> DHI Mortgage correctly notes the absence of an actionable duty between a lender and borrower in that loan transactions are arms-length and do not invoke fiduciary duties. Absent 'special circumstances' a loan transaction 'is at arms-length and there is no fiduciary relationship between the borrower and lender.' … Moreover, a lender 'owes no duty of care to the [borrowers] in approving their loan. Liability to a borrower for negligence arises [*57] only when the lender "actively participates" in the financed enterprise "beyond the domain of the usual money lender."' … '[A]s a general rule, a financial institution owes no duty of care to a borrower when the institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money.' …
> DHI Mortgage further notes the absence of a lender's duty to ensure a loan is suitable for a borrower. 'No such duty exists' for a lender 'to determine the borrower's ability to repay the loan … The lender's efforts to determine the creditworthiness and ability to repay by a borrower are for the lender's protection, not the borrower's.' Renteria v. United States, 452 F. Supp. 2d 910, 922-923 (D.Ariz.2006) (borrowers 'had to rely on their own judgment and risk assessment to determine whether or not to accept the loan').

See also *Abelyan v. OneWest Bank, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108140, 2009 WL 3784610 at 4 (C.D.Cal., Nov. 9, 2009):

> HN35[] To establish a claim under the 'fraudulent' prong of the UCL, a plaintiff must demonstrate that 'members of the public are likely to be deceived.' Williams v. Gerber Products Co., 523 F.3d 934, 938 (9th Cir.2008). The gravamen of plaintiff's claim is that [*58] defendant fraudulently failed to disclose all the terms of her loan. However, 'absent a duty to disclose, the failure to do so does not support a claim under the > fraudulent prong of the UCL.' Buller v. Sutter Health, et al., 160 Cal.App.4th 981, 987, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 47 (2008). In her complaint, plaintiff does not specifically allege any required duty to disclose on the part of defendant. Accordingly, the Court concludes that dismissal of plaintiff's UCL claim is appropriate.

Defendants also cite Nymark v. Heart Federal Savings & Loan Assn., supra, 231 Cal.App.3d at 1095-1096, 1099-1100. In Nymark, a property owner brought an action against a lending institution alleging negligence in the institution's appraisal of the property uses as security for a loan. The institution appraised the property and approved the loan, finding the property was in good condition. The owner subsequently discovered the property needed costly repairs. The Court of Appeals held:

> The parties have not identified, nor have we found, any California case specifically addressing whether a lender has a duty of care to a borrower in appraising the borrower's collateral to determine if it is adequate security for a loan. However, as a general [*59] rule, a financial institution owes no duty of care to a borrower when the institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money
> Here, defendant performed the appraisal of plaintiff's property in the usual course and scope of its loan processing procedures to protect defendant's interest by satisfying it that the property provided adequate security for the loan. The complaint does not allege, nor does anything in the summary judgment papers indicate, that the appraisal was intended to induce plaintiff to enter into the loan transaction or to assure him that his collateral was sound. Accordingly, in preparing the appraisal, defendant was acting in its conventional role as a lender of money to ascertain the sufficiency of the collateral as security for the loan. 'Normal supervision of the enterprise by the lender for the protection of its security interest in loan collateral is not "active participation" [in the financed enterprise beyond that of the ordinary role of a lender in a loan transaction.' … Thus, we conclude that defendant owed no duty of care to plaintiff in the preparation of the property appraisal.
> … [*60] In California, the test for determining whether a financial institution owes a duty of care to a borrower-client 'involves the balancing of various factors, among which are [1] the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, [2] the foreseeability of harm to him, [3] the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, [4] the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, [5] the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and [6] the policy of preventing future harm.' ….
> While it was foreseeable the appraisal might be considered by plaintiff in completing the loan transaction, the foreseeability of harm was remote. Plaintiff was in as good a position as, if not better position than, defendant to know the value and condition of the property. One who seeks financing to purchase real property has many means available to assess the property's value and condition, including comparable sales, advice from a realtor, independent appraisal, contractors' inspections, personal observation and opinion, and the like. Here, plaintiff already had purchased the house and had lived in it for two years, apparently without [*61] complaint, before applying to defendant for a refinancing loan. We believe it is not reasonably foreseeable that a borrower will be influenced to his or her detriment by an appraisal prepared by the lender for its own benefit because the borrower is in a position in which he or she knows or should know the value and condition of the property independent of the appraisal made for the lender's protection. Stated another way, the borrower should be expected to know that the appraisal is intended for the lender's benefit to assist it in determining whether to make the loan, and not for the purpose of ensuring that the borrower has made a good bargain, i.e., not to insure the success of the investment.

Plaintiffs argue that they have stated a claim upon which relief can be granted:

> Plaintiffs sufficiently allege how Defendants conducted fraudulent business practices likely to mislead and deceive the consumer, including Plaintiffs, with their teaser interest rates, inflation of property value, > misrepresentation as to affordability, misrepresentations as to true risk factors and costs of loans, unscrupulous incentivizing of brokers and agents to aggressively and deceptively market, and concealment [*62] of Defendants' system of transfer and securitization of the Plaintiffs' loans which offset BOA's liability and inflated Defendants' profitability while burdening Plaintiff [sic] with undue cost and risk. BOA is the originator and servicer of the loans, and PRLAP is the trustee per deed of trust. As the originator, BOA has full knowledge of the loan terms that these terms were inappropriate for the Subject Property and Plaintiffs' actual financial qualifications when BOA approved, closed, and serviced the loan [sic]. BOA also had full knowledge of how misleading, deceptive, and unduly risky the loans were for Plaintiffs. However, rather than warn Plaintiffs, BOA steered Plaintiffs into a Hybrid ARM loan originated from the stated income program because these loans were highly profitable, thereby perpetuating the misrepresentation that Plaintiffs were qualified for the loan. Most importantly, BOA and PRLAP had full knowledge of the profitability of the secondary securities market where the margin of profit was driven by indiscriminate volume and risky loans. This margin of profit was Defendants' only consideration when selling Plaintiff's loan [sic].

Defendants' motion to dismiss the [*63] Sixth Cause of Action is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND as to the "unfair" and "fraudulent" prongs of the UCL. Plaintiffs shall plead specific facts from which it may be inferred that Defendants owed a legal duty to Plaintiffs.

G. SEVENTH CAUSE OF ACTION FOR CIVIL CONSPIRACY.

After incorporating all preceding allegations, the Seventh Cause of Action alleges:

> 119. Defendants acted in concert and partnership with one another to commit the wrongful acts alleged in this Complaint. Defendants created this multi-party system and scheme in order to facilitate and perpetuate their unlawful profiteering through subprime residential home mortgage lending, on a national scale. Plaintiffs are merely two of many injured as a consequence of Defendants' systemized conduct.
> 120. Defendants knowingly participated in a conspiracy to violate laws protecting consumers, including Plaintiffs, from fraud and unfair competition. Specifically, this conspiracy related to the processing of loan applications in a manner that each defendant knew or should have known was malicious, wrongful, and unlawful. Defendants intentionally created and perpetuated risky loan products, including the loan package at issue in this [*64] action, and aggressively marketed their risky loan products to consumers. In their interactions with Plaintiffs concerning these risky loan products, Defendants, and each of Defendants, purposely concealed or failed to disclose their risky and dangerous nature, including the risks inherent in a Hybrid ARM that provided an initial 'teaser' interest rate and interest-only payments, coupled with a piggyback balloon loan, to Plaintiffs' detriment.
> 121. All Defendants turned a blind eye to this known fraud and to the risks inherent in the loans BoA originated because they all profited, and even now continue to profit off of such loans, despite their astronomical default and foreclosure rates.
> 122. Defendants' business relationships allowed Defendants to perpetuate and to expand this conspiracy, as they provided for one another the right to service, assign, sell, or otherwise transfer for a profit, which each defendant did, in turn, acquire.
> 123. Defendants' conspiracy included their collective efforts to profit through the securitization process, which was beneficial to all of Defendants because it both generated massive capital and allowed Defendants to shed credit risk from the likely failure [*65] of the underlying mortgage loans, including Plaintiffs'. Defendants often securitized their risky loan products themselves, that is they sold, purchased, aggregated, and issued securities based on the loans themselves. Defendants had strong incentives to securitize the loans quickly, and in fact the same corporate executives often signed off on securitization contracts as both the originator and purchaser of the same underlying mortgage loan.
> 124. Defendants' scheme was to profit through the securitization of their loans fed their motivation to commit the unlawful acts described herein. For example, in order for an asset-backed security to ostensibly satisfy Securities and Exchange Commission regulations, such a security may not contain non-performing loans and delinquent loans may not constitute 50% or more of the asset's pool on the date that pool is readied for sale. Because their risky loan products ultimately default at a rate exceeding 50%, Defendants needed to perpetually > originate more and more of such risky loans, including the loan package here at issue, in order to give a false impression of a lower delinquency rate.

Defendants move to dismiss the Seventh Cause of Action on [*66] the ground that civil conspiracy is not a cause of action, citing Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd, 7 Cal.4th 503, 510-511, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994):

> HN36[] Conspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration … By participation in a civil conspiracy, a coconspirator effectively adopts as his or her own the torts of other conspirators within the ambit of the conspiracy … In this way, a coconspirator incurs tort liability co-equal with the immediate tortfeasors.
> HN37[] Standing alone, a conspiracy does no harm and engenders no tort liability. It must be activated by the commission of an actual tort. "'A civil conspiracy, however atrocious, does not per se give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage.'"

Defendants assert that "[a]s the complaint does not otherwise allege a viable claim, these appendages have no body on which to hang, and so must be dismissed along with the rest of the complaint."

Because Defendants' motion to dismiss is granted with leave to amend, the motion to dismiss [*67] the Seventh Cause of Action is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND. HN38[] As to allegations of conspiracy, heightened pleading is required by Rule 9(b) when the object of the conspiracy is fraudulent. See Wasco Products v. Southwell Technologies, 435 F.3d 989, 991 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 817, 127 S. Ct. 83, 166 L. Ed. 2d 30 (2006) ("Based on these precedents and the plain language of Rule 9(b), we hold that under federal law a plaintiff must plead, at a minimum, the basic elements of a civil conspiracy if the object of the conspiracy is fraudulent."). As explained in Alfus v. Pyramid Technology Corp., 745 F.Supp. 1511, 1521 (N.D.Cal.1990):

> To survive a motion to dismiss, plaintiff must allege with sufficient factual particularity that defendants reached some explicit or tacit understanding or agreement … It is not enough to show that defendants might have had a common goal unless there is a factually specific allegation that they directed themselves towards the wrongful goal by virtue of a mutual understanding or agreement.

Plaintiffs have not satisfied the requirements of Rule 9(b) with regard to the Seventh Cause of Action. Defendants' motion to dismiss the Seventh Cause of Action is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

CONCLUSION

For [*68] the reasons stated:

1. Defendants' motion to dismiss is DENIED IN PART AND GRANTED IN PART WITH LEAVE TO AMEND as described above;

2. Counsel for Defendants shall prepare and lodge a form of order consistent with this Memorandum Decision within five (5) court days following service of this Memorandum Decision

2. Plaintiffs shall file a First Amended Complaint in accordance with the rulings herein within thirty (30) days of the filing date of the Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING-IN-PART AND DENYING-IN-PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS [10]; ORDER DENYING MOTION TO TRANSFER VENUE [24]

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Background

Plaintiff Wynne Systems Inc. filed a complaint against Defendants Mobile Storage Group, Inc. and Mobile Mini Inc. for breach of contract, quantum meruit, misappropriation of trade secrets, unfair competition, and conversion.

Plaintiff Wynne Systems is a software company that licenses two computer programs in dispute in this action. The "RentalMan" software is used by businesses in the equipment rental industry to assist in creating invoices, maintaining customer information, and coordinating equipment logistics. (Compl. 6.) The "InfoManager" software is used in "developing, [*2] marketing and implementing business intelligence software and services." (Compl. 6.)

Defendants Mobile Storage Group and Mobile Mini are in the business of providing portable storage container units and mobile offices.

B. The Dispute

On December 1, 1998, Wynne Systems licensed its RentalMan software to Defendant Mobile Storage Group. (Compl. 7.)

On September 30, 2003, Wynne Systems's predecessor-in-interest InfoManager licensed the InfoManager software to Defendant Mobile Storage Group. (Compl. 8.)

The crux of Wynne Systems's Complaint is that Mobile Storage Group and Mobile Mini merged in June 2008, and that following the merger, Mobile Mini began using Wynne Systems's software without Wynne Systems's permission. Wynne Systems alleges that, although Mobile Storage Group had a license to use the RentalMan software and InfoManager software, Mobile Mini did not have a license to use either piece of software.

Wynne Systems therefore alleges that Mobile Mini is using the RentalMan and InfoManager software without Wynne Systems's authorization, and that Mobile Storage Group transferred that software to Mobile Mini in violation of the licensing agreements between Mobile Storage Group and Wynne [*3] Systems.

On the basis of these three interrelated facts — (1) the licensing agreements between Wynne Systems and Mobile Storage Group, (2) the subsequent merger between Mobile Storage Group and Mobile Mini, and (3) Mobile Mini's subsequent use of the RentalMan and InfoManager software — Wynne Systems has filed six causes of action:

(1) breach of contract against Mobile Storage Group for transferring the RentalMan software to Mobile Mini without authorization and by breaching confidentiality conditions of the contract;

(2) breach of contract against Mobile Storage Group for transferring the InfoManager software to Mobile Mini without authorization and by breaching confidentiality conditions of the contract;

(3) quantum meruit against Mobile Mini for wrongfully obtaining an economic benefit at Wynne Systems's expense;

(4) misappropriation of trade secrets:

(a) against Mobile Storage Group for disclosing Wynne Systems's trade secrets to Mobile Mini, and

(b) against Mobile Mini for using Wynne Systems's trade secrets without authorization;

(5) unfair competition:

(a) against Mobile Mini for illegally receiving and using the software and other confidential information without Wynne Systems's authorization, [*4] and

(b) against Mobile Storage Group for breaching the software licensing contracts and disclosing Wynne Systems's secret information;

(6) conversion against both Mobile Mini and Mobile Storage Group for assuming control over Wynne Systems's confidential software for the benefit of Mobile Mini and Mobile Storage Group, and to the detriment of Wynne Systems.

Wynne Systems requests approximately $68,000 or more with respect to the RentalMan software, $14,000 with respect to the InfoManager software, and injunctive relief, punitive damages, and attorneys' fees with respect to the tort causes of action.

II. MOTION TO DISMISS

A. LEGAL STANDARD

In order to comply with the notice pleading standards of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a), a plaintiff's complaint "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. A complaint that offers mere "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will [*5] not do." Id.; see also Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009) (citing Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1951).

Generally, the Court's analysis is limited to the contents of the complaint. See Schneider v. Cal. Dept. Of Corrections, 151 F.3d 1194, 1197 n.1 (9th Cir. 1998) (citations omitted). However, "[w]hen a plaintiff has attached various exhibits to the complaint, those exhibits may be considered in determining whether dismissal [i]s proper." Parks School of Business, Inc. v. Symington, 51 F.3d 1480, 1484 (9th Cir. 1995) (citation omitted); see also United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 907 (9th Cir. 2003).

Under Rule 15(a), a plaintiff has a right to amend the complaint once as a matter of course, but this right "terminates 21 days after service of a motion under 12(b), (e), or (f)," or by service of a responsive pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(1)(B) & cmt. to 2009 Amendment. Once this period expires, the plaintiff may only amend with the court's permission. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). "Five factors are frequently used to assess the propriety of a motion for leave to amend: (1) bad faith, (2) undue delay, (3) prejudice to the opposing party, (4) futility of amendment; and (5) whether plaintiff has previously amended his complaint." Allen v. City of Beverly Hills, 911 F.2d 367, 373 (9th Cir. 1990) (citing Ascon Properties, Inc. v. Mobil Oil Co., 866 F.2d 1149, 1160 (9th Cir. 1989)).

B. DISCUSSION

Defendants filed a Motion to Dismiss certain causes of action for various theories. For clarity, each cause of action will be addressed individually.[1]

(1) breach of contract against Mobile Storage Group for transferring the RentalMan software to Mobile Mini without authorization [*6] and by breaching confidentiality conditions of the contract

Defendants do not challenge the sufficiency of this cause of action.

(2) breach of contract against Mobile Storage Group for transferring the InfoManager software to Mobile Mini without authorization and by breaching confidentiality conditions of the contract

Defendants argue that this cause of action fails because Wynne Systems has been paid for the 2003 InfoManager license.

Defendants attach to their Motion a "Sale Agreement/Invoice" from November 23, 2009, and a "Purchase Order" from December 14, 2009. (Mot. Ex. 1.) Defendants assert that these documents are properly considered with respect to the Motion to Dismiss because Plaintiffs attached to the Complaint a copy of the 2003 InfoManager licensing contract.

According to Defendants, it is appropriate to consider the "Sale Agreement/Invoice" and "Purchase Order" under the rule that "Ninth Circuit law permits the Court to consider documents not specifically incorporated by reference [into the complaint] if the 'plaintiff's claim depends on the contents of the document, the defendant attaches the document to its motion to dismiss, and the parties do not dispute the authenticity [*7] of the document, even though the plaintiff does not explicitly allege the contents of that document in the complaint.'" (Mot. at 12, quoting Zella v. E.W. Scripps Co., 529 F. Supp. 2d 1124, 1131 (C.D. Cal. 2007) (quoting Knievel v. ESPN, 393 F.3d 1068, 1076 (9th Cir. 2005)).

[1] Following the parties' lead, the Court analyzes the causes of action under California law. However, the parties are on notice that the tort claims at issue in this case present potentially difficult conflict-of-law issues, and they should either stipulate as to the applicable law or be prepared to fully litigate the matter. (The contract claims, in contrast, appear to be governed by choice-of-law clauses: one agreement is governed by California law, the other by Texas law.)

In its Opposition, Wynne Systems disputes the authenticity of the "Sale Agreement/Invoice" and "Purchase Order," and properly points out that its Complaint does not "depend[] on the contents of th[os]e document[s]." See Zella, 529 F. Supp. 2d at 1131.

The Court agrees with Wynne Systems. This is not a situation in which the plaintiff alleges the existence of a contract and the defendant, on the motion to dismiss, provides a copy of the contract for the court's consideration. Rather, the documents attached to the Motion to Dismiss are completely extrinsic to the Complaint and the documents discussed in the Complaint.

This issue is improper for adjudication on a Motion to Dismiss. The breach of contract cause of action adequately pleads a claim for which relief may be granted.

(3) quantum meruit against Mobile Mini for wrongfully obtaining an economic benefit at Wynne Systems's expense

Defendants argue that this cause of action fails because Wynne Systems has in fact been paid for the 2003 InfoManager license. (Mot. at 11-12.) Further, Defendants argue that Mobile Mini [*8] has the right to use the 1998 RentalMan license "by virtue of the Mobile Storage acquisition." (Mot. at 13.)

Both of these arguments rely on facts outside the Complaint. For the reasons set forth with respect to the second cause of action, Defendants' arguments fail to show Plaintiff is not entitled to relief on the quantum meruit claim.

Further, to the extent that Defendants assert that the Mobile Mini is permitted to use the licensing agreement entered into by Mobile Storage Group, this argument requires detailed consideration of the mechanics of the Mobile Mini-Mobile Storage Group merger and /or acquisition.[2] Those details are not presently before the Court, and are not a proper basis for a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

(4) misappropriation of trade secrets against Mobile Storage Group for disclosing Wynne Systems's trade secrets to Mobile Mini, and against Mobile Mini for using Wynne Systems's trade secrets without authorization

Defendants assert that Wynne Systems's trade secret misappropriation claim fails to state sufficient facts to satisfy the Rule 8 pleading requirements as interpreted by Twombly v. Bell Atlantic and Iqbal v. Ashcroft. Defendants claim that Wynne Systems merely recites [*9] the elements of the cause of action without first establishing "how its software programs actually constitute trade secrets." (Mot. at 8.)

[2] In the Complaint, Wynne Systems tends to view the transaction as a merger, in which Mobile Mini and Mobile Storage Group became a single legal entity. Specifically, the Complaint alleges that "Mobile Storage Group . . . and Mobile Mini merged," and "[b]y virtue of the merger . . . Mobile Storage Group ceased to exist as an entity." (Compl. 11.)

In the Motion to Dismiss, Defendants characterize the transaction as an acquisition by Mobile Mini of Mobile Storage Group: "Mobile Mini acquired Mobile Storage Group, Inc. on June 27, 2008. Through the transaction, Mobile Storage retained its individual legal status and became a subsidiary of Mobile Mini." (Motion to Dismiss at 1.)

The Court previously determined for jurisdictional purposes that both Mobile Mini and Mobile Storage are Delaware corporations, thus adopting Defendants' characterization of the transaction. However, for purposes of the present Motion, the Court must take the factual allegations of the Complaint as true.

Contrary to Defendants' argument, Wynne's Complaint adequately alleges that the software programs were trade secrets. It is well-established that computer programs can constitute trade secrets under California law. See, e.g., MAI Systs. Corp. v. Peak Comp., Inc., 991 F.2d 511, 522 (9th Cir. 1993) ("computer software can qualify for trade secret protection under the UTSA"). In order to constitute a trade secret under California law, computer software must "(1) Derive[] independent economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known to the public or to other persons who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use; and (2) [Be] the subject of efforts that are reasonable under the circumstances to maintain its secrecy." Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.1(d)(1)-(2).

Wynne alleges that its software licenses prohibited licensees from transferring the software or related training manuals to third parties without Wynne's permission. (Compl. P 41, 42, 44.) Wynne also alleges that Wynne undertook efforts to limit access to the software, for example by limiting Wynne's employees' access to the software, installing security systems, and informing its [*10] employees that internal information was confidential and proprietary. (Compl. P 45.) Wynne further alleges that its software derived economic value from being secret - namely, because if the software were freely available to third parties, Wynne would be unable to generate licensing fees from the software. (See Compl. PP 45, 47, 48.)

These factual allegations provide a sufficient basis for concluding that Wynne's software (1) derives independent economic value from its secrecy, and (2) is the subject of reasonable efforts to maintain secrecy. Wynne has done more than simply reciting the elements of the cause of action. Wynne has alleged sufficient facts to establish the existence of a trade secret under California law.

(5) unfair competition against Mobile Mini for illegally receiving and using the software and other confidential information without Wynne Systems's authorization, and against Mobile Storage Group for breaching the software licensing contracts and disclosing Wynne Systems's secret information

Defendants argue that Wynne "fails to identify the acts of Mobile Storage and Mobile Mini that it believes are prohibited by § 17200, much less why it believes the acts are unlawful, unfair, [*11] or fraudulent." (Mot. at 9.) Defendants further argue that the Unfair Competition claim is superseded by the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act. (Mot. at 14-15.)

Wynne's unfair competition cause of action is premised on (1) Mobile Mini's "receipt and use" of the software, which allowed Mobile Mini "to gain an economic advantage at Wynne Systems' expense," and (2) Mobile Storage Group's breach of its contract obligation not to disclose or transfer the software to third parties or to use such information for its own benefit." (Compl. P 54.)

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 "broadly prohibit[s] unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent business acts. Unlawful acts are anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law[,] be it civil, criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made. . . . Unfair acts among competitors means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the spirit or policy of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. Finally, fraudulent acts are ones where members of the public are likely to be [*12] deceived." Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAV Corp., 517 F.3d 1137, 1151-52 (9th Cir. 2008) (citations and quotations omitted).

Wynne Systems's Complaint alleges that Mobile Mini's "receipt and use" of the software was "illegal," that Mobile Systems Groups's transfer of the software was one act "among other illegal acts," and that such conduct "constitute[s] unfair competition in violation of California's Unfair Competition Laws." (Compl. P 54.)

As a whole, the Unfair Competition cause of action does not identify any conduct taken by Defendants other than the conduct alleged to constitute breach of contract, unjust enrichment, misappropriation of trade secret, and conversion. Such conclusory assertions fail to state a viable cause of action under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

A breach of contract alone cannot constitute an "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent" business practice. Sybersound Records, 517 F.3d at 1152 (citations omitted). That is because "[c]ontractual duties are voluntarily undertaken by the parties to the contract, not imposed by state or federal law." *Boland, Inc. v. Rolf C. Hagen (USA) Corp., 685 F. Supp. 2d 1094, 2010 WL 493422, at 13 (E.D. Cal. 2010) (quoting Smith v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 135 Cal. App. 4th 1463, 1484, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 653 (2005)). Thus, to constitute an unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business practice for purposes of § 17200, the breach of contract must be "independently unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent." Sybersound, 517 F.3d at 1152 (emphasis added).

Likewise, a trade-secret misappropriation claim alone cannot constitute [*13] an "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent" business practice unless the misappropriation involves wrongful acts extending beyond mere misappropriation. K.C. Multimedia, Inc. v. Bank of America Technology & Operations, Inc., 171 Cal. App. 4th 939, 961-62, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 247 (2009) (citing Digital Envoy, Inc. v. Google, Inc., 370 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1034-35 (N.D. Cal. 2005)). That is because California's trade secret statute provides the exclusive remedy for trade secret misappropriation claims. K.C. Multimedia, 171 Cal. App. 4th at 954-58 (analyzing Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7); see also *Silvaco Data Systems v. Intel Corp., 184 Cal. App. 4th 210, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27, 2010 WL 1713241, at 13-15 (Cal. App. 2010) (same).[3] As a result, the Trade Secrets Act broadly supersedes other "claims that are based on the same nucleus of facts as the misappropriation of trade secrets claim for relief." K.C. Multimedia, 171 Cal. App. 4th at 958; see also *Gabriel Technologies Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., No. 08cv1992-MMA(POR), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98379, 2009 WL 3326631, at 11 (S.D.Cal. Sept. 3, 2009) ("The preemption inquiry for those causes of action not specifically exempted by § 3426.7(b) focuses on whether other claims are no more than a restatement of the same operative facts supporting trade secret misappropriation. . . . If there is no material distinction between the wrongdoing alleged in a UTSA claim and that alleged in a different claim, the UTSA preempts the other claim."). Applying this principle, courts routinely hold that § 17200 unfair competition claims are "superseded" by the Trade Secrets Act. E.g., K.C. Multimedia, 171 Cal. App. 4th at 961-62 ("appellant's statutory unfair competition claim rests squarely on its factual allegations of trade secret misappropriation. As a legal [*14] basis for its unfair competition claim, appellant asserts a violation of CUTSA. As a factual basis for its claim, appellant alleges the same conduct that gives rise to trade secrets claim. That being so, this claim is also preempted.") (citations omitted); *Gabriel Technologies, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98379, 2009 WL 3326631, at 12 ("Plaintiffs' statutory unfair competition claim rests squarely on the factual allegations of trade secret misappropriation. Plaintiffs allege the same conduct that gives rise to the trade secrets claim. That being so, this claim is also preempted."); Digital Envoy, 370 F. Supp. 2d at 1035 ("California's [Trade Secrets] statute . . . preempts Digital's claims for unfair competition and unjust enrichment since those claims are based on the same nucleus of facts as the misappropriation of trade secrets claim for relief.").[4]

Here, Wynne Systems has not pleaded any facts establishing that Mobile Storage Group's conduct was independently "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent" so as to state an unfair competition claim. The Complaint avers that Mobile Storage Group's conduct either breached the parties' licensing contracts and/or constituted misappropriation of trade secrets. As discussed above, neither breach of contract nor misappropriation of trade [*15] secret constitutes an "unlawful" or "unfair" business practice for purposes of § 17200. Wynne Systems therefore fails to [3] It should be noted that the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act does not supersede contract-based causes of action. The Act specifically refrains from superseding "contractual remedies, whether or not based upon misappropriation of a trade secret." Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7(b)(1).

It should also be noted that, while the caselaw tends to characterize the Trade Secrets Act as "preempting" other causes of action, "[t]he [California] Supreme Court has criticized the use of 'preempt' to describe the supersession of one state law by another." *Silvaco Data Syst., 184 Cal. App. 4th 210, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27, 2010 WL 1713241, at 13 n.14 (quoting Zengen, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 41 Cal.4th 239, 247 n.5, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240, 158 P.3d 800 (2007)). The Court of Appeal has therefore stated its preference for the term "supersede" rather than "preempt." Id.

[4] To the extent that Wynne Systems's Unfair Competition claim is premised on the unlawful act of conversion, the Court finds that the conversion cause of action is superseded by the trade secret misappropriation cause of action. (See infra.) The unfair competition claim is therefore superseded by the Trade Secrets Act to the extent that the unfair competition claim is premised on a superseded conversion claim. See, e.g., *Gabriel Technologies, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98379, 2009 WL 3326631, at 12-13 (dismissing conversion and unfair competition causes of action where both were premised on misappropriation of trade secrets).

state a claim under § 17200 for which relief may be granted. To the extent that Wynne Systems alleges that Mobile Storage Group engaged in "other illegal acts" (Compl. 54), this bare legal conclusion is insufficient to satisfy the Rule 8 pleading requirements as construed in Twombly and Iqbal.

Likewise, Wynne Systems has not pleaded any facts establishing that Mobile Mini's conduct was independently "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent" sufficient to state an unfair competition claim. The Complaint simply avers that Mobile Mini "recei[ved] and use[d]" Wynne Systems's software without its permission. (Compl. 54.) The Complaint's discussion of "receipt and use" of software is in fact a claim for misappropriation of trade secrets. As discussed above, § 17200 claim may not be premised on misappropriation of trade secrets, and Wynne Systems therefore fails to state a § 17200 for which relief may be granted. To the extent that Wynne Systems baldly alleges that that Mobile Mini's conduct was "illegal" (Compl. 54), this bare legal conclusion is insufficient to satisfy the Rule 8 pleading requirements as construed in [*16] Twombly and Iqbal.

Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the cause of action under California's Unfair Competition Law is GRANTED. Furthermore, because Wynne Systems has not identified how it would seek to amend this claim -- and, indeed, because Wynne Systems insists that "no details have been omitted" from this claim (Opp. at 7) --- Wynne Systems may not amend this cause of action.

(6) conversion against both Mobile Mini and Mobile Storage Group for assuming control over Wynne Systems's confidential software for the benefit of Mobile Mini and Mobile Storage Group, and to the detriment of Wynne Systems

"The elements of a conversion are the plaintiff's ownership or right to possession of the property at the time of the conversion; the defendant's conversion by a wrongful act or disposition of property right; and damages." Oakdale Village Group v. Fong, 43 Cal. App. 4th 539, 543-544, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810 (1996). Conversion applies with equal force to intangible property as well as to tangible property, provided that the intangible property satisfies a three-part test for determining if a property right exists: "First, there must be an interest capable of precise definition; second, it must be capable of exclusive possession or control; and third, the putative owner must have established [*17] a legitimate claim to exclusivity." Kremen v. Cohen, 337 F.3d 1024, 1030 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting G.S. Rasmussen & Assocs., Inc. v. Kalitta Flying Serv., Inc., 958 F.2d 896, 903 (9th Cir. 1992)).

Defendants argue that the conversion cause of action is barred by the economic loss rule to the extent that the conversion is premised on a breach of contract. (Mot. at 5.) Defendants further argue that the conversion cause of action is superseded by the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 3426.7(b). (Mot. at 14-16.) Defendants' arguments are sound.

Under the economic loss rule, a party may not recover in tort for economic harms that flow from breaches of contractually-owed duties. The economic loss rule provides:

> Where a purchaser's expectations in a sale are frustrated because the product he bought is not working properly, his remedy is said to be in contract alone, for he has suffered only 'economic' losses. This doctrine hinges on a distinction drawn between transactions involving the sale of goods for commercial purposes where economic expectations are protected by commercial and contract law, and those involving the sale of defective products to individual consumers who are injured in a manner which has traditionally been remedied by resort to the law of torts. The economic loss rule requires a purchaser to recover in contract for purely [*18] economic loss due to disappointed expectations, unless he can demonstrate harm above and beyond a broken contractual promise. Quite simply, the economic loss rule prevents the law of contract and the law of tort from dissolving one into the other.

Robinson Helicopter Co. v. Dana Corp., 34 Cal. 4th 979, 988, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 (2004) (citations, quotations, and alterations omitted).

As can be inferred from the California Supreme Court's summary of the economic loss rule, the rule most often arises in the products liability context. In products liability cases, the plaintiff may recover only in contract if he has suffered economic harms; however, if he suffers physical harms, he may bring a tort action.

The economic loss rule has been applied to conversion claims in addition to products liability torts. In cases involving conversion causes of action, courts turn to the economic loss rule to bar conversion claims that are based solely on breaches of contractual duties. The basic principle at issue in such cases is that "[c]onduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only when it also violates an independent duty arising from principles of tort law. In other words, an omission to perform a contract obligation is never a tort, unless that omission is also an omission [*19] to perform a legal duty." *McGehee v. Coe Newnes/McGehee ULC, No. C 03-5145 MJJ, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32786, 2004 WL 2452855, at 2 (N.D.Cal. Feb. 10, 2004) (citations and quotations omitted).

A useful example of this principle can be found in Textainer Equipment Management (U.S.) Ltd. v. TRS. Inc., No. C 07-01519 WHA, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47527, 2007 WL 1795695 (N.D. Cal. June 20, 2007). In Textainer, the parties had entered a lease agreement in which the plaintiff leased shipping containers to the defendant. The plaintiff discovered that the defendant had sold some of the containers to a third party. *2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47527 at 1. The court held that the plaintiff had stated a viable claim for both breach of contract and conversion. The court explained that the economic loss rule did not bar the conversion claim because the defendant "had an independent duty not to misappropriate the containers. This duty existed outside the contract." *2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47527 at 3.

Textainer is generally applicable to the present case. As Wynne Systems correctly points out, Defendants owed Wynne a non-contractual duty not to misappropriate the RentalMan and InfoManager software. This duty existed separate and independent from Defendants' obligations under the licensing agreements.[5]

That said, Wynne Systems is hoisted on its own petard. It is true, as Wynne urges [*20] the Court to conclude, that Defendants owed a duty not to misappropriate the software. However, this duty exists solely under the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act, and, as is noted supra, the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act provides for the exclusive tort-based cause of action for misappropriation of trade secrets. Courts uniformly hold that conversion causes of action are barred where the underlying act involves interference with or misappropriation of information protected by the Trade Secrets Act. See, e.g., *Silvaco Data Syst., 184 Cal. App. 4th 210, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27, 2010 WL 1713241, at 17-18; *Gabriel Technologies, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98379, 2009 WL 3326631, at 12; *AirDefense, Inc. v. AirTight Networks, Inc., No. C 05-04615JF, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55364, 2006 WL 2092053, at 6 (N.D. Cal. July 26, 2006); *Hirel Contractors, Inc. v. United States, No. CV 01-11069 DSF (VBKx), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31036, 2004 WL 5639770, at 26 (C.D. Cal. Jan. 23, 2004).

Accordingly, because Wynne's Complaint is premised on Defendants' misappropriation of Wynne's proprietary and confidential software, which, as discussed supra is protected by the California Trade Secrets Act, Wynne's conversion cause of action is "superseded" by the Trade Secrets Act.[6] [5] It should be noted in this respect that, as stated in the Complaint, only Defendant Mobile Storage Group entered into a contractual relationship with Plaintiff Wynne Systems. Because Mobile Mini and Wynne did not have a contractual relationship, the economic loss rule is entirely inapplicable to Wynne's causes of action against Mobile Mini.

[6] Further, the Court has sua sponte identified two other reasons that the Complaint fails to state a viable conversion claim. (Because these issues were not raised in the parties' briefings, the Court wishes to emphasize that these theories are not the basis for the Court's holding.) To the extent that Wynne Systems seeks to premise its conversion claim on an intangible property right to its software aside from its rights under the Trade Secrets Act, Wynne Systems's Complaint fails to allege sufficient facts (per Twombly and Iqbal) to show that such an intangible property right exists under the Ninth Circuit's three-part test. See Kremen, 337 F.3d at 1030; G.S. Rasmussen, 958 F.2d at 903.

Also, even if Wynne Systems had satisfied the governing three-part test for establishing intangible property rights, the conversion claim would be preempted by the Copyright Act. See Firoozye v. Earthlink Network, 153 F. Supp. 2d 1115, 1129-30 (N.D. Cal. 2001) (in dispute involving alleged conversion of computer software, holding that elements of claim for conversion of

In summary, Wynne's cause of action for conversion is (1) barred by the economic loss rule to the extent that it is based on the alleged breach of Mobile Storage [*21] Group's breach of contract, (2) superseded by the California Trade Secret Act to the extent it is based on the alleged misappropriation of Wynne's proprietary information protected by the Trade Secrets Act. Defendants' Motion is accordingly GRANTED.

C. CONCLUSION RE: MOTION TO DISMISS

In sum: the breach of contract claims are viable; the unjust enrichment claim is viable; the trade secrets claim is viable; the unfair competition claim must be dismissed; and the conversion claim must be dismissed.

III. MOTION TO TRANSFER

A. BACKGROUND

Defendants seek to transfer the action to the District of Arizona. Defendants are both headquartered in Arizona. Plaintiff is headquartered in California.

Notably, the RentalMan agreement contains a forum-selection clause calling for any disputes to be resolved within Los Angeles County. Although the forum-selection clause is not dispositive, it places a thumb on the scale in favor of retaining the case. Defendants have not identified sufficiently compelling reasons for transferring the action to Arizona.

> In full, the RentalMan Agreement's forum selection clause states: All claims or disputes regarding the breach or interpretation of, or arising from or relating [*22] to the Agreement shall be determined under the applicable Federal laws and/or the laws of the State of California, and shall be venued in the State of California, County of Los Angeles.

(Pl.'s Opp. Ex. A, P 10.4.) The other contract (the InfoManager Agreement) does not contain a forum selection clause.

B. LEGAL STANDARD

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1404(a) "[f]or the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought." Whether to grant transfer is within the sound discretion of the court and is determined on an individualized basis. Vu v. Ortho-McNeil Pharm., Inc., 602 F. Supp. 2d 1151, 1155 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (citing Jones v. GNC Franchising, Inc., 211 F.3d 495, 498-99 (9th Cir. 2000)).

In addressing a motion to transfer venue, the moving party must make "a strong showing of inconvenience to warrant upsetting [the plaintiff's] choice of forum." Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 805 F.2d 834, 843 (9th Cir. 1986) (emphasis added).

The factors considered in the analysis include: (1) convenience of witnesses; (2) convenience of parties; (3) ability to compel attendance of non-party witnesses; (4) contacts with the forum relating to the causes of action and the intangible property under California law are identical to elements of claim for copyright infringement under Federal law, and are therefore preempted by the Copyright Act); *Meridian Project Syst., Inc. v. Hardin Const. Co., LLC, No. CIV. S-04-2728 FCD DAD, 2006 U.S .Dist. LEXIS 34092, 2006 WL 1062070, at 3-4 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 21, 2006) (same); see also Doody v. Penguin Group (USA) Inc., 673 F. Supp. 2d 1144, 1164-65 (D. Haw. 2009) (collecting cases); *Apparel Business Syst., LLC v. Tom James Co., No. 06-1092, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26313, 2008 WL 858754, at 18 n.9 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 28, 2008) ("Most courts that have addressed the [copyright preemption] question have found such software conversion claims preempted.") (collecting cases).

forum's interest in the action; (5) ease of access to sources of proof; (6) differences in litigation costs; (7) the preliminary stage of [*23] litigation; and (8) relative docket congestion. Jones, 211 F.3d at 498-99. Additional considerations include the location where any agreements were negotiated and executed; forum selection clause; and plaintiff's choice of forum. Id.

A forum selection clause is presumptively valid. Hendricks v. Bank of America, N.A., 408 F. 3d 1127, 1137 (9th Cir. 2005) ("we presume that the shareholder agreement's forum selection clause is prima facie valid and enforceable . . ."); see also Ingenieria Alimentaria Del Matatipac, S.A. de C.V.v. Ocean Garden, 320 Fed. Appx. 549, 549 (9th Cir. 2009) (citable pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 32.1) (citing Murphy v. Schneider Nat'l, Inc., 362 F.3d 1133, 1140 (9th Cir. 2004)). The party challenging the validity of a forum selection clause bears a "heavy burden of proof" and must "clearly show that enforcement would be unreasonable and unjust." Ingenieria Alimentaria, 320 Fed. Appx. at 549 (quoting M/S Bremen v. Zapata Off Shore Co., 407 U.S. 1, 15, 17, 92 S.Ct. 1907, 32 L.Ed.2d 513 (1972)); see also Argueta v. Banco Mexicano, S.A., 87 F.3d 320, 325 (9th Cir. 1996) ("Although Bremen is an admiralty case, its standard has been widely applied to forum selection clauses in general.").

Here, Defendants have not identified any basis for ignoring the forum-selection clause as a matter of contract law. Accordingly, it is valid and must be taken into account in deciding whether to transfer the case.

A summary inquiry into the relevant factors reveals that the action must remain in California.

(1) convenience of witnesses

Plaintiffs assert that their witnesses are located in California; Defendants assert that their witnesses are located in Arizona. Defendants [*24] provide more factual detail about their witnesses than Plaintiff does, and Defendants further identify one witness who is not an employee of either party and thus would not be subject to the compulsory process of the Central District.

Because Defendants have shown that one of their witnesses might be unavailable for trial, this factor weighs slightly in favor of transferring the action to Arizona.

(2) convenience of parties

Plaintiffs are located in California, Defendants in Arizona. This factor is neutral.

(3) ability to compel attendance of non-party witnesses

As noted with respect to the first factor (convenience of witnesses), this factor weighs slightly in Defendants' favor.

(4) contacts with the forum relating to the causes of action and the forum's interest in the action

California has an interest in ensuring that harms to its citizens are remedied in California courts. Furthermore, California has an interest in having its laws applied in California-based courts. (The RentalMan agreement contains a California choice-of-law clause; the InfoManager contains a Texas choice-of-law clause.)

On the other hand, the alleged wrongful acts flowing from Mobile Mini's acquisition of Mobile Storage [*25] occurred in Arizona. Arizona therefore has more contacts with the dispute.

This factor is neutral.

(5) ease of access to sources of proof

Defendants assert that the key documents are related to Mobile Mini's and Mobile Storage Group's conduct, and that these documents are in Arizona.

This factor weighs in favor of transfer.

(6) differences in litigation costs

As Defendants point out, it is less expensive to litigate in Arizona than Los Angeles.

This factor weighs slightly in favor of transfer.

(7) the preliminary stage of litigation

Because the action has only started, this factor does not weigh against transfer.

(8) relative docket congestion

Somewhat surprisingly, this factor weighs in favor of retaining the action in Los Angeles. Defendants submit caseload information from 2009. (Pl.' Ex. 1.) Although the Central District has a greater overall volume of case filings than the District of Arizona, the Central District has fewer case filings per judge (578 in Central District, 713 in Arizona) and cases proceed to trial more quickly in the Central District than in Arizona (19 months to trial in Central District, 29 months to trial in Arizona).

This factor weighs against transferring the case.

(9) [*26] location where any agreements were negotiated and executed

Both agreements were negotiated and executed in California. (Defs.' Mot. at 12.)

This factor weighs against transfer.

(10) forum selection clause

The parties to the RentalMan agreement selected a Los Angeles-based forum. The parties are sophisticated entities capable of evaluating the implications of their contractual choices. It is true that the InfoManager agreement does not contain any forum selection clause, but this fact merely suggests that the RentalMan agreement's clear and explicit choice should control.

Although forum selection clauses are not dispositive, the forum selection clause "is a significant factor that should figure centrally in the calculus of a district court when considering a motion to transfer venue." Wright & Miller, 15 Fed. Prac. & Proc. § 3854.1 (3d ed.).

This factor weighs strongly against transferring the action.

(11) plaintiff's choice of forum

Plaintiff elected to bring this case in Los Angeles. This factor weighs against transfer.

CONCLUSION RE: MOTION TO TRANSFER

Having weighed all of the relevant factors, the Court concludes that this action must remain in this Court. Neither the "interests of justice," nor [*27] the "convenience of the witnesses and parties" compel the conclusion that this case should be litigated in Arizona. Defendants have not met their burden of showing that transfer is appropriate.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED as to the fifth and sixth causes of action and DENIED as to the first, second, third, and fourth causes of action. The Motion to Transfer Venue is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

I. Introduction

The instant matter comes to the Court upon a motion to dismiss [D.E. 6] the complaint filed by plaintiff Dr. Max Antoine acting pro se [D.E. 1] against defendants Newark Morning Ledger Company, publisher of the New Jersey newspaper The Star-Ledger (the "Ledger"), and a reporter for the Ledger, Paul Brubaker (collectively, "defendants").

a. Background Information

The following is drawn from Antoine's complaint:

On April 8, 2009, Antoine was arrested--an arrest that he claims was falsely made and based on an unconstitutional search and seizure. (Compl. PP 7-8.) Two days later, on April 10, 2009, the Ledger published an article written by

Brubaker, titled "Police allege Belleville man bilked immigrants in Essex," detailing the arrest. [1] Antoine claims that the Ledger and Brubaker published lies in the article and did so with an "extreme" bias against him, as they did not verify with [*2] him the circumstances of his arrest or conduct an independent investigation of the facts. (Compl. PP 8, 11.)

The complaint makes apparent that Antoine believes that defendants' bias emanates from their interconnectedness with local and state law enforcement officials, with whom Antoine has an extensive and litigious history. (See generally id.) Antoine asserts that he has incriminating evidence linking the Essex County, New Jersey Prosecutor's Office to criminal activity, such as their "planting, fabricating, [and] digital transferring of fake mug shots [sic] photographs" of him so that it could refute allegations that he made in 1996 charging the Irvington Police Department with police brutality and corruption. [*3] (Id. P 17.) Antoine contends that defendants published the April 10, 2009 article to ruin him professionally because of a lawsuit he filed against the Irvington, New Jersey "Police Brutality Squad Dept" and the Essex County Prosecutors Office based on his brutality and corruption claim. (Id. PP 12, 19.) He alleges that the suit is pending before the Third Circuit. (Id.) Antoine thus asserts that the article was an act of defamation and a violation of his civil rights.

As a result of the allegedly false report, Antoine claims to have sustained "great irreparable harms and extended losses including personal and business losses, irreversible damages to his personal name, and employer's transnational name, business ethics, social class, strata and his apparent once venerated character." (Id. P 20.) He seeks $ 77,777,777.00 in damages. (Id. P 21.)

Antoine asserts federal claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for violations of his First, Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e, et seq. ("Title VII"), unspecified federal antitrust laws and regulations, the Federal Video Privacy Protection Act, 18 U.S.C. § 2710, as well as asserting [*4] unspecified violations of Federal Trade Commission and Federal Communications Commission protocols. The complaint also asserts an employment discrimination claim under the New Jersey Law Against Discrimination ("NJLAD"), N.J.S.A. 10:5-1, et seq. Defendants have moved to dismiss under Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("FRCP").

b. The Ledger Article

The article at issue in this litigation reads in its entirety as follows:

> Police allege Belleville man bilked immigrants in Essex
> By Paul Brubaker
> Star-Ledger Staff
> A 39-year-old Belleville man has been arrested on charges of bilking several immigrants by posing as an immigration attorney without authorization to practice law, Essex County Prosecutor Paula Dow announced yesterday.
> Max Antoine was apprehended late Wednesday after a three-year investigation by detectives from the Bloomfield Police Department, which was aided by the Essex County Prosecutor's Office economic crimes unit for the past year.
> Antoine has been fraudulently practicing immigration law from a Bloomfield office since 2003, said Essex County Assistant Prosecutor Robert Grady. The investigation was prompted by several complaints to Bloomfield [*5] police, said Grady.
> "It's basically a case of receiving payments and services never being rendered," said Paul M. Loriquet, a spokesman for the prosecutor's office.

[1] The article is attached as Exhibit 2 to the certification of Keith J. Miller ("Miller Cert.") in support of defendants' Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("FRCP") 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. [D.E. 6.] The Court may consider documents attached to or specially referenced in the second amended complaint, and matters of public record, without converting a motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment. See Mele v. Federal Reserve Bank of N.Y., 359 F.3d 251, 255 n.5 (3d Cir. 2004).

> Several documents from Antoine's office were confiscated and more charges are expected, Loriquet said. It remains to be seen if anyone's immigration status has been jeopardized, he said. He said police don't know how much was stolen but the investigation is continuing.
> Loriquet said Antoine made false claims of having other credentials, including a real estate broker's license and a doctorate. "All we know for certain is he is a licensed private detective," he said.
> Antoine faces charges of theft by deception, unauthorized practice of law and conspiracy to traffic false government documents and, if convicted, could be sentenced up to 15 years in prison, said Loriquet.
> Antoine is being held at the Essex County Jail with bail set at $ 75,000 with no 10 percent option, said Loriquet.

(Miller Cert., Exh. 2.)

II. Standard of Review

In deciding a motion to dismiss under FRCP 12(b)(6), the Court is "required to accept as true all of the allegations in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn therefrom, and view them [*6] in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Morse v. Lower Merion Sch. Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997). A complaint should be dismissed if the plaintiff's allegations, taken as true, fail to state a claim. Oshiver v. Levin, Fishbein, Sedran & Berman, 38 F.3d 1380, 1384-85 (3d Cir. 1994). "While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal citations omitted).

III. Discussion

Antoine's claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 alleges that the Ledger and Brubaker infringed on his First, Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights. (Compl. P 7.) For this claim, and throughout the suit, Antoine attempts to link defendants' act of publishing a newspaper article with the past conduct of state actors--specifically, the Bloomfield Police Department, the Irvington Police Department, and the Essex County Prosecutors Office. For example, in paragraph 1(W), where he alleges that [*7] "[f]reedom of the Press was vested under the First Amendment Right of our Federal Constitution [and] does not in any explicit way immune [sic] reports from CIVIL AND CRIMINAL LIABILITY, especially when attempting to maliciously deprive private citizens of their constitutional rights to privacy, [and] unlawful search and seizures," Antoine seeks to intertwine defendants' article with the allegedly unlawful search and seizures conducted by his arresting officers. In paragraph 5, Antoine characterizes the Ledger as acting under color of state law: "The defendant, Star Ledger, is also a duly licensed [sic] by the state of New Jersey to legally conduct its print business; however, it is not immune to knowingly defame good reputations . . . and venerated names of New Jersey private citizens and businesses alike under color of [] New Jersey State Law." Again in paragraph 12, he links up defendants with law enforcement:

> [D]efendants have also purposefully defamed and boycotted . . . Plaintiff Dr [sic] Max Denis Antoine by publishing fake, false, and premeditated stories . . . , knowing that the Essex County Prosecutors [sic] charges were pre-fabricated, criminally planted defamatory statements, [*8] and taken from the unauthorized police officers, and covert detectives of the local Bloomfield Municipal Police Dept, and also from a Perpetuator "AKA" as [sic] Mr. David Sanabria of the Essex County Prosecutors Office.

Section 1983 provides in relevant part:

> Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State . . . subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law . . . .

Thus, "[t]he Supreme Court has set forth the two essential elements of a § 1983 action: (1) the conduct complained of was committed by a person acting under color of state law; and (2) this conduct deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States." Kost v. Kozakiewicz, 1 F.3d 176, 184 (3d Cir. 1993). To act under color of state law, a defendant must have exercised power "possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority [*9] of state law." West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 49, 108 S. Ct. 2250, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1988).

Where named defendants are not state or municipal officials but private individuals, like the Ledger and Brubaker, the Third Circuit instructs that "[a] private action is not converted into one under color of state law merely by some tenuous connection to state action. The issue is not whether the state was involved in some way in the relevant events, but whether the action taken can be fairly attributed to the state itself." Groman v. Township of Manalapan, 47 F.3d 628, 639 (3d Cir. 1995) (citing Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 351, 95 S. Ct. 449, 42 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1974)). The inquiry, stated another way, is "whether the State provided a mantle of authority that enhanced the power of the harm-causing individual actor." NCAA v. Tarkanian, 488 U.S. 179, 192, 109 S. Ct. 454, 102 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1988).

According to the pleadings, defendants' article was defamatory, lacked proper investigation, and was written with full knowledge that his arrest was premised on unconstitutional acts by the Essex County Prosecutors office committed in retaliation for his prior accusations against them. Nowhere in the complaint, however, does he assert that defendants contributed to the underlying acts [*10] of his false arrest, illegal search and seizure, or the unspecified abuse he suffered from the Irvington Police Department in 1996. Instead, he alleges that defendants were responsible for the violations of his First, Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth amendment rights because they reported a false story, despite knowing the true facts behind the matter. These allegations do not state a claim under § 1983 because Antoine has not pleaded facts demonstrating that the defendants were clothed with the authority of the state.

The Third Circuit addressed a similar suit in Lewis v. City of Renton Police Department et al., 175 F. App'x 552, 554 (3d Cir. 2006), where it affirmed a district court's dismissal of a pro se complaint against newspaper defendants, holding as follows:

> Essential to an action under § 1983 are allegations that a person acting under color of state law engaged in conduct depriving a plaintiff of his constitutional rights. See Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc., 184 F.3d 268, 277 (3d Cir. 1999); Kost v. Kozakiewicz, 1 F.3d 176, 184 (3d Cir. 1993). Because the newspaper defendants are private parties and there is simply no indication that they acted under color of state law, [*11] the District Court did not err in dismissing Lewis' claims against them.

Id.

Notwithstanding Antoine's claims that defendants shared in the state actors' bias against him and ill-intent to harm him, he does not sufficiently aver with facts that in publishing the article, defendants engaged in conduct "fairly attributed to the state itself." See Groman v. Township of Manalapan, 47 F.3d at 639.

Antoine also brings federal claims under Title VII, federal antitrust law, and the Federal Video Privacy Protection Act. Antoine alleges that defendants defamed him and his employers in violation of Title VII and the NJLAD laws against employment discrimination. (Compl. P 9.) Title VII and the NJLAD protect employees from adverse employment actions on the basis of their status as individuals within a recognized protected class. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a); N.J.S.A. 10:5-12. Antoine, however, does not allege in his complaint that defendants employed him, so Title VII and NJLAD afford him no relief on these facts.

Likewise, Antoine has failed to state a claim for relief under federal antitrust law or the Video Privacy Protection Act, 18 U.S.C. § 2710. Antoine appears to be suing under federal antitrust [*12] law because defendants were allegedly "boycotting" and damaging his business by publishing the article on his arrest. (See Compl P 9.) Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, governs federal antitrust claims of illegal "group boycotts." See Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786 (3d Cir. 1984). The Third Circuit has held that a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act "requires proof of a contract, combination or conspiracy, a restraint of trade, and an effect on interstate commerce." Miller v. Indiana Hosp., 843 F.2d 139, 141 (3d Cir. 1988). Here, at a minimum, Antoine's pleadings do not allege any contract or effect on interstate commerce, and the Court finds that they fail to state a claim for an illegal boycott.

The Video Privacy Protection Act can be violated when: (1) a video tape service provider discloses personally identifiable information regarding a customer without the customer's permission; (2) personally identifiable information from video tape rentals is obtained in any manner and is "received in evidence" in an adversarial proceeding; and (3) a person fails to timely destroy a customer's personally identifiable information. See Dirkes v. Borough of Runnemede, 936 F.Supp. 235, 239 (D.N.J. 1996) [*13] (Brotman, J.). Antoine has not pleaded anything to implicate that videotapes or information stemming from videotape rentals were involved in defendants' alleged misconduct.

To the extent that Antoine brings state law claims for defamation and libel against defendants, section 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a) of the Judicial Improvements Act of 1990 states that federal courts "shall have supplemental jurisdiction" over claims if they are "part of the same case or controversy" over which the court has original jurisdiction. Subsection (c) of the statute provides that a district court may decline to exercise jurisdiction if it "has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." Id. § 1367(c). The Court has granted defendants' motion to dismiss all of Antoine's federal law claims, and declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over his remaining state law claims. See Bacon v. Carroll, 232 F. App'x 158, 160 (3d Cir. 2007).

IV. Conclusion

For the forgoing reasons, defendants' motion under FRCP 12(b)(6) is granted on Antoine's federal claims and his claim under the NJLAD, and the complaint will be dismissed. An appropriate order will be entered.

ORDER:

(1) DENYING MOTION TO STRIKE [Doc. No. 11]; and

(2) GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS [Doc. No. 10].

This is a contract dispute case. Currently before the Court are Counter-Defendant DCI Solutions, Inc.'s ("DCI") Motion to Strike and Motion to Dismiss certain causes of action in Counter-Claimant Urban Outfitters, Inc.'s ("Urban") counterclaim. Having considered the parties' arguments, and for the reasons set forth below, the Court DENIES the motion to strike and GRANTS the motion to dismiss WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

BACKGROUND

I. The Parties

DCI is a company specializing in overhead cost reduction. Working on a contingency fee, DCI helps companies identify ways to save money. DCI alleges that unlike other companies, which focus only on one expense category, it offers an expert analysis of 40 different [*2] overhead and tax categories. DCI does not charge any up-front fee and begins billing its clients only after the client has begun saving money.

Urban is an innovative specialty retail company that offers a variety of "lifestyle" merchandise to highly defined customer niches through its "Urban Outfitters," "Anthropologie," and "Free People" retail stores in the United States, Canada, and Europe, as well as through websites, catalogues, and wholesale concepts.

II. The Dispute

In October 2007, DCI and Urban entered into a written agreement ("Agreement"), whereby DCI was to recommend ways Urban could save money. According to Urban, DCI promised it would "dramatically reduce" Urban's overhead costs and that Urban would realize "six figure savings" as a result of "expert" recommendations. Urban allegedly agreed to pay DCI 33% of all savings it received during the thirty-six months following the implementation of DCI's recommendations.

According to DCI, it demonstrated to Urban that Urban was paying far more than it should for its "Less than Truckload" ("LTL") freight costs. DCI estimated that by renegotiating its tariff rates with its current freight carriers, or negotiating rates with new carriers, [*3] Urban could save between $ 1 million and $ 1.5 million per year based upon its current annual shipping volume. DCI alleges that it invested valuable time and energy over a period of several months to come up with these recommendations. Urban then told DCI that it decided not to implement DCI's recommendations. DCI has since learned, however, that Urban did in fact secretly implement DCI's recommendations without notifying DCI and is now achieving significant savings on its LTL freight rates. According to DCI, Urban refuses to pay DCI the savings fee that was agreed to in the Agreement.

On the other hand, Urban alleges that DCI's consultant spent less than five hours "analyzing" Urban's extensive freight cost history, and that DCI failed to deliver any useful recommendations. Accordingly, Urban rejected and did not utilize any recommendations or advice provided by DCI. Urban also alleges that it subsequently discovered that DCI's representations were the core of its regular business practice. According to Urban, DCI fraudulently induces company managers to enter into contracts for services with DCI and to forego entering into any other contracts with competing companies. In fact, DCI [*4] has no interest in genuinely analyzing a company's business practices, but rather makes generic recommendations as to what the company should do to save money. Urban alleges that DCI's entire business scheme is intended to fraudulently induce companies to pay DCI money which it has not earned. If a company complains, DCI's practice is to file a lawsuit.

III. Procedural Background

In January 2010, DCI filed this lawsuit in the Superior Court for the County of San Diego. Urban subsequently removed it to this Court based on diversity grounds. DCI's complaint alleges four causes of action: (1) fraud in the inducement, (2) breach of contract, (3) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and (4) quantum meruit.

In response to DCI's complaint, Urban filed a counterclaim. Urban's counterclaim alleges seven causes of action: (1) fraud in the inducement, (2) fraud, (3) breach of contract, (4) violation of Section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code, (5) declaratory relief, (6) breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and (7) rescission based upon fraud.

Currently before the Court are DCI's Motion to Strike pursuant to California's anti-SLAPP statute, [*5] CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 425.16, and Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with respect to certain Urban's counterclaims. Urban filed an opposition to each motion, and DCI replied. The Court heard oral argument on May 3, 2010.

LEGAL STANDARD

I. Motion to Strike

A Strategic Lawsuit Against Public Participation ("SLAPP") is a civil action "in which the [non-moving party's] alleged injury results from petitioning or free speech activities by [the moving party] that are protected by the federal or state constitutions." Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 317 F.3d 1097, 1109 (9th Cir. 2003). "California's anti-SLAPP statute was 'enacted to allow early dismissal of meritless first amendment cases aimed at chilling expression through costly, time-consuming litigation.'" Id. (citations omitted). Specifically, the statute allows a party to move to strike the non-moving party's cause of action if that cause of action "aris[es] from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States Constitution or the California Constitution in connection with a public issue." [1] See CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 425.16(b)(1).

An anti-SLAPP motion to strike requires a two-step inquiry. First, the moving party must make an initial prima facie showing that the other party's suit arises from the moving party's protected activity--i.e, an act in furtherance of that party's rights of petition or free speech. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1110. The other party's intentions in bringing the suit "are ultimately beside the point." Equilon Enterprises v. Consumer Cause, Inc., 29 Cal. 4th 53, 67, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507, 52 P.3d 685 (2002). Similarly, the moving party need not demonstrate that any speech was actually chilled. See City of Cotati v. Cashman, 29 Cal. 4th 69, 75-76, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 519, 52 P.3d 695 (2002). The filing of a lawsuit is one example of protected activity. See Jarrow Formulas, 31 Cal. 4th at 734; CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 425.16(e) (providing that an "act in furtherance of a person's right of petition or free speech" includes any written or oral statement or writing made "before [*7] a . . . judicial proceeding" or "in connection with an issue under consideration by . . . a judicial body").

Nonetheless, "the critical point is whether the [non-moving party's] cause of action itself was based on an act in furtherance of the [moving party's] right of petition or free speech." Cotati, 29 Cal. 4th at 78 (citations omitted). The mere fact that an action was filed after protected activity took place--in this case, DCI's lawsuit against Urban-does not necessarily mean it arose from that activity. See id. at 76-77. As the California Supreme Court has cautioned, to construe "arising from" in Section 425.16(b)(1) as meaning "in response to" would in effect render all cross-actions potential SLAPPs. Id. at 77. Indeed, "to suggest that all cross-actions arise from the causes of action in response to which they are pled would contravene the statutory scheme governing cross-complaints." Id.

If the moving party meets its initial burden, the court proceeds to the second step and asks whether the non-moving party can demonstrate "a probability that he or she will prevail on the claim." CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 425.16(b). In order to do so, the non-moving party must "state and substantiate [*8] a legally sufficient claim." Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester, 28 Cal. 4th 811, 821, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 50 P.3d 733 (2002) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). "Put another way, the [non-moving party] 'must demonstrate that the complaint is both legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the [non-moving party] is credited.'" Id. (citation omitted). Although the court does not weigh the credibility or comparative probative strength of competing evidence, it must grant a motion to strike "if, as a matter of law, the [moving party's] evidence supporting the motion defeats the [non-moving party's] attempt to establish evidentiary support for the claim." Id. (citation omitted).

[1] That [*6] the underlying action in this case is a counterclaim rather than an original complaint is not statutorily significant because the anti-SLAPP statute explicitly applies to complaints and counter-complaints. See Jarrow Formulas, Inc. v. LaMarche, 31 Cal. 4th 728, 735 n.2, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 636, 74 P.3d 737 (2003); CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 425.16(h).

II. Motion to Dismiss

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the pleadings. A complaint survives a motion to dismiss if it contains "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S.544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The court may dismiss a complaint as a matter of law for: (1) "lack of cognizable legal theory," or (2) "insufficient facts under a cognizable legal claim." [*9] SmileCare Dental Group v. Delta Dental Plan of Cal., 88 F.3d 780, 783 (9th Cir. 1996) (citation omitted). The court only reviews the contents of the complaint, accepting all factual allegations as true, and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party. al-Kidd v. Ashcroft, 580 F.3d 949, 956 (9th Cir. 2009) (citation omitted).

Despite the deference, the court need not accept "legal conclusions" as true. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). It is also improper for the court to assume "the [plaintiff] can prove facts that [he or she] has not alleged." Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). On the other hand, "[w]hen there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1950.

DISCUSSION

I. Motion to Strike

DCI brings the anti-SLAPP motion to strike with respect to the following causes of action in Urban's counterclaim: (1) fraud in the inducement, (2) fraud, and (3) violation of Section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code (hereinafter, "Section 17200"). [*10] According to DCI, all of these causes of action arise out of DCI's alleged litigation activity. In support of this, DCI relies heavily on paragraph 9 of Urban's counterclaim, which provides in its entirety:

> DCI's entire business scheme is intended to fraudulently induce companies to pay DCI money which DCI has not earned. If a company complains to DCI about its claims for payment, DCI's practice is to file a lawsuit. Indeed, DCI has litigated multiple lawsuits with clients in pursuit of gains from its fraudulent business model and practices.

(Def. Counterclaim P 9 [Doc. No. 4].) However, even if DCI could meet its burden under Section 425.16(b)(1), the motion to strike nonetheless fails because the challenged counterclaims fall squarely within an exception to the anti-SLAPP statute contained in Section 425.17(c).

Due to a "disturbing abuse" of California's anti-SLAPP law, which has undermined the very constitutional rights that Section 425.16 was designed to protect, the Legislature in 2003 enacted Section 425.17, rendering Section 425.16 inapplicable to certain actions. See CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 425.17(a). One of the exceptions provides that:

> Section 425.16 does not apply to any cause [*11] of action brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services, including, but not limited to, insurance, securities, or financial instruments, arising from any statement or conduct by that person if both of the following conditions exist:
> > (1) The statement or conduct consists of representations of fact about that person's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services, that is made for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services, or the statement or conduct was made in the course of delivering the person's goods or services.
> > (2) The intended audience is an actual or potential buyer or customer, or a person likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence, an actual or potential buyer or customer, or the statement or conduct arose out of or within the context of a regulatory approval process, proceeding, or investigation, except > where the statement or conduct was made by a telephone corporation in the course of a proceeding before the California Public Utilities Commission and is the subject of a lawsuit brought [*12] by a competitor, notwithstanding that the conduct or statement concerns an important public issue.

Id. § 425.17(c). This exception was specifically intended to apply to cases against a business arising out of its "commercial speech" or "conduct," see Brill Media Co. v. TCW Group, Inc., 132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 342, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 (2005), and the party moving to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute bears the burden of establishing that the exception does not apply. Moreover, the exception applies even if the elements of Section 425.16 would otherwise be satisfied. See id. at 330-31 (noting that although Section 425.17(c) does not alter the traditional two-prong burden-shifting approach, it does represent a "procedural exception to the special motion to strike remedy" (citations omitted)).

