Internet Access Service subscriber can typically achieve download speeds of at least 12 megabits per second. The United States or Defendants may petition this Court, based upon a showing that comparable Internet Access Service providers (e.g., Persons using hybrid fiber-coax technology to provide service on a mass-market scale) have generally increased or decreased the speed of their services after the entry of this Final Judgment, to modify [*32] Comcast's required download speeds. This Section V.G does not restrict Comcast's ability to impose byte caps or consumption-based billing, subject to the other provisions of this Final Judgment.

6. Nothing in this Section V.G

a. supersedes any obligation or authorization Comcast may have to address the needs of emergency communications or law enforcement, public safety, or national security authorities, consistent with or as permitted by applicable law, or limits Comcast's ability to do so; or

b. prohibits reasonable efforts by Comcast to address copyright infringement or other unlawful activity.

VI. PERMITTED CONDUCT

Nothing in this Final Judgment prohibits Defendants from refusing to provide to any MVPD or OVD any Video Programming (1) for which Defendants do not possess copyright rights; (2) not subject to Defendants' management or control or over which Defendants do not possess the power or authority to negotiate content licenses; or (3) the provision of which would require Defendants' to breach any contract not prohibited by Sections V.B or V.C of this Final Judgment.

VII. ARBITRATION

A. Defendants shall negotiate in good faith and with reasonable diligence to provide Video Programming [*33] sought by an OVD pursuant to Sections IV.A and IV.B of this Final Judgment and, upon demand by an OVD approved by the Department of Justice pursuant to Section IV.C of this Final Judgment, shall participate in commercial arbitration in accordance with the procedures herein.

B. Defendants and an OVD may, by agreement, modify any time periods specified in this Section VII.

C. Any OVD seeking to invoke commercial arbitration under this Final Judgment must, pursuant to Section IV.C of this Final Judgment, apply to the Department of Justice for permission to do so. If the Department of Justice determines the commercial arbitration should proceed, the OVD shall furnish a written notice to Defendants and the Department of Justice expressly (1) waiving all rights to invoke any dispute resolution process under Federal Communications Commission orders and rules to resolve a dispute with Defendants concerning the same Video Programming; and (2) stating that the OVD consents to be bound by the terms in the Final Offer selected by the arbitrator. Arbitration under this Final Judgment is not available if a dispute between an OVD and Defendants concerning the same Video Programming is the subject of [*34] any Federal Communications Commission dispute resolution process. Defendants shall not (a) commence arbitration of any dispute under the arbitration procedures contained in this Final Judgment, or (b) upon receipt of the notice from the OVD that it intends to commence arbitration under this Final Judgment, commence any Federal Communications Commission dispute resolution process to resolve the same dispute with the OVD.

D. Arbitration pursuant to this Final Judgment shall be conducted in accordance with the AAA's Commercial Arbitration Rules and Expedited Procedures, except where inconsistent with specific procedures prescribed by this Final Judgment. As described below in Sections VII.P and VII.Q, the arbitrator shall select the Final Offer of either the OVD or the Defendants and may not alter, or request or demand alteration of, any terms of those Final Offers. The decision of the arbitrator shall be binding on the parties, and Defendants shall abide by the arbitrator's decision.

E. The AAA, in consultation with the United States, shall assemble a list of potential arbitrators, to be furnished to the OVD and Defendants as soon as practicable after commencement of the arbitration. Within [*35] five business days after receipt of this list, the OVD and Defendants each may submit to the AAA the names of up to 20 percent of the persons on the list to be excluded from consideration, and shall rank the remaining arbitrators in their orders of preference. The AAA, in consultation with the United States, will appoint as arbitrator the candidate with the highest ranking who is not excluded by the OVD or Defendants.

F. Defendants shall continue to provide Video Programming to an OVD pursuant to the terms of any existing agreement until the arbitration is completed. If the arbitrator's decision changes the financial terms on which Defendants must provide Video Programming to the OVD, Defendants or the OVD, as the case may be, shall compensate the other based on application of the new financial terms for the period dating from expiration of the existing agreement (plus appropriate interest).

G. Within five business days of the commencement of an arbitration, the OVD and the Defendants each shall furnish a writing to the other and to the Department of Justice committing to maintain the confidentiality of the arbitration and of any Final Offers and discovery materials exchanged during [*36] the arbitration, and to limit the use of any Final Offers and discovery materials to the arbitration. The writing shall expressly state that all records of the arbitration and any discovery materials may be disclosed to the Department of Justice.

H. Defendants shall not be bound by the provisions of this Section VII if an OVD commences arbitration under this Final Judgment more than 60 days prior to the expiration of an existing Video Programming agreement, or less than 30 days after an OVD first requests Defendants to provide Video Programming under Section IV.A or IV.B of this Final Judgment.

I. After an OVD receives approval from the Department of Justice, pursuant to Section IV.C of this Final Judgment, the OVD may commence arbitration by filing with the AAA and furnishing to Defendants and to the Department of Justice

1. an assertion that Defendants must provide Video Programming to the OVD pursuant to Section IV.A or IV.B of this Final Judgment; and

2. if the Qualified OVD's assertion is based, pursuant to Section IV.B of this Final Judgment, on Comparable Video Programming provided by a Peer or Peers, each agreement with any such Peers.

J. Simultaneously with the commencement of [*37] arbitration, the OVD must file with the AAA its Final Offer for the Video Programming it believes Defendants must provide.

K. Within five business days of the commencement of an arbitration, Defendants shall file with the AAA and furnish to the Department of Justice their Final Offer for the Video Programming sought by the OVD.

L. After the AAA has received Final Offers from the OVD and Defendants, it will immediately furnish a copy of each Final Offer to the other party.

M. At any time after the commencement of arbitration, the OVD and Defendants may agree to suspend the arbitration, for periods not to exceed 14 days in the aggregate, to attempt to resolve their dispute through negotiation. The OVD and the Defendants shall effectuate such suspension through a joint writing filed with the AAA and furnished to the Department of Justice. Either the OVD or the Defendants may terminate the suspension at any time by filing with the AAA and furnishing to the Department of Justice a writing calling for the arbitration to resume.

N. The OVD and the Defendants shall exchange written discovery requests within five business days of receiving the other party's Final Offer, and shall exercise reasonable [*38] diligence to respond within 14 days. Discovery shall be limited to the following items in the possession of the parties:

1. previous agreements between the OVD and the Defendants;

2. formal offers to renew previous agreements;

3. current and prior agreements between the Defendants and MVPDs or other OVDs;

4. current and prior agreements between the OVD and other Broadcast Networks, Cable Programmers, or Production Studios;

5. records of past arbitrations pursuant to this Final Judgment;

6. documents reflecting Nielsen or other ratings of the Video Programming at issue or of Comparable Video Programming; and

7. documents reflecting the number of subscribers to the OVD. There shall be no discovery or use in the arbitration of documents or information not in the possession, custody, or control of the OVD or the Defendants, of draft agreements or other documents concerning negotiations between the OVD and the Defendants (other than formal offers to renew previous agreements, pursuant to Section VII.N.2 of this Final Judgment), or of the costs associated with Defendants' production of their Video Programming.

O. In reaching his or her decision, the arbitrator may consider only documents exchanged [*39] in discovery between the parties and the following:

1. testimony explaining the documents and the parties' Final Offers;

2. briefs submitted and arguments made by counsel; and

3. summary exhibits illustrating the terms of Defendants' agreements with MVPDs or other OVDs or of the party OVD's agreements with other Broadcast Networks, Cable Programmers, or Production Studios.

P. Arbitrations under Section IV.A of this Final Judgment shall begin within 30 days of the AAA furnishing to the OVD and to the Defendants, pursuant to Section VII.L of this Final Judgment, each party's Final Offer. The arbitration hearing shall last no longer than ten business days, after which the arbitrator shall have five business days to inform the OVD and the Defendants which Final Offer best reflects the appropriate Economically Equivalent terms under Section IV.A of the Final Judgment.

Q. Arbitrations under Section IV.B of this Final Judgment shall be conducted in two stages, the first of which shall begin within 30 days of the AAA furnishing to the Qualified OVD and to the Defendants, pursuant to Section VII.L of this Final Judgment, each party's Final Offer. The first stage shall last no longer than ten business [*40] days, after which the arbitrator shall have five business days to inform the Qualified OVD and the Defendants which Final Offer encompasses the appropriate Comparable Video Programming under Section IV.B of this Final Judgment. Within five business days of the arbitrator's decision, the Qualified OVD and the Defendants shall file with the AAA, furnish to the Department of Justice, and exchange revised Final Offers containing proposed financial terms for the Comparable Video Programming selected by the arbitrator. The second stage of the arbitration shall commence within ten days of the exchange of the revised Final Offers and shall last no longer than ten business days, after which the arbitrator shall have five business days to inform the Qualified OVD and the Defendants which Final Offer best reflects the appropriate Economically Equivalent terms under Section IV.B of this Final Judgment.

VIII. COMPLIANCE INSPECTION

A. For purposes of determining or securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or of determining whether the Final Judgment should be modified or vacated, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, from time to time duly authorized representatives of the Department [*41] of Justice, including consultants and other persons retained by the Department of Justice, shall, upon written request of an authorized representative of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to Defendants, be permitted

1. access during the Defendants' office hours to inspect and copy, or at the option of the United States, to require Defendants to provide to the United States and the Plaintiff States hard copy or electronic copies of, all books, ledgers, accounts, records, data, and documents in the possession, custody, or control of Defendants, relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment, including documents Defendants are required to collect and maintain pursuant to Sections IV.J, IV.K, IV.L, IV.M, or IV.O of this Final Judgment; and

2. to interview, either informally or on the record, the Defendants' officers, employees, or agents, who may have their individual counsel present, regarding such matters. The interviews shall be subject to the reasonable convenience of the interviewee and without restraint or interference by Defendants.

B. Upon the written request of an authorized representative of the Assistant Attorney [*42] General in charge of the Antitrust Division, Defendants shall submit written reports or respond to written interrogatories, under oath if requested, relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may be requested. Written reports authorized under this paragraph may, at the sole discretion of the United States (after consultation with the Plaintiff States), require Defendants to conduct, at their cost, an independent audit or analysis relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment.

C. No information or documents obtained by the means provided in this section shall be divulged by the United States to any person other than an authorized representative of (1) the executive branch of the United States, (2) the Plaintiff States, or (3) the Federal Communications Commission, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party (including grand jury proceedings), or for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

D. If at the time information or documents are furnished by a Defendant to the United States and the Plaintiff States, the Defendant represents and identifies in writing [*43] the material in any such information or documents to which a claim of protection may be asserted under Rule 26(c)(1)(G) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and the Defendant marks each pertinent page of such material, "Subject to claim of protection under Rule 26(c)(1)(G) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure," then the United States and the Plaintiff States shall give the Defendant ten calendar days notice prior to divulging such material in any civil or administrative proceeding.

IX. RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

This Court retains jurisdiction to enable any party to apply to this Court at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, to modify any of its provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Plaintiff States shall have no right to apply to the Court for further orders or directions with respect to Sections IV.C, IV.D, IV.E, IV.F, V.G, or VII of this Final Judgment. In particular, the Plaintiff States shall not be able to apply to this Court to carry out, construe, modify, enforce, or punish violations of Sections IV.C, IV.D, IV.E, [*44] IV.F, V.G, or VII of this Final Judgment.

X. NO LIMITATION ON GOVERNMENT RIGHTS

Nothing in this Final Judgment shall limit the right of the United States or the Plaintiff States to investigate and bring actions to prevent or restrain violations of the antitrust laws concerning any past, present, or future conduct, policy, or practice of the Defendants.

XI. EXPIRATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT

Unless this Court grants an extension, this Final Judgment shall expire seven years from the date of its entry.