In the present case, DCI has not met its burden of demonstrating that Section 425.17(c) does not apply. On the contrary, an examination of Urban's counterclaim reveals that the "commercial speech" exception is directly applicable. First, DCI is "primarily engaged in the business of selling . . . services" within the meaning of the statute in that DCI styles itself as "an expert in overhead cost reduction" that "helps companies [*13] identify undetected ways to reduce costs and maximize savings" for a contingency fee. (See Pl. Compl. P 12.) Second, the challenged "statement or conduct consists of representations of fact about [DCI's] . . . services" within the meaning of Section 425.17(c)(1) in that DCI's fraudulent misrepresentations about its services form the basis of Urban's counterclaim. (See Def. Counterclaim PP 5-9.) Third, these statements were "made for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales . . . of . . . [DCI's] . . . services" within the meaning of the statute in that Urban's counterclaim alleges that those statements were made "to induce company managers to enter into contracts for services with DCI." (See id. P 6.) Finally, because the statements were made "to induce a company to enter into a contract with DCI," (id. P 7), this satisfies Section 425.17(c)(2)'s requirement that "[t]he intended audience is an actual or potential buyer or customer."

DCI's arguments to the contrary are unavailing. In attempting to show that the "commercial speech" exception does not apply in this case, DCI shifts the focus from the alleged conduct as a whole to the allegations in paragraph [*14] 9 in Urban's counterclaim. [2] However, the Court cannot ignore the fact that at the center of Urban's counterclaim is DCI's allegedly fraudulent misrepresentations about its services, which amount to "commercial speech" that the Legislature expressly decided to exempt from the application of the anti-SLAPP statute. See 132 Cal. App. 4th at 342. Although it is true that the anti-SLAPP statute provides that it "shall be construed broadly," see Equilon, 29 Cal. 4th at 60, there is a limit to how broadly the Court can construe it. In the present case, that limit was expressly provided by the Legislature when it enacted Section 425.17(c), and DCI has failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that the exception set forth there does not apply.

Accordingly, DCI has failed to carry its initial burden of demonstrating that [*15] the challenged counterclaims "aris[e] from any act . . . in furtherance of [its] right of petition or free speech under the United States Constitution or the California Constitution in connection with a public issue" as that term is defined in Section 425.16(b)(1). That is because Section 425.17(c) explicitly excludes DCI's alleged conduct from the scope of Section 425.16. For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES DCI's motion to strike Urban's first, second, and fourth counterclaims.

The Court also DENIES Urban's request for attorney's fees. Section 425.16(c)(1) provides that a court shall award costs and reasonable attorney's fees to the non-moving party if the court finds that the motion to strike was "frivolous" or was "solely intended to cause unnecessary delay." CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE § 425.16(c)(1). "Frivolous" means "totally and completely without merit" or "for the sole purpose of harassing an opposing party."

[2] As previously noted, paragraph 9 alleges that as part of DCI's fraudulent scheme, DCI makes it a practice to file a lawsuit against any company that complains to DCI about its claims for payment. (Def. Counterclaim P 9.) Paragraph 9 also alleges that "DCI has litigated multiple lawsuits with clients in pursuit of gains from its fraudulent business model and practices." (Id.)

Id. § 128.5(b)(2). In this case, the Court does not believe the motion to strike was frivolous or that it was solely intended to cause unnecessary delay. [3]

II. Motion to Dismiss

In its Motion to Dismiss, DCI seeks to dismiss Urban's first, second, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh counterclaims for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6).

A. Fraud and fraud in the inducement

Urban's first and second counterclaims allege fraud and fraud in the inducement by DCI. To recover for common law fraud under California law, Urban must demonstrate: "(a) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (b) knowledge of falsity (or "scienter"); (c) intent to defraud, i.e. to induce reliance; (d) justifiable reliance; and (e) resulting damage." See Engalla v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc., 15 Cal. 4th 951, 974, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 (1997) (citation and internal quotations marks omitted). Fraud in the inducement is a subset of fraud. It occurs when "the promisor knows what he is [*17] signing but his consent is induced by fraud, mutual assent is present and a contract is formed, which, by reason of the fraud, is voidable." Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin. Sec. Corp., 14 Cal. 4th 394, 415, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061 (1996) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted) (emphasis in original). The remedy for fraud in the inducement is rescission. See id.

Morever, Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires allegations of fraud or mistake to be stated "with particularity." In the Ninth Circuit, this rule "has been interpreted to mean the pleader must state the time, place and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Misc. Serv. Workers, Drivers & Helpers v. Philco-Ford Corp., 661 F.2d 776, 782 (9th Cir. 1981) (citations omitted); see also Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Averments of fraud must be accompanied by 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." (citation omitted)).

Urban has failed to satisfy the heightened pleading requirement of Rule 9(b). Although Urban arguably alleges sufficient facts to state the who, what, and when of the misconduct charged, [*18] it has provided only conclusory allegations as to why it believes the statements were false when made. Fraudulent intent cannot be proven by simply pointing to the defendant's subsequent nonperformance. See Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc., 39 Cal. 3d 18, 30-31, 216 Cal. Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 (1985). Rather, "the plaintiff must plead facts explaining why the statement was false when it was made." Smith v. Allstate Ins. Co., 160 F. Supp. 2d 1150, 1152 (S.D. Cal. 2001) (citation omitted). In the present case, Urban's counterclaims cannot survive the motion to dismiss because Urban provides only conclusory allegations as to why Urban believes the statements were false when made. For example, Urban alleges in a conclusory matter that: (1) DCI engages in a practice of making such misrepresentations in order to induce companies to enter into a contract with DCI; (2) DCI then makes generic recommendations as to what the company should do to save money; (3) afterwards, DCI sits and waits for a period of time before claiming that any cost savings were the result of DCI's recommendations and ideas; and (4) if the company complains, DCI's practice is to file a lawsuit. (Def. Counterclaim PP 5-9.) Because there is absolutely no factual [*19] basis provided for these allegations, they are not sufficient "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss as it relates to Urban's counterclaims for fraud and fraud in the inducement.

[3] To the extent Urban also seeks attorney's fees pursuant to Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the [*16] Court DENIES that request because Urban has not shown that it complied with Rule 11's "safe harbor" provision. See Winterrowd v. Am. Gen. Annuity Ins. Co., 556 F.3d 815, 826 (9th Cir. 2009) ("A Rule 11 motion for sanctions must be served on opposing counsel twenty-one days before filing the motion with the court . . . ." (citations omitted)); FED. R. CIV. P. 11(c)(2).

B. Unfair competition claim

Urban's fourth counterclaim alleges DCI violated California's unfair competition law by engaging in a pattern of unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent conduct. Section 17200 defines unfair competition as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice" and "unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200. Because the statute is written in the disjunctive, it prohibits three separate types of unfair competition: (1) unlawful acts or practices, (2) unfair acts or practices, and (3) fraudulent acts or practices. Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). In the present case, Urban's counterclaim alleges that DCI violated all three sub-parts of the unfair competition law.

With respect to the "unlawful practices" part, Urban has failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for relief. By proscribing "any [*20] unlawful" business practice, Section 17200 "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable. Cel-Tech., 20 Cal. 4th at 180. Because Urban fails to specifically allege any other law that DCI violated, the Court finds that Urban failed to state a claim for relief under the "unlawful practices" prong of Section 17200. [4]

Likewise, with respect to the "fraudulent practices," Urban has failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for relief. "[F]raudulent acts are ones where members of the public are likely to be deceived." Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAV Corp., 517 F.3d 1137, 1152 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted); accord South Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th 861, 888, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 (1999). Here, the counterclaim provides only conclusory statements as to whether the public was impacted at all by DCI's alleged actions. [*21] As already noted, these allegations of a fraudulent scheme are insufficient "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Accordingly, because Urban has failed to demonstrate that members of the public are likely to be deceived, it failed to state a claim for relief under the "fraudulent practices" prong as well.

Finally, Urban has failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for relief under the "unfair practices" prong. Where direct competitors are concerned, the California Supreme Court has concluded that the word "unfair" means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech., 20 Cal. 4th at 187. On the other hand, when an action is brought by a consumer or a competitor alleging a different kind of violation, as is the case here, it appears a broader definition would apply. In that context, an "unfair" business practice occurs "when it offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, [*22] oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." See People v. Casa Blanca Convalescent Homes, Inc., 159 Cal. App. 3d 509, 530, 206 Cal. Rptr. 164 (1984), abrogated on other grounds Cel-Tech., 20 Cal. 4th at 186-87 & n. 12; accord McDonald v. Coldwell Banker, 543 F.3d 498, 506 (9th Cir. 2008). Nonetheless, because Urban provides only conclusory statements as to DCI's alleged fraudulent scheme, the Court cannot conclude if those actions "offend[] an established public policy" or if they are "immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." See Casa Blanca, 159 Cal. App. 4th at 530. Accordingly, Urban has also failed to state a claim for relief under the "unfair practices" prong.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss as it relates to Urban's counterclaim for violation of California's unfair competition law.

C. Declaratory relief

[4] In its opposition to DCI's Motion to Dismiss, Urban alleges for the first time that the challenged conduct is "unlawful" because it violates Sections 1709 et seq of the California Civil Code. However, this allegation does not appear anywhere in Urban's counterclaim.

Urban's fifth counterclaim seeks declaratory relief concerning the parties' rights, duties, and obligations under the Agreement. Under 28 U.S.C. § 2201, "any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party [*23] seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought." Declaratory relief, however, may be unnecessary where an adequate remedy exists under some other cause of action. See Mangindin v. Wash. Mut. Bank, 637 F. Supp. 2d 700, 707 (N.D. Cal. 2009). Likewise, "[d]eclaratory relief should be denied when it will neither serve a useful purpose in clarifying and settling the legal relations in issue nor terminate the proceedings and afford relief from the uncertainty and controversy faced by the parties." United States v. Washington, 759 F.2d 1353, 1356-57 (9th Cir. 1985) (en banc) (per curiam) (citations omitted).

In the present case, Urban's request for declaratory relief appears to be redundant in the face of the other causes of action, and it does not appear to be useful in clarifying the legal relations between the parties. Specifically, Urban wants the Court to adjudge whether the Agreement is null and void due to fraud or failure of consideration such that Urban owes no compensation thereunder. (Def. Counterclaim P 39.) However, this is identical to the relief sought in Urban's third counterclaim (breach of contract) and DCI's second claim (breach of contract). [*24] (See Def. Counterclaim PP 24-28; Pl. Complaint PP 25-29.) In other words, the resolution of the parties' competing breach of contract claims would afford Urban the exact relief sought in its counterclaim for declaratory relief. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss in this regard.

D. Breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing

Urban's sixth counterclaim alleges a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. However, "if the plaintiff's allegations of breach of the covenant of good faith 'do not go beyond the statement of a mere contract breach and, relying on the same alleged acts, simply seek the same damages or other relief already claimed in a companion contract cause of action, they may be disregarded as superfluous as no additional claim is actually stated.'" Bionghi v. Metropolitan Water Dist., 70 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1370, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 388 (1999) (citation omitted). In the present case, it does not appear that Urban's counterclaim for breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing goes beyond Urban's counterclaim for breach of contract. Moreover, both of the counterclaims seek the same damages. Accordingly, because the sixth counterclaim is "superfluous" [*25] to the allegations of breach of contract, see id., the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss in this regard. [5]

E. Rescission based upon fraud

Finally, Urban's seventh counterclaim seeks rescission based upon fraud pursuant to Sections 1567 and 1689(b) of the California Civil Code. As relevant here, Section 1567 provides that "[a]n apparent consent is not real or [*26] free when obtained through . . . fraud." CAL. CIV. CODE § 1567(3). Likewise, as relevant here, Section 1689(b) provides that a party to a contract may rescind the contract if its consent was obtained through fraud or if there is a failure of consideration. Id. § 1689(b). However, as previously noted, Urban's allegations of fraudulent misconduct against DCI are not stated with sufficient particularity as required by Rule 9(b). Accordingly, for the same reasons as before, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss as to this counterclaim.

CONCLUSION

[5] To the extent Urban alleges this is a tort claim for breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing, it nonetheless fails because Urban cannot point to any "independent duty" between the parties. See Freeman & Mills, Inc. v. Belcher Oil Co., 11 Cal. 4th 85, 102, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 420, 900 P.2d 669 (1995) (concluding that, with the exception of insurance contracts, there can be no tort recovery for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, "at least in the absence of violation of 'an independent duty arising from principles of tort law'" (citation omitted)); accord Bionghi, 70 Cal. App. 4th at 1370 ("[T]ort recovery for breach of the covenant is available only in limited circumstances, generally involving a special relationship between the contracting parties, such as the relationship between an insured and its insurer." (citation omitted)).

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES the motion to strike Urban's first, second, and fourth counterclaims pursuant to the anti-SLAPP statute. Nonetheless, because Urban has failed to plead those counterclaims with requisite particularity, and because the other challenged counterclaims fail to allege sufficient facts to state claims for relief, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss with respect to Urban's first, second, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh counterclaims. All of those counterclaims are dismissed WITH LEAVE TO AMEND. Urban shall file an amended counterclaim within 21 days from the filing of this Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act creates civil liability for any person who uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device which is likely to cause confusion as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125(a)(1)(A). The United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit generally looks to a non-exclusive, multi-factor list to determine whether a likelihood of confusion exists. That list is merely illustrative, however; the purpose of the inquiry is simply to determine whether the allegedly infringing conduct carries with it a likelihood of confounding an appreciable number of reasonably prudent purchasers exercising ordinary care. Specifically, the First Circuit looks to (1) the similarity of the marks; (2) the similarity of the goods (or, in a service mark case, the services); (3) the relationship between the parties' channels of trade; (4) the juxtaposition of their advertising; (5) the classes of prospective purchasers; (6) the evidence of actual confusion; (7) the defendant's intent in adopting its allegedly infringing mark; and (8) the strength of the plaintiff's mark. The application of those factors to the record is a highly fact-intensive inquiry.

HN8[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

An appellate court reviews a district court's decision to strike a motion for summary judgment for an abuse of discretion when it is stricken for a failure to comply with the terms of a case-management order. Case management-related decisions are generally reviewed for an abuse of discretion. The appellate court reviews the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo and makes all reasonable factual inferences in the light most favorable to the non-movant. Summary judgment is appropriate when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The appellate court may affirm on any basis in the record.

Opinion

[*1540] [*14] LYNCH, Chief Judge. This Petroleum Marketing Practices Act suit is between the plaintiff, Shell Company [1541] (Puerto Rico) Limited ("Shell"), and defendant, the Los Frailes Service Station, Inc. ("LFSS"), which owned and operated the Los Frailes gasoline service station in Guaynabo, Puerto Rico as a Shell franchisee from 1997 until 2003. Shell terminated LFSS's franchise, and this appeal by LFSS primarily concerns the permanent injunction awarding Shell relief against LFSS and the dismissal of LFSS's counterclaims. The complications in this case arise from LFSS's dual status as the owner of the service station and surrounding property, in which capacity it leased the property to Shell, and as a retailer-franchisee, in which capacity LFSS subleased the service station from Shell to operate it.

Since December 2003, when Shell first obtained [2] a preliminary injunction, LFSS has been ordered to cease using Shell's trademarks, trade dress, and color patterns; to comply with all post-termination contractual provisions; and to "immediately surrender the station in question, the storage tanks and all pertinent equipment to Shell, in order for Shell to designate a third party to operate the same." The Shell Co. (P.R.) Ltd. v. Los Frailes Serv. Station, Inc. (Shell I), No. 03-1623, slip op. at 35 (D.P.R. Dec. 2, 2003).

On January 23, 2007, the district court granted Shell summary judgment on [*15] LFSS's counterclaims. See The Shell Co. (P.R.) Ltd. v. Los Frailes Serv. Station, Inc. (Shell II), 551 F. Supp. 2d 127, 134 (D.P.R. 2007). The district court converted the preliminary injunction to a permanent injunction on January 29, 2007, ordering and compelling LFSS to cease any use of Shell trademarks, trade dress, or color patterns, to comply with the post-termination provisions of its franchise agreements with Shell, and, in addition, to allow Shell "to continue in possession of the Los Frailes Service Station, along with the subterraneous storage tanks and all pertinent equipment, until the expiration of [Shell's] rights under the lease [3] agreement between the parties," set to expire in 2014. The Shell Co. (P.R.) Ltd. v. Los Frailes Serv. Station, Inc. (Shell III), No. 03-1623, slip op. at 2-3 (D.P.R. Jan. 31, 2007). [1] In the same order, the district court denied LFSS's motion to reconsider its grant of summary judgment to Shell on LFSS's counterclaims and dismissed LFSS's breach of contract counterclaim for failure to prosecute. Id. at 1-2. In the meantime, LFSS has gone through bankruptcy, and Shell has changed its name to Sol Puerto Rico Limited following an acquisition and share purchase in 2006. [2] See Shell IV, 596 F. Supp. 2d at 196 n.1. Shell has been in control of the property since 2003.

LFSS appeals from various provisions of the permanent injunction, the grant of summary judgment to Shell on LFSS's federal and state law counterclaims against Shell, and the dismissal of LFSS's state law breach of contract counterclaim with prejudice (for failure to prosecute). We hold that the district court did not abuse its discretion by enjoining LFSS from further use of Shell's trademarks, trade dress, and color patterns under Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act. We further hold that the district court did not abuse its discretion by compelling LFSS to comply with the post-termination provisions of its franchise agreements with Shell. The district court did, however, abuse its discretion by extending the injunction to compel LFSS "to allow [Shell] to continue in possession of the Los Frailes Service Station . . . until the expiration of [Shell]'s rights under the lease agreement between the parties" in 2014. Shell III, slip op. at 2. [5] We vacate that provision of the injunction, without prejudice to Shell's seeking further injunctive relief at a future date. We also hold that the district court properly granted Shell summary judgment on LFSS's counterclaims and that there was no abuse of discretion in dismissing LFSS's breach of contract counterclaim for failure to prosecute.

I. Factual Background

The following facts are either uncontested or were stipulated by the parties.

The gasoline service station located at the corner of State Road 177 and Muro Street in the Los Frailes area of Guaynabo has long [1542] been one of the busiest in the region. LFSS has owned this station and [*16] the property surrounding it since 1977. For several decades, LFSS sold Shell-brand gasoline as an independent retailer under a lease arrangement with Shell. In 1997, LFSS became a Shell franchisee.

Three contracts, all signed on April 11, 1997, defined the franchise relationship between Shell and LFSS: an amended lease agreement, a retailer/sublease agreement, and a trademark and equipment agreement.

The amended lease agreement extended Shell's 1992 lease of the service station and its surrounding property until February 28, 2014. The "primary and essential [6] purpose" of the lease was to maintain a service station there, and, under the amended lease, Shell did not need LFSS's permission to sublease the station to a third party retailer to operate. In exchange for this leasehold, Shell agreed to pay graduated rent to LFSS based on the number of gallons of gasoline the retailer (whether LFSS or a third party) bought from Shell each month.

[1] The district court later issued an amended order clarifying that Shell was entitled to injunctive relief only under Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), to compel LFSS to stop further use of Shell's trademarks, trade dress, and color patterns. See The Shell Co. (P.R.) Ltd. v. Los Frailes Serv. Station, Inc. (Shell V), No. 03-1623, slip op. at 1-2 (D.P.R. Dec. 30, 2008) (amended judgment); The Shell Co. (P.R.) Ltd. v. Los Frailes Serv. Station, Inc. (Shell IV), 596 F. Supp. 2d. 193, 201-03, 205 (D.P.R. 2008) [4] (opinion and order).

[2] In order to accurately describe the parties' interactions and the events leading up to this suit, all of which occurred before the merger, we refer to the plaintiff as "Shell" throughout and discuss the significance of the merger where relevant.

Under the retailer/sublease agreement, Shell then subleased the station back to LFSS to operate as a Shell franchisee. As a Shell franchisee, LFSS had the right to operate the station under the Shell name, as an exclusive retailer of Shell-brand petroleum products. In exchange, LFSS agreed to certain obligations, including to purchase a minimum average of 300,000 gallons of fuel from Shell each month, to pay for Shell products on time each month on the check or credit terms set by Shell, to keep the station open and running during its hours of operation, and to operate the station for the exclusive purpose of selling only Shell-brand products.

The trademark and equipment agreement governed LFSS's exclusive use of Shell trademarks and of equipment Shell provided to LFSS and also set out LFSS's maintenance, [7] inventory, and delivery obligations. This agreement recognized Shell's ownership of the underground storage tanks and other equipment at the station and gave LFSS the right to use this equipment only to sell and store Shell-brand fuel when operating the station.

These three agreements also included important provisions governing when the agreements could be terminated and the consequences of termination. The parties contest the interpretation of many of these provisions, and we discuss them further below.

From 1997 to 2000, LFSS operated the Los Frailes station as a Shell station under the terms of these agreements. Beginning in 2000, the parties made several amendments to the lease agreement. A February 15, 2001, amendment, at issue in this case, gave LFSS a temporary rent benefit from Shell to encourage a higher volume of gasoline sales. [3] Under the amendment, this rent benefit would automatically continue every month unless Shell notified LFSS otherwise in writing.

On July 2, 2001, Shell informed LFSS and its other Puerto Rican franchisees that it was implementing a Competitive Adjustment Program (CAP), and LFSS agreed to participate. The program established certain price zones for retailers and set maximum retail prices for Shell's retailers in those zones. In exchange, the CAP gave retailers discounts on wholesale fuel prices, again based on those zones. Following an investigation, the Puerto Rico Department of Justice ordered Shell to cease the CAP program on January 30, [*17] 2004, on the ground that it violated Puerto Rican antitrust law. Shell complied.

LFSS participated in the CAP for the duration of its franchise with Shell. Though LFSS now contests whether the CAP displaced the temporary rent benefit Shell implemented in February 2001, LFSS does not contest the district court's factual finding that LFSS sent Shell an April 9, 2002 letter proposing "a temporary adjustment in rent for LFSS as we had in the first quarter of last year." We discuss the CAP in further detail below.

By early 2003, LFSS was suffering from cash flow problems and so did not pay for more than $ 80,000 worth of Shell's fuel deliveries. Shell, pursuant to [9] the retailer/sublease agreement, also implemented a hard cash payment policy and required LFSS to pay for Shell products by certified check at delivery.

During the weekend of May 17 and 18, 2003, LFSS instead tried to pay for two deliveries with personal checks. On Monday, May 19, Shell told LFSS that until LFSS paid for the weekend deliveries with certified checks, Shell would not make any further deliveries. [1543] LFSS did not comply; there were no further deliveries, LFSS ran out of fuel to sell, and the station temporarily closed. That same day, May 19, LFSS sent Shell a letter stating that Shell had not paid the February 2001 additional rent benefit since July 2001 (when the CAP went into effect), that Shell had not sent written notice of its cancellation, and that Shell therefore immediately owed the balance of the additional rent from July 2001 until April 2003.

On May 21, 2003, LFSS sent Shell a letter purportedly cancelling their entire commercial relationship, including the lease, citing Shell's alleged failure to pay LFSS the additional rent and its alleged obligation to deliver fuel to LFSS. LFSS then purchased fuel from other refiners and distributors, covered some but not all [10] of the Shell trademarks at the station, and began selling non-Shell-brand fuel. LFSS also put up signs saying "We Do Not Sell Shell Gasoline." The signs were not prominently displayed.

[3] Specifically, in addition to the rent specified in the lease, Shell agreed to pay LFSS an additional $ 0.02 per gallon for the first 480,000 gallons sold, and an additional $ 0.03 per gallon for every gallon over 490,000 [8] that LFSS sold.

On May 23, 2003, Shell informed LFSS by letter that it was terminating LFSS's franchise, which Shell said terminated the retailer/sublease agreement and trademarks and equipment agreement but not the underlying lease agreement under which Shell leased the property from LFSS. Shell said that LFSS's termination of the lease was invalid because LFSS had not complied with the lease termination provisions. Shell then demanded that LFSS honor its obligations under the lease and under the post-termination provisions of the retailer/sublease and equipment and trademark agreements by immediately vacating the service station premises and turning over Shell's equipment.

LFSS instead continued to operate the service station by selling non-Shellbrand fuel at the service station. Shell then brought assorted federal and state law claims against LFSS in the federal district court of Puerto Rico less than two weeks later, on June 3, 2003, eventually culminating in this appeal.

II. The Parties' Claims

Before delving into [11] the legal analysis, we summarize Shell and LFSS's respective claims and counterclaims.

Shell's claims against LFSS proceed from Shell's contention that it validly terminated LFSS's franchise on May 23, 2003. Shell says it was entitled to do so under the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act ("PMPA"), 15 U.S.C. § 2801 et seq., a federal law that regulates franchisors' termination of franchises, because of LFSS's failure to pay for fuel deliveries, its unreasonable [*18] closing of the station, and its sale of non-Shell fuel while displaying Shell trademarks.

Shell claims LFSS's post-termination actions violated Shell's rights in two respects. First, Shell says that LFSS created a likelihood that consumers would be confused or deceived when it sold non-Shell products while displaying Shell trademarks, in violation of Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). On this basis, Shell requested, and the district court granted, injunctive relief to stop LFSS from using Shell trademarks, trade dress, or color patterns. See Shell IV, 596 F. Supp. 2d at 203-05; Shell I, slip op. at 29-31.

Second, Shell says its termination of the franchise left its underlying lease of the station from LFSS intact. [12] Shell further claimed that LFSS's refusal to vacate the premises and to allow Shell to exercise its property rights over the station as a lessor violated the terms of the lease, as well as various post-termination provisions in the retailer/sublease and trademark and equipment agreements requiring LFSS to relinquish possession of the station. This was the district court's basis for compelling LFSS to comply with all post-termination contractual provisions and for the separate provision of the injunction allowing Shell to remain in possession of the service station until the expiration of its lease in 2014. See Shell I, slip op. at 27-29, 32-34.

LFSS makes several arguments as to why the district court abused its discretion in granting Shell a permanent injunction. LFSS first claims that it validly terminated all contracts, including the lease, on May 21, 2003, two days before Shell purportedly terminated the franchise. In the alternative, LFSS says, Shell's termination of the franchise was not valid under the PMPA, and the district court erred in finding otherwise.

LFSS further argues that the district court erred in granting injunctive relief. It contests the injunction on Shell's Lanham [13] Act claim, urging that the evidence was contradictory and insufficient to support a likelihood of confusion. In any event, LFSS says, Shell is not entitled to the specific remedy of an injunction to enforce the lease, which gives Shell possession [1544] until 2014, whether under the PMPA or any of Shell's other claims, and the district court erred in finding otherwise. This last issue is potentially the most difficult in the case, raising questions about the scope of injunctive relief available to franchisors under the PMPA.

LFSS also argues that the district court erred in granting Shell summary judgment on LFSS's counterclaim that Shell's CAP program violated federal and Puerto Rican antitrust law. Specifically, LFSS argues that the district court abused its discretion by striking LFSS's cross-motion for summary judgment and denying its motion for reconsideration. Its main substantive challenge, however, is that the district court erroneously made factual inferences in Shell's favor when granting summary judgment to Shell on LFSS's antitrust claims and that there were material issues of fact precluding summary judgment. Finally, LFSS says the district court abused its discretion by dismissing [14] its state law breach of contract counterclaim for failure to prosecute, because, LFSS insists, it diligently asserted this claim.

We analyze LFSS's challenges to the permanent injunction, summary judgment, and dismissal of its breach of contract counterclaim in turn. We vacate only the portion of the district court's injunction allowing Shell to continue in possession of the Los Frailes service station until 2014, when its lease expires, and we affirm the district court's judgment on all other grounds.

[*19] III. Shell's Claims against LFSS

HN1[] We review a district court's grant of a permanent injunction for abuse of discretion; we review its underlying conclusions of law de novo and any factual findings for clear error. [4] Garcia-Rubiera v. Calderon, 570 F.3d 443, 455-56 (1st Cir. 2009).

HN2[] A plaintiff seeking a permanent injunction before a district court must ordinarily show: "(1) that it has suffered an irreparable injury; (2) that remedies available at law, such as monetary damages, are inadequate to compensate for that injury; (3) that, considering the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant, a remedy in equity is warranted; and (4) that the public interest would not be disserved by a permanent injunction." eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 391, 126 S. Ct. 1837, 164 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2006); see also CoxCom, Inc. v. Chaffee, 536 F.3d 101, 112 (1st Cir. 2008). LFSS's claims of error cut across these criteria.

A. LFSS's Purported Termination of the Lease Agreement

LFSS's primary argument on appeal is that LFSS validly terminated its lease of the Los Frailes station to Shell on May 21, 2003, and that the district court therefore erred by granting Shell an injunction [16] that gave Shell possession of the service station.

We reject this argument; LFSS's attempt to terminate the lease on May 21 was plainly invalid. [5] Even assuming dubitante that Shell had defaulted on its lease obligations, article 17 of the lease provided that LFSS could terminate the lease in the event of default only after a sixty-day curative period. LFSS admits that its May 21, 2003, letter of termination cited Shell's purported breaches as the grounds for termination and did not comply with the sixty-day curative requirement.

Instead, LFSS claims that a different part of the lease agreement, article 7, authorized LFSS to terminate the lease with Shell immediately, without any sixty-day curative period, on the sole condition that LFSS pay Shell for the cost of the improvements and alterations Shell had made to the station, less depreciation. Because [17] LFSS only developed this interpretation of article 7 at oral argument and not in its briefs, this argument is waived. See Mass. [1545] Museum of Contemporary Art Found. v. Buchel, 593 F.3d 38, 65 (1st Cir. 2010). Even if the argument were properly before this court, it would fail. Article 7 states in relevant part that "[i]f this lease is terminated before the expiration of its term . . . for causes attributable to [LFSS]," LFSS, "in addition to any other remedy under the contract," must [*20] "immediately pay [Shell] an amount equivalent to the amount not depreciated (or amortized) of the improvements and permanent alterations made by [Shell] in the Property, in the [4] LFSS's argument that the district court could not convert the preliminary injunction into a permanent injunction without an evidentiary hearing fails. The district court converted the preliminary injunction into a permanent injunction only after issuing a show cause order to LFSS, and only after determining that LFSS had not advanced any new evidence or legal arguments beyond what it had presented at the preliminary [15] injunction hearing. Under those circumstances, an evidentiary hearing would have served little purpose, and the district court's conversion was not error. See HMG Prop. Investors, Inc. v. Parque Indus. Rio Canas, Inc., 847 F.2d 908, 915 (1st Cir. 1988); cf. United States v. Owens, 54 F.3d 271, 276-77 (6th Cir. 1995).

[5] The parties have not briefed the question of whether this court is, in any event, bound by the bankruptcy court's determination that the lease remained in effect and Shell retained all its rights as a lessor under that agreement, though the district court relied on that judgment in rejecting LFSS's claims below. See Shell III, slip op. at 3.

Station or in the surrounding areas." This is plainly a liquidated damages provision addressing the consequences of termination, not the conditions under which the parties could terminate the agreement. It cannot be construed as an open-ended alternative to the limitations on termination set out in article 17.

B. Shell's PMPA Claim

In the alternative, LFSS argues that the district court erred in concluding as a matter of law that Shell's termination of LFSS's franchise complied with the PMPA. Absent a valid termination, LFSS suggests, [18] Shell suffered no irreparable injury, since Shell's asserted harms arose from LFSS's alleged failure to comply with the consequences of franchise termination. Those consequences include the loss of LFSS's right to use Shell's trademarks and equipment and to sublease and operate the service station. This argument also fails; we reject its assumption that Shell's termination was invalid.

The PMPA, enacted in 1978, addressed franchisors' "allegedly unfair franchise terminations and nonrenewals in the petroleum industry" by "establish[ing] minimum federal standards governing the termination and nonrenewal of petroleum franchises." Mac's Shell Serv., Inc. v. Shell Oil Prods. Co. LLC, 559 U.S. 175, 130 S. Ct. 1251, 1255, 176 L. Ed. 2d 36 (2010). HN3[] Under provisions of the PMPA, franchisors can terminate or fail to renew a franchise "only if the franchisor provides written notice and takes the action in question for a reason specifically recognized in the statute." Id. [6]

HN4[] Reasons recognized in the statute for termination include "[t]he occurrence of an event which is . . . relevant to the franchise relationship and as [19] a result of which termination of the franchise . . . is reasonable." 15 U.S.C. § 2802(b)(2)(C). The PMPA explicitly includes "failure by the franchisee to pay the franchisor in a timely manner," id. ' 2802(c)(8), "failure by the franchisee to operate the marketing premises for . . . an unreasonable period of time" under the circumstances, id. § 2802(c)(9)(B), and "willful adulteration, mislabeling or misbranding of motor fuels or other trademark violations of the franchisee," id. § 2802(c)(10), as examples of such events.

LFSS does not contest that it failed to make payments on time, temporarily closed the station, and sold non-Shell-brand fuel. Rather, it argues that the PMPA requires courts to determine whether a termination based on these events was objectively reasonable under the circumstances, not just whether an event listed under § 2802(c) technically occurred. The circumstances here, LFSS says, made Shell's termination unreasonable, because the cash flow problems leading to these three events were caused by Shell's alleged violation of antitrust laws and its purported failure to pay LFSS the temporary rent benefit Shell agreed to in February 2001. Those two allegations are [20] also the basis for LFSS's counterclaims against Shell.

The district court rejected this argument, holding as a matter of law that Shell's termination of the franchise was per se reasonable because the termination [*21] was based on those three, explicitly listed statutory grounds for termination. See Shell I, slip op. at 19-21. The district court's reasoning suggested that the termination was valid even under an objective reasonableness standard. It found that LFSS's claim that Shell's nonpayment of the rent benefit caused LFSS's cash flow problems lacked merit because of LFSS's April 2002 admission in its letter to Shell that the February 2001 rent benefit was no longer in effect. Id. at 22. We need not evaluate the wisdom of a per se rule that termination is reasonable if an event listed in § 2802(c) occurs. [7] LFSS could not prevail even if we

[6] It is clear, and LFSS does not contest, that Shell provided adequate written notice of the termination here.

[7] The district court's interpretation of the PMPA reflects the law of this circuit: if any of the events listed in § 2802(c) occur, "termination is conclusively presumed to be reasonable as a matter of law." Desfosses v. Wallace Energy, Inc., 836 F.2d 22, 26 (1st Cir. 1987). At least one other circuit also adopted this rule. See Hinkleman v. Shell Oil Co., 962 F.2d 372, 377 (4th Cir. 1992) (per curiam). But see Patel v. Sun Co., Inc., 141 F.3d 447, 456-57 (3d Cir. 1998) ("There is no question that at least some of the § 2802(c) relevant event exceptions mandate some form of judicial scrutiny."); Marathon Petroleum Co. v. Pendleton, 889 F.2d 1509, 1512 (6th Cir. 1989) (suggesting that all terminations for events listed in § 2802(c) are subject to judicial scrutiny to determine whether they were objectively reasonable); Sun Refining & Mktg. Co. v. Rago, 741 F.2d 670, 672-74 (3d Cir. 1984) (holding that in light of the PMPA's purpose of benefitting franchisees, courts must [22] look to whether franchisor terminations under § 2802(c)(8) and (9) are objectively reasonable and not presume reasonableness per se).

reviewed whether [1546] Shell's termination was objectively reasonable. The district court did not clearly err in finding that the February 2001 rent benefit was temporary, long since terminated, and could not have been responsible for LFSS's May 2003 cash flow problems. In any event, uncontested record evidence shows that LFSS's cash flow problems, culminating [21] in its inability to pay Shell for deliveries, had a number of causes unrelated to Shell's actions with respect to the CAP or the temporary rent benefit. [8] Shell's termination of the franchise was valid under the PMPA.

C. Shell's Lanham Act Claim

LFSS also challenges the district court's grant of a permanent injunction preventing LFSS from further using Shell trademarks, trade dress, and color patterns. The district court reasoned that this relief was warranted under Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a), because LFSS's sale of non-Shell products while displaying Shell trademarks was likely to cause confusion as to the origin of LFSS's petroleum products. See Shell I, slip op. at 29-32; Shell IV, 596 F. Supp. 2d at 202-03 (limiting injunctive relief to § 1125(a)).

HN5[] Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act creates civil liability for "any person who . . . uses in commerce any [23] word, term, name, symbol, or device . . . which . . . is likely to cause confusion . . . as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person." 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(A). This circuit generally looks to a non-exclusive, multi-factor list to determine whether a likelihood of confusion exists. [9] That list is merely illustrative, [*22] however; the purpose of the inquiry is simply to determine whether "the allegedly infringing conduct carries with it a likelihood of confounding an appreciable number of reasonably prudent purchasers exercising ordinary care." Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. Winship Green Nursing Ctr., 103 F.3d 196, 201 (1st Cir. 1996).

The application of those factors to the record is a highly fact-intensive inquiry. See Visible Sys. Corp. v. Unisys Corp., 551 F.3d 65, 73-74 (1st Cir. 2008). That is especially so given that LFSS is challenging the district court's decision to limit the evidence to Shell's photographs and the persuasiveness of that evidence. HN6[] We accordingly review the district court's finding of a likelihood of confusion for clear error, and hold that the district court did not clearly err in its finding.

There is no need to go through a mechanical application of the multi-factor list to reach this conclusion. The district court properly rejected LFSS's argument that Shell's photographs of still-visible Shell trademarks at the Los Frailes service station are unpersuasive and unreliable evidence. LFSS presented evidence squarely challenging Shell's photographs only in 2007 and had previously made stipulations at odds with the 2007 evidence that it presented. See Shell IV, 596 F. Supp. 2d at 201-02.

Moreover, beyond the photographic evidence, it is uncontested that LFSS had operated a Shell station on the premises for more than [25] a decade, and that LFSS covered up some, but not all, of the Shell trademarks displayed at the Los Frailes station while selling non-Shell-brand fuel. It is also uncontested that LFSS failed to alter the overall appearance of the service station, which retained the [1547] trade dress of a Shell station. LFSS

[8] Specifically, in 2000, before the CAP or the February 2001 rent benefit were implemented, LFSS's net operating income was $ 33,440, but it loaned more than $ 150,000 to its stockholders during the fiscal year. LFSS also took out substantial loans totaling about $ 675,000 before implementing the CAP, and LFSS paid out more than $ 200,000 to its president, the station operator, in 2000, 2002, and 2003.

> (1) the similarity of the marks; (2) the similarity of the goods (or, in a service mark case, the services); (3) the relationship between the parties' channels of trade; (4) the juxtaposition of their advertising; (5) the classes of prospective purchasers; (6) the evidence of actual confusion; (7) the defendant's intent in adopting its allegedly infringing mark; and (8) the strength of the plaintiff's mark.

Int'l Ass'n of Machinists v. Winship Green Nursing Ctr., 103 F.3d 196, 201 (1st Cir. 1996); [24] see also Visible Sys. Corp. v. Unisys Corp., 551 F.3d 65, 73 (1st Cir. 2008).

further conceded before the district court that the fuel it sold after May 21, 2003, was of inferior quality to the fuel it had previously sold under Shell trademarks. Shell I, slip op. at 24. LFSS's brief on appeal concedes that the station continued to serve the same potential customers before and after the franchise termination.

These facts amply support the district court's finding that when LFSS began selling non-Shell-brand fuel without completely obscuring the Shell trademarks at the station, LFSS's actions were substantially likely to confuse reasonably prudent consumers. Given that the Los Frailes station had been identified with the Shell brand for over a decade and that Shell trademarks were still visible at the station, LFSS's signs stating "We Do Not Sell Shell Gasoline" were not enough to avoid likely confusion, not least because customers could only see those signs after [26] they were already at the gas pump. [10]

[*23] D. The Provision of the Injunction Ordering LFSS to Allow Shell to Retain Possession of the Service Station until the Expiration of the Lease

We next address LFSS's argument that the district court abused its discretion in granting the portion of the injunction that compelled LFSS "to allow [Shell] to continue in possession of the Los Frailes [27] Service Station . . . until the expiration of [Shell]'s rights under the lease agreement between the parties" in 2014. Shell III, slip op. at 2.

The district court did not provide any specific reasoning in its opinion as to why this particular provision of the injunction, guaranteeing Shell's continued presence for a number of years into the future, was necessary to remedy the irreparable harms associated with Shell's loss of goodwill and market presence. Those harms derived from LFSS's failure to comply with the consequences of its franchise termination, including the termination of LFSS's sublease of the service station from Shell and LFSS's obligation to cease operating the station as Shell's designated retailer/sublessee. Shell I, slip op. at 28-29. But the district court's injunction included a separate provision specifically requiring LFSS to comply with the post-termination provisions of the retailer/sublease agreement and the trademark and equipment agreement. Id. The portion of the injunction requiring LFSS to also allow Shell to remain in possession of the service station until its rights under the lease expired in 2014 was in addition to, and separate from, that provision. [28] Id. The district court appears to have reasoned that the PMPA allows franchisors to obtain injunctions based on an underlying lease agreement, not merely injunctions to enforce post-termination provisions of franchise agreements. Id. at 27-29.

On appeal, LFSS does not challenge the portion of the injunction ordering it to comply with post-termination clauses in the franchise agreements. Nor does LFSS dispute that those contractual clauses provided that "[i]f this Contract is terminated or non-renewed, [LFSS] will deliver the Station and the Equipment to [Shell]" within twenty-four hours of termination. Once LFSS's sublease of the station from Shell ended, LFSS had to vacate the premises. Shell then could presumably enter into another sublease with a new retailer to operate the service station. It is unclear from the record whether that has in fact happened.

Instead, LFSS's argument is that the district court should not have added the additional portion of the injunction compelling LFSS to allow Shell to possess the station until Shell's rights under the lease expire in 2014. LFSS is essentially arguing that franchisors like Shell cannot use the PMPA to obtain this kind of injunctive remedy, [29] as distinct from whatever post-termination obligations LFSS has under the franchise agreements. [11]

[10] We likewise reject LFSS's argument that Shell lacked standing to assert an injury on its Lanham Act claims because of Shell's 2006 acquisition and share purchase and its rebranding as Sol Puerto Rico, and specifically because Sol is not the registrant of the relevant Shell trademarks. HN7[] Anyone "who may suffer adverse consequences from a violation of section 1125(a) has standing to sue regardless of whether he is the registrant of the trademark." Quabaug Rubber Co. v. Fabiano Shoe Co., Inc., 567 F.2d 154, 160 (1st Cir. 1977); see also Waldman Publ'g Corp. v. Landoll, Inc., 43 F.3d 775, 784-85 (2d Cir. 1994). Sol, as the owner of numerous Shell stations, plainly has an interest in preventing the confusion of the Shell brand with the inferior-quality fuel that LFSS sold while still displaying some Shell trademarks.

[11] Though LFSS broadly asserts that the PMPA does not allow franchisors to obtain injunctive relief against franchisees if the relief would give the franchisors property rights, LFSS does not claim that this prevents the district court from ordering LFSS to [*1548] [*24] We agree that the district court abused its discretion in ordering LFSS to allow Shell to continue in possession of the Los Frailes service station until Shell's rights under the lease expired.

Here, Shell made no showing of irreparable harm that [30] might justify an order giving it possession of the property for the full term of the lease, until 2014. The post-termination provisions of the retailer/sublease and trademark and equipment contracts adequately protected Shell's right to resume possession of the station and its equipment. We see no basis for further ordering LFSS to allow Shell to possess the property until 2014 under the lease; the district court's order compelling LFSS to comply with these post termination provisions sufficiently protected Shell's interests. The district court did not hold that any violations of the lease by LFSS may have caused discrete, irreparable harms to Shell or that injunctive relief would be the remedy for such harms.

Moreover, the terms of this portion of the injunction appear to allow Shell to continue possessing the property and service station until the lease expires even if Shell, in the future, breaches its obligations under the lease. Shell plainly cannot be entitled to that remedy, which goes even beyond ordering enforcement of the lease agreement.

We vacate this portion of the injunction alone, without prejudice. Shell is free to try to obtain this remedy at a later date if future events [31] warrant it.

IV. LFSS's Antitrust Counterclaim against Shell

LFSS also appeals the district court's decision to strike LFSS's cross-motion for summary judgment and its grant of summary judgment to Shell on LFSS's federal and state law antitrust counterclaims.

HN8[] We review a district court's decision to strike a motion for summary judgment for an abuse of discretion when it is stricken for a failure to comply with the terms of a case-management order. See Rosario-Diaz v. Gonzalez, 140 F.3d 312, 315 (1st Cir. 1998) (holding that case management-related decisions are generally reviewed for an abuse of discretion). We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo and make all reasonable factual inferences in the light most favorable to the non-movant, LFSS. Boston & Me. Corp. v. Mass. Bay Transp. Auth., 587 F.3d 89, 98 (1st Cir. 2009). Summary judgment is appropriate when "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). "We may affirm . . . on any basis in the record." Chiang v. Verizon New England, Inc., 595 F.3d 26, 34 (1st Cir. 2010). We affirm both rulings.

A. The District [32] Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion in Striking LFSS's Summary Judgment Motion

LFSS's argument that the district court erred in striking its motion for summary judgment ignores the salient fact that LFSS's motion was filed on January 3, 2007, weeks after the conclusion of discovery, and well after the September 1, 2006, deadline the district court imposed for dispositive motions.

LFSS argues on appeal that the district court's extension of discovery until November 30, 2006, effectively extended or [*25] vacated the September 1 deadline. That argument, however, does not provide a persuasive ground for questioning the district court's discretionary case management decisions. See Perez-Cordero v. Wal-Mart P.R., 440 F.3d 531, 533 (1st Cir. 2006); Rosario-Diaz, 140 F.3d at 315. LFSS had numerous opportunities to request a filing extension for its summary judgment motion at various status conferences after the September deadline; it took none of them. Nor has LFSS presented any convincing reason for the delay in filing this motion. [12] There was no [1549] abuse of discretion in denying LFSS's summary judgment motion.

comply with its post-termination contractual obligations. In any event, we need not decide whether the PMPA allows franchisors to obtain injunctions to enforce those kinds of obligations. Shell's complaint also included a claim to judicially dispossess LFSS of the service station premises and equipment under Puerto Rican law, and Shell can obtain enforcement of the relevant post-termination contractual provisions on that basis. Shell did not, however, bring any state law claims that would provide an alternate basis for it to obtain an injunctive remedy involving the lease agreement in this suit.

[12] In any event, as the district court noted in its opinion granting summary judgment to Shell, [33] the outcome would have been no different even if it had considered this untimely motion. LFSS's purported evidence that it was in actual competition with

B. The District Court Properly Granted Summary Judgment to Shell on LFSS's Antitrust Counterclaim

LFSS further argues that the district court improperly granted summary judgment against it on its claims under the Robinson-Patman Act and equivalent provisions of Puerto Rican antitrust law because, it says, there were contested material issues of fact as to various elements of that claim even absent the evidence submitted in its stricken motion for summary judgment. We disagree.

HN9[] Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, prohibits price discrimination among different purchasers of like commodities if "the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce," among other consequences. 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). The Robinson-Patman Act prohibits, inter alia, actions "directed [34] at injuring competition among the discriminating seller's customers," referred to as "secondary line violations." See Able Sales Co., Inc. v. Compania de Azucar de P.R., 406 F.3d 56, 60 (1st Cir. 2005).

LFSS claims that Shell engaged in secondary-line violations through the CAP program Shell implemented in July 2001. LFSS says that in establishing price zones for retailers, the CAP offered certain Shell retailers (those operating Shell-owned stations) more favorable prices on Shell fuel than LFSS and other retailer-owned stations received.

HN10[] One of the basic requirements of competitive injury, however, is a showing of "actual competition" between the disfavored retailer (LFSS) and those retailers benefitting from the price discrimination. Volvo Trucks N. Am., Inc. v. Reeder-Simco GMC, Inc., 546 U.S. 164, 177, 126 S. Ct. 860, 163 L. Ed. 2d 663 (2006).

The central reason LFSS's argument fails is because, as the district court found, LFSS presented no evidence that it was actually in competition with the retailers it said were the beneficiaries of the CAP. LFSS's response to Shell's motion for summary judgment simply asserted that under an August 2005 Puerto Rican law, P.R. Laws. Ann., tit. 23, § 1104, the entire island constituted [35] a single price zone and that all retailers were presumptively each other's competitors. But that law was marginally relevant at best. It was a non-retroactive law implemented two years after this suit began, and a year after the CAP was discontinued. See Shell III, slip op. at 8-9.

We likewise reject LFSS's argument that the deposition testimony showing [*26] three other Shell stations were within two miles of LFSS meant that those stations were presumptively in competition with the Los Frailes service station. This testimony was exceptionally vague. LFSS neither presented corroboration nor explained why consumers would in practice choose among these stations. On the evidence submitted in this case, even viewing all reasonable inferences in LFSS's favor, proximity does not per se show actual competition.

LFSS's reply to Shell's motion for summary judgment presented no other factual or legal basis for finding LFSS was in competition with favored retailers, and its attempts on appeal to create an issue of material fact on this point all depend on the exhibits in support of its stricken motion for summary judgment. We need go no further. [13] LFSS cannot satisfy the first prerequisite [36] of its antitrust claims, and thus the district court properly granted Shell summary judgment.

V. LFSS's State Law Breach of Contract Counterclaim

Finally, we reject LFSS's argument that the district court erred in dismissing for failure to prosecute LFSS's breach of contract claim for additional rent due under the lease. HN11[] We review dismissals for failure to prosecute under Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(b) for an abuse of discretion. See Malot v. Dorado Beach Cottages Assocs., 478 F.3d 40, 43 (1st Cir. 2007). There was no abuse of discretion here.

other, nearby retailers that it said received better prices from Shell was weak at best, and it failed to show price differentials. See Shell II, 551 F. Supp. 2d at 134 n.3.

[13] We note that the district court amply explained why, even assuming arguendo that LFSS presented an issue of material fact on the question of whether it was in competition with favored retailers, there were no material issues of fact on the other required elements of this claim that would preclude Shell from obtaining judgment on the merits. See Shell II, 551 F. Supp. 2d at 134-35.

LFSS conceded before the district court in a 2007 show-cause hearing that this claim had been included only in a section of an earlier response to a motion to show cause. The district court could reasonably find there was no real development of this claim since 2003. LFSS's main [37] argument before the district court was that the district court should nonetheless [1550] exercise its discretion not to deem the argument waived. LFSS made all its present arguments as to the lack of hardship to Shell before the district court, which carefully considered them. Nor, despite the extensive filings in this case, has LFSS at any point explained why this claim has merit. LFSS has also not developed the argument as to why this claim should not have been dismissed with prejudice; in any event, HN12[] the district court's decision to dismiss a claim for failure to prosecute with or without prejudice is ordinarily within its discretion. The district court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the claim with prejudice.

We affirm the district court's grant of a permanent injunction ordering LFSS to refrain from further use of any Shell trademarks, trade dress, or color patterns and ordering LFSS to comply with relevant post-termination contractual obligations. We vacate, without prejudice, the portion of the permanent injunction ordering and compelling LFSS to allow Shell to continue in possession of the Los Frailes Service Station until the expiration of the lease in 2014. Shell is free [38] to seek future injunctive relief should it be warranted. The district court's grant of summary judgment and its dismissal of LFSS's breach of contract counterclaim with prejudice are affirmed. No costs are awarded.

judgment and Plaintiff's cross-motion to amend its Complaint. For the reasons stated below, Defendants' motion is granted, and Plaintiff's motion is denied. Accordingly, the case will be closed.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Facts

1. The Health Benefits Program

Current and former employees of the City of New York, as well as their dependents, receive health benefits through the City's Health Benefits Program. (Defs.' 56.1 P 37.) In addition to approximately one million individuals associated with the City, the Program also covers an additional 200,000 employees of thirty-five City-related agencies and entities, such as the New York City Housing Authority, the New York Public Library, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art. (Pl.'s 56.1 P 1.)

The Health Benefits Program is administered by the City's Office of Labor Relations ("OLR"). (Defs.' 56.1 P 37.) The OLR works in conjunction with the Municipal Labor Committee ("MLC"), a multi-union organization, to select plans for inclusion in the [*3] Program. (Id. P 38.) To be included in the Program, a plan must successfully respond to a request for proposals ("RFP") issued by the City. (Id.)

A number of health plans are currently included in the program, including plans offered by CIGNA, Aetna, Empire, GHI, and HIP. (Id. P 27.) The City has agreed to pay for participants' benefits up to the rate charged by HIP for its health maintenance organization ("HMO") product; where an employee chooses a plan with a higher premium, he or she is responsible for the difference in the form of either a payroll or pension deduction. (Id. PP 40, 42.) The City, however, has also created a "Stabilization Fund," the goal of which is to cover the difference between the GHI preferred provider organization ("PPO") rate and the HIP HMO rate. (Id. P 41.) According to the Complaint, 93% of the participants in the Health Benefits Program select a plan offered by HIP or GHI, as their costs are far lower than their competitors'. (Compl. P 15.)

2. The Challenged Transaction

On September 29, 2005, GHI and HIP announced their intention to affiliate under a common holding company. (Defs.' 56.1 P 6.) After the transaction was approved by the United States Department [*4] of Justice, the New York Superintendent of Insurance, the New York Department of Health, and the New York attorney general, the affiliation was consummated on November 15, 2006. (Id. PP 9, 11, 12, 14, 17.)

B. Procedural History

Plaintiffs filed this action on November 13, 2006, and it was assigned to the Honorable Kenneth M. Karas, District Judge. On November 14, 2006, the parties appeared before Judge Karas on Plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order. Judge Karas denied the motion from the bench.

The case was reassigned to my docket on September 4, 2007, and Defendants moved for summary judgment on December 4, 2009. On January 20, 2010 -- nine days before its opposition papers were due -- Plaintiff submitted a pre-motion letter seeking leave to amend the Complaint. The parties appeared before the Court for a pre-motion conference on January 27, 2010, at which time the Court granted Plaintiff permission to seek leave to amend in its papers opposing Defendants' summary judgment motion. The motions were fully submitted on February 25, 2010. [2]

II. DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

A. Standard of Review

[2] The motions were technically fully submitted on February 19, 2010, when Defendants submitted their reply memorandum in support of their [*5] motion for summary judgment and in opposition to Plaintiff's motion to amend. On February 25, 2010, however, Plaintiff filed a reply in support of its motion to amend, despite the fact that the Court's Order of January 27, 2010, did not authorize the filing of such a memorandum. Notwithstanding Plaintiff's failure to seek permission to submit a reply brief, the Court has considered it in resolving the pending motions.

A court may grant a motion for summary judgment if "the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party bears the burden of showing that he or she is entitled to summary judgment. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). The court "is not to weigh the evidence but is instead required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment, to draw all reasonable inferences in favor of that party, and to eschew credibility assessments." Amnesty Am. v. Town of W. Hartford, 361 F.3d 113, 122 (2d Cir. 2004). [*6] As such, "if 'there is any evidence in the record from any source from which a reasonable inference in the [nonmoving party's] favor may be drawn, the moving party simply cannot obtain a summary judgment.'" Binder & Binder PC v. Barnhart, 481 F.3d 141, 148 (2d Cir. 2007) (quoting R.B. Ventures, Ltd. v. Shane, 112 F.3d 54, 59 (2d Cir. 1997)) (alteration in original).

B. Analysis

1. The Statutory Claims

The City brings claims, exclusively in its capacity as a purchaser of Defendants' products, under four statutory sections:

(1) Section 7 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits acquisitions that "substantially . . . lessen competition, or . . . tend to create a monopoly," 15 U.S.C. § 18;

(2) Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce," id. § 1;

(3) Section 2 of the Sherman Act, which renders it illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States," id. § 2; and

(4) Section 340(1) of the Donnelly Act, which prohibits "[e]very contract, agreement, arrangement [*7] or combination whereby [a] monopoly . . . is or may be established or maintained." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law. § 340(1).

2. The Requirement of a Legally Sufficient Product Market

To state claims under any of the statutes identified above, Plaintiffs must identify the product market in which competition will be impaired. See Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Found., 890 F. Supp. 250, 254 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (Sherman Act); Intellective, Inc. v. Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 190 F. Supp. 2d 600, 609 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (Clayton Act); *Astra Media Group, LLC v. Clear Channel Taxi Media, LLC, 679 F. Supp. 2d 413, 2009 WL 5171742, at 10 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (Donnelly Act). Failure to plead a legally sufficient product market is grounds for dismissal. See Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 200 (2d Cir. 2001) ("To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, an alleged product market must bear a rational relation to the methodology courts prescribe to define a market for antitrust purposes -- analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand, and it must be plausible." (citations and internal quotation marks omitted); accord B.V. Optische Industrie De Oude Delft v. Hologic, Inc., 909 F. Supp. 162, 172 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

"The [*8] relevant market is defined as all products 'reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes,' because the ability of consumers to switch to a substitute restrains a firm's ability to raise prices above the competitive level." Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs. Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 496 (2d Cir. 2004) (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). Market definitions recently found to be acceptable by courts in this district have included, for example, "the market for the digital distribution of copyrighted music over the internet," Arista Records LLC v. Lime Group LLC, 532 F. Supp. 2d 556, 576 (S.D.N.Y. 2007), the market for "top commercial films," Reading Int'l, Inc. v. Oaktree Capital Mgmt. LLC, 317 F. Supp. 2d 301, 311 (S.D.N.Y. 2003), and "the market for the installation of telecommunications wiring and systems in commercial buildings," *U.S. Info. Sys., Inc. v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local Union No. 3, No. 00 Civ. 4763 (RMB), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1038, 2002 WL 91625, at 6 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 23, 2002).

As then-Judge Sotomayor explained, "[a] consumer might choose to purchase a certain product because the manufacturer has spent time and energy differentiating [*9] his or her creation from the panoply of products in the market, but at base, Pepsi is one of many sodas, and NBC is just another television network." Global Discount Travel Servs., LLC v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 960 F. Supp. 701, 705 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (Sotomayor, J.). In other words, "'the test for a relevant market is not commodities reasonably interchangeable by a particular plaintiff, but commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.'" *PepsiCo, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., No. 98 Civ. 3282 (LAP), 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13440, 1998 WL 547088, at 10 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 1998) (emphasis added and additional internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 438 (3d Cir. 1997).

As the Tenth Circuit has explicitly held, "[p]urchasing constraints on a single consumer, such as a required competitive bidding procedure, do not" create a market of which only that consumer is a member. See Smalley & Co. v. Emerson & Cuming, Inc., 13 F.3d 366, 368 (10th Cir. 1993); accord Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Boeing Co., 314 F. Supp. 2d 1198, 1228-29 (M.D. Fla. 2004) ("The argument that, because it cannot turn to many suppliers, the U.S. Government has been or will [*10] be harmed by unfair trade practices by one of few suppliers does not alter this analysis. The goal of antitrust law is to prevent harm to competition, not to prevent harm to one of many purchasers of a product.").

3. The City's Market Definition

The Complaint defines the relevant product market as the "the low-cost municipal health benefits market." (Compl. P 3.) According to the Complaint, this entire market consists of two programs: the Health Benefits Program, administered by the City as described above, and the Transit Health Program, administered by the New York City Transit Authority. (Id. P 14.) [3]

The Complaint alleges that within the City's Health Benefits Program, HIP and GHI are the only sellers of "low-cost health insurance." (Id.) While other companies offer health insurance, the Complaint alleges, their prices are sufficiently higher such that they do not exist [*11] in the same market as HIP and GHI. (Id. at PP 14-15.)

According to Plaintiff, plans in the relevant market are distinguished from other plans by four characteristics: (1) the absence of pharmacy benefits, (2) the absence of tiered networks, (3) a large number of in-network doctors in the outer boroughs of New York willing to accept relatively low reimbursements, and (4) in the case of the GHI plan, the fact that hospital and medical benefits are separately provided. (Compl. PP 39.) [4]

4. Analysis

a. The City's Market Definition Is Improperly Limited to a Single Purchaser

Notwithstanding the distinguishing features identified by the City, the market definition contained in the Complaint is deficient as a matter of law, as the market is defined predominantly by the City's and the MLC's roles in selecting plans for inclusion in the Health Benefits Program.

The City concedes that the requirements [*12] of the collective bargaining process create significant barriers to entering its proposed market. In other words, an insurer cannot simply decide to enter the Health Benefits Program.

[3] Although the Complaint alleges that the Transit Health Program is a member of the relevant product market, it is not addressed in the parties' briefing on the instant motion or in their Local Rule 56.1 statements. Accordingly, the Court will not consider the Transit Health Program in resolving the pending motions.

[4] As a fifth supposed difference, the City indicates that "the City and the MLC have worked in conjunction with GHI and HIP to craft the benefits included in their plans." (Id.) This is hardly a relevant difference, apart from the fact that it produced the four distinguishing factors noted in the text above.

Rather, "[t]o change insurers, the City and its unions have to engage consultants and undertake a 15-step process to issue a Request for Proposals and evaluate responsive proposals." (Pl.'s Opp'n at 20.)

As explained in the Declaration of Dorothy A. Wolfe, the Director of the Employee Benefits Program within the City's Office of Labor Relations, "[h]ealth insurance . . . is a mandatory subject of collective bargaining" and "the City cannot modify the Health Benefits Program unilaterally." (Decl. of Dorothy A. Wolfe P 5.) Accordingly, "any significant restructuring of the City's health program would require a number of lengthy and expensive steps." (Id. P 18.) In total, awarding a contract to an insurance company to join the Health Benefits Program typically takes anywhere from twelve to eighteen months. (Id. P 22.)

The City further concedes that it exercises its gatekeeping role based on its particular needs and policy preferences. (See Pl.'s Opp'n at 17 ("The City's program is designed as a result of mandatory [*13] collective bargaining with the City's many unions."); id. ("These attributes of the City's health plan express policy preferences of the City and its many unions, and are incorporated in multiple collective bargaining agreements."); id. ("The unions' influence on the design of the City's health benefits program is a further factor that influences the City's ability to switch to another carrier.")).

Against the backdrop of these significant barriers to entry erected by the City's collective bargaining process, it is disingenuous for the City to argue that the four minor distinguishing features that it has identified serve to define the product market. [5] Rather, the record is clear that the major distinguishing feature of the plans in the City's purported market is that, unlike other plans, the plans in the market have been approved by the City for inclusion in the Health Benefits Program after a lengthy bidding process. Yet the law is equally clear that the preferences of a single purchaser cannot define a product market, see, e.g., Lockheed Martin Corp., 314 F. Supp. 2d at 1228-29; *PepsiCo, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13440, 1998 WL 547088, at 1, and that "[p]urchasing constraints on a single consumer, such as a required [*14] competitive bidding procedure, do not" create a market of which only that consumer is a member, see Smalley, 13 F.3d at 368 (emphasis added).

The City's argument that it has not defined a "single purchaser" market, as individual enrollees choose the program within the market in which they wish to enroll, may be dismissed out of hand. While the individuals choose the member of the proposed "market" in which to enroll, no plan can become a member of this market without being first selected by the City.

Because the City has defined the relevant market solely with regard to its own preferences as a purchaser of health insurance, its market definition is inadequate as a matter of law. This inadequacy alone is sufficient support for granting summary judgment.

b. The City's Market Definition Is Not Supported by Its Own Expert Report

A further, independent flaw with the City's proposed market definition is that it is not supported by the City's own expert report. Rather than concluding that the two-provider market for "low-cost municipal health benefits" [*15] described in the Complaint is a relevant product market for antitrust purposes, the expert report of Professor Frank Lichtenberg concludes that the market for "medical benefits to City employees, retirees, and dependents is a relevant antitrust market." (See Decl. of Frank R. Lichtenberg P 20.) His report then analyzes the merger's effects on competition in this market. Notably, Professor Lichtenberg's market definition does not include cost as a bounding factor of the market; unlike the Complaint, it thus does not conclude that GHI and HIP are the only members of the relevant market. (See id. Ex. 5.) The City's inability to proffer any evidence in support of reduced competition in the market defined by its own Complaint is fatal to its claims. See Mahmud v. Kaufmann, 607 F. Supp. 2d 541, 555 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (noting that, where the market definition stated in the complaint differed from the market definition asserted in opposition to the defendant's summary judgment motion, "courts will not consider, on a motion for summary judgment, allegations that were not pled in the complaint and raised for the first time in opposition to a motion for summary judgment"), aff'd, 358 Fed. Appx. 229, 2009 WL 4912180 (2d Cir. 2009).

[5] Indeed, it is undisputed that HIP offers an identical HMO plan to purchasers outside of the Health Benefits Program. (See Def.'s 56.1 P 62.)

III. [*16] PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO AMEND

Where a party is not entitled to amend as a matter of right, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure still provide that the "Court should freely give leave when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). Nevertheless, the Court has broad discretion in deciding whether or not to grant such a request." *Panther Partners, Inc. v. Ikanos Commc'ns, Inc., No. 06 Civ. 12967 (PAC), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45907, 2008 WL 2414047, at 2 (S.D.N.Y. June 12, 2008); see also McCarthy v. Dun & Bradstreet Corp., 482 F.3d 184, 200 (2d Cir. 2007). Factors that are relevant to the exercise of the Court's discretion include (1) the presence of bad faith, dilatory motives, or undue delay on the part of the movant; (2) the potential for prejudice to an opposing party; and (3) whether the sought-after amendment would be futile. See, e.g., In re PXRE Group, Ltd., Sec. Litig., 600 F. Supp. 2d 510, 523-24 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). Ultimately, "Rule 15(a) is not a shield against dismissal to be invoked as either a makeweight or a fallback position in response to a dispositive motion." *DeBlasio v. Merrill Lynch & Co., No. 07 Civ. 318 (RJS), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64848, 2009 WL 2242605, at 41 (S.D.N.Y. July 27, 2009).

Courts are particularly skeptical [*17] of motions to amend brought in response to motions for summary judgment. See Ansam Assocs., Inc. v. Cola Petroleum, Ltd., 760 F.2d 442, 446 (2d Cir. 1985) ("[P]ermitting the proposed amendment would have been especially prejudicial given the fact that discovery had already been completed and [the defendant] had already filed a motion for summary judgment."); CL-Alexanders Laing & Cruickshank v. Godlfeld, 739 F. Supp. 158, 167 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) ("When the motion is made after discovery has been completed and a motion for summary judgment has been filed, leave to amend is particularly disfavored because of the resultant prejudice to defendant.").

Given the flaws in Plaintiff's market definition identified above, and detailed in Defendants' able briefing, Plaintiff's desire to amend its Complaint is unsurprising. In this case, Plaintiff moves to file an amended complaint that would (1) propose an additional market definition of "downstate New York suppliers of commercial medical benefits," (2) revise the complaint's existing market definition to clarify that other companies, in addition to HIP and GHI, participate in that market, and (3) add the "upwards pricing pressure" test as an avenue [*18] of proof. [6] The motion is denied, both because (1) Plaintiff has exhibited undue delay, and (2) there would be clear prejudice to the opposing party.

With respect to undue delay, Plaintiff has been on notice of the flaws in its market definition since at least November 14, 2006, when Judge Karas denied its motion for a temporary restraining order. As Judge Karas explained in denying Plaintiff's motion, "there are substantial questions about the market definition analysis that the plaintiff has [*19] adopted here. It appears to be focused on what the City is paying for, and not so much on the market of insurance coverage." (Tr. Nov. 14, 2006, at 79:6-9 (emphasis added)). He continued that "I think the products . . . are the same, whether they're offered to the City or they're offered to a private large employer, and so I think it raises substantial questions as to whether or not the City's market analysis is really the appropriate starting point." (Id. at 79:24 - 80:4.) While Judge Karas indicated that his conclusion was preliminary, and should not be treated as law of the case (id. at 80-4:6), Plaintiff was at least on notice as of this date of the potential flaws in its market definition.