XII. PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION

Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest. The parties have complied with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, including making copies available to the public of this Final Judgment, the Competitive Impact Statement, and any comments thereon and the United States' responses to comments. Based upon the record before the Court, which includes the Competitive Impact Statement and any comments and response to comments filed with the Court, entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

Date: 9/1/11

Court approval subject to procedures set forth in the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16

/s/ [*45] Richard J. Leon

United States District Judge

ClearPlay, Inc. v. Nissim Corp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida

September 2, 2011, Decided; September 2, 2011, Entered on Docket

CASE NO. 07-81170-CIV-HUCK/BANDSTRA

Reporter

2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99154 *; 2011 WL 3878363

CLEARPLAY, INC., Plaintiff, v. NISSIM CORPORATION and MAX ABECASSIS, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Summary judgment granted by Clearplay, Inc. v. Nissim Corp., 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 146861 (S.D. Fla., Dec. 21, 2011)

Affirmed by Clearplay, Inc. v. Nissim Corp., 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 23339 (11th Cir. Fla., Nov. 14, 2012)

Prior History: Clearplay, Inc. v. Nissim Corp., 433 Fed. Appx. 782, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 14072 (11th Cir. Fla., 2011)

Core Terms

infringement, patents, Players, Settlement, license agreement, Specifications, communications, baseless, license, preemption, products, patent infringement, warnings, filters, preempts, allegations, federal patent law, bad faith, unlicensed, tortious interference, patent law, summary judgment, non-compliance, manufacturers, immunity, asserts, compliance, press release, matter of law, objectionable

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, those who petition the government, including adjudicatory bodies such as the courts, for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability. The immunity extends beyond actual litigation to pre-litigation communications.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Patent Law > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The decision to permit state tort liability for only objectively baseless allegations of patent infringement rests on both federal preemption and the First Amendment. The federal patent laws preempt state laws that impose tort liability for a patent-holder's good faith conduct in communications asserting infringement of its patent and warning about potential litigation. In addition, the same First Amendment policy reasons that justify the extension of Noerr-Pennington immunity to pre-litigation conduct in the context of federal antitrust law apply equally in the context of state-law tort claims.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN3[] Defenses, Bad Faith Enforcement

Patent law "conflict preempts" state torts in the area of unfair competition that are based on conduct protected or governed by federal patent law. Federal patent law protects publicizing a patent in the marketplace and, related, communicating allegations of patent infringement. However, patent law protects this conduct only if undertaken not in bad faith. Bad faith must be alleged and ultimately proven, even if bad faith is not an element of the state law claim, in order to escape preemption by federal patent law.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

HN4[] Defenses, Bad Faith Enforcement

Federal patent law bars imposing liability on a patentee for communicating its warnings of license noncompliance and patent infringement so long as these warnings were not made in bad faith.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN5[] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Under the exacting test for 28 U.S.C.S. § 1338 jurisdiction, resolution of a patent law issue must be necessary to every theory of relief under at least one claim, whereas, under the test for patent preemption, the inquiry is whether federal patent law protects the conduct for which plaintiff seeks relief under state law.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

HN6[] Defenses, Bad Faith Enforcement

The bad faith required to avoid patent preemption encompasses both objective and subjective considerations. However, the bad faith standard cannot be satisfied unless the infringement allegations and/or publicizing of the patent were objectively baseless. Objectively baseless allegations are ones for which no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. The party seeking to establish objective baselessness must offer clear and convincing evidence that the patentee had no reasonable basis to believe that its patent claims were valid or that they were infringed. A successful outcome in an underlying suit for infringement obviates a finding of objective baselessness; although, an unsuccessful outcome does not necessarily support objective baselessness.

Counsel: [*1] For Clearplay, Inc., a Utah Corporation, Plaintiff: Brian Michael Torres, Sheftall & Torres, P.A., Miami, FL; G. Stephen Long, Page G. Crowther, Reid A. Page, Long & Page, LLP, Denver, CO; Scott Dozier Sheftall, Sheftall & Torres, Miami, FL.

For Nissim Corp., a Florida Corporation, Max Abecassis, Defendants: Allison Jeanne Cammack, John C. Carey, Carey Rodriguez Greenberg & Paul LLP, Miami, FL.

For Nissim Corp., a Florida Corporation, Counter Claimant: Allison Jeanne Cammack, John C. Carey, Carey Rodriguez Greenberg & Paul LLP, Miami, FL.

For Clearplay, Inc., a Utah Corporation, Counter Defendant: Brian Michael Torres, Sheftall & Torres, P.A., Miami, FL; G. Stephen Long, Page G. Crowther, Reid A. Page, Long & Page, LLP, Denver, CO; Scott Dozier Sheftall, Sheftall & Torres, Miami, FL.

Judges: PAUL C. HUCK, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: PAUL C. HUCK

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

This matter is currently before the Court on Defendants' Nissim Corporation and Max Abecassis' ("Nissim" [1]) Motion for Summary Judgment, (D.E. # 332, filed March 12, 2011). The Court held hearings on discrete issues raised by this Motion on August, 22, 2011 (in person) and on August 30, 2011 (by telephone). [*2] Nissim's principal argument in support of summary judgment is that its warnings of patent infringement were not, as a matter of law, made in bad faith and, therefore, the doctrines of patent law preemption and Noerr-Pennington immunity bar ClearPlay's state law claims premised on these warnings. For the reasons discussed below, the Court finds that federal patent law preempts ClearPlay's state tortious interference claims and preempts in part its state unfair competition claim and grants Nissim summary judgment on this issue. The Court also denies without prejudice Nissim's request for summary judgment as to ClearPlay's claim for breach of contract to allow for further development of the factual record.

I. BACKGROUND[2]

Defendant Nissim Corporation, founded and owned by co-Defendant Max Abecassis, holds patents in the area of video technology. At issue in this case and related cases before the Court are two forms of such technology: 1) objectionable content control, and 2) industry-standard digital video disc ("DVD") specifications ("DVD Specifications"). ClearPlay produces and sells DVD players, software and objectionable content filters for DVD Players.

A. The 2004 Case and Enforcement Litigation

[1] Abecassis is the founder, President and CEO of Nissim and inventor of its patents. For the sake of simplicity and unless otherwise indicated, this Order refers to both Nissim and Abecassis as "Nissim."

[2] For further background see the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit and Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit opinions and this Court's rulings in this and related cases. See ClearPlay Inc. v. Max Abecassis & Nissim Corp., 602 F.3d 1364 (Fed. Cir. 2010); Nissim Corp. v. ClearPlay, Inc., 374 Fed. Appx. 987 (Fed. Cir. 2010); [*3] ClearPlay Inc. v. Nissim Corp., No. 10-13469, 433 Fed. Appx. 782, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 14072 (11th Cir. July 7, 2011); and this Court's prior orders from case numbers 04-CV-21140 and 08-CV-80535.

The tortured history of the parties' litigation begins in 2004 when Nissim sued ClearPlay for patent infringement alleging that ClearPlay had violated certain Nissim patents relating to technology for editing video programs based on content (Case No. 04-CV-21140 or the "2004 Case"). ClearPlay counterclaimed for a declaratory judgment of non-infringement and patent invalidity. On the eve of trial, the parties settled and entered into a Settlement and License Agreement. In this agreement Nissim granted ClearPlay a limited, non-exclusive [*4] license under the patents in suit to, among other things, make and sell, certain DVD Players provided that the Players' objectionable content filters "substantially complied" with Nissim's specifications for coding such content, which are called the CustomPlay [3] OC (Objectionable Content) Specifications. Based on the settlement, on November 30, 2005, the Court dismissed the case and retained jurisdiction solely to enforce the terms of the Settlement and License Agreement. The Court's dismissal was with prejudice. Unfortunately, rather than amicably resolving the parties' dispute, the settlement unleashed the torrent of litigation summarized here.

In 2007, ClearPlay began releasing products subject to the Settlement and License Agreement and soon thereafter Nissim asserted that these products did not comply with the agreement's terms. On June 11, 2007, Nissim filed a Motion to Enforce the Settlement and License Agreement ("Motion to Enforce"), spawning what has been deemed the "Enforcement Litigation." Nissim alleged that ClearPlay filters released for use with ClearPlay's CP-007-USB Players ("007 Players") did not comply with the terms of the Settlement [*5] and License Agreement, that the 007 Players also did not comply with the agreement, and that ClearPlay's royalty reports were deficient. The first issue, upon the parties' consent, was referred to the Special Master, and regarding the last two issues, the Court found that ClearPlay had not materially breached the Settlement and License Agreement.

The Special Master determined that ClearPlay's filters substantially complied with Nissim's OC Specifications as required by the Settlement and License Agreement because an "artistic judgment" clause in the relevant portion of the agreement allowed ClearPlay to depart from the OC Specifications if in ClearPlay's judgment the material's relevance to the movie outweighed its objectionableness. [4] On March 31, 2009, this Court "ratified and affirmed" the Special Master's report and recommendation and denied Nissim's Motion to Enforce. Nissim appealed all of the Court's rulings. On appeal, the Federal Circuit reversed with regard to the issue of ClearPlay's filters, holding that the "artistic judgment exception would swallow the . . . rule" and remanded to determine, consistent with its opinion, whether ClearPlay's filters substantially comply with [*6] the OC Specifications as required by the Settlement and License Agreement. Nissim Corp. v. Clearplay, Inc., 374 Fed. Appx. 987, 992 (Fed. Cir. 2010). Nissim filed, and this Court denied, various motions to circumvent the process of returning the filter dispute to the Special Master. Therefore, the issue of the filters' compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement in light of the Federal Circuit's mandate is presently ripe and will proceed before the Special Master.

B. This Action

At the same time as the Motion to Enforce, Nissim began the communications with third-party retailers and potential manufacturers of ClearPlay products that led to the instant case, 07-CV-81170. Nissim sent letters to Target, which was selling ClearPlay 007 Players, indicating that these players were not licensed under the Settlement and License Agreement and warning of an [*7] infringement action and posted a press release to the same effect. Target stopped selling the 007 Players. One of Nissim's letters to Target also warned of a different form of patent infringement. On December 10, 2007, ClearPlay filed the initial two-count complaint alleging tortious interference with its relationship with Target. The Court dismissed ClearPlay's complaint without prejudice, finding federal patent law preempted its claims.

In subsequent amended complaints, ClearPlay added claims based on Nissim's communications with other third parties. In early 2008 Nissim contacted Best Buy, which had agreed to carry another ClearPlay DVD player, CP-427-USB ("427 Player"), claiming that the 427 Players did not comply with the Settlement and License Agreement

[3] CustomPlay is a Nissim subsidiary.

[4] Section 1.4 of the License Agreement requires, inter alia, that ClearPlay's filters be "in substantial compliance with the CustomPlay Specifications, it being recognized by the parties that application of the CustomPlay OC Specifications requires flexibility of artistic judgment within the overall goal of maintaining consistency."

and infringed Nissim's patents and warning of an infringement action. In March of that year, BestBuy stopped selling 427 Players. In August 2008, Nissim contacted Samsung Electronics and repeated its allegation regarding ClearPlay's products' non-compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement, and ClearPlay alleges that as a result, Samsung discontinued business negotiations with ClearPlay. Subsequent amended complaints also [*8] added a breach of contract claim based on allegations of breach of various provisions of the Settlement and License Agreement and a claim for violation of Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA").

Pursuant to Nissim's motion to dismiss ClearPlay's Second and Third Amended Complaints, the Court analyzed whether, in light of the federal pleading standard, ClearPlay's public assertions of patent infringement met the bad faith/objectively baseless standard required to avoid patent preemption. See e.g. Globetrotter Software Inc. v. Elan Computer Group, Inc., 362 F.3d 1367, 1374 (Fed. Cir. 2004) ("State [tort] law claims . . . can survive federal [patent law] preemption only to the extent that those claims are based on a showing of 'bad faith' action in asserting infringement.") As Nissim repeatedly highlights in its current motion, the Court observed that the issue of the ClearPlay filters' compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement had, as the Enforcement Litigation showed, presented a "fairly close question;" hence, Nissim's notifications of ClearPlay's products' infringement were not "objectively baseless." [5] (D.E. # 190-1, Aug. 7, 2009, Hrg. Tr. at 22.) [*9] Nonetheless, the Court, confined to the four-corners of the Third Amended Complaint, found ClearPlay's allegations sufficient to avoid patent preemption.

While the parties litigated the motions to dismiss, ClearPlay filed a motion for preliminary injunction. [6] The Court granted the injunction, and on interlocutory appeal, the Federal Circuit found it lacked subject-matter jurisdiction because the case did not arise under patent law. See ClearPlay Inc. v. Max Abecassis & Nissim Corp., 602 F.3d 1364, 1366 (Fed. Cir. 2010); 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a) (granting the Federal Circuit exclusive jurisdiction over district courts' final decisions under 28 U.S.C. § 1338, which grants district courts "original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any Act of Congress relating to patents . . . .")

The Federal Circuit explained that section 1338 jurisdiction is conferred when either (1) federal patent law creates the cause of action—not the case here with purely state law claims—or (2) plaintiff's right to relief depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal law, which means that resolution of at least one of plaintiff's claims requires deciding an issue of federal patent law. See 602 F.3d at 1367 (citing and discussing Christianson v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 486 U.S. 800, 808-09, 108 S. Ct. 2166, 100 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1988)). The Federal Circuit found that this case did not satisfy the second basis for section 1338 jurisdiction. With regard to the tortious interference claims, each claim asserted a theory of relief that would not require the Court to address patent law. Id. at 1368. The Federal Circuit explained,

> For example, in each of those [tortious interference] claims ClearPlay asserts that Nissim falsely stated that the ClearPlay DVD players and related filtering technology were not covered by the license agreement. Resolution of that issue would not require the court to address any patent law question; it would require only that the court consider [*11] the provisions of the license agreement in light of the DVD Players and filters sold by ClearPlay. . . . ClearPlay could prevail on its claims by showing that the assertions that ClearPlay's products are unlicensed were false, without regard to whether sale of the products, if unlicensed, would infringe Nissim's patents. If ClearPlay could prove that its devices, even absent a license, did not infringe, that would be another arrow in its quiver, but even assuming the devices would infringe if unlicensed, ClearPlay would still have viable theories of liability under its complaint.

Id. at 1368-69. The Federal Circuit transferred the case to the Eleventh Circuit, which affirmed the injunction. ClearPlay Inc. v. Nissim Corp., No. 10-13469, 433 Fed. Appx. 782, 2011 U.S. App. LEXIS 14072 (11th Cir. July 7,

---

[5] At the time of this and the Court's other observations regarding the sufficiency of ClearPlay's bad faith allegations, the Federal Circuit had not yet issued its ruling. The Federal Circuit opinion, Nissim Corp. v. Clearplay, Inc., 374 Fed. Appx. 987 (Fed. Cir. 2010), only strengthens this Court's prior pronouncements regarding Nissim's statements' lack of "objective baselessness."

[6] The grounds for ClearPlay's [*10] injunctive relief are not relevant to this order.

2011). The implication of the Federal Circuit's jurisdictional ruling for the application and scope of patent preemption is discussed below.

C. The 2008 Case

In 2008 Nissim again sued ClearPlay for patent infringement, alleging that ClearPlay's DVD Players, including the 427 Players, infringe four Nissim patents with regard to the Players' implementation of industry-standard DVD Specifications. In this action, [*12] the 2008 Case, the Court ruled that the Settlement and License Agreement expressly excludes a license to implement the DVD Specifications and otherwise denied ClearPlay's Motion for Summary Judgment on multiple grounds unrelated to patent non-infringement or invalidity. The Court also held a Markman hearing, following which it construed one contested claim term from one of the patents at issue. Both the 2008 case and this case have been partially stayed, since November 24, 2009, pending the Federal Circuit's ruling in the Enforcement Litigation.

D. Nissim's Present Motion for Summary Judgment

Nissim has moved for summary judgment on all of ClearPlay's claims against it. ClearPlay's Third Amended Complaint asserts the following five counts: (1) Tortious Interference with Contractual Relationship (Target), (2) Tortious Interference with Contractual Relationship (Best Buy), (3) Tortious Interference with Potential Advantageous Business Relationships, (4) Breach of Contract (breach of various provisions of the Settlement and License Agreement), and (5) Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA") violation. In response, Nissim asserts that the Federal Circuit's patent preemption [*13] doctrine and Noerr-Pennington immunity bar all counts because the undisputed facts show that Nissim's warnings of patent infringement contained in letters to ClearPlay business partners as well as in press releases were not objectively baseless. ClearPlay's tortious interference claims are based exclusively on Nissim's public notifications of infringement, whereas the breach of contract and FDUTPA claim assert multiple theories of relief, some based on the warnings of patent infringement and others based on Nissim's conduct and legal positions related to the Settlement and License Agreement. Nissim also argues that it should be granted summary judgment on ClearPlay's FDUTPA and breach of contract claim for additional reasons.

II. FACTS[7]

On June 11, 2007, the same day it filed its motion launching the Enforcement Litigation, Nissim sent Target a letter "Re: Unlicensed ClearPlay DVD Players Infringement of Nissim U.S. Patents ['678]; ['945]; ['472]; ['013]; ['401]." These are the patents covered by the Settlement and [*14] License Agreement. The letter indicated that Target was currently selling the 007 Players and that

> As part of a settlement of prior patent infringement litigation, Nissim had previously granted ClearPlay a conditional license to sell certain DVD players that adopt the "CustomPlay Specifications" . . . . However, the CP007-USB DVD players and the ClearPlay filters used by the players do not comply with the required standards and therefore are not covered by the license.

(D.E. # 185-7, June 11, 2007 Letter.) [8] The letter goes on to specify that the 007 Player "does not operate as advertised" because it does not filter entire categories and levels of explicitness, which the menu indicates can be filtered. The letter provides formal notice to Target that the 007 Player "is not licensed by Nissim, and therefore that Target's sales and offers to sell the ClearPlay CP007-USB DVD Player constitute infringements of the above-identified Nissim patents" and requests that Target discontinue sale of the infringing 007 Players. Also that day,

---

[7] ClearPlay disputes the veracity and implications of the statements made in the below-summarized Nissim communications but it does not dispute the communications' content.

[8] Nissim's Statement of Undisputed Facts (D.E. # 332-1) at times miscites the docket entries for Nissim's communications. The Court uses the current docket entry numbers for the communications, which are all attached to ClearPlay's Third Amended Complaint (D.E. # 185).

Nissim issued a press release announcing the filing of its Motion to Enforce and "providing formal notice to all retailers and other third parties that the ClearPlay [*15] DVD Player [007 Player] is not licensed [for failure to comply with the Settlement and License Agreement]" and warning that sales of the 007 Player "constitute infringements of the Nissim patents." (D.E. # 185-10, June 11, 2007 Press Release.) On July 6, 2007, ClearPlay responded to Nissim's allegations in a letter to Target, stating that the 007 Player is "in full compliance with the settlement and license agreement." (D.E. # 185-12, July 6, 2007 Letter.)

On October 19, 2007, Nissim sent Target another letter Re: "Unlicensed DVD Devices Infringement of Nissim Patents ['678]; ['945]; ['013]; ['444]; ['805]; ['207]." [9] This letter differs significantly from the June 11th letter because it takes issue with Target's sale of DVD devices by manufacturers allegedly without a license from Nissim under its patents to implement the industry-wide DVD Specifications. It states that Target's private brand and certain identified third-party [*16] brands, all detailed in a list attached to the letter, are unlicensed because they do not hold a license for the DVD Specifications from Nissim. The October 19, 2007, letter also, > demands that Target discontinue selling the unlicensed DVD players from ClearPlay model CP-007 USB unless and until those players are found by the court presiding over Nissim's current enforcement proceeding to be in compliance with the terms of the . . . Settlement and License Agreement. . . . The ClearPlay products are unlicensed and infringing products and should be removed from Target's shelves.

(D.E. # 185-13, Oct. 19, 2007 Letter.) Nissim's October letter explicitly threatens patent infringement litigation. It states that if Target does not provide certain written assurances within 14 days, then Nissim will file the attached complaint for patent infringement.

On November 1, 2007, ClearPlay sent Target a letter regarding Nissim's claims. The letter states that "ClearPlay believes that it is in compliance with all the material terms and conditions of the [Settlement and] License Agreement and has responded in kind to the Court [in the [*17] Enforcement Litigation]." (D.E. # 185-14, Nov. 1, 2007 Letter.) ClearPlay also informs Target that the 007 Player was designed and manufactured "to avoid the Nissim patents delineated in the DVD License and any of the essential claims in such patents." [10] One day later, on November 2, 2007, Target sent Nissim a letter, copying ClearPlay, indicating that pending the outcome of the Enforcement Litigation, it will cease sales of the ClearPlay players. (D.E. # 185-15, Nov. 2, 2007 Letter.) Nissim posted this news on its website. (D.E. # 185-17, Nov. 2, 2007 Press Release.)

On January 14, 2008, Nissim sent ClearPlay a letter (copying Best Buy and entitled "Unlicensed and Infringing ClearPlay DVD Players and Filters") regarding ClearPlay's 427 Player, then offered for sale at Best Buy. The letter states, > Regrettably, for the same reasons as in the case of the CP007 player, the new CP427 players and the ClearPlay filters used by the CPP427 [*18] players also do not comply with the requirements of the Settlement Agreement between Nissim and ClearPlay. . . . Nissim hereby provides ClearPlay formal notice that the CP427 Player is also not covered by Nissim's license, and therefore that ClearPlay's and Best Buy's sales and offers to sell the CP427 player constitute infringements of Nissim's patents. . . .

(D.E. # 185-19, Jan. 14, 2008 Letter.) On February 22, 2008, Nissim sent a letter directly to Best Buy referencing the January 14 letter, which "gave ClearPlay formal notice that the CP427 player is not in compliance with the terms of the Settlement [and License] Agreement . . . . and that continued sale of the CP427 player constitutes an unlicensed infringement of the Nissim patents." (D.E. # 185-20, February 22, 2008 Letter.) The letter goes on to state that Best Buy's own license for the DVD Specifications excludes from its scope devices sold by third-parties and, moreover, excludes devices that infringe U.S. patent ['401] (not one of the DVD Specifications patents). Nissim sent Best Buy a follow-up letter shortly thereafter, on March 19, 2008, entitled "Best Buy Sales of ClearPlay Players - Infringement of Nissim U.S. Patents ['678], [*19] ['945], ['013], ['401], ['444], ['805], and ['207]." (D.E. # 185-21,

---

[9] These are the patents covered by Nissim's DVD Specifications license.

[10] As indicated subsequently in this opinion, ClearPlay takes the position that both a) its products designed around Nissim's patents with regard to the DVD Specifications and b) Nissim's patents are not necessary for implementation of the DVD Specifications.

March 19, 2008 Letter.) This letter explicitly threatened infringement litigation and attached a draft complaint against Best Buy. On March 31, 2008, BestBuy agreed to suspend ClearPlay sales, and Nissim publicized this decision with a press release. (D.E. # 185-22, March 31, 2008 Press Release.)

Finally, later that year, Nissim approached Samsung, with whom ClearPlay was discussing manufacture of a DVD device using ClearPlay objectionable content software and filters. On August 11, 2008, Nissim sent Samsung a letter re: "Unlicensed and Infringing Products from ClearPlay Inc." (D.E. # 185-30 filed under seal, August 11, 2008 Letter.) The letter notes that Samsung's DVD Specifications license "expressly excludes the field of use under the Nissim Patent Portfolio known as 'CustomPlay' and excludes U.S. Patent ['401], which are infringed by use of ClearPlay enabled software and filters." On this basis, Nissim warns that Samsung would be liable for patent infringement were it to offer products utilizing ClearPlay's software and filters. ClearPlay's complaint alleges that as a result of Nissim's communication, Samsung [*20] discontinued negotiations with ClearPlay.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Patent Law Preemption

Nissim's principal argument in support of summary judgment is that its communications to third parties and the public at large contained warnings of patent infringement that were not objectively baseless and, therefore, ClearPlay's state law claims predicated on these warnings are barred by patent preemption and Noerr-Pennington immunity. In response, ClearPlay argues that Nissim's communications do not make statements related to Nissim patents, but, rather, statements regarding ClearPlay products' lack of compliance with the objectionable content specifications "OC Specifications" and Settlement and License Agreement, matters of contract interpretation. Thus, patent preemption and Noerr-Pennington immunity do not apply. In the alternative, ClearPlay claims, patent law only possibly preempts the communications' select statements regarding Nissim's patents. Before analyzing the patent law preemption of ClearPlay's claims, the Court will dispose of some preliminary issues.

1. Applicability of Noerr-Pennington Immunity

Nissim argues that both the Federal Circuit's patent preemption doctrine and the doctrine of [*21] Noerr-Pennington immunity bar ClearPlay's claims. The Court questions whether Noerr-Pennington immunity provides protection separate or distinct from the doctrine of patent preemption for pre-litigation communications alleging patent infringement, such as Nissim's communications here. HN1[] Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, those who petition the government, including adjudicatory bodies such as the courts, for redress are generally immune from antitrust liability. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus. Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56-57, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). The Eleventh Circuit and other Circuits have extended Noerr-Pennington immunity beyond actual litigation to pre-litigation communications. See e.g. McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1560 (11th Cir. 1992). In one of its seminal cases on patent preemption, the Federal Circuit explained that the higher bad faith standard for patent infringement allegations is rooted not only in the Supremacy Clause but also the First Amendment underpinnings of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which had been extended to pre-litigation communications.

> HN2[] Our decision to permit state tort liability for only objectively baseless allegations [*22] of infringement rests on both federal preemption and the First Amendment. The federal patent laws preempt state laws that impose tort liability for a patentholder's good faith conduct in communications asserting infringement of its patent and warning about potential litigation. In addition, the same First Amendment policy reasons that justify the extension of Noerr immunity to pre-litigation conduct in the context of federal antitrust law apply equally in the context of state-law tort claims.