In addition to the undue delay noted above, allowing the City's proposed amendment would impose undue prejudice on Defendants. Having required Defendants to spend three and half years defending a lawsuit premised on the City's narrowly defined market, the City would now force Defendants to analyze an entirely different, broader market. And while the City argues that Defendants would need little additional discovery to defend its revised claims, the Court is persuaded that prudent counsel would [*20] insist on additional discovery to defend a lawsuit alleging reduced competition in an entirely different market from the one identified in the Complaint.

Because the City waited unduly long to propose amendments that would require Defendants to conduct substantial additional discovery, leave to amend is denied.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, Defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted, and Plaintiff's motion to amend is denied. The Clerk of the Court is respectfully directed to terminate the motions located at document numbers 129 and 142 and to close this case.

SO ORDERED.

Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) (2007-08) sets forth two prerequisites to bringing an action against a governmental body such as a county, a notice of injury, § 893.80(1)(a), and a notice of claim, § 893.80(1)(b). The notice of injury must be given within 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim, and supply written notice of the circumstances of the claim. However, failure to give the requisite notice shall not bar action on the claim if the county had actual notice of the claim and the claimant shows to the satisfaction of the court that the delay or failure to give the requisite notice has not been prejudicial to the county. The purpose of the para. (1)(a) notice of injury is to notify the governmental entity of the potential claim so that it might investigate and evaluate.

The notice of claim against a governmental body is not subject to any filing deadline. The notice is to contain the claimant's address and an itemized statement of the relief sought, and no action may be brought until the claim has been disallowed. Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(b) (2007-08). A claim is deemed disallowed if the governmental body fails to respond within 120 days. Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1g). The purpose of the para. (1)(b) notice of claim is to afford the governmental entity an opportunity to effect compromise without suit, and to budget for settlement or litigation.

Courts apply the following three-factor test to determine on a case-by-case basis whether a particular statutory claim is excepted from the notice requirements of Wis. Stat. § 893.80 (2007-08): (1) whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption; (2) whether enforcement of § 893.80(1) would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution of the type of claim under consideration; and (3) whether the purposes for which § 893.80(1) was enacted would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed.

Whether the notice provisions of Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1) (2007-08) apply to specific statutory actions is a question of statutory interpretation and presents a question of law that an appellate court determines independently of a trial court.

Opinion

[*P1] [426] [646] HOOVER, P.J. E-Z Roll Off, LLC, appeals a judgment dismissing its complaint for failure to provide Oneida County a timely notice of injury and claim as required by WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1). [1] E-Z Roll Off primarily argues its WIS. STAT. ch. 133 antitrust claim was exempt from the statutory notice requirements. If not exempt, then E-Z Roll Off contends its notice was timely because [647] there was a continuing violation. As its final alternative, E-Z Roll Off asserts Oneida County had actual notice and was not prejudiced by the failure to give the statutory notice. We agree ch. 133 antitrust claims are exempt from § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements and, therefore, reverse the judgment and remand.

BACKGROUND

[*P2] E-Z Roll Off was in the solid waste hauling business, providing dumpsters to its customers. In June 2003, Oneida County executed an agreement with another waste hauling company, Waste Management, Wisconsin,

[1] All references to the Wisconsin Statutes are to the 2007-08 version unless otherwise noted.

[2] [427] Inc. As part of that agreement, Waste Management was charged a preferential $ 5.25 per ton rate for waste it delivered to the County's transfer station. Other waste haulers, including E-Z Roll Off, were charged $ 44 or $ 54 per ton, depending on whether the hauler delivered enough waste to the County annually to earn a rebate.

[*P3] E-Z Roll Off's owners, Todd and Paula Laddusire, were unaware of the Waste Management contract until February 2004, when one of their employees inadvertently saw a scale ticket showing Waste Management's rate. [2] The Laddusires promptly requested a meeting with the County's solid waste director, Bart Sexton. At a February 17, 2004 meeting, the Laddusires expressed their concerns with the Waste Management contract, opining it created a monopoly and stating they would take their waste elsewhere unless the County reduced E-Z Roll Off's disposal rate. Sexton refused to reduce E-Z Roll Off's rate.

[*P4] The Laddusires then filed complaints with various governmental entities, including the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, Trade, and Consumer Protection. As a remedy, the complaint requested reimbursement of "the amount … paid over [$]5.25/ton, … which is about [$]98,000," and that "the monopoly … be broken [and] criminal charges filed against all parties involved." The Department forwarded a copy of the complaint to the County landfill, but took no further [428] action. The Department's cover letter indicated the County had the option to provide a response, which the Department would place in its file. Sexton replied to the complaint, which he had received May 8, 2004, in a letter to the Department and the Laddusires. Sexton asserted the Laddusires were always aware of the contract terms, and stressed the contract resulted from an open bidding process. He also denied the Laddusires' claim that payments had been made "under the table."

[*P5] On September 28, 2005, E-Z Roll Off filed with the County a notice of injury alleging violations of WIS. STAT. ch. 133, and a statement of claim indicating a loss of $ 1,199,100.45 in past and future [*4] lost earnings. The claim was disallowed and E-Z Roll Off filed the present action on April 20, 2006. Ultimately, the circuit court granted the County's motion for summary judgment, dismissing the case. The court concluded WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements applied, E-Z Roll Off's notice was not timely, and E-Z Roll Off failed to demonstrate actual notice and lack of prejudice.

DISCUSSION

[*P6] HN1[] WISCONSIN STAT. § 893.80(1) sets forth two prerequisites to bringing an action [648] against a governmental body such as Oneida County, a notice of injury, § 893.80(1)(a), and a notice of claim, § 893.80(1)(b). [3] The notice of injury must be given "[w]ithin 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim," and supply "written notice of the circumstances of the claim." WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)(a). However, "[f]ailure [429] to give the requisite notice shall not bar action on the claim if the [county] had actual notice of the claim and the claimant shows to the satisfaction of the court that the delay or failure to give the requisite notice has not been prejudicial to the [county]." Id. The purpose of the para. (1)(a) notice of injury is to notify the governmental entity of the potential [5] claim so that it might investigate and evaluate. Griffin v. Milwaukee Transp. Servs., Inc., 2001 WI App 125, PP14-15, 246 Wis. 2d 433, 630 N.W.2d 536*.

[P7] HN2[] The notice of claim, on the other hand, is not subject to any filing deadline. Vanstone v. Town of Delafield, 191 Wis. 2d 586, 593, 530 N.W.2d 16 (Ct. App. 1995)*; see also Thorp v. Town of Lebanon*, 2000 WI 60, P28, 235 Wis. 2d 610, 612 N.W.2d 59*. That notice is to contain the claimant's address and "an itemized

[2] The County disputes this fact, asserting the Laddusires were aware of the contract when it was created. However, because summary judgment was granted to the County, the facts must be construed in E-Z Roll Off's favor. See Kuehl v. Sentry Select Ins. Co*., 2009 WI App 38, P5, 316 Wis. 2d 506, 765 N.W.2d 860*. [*3] Regardless, the fact is not critical to our decision.

[3] WISCONSIN STAT. § 893.80(1)(a) actually uses the word "claim," not "injury." The case law, however, recognizes this component of the statute as the notice of injury. Vanstone v. Town of Delafield*, 191 Wis. 2d 586, 591 n.5, 530 N.W.2d 16 (Ct. App. 1995)*.

statement of the relief sought," and no action may be brought until the claim has been disallowed. WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)(b). A claim is deemed disallowed if the county fails to respond within 120 days. WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1g). The purpose of the para. (1)(b) notice of claim is to afford the governmental entity an opportunity to effect compromise without suit, and to budget for settlement or litigation. Griffin, 2001 WI App 125, 246 Wis. 2d 433, PP14-15, 630 N.W.2d 536*

[*P8] Our supreme court has held HN3[] WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)'s [*6] notice provisions apply generally to all actions, not just those in tort or those for money damages. See DNR v. City of Waukesha, 184 Wis. 2d 178, 191, 515 N.W.2d 888 (1994)*, overruled in part by State ex rel. Auchinleck v. Town of LaGrange, 200 Wis. 2d 585, 597, 547 N.W.2d 587 (1996)* (holding the "all actions" language was overbroad). However, the court held substantial compliance with the statute was sufficient. Id. at 198*.

[P9] [430] Two years later, in Auchinleck, 200 Wis. 2d at 596, the supreme court nonetheless held WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements do not apply to open records and open meetings actions because the statutes were conflicting, primarily because the open records and meetings laws specify procedures for immediate relief. The court also rejected the Town's argument that effect must be given to the notice statute's intent to afford a municipality an opportunity to settle the claim without litigation. Id. at 593, 595-96*. It reasoned that "allowing a municipality an additional 120 days to contemplate how to respond to an open records or open meetings enforcement action in large part duplicates the process in which it already engaged prior to its initial response [7] [denying the records request or deciding to hold a closed meeting]." [4] Id. at 596.

> Wisconsin Stat. § 30.294 expressly allows [*8] a plaintiff to seek immediate injunctive relief to prevent injury. The enforcement procedures provided in § 30.294, are inconsistent with Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(b), which requires a plaintiff to provide a governmental body with a notice of claim, and to wait 120 days or until the claim is disallowed before filing an action. Therefore, the general application of § 893.80(1)(b) in this case frustrates the plaintiffs' specific right to injunctive relief under § 30.294.

Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 822*. The court also relied in part on the nature of public trust doctrine cases, which are enforced on behalf of the state. Id. at 827*.

[*P11] Suffice it to say, since the City of Waukesha decision, Wisconsin courts "have identified [at least eight] statutes which provide specific procedures for bringing actions in which municipal entities are defendants or respondents, but to which the notice … requirement[s] of WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) do[] not apply." Oak Creek Citizen's Action Comm. v. City of Oak Creek, 2007 WI App 196, P6, 304 Wis. 2d 702, 738 N.W.2d 168* (collecting six cases, and recognizing a seventh exception); see also Kapischke v. Walworth County, 226 Wis. 2d 320, 326-27, 595 N.W.2d 42 (Ct. App. 1999)* [*9] (an eighth statutory exception recognized, not collected in Oak Creek).

[4] In State ex rel. Auchinleck v. Town of LaGrange, 200 Wis. 2d 585, 596, 547 N.W.2d 587 (1996)*, the court also observed: "Further, Wis. Stat. § 893.80(5) expressly states that specific rights and remedies provided by other statutes take precedence over the provisions of § 893.80." This effectively overruled the court's prior holding in DNR v. City of Waukesha, 184 Wis. 2d 178, 191-93, 515 N.W.2d 888 (1994)*, where the court had concluded subsec. (5) only applied to subsec. (3)'s damage caps, not subsec. (1)'s notice provisions. Id. at 192*.

(1) whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption;

(2) whether enforcement of § 893.80(1) would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution of the type of claim under consideration; and

(3) whether the purposes for which § 893.80(1) was enacted would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed.

Oak Creek, 2007 WI App 196, 304 Wis. 2d 702, P7, 738 N.W.2d 168* HN5[] Whether the notice provisions of WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) apply to specific statutory actions is a question of statutory interpretation and presents a question of law that we determine independently of the circuit court. Nesbitt Farms, LLC v. City of Madison, 2003 WI App 122, P4, 265 Wis. 2d 422, 665 N.W.2d 379*.

[*P13] [*650] E-Z Roll Off, relying heavily on Gillen, argues for an exception to WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements for its WIS. STAT. ch. 133 antitrust claim. The primary focus here is on WIS. STAT. § 133.16, injunction; pleading; practice. [6] That section consists of a single, lengthy paragraph. In relevant part, it states:

> HN6[] [433] Any circuit court may prevent or restrain, by injunction or otherwise, any violation of this chapter. The department of justice, any district attorney or any person by complaint may institute actions or proceedings to prevent or restrain a violation of this chapter, setting forth the cause and grounds for the intervention of the court and praying that such violation, whether intended or continuing be enjoined or prohibited. When the parties informed against or complained of have been served with [*11] a copy of the information or complaint and cited to answer it, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be in accordance with its rules, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending the filing of the answer to such information or complaint may, at any time, upon proper notice, make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as is just. Whenever it appears to the court that the ends of justice require that other persons be made parties to the action or proceeding the court may cause them to be made parties in such manner as it directs. The party commencing or maintaining the action or proceeding may demand and recover the cost of suit including reasonable attorney fees. … Copies of all pleadings filed under this section shall be served on the department of justice.

WIS. STAT. § 133.16 (emphasis added). Also relevant to the statutory scheme here are two provisions of WIS. STAT. § 133.18:

> (4) HN7[] A cause of action arising under this chapter does not accrue until the discovery, by the aggrieved person, of the facts constituting the cause of action.
> (5) HN8[] Each civil action under this chapter and each motion or other proceeding in such action *shall be expedited in every way and shall [12] be heard at the earliest practicable date. (Emphasis added.)

[434] I. Whether there is a specific statutory scheme for which the plaintiff seeks exemption.

[5] In Town of Burke v. City of Madison, 225 Wis. 2d 615, 625, 593 N.W.2d 822 (Ct. App. 1999)*, we merely observed that prior decisions had focused [10] on three factors. In Nesbitt Farms, LLC v. City of Madison, 2003 WI App 122, P9, 265 Wis. 2d 422, 665 N.W.2d 379, we noted Town of Burke had identified three factors "which shed light on the question." Eventually, we referred to the three factors as a "test." See Oak Creek Citizen's Action Comm. v. City of Oak Creek, 2007 WI App 196, P7, 304 Wis. 2d 702, 738 N.W.2d 168*.

[6] Although titles are not part of statutes, WIS. STAT. § 990.001(6), they may be helpful in interpretation. Aiello v. Village of Pleasant Prairie, 206 Wis. 2d 68, 73, 556 N.W.2d 697 (1996)*. As the issue here is one of statutory interpretation, we recite the title to provide context.

[*P14] We first address whether there is a specific statutory enforcement scheme. As noted, the statutory scheme addressed in Gillen consisted of a single sentence recognizing the availability of injunctive relief. Here, the County concedes WIS. STAT. § 133.16's mention of injunctive relief, alone, might thus satisfy the first factor of the test. Nonetheless, it argues the WIS. STAT. ch. 133 scheme is not specific enough to qualify. Specifically, the County contends § 133.16 is too vague because it uses terms in addition to injunction, allowing a court to prevent or restrain any violations by "injunction or otherwise," and permitting parties to accomplish this through "actions or proceedings."

[*P16] The County also argues WIS. STAT. § 133.16's references to a "complaint" and to "actions or proceedings" [435] suggest that WIS. STAT. ch. 133 claims are brought as traditional actions pursuant to the rules of civil procedure and, therefore, are subject to WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements. [7] This argument, however, does not account for the Gillenor Nesbitt Farms decisions.

[*P17] The statute in Gillen, WIS. STAT. § 30.294, similarly provides for enforcement of injunctions generally by "legal action," without providing any specific mechanisms. Thus, WIS. STAT. ch. 30 actions must also be brought by complaint and prosecuted in the usual manner. See Gillen*, 219 Wis. 2d at 837* (C.J. Abrahamson, concurring). Similarly, WIS. STAT. § 32.05(11), at issue in Nesbitt Farms, provides that appeals brought under it "shall proceed as an action in [circuit] court subject to all the provisions of law relating to actions originally brought therein." That statute does, however, set forth procedural guidance, analogous to that found here in WIS. STAT. §§ 133.16 and 133.18. See Nesbitt Farms*, 2003 WI App 122, PP5, 10, 265 Wis. 2d 422, 665 N.W.2d 379*

[*18] WISCONSIN STAT. § 30.294 constitutes a specific statutory enforcement scheme even though it consists of a single, vague [*15] sentence mentioning "injunction" and "legal action" and providing no further enforcement mechanism, procedural guidance, or deadlines. See Gillen*, 219 Wis. 2d at 821-22*. If that section constitutes a specific statutory enforcement scheme, then so too must the much more specific provisions of [436] WIS. STAT. §§ 133.16 and 133.18, which are comparable to those found sufficient in Nesbitt Farms. [8] Therefore, the first factor is satisfied in this case.

II. Whether enforcement of WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution [16] of the type of claim under consideration.

[7] The County also asserts the "actions and proceedings" [*14] language suggests other remedies, in addition to injunctions, are also appropriate in WIS. STAT. ch 133 actions. However, WIS. STAT. § 133.16 and 133.18 specifically provide for the recovery of costs, attorney fees, and treble damages. This serves to strengthen, not weaken, the conclusion that there is a specific statutory enforcement scheme.

[8] In addition to the provisions of WIS. STAT. §§ 133.16 and 133.18 recited in this decision, those sections also specify a statute of limitations, tolling provisions, an allowance for treble damages, and state enforcement procedures. Additionally, like WIS. STAT. § 30.294, the statute at issue in Gillen v. City of Neenah*, 219 Wis. 2d 806, 580 N.W.2d 628 (1998)*, both sections apply only to the specific violations provided for by the chapter in which they are set forth. See WIS. STAT. §§ 133.16, 133.18; Gerol v. Arena*, 127 Wis. 2d 1, 12, 377 N.W.2d 618 (Ct. App. 1985)* (WIS. STAT. ch. 133 remedies are "confined to violations under ch. 133").

[*P19] We next address whether enforcement of WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) would hinder a legislative preference for a prompt resolution of WIS. STAT. ch. 133 claims. In the past, courts have often found this second factor satisfied where a specific statutory enforcement scheme established precise procedural time limits [652] that conflicted with the 120-day timelines of §§ 893.80(1) and (1g). See Oak Creek, 2007 WI App 196, PP5, 9, 304 Wis. 2d 702, 738 N.W.2d 168*; Burke, 225 Wis. 2d at 620, 625-26*; Gamroth v. Village of Jackson, 215 Wis. 2d 251, 258-59, 571 N.W.2d 917 (Ct. App. 1997)*. However, specific time limits are not the sole indicator of a legislative preference for prompt resolution.

[*P20] Rather, prior decisions have also focused on statutory statements indicating such a preference. See [437] Auchinleck, 200 Wis. 2d at 592* (response required "as soon as practicable and without delay"); Nesbitt Farms, 2003 WI App 122, 265 Wis. 2d 422, P11, 665 N.W.2d 379* (condemnation appeals "shall have precedence over all other actions not then on trial"); Burke, 225 Wis. 2d at 620, 625-26* ("An action contesting an annexation shall be given preference in the circuit court."). There are similar statutory statements in this instance. WISCONSIN STAT. § 133.16 [*17] provides that "the [circuit] court shall proceed, as soon as may be in accordance with its rules, to the hearing and determination of the case." Further, WIS. STAT. § 133.18(5) requires, "Each civil action under this chapter and each motion or other proceeding in such action shall be expedited in every way and shall be heard at the earliest practicable date." That the legislature used such strong language, i.e., shall, and twice set forth requirements for prompt resolution, supports a conclusion that the second factor is satisfied.

[*P21] Additionally, in Gillen, the supreme court relied solely on the mere suggestion of a preference for prompt resolution, based on the statute's allowance for injunctions, holding:

> Wisconsin Stat. § 30.294 expressly allows a plaintiff to seek immediate injunctive relief to prevent injury. The enforcement procedures provided in § 30.294, are inconsistent with Wis. Stat. § 893.80(1)(b), which requires a plaintiff to provide a governmental body with a notice of claim, and to wait 120 days or until the claim is disallowed before filing an action.

Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 822*. The concurrence in that case criticized this immediacy rationale, observing that it "obfuscates [18] the differences between a preliminary injunction and a permanent injunction." Id. at 837 (C.J. Abrahamson, concurring). Here, on the other hand, WIS. STAT. § 133.16 provides not only for injunctive [438] relief generally, but also specifies that a court, "pending the filing of the answer … may, at any time, upon proper notice, make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as is just." This provides further indication that the legislature intended prompt relief for WIS. STAT. ch. 133 plaintiffs.

[*P22] Finally, we have recognized "that hindering a legislative preference for 'promptness' is not the only way in which the requirements of WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) might interfere with legislative purposes." Nesbitt Farms, 2003 WI App 122, 265 Wis. 2d 422, P13, 665 N.W.2d 379*. Rather, other significant conflicts may also support an exception to § 893.80(1) under the second factor of the analysis. See id., PP13-17* (applying § 893.80(1) to WIS. STAT. § 32.05(11) would limit ability of additional parties to join an appeal, thus conflicting with legislative preference "for efficiency and consistency in resolving compensation disputes").

[*P23] Of importance here, WIS. STAT. § 133.18(4) provides, "A cause of action arising under this [*19] chapter does not accrue until the discovery, by the aggrieved person, of the facts constituting the cause of action." Yet, a claim might be extinguished before discovery of the facts underlying it by the application of § 893.80(1)(a), which requires that notice of the injury must be provided "[w]ithin 120 days after the happening of the event giving rise to the claim." Indeed, here the [653] circuit court concluded the "event" was the creation of the contract, rather than the Laddusires' subsequent discovery of its terms.

[*P24] By hindering a party's ability to bring timely actions to enforce violations, applying the 120-day limitations period would be contrary to the legislature's intent that WIS. STAT. ch. 133 "be interpreted in a manner which gives the most liberal construction to [439] achieve the aim of competition." WIS. STAT. § 133.01. In light of the legislature's multiple indications of a preference for prompt resolution, and the conflict with WIS. STAT. § 133.18(4), we conclude the second factor is satisfied in this case.

III. Whether the purposes for which WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) was enacted would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed.

[*P25] Finally, we address whether the [*20] purposes for which WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) was enacted would be furthered by requiring that a notice of claim be filed. In other words, should the notice requirements still apply despite the conflicts with WIS. STAT. § 133.16 and 133.18? See Auchinleck, 200 Wis. 2d at 595-96*; Nesbitt Farms, 2003 WI App 122, 265 Wis. 2d 422, PP21-23, 665 N.W.2d 379*

[*P26] We first observe that the application of this third factor is a nebulous matter. When the first two factors of the analysis have been found to favor exemption from WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1), to our knowledge no court has concluded the third factor did not also favor exemption. Thus, neither has any court addressed how such a conclusion, that the third factor militated against exemption, would affect the outcome of the analysis. [9] In fact, the County concedes "no court has declared whether all of the prongs must be fulfilled for [440] the notice requirements of § 893.80 to give way." Further contributing to the [654] nebulosity of the third factor's application, it is unclear whether we should focus only on the statutes or also on the facts. In most cases courts [441] have addressed the third factor only by comparing the statutes at issue, rather than addressing the particular facts of the [21] given case. However, in Oak Creek, 2007 WI App 196, 304 Wis. 2d 702, PP10-12, 738 N.W.2d 168, for example, we addressed both.

[*P27] Aside from simply restating the purposes underlying the notice of injury and notice of claim provisions, the County provides no argument applying them in the context of WIS. STAT. ch. 133 claims, generally, or as they apply to the specific facts of this case. We may treat this failure to sufficiently address the issue as a concession. See State v. Flynn, 190 Wis. 2d 31, 39 n.2, 527 N.W.2d 343 (Ct. App. 1994)*. E-Z Roll Off argues there was no need to provide notice for investigation purposes, because the County entered into the contract and therefore already knew its terms. It further argues antitrust actions will frequently involve continuing violations and, therefore, the need for prompt investigation will not exist.

[P28] By the very nature of WIS. STAT. ch. 133 antitrust claims, aggrieved parties often will not immediately know of the circumstances giving rise to a claim. The prohibited deals and conspiracies will be secret and, thus, the [9] In both Auchinleck, 200 Wis. 2d at 595-96 and Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 822-24*, the supreme court observed the conflicting, specific statutory schemes had to take precedence over the more general notice statute. Thus, it is unclear whether the third factor could outweigh the first two factors in any given case.

When first setting forth the three-factor analysis in Burke, 225 Wis. 2d at 625* and nn.3-5, we cited a different case for the existence of each factor. For the third factor, we cited City of Waukesha, 184 Wis. 2d 178, 515 N.W.2d 888*Recall, however, that case was where the supreme court first recognized WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) applied in all types of cases. Id. at 202*. The court there did not engage in what is now our three-factor test. To the contrary, it refused to consider a claim that an exception existed for WIS. STAT. ch. 144 (1991-92) enforcement actions even though the chapter's enforcement provisions, WIS. STAT. §§ 144.98 and 144.99 (1991-92), explicitly provided that all violations of the chapter constituted public nuisances enforceable by injunction. Yet, that is precisely what the subsequent [*22] Gillen decision concluded was sufficient to create an exception, there, without consideration of the third Burke factor. See Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 821-22, 826-27*.

The court declined in City of Waukesha, 184 Wis. 2d at 193 n.10*, to address whether there should be an exception because, although the DNR had requested an injunction, id. at 186*, it had not requested immediate relief via a temporary injunction. In Gillen, the court abrogated City of Waukesha, explicitly rejecting any requirement that injunctive relief, in any form, even be requested to recognize an exception to WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements, relying instead on the enforcement scheme's provision for injunctive relief. Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 826 (per curiam), 834-35* (C.J. Abrahamson, concurring) (criticizing the per curiam for failing to acknowledge it was overruling City of Waukesha). Thus, our reliance on the much maligned City of Waukesha decision to recognize a third factor for the "exceptions test," may not have been the best choice. Despite our concerns with the third factor, we are obliged to apply it. See Cook v. Cook, 208 Wis. 2d 166, 189-90, 560 N.W.2d 246 (1997)* (court of appeals may not overrule, [*23] modify, or withdraw language from a prior published opinion). Perhaps the issue is ripe for review by our supreme court; it has yet to address our recognition of a three-factor test.

legislature has provided for tolling commencement of the limitations [*24] period for bringing claims until discovery of the conduct. See WIS. STAT. § 133.18(4). Such conduct will, however, be known to the parties partaking in it. Hence, E-Z Roll Off is correct that there is little need to provide for prompt investigation into the circumstances giving rise to the claim. "In short, a [ch. 133 antitrust action] is not like a suit to recover damages for injuries sustained in a slip-and-fall on municipal property, of which, absent notice under WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1), a municipality may know absolutely nothing prior to suit." Nesbitt Farms, 2003 WI App 122, 265 Wis. 2d 422, P25, 665 N.W.2d 379*

[*P29] [442] We further agree with E-Z Roll Off that in the case of continuing violations, there is also a diminished need to provide an opportunity for prompt investigation. See WIS. STAT. § 133.01 (ch. 133 is intended "to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies") (emphasis added). Additionally, here, E-Z Roll Off did promptly provide actual notice of the circumstances giving rise to its claim when it met with Sexton and expressed dissatisfaction with Waste Management's preferential pricing, and claimed that preference created a monopoly. Thus, in any event, the purposes of notice [*25] were honored here.

[*P30] Neither party specifically addresses the WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)(b) purpose of allowing the municipality an opportunity to effect compromise without suit, and to budget for settlement or litigation. However, in this case, E-Z Roll Off did eventually provide that notice and the claim was disallowed prior to filing the action. [10] Thus, again, the purposes of notice were honored here.

[*P31] Regarding the interactions of the statutes generally, a defendant municipality may be unable to simply negotiate a compromise on a WIS. STAT. ch. 133 claim because, even if a private party plaintiff [655] settles its claim, the State might nonetheless prosecute the conduct criminally. In fact, WIS. STAT. § 133.16 requires that copies of all ch. 133 pleadings be served on the department of justice. Thus, the opportunity-to-compromise purpose is less important in ch. 133 actions. Further, while WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)(b)'s 120-day delay may allow municipalities some opportunity to budget for defending a claim, the legislature has strongly expressed its intent that ch. 133 actions be decided [*26] swiftly. [443] The general notice statute cannot override WIS. STAT. §§ 133.16's and 133.18's specific provisions requiring prompt resolution. See Auchinleck, 200 Wis. 2d at 595-96*; Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 822-24*. "Further, HN10[] Wis. Stat. § 893.80(5) expressly states that specific rights and remedies provided by other statutes take precedence over the provisions of § 893.80." Auchinleck, 200 Wis. 2d at 596*.

[*P32] Finally, in Gillen, which preceded our recognition of a three-factor test, the supreme court recognized an exception to WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1) without any discussion of the third factor. [11] Rather, it relied on a conflicting statutory scheme (factors one and two) and the fact that the statutory claims at issue there could be enforced by private citizens on behalf of the public interest. Gillen, 219 Wis. 2d at 820-21, 826-27*. WISCONSIN STAT. ch. 133 claims are likewise brought in the public interest:

> The Wisconsin legislature determined that private, civil antitrust suits are important methods of enforcing chapter 133. To encourage private enforcement, the legislature built incentives into the statute. These include tolling the statute of limitations under certain circumstances, allowing [*27] the cost of the suit, including reasonable attorney fees to prevailing claimants, awarding treble damages, and granting expedited treatment to civil antitrust actions in the courts. Under this legislative scheme, a private party "performs the office of a private attorney general," when bringing a civil antitrust action and significantly supplements the government's limited resources for enforcing antitrust law.

[444] Carlson & Erickson Bldrs., Inc. v. Lampert Yards, Inc., 190 Wis. 2d 650, 663-64, 529 N.W.2d 905 (1995)* (internal citations omitted). While not comfortably fitting within the third-or any other-factor of the analysis, this "private attorney general" similarity provides further support for recognizing an exception pursuant to Gillen. [12]

[10] As noted supra, the WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)(b) notice of claim is not subject to a filing deadline.

[11] Thus, we reject the County's bald assertion, lacking citation, that the Gillen court proceeded to examine all three factors.

By the Court. -- Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

[12] Because we conclude WIS. STAT. ch. 133 claims are exempt from WIS. STAT. § 893.80(1)'s notice requirements, we need not resolve E-Z Roll Off's remaining arguments regarding continuing violations and actual notice with lack of prejudice. See State v. Castillo, 213 Wis. 2d 488, 492, 570 N.W.2d 44 (1997)* (cases should be [*28] decided on the narrowest possible grounds).

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Generally, a complaint must merely contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). In recent years the United States Supreme Court has clarified and refined the appropriate pleading standard: Rule 8(a)(2) still requires a showing, rather than a blanket assertion, of entitlement to relief. Without some factual allegation in the complaint, it is hard to see how a claimant could satisfy the requirement of providing not only fair notice of the nature of the claim, but also grounds on which the claim rests. The Supreme Court recognizes the threshold requirement of Rule 8(a)(2) that the plain statement possess enough heft to show that the pleader is entitled to relief. Courts do not require heightened fact pleading of specifics, but only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. In determining whether a complaint states a claim to relief that is plausible on its face, a court must take all of the factual allegations in the complaint as true, but is not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The United States Supreme Court has stated that it is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. It has long been recognized that agreements between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories, fix prices or otherwise minimize competition, referred to as horizontal restraints, are classic examples of per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Conversely, agreements between persons at different levels of a market structure, for example between manufacturer and distributor or between franchisor and franchisee, referred to as vertical restraints, are analyzed under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN3[] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

The Second Circuit has held that a manufacturer's decision to discontinue the distributorship of one distributor in accordance with the terms of their contract is judged under the rule of reason, even when the manufacturer's decision came at the behest and insistence of another distributor. It has always been the prerogative of a manufacturer to decide with whom it will deal.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Presumptions > Creation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN4[] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

A vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels, even when the vertical restraint came about as a result of price complaints from a competing dealer. There is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard. While vertical restraints, such as a manufacturer terminating a distributor, have the potential to restrain intrabrand competition, they also have real potential to stimulate interbrand competition, which is the primary concern of antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN5[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

Evidence of complaints from competing retailers to a manufacturer about price competition is insufficient to show a horizontal conspiracy. Where the evidence does not suggest that the competing retailers conspired to boycott the manufacturer unless it terminated the plaintiff, the terminated plaintiff cannot proceed under a horizontal group boycott analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN6[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

The United States Supreme Court cases have long been clear that parallel conduct is not sufficient to show agreement and, in order to prove a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 antitrust claim, a plaintiff must offer evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action. At the pleading stage, when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. In other words, even at the pleading stage, a plaintiff must state enough facts to plausibly suggest agreement, and factual allegations that possibly suggest agreement or are merely consistent with agreement are insufficient.

HN7[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

A conspiracy to eliminate competition with respect to one component within a business involving a package of numerous products and services, within one brand, within an industry in which a plaintiff has not alleged a lack of substitutes is not the type of restraint that is so manifestly anticompetitive, or that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output, nor is it a restraint with which courts have had considerable experience such that a per se rule would be appropriate. Similarly, the alleged restraint on one component of the larger package of goods and services provided by authorized dealers within a single brand is not the type of naked restraint that would merit a quick-look analysis without an analysis of the industry at issue.

A manufacturer's decision to eliminate a dealer is evaluated under the rule of reason, even where that decision was the result of price complaints from competing dealers and based on those competing dealers' impermissible desire to restrain competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN9[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

In order to plead an antitrust violation under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must allege a relevant market, including both a product market and a geographic market. While acknowledging that market definition is frequently a fact-intensive inquiry where courts are hesitant to grant a motion to dismiss, the Second Circuit has stated that to survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, an alleged product market must bear a rational relation to the methodology courts prescribe to define a market for antitrust purposes, analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross, elasticity of demand, and it must be plausible. Cases in which dismissal on the pleadings is appropriate frequently involve either failed attempts to limit a product market to a single brand that competes with potential substitutes or failure even to attempt a plausible explanation as to why a market should be limited in a particular way.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN10[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Dismissal is appropriate in an antitrust case where the alleged product market is defined without reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand or where it clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in the plaintiff's favor. Courts in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York have consistently held that single brand name product cannot define a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN11[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

Under the rule of reason, in order to prove a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, violation, a plaintiff must also show an adverse effect on competition, not merely injury to itself. The plaintiff must show that the defendant's conduct had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Like the relevant market definition, the adverse effect on competition is a requirement that must be alleged at the pleading stage and can be the basis for a motion to dismiss.

[*288] OPINION AND ORDER

ROBERT P. PATTERSON, JR., U.S.D.J.

By motion dated August 17, 2009, Defendant Honeywell International, Inc. ("Defendant" or "Honeywell") moves to dismiss Plaintiff Integrated Systems & Power, Inc.'s ("Plaintiff" or "ISPI") complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. On September 21, 2009, Plaintiff filed its opposition to Defendant's motion and on October 13, 2009, Defendant filed its reply in further support of its motion to dismiss. The Court heard oral argument on November 20, 2009. For the reasons discussed herein, Defendant's motion is granted and Plaintiff's complaint is dismissed without prejudice.

I. Facts

Plaintiff ISPI is a corporation engaged in the business of selling, installing and servicing fire-detection [2] and alarm systems, including NOTIFIER systems manufactured by Defendant Honeywell. (Compl. P 6.) [1] Through the NOTIFIER division of its Fire Solutions Group, Honeywell manufactures commercial fire alarm systems, as well as related technology, peripheral devices and accessories. (Id. [*289] P 7.) From January 2002 until July 2009, ISPI was a non-exclusive authorized distributor of Honeywell's NOTIFIER fire-detection alarm system. (Id. PP 9, 26.) Pursuant to a NOTIFIER Engineered Systems Distributor Agreement dated November 5, 2001 and later pursuant to a successor agreement dated July 1, 2003 (the "Distributor Agreement"), Honeywell authorized ISPI to market, sell, install and service Honeywell's NOTIFIER fire-detection and alarm system products, with New York City as ISPI's "territory" or "primary trading area." (Id. PP 9-10.) The Distribution Agreement contained no limitation on the entities to which ISPI was authorized to sell products and/or services. (Id. P 14.)

As an authorized NOTIFIER distributor, ISPI sold only NOTIFIER fire-detection [3] and alarm systems. (Id. P 12.) On the other hand, after ISPI became a NOTIFIER distributer, in addition to servicing NOTIFIER systems, ISPI continued to provide service to its pre-existing portfolio of customers with Simplex fire-detection alarm systems -- a brand competing with NOTIFIER. (Id. P 13.)

During its time as an authorized distributor, ISPI submitted bids on a number of NOTIFIER service contracts, where the client's system had been sold, installed and/or previously serviced by a different NOTIFIER authorized distributor. (Id. PP 19-24.) ISPI frequently submitted the lowest bid for such service contracts. In some cases ISPI successfully obtained the contracts in question (id. PP 20(d), 23, 24); in some cases it was unsuccessful and the client remained with the "incumbent" distributor despite ISPI's lower bid. (id. PP 20(a),(b)). Other dealers, against whom ISPI was bidding for service contracts, complained to Honeywell about ISPI's bidding practices, and Honeywell in turn warned ISPI on a number of occasions that such low-ball bidding was a problem. (Id. PP 19-23, 25, 28.) Honeywell instructed ISPI not to bid for service contracts against other authorized NOTIFIER distributors [4] and told ISPI that Honeywell "expects [ISPI] to cooperate and not bid." (Id. P 20(d).)

At a meeting among NOTIFIER distributors on April 28, 2009, shortly after ISPI was awarded a contract with the United States Postal Service for fire alarm maintenance at 13 postal service sites, other NOTIFIER distributers besides ISPI again complained to Honeywell about ISPI's practice of bidding against other authorized NOTIFIER distributors. (Id. PP 24, 25.) The distributors pressured Honeywell to terminate ISPI as an authorized distributor and, in response to the distributors' requests, demands and/or threats, Honeywell agreed to terminate its Distributor Agreement with ISPI. (Id. P 25.)

By letter dated June 4, 2009, Honeywell gave notice to ISPI that it would terminate ISPI's distributorship without cause on 30 days notice, effective July 6, 2009 in accordance with the terms of the Distributor Agreement. (Id. PP 11, 26.) In two telephone conversations between representatives of ISPI and Honeywell on June 8 and 16, 2009, Honeywell told ISPI that it terminated ISPI because of ISPI's practice of bidding for service contracts against other distributors and referenced examples of ISPI's bidding, complaints [5] from other distributors and previous warnings given by Honeywell to ISPI. (Id. P 28.)

II. Plaintiff's Antitrust Allegations

Plaintiff alleges that NOTIFIER distributors, other than ISPI, agreed among themselves to engage in the conduct complained of: (i) to allocate customers; (ii) to not compete for service contracts; (iii) to submit non-competitive bids; and (iv) to complain to Honeywell about ISPI's low bids on service contracts. (Compl. PP 1, 15, [*290] 25.) Plaintiff also alleges that the purpose and/or effect of the agreement was eliminating or substantially reducing price competition. (Id. PP 1, 17.) Plaintiff further alleges that Honeywell was and is an active participant in the agreement among the distributors, that Honeywell knowingly aided and abetted the distributors' agreement, and that Honeywell terminated ISPI's distributorship as part of the distributors' agreement and in response to complaints by distributors. (Id. PP 16, 25, 27)

In its complaint, Plaintiff lists the relevant product market as "the sale, installation and servicing of NOTIFIER fire-detection and alarm system products" and the relevant geographic market as New York City. (Id. P 8.) Plaintiff asserts that the alleged [6] agreement among the NOTIFIER distributors constitutes a horizontal conspiracy (id. PP 1, 16, 18, 27), and that such conduct constitutes a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (id. PP 29-33). In the alternative, if the alleged conspiracy is not deemed to be a per se violation, Plaintiff asserts that the complained of conduct is unlawful under the rule of reason because the anticompetitive effects of Honeywell's conduct outweigh the pro-competitive effects, if any. (Id. PP 34-37.)

III. Discussion

Defendant moves to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. HN1[] Generally, a complaint must merely contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). In recent years the Supreme Court has clarified and refined the appropriate pleading standard:

> Rule 8(a)(2) still requires a "showing," rather than a blanket assertion, of entitlement to relief. Without some factual allegation in the complaint, it is hard to see how a claimant could satisfy the requirement of providing not only "fair notice" of the nature of the [7] claim, but also "grounds" on which the claim rests.

Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556 n.3, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The Supreme Court recognized the "threshold requirement of Rule 8(a)(2) that the 'plain statement' possess enough heft to 'show that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. at 557. Courts "do not require heightened fact pleading of specifics, but only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. In determining whether a complaint states a claim to relief that is plausible on its face, a court "must take all of the factual allegations in the complaint as true," but is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

A. Per Se Analysis

The primary point of dispute between the parties is whether the complaint has alleged conduct that is properly analyzed under the per se rule for Sherman Act violations or under the so-called "rule of reason." While Plaintiff repeatedly asserts that Defendant's conduct constitutes a "horizontal conspiracy," and therefore is a per se violation, this characterization is a legal conclusion [8] that the Court does not accept as true on a motion to dismiss. Therefore, as a threshold question, the Court must determine whether the complaint adequately alleges a horizontal conspiracy, as Plaintiff claims.

HN2[] The Supreme Court has stated that "[i]t is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act." United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607-08, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 [*291] (1972). It has long been recognized that agreements between competitors at the same level of the market structure to allocate territories, fix prices or otherwise minimize competition -- referred to as "horizontal restraints" -- are classic examples of per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See id. at 608. Conversely, agreements between persons at different levels of a market structure, for example between manufacturer and distributor or between franchisor and franchisee -- referred to as "vertical restraints" -- are analyzed under the rule of reason. See Cont'l T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) (holding non-price vertical restrictions are analyzed under the rule of reason); see also Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 907, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) [9] (holding vertical price restraints are judged according to the rule of reason).

Without question, the conduct complained of in this case includes both horizontal and vertical components. Plaintiff alleges that the agreement at issue is one among the NOTIFIER distributors, other than ISPI, and is therefore a horizontal conspiracy. But the specific action ISPI alleges that Honeywell took (which ISPI alleges harmed both ISPI and competition generally) was Honeywell's termination of ISPI as an authorized NOTIFIER distributor. The termination of a distributor by a manufacturer is unquestionably a restriction or restraint between actors at different levels of the supply chain, i.e., a vertical restraint. ISPI argues that the termination of ISPI by Honeywell was in response to and in furtherance of a horizontal conspiracy among NOTIFIER distributors, and therefore urges the Court to treat the conduct complained of collectively as one horizontal conspiracy and apply the per se rule. For the reasons discussed below, under controlling Supreme Court and Second Circuit precedent, ISPI's argument is unpersuasive.

1. Vertical Restraints Resulting from Dealer Complaints

In Oreck Corp. v Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126 (2d Cir. 1978) [10] (en banc), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 946, 99 S. Ct. 340, 58 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1978), HN3[] the Second Circuit, sitting en banc, held that a manufacturer's decision to discontinue the distributorship of one distributor in accordance with the terms of their contract is judged under the rule of reason, even when the manufacturer's decision came at the "behest and insistence" of another distributor. Id. at 128, 133-34. The court rejected Oreck's argument that "the elimination of its distributorship amounted to tampering with the price structure" and should therefore be construed as a per se violation, id. at 130-31, and noted that "[i]t has always been the prerogative of a manufacturer to decide with whom it will deal" id. at 133 (citing United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919)).

Ten years later, in Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988), the United States Supreme Court reached a similar conclusion, holding that HN4[] "a vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels," Id. at 735-36, even when the vertical restraint -- in that case, the termination of a dealership -- came about as a result of price complaints from a competing dealer, id. at 721. [11] In Business Electronics, the pressure from the complaining dealer was even greater than the complaints from NOTIFIER distributors alleged here, specifically, the complaining dealer "gave respondent the ultimatum that [he] would terminate his dealership unless respondent [*292] ended its relationship with petitioner within 30 days." Id. In Business Electronics the Supreme Court emphasized the principle that "there is a presumption in favor of a rule-of-reason standard." Id. at 726 (citing Cont'l T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). While vertical restraints, such as a manufacturer terminating a distributor, have the potential to restrain intrabrand competition, they also have "real potential to stimulate interbrand competition," which is "the primary concern of antitrust law." Id. at 724, 726.

Here, just as in Business Electronics and Oreck, the restraint that allegedly restricted competition and harmed ISPI (Honeywell's termination of ISPI) was a vertical restraint imposed by a manufacturer against a distributor that allegedly came about as a result of price complaints from competing distributors, and should be [12] evaluated under the rule of reason like those cases. Plaintiff attempts to distinguish Business Electronics and Oreck, arguing that ISPI's termination was not merely the result of dealer complaints, but the result of a horizontal conspiracy among NOTIFIER distributors to eliminate competition and rig bids. For the reasons discussed below, Plaintiff's argument is unpersuasive.

2. Horizontal Conspiracy

ISPI cites United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 86 S. Ct. 1321, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1966), for the proposition that a manufacturer's participation in a horizontal conspiracy among its dealers is a per se violation. In General Motors, the United States brought a civil suit against General Motors for conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. After trial, the district court concluded that the proof failed to establish a violation, and on direct appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed. The government argued that General Motors and its dealers engaged in a concerted effort to eliminate so-called "discounters" from the market for Chevrolet cars sold in the Los Angeles area. Certain dealers developed relationships with discounters that took various forms, but in substance amounted [13] to providing cars to discounters at a small markup over the factory invoice price, allowing the discounters in turn to sell to customers at "bargain" prices relative to authorized dealers. Id. at 130-31. This high-volume, low-margin business was profitable to the dealers who worked with discounters, but damaging to the business of authorized dealers as a whole, and the practice generated concerns and complaints from dealers in the Los Angeles area. Id. at 133-34. Dealers who worked with discounters were understandably hesitant to give up the practice for fear that if they did, other dealers would merely pick up where they left off. Id. In response to complaints from dealers, General Motors solicited and obtained agreements from each dealer not to do business with discounters. Id. at 136. Together, General Motors, dealers and trade associations (comprised of member dealers) policed the new agreements using professional investigators to pose as customers of the discounters. Id. at 136-37. Once the investigators obtained evidence that one dealer was doing business with discounters, in violation of its agreement with General Motors, General Motors confronted the offending dealer and offered [14] that dealer the opportunity to repurchase the car previously sold through a discounter, sometimes at a substantial loss to the dealer. Id. at 137-38. In every case the "embarrassed" dealer repurchased the car and "promised to stop such sales." Id. at 137. The [*293] Supreme Court found that the conduct of General Motors and the defendant dealer associations constituted a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 145.

The conduct at issue in ISPI's complaint, however, lacks two key horizontal characteristics that were involved in General Motors. First, in General Motors, not only did the associations of dealers agree to attempt to eliminate discounters, the dealers themselves actively policed the agreements not to deal with discounters. Id. at 141. Specifically, the dealer associations created a "joint investigating committee" and jointly financed the investigation and policing of the agreements. Id. at 137, 141. Conversely, in this case, the only "enforcement" or "policing" action was Honeywell's termination of ISPI as an authorized dealer in accordance with the terms of ISPI's contract. ISPI's termination was undertaken unilaterally and in the sole discretion of Honeywell. While [15] ISPI goes to great length to argue that its termination was in response to complaints from other NOTIFIER authorized dealers, the fact remains that any complaints were vertical in nature (from dealers to manufacturer) and any resulting action by Honeywell was likewise vertical in nature (termination of dealer by manufacturer).

Second, in General Motors, the discounters who were eliminated from the market through the horizontal conspiracy among authorized Chevrolet dealers relied on the dealers in order to obtain cars to sell at a discount. While General Motors' solicitations of explicit agreements from individual dealers not to do business with discounters helped cement the horizontal conspiracy in place, it was the agreement among the dealers to cease doing business with discounters that froze the discounters out of the market. Therefore, the Supreme Court ultimately concluded that the conduct of General Motors and the dealer associations was a per se violation as a joint refusal to deal or a group boycott. Citing Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 211, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959), the Supreme Court reasoned that a "group boycott of even a single trader violated [the Sherman Act] [16] without regard to the reasonableness of the conduct in the circumstances." General Motors, 384 U.S. at 145-46.

Here, unlike in General Motors, the other authorized NOTIFIER distributors who are alleged to have engaged in a horizontal conspiracy did not refuse to deal with or boycott ISPI. Indeed, the other distributors had no direct ability to influence whether ISPI could participate in the market. Assuming the facts in the light most favorable to ISPI, the actions taken by NOTIFIER distributors that eventually resulted in ISPI's termination were the act of complaining to Honeywell. The mere act of complaining, even if undertaken by more than one distributor, is a far cry from the horizontal conspiracy involving a group boycott and refusal to deal that the Supreme Court recognized as a per se violation in General Motors.

Plaintiff's reliance on United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972), fares no better. Topco was a trade association comprised of various regional grocery chains that acted as a purchasing cooperative for private-label products. Topco allocated geographic territories among its members and controlled whether new members would be admitted into the cooperative. [17] Because an 85% vote was required to admit a new member when the existing member whose operations were closest to those of the proposed new member voted against admission, the procedure for approval provided members with "a veto of sorts over actual or potential competition [*294] in the territorial areas in which they are concerned." Id. at 602. Most licenses granted to members were exclusive and the Supreme Court noted that "[w]hen combined with each member's veto power over new members, provisions for exclusivity work effectively to insulate members from competition in Topco-brand goods." Id. The Supreme Court held that the restriction on competition in Topco was a horizontal restraint because the exclusive geographic market allocations and the restrictions on entry imposed by Topco were effectively restrictions imposed horizontally by the member grocery chains because Topco was wholly owned and operated by its member licensees. Id. at 609 (citing United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238 (1967)).

The instant case is inapposite because unlike in Topco, Honeywell is not owned, operated or controlled by its licensee-distributors, the distributors did not have exclusive territories and the [18] alleged conduct that restrained trade (the elimination of ISPI's distributorship) was imposed vertically and unilaterally by Honeywell, not jointly and horizontally by ISPI's co-distributors as was the case in Topco.

In American Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc. 521 F.2d 1230 (3d Cir. 1975), when a franchisee hotel operator applied to franchisor Holiday Inns ("HI"), HI would solicit comments from at least the three existing Holiday Inn hotels nearest the proposed new hotel. Id. at 1236. The district court found that in the case of plaintiff American Motor Inns' ("AMI") application for a new hotel in Newark, New Jersey, the objections of existing franchisees "were dispositive" and were "treated as a veto," resulting in the application being denied. Id. at 1237, 1242. Each of HI's franchise agreements, also contained a "non-Holiday Inn" clause prohibiting an HI franchisee from owning or operating any hotel or motel that is not a Holiday Inn during the period of the franchise license. Id. at 1236 n.3. After AMI's license application for a new Holiday Inn in Newark was denied, AMI asked HI to waive the non-Holiday Inn clause in AMI's license agreements so it could build a non-Holiday [19] Inn hotel on the parcel of land it had already purchased, and HI refused. Id. at 1237. The Third Circuit found that HI's and existing franchisees' actions in the alleged Newark conspiracy constituted a horizontal conspiracy. Id. at 1242. HI's established practice of providing existing hotel operators with an absolute veto on new applications (as found by the district court) permitted competitors at the same level in the market structure to directly determine with whom they would compete -- a classic example of a horizontal conspiracy. Further, when considered in connection with the non-Holiday Inn clause, the veto granted to existing hotel operators functioned to exclude any competition from hotel operators who were parties to license agreements with HI for hotels in different areas, whether it be competition from HI hotels or non-HI hotels. In other words, by virtue of signing any license agreement with HI, the plaintiff in American Motor Inns, was prevented from opening a competing hotel or motel of any type or brand name in the Newark area after its license application was denied by HI.

In the instant case, ISPI was subject to no similar absolute veto or exclusion imposed by other [20] NOTIFIER distributors. Further, there is no allegation that anything in the structure of Honeywell's distribution agreements allowed for territorial or geographic market allocation or prohibited distributors from engaging in other similar businesses as was the case in American Motor Inns. Indeed, ISPI continued to service Simplex alarm systems during the term of its distributorship with Honeywell. (Compl. P 13.)

[*295] In Fontana Aviation, Inc. v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 432 F.2d 1080 (7th Cir. 1970), the Seventh Circuit reversed the district court's grant of judgment n.o.v. to defendants, an airline manufacturer and one of its distributors. Fontana is inapposite because the Seventh Circuit opinion, as well as the district court's initial grant of judgment n.o.v., turned on the issue of damages. Id. at 1083, 1085-86. The court, however, stated that "[t]here was evidence in the case before us on which the jury reasonably could have found that for the purpose of lessening competition a rigid territorial division had been worked out on a horizontal basis between the various distributors." Id. at 1084. In Fontana, the participation in the conspiracy by Beech, both through its tacit approval as manufacturer [21] and through its own distributor companies, did not change an otherwise horizontal restraint into a vertical restraint. Id. at 1084-85. Here, in contrast, Honeywell is not alleged to have participated in any concerted, horizontal action of its distributors. Rather, Honeywell received complaints that were voiced up the vertical market structure, relayed those complaints back down to ISPI, and ultimately terminated ISPI -- all vertical actions.

The additional out-of-circuit cases relied on by ISPI in arguing that the alleged conduct constitutes a horizontal conspiracy and a per se violation are distinguishable and unpersuasive. See Miles Distribs., Inc. v. Specialty Constr. Brands, Inc., 476 F.3d 442, 449-50 (7th Cir. 2007) (stating that HN5[] evidence of complaints from competing retailers to manufacturer about price competition is insufficient to show a horizontal conspiracy and holding that where evidence "does not suggest that the competing [retailers] conspired to boycott [manufacturer] unless it terminated [plaintiff]," the terminated plaintiff "cannot proceed under a horizontal group boycott analysis"); Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher &Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1006, 1011-12 (3d Cir. 1994) [22] (characterizing a restraint intended to target discounters implemented by retailers through a trade association as horizontal conspiracy, but characterizing an effort to target the same discounters by manufacturer as a vertical conspiracy and noting that the manufacturer's action, even if taken in response to retailer complaints, could have been "entirely consistent with its previously held view of its own self-interest"); Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North Am., Inc., 974 F.2d 1358, 1376 (3d Cir. 1992) (noting that competing dealers combined to form a group boycott of manufacturer to pressure manufacturer not to award prospective competitor a dealership and that such a scenario presents a horizontal group boycott as opposed to a vertical restraint); *Coca-Cola Co. v. Omni Pac. Co., No. 3:98-CV-0784, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17089, 2000 WL 33194867, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 27, 2000) (noting that manufacturer's territorial restraints have taken on a horizontal character as "the enforcement of these restraints is initiated by, and for the benefit of, the independent bottlers").

3. Bid Rigging

ISPI cites bid rigging cases for the proposition that bid rigging is per se illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act. (See Pl. Opp'n [23] at 7 (citing *Philip Morris Inc. v. Heinrich, No. 95-CV-0328 (LMM), 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9156, 1996 WL 363156, at 9 (S.D.N.Y. June 28, 1996).) This is an uncontroversial point. [2] [*296] Rather, the salient

[2] ISPI also cites three criminal bid rigging cases in support of the same point; they add nothing to the argument. See United States v. Koppers Co., 652 F.2d 290 (2d Cir. 1981) (affirming criminal conviction based on explicit agreement between the only two competitors in the road tar business to allocate territory and pre-determine bid prices, thereby rigging bids for state contracts); United States v. Portsmouth Paving Corp., 694 F.2d 312 (4th Cir. 1982) (affirming criminal conviction for bid rigging where evidence at trial included testimony that competitors held periodic in-person meetings where they explicitly agreed to issues are whether the conduct complained of in ISPI's complaint constitute a bid rigging agreement and whether the complaint contains "allegations plausibly suggesting (not merely consistent with) agreement" to rig bids. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 557, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).

The complaint sufficiently alleges that authorized NOTIFIER distributors did not tend to bid on service contracts for customers that had a pre-existing relationship with another distributor (the "incumbent" distributor). The complaint also contains well-pled allegations that when ISPI submitted low bids against incumbent distributors, those distributors complained to Honeywell and Honeywell complained to and warned ISPI. The allegation that numerous distributors all complained to Honeywell about ISPI's bidding is insufficient to suggest plausibly that the distributors agreed with each other not to submit competitive bids. HN6[] Supreme Court cases have long been clear that parallel conduct is not sufficient to show agreement and in order to prove a § 1 antitrust claim, a plaintiff must offer evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 554 (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). Twombly [25] also stated that, at the pleading stage, "when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." Id. at 557; see also Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 323-24 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting Twombly and listing facts which, in addition to parallel conduct, provided factual context raising a suggestion of a preceding agreement). In other words, even at the pleading stage, a plaintiff must state enough facts to plausibly suggest agreement, and factual allegations that possibly suggest agreement or are merely consistent with agreement are insufficient. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 570.

Here, there could be any number of reasons distributors declined to bid on the service contracts where the NOTIFIER system was installed by another dealer. There may be operational efficiencies to be gained through continuity of service providers. Further, as discussed in more detail infra, the package of products and services provided to customers by NOTIFIER distributors includes at least three different components: sale [26] of the equipment, installation and service. (Compl. PP 6, 10.) Distributors may not consider it valuable business to attempt to poach the service contract alone from an established customer instead of focusing on customers of competing alarm system brands or developing completely new customers to whom a distributor could provide all three components of a NOTIFIER package. In short, ISPI's allegations of distributor complaints followed by action on the part of Honeywell are insufficient to constitute a plausible agreement among the distributors to rig bids for service contracts as opposed to mere parallel action. [*297] Nor does the complaint provide factual allegations which, "taken together, place the parallel conduct in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement." Starr, 592 F.3d at 323. Repeating the assertion that the distributors "agreed" and characterizing the conduct as a horizontal conspiracy (Compl. PP 1, 15, 16, 18, 27) does not, without more, pass muster under Twombly. See Starr, 592 F.3d at 319 n.2 (stating that the "allegation that defendants agreed" is "obviously conclusory, and is not accepted as true"). [3] allocate contracts and not to submit competitive bids); United States v. Flom, 558 F.2d 1179 (5th Cir. 1977) (finding trial [24] errors and remanding for new trial convictions based on periodic meetings where competitors explicitly divided and allocated upcoming contracts for steel re-bars).

4. [28] Economic Impact of Alleged Horizontal Restraint

[3] The same analysis under Twombly and Starr may apply [27] to the allegations of an "agreement" to terminate ISPI between Honeywell and other NOTIFIER distributors, i.e. the vertical restraint discussed in part III.A.1, supra. Because, even assuming that ISPI has sufficiently alleged a vertical "agreement," the allegations of a vertical conspiracy are insufficient to state a claim under the rule of reason (infra, part III.B), the issue of whether ISPI's allegations of a vertical agreement fulfill Twombly's pleading requirements is not dispositive of the instant motion. The Court merely notes that allegations that Honeywell "'warned' ISPI that it should not compete for the business of clients previously served by other incumbent NOTIFIER distributors" (Compl. P 19), and allegations that Honeywell terminated ISPI's distributorship "[p]ursuant and in response to the other NOTIFIER distributors' requests, demands and/or threats" (Id. P 25) do not necessarily place Honeywell's conduct "in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557; Starr, 592 F.3d at 323. Therefore, ISPI's allegations of a pre-existing "agreement" between Honeywell and other NOTIFIER distributors, as currently pled, may be conclusory.

Finally, while ISPI defines the relevant market as "the sale, installation and servicing of NOTIFIER fire-detection and alarm system products" (Compl. P 8), ISPI only alleges that service and maintenance contracts were the subject of distributors' agreement not to submit competitive bids (id. PP 15, 20-24). The business of authorized NOTIFIER distributors involves not only service and maintenance, but also sale, installation, marketing (id. P 10), inspections, testing, cleaning, calibration (id. P 6), and possibly the provision of peripheral devices (id. P 7). Not only is the alleged horizontal conspiracy limited to a single brand -- NOTIFIER -- for which ISPI has not pled a high market concentration or lack of substitute brand, but the alleged horizontal conspiracy related to only one aspect of the intrabrand market for NOTIFIER products and services. HN7[] A conspiracy to eliminate competition with respect to one component (within a business involving a package of numerous products and services), within one brand, within an industry in which Plaintiff has not alleged a lack of substitutes is not the type of restraint that is so "manifestly [29] anticompetitive," or that "would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output," nor is it a restraint with which "courts have had considerable experience" such that a per se rule would be appropriate. Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886-87, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). Similarly, the alleged restraint on one component of the larger package of goods and services provided by authorized dealers within a single brand is not the type of "naked restraint" that would merit a "quick-look" analysis without an analysis of the industry at issue. See NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 109-10, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984); Nat'l Soc. of Prof. Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978).

Because this case lacks key horizontal characteristics that were present in prior cases where manufacturers have [*298] been held to have participated in a horizontal conspiracy among dealers, and because Plaintiff failed to sufficiently allege an agreement among distributors to rig bids under the clear standards of Twombly, this case falls squarely under the controlling precedents of Business Electronics and Oreck, holding that HN8[] a manufacturer's decision to eliminate a dealer is [30] evaluated under the rule of reason, even where that decision was the result of price complaints from competing dealers and based on those competing dealers' impermissible desire to restrain competition.

B. Rule of Reason Analysis

The inapplicability of a per se analysis is not dispositive of Defendant's motion. The conduct alleged in the complaint would constitute a violation of § 1 if that conduct "imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition," i.e., if Defendant's conduct is shown to be a violation under the rule of reason. See Major League Baseball Props., Inc. v. Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d 290, 316 (2d Cir. 2008) (describing rule of reason and collecting cases). Honeywell argues that the complaint fails adequately to allege a § 1 violation under the rule of reason because: (i) it does not allege a relevant product market; (ii) it does not allege a legally cognizable antitrust injury; and (iii) it fails to allege conduct violating the antitrust laws.

1. Relevant Market

HN9[] In order to plead an antitrust violation under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must allege a relevant market, including both a product market and a geographic market. See Mathias v. Daily News, L.P., 152 F. Supp. 2d 465, 480-81 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) [31] (citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). While acknowledging that market definition is frequently a fact-intensive inquiry where courts are hesitant to grant a motion to dismiss, the Second Circuit stated:

> To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, an alleged product market must bear a rational relation to the methodology courts prescribe to define a market for antitrust purposes -- analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand, and it must be plausible. Cases in which dismissal on the pleadings is appropriate frequently involve either (1) failed attempts to limit a product market to a single brand . . . that competes with potential substitutes or (2) failure even to attempt a plausible explanation as to why a market should be limited in a particular way.

Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 200 (2d Cir. 2001) (citing Hack v. President & Fellows of Yale Coll., 237 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 2000) and Gianna Enters. v. Miss World (Jersey) Ltd., 551 F. Supp. 1348, 1354 (S.D.N.Y. 1982), internal quotations and footnotes omitted).

HN10[] Dismissal is appropriate where the alleged product market is defined without [32] "reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand" or where it "clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor." Chapman v. N.Y. State Div. for Youth, 546 F.3d 230, 238 (2d Cir. 2008) (quoting Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997)).

Courts in this district have consistently held that single brand name product cannot define a relevant market. Mathias, 152 F. Supp. 2d at 482; Re-Alco Indus., Inc. v. Nat'l Ctr. for Health Educ. Inc., 812 F. Supp. 387, 391 (S.D.N.Y. 1993); see also Todd, 275 F.3d at 200 n.3 (collecting cases where single-brand market definition was deemed inadequate product market).

[*299] Here, ISPI defines the relevant product market as "the sale, installation and servicing of NOTIFIER fire-detection and alarm system products." (Compl. P 8.) ISPI does not allege a relevant product market that includes interchangeable substitute products, nor does ISPI even attempt to plead facts that, if true, would provide a plausible explanation as to why the relevant product market should be limited to a single brand of fire-detection [33] and alarm system products. In response to Honeywell's argument that ISPI failed to define a relevant product market, ISPI merely states that, because it has alleged a per se violation, it is not required to define a relevant product market. (Pl. Opp'n at 10.) As discussed supra, ISPI's assertion that it has alleged a per se violation is a legal conclusion, which the Court does not accept as true on a motion to dismiss, and is a conclusion that this Court has rejected (supra, part III.A). In support of its definition of a relevant market based on a single brand, ISPI cites General Motors and Topco, discussed in detail, supra, as examples of antitrust violations based on single brands. But those two cases are inapposite to the relevant market requirement under the rule of reason because they involved per se violations based on horizontal restraints.

2. Antitrust Injury

HN11[] Under the rule of reason, in order to prove a § 1 violation, a plaintiff must also show an adverse effect on competition, not merely injury to itself. See Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 96 (2d Cir. 1998) (plaintiff must show defendant's conduct "had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole [34] in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice." (emphasis in original)). Like the relevant market definition, the adverse effect on competition is a requirement that must be alleged at the pleading stage and can be the basis for a motion to dismiss. Electronics Communs. Corp. v. Toshiba Am. Consumer Prods., 129 F.3d 240, 244-46 (2d Cir. 1997); Re-Alco, 812 F. Supp. at 392.

First, ISPI's complaint does not contain allegations that a lack of competitive bidding in publicly-solicited service and maintenance contracts for NOTIFIER fire-detection systems would have any effect on the overall market for fire-detection systems. Second, even assuming arguendo that the relevant market as defined in the complaint is sufficient, the allegations of adverse effect on competition remain inadequate. There are no factual allegations which, if true, would show: (i) what percent of service and maintenance contracts are subject to public bidding; (ii) what percent of the market for "sale, installation and servicing" is composed of service and maintenance contracts; or (iii) whether the market for NOTIFIER service and maintenance providers includes businesses [35] that are not authorized NOTIFIER distributors. In short, even within the narrowly-defined relevant market put forth by Plaintiff, the complaint does not allege facts showing an injury to competition, as opposed to merely showing an injury to Plaintiff.

3. Conduct Violating the Antitrust Law

Because Plaintiff failed adequately to plead a relevant product market and failed adequately to plead an antitrust injury, and each independently is grounds to dismiss the complaint under the rule of reason, the Court need not reach Defendant's third argument that the conduct alleged is inadequate to state an antitrust violation.

IV. Conclusion

Because Plaintiff failed to allege a per se antitrust violation and because Plaintiff failed to allege both a relevant product market and an antitrust injury under the [*300] rule of reason, Plaintiff's complaint is dismissed. Because HN12[] "this circuit strongly favors liberal grant of an opportunity to replead after dismissal of a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6)," Porat v. Lincoln Towers Community Ass'n, 464 F.3d 274, 276 (2d Cir. 2006), this dismissal is without prejudice. If Plaintiff elects to re-plead, it shall do so within thirty days of this opinion and order.

IT IS [36] SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit reviews de novo the district court's grant of a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim, accepting the allegations in the complaint as true and construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

HN2[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires that a pleading contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

While a complaint attacked by a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact). To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must now contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.

HN4[] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

The tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

HN5[] Pleadings, Complaints

Where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged--but it has not shown--that the pleader is entitled to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The U.S. Supreme Court has suggested that courts considering motions to dismiss adopt a "two-pronged approach" in applying these principles: 1) eliminate any allegations in the complaint that are merely legal conclusions; and 2) where there are well-pleaded factual allegations, assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961 to 1968, requires that a plaintiff prove that a defendant participated in an illegal enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(c). "Racketeering activity" is defined to include such predicate acts as mail and wire fraud. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(1). Mail or wire fraud occurs when a person (1) intentionally participates in a scheme to defraud another of money or property and (2) uses the mails or wires in furtherance of that scheme. In order to prove a pattern of racketeering in a civil or criminal RICO case, a plaintiff must show at least two racketeering predicates that are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time.