Globetrotter Software, Inc., v. Elan Computer Group, Inc., 362 F.3d 1367, 1377 (Fed. Cir. 2004) (internal citation omitted). Moreover, the "objectively baseless" bad faith standard adopted by the Federal Circuit in Globetrotter is the same standard developed by the Supreme Court under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc., 508 U.S. at 60 (stating that in order to be the type of sham litigation required to escape Noerr-Pennington immunity, the litigation must be, first, "objectively baseless."); Globetrotter, 362 F.3d at 1377 ("Accordingly, the objectively baseless standard of Professional Real Estate applies to state-law claims based on communications alleging [*23] patent infringement.") Therefore, the Court concludes that a Noerr-Pennington immunity analysis is not needed here because that immunity would not provide any protection to Nissim's allegations of patent infringement beyond the protection already afforded by the Federal Circuit's patent preemption doctrine. [11] As such, the Court will only apply the Federal Circuit's patent preemption standard and case law in this opinion to determine whether ClearPlay's claims premised on Nissim's infringement warnings survive summary judgment.

2. Scope of the Federal Circuit's Ruling

ClearPlay's position that patent law does not preempt its claims is rooted in large part in the Federal Circuit's jurisdictional ruling in this case, discussed above. See ClearPlay Inc. v. Max Abecassis & Nissim Corp., 602 F.3d 1364 (Fed. Cir. 2010). ClearPlay argues that patent law does not preempt its claims because the Federal Circuit held that this case does not arise under patent law. ClearPlay's argument impermissibly conflates jurisdiction with the defense of preemption. Even though the [*25] Court does not have subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1338, federal patent law may, nonetheless, preempt some or all of the state claims at issue. A footnote in the Federal Circuit's opinion confirms:

> [T]o the extent that the principles of federal patent law apply to this case and conflict with relevant state tort law, those principles would provide the rules of decision as a matter of conflict preemption, regardless of the forum.

602 F.3d at 1367 n.1. Moreover, while appellate jurisdiction rests with the Eleventh Circuit, the Court will apply the Federal Circuit's substantial body of case law regarding patent preemption to this case. See Fisher Tool Co. v. Gillet Outillage, 530 F.3d 1063, 1068 (9th Cir. 2008) (finding plaintiff's state tort and Lanham Act claims based on patent infringement warnings barred under Federal Circuit precedent).

3. Patent Preemption of ClearPlay's Tortious Interference and FDUTPA Claims

a) Application to Communications of Patent Infringement Involving Settlement and License Agreement Non-Compliance

The Court now turns to the key question of federal patent law preemption of ClearPlay's state tortious interference and statutory unfair competition claims [*26] based on Nissim's communications. As noted above, the facts alleged in support of the FDUTPA claim, unlike those underlying the tortious interference claims, extend beyond Nissim's communications of patent infringement. Therefore, the Court finds that if patent law protects Nissim's communications, then ClearPlay's tortious interference claims are preempted in whole and the the FDUTPA claim is preempted in part, that is, preempted as to the theory of relief based on Nissim's communications. [12]

---

[11] The Court also notes that while other Circuits have applied Noerr-Pennington immunity to bar not only anti-trust claims but also state tort claims, the Eleventh Circuit has done so only in a very specific context. See McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1560 (11th Cir. 1992) (holding that First Amendment underpinnings of the Noerr Pennington doctrine bar not only anti-trust claims but also a state unfair trade practices claim, which in that case was identical to the anti-trust claim); Atico Int'l USA, Inc. v. Luv N' Care, Ltd., Case No. 09-60397-CIV, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73540, at *11 (S.D. Fla. Aug. 19, 2009) (citing "many circuit courts" that [*24] have used the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to bar state law claims and finding that Noerr-Pennington immunity bars state law claims for tortious interference and FDUTPA violation); but see Slip-n-Slide Records, Inc. v. TVT Records, LLC, No. 05-21113-CIV, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9014, at * 21-22 (S.D. Fla. Feb. 8, 2007) (declining to extent Noerr-Pennington immunity to bar state tort claims wholly unrelated to an anti-trust claim). Therefore, judicial restraint also motivates the Court's decision to apply only the Federal Circuit's patent preemption doctrine, not Noerr Pennington immunity, to ClearPlay's state law claims, which are unrelated to anti-trust law.

[12] Nissim also argues that patent preemption should apply to ClearPlay's breach of contract claim. The Court acknowledges that certain theories of breach (breach of Sections 4.2 and 4.7, specifically) allege that Nissim violated the Settlement and License

Federal law may preempt state law in three ways—explicit preemption, [*27] field preemption, and conflict preemption—and the Federal Circuit has held that HN3[] patent law "conflict preempts" state torts in the area of unfair competition that are based on conduct protected or governed by federal patent law. Hunter Douglas, Inc. v. Harmonic Design, Inc., 153 F.3d 1318, 1332-35 (Fed. Cir. 1998). Federal patent law protects publicizing a patent in the marketplace and, related, communicating allegations of patent infringement. Hunter Douglas, Inc., 153 F.3d at 1336; Mikohn Gaming Corp. v. Acres Gaming, Inc., 165 F.3d 891, 897 (Fed. Cir. 1998); see also Dominant Semiconductors Sdn. Bhd. v. OSRAM GmbH, 524 F.3d 1254, 1258 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (finding that federal patent law preempted unfair competition claims as well as tortious interference claims all based on competitor's third-party letters asserting patent infringement). However, patent law protects this conduct only if undertaken not in bad faith. Bad faith must be alleged and ultimately proven, even if bad faith is not an element of the state law claim, in order to escape preemption by federal patent law. Dominant Semiconductors, 524 F.3d at 1260.

ClearPlay argues that patent law does not protect Nissim's communications [*28] to its business partners because these communications asserted non-compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement, a contractual issue unrelated to Nissim's patent rights and ClearPlay's business partners' alleged infringement. [13] The Court disagrees. The issues of ClearPlay's products' (specifically, its filters') non-compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement and these same products' infringement of Nissim's patents are closely intertwined. Nissim's theory in its third-party communications and press releases summarized above was that ClearPlay's products do not comply with the terms of the Settlement and License Agreement, and therefore, are unlicensed and infringe Nissim's patents. The Court finds that this theory makes perfect sense. The Court dismissed Nissim's claims for infringement and ClearPlay's counterclaims for non-infringement and patent invalidity in the 2004 case with prejudice. Therefore, if ClearPlay's products were found to be outside the scope of the Settlement and License Agreement, Nissim could also reasonably argue that the products infringe the patents covered by the Agreement.

The Court acknowledges that the application of the Federal Circuit's patent preemption doctrine to a patent holder's communications alleging infringement based on a licensee's products' non-compliance with a settlement and license agreement seems to be an issue of first impression. None of the Federal Circuit's decisions in this area concerns allegations of patent infringement based on non-compliance with a license agreement, particularly a settlement and license agreement. Nonetheless, the Court thinks that the rationale behind patent preemption applies with equal force in such situations. The purpose of the doctrine is protection of a patent-holder's good faith assertion of its statutory rights. See Hunter Douglas, Inc., 153 F.3d at 1336 (citing and quoting, inter [*30] alia, Virginia Panel Corp. v. MAC Panel Co., 133 F.3d 860, 869 (Fed. Cir. 1997) ("[A] patentee must be allowed to make its rights known to a potential infringer so that the latter can determine whether to cease its allegedly infringing activities, negotiate a license if one is offered or decide to run the risk of liability and/or the imposition of an injunction."); Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 227 U.S. 8, 37-38, 33 S. Ct. 202, 57 L. Ed. 393, 1913 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 519 (1913) ("Patents would be of little value if infringers of them could not be notified of the consequences of infringement or proceeded against in the courts. Such action considered by itself cannot be said to be illegal.")); see also Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340, 1353 (Fed. Cir. 1999). Nissim, like any other patent holder, was allowed to pursue its rights in good faith without fear of liability under state tort law. See Fisher Tool Co. v. Gillet Outillage, 530 F.3d 1063, 1068 (9th Cir. 2008) ("The purpose of the bad-faith requirement is to permit the patent-holder to assert his rights without fear that he might thereby violate . . . state tort laws.") In this case, Nissim could not have realistically warned of or alleged patent infringement by Target, [*31] Best Buy and/or Samsung without addressing ClearPlay's non-compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement. Therefore, the Court finds that HN4[] federal patent law bars imposing liability on Nissim for communicating its

---

Agreement by making its communications of infringement. Because the Court presently reserves ruling on summary judgment as to ClearPlay's breach of contract claim to allow for further development of the record as to the facts supporting the contractual issues, the Court also declines to rule at present on the issue of patent preemption of certain theories of breach of contract.

[13] ClearPlay also argues that Nissim's communications made statements [*29] "disparaging ClearPlay's products" and "mischaracterizing" the parties' litigation before this Court. The Court finds that the statements to which ClearPlay is referring, such as statements regarding the operation of ClearPlay's filters and the course of the 2004 case, are part and parcel of Nissim's allegations that ClearPlay's products do not comply with the Settlement and License Agreement and, hence, are infringing.

warnings of license non-compliance and patent infringement [14] so long as these warnings were not made in bad faith.

The Court reiterates that its decision finding ClearPlay's claims predicated on Nissim's notifications of license non-compliance and infringement potentially preempted does not conflict with the Federal Circuit's opinion in this case. There, the court found, for purposes of determining subject matter jurisdiction and based solely on the complaint's allegations, that each of ClearPlay's claims could theoretically be resolved without addressing patent law questions. See ClearPlay, Inc. v. Nissim Corp., 602 F.3d 1364, 1367-69 (Fed. Cir. 2010). HN5[] Under the exacting test for § 1338 jurisdiction "resolution of a patent law issue must be necessary to every theory of relief under at least one claim," id. at 1369; whereas, under the test for patent preemption, the inquiry is whether federal patent law protects the conduct for which plaintiff seeks relief [*33] under state law.

b) Bad Faith in Communicating Patent Infringement Involving Settlement and License Agreement Non-Compliance

HN6[] The bad faith required to avoid patent preemption encompasses both objective and subjective considerations. Mikohn Gaming Corp. v. Acres Gaming, Inc., 165 F.3d 891, 897 (Fed. Cir. 1998). However, the bad faith standard cannot be satisfied unless the infringement allegations and/or publicization of the patent were "objectively baseless." Globetrotter Software, Inc. v. Elan Computer Group, 362 F. 3d 1367, 1375 (Fed. Cir. 2004); Dominant Semiconductors Sdn. Bhd. v. OSRAM GmbH, 524 F.3d 1254, 1260 n.5 (Fed. Cir. 2008); see also 800 Adept, Inc. v. Murex Securities Ltd., 539 F.3d 1354, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2008) ("Absent a showing that the infringement allegations are objectively baseless, it is unnecessary to reach the question of the patentee's intent.") Objectively baseless allegations are ones for which "no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." 800 Adept, Inc., 539 F.3d at 1370 (quoting Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus. Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993)). The Federal Circuit has stated that the party seeking [*34] to establish objective baselessness must offer "clear and convincing evidence" that the patentee had "no reasonable basis to believe that its patent claims were valid or that they were infringed." 800 Adept, 539 F.3d at 1370. The Federal Circuit has also indicated that a successful outcome in an underlying suit for infringement obviates a finding of objective baselessness; although, an unsuccessful outcome does not necessarily support objective baselessness. See Dominant Semiconductors, 524 F.3d at 1261.

The Court finds that the record before it, including the proceedings to date in the Enforcement Litigation, establishes that Nissim's communications regarding license non-compliance and patent infringement were not objectively baseless. The Federal Circuit reversed this Court's and the Special Master's determination that ClearPlay's filters did not violate the Settlement and License Agreement's requirement of substantial compliance with Nissim's objectionable content specifications. The Federal Circuit's ruling lends support to Nissim's position that it had a reasonable basis to believe that ClearPlay's filters, and hence its products, did not comply with the Settlement and License [*35] Agreement. Even before the Federal Circuit ruled, the Court concluded that the history and course of the Enforcement Litigation demonstrated that the filter compliance issue presented a close question, and, hence, Nissim's position could not be "objectively baseless." The Court also finds that it was not objectively baseless for Nissim to assert that ClearPlay's business partners would infringe Nissim's patents if they sold or manufactured the ClearPlay products not in compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement's requirements. The Settlement and License Agreement was an agreement to settle the 2004 infringement case, which the Court dismissed with [14] The Court notes that the majority of these communications were made in Nissim's letters—that is, its letter to ClearPlay (the January 14, 2008 letter copying Best Buy) and its letters to ClearPlay retailers and manufacturers (June 11, 2007 letter to Target, October 19, 2007 letter to Target, February 22, 2008 letter to Best Buy, March 19, 2008 letter to Best Buy, and August 11, 2008 letter to Samsung). However, Nissim also communicated its patent rights and allegations of license non-compliance and infringement in press releases, which are also protected under patent law. Even Nissim's broad statement in its June 11, 2007 press release "providing formal notice to all retailers and other third parties" that the 007 Player was not compliant with the Settlement and License Agreement and warning that sales of this Player constitute infringement is protected [*32] so long as it was not made in bad faith. See Globetrotter Software, Inc. v. Elan Computer Group, 362 F. 3d 1367, 1377 (Fed. Cir. 2004) (stating federal patent law preempts state law that punishes merely "publicizing a patent in the marketplace[,] unless the plaintiff can show that the patentholder acted in bad faith.")(internal citation omitted).

---

prejudice. Therefore, Nissim had a reasonable basis to assert that ClearPlay products that do not comply with the Settlement and License Agreement would infringe the patents covered by said agreement.

ClearPlay's argument to the contrary is without merit. ClearPlay argues that it was objectively baseless for Nissim to state that ClearPlay's products were "unlicensed" because the Settlement and License Agreement was still in effect between them, and, hence, its products were "licensed." ClearPlay's argument and interpretation of "unlicensed" [*36] not only misses the point of Nissim's communications but is also belied by the language of these communications. Nissim's communications notify of its belief that ClearPlay's products are unlicensed because they "do not comply with the required standards [of the Settlement and License Agreement]" (D.E. 185-7, June 11, 2007 Letter); "do not comply with the requirements of the Settlement [and License] Agreement between Nissim and ClearPlay" and "[are] not covered by Nissim's license" (D.E. # 185-19, January 14, 2008 Letter.). Nissim does not deny the existence of the Settlement and License Agreement, only that the products fall outside the license granted in that agreement.

Based on the foregoing, the Court concludes that Nissim's communications that ClearPlay's products do not comply with the Settlement and License Agreement and hence ClearPlay and those who sold or manufactured these products would infringe its patents were not objectively baseless as a matter of law. Therefore, patent law preempts ClearPlay's tortious interference claims, which are premised in whole on these communications (Counts I, II and III of the Third Amended Complaint), and preempts the portion of ClearPlay's [*37] FDUTPA claim (Count V) premised on the same.

c) Allegations of Infringement re: Implementation of DVD Specifications

Nissim also asserts that its communications warned of another form of patent infringement. In addition to alleging that ClearPlay's products infringed for failure to comply with the Settlement and License Agreement, Nissim says that its communications also alleged that ClearPlay's products infringed because they use industry-standard digital video disc ("DVD") specifications ("DVD Specifications"), for which Nissim's patents are necessary, without a license from Nissim. Nissim asserts that these allegations of DVD Specifications infringement were also not objectively baseless and hence, patent preemption should bar ClearPlay's claims based on these allegations. By way of background, the Court notes that approximately ninety DVD player manufacturers have non-exclusive DVD Specifications licenses from Nissim. [15] Nissim's DVD-Device License Agreement (DVD Specifications) covers its U.S. Patents ['678], ['945], ['013], ['444], ['805] and ['207]. See Nissim's DVD Device License Agreement, D.E. # 185-14 at 8-21. The first three patents in this list, ['678], ['945] and ['013], [*38] were also covered by the Settlement and License Agreement, which granted a limited license for products implementing Nissim's objectionable-content specifications. Also, as indicated above, Nissim sued ClearPlay in the 2008 case alleging that ClearPlay's DVD Players, including the '427 Player, infringe Nissim's patents by implementing the DVD Specifications. The patents at issue in the 2008 case are all patents that were at issue in the 2004 case and under which ClearPlay has the limited license under the Settlement and License Agreement.

ClearPlay disagrees with Nissim's contention that the communications all allege infringement for implementation of the DVD Specifications, asserting that these communications only alleged non-compliance with the OC Specifications. However, ClearPlay also, in the alternative, takes the position that to the extent the letters warned of infringement regarding DVD Specifications implementation, these warnings were objectively baseless. The Court has carefully reviewed Nissim's letters [*39] to Target, Best Buy and Samsung as well as its related press releases and determines that all but two communications asserted ClearPlay's products' infringement based solely on non-compliance with the Settlement and License Agreement. The October 19, 2007 Target letter and March 19, 2008 Best Buy letter also assert that ClearPlay's products infringed due to their unlicensed implementation of the DVD Specifications. In the October letter Nissim asserted that Target would infringe Nissim's patents by selling DVD players manufactured by companies that did not have DVD Specifications licenses, including ClearPlay. In its response to this letter, ClearPlay denies such infringement because its players were specifically designed around the DVD Specifications. See D.E. # 185-14, Nov. 1, 2007 Letter. The March letter to Best Buy was "Re: . . .

[15] ClearPlay does not dispute this fact; although, as discussed below, ClearPlay disputes that Nissim's patents are necessary for implementation of the DVD Specifications.

Infringement of Nissim U.S. Patents ['678], ['945], ['013], ['401], ['444], ['805], and ['207]," all six patents allegedly necessary to the DVD Specifications, and the draft complaint for infringement attached to this letter includes counts under all six patents.

Therefore, the Court must also determine whether these two letters alleging ClearPlay's products' [*40] infringement due to unlicensed implementation of the DVD Specifications support ClearPlay's claims. The Court finds they do not. Though admittedly not directly on point, Federal Circuit authorities suggest that a finding that one of two infringement allegations was not made in bad faith precludes finding that the infringement allegations as a whole were asserted in bad faith. In Dominant Semiconductors Sdn. Bhd. v. OSRAM GmbH, 524 F.3d 1254, 1261 (Fed. Cir. 2008), a patentee's public warnings of infringement were found not objectively baseless when, in the underlying patent infringement suit, the adjudicator had found infringement of one of the patentee's patents yet also found non-infringement and invalidity with regard to other patents. See also Globetrotter Software, Inc., 362 F.3d at 1375, 1377 (Fed. Cir. 2004) (finding no bad faith for patentee's communications of infringement of three patents when only evidence of objective baselessness was that summary judgment was granted, but then reversed, for non-infringement of one patent at issue). The rationale underlying these authorities suggests that the Court's finding that Nissim's infringement warnings regarding ClearPlay's license [*41] non-compliance were not objectively baseless is sufficient to preempt claims based on warnings, contained in the very same communications, also alerting of ClearPlay's products' infringement regarding the DVD Specifications. This conclusion seems reasonable. As a practical matter, if ClearPlay's products were infringing with regard to one technology or one patent or series of patents, they were infringing regardless of whether they infringed with regard to another technology or patent(s). In other words, if Nissim has one good faith reason to assert ClearPlay's products' infringement, it does not matter from a retailer's or manufacturer's perspective whether the products infringe in other ways: these retailers and manufacturers would still be concerned about selling or manufacturing the allegedly infringing products.

In addition, the record establishes that Nissim's allegations of infringement for implementation of the DVD Specifications were independently not objectively baseless as a matter of law. Nissim points to various portions of the record to support its position that its communications of infringement for DVD Specifications implementation were not objectively baseless. One, [*42] it is undisputed that approximately ninety DVD player manufacturers are licensed under Nissim patents to implement the DVD Specifications. Two, Nissim's expert opined that Nissim's patents cover and that ClearPlay's '427 Player implements a DVD Specifications function known as "seamless branching." Nissim's expert declaration was submitted in the 2008 case. (D.E. #32 in 08-CV-80535, Expert Decl., filed under seal). In this declaration Nissim's expert attaches his earlier report regarding ClearPlay's player at issue in the 2004 case, and on the basis of this earlier report and an examination of the ClearPlay '427 Player, the expert concludes that the '427 Player has the ability to play DVDs that use the seamless branching function of the DVD Specifications and, hence, infringes claims of certain of Nissim's patents. Three, Nissim's counsel testifies that he personally tested both the '427 and '007 ClearPlay players and that these devices perform features, seamless branching as well as other features, that are encompassed by the DVD Specifications. (D.E. # 332-2, Carey Decl. at ¶ 19-20). ClearPlay has submitted evidence to the contrary. ClearPlay's expert opines that the "patents asserted [*43] by . . . [Nissim] to be necessary to implement the DVD Specifications . . . are not, in fact, necessary for or infringed by the implementation of the DVD Specifications." (D.E. # 345-2, LaBarge Decl. at ¶ 6.) Also, ClearPlay's co-founder testifies that following the Settlement and License Agreement, ClearPlay has designed all its players, including the 007 and 427 Players, to not implement the DVD Specifications features that Nissim claims are covered by Nissim's patents. (D.E. # 345-2, Jarman Decl. at ¶ 18-23).

This record unquestionably presents genuine issues of material fact as to ClearPlay's players' infringement of Nissim's patents based on implementation of the DVD Specifications. However, the matter before the Court is very different. The Court must determine whether Nissim's allegations of infringement based on ClearPlay's products implementation of the DVD Specifications were objectively baseless. The Court finds that these allegations were not objectively baseless as a matter of law. To establish that Nissim's actions were objectively baseless, ClearPlay "was required to offer clear and convincing evidence that [Nissim] . . . had no reasonable basis to believe that its patent [*44] claims were valid or that they were infringed." 800 Adept, Inc. v. Murex Securities Ltd., 539 F.3d 1354, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (reversing judgment on a jury verdict because there was no clear and convincing evidence such that a reasonable jury could find that defendant had no reasonable basis to believe that its patents were valid or infringed); see also Dominant Semiconductors Sdn. Bhd. v. OSRAM GmbH, 524 F.3d 1254, 1260 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (indicating that the party challenging pre-litigation infringement communications must present affirmative evidence of bad faith under a clear and convincing standard to survive summary judgment). [16] Here, Nissim must have had no reasonable basis to assert that ClearPlay's '007 and '427 Players infringed its patents for implementation of the DVD Specifications as claimed in its letters. The opinions of Nissim's expert and counsel as well as the prevalence of Nissim's DVD Specifications licenses to DVD manufacturers and others establish that Nissim had a reasonable basis to believe that ClearPlay's products infringe its patents due to their implementation of the DVD Specifications, and the Court finds that the opinions of ClearPlay's expert and witness [*45] are not clear and convincing evidence to the contrary. See 800 Adept, Inc., 539 F.3d 1354 (finding no objective baselessness as a matter of law when patentee's assertion of validity was supported by patent examiner and expert opinion and assertion of infringement was supported by, among other things, a legal opinion from counsel); Globetrotter Software Inc. v. Elan Computer Group, Inc., 362 F.3d 1367 (Fed. Cir. 2004) (affirming summary judgment finding allegations of infringement were not objectively baseless when summary judgment on non-infringement was reversed due to, in part, genuine issues of material fact regarding infringement).

Therefore, Nissim's communications alleging infringement for implementation of the DVD Specifications were not made in bad faith, and, accordingly, federal patent law also bars ClearPlay's state law claims based on these communications.

B. Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act Claim

Nissim asserts that summary judgment on ClearPlay's FDUTPA claim is warranted because Nissim's infringement warnings to third-parties are not "trade or commerce" under the meaning of this statute. The Court has already found that patent law preempts the portion of ClearPlay's FDUTPA claim alleging that Nissim's third-party communications violated FDUTPA. As such, the Court need not further address this argument.

ClearPlay's FDUTPA claim also alleges that Nissim violated this statute by entering into the Settlement and License Agreement in bad faith and breaching this agreement. Without commenting on the viability on this claim, the Court [*47] notes that Nissim does not address this portion of the FDUTPA claim in its summary judgment motion and, hence, it remains viable following issuance of this instant order.

C. Breach of Contract Claim

ClearPlay's Third Amended Complaint alleges that Nissim breached multiple provisions of the Settlement and License Agreement, and Nissim has moved for judgment as a matter of law on all of these elements of ClearPlay's breach of contract claim. As indicated at the August 30, 2011, telephonic hearing in this matter, the Court believes that further development of the record is needed with regard to the facts underlying at least some elements of ClearPlay's claim. Accordingly, Nissim's request for judgment as a matter of law on ClearPlay's claim for breach of contract is denied without prejudice to allow Nissim to file a renewed motion for summary judgment, which will permit the parties to submit evidence and briefing as discussed at the August 30, 2011, telephonic hearing.