HN10[] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard requires that in alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake. Pursuant to Rule 9(b), a plaintiff must allege: (1) the precise statements, documents, or misrepresentations made; (2) the time, place, and person responsible for the statement; (3) the content and manner in which these statements misled the plaintiffs; and (4) what the defendants gained by the alleged fraud. The plaintiff must allege facts with respect to each defendant's participation in the fraud.

A plaintiff must allege that some kind of deceptive conduct occurred in order to plead a violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961 to 1968, predicated on mail fraud.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Section 1962(d) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1961 to 1968, makes it illegal for anyone to conspire to violate one of the substantive provisions of RICO, including § 1962(c). 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962(d). A plaintiff can establish a RICO conspiracy claim in one of two ways: (1) by showing that the defendant agreed to the overall objective of the conspiracy; or (2) by showing that the defendant agreed to commit two predicate acts. A plaintiff need not offer direct evidence of a RICO agreement; the existence of conspiracy may be inferred from the conduct of the participants.

When allegations of parallel conduct are set out they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. Allegations of parallel conduct, accompanied by nothing more than a bare assertion of a conspiracy, do not plausibly suggest a conspiracy, without that further circumstance pointing to a meeting of the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory. These conclusions are especially true where there is an obvious alternative explanation for each of the collective actions alleged that suggests lawful, independent conduct.

* Honorable W. Harold Albritton, United States District Judge for the Middle District of Alabama, sitting by designation.

The question presented in this appeal is whether, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) and the pleading standard recently [2] articulated by the Supreme Court in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, U.S. , 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009), Plaintiffs/Appellants ("Plaintiffs") have sufficiently pled factual allegations in their RICO complaint to survive a motion to dismiss. After reviewing the briefs and record and having the benefit of oral argument, we affirm the district court order dismissing the complaint.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs are three dentists practicing in Illinois, Nebraska, and Maryland. The American Dental Association ("ADA"), a non-profit dental association headquartered in Chicago, also asserts representational standing on behalf of its members. The defendants/appellees are dental insurance companies: Cigna Corporation, Connecticut General Life Insurance Company, Cigna Dental Health, Inc., MetLife Inc., and Metropolitan Life Insurance Company ("Defendants"). Plaintiffs contracted with Defendants to provide dental services to Defendants' members through dental service managed care plans. Plaintiffs now assert violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968 (2006), as well as state law claims [3] for breach of contract and tortious interference with contractual relations and existing and prospective business expectations. More specifically, Plaintiffs allege, on behalf of themselves and a putative class of similarly-situated dentists, that Defendants "engaged in a systematic, fraudulent scheme to diminish payments to Class Plaintiffs through automatic downcoding, Current Dental Terminology ('CDT') code manipulation and improper bundling." [1] D.E. 111, at P 3.

Plaintiffs filed this purported class action lawsuit in the Southern District of Florida in May 2003. The case was originally assigned to Judge Adalberto Jordan. [*1287] Defendants moved to dismiss the RICO and state law claims in the original complaint. On March 30, 2005, Judge Jordan dismissed all of the RICO allegations without prejudice on the ground that Plaintiffs' RICO enterprise [5] allegations were deficient. Plaintiffs filed their first amended complaint on April 18, 2005. On June 30, 2005, while Defendants' motion to dismiss the first amended complaint was pending, Judge Jordan transferred the case to Judge Frederico Moreno as a case related to the In re Managed Care Litigation Multi-District Litigation ("Managed Care MDL"), 00-MD-1334, an MDL that has been ongoing in the Southern District of Florida since 2000. [2] On November 28, 2005, Judge Moreno designated the case as a tag-along action within the Managed Care MDL and closed it for statistical purposes.

[1] The Council on Dental Benefit Programs created an educational manual to include the Code on Dental Procedures and Nomenclature ("the Code"). Current Dental Terminology, Fifth Edition ("CDT") contains recent revisions to the Code. The Code, which is designed as the national standard for reporting dental services by the Federal Government under the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 ("HIPAA"), is currently recognized by third-party payers, including Defendants, nationwide. An underlying purpose of the Code is to provide a uniform language that accurately describes the dental, surgical and diagnostic services a dental service provider has rendered, thereby giving Defendants or their designated payers [4] the information they need to process a claim for payment. To claim reimbursement for dental services, dental health care providers complete a standardized form incorporating a CDT coding system through which procedures are identified by standardized designations. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants utilized automated programs to manipulate procedure codes on submitted claim forms and thereby reduce the amount paid for dental services. According to Plaintiffs' complaint, "downcoding" reduces or denies payment of claims submitted by dental providers by changing the CDT code assigned to a particular service to a less expensive CDT code. D.E. 111, at P 40. "Bundling" reduces or denies payment of claims by combining the CDT codes of two or more appropriately performed and billed procedures into one CDT code. Id. at P 41.

[2] The Managed Care MDL was originally limited to claims brought by medical doctors against Humana, Inc., a nationwide managed care organization, and other "major HMOs," see Klay v. Humana, Inc., 382 F.3d 1241, 1249-50 (11th Cir. 2004), but grew to include many disputes between healthcare providers of all kinds (e.g., chiropractors, obstetricians and gynecologists, and dentists) and managed care companies who use computer software programs to process claims. Providers have, among other things, claimed RICO violations, alleging that managed care entities, acting individually and as part of a conspiracy, developed [6] and used certain claims processing, claims payment and/or other practices in order to "deny, delay, and

In February 2008, Judge Moreno denied all pending motions in the case with leave to re-file, and requested status reports. During the roughly two-year lull in activity in this case, the United States Supreme Court decided Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Although the district court had not ruled on the motion to dismiss the first amended complaint, Plaintiffs sought and received Defendants' consent to file a motion seeking leave to file a second amended complaint.

On May 1, 2008, Plaintiffs filed their Second Amended Complaint, which is at issue in this appeal. The complaint contains six counts. Counts I-IV are federal RICO and RICO-related claims: RICO conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) (Count I), a claim for aiding and abetting RICO violations under 18 U.S.C. § 2 (Count II), a substantive RICO claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) (Count III), and a claim for declaratory relief under 18 U.S.C. § 1964(a) and 28 U.S.C. § 2201 [7] for RICO violations (Count IV). Counts V and VI are state law claims for breach of contract and tortious interference with contractual relations and with existing and prospective business expectancies, respectively.

On June 6, 2008, Defendants moved to dismiss Counts I-IV and VI of the Second Amended Complaint. They did not move to dismiss the breach of contract claim (Count V). After briefing, on February 11, 2009, the district court issued a written order granting the motion to dismiss without prejudice. The court held that all four RICO claims were deficiently alleged. Citing Twombly, the court held that Plaintiffs' substantive RICO allegations "fail to set forth a violation of § 1962(c) that is 'plausible on its face' because they do not raise a right to relief 'above [the] speculative level.'" *In re Managed Care Litig., No. 03-21266-CIV, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18731, 2009 WL 347795, at 4 (S.D. Fla. Feb. 11, 2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570, 555, 127 S. Ct. at 1974, 1965). The court also found the conspiracy claim lacking because the Second Amended Complaint did "not contain sufficient factual allegations about the Defendants [*1288] agreeing with other entities and/or persons to engage in the ongoing criminal [8] conduct of an enterprise." Id. The court held that the remaining RICO claims were deficient for similar reasons.

The district court, however, gave Plaintiffs a chance to file another amended complaint by February 26, 2009. It directed Plaintiffs to "conform with the pleading requirements announced in Twombly and applied by this Court in Solomon and Genord," *2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18731, [WL] at 7, which are two cases also involved in the Managed Care MDL. See Solomon v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield Ass'n, 574 F. Supp. 2d 1288 (S.D. Fla. 2008) (dismissing complaint for failure to state a claim under Twombly); Genord v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mich., No. 07-21688-CIV, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99084, 2008 WL 5070149 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 24, 2008) (same). The court warned that similar failure to comply with the new pleading standard would result in dismissal with prejudice. *In re Managed Care Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18731, 2009 WL 347795, at 8.

On February 23, 2009, Plaintiffs sought an extension of time to file a third amended complaint. On February 24, 2009, the district court denied that motion, stating:

> Given the history of this particular case and the consistent insufficiencies of the Plaintiffs' allegations, the Court would likely have had sufficient justification to dismiss [9] Counts I-IV and VI of the Second Amended Complaint with prejudice. Because the plaintiffs are operating under newer, more stringent pleading requirements, the Court decided to afford them one last bite at the proverbial apple. . . . At this point, the factual averments necessary to satisfy Twombly are either readily included in yet another amended complaint, or simply do not exist.

D.E. 143, at 2. Plaintiffs never filed a third amended complaint. On March 2, 2009, the district court dismissed Counts I-IV and VI with prejudice. The district court entered a final order on March 23, 2009, declining to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Count V and dismissing the case in its entirety. Plaintiffs now appeal the dismissal of the RICO and RICO-related claims in their complaint.

diminish" payments allegedly owed. See id. at 1247 & n.1. Among the complained-of practices are "downcoding" and "bundling." See id. at 1248.

HN1[] "We review de novo the district court's grant of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim, accepting the allegations in the complaint as true and construing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Mills v. Foremost Ins. Co., 511 F.3d 1300, 1303 (11th Cir. 2008) (quoting Castro v. Sec'y of Homeland Sec., 472 F.3d 1334, 1336 (11th Cir. 2006)).

III. [10] DISCUSSION

A*. Twombly and Iqbal

Because the present case reflects the concerns that motivated the Supreme Court to adopt a new pleading standard in Twombly and Iqbal, a brief discussion of those decisions is warranted.

HN2[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) requires that a pleading contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief" in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the … claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S. Ct. 99, 103, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). In Twombly, the Supreme Court expressly "retired" the "no set of facts" pleading standard under Rule 8(a)(2) that the Court had previously established in Conley v. Gibson. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 563, 127 S. Ct. at 1969. Justice Black wrote for the Court in Conley of "the accepted rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." 355 U.S. at 45-46, 78 S. Ct. [*1289] at 102. In rejecting that language, the Court in Twombly noted that courts had read the rule so narrowly and literally that "a wholly conclusory statement [11] of claim would survive a motion to dismiss whenever the pleadings left open the possibility that a plaintiff might later establish some set of undisclosed facts to support recovery." 550 U.S. at 561, 127 S. Ct. at 1968 (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted).

In Twombly, the plaintiffs alleged an antitrust conspiracy among certain regional telecommunications providers in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (2006). Id. at 550, 127 S. Ct. at 1962. Their complaint relied on allegations of the defendants' parallel behavior to allege the conspiracy. Id. The Supreme Court granted certiorari to address the proper standard for pleading an antitrust conspiracy through allegations of parallel conduct. Id. at 553, 127 S. Ct. at 1963. Justice Souter, writing for a substantial majority, first noted:

> HN3[] While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.

Id. at 555, 127 S. Ct. at 1964-65 (internal quotation marks, citations, and alterations [12] omitted). The Court explained that "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Id. at 555, 127 S. Ct. at 1965. The Court ultimately held that to survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must now contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570, 127 S. Ct. at 1974. Cautioning that its new plausibility standard is not akin to a "probability requirement" at the pleading stage, the Court nonetheless held that the standard "calls for enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence" of the claim. Id. at 556, 127 S. Ct. at 1965. The Court was careful to note that "we do not require heightened fact pleading of specifics," but concluded that when plaintiffs "have not nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, their complaint must be dismissed." Id. at 570, 127 S. Ct. at 1974. Finding that the plaintiffs' complaint did not plausibly suggest an illegal conspiracy by merely alleging parallel conduct--because such [13] parallel conduct was more likely explained by lawful, independent market behavior--the Court held that the district court properly dismissed the complaint. Id. at 567-70, 127 S. Ct. at 1972-74.

The Supreme Court has since applied the Twombly plausibility standard to another civil action, Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Iqbal involved a Bivens action brought by a Muslim Pakistani who had been arrested and detained following the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Id. at 1943. He sued current and former federal officials, including John Ashcroft, former Attorney General of the United States, and Robert Mueller, the Director of the FBI. Id. at 1942. Iqbal alleged that Ashcroft and Mueller adopted and implemented a detention policy for persons of high interest after September 11, and that they designated him a person of high interest on account of his race, religion, or national origin, in violation of the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution. Id. at 1944. Iqbal's complaint alleged that Ashcroft was the "principal architect" of the policy and identified Mueller as "instrumental in [its] adoption, promulgation, and implementation," but also stated that both men "knew [14] of, condoned, and willfully [*1290] and maliciously agreed to subject" Iqbal to harsh conditions of confinement "as a matter of policy . . . for no legitimate penological interest." Id. at 1944 (alteration in original).

In evaluating the sufficiency of Iqbal's complaint in light of Twombly's construction of Rule 8, the Court explained the "working principles" underlying its decision in that case. Id. at 1949. First, the Court held that HN4[] "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Id. Second, restating the plausibility standard, the Court held that HN5[] "where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged--but it has not 'show[n]'--'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. at 1950 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)). HN6[] The Court suggested that courts considering motions to dismiss adopt a "two-pronged approach" in applying these principles: 1) eliminate any allegations in the complaint that are merely legal conclusions; and 2) where there are well-pleaded factual allegations, "assume their veracity and then determine whether they [15] plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Id. Importantly, the Court held in Iqbal, as it had in Twombly, that HN7[] courts may infer from the factual allegations in the complaint "obvious alternative explanation[s]," which suggest lawful conduct rather than the unlawful conduct the plaintiff would ask the court to infer. Id. at 1951-52 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567, 127 S. Ct. at 1972). Finally, the Court in Iqbal explicitly held that HN8[] the Twombly plausibility standard applies to all civil actions, not merely antitrust actions, because it is an interpretation of Rule 8. Id. at 1953.

Applying these principles to Iqbal's complaint, the Court began by disregarding as wholly conclusory Iqbal's allegations that Mueller was "instrumental" in adopting the detention policy and Ashcroft was the "principal architect" of the policy, and that they willfully agreed to subject Iqbal to harsh treatment for a discriminatory purpose. Id. at 1951. The Court then determined that the remaining factual allegations--that Mueller and Ashcroft approved the FBI's policy of arresting and detaining thousands of Arab Muslim men as part of its investigation into the events of September 11--did not plausibly [16] establish the purposeful, invidious discrimination that Iqbal asked the Court to infer. Id. at 1951-52. The alternative inferences that could be drawn from the facts--namely, that the arrests were likely lawful and justified by a nondiscriminatory intent to detain aliens who were illegally present in the United States and who had potential connections to those who committed terrorist acts--were at least equally compelling. Id. Accordingly, the Court ruled that Iqbal's complaint must be dismissed. Id. at 1954.

With this precedent in mind, we now turn to the RICO allegations in Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint.

B. Plaintiffs' Allegations of the Predicate Acts of a Pattern of Racketeering Activity under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)

HN9[] Section 1962(c) of the RICO statutes requires that a plaintiff prove that a defendant participated in an illegal enterprise "through a pattern of racketeering activity." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). "Racketeering activity" is defined to include such predicate acts as mail and wire fraud. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). "Mail or wire fraud occurs when a person (1) intentionally participates in a scheme to defraud another of money or property and (2) uses the mails or wires in furtherance [17] of that scheme." Pelletier v. Zweifel, 921 F.2d 1465, 1498 (11th Cir. 1989). In order to prove a pattern [*1291] of racketeering in a civil or criminal RICO case, a plaintiff must show at least two racketeering predicates that are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. H.J. Inc. v. Nw. Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 240, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 2901, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1989). "A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time." Id. at 242, 109 S. Ct. at 2902.

Because Plaintiffs' section 1962(c) claim is based on an alleged pattern of racketeering consisting entirely of the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, their substantive RICO allegations must comply not only with the plausibility criteria articulated in Twombly and Iqbal but also with HN10[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard, which requires that "[i]n alleging fraud or mistake, a party must state with particularity the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake." See also Ambrosia Coal & Constr. Co. v. Pages Morales, 482 F.3d 1309, 1316 (11th Cir. 2007) (holding that civil RICO claims, which [18] are "essentially a certain breed of fraud claims, must be pled with an increased level of specificity" under Rule 9(b)). We have held that pursuant to Rule 9(b), a plaintiff must allege: "(1) the precise statements, documents, or misrepresentations made; (2) the time, place, and person responsible for the statement; (3) the content and manner in which these statements misled the Plaintiffs; and (4) what the defendants gained by the alleged fraud." Brooks v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Fla., Inc., 116 F.3d 1364, 1380-81 (11th Cir. 1997) (applying the requirements to a RICO fraud complaint). The plaintiff must allege facts with respect to each defendant's participation in the fraud. Id. at 1381.

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that "[d]efendants represented in their on-line advertising, in their provider agreements and in their fee schedules that their in-network providers would be compensated for covered procedures based on commonly accepted dental practice, standard coding practice and Defendants' fee schedules." D.E. 111, at P 28. Plaintiffs argue that these advertisements, agreements, and fee schedules were fraudulent because they indicated benefits payments lower than what Plaintiffs [19] believed were due to them under their fee-for-service agreements with Defendants, which Plaintiffs argue had promised them timely specified payments "in accordance with standard dental coding procedures." D.E. 111, at P 24. In other words, Plaintiffs contend that they performed multiple procedures worthy of multiple or larger benefits payments, but that Defendants bundled and downcoded the procedures into fewer claims worthy of smaller payments. Additionally, Plaintiffs allege that the only way the alleged scheme of downcoding and bundling claims could work is if Defendants "agree[d]" to employ the "same" devices and tactics. D.E. 111, at P 9. Thus, Plaintiffs do not allege parallel schemes among competing dental insurers; they allege a single scheme consisting of identical conduct in which all Defendants agreed to participate. Therefore, not only did Plaintiffs need to plausibly and particularly allege facts showing related instances of mail and wire fraud, but also plausibly allege facts showing that a conspiracy created the alleged scheme.

Though the complaint sets out at least six examples of e-mail and letter communications between Defendants and Plaintiffs, including online advertisements, [20] fee schedules, contracts, and Explanations of Benefits ("EOBs") documents, D.E. 111, at PP 28-33, 49-56, Plaintiffs do not point to a single specific misrepresentation by Defendants regarding how Plaintiffs would be compensated in any of these communications, [*1292] nor do they allege the manner in which they were misled by the documents, as they are required to do under Rule 9(b). We have held that HN11[] a plaintiff must allege that some kind of deceptive conduct occurred in order to plead a RICO violation predicated on mail fraud. Am. United Life Ins. Co. v. Martinez, 480 F.3d 1043, 1065 (11th Cir. 2007) (affirming dismissal of plaintiff's substantive RICO claims where complaint did not allege that defendants made any affirmative misrepresentations in the mailings). Here, Plaintiffs' complaint provides a list of mailings and wires, without ever identifying any actual fraud. HN12[] If the specific misrepresentations do not exist, it follows that the complaint has not alleged a right to relief that is "plausible on its face." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570, 127 S. Ct. at 1974.

For example, Plaintiffs do not allege any misrepresentations in the EOBs because Plaintiffs allege in their complaint that the EOBs [21] expressly informed Plaintiffs when their claims were going to be bundled or downcoded and gave the reasons for doing so. See D.E. 111, at P 56 ("All Defendants have similarly engaged in bundling and downcoding practices by noting on EOBs . . . that 'services are not covered when billed with related primary procedures,' 'benefits are not provided for this service as it is considered to be a part of, and inclusive to, the primary services performed,' or that, 'based on information reported or in file, a different procedure code has been assigned.'"). Plaintiffs have not shown how they were misled by the EOBs if the language in the EOBs notified them about any bundling or downcoding of particular procedures.

Nor does the complaint allege any misrepresentations in the online advertisements. There are no allegations anywhere that the quoted language of the advertisements is false. Read as a whole, they amount at most to puffery, not fraud. See Byrne v. Nezhat, 261 F.3d 1075, 1111 (11th Cir. 2001) (noting that claims of surgical success in medical journals "seem more akin to puffing than actionable misrepresentations," in dismissing a civil RICO complaint alleging violations of section 1962(c) [22] predicated on acts of mail fraud). Additionally, Plaintiffs make no allegations as to who, if anyone, read the advertisements and was misled by them.

Further, the complaint does not connect the allegedly fraudulent communications to any particular acts of bundling or downcoding that Plaintiffs find unacceptable. Counsel for Plaintiffs stated at oral argument that this lack of particularity should be excused because they were at an "informational disadvantage" as to exactly how Defendants' software bundled and downcoded submitted procedures. To the contrary, we think it telling that the three named plaintiffs, Drs. Milgram, Trapp, and Desbordes, each received EOBs explaining the reimbursement of specific procedures they had performed, yet the complaint never offers any examples of which claims were bundled and downcoded. Perhaps the closest Plaintiffs come to alleging a specific instance of fraud is in paragraph 49 of the complaint, where they allege that "[d]efendants regularly sent EOBs [to Plaintiffs] that inappropriately and automatically bundled x-ray procedures with other procedures." D.E. 111, at P 49. However, Plaintiffs do not allege other procedures with which the x-ray codes [23] were bundled. This is at most an allegation of possible parallel conduct without any allegation of an agreement as to how Defendants would process x-ray billing codes as part of a greater scheme. In fact, Plaintiffs do not allege how Defendants agreed to employ any of these procedures as part of a long-term criminal enterprise predicated on acts of mail and wire fraud. HN13[] Simply specifying particular dates and contents of communications cannot [*1293] automatically constitute a valid claim that a defendant violated 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) without also plausibly alleging the existence of a long-term criminal enterprise.

In sum, the Second Amended Complaint does not plausibly, under Twombly, or particularly, under Rule 9(b), allege a pattern of racketeering activity predicated on a scheme to commit acts of mail and wire fraud. We find no specific misrepresentations in any of the communications Plaintiffs referenced, no connection between the alleged misrepresentations and any particular acts of downcoding or bundling, and no allegations as to how Defendants agreed to engage in an illegal scheme to defraud dental providers. Plaintiffs may have a difference of opinion from Defendants regarding the coding [24] that was used in processing their claims, but we cannot infer a scheme-driven deception from a complaint that provides no details of fraud or conspiracy. Accordingly, we conclude that the district court did not err in dismissing the substantive RICO claim in the Second Amended Complaint for failure to state a claim. [3]

C. Plaintiffs' Allegations of Conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d)

HN15[] Section 1962(d) of the RICO statutes makes it illegal for anyone to conspire to violate one of the substantive provisions of RICO, including § 1962(c). 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). "A plaintiff can establish a RICO conspiracy claim in one of two ways: (1) by showing that the defendant agreed to the overall objective of the conspiracy; or (2) by showing that the defendant agreed to commit two predicate acts." Republic of Panama v. BCCI Holdings (Luxembourg) S.A., 119 F.3d 935, 950 (11th Cir. 1997) (quoting United States v. Church, 955 F.2d 688, 694 (11th Cir. 1992)). A plaintiff need not offer direct evidence of a RICO agreement; the existence of conspiracy "may be inferred from the conduct of the participants." Id. at 950 (quoting Church, 955 F.2d at 695).

Here, the allegations in Plaintiffs' complaint do not support an inference of an agreement to the overall objective of the conspiracy or an agreement to commit two predicate acts. HN16[] In analyzing the [26] conspiracy claim under the plausibility standard, Iqbal instructs us that our first task is to eliminate any allegations in Plaintiffs'

[3] As somewhat of a last resort, Plaintiffs also argue that the district court did not dismiss their substantive RICO claim on the basis that the allegations were insufficiently particularized under Rule 9(b), but that its dismissal was solely grounded on what it held to be a lack of plausibility under Twombly. We disagree because the district court referenced Rule 9(b) in the section of its order specifically discussing the section 1962(c) claim. *See In re Managed Care Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18731, 2009 WL 347795, at 3. But even if the district court did not apply the proper standard to the substantive RICO claim, we need not resolve that issue if there is another basis for affirming its judgment, because HN14[] "we may affirm its judgment 'on any ground that finds support in the record.'" Lucas v. W.W. Grainger, Inc., 257 F.3d 1249, 1256 (11th Cir. 2001) (quoting Jaffke v. Dunham, 352 U.S. 280, 281, 77 S. Ct. 307, 308, 1 L. Ed. 2d 314 (1957)). [25] The district court's dismissal of the substantive RICO claim is still due to be affirmed because Plaintiffs have not pleaded the claim with sufficient particularity under Rule 9(b).

complaint that are merely legal conclusions. 129 S. Ct. at 1950. Plaintiffs offer conclusory statements such as "[d]efendants have not undertaken the above practices and activities in isolation, but instead have done so as part of a common scheme and conspiracy," D.E. 111 at P 67, and "[e]ach Defendant and member of the conspiracy, with knowledge and intent, agreed to the overall objective of the conspiracy, agreed to commit acts of fraud to relieve Class Plaintiffs of their rightful compensation, [*1294] and actually committed such acts." D.E. 111, at P 68. These are the kinds of "formulaic recitations" of a conspiracy claim that the Court in Twombly and Iqbal said were insufficient. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S. Ct. at 1966 (noting that "a conclusory allegation of agreement at some unidentified point does not supply facts adequate to show illegality"); Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950-51 (holding that Iqbal's bare allegation that defendants Ashcroft and Mueller agreed to adopt a discriminatory policy was not entitled to the presumption of truth and should be [27] ignored under Twombly). Plaintiffs also allege that "[i]n order for the fraudulent schemes described above to be successful, each Defendant and other members of the conspiracy had to agree to enact and utilize the same devices and fraudulent tactics against the Class Plaintiffs." D.E. 111, at P 69. We are "not required to admit as true this unwarranted deduction of fact." See Sinaltrainal v. Coca-Cola Co., 578 F.3d 1252, 1268 (11th Cir. 2009) (rejecting plaintiff's allegation that the alleged scheme necessarily required the cooperation of the alleged conspirators); Twombly, 550 U.S. at 566, 127 S. Ct. at 1971 (rejecting plaintiffs' argument that as soon as one defendant gave in, the conspiracy would not work, because there were logical reasons why defendants would independently engage in similar conduct).

After eliminating the wholly conclusory allegations of conspiracy, we turn to Plaintiffs' remaining factual allegations. Plaintiffs attempt to bolster their conspiracy allegations by describing the following "collective" or parallel actions taken by Defendants, from which they now argue the existence of an agreement may be inferred: the collective development and use of automated processes [28] to manipulate CDT codes, i.e. downcoding and bundling; the use of the same claims procedures, including the data that dentists are required to provide in submitting claims, the forms on which dentists must submit their data, and the coding that dentists use to submit their data; and Defendants' participation in trade associations and private, jointly owned partnerships and corporations. D.E. 111, at PP 70-71. Assuming for the sake of argument that parallel conduct has actually been alleged here, [4] and accepting these factual allegations as true, as we are required to do under Iqbal, see 129 S. Ct. at 1950, we think that the Supreme Court's holding in Twombly forecloses any possibility that Plaintiffs' allegations of parallel conduct plausibly suggest a conspiracy. The Court stated in Twombly that "HN17[] when allegations of parallel conduct are set out . . . they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S. Ct. at 1966. The Court held that allegations of parallel conduct, accompanied by nothing more than a bare assertion of a conspiracy, do not plausibly suggest [29] a conspiracy, stating that "without that further circumstance [*1295] pointing to a meeting of the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory." Id. [5]

These conclusions are especially true where, as here, there is an "obvious alternative explanation" for each of the collective actions alleged that suggests lawful, independent conduct. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 568, 127 S. Ct. at 1972 (finding that industry developments provided a "natural explanation" for defendants' alleged conduct that helped to foreclose plaintiffs' suggestion of conspiracy); Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1951-52 (finding that though some of the plaintiff's allegations were "consistent with" purposeful discrimination, the complaint as a whole supported a plausible and legitimate motive by law enforcement officers to protect the nation from "suspected terrorists"). As for Plaintiffs' allegation that Defendants downcoded and bundled some submitted [31] claims, insurance companies must use computers and software to efficiently process claims, and the use of downcoding and bundling may be proper in order to decrease physicians' costs and potentially increase profits. See In re Managed Care Litig., 430 F. Supp. 2d 1336, 1348 (S.D. Fla. 2006), aff'd sub nom. Shane v. Humana, Inc., 228 F. App'x 927 (11th Cir. 2007) (unpublished). In fact, Plaintiffs' brief only decries the use of "improper" bundling, which implies that some bundling of claims is commonly acceptable. Brief of Appellant at 1. Additionally, the Department of Health and Human Services has taken the position that the inverse processes of "upcoding" and "unbundling" are fraudulent billing practices under Medicare, which supports the use of automated claims processing systems. See Medicare at Risk: Emerging Fraud in Medicare Programs: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, 105th Cong. (1997) (statement of Michael F. Mangano, Principal Deputy Inspector General, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services), available at http://www.hhs.gov/asl/testify/t970626b.html. The use of automated systems that bundle and downcode [32] may just as easily have developed from independent action in a competitive environment as it would from an illegal conspiracy, because each insurer would have an economic interest in decreasing physicians' costs and increasing profits. See In re Managed Care Litig., 430 F. Supp. 2d at 1348. The complaint does not plausibly suggest that by using similar methods to downcode and bundle claims, Defendants have acted in any way inconsistent with the independent pursuit of their own economic self-interest. Accordingly, Defendants' parallel conduct is equally indicative of rational independent action as it is concerted, illegitimate conduct and thus "stays in neutral territory." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S. Ct. at 1966.

[4] We are not convinced that Plaintiffs actually allege parallel conduct with regard to their allegation that Defendants used the same downcoding and bundling methods, because there is no indication from the complaint that Defendants used the same software to downcode and bundle procedures in the same way over an extended period of time. See D.E. 111, at P 42 ("To accomplish this downcoding and bundling, Defendants used services and software such as those sold and licensed by Dentistat Inc. ('Dentistat') and McKesson Corporation ('McKesson'), such as ClaimsCheck Dental, CodeReview, and AutoCoder, or comparable software, which, among other things, are capable of modifying code protocols.") (emphases added); D.E. 111, at P 46 ("Through the use of Dentacom, Proclaim and other systems, Defendant Cigna aggressively reduces the payment of claims by systematically downcoding, bundling and pending provider claims for payment.") (emphasis added).

[5] The Court acknowledged that certain examples of a parallel conduct might [30] be sufficient to imply a conspiracy, such as "parallel behavior that would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties." 550 U.S. at 557 n.4, 127 S. Ct. at 1966 n.4 (quoting 6 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1425, pp. 167-85 (2d ed. 2003)). The conduct alleged here does not fall into any of these categories.

As for Plaintiffs' allegation that a conspiracy may be inferred from Defendants' participation in trade associations and other professional groups, it was well-settled before Twombly that HN18[] participation in trade organizations provides no indication of conspiracy. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 567 n.12, 127 S. Ct. at 1971 n.12; see also Consol. Metal Prods., Inc. v. Am. Petroleum Inst., 846 F.2d 284, 293-94 (5th Cir. 1988) ("A trade association by its nature involves [*1296] collective action [33] by competitors. Nonetheless, a trade association is not by its nature a 'walking conspiracy' . . . . [T]he establishment and monitoring of trade standards is a legitimate and beneficial function of trade associations.").

Plaintiffs have not plausibly alleged sufficient facts regarding Defendants agreement with other entities or persons to engage in the ongoing criminal conduct of an enterprise. Plaintiffs' allegations of Defendants' parallel conduct, absent a plausibly-alleged "meeting of the minds," fail to "nudge [] their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 570, 127 S. Ct. at 1966, 1974. Accordingly, we conclude that the district court did not err in dismissing the RICO conspiracy claim in the Second Amended Complaint. [6]

[6] We recognize that many of our sister circuits have held that if a plaintiff fails to state a claim of a primary RICO violation, then the plaintiff's civil RICO conspiracy claim necessarily fails. See GE Invest. Private Placement Partners II v. Parker, 247 F.3d 543, 551 n.2 (4th Cir. 2001); Efron v. Embassy Suites, P.R., Inc., 223 F.3d 12, 21 (1st Cir. 2000); Discon, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 93 F.3d 1055, 1064 (2d Cir. 1996), [34] vacated on other grounds, 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998); Lightning Lube, Inc. v. Hutton & Co., 899 F.2d 485, 495 (6th Cir. 1990); In re Edwards, 872 F.2d 347, 352 (10th Cir. 1989). This court has not expressly stated such a rule. In Jackson v. Bellsouth Telecomms., 372 F.3d 1250 (11th Cir. 2004), we affirmed the dismissal of a RICO conspiracy claim because the complaint failed to allege a substantive RICO claim, but we emphasized that "the RICO conspiracy [claim] add[ed] nothing" because it "simply conclude[d] that the defendants 'conspired and confederated' to commit conduct which in itself does not constitute a RICO violation." Id. at 1269. In an unpublished opinion, we characterized our holding in Jackson as follows: "where a plaintiff fails to state a RICO claim and the conspiracy count does not contain additional allegations, the conspiracy claim necessarily fails." Rogers v. Nacchio, 241 F. App'x 602, 609 (11th Cir. 2007) (citing Jackson, 372 F.3d at 1269) [35] (emphasis added). Unlike in Jackson, Plaintiffs' conspiracy count contains additional allegations, separate from the allegations in the substantive RICO count. Accordingly, there appears to be no controlling authority in our circuit or in the Supreme Court instructing us to adopt the reasoning of our sister circuits and dismiss

V. CONCLUSION

The RICO allegations in Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint "stop [] short of the line between possibility and plausibility." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557, 127 S. Ct. at 1966. As explained above, Plaintiffs failed to sufficiently plead a pattern of racketeering [36] activity predicated on a scheme to commit acts of mail and wire fraud. Plaintiffs also failed to plausibly allege a conspiracy to commit RICO violations, as they merely offered conclusory allegations of agreement accompanied by statements of parallel behavior, which just as easily suggest independent, lawful action. For the aforementioned reasons, we affirm the district court order dismissing Plaintiffs' RICO and RICO-related claims for failure to state a claim. [7]

Plaintiffs' conspiracy claim because the substantive RICO claim was deficiently alleged. See also Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 506 n.10, 120 S. Ct. 1608, 1616 n.10, 146 L. Ed. 2d 561 (2000) (expressly declining to resolve whether a plaintiff suing under section 1964(c) for a RICO conspiracy must allege an actionable violation under section 1962(a)-(c)). Because Plaintiffs' conspiracy count fails to state a claim under Twombly and Iqbal's plausibility standard, we find it unnecessary to decide in this case whether Plaintiffs' conspiracy claim must also fail because of the deficiencies in the substantive RICO count.

[7] The only argument Plaintiffs make with respect to the claim for aiding and abetting RICO violations under 18 U.S.C. § 2 (Count II) is in a footnote, which states that their arguments apply with equal force to that claim. Plaintiffs do not offer any argument with respect to their claim for declaratory relief for RICO violations (Count IV). We conclude that the district court properly dismissed these claims for the same reasons that it dismissed the section 1962(c) and section 1962(d) claims. Additionally, Plaintiffs raise several other arguments on appeal with respect to the district court's order dismissing their complaint. For example, Plaintiffs assert that the district court erroneously found Twombly to have created a [37] heightened pleading standard and wrongly compared their RICO allegations to those in the Solomon and Genord cases that the court had earlier dismissed for failure to state a claim. Because we hold that the Second Amended Complaint fails to state a claim for relief under the plausibility pleading standard articulated by the Supreme Court in Twombly and Iqbal, we conclude that these contentions are meritless.

ORDER

WOOD, U.S.D.J.:

On February 24, 2010, the Court issued an opinion resolving several motions in the above-captioned case (the "Opinion"). The Court filed the Opinion under seal because it discussed sealed exhibits that contain confidential and proprietary information relating to Defendants' business operations. The sealed exhibits include confidential business contracts, financial statements, business plans, and minutes from business meetings. The Court ordered the parties to submit a proposed redacted version of the Opinion, which the Court could file publicly.

On March 5, 2010, the parties submitted a proposed redacted version of the Opinion, which the Court has reviewed. The Court finds that only certain of the parties' proposed redactions contain confidential and proprietary business information that should be filed under seal. The Court has redacted those statements from the Opinion, and attached the Court's redacted version of the Opinion (the "Redacted Opinion") to this Order. The Court orders the Clerk of the Court [*3] to maintain the redacted portions of the Redacted Opinion under seal, and to file the Redacted Opinion through the ECF public filing system.

OPINION & ORDER

WOOD, U.S.D.J.:

On July 11, 2007, Plaintiff Angela Tese-Milner ("Plaintiff), the Chapter 7 Bankruptcy Trustee of the Estate of W.B. David & Co., Inc. ("W.B. David"), filed an Amended Complaint ("AC") in the above-captioned action, alleging, inter alia, violations of federal and state antitrust laws. Plaintiff now moves for leave to file a Second Amended Complaint ("SAC"), pursuant to Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("FRCP"). Defendants De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd. ("Consolidated"), De Beers Centenary A.G. ("Centenary"), De Beers S.A. ("DBSA"), and DB Investments, Inc. ("DBI") (collectively, "Jurisdictional Defendants"), move to dismiss the AC for lack of personal jurisdiction, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2) of the FRCP. Jurisdictional Defendants, Defendant CSO Valuations A.G. ("CSOV"), and Defendant Diamond Trading Company, Ltd. ("Diamond Trading") (collectively, Defendants), oppose Plaintiffs motion for leave [*4] to amend, and move to dismiss the AC, or, in the alternative, the proposed SAC, for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the FRCP. CSOV also moves to dismiss the AC for insufficient service of process, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(5) of the FRCP. Finally, Jurisdictional Defendants move to dismiss the AC as against Defendant Central Selling Organization ("CSO") on the grounds that CSO does not exist.

For the reasons stated below, the Court: (1) GRANTS Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(5); (2) DENIES Plaintiffs motion to file the proposed SAC; (3) GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC, without prejudice; (4) DENIES CSOV's motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2) as moot; and (5) GRANTS Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC as against CSO.

I. Background

Defendants are business entities affiliated with the De Beers Group ("De Beers"). De Beers is the name of a group of related companies involved in the production, purchase, and sale of diamonds. De Beers has played a leading role in the diamond industry for decades. Plaintiffs claims arise out of W.B. David's longstanding business relationship with De Beers. From 1969 to [*5] 2003, W.B. David was a De Beers' Sightholder — a company selected by De Beers to purchase and sell De Beers' rough diamonds.

On July 1, 2004, W.B. David filed the 140-page Original Complaint ("OC") in this action, asserting thirty-six claims against over 100 defendants. The OC alleged that De Beers controlled the world diamond market, and was engaged in anticompetitive conduct affecting the U.S. markets for rough and polished diamonds. The OC's allegations focused on the "Supplier of Choice" program, a program De Beers introduced in 2003 to select Sightholders. De Beers terminated W.B. David as a Sightholder after implementing the Supplier of Choice program. The OC alleged that De Beers used the Supplier of Choice program to reduce the number of Sightholders, thereby restricting the supply of diamonds to the market and raising diamond prices. The OC also alleged that DeBeers had stolen from W.B. David a proprietary diamond marketing plan called "Leading Jewelers of the World." The OC alleged that De Beers' conduct violated: (1) federal and state antitrust law, including Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2; (2) the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations [*6] Act; and (3) state common law.

On January 25, 2006, unsecured creditors of W.B. David filed an involuntary Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition against W.B. David in the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York. The Bankruptcy Court entered an order of relief on February 8, 2006, and appointed Angela Tese-Milner as Trustee of the W.B. David Estate.

On July 5, 2007, Plaintiff filed the AC, which is 11 pages long and omits many of the defendants, allegations, and claims included in the OC. In the AC, Plaintiff sued Defendants and three additional companies allegedly related to De Beers (the "Diamond Development Companies") (collectively with Defendants, the "AC Defendants"). The AC continues to allege that De Beers controls the diamond market, but it abandons all of the OC's specific allegations regarding the Supplier of Choice program and the Leading Jewelers of the World campaign. Instead, the AC alleges that De Beers maintains its monopoly by various means, many of which are secret, and that it conspires with unidentified entities to control the supply of diamonds and raise and maintain diamond prices. The AC claims that De Beers' monopolistic conduct has anticompetitive [*7] effects in the diamond market, and violates Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 340 of the Donnelly Act.

In September 2007, Defendants filed a motion to dismiss the AC for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Jurisdictional Defendants filed a motion to dismiss the AC for lack of personal jurisdiction, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2), and for insufficient service of process, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(5).

On January 23, 2009, the Court issued an order addressing Defendants' motions to dismiss. See Tese-Milner v. De Beers Centenary A.G., et al., 613 F.Supp.2d 404 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). The Court assumes familiarity with its January 2009 Order, and summarizes only those aspects that are relevant to the instant motions. In the Order, the Court stated that it would first address the motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, because the jurisdictional issue was antecedent to questions of the propriety of service and the sufficiency of Plaintiff's claims. Plaintiff argued that the Court could assert jurisdiction over the Jurisdictional Defendants based on De Beers' (i.e., all AC Defendants') aggregate contacts with the United States and New York, pursuant to (1) New York's [*8] general jurisdiction statute, N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 301; (2) New York's long-arm statute, N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 302; (3) Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(k)(2); and (4) Section 12 of the Clayton Act. Plaintiff argued that De Beers was an "integrated enterprise," and thus that the New York contacts of Diamond Trading and CSOV, who were not contesting jurisdiction, could be attributed to Jurisdictional Defendants.

The Court held that Plaintiff had not made a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction over the Jurisdictional Defendants, or even a "sufficient start" towards a prima facie showing so as to justify jurisdictional discovery, pursuant to New York's long-arm statute (C.P.L.R. § 302), Rule 4(k)(2), or Section 12 of the Clayton Act. See Stratagem Dev. Corp. v. Heron Int'l. N.V., 153 F.R.D. 535, 547 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (stating that plaintiff was entitled to jurisdictional discovery where he had made a "sufficient start" towards establishing personal jurisdiction).

With respect to C.P.L.R. § 301, New York's general jurisdiction statute, Plaintiff argued that Diamond Trading and CSOV were departments or agents of Jurisdictional Defendants, and that, accordingly, their contacts with New York could [*9] be attributed to Jurisdictional Defendants for the purpose of establishing jurisdiction. The Court found that Plaintiff had failed to make a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction pursuant to agency or department theories of jurisdiction, but had made a sufficient start towards such a showing to justify jurisdictional discovery on the issue. The Court denied Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, without prejudice to refile upon the completion of jurisdictional discovery.[1] The Court denied Defendants' motions to dismiss for insufficient service of process and for failure to state a claim, without prejudice to refile after the completion of jurisdictional discovery.

In their motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Defendants also argued that Defendant CSO did not exist. In an order issued on February 24, 2009, the Court ordered the parties to conduct discovery on the issue of whether CSO was a legal entity capable of being sued. The parties completed jurisdictional discovery in May 2009. The instant motions followed.

For the reasons stated below, the Court: (1) GRANTS Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2); (2) DENIES Plaintiffs motion for leave to amend; (3) GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), without prejudice; (4) GRANTS Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC as against the CSO; and (5) DENIES CSOV's motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(5) as moot.

II. Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2)

The Court holds that Plaintiff has not established that Diamond Trading is a department or agent of Jurisdictional Defendants, and thus has not made out [*12] a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over Jurisdictional Defendants.

A. Personal Jurisdiction Pursuant to C.P.L.R. § 301

C.P.L.R. § 301, which is New York's general jurisdiction statute, empowers a court to exercise jurisdiction over a non-domiciliary defendant that is "'engaged in such a continuous and systematic course of 'doing business' [in New York] that a finding of its 'presence' in [the state] is warranted.'" See Bresciani v. Leela Mumbai-A-Kempinski Hotel, 311 F. Supp. 2d 440, 444 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (quoting Landoil Res. Corp. v. Alexander & Alexander Servs., Inc., 77

---

[1] The Diamond Development Companies — Diamond Development Company N.V. ("Diamdel N.V."), Diamond Development Company S.A. ("Diamdel S.A."), and Diamond Development Company Ltd. ("Diamdel Ltd.") — joined in Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2) and Rule 12(b)(5). In the January 23 Order, the Court granted the motion to dismiss with respect to Diamdel Ltd., holding that the Plaintiffs had not made out a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over [*10] Diamdel Ltd., or even a sufficient start towards a prima facie showing, pursuant to any of the four jurisdictional theories proposed.

Plaintiff alleged that Diamdel N.V. and Diamdel S.A. were alternate names for a company in Antwerp, Belgium that sold diamonds to W.B. David. Defendants claimed that a company named Diamdel S.A. did not exist. Plaintiff stated in a letter to the Court that she did not object to dismissing Diamdel S.A. from the action, based on Defendants' representation that Diamdel N.V. was the correct party. In an order issued on February 24, 2009, the Court dismissed the action against Diamdel S.A. without prejudice.

In the SAC, Plaintiff has dropped Diamdel N.V. as a defendant. In a proposed order attached to the SAC, Plaintiff states that its claims against Diamdel N.V. are moot due to the settlement in Sullivan v. DB Investments. Inc., 04-2819 (SRC) (D.N.J.), a class action filed against various De Beers entities, including some of Defendants. Plaintiff seeks to voluntarily dismiss the action against Diamdel N.V., without prejudice to refile if the Sullivan class action settlement is not finalized. Defendants do not oppose the dismissal. The Court grants Plaintiffs [*11] request. The Court notes, however, that Plaintiff can reassert against Diamdel N.V. only claims that accrued on or after the date on which the Amended Complaint was filed, see Part III.D, infra.

N.Y.2d 28, 565 N.E.2d 488, 490, 563 N.Y.S.2d 739 (1990)). Where a court has jurisdiction over a corporate defendant pursuant to C.P.L.R. § 301, the court may also exercise jurisdiction over any company for whom the defendant acts as an agent, or of which the defendant is a mere department.[2] See J.L.B. Equities, Inc. v. Ocwen Fin. Corp., 131 F. Supp. 2d 544, 549-50 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Bulova Watch Co., Inc. v. K. Hattori & Co., Ltd., 508 F. Supp. 1322, 1333-34 (E.D.N.Y. 1981).

On a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, "the plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the court has jurisdiction over the defendants." Kernan v. Kurz-Hastings, Inc., 175 F.3d 236, 240 (2d Cir. 1999) (citations omitted). After discovery has been conducted, plaintiff must make a "prima facie showing of facts that, if credited by the trier of fact, would suffice to establish jurisdiction over the defendant." Bicicletas Windsor, S.A. v. Bicycle Corp. of America, 783 F. Supp. 781, 783 (S.D.N.Y. 1992); Ball v. Metallurgie Hoboken-Overpelt. S.A., 902 F.2d 194, 197(2d Cir. 1990).

Plaintiff argues that jurisdictional discovery has revealed that Diamond Trading is an agent and/or department of Jurisdictional Defendants,[3] and that the Court can exercise jurisdiction over [*14] Jurisdictional Defendants pursuant to Section 301.

B. Results of Jurisdictional Discovery

Diamond Trading and Jurisdictional Defendants — DBI (DB Investments, Inc.), DBSA (De Beers S.A.), Consolidated (De Beers Consolidated Mines, Ltd.), and Centenary (De Beers Centenary A.G.) — are all part of the De Beers group of companies, which consists of directly and indirectly owned subsidiaries of DBI and DBSA.

DBI: DBI is a holding company incorporated in Luxembourg; it is the parent company of DBSA. (SAC, ¶ 16; Seward Decl., Ex. 2). DBI has three shareholders but no executives, and it functions solely through [*15] the actions of its board of directors. (Seward Decl., Ex. 3, Ketley Dep. 124:18-25:31; Seward Decl., Ex. 4, Ex. 5.) The responsibilities of DBI's board include approving the annual business plans and budget for each De Beers' company, appointing the Chairman of the DBI and DBSA boards, and approving certain capital expenditures by subsidiaries. (Seward Decl, Ex. 5.)

DBSA: DBSA is a holding company also incorporated in Luxembourg. (SAC, ¶ 17.) DBSA's holdings include Consolidated, Diamond Trading, a retail diamond jewelry chain, and an industrial diamond business. (Seward Decl., Ex. 7.) DBSA is governed by its board of directors, which is responsible for such tasks as reviewing and recommending the annual De Beers' business plan and budget to the DBI board. (Seward Decl., Ex. 5 at DBI 000456-457; Ex. 3, Ketley Dep. 124:6-10.) DBSA has an Executive Committee that recommends and monitors the implementation of DBSA's policies and strategies. (Seward Decl., Ex. 8 at 000556-7.)

Consolidated and Centenary: Consolidated is a South African corporation engaged in diamond exploration and mining. Its owners are DBSA, which owns seventy-four percent of the company, and Ponahalo Holdings (Pty.) Ltd., [*16] an investment company established to benefit historically disadvantaged South Africans, which owns twenty-six percent. (Seward Decl., Ex. 7. & 13.) Consolidated's operations are overseen by its board of directors, eight of whom are appointed by DBSA and three by Ponahalo. (Seward Decl., Ex. 15 at 004495; Ex. 14 at 004544.)

[2] Because Diamond Trading has not contested jurisdiction, the Court has not determined the specific jurisdiction pursuant to which it can exercise jurisdiction over the company. [*13] In other words, the Court has not determined that it has jurisdiction over Diamond Trading pursuant to Section 301. The parties contest whether Diamond Trading has sufficient contacts with New York to satisfy Section 301. The Court finds that Diamond Trading is not an agent or department of Jurisdictional Defendants, and thus does not address whether jurisdiction over Diamond Trading arises under Section 301.

[3] The Court also granted jurisdictional discovery to determine whether CSOV was an agent or department of Jurisdictional Defendants. Jurisdictional Defendants argue that discovery did not reveal any evidence showing that CSOV is an agent or department of Jurisdictional Defendants. Plaintiff does not contest this claim. The Court agrees with Jurisdictional Defendants. There is no evidence on the record supporting the theory that CSOV is an agent or department of Jurisdictional Defendants, and thus the Court does not have jurisdiction over Jurisdictional Defendants based on CSOV's activities.

Consolidated's Executive Committee is responsible for the company's day-to-day management. (Seward Decl., Ex. 15 at 004496; Ex. 14 at 004545.) Since at least 2005, Consolidated has sold the diamonds it mines to De Beers Group Services (Pty) Ltd. ("DBGS"), a South African company owned by DBSA. DBGS then sells to Diamond Trading any diamonds intended for export. (Seward Decl., Ex. 17; Ex. 18.)

Prior to 2001, Consolidated and Centenary were both parent companies of De Beers, and were publicly traded. (SAC, ¶¶ 23 & 24.) On June 8, 2001, Consolidated and Centenary were converted into private companies, with DBSA acquiring 100% of each company's stock. Since 2001, Centenary's capital and responsibilities have been reduced significantly, and the company now provides only limited financial services to some De Beers' entities. (Seward Decl., Ex. 23.)

Diamond Trading: Diamond [*17] Trading is incorporated under the laws of England and Wales, and has offices in London. (SAC, ¶ 9; Ex. 24.) Currently, Diamond Trading is engaged in purchasing, sorting, marketing, and selling rough diamonds. Prior to 2002, Diamond Trading served only as an invoicing company. (Seward Decl., Ex. 40 at 000713.) At that time, a company known as Diamond Trading Company (Pty) Limited was responsible for selling De Beers' rough diamonds. (Seward Decl., Ex. 12, Page Dep. 4:25-5:19.) Prior to sale, the diamonds were held by a Bermudian company called Corriedale Limited. (Page Dep. 27:23-28:8.) CSOV provided sorting, valuing, sales, and marketing services. (Page Dep. 188:10-189:4.) After Consolidated and Centenary became private companies in 2001, the various companies' functions were consolidated into Diamond Trading. Diamond Trading purchased the stocks of rough diamonds held by Corriedale and its affiliates, and acquired CSOV's assets and liabilities. (Seward Decl., Ex. 40, 41.) By the end of 2005, Diamond Trading had assumed all diamond trading responsibilities and was operating in its current form.

Diamond Trading purchases rough diamonds from mining companies or other suppliers, sorts [*18] and values them, and sells them to Sightholders at ten annual sales events, which are known as "Sights." (Seward Decl., Ex. 28-29.) Until it lost its Sightholder position in 2003, W.B. David purchased diamonds from Diamond Trading Sights that took place in London. Diamond Trading purchases of [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] its rough diamonds from Consolidated and the remainder from other companies. (Seward Decl., Ex. 12, Page Dep. 199:16-200:8.) Diamond Trading enters into formal purchase agreements with all of its suppliers, including Consolidated. (Seward Decl., Ex. 18, 25-26.)

Since its 2001 restructuring, Diamond Trading has generated revenues predominately through the sale of rough diamonds. (Seward Decl., Ex. 36.) Revenues are used to cover the company's expenses, such as cost of sales, salaries, interests on loans, and taxes. From 2002 to 2007, Diamond Trading also had access to a revolving credit facility that was provided by a syndicate of banks and open to a number of De Beers companies. (Wait Decl., Ex. 2, Page Dep. 189:5-192:8, 193:21-194:7.) Diamond Trading borrowed money through the facility under its own name, though the liabilities accrued to De Beers generally. (Id. 192.)

Diamond [*19] Trading's day-to-day operations are run by its Managing Director, who reports to the company's board and to DBSA's Managing Director. (Seward Decl., Ex. 30 & 31.) The Managing Director is responsible for developing and implementing Diamond Trading's strategy, policies, procedures, and budgets; monitoring its financial performance; assessing and controlling risk; and other management functions. (Seward Decl, Ex. 32 & 35.) Diamond Trading also has an Executive Committee, which assists the Managing Director. (Id.) Diamond Trading's board prepares the annual business plan and budget, which is submitted to DBSA's board for review and recommendation to DBI, which then reviews and approves the plan.

There is some overlapping membership on Defendants' boards of directors. Diamond Trading and DBSA share four directors, and two DBI directors also sit on the Diamond Trading board. (Seward Decl., Ex. 32 & 59.) Four individuals sit on both Consolidated's and Diamond Trading's boards. (Id.) In addition, two of Diamond Trading's executives sit on the boards of DBSA and Centenary.

C. Agency Theory of Personal Jurisdiction

1. Legal Standard

To establish that one company acts as the agent of another company [*20] for the purposes of C.P.L.R. § 301, the plaintiff must show that the alleged agent "does all the business which [the other company] would do were it [in New York] by its own officials." Jazini v. Nissan Motor Co., Ltd., 148 F.3d 181, 184 (2d Cir. 1998) (internal quotations and citations omitted). "Courts have interpreted this to mean that the agent's activities in New York must be sufficiently important to the foreign corporation that if it did not have a representative to perform them, the corporation's own officials would undertake to perform substantially similar services." Stutts v. De Dietrich Group, 465 F. Supp. 2d 156, 162 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) (internal quotations and citations omitted). In determining whether an agency relationship exists, courts consider only the purported agent's activities in New York. See Wiwa v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., 226 F.3d 88, 95 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that a court can exercise jurisdiction over a parent company "predicated upon activities performed in New York [for the parent corporation] by an agent") (emphasis added); Saraceno v. S. C. Johnson & Son, Inc., 83 F.R.D. 65, 68 (S.D.N.Y. 1979) (refusing to consider purported agent's non-New York contacts [*21] when ruling on personal jurisdiction).

2. Application

Plaintiff has not raised sufficient facts to establish that Diamond Trading is as an agent of Jurisdictional Defendants for the purposes of C.P.L.R. § 301.

First, Plaintiff has not shown that Diamond Trading carries out any activities in New York. In Plaintiffs opposition briefs, Plaintiff details certain activities carried out by "De Beers" that involve New York, but she does not explain which — if any — of these activities are carried out by Diamond Trading specifically. (Opp. 12(b)(2), 19-21; Org. Opp. 12(b)(2).) Allegations about the actions of De Beers in general are insufficient to establish that Diamond Trading is an agent of Jurisdictional Defendants. Rather, Plaintiff must allege that Diamond Trading itself is engaged in conduct in New York that can be attributed to Jurisdictional Defendants.

Defendants acknowledge that Diamond Trading was involved in three New York-related activities: (1) sales, which took place in London, to eight New York Sightholders, including W.B. David; (2) formation of the U.S. Carat Club, a marketing mechanism intended to increase De Beers' sales in the U.S.; and (3) organization of a nationwide advertising [*22] campaign. (Br. 12(b)(2), 29.) These activities, however, cannot be used to establish agency pursuant to Section 301, because they did not take place in New York. Diamond Trading's offices are in London; New York Sightholders travel to London to purchase the company's diamonds. (Org. Opp. Br. 12(b)(2), 5.) There is no evidence that Diamond Trading conducted any Sights or other sales activities in New York. See Yurman Designs, Inc. v. A.R. Morris Jewelers, L.L.C., 41 F. Supp. 2d 453, 458 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) ("[Solicitation of business alone will not justify a finding of corporate presence in New York with respect to a foreign [company] . . . .") (internal quotations and citations omitted). The U.S. Carat Club and the advertising campaign were organized by Diamond Trading personnel in London, and targeted to the U.S. in general, not specifically to New York. (Org. Opp. Br. 12(b)(2), 5-8.) Nationwide advertising and marketing does not constitute activity in New York for the purposes of Section 301. See Pellegrino v. Stratton Corp., 679 F. Supp. 1164, 1171-72 (N.D.N.Y. 1988) (finding that court did not have jurisdiction over defendant pursuant to C.P.L.R. § 301 based on defendant's advertising [*23] in national newspapers because the newspapers were directed at a national audience and not specifically at New York); Baird v. Day & Zimmerman, Inc., 390 F. Supp. 883, 884 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) (holding that advertising in New York telephone directory amounted to mere solicitation and did not support a finding that defendant was doing business in New York pursuant to C.P.L.R. § 301). Plaintiff, therefore, has raised no evidence showing that Diamond Trading was involved in activity in New York

Second, even if Diamond Trading's sales to New York Sightholders did constitute an activity in New York, Plaintiff has not shown that these sales are sufficiently important to Jurisdictional Defendants that they would conduct the sales themselves if Diamond Trading were unavailable. Jurisdictional discovery revealed that the eight New York Sightholders make up less than ten percent of Diamond Trading's customers. (Steward Decl., Ex. 66.) Plaintiff has pointed to no evidence indicating that these eight Sightholders purchase a significant percentage of Diamond Trading's merchandise. Without such evidence, the Court is not convinced that Jurisdictional Defendants would begin sorting, valuing, and selling [*24] rough diamonds simply to maintain eight of Diamond Trading's eighty-three customers, particularly given that Jurisdictional Defendants currently are not equipped to carry out these activities.

Plaintiff attempts to support her agency argument by pointing to statements by De Beers personnel that De Beers is an "integrated enterprise" and that Diamond Trading is the group's "marketing arm." (Opp. Br. 12(b)(2), 15.) The Court has already found that descriptions of De Beers as an "integrated enterprise" are insufficient to establish agency. See Tese-Milner, 613 F. Supp. 2d at 415-17 (holding that Plaintiff had failed to make a prima facie claim that Diamond Trading was an agent of Defendants, even though Plaintiff alleged that De Beers was an integrated enterprise). This is especially true when, after jurisdictional discovery, Plaintiff has failed to show that Diamond Trading conducts important activities in New York on behalf of Jurisdictional Defendants. Assertions that Diamond Trading is De Beers' "marketing arm" are similarly ineffectual, particularly where Plaintiff has pointed to no facts indicating that Diamond Trading carries out marketing or advertising activities in or specifically [*25] targeted to New York. See H. Heller & Co. v. Novacor Chems. Ltd., 726 F. Supp. 49, 55 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (finding that the phrase "marketing arm" can "describe many relationships" and "is not coterminous with the jurisdictional definition of agency'").

Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiff has not established that Diamond Trading serves as an agent in New York of Jurisdictional Defendants.

D. Department Theory of Jurisdiction

1. Legal standard

To demonstrate that a subsidiary company is a mere department of its parent, a plaintiff must show that the "parent's control of the subsidiary is pervasive enough that the corporate separation is more formal than real." H. Heller & Co., 726 F. Supp. at 54. To determine whether such control exists, courts consider four factors: (1) common ownership; (2) financial dependence of the subsidiary on the parent; (3) the degree to which the parent interferes in the selection and assignment of the subsidiary's executive personnel and fails to observe corporate formalities; and (4) the degree of control the parent exercises over the marketing and operational policies of the subsidiary.[4] Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 751 F.2d 117, 120-22 (2d Cir. 1984).

2. Application

The Court finds that Plaintiff has not shown that Diamond Trading is a department of any of the Jurisdictional Defendants.

a. Common ownership

Common ownership is "essential to the assertion of jurisdiction over a foreign related corporation." Id. at 120. The common ownership prong is most easily satisfied where the alleged department is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the parent corporation. Courts have found common ownership outside of the classic parent-subsidiary relationship, but only where ownership interests in the companies are "nearly identical." Id.; Palmieri v. Estefan, 793 F. Supp. 1182, 1187-88 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (finding that common ownership existed between companies that were all wholly-owned by the same parent [*27] company).[5]

[4] Courts [*26] have applied the department test outside of the classic parent-subsidiary relationship. Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 751 F.2d 117, 120 (2d Cir. 1984). When discussing the test, however, the majority of courts focus on the parent-subsidiary relationship, and, for ease of reference, this Court will do the same. In its analysis, however, the Court applies the test to Centenary and Consolidated, Diamond Trading's sister companies.

[5] In its January 2009 Order addressing personal jurisdiction, the Court found that Plaintiff had not alleged sufficient facts to make jurisdictional discovery appropriate as to former Defendant Diamdel Ltd., in part because Plaintiff had not alleged that Diamdel Ltd. had an ownership interest in CSOV or Diamond Trading. The Court realizes that this statement does not accurately reflect the law: the common ownership prong of the department test can be satisfied in cases involving sister companies or affiliates, if the ownership interests in the companies are nearly identical. The Court also stated, however, that Plaintiffs allegations against Diamdel Ltd. were flawed because Plaintiff had named three Diamdel companies in the AC, and stated that she was not certain which of the three was the appropriate defendant. Plaintiff has since identified Diamdel N.V., and not Diamdel Ltd., as the appropriate defendant.

Consolidated is owned by DBSA (seventy-four percent) and by Ponahalo Investments (twenty-six percent). Thus the ownership of Consolidated is not "nearly identical" to that of Diamond Trading, which is wholly-owned by DBSA. The two thus lack common ownership. See ESI, Inc. v. Coastal Corp., 61 F. Supp. 2d 35, 52 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) [*28] (finding that common ownership of ninety-percent is a close call but sufficient); Saraceno, 83 F.R.D. at 69 (one hundred percent ownership satisfies this prong of test); Vendetti v. Fiat Auto S.p.A., 802 F. Supp. 886, 893 (W.D.N.Y. 1992) (same). The absence of common ownership weighs heavily against Plaintiffs argument that Diamond Trading is a department of Consolidated.

There is common ownership between Diamond Trading and DBSA, DBI, and Centenary. Diamond Trading is a wholly-owned subsidiary of DBSA, and is an indirect, wholly-owned subsidiary of DBI. Centenary is also wholly-owned by DBSA. The existence of common ownership, however, does not establish that Diamond Trading is a department of DBSA, DBI, or Centenary, if the remaining three factors do not support such a finding. See *Dorfman v. Marriott Int'l Hotels, Inc., No. 99 CIV 10496 (CSH), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72, 2002 WL 14363, at 7 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 3, 2002).

b. Financial dependence

To determine whether a subsidiary is financially dependent on its parent company, courts consider whether the parent company, inter alia, (1) provides no- or low-interest loans to the subsidiary or extends credit to the subsidiary on terms not otherwise available; (2) guarantees [*29] the subsidiary's obligations; or (3) provides or pays for insurance coverage on behalf of the subsidiary. ESI, Inc., 61 F. Supp. 2d at 53. In general, to establish financial dependency, a plaintiff must show that the subsidiary cannot function without the financial backing of the parent company. See Reers v. Deutsche Bahn AG, 320 F. Supp. 2d 140, 157 (S.D.N.Y. 2004); Meteoro Amusement Corp. v. Six Flags, 267 F. Supp. 2d 263, 271 (N.D.N.Y. 2003).

Plaintiff has not established that Diamond Trading is financially dependent on any of Jurisdictional Defendants. Jurisdictional discovery produced evidence that shows that since 2007, Diamond Trading has generated revenues sufficient to cover most of its expenses. It is less clear how Diamond Trading was financed from 2001-2007. Plaintiff, however, has pointed to no evidence that Diamond Trading relied on financing from Jurisdictional Defendants to pay its operating expenses during this period.

Prior to 2007, Diamond Trading did have access to a credit facility that was also open to other De Beers entities. The credit facility was operated by a bank syndicate, however, and there is no indication that Diamond Trading received no- or low-interest [*30] loans or any other special terms for borrowing. Diamond Trading's use of the credit facility, therefore, does not establish that it was financially dependent on Jurisdictional Defendants.

Although Diamond Trading purchases [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] from Consolidated, these sales are conducted through arms-length contracts and there is no evidence of any special terms between the parties. Plaintiff has not shown, therefore, that Diamond Trading depends on any of the Jurisdictional Defendants for financial support.

c. Control over personnel selection and respect for corporate formalities

Factors that courts consider when examining the third prong of the department test — interference with personnel selection and failure to observe corporate formalities — include whether (1) the parent shares officers with the subsidiary; (2) the parent pays the executives' salaries; and (3) the subsidiary holds separate meetings of its board of directors. See ESI, Inc., 61 F. Supp. 2d at 54. It is normal for a parent company to "control the board of directors of a subsidiary in their capacity as representatives of the controlling stockholder." Beech Aircraft, 751 F.2d at 121; see also Vendetti, 802 F. Supp. at 895 [*31] ("[T]he existence of common directors and officers is a normal business practice of a multi-national corporation . . . ."). When, however, "the parent officers extend their control beyond that normally exercised by boards of directors, their behavior supports an inference that the subsidiary is not an independent entity." Beech Aircraft, 751 F.2d at 121. The fact that a parent company appoints a few of the subsidiary's officers or directors is insufficient to establish control over personnel selection. Reers, 320 F. Supp. 2d at 157.

Here, there is some overlap in the membership of the boards of Diamond Trading and Jurisdictional Defendants. There is no evidence, however, that Jurisdictional Defendants' board members are involved in the day-to-day management of Diamond Trading. The fact that two of Diamond Trading's executives sit on the boards of Centenary and DBSA does not prove that either of these companies controls Diamond Trading. See Vendetti, 802 F. Supp. at 894-95.

Plaintiff claims that the restructuring of Diamond Trading from 2001-2004 "speaks volumes as to the meaningless of corporate formalities [within De Beers]." (Br. Opp. 12(b)(5), 18.) While a decision by a parent company [*32] to restructure a subsidiary may be a sign that the parent exercises control over the subsidiary, the mere fact that a restructuring occurs does not prove that corporate formality has broken down. See In re Ski Train Fire in Kaprun, Austria on Nov. 11, 2000, 342 F. Supp. 2d 207, 215 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (finding that restructuring of subsidiary did not show an absence of corporate formality).