IV. CONCLUSION

---

[16] In Breckenridge Pharmaceutical, Inc. v. Metabolite Laboratories, Inc., 444 F.3d 1356, 1369 (Fed. Cir. 2006), the Federal Circuit reversed summary judgment on state tortious interference and unfair competition claims based on patentee's letters publicizing its patents because the "question of whether any statements in the letters were 'objectively baseless' is genuinely disputed." The court in Breckenridge provided no indication of the facts that the patentee asserted to support no objective baselenessness, thus providing little guidance here, and also [*46] did not cite the clear and convincing standard followed by the Federal Circuit in 800 Adept, Inc. v. Murex Securities Ltd., 539 F.3d 1354, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2008) and reiterated in Dominant Semiconductors Sdn. Bhd. v. OSRAM GmbH, 524 F.3d 1254, 1260 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

For the foregoing reasons, Nissim's motion for summary judgment is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE IN PART. Federal patent law preempts Counts I, II and III for tortious interference with contractual [*48] or potential advantageous business relationships. Federal patent law also preempts in part Count V for violation of FDUTPA as indicated above. Following the submission of another motion for summary judgment and further evidence, the Court will examine whether Nissim is entitled to judgment as a matter of law with regard to ClearPlay's claim for breach of contract.

DONE and ORDERED in Chambers, Miami, Florida, September 2, 2011.

/s/ Paul C. Huck

PAUL C. HUCK

United States District Judge

End of Document

In re Puerto Rican Cabotage Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico

September 13, 2011, Decided; September 13, 2011, Filed

MDL Docket No. 3:08-md-1960 (DRD)

Reporter

815 F. Supp. 2d 448 *; 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113980 **

IN RE PUERTO RICAN CABOTAGE ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Prior History: In re Puerto Rican Cabotage Antitrust Litig., 269 F.R.D. 125, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90338 (D.P.R., July 12, 2010)

Core Terms

Settlements, Objectors, class member, attorney's fees, lodestar, cases, class representative, Plaintiffs', discovery, incentive award, multiplier, settlement agreement, class action, fee award, Defendants', antitrust, freeze, proposed settlement, calculated, instant case, courts, duration, awards, award fees, base rate, cabotage, expenses, cross-check, approving, assessing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > American Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN1[] Basis of Recovery, American Rule

The general "American Rule" is that each side bears its own litigation costs and that the prevailing party is not entitled to recover attorneys' fees or costs. However, the U.S. Supreme Court has recognized an equitable exception to this rule - known as the common fund or common benefit doctrine - that permits litigants or lawyers who recover a common fund for the benefit of persons other than themselves to obtain reasonable attorney's fees out of the fund, thus spreading the cost of the litigation to its beneficiaries. Class action lawsuits are the prototypical example of instances where the common fund doctrine can apply. In assessing requests for attorneys' fees, the court functions as a quasi-fiduciary to safeguard the corpus of the settlement fund for the benefit of the plaintiff class. The court is to act as a fiduciary who must serve as a guardian of the rights of absent class members. Additionally, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h) provides, in a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees and nontaxable costs that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement. However, a thorough judicial review of fee applications is required in all class action settlements.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN2[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Attorneys' fees are typically assessed through either the percentage of the fund method or through the lodestar method. The percentage of the fund method applies a certain percentage to the settlement fund whereas the lodestar method multiplies the number of hours class counsel worked on a case by a reasonable hourly billing rate for such services.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN3[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The percentage of the fund methodology for attorneys' fees is favored in the First Circuit. The percentage-of-recovery method is generally favored because it allows courts to award fees from the fund in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure. Under the percentage of the fund method, the court has extremely broad latitude to determine an appropriate fee award. Although the First Circuit has not set forth a comprehensive list of factors to be considered when evaluating an attorneys' fees request pursuant to this approach, other district courts within the First Circuit have analyzed factors set forth by the Second and Third Circuits. The United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico follows suit and analyzes a counsel's request utilizing the following relevant factors: (1) the size of the fund and the number of persons benefitted; (2) the skill, experience, and efficiency of the attorneys involved; (3) the complexity and duration of the litigation; (4) the risks of the litigation; (5) the amount of time devoted to the case by counsel; (6) awards in similar cases; and (7) public policy considerations, if any.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN4[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Analyzing the net dollars and cents results achieved by counsel for their clients is often the most influential factor in assessing the reasonableness of any attorneys' fee award. Generally speaking, there is an inverse relationship between an increase in the size of the settlement fund and the percentage fee award. The basis for this inverse relationship is the belief that in many instances the increase in the recovery is merely a factor of the size of the class and has no direct relationship to the efforts of counsel.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN5[] Class Attorneys, Fees

When a lead counsel is requesting to withdraw a portion of a settlement fund today for compensation, the court finds it imprudent to rely upon a hypothetical and theoretical "maximized potential" value of what the settlement fund may reach on a future date. The court should be conservative in assessing the total value of the settlement fund and base those assessments on actual, tangible benefits that are able to be calculated in the present.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN6[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In the context of factors to be considered under the percentage of the fund method for attorneys' fees, the complexity of federal antitrust law is well known, and antitrust class actions are notoriously complex, protracted, and bitterly fought.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN7[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In the context of factors to be considered under the percentage of the fund method for attorneys' fees, antitrust litigation in general, and class action litigation in particular, is unpredictable. The history of antitrust litigation is replete with cases in which antitrust plaintiffs succeeded at trial on liability, but recovered no damages, or only negligible damages, at trial, or on appeal. Further, whenever an attorney takes a case on a contingency basis, there is always the risk of non-payment. Certainly there are instances where diligent and experienced plaintiffs attorneys pour thousands of hours and dollars into their class action case only to recover little or nothing at trial or on appeal.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN8[] Class Attorneys, Fees

In the context of factors to be considered under the percentage of the fund method for attorneys' fees, the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico finds it useful to turn to objective academic studies in assessing awards in similar cases. Such studies provide good indicators of what the market would pay for class counsel's services because the data shows what attorneys have been paid in similar cases, and thus what class counsel could have expected when they decided to invest their resources in a case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN9[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The percentage used in calculating any given fee award must follow a sliding-scale and must bear an inverse relationship to the amount of the settlement. Otherwise, those law firms who obtain huge settlements, whether by happenstance or skill, will be over-compensated to the detriment of the class members they represent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN10[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Class action plaintiffs' attorneys provide an invaluable service by aggregating the seemingly insignificant harms endured by a large multitude into a distinct sum where the collective injury can then become apparent. Due to the expense, time, and difficulty of pursuing complex litigation, it would likely not be economical for an individual class member to pursue such litigation on their own. In the absence of adequate attorneys' fee awards, many antitrust actions would not be commenced since the claims of individual litigants, when taken separately, often hardly justify the expense of litigation. Attorneys who take on class action matters serve a benefit to society and the judicial process by enabling such small claimants to pool their claims and resources. The litigation is critical because it gives voice to relatively small claimants who may not be aware of statutory violations or have an avenue to relief. These considerations weight in favor of granting attorneys' fees under the percentage of the fund methodology, as private civil class action litigation is an important tool in enforcement of antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN11[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Attorneys' fee awards of 33a% should be reserved for cases which proceed to trial or settle on the eve of trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN12[] Class Attorneys, Fees

The First Circuit does not require a court to engage in calculating the lodestar method when awarding fees based upon the percentage of the fund method. Nevertheless, the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico finds that it is a pragmatic cross-check to ensure that the court is not creating a windfall for counsel. The lodestar cross-check ensures that fees awarded under the percentage of the fund method are reasonable in light of the amount of work counsel actually performed. The lodestar represents a presumptively reasonable fee. The lodestar cross-check is performed by multiplying the hours reasonably expended on the matter by the reasonable hourly billing rate which then provides the court with the lodestar calculation. In implementing this lodestar approach, the judge first calculates the time counsel spent on the case, subtracts duplicative, unproductive, or excessive hours, and then applies prevailing rates in the community (taking into account the qualifications, experience, and specialized competence of the attorneys involved. The proposed fee award is then divided by the lodestar calculation, resulting in a lodestar multiplier. The lodestar multiplier is compared to other multipliers employed in similar cases. If the multiplier is too great, the court should consider reducing its award calculated under the percentage of the fund method.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN13[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Multiples ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN14[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Generally in class action suits, once a settlement figure has been reached, defendants have little interest in how the fund is ultimately appropriated, including what percentage of the fund that plaintiffs' counsel receives. At this stage of the litigation, the lead counsel's interest begins to conflict with the class members'. Objectors thus aid the court in assessing plaintiffs' counsels' request for attorneys' fees to ensure that the class members' interests are protected. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure contemplate the possibility of fees to objectors: Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(h) provides a format for all awards of attorney fees and nontaxable costs in connection with a class action, and not only the award to class counsel. In some situations, there may be a basis for making an award to other counsel whose work produced a beneficial result for the class, such as attorneys who represented objectors to a proposed settlement under Rule 23(e) or to the fee motion of class counsel. Rule 23(h), Advisory Committee Notes to the 2003 Amendments. An objector whose arguments result in a reduction of attorney-fee and expense awards provides a benefit to the class and are thus entitled to attorneys' fees. Objectors who do not benefit the class, however, are not entitled to compensation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN15[] Class Attorneys, Fees

Objectors must produce an improvement in the settlement worth more than the fee they are seeking; otherwise they have rendered no benefit to the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN16[] Class Actions, Judicial Discretion

Because a named plaintiff is an essential ingredient of any class action, an incentive award can be appropriate to encourage or induce an individual to participate in the suit. Incentive awards are recognized as serving an important function in promoting class action settlements. Courts routinely approve incentive awards to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of the class action litigation. Additionally, courts typically examine the following criteria when assessing incentive awards: 1) the risk to the class representative in commencing suit, both financial and otherwise; 2) the notoriety and personal difficulties encountered by the class representative; 3) the amount of time and effort spent by the class representative; 4) the duration of the litigation and; 5) the personal benefit (or lack thereof) enjoyed by the class representative as a result of the litigation.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > General Overview

HN17[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, a court may approve a settlement that would bind class members only after a hearing and on finding that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate. Rule 23(e)(1)(c).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > General Overview

HN18[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The First Circuit has yet to espouse a set of determined factors for assessing the fairness, reasonableness, and adequacy of a proposed settlement. Thus, the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico follows other courts within the First Circuit that have utilized a modified version of the Grinnell factors set forth by the Second Circuit and adopted by the Third Circuit. The modified Grinnell factors are: (1) risk, complexity, expense, and duration of the case; (2) comparison of the proposed settlement with the likely result of continued litigation; (3) reaction of the class to the settlement; (4) stage of the litigation and the amount of discovery completed; and (5) quality of counsel and conduct during litigation and settlement negotiations.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > General Overview

HN19[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

If only a small number of objections are received, that fact can be viewed as indicative of the adequacy of a settlement. However, while silence constitutes tacit consent to the settlement agreement, a lack of response from the class is typical. A substantial lack of response from absentee class members appears to be the norm rather than the exception. Potential objectors have an insufficient incentive to contest an unpalatable settlement agreement because the cost of contesting exceeds the objector's pro rata benefit.

Counsel: [1] For Century Packing Corp., Individually and on Behalf of all Others Similarly Situated, Plaintiff: H. Laddie Montague, Jr., Ruthanne Gordon, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Berger & Montague, PC, Philadelphia, PA; Maria D. Bertolez-Elvira, Nestor Mendez-Gomez, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Pietrantoni Mendez & Alvarez, San Juan, PR.

For Horizon Lines, LLC, Horizon Lines, LLC, Civ. 08-2095, Plaintiffs: Jose F. Sarraga-Venegas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jose F. Sarraga Law Office, San Juan, PR; Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR; Tiffany Rider-Rohrbaugh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, LLP, Washington, DC.

For All Plaintiffs, Plaintiff: John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San Juan, PR; Maria D. Bertolez-Elvira, Nestor Mendez-Gomez, Pietrantoni Mendez & Alvarez, San Juan, PR; PHV Richard P Rouco, PRO HAC VICE, Quinn, Connor, Weaver, Davies & Rouco, Birmingham, AL.

For V. Suarez, Inc., Plaintiff: Luis A. Oliver-Fraticelli, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fiddler Gonzalez & Rodriguez, P.S.C, San Juan, PR.

For Rona Distributors, Civ. 08-1531, Consol Plaintiff: Barbara J. Felt, PHV Scott W. Carlson, PHV Vincent J. Esades, [2] LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Heins Mills & Olson, PLC, Minneapolis, MN; David C. Indiano-Vicic, Jeffrey M. Williams-English, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Indiano & Williams, PSC, San Juan, PR; Dwayne L. Clark, Kristen Z. Watson, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Clark & Watson, P.A., Jacksonville, FL; John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San Juan, PR.

For La Esperanza Bus Line, Civ. 08-1525, Marina Electric Inc., Civ. 08-1555, Metro Plumbing, Inc., Civ. 08-1626, Consol Plaintiffs: Eric M. Quetglas-Jordan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Quetglas Law Office, San Juan, PR; PHV Richard P Rouco, PRO HAC VICE, Quinn, Connor, Weaver, Davies & Rouco, Birmingham, AL.