Here, the evidence produced during discovery indicates that formalities were adhered to during Diamond Trading's reorganization. Diamond Trading purchased the assets of Corriedale and its affiliates for $1.2 billion, through a sale approved by Diamond Trading's board. The company entered into a formal novation agreement with CSOV and Corriedale to transfer CSOV's operations to Diamond Trading. (Seward Decl., Ex. 42.) There is no evidence indicating that Jurisdictional Defendants controlled or even were involved in these decisions. See Id. at 215 (finding that restructuring of subsidiary did not disregard corporate formalities where decision to restructure was made by subsidiary's board). The reorganization was designed to benefit Diamond Trading by streamlining diamond trading activities into one entity [*33] operating in one location (London). See Seward Decl., Ex. 40; In re Ski Train Fire, 342 F. Supp. 2d at 215 (restructuring did not disregard corporate formalities where it was designed to benefit subsidiary). The fact that the transaction also benefited Jurisdictional Defendants does not establish that they controlled the process. Plaintiff, therefore, has not established an absence of corporate formality between Diamond Trading and Jurisdictional Defendants.

Accordingly, Plaintiff has not met the third prong of the department test with respect to any of Jurisdictional Defendants.

d. Control over marketing and operational policies

To measure the degree of control a parent company exercises over a subsidiaries marketing and operational policies, courts look to such factors as whether: (1) the parent holds out the subsidiary as a division or department on promotional materials; (2) the parent determines the subsidiary's operational policies and strategy; and (3) the subsidiary runs its own operations and hires, trains, and pays its own employees. ESI, Inc., 61 F. Supp. 2d at 55; Linde v. Arab Bank, PLC, 262 F.R.D. 136, 144 (E.D.N.Y. 2009).

Again, Plaintiff has produced no evidence indicating [*34] that Jurisdictional Defendants control Diamond Trading's marketing and operational policies. Diamond Trading's Executive Committee and Managing Director set the company's operating policies and oversee its day-to-day operations. Diamond Trading has its own human resources department, and there is no evidence that Jurisdictional Defendants hire, train, or pay the company's employees. Although De Beers refers to itself as an "integrated company" in marketing materials, such descriptions do not show that Jurisdictional Defendants control Diamond Trading's operations. See Jazini, 148 F.3d at 185 (references to company as a "truly global company" with "global operations . . . contributing to the company as a whole" do not show "pervasive control over the subsidiary that the 'mere department' standard requires.").

Plaintiff argues that Consolidated controls Diamond Trading's operations through contracts it enters into when selling its rough diamonds to Diamond Trading, which [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] (Wait Decl., Ex. 2, Page Dep. 72-80.) These provisions give Consolidated some assurances regarding the price and volume of diamonds it sells to Diamond Trading; they do not give the company [*35] control over Diamond Trading's operations. Plaintiff thus has failed to show that any of Jurisdictional Defendants control Diamond Trading's operational or marketing policies.

The Court finds that Plaintiff has not made a prima facie showing of facts that would suffice to establish that Diamond Trading is a mere department of any of Jurisdictional Defendants. Although Plaintiff has shown common ownership between Diamond Trading and DBSA, DBI, and Centenary, she has failed to show that Diamond Trading is financially dependent on any of these companies, or that they control Diamond Trading's selection of personnel or its marketing and operational policies. With respect to Consolidated, Plaintiff has not even established common ownership.

Because Plaintiff has failed to show that Diamond Trading is an agency or a department of Jurisdictional Defendants, the Court cannot exercise jurisdiction over them pursuant to C.P.L.R. § 301.[6] Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2).

III. Motion for Leave to Amend Pursuant to Rule 15(b)

Plaintiff moves for leave to file the proposed SAC pursuant to Rule 15(b). The remaining Defendants — Diamond Trading and CSOV — oppose Plaintiffs motion, on the ground that amendment would be futile because the SAC would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. The Court agrees with Defendants, and DENIES Plaintiffs motion for leave to amend because [*37] the SAC fails to state a claim against Diamond Trading or CSOV.

Defendants also move to dismiss the AC for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Because the allegations in the AC and SAC are similar, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC for failure to state a claim. See, infra Section IV.

A. Legal Standard for Granting Leave to Amend

Pursuant to Rule 15(a)(2) of the FRCP, leave to amend should be freely given when justice so requires. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2); Pangburn v. Culbertson, 200 F.3d 65, 70 (2d Cir. 1999). A court may deny a motion for leave to amend, however, when the proposed amendments are futile. See Acito v. Imcera Group, Inc., 47 F.3d 47, 55 (2d Cir. 1995). A proposed amendment is futile when it would not survive a motion to dismiss. See S.S. Silberblatt, Inc. v. E. Harlem Pilot Block Bldg. 1 Hous. Dev. Fund Co., 608 F.2d 28, 42 (2d Cir. 1979). Accordingly, if the SAC would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the Court will deny Plaintiffs motion for leave to amend. DeBlasio v. Merrill Lynch & Co., No. 07 Civ. 318 (RJS), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64848, 2009 WL 2242605, at Ml (S.D.N.Y. July 27, 2009); *Porter-McWilliams v. Anderson, [38] No. 07-CV-0407 (KMK) (LMS), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89326, 2007 WL 4276801 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 3, 2007).

B. Legal Standard for a Rule 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss

For a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the plaintiff must plead sufficient factual allegations "to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A claim is plausible "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "Threadbare recitals of the elements of the cause of action . . . do not suffice." Id. "While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations." Id. at 1950.

[6] In its January 2009 Order granting jurisdictional discovery, the Court stated that Plaintiff had made sufficient allegations [*36] to justify jurisdictional discovery pursuant only to the agency and department theories of Section 301, but that discovery could reveal that jurisdiction is appropriate pursuant to other legal theories as well. Tese-Milner, 613 F. Supp. 2d at 419 n. 10. Jurisdictional Defendants argue that discovery has not produced any evidence to support other theories of jurisdiction. Plaintiff does not contest this statement, or argue that the Court has jurisdiction pursuant to another provision. The Court thus holds that Plaintiff has not made a prima facie showing of facts establishing jurisdiction pursuant to Section 301 or any other jurisdictional provision, including N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 302, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(k)(2), and Section 12 of the Clayton Act.

The Court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations in the complaint, Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, and "draw[] all inferences in the plaintiff's favor," Allaire Corp. v. Okumus, 433 F.3d 248, 249-50 (2d Cir. 2006).

C. Allegations in the SAC

The SAC sues Defendants pursuant to Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The allegations in the SAC are similar to those in the AC, though [*39] Plaintiff has added some new factual allegations based on the results of the jurisdictional discovery.

1. Specific allegations regarding Defendants

The SAC alleges that Defendants refer to themselves collectively (and together with other companies) as the "De Beers Group." The SAC makes the following, specific allegations concerning each Defendant:[7]

DBI directly owns DBSA and is the ultimate owner of the De Beers Group.

Around 2001, DBSA became a holding company for its two operating subsidiaries, Consolidated and Centenary. Prior to 2001, DBSA and DBI were the same company.

Centenary is a company that was party to contracts for the acquisition of rough diamonds from producers. Centenary is 100% owned by DBSA.

Consolidated produces the rough diamonds sold to Sightholders, and receives 90% of the final sales price of those diamonds.

Diamond Trading is a "department or agent of each of the other defendants." (SAC ¶ 12). Diamond Trading issued invoices on 95% of the rough diamonds sold to Sightholders by De Beers. Before 2002, [*40] Diamond Trading was indirectly owned by Centenary. As of December 2005, Diamond Trading is an indirect subsidiary of DBSA and DBI.

Prior to 2002, CSOV was engaged in sorting and valuing rough diamonds, and determining the prices at which they were sold to Sightholders. Personnel on the CSOV payroll conducted Sights. In 2002, Diamond Trading acquired the assets of CSOV.

2. Allegations regarding DTC/CSO

The SAC introduces an entity called DTC/CSO, which is not named as a Defendant. The SAC alleges that DTC/CSO is "an unincorporated association of affiliates of [DBSA]," engaged in acquiring, stocking, and selling diamonds to "the market." (SAC, ¶ 13.) De Beers allegedly refers to DTC/CSO as a "producers' cooperative" responsible for marketing rough diamonds on behalf of major producers. (Id.)

The SAC alleges that the DTC/CSO is "the mechanism De Beers uses" to regulate the supply of diamonds and ensure stable market conditions. DTC/CSO allegedly sets prices for and sells the rough diamonds produced by Consolidated and purchased by Centenary. The SAC alleges that Diamond Trading is "an entity that is a part of DTC/CSO. (Id. ¶ 12.)

3. Allegations of anticompetitive and monopolistic conduct

The [*41] SAC alleges that the De Beers Group controls more than sixty percent of the world's rough diamonds, including the diamonds it produces and diamonds it purchases on the open market or controls through agreements with other produces.

De Beers' monopoly over the diamond business allegedly arose more than a century ago, when it gained control over diamond mines in South Africa. Consolidated later signed a sales contract with the London Diamond Syndicate

[7] The Court includes allegations regarding Jurisdictional Defendants, who are no longer part of the case, because they relate to the claims against Diamond Trading and CSOV

("Syndicate"), a group of previously competing diamond merchants, to sell Consolidated's entire production to the Syndicate, thereby creating a worldwide monopoly. The SAC alleges that the Syndicate "formed the basis" for DTC/CSO. (SAC, ¶ 34.)

The SAC claims that the Syndicate maintained its monopoly by various means, including: (1) purchasing the entire output of a non-De Beers producer; (2) purchasing a non-De Beers producer; (3) entering into an agreement with a non-De Beers producer, in which the producer agreed not to sell at prices lower than those set by De Beers; and (4) imposing production quotas on non-De Beers producers. The SAC alleges that De Beers also engaged in other, secret, monopolistic conduct.

According to the SAC, De Beers [*42] regularly acknowledged that it controlled the diamond industry. The SAC cites a speech given in 1999 by De Beers' CEO, in which he claimed that De Beers is the world's best known monopoly and that it intentionally violates the Sherman Act.

DTC/CSO allegedly selects Sightholders and sells ninety to ninety-five percent of the rough diamonds controlled by De Beers. In order to purchase diamonds, Sightholders must supply DTC/CSO with detailed competitive information about their businesses and past sales of diamonds. The SAC claims that De Beers uses that information to regulate the price and supply of rough and polished diamonds worldwide.

The SAC alleges that Defendants are engaged in a "contract, combination and conspiracy," through which Defendants and "co-conspirators": (1) agreed on the prices and terms for selling diamonds; (2) monitored and regulated the production of potential competing producers; and (3) monitored and regulated the availability of diamonds to Sightholders. The alleged purpose of the conspiracy is to: (1) fix, raise, stabilize, and maintain the price of diamonds; (2) regulate the production of diamonds; and (3) "facilitate, effectuate and implement the contract, [*43] combination and conspiracy."

According to the SAC, Defendants' conspiracy has had the following anticompetitive effects: (1) purchasers of diamonds are deprived of the benefits of free and open competition; (2) diamond prices are fixed, raised, maintained and stabilized at artificially high and noncompetitive levels; and (3) competition between and among defendants and their co-conspirators is unreasonably restrained.

D. Application of Legal Standards to the SAC

The SAC brings claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2. The Court holds that the SAC fails to state a claim against CSOV or Diamond Trading, pursuant to either Section, because: (1) the SAC's allegations of illegal conduct by CSOV fall outside of the statute of limitations for actions brought under the Sherman Act; (2) the SAC fails to sufficiently allege that Diamond Trading entered into an agreement with independent entities to restrain trade, as required to state a claim pursuant to Section 1 of the Sherman Act; and (3) the SAC fails to sufficiently allege that Diamond Trading holds monopoly power in a relevant market or is involved in a conspiracy to monopolize, as required to state a claim pursuant [*44] to Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the SAC would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, and Plaintiffs proposed amendments are futile.

1. Statute of limitations

CSOV's alleged involvement in the De Beers monopoly occurred outside of the statute of limitations for actions under the Sherman Act, and therefore cannot be used to support a claim against CSOV pursuant to either Section 1 or Section 2 of the Act.

a. Legal Standard

The statute of limitations on Sherman Act claims is four years, accruing when the defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiff. 15 U.S.C. § 15(b); N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340.5. In the case of a continuing antitrust conspiracy, the statute of limitations restarts at the time of each overt act that is part of the violation and that injures plaintiff. Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997). When the plaintiff files for bankruptcy, the statute of limitations is tolled for two years from the date that the bankruptcy court files the order for relief. 11 U.S.C. § 108(a).

An amended complaint relates back to the filing date of the original complaint for statute of limitation purposes where "the claim or defenses asserted in the amended pleading [*45] arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading." Fed R. Civ. P. 15(c)(2). To determine whether relation back is appropriate, courts consider whether the original complaint gave the defendant adequate notice of the matters raised in the amended pleading. See Schiavone v. Fortune, 477 U.S. 21, 31, 106 S. Ct. 2379, 91 L. Ed. 2d 18 (1986). An amended complaint relates back if it renders previous allegations more definite or precise, but not if it introduces a new set of operative facts. Slayton v. Am. Express Co., 460 F.3d 215, 228 (2d Cir. 2006). Even where an amended complaint tracks the legal theory of the original complaint, claims based on an entirely distinct set of factual allegations do not relate back for the purposes of Rule 15(c)(2). Bank of Brussels Lambert v. Chase Manhattan Bank. N.A., No. 93 Civ. 5298, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13235, 1999 WL 672302 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 1999).

b. Application

The AC and SAC are nearly identical, and it is uncontested that the SAC relates back to the AC for statute of limitation purposes. It is clear, therefore, that Plaintiff can bring claims in the SAC arising on or after February 8, 2002, which is four years prior to the filing of the AC [*46] in July 2007, and an additional two years from the order of relief in the bankruptcy proceeding, which was entered on February 8, 2006.

Plaintiff argues that the AC relates back to the OC, which was filed on July 4, 2004. This would mean that Plaintiff could bring claims against Defendants based on conduct reaching back to July 1, 2000. Defendants counter that the SAC introduces a new set of operative facts, and thus does not relate back to the OC. The Court agrees with Defendants, and holds that Plaintiff is limited to claims arising on or after February 8, 2002.

There are some similarities between the OC and AC, including that both raise claims under the Sherman Act and allege that De Beers controls the diamond market. The OC, however, bases its Sherman Act claims on an alleged plot by De Beers to increase its control over the U.S. diamond market through the Suppliers for Choice Program. To support its claim, the OC contains 140-pages of detailed factual allegations about Suppliers for Choice and De Beers' U.S. marketing and advertising strategies and retail operations. The OC also asserts claims based on De Beers' alleged theft of a proprietary marketing scheme from W.B. David.

The [*47] AC, which is only eleven pages long, omits almost all of the OC's factual allegations, and instead asserts that De Beers is involved in an amorphous, worldwide conspiracy with unnamed co-conspirators to control the global diamond market, or some unspecified portion thereof. The AC claims that most of the means De Beers uses to maintain its monopoly are secret. Its alleges that De Beers sells rough diamonds to Sightholders and collects information from them that it uses to monitor the diamond market. There is not a single reference in the AC to the Suppliers for Choice Program or De Beers' U.S. marketing, advertising, or retail plans. The AC, therefore, introduces a new set of operative facts. The OC's specific allegations about the Suppliers for Choice Program and De Beers' U.S. marketing and retail plans would not have given Defendants notice that Plaintiff intended to bring broad conspiracy claims based on De Beers' global structure and operations. Accordingly, the AC does not relate back to the OC pursuant to Rule 15(b)(2), and Plaintiff can bring claims based only on conduct taking place on or after February 8, 2002.

The SAC alleges that prior to 2002, CSOV was responsible for sorting [*48] and valuing De Beers' diamonds and operating the Sights. In 2002, Diamond Trading acquired CSOV's assets. The SAC does not allege any conduct by CSOV after the acquisition. CSOV's alleged conduct, therefore, falls outside of the limitations period, and cannot be used to state a claim against the company. The SAC's claims against CSOV would not survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6).

2. Section 1 of the Sherman Act

a. Legal standard

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal to enter into a "contract, combination ... or conspiracy" to restrain trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 1. To properly plead a violation of Section 1, a plaintiff must allege that: (1) defendants were involved in a contract, combination or conspiracy that (2) operated unreasonably to restrain interstate trade. In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., No. 04 CV 1178 (TPG), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34517,72006 WL 1470994, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. May 30, 2006).

The bare assertion of a conspiracy is not enough to survive a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss; the complaint must contain "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement [to restrain trade] was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 545. A well-pleaded complaint should include specific, factual [*49] allegations as to "the identities of the co-conspirators, the nature of their conspiracy, how the participants attempted to accomplish their objectives, and what overt acts . . . they performed ...." Mathias v. Daily News. L.P., 152 F. Supp. 2d 465, 484 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); see also Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10 (allegations should include the time, place, and persons involved in the conspiracy). "[Unspecified contracts with unnamed other entities to achieve unidentified anticompetitive effects does not meet the minimum standards of pleading a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act." Garshman v. Universal Res. Holding Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 1987).

Section 1 does not cover wholly unilateral action. See Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) ("Unilateral action simply does not support liability; there must be a "unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement.") (internal citations omitted). To state a claim pursuant to the section a plaintiff must allege concerted action by two or more "legally distinct economic entities." Primetime 24 Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broadcasting, Co., Inc., 219 F.3d 92, 103 (2d Cir. 2000). [*50] The Supreme Court has held that a parent and its wholly-owned subsidiary are not distinct entities capable of conspiring together in violation of Section 1. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 776-77, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)[8] Courts also apply this rule to sister companies, meaning that Section 1 does not prohibit concerted action on the part of two or more subsidiaries owned by the same parent company. See Cohen v. Primerica Corp., 709 F. Supp. 63, 65 (E.D.N.Y. 1989).

3. Application

Diamond Trading is the only Defendant remaining in the SAC. The SAC's allegations are insufficient to state a claim that (1) Diamond Trading is involved in the alleged conspiracy; or [*51] (2) Diamond Trading is acting in concert with independent entities.

a. Diamond Trading's involvement in a conspiracy

The SAC does not sufficiently allege that Diamond Trading is involved in the alleged conspiracy.

The SAC's allegations regarding the nature of the conspiracy focus on the conduct of "De Beers" and the DTC/CSO. De Beers allegedly controls the diamond market and takes actions to maintain its monopoly. DTC/CSO is responsible for setting prices for De Beers' diamonds and regulating the supply of diamonds to the market. Allegations about the conduct of De Beers as a whole and of DTC/CSO do not explain the nature of Diamond Trading's involvement in the alleged conspiracy. See Invamed, Inc. v. Barr Laboratories, Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d 210, 218-19 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (dismissing conspiracy claims against parent company where complaint failed to articulate any specific allegations against it).

The SAC alleges that Diamond Trading is a "department and agent" of each Defendant and "part of DTC/CSO, but these bare assertions are insufficient to state a claim against the company. The SAC must plead facts showing how Diamond Trading worked with co-conspirators to restrain the diamond market, [*52] such as agreements between [8] The Court explained that Section 1 is intended to prevent two independent sources of economic power from joining together to take unified action that has anticompetitive effects. Copperweld Corp., 467 U.S. at 769. A parent and its wholly-owned subsidiary are not separate economic actors pursuing separate interests, but rather a unified entity with a single "corporate consciousness." Id. at 769-70. Accordingly, concerted action by such entities does not give rise to the anticompetitive dangers targeted by Section 1. Id.

Diamond Trading and other entities establishing Diamond Trading's role in the conspiracy, details about the terms of such agreements and when and where they were made, and overt actions taken by Diamond Trading to further the conspiracy. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565 n.10; Mathias, 152 F. Supp. 2d at 484; *Stephens v. CMG Health, No. 96 Civ. 7798 (KMW), 1997 U.S. Dist. Lexis 23797, at * 16-17 (S.D.N.Y. July 21, 1997)* (complaint must allege facts, such as "details of specific meetings, the identities of responsible individuals, [or] the terms of the alleged 'agreements] ....'").

The SAC does allege that Diamond Trading "issues invoices" on ninety-five percent of De Beers' diamond sales. This single allegation, however, does not sufficiently explain the nature of Diamond Trading's involvement in the alleged conspiracy. The SAC does not allege that Diamond Trading agreed to issue invoices in order to support De Beers' monopoly. Moreover, it is not clear how Diamond Trading's invoicing activities are linked to alleged efforts by De Beers and DTC/CSO to set diamond prices, regulate supply, monitor sellers, or otherwise maintain De Beers' monopoly.

b. Acting in concert [*53] with independent entities

The SAC does not sufficiently allege that Diamond Trading is conspiring with "legally distinct economic entities." The SAC claims that Defendants — acting in concert as the De Beers Group — mine, sort, and value rough diamonds, which are then sold to Sightholders by the DTC/CSO. The DTC/CSO is described as an "unincorporated association of De Beers' affiliates" and as a "producers' cooperative." None of these allegations make out a claim that Diamond Trading acts in concert with independent entities.

It is clear that Diamond Trading cannot conspire with Jurisdictional Defendants and CSOV within the meaning of Section 1: Diamond Trading is a wholly-owned subsidiary of DBSA and DBI, and a sister company of CSOV, Centenary, and Consolidated.

The DTC/CSO is described as an "unincorporated association." It is possible that Diamond Trading could conspire with the DTC/CSO, if it is comprised of independent companies. See Jund v. Town of Hempstead, 941 F.2d 1271, 1282 (2d Cir. 1991) (stating that an unincorporated association has no identity outside of the identity of its constituent members). The SAC claims that the DTC/CSO is an association of De Beers' affiliates, [*54] but it does not name a single non-De Beers entity involved in the association. Indeed, the only specific companies linked to the DTC/CSO are Consolidated, CSOV, and Diamond Trading itself. The SAC, therefore, fails to allege that the DTC/CSO is an independent entity capable of entering into a Section 1 conspiracy with Diamond Trading.

The SAC also alleges that De Beers took certain actions with "non-De Beers producers]" in order to maintain its monopoly over the diamond market. However, it again fails to identify even one of these entities. In order to state a claim pursuant to Section 1, the SAC must name least one, specific, non-De Beers entity that is allegedly acting in concert with Diamond Trading, through the DTC/CSO or otherwise. The SAC's failure to do so means that it would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

Accordingly, the SAC does not sufficiently allege that Diamond Trading has entered into an agreement to restrain trade, or acted in concert with independent entities. The SAC's Section 1 claim, therefore, would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

4. Section 2 of the Sherman Act

Plaintiffs Section 2 claim against Diamond Trading includes claims of monopolization [*55] and of conspiracy to monopolize. The Court holds that Plaintiff has failed to state a claim under either theory.

a. Monopolization claim

i. Legal standard

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it illegal for an individual to monopolize a market. 15 U.S.C. § 2. To state a claim of monopolization pursuant to Section 2, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant: (1) possesses monopoly power in a relevant market; (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) engaged in anti-competitive behavior. See Invamed, Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d at 218 (emphasis added).

A relevant market is comprised of the product market and geographic market in which the defendant allegedly exercises monopoly power. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F. 3d 430, 442 (3d Cir. 1997). A product market includes all products that are reasonably interchangeable, which requires consideration of the cross-elasticity of demand (that is, the extent to which a change in the price of one product will alter the demand for another product). Id. at 436. A geographic market is the geographic area in which competition occurs. Heerwagen v. Clear Channel Commc'ns. 435 F.3d 219, 227-31 (2d Cir. 2006).

The allegation [*56] of a relevant market is a "prerequisite" to a Section 2 claim. *Polargrid LLC v. Videsh Sanchar Nigam, Ltd., No. 04 CV 9578 (TPG), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54434, 2006 WL 2266351, at 6 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 7, 2006). Without a market definition, there is no way for a court to measure whether the defendant holds monopoly power and has the ability to act as a monopolist. United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 63 F.3d 95, 104 (2d Cir. 1995). Determining a relevant market can be a fact-intensive inquiry, and thus courts often hesitate to dismiss a claim for failing to adequately plead a relevant market. Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 199-200 (2d Cir. 2001). "There is, however, no absolute rule against [ ] dismissal" on such a ground. Id. at 200.

ii. Application

The SAC does not state a claim for monopolization because it does not allege a relevant market.

The SAC contains no allegations specifically identifying a relevant market or markets. Indeed, in her brief opposing Defendant's motion to dismiss, Plaintiff explicitly states that she is not attempting to allege a relevant market at this time.[9] Rather, she intends to wait for discovery to reveal the markets in which De Beers exercises monopoly power. She states that discovery [*57] could uncover any number of relevant markets, including the U.S. or worldwide markets for rough or polished diamonds, markets defined by other geographic boundaries, or markets based on carat size.

Plaintiff's approach is unacceptable. Plaintiff cannot refuse to plead an essential element of a Section 2 claim on the ground that she is waiting for discovery to reveal the optimal facts on which to build her case. The SAC does not necessarily need to include detailed factual allegations about all aspects of the alleged relevant markets, such [*58] as demand elasticity or substitutability. See Todd, 275 F.3d at 200-01. In order to state a claim for monopolization, however, Plaintiff must at least plead the basic contours of the relevant market or markets in which she believes De Beers exercises monopoly power. Without such information, the Court cannot assess whether Plaintiff has alleged that De Beers possesses monopoly power and has engaged in anticompetitive conduct in the identified markets. Plaintiffs refusal to define a relevant market is fatal to her monopolization claim; the claim would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

b. Conspiracy to monopolize claim

Section 2 also prohibits conspiracies between two or more persons to monopolize. To plead that a defendant was involved in a conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must sufficiently allege (1) that the defendant entered into concerted action with the specific intent of achieving a monopoly, and (2) the commission of overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy. See Int'l Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., Inc., 812 F.2d 786, 795-96 (2d Cir. 1987); Invamed, Inc., 22 F. Supp. 2d at 220. To survive a motion to dismiss, an antitrust plaintiff must allege [*59] facts "that reasonably tend[ ] to prove that the [defendant]... 'had a conscious commitment to a common [9] The SAC does include some allegations that reference potential relevant markets, including allegations that De Beers: (1) controls sixty percent of the world's rough diamonds; (2) maintains a "world-wide monopoly;" and (3) exercises control over two-thirds of the world's supply of diamonds and over seventy-five percent of diamonds imported into the United States. The Court could construe these allegations as alleging that the relevant market is the worldwide market for rough diamonds or the market for rough diamonds imported into the U.S. The Court, however, will not interpret the SAC as containing allegations that Plaintiff has explicitly disavowed.

c. Application

As discussed above with respect to the Section 1 claim, the SAC does not plead facts sufficient to explain the nature of Diamond Trading's involvement in the alleged conspiracy. Plaintiffs allegation that Diamond Trading "issued invoices" on De Beers' sales of rough diamonds does not support an inference that Diamond Trading engaged in concerted action with the specific intent of establishing a monopoly. There are no allegations that Diamond Trading was aware that De Beers controlled the diamond market or that the invoiced diamonds were sold at fixed prices. The SAC also does not claim that Diamond Trading itself was involved in determining the prices or quantities of diamonds sold. The SAC, therefore, fails to state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize pursuant to Section 2, and the claim would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

For the reasons stated above, the SAC fails to state claims against Diamond Trading and CSOV [*60] pursuant to Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and thus would not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Accordingly, the amendments proposed in the SAC are futile, and the Court DENIES Plaintiffs motion for leave to amend.

IV. Motion to Dismiss the AC Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6)

Defendants move to dismiss the AC for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), with prejudice. The AC contains the same Sherman Act claims as the SAC, as well as a claim under Section 340 of the Donnelly Act. The AC's allegations are very similar to those in the SAC, except that the SAC includes several additional allegations about De Beers' corporate structure. Therefore, for the reasons set forth above with respect to the SAC, the AC fails to state claims pursuant to Sections 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act.

Like Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Section 340 of the Donnelly Act prohibits individuals from entering into conspiracies to restrain trade. Donnelly Act § 340. To state a claim pursuant to Section 340, a plaintiff must satisfy the same pleading requirements as for a claim pursuant to Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co. Inc., 17 F. Supp. 2d 275, 298 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). [*61] Accordingly, based on the reasoning set forth above with respect to Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the Court holds that the AC fails to state a claim pursuant to Section 340 of the Donnelly Act.

The Court, however, will give Plaintiff the opportunity to file an amended complaint. Defendants argue that the AC should be dismissed with prejudice because Defendant's 2007 Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss put Plaintiff on notice of the deficiencies in the AC, and Plaintiff failed to correct those deficiencies in the SAC. The Court did not address Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) arguments before Plaintiff moved for leave to file the SAC. Although Defendants' original motion correctly identified certain of the deficiencies in the AC, the issues do not weigh so clearly in Defendants' favor that the motion should have put Plaintiff on notice that the Court would rule against it. The Court's instant Opinion has clarified that Plaintiff cannot bring an action against Jurisdictional Defendants, because the Court lacks personal jurisdiction over them, or against CSOV, because it did not commit any conduct within the statute of limitations period. If Plaintiff can make out more specific, factual allegations [*62] about the role of Diamond Trading in De Beers' alleged monopoly, however, then Plaintiff may be able to state a claim against the company. The Court thus will allow Plaintiff to file an amended pleading, in order to bring claims against Diamond Trading specifically.

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), without prejudice.

Defendants had also moved to dismiss the AC against CSOV for insufficient service of process, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(5). The Court has dismissed the AC as against CSOV, for failure to state a claim. Accordingly, CSOV's Rule 12(b)(6) motion is moot. The Court DENIES the motion.

V. The Central Selling Organization

The AC names as a Defendant an entity referred to as the Central Selling Organization ("CSO"). In 2007, when Jurisdictional Defendants moved to dismiss the AC for lack of personal jurisdiction, they also asserted that the CSO did not exist. In an order issued on February 24, 2009, the Court ordered the parties to conduct discovery on whether CSO exists as a separate legal entity capable of being sued.

It is now uncontested the CSO ceased to exist in 2001. It thus cannot have committed [*63] any actions that would fall within the limitations period for this action. Accordingly, the Court DISMISSES Plaintiffs claims against the CSO.

VI. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the Court: (1) GRANTS Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2); (2) DENIES Plaintiffs motion for leave to amend; (3) GRANTS Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), without prejudice; (4) DENIES CSOV's motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(5) as moot; and (5) GRANTS Jurisdictional Defendants' motion to dismiss the AC as against the CSO, with prejudice.

The Court GRANTS Plaintiff leave to file an amended complaint by no later than March 19, 2010.

The Court permitted the parties to file under seal portions of the SAC and of the instant motions and supporting documents because they contain confidential business information. The Court relied on these documents when drafting this Opinion. Accordingly, the Court is filing the Opinion under seal because it may contain confidential information. The Court orders the parties to submit to the Court a proposed redacted version of the Opinion that can be filed publicly, by no later than March 5, 2010.

In reviewing a motion filed under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court must accept all factual allegations in a complaint as true and take them in the light most favorable to plaintiff. A complaint must contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). A complaint does not need detailed factual allegations; however, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the "grounds" of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. The factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all of the complaint's allegations are true.

15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or conspire to monopolize, interstate or international commerce. It is the provision of the antitrust laws designed to curb the excesses of monopolists and near-monopolists. Liability under § 2 requires (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Monopoly power is the ability to control prices and exclude competition in a given market. If a firm can profitably raise prices without causing competing firms to expand output and drive down prices, that firm has monopoly power.

To support an inference of monopoly power, a plaintiff typically must plead and prove that a firm has a dominant share in a relevant market, and that significant "entry barriers" protect that market. Barriers to entry are factors, such as regulatory requirements, high capital costs, or technological obstacles, that prevent new competition from entering a market in response to a monopolist's supracompetitive prices. Without barriers to entry it would presumably be impossible to maintain supracompetitive prices for an extended time.

HN6[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Anticompetitive conduct may take a variety of forms, but it is generally defined as conduct to obtain or maintain monopoly power as a result of competition on some basis other than the merits. Conduct that impairs the opportunities of rivals and either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way may be deemed anticompetitive. Conduct that merely harms competitors, however, while not harming the competitive process itself, is not anticompetitive. It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for the protection of competition, not competitors. The law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN7[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

A patent owner asserting its rights through patent infringement litigation is generally immune from antitrust liability. Commonly referred to as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, this immunity extends to persons who petition all types of government entities, including legislatures, administrative agencies, and courts. Noerr-Pennington immunity, however, is subject to an exception for "sham" litigation. In this regard, the United States Supreme Court has outlined a two-part test to determine whether the "sham litigation" exception applies. As an objective first part, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, then the suit does not qualify as sham litigation and is immunized under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The subjective second part of the definition arises only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless. In such a case, the court must decide whether the baseless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. To invoke the "sham" exception, plaintiffs must prove, by clear and convincing evidence, that the defendant's activities were not really efforts to vindicate its rights in court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Courts must look to the monopolist's conduct taken as a whole rather than considering each aspect in isolation; if the plaintiffs can allege that a series of actions, when viewed together, were taken in furtherance and as an integral part of a plan to violate the antitrust laws, that series of actions, as an overall scheme, may trigger antitrust liability. This rationale applies equally in the patent context as in other antitrust contexts.

HN13[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

If a plaintiff can allege that a series of actions, when viewed together, were taken in furtherance and as an integral part of a plan to violate the antitrust laws, that series of actions, as an overall scheme, may trigger antitrust liability.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

HN14[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Issue preclusion, also called collateral estoppel, applies when "(1) the identical issue was previously adjudicated; (2) the issue was actually litigated; (3) the previous determination was necessary to the decision; and (4) the party being precluded from relitigating the issue was fully represented in the prior action. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has also considered whether the party being precluded had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in question in the prior litigation and, in addition, whether the issue was determined by final judgment.

HN15[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

"Objective baselessness," the threshold issue with respect to Noerr-Pennington immunity, is primarily a legal question.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

HN16[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Antitrust standing, the second prong of the Noerr-Pennington inquiry are determinations that flow from factual allegations and, as a result, are better addressed at the summary judgment stage upon a developed record.

I. INTRODUCTION

This is an antitrust action arising out of a patent infringement case filed on May 16, 2003 by Braintree Laboratories, Inc. ("Braintree" or "defendant"), a pharmaceutical company selling the constipation drug polyethylene glycol 3350 ("PEG") in the United States under the brand name MiraLax(R), against a generic drug manufacturer, Schwarz Pharma, Inc. ("Schwarz"), seeking to preclude FDA approval for Schwarz's generic PEG drug GlycoLax(R). (Civ. No. 03-477-SLR (hereinafter, "the Braintree/Schwarz litigation")) The Braintree/Schwarz litigation commenced when Braintree brought suit pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(2)(A) [1] responsive to Schwarz's filing of an ANDA containing a "Paragraph IV" certification [2] claiming that the patent listed by Braintree in the FDA's Orange Book [3] as covering MiraLax(R), U.S. Patent 5,710,183 [3] ("the '183 patent" or the "Halow patent"), is invalid or not infringed by the manufacture, use, or sale of GlycoLax(R). That suit triggered the 30-month stay on the FDA's approval of Schwarz's ANDA. See 21 U.S.C. § 355(j)(5)(B)(iii). The Braintree/Schwarz litigation was voluntarily dismissed by Braintree on June 3, 2004. Braintree waived any remaining portion of the 30-month stay, and GlycoLax(R) entered the market shortly the FDA issued its approval on July 2, 2004. Plaintiffs filed the instant suit on March 12, 2007 alleging that the Braintree/Schwarz litigation was a sham litigation designed to delay the FDA's approval of GlycoLax(R) and to improperly maintain monopoly power with respect to its pioneer drug. Plaintiffs amended their complaint on October 2, 2009. (D.I. 21) In lieu of an answer, defendant filed a motion to dismiss pursuant [*312] to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). (D.I. 22) That motion is presently before the court. For the reasons that follow, defendant's motion is denied.

II. BACKGROUND

A. The Parties and their Products

Plaintiffs in this action are direct purchasers of MiraLax(R) who allege that they paid overcharges on their purchases of MiraLax(R) or generic PEG as a result of defendant's monopoly prior to July 2004. (D.I. 21 at P 1) Plaintiffs Meijer, Inc. and Meijer Distribution, Inc. (collectively, "Meijer") are corporations organized under the laws of the State of Michigan, with their principal place of business in Grand Rapids, Michigan. (Id. at P 13) Meijer is the assignee of the claims of the Frank W. Kerr Co. which, during the relevant period, purchased MiraLax(R) directly from defendant. (Id.) Plaintiff Rochester Drug Cooperation, Inc. ("RDC") is a drug wholesale cooperative located in Rochester, New York. (Id. at P 14) Plaintiff Louisiana Wholesale Drug Company, Inc. ("LWD") [5] is a Louisiana corporation located in Sunset, Louisiana. (Id. at P 15)

Defendant Braintree is a privately held corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and shares its name with its principal place of business -- Braintree, Massachusetts. (Id. at P 16) Defendant first discovered the '183 patent while its New Drug Application ("NDA") was pending with the FDA. [4] (Id. at P 66; D.I. 23 at 5) After defendant's counsel examined the '183 patent, defendant paid the named inventor, George M. Halow ("Halow"), "a nuisance-value payment of approximately $ 15,000 for a non-exclusive license." (D.I. 21 at P 68; D.I. 23 at 5) In 1999, while its NDA remained pending, defendant listed the '183 patent in the FDA's Orange Book as covering MiraLax(R). (D.I. 21 at P 69) Defendant purchased the '183 patent outright in 2001. [5] (Id. at P 70)

Schwarz filed its ANDA for GylcoLax(R), a generic PEG, on January 20, 2003, and sent defendant a Paragraph IV certification letter on April 1, 2003. (Id. at PP 70-71) Braintree filed its patent infringement suit against Schwarz on May 16, 2003. [6] (Id. at P 73) The only asserted claim in the Braintree/Schwarz litigation was claim 33 of the '183 patent, claiming: "A method for improving bowel function in a mammal, comprising orally administering [PEG] to the mammal, in an amount sufficient to improve bowel motility, stool formation, or both."

Schwarz received a tentative approval letter from the FDA for its ANDA for GlycoLax(R) on December 23, 2003. (Id. at P 82) This approval would have become final but for the 30-month stay triggered by the Braintree/Schwarz litigation. (Id.)

B. The Braintree/Schwarz Litigation

1. Prosecution history relevant to the parties' claim [7] construction arguments

Claim 33 of the '183 patent was filed as [*313] original claim 34. (D.I. 21 at P 57) [7] During prosecution of the '183 patent, on February 25, 1997, the examiner rejected all of the pending claims 1-34. Specifically, claim 34 was rejected as obvious in light of two prior art references teaching compositions containing PEG to improve bowel movement. (Id. at P 58) In response, the applicant argued that claims 1-34 "provide a unique composition containing polyethylene glycol and a fiber bulking agent wherein PEG is present in a weight ratio of polyethylene glycol to fiber of from about 1 to 2 to no more than about 7 to 1. These percentages are critical and nowhere are they discussed or taught in the base references or the alleged equivalence teaching set forth by the secondary references." (Id. at P 59) The applicant further emphasized that the ratio of PEG to fiber was critical because if "the PEG to fiber ratio is too low, rapid onset of activity of the products of the invention drops off and begins to approach the low onset of a fiber based bulk laxative of the prior art. If the PEG to fiber ratio is too high, the volume of composition which must be ingested to obtain [8] the benefits of the fiber content may be too high and the excess PEG may result in undesirable effects, such as those associated with PEG based bowel lavage compositions, such as those set forth in [the asserted prior art]." (Id. at P 60) The examiner issued a notice of allowance based upon this teaching of "the ratio for the two active ingredients." (Id. at P 61) While issuing claims 1-32 included the emphasized PEG-fiber ratio, claim 33 (original claim 34) issued unamended, without this restriction. (Id. at P 63)

2. The parties' positions and the court's determination

The labeling literature for GlycoLax(R) does not include any reference to the improvement of "bowel motility" or "stool formation" as reflected in claim 33 of the '183 patent. (D.I. 21 at P 6; Civ. No. 03-477, D.I. 262 at 19-20) Braintree argued that the term "amount sufficient" as used in claim 33 should be construed to include the purpose of the stated amount of PEG, that is, "to improve bowel motility, stool formation, or both[,]" as this was the "new use discovered [9] by Dr. Halow and the novel portion of the claim." (Civ. No. 03-477, D.I. 262 at 18) It was Schwarz's position that only an "amount sufficient" to "improv[e] bowel function in a mammal" is required, as there is no discussion of improving bowel motility or stool formation in the '183 patent specification. If "amount sufficient" was not limited to the new use advocated by defendant, then several prior art references disclosing the use of PEG to treat constipation would anticipate the claim. Contrarily, if "amount sufficient" were tied to the result of "improv[ing] bowel motility, stool formation, or both," the prior art, omitting any reference to these particular uses, would not invalidate. (Id. at 18-19)

Schwarz's principal argument was twofold: (1) MiraLax(R) does not include in its labeling any reference to bowel motility or stool formation in its packaging, yet Braintree listed the '183 patent in the Orange Book for MiraLax(R); and (2) if GlycoLax(R) can infringe without such references in its packaging, then the asserted prior art references anticipate without specific reference to bowel motility or stool formation. (Id. at 19-20) The court agreed that only one construction applies [10] to both infringement and validity analyses. The court noted that Braintree's construction "reflects the plain meaning of the claim," and that neither asserted prior art reference discuss using PEG to improve bowel motility, [*314] stool formation, or both. (Id. at 20) Schwarz's anticipation argument, therefore, was premised on "inherent anticipation." (Id.) Schwarz did not present clear and convincing evidence that an improvement of bowel motility or of stool formation always and necessarily results from the administration of

PEG as disclosed in its asserted prior art references. Both parties' experts agreed that "stool softening," improving "bowel motility" and improving "stool formation" were related benefits to some degree, but the record lacked any clear indication of the nature of this relationship. (Id.) Because it was possible that both MiraLax(R) and GlycoLax(R) have a use covered by claim 33, and because clear and convincing evidence of inherent anticipation was not provided, the court "decline[d] to find Braintree's infringement claim frivolous on th[at] record." (Id. at 21) (emphasis added) Essentially, although Braintree's position may have been inconsistent with respect to infringement [11] (by GlycoLax(R), as unlabeled for the claimed uses) and anticipation (by prior art not specifically disclosing the claimed uses), the court's decision was premised on Schwarz's failure to meet its high burden of proof.

C. Termination of the Braintree/Schwarz Litigation

The Braintree/Schwarz litigation proceeded until May 21, 2004, at which time Braintree wrote to Schwarz that it had decided to voluntarily dismiss its patent infringement claim with prejudice and without costs. Braintree also offered Schwarz a royalty-free license to claim 33 of the '183 patent. (D.I. 21 at P 83) Braintree states that its dismissal was prompted by "certain unexpected discovery from Mr. Halow." (D.I. 23 at 6) The court effectuated the dismissal on June 3, 2004 (Civ. No. 03-477, D.I. 64), and the FDA issued its final approval to Schwarz for GlycoLax(R) on July 2, 2004. (D.I. 21 at P 86) GlycoLax(R) was first shipped "within days" of the FDA's approval. (Id.)

The Braintree/Schwarz litigation was not terminated, however. Schwarz maintained its state law counterclaims of unfair competition and tortious interference with business relations, as well as its claim that defendant violated Section 2 of the Sherman [12] Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, by engaging in sham patent infringement litigation for the purpose of unlawfully extending defendant's market monopoly on MiraLax(R). Following a bench trial, the court issued its findings of fact and conclusions of law. (Civ. No. 03-477, D.I. 262) [8] On the record before it, the court drew an inference that Braintree "obtained and relied upon an admittedly 'weak' patent for protection from other generic competition." (Id. at 14) However, insofar as even a potentially "weak" patent enjoys a presumption of validity, 35 U.S.C. § 282, the court concluded that Braintree had "advanced at least a colorable argument for validity and for infringement under its reading of claim 33" and, therefore, Braintree was immune from antitrust liability pursuant to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, discussed in detail infra. (Civ. No. 03-477, D.I. 262 at 18)

III. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Motions to Dismiss

HN2[] In reviewing a motion filed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), the court must accept all factual allegations in a complaint as true and take them in the light most favorable to plaintiff. See [13] Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 127 S.Ct. 2197, 2200, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007); [*315] Christopher v. Harbury, 536 U.S. 403, 406, 122 S. Ct. 2179, 153 L. Ed. 2d 413 (2002). A complaint must contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, in order to give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1964, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (hereinafter, "Twombly") (interpreting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)) (internal quotations omitted). A complaint does not need detailed factual allegations; however, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Id. at 1964-65 (alteration in original) (citation omitted). The "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level on the assumption that all of the complaint's allegations are true." Id. at 1959.

B. Antitrust Liability

HN3[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or conspire to monopolize, interstate or international commerce. [9] It is "the provision of [14] the antitrust laws designed to curb the excesses of monopolists and near-monopolists." LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 169 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc). Liability under § 2 requires "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966); Schuylkill Energy Resources v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 412-13 (3d Cir. 1997). Monopoly power is the ability" to control prices and exclude competition in a given market. Id. at 571. If a firm can profitably raise prices without causing competing firms to expand output and drive down prices, that firm has monopoly power. Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 380 (3d Cir. 2005).

HN5[] To support an inference of monopoly power, a plaintiff typically must plead and prove that a firm has a dominant share in a relevant market, and that significant "entry barriers" protect that market. Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 381; United States v. Microsoft, 253 F.3d 34, 51, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Barriers to entry are factors, such as regulatory requirements, high capital costs, or technological obstacles, that prevent new competition from entering a market in response to a monopolist's supracompetitive prices. Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 51; Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1439 (9th Cir. 1995); see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 591 n.15, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) ("[W]ithout barriers to entry it would presumably be impossible to maintain supracompetitive prices for an extended time.").

HN6[] Anticompetitive conduct may take a variety of forms, but it is generally defined as conduct to obtain or maintain monopoly power as a result of competition [16] on some basis other than the merits. LePage's, 324 [*316] F.3d at 147. Conduct that impairs the opportunities of rivals and either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way may be deemed anticompetitive. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 604-05, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 & n.32 (1985). Conduct that merely harms competitors, however, while not harming the competitive process itself, is not anticompetitive. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 224, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) ("It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'") (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)); Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) ("The law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself.")

C. Noerr-Pennington Immunity

HN7[] A patent owner asserting its rights through patent infringement litigation is generally immune from antitrust liability. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). [17] Commonly referred to as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, this immunity extends to persons who petition all types of government entities, including legislatures, administrative agencies, and courts. California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972). Noerr-Pennington immunity, however, is subject to an exception for "sham" litigation. In this regard, the Supreme Court has outlined a two-part test to determine whether the "sham litigation" exception applies. See Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Ind., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). As an objective first part, "the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." Id. at 60. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, then the suit does not qualify as sham litigation and is immunized under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Id. The subjective second part of the definition arises only if the challenged litigation is objectively meritless. In such a case, the court must decide whether the "baseless lawsuit conceals 'an attempt to interfere directly with the [18] business relationships of a competitor.'" Id. at 60-61. To invoke the "sham" exception, plaintiffs must prove, by clear and convincing evidence, that defendant's activities were not really efforts to vindicate its rights in court. See C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Systems, Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1368-69 (Fed. Cir. 1998) ("sham litigation requires more than a failed legal theory") (quoting Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 743 F.2d 1282, 1288 (9th Cir. 1984)); MCI Communications v. Am. Telephone and Telegraph Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1155 (7th Cir. 1983).

[9] HN4[] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall [15] be punished by fine not exceeding $ 100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." 15 U.S.C. § 2.

IV. DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs frame their Section 2 claim in terms of one improper "course of conduct" by Braintree comprising several distinct acts, specifically, knowingly and intentionally: (1) procuring the '183 patent despite its belief that the '183 patent was invalid; [10] (2) improperly listing the '183 [*317] patent in the Orange Book; and (3) improperly filing and prosecuting objectively baseless patent infringement actions against companies seeking to market generic MiraLax(R). [11] (D.I. 21 at P 103) As a result of Braintree's patent monopoly, plaintiffs allege that they paid artificially inflated prices for their PEG purchases ("overcharge" antitrust [19] damages) during the extended monopoly period. (Id. at PP 104-05) Braintree disaggregates plaintiffs' theory into its constituent parts, arguing that: (1) plaintiffs' Orange Book allegations fail because they did not result in direct injury; and (2) the court's prior opinion establishes that its suit against Schwarz was not objectively baseless as a matter of law and, therefore, Noerr-Pennington immunity applies here to bar plaintiffs' claim.

A. Plaintiffs Have Alleged Antitrust Injury

HN9[] Antitrust injury, or "an injury of the type the antitrust laws were [20] intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful," is a requisite to antitrust standing. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). In its reply brief, Braintree argues (for the first time) that plaintiffs' improper Orange Book listing allegation fails because it resulted in no direct injury to plaintiffs. Insofar as the existence of antitrust injury is a threshold issue, the court briefly addresses it here.

Plaintiffs allege that, as a result of Braintree's scheme, the ANDA approval process was delayed by the FDA. (D.I. 21 at P 88) The FDA approved Schwarz's ANDA for PEG less than a month after Braintree dismissed its claim against Schwarz. (Id. at P 90) "But for Braintree's misconduct, one or more competitors would have begun marketing A-rated generic versions of MiraLax(R) much sooner than such versions actually were marketed." (Id. at P 87) Braintree's "scheme to delay the introduction into the U.S. marketplace of any generic version of MiraLax(R) caused plaintiffs and the class to pay more than they otherwise would have paid for [PEG]" during the exclusionary period. (Id. at P 91) More specifically, the emergence [21] of generics typically results in price competition which enables drug purchasers to both purchase generics at a substantially lower price and to purchase the brand name drug at a reduced price. (Id. at P 92)

[10] As Braintree did not prosecute the '183 patent, plaintiffs do not claim that Braintree committed a fraud on the PTO.

[11] Although the allegation is written broadly to encompass other litigation, the complaint identifies only the Braintree/Schwarz litigation as the basis for plaintiffs' claim. HN8[] "A single lawsuit can violate antitrust law as long as it is both an objective and subjective sham." See In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 686 (2d Cir. 2009). Notwithstanding, as discussed in the following section, plaintiffs have alleged an overall scheme comprising more than the filing of the Braintree/Schwarz litigation.

Braintree's argument that the causal link between its Orange Book listing and delayed generic entry is too attenuated to maintain an antitrust scheme is misplaced. As discussed in detail infra, plaintiffs' claim is premised on an overall scheme. It is sufficient, therefore, for plintiffs to allege injuries that occurred as a result of the entire scheme, rather than any particular component therein.

HN10[] The Third Circuit has generally sanctioned claims of antitrust injury including, as in this case, allegations that prescription drug consumers, the "foreseeable and necessary victims" of a pioneer drug company's efforts to exclude a generic from the market, pay overcharges during the [*318] exclusion period. See gen. In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 214 F.3d 395, 400-01 (3d Cir. 2000) (stating that "[i]t is difficult to imagine a more formidable demonstration of antitrust injury") (reversing district court's dismissal of indirect purchasers' claim for injunctive relief under the Clayton [22] Act for lack of standing).

Taking plaintiffs' allegations as true, the court finds that the amended complaint sufficiently conveys a causal nexus between the alleged injury and Braintree's purportedly monopolistic behavior. Plaintiffs' allegations in this regard are of the type that generally pass muster in this context. See id.; see also In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 649 F. Supp. 2d at 355 (citing *Abbott Labs. v. Mylan Pharms., Inc., Civ. No. 05-6561, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12839, 2007 WL 625496 at 4-5 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 23, 2007)). As "HN11[] the existence of antitrust injury is not typically resolved through motions to dismiss," the court declines to analyze any further disputes with respect to causation and injury on this motion. See Schuylkill Energy Res., 113 F.3d at 417; see also gen. Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 989 (9th Cir. 2001).

B. Plaintiffs Have Alleged an "Overall Scheme" to Forestall Competition

Plaintiffs may make their antitrust case by establishing an "overall scheme" to forestall generic competition. HN12[] "[C]ourts must look to the monopolist's conduct taken as a whole rather than considering each aspect in isolation"; "[i]f [plaintiffs] can allege that a series of actions, when viewed [23] together, were taken in furtherance and as an integral part of a plan to violate the antitrust laws, that series of actions, as an overall scheme, may trigger antitrust liability." In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 649 F. Supp. 2d 340, 358-59 (D.N.J. 2009) (citing LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 162 (3d Cir. 2001)). This rationale applies equally in the patent context as in other antitrust contexts. See id. (citing In re Remeron Antitrust Litig., 335 F. Supp. 2d 522 (D.N.J. 2004)); see also *In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., Civ. Nos. 02-1830, 02-2731, & 02-5583, MDL No. 1479, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77475, 2009 WL 2751029 at 15-16 (D.N.J. Aug. 28, 2009) (citations omitted).

Plaintiffs have alleged that during and prior to the proposed class period, Braintree held a 100% share of the PEG market in the United States and, therefore, had monopoly power. (D.I. 21 at P 101) Plaintiffs have alleged in detail how Braintree engaged in a multifaceted scheme to unlawfully maintain its monopoly on the MiraLax(R) (PEG) market. The scheme comprised paying "a nuisance value payment of approximately $ 15,000" for a non-exclusive license to the '183 patent, which Braintree considered to be invalid. (Id. at PP 67-68) Braintree nevertheless [24] listed the '183 patent in the Orange Book for MiraLax(R) in 1999 and purchased the patent outright in 2001, "shortly before MiraLax(R) would lose its marketing exclusivity on February 18, 2002." (Id. at PP 68-70) The Orange Book listing forced Schwarz to file a Paragraph IV certification. Braintree commenced suit against Schwarz to obtain the benefits of the 30-month stay and extend its market monopoly on MiraLax(R) beyond that allowed by the patent laws. (Id. at PP 69-73, 88)

As explained infra, plaintiffs describe in detail why they believe that the Braintree/Schwarz litigation was objectively baseless. In view of the foregoing, plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an overall scheme by Braintree to forestall competition on generic MiraLax(R). See In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 649 F. Supp. 2d at 359 ("HN13[] If a plaintiff can allege that a series of actions, when viewed together, were taken in furtherance and as an integral [*319] part of a plan to violate the antitrust laws, that series of actions, as an overall scheme, may trigger antitrust liability.") (denying motion to dismiss). The court need not, and declines to, analyze whether each facet of this scheme constitutes a separate antitrust [25] violation. Id. at 359.

C. Objective Baselessness

1. Plaintiffs' allegations

The majority of Braintree's papers is devoted to its assertions that Noerr-Pennington immunity bars plaintiffs' claim because its positions in the Braintree/Schwarz litigation were objectively reasonable. Plaintiffs' allegations with respect to the baselessness of the Braintree/Schwarz litigation are as follows. First, Braintree knew or should have known that claim 33 was invalid for reading on the prior art. Braintree itself attempted to patent the use of PEG for the treatment of constipation but its applications claiming this use were consistently denied by the PTO. (D.I. 21 at P 64) When Braintree learned of the '183 patent while its NDA for MiraLax(R) was pending, its counsel examined the '183 patent "and concluded, in a December 23, 1998 letter sent to Halow, that claim 33 of the '183 patent was directly anticipated by the prior art, and hence invalid." [12] (Id. at P 67)

Aside from anticipation, plaintiffs allege that the '183 patent is invalid on its [26] face because there is no disclosure of PEG (without fiber) in the specification of the '183 patent in accordance with the requirements of 35 U.S.C. § 112. (Id. at P 77) As noted previously, Braintree paid "a nuisance value payment of approximately $ 15,000" for a non-exclusive license prior to purchasing the '183 patent outright prior to the expiration of the MiraLax(R) exclusivity period. (Id. at PP 68-70)

Plaintiffs aver that Braintree's lawsuit against Schwarz was "objectively baseless on its face because, to prevail, Braintree was required to advance a claim construction position for purposes of validity that precluded any reasonable argument of inducement by [Schwarz], and vice versa." (Id. at P 76) First, reading claim 33 to cover PEG without fiber would be inconsistent with the examiner's basis for allowing the claims in the first instance, and would compel a finding of anticipation (or obviousness) in view of a plethora of prior art teaching the use of PEG (without fiber) to treat constipation. (Id. at P 77) Construing the claim consistent with the applicant's arguments results in noninfringement, as GlycoLax(R) does not contain fiber. (Id.)

Secondly, to overcome the prior art, [27] Braintree was forced to distinguish improving constipation from both bowel motility and stool formation. Braintree argued: (1) "[m]ost patients with constipation do not have a bowel motility or stool formation problem;" (2) "[p]atients with normal transit constipation may still have dismotility of the bowel, meaning alterations in the neuromuscular contractions of the bowel, but would not necessarily have bowel motility problems;" and (3) "giving PEG to soften stool would not necessarily improve stool formation [-] softening the stool of a person having a stool form of five would make that person's stool formation worse." (Id. at P 79) (internal citations omitted). Plaintiffs argue that, if the treatment of constipation does not necessarily require improving bowel motility or stool formation, then Schwarz could not reasonably be viewed as encouraging patients to utilize GlycoLax(R) for these purposes simply [*320] by encouraging patients to utilize GlycoLax(R) for constipation. (Id.)

Finally, plaintiffs aver that the ruling in Warner-Lambert Co. v. Apotex Corp., 316 F.3d 1348 (Fed. Cir. 2003), preceded Braintree's suit by four months and contravened the grounds for Braintree's infringement [28] claim. (Id. at P 75) That is, a method of treatment claim may only be directly infringed by patients who perform the claimed method. (Id. at P 76) Schwarz could infringe only if it induced patients to infringe, and GlycoLax(R) labeling is directed to constipation, which was distinguished by Braintree. (Id. at PP 76, 78, 79)

2. Effect of the prior opinion

[12] The contents of the letter to Halow, i.e., Braintree's grounds for its statement that the '183 patent was invalid, are not specified in the amended complaint.

The court addresses at this juncture Braintree's argument that, in view of the court's opinion in the Braintree/Schwarz litigation, the court should decide that the Braintree/Schwarz litigation was not a sham as a matter of law. The court disagrees for several reasons. As discussed above, although the court previously found that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine barred Schwarz's antitrust counterclaim, it did so on the record before it at that time, mainly, in view of the fact that "[Schwarz did not] demonstrate[ ], by clear and convincing evidence, the lack of any objectively reasonable argument that the '183 patent is valid." (Civ. No. 03-477, D.I. 262 at 21; see also id. ("[T]he court declines to find Braintree's infringement claim frivolous on this record." (emphasis added))

HN14[] Issue preclusion, also called collateral estoppel, applies when [29] "(1) the identical issue was previously adjudicated; (2) the issue was actually litigated; (3) the previous determination was necessary to the decision; and (4) the party being precluded from relitigating the issue was fully represented in the prior action." Jean Alexander Cosmetics, Inc. v. L'Oreal USA, Inc., 458 F.3d 244, 249 (3d Cir. 2006) (citations omitted). The Third Circuit has also considered whether the party being precluded had "a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue in question in the prior litigation" and, in addition, whether the issue was determined by final judgment. Id. (citations omitted).

Plaintiffs, direct purchasers of MiraLax(R), were not represented in the Braintree/Schwarz litigation. [13] Plaintiffs at bar seek to make their own record, and insist that they will overcome the deficiencies in proof suffered by Schwarz. The court will not divest these plaintiffs of their day in court. All that is required to defeat Braintree's motion is that the amended complaint allege facts which, if proven, show that Braintree is not entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity under the sham litigation exception. See In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 649 F. Supp. 2d at 363 (citation [30] omitted). The court is satisfied that plaintiffs have alleged facts sufficient to establish that Braintree's suit against Schwarz was both objectively and subjectively baseless.

D. Noerr-Pennington Immunity Vis-a-Vis the "Overall Scheme" Claim

As noted previously, having found that plaintiffs have alleged an "overall scheme" on the part of Braintree that resulted in antitrust injury, the court does not parse plaintiffs' theory into its component parts. In analyzing the litigation component of plaintiffs' alleged monopolistic scheme, the court has not lost sight of this determination. For the reasons discussed above, the [*321] court does not exclude Braintree's bringing suit against Schwarz from the asserted scheme. [14]

E. Discovery Should be Tailored to the Issues to be Decided on Summary Judgment

HN15[] "Objective baselessness," the threshold issue with respect to Noerr-Pennington immunity, is primarily a legal question requiring the court to evaluate the reasonableness of Braintree's litigation positions vis-a-vis the patent laws. To this end, the litigation record of the Braintree/Schwarz litigation has already been forged; only limited additional discovery may be necessary. For example, it would aid the court's review on summary judgment to have scientific evidence shedding light on the credibility of Braintree's positions in that litigation.

HN16[] Antitrust standing, the second prong of the Noerr-Pennington inquiry, and the merits of plaintiffs' Section 2 claim, are determinations that flow from factual allegations and, as a result, are better addressed at the summary judgment stage upon a developed record. See In re Gabapentin Patent Litig., 649 F. Supp. 2d at 360 n.23; [32] *In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77475, 2009 WL 2751029 at 22-23; In re Remeron

[13] This is likely the reason Braintree specifically avoids framing its argument as one of issue preclusion or collateral estoppel, notwithstanding its urging the court to apply preclusively the prior holding in a manner consistent with the doctrine.

[14] Although it need not consider the Orange Book listing component of the asserted scheme independently for purposes of deciding the present motion, the court notes its agreement with the caselaw holding that "improper listing" in the [31] FDA's Orange Book is not an act of petitioning for Noerr-Pennington purposes, under the rationale iterated in In re Buspirone Patent Litigation, 185 F. Supp. 2d 363 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). Braintree's motion would be alternatively denied on this ground.

Antitrust Litig., 335 F. Supp. 2d at 528. A scheduling conference will be set in due course. The parties shall be prepared to discuss focusing discovery so as to streamline this litigation.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Braintree's motion is denied. An appropriate order shall issue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. p. 12(b)(6) provides for dismissal of a complaint that fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, a court is required to accept the material facts alleged in the complaint as true. The court is also required to read a complaint generously, drawing all reasonable inferences from its allegations in favor of the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

While a complaint attacked by a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. Instead, a plaintiff must assert enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a court may refer to documents attached to the complaint as an exhibit or incorporated in it by reference, to matters of which judicial notice may be taken, or to documents either in plaintiffs' possession or of which plaintiffs had knowledge and relied on in bringing suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, citizen petitions are immune from antitrust liability in light of the First Amendment. Noerr-Pennington immunity extends to those who petition all types of government entities, including the courts.

HN5[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

There is an exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity if the litigation, ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. There are two types of "sham" lawsuits. When it is alleged that a single action amounts to sham petitioning, a plaintiff must show that the litigation in question is (i) objectively baseless, i.e., no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits; and (ii) an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the governmental process - as opposed to the outcome of that process - as an anticompetitive weapon. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless, may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation.

HN6[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

When a defendant is accused of bringing "a whole series of legal proceedings" indiscriminately - known as automatic petitioning - the test is: Were the legal filings made, not out of a genuine interest in redressing grievances, but as part of a pattern or practice of successive filings undertaken essentially for purposes of harassment? In automatic petitioning cases, it is immaterial that some of the claims might, as a matter of chance, have merit. The relevant issue is whether the legal challenges are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival.

HN7[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

An unsuccessful lawsuit, without more, is not a sham.

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > Statutory Awards

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Clear & Convincing Proof

Patent Law > Remedies > General Overview

HN8[] Basis of Recovery, Statutory Awards

The Patent Statute provides that a court in exceptional cases may award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party. 35 U.S.C.S. § 285. Attorney fees are not to be routinely assessed against a losing party in litigation in order to avoid penalizing a party for merely defending or prosecuting a lawsuit, and are awarded to avoid a gross injustice. A district court must determine whether the case is "exceptional"; if it is, then it is within the court's discretion to award attorneys' fees to the prevailing party. The party seeking attorneys' fees bears the burden to show that a case is exceptional by clear and convincing evidence.

BARBARA S. JONES

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

On June 29, 2007, Mylan Inc. and Mylan Pharmaceuticals Inc. ("Mylan") moved under 35 U.S.C. § 285 for an award of attorneys' fees against Plaintiffs AstraZeneca AB, Aktiebolaget Hassle, KBI-E, Inc., KBI, Inc., and AstraZeneca, LP ("Astra"). On December 19, 2008, Astra moved to dismiss with prejudice Mylan's antitrust counterclaims pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). For the reasons set forth below, Astra's motion to dismiss Mylan's antitrust counterclaims is GRANTED and Mylan's motion for attorneys' fees is DENIED.

On May 31, 2007, the Court ruled in its Second Wave decision that Mylan did not infringe the asserted claims of Astra's omeprazole patents (the formulation described in U.S. Patent Nos. 4,786,505 (the "'505 patent") and 4,853,230 (the "'230 patent")). [*8] See AstraZeneca AB, et al. v. Mylan Labs., Inc., 490 F. Supp. 2d 381, 390 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). This decision was affirmed on appeal by the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. See In re Omeprazole Patent Litig., 281 Fed. Appx. 974, 2008 WL 2369864 (Fed. Cir. 2008). After the Court's Second Wave decision, Mylan moved for attorneys' fees pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 285, claiming that Astra's patent infringement suit was entirely devoid of merit.

In addition, in its Answer to Astra's Second Amended Complaint, Mylan asserted, inter alia, counterclaims for treble damages under the antitrust laws ("antitrust counterclaims"). AstraZeneca AB, 490 F. Supp. 2d at 397. The antitrust counterclaims assert that Astra kept generic manufacturers of omeprazole products off the market by bringing sham patent litigation to forestall generic-product launch. These counterclaims were severed and stayed pending resolution of the allegations of the complaint. Id. Astra has now moved to dismiss with prejudice the antitrust counterclaims.

LEGAL STANDARD

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure HN1[] provides for dismissal of a complaint that fails to state a claim upon [*9] which relief may be granted. "In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, the court is required to accept the material facts alleged in the complaint as true." Frasier v. Gen. Elec. Co., 930 F.2d 1004, 1007 (2d Cir. 1991). The court is also required to read a complaint generously, drawing all reasonable inferences from its allegations in favor of the plaintiff. See California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972).

HN2[] "While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b) (6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal quotations marks, alterations and citations omitted). Instead, a plaintiff must assert "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. DISCUSSION

I. Antitrust Counterclaims

Mylan brings four antitrust counterclaims: monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; attempted monopolization in violation of § 2; combination and conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2; and combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The four predicate acts underlying the counterclaims are the same:

> (1) Astra sued every potential generic [*11] competitor (including Mylan) without regard for the merits, (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 137, 144-46, 156, 166, 175, 186-88, 200-01);
> (2) Astra improperly listed certain Prilosec(R) patents in the Orange Book, either because the patents were invalid or because they did not meet the statutory requirements, (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 141-42);
> (3) Astra attempted to (i) convert sales of Prilosec(R) to Nexium(R) by pressuring physicians and by aggressive direct-to-consumer advertising, thereby replacing revenue that would otherwise have gone to suppliers of generic omeprazole products, and (ii) convert sales of prescription omeprazole to an over-the-counter omeprazole product (Prilosec(R) OTC) before substantial or additional generic competition to Prilosec(R) could occur, (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 189-90); and
> (4) Astra's alleged activities abroad were aimed at excluding both generic firms and parallel traders from competing against AstraZeneca's Losec(R) product (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 138, 192).