For Flexible Packaging Group, Civ. 08-1553, Consol Plaintiff: Eric M. Quetglas-Jordan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Quetglas Law Office, San Juan, PR; PHV Joe R Whatley Jr, PRO HAC VICE, Whatley, Drake & Kallas, LLC, New York, NY; PHV Richard P Rouco, PRO HAC VICE, Quinn, Connor, Weaver, Davies & Rouco, Birmingham, AL.

For La Rosa del Monte Express Inc., Civ. 08-1617, Consol Plaintiff: Eric M. Quetglas-Jordan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Quetglas Law Office, San Juan, PR; John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San Juan, PR; PHV Richard P Rouco, [3] PRO HAC VICE, Quinn, Connor, Weaver, Davies & Rouco, Birmingham, AL.

For CV Joints Specialties, Inc., Civ. 08-1618, Magic Transport, Inc., Civ. 08-2244, Consol Plaintiffs: Eric M. Quetglas-Jordan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Quetglas Law Office, San Juan, PR.

For Linde Gas Puerto Rico, Inc., Civ. 08-1665, Consol Plaintiff: David C. Indiano-Vicic, Jeffrey M. Williams-English, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Indiano & Williams, PSC, San Juan, PR.

For Vineland Fireworks Company, Inc., Civ. 08-2029, Consol Plaintiff: Don P. Foster, Lynette Santiago-Rivera, Sally Miller, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Klerh Harrison Harvey Branzburg & Ellers LLP, Philadelphia, PA; Eric Perez-Ochoa, LEAD ATTORNEY, Adsuar Muniz Goyco Seda & Perez Ochoa PSC, San Juan, PR; Mindee J. Reuben, Steven A. Asher, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Weinstein Kitchenoff & Asher LLC, Philadelphia, PA.

For Alaska Air & Sound Center, Inc., Civ. 08-1569, Fermax, Inc, Civ. 08-2260, Almacenes Arilope, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Comercial Don Benja, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Comercial Tortuguero, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Comercial Berrios, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Ferreteria Amador, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Ferreteria Berrios, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Ferreteria El Cerrillo, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Ferreteria [4] Solar El Almacigo, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Financiadora Caguas Comercial, Inc., Civ. 08-2260, Consol Plaintiffs: John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San Juan, PR.

For CC 1 Limited Partnership, Civ. 08-1901, Consol Plaintiff: John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San Juan, PR; Michael A. Hanzman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hanzman Gilbert LLP, Coral Gables, FL; Kevin Bruce Love, Criden & Love, South Miami, FL.

For Bacplas, Inc., Civ. 08-1902, Consol Plaintiff: John D. Radice, PRO HAC VICE, Linda P. Nussbaum, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Grant & Eisenhofer, P.A., New York, NY; Kevin Bruce Love, LEAD ATTORNEY, Criden & Love, South Miami, FL.

For Isaac Industries, Inc., Civ. 8-1903, Consol Plaintiff: Joseph W. Cotchett, Steven Williams, Stuart G. Gross, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Cotchett Pitre & McCarthy, Burlingame, CA; Michael Elliot Criden, LEAD ATTORNEY, Hanzman Criden & Love PA, South Miami, FL.

For Horizon International Shipping, Inc., Civ. 08-1908, Consol Plaintiff: Andres W. Lopez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Andres W. Lopez Law Office, San Juan, PR; John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San Juan, PR.

For Kamino International Transport, Inc., Civ. [5] 08-1989, Consol Plaintiff: Jay Brian Shapiro, Zachary Scott Bower, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Stearns Weaver Miller Weissler Alhadeff & Sitterson, Miami, FL; Seth Rich Gassman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cohen Milstein Sellers & Toll PLLC, New York, NY.

For Yoly Industrial Supply, Inc, Civ. 08-1900, Consol Plaintiff: Andres W. Lopez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Andres W. Lopez Law Office, San Juan, PR; Hollis L. Salzman, Kellie Lerner, Morissa R. Falk, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Labaton Sucharow LLP, New York, NY.

For Mayda Rodriguez, Civ. 08-2028, Consol Plaintiff: Archie C. Lamb, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Archie Lamb, LLC, Birmingham, AL; Joseph S. Silver, LEAD ATTORNEY, Silver & Agacinski, PA, Tampa, FL; PHV Richard P Rouco, PRO HAC VICE, Quinn, Connor, Weaver, Davies & Rouco, Birmingham, AL.

For Magazine Auto, Inc., Civ. 08-2026, Consol Plaintiff: Andres W. Lopez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Andres W. Lopez Law Office, San Juan, PR.

For X-Press Freight Forwarders, Inc., Civ. 08-2027 and Civ. 08-2095, Consol Plaintiff, Counter Claimant: Guillermo De-Guzman-Vendrell, LEAD ATTORNEY, De Guzman Law Offices, Counsel for Co-defendant Pipeliners, San Juan, PR; John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San [6] Juan, PR.

For Mayrsohn International Trading, Co., Civ. 08-1936, Consol Plaintiff: Benjamin D. Brown, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Cohen Milstein Seooers & Toll TOOC, Washington, DC; Douglas A. Millen, Steven A. Kanner, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Freed Kanner London & Millen LLC, Bannockburn, IL; Luis A. Oliver-Fraticelli, LEAD ATTORNEY, Fiddler Gonzalez & Rodriguez, P.S.C, San Juan, PR; PHV Michael D. Hausfeld, Patrick A. Tillou, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Milstein Hausfeld & Toll, PLLC, Washington, DC.

For Marie Francis Kent, Civ. 08-2030, Consol Plaintiff: Kevin Bruce Love, LEAD ATTORNEY, Criden & Love, South Miami, FL.

For Luis Freire, Div. of KMA Associates of Puerto Rico, Inc., Civ. 08-1926, Foam Pack, Inc., Civ. 08-1925, Combe Products, Inc., Civ. 08-2003, Consol Plaintiffs: Guillermo De-Guzman-Vendrell, LEAD ATTORNEY, De Guzman Law Offices, Counsel for Co-defendant Pipeliners, San Juan, PR.

For The Aaron Group, Civ. 08-1904, Consol Plaintiff: David C. Indiano-Vicic, LEAD ATTORNEY, Indiano & Williams, PSC, San Juan, PR; PHV Gerald J. Rodos, PHV Jeffrey B. Gittleman, PHV Mark A. Rosen, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Barrack, Rodos & Bacine, Philadelphia, PA.

For Sedeco Servicios [7] de Descuentos en Compra, Inc., Civ. 08-2001, Consol Plaintiff: Eric M. Quetglas-Jordan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Quetglas Law Office, San Juan, PR; Monique Guillemard-Noble, LEAD ATTORNEY, Nachman & Guillemard, PSC, San Juan, PR; PHV Bryan L. Clobes, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Cafferty Faucher LLP, Philadelphia, PA.

For Pedro Luciano, Civ. 08-1795, Consol Plaintiff: Hector E. Pedrosa-Luna, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Law Offices of Hector E. Pedrosa-Luna, San Juan, PR; Luis E. Minana, LEAD ATTORNEY, Luis E. Minana & Associates, San Juan, PR; PHV Amanda F. Lawrence, PHV David R. Scott, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP - CT, Colchester, CT; PHV Christopher Burke, PHV Kristen M Anderson, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP - CA, San Diego, CA; PHV Walter W. Noss, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott LLP - OH, Cleveland Heights, OH.

For Cliffstar Corporation, Civ. 08-2123, Consol Plaintiff: Alejandro Alvarez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Coral Gables, FL; Daniel E. Gustafson, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Gustafson Gluek PLLC, Minneapolis, MN; Elizabeth R. Odette, PRO HAC VICE, Joseph W. Bruckner, PRO HAC VICE, Richard A. Lockridge, PRO HAC VICE, Robert K. Shelquist, PRO HAC VICE, Lockridge [8] Grindal Nauen PLLP, Minneapolis, MN.

For Econocaribe, Inc., Civ. 08-2395, Consol Plaintiff: Edward M. Joffe, LEAD ATTORNEY, Michelle Lynn Mejia, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Sandler Travis & Rosenberg, The Waterford, Miami, FL; Kenneth N. Wolf, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Sandler Travis & Rosenberg, New York, NY; Robert J. Becerra, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Sandler Travis & Rosenberg, Miami, FL.

For Central Produce El Jibarito, Inc., Civ. 09-1096, Empresas Berrios, Inc., Civ. 09-1822, Consol Plaintiffs: Adrian Sanchez-Pagan, Jaime Sifre-Rodriguez, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Sanchez-Betances, Sifre & Munoz-Noya Law Offices, PSC, San Juan, PR.

For SGS Logistic Services, Inc., Civ. 09-1852, Consol Plaintiff: Jayne Arnold Goldstein, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Shepherd, Finkelman, Miller & Shah LLP, Weston, FL; Mark S. Fistos, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Aronovitz Trial Lawyers PA, Tallahassee, FL; Tod N. Aronovitz, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Aronovitz Law, Miami, FL.

For Alpha Freight & Transport International, Inc., Civ. 09-1851, Consol Plaintiff: Edward L. Birk, Michael B. Bittner, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Marks Gray, PA, Jacksonville, FL; Eric Chase Roberson, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, [9] McGuire Woods, LLP, Jacksonville, FL; Hollis L. Salzman, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Labaton Sucharow LLP, New York, NY; Michael I. Fistel, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Holzer, Holzer & Fistel, LLC, Atlanta, GA.

For Francisco J Rivera-Muniz, Consol Plaintiff: Jose A. Andreu-Garcia, LEAD ATTORNEY, Andreu & Sagardia Law Office, San Juan, PR; Jorge M. Torres-Gomez, Torres Gomez Law Offices, San Juan, PR.

For Mrs. Valerie Dapena-Disdier, Eduardo Ferrer-Bolivar, Eduardo Ferrer-Ramirez de Arellano, Consol Plaintiffs: Jorge M. Torres-Gomez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Torres Gomez Law Offices, San Juan, PR; Jose A. Andreu-Garcia, LEAD ATTORNEY, Andreu & Sagardia Law Office, San Juan, PR.

For Caribbean Produce Exchange, Inc., Civ. 10-1556, Consol Plaintiff: Hiram Martinez-Lopez, Hiram Martinez Law Office, San Juan, PR; Orlando H. Martinez-Echevarria, Orlando H. Martinez Echevarria PSC, San Juan, PR; Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR.

For Horizon Lines, Inc., Defendant: Angelo M. Russo, PHV Amy B. Manning, PHV Tammy L. Adkins, Richard J. Rappaport, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, McGuire Woods LLP, Chicago, IL; Carlos E. George-Iguina, Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, [10] LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR; PHV John M. Nannes, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Tiffany Rider-Rohrbaugh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Skadden Arps Slate Meagher & Flom LLP, Washington, DC; Francisco G. Bruno-Rovira, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR.

For Horizon Lines, LLC, Defendant: Angelo M. Russo, PHV Amy B. Manning, PHV Tammy L. Adkins, Richard J. Rappaport, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, McGuire Woods LLP, Chicago, IL; Carlos E. George-Iguina, Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR; Tiffany Rider-Rohrbaugh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, LLP, Washington, DC; Francisco G. Bruno-Rovira, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR.

For Sea Star Line, LLC, Defendant: Adam S. Paris, Emma Gilmore, George E. Pence, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Denis Schmidt, Sullivan & Cromwell, LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Carlos A. Rodriguez-Vidal, Mariana Negron-Vargas, Rossell Barrios-Amy, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Goldman Antonetti & Cordova, San Juan, PR; Jennifer L. Murray, PHV Nicolas Bourtin, Steven L. Holley, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Andrew J. Finn, PRO HAC VICE, Sullivan & Cromwell, LLP, New York, NY; Timothy Joseph Armstrong, LEAD [11] ATTORNEY, Armstrong & Mejer, Coral Gables, FL; Francisco G. Bruno-Rovira, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR.

For Trailer Bridge, Inc., Defendant: Alejandro J. Cepeda-Diaz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Francisco G. Bruno-Rovira, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR; Scott D Richburg, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Foley & Lardner, LLP, Jacksonville, FL.

For Crowley Maritime Corporation, Crowley Liner Services, Inc., Defendants: Andrew Zimmitti, Samuel Rosenthal, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Patton Boggs LLP, Washington, DC; Jose Ramon Rivera-Morales, Manolo T. Rodriguez-Bird, LEAD ATTORNEYS, William A. Graffam, Jimenez, Graffam & Lausell, San Juan, PR; Francisco G. Bruno-Rovira, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR.