Mylan alleges that Astra committed these acts to unlawfully perpetuate its monopoly power in the U.S. market, which Mylan defines as "omeprazole-based drugs, [*12] which consists of Prilosec(R) and generic omeprazole products" or, alternatively, "Nexium(R) (esomeprazole) in addition to Prilosec(R) and generic omeprazole products." (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 193, 203.)

In Counts III and IV, Mylan alleges that Astra, Merck & Co., Inc., and Procter & Gamble combined and conspired to delay and prevent generic competition in the relevant market. (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 214, 221.) The alleged overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy are predicate acts (1) and (3), supra.

With respect to predicate act (1), Astra responds that under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, Astra's patent infringement action against Mylan cannot give rise to antitrust liability because Astra's suit was not a sham--i.e., Astra's claims were supported by probable cause.

"Generally, HN4[] under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, citizen petitions are immune from antitrust liability in light of the First Amendment." In re DDAVP Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 585 F.3d 677, 685-86 (2d Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Noerr-Pennington immunity extends to those who petition all types of government entities, including the courts. California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510-11, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972) [*13] .

HN5[] There is an exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity if the litigation, ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, "is a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Eastern R.R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 144, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961). There are two types of "sham" lawsuits. When it is alleged that a single action amounts to sham petitioning, a plaintiff must show that the litigation in question is (i) "objectively baseless," i.e., "no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits"; and (ii) "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon." Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) ("PRE") (citations, internal quotation marks, and alterations omitted). "Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless," i.e., (i), "may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation," i.e., (ii). Id.

By contrast, HN6[] when a defendant is accused of bringing [*14] "a whole series of legal proceedings" indiscriminately--known as automatic petitioning--the test is: "Were the legal filings made, not out of a genuine interest in redressing grievances, but as part of a pattern or practice of successive filings undertaken essentially for purposes of harassment?" Primetime 24 Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broadcasting, Co., Inc., 219 F.3d 92, 101 (2d Cir. 2000) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). In automatic petitioning cases, "[i]t is immaterial that some of the claims might, as a matter of chance, have merit. The relevant issue is whether the legal challenges are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival." Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

The Court finds that Astra is entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity from antitrust liability arising from its patent infringement action against Mylan because the suit was not a sham. Mylan alleges that when Astra filed its infringement action (and at various points thereafter), Astra knew or should have known that Mylan's product did not infringe the asserted patents, yet Astra pursued the lawsuit [*15] to prevent or delay Mylan's entry to the relevant market. However, as explained infra, the Court cannot conclude that Astra's infringement action against Mylan was one for which "no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits." PRE, 508 U.S. at 60.

First, HN7[] an unsuccessful lawsuit, without more, is not a sham. See id. at 61 n.5 ("[W]hen the antitrust defendant has lost the underlying litigation, a court must resist the understandable temptation to engage in post hoc reasoning by concluding that an ultimately unsuccessful action must have been unreasonable or without foundation."). This Court may not infer automatically that Astra's infringement action against Mylan was objectively baseless just because Astra lost at trial.

Second, this Court denied Mylan's motion for summary judgment of non-infringement, ruling that there were genuine issues of fact as to whether Mylan infringed Astra's patents. While surviving summary judgment may not establish conclusively that a suit is not a sham, it provides strong evidence that Astra could have reasonably expected success on the merits. See, e.g., Sulzer Textil A.G. v. Picanol N.V., 358 F.3d 1356, 1370 (Fed. Cir. 2004) (agreeing [*16] with district court's reasoning that "because Sulzer's claims survived Picanol's motion for summary judgment, Sulzer's claims could not be considered baseless"); APT Sec. Sys., Inc. v. Guerra, No. 95-CV-1051, 1997 WL 114784, at *2 (D. Conn. Mar. 4, 1997) ("Here, the court has concluded that ADT's claims are worthy of presentation to the trier of fact and therefore cannot conclude that its lawsuit is a sham.").

Third, at the outset of Astra's case, Mylan gave Astra an objectively reasonable basis to sue: Mylan provided Astra notice of its Paragraph IV certification. This is an act of infringement under 35 U.S.C. § 271(e)(2)(A). *See Celgene Corp. v. KV Pharm. Co., No. 07-4819, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55700, 2008 WL 2856469, at 2-5 (D.N.J. July 22, 2008) ("Because the Act has made the act of submitting an ANDA itself an act of infringement," in a Hatch-Waxman ANDA case the attorney need only "conduct a reasonable and competent inquiry into the act of infringement by investigating whether a relevant ANDA has been filed."). The Court agrees with Astra that a reasonable plaintiff in a Hatch-Waxman case would be expected to know few details about the accused product at the outset of litigation and plaintiff's counsel may [*17] reasonably rely on discovery to learn the material details.

Finally, Astra's infringement action against Mylan was hard-fought and close. In its lengthy Second Wave decision--issued after a 42-day bench trial--the Court ruled that Astra had proven that two of three contested limitations of its claims (limitations 1(b) and 1(c)) were found in Mylan's product. See AstraZeneca AB, et al. v. Mylan Labs., Inc., 490 F. Supp. 2d 381, 427-447 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). Mylan's invalidity defenses also failed. Id. at 397, 499. This outcome hardly bespeaks baseless litigation.

For all these reasons, the Court concludes that Astra's infringement action against Mylan was not objectively baseless and that it was therefore not a sham lawsuit unworthy of Noerr-Pennington protection. [2]

Mylan next argues that its antitrust counterclaims should not be dismissed because they fall within the automatic petitioning exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity. [*18] See Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 512-16, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972) (holding that plaintiffs' allegations that defendants "instituted the proceedings and actions . . . with or without probable cause, and regardless of the merits of the cases" "come within the 'sham' exception [to Noerr-Pennington immunity]"). In connection with this, Mylan alleges that (1) "Astra and its marketing partners engaged in an extensive multifaceted worldwide campaign designed to maintain their market dominance and monopoly beyond the legitimate scope of its patent protection [by] filing and maintaining lawsuits against each and every potential generic competitor without regard for the merits," (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims § 137), and (2) "Astra and its U.S. marketing partner Merck & Co. . . . had a policy of starting and maintaining legal proceedings [in the form of patent infringement actions] against all competitors (including Mylan) seeking FDA approval to enter the relevant market without regard to the merits of those actions." (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims § 187.)

The Court first notes that it appears to be an open question whether California Motor Transport's automatic petitioning [*19] exception to Noerr-Penington immunity remains viable following the Supreme Court's decision in PRE. In PRE, the Court observed that it had previously "described a sham as evidenced by repetitive lawsuits carrying the hallmark of insubstantial claims." PRE, 508 U.S. at 58 (emphasis in original, internal quotations omitted). The PRE Court ultimately rejected a "purely subjective definition of 'sham,'" reasoning that "[s]ince California Motor Transport, we have consistently assumed that the sham exception contains an indispensable objective component." Id. at 58, 60 (emphasis added). The Supreme Court thus indicated that a sham must be, at minimum, objectively baseless. Yet the automatic petitioning exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity would apply even where a defendant's allegedly indiscriminate litigation campaign occasionally is successful, i.e., where some portion of the lawsuits are meritorious and thus, objectively justified. See Primetime 24 Joint Venture, 219 F.3d at 101 (explaining that in automatic petitioning cases "[i]t is immaterial that some of the claims might, as a matter of chance, have merit"). Because PRE indicates that a sham must be objectively baseless, and because [*20] this

[2] Because the Court does not find that the infringement action was objectively meritless, the Court need not examine Astra's subjective motivation in bringing the suit. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993).

Court has concluded that Astra's infringement action against Mylan was not objectively baseless (and indeed, many of Astra's suits against other generic manufacturers of omeprazole were not objectively baseless because they succeeded), it may be that the automatic petitioning exception cannot strip Astra of Noerr-Pennington immunity for its patent enforcement efforts.

Nevertheless, even if automatic petitioning remains a viable exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity where litigation has an objective basis, the Court finds that Mylan's allegations fail to plausibly allege that Astra engaged in automatic petitioning. Astra had considerable success against the generic manufacturers it pursued through litigation. In fact, Astra succeeded against eight of eleven generic manufacturers--a .727 "batting average." See Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 552 F.3d 1033, 1047 (9th Cir. 2009) (rejecting sham litigation claim against a Hatch-Waxman plaintiff that won seven of its seventeen suits where, in each of the ten losing cases, plaintiff had a "plausible" argument); see also USS-POSCO Indus. v. Contra Costa County Building & Constr. Trades Council, 31 F.3d 800, 811 (9th Cir. 1994) [*21] ("Given that the plaintiff has the burden in litigation, a batting average exceeding .500 cannot support" plaintiff's antitrust theory); In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 335 F. Supp. 2d 1336, 1367 (S.D. Fla. 2004) ("Abbott succeeded on seven of the eleven lawsuits it filed: an impressive .636 batting average."). Moreover, although Astra initiated many lawsuits against generic manufacturers of omeprazole, "the volume of [Astra's] suits was dependent on the number of generic companies attempting to enter the [omeprazole] marketplace, a matter over which [Astra] had no control." Kaiser, 552 F.3d at 1047. Thus, the Court cannot conclude that Mylan has plausibly alleged that Astra brought its infringement actions pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring market rivals. Therefore, the Court finds no basis for withholding Noer-Pennington immunity from Astra for Mylan's antitrust counterclaims.

The Court also finds that none of Astra's other predicate acts alleged in the antitrust counterclaims violates the Sherman Act. In predicate act (2), supra, Mylan alleges that Astra improperly listed certain Prilosec(R) [*22] patents in the Orange Book, (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 141-42), but these allegations do not suggest how these listings were improper or anticompetitive. For example, Mylan does not identify which patents were improperly listed, why those patents were invalid at the time of listing, or how Astra failed to meet other statutory requirements for Orange Book listing. See generally Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).

As for Mylan's allegation in predicate act (3), supra (the claim of predatory product replacement practices (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 189-90)), the Court finds that Mylan has failed to plausibly allege "predatory or exclusionary acts or practices that have the effect of preventing or excluding competition within the relevant market," Morris Communcs. Corp. v. PGA Tour, Inc., 364 F.3d 1288, 1294 (11th Cir. 2004), as required to state a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, because the alleged conduct--introducing new products--is generally considered pro-competitive. See Walgreen Co. v. AstraZeneca Pharm. L.P., 534 F. Supp. 2d 146, 150-52 (D.D.C. 2008) (rejecting antitrust theory that AstraZeneca engaged in exclusionary conduct by introducing [*23] Nexium, a drug alleged to be nearly identical to and no more effective than Prilosec, in order to avoid competition from generic manufacturers because AstraZeneca's actions allegedly increased consumer choice). Similarly, Mylan's allegation that Astra aggressively pressured physicians and persuaded consumers to convert sales of Prilosec(R) to Nexium(R) fails to "identif[y] any antitrust law that prohibits market switching through sales persuasion short of false representations or fraud, or any court that has identified such conduct as exclusionary for purposes of § 2 of the Sherman Act." Id. at 152.

In addition, Mylan's allegation that Astra took steps abroad to prevent competition with Prilosec(R) (predicate act 4, supra, (Mylan's Answer and Counterclaims §§ 138, 192)) fails to plausibly allege any "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on U.S. commerce, as required by 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1). See F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd v. Empagran S.A.., 542 U.S. 155, 161, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004); see generally Cantor Fitzgerald Inc. v. Lutnick, 313 F.3d 704, 709 (2d Cir. 2002) ("[W]e give no credence to plaintiff's conclusory allegations.") (internal quotation marks omitted).

Finally, the Court finds that [*24] Mylan's allegations in Counts III and IV of a combination and conspiracy between Astra, Merck and Procter & Gamble to delay and prevent generic competition in the relevant market fail to state claims because they are based on predicate acts (1) and (3), supra, which the Court has already determined do not violate the Sherman Act. The Court agrees with Astra that even if the litigation alleged to be a sham was pursued jointly, it is not an antitrust violation as a matter of law if the Court finds the activity immunized by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See *Kahn v. iBiquity Digital, Corp., 309 Fed. Appx. 429, 2009 WL 102810, at 1 (2d Cir. 2009) (ruling that the alleged conspiracy to engage in activity protected by Noerr-Pennington immunity fails to state a claim). [3]

For the foregoing reasons, Astra's motion to dismiss Mylan's antitrust counterclaims is GRANTED.

II. Motion for Attorneys' Fees

In its motion for attorneys' fees, Mylan requests that the Court deem this case "exceptional" [*26] and award attorneys' fees and related expenses under 35 U.S.C. § 285 because Astra's patent infringement claims were entirely without merit. Specifically, Mylan asserts that Astra advanced numerous unfounded theories in support of its claim that Mylan's product contains an alkaline reacting compound ("ARC") in the form of alleged impurities. According to Mylan, this case should be deemed "exceptional" and fees should be awarded because "Astra's relentless pursuit of its claims against Mylan and Esteve for more than half a decade, despite [any supporting evidence], forced Mylan/Esteve to incur millions of dollars in attorneys' fees and expenses." (Mylan/Esteve's Motion for Attorneys' Fees 1-2).

HN8[] The Patent Statute provides that "[t]he court in exceptional cases may award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party." 35 U.S.C. § 285. "Attorney fees are not to be routinely assessed against a losing party in litigation in order to avoid penalizing a party for merely defending or prosecuting a lawsuit, and are awarded to avoid a gross injustice." Revlon, Inc. v. Carson Products Co., 803 F.2d 676, 679 (Fed. Cir. 1986) (internal citations omitted). "The district court must determine whether [*27] the case is 'exceptional'; if it is, then it is within the court's discretion to award attorneys' fees to the prevailing party." J.P. Stevens Co., Inc. v. Lex Tex Ltd., Inc., 822 F.2d 1047, 1050 (Fed. Cir. 1987). The party seeking attorneys' fees bears the burden to show that a case is exceptional by clear and convincing evidence. Cambridge Prods., Ltd. v. Penn Nutrients, Inc., 962 F.2d 1048, 1050 (Fed. Cir. 1992).

The Court finds that Mylan has failed to establish by clear and convincing evidence that this case is "exceptional" and Mylan is therefore not entitled to attorneys' fees and related expenses. At bottom, Mylan's theory is that Astra should be liable for attorneys' fees because it ultimately lost its infringement claim against Mylan at trial. As discussed supra, the Court has found that Astra had an objectively reasonable basis to sue Mylan for infringement and that its lawsuit was not a sham. The same reasoning applies here. For example, as in Sulzer Textil A.G. v. Picanol N.V., 358 F.3d 1356 (Fed. Cir. 2004), because Astra's action survived summary judgment, it is appropriate to conclude that it was not baseless, and thus, not exceptional for purposes of awarding attorneys' [*28] fees. Id. at [3] The Court also rejects Mylan's argument that dismissal of its antitrust counterclaims at this stage is not warranted because the counterclaims raise issues of fact requiring discovery--e.g., evidence of Astra's knowledge and motivations, policies and strategies related to its litigation efforts. Such evidence plainly goes to the subjective intent prong under PRE and, as discussed in footnote 2, supra, it is irrelevant [*25] because the Court concludes that Astra's infringement action against Mylan was not objectively baseless. Moreover, as is clear from the Court's dismissal of Mylan's antitrust counterclaims, Mylan has failed to cross the "threshold of plausibility" on its counterclaims to justify discovery. See Asahi Glass Co. v. Pentech Pharms., Inc., 289 F. Supp. 2d 986, 995 (N.D. I11. 2003) (Posner, J.) ("[T]o avoid turning every patent case into an antitrust case, some threshold of plausibility must be crossed at the outset before a patent antitrust case should be permitted to go into its inevitably costly and protracted discovery phase…. [A]n infringement suit must be adjudged to be objectively baseless before it can be considered an unlawful method of competition; that is, the determination of whether such a suit is a sham depends not on what the patentee believes but on the nature of and the underlying merits of the patentee's case.") (emphasis added and internal quotation marks omitted).

1370. And, as discussed, Astra's action against Mylan was hard-fought and close, necessitating a lengthy bench trial and a voluminous opinion. Moreover, there is no basis to find that Astra committed any misconduct in its handling of this litigation. Simply put, there was no bad faith, inequitable conduct, or vexatious activity by Astra. See Cambridge Prods., 962 F.2d at 1050-51 ("In the case of awards to prevailing accused infringers . . . 'exceptional cases' are normally those of bad faith litigation or those involving fraud or inequitable conduct by the patentee in procuring the patent.").

For these reasons, Mylan's motion for attorneys' fees and expenses is DENIED.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, Astra's motion to dismiss Mylan's antitrust counterclaims is GRANTED and Mylan's motion for attorneys' fees is DENIED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS AND VACATING HEARING

INTRODUCTION

In this patent infringement action involving commercial kitchen ventilation systems, defendant Streivor, Inc. moves to dismiss plaintiff Halton Co.'s claims for indirect infringement, unfair competition, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. Alternatively, defendant moves for a more definite statement on each of these claims. For the reasons stated below, defendant's motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

STATEMENT

Three [*2] claims are alleged in the complaint: (1) patent infringement, both direct and indirect, (2) unfair competition under California law, and (3) intentional interference with prospective economic advantage (Dkt. No. 1).

Underlying these claims is United States Patent No. 6,851,421, entitled "Exhaust Hood With Air Curtain," of which plaintiff is the assignee. The instant motion targets each of these claims with the exception of plaintiff's claim of direct patent infringement (Dkt. No. 19).

1. LEGAL STANDARD

"[T]o survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, 'to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (internal citations omitted); FRCP 8(a). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ibid. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. Id. at 1950. A court is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007).

A. [*3] Indirect Infringement

Defendant argues that plaintiff failed to sufficiently allege indirect infringement of the '421 patent under FRCP 8(a) and Iqbal. The complaint stated in relevant part (Compl. PP 11-13):

> 11. On information and belief, during the term of the '421 Patent, Streivor has infringed and continues to infringe; has contributorily infringed and continues to contributorily infringe; and/or has induced and continues to induce others to infringe one or more claims of the '421 Patent. Streivor's infringing activities in the United States and in this District include making, using, selling and/or offering to sell commercial kitchen products with exhaust hoods, including, but not limited to, Wall Canopy Box Design Hoods with Smart Aire.
> 12. In April 2009, Halton provided Streivor with actual written notice of the '421 Patent and Streivor's infringing activity, and demanded that Streivor cease and desist from infringing the '421 Patent.
> 13. Streivor has intentionally and willfully infringed the '421 Patent and continues to intentionally and willfully infringe the '421 Patent.

There are two theories under which a party may be held liable for indirect infringement: (1) induced infringement [*4] under 35 U.S.C. 271(b) and (2) contributory infringement under 35 U.S.C. 271(c).

As set forth in 35 U.S.C. 271(b), "[w]hoever actively induces infringement of a patent shall be liable as an infringer." To establish liability for induced infringement, "a patent holder must prove that once the defendants knew of the patent, they 'actively and knowingly aid[ed] and abett[ed] another's direct infringement.'" DSU Med. Corp. v. JMS Co., 471 F.3d 1293, 1305 (Fed. Cir. 2006). In other words, the accused party must have "knowingly induced infringement and possessed specific intent to encourage another's infringement." i4i Ltd. Partnership v. Microsoft Corp., 598 F.3d 831, 851 (Fed. Cir. 2010) (quoting MEMC Elec. Materials, Inc. v. Mitsubishi Materials Silicon Corp., 420 F.3d 1369, 1378 (Fed. Cir. 2005)).

With respect to contributory infringement, "[w]hoever offers to sell or sells within the United States or imports into the United States a component of a patented machine, manufacture, combination or composition, or a material or apparatus for use in practicing a patented process, constituting a material part of the invention, knowing the same to be especially made or especially adapted for use [*5] in an infringement of such patent, and not a staple article or commodity of commerce suitable for substantial noninfringing use, shall be liable as a contributory infringer." 35 U.S.C. 271(c).

Even assuming the truth of the facts alleged in the complaint, plaintiff has failed to make a plausible claim for induced or contributory infringement. Here's why:

Induced infringement under 35 U.S.C. 271(b) requires the direct infringement by another entity, and that this direct infringement be "actively induce[d]" by the party accused under Section 271(b). See i4i Ltd. Partnership, 598 F.3d at 851. As the above excerpts from the complaint illustrate, no entity other than defendant as been accused of directly infringing the '421 patent. Moreover, there are insufficient facts supporting a plausible inference of active inducement. The complaint merely alleged that defendant "makes, uses, sells and/or offers to sell" the accused infringing product, and continued to "intentionally" and "wilfully" infringe after receiving notice by plaintiff in April 2009 of possible infringement of the '421 patent (Compl. PP 11-13). No mention of any "specific intent to encourage another's infringement" is made.

Similarly, [*6] the complaint is devoid of facts to support a plausible inference of contributory infringement. As the excerpts from the complaint illustrate, there was no allegation by plaintiff that the accused commercial kitchen product was a "component of a patented machine . . . constituting a material part of the [patented] invention" or that the accused product was not capable of "substantial noninfringing use" (ibid.). 35 U.S.C. 271(c). Nothing alleged in the complaint fits the theory of contributory infringement.

In its opposition, plaintiff hangs its hat on FRCP 84, which states that the "forms in the Appendix suffice under these rules and illustrate the simplicity and brevity that these rules contemplate" (Opp. 3-4). The gist of plaintiff's argument is that it has sufficiently pled indirect infringement using Form 18, which was created prior to the Iqbal decision and is found in the appendix of the current Federal Rules.

On its face, however, Form 18 is silent as to any theory of patent infringement besides direct infringement. See FRCP Appendix of Forms, Form 18 (recommending in a "Complaint for Patent Infringement" a statement that "defendant has infringed and is still infringing the Letters [*7] Patent by making, selling, and using [the accused products] that embody the patented invention"). Nowhere in Form 18 are theories and elements of induced infringement or contributory infringement referenced. Given this silence, this order finds that plaintiff cannot use Form 18 as a shield against the instant motion. Several other courts in this district have reached the same conclusion. See Bender v. LG Elecs. U.S.A., Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33075, 2010 WL 889541 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 11, 2010) (Form 18 only provides an example of how direct patent infringement may be alleged); Elan Microelectronics Corp. v. Apple, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83715, 2009 WL 2972374 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 14, 2009) ("[i]n the absence of any other form that addresses indirect infringement and is made binding on the courts through Rule 84, the Court must apply the teachings of Twombly and Iqbal").

For these reasons, plaintiff's claims of indirect infringement under 35 U.S.C. 271(b) and 35 U.S.C. 271(c) are DISMISSED.

B. California Unfair Competition Law

Defendant's next attack targets the Section 17200 claims alleged in the complaint. The complaint set forth in relevant part (Compl. PP 17-20):

> 17. Strevoir [sic] is representing to potential clients that Streivor holds [*8] patent rights in its productions, which on information and belief such patent rights do not exist.
> 18. Streivor has represented to potential customers of Halton that it has patent rights that are superior to Halton's patents and by doing so implying [sic] that its patent rights cover Halton's exhaust hoods products.
> 19. On information and belief, during the term of the '421 Patent, Streivor has marketed and continues to market to potential customers that Streivor's exhaust hoods are equal to Halton's exhaust hoods and Streivor's exhaust hoods are half the price of Halton's system.
> 20. Potential customers are likely to be deceived into believing that Strevoir [sic] has the right to market its exhaust hoods, without a license from Halton, when in fact the intellectual property rights to the product covered by the '421 Patent belong to Halton.

Section 17200 states that "unfair competition shall mean and include any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." This language was intended to include "anything that can properly be called a business practice." Prata v. Superior Court, 91 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1136, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296 (2001) (internal [*9] quotation marks omitted). Defendant argues that the above allegations fail to state a plausible claim under California unfair competition law. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code. § 17200 et seq. This order agrees.

As the relevant excerpts from the complaint show, plaintiff's allegations are difficult to decipher. Giving the complaint as plausible a reading as possible, it appears that defendant misrepresented to its potential clients that it held patent rights in its products superior to those of plaintiff and that customers were likely to be deceived that defendant had the right to market its exhaust hoods without a license from plaintiff. The complaint leaves unaddressed why such misrepresentations would be important to a customer's decision in choosing between commercial kitchen appliances. Additionally, inexplicably thrown into these allegations is the claim that defendant represented to potential customers of plaintiff that its products were of equal quality at half the price.

There are numerous deficiencies with these allegations. First, claims that "sound in fraud" or are "grounded in fraud" -- including those alleged under Section 17200 -- must be pled with particularity under FRCP 9(b). [*10] See Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009) ("[W]e have specifically ruled that Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standards apply to claims for violations of the . . . UCL."). Since plaintiff's unfair competition allegations appear to be solely based upon defendant's allegedly false "representations" regarding its patent rights that were "likely to deceive []" customers, FRCP 9(b) applies to this claim. Applying this heightened pleading standard, the complaint failed to allege sufficient facts as to "the who, what, when, where, and how" relating to the alleged deceitful misconduct. Id. at 1126. For example, it is unclear who made these alleged "representations," how they were supposedly made, when they were supposedly made, and where they were supposedly made. This lack of specificity, as well as plaintiff's failure to allege a plausible theory of reliance on these supposed misrepresentations, makes it impossible for defendant to respond to these allegations (which appear to fall under the "fraudulent" prong of Section 17200).

Second, with respect to the seemingly unrelated allegation that defendant has marketed (and continues to market) to potential customers that [*11] its exhaust hoods are "equal to [plaintiff's] exhaust hoods and . . . are half the price," the complaint failed to allege that these representations were actually false. Moreover, at least with the representation that the competing exhaust hoods were "equal" to each other, such a vague marketing statement would almost certainly be deemed non-actionable puffery under the law.

Third, to the extent that plaintiff has alleged a violation under the "unlawful" prong of Section 17200, a violation of federal patent law -- without more -- cannot serve as the basis of this claim. See Summit Mach. Tool Mfg. Corp. v. Victor CNC Systems, Inc., 7 F.3d 1434, 1439 (9th Cir. 1993) ("Federal patent and copyright laws limit the states' ability to regulate unfair competition."). A state-law claim must be "qualitatively different from a copyright or patent infringement claim" or else it is preempted. Id. at 1439-40. This means that the state-law claim must require proof of an element not shared by the federal law. Ibid. In its opposition, plaintiff simply argues that "patent infringement is clearly a violation of federal law" as the basis for its claim under the "unlawful" prong. This argument fails under [*12] the rules set forth above.

Fourth, to the extent that a violation of the "unfair" prong has been alleged, there is no allegation that defendant's conduct "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). The complaint merely alleged that defendant committed patent infringement and knowingly deceived customers into believing that defendant's products did not require a license. If anything, this alleged misconduct, while potentially in violation of federal patent law, provided customers seeking commercial kitchen exhaust hoods with additional choices and the market with additional competition. The complaint failed to set forth any legally cognizable theory as to why the alleged misconduct was (and is) "unfair."

For these reasons, plaintiff's unfair competition claim under all three prongs of Section 17200 has been inadequately pled under FRCP 8(a) and Iqbal, and is hereby DISMISSED.

C. Intentional Interference [*13] With Prospective Economic Advantage

The elements of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are: (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant. Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1153, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003).

Plaintiff's only factual allegation with respect to the first element is that "Halton had a reasonable probability of profitable economic relationships with others . . ." (Compl. PP 26-33). As the undersigned recently explained in *Swingless Golf Club v. Taylor, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57654, 11-12 (N.D. Cal Jul. 7, 2009), "it is well settled in California that a plaintiff must establish an existing economic relationship or a protected expectancy with a third person, not merely a hope of future transactions." Such an existing relationship must be pleaded to state a claim for intentional interference [*14] with prospective economic advantage. Plaintiff acknowledges that its complaint is deficient in this respect (Opp. 10).

As such, plaintiff's claim of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage must be DISMISSED.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, plaintiff's claims for induced patent infringement, contributory patent infringement, unfair competition, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are DISMISSED. The hearing on this motion is VACATED.

Within FOURTEEN CALENDAR DAYS, plaintiff may file a motion on the normal 35-day track seeking to cure the foregoing deficiencies. A proposed amended complaint must be appended to such a motion, and the motion should clearly explain why each amended claim overcomes the deficiencies stated herein.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The meaning of the term "contract, combination, or conspiracy" under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is informed by the basic distinction in the Sherman Act between concerted and independent action that distinguishes § 1 of the Sherman Act from 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Section 1 applies only to concerted action that restrains trade. Section 2, by contrast, covers both concerted and independent action, but only if that action monopolizes, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, or threatens actual monopolization, a category that is narrower than restraint of trade. Monopoly power may be equally harmful whether it is the product of joint action or individual action. Congress used this distinction between concerted and independent action to deter anticompetitive conduct and compensate its victims, without chilling vigorous competition through ordinary business operations. The distinction also avoids judicial scrutiny of routine, internal business decisions.

In 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 Congress treats concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior. This is so because unlike independent action, concerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk insofar as it deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands. And because concerted action is discrete and distinct, a limit on such activity leaves untouched a vast amount of business conduct. As a result, there is less risk of deterring a firm's necessary conduct; courts need only examine discrete agreements; and such conduct may be remedied simply through prohibition. Concerted activity is thus judged more sternly than unilateral activity under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. For these reasons, § 1 prohibits any concerted action in restraint of trade or commerce, even if the action does not threaten monopolization. And therefore, an arrangement must embody concerted action in order to be a "contract, combination, or conspiracy" under § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Concerted action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 does not turn simply on whether the parties involved are legally distinct entities. Instead, such formalistic distinctions have been eschewed in favor of a functional consideration of how the parties involved in the alleged anticompetitive conduct actually operate. As a result, instances have repeatedly been found in which members of a legally single entity violated § 1 when the entity was controlled by a group of competitors and served, in essence, as a vehicle for ongoing concerted activity. A court seeks the central substance of the situation, and therefore the court is moved by the identity of the persons who act, rather than the label of their hats.

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

There is not necessarily concerted action for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 simply because more than one legally distinct entity is involved. Although, under a now-defunct doctrine known as the "intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine," cooperation between legally separate entities was once treated as necessarily covered by § 1, a court now embarks on a more functional analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

As an internal agreement to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is designed to police, a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Although a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are "separate" for the purposes of incorporation or formal title, they are controlled by a single center of decisionmaking and they control a single aggregation of economic power. Joint conduct by two such entities does not deprive the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking, and as a result, an agreement between them does not constitute a "contract, combination, or conspiracy" for the purposes of § 1.

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Substance, not form, should determine whether an entity is capable of conspiring under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. This inquiry is sometimes described as asking whether the alleged conspirators are a single entity. That is perhaps a misdescription, however, because the question is not whether the defendant is a legally single entity or has a single name; nor is the question whether the parties involved "seem" like one firm or multiple firms in any metaphysical sense. The key is whether the alleged "contract, combination, or conspiracy" is concerted action--that is, whether it joins together separate decisionmakers. The relevant inquiry, therefore, is whether there is a "contract, combination, or conspiracy" amongst separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, such that the agreement deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking and therefore of diversity of entrepreneurial interests, and thus of actual or potential competition. The central evil addressed by Sherman Act § 1 is the elimination of competition that would otherwise exist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Governance > Directors & Officers > General Overview

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

While the president and a vice president of a firm can (and regularly do) act in combination, their joint action generally is not the sort of "combination" that 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is intended to cover. Such agreements might be described as really unilateral behavior flowing from decisions of a single enterprise. Nor, for this reason, does § 1 cover internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and one of its unincorporated divisions, because a division within a corporate structure pursues the common interests of the whole, and therefore coordination between a corporation and its division does not represent a sudden joining of two independent sources of economic power previously pursuing separate interests. Nor, for the same reasons, is the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary covered. They have a complete unity of interest and thus, with or without a formal "agreement," the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

HN10[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Because the inquiry is one of competitive reality, it is not determinative that two parties to an alleged 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation are legally distinct entities. Nor, however, is it determinative that two legally distinct entities have organized themselves under a single umbrella or into a structured joint venture. The question is whether the agreement joins together independent centers of decisionmaking. If it does, the entities are capable of conspiring under § 1, and a court must decide whether the restraint of trade is an unreasonable and therefore illegal one.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN11[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

An ongoing 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation cannot evade § 1 scrutiny simply by giving the ongoing violation a name and label.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A history of concerted activity does not immunize conduct from 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 scrutiny. Absence of actual competition may simply be a manifestation of the anticompetitive agreement itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The justification for cooperation is not relevant to whether that cooperation is concerted or independent action. A "contract, combination, or conspiracy," 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, that is necessary or useful to a joint venture is still a "contract, combination, or conspiracy" if it deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking. Joint ventures have no immunity from antitrust laws. Any joint venture involves multiple sources of economic power cooperating to produce a product. And for many such ventures, the participation of others is necessary. But that does not mean that necessity of cooperation transforms concerted action into independent action; a nut and a bolt can only operate together, but an agreement between nut and bolt manufacturers is still subject to § 1 analysis. Nor does it mean that once a group of firms agree to produce a joint product, cooperation amongst those firms must be treated as independent conduct. The mere fact that firms operate jointly in some sense does not mean that they are immune.

HN14[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Agreements within a single firm are generally treated as independent action for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 on the presumption that the components of the firm will act to maximize the firm's profits. But in rare cases, that presumption does not hold. Agreements made within a firm can constitute concerted action covered by § 1 when the parties to the agreement act on interests separate from those of the firm itself, and the intrafirm agreements may simply be a formalistic shell for ongoing concerted action.

HN15[] Antitrust, Antitrust Statutes

Competitors cannot simply get around antitrust liability by acting through a third-party intermediary or "joint venture."

HN16[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

When restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all, per se rules of illegality are inapplicable, and instead the restraint must be judged according to the flexible rule of reason. In such instances, the agreement is likely to survive the rule of reason. Joint ventures and other cooperative arrangements are not usually unlawful where the agreement is necessary to market a product at all. And depending upon the concerted activity in question, the rule of reason may not require a detailed analysis; it can sometimes be applied in the twinkling of an eye.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN17[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The true test of legality under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question a court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint is imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Decision

[*947] Licensing activities of league (unincorporated association of separately owned professional football teams) held to constitute concerted action that was (1) not categorically beyond coverage of § 1 of Sherman Act (15 U.S.C.S. § 1), and (2) to be judged under rule of reason.

Summary

Procedural posture: Petitioner former licensee sued respondents, including a professional football league, its teams, and a licensor, alleging antitrust violations under 15 U.S.C.S. §§1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The district court granted summary judgment for respondents on the § 1 claim, and the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari.

Overview: The teams formed the licensor to license their intellectual property. The licensee alleged that the agreements among respondents violated § 1. The district court and the Seventh Circuit found that § 1 did not apply because the league, the teams, and the licensor acted as a single entity with regard to the licensing of intellectual property. The Supreme Court held that the licensing activities constituted concerted action that was not categorically beyond the coverage of § 1, and the legality of that action had to be judged under the rule of reason. The relevant inquiry was whether there was a “contract, combination, or conspiracy” among separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests. If an agreement joined together independent centers of decisionmaking, the entities were capable of conspiring under § 1. The teams competed in the market for intellectual property, and decisions to collectively license their separately owned trademarks deprived the market [948] place of independent centers of decisionmaking. The licensor's decisions constituted concerted action, as the licensor acted as an instrumentality of the teams in making licensing decisions.

Outcome: In a unanimous decision, the Court reversed the Seventh Circuit's judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings.

LEdHN[3][] [3]

The meaning of the term “contract, combination, or conspiracy” under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is informed by the basic distinction in the Sherman Act between concerted and independent action that distinguishes § 1 of the Sherman Act from 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Section 1 applies only to concerted action that restrains trade. Section 2, by contrast, covers both concerted and independent action, but only if that action monopolizes, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, or threatens actual monopolization, a category that is narrower than restraint of trade. Monopoly power may be equally harmful whether it is the product of joint action or individual action. Congress used this distinction between concerted and independent action to deter anticompetitive conduct and compensate its victims, without chilling vigorous competition through ordinary business operations. The distinction also avoids judicial scrutiny of routine, internal business decisions.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §9 > CONCERTED BEHAVIOR -- SHERMAN ACT TREATMENT > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

In 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 Congress treats concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior. This is so because unlike independent action, concerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk insofar as it deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands. And because concerted action is discrete and distinct, a limit on such activity leaves untouched a vast amount of business conduct. As a result, there is less risk of deterring a firm's necessary conduct; courts need only examine discrete agreements; and such conduct may be remedied simply through prohibition. Concerted activity is thus judged more sternly than unilateral activity under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. For these reasons, § 1 prohibits any concerted action in restraint of trade or commerce, even if the action does not threaten monopolization. And therefore, an arrangement must embody concerted action in order to be a “contract, combination, or conspiracy” under § 1.

LEdHN[5][] [5]

Concerted action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 does not turn simply on whether the parties involved are legally distinct entities. Instead, such formalistic distinctions have been eschewed in favor of a functional consideration of how the parties involved in the alleged anticompetitive conduct actually operate. As a result, instances have repeatedly been found in which members of a legally single entity violated § 1 when the entity was controlled by a group of competitors and served, in essence, as a vehicle for ongoing concerted activity. A court seeks the central substance of the situation, and therefore the court is moved by the identity of the persons who act, rather than the label of their hats.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > CONCERTED ACTION -- FUNCTIONAL ANALYSIS > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

There is not necessarily concerted action for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 simply because more than one legally distinct entity is involved. Although, under a now-defunct doctrine known as the “intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine,” cooperation between legally separate entities was once treated as necessarily covered by § 1, a court now embarks on a more functional analysis.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §33.6 > PARENT AND SUBSIDIARY -- AGREEMENT AS NOT COVERED > Headnote:
LEdHN[7][] [7]

As an internal agreement to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is designed to police, a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Although a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are “separate” for the purposes of incorporation or formal title, they are controlled by a single center of decisionmaking and they control a single aggregation of economic power. Joint conduct by two such entities does not deprive the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking, and as a result, an agreement between them does not constitute a “contract, combination, or conspiracy” for the purposes of § 1.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > CONCERTED ACTIVITY -- RELEVANT INQUIRY -- SEPARATE ECONOMIC ACTORS > Headnote:
LEdHN[8][] [8]

Substance, not form, should determine whether an entity is capable of conspiring under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. This inquiry is sometimes described as asking whether the alleged conspirators are a single entity. That is perhaps a misdescription, however, because the question is not whether the defendant is a legally single entity or has a single name; nor is the question whether the parties involved “seem” like one firm or multiple firms in any metaphysical sense. The key is whether the alleged “contract, combination, or conspiracy” is concerted action--that is, whether it joins together separate decisionmakers. The relevant inquiry, therefore, is whether there is a “contract, combination, or conspiracy” amongst separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, such that the agreement deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking and therefore of diversity of entrepreneurial interests, and thus of actual or potential competition. The central evil addressed by Sherman Act § 1 is the elimination of competition that would otherwise exist.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §33.6 > ACTIONS NOT COVERED -- OFFICERS OF FIRM -- CORPORATION AND DIVISION -- PARENT AND SUBSIDIARY > Headnote:
LEdHN[9][] [9]

While the president and a vice president of a firm can (and regularly do) act in combination, their joint action generally is not the sort of “combination” that 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is intended to cover. Such agreements might be described as really unilateral behavior flowing from decisions of a single enterprise. Nor, for this reason, does § 1 cover internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and one of its unincorporated divisions, because a division within a corporate structure pursues the common interests of the whole, and therefore coordination between a corporation and its division does not represent a sudden joining of two independent sources of economic power previously pursuing separate interests. Nor, for the same reasons, is the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary covered. They have a complete unity of interest and thus, with or without a formal “agreement,” the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder.

LEdHN[10][] [10]

Because the inquiry is one of competitive reality, it is not determinative that two parties to an alleged 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation are legally distinct entities. Nor, however, is it determinative that two legally distinct entities have organized themselves under a single umbrella or into a structured joint venture. The question is whether the agreement joins together independent centers of decisionmaking. If it does, the entities are capable of conspiring under § 1, and a court must decide whether the restraint of trade is an unreasonable and therefore illegal one.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > SCRUTINY -- LABEL > Headnote:
LEdHN[11][] [11]

An ongoing 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation cannot evade § 1 scrutiny simply by giving the ongoing violation a name and label.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §14 > HISTORY OF CONCERTED ACTIVITY > Headnote:
LEdHN[12][] [12]

A history of concerted activity does not immunize conduct from 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 scrutiny. Absence of actual competition may simply be a manifestation of the anticompetitive agreement itself.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §12 RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §33.6 > JUSTIFICATION FOR COOPERATION -- JOINT VENTURES > Headnote:
LEdHN[13][] [13]

The justification for cooperation is not relevant to whether that cooperation is concerted or independent action. A "contract, combination, or conspiracy," 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, that is necessary or useful to a joint venture is still a "contract, combination, or conspiracy" if it deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking. Joint ventures have no immunity from antitrust laws. Any joint venture involves multiple sources of economic power cooperating to produce a product. And for many such ventures, the participation of others is necessary. But that does not mean that necessity of cooperation transforms concerted action into independent action; a nut and a bolt can only operate together, but an agreement between nut and bolt manufacturers is still subject to § 1 analysis. Nor does it mean that once a group of firms agree to produce a joint product, cooperation amongst those firms must be treated as independent conduct. The mere fact that firms operate jointly in some sense does not mean that they are immune.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > AGREEMENTS WITHIN SINGLE FIRM -- TRADE RESTRAINT -- PRESUMPTION > Headnote:
LEdHN[14][] [14]

Agreements within a single firm are generally treated as independent action for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 on the presumption that the components of the firm will act to maximize the firm's profits. But in rare cases, that presumption does not hold. Agreements made within a firm can constitute concerted action covered by § 1 when the parties to the agreement act on interests separate from those of the firm itself, and the intrafirm agreements may simply be a formalistic shell for ongoing concerted action.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §33.6 > LIABILITY -- INTERMEDIARY -- JOINT VENTURE > Headnote:

Competitors cannot simply get around antitrust liability by acting through a third-party intermediary or "joint venture."

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §16 RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §33.6 > RULE OF REASON -- WHEN APPLICABLE -- JOINT VENTURES > Headnote:
LEdHN[16][] [16]

When restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all, per se rules of illegality are inapplicable, and instead the restraint must be judged according to the flexible rule of reason. In such instances, the agreement is likely to survive the rule of reason. Joint ventures and other cooperative arrangements are not usually unlawful where the agreement is necessary to market a product at all. And depending upon the concerted activity in question, the rule of reason may not require a detailed analysis; it can sometimes be applied in the twinkling of an eye.

[*952]

LEdHN[17][] [17]

The true test of legality under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question a court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint is imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy, the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts. This is not because a good intention will save an otherwise objectionable regulation or the reverse; but because knowledge of intent may help the court to interpret facts and to predict consequences.

Syllabus

[*183] [1674] Respondent National Football League (NFL) is an unincorporated association of 32 separately owned professional football teams, also respondents here. The teams, each of which owns its own name, colors, logo, trademarks, and related intellectual property, formed respondent National Football League Properties (NFLP) to develop, license, and market that property. At first, NFLP granted nonexclusive licenses to petitioner and other vendors to manufacture and sell team-labeled apparel. In December 2000, however, the teams authorized NFLP to grant exclusive licenses. NFLP granted an exclusive license to respondent Reebok International Ltd. [953] to produce and sell trademarked headwear for all 32 teams. When petitioner's license was not renewed, it filed this action alleging that the agreements between respondents violated the Sherman Act, § 1 of which makes "[e]very contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade" illegal. Respondents answered that they were incapable of conspiring within § 1's meaning because the NFL and its teams are, in antitrust law jargon, [*2] a single entity with respect to the conduct challenged. The District Court granted respondents summary judgment, and the Seventh Circuit affirmed.

Held: The alleged conduct related to licensing of intellectual property constitutes concerted action that is not categorically beyond § 1's coverage. Pp. 189-204, 176 L. Ed. 2d, at 956-966.

(a) The meaning of "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" in § 1 of the Sherman Act is informed by the Act's " 'basic distinction between concerted and independent action.' Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. Section 1 "treat[s] concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior," id., at 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, because, unlike independent action, "[c]oncerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk" insofar as it "deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands," id., at 768-769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. And because concerted action is discrete and distinct, a limit on such activity leaves untouched a vast amount of business conduct. That creates less risk of deterring a firm's necessary [*184] conduct and leaves courts to examine only discrete agreements. An arrangement must therefore embody concerted action in order [*3] to be a "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" under § 1. Pp. 189-191, 176 L. Ed. 2d, at 956-958.

(b) In determining whether there is concerted action under § 1, the Court has eschewed formalistic distinctions, such as whether the alleged conspirators are legally distinct entities, in favor of a functional consideration of how they actually operate. The Court has repeatedly found instances in which members of a legally single entity violated § 1 when the entity was controlled by a group of competitors and served, in essence, as a vehicle for ongoing concerted activity. See, e.g., United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 352-356, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238. Conversely, the Court has found that although the entities may be "separate" for purposes of incorporation or formal title, if they are controlled by a single center of decisionmaking and they control a single aggregation of economic power, an agreement between them does not constitute a "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy." Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. Pp. 191-194, 176 L. Ed. 2d, at 958-960.

(c) The relevant inquiry is therefore one of substance, not form, which does not turn on whether the alleged parties to contract, combination, or conspiracy are part of a legally single entity or seem like one firm [*4] or multiple firms in any metaphysical sense. The inquiry is whether the agreement in question joins together "separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests," Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, such that it "deprives the marketplace of independent centers [954] of decisionmaking," id., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, and therefore of diversity of entrepreneurial interests and thus of actual or potential competition. If it does, then there is concerted action covered by § 1, and the court must decide whether the restraint of trade is unreasonable and therefore illegal. Pp. 195-196, 176 L. Ed. 2d, at 960-961.

(d) The NFL teams do not possess either the unitary decisionmaking quality or the single aggregation of economic power characteristic of independent action. Each of them is a substantial, independently owned, independently managed business, whose "general corporate actions are guided or determined" by "separate corporate consciousnesses," and whose "objectives are" not "common." Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. They compete with one another, [1675] not only on the playing field, but to attract fans, for gate receipts, and for contracts with managerial and playing personnel. See, e.g., Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 249, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521. Directly [*5] relevant here, the teams are potentially competing suppliers in the market for intellectual property. When teams license such property, they are not pursuing the "common interests of the whole" league, but, instead, the interests of each "corporation itself." Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 770, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. It is not dispositive, as respondents argue, that, by forming NFLP, they have formed a single entity, [*185] akin to a merger, and market their NFL brands through a single outlet. Although the NFL respondents may be similar in some sense to a single enterprise, they are not similar in the relevant functional sense. While teams have common interests such as promoting the NFL brand, they are still separate, profit-maximizing entities, and their interests in licensing team trademarks are not necessarily aligned. Nor does it matter that the teams may find the alleged cooperation necessary to compete against other forms of entertainment. Although decisions made by NFLP are not as easily classified as concerted activity, NFLP's decisions about licensing the teams' separately owned intellectual property are concerted activity and thus covered by § 1 for the same reason that decisions made directly by the 32 [*6] teams are covered by § 1. In making the relevant licensing decisions, NFLP is "an instrumentality" of the teams. Sealy, 388 U.S., at 352-354, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238. Pp. 196-202, 176 L. Ed. 2d, at 961-965.

(e) Football teams that need to cooperate are not trapped by antitrust law. The fact that the NFL teams share an interest in making the entire league successful and profitable, and that they must cooperate to produce games, provides a perfectly sensible justification for making a host of collective decisions. Because some of these restraints on competition are necessary to produce the NFL's product, the Rule of Reason generally should apply, and teams' cooperation is likely to be permissible. And depending upon the activity in question, the Rule of Reason can at times be applied without detailed analysis. But the activity at issue in this case is still concerted activity covered for § 1 purposes. Pp. 202-204, 176 L. Ed. 2d, at 965-966.

[2206] Justice Stevens delivered the opinion of the Court.

HN1[] LEdHN[1][] [1] "Every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade" is made illegal by § 1 of the Sherman Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, [*7] 15 U.S.C. § 1. The question whether an arrangement is a contract, combination, or conspiracy is different from and antecedent to the question whether it unreasonably restrains trade. This case raises that antecedent question about the business of the 32 teams in the National Football League (NFL) and a corporate entity that they formed to manage their intellectual property. We conclude that the NFL's licensing activities [2207] constitute concerted action that is not categorically beyond the coverage of § 1. The legality of that concerted action must be judged under the Rule of Reason.

Originally organized in 1920, the NFL is an unincorporated association that now includes 32 separately owned professional football teams.[1] Each team has its own name, colors, and logo, and owns related intellectual property. Like each of the other teams in the league, the New Orleans Saints and the Indianapolis Colts, for example, have their own distinctive names, colors, and marks that are well known to millions of sports fans.

Prior to 1963, the teams made their own arrangements for licensing their intellectual property and marketing trademarked items such as caps and jerseys. In 1963, the teams formed National Football League Properties (NFLP) to develop, license, and market their intellectual property. Most, but not all, of the substantial revenues generated by NFLP have either been given to charity or shared equally among the teams. However, the teams are able to and have at times sought to withdraw from this arrangement.

[1] The NFL was founded in Canton, Ohio, as the "American Professional Football Association." United States Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1343 (CA2 1988). [*8] It took its current name in 1922. Ibid. Forty-one franchises failed in the first 41 years of the league's existence. Ibid.

Between 1963 and 2000, NFLP granted nonexclusive licenses to a number of vendors, permitting them to manufacture and sell apparel [1676] bearing team insignias. Petitioner, American Needle, Inc., was one of those licensees. In December 2000, the teams voted to authorize NFLP to grant exclusive licenses, and NFLP granted Reebok International Ltd. an exclusive 10-year license to manufacture and sell trademarked headwear for all 32 teams. It thereafter declined to renew American Needle's nonexclusive license.

American Needle filed this action in the Northern District of [*9] Illinois, alleging that the agreements between the NFL, its teams, NFLP, and Reebok violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. In their answer to the complaint, the defendants averred [*188] that the teams, NFL, and NFLP were incapable of conspiring within the meaning of § 1 "because they are a single economic enterprise, at least with respect to the conduct challenged." App. 99. After limited discovery, the District Court granted summary judgment on the question "whether, with regard to the facet of their operations [956] respecting exploitation of intellectual property rights, the NFL and its 32 teams are, in the jargon of antitrust law, acting as a single entity." American Needle, Inc. v. New Orleans La. Saints, 496 F. Supp. 2d 941, 943 (2007). The court concluded "that in that facet of their operations they have so integrated their operations that they should be deemed a single entity rather than joint ventures cooperating for a common purpose." Ibid.

The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed. The panel observed that "in some contexts, a league seems more aptly described as a single entity immune from antitrust scrutiny, while in others a league appears to be a joint venture between [*10] independently owned teams that is subject to review under § 1." 538 F.3d 736, 741 (2008). Relying on Circuit precedent, the court limited its inquiry to the particular conduct at issue, licensing of teams' intellectual property. The panel agreed with petitioner that "when making a single-entity determination, courts must examine whether the conduct in question [2208] deprives the marketplace of the independent sources of economic control that competition assumes." Id., at 742. The court, however, discounted the significance of potential competition among the teams regarding the use of their intellectual property because the teams "can function only as one source of economic power when collectively producing NFL football." Id., at 743. The court noted that football itself can only be carried out jointly. See ibid. ("Asserting that a single football team could produce a football game . . . is a Zen riddle: Who wins when a football team plays itself "). Moreover, "NFL teams share a vital economic interest in collectively promoting [*189] NFL football . . . [to] compet[e] with other forms of entertainment." Ibid. "It thus follows," the court found, "that only one source of economic power controls the [*11] promotion of NFL football," and "it makes little sense to assert that each individual team has the authority, if not the responsibility, to promote the jointly produced NFL football." Ibid. Recognizing that NFL teams have "license[d] their intellectual property collectively" since 1963, the court held that § 1 did not apply. Id., at 744.

II

As the case comes to us, we have only a narrow issue to decide: whether the NFL respondents are capable of engaging in a "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" as defined by § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, or, as we have sometimes phrased it, whether the alleged activity by the NFL respondents "must be viewed as that of a single enterprise for purposes of § 1." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984).

Taken literally, the applicability of § 1 to "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" could be understood to cover every conceivable agreement, whether it be a group of competing firms fixing prices or a single firm's chief executive telling her subordinate how to price their company's product. But HN2[] LEdHN[2][] [2] even though, "read literally," § 1 would address "the entire [*12] body of private contract," that is not what the statute means. National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 688, 98 S. [957] Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978); see also Texaco Inc. v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006) ("This Court has not taken a literal approach to this language"); cf. Board of Trade of Chicago v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918) (reasoning that the term "restraint of trade" in § 1 cannot possibly refer to any restraint on competition because "[e]very agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence"). Not every instance [*190] of cooperation between two people is a potential [1677] "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

HN3[] LEdHN[3][] [3] The meaning of the term "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" is informed by the " 'basic distinction' " in the Sherman Act " 'between concerted and independent action' " that distinguishes § 1 of the Sherman Act from § 2. Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). Section 1 applies only to concerted action that restrains trade. Section 2, by contrast, covers both concerted and independent action, but [*13] only if that action "monopolize[s]," 15 U.S.C. § 2, or "threatens actual monopolization," Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, a category that is narrower than restraint of trade. [2209] Monopoly power may be equally harmful whether it is the product of joint action or individual action.

Congress used this distinction between concerted and independent action to deter anticompetitive conduct and compensate its victims, without chilling vigorous competition through ordinary business operations. The distinction also avoids judicial scrutiny of routine, internal business decisions.

Thus, HN4[] LEdHN[4][] [4] in § 1 Congress "treated concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior." Id., at 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. This is so because unlike independent action, "[c]oncerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk" insofar as it "deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands." Id., at 768-769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. And because concerted action is discrete and distinct, a limit on such activity leaves untouched a vast amount of business conduct. As a result, there is less risk of deterring a firm's necessary conduct; courts need only examine discrete agreements; and such conduct may be [*14] remedied simply through prohibition.[2] See Areeda & Hovenkamp [*191] P1464c, at 206. Concerted activity is thus "judged more sternly than unilateral activity under [958] § 2," Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. For these reasons, § 1 prohibits any concerted action "in restraint of trade or commerce," even if the action does not "threate[n] monopolization," ibid. And therefore, an arrangement must embody concerted action in order to be a "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" under § 1.

III

We have long held that HN5[] LEdHN[5][] [5] concerted action under § 1 does not turn simply on whether the parties involved are legally distinct entities. Instead, we have eschewed such formalistic distinctions in favor of a functional consideration of how the parties involved in the alleged anticompetitive conduct actually operate.

As a result, we have repeatedly found instances in which members of a legally single entity violated § 1 when the entity was controlled by a group of competitors and served, in essence, as a vehicle for ongoing concerted activity. In United States v. Sealy, Inc., 388 U.S. 350, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238 (1967), for example, a group of mattress manufacturers operated and controlled Sealy, Inc., a company that licensed the Sealy trademark to the manufacturers, and dictated that each operate within a specific geographic area. Id., at 352-353, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238. The Government alleged that the licensees and Sealy were conspiring in violation of § 1, and we [*16] agreed. Id., at 352-354, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238. We explained that "[w]e seek the central substance of the situation" and [*192] therefore "we are moved by the identity of the persons who act, rather than the label [2210] of their hats." Id., at 353, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238. We thus held that Sealy was not a "separate entity, but . . . an instrumentality of the individual manufacturers." Id., at 356, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238. In similar circumstances, we have found other formally distinct business organizations covered by § 1. See, e.g., Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985); National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (NCAA);United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 609, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 65 S. Ct. 1416, 89 L. Ed. 2013 (1945); id., [1678] at 26, 65 S. Ct. 1416, 89 L. Ed. 2013 (Frankfurter, J., concurring); United States v. Terminal R. Ass'n, 224 U.S. 383, 32 S. Ct. 507, 56 L. Ed. 810 (1912); see also Rock, Corporate Law Through an Antitrust Lens, 92 Colum. L. Rev. 497, 506-510 (1992) (discussing cases). We have similarly looked past the form of a legally "single entity" when competitors were part of professional organization[3] or trade groups.[4]

[*959] Conversely, HN6[] LEdHN[6][] [6] there is not necessarily concerted action simply because more than one legally distinct entity is involved. Although, under a now-defunct doctrine known as the "intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine," we once treated cooperation between legally separate entities as necessarily covered by § 1, we now embark on a more functional analysis.

The roots of this functional analysis can be found in the very decision that established the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine. In United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 67 S. Ct. 1560, 91 L. Ed. 2010 (1947), we observed that "corporate interrelationships . . . [*193] are not determinative of the applicability of the Sherman Act" because the Act "is aimed at substance rather than form." Id., at 227, 67 S. Ct. 1560, 91 L. Ed. 2010. We nonetheless held that cooperation between [*18] legally separate entities was necessarily covered by § 1 because an unreasonable restraint of trade "may result as readily from a conspiracy among those who are affiliated or integrated under common ownership as from a conspiracy among those who are otherwise independent." Ibid.; see also Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 215, 71 S. Ct. 259, 95 L. Ed. 219 (1951).

The decline of the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine began in Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. 19, 82 S. Ct. 1130, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305 (1962). In that case, several agricultural cooperatives that were owned by the same farmers were sued for violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Id., at 24-25, 82 S. Ct. 1130, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305. Applying a specific immunity provision for agricultural cooperatives, we held that the three cooperatives were "in practical effect" one "organization," even though the controlling farmers "have formally organized themselves into three separate legal entities." Id., at 29, [2211] 82 S. Ct. 1130, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305. "To hold otherwise," we explained, "would be to impose grave legal consequences upon organizational distinctions that are of de minimis meaning and effect" insofar as "use of separate corporations had [no] economic significance." Ibid.

Next, in United States v. Citizens & Southern Nat. Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1975), [*19] a large bank, Citizens and Southern (C&S), formed a holding company that operated de facto suburban branch banks in the Atlanta area through ownership of the maximum amount of stock in each local branch that was allowed by law, "ownership of much of the remaining stock by parties friendly to C, use by the suburban banks of the C logogram and all of C's banking services, and close C oversight of the operation and governance of the suburban banks." Id., at 89, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 (footnote omitted). The Government challenged the cooperation between the banks. In our analysis, we observed that " 'corporate interrelationships . . . [*194] are not determinative,' id., at 116, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41, "looked to economic substance," and observed that "because the sponsored banks were not set up to be competitors, § 1 did not compel them to compete." Areeda & Hovenkamp ¶ 1463g, at 200-201; see also Citizens & Southern, 422 U.S., at 119-120, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41; Areeda, Intraenterprise Conspiracy in Decline, 97 Harv. L. Rev. 451, 461 (1983).

We finally reexamined the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube [960] Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984), and concluded that it was inconsistent with the " 'basic distinction between concerted and [*20] independent action.' Id., at 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. Considering it "perfectly plain that HN7[] LEdHN[7][] [7] an internal agreement to implement a single, unitary firm's policies does not raise the antitrust dangers that § 1 was designed to police," id., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, we held that a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary "are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act," id., at 777, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. We explained that although a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary are "separate" for the purposes of incorporation or formal title, they are controlled by a single center of decisionmaking and they control a single aggregation of economic power. Joint conduct [1679] by two such entities does not "depriv[e] the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking," id., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, and as a result, an agreement between them does not constitute a "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" for the purposes of § 1.[5]

As Copperweld exemplifies, HN8[] LEdHN[8][] [8] "substance, not form, should determine whether a[n] . . . entity is capable of conspiring under § 1." 467 U.S., at 773, n. 21, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. This inquiry is sometimes described as asking whether the alleged conspirators are a single entity. That is perhaps a misdescription, however, because the question is not whether the defendant is a legally single entity or has a single name; nor is the question whether the [2212] parties involved "seem" like one firm or multiple firms in any metaphysical sense. The key is whether the alleged "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" is concerted action--that is, whether it joins together separate decisionmakers. The relevant inquiry, therefore, is whether there is a "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" amongst "separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests," id., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, such that the agreement "deprives the marketplace of independent centers [*22] of decisionmaking," ibid., and therefore of "diversity of entrepreneurial interests," Fraser v. Major League Soccer, L. L. C., 284 F.3d 47, 57 (CA1 2002) (Boudin, C. J.), and thus of actual or potential competition, see Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 322 F.3d 1133, 1148-1149 (CA9 2003) (Kozinski, J.); Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, 214-215, 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142 (CADC 1986) (Bork, J.); see also Areeda & Hovenkamp P1462b, at 193-194 (noting that the "central evil addressed by Sherman Act § 1 is the "elimin[ation of] competition that would otherwise exist").

Thus, HN9[] LEdHN[9][] [9] while the president and a vice president of a firm could (and regularly do) act in combination, their joint action generally is not the sort of "combination" that § 1 is intended to [961] cover. Such agreements might be described as "really unilateral behavior flowing from decisions of a single enterprise." Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 767, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. Nor, for this reason, does § 1 cover "internally coordinated conduct of a corporation and one of its unincorporated divisions," id., at 770, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, because [*196] "[a] division within a corporate structure pursues the common interests of the whole," ibid., and therefore "coordination between [*23] a corporation and its division does not represent a sudden joining of two independent sources of economic power previously pursuing separate interests," id., at 770-771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. Nor, for the same reasons, is "the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary" covered. See id., at 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. They "have a complete unity of interest" and thus "[w]ith or without a formal 'agreement,' the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder." Ibid.

[5] This focus on "substance, not form," Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 773, n. 21, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, can also be seen in our cases about whether a company and its agent are capable of conspiring under § 1. See, e.g., Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of Cal., 377 U.S. 13, 20-21, 84 S. Ct. 1051, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1964); see also E. Elhauge & D. Geradin, [*21] Global Antitrust Law and Economics 787-788, and n. 7 (2007) (hereinafter Elhauge & Geradin) (explaining the functional difference between Simpson and United States v. General Elec. Co., 272 U.S. 476, 47 S. Ct. 192, 71 L. Ed. 362 (1926), in which we treated a similar agreement as beyond the reach of § 1).

HN10[] LEdHN[10][] [10] Because the inquiry is one of competitive reality, it is not determinative that two parties to an alleged § 1 violation are legally distinct entities. Nor, however, is it determinative that two legally distinct entities have organized themselves under a single umbrella or into a structured joint venture. The question is whether the agreement joins together "independent centers of decisionmaking." Id., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. If it does, the entities are capable of conspiring under § 1, and the court must decide whether the restraint of trade is an unreasonable and therefore illegal one.

The NFL teams do not possess either the unitary decisionmaking quality or the single aggregation of economic power characteristic of independent action. Each [*24] of the teams is a substantial, independently owned, and independently managed business. "[T]heir general corporate actions are guided or determined" by "separate corporate consciousnesses," and "[t]heir objectives are" not "common." Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628; see also North American Soccer League v. NFL, 670 F.2d 1249, 1252 (CA2 1982) (discussing ways that "the financial performance of each team, while related to that of the others, does not . . . necessarily rise and fall with that of the others"). The teams compete with one another, not only on the playing field, but to attract fans, for gate [*197] receipts, and for contracts with managerial [2213] and playing personnel. See Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 249, [1680] 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996); Sullivan v. NFL, 34 F.3d 1091, 1098 (CA1 1994); Mid-South Grizzlies v. NFL, 720 F.2d 772, 787 (CA3 1983); cf. NCAA, 468 U.S., at 99, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70.

Directly relevant to this case, the teams compete in the market for intellectual property. To a firm making hats, the Saints and the Colts are two potentially competing suppliers of valuable trademarks. When each NFL team licenses its intellectual property, it is not pursuing the "common interests of the whole" league but is instead pursuing [*25] interests of each "corporation itself," Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 770, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628; teams are acting as "separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests," and each team therefore is a potential "independent cente[r] of decisionmaking," id., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. Decisions by NFL teams to license [962] their separately owned trademarks collectively and to only one vendor are decisions that "depriv[e] the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking," ibid., and therefore of actual or potential competition. See NCAA, 468 U.S., at 109, n. 39, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (observing a possible § 1 violation if two separately owned companies sold their separate products through a "single selling agent"); cf. Areeda & Hovenkamp P1478a, at 318 ("Obviously, the most significant competitive threats arise when joint venture participants are actual or potential competitors").

In defense, respondents argue that by forming NFLP, they have formed a single entity, akin to a merger, and market their NFL brands through a single outlet. But it is not dispositive that the teams have organized and own a legally separate entity that centralizes the management of their intellectual property. HN11[] LEdHN[11][] [11] An ongoing § 1 violation cannot evade § 1 scrutiny simply [*26] by giving the ongoing violation a name and label. "Perhaps every agreement and combination in restraint of trade could be so labeled." Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 598, 71 S. Ct. 971, 95 L. Ed. 1199 (1951).

[*198] The NFL respondents may be similar in some sense to a single enterprise that owns several pieces of intellectual property and licenses them jointly, but they are not similar in the relevant functional sense. Although NFL teams have common interests such as promoting the NFL brand, they are still separate, profit-maximizing entities, and their interests in licensing team trademarks are not necessarily aligned. See generally Hovenkamp, Exclusive Joint Ventures and Antitrust Policy, 1995 Colum. Bus. L. Rev. 1, 52-61 (1995); Shishido, Conflicts of Interest and Fiduciary Duties in the Operation of a Joint Venture, 39 Hastings L. J. 63, 69-81 (1987). Common interests in the NFL brand "partially unit[e] the economic interests of the parent firms," Broadley, Joint Ventures and Antitrust Policy, 95 Harv. L. Rev. 1521, 1526 (1982) (emphasis added), but the teams still have distinct, potentially competing interests.

It may be, as respondents argue, that NFLP "has served as the 'single driver' " [*27] of the teams' "promotional vehicle, 'pursu[ing] the common interests of the whole.' " Brief for NFL Respondents 28 (quoting Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 770-771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628; brackets in original). But illegal restraints often are in the common interests of the parties to the restraint, at the expense of those who are not parties. It is true, as respondents describe, that they have for some time marketed their trademarks jointly. But HN12[] LEdHN[12][] [12] a history of concerted activity does not immunize conduct from § 1 scrutiny. "Absence of actual competition may simply be a manifestation [2214] of the anticompetitive agreement itself." Freeman, 322 F.3d, at 1149.

Respondents argue that nonetheless, as the Court of Appeals held, they constitute a single entity because without their cooperation, there would be no NFL football. It is true that "the clubs that make up a professional sports league are not completely independent economic competitors, as they depend upon a degree of cooperation for economic survival." Brown, 518 U.S., at 248, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 l. Ed. 2d 521. But the Court of Appeals' reasoning is unpersuasive.

HN13[] LEdHN[13][] [13] [*199] The justification for cooperation is not relevant to whether that cooperation [963] is concerted or independent action.[6] A "contract, combination [*28] . . . , or conspiracy," § 1, that is necessary or useful to a joint venture is still a "contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy" if it "deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking," Copperweld, 467 U.S., at 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628. See NCAA, 468 U.S., at 113, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 ("[J]oint ventures [1681] have no immunity from antitrust laws"). Any joint venture involves multiple sources of economic power cooperating to produce a product. And for many such ventures, the participation of others is necessary. But that does not mean that necessity of cooperation transforms concerted action into independent action; a nut and a bolt can only operate together, but an agreement between nut and bolt manufacturers is still subject to § 1 analysis. Nor does it mean that once a group of firms agree to produce a joint product, cooperation amongst those firms must be treated as independent conduct. The mere fact that the teams operate jointly in some sense does not mean that they are immune.[7]

[*200] The question whether [*30] NFLP decisions can constitute concerted activity covered by § 1 is closer than whether decisions made directly by the 32 teams are covered by § 1. This is so both because NFLP is a separate corporation with its own management and because the record indicates that most of the revenues generated by NFLP are shared by the teams on an equal basis. Nevertheless we think it clear that for the same reasons the 32 teams' conduct is covered by § 1, NFLP's actions also are subject to § 1, at least with regards to its marketing of property owned by the separate teams. NFLP's licensing decisions are made by the 32 potential competitors, and each of them actually owns its share of the jointly managed assets. Cf. Sealy, 388 U.S., at 352-354, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238. Apart from their agreement to cooperate in exploiting [2215] those assets, including their decisions as the NFLP, there would be nothing to prevent each of the teams from making its own market decisions relating to purchases of apparel and headwear, to the sale of such items, and to the granting of licenses to use its trademarks.

[6] As discussed infra, necessity of cooperation is a factor relevant to whether the agreement is subject to the Rule of Reason. See NCAA, 468 U.S. 85, 101, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (holding that NCAA restrictions on televising college football games are subject [*29] to Rule of Reason analysis for the "critical" reason that "horizontal restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all").

[7] In any event, it simply is not apparent that the alleged conduct was necessary at all. Although two teams are needed to play a football game, not all aspects of elaborate interleague cooperation are necessary to produce a game. Moreover, even if leaguewide agreements are necessary to produce football, it does not follow that concerted activity in marketing intellectual property is necessary to produce football.

The Court of Appeals carved out a zone of antitrust immunity for conduct arguably related to league operations by reasoning that coordinated team trademark sales are necessary to produce "NFL football," a single NFL brand that competes against other forms of entertainment. But defining the product as "NFL football" puts the cart before the horse: Of course the NFL produces NFL football; but that does not mean that cooperation amongst NFL teams is immune from § 1 scrutiny. Members of any cartel could insist that their cooperation is necessary to produce the "cartel product" and compete with other products.

HN14[] LEdHN[14][] [14] We generally treat agreements within a single firm as independent action on the presumption that the components of the firm will act to [964] maximize [*31] the firm's profits. But in rare cases, that presumption does not hold. Agreements made within a firm can constitute concerted action covered by § 1 when the parties to the agreement act on interests separate from those of the firm itself,[8] and the intrafirm agreements may simply be a formalistic shell for ongoing concerted action. [*201] See, e.g., Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S., at 609, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515; Sealy, 388 U.S., at 352-354, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238.

For that reason, decisions by NFLP regarding the teams' separately owned intellectual property constitute concerted action. Thirty-two teams operating independently through the vehicle of NFLP are not like the components of a single firm that act to maximize the [*32] firm's profits. The teams remain separately controlled, potential competitors with economic interests that are distinct from NFLP's financial well-being. See generally Hovenkamp, 1995 Colum. Bus. L. Rev., at 52-61. Unlike typical decisions by corporate shareholders, NFLP licensing decisions effectively require the assent of more than a mere majority of shareholders. And each team's decision reflects not only an interest in NFLP's profits but also an interest in the team's individual profits. See generally Shusido*, 39 Hastings L. J., at 69-71*. The 32 teams capture individual economic benefits separate and apart from NFLP profits as a result of the decisions they make for NFLP. NFLP's decisions thus affect each team's profits from licensing its own intellectual property. “Although the business interests of” the teams “will often coincide with those of ” NFLP “as an entity in itself, that commonality of interest exists in every cartel.” Los Angeles Memorial [1682] Coliseum Comm'n v. NFL, 726 F.2d 1381, 1389 (CA9 1984) (emphasis added). In making the relevant licensing decisions, NFLP is therefore “an instrumentality” of the teams. Sealy, 388 U.S., at 352-354, 87 S. Ct. 1847, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1238; see also Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S., at 609, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515.

If [*33] the fact that potential competitors shared in profits or losses from a venture meant that the venture was immune from § 1, then any cartel “could evade the antitrust laws simply by creating a 'joint venture' to serve as the exclusive seller of their competing products.” Major League Baseball Properties, Inc. v. Salvino, Inc., 542 F.3d 290, 335 (CA2 2008) (Sotomayor, J., concurring in judgment). “So long as no agreement,” other than one made by the cartelists sitting [*202] on the board of the joint venture, “explicitly listed the prices to be charged, the companies could act as monopolies through the 'joint venture.' ” Ibid. (Indeed, a joint venture with a single management structure is generally a better way to operate a cartel because it decreases the risks of a party to an illegal agreement defecting from that agreement). However, HN15[] LEdHN[15][] [15] competitors “cannot [2216] simply get around” antitrust liability by acting “through a [965] third-party intermediary or 'joint venture'.” Id., at 336.[9]

[9] For the purposes of resolving this case, there is no need to pass upon the Government's position that entities are incapable of conspiring under § 1 if they “have effectively merged the relevant aspect of their operations, [*34] thereby eliminating actual and potential competition . . . in that operational sphere” and “the challenged restraint [does] not significantly affect actual or potential competition . . . outside their merged operations.” Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 17. The Government urges that the choices “to offer only a blanket license” and “to have only a single headwear licensee” might not constitute concerted action under its test. Id., at 32. However, because the teams still own their own trademarks and are free to market those trademarks as they see fit, even those two choices were agreements amongst potential competitors and would constitute concerted action under the Government's own standard. At any point, the teams could decide to license their own trademarks. It is significant, moreover, that the teams here control NFLP. The two choices that the Government might treat as independent action, although nominally made by NFLP, are for all functional purposes choices made by the 32 entities with potentially competing interests.

Football teams that need to cooperate are not trapped by antitrust law. "[T]he special characteristics of this industry may provide a justification" for [*35] many kinds of agreements. Brown, 518 U.S., at 252, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (Stevens, J., dissenting). The fact that NFL teams share an interest in making the entire league successful and profitable, and that they must cooperate in the production and scheduling of games, provides a perfectly sensible justification for making a host of collective decisions. But the conduct at issue in this case is still concerted [*203] activity under the Sherman Act that is subject to § 1 analysis.

HN16[] LEdHN[16][] [16] When "restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all," per se rules of illegality are inapplicable, and instead the restraint must be judged according to the flexible Rule of Reason.[10] NCAA, 468 U.S., at 101, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70; see id., at 117 ("Our decision not to apply a per se rule to this case rests in large part on our recognition that a certain degree of cooperation is necessary if the type of competition that petitioner and its member institutions seek to market is to be preserved"); see also Dagher, 547 U.S., at 6, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1. In such instances, the agreement is likely to survive the Rule of Reason. See Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 23, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979) ("Joint ventures and other cooperative arrangements [*36] are also not usually unlawful. . . where the agreement . . . is necessary to market the product at all"). And depending upon the concerted activity [966] in question, [2217] the Rule of Reason may not require a detailed analysis; it "can sometimes be applied in the twinkling of an eye." NCAA, 468 U.S., at 110, n. 39, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70.

[*204] Other features of the NFL may also save agreements amongst the teams. We have recognized, [1683] for example, "that the interest in maintaining a competitive balance" among "athletic teams is legitimate and important," id. at 117, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70. While that same interest applies to the teams in the NFL, it does not justify treating them as a single entity for § 1 purposes when it comes to the marketing of the teams' individually owned intellectual property. It is, however, unquestionably an interest that may well justify a variety of collective decisions made by the teams. What role it properly plays in applying the Rule of Reason to the allegations in this case is a matter to be considered on remand.

Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DEFERRING IN PART RULING ON DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS;

DISMISSING FIRST AND SECOND COUNTS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND; CONTINUING CASE MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE

Before [*2] the Court are two motions: (1) defendant Catholic Healthcare West dba Mercy Hospital's ("Mercy Hospital") Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), filed November 19, 2009; and (2) defendant Golden Empire Management Care, A Medical Group, Inc. and defendant Managed Care Systems, LP's (collectively, "GEMCare") Motion to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), filed November 19, 2009 and amended by a Notice of Errata also filed on November 19, 2009. Plaintiff Colonial Medical Group ("Colonial") has filed a single opposition, to which Mercy Hospital and GEMCare have separately replied. Having read and considered the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motions, the Court hereby rules as follows.

BACKGROUND

In its First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), Colonial alleges that it is "engaged in the business of providing medical services to individuals who are inmates in prisons or correctional institutions located in Central California, consisting of the counties of Fresno, Kern, Kings, Madera, Monterey, and San Luis Obispo." (See FAC P 4.) Colonial alleges that in such geographic area, there exists a "product [*3] market" it describes as "the provision of medical services to prison inmates at secure or guarded hospital facilities." (See FAC P 9.) According to Colonial, "secure" hospital facilities are "those which are locked down so that there is no public ingress or egress," while "guarded" hospital facilities are those with "normally conventional hospital rooms which are, when occupied by an inmate, under armed guard at the door and sometimes in the room as well and protected by barred and/or locked windows." (See id.)

Colonial alleges that two of its "competitors" in the above-described product market are GEMCare and Premier Physicians Alliance Group ("PPAG"). (See FAC P 10.) Colonial also alleges that both Colonial and GEMCare have a "non-exclusive contract" with the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation ("CDCR") to provide medical services to California state inmates. (See FAC PP 11, 16.) [1] Colonial further alleges that Colonial, GEMCare, and PPAG have been "unsuccessful in securing authority to care for federal inmates" in federal prisons located in California City and Taft, each of which is operated by a private corporation, and that the "relatively few inmates at those [*4] [federal] institutions are cared for by physicians in those communities." (See FAC P 12.) [2]

Colonial alleges that Mercy Hospital, located in Bakersfield, California, "has a 29 bed guarded unit and other guarded facilities, which other hospitals in the area do not" (see FAC P 11), and that Mercy Hospital has a contract with the CDCR "to provide hospital services to [the] CDCR's inmates" (see FAC P 6). According to Colonial, the contract between Mercy Hospital and the CDCR requires that "the guarded facilities of defendant Mercy Hospital be devoted exclusively to state prison inmates under the control of [the] CDCR." (See FAC P 11.) Colonial also alleges that at the time Colonial entered into its contract with the CDCR, it was "understood that Mercy Hospital [*5] was the only hospital that Colonial would use for CDCR inmates." (See id.) [3]

Colonial further alleges that when the CDCR determines an inmate needs medical care at a hospital and further determines that Colonial should provide the medical care, the CDCR "customarily" so advises Colonial and then transports the inmate to a facility which "in most instances" is Mercy Hospital. (See FAC P 12.) When the CDCR

[1] Colonial does not state whether PPAG has such a "non-exclusive contract," or any contract, with the CDCR, but does allege that PPAG "services a small number of inmates at the San Joaquin Community Hospital in Bakersfield." (See FAC P 10.)

[2] The FAC includes no allegations setting forth who provides medical care to persons incarcerated in facilities other than those operated by the CDCR or by private corporations operating federal prisons.

[3] Additionally, Colonial alleges that the CDCR, in connection with "the latest proposed contract between the parties," has "requested a term that Colonial admit CDCR patients only to Mercy Hospital." (See id.) Colonial does not allege whether it has agreed or disagreed to such additional term, but alleges that it has "not finalized any new contract" with the CDCR "[g]iven the financial crisis which has engulfed the state of California." (See id.)

decides to transport an inmate to Mercy Hospital, Colonial alleges, Colonial "contacts the Emergency Room at [ ] Mercy Hospital and advises the Emergency Room personnel of the anticipated arrival of its inmate patient"; if the Emergency Room physician determines the inmate should be admitted, a Colonial physician admits the inmate to Mercy Hospital [*6] and thereafter provides care to the inmate. (See id.) [4]

Colonial alleges that on or about April 28, 2009, Mercy Hospital entered into an "exclusive contract" with GEMCare, under which agreement GEMCare became "the exclusive provider of medical services to CDCR inmates admitted to Mercy Hospital through the Emergency Room." (See FAC P 22.) Colonial alleges that Mercy Hospital, in connection with its having entered into the above-referenced contract with GEMCare, "unilaterally modified the 'On Call' protocol" (see FAC P 20), such that "Emergency Room personnel were to call [d]efendant GEMCare to provide care for inmates to the exclusion of Colonial physicians" (see FAC P 21). According to Colonial, under such new protocol and beginning May 1, 2009, "inmate patients assigned to Colonial by [the] CDCR have been diverted by [*7] Mercy Hospital to physicians associated with GEMCare." (See FAC P 29.)

Based on the above allegations, Colonial asserts five causes of action, the first of said causes of action alleging a claim under federal law and the remainder alleging violations of state law.

LEGAL STANDARD

Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure can be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. See Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). Rule 8(a)(2), however, "requires only 'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)). Consequently, "a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations." See id. Nonetheless, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." See id. (internal quotation, citation, and alteration omitted).

In analyzing a motion [*8] to dismiss, a district court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint, and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See NL Industries, Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual material, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level[.]" Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950 (internal quotation and citation omitted); see, e.g., Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047-48 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding plaintiff who alleged "only ultimate facts" and "legal conclusions," rather than "evidentiary facts," failed to state claim under Sherman Act).

DISCUSSION

In their respective motions, defendants argue that each of the five counts alleged in the complaint is subject to dismissal for failure to state a claim.

A. Count One ("Antitrust Under the Sherman [*9] Act")

[4] Colonial does not specify the procedure employed when the CDCR determines that an inmate needs care, determines that Colonial should provide the care, and transports the inmate to a facility other than Mercy Hospital. Nor does Colonial describe the procedure employed when an inmate treated at Mercy Hospital is not admitted to the hospital through the Emergency Room.

In Count One, Colonial alleges violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Defendants argue the Sherman Act claims are subject to dismissal.

1. Product Market Allegations

"Antitrust law requires [an] allegation of both a product market and a geographic market." Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 n.4 (9th Cir. 2008). This requirement applies to both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act. See id. at 1044 n.3.

"The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). "Interchangeability implies that one product is roughly equivalent to another for the use to which it is put," Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 437 (3rd Cir. 1997) (internal quotation and citation omitted), while "[c]ross-elasticity of demand is a measure of the substitutability of products from the point of view of buyers," see id. at 438 n.6 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

Sherman Act claims are subject to dismissal "if the complaint's 'relevant market' definition is facially [*10] unsustainable." See Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 (citing Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436-37)). "Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted." Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436; see, e.g., Tanaka v. University of Southern California, 252 F.3d 1059, 1063-64 (9th Cir. 2001) (affirming dismissal of antitrust claims where plaintiff athlete identified product market as "UCLA women's soccer program" but failed to allege any facts to support "conclusory" assertion that such market existed); Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1105 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding, where complaint alleged existence of "product markets for lodging accommodations and ski packages" in Big Bear Valley, district court properly dismissed antitrust claims because plaintiffs failed to allege "there are no other goods or services [*11] that are reasonably interchangeable with lodging accommodations or ski packages within [the] geographic market" of Big Bear Valley).

Here, in its initial complaint, Colonial alleged that the relevant "product market" was "the provision of inpatient medical services and treatment by medical doctors for inmates of the California prison system." (See Compl. P 38 (emphasis added).) By order filed September 29, 2009, the Court dismissed the antitrust claims alleged in the initial complaint, for the reason that Colonial had failed to allege a cognizable product market; in particular, Colonial had defined the market by reference to a consumer, specifically, the CDCR. (See Order filed September 29, 2009, at 4-5); see also Newcal Indus., 513 F.3d at 1045 ("The consumers do not define the boundaries of the market; the products or producers do.").

In the FAC, Colonial now allege the relevant product market is "the provision of medical services to prison inmates at secure or guarded hospital facilities." (See FAC P 4 (emphasis added).) Other than the addition of an allegation that the services are provided in medical facilities from which an inmate may not readily escape, Colonial's amended product [*12] market differs from the market alleged in the initial complaint only insofar as it replaces the phrase "inmates of the California prison system" with "prison inmates," and thus now includes federal as well as state prisoners therein. In other words, Colonial is proposing a market in which the only possible consumers of the alleged services, i.e., "products," are the CDCR and the two private corporations that operate federal prisons in the six-county geographic region identified in the FAC. Necessarily excluded from Colonial's alleged product market are medical services provided at "secure or guarded hospital facilities" to inmates incarcerated in city and county jails, to persons detained in county jails pending the outcome of criminal proceedings, to military personnel held in the detention facility at the United States Naval Air Station in Lemoore, and to persons detained or confined by various federal, state, and local government agencies as a result of orders of civil confinement or commitment.

The FAC, however, includes no allegations to support a finding that medical services provided by Colonial and its competitors to persons incarcerated in prisons are not reasonably interchangeable [*13] with medical services provided to persons who, for example, are inmates of local jails or other locked facilities by reason of criminal or civil proceedings. Consequently, Colonial's proposed product market is "legally insufficient." See Chapman v. New York State Division for Youth, 546 F.3d 230, 238-39 (2nd Cir. 2008) (affirming dismissal of antitrust claims; holding plaintiff's allegation of market for "restraint training services to private child care providers" was legally insufficient, where plaintiff failed to allege facts to "show how the market for restraint training services to child care providers is any different from the larger market for restraint training services to other businesses, agencies, and organizations"); see also Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436, 438 (affirming dismissal of antitrust claims; holding plaintiff's allegation of market for "pizza supplies and ingredients for use in Domino's stores" was legally insufficient, because "dough, tomato sauce, and paper cups that meet Domino's Pizza, Inc. standards and are used by Domino's stores are interchangeable with dough, sauce and cups available from other suppliers and used by other pizza companies").

Accordingly, [*14] the First Cause of Action is, in its entirety, subject to dismissal for failure to allege sufficient facts to support a finding that the product market identified in the FAC is legally cognizable.

The Court will afford Colonial one further opportunity to properly allege a product market. For this reason, the Court finds it appropriate to consider at this time defendants' additional argument that, even assuming a properly alleged product market, Colonial nonetheless fails to state a claim under the Sherman Act.

2. Section 1

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that any "contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce" is "illegal." See 15 U.S.C. § 1.

Colonial alleges that "[t]he modification of the 'On Call' protocol and the Exclusive Coverage Services Agreement between defendants GEMCare and Mercy Hospital each constitutes a contract in an unreasonable restraint of trade" (see FAC P 34), in that such agreements constitute "non-price vertical restraint[s]" (see FAC P 36). In its opposition, Colonial clarifies that the alleged "restraint[s]" are "exclusive dealing arrangements." (See Pl.'s Opp. at 12:18-19.)

An "exclusive-dealing arrangement" does not violate [*15] antitrust laws unless "performance of the contract will foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected." See Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961). [5] "For exclusive dealing, foreclosure levels are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 373 F.3d 57, 68 (1st Cir. 2004); see also United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 70, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (noting "roughly 40% to 50% share [of the relevant market] usually [is] required in order to establish a § 1 violation"); see, e.g., TCA Building Co. v. Northwestern Resources Co., 873 F. Supp. 29, 39 (S.D. Tex. 1995) (holding plaintiff failed to establish exclusive dealing arrangement violated Sherman Act, where buyer's "consumption represent[ed] only 33% of the consumption in the [relevant geographic] area . . ., leaving [the plaintiff] with almost 70% of the [relevant] market open to it").

Defendants argue that the FAC fails to include sufficient facts to support a finding that performance of the contract between Mercy Hospital and GEMCare will foreclose competition in the alleged relevant market. The Court, as discussed below, agrees.

[5] Although Tampa Electric involved a claim under § 3 of the Clayton Act, the Ninth Circuit has held that the analysis set forth therein is applicable to a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, with the exception that [*16] the plaintiff alleging a § 1 claim must make a "greater showing of anti-competitive effect." See Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 512 F.2d 1264, 1275 (9th Cir. 1975).

Construed in the light most favorable to Colonial, the FAC alleges that as a result of the challenged contract between Mercy Hospital and GEMCare, when the CDCR brings an inmate in its custody to the Emergency Room of Mercy Hospital, such inmate, if thereafter admitted to Mercy Hospital, can only be treated by a GEMCare physician. Stated otherwise, the FAC alleges that medical providers in the relevant market are unable to compete with GEMCare for services rendered to the CDCR, specifically, medical services rendered to inmates in the custody of the CDCR to the extent such services are rendered after inmates are brought to Mercy Hospital's Emergency Room and thereafter admitted to Mercy Hospital for treatment.

The FAC does not allege, however, that the [*17] contract between Mercy Hospital and GEMCare has any effect on services sought by the CDCR to the extent the CDCR seeks treatment for inmates it does not bring to the Emergency Room of Mercy Hospital. More significantly, the FAC does not allege that the contract between Mercy Hospital and GEMCare has any effect on any consumer other than the CDCR. Further, as noted above, the FAC alleges that Mercy Hospital's contract with the CDCR requires Mercy Hospital to "devote[ ] exclusively to state prison inmates under the control of the CDCR" its "guarded facilities" (see FAC P 11); [6] by which allegation a reasonable inference can be drawn that all other consumers in the alleged relevant market are using facilities other than Mercy Hospital. [7]

In sum, the FAC alleges that the exclusive dealing arrangement between Mercy Hospital and GEMCare only has an effect on competition among medical providers for the business of the CDCR to the extent the CDCR seeks medical care for inmates who are first brought by the CDCR to the Emergency Room of Mercy Hospital. The FAC includes no facts, however, from which it reasonably could be inferred that the percentage of the product market foreclosed is sufficiently substantial to support a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 209 (4th Cir. 2002) (affirming dismissal of § 1 claim based on "exclusive dealing" contracts; holding that because complaint failed to include "an allegation regarding [defendants'] power or share in the [relevant] market, there [was] no [*19] basis for concluding that [the] agreements at issue . . . [were] likely to foreclose a significant share of the relevant [product] markets").

3. Section 2

Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that it is illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." See 15 U.S.C. § 2. Here, Colonial alleges that GEMCare "has monopolized, and engaged in an attempt to monopolize, the provision of medical services at Mercy Hospital for inmates in Central California." (See FAC P 34.) [8]

"The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or

[6] It would appear that "guarded facilities," when read in context, is a reference to Mercy Hospital's "dedicated, secured and guarded floor." (See FAC P 24.)

[7] As defendants note, the FAC alleges that the services rendered by medical providers can be rendered in any hospital room with a locking window, if an armed guard can be placed outside the room, (see FAC P 9), a description that would appear to describe rooms in every hospital facility. Indeed, the [*18] FAC expressly alleges that medical services to incarcerated persons are rendered in facilities other than Mercy Hospital, specifically, in Memorial Hospital and San Joaquin Community Hospital, as well as in facilities, unnamed in the FAC, at which physicians provide medical care to federal prisoners incarcerated at institutions operated by private corporations. (See FAC PP 6, 10, 11.)

development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). "[T]o demonstrate [*20] attempted monopolization a plaintiff must prove (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993).

At the outset, the Court finds that Colonial fails to state a claim because it does not allege, even as a conclusion, much less with the requisite evidentiary facts, that GEMCare has monopolized or has attempted to monopolize the alleged relevant market. The alleged relevant market is not the "provision of medical services at Mercy Hospital for inmates in Central California" (see FAC P 34), but, rather, the "provision of medical services to prison inmates at secure or guarded hospital facilities" in Central California (see FAC PP 9, 10). [9]

Nor can the Court reasonably infer, from the facts that are alleged in the FAC, that GEMCare has monopolized or has attempted the monopolize [*21] the relevant market. The FAC does not set forth GEMCare's market share, does not allege that GEMCare provides medical services to any consumer in the relevant market other than the CDCR, and includes no facts to support a finding that GEMCare has the ability to control the prices charged by medical providers in the relevant market. Cf. Cost Management Services, Inc. v. Washington Natural Gas Co., 99 F.3d 937, 950-51 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding allegation defendant had 90% market share in relevant market, coupled with factual allegations to support finding defendant had ability to control prices and to exclude competition, sufficient to allege defendant had monopoly power). Further, as discussed above, Colonial does not allege that the contract between GEMCare and Mercy Hospital has an effect on any consumer in the relevant market other than the CDCR.

Moreover, because the alleged wrongful conduct by GEMCare consists of its having entered into the above-referenced contract with Mercy Hospital (see FAC P 34), and the Court has found that Colonial has failed to state a § 1 claim based on such arrangement, Colonial's § 2 claim fails for this additional reason. See Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork Inc., 710 F.2d 1366, 1374 n.3 (9th Cir. 1983) [*22] (holding where plaintiff bases § 1 claim and § 2 claim on same "concerted activity," plaintiff's failure to establish claim under § 1 precludes finding in favor of plaintiff on claim under § 2).

Accordingly, the First Cause of Action is subject to dismissal to the extent it is based on a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act.

B. Count Two ("Violation of the Cartwright Act")

In Count Two, Colonial alleges a violation of California's Cartwright Act. Such claim is based entirely on the conduct on which Colonial bases its Sherman Act claims. (See FAC PP 42-44.)

"The analysis under California's antitrust law mirrors the analysis under federal law because the Cartwright Act . . . was modeled after the Sherman Act." County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Community Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001); see also Marin County Board of Realtors, Inc. v. Palsson, 16 Cal.3d 920, 925, 130 Cal. Rptr. 1, 549 P.2d 833 (1976) (holding "federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable to problems arising under the Cartwright Act").

Accordingly, for the reasons stated above with respect to Count One, Count Two is subject to dismissal.

C. Remaining State Law Claims

---

[9] As discussed above, however, Colonial has failed to allege sufficient facts to support a finding there exists a market limited solely to the "provision of medical services to prison inmates at secure or guarded hospital facilities."

In Count Three, Colonial alleges defendants have violated §§ 650.01 and 650.02 [*23] of the California Business & Professions Code by engaging in "prohibited referral[s]" of medical care. (See FAC P 47.) In Count Four, Colonial alleges a violation of § 17200 of the California Business & Professions Code and, in Count Five, Colonial alleges a claim for "tortious interference with contract and prospective economic advantage," each such claim based on all of the above-described statutory violations. (See FAC PP 49-50, 57-58.)

The Court will defer ruling on the sufficiency of Counts Three, Four, and Five, pending amendment, if any, of Colonial's Sherman Act claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3) (providing where causes of action over which district court has original jurisdiction have been dismissed, court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over remaining claims).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, defendants' motions to dismiss are hereby GRANTED in part and DEFERRED in part, as follows:

1. Counts One and Two are hereby DISMISSED, with leave to amend to cure the deficiencies identified above.

2. To the extent the motions seek dismissal of Counts Three, Four, and Five, ruling is hereby DEFERRED.

3. If Colonial elects to file a Second Amended Complaint to [*24] cure the deficiencies identified above, Colonial shall file its Second Amended Complaint no later than June 18, 2010. If Colonial does not file a Second Amended Complaint on or before June 18, 2010, the instant action will consist of the state law claims alleged in the FAC.

4. The Case Management Conference is hereby CONTINUED from June 25, 2010 to September 3, 2010. A Joint Case Management Statement shall be filed no later than August 27, 2010.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION AND ORDER ON DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES AND COSTS

DEIN, U.S.M.J.

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter is before the court on the Defendant's Motion for Attorney's Fees and Costs (Docket No. 74). By its motion, the defendant, Advanced Ion Beam Technology, [*3] Inc. ("AIBT"), is seeking an order declaring this an "exceptional case" and awarding it attorney fees pursuant to the Patent Act, 35 U.S.C. § 285. Additionally, AIBT seeks expert witness fees and prejudgment interest on its costs and attorneys' fees pursuant to the court's inherent power to impose sanctions for abuse of the judicial process, as well as costs pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d). For all the reasons detailed below, AIBT's motion is ALLOWED only as to the defendant's request for costs under Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d), but is otherwise DENIED. The issue of Varian's conduct vis-a-vis the Patent Office and its motivation in filing this suit will be fully explored in the Antitrust Litigation, in which AIBT may move for fees if appropriate. The instant case, however, should be closed as AIBT has not even sufficiently pleaded inequitable conduct on the part of Varian to withstand a motion to dismiss, much less shown that this is an "exceptional case."

II. BACKGROUND

This court previously described the procedural background of this case in its February 26, 2010 Report and Recommendation on Defendant's Motion for Attorney's Fees and Costs and in its April 27, 2010 Report and Recommendation [*4] on Defendant's Motion to Dismiss in Civil Action No. 09-11448-NG. Because that background is directly relevant to the issues raised in the present motion for attorney fees and costs, it is summarized again here as follows.

On March 25, 2008, plaintiffs Varian Semiconductor Equipment Associates, Inc. and the owners of U.S. Patent No. 7,301,156 (the "'156 Patent") (collectively, "Varian") brought this action against AIBT alleging infringement of the '156 Patent entitled "Controlling the Characteristics of Implanter Ion-Beams." (Docket No. 1). AIBT responded by denying liability, asserting various affirmative defenses, and filing three counterclaims consisting of claims for invalidity, non-infringement and unenforceability. (Docket No. 7). On November 25, 2008, after the parties had engaged in initial discovery, Varian, for reasons that are in dispute, unilaterally granted AIBT a covenant not to sue on the '156 Patent, and moved to dismiss both its claims and AIBT's three counterclaims. (See Docket No. 37). Ultimately, the court allowed the parties' Joint Stipulation and Motion for Dismissal by Order of the Court, thereby dismissing Varian's claims with prejudice pursuant to its covenant [*5] not to sue, and dismissing AIBT's three counterclaims with prejudice to the extent that those claims were directed to products that were the subject of Varian's covenant not to sue. (See Docket No. 62). AIBT contends that in the eight months the litigation was pending, and before any depositions were taken, it incurred approximately $ 1.4 million in costs, fees and expenses. (Docket No. 76 at 18). In their Joint Stipulation dismissing the claims, the parties agreed that "[w]ith respect to Plaintiffs' claims dismissed in connection with [their] stipulation, AIBT is the prevailing party pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 285" of the Patent Act. (Docket No. 62 P 3). However, Varian did not agree that the action constituted an "exceptional case" under 35 U.S.C. § 285. (Id.).

On December 24, 2008, after Varian had granted the covenant not to sue and while the motion to dismiss Varian's claim and AIBT's three counterclaims remained pending, AIBT filed a First Amended Answer and First Amended Counterclaims. (Docket No. 45). Therein, AIBT reasserted its original counterclaims for invalidity, non-infringement and unenforceability, and added five antitrust counterclaims. The additional claims included Walker [*6] Process claims [1] and "sham litigation" claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization, as well as a claim for conspiracy to monopolize. In support of these claims, AIBT alleged among other things that Varian had engaged in monopolization and attempted monopolization by seeking, through this litigation, to enforce a patent that it knew was obtained by fraud on the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO"), and that it knew was invalid or otherwise unenforceable. (See id.).

Varian moved to dismiss AIBT's amended counterclaims for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), and on July 20, 2009, this court issued a Report and Recommendation (the "2009 R&R") in which it recommended that Varian's motion be allowed. (Docket No. 72). Therein, this court determined that AIBT had failed to allege [*7] sufficient facts to establish an antitrust injury and therefore lacked standing to pursue its antitrust counterclaims. This court also concluded that AIBT had failed to allege fraud with sufficient particularity to support its Walker Process and "sham litigation" claims, and that AIBT had failed to allege adequate facts to support its claim for conspiracy to monopolize. Accordingly, this court recommended that all of AIBT's counterclaims be dismissed. [2] However, because this court concluded that the record did not establish that AIBT would not be able to allege a cause of action, it further recommended that the dismissal be without prejudice. The 2009 R&R was adopted by the District Court on August 4, 2009, thereby dismissing AIBT's antitrust counterclaims without prejudice. On August 18, 2009, AIBT filed the instant motion for fees and costs.

Instead of filing a motion for leave to amend its counterclaims in this case, AIBT chose [*8] to pursue its antitrust claims by filing a new action against Varian. Thus, on August 31, 2009, AIBT filed a complaint against Varian in Civil Action No. 09-11448-NG (the "Antitrust Litigation"). The complaint expanded upon the factual allegations, but contained the same five antitrust claims that AIBT had asserted against Varian by way of its counterclaims in this action. Accordingly, AIBT continued to contend that Varian engaged in anti-competitive conduct, in violation of federal antitrust law, by "alleging infringement of a patent that they knew was obtained by fraud on the [PTO]." (Docket No. 1 in C.A. No. 09-11448-NG P 1). AIBT is seeking costs and attorneys' fees in connection with the Antitrust Litigation as well.

Varian filed a motion to dismiss all of the claims against it in the Antitrust Litigation, arguing that AIBT had failed to cure the deficiencies identified by this court with respect to AIBT's counterclaims in this action, and that AIBT's Complaint should be dismissed on the same grounds articulated in the 2009 R&R. (Docket No. 8 in C.A. No. 09-11448-NG). On April 27, 2010, this court issued a Report and Recommendation (the "2010 R&R") in which it determined that AIBT's [*9] expanded factual allegations cured a few but not most of the deficiencies in AIBT's original counterclaims, and recommended that Varian's motion to dismiss be allowed in part and denied in part. (Docket No. 27 in C.A. No. 09-11448-NG). Specifically, this court recommended that AIBT's principal claim, i.e., that Varian committed fraud by misleading the PTO in connection with its disclosures concerning U.S. Patent No. 3,541,328, its claim of a failure to disclose an article authored by W.K.H. Panofsky, et al. (the "Panofsky Reference"), as well as its claim of conspiracy to monopolize, be dismissed for failure to state a claim. However, this court further recommended that Varian's motion to dismiss be denied with respect to AIBT's claim that Varian committed fraud on the PTO by failing to disclose a publication by Nicholas White, et al. (the "White Reference"), an invention known as the "Ionex Quad Magnet," an offer by Nicholas White to sell certain technology to Varian, and the identity of Nicholas White as allegedly one of the inventors of the '156 Patent. Both parties have filed objections to the 2010 R&R, which are pending before the District Court for a final decision.

Additional [*10] facts will be provided below where appropriate.

III. DISCUSSION

A. AIBT's Request for Attorney Fees

By its present motion, AIBT is seeking attorney fees pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 285 of the Patent Act. Section 285 provides that "[t]he court in exceptional cases may award reasonable attorney fees to the prevailing party." 35 U.S.C. § 285. Varian argues that AIBT's motion should be denied because it has failed to present clear and convincing evidence showing that this case is "exceptional" within the meaning of the Patent Act. [3] As the Federal Circuit has stated, > [t]he determination of whether a case is exceptional and, thus, eligible for and warranting an award of attorney fees under § 285 is a two-step process in which the district court must (1) determine whether there is clear and convincing evidence that a case is exceptional ... and (2) if so, then determine in its discretion whether an award of attorney fees is justified ....

Digeo, Inc. v. Audible, Inc., 505 F.3d 1362, 1366-67 (Fed. Cir. 2007). [4] For the reasons that follow, this court agrees that AIBT has failed to establish, by clear and convincing evidence, that this is an exceptional case. Accordingly, AIBT has not shown that an award [*11] of attorney fees would be appropriate.

"A case may be deemed exceptional when there has been some material inappropriate conduct related to the matter in litigation, such as willful infringement, fraud or inequitable conduct in procuring the patent, misconduct during litigation, vexatious or unjustified litigation, conduct that violates Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, or like infractions." Brooks Furniture Mfg., Inc. v. Dutailier Int'l, Inc., 393 F.3d 1378, 1381 (Fed. Cir. 2005). In the instant case, AIBT asserts that this case is exceptional because Varian procured the '156 Patent [*12] through fraud on the PTO. As AIBT states in its memorandum in support of its motion,

> [t]he evidence of record shows that Plaintiff Varian Semiconductor Equipment Associates, Inc. ("Varian") and the other Plaintiffs brought and knowingly maintained a baseless infringement suit asserting a fraudulently procured patent in an effort to crush AIBT and thereby improperly block competition that offered better technology and that was poised to erode Varian's dominant market position. As such, this is an exceptional case, and the Court should award AIBT its attorneys' fees and costs, including expert fees and interest thereon.

(Def. Mem. (Docket No. 76) at 2). However, AIBT did not present any evidence in the instant case, much less clear and convincing evidence, to substantiate its fraud claims.

[3] Varian does not dispute AIBT's contention that this court retains jurisdiction to decide its motion, or that since Varian's claims were dismissed due to the covenant not to sue, AIBT is the "prevailing party" for purposes of its request for attorney fees pursuant to 35 U.S.C. § 285. Instead, Varian argues that AIBT's request for attorney fees should be denied because the defendant has not established that this is an exceptional case justifying an award of such fees. (See Pls. Opp. (Docket No. 78) at 8-11).

As AIBT argues, the essence of its fraud claims is the alleged "failure of the inventors to advise the PTO that the inventors were aware that the asserted claims were not patentable due to a much earlier prior art patent, U.S. Patent No. 3,541,328 (the "328 Patent"), that was developed by one of the inventors of the 156 Patent, Enge." (Def. Mem. at 3). While AIBT asserts that [*13] there were a number of other instances of failure to disclose information to the PTO which resulted in fraud on the PTO, (see id. at 12-15), it relies on the alleged failure to disclose the '328 Patent and two letters that plaintiff Kenneth H. Purser ("Purser") sent to Harald A. Enge ("Enge") to establish that this case is exceptional. (See Def. Reply Mem. (Docket No. 80) at 4-7). According to AIBT, "[t]hese letters show that the Plaintiffs intentionally deceived the PTO when they signed the declarations attesting that they were the true and only inventors of the inventions claimed in the patent-in-suit with knowledge that one or more of the then pending claims was anticipated by the 328 Patent." (Def. Mem at 4).

This evidence is insufficient to justify an award of attorney fees in this case. In dismissing AIBT's counterclaims, this court considered AIBT's allegations that the inventors misled the PTO about the contents and scope of the '328 Patent and found them insufficient to state a claim for fraud under the applicable pleading standards. (See 2009 R&R at 17-20). Moreover, in connection with Varian's motion to dismiss the Complaint in the Antitrust Litigation, this court considered [*14] AIBT's revised allegations regarding the '328 Patent, including the substance of the two letters from Purser to Enge, and found that AIBT still could not state a claim for fraud. (See 2010 R&R at 10-13, 26-31). In particular, as detailed more fully in the 2010 R&R, this court determined that due to the fact that the inventors of the '156 Patent disclosed and accurately described the '328 Patent to the PTO, AIBT could not sustain a claim based on allegations that the inventors misled the PTO about the '328 Patent. (Id. at 26). Because the letters on which AIBT relies to show that this case is exceptional do not even support a claim of fraud on the PTO, they do not establish clear and convincing evidence of inappropriate conduct for purposes of an attorney fee award under 35 U.S.C. § 285. [5]

AIBT is outraged at the content of these letters and argues that proof that Varian's suit was brought in bad faith is established by Varian's alleged failure to explain the letters, which demonstrate "Plaintiffs' intentional deception of the PTO when they signed the declaration attesting that they were the true and only inventors of the inventions claimed in the patent-in-suit." (Def. Reply Mem. at 6). However, to date, no explanation has been necessary, and AIBT's argument ignores Varian's repeated assertion that these facts likely will be explored in the interference proceeding Varian has requested before the PTO. (See Pls. Opp. (Docket No. 78) at 4). Moreover, AIBT is ignoring the fact that an inventor's opinion about patentability is not controlling on whether an invention is patentable as a matter of law. Finally, as this court has found [*16] twice, it is undisputed that the '328 Patent was disclosed and accurately described to the PTO in connection with the procurement of the '156 Patent. The existence of this correspondence does not establish AIBT's claim of fraud and does not render this litigation exceptional under § 285.

To the extent that AIBT relies on other alleged failures to disclose information to the PTO to support its claim for fees, costs and expenses, these claims must also fail. Thus, AIBT argues that Varian's omissions and representations to the PTO with respect to the White Reference, the Panofsky Reference, the Ionex Quad Magnet and Nicholas White's offer to sell technology to Varian also constitute evidence that this case is exceptional. (Def. Mem. at 12-16). However, in the instant case, AIBT was not able to state a claim of fraud based on Varian's alleged failure to disclose these references to the PTO. In light of AIBT having failed to allege sufficient facts to even state a claim in the instant action, and having elected not to amend its pleadings in the instant case, this case should be closed. Any remedy which AIBT may recover should be developed in the Antitrust Litigation where some, but not all [*17] of AIBT's claims of failure to disclose this information to the PTO have, thus far, survived a motion to dismiss.

[5] This court is not ruling that "AIBT must prove its fraud claim to prevail on its motion under § 285[.]" (Def. Reply Mem. at 3) (arguing that proof of fraud is not required). This court agrees that "[i]f there is clear and convincing evidence that a plaintiff has brought a baseless or frivolous suit against an accused infringer, that is a sufficient basis to require a district court to deem the case [*15] exceptional under § 285." Digeo, Inc., 505 F.3d at 1367. However, since AIBT is basing its claim that this case is exceptional on the existence of these two letters, which AIBT contends establish knowledge of the fraud, the fact that these two letters do not even state a claim for fraud on the PTO defeats AIBT's claim of exceptional circumstances.

AIBT argues further that the timing of Varian's decision not to pursue its claim of infringement, i.e., shortly before a court hearing and depositions, is persuasive evidence that Varian's suit was baseless. (Def. Reply Mem. at 6-7). However, Varian has offered an explanation of its action, which, if supported by a developed record, defeats AIBT's claim. (See Pls. Opp. at 5 n.1). Thus, on its face, the timing of the issuance of the covenant not to sue does not render this case exceptional or warrant the award of attorneys' fees and expenses.

AIBT's Request for Discovery

AIBT has requested an opportunity to pursue discovery to the extent necessary to establish that this is an exceptional case. According to the defendant, "[t]his discovery would include evidence of Plaintiffs' inequitable conduct and evidence that Plaintiffs' knew that this case was frivolous[ ] at the time they filed it." (Def. Mem. at 18). Therefore, AIBT is seeking the same or similar discovery that it will be taking in the Antitrust Litigation in order to prove its claims that Varian violated the antitrust [*18] laws by seeking to enforce a patent in this case that it allegedly knew had been obtained by fraud on the PTO.

AIBT's request for discovery in this matter is denied. The defendant has chosen to conclude this litigation by pursuing its antitrust claims in a separate lawsuit. To the extent it is able to develop clear and convincing evidence in the context of the Antitrust Litigation to show that Varian's patent infringement claims were baseless because the '156 Patent was procured by fraud on the PTO, it may file an appropriate motion for attorney fees in that case.

B. AIBT's Request for Expert Witness Fees and Prejudgment Interest

By its motion, AIBT also requests that this court exercise its inherent power to impose sanctions for fraud or abuse of the judicial process, and award the defendant its expert witness fees, as well as pre-judgment interest on its costs and attorneys' fees. A federal court may "invoke its inherent powers if it determines 'that fraud has been practiced upon it, or that the very temple of justice has been defiled.' Similarly, a court may impose sanctions where 'a party shows bad faith by delaying or disrupting the litigation or by hampering enforcement of a court [*19] order.'" Amsted Indus. Inc. v. Buckeye Steel Castings Co., 23 F.3d 374, 378 (Fed. Cir. 1994) (quoting Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32, 46, 111 S. Ct. 2123, 2133, 115 L. Ed. 2d 27 (1991)) (additional quotations and citations omitted). However, "[w]ithout a finding of fraud or bad faith whereby the 'very temple of justice has been defiled,' a court enjoys no discretion to employ inherent powers to impose sanctions." Id. See also Chambers, 501 U.S. at 50-51, 111 S. Ct. at 2136 (court must "exercise caution in invoking its inherent power," but may impose sanctions pursuant to such power where there is evidence of bad faith conduct or attempt to perpetrate fraud on the court). The present record does not support the claim for this extraordinary award, and AIBT's request for sanctions in the form of expert witness fees and pre-judgment interest is denied.

C. AIBT's Request for Costs Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d)

Finally, AIBT is seeking costs pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d), which provides in relevant part that "[u]nless a federal statute, these rules, or a court order provides otherwise, costs - other than attorney's fees - should be allowed to the prevailing party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d)(1). [*20] Varian urges this court to decline AIBT's request because Varian prevailed on AIBT's antitrust counterclaims, and it contends that under such circumstances, each party should bear its own costs. (Pl. Opp. Mem. at 12). Because this court finds that AIBT is the sole "prevailing party" for purposes of Rule 54(d), AIBT's motion for costs is allowed.

In patent cases, the question "whether a party is 'prevailing' for the purposes of Rule 54 is a matter of federal circuit law." Power Mosfet Techs., L.L.C. v. Siemens AG, 378 F.3d 1396, 1416 (Fed. Cir. 2004). See also Manildra Milling Corp. v. Ogilvie Mills, Inc., 76 F.3d 1178, 1181-82 (Fed. Cir. 1996) (describing basis for applying federal circuit law to define meaning of "prevailing party" in patent litigation). "The dismissal of a claim with prejudice . . . is a judgment on the merits under the law of the Federal Circuit." Power Mosfet Techs., L.L.C., 378 F.3d at 1416. Accordingly, "a defendant [is] the prevailing party for purposes of costs under Rule 54 where the plaintiff voluntarily dismiss[es] its case against [that] defendant with prejudice." Highway Equip. Co., Inc. v. FECO, Ltd., 469 F.3d 1027, 1035 (Fed.

Cir. 2006). See also id. at 1035-36 [*21] (basis for defendant's prevailing party status was plaintiff's filing of a covenant not to sue, which ended the litigation and resulted in a dismissal with prejudice). On the other hand, a dismissal without prejudice "does not bestow 'prevailing party' status" upon the opposing party, as it does not amount to a victory on the merits and "does not constitute a change in the legal relationship of the parties because the plaintiff is free to refile its action." RFR Indus., Inc. v. Century Steps, Inc., 477 F.3d 1348, 1353 (Fed. Cir. 2007). See also Highway Equip. Co., Inc., 469 F.3d at 1034 (dispositive issue is whether the dismissal "had sufficient judicial imprimatur to constitute a 'judicially sanctioned change in the legal relationship of the parties'") (quoting Buckhannon Bd. & Care Home, Inc. v. W. Va. Dep't of Health & Human Res., 532 U.S. 598, 605, 121 S. Ct. 1835, 1840, 149 L. Ed. 2d 855 (2001)); Szabo Food Serv., Inc. v. Canteen Corp., 823 F.2d 1073, 1077 (7th Cir. 1987) (a dismissal without prejudice "is not the practical equivalent of a victory for defendant on the merits"). Because Varian's claims in this action were dismissed with prejudice, but AIBT's counterclaims were [*22] dismissed without prejudice, AIBT is the prevailing party for purposes Rule 54(d). Accordingly, AIBT is entitled to recover costs against Varian pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1920. [6]

IV. CONCLUSION

For all the reasons detailed above, the "Defendant's Motion for Attorneys' Fees and Costs" (Docket No. 74) is ALLOWED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. Specifically, the motion is ALLOWED with respect to the defendant's request for costs under Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d), but is otherwise DENIED. Within 14 days from the date of this Memorandum of Decision and Order, AIBT shall file a bill of costs with the court. Any objection to the bill of costs shall be filed within 14 days from the date of AIBT's submission.

Washington law requires Certificates of Need for any tertiary health service, or a specialized service that meets complicated medical needs of people and requires sufficient patient volume to optimize provider effectiveness, quality of service, and improved outcomes of care. Wash. Rev. Code § 70.38.105(4)(f). This includes percutaneous coronary intervention. Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-700.

Healthcare Law > ... > Facility Planning > Certificates of Need > Hospitals

HN2[] Certificates of Need, Hospitals

Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-745 sets the standards for granting elective percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) Certificate of Need (CON) licenses to hospitals. First, the Washington State Department of Health must estimate the number of elective PCI procedures that will be performed each year in a geographic planning area. To do this, it determines the area's use rate, which is the number of PCI's performed on persons over fifteen years old per 1000 persons. The use rate is then multiplied by an estimate of the area's population in that area for each year five years into the future. The Department grants a new CON license if the estimated future need is substantially greater than licensed providers' capacity to perform elective PCI's (net need). But the Department does not grant a new PCI CON just because there is a net need in the planning area. A new provider must perform a minimum of 300 PCI's per year. Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-720. Therefore, the difference between current capacity and projected demand must exceed 300 for a new provider to receive a CON license. Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-745(10). If the difference is greater than 300, the Department divides the difference by 300 and rounds down to determine the additional need. Wash. Admin. Code § 246-310-745(10).

A motion for judgment on the pleadings under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) is appropriate after the pleadings are closed. In a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a court may consider only legal issues. The court will grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings if the moving party can show a clear right to judgment as a matter of law from the face of the pleadings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Generally speaking, restraints of trade imposed directly by states are immune from antitrust liability. This immunity extends to the acts of the state executive branch, including administrative agencies. State restraints of trade are divided into two categories: unilateral and hybrid. Hybrid restraints are not immune from antitrust liability. Restraints are hybrid when the state merely enforces private marketing decisions, thereby granting private actors a degree of private regulatory power. But just because a law has anti-competitive effects that private parties acting in concert could not produce without violating the antitrust laws does not mean it is hybrid. The law must actually sanction an arrangement between private parties that unlawfully restrains competition. In contrast, restraints are unilateral and immune from antitrust challenge when they do not delegate any market authority to private actors. A unilateral restraint's anti-competitive effects are the result of the state's regulation, not of state sanction of private violations.

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Several Ninth Circuit opinions have rejected antitrust challenges to state-created local monopolies. These opinions did not address whether the regulations were unilateral or hybrid, but they recognized that when the state deliberately creates a monopoly it is immune from antitrust law. The greater power of creating a permanent local monopoly, repeatedly validated by the Ninth Circuit, necessarily encompasses the lesser power of creating a local monopoly that may or may not be permanent.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

HN6[] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

The language of the Commerce Clause does not explicitly limit the states' power over interstate commerce. Nevertheless, it is well established that the Commerce Clause contains a negative or dormant aspect that limits the states' ability to regulate interstate trade. The U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly held that states may not enforce laws that either (1) discriminate between in-state and out-of-state entities to protect in-state economic interests or (2) incidentally burden interstate commerce more than they benefit local interests. Like so many rules in constitutional law, the dormant Commerce Clause has a number of exceptions, however.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN7[] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

HN8[] Standing, Elements

To sue in federal court, a plaintiff must have standing, including both constitutional and prudential components. To have constitutional standing, the plaintiff must have suffered an injury that is redressable by a favorable outcome.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Particular Parties

HN9[] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

In order to have prudential standing to sue for constitutional violations, the complaint must fall within the zone of interests protected by the constitutional provision at issue. The zone of interests is defined differently if the dormant Commerce Clause challenge is a facial challenge or one based on Pike. The Fifth Circuit articulated this distinction nicely in National Solid Waste Management Association v. Pine Belt Regional Solid Waste Management Association. In that case, a regional waste management authority required the residents of counties in the authority's service area to dispose of their trash at sites owned by the authority. The Fifth Circuit held that the plaintiffs lacked standing to sue for a facial challenge because they did not allege that they intended to ship waste from out of state into the region. However, the court found the plaintiffs had prudential standing to challenge the regulations under Pike because they claimed they operated in interstate commerce and alleged that the challenged ordinance burdened their interstate business. Similarly, the Ninth Circuit held in City of Los Angeles v. County of Kern that it is the interest claimed, not the harm claimed, that matters for purposes of determining prudential standing to sue under the dormant Commerce Clause.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN10[] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

An otherwise unconstitutional state burden on interstate commerce is permissible if authorized by Congress. Congressional authorization for state burdens on interstate commerce must be very clear for the burden to survive dormant Commerce Clause scrutiny. The language must indicate a desire to alter the limits of state power imposed by the Commerce Clause. The state asserting Congressional authorization bears the burden of showing that Congress authorized the state action.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN11[] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

Congress must authorize only the specific action, not the consequences of that action, in order to exempt it from liability under the dormant Commerce Clause. If the explicitly-authorized action has consequences that burden interstate commerce, it is immune from a dormant Commerce Clause challenge.

Because the natural result of the Certificate of Need laws required by the now-repealed National Health Planning and Resource Development Act, Pub. L. No. 93-641, 88 Stat. 2225 (1975), is to burden interstate commerce, Congress authorized dormant Commerce Clause violations.

[*1161] ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

A hearing occurred in the above-captioned matter on December 16, 2009 in Yakima. James L. Phillips appeared on Plaintiff Yakima Valley Memorial Hospital's ("YVMH") behalf; Michael [2] S. Tribble appeared for Defendants Washington State Department of Health ("Department") and Secretary Mary C. Selecky. Before the Court was Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. (Ct. Rec. 31.) For the reasons given below, the Court grants Defendants' Motion and dismisses YVMH's claims.

I. Background

YVMH sues to enjoin enforcement of the Department's Certificate of Need ("CON") regulations that restrict the number of hospitals that can perform elective percutaneous coronary intervention ("PCI"). The Department first issued the challenged regulations under a Washington statute that was passed in response to the National Health Planning and Resource Development Act ("NHPRDA").

A. NHPRDA

In 1974, Congress passed the NHPRDA, which required states to enact CON laws in order to receive federal health care funding. Pub. L. No. 93-641, 88 Stat. 2225 § 1523 (1975). CON laws empower State health agencies to determine the need for certain health services in each geographic area and license only needed services. Specifically, CON laws "provide for the review of and determination of need for . . . offerings of new institutional health services." North Carolina v. P.I.A. Asheville, Inc., 722 F.2d 59, 62 (4th Cir. 1983). [3] Congress's aim in passing the NHPRDA was to limit costs by preventing needless duplication of services and remedy uneven health care distribution. Id. at 61. [1]

This aim was not achieved. Congress repealed the NHPRDA in 1986. Pub. L. No. 99-660; 100 Stat. 3743, 3799 § 701 (1986). Repeal meant that states were no longer required to have CON laws in order to receive federal health care funding.

B. Washington State CON Laws and Regulations

The Washington legislature passed a CON law in 1979, when the NHPRDA was still in effect. RCW 70.38. HN1[] Washington's law required CON's for any "tertiary health service," or a "specialized service that meets complicated medical needs of people and requires sufficient patient volume to optimize provider effectiveness, quality of service, and improved outcomes of care." RCW 70.38.105(4)(f). This includes PCI. WAC 246-310-700. In response, the Department adopted PCI CON regulations, WAC 246-310-700 -- 246-310-755, [*1162] among which are the regulations that YVMH challenges.

PCI, commonly known as coronary angioplasty or more simply angioplasty, is a non-surgical treatment [4] for coronary heart disease. PCI involves removing arterial plaque, thereby clearing out obstructed coronary arteries and ameliorating the effects of heart disease. The category includes several different procedures, but PCI always involves inserting some device into the coronary artery to remove plaque. Elective PCI's are performed when the patient is stable and no medical emergency requires immediate action.

HN2[] Section 246-310-745 sets the standards for granting elective PCI CON licenses to hospitals. First, the Department must estimate the number of elective PCI procedures that will be performed each year in a geographic planning area. To do this, it determines the area's use rate, which is the number of PCI's performed on persons over fifteen years old per 1000 persons. The use rate is then multiplied by an estimate of the area's population in that area for each year five years into the future.

The Department grants a new CON license if the estimated future need is substantially greater than licensed providers' capacity to perform elective PCI's ("net need"). But the Department does not grant a new PCI CON just because there is a net need in the planning area. A new provider must perform [5] a minimum of 300 PCI's per year. WAC 246-310-720. Therefore, the difference between current capacity and projected demand must exceed 300 for a new provider to receive a CON license. WAC 246-310-745(10) Step 4. If the difference is greater than 300, the Department divides the difference by 300 and rounds down to determine the additional need. WAC 246-310-745(10) Step 5. To illustrate, even if the difference is 575, or almost enough for two additional PCI programs, only one additional program will be licensed because 575 divided by 300 is not quite two.

C. YVMH's Claims

YVMH challenges three aspects of the PCI CON regulations. First, it takes issue with the definition of current capacity as the sum of all PCI's performed by providers that have CON approval. Defining current capacity in this way gives licensed hospitals a permanent franchise to perform elective PCI's. These hospitals can continue expanding their PCI capacity to ensure net need never arises in the planning area. Second, it challenges the calculation method for granting additional PCI's, which requires a full 300 additional net needed procedures before another CON will be granted in a planning area. Rounding down underestimates [6] the need for PCI programs. Third, it asserts that the 300 annual PCI minimum volume requirement is arbitrary because cardiologists agree that the appropriate annual minimum is 200.

YVMH brings two claims against Defendants. First, YVMH claims that the regulations violate the Sherman Anti-trust Act because they restrain competition by limiting the number of PCI providers. This injures consumers and hinders commerce. YVMH alleges that the state does not monitor or actively supervise the operation of these regulations so they are not protected by the state immunity doctrine. (Ct. Rec. 1 at 7.) Second, according to YVMH, the CON regulations violate the dormant Commerce Clause under the test articulated in Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 90 S. Ct. 844, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1970), because the regulations' burdens on interstate commerce outweigh their putative local benefits. (Ct. Rec. 1 at 6.)

[*1163] II. Discussion

A. Standard

HN3[] A motion for judgment on the pleadings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) is appropriate after the pleadings are closed. Although Defendants style their motion under Rules 12(b)(6) and 12(c), Defendants already filed an answer without asserting the defenses in this motion. Therefore, a Rule 12(b)(6) [7] motion is barred in this case, and this is a motion for judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12(c). See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b).

In a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a court may consider only legal issues. Enron Oil Trading & Transp. Co. v. Walbrook Ins. Co., Ltd., 132 F.3d 526, 528 (9th Cir. 1997). Material facts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, in this case, YVMH. McGann v. Ernst & Young, 102 F.3d 390, 392 (9th Cir. 1996). The court will grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings if the moving party can show a clear right to judgment as a matter of law from the face of the pleadings. George v. Pacific-CSC Work Furlough, 91 F.3d 1227, 1229 (9th Cir. 1996).

B. Motion to Supplement

After this motion was argued and submitted, YVMH moved to supplement its response with two expert reports. The Court declines to consider those reports at this time for two reasons. First, it would prejudice Defendants to consider them without converting this motion into a motion for summary judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(d). Second, the Court does not find the expert reports helpful in clarifying the legal issues in the case. Although YVMH claims they explain the anti-trust [8] and dormant commerce clause violations, they appear to assert policy arguments against PCI CON laws. YVMH's motion is denied.

C. Analysis

1. Anti-trust

YVMH asserts that the challenged regulations violate the Sherman Anti-trust Act by enabling hospitals that already have PCI CON licenses to perpetuate their elective PCI monopoly. Additionally, rounding down the estimated need serves no purpose other than to underestimate the number of required procedures, which artificially inflates prices. Finally, the regulation setting the minimum volume requirement at 300 is irrational and experts agree that the appropriate minimum volume requirement is 200 annual PCI's.

Defendants argue that the challenged regulations are actions of the State as sovereign, and as such are immune from anti-trust liability. Although the regulations have anti-competitive effects, Defendants say those effects are part of the State-designed system and the regulations delegate no market power to private parties.

HN4[] Generally speaking, restraints of trade imposed directly by States are immune from anti-trust liability. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-52, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943) ("an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over [9] its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress"). This immunity extends to the acts of the State executive branch, including administrative agencies such as the Department. Deak-Perera Hawaii, Inc. v. Dep't of Transp., 745 F.2d 1281, 1283 (9th Cir. 1984).

State restraints of trade are divided into two categories: unilateral and hybrid. See Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 267-68, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986). Hybrid restraints are not immune from anti-trust liability. Restraints are hybrid when the State "merely enforces private marketing decisions," [*1164] thereby granting private actors "a degree of private regulatory power." 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 345 n.8, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987) (citations omitted); Fisher, 475 U.S. at 268 (citing Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 665, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982)). But just because a law has anti-competitive effects that private parties acting in concert could not produce without violating the anti-trust laws does not mean it is hybrid. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266; Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Maleng, 522 F.3d 874, 889 (9th Cir. 2008); Mass. Food Ass'n v. Mass. Alcoholic Beverages Control Comm'n, 197 F.3d 560, 565 (1st Cir. 1999). The law must actually sanction [10] an arrangement between private parties that unlawfully restrains competition. Sanders v. Brown, 504 F.3d 903, 915 (9th Cir. 2007).

In contrast, restraints are unilateral and immune from anti-trust challenge when they do not delegate any market authority to private actors. A unilateral restraint's anti-competitive effects are the result of the State's regulation, not of State sanction of private violations. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266-67; Costco, 522 F.3d at 887.

YVMH's assertion that the restraint is hybrid need not be accepted as true at this stage. Because this is a legal conclusion, not a factual assertion, the Court does not automatically take it to be accurate. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949-52, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009); Point Ruston, LLC v. Pac. Nw. Reg'l Council of the United Bhd. Of Carpenters & Joiners of Am., 658 F. Supp. 2d 1266, 1273 (W.D. Wash. 2009).

YVMH makes three arguments that the challenged CON regulations are hybrid. First, YVMH claims that the licensing scheme gives licensed hospitals a local monopoly. This permits them to set prices without any supervision or control by the State. Second, based on Hertz Corp. v. City of New York, 1 F.3d 121 (2d Cir. 1993), YVMH argues [11] that the regulation's anti-competitive effects render it hybrid. Third, YMVH asserts that the State delegated market authority to hospitals with CON licenses because they have the ability to perpetuate their local monopolies.

These arguments are unpersuasive. First, a regulation that enables private actors to enjoy a monopoly is not necessarily a hybrid restraint. Although allowing only certain hospitals to perform elective PCI's might drive up cost by limiting supply and inhibiting competition, a regulation's anti-competitive effects are insufficient to render it hybrid. Those anti-competitive effects are not the result of private action or collaboration given the State seal of approval, but are contemplated by the State's licensing scheme. Cf. Costco, 522 F.3d at 890 (holding that a scheme that enabled price collusion among private actors was hybrid).

The cases YVMH cites for contrary authority are inapplicable. In Miller, the Ninth Circuit considered a statute whereby the State allowed liquor companies to set their own prices and then required them to keep those prices. 813 F.2d 1344. The court found the regulations compelled private parties to exchange price information and to fix [12] prices without State review. Id. at 1349-51. Such private collaboration is not protected by the state immunity doctrine. In contrast, the regulations in this case have incidental anti-competitive effects that are not caused by private action. Rather, the State limits the number of hospitals that may perform the procedures, which makes the procedures pricier. There is no private collusion at all, only a State-granted monopoly.

Second, to the extent Hertz is persuasive authority in this Circuit, its logic is questionable because it is irreconcilable [*1165] with Supreme Court decisions. In Hertz, the Second Circuit held that a New York City ordinance that prohibited rental car companies from charging renters more based on the city of their residence was a hybrid restraint. 1 F.3d at 127. The Hertz court reasoned that the ordinance was unlike rent control because it was not a regulatory scheme, there was no independent regulatory board to adjust rates, and it addressed an issue less central to municipal authority than housing. [2] Id. The Second Circuit also noted several "anticompetitive risks" identified in Supreme Court cases, including the city's ability to impose extra-territorial costs on [13] the industry and obstruction of regional efficiency by distorting local markets. 1 F.3d at 127.

The Court respectfully disagrees with the Second Circuit's decision in Hertz. In light of Fisher, the Second Circuit's logic in Hertz is unpersuasive because it focused on a law's anti-competitive risks rather than delegation of market authority to private actors. The ordinance in Hertz was unilaterally imposed by the local government. Although any regulation might distort the market, such distortions are insufficient to make a restraint hybrid. See Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266. To be hybrid, a restraint must give direct market authority to private parties. Therefore, Hertz does not help YVMH's cause.

YVMH's third argument is more nuanced. YVMH argues that the Department does not grant a CON approval unless there is a net need for elective PCI procedures in a geographic area. In order for there to be a net need, the projected demand for these procedures must exceed the existing providers' capacity to perform them. But by performing procedures [14] on individuals from outside the area, a hospital with a PCI CON license can increase its capacity to ensure local net need never arises. Therefore, although the local monopoly theoretically could end when local need outstrips licensed hospitals' ability to satisfy local PCI needs, in practice it never will because the monopolistic hospital can keep expanding its capacity.

To put it differently, YVMH argues that the regulations permit private actors to control markets. Hospitals with a PCI CON licenses can manipulate their PCI capacity to prevent others from intruding on their monopoly.

This argument ultimately does not persuade the Court. HN5[] Several Ninth Circuit opinions have rejected anti-trust challenges to State-created local monopolies. See, e.g., A-1 Ambulance Serv., Inc. v. County of Monterey, 90 F.3d 333 (9th Cir. 1996); Charley's Taxi Radio Dispatch Corp. v. SIDA of Hawaii, Inc., 810 F.2d 869 (9th Cir. 1987); Deak-Perera, 745 F.3d 1281. These opinions did not address whether the regulations were unilateral or hybrid, but they recognized that when the State deliberately creates a monopoly it is immune from anti-trust law. Defendants point out that Washington's PCI CON laws permit [15] temporary monopolies that might open if there is enough net need. The greater power of creating a permanent local monopoly, repeatedly validated by the Ninth Circuit, necessarily encompasses the lesser power of creating a local monopoly that may or may not be permanent.

None of the challenged regulations delegates any market power to private actors. The definition of current capacity comes directly from the State's regulation. It guarantees that hospitals with a PCI CON license may perform all the PCI's they can, but that is part of the regulatory [*1166] design. YVMH takes issue with the possibility that licensed hospitals will keep expanding their capacity and crowd out intruders, but the State granted them an initial license and expected they could perpetuate their monopoly in that way. Costco, 522 F.3d at 890. The minimum volume requirement and rounding down are internal calculation methods the Department uses. Although they may restrict competition, and may even be unwise policy, that does not make them unlawful. They are directives from the State. Whatever anti-competitive effects the regulations may have were part of the State's design. Therefore, the regulations are unilateral and immune [16] from anti-trust law, and YVMH's anti-trust claim is dismissed. [3]

2. Dormant Commerce Clause

HN6[] The language of the Commerce Clause does not explicitly limit the States' power over interstate commerce. [4] Nevertheless, it is well established that the Commerce Clause contains a negative or dormant aspect that limits the States' ability to regulate interstate trade. See, e.g., Dennis v. Higgins, 498 U.S. 439, 446, 111 S. Ct. 865, 112 L. Ed. 2d 969 (1991). The Supreme Court repeatedly held that States may not enforce laws that either 1) discriminate between in-state and out-of-state entities to protect in-state economic interests or 2) incidentally burden interstate commerce more than they benefit local [17] interests. City of Philadelphia v. New Jersey, 437 U.S. 617, 624, 98 S. Ct. 2531, 57 L. Ed. 2d 475 (1978); Pike, 397 U.S. at 142. Like so many rules in constitutional law, the dormant Commerce Clause has a number of exceptions, however. Defendants argue that YVMH lacks standing to sue for dormant Commerce Clause violations and that the challenged regulations are immune from Commerce Clause scrutiny because they were authorized by Congress.

a. Standing

Defendants argue that YVMH lacks standing to bring a dormant Commerce Clause claim for four reasons. First, YVMH has not pled its participation in interstate commerce. Second, YVMH cannot assert third-party standing in this case. Third, YVMH has not been harmed by a law that treats out-of-state companies differently from in-state companies. Finally, YVMH's operations in other states have not been harmed by these regulations because YVMH has no operations in other states.