For Horizon Lines of Puerto Rico, Inc., Defendant: Angelo M. Russo, PHV Amy B. Manning, PHV Tammy L. Adkins, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, McGuire Woods LLP, Chicago, IL; Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, Salvador J.

Antonetti-Stutts, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR; Carlos A. Rodriguez-Vidal, Goldman Antonetti & Cordova, San Juan, PR.

For Alexander G. Chisholm, Defendant: Celia A Howes, Ronald H Hoevet, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Hoevet Boise & Olson, PC, Portland, OR; Nilda M. Navarro-Cabrer, [12] LEAD ATTORNEY, Nilda M. Navarro Law Office, San Juan, PR.

For Gabriel Serra, Defendant: Brian P. Roche, Richard L. Reinish, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Seyfarth Shaw LLP, Chicago, IL.

For Kevin Gill, Defendant: Lori R. Keeton, Richard S. Glaser, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Parker Poe Adams & Bernstein LLP, Charlotte, NC.

For Gregory Glova, Defendant: PHV Jack M. Knight, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Winston & Strawn LLP, Charlotte, NC.

For Horizon Lines of Puerto Rico, Inc., Defendant: Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR; Francisco G. Bruno-Rovira, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR.

For Xpress Fright Forwarders, Inc., Ernesto Vilanova-Velez, Defendants, Counter Claimant: Guillermo De-Guzman-Vendrell, LEAD ATTORNEY, De Guzman Law Offices, Counsel for Co-defendant Pipeliners, San Juan, PR.

For Saltchuk Resources, Inc., Defendant: Harold D. Vicente-Gonzalez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Vicente & Cuebas, San Juan, PR; Harold D. Vicente-Colon, San Juan, PR.

For Leonard Shapiro, Defendant: Roberto Buso-Aboy, LEAD ATTORNEY, Buso Aboy Law Office, San Juan, PR.

For Horizon Lines of Puerto Rico, Inc., Consol Defendant: Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, [13] Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR.

For Horizon Logistics, LLC, Consol Defendant: Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR; Francisco G. Bruno-Rovira, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR.

For Ernesto Vilanova-Velez, Civ. 08-2095 also known as Ernesto Villalona, Consol Defendant: Guillermo De-Guzman-Vendrell, LEAD ATTORNEY, De Guzman Law Offices, Counsel for Co-defendant Pipeliners, San Juan, PR.

For JBA Transport & Logistics, Inc., Civ. 08-1729, Agustin Berastain, Consol Defendants: Arturo Diaz-Angueira, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cancio, Nadal, Rivera & Diaz, San Juan, PR; Elizabeth Del Pilar Villagrasa-Flores, Cancio, Nadal, Rivera & Daz, PSC, San Juan, PR.

For Call Rapido, LLC, Civ. 09-1849, Consol Defendant: Andrew Mitchell Schwartz, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Andrew M. Schwartz, Boca Raton, FL; Matthew Fornaro, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Boca Raton, FL.

For Suramya T. Atapattu, Civ. 09-1849, Consol Defendant: Andrew Mitchell Schwartz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Andrew M. Schwartz, Boca Raton, FL.

For United States of America, Intervenor: Michael L. Whitlock, LEAD ATTORNEY, United States Department of Justice, [14] Antitrust Division, Washington, DC.

For Banco Popular de Puerto Rico, Intervenor: Edelmiro Antonio Salas-Gonzalez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Urb. Villa Nevarez, San Juan, PR; Pedro E. Ruiz-Melendez, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pedro E. Ruiz Law Office, PSC, San Juan, PR.

For David C. Eddy, Intervenor: David C. Eddy, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Nexsen Pruet, LLC, Columbia, SC.

For INEOS USA LLC, INEOS Polyethylene North America and INEOS Polymers, Inc., Intervenor Plaintiff: Manuel Sosa-Baez, Saldana, Carvajal & Velez-Rive, PSC., San Juan, PR; Thomas T. Hutcheson, PRO HAC VICE, Tom Van-Arsdel, Winstead PC, Houston, TX.

For Linde Gas Puerto Rico, Inc., Interested Party: David C. Indiano-Vicic, LEAD ATTORNEY, Indiano & Williams, PSC, San Juan, PR; John F. Nevares, LEAD ATTORNEY, John F. Nevares & Assoc. PSC, San Juan, PR.

For Motorambar, Inc., Interested Party: Agustin Collazo-Mojica, LEAD ATTORNEY, Agustin Collazo Law Office, San Juan, PR.

For Various (Class Settlements), Interested Party: Ramon E. Dapena, San Juan, PR.

For Pan American Grain Co. Inc., Interested Party: Irma R. Valldejuli-Perez, San Juan, PR.

For Opt-Out Entities, Interested Party: John F. Malley-Vega, LEAD ATTORNEY, Malley Tamargo & Melendez-Sauri, [15] San Juan, PR.

For Horizon Lines, LLC, Counter Defendant: Angelo M. Russo, PHV Amy B. Manning, PHV Tammy L. Adkins, Richard J. Rappaport, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, McGuire Woods LLP, Chicago, IL; Carlos E. George-Iguina, Mauricio O. Muniz-Luciano, Salvador J. Antonetti-Stutts, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR; Jose F. Sarraga-Venegas, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jose F. Sarraga Law Office, San Juan, PR; Tiffany Rider-Rohrbaugh, LEAD ATTORNEY, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, LLP, Washington, DC.

Judges: DANIEL R. DOMÍNGUEZ , U.S. District Judge.

Opinion by: DANIEL R. DOMÍNGUEZ

Opinion

[*453] AMENDED OPINION AND ORDER

Following a criminal investigation by United States Department of Justice's Antitrust Division (the "DOJ"), Plaintiffs filed suit under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 3. [1] The instant case is comprised of a compilation of cases sent to this District Court to be handled as a multi-district litigation.

Plaintiffs represent a Class comprised of direct purchasers of waterborne cabotage between Puerto Rico and the United States, its territories and possessions. Plaintiffs purchased the cabotage from Defendants, companies that provide cabotage services and several individual officers of those companies.

[*454] Plaintiffs allege that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy to illegally fix waterborne cabotage prices [2] between the U.S. and Puerto Rico from May 1, 2002 to April 17, 2008. Defendants collectively controlled approximately 86% of the cabotage market during that time period. [3] Plaintiffs further assert that Defendants colluded by conspiring to allocate customers and rig bids to customers in addition to fixing their rates, surcharges and other fees. (Docket [17] No. 540-25). Pending before the Court is Lead Counsel for Plaintiffs' ("Lead Counsel") requests for an award of attorneys' fees, reimbursement of expenses and incentive award payments.

---

[1] The criminal investigation led to Horizon Lines, LLC pleading guilty to one count of price fixing in violation of the Sherman Act and five guilty pleas from former employees of the Horizon and Sea Star Defendants. See United States v. Horizon Lines, LLC, No. 3:11-CR-0071, Second Amended Judgment (D.P.R., [16] Apr. 28, 2011); United States v. Chisholm, No. 08-cr-00353, Plea Agreement (M.D. Fla., Oct. 20, 2008); United States v. Serra, No. 08-cr-00349, Plea Agreement (M.D. Fla., Oct. 20, 2008); United States v. Glova, No. 08-cr-00352, Plea Agreement (M.D. Fla., Oct. 20, 2008); United States v. Gill, No. 08-cr-00351, Plea Agreement (M.D. Fla., Oct. 20, 2008); and United States v. Baci, No. 08-cr-00350, Plea Agreement (M.D. Fla., Oct. 20, 2008).

[2] "Prices" in this context include both the negotiated costs of shipping and the various surcharges, such as fuel surcharges, imposed by cabotage providers.

[3] Horizon accounts for approximately 35% of the Puerto Rico cabotage market; Crowley and Sea Star account for approximately 30% and 21% of the market, respectively. Trailer Bridge, a Defendant that was ultimately dismissed from the instant matter (Docket No. 722), accounts for approximately 14% of the Puerto Rico cabotage market.

I. Procedural History

On August 25, 2010, the Court granted preliminary approval for the settlement reached with (1) Horizon Lines, Inc., Horizon Lines, LLC, Horizon Logistics Holdings, LLC, Horizon Logistics, LLC and Horizon Lines of Puerto Rico, Inc. (collectively, the "Horizon Defendants"); (2) Crowley Maritime Corp., Crowley Liner Services, Inc. (collectively, the "Crowley Defendants"); (3) Sea Star Line, LLC, American Shipping Group, Inc., Saltchuk Resources, Inc. and Leonard Shapiro (collectively, the "Sea Star Defendants"); [18] and (4) Alexander Chisholm [4] ("Chisholm"). (Docket No. 800). Therein, the Court concluded that the settlement negotiations were conducted at arm's length and that the parties were sufficiently informed by the limited discovery that occurred. In re Puerto Rican Cabotage Antitrust Litig., 269 F.R.D. 125 (D.P.R. 2010); (Docket Nos. 800 and 801).

The Horizon Settlement Agreement provides, inter alia, that the Horizon Defendants agreed to (1) pay $20,000,000 in cash to the Settlement Class; (2) offer Settlement Class Members (the "Class" or "Class Members") the option of freezing the base rates of any shipping contracts they have with the Horizon Defendants for two years, an option valued at $42.9 million; and (3) cooperate with Plaintiffs in litigating their claims against the remaining, non-settling Defendants. In return, Class Members agreed to release any claims [19] against the Horizon Defendants related to the purchases of Puerto Rican Cabotage.

The Crowley and Sea Star Settlement Agreements are substantially identical to the settlement reached with the Horizon Defendants. However, the Crowley Defendants agreed to pay $13,750,000 in cash to the Settlement Class and the value of the base rate freeze offered by Crowley is $38.9 million. The Sea Star Defendants similarly agreed to pay $18,500,000 in cash to the Settlement Class and offer a base rate freeze option valued at $23.2 million.

The Chisholm Settlement Agreement provides that in exchange for a release of certain claims, Chisholm agreed to cooperate with Plaintiffs in further litigation against non-settling Defendants. The agreement generally provides that Chisholm will (a) furnish certain documents, [*455] data, or other items potentially relevant to Plaintiffs' claims; (b) allow himself to be interviewed by Plaintiffs; (c) provide declarations and affidavits; and (d) provide a deposition and testify at trial.

Lead Counsel mailed the Class a Notice, dated August 25, 2010 (Docket No. 874-1), stating that Plaintiffs' attorneys' fees would be based upon the value of both the cash portion of the Settlements [20] and the value of non-cash, base-rate freeze option. The Notice further provides that counsel will only be compensated from the cash portion of the Settlements. [5]

On December 7, 2010, following a Final Fairness Hearing (Docket No. 876), the Court entered an Order (Docket No. 875) regarding final approval of the Crowley (Docket No. 680), Horizon (Docket No. 375), Sea Star (Docket No. 777) and Chisholm (Docket No. 597) Settlement Agreements (collectively, the "Settlement Agreements" or "Settlements"). In that filing, [21] the Court indicated that its previous concerns [6] regarding various aspects of the [4] Alexander Chisholm was the Assistant Vice President of Yield Management for Sea Star. On October 20, 2008, Chisholm, along with four other individuals, pled guilt to government charges that he destroyed evidence concealing the alleged conspiracy. United States v. Chisholm, No. 08-cr-00353, Plea Agreement (M.D. Fla. Oct. 20, 2008).

---

[5] Paragraph 16 of the Notice states that "payment of attorneys' fees [will] not [] exceed one third of the Horizon, Crowley and Sea Star Settlement Funds plus the value of the non-cash portion of the Settlements." Paragraph 8 of the Notice defines the terms "Horizon Settlement Fund," "Crowley Settlement Fund," and "Sea Star Settlement Fund" as the settlement amounts in cash to be paid by each of the settling defendants (Horizon, Crowley and Sea Star). Therefore, the notice is clear that attorneys' fees would be computed as a percentage of the total value of the settlement (including the value of the non-cash portion) and will be paid from the cash portion of the Settlements.

[6] Specifically, the Court had expressed concern "that the notices may have inadvertently misled Class Members to believe that they could select both the base rate freeze and the cash option." The Court also was concerned that the INEOS Objectors needed additional "time and information to ascertain whether the settlement was adequate as to them." Both of these concerns, Settlement Agreements had been assuaged during the Final Fairness Hearing. However, the Court declined to grant the motion for final approval of the Settlement Agreements (Docket No. 840) [7] as the Court harbored reservations regarding the attorneys' fees requested by Lead Counsel. [8] (Docket No. 839). The Court thus invited "Plaintiffs' Counsel to further brief the application of a 'percentage of the fund' approach to attorneys' fees in the instant case in light of the relevant jurisprudence regarding funds whose monetary value is difficult to determine." (Docket No. 875).