HN8[] To sue in federal court, a plaintiff must have standing, including both constitutional and prudential components. See On the Green Apartments L.L.C. v. City of Tacoma, 241 F.3d 1235, 1239 (9th Cir. 2000). [18] To have constitutional standing, the plaintiff must have suffered an injury that is redressable by a favorable outcome. Id. Defendants do not argue that YVMH lacks constitutional standing. Indeed, YVMH has suffered financial injury because the challenged regulations prevent YVMH from performing elective PCI.

Defendants contest YVMH's prudential standing. HN9[] In order to have prudential [*1167] standing to sue for constitutional violations, the complaint must fall within the "zone of interests" protected by the constitutional provision at issue, in this case the Commerce Clause. Id. (citing Individuals for Responsible Gov't, Inc. v. Washoe County, 110 F.3d 699 (9th Cir. 1997)). The zone of interests is defined differently if the dormant Commerce Clause challenge is a facial challenge or one based on Pike.

Feb. 12, 1986) (holding that private health care providers proceeding under CON licenses are immune from anti-trust liability under the state action doctrine); Trident Neuro-Imaging Lab. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of S.C., Inc., No. 81-1639-1, 1982 WL 1955, at *6 (D.S.C. [4] HN7[] "The Congress shall have Power. . . To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes." U.S. Const. art. I, § 8.

The Fifth Circuit articulated this distinction nicely in National Solid Waste Management Association v. Pine Belt Regional Solid Waste Management Association, 389 F.3d 491 (5th Cir. 2004). In that case, a regional waste management authority required the residents of counties in the authority's service area to dispose of their trash at sites owned by the authority. Id. at 493. The Fifth Circuit held [19] that the plaintiffs lacked standing to sue for a facial challenge because they did not allege that they intended to ship waste from out of state into the region. Id. at 499-500. However, the court found the plaintiffs had prudential standing to challenge the regulations under Pike because they claimed they operated in interstate commerce and alleged that the challenged ordinance burdened their interstate business. Id. at 500-01.

Similarly, the Ninth Circuit held that it is the interested claimed, not the harm claimed, that matters for purposes of determining prudential standing to sue under the dormant Commerce Clause. City of Los Angeles v. County of Kern, 581 F.3d 841, 847-48 (9th Cir. 2009). In County of Kern, a waste-disposal company wanted to ship waste inside its home State but was discouraged from doing so by a statute that made it more expensive. The court held that the company did not have standing even though the increased cost would force it to ship waste out of state. Id. Only the harm (having to ship to out-of-state waste disposal sites), and not the interest (maintaining its in-state shipment), was out of state. In order for the company to have had standing, it would have [20] had to claim that the regulations thwarted some actual or potential interstate operation.

The Court concludes that YVMH has prudential standing to sue for the alleged violations. The Complaint adequately alleges that the challenged regulations burden YVMH's interstate business. Specifically, YVMH alleges that if it were allowed to perform elective PCI's, it would 1) provide elective PCI to out-of-state residents; 2) buy necessary PCI equipment from out-of-state vendors; and 3) recruit physicians and staff from outside Washington to perform PCI. (Ct. Rec. 1 at 6.) If these facts are true, the Department burdened YVMH's interest in participating in interstate commerce. Cf. Oregon v. Heavy Vehicle Elec. License Plate, Inc., 157 F. Supp. 2d 1158, 1169-70 (D. Or. 2001) (holding that State restrictions on electronic license plates might constitute an undue burden on interstate commerce so the claim fell within the zone of interests protected by the dormant Commerce Clause). YVMH need only plead that it has interstate commercial interests that are burdened by the challenged regulations. County of Kern, 581 F.3d at 847-48; Pine Belt, 389 F.3d at 501; see also Boston Stock Exch. v. State Tax Comm'n, 429 U.S. 318, 321 n.3, 97 S. Ct. 599, 50 L. Ed. 2d 514 (1977) [21] (holding that stock exchanges asserting their rights to engage in interstate commerce free of discriminatory taxes are within the zone of interests protected by the Commerce clause). This it has done. It pled that it operates in interstate commerce and those operations would include PCI if not for the CON regulations.

Defendants' argument under On the Green is misguided. In that case, the [*1168] plaintiff, an apartment-complex operator, challenged a local ordinance that required a city utility to collect waste from all businesses and residents in the city and dispose of it in a city-owned landfill. 241 F.3d at 1237. The Ninth Circuit held that the plaintiff lacked standing. Id. at 1239-40. Its only grievance was that it was forced to pay for services that it wished to perform itself. It had no plans to ship waste across state lines, and did not allege that its interstate commercial activities were burdened in any way. Id. As a result, the injury it claimed was only "marginally related to the purposes implicit in the dormant Commerce Clause." Id. at 1240 (citing Individuals for Responsible Gov't, Inc., 110 F.3d 699). By negative inference, had the plaintiff pled the ordinance burdened specific [22] interstate contracts, it would have had standing. The apartment operator in On the Green was indistinguishable in relevant respects from the trash hauler in County of Kern. Neither had any plans to engage in interstate commerce that were burdened by the challenged regulation. 581 F.3d at 847; 241 F.3d at 1239-40. In contrast, YVMH pled that it has an actual interest in contracts with out-of-state medical suppliers, physicians, and potential PCI patients. The challenged regulations make it impossible for those contracts to come to fruition. Further, YVMH is not asserting a third party's rights, but its own frustrated rights to participate in interstate commerce. Accordingly, YVMH has standing under the dormant Commerce Clause.

b. Congressional Authorization

Defendants argue that the 1974 NHPRDA authorized Washington's CON statute, under which the Department issued the challenged regulations. According to Defendants, because Congress authorized the regulations, they are not subject to attack under the dormant Commerce Clause. Furthermore, Defendants say, the subsequent repeal of the NHPRDA did not repeal the authorization for CON statutes, but only removed the requirement that States have [23] CON statutes if they wished to receive federal health care funding.

HN10[] An otherwise unconstitutional State burden on interstate commerce is permissible if authorized by Congress. C & A Carbone, Inc. v. Town of Clarkstown, 511 U.S. 383, 408, 114 S. Ct. 1677, 128 L. Ed. 2d 399 (1994); Shamrock Farms Co. v. Veneman, 146 F.3d 1177, 1179 (9th Cir. 1998). Congressional authorization for State burdens on interstate commerce must be very clear for the burden to survive dormant Commerce Clause scrutiny. Wyoming v. Oklahoma, 502 U.S. 437, 458, 112 S. Ct. 789, 117 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1992). [5] The language must indicate a desire [*1169] to alter the limits of state power imposed by the Commerce Clause. United States v. Pub. Util. Comm'n of Cal., 345 U.S. 295, 304, 73 S. Ct. 706, 97 L. Ed. 1020 (1953). The State asserting Congressional authorization bears the burden of showing that Congress authorized the State action. Id.

Research revealed only one case addressing a dormant Commerce Clause challenge to a health care CON law. See Walgreen Co. v. Rullan, 405 F.3d 50 (1st Cir. 2005). That case did not discuss whether Congress authorized the CON statute through the NHPRDA, and the defendant-appellee Puerto Rico Health Department did not raise the defense in its brief. See 2004 WL 5661258.

The Court holds that [25] the NHPRDA clearly authorized PCI CON regulations such as the one at issue. Although the NHPRDA did not explicitly say that it allowed the States to burden interstate commerce, it required states receiving federal funding to devise programs to ensure that "only those [health care] services, facilities, and organizations found to be needed shall be offered or developed in the State." Pub. L. No. 93-541, 88 Stat. 2225 § 1523(a). Through this mandate, Congress necessarily permitted and indeed encouraged some restrictions of interstate commerce. As YVMH complains, limiting the number of CON licenses burdens hospitals' interstate contracts. Hospitals that lack licenses would service out-of-state patients, purchase supplies from out-of-state companies, and recruit out-of-state physicians if they were allowed to perform those services. HN12[] Because the natural result of the CON laws required by the NHPRDA is to burden interstate commerce, Congress authorized dormant Commerce Clause violations. See Ne. Bancorp., 472 U.S. at 174-75; White v. Mass. Council of Constr. Employers, 460 U.S. 204, 213, 103 S. Ct. 1042, 75 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1983) (concluding that a federal program intended to encourage economic revitalization "affirmatively [26] permit[ted] the type of parochial favoritism" promoted by a municipal order that required city-funded construction projects to be performed by a local work force).

Moreover, the Court is not convinced that repeal of the NHPRDA extinguished that authorization. YVMH has the burden of showing that Congress intended to revoke permission to burden interstate commerce when it repealed the NHPRDA. See Cent. Valley Chrysler-Jeep v. Witherspoon, 456 F. Supp. 2d 1160, 1185 (E.D. Cal. 2006). It did not meet that burden. Relying on Congress's CON law requirements, all states but one enacted CON laws after the [5] The Supreme Court frequently has held that Congress did not state its intent to relieve a state action from the limits of the Commerce Clause sufficiently explicitly. See, e.g., South-Central Timber Dev., Inc. v. Wunnicke, 467 U.S. 82, 90, 104 S. Ct. 2237, 81 L. Ed. 2d 71 (1984) (holding that a Congressional policy allowing vertical integration of logging on federal lands does not indicate that a similar [24] policy is permissible on State lands); New England Power Co. v. New Hampshire, 455 U.S. 331, 102 S. Ct. 1096, 71 L. Ed. 2d 188 (1982) (holding that the Federal Power Act did not evince an intent to permit States to prohibit export of hydroelectric power out of state); Sporhase v. Nebraska ex rel. Douglas, 458 U.S. 941, 959-60, 102 S. Ct. 3456, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1254 (1982) (reasoning that Congressional deference to States on water law does not indicate that Congress did not intend for the Commerce Clause to apply to State water regulations).

HN11[] But Congress must authorize only the specific action, not the consequences of that action, in order to exempt it from liability under the dormant Commerce Clause. If the explicitly-authorized action has consequences that burden interstate commerce, it is immune from a dormant Commerce Clause challenge. See Ne. Bancorp., 472 U.S. at 174-75.

NHPRDA. Lowell M. Zeta, Fundamental First Steps Along the Road to Health Care Reform: Eliminating the Bureaucratic Burdens of Certificate of Need Programs and Embracing Market Competition to Improve State Health Care Systems, 41 Creighton L. Rev. 727, 731 (2008). When Congress repealed the NHPRDA, it did not comment on all the CON regulations then existing in a supermajority of States. Nor did Congress revoke federal health care funding for States that had CON laws passed in response to its mandate. Even after the repeal, thirty-six states and the District of Columbia retained their CON laws [27] and their federal funding. Id. at 732. The Court infers from this that Congress continued to approve of CON laws.

The scant legislative history of the repeal supports this inference. President Reagan issued a statement when he signed the bill that repealed the NHPRDA. He indicated that the federal government was withdrawing from regulating an area in which it had caused considerable inefficiencies:

> [*1170] It is also with great pleasure that I can finally lay to rest the Federal health planning authorities. I have sought their repeal since I assumed office. These authorities, while perhaps well-intentioned when they were enacted in the 1970s, have only served to insert the Federal government into a process that is best reserved to the marketplace.

Statement by President Ronald Reagan on Signing S. 1744, 22 Weekly Comp. Pres. Doc. 1565 (Nov. 17, 1986). Notably, President Reagan did not say that the States no longer had the power to regulate health care planning when it impacted interstate commerce. Rather, the NHPRDA was repealed because the federal government was ill equipped to impose such requirements. The States still could individually decide whether to require CON licenses or leave health [28] care planning to the market. HN13[] Taking together the evidence of Congressional intent and the States' reliance on the NHPRDA when they passed their CON laws, the Court concludes that the repeal of the NHPRDA removed only the requirement and not the authorization for State CON laws.

Defendants met their burden of showing that Congress authorized Washington's PCI CON regulations. Those regulations are immune from dormant Commerce Clause scrutiny. [6]

III. Conclusion

For the reasons given above, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

1. Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings (Ct. Rec. 31) is GRANTED.

2. YVMH's Motion to Supplement (Ct. Rec. 50) is DENIED. The related Motion to Expedite (Ct. Rec. 49) is GRANTED.

3. The Clerk of the Court is DIRECTED to [29] enter judgment in Defendants' favor on all claims.

4. This file shall be closed.

IT IS SO ORDERED. The District Court Executive is directed to enter this Order and distribute copies to counsel.

DATED this 25th day of May 2010.

[6] Defendants also move to dismiss YVMH's "privileges and immunities" claim. However, as YVMH makes clear in its response, that is not a separate claim, but simply a rephrasing of its claim for attorney's fees and costs under the dormant Commerce Clause through 42 U.S.C. § 1983. As discussed above, the Court dismisses that claim, so further treatment of the so-called privileges and immunities claim is unnecessary.

ORDER GRANTING DREYER'S ENTITIES' MOTION TO DISMISS (Docket No. 29)

Plaintiff Ice Cream Distributors of Evansville, LLC (ICD) alleges that Defendants Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc.; Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream Holdings, Inc.; Edy's Grand Ice Cream, Inc. (collectively, Dreyer's); and Defendant Randy Stathers violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68; federal and state antitrust laws; and California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus & Prof. Code §§ 17200, et seq. Dreyer's moves to dismiss ICD's complaint [*2] for failure to state a claim. Mr. Stathers has not answered

ICD's complaint and does not join in the motion. [1] ICD opposes the motion in part. The motion was heard on April 29, 2010. Having considered oral argument and the papers submitted by the parties, the Court GRANTS Dreyer's motion.

Unless otherwise indicated, the following allegations are contained in ICD's complaint.

ICD is a limited liability corporation registered in Kentucky. Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc. and Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream Holdings, Inc. are Delaware corporations with a principal place of business in California. At all times relevant to this action, Edy's Grand Ice Cream, Inc., a California corporation, was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc., which itself was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream Holdings, Inc. Dreyer's Entities' Request for Judicial Notice (RJN), Exs. 2-3. [2]

ICD sold and distributed ice cream products to grocery and convenience stores in Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky.

In or around July, 2004, Dreyer's employees conspired "to wrongfully acquire ICD's accounts through the use of false statements, unfair business practices, and hiring away key employees from ICD to steal ICD's account information." First Am. Compl. (1AC) PP 22 and 25. To further this scheme, these employees communicated by telephone and email.

In or around December, 2004, Dreyer's contacted ICD about entering into a "Standard Distributorship Agreement - Grocery Channel" (Grocery Agreement), which would govern distribution of Dreyer's products to grocery stores, and a "Standard Distributorship Agreement - New Channel" (New Channel Agreement), which would provide terms for distribution to convenience stores. 1AC PP 15 and 16. Dreyer's conditioned the execution of a Grocery Agreement on ICD agreeing to a New Channel Agreement that would prohibit ICD from selling or distributing ice cream products of Dreyer's [*4] competitors, including Unilever, to convenience stores. ICD was hesitant to enter into such an exclusive distribution agreement without compensation for "the risk of narrowing its product selection . . . ." Compl. P 18.

On or around December 12, 2005, Dreyer's notified ICD that it would no longer sell its products to ICD for distribution in grocery stores because ICD refused to enter into an exclusive distribution agreement. As a result, ICD could no longer serve its grocery store accounts, causing a loss of "over half of its business." 1AC P 34.

Also, beginning in December, 2005, Dreyer's made "false and slanderous statements" about ICD. 1AC P 52. These statements caused many convenience stores and regional ice cream distributors to terminate their relationships with ICD. Most of these statements were made between December, 2005 and March, 2006; three were communicated in early 2007. ICD was informed by "Walgreens-Louisville" that, during the same period, "Dreyer's was taking similar actions against various other local distributors around the country." 1AC P 71.

At around the same time, Dreyer's recruited and hired Defendant Stathers, who was an ICD branch manager, and Buddy Stone, a [*5] driver for ICD. Stathers and Stone had substantial knowledge of ICD's business practices. Both agreed to misappropriate, on behalf of Dreyer's, ICD's confidential information.

ICD contends that Defendants engaged in racketeering activity and imposed unreasonable restraints of trade. ICD brings four claims under the RICO Act, asserting that Defendants violated and conspired to violate 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962(a) and 1962(c). It also asserts claims for violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act and California's Cartwright Act and UCL. ICD maintains that Defendants caused the "total collapse" of its business, leading it to cease operations in or around September, 2007. 1AC P 73.

[1] Pursuant to stipulation, the Court extended the time for Mr. Stathers to answer ICD's complaint. (Docket No. 33.)

[2] Dreyer's requests judicial notice of filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission and with the Delaware Secretary of State. Because the facts contained in these filings [*3] are "capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned," the Court grants Dreyer's request. Fed. R. Evid. 201.

LEGAL STANDARD

A complaint must contain a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim is appropriate only when the complaint does not give the defendant fair notice of a legally cognizable claim and the grounds on which it rests. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). In considering whether the complaint is sufficient to state a claim, the court will take all material allegations as true [*6] and construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. NL Indus., Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986). However, this principle is inapplicable to legal conclusions; "threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements," are not taken as true. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

When granting a motion to dismiss, the court is generally required to grant the plaintiff leave to amend, even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless amendment would be futile. Cook, Perkiss & Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv. Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 246-47 (9th Cir. 1990). In determining whether amendment would be futile, the court examines whether the complaint could be amended to cure the defect requiring dismissal "without contradicting any of the allegations of [the] original complaint." Reddy v. Litton Indus., Inc., 912 F.2d 291, 296 (9th Cir. 1990). Leave to amend should be liberally granted, but an amended complaint cannot allege facts inconsistent with the challenged pleading. Id. at 296-97.

DISCUSSION

I. RICO Claims

To state a claim for relief in a private [*7] RICO action, ICD must allege four essential elements: (1) a pattern of racketeering activity, (2) the existence of an enterprise engaged in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, (3) a nexus between the pattern of racketeering activity and the enterprise and (4) an injury to its business or property by reason of the above. Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Company, Inc. et al., 473 U.S. 479, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985). The racketeering activities upon which ICD relies are the federal offenses of mail fraud and wire fraud. "A wire fraud violation consists of (1) the formation of a scheme or artifice to defraud; (2) use of the United States wires or causing a use of the United States wires in furtherance of the scheme; and (3) specific intent to deceive or defraud." Odom v. Microsoft Corp., 486 F.3d 541, 554 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation marks omitted); 18 U.S.C. § 1343. The elements of mail fraud differ only in that they involve the use of the United States mails rather than wires. See 18 U.S.C. § 1341. All such allegations must be plead with particularity. Moore v. Kayport Package Express, Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 541 (9th Cir. 1989).

Dreyer's argues that ICD's four RICO claims fail because ICD does not allege [*8] a pattern of racketeering activity and proximate causation. Even if these threshold elements were plead, Dreyer's contends that ICD's claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) fails for the independent reason that ICD did not plead RICO persons distinct from the RICO enterprise.

ICD does not oppose dismissal of its claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a), acknowledging that it has not sufficiently plead injury resulting from Dreyer's investment of racketeering funds. Opp'n at 8. Accordingly, for this reason and those discussed below, this claim is dismissed with leave to amend. Because ICD's § 1962(a) claim serves as a predicate for one of its claims under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d), which proscribes conspiracies to commit RICO violations, the Court likewise dismisses that claim with leave to amend.

A. Pattern of Racketeering Activity

"A 'pattern' of racketeering activity . . . requires proof that the racketeering predicates are related and 'that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity.'" Turner v. Cook, 362 F.3d 1219, 1229 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting H.J. Inc. v. Nw. Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S. Ct. 2893, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1989)). A pattern can be shown through either closed- or open-ended continuity. Turner, 362 F.3d at 1229. [*9] To allege closed-ended continuity, a plaintiff must aver a "series of related predicates" that extends "over a substantial period of time" and threatens future criminal conduct. Id. (citing Howard v. Am. Online, Inc., 208 F.3d 741, 750 (9th Cir. 2000)) (editing marks omitted). To plead open-ended continuity, a plaintiff "must charge a form of predicate misconduct that 'by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition.'" Turner, 362 F.3d at 1229 (quoting Religious Tech. Ctr. v. Wollersheim, 971 F.2d 364, 366 (9th Cir. 1992)).

ICD contends that it pleads a pattern through closed-ended continuity, referring to its allegations of misconduct spanning from July, 2004 through 2007. In particular, ICD identifies eleven statements between December, 2005 and March, 2006. However, with regard to nine of them, ICD fails to plead the mode through which Dreyer's communicated. [3] See 1AC PP 53, 56-61, 66-67. Therefore, as plead, these nine communications do not constitute mail or wire fraud. ICD does allege that Dreyer's communicated two allegedly false statements by wire, 1AC PP 55 and 65; however, two instances of alleged wire fraud do not establish closed-ended continuity.

Assuming ICD plead all eleven communications with sufficient specificity, mail and wire fraud over a four-month period would not constitute "a 'series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time.'" Turner, 362 F.3d at 1231. To expand the timeframe, ICD refers to conduct that occurred in July, 2004. Then, Dreyer's employees allegedly conspired "to wrongfully acquire ICD's accounts through the use of false statements, unfair business practices, and hiring away key employees from ICD to steal ICD's account information." 1AC P 22. ICD does not cite authority providing that the goal of this conduct -- acquiring ICD's accounts -- constitutes racketeering activity under 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). And although ICD alleges that Dreyer's used "false statements" to achieve this end, it fails to plead these statements with specificity. ICD has not identified the "who, what, where, or why" of these alleged false statements or "set [*11] forth what is false or misleading about" them and why they are false. Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003) (citation and quotation marks omitted). Thus, as plead, the July, 2004 conduct of which ICD complains cannot serve as a predicate for its RICO claim. [4]

ICD also cites three statements allegedly made in 2007. However, these three statements, along with the eleven others made between December, 2005 and March, 2006 do not constitute conduct over a substantial period of time, which is necessary to support a RICO claim. See Turner, 362 F.3d at 1231 (concluding that ninety-four communications over a two-month period, along with three from the prior year, did not suffice as a pattern of racketeering activity). Furthermore, ICD fails to plead that at least two of these statements were false. 1AC PP 62 and 64. [5] Accordingly, ICD has not alleged a pattern through closed-ended continuity.

ICD likewise fails to plead a pattern through open-ended continuity. ICD contends that the statements between December, 2005 and March, 2006 demonstrated a threat of future misconduct. However, ICD has not plead these acts with the specificity required to suggest the communications constituted wire and mail fraud. And even if it had, ICD has not alleged facts to suggest a threat of future misconduct. ICD avers that Dreyer's identified Unilever as its "number one nemesis" and that it learned through Walgreens that Dreyer's engaged "in similar actions against various other local distributors." 1AC P 71. Citing Ticor Title Insurance v. Florida, ICD maintains that these allegations suggest a "regular way of conducting business" sufficient to show a threat of future misconduct. 937 F.2d 447, 450 (9th Cir. 1991). However, Dreyer's statement about its competitor, on its own, does not suggest that it will engage in future racketeering activity. And ICD fails to allege facts to support its claim that Dreyer's harmed other regional distributors through wire and mail fraud. [*13] If it intends to allege such fraudulent conduct, ICD

[3] ICD [*10] makes a broad allegation that Dreyer's communicated by telephone, U.S. mail and the Internet to further its alleged fraudulent scheme. 1AC P 76. However, this does not satisfy the specificity required for RICO claims.

[4] Furthermore, the alleged enterprise did not exist at that time. Although ICD avers that Mr. Stathers was part of the enterprise, it alleges that he became associated with Dreyer's in January, 2006.

[5] ICD does not appear to consider these statements false and misleading. As discussed [*12] in greater detail below, ICD argues that only one of the statements made in 2007 was false and misleading. See Opp'n at 13.

must allege facts with specificity. In its current complaint, ICD does not do so. Accordingly, it does not allege a pattern through open-ended continuity.

Because ICD fails to plead a pattern of racketeering conduct, the Court dismisses all of its RICO claims with leave to amend.

B. Proximate Causation

To show an injury under RICO, a plaintiff must show a concrete financial loss, not mere injury to a valuable intangible property interest. Oscar v. Univ. Students Coop. Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783, 785 (9th Cir. 1992); Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Stites, 258 F.3d 1016, 1021 (9th Cir. 2001). The Supreme Court has stated that there must be "some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. Thus, a plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover." Holmes v. Sec. Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268-69, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1992). "When a court evaluates a RICO claim for proximate causation, the central question it must ask is whether the alleged violation led directly to plaintiff's injuries." [*14] Anza v. Ideal Steel Supply Corp., 547 U.S. 451, 460-61, 126 S. Ct. 1991, 164 L. Ed. 2d 720 (2006).

ICD adequately alleges that Defendants' acts proximately caused its injury. Although ICD may be seeking damages in excess of the harm Defendants actually caused, this would not defeat causation.

C. Claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)

Under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c),

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

To establish liability under this section, a plaintiff must allege "(1) a 'person'; and (2) an 'enterprise' that is not simply the same 'person' referred to by a different name." Living Designs, Inc. v. E.I. Dupont de Nemours & Co., 431 F.3d 353, 361 (9th Cir. 2005) (quoting Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 161, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 (2001)). In other words, a RICO "enterprise" [6] must constitute an entity distinct from the RICO "person." Living Designs, 431 F.3d at 361; River City Markets, Inc. v. Fleming Foods W., Inc., 960 F.2d 1458, 1461 (9th Cir. 1992) [*15] (stating that "a single individual or entity cannot be both the RICO enterprise and an individual RICO defendant"); see also Walter v. Drayson, 538 F.3d 1244, 1247 (9th Cir. 2008).

ICD pleads that the three Dreyer's entities and Mr. Stathers are RICO "persons" that also comprise the RICO "enterprise." This does not satisfy the distinctiveness requirement. At the time the alleged activity took place, Mr. Stathers was a Dreyer's employee, and Edy's was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc. [7] An "enterprise" comprised of a corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary and an employee of that corporate family is not a being sufficiently distinct from these entities as "persons." See Living Designs, 431 F.3d at 361-62; Fogie v. THORN Americas, Inc., 190 F.3d 889, 896 (8th Cir. 1999) (concluding that a parent and subsidiary are not sufficiently distinct for the purposes of § 1962(c)); *Greenstein v. Peters, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 124196, 2009 WL 722067, at 2 (C.D. Cal.). As plead, the RICO "enterprise" [*16] is indistinguishable from the RICO "persons."

ICD cites River City Markets, Inc. v. Fleming Foods West, Inc., in which the Ninth Circuit stated that "a plaintiff is free to name all members of an association-in-fact enterprise as individual defendants." 960 F.2d 1458, 1462 (9th Cir. 1992) (citations omitted). However, River City is inapposite because it involved an enterprise comprised of two separate corporate families that "associated together in a business relationship akin to a joint venture . . . ." Id. at 1461. Thus, the combination of the individual defendants in the enterprise created a new entity because they had not been previously related. As the court explained, "Logically, one can associate with a group of which he is a member, with the member and the group remaining distinct entities." Id. The same does not apply here. Unlike in River City, the three Dreyer's Defendants are all part of the same corporate family, of which Mr. Strathers is an employee. The combination of Defendants as an enterprise does not create a sufficiently distinct being. Thus, ICD's reliance on River [*17] City is misplaced.

[6] An enterprise "includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4).

Accordingly, even if ICD adequately plead a pattern of racketeering activity, its § 1962(c) claim would nevertheless fail because it does not plead RICO persons that are sufficiently distinct from the alleged RICO enterprise. For this additional reason, the Court dismisses this claim with leave to amend. Because ICD's § 1962(c) claim serves as a predicate for one of its claims under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d), that claim is likewise dismissed with leave to amend.

II. Federal and State Antitrust Claims

A. Sherman Act Claim

To state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff "must demonstrate: '(1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis; and (3) that the restraint affected interstate commerce.'" Tanaka v. Univ. of S. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1062 (9th Cir. 2001) (quoting Hairston v. Pac. 10 Conference, 101 F.3d 1315, 1318 (9th Cir. 1996)).

Dreyer's argues that ICD's antitrust claims must be dismissed because ICD fails to allege an antitrust conspiracy and an injury to competition. Dreyer's also contends that ICD does not plead an unlawful [*18] tying arrangement.

1. Existence of a Contract, Combination or Conspiracy ICD alleges that Defendants entered into an agreement to demand "that ICD cease distribution and sale of all of Dreyer's competitors' products, namely Unilever products, and . . . enter into an agreement whereby ICD would distribute Dreyer's products exclusively." 1AC P 122. However, as plead, only Edy's and Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc. and its employees were responsible for this alleged anti-competitive conduct. Coordinated acts among a corporation, its wholly-owned subsidiary and its employees do not establish the type of conspiracy to which § 1 is directed. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 777, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (concluding that a corporation "and its wholly owned subsidiary . . . are incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act"); see also Jack Russell Terrier Network for N. Cal. v. Am. Kennel Club, Inc., 407 F.3d 1027, 1034 (9th Cir. 2005) ("The crucial question is whether the entities alleged to have conspired maintain an 'economic unity,' and whether the entities were either actual or potential competitors."). These actors are not "pursuing separate economic [*19] interests, so agreements among them do not suddenly bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals." Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769. Section 1 applies only to "restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy" and therefore "leaves untouched a single firm's anticompetitive conduct . . . ." Id. at 775.

To save its claim, ICD argues that, when "Dreyer's was attempting to force ICD into unlawful exclusivity and tying arrangements," Mr. Stathers was an ICD employee. Opp'n at 10. Although this may be true, it is irrelevant. To allege a conspiracy involving Mr. Stathers, ICD must plead that, while working for ICD, he agreed with Dreyer's to impose an unreasonable restraint of trade. [8] Furthermore, ICD does not allege that Mr. Stathers was an actual or potential competitor of ICD. Thus, Mr. Stathers does not appear legally capable of participating in an antitrust conspiracy.

[8] In its complaint, ICD identifies Mr. Stathers as part of a group of persons that "also conspired to force ICD into improper tying arrangements and exclusivity arrangements." 1AC P 23. However, ICD does not plead facts to suggest that Mr. Stathers associated with Dreyer's prior to his [*20] employment in January, 2006. Thus, as alleged, Mr. Stathers did not "conspire" with Dreyer's until he was a Dreyer's employee.

ICD does not allege a contract, combination or conspiracy to support its § 1 claim. Accordingly, the Court dismisses ICD's Sherman Act claim with leave to amend.

2. Injury to Competition

"Indispensable to any section 1 claim is an allegation that competition has been injured rather than merely competitors." Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 734 (9th Cir. 1987) (emphasis in original); *see also In re Webkinz Antitrust Litig., 695 F. Supp. 2d 987, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20724, 2010 WL 597990, at 5 (N.D. Cal.). "'The intent proscribed by the antitrust laws lies in the purpose to harm competition in the relevant market, not to harm a particular competitor.'" Rutman Wine, 829 F.2d at 735 (quoting A.H. Cox & Co. v. Star Machinery, 653 F.2d 1302, 1307 (9th Cir. 1981)). "In order successfully to allege injury to competition, a section one claimant may not merely recite the bare legal conclusion that competition has been restrained unreasonably. Rather, a claimant must, at a minimum, sketch the outline of the antitrust violation with allegations of supporting factual detail." Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507-08 (9th Cir. 1989) [*21] (citing Rutman Wine, 829 F.2d at 736).

ICD pleads that the alleged demands by Dreyer's that it enter into exclusivity agreements had "the probable effect of foreclosing competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce." 1AC P 122. Although not clearly stated, it appears that ICD complains that Dreyer's harmed competition in the market for novelty ice cream products sold in convenience stores. See 1AC P 123 (pleading that Dreyer's "imposed an illegal tying arrangement on ICD by using its market power in grocery store accounts to demand that ICD purchase Defendants' novelty ice cream products, a distinct market in which Defendants Dreyer's and Edy's did not have market power"); Opp'n at 11 ("In the case at hand, the purpose of Dreyer's exclusivity requests were centered on its desire to damage Unilever's business and pick up market share."). However, ICD fails to plead any facts to suggest that Dreyer's reduced competition in this market or negatively impacted its competitors, such as Unilever. See Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir. 1995). And even if ICD made such allegations, it must also plead facts concerning how the conduct harmed consumers. [*22] Id. ("Of course, conduct that eliminates rivals reduces competition. But reduction of competition does not invoke the Sherman Act until it harms consumer welfare.").

Instead of pleading facts addressing injury to the market, ICD alleges harm to its business. [9] This injury is not sufficient to sustain a claim under the Sherman Act. Accordingly, even if ICD plead an antitrust conspiracy, its Sherman Act claim would nevertheless fail because it failed to allege an injury to competition.

3. Illegal Tying Arrangement

"A tying arrangement is a device used by a seller with market power in one product market to extend its market power to a distinct product market." Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 912 (9th Cir. 2008) [*23] (citation omitted). "To accomplish this objective, the seller conditions the sale of one product (the tying product) on the buyer's purchase of a second product (the tied product)." Id. "For a tying claim to suffer per se condemnation, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant tied together the sale of two distinct products or services; (2) that the defendant possesses enough economic power in the tying product market to coerce its customers into purchasing the tied product; and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a 'not insubstantial volume of commerce' in the tied product market." Id. at 913 (citation omitted).

ICD seems to plead that Dreyer's tied the sale of its multiple-serving ice cream product packages, generally marketed in grocery stores, to the purchase of its individual "novelty ice cream products," which are typically carried by convenience stories. 1AC P 123; Opp'n at 12. ICD suggests that Dreyer's did so because, although it had a presence in the grocery store distribution channel, it lacked a similar foothold in the convenience store channel.

[9] ICD cites Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959), which does not support its position. Klor's involved allegations of a group boycott, whereby various manufacturers, distributors and a retailer conspired "either not to sell to Klor's or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms." 359 U.S. at 209. Here, ICD does not plead that Dreyer's and the regional ice cream distributors conspired to engage in a group boycott against ICD.

ICD tying theory fails because, at the least, it has failed to allege that this purported tying arrangement impacted a "not [*24] insubstantial volume of commerce" in the novelty ice cream product market. ICD argues that its allegations that "it lost over six hundred convenience stores" supports its claim. ICD misapprehends the nature of this element. Tying arrangements are prohibited on the theory that they cause "reduced competition in the market for the tied product." Rick-Mik Enters., Inc. v. Equilon Enters. LLC, 532 F.3d 963, 971 (9th Cir. 2008) (citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984)). Thus, as above, ICD's allegation that it was harmed by the alleged tying conduct does not speak to whether competition in the convenience store product market was reduced.

Accordingly, like its allegations of an antitrust conspiracy, ICD's theory of liability based on tying fails. In any amended complaint, ICD must make factual allegations, if it can truthfully do so, that Dreyer's conditioned its sale of multiple-serving ice cream product packages on ICD's purchase of its novelty ice cream products, that Dreyer's had sufficient market power in the multiple-serving ice cream product market to coerce its customers and that this tying arrangement affected a "not [*25] insubstantial amount of commerce," through a reduction in competition, in the novelty ice cream market.

B. Cartwright Act Claim

The pleading requirements under the Sherman and Cartwright Acts are the same. County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001). Because ICD does not state a Sherman Act claim, its Cartwright Act claim likewise fails and is dismissed with leave to amend.

III. UCL Claim

California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL) prohibits any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. The UCL incorporates other laws and treats violations of those laws as unlawful business practices independently actionable under state law. Chabner v. United Omaha Life Ins. Co., 225 F.3d 1042, 1048 (9th Cir. 2000). Violation of almost any federal, state or local law may serve as the basis for a UCL claim. Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994). In addition, a business practice may be "unfair or fraudulent in violation of the UCL even if the practice does not violate any law." Olszewski v. Scripps Health, 30 Cal. 4th 798, 827, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 69 P.3d 927 (2003).

ICD pleads under the unlawful prong of the UCL, [10] alleging that Dreyer's [*26] violated the RICO Act, the Sherman Act, the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act (CUTSA), the Cartwright Act and California Business & Professions Code section 17500, and interfered with its economic relations.

Because it fails to state claims for violations of the RICO Act and state and federal antitrust laws, ICD's UCL claim must be dismissed insofar as it is based on those claims. And although ICD also premises [*27] its UCL claim on violations of the CUTSA and intentional interference with economic relations, [11] the claim is nevertheless dismissed in its entirety for the reasons stated below.

A. Statute of Limitations

[10] In its complaint, ICD states that the alleged violations of these statutes constituted "unfair" business practices. 1AC P 112. However, because ICD states in its opposition that its UCL claim is based on "violations of . . . 'borrowed' laws," the Court understands ICD to plead the unlawful prong of the UCL. Opp'n at 15. Pleading the "unfair" prong of the UCL requires a plaintiff to plead "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commun's v. L.A. Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). As noted above, ICD fails to allege harm to competition.

[11] Dreyer's maintains that ICD fails to allege facts supporting such unlawful conduct by each Dreyer's entity. However, ICD pleads that the Dreyer's entities committed these unlawful acts through their employees. Assuming they are agents of Dreyer's, the employees' actions can be imputed on to their employer.

"The UCL has a four-year statute of limitations, which applies even if the borrowed statute has a shorter limitations statute." Blanks v. Shaw, 171 Cal. App. 4th 336, 364, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 710 (2009) (citing Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17208); see also Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Prods. Co., 23 Cal. 4th 163, 179, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518, 999 P.2d 706 (2000) ("Any action on any UCL cause of action is subject to the four-year limitations period created by that section.") (emphasis in original). The "general rule is that a UCL cause of action borrows the substantive portion of the borrowed statute to prove the 'unlawful' prong of that statute, but not the limitations procedural part of the borrowed statute." Blanks, 171 Cal. App. 4th at 364.

Because [*28] ICD initiated this action on December 11, 2009, it may maintain its UCL claim based on conduct that occurred on or after December 11, 2005. [12]

B. Application of UCL to Conduct Outside of California

California's Unfair Competition Law "does not apply to actions occurring outside of California that injure non-residents." Standfacts Credit Servs., Inc. v. Experian Information Solutions, Inc., 405 F. Supp. 2d 1141, 1148 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (citing Norwest Mortgage, Inc. v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 4th 214, 226, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18 (1999)). Nonetheless, a claim under section 17200 may be asserted by a non-resident plaintiff if the challenged conduct occurred in or emanated from California. Wershba v. Apple Computer, Inc., 91 Cal. App 4th 224, 241-42, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 145 (2001); Norwest Mortgage, 72 Cal. App. 4th at 222.

The conduct of which ICD complains largely took place outside of California and, as a result, cannot provide a basis for its UCL claim. Accordingly, the claim is dismissed with leave to amend to allege [*29] conduct that occurred in or emanated from California.

C. Restitution

Under the UCL, private plaintiffs may only seek injunctive or restitutionary relief. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203; see also Madrid v. Perot Sys. Corp., 130 Cal. App. 4th 440, 452-53, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 (2005). In "the context of the UCL, 'restitution' is limited to the return of property or funds in which the plaintiff has an ownership interest (or is claiming through someone with an ownership interest)." Madrid, 130 Cal. App. 4th at 453 (citation omitted). Dreyer's maintains that ICD's UCL claim must be dismissed because ICD seeks damages, not restitution.

In its opposition, ICD argues that it is "entitled to restitution of money it paid to Defendants for ice cream products, money spent for equipment to distribute said products, and money spent for the purchase of ICD." Opp'n at 15. However, ICD did not plead this in its complaint. Nor did ICD plead how restitution of these monies is connected to the alleged unlawful business practices of Dreyer's. [13] Because ICD failed to plead the basis of its request for restitution, its UCL claim is dismissed with leave to amend.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Dreyer's motion to dismiss. (Docket No. 29.) The Court's holdings are summarized as follows:

1. ICD's claims under the RICO Act are dismissed with leave to amend. With respect to all of its RICO claims, ICD has failed to allege a pattern of racketeering activity. Concerning its claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a), ICD has failed to allege injury resulting from Dreyer's investment of funds obtained through racketeering. As for its claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), ICD has failed to allege a RICO enterprise distinct from the purported RICO

[12] The Court understands ICD to bring its false advertising claim under the UCL. Thus, it need not address Dreyer's arguments concerning the application of California Code of Civil Procedure section 338 to this case.

[13] In its complaint, ICD provides conclusory statements that its "remedy [*30] at law is inadequate" and that it requires "restitution and disgorgement of all unjust profits." 1AC P 117; 1AC at 22.

persons. Because its claims under §§ 1962(a) and 1962(c) fail, its claims under § 1962(d) for conspiracy to commit violations under these sections likewise fail.

2. ICD's claim under the Sherman Act is dismissed with leave to amend. ICD fails to allege a cognizable contract, combination or conspiracy and an antitrust injury. ICD also does not plead a cognizable antitrust theory based on an unlawful tying arrangement. Because ICD fails to state a Sherman Act claim, its Cartwright Act claim [*31] is likewise dismissed.

3. ICD's claim under the UCL is dismissed with leave to amend. The relevant statute of limitations bars the action only to the extent that it rests on actions that accrued before December 11, 2005. However, ICD must allege conduct that occurred in or emanated from California and a basis for a restitutionary remedy.

ICD may file an amended complaint addressing the deficiencies detailed above within fourteen days of the date of this Order. If ICD does so, Defendants may file a motion to dismiss three weeks thereafter, with ICD's opposition due two weeks following and Defendants' reply due one week after that. The motion will be decided on the papers.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER:

(1) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO DISMISS [Doc. No. 31]; and

(2) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION TO STRIKE [Doc. No. 32].

Currently before the Court are Defendant's Motion to Dismiss and Motion to Strike. Having considered the parties' arguments, the Court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART the Motion to Dismiss and GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART the Motion to Strike.

BACKGROUND

I. Factual background

Plaintiff Don Tobin Watkinson resides at real property located at 8151 Caminito Santaluz Sur, San Diego, CA 92127 ("Property"). On November 11, 2006, Plaintiff obtained a loan from Defendant MortgageIT, Inc. Plaintiff alleges that he was offered an adjustable rate loan, even though he applied for a 30-year fixed rate loan. Shortly after closing the loan, however, Plaintiff encountered unexpected medical bills associated with a serious illness suffered by his wife, and therefore could [*2] no longer produce the necessary income to support his new mortgage. On April 3, 2009, Plaintiff alleges he contacted Defendant for a loan modification, but no modification proposal was ever given to him.

II. Procedural background

Plaintiff originally filed the suit in the District Court for the Eastern District of California. Plaintiff's Complaint alleges nine cause of action: (1) violation of the Truth in Lending Act ("TILA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601 et seq.; (2) violation of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act ("RESPA"), 12 U.S.C. §§ 2601 et seq.; (3) rescission; (4) unfair competition in violation of Section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code; (5) unjust enrichment; (6) predatory lending; (7) negligence; (8) resulting trust; and (9) constructive trust.

On February 9, 2010, the case was transferred to this Court. Subsequently, Defendant filed the present Motion to Dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) and Motion to Strike pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Plaintiff filed late oppositions to both motions, and Defendant replied. The Court took the motions under submission pursuant to Civil Local Rule 7.1(d)(1).

LEGAL STANDARD

I. Motion to dismiss

A motion to dismiss [*3] under Rule 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the pleadings. A complaint survives a motion to dismiss if it contains "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S.544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). The court may dismiss a complaint as a matter of law for: (1) "lack of cognizable legal theory," or (2) "insufficient facts under a cognizable legal claim." SmileCare Dental Group v. Delta Dental Plan of Cal., 88 F.3d 780, 783 (9th Cir. 1996) (citation omitted). The court only reviews the contents of the complaint, accepting all factual allegations as true, and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party. al-Kidd v. Ashcroft, 580 F.3d 949, 956 (9th Cir. 2009) (citation omitted).

Despite the deference, the court need not accept "legal conclusions" as true. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949-50, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). It is also improper for the court to assume "the [plaintiff] can prove facts that [he or she] has not alleged." Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). On the other hand, "[w]hen there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume [*4] their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1950.

II. Motion to strike

Under Rule 12(f), the court may "strike from a pleading . . . any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." FED. R. CIV. P. 12(f). "Immaterial" matter is that which has "'no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded.'" Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 984 F.2d 1524, 1527 (9th Cir. 1993) (citation omitted), rev'd on other grounds, 510 U.S. 517, 114 S. Ct. 1023, 127 L. Ed. 2d 455 (1994). "Impertinent" matter consists of statements that "'do not pertain, and are not necessary, to the issues in question.'" Id. (citation omitted). In ruling upon a motion to strike, just as with a motion to dismiss, the court must view the pleadings in a light most favorable to the nonmoving party. In re 2TheMart.com, Inc. Sec. Litig., 114 F. Supp. 2d 955, 965 (C.D. Cal. 2000).

The purpose of a Rule 12(f) motion is "to avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial." Sidney-Vinstein v. A.H. Robins Co., 697 F.2d 880, 885 (9th Cir. 1983) (citation omitted). However, [*5] courts often view motions to strike with disfavor, and therefore will not grant a motion to strike "unless the matter to be stricken clearly could have no possible bearing on the subject of the litigation." Platte Anchor Bolt, Inc. v. IHI, Inc., 352 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1057 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (citations omitted); see also Bureerong v. Uvawas, 922 F. Supp. 1450, 1478 (C.D. Cal. 1996). The court should deny the motion to strike if "there is any doubt as to whether the allegations might be an issue in the action." In re 2TheMart.com, 114 F. Supp. 2d at 965 (citing Fantasy, 984 F.2d at 1527) (emphasis in original).

DISCUSSION

I. Motion to dismiss

A. TILA violations

Plaintiff's first cause of action alleges Defendant violated TILA by "failing to provide Plaintiff with accurate and clear and conspicuous material disclosures required under TILA" and by not fully informing him "of the pros and cons of adjustable rate mortgages in a language (both written and spoken) that [he] can understand and comprehend." (Compl. P 57.) Defendant moves to dismiss this cause of action, arguing that the TILA claim for damages is time-barred and that the TILA claim for rescission fails because Plaintiff has not properly [*6] complied with the notice requirements and has not alleged that he is able to tender the loan proceeds.

1. TILA claim for rescission

Section 1635 governs the borrower's right under TILA to rescind a "consumer credit transaction . . . in which a security interest . . . is or will be retained or acquired in any property which is used as the principal dwelling of the person to whom credit is extended." 15 U.S.C. § 1635(a). While the borrower's right of rescission must normally be exercised within a three-day period, TILA extends that period to three years where the lender fails to provide the borrower with certain "material disclosures" [1] or with the notice of the right to cancel. See id. § 1635(f); 12 C.F.R. § 226.23(a)(3).

In the present case, however, the allegations in the Complaint are insufficient to extend the limitations period to three years. The only alleged TILA violation that is [*7] ascertainable from Plaintiff's Complaint is that Defendant allegedly violated TILA by providing Plaintiff with only three, instead of four, copies of the Notice of Right to Cancel. (See Compl. P 47.) However, under TILA, the creditor is only required to deliver "two copies of the notice of the right to rescind to each consumer entitled to rescind." 12 C.F.R. § 226.23(b)(1) (emphasis added). Accordingly, Defendant's failure to deliver four copies of the notice of the right to cancel does not constitute an actionable TILA violation.

Finally, apart from the alleged failure to provide a proper number of copies of the notice of the right to cancel, the Complaint fails to allege what specific material disclosures were not provided to Plaintiff or what specific provisions of TILA were violated. Rather, Plaintiff merely alleges in a conclusory fashion that:

> Defendants violated TILA by failing to provide Plaintiff with accurate and conspicuous material disclosures required under TILA and not taking into account the intent of the Legislature in approving this statute which was to fully inform borrowers of the pros and cons of adjustable rate mortgages in a language (both written and > spoken) that [*8] they can understand and comprehend; and to advise them to compare similar loan products that might be more advantageous for the borrower under the same qualifying matrix.

[1] The term "material disclosures" means "the required disclosures of the annual percentage rate, the finance charge, the amount financed, the total of payments, the payment schedule, and the disclosures and limitations referred to in §§ 226.32(c) and (d) and 226.35(b)(2)." 12 C.F.R. § 226.23(a)(3) n.48.

(Compl. P 57.) Such conclusory allegations, however, are insufficient "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Accordingly, because Plaintiff has not demonstrated that he is entitled to the longer limitations period of three years, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss and DISMISSES WITH LEAVE TO AMEND the TILA claim for rescission.

2. TILA claim for damages

As to Plaintiff's TILA claim for damages, that claim is clearly barred on the face of the complaint. As Defendant points out, claims for damages under TILA must be commenced within one year following the date of the alleged violation. See 15 U.S.C. § 1640(e); see also Lynch v. RKS Mortgage Inc., 588 F. Supp. 2d 1254, 1259 (E.D. Cal. 2008). The date of violation refers to the date of the consummation of the transaction, unless the doctrine of equitable tolling applies. King v. State of Cal., 784 F.2d 910, 915 (9th Cir. 1986). In the present case, because the loan transaction took place on November 11, 2006, but the complaint [*9] was not filed until November 7, 2009, the running of the statute of limitations on Plaintiff's TILA claim for damages is clear on the face of the complaint.

Moreover, Plaintiff is not entitled to equitable tolling because he has not carried his burden of showing that it applies in this context. Plaintiff had all of the information he needed to discover and bring an action regarding the alleged wrongs when the loan transaction closed, and he has not alleged that he was prevented in any way from doing so. See Hubbard v. Fidelity Fed. Bank, 91 F.3d 75, 79 (9th Cir. 1996) (concluding that plaintiff was not entitled to tolling where "nothing prevented [her] from comparing the loan contract, [defendant's] initial disclosures, and TILA's statutory and regulatory requirements" (citing King, 784 F.2d at 915)). Accordingly, because Plaintiff's TILA claim for damages is time-barred on the face of the complaint, it fails to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss in this regard and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE Plaintiff's TILA claim for damages.

B. RESPA claim

Plaintiff's [*10] second cause of action alleges Defendant violated RESPA "because the payments to the mortgage broker and to the lender in regard to the principal balance and the interest adjustment were misleading and designed to create a windfall," whereby Defendant was paid a "yield spread premium" of approximately $ 9,000. (Compl. P 66.) According to Plaintiff, this premium was Defendant's "incentive for placing Plaintiff in a less attractive loan." (Id.)

Plaintiff's allegations of an improper "yield spread premium" and adjustments that were "designed to create a windfall" appear to fall under Section 2607, which prohibits kickbacks and unearned fees. See 12 U.S.C. § 2607. However, because recovery under Section 2607 is governed by a one-year statute of limitations, Plaintiff's claims in this regard are untimely on the face of the complaint. See id. § 2614. Accordingly, because Plaintiff's second cause of action fails, the Court DISMISSES it WITH PREJUDICE.

C. Rescission

In his third cause of action, Plaintiff alleges that he is entitled to rescind the loan for all of the foregoing reasons: (1) TILA violations; (2) failure to provide a Mortgage Loan Origination Agreement; (3) failure to adequately [*11] provide loan documents and options in plain English, in which the agreement was negotiated; (4) Plaintiff was given three copies of the Notice of Right to Cancel, which is in contradiction to the lender's instructions; (5) failure to properly provide Truth in Lending disclosures; and (6) Defendants refused to accept Plaintiff's properly executed and delivered rescission. (Compl. P 70.) Plaintiff also alleges that he was "mistaken, misled and deceived about the material terms of the alleged loan." (Id. P 71.) Finally, Plaintiff indicates that upon rescission, he "will provide restitution to Defendant or the amount Plaintiff has been enriched." (Id. P 72.)

The Court has already dealt with rescission based on TILA. To the extent Plaintiff's third cause of action alleges additional grounds for rescission, the Court notes that "[r]escission is not a cause of action; it is a remedy." Nakash v. Super. Ct., 196 Cal. App. 3d 59, 70, 241 Cal. Rptr. 578 (1987) (citations omitted); accord *Gayduchik v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., No. 2:09-cv-03524 JAM-GGH, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50561, 2010 WL 1737109, at 4 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2010); *Tiqui v. First Nat'l Bank of Az., No. 09cv1750 BTM (BLM), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33326, 2010 WL 1345381, at 7 (S.D. Cal. Apr. 5, 2010). Accordingly, [*12] to the extent Plaintiff attempts to assert a cause of action for rescission on grounds other than TILA, the Court DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE that cause of action. Plaintiff's request for rescission as a remedy, however, remains viable--provided Plaintiff is successful on the merits of one of his other causes of action.

D. Unfair competition claim

Plaintiff's fourth cause of action alleges Defendant violated California's unfair competition law ("UCL") "by consummating an unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent practice." (Compl. P 78.) Section 17200 defines unfair competition as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice" and "unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200. Because the statute is written in the disjunctive, it prohibits three separate types of unfair competition: (1) unlawful acts or practices, (2) unfair acts or practices, and (3) fraudulent acts or practices. Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). In the present case, Plaintiff's fourth cause of action alleges that Defendant violated all three sub-parts of the unfair competition law.

1. Standing

Defendant first argues that Plaintiff [*13] lacks standing, which is a prerequisite for a private plaintiff to bring suit under Section 17200. See Californians For Disability Rights v. Mervyn's, LLC, 39 Cal. 4th 223, 232-33, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 57, 138 P.3d 207 (2006). A private person has standing to assert a UCL claim only if he or she (1) "has suffered injury in fact" and (2) "has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition." CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17204. In this case, accepting Plaintiff's allegations as true, he has adequately pled that he suffered an injury and lost money as a direct result of Defendant's actions.

2. Unlawful practices

By proscribing "any unlawful" business practice, Section 17200 "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable. Id. "Violation of almost any federal, state, or local law may serve as the basis for a[n] [unfair competition] claim." Plascencia v. Lending 1st Mortg., 583 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1098 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (citing Saunders v. Super. Ct., 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994)).

In this case, Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's actions were unlawful because they violated TILA as well as Sections 1632, 1916.7(c), and 2923.6 of [*14] the California Civil Code. (See Compl. PP 79, 84.) However, because the Court has already determined that the Complaint fails to state a cause of action under TILA, that statute cannot form the basis of Plaintiff's UCL claim. As for the other statutes alleged in Plaintiff's fourth cause of action, none of those are applicable in this case. First, there are no allegations in the Complaint that the loan transaction at issue here was negotiated in a language other than English, as required by Section 1632. See CAL. CIV. CODE § 1632. Second, Plaintiff has not alleged any facts to show that Section 1916.7, which governs adjustable rate mortgages, applies to her loan. See id. § 1916.7(c). Rather, as Defendant points out, the majority of adjustable rate mortgage loans in California originate under the federal Alternative Mortgage Transaction Parity Act, 12 U.S.C. § 3803(b), which preempts state laws. See, e.g., *Pagtalunan v. Reunion Mortg., Inc., No. C-09-00162 EDL, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34811, 2009 WL 961995, at * 4 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 8, 2009)* (citing Nat'l Home Equity Mortg. Ass'n v. Face, 239 F.3d 633, 637 (4th Cir. 2001)). Finally, as other courts have noted with respect to Section 2923.6, "nothing in Cal.

Civ. Code § 2923.6 [*15] imposes a duty on servicers of loans to modify the terms of loans or creates a private right of action for borrowers." *Farner v. Countrywide Home Loans, No. 08cv2193 BTM (AJB), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5303 , 2009 WL 189025, at 2 (S.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2009); accord Pantoja v. Countrywide Home Loans, 640 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1188 (N.D. Cal. 2009). Accordingly, because there is no predicate violation that can form the basis of Plaintiff's UCL claim, Plaintiff has failed to state a claim for relief under the "unlawful practices" prong.

3. Fraudulent practices

Likewise, with respect to the "fraudulent practices" prong, Plaintiff has failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for relief. To prove fraud under California law, the plaintiff must demonstrate: "(a) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (b) knowledge of falsity (or "scienter"); (c) intent to defraud, i.e. to induce reliance; (d) justifiable reliance; and (e) resulting damage." Engalla v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc., 15 Cal. 4th 951, 974, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 (1997) (citation and internal quotations marks omitted). Moreover, to establish "fraudulent acts" under the UCL, the plaintiff must show that "members of the public are likely to be deceived." [*16] Sybersound Records, Inc. v. UAV Corp., 517 F.3d 1137, 1152 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted); accord South Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th 861, 888, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 (1999).

In addition, Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires allegations of fraud or mistake to be stated "with particularity." In the Ninth Circuit, this rule "has been interpreted to mean the pleader must state the time, place and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Misc. Serv. Workers, Drivers & Helpers v. Philco-Ford Corp., 661 F.2d 776, 782 (9th Cir. 1981) (citations omitted); see also Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Averments of fraud must be accompanied by 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." (citation omitted)).

In the present case, Plaintiff has failed to satisfy the heightened pleading requirement of Rule 9(b). The fourth cause of action alleges in a conclusory fashion that Defendants' conduct was fraudulent because "Defendants gave information to Plaintiff, that was factually incorrect" and because "Defendants omitted to provide information, [*17] which he [sic] was bound by law to provide." (Compl. PP 80-81.) However, it is unclear from these allegations what was the specific content of the fraudulent misrepresentations or who on behalf of Defendant made those representations. Likewise, apart from conclusory allegations, the Complaint fails to allege why Plaintiff believes the statements were false when made. Fraudulent intent cannot be proven by simply pointing to the defendant's subsequent nonperformance. See Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc., 39 Cal. 3d 18, 30-31, 216 Cal. Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 (1985). Rather, "the plaintiff must plead facts explaining why the statement was false when it was made." Smith v. Allstate Ins. Co., 160 F. Supp. 2d 1150, 1152 (S.D. Cal. 2001) (citation omitted). In the present case, Plaintiff's unfair competition claim cannot survive the motion to dismiss because Plaintiff fails to plead this cause of action with the specificity required by Rule 9(b). [2]

4. Unfair practices

[2] The remainder of the Complaint is not helpful in discerning the precise scope of Plaintiff's UCL claim. For example, the Complaint alleges in conclusory manner that: (1) Defendants claimed to maintain underwriting guidelines that assessed the ability of the borrower to repay the debt; [*18] (2) they purposefully relaxed those guidelines and sold risky loan products to other borrowers like Plaintiff; (3) Defendants failed to clearly and conspicuously disclose the key provisions of the loans, even though they were very complicated; (4) Defendants provided undisclosed incentives to their agents and officers for marketing and selling these risky loans; and (5) Defendants misrepresented the true terms of the loans. (See generally Compl. PP 14-42.) However, none of these allegations provide any specific allegations as to who on behalf of Defendants made these representations, how Defendants misrepresented the terms of the loans, or why the statements were false or misleading. See Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106 ("Averments of fraud must be accompanied by 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the misconduct charged." (citation omitted)); Misc. Serv. Workers, 661 F.2d at 782 (noting that "the pleader must state the time, place and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation" (citations omitted)).

Finally, Plaintiff has failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for relief under the "unfair [*19] practices" prong. Where direct competitors are concerned, the California Supreme Court has concluded that the word "unfair" means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel. Tech., 20 Cal. 4th at 187. On the other hand, when an action is brought by a consumer or a competitor alleging a different kind of violation, as is the case here, it appears a broader definition would apply. In that context, an "unfair" business practice occurs "when it offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." See People v. Casa Blanca Convalescent Homes, Inc., 159 Cal. App. 3d 509, 530, 206 Cal. Rptr. 164 (1984), abrogated on other grounds in Cel. Tech., 20 Cal. 4th at 186-87 & n.12; accord McDonald v. Coldwell Banker, 543 F.3d 498, 506 (9th Cir. 2008).

In this case, Plaintiff alleges Defendants' conduct was unfair because "Defendants failed to provide disclosures that could be understood by Plaintiff, thus making [*20] it likely that Plaintiff would be deceived." (Compl. P 82.) However, the Court cannot conclude from these conclusory allegations whether Defendants' actions "offend[] an established public policy" or if they are "immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." See Casa Blanca, 159 Cal. App. 3d at 530. Accordingly, Plaintiff's claim for relief under the "unfair practices" prong also fails.

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss and DISMISSES WITH LEAVE TO AMEND the entire UCL claim.

E. Unjust enrichment

Plaintiff's fifth cause of action alleges unjust enrichment by Defendants. Under California law, "[t]he theory of unjust enrichment requires one who acquires a benefit which may not justly be retained, to return either the thing or its equivalent to the aggrieved party so as not to be unjustly enriched." Otworth v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co., 166 Cal. App. 3d 452, 460, 212 Cal. Rptr. 743 (1985) (citations omitted). However, unjust enrichment is inapplicable where the defendant has merely obtained that to which it was entitled pursuant to a contract between the parties. See Jones v. Wells Fargo Bank, 112 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1541, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 835 (2003).

In the [*21] present case, there are no allegations that Defendant has received any benefit at Plaintiff's expense such that it was unjustly enriched. Rather, it appears the only allegation of unjust enrichment is that Defendant might receive a windfall in case there is a forced sale of Plaintiff's home. (Compl. P 91.) Such allegations, however, are insufficient to "to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Moreover, unjust enrichment is inapplicable to the extent that any benefit derived by Defendant would be pursuant to the loan contract between the parties. See Jones, 112 Cal. App. 4th at 1541. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss and DISMISSES WITH LEAVE TO AMEND the unjust enrichment claim.

F. Predatory lending

Plaintiff's sixth cause of action alleges Defendant committed predatory lending by marketing the subject loan in whole or in part on the basis of fraud, exaggeration, misrepresentation, and concealment of material facts. (Compl. P 96.) According to Plaintiff, the loan contains terms whereby the borrower can never realistically repay the loan, which is representative of "Bait & Switch" tactics. Plaintiff, however, fails to indicate [*22] any legal basis for his "predatory lending" cause of action. As a result, both the Court and Defendant are left to guess whether this claim is based on an alleged violation of federal law, state law, common law, or some combination of the above. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss in this regard and DISMISSES WITH LEAVE TO AMEND the predatory lending claim. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (noting that "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions"). [3]

G. Negligence

Plaintiff's seventh cause of action alleges negligence against Defendant. To state a claim for negligence, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the defendant's legal duty of care to the plaintiff; (2) breach of that duty; (3) causation; and (4) resulting injury to the plaintiff. Merrill v. Navegar, Inc., 26 Cal. 4th 465, 500, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 28 P.3d 116 (2001). In the present case, Defendant argues the negligence cause of action fails because Plaintiff cannot demonstrate that Defendant owed him a duty [*23] of care.

As a general rule, "a financial institution owes no duty of care to a borrower when the institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money." Nymark v. Heart Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 231 Cal. App. 3d 1089, 1095-96, 283 Cal. Rptr. 53 (1991) (citations omitted). However, there are instances where the law imposes a duty on the lender. In California, the test for determining whether a duty exists between a lender and a borrower-client "'involves the balancing of various factors, among which are [1] the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, [2] the foreseeability of harm to him, [3] the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, [4] the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, [5] the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and [6] the policy of preventing future harm.'" Connor v. Great Western Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 69 Cal. 2d 850, 865, 73 Cal. Rptr. 369, 447 P.2d 609 (1968) (quoting Biakanja v. Irving, 49 Cal. 2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16 (1958)); accord Nymark, 231 Cal. App. 3d at 1098.

In the present case, Plaintiff alleges that Defendant overstated Plaintiff's income and the value [*24] of the Property on the loan application, knowing that both of those were false. (Compl. PP 20, 27.) Taking these allegations as true, Defendant arguably owed Plaintiff a duty of care in processing Plaintiff's loan application. The transaction at issue was undoubtedly "intended to affect the plaintiff" in that the outcome of the loan application determined what type of loan Plaintiff would qualify for. Likewise, it was readily foreseeable that misstating the amounts on the application and providing Plaintiff with a loan for which he was not qualified would potentially harm Plaintiff in that it increased the likelihood that he would default on the loan. The injury to Plaintiff is also certain because Plaintiff lost an opportunity to obtain a loan that he could afford and there are now foreclosure proceedings instituted against him. All of these factors weigh in favor of finding a duty of care in this case.

On the other hand, because Plaintiff's inability to pay the mortgage was caused by his wife's sudden illness, there might not be a close connection between Defendant's conduct and the injury suffered. Similarly, at this stage of the proceedings, it is unclear whether moral blame should [*25] attach to Defendant's conduct and whether public policy will be better served in prohibiting lenders from extending loans to individuals who might not be qualified for them. On balance, however, these factors do not necessarily weigh against the finding of duty of care in this case.

Finally, even the court in Nymark, on which Defendant relies, noted that the "general rule" that a lender does not owe a duty of care to a borrower is not absolute. On the contrary, in holding there was no duty of care in that case, the court noted that "[t]he complaint does not allege, nor does anything in the summary judgment papers indicate, that the appraisal was intended to induce plaintiff to enter into the loan transaction or to assure him that his collateral was sound." Nymark, 231 Cal. App. 3d at 1096-97. In this case, however, Plaintiff does allege Defendant misstated the value of the Property in order to induce him into acquiring the more riskier loan. (Compl. PP 20, 23, 27, 29-30.)

Accordingly, based on the consideration of the above factors and the fact that Defendant intended to induce Plaintiff to enter into the loan transaction, the Complaint contains sufficient facts to allege that Defendant [*26] owed

[3] To the extent Plaintiff cites Cal. Civ. Code § 17200 in his predatory lending claim, that allegation is duplicative of the fourth cause of action for violation of the UCL.

Plaintiff a duty of care when it allegedly misstated Plaintiff's income and the value of the Property on Plaintiff's loan application. See *Garcia v. Ocwen Loan Serv., LLC, No. C 10-0290 PVT, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45375, 2010 WL 1881098, at 3 (N.D. Cal. May 10, 2010) (finding that a lender owed a duty of care to a borrower-client in processing the borrower's loan modification application). Therefore, the Court DENIES IN PART the motion to dismiss in this regard.

On the other hand, the Court GRANTS IN PART the motion to dismiss to the extent Plaintiff's seventh cause of action alleges that there was an explicit or implicit duty of care to Plaintiff pursuant to the Note or the Deed of Trust because the Complaint fails to demonstrate how Defendant's obligations in this regard exceeded the scope of Defendant's "conventional role as a mere lender of money." See Nymark, 231 Cal. App. 3d at 1095-96. Similarly, there is no duty of care pursuant to the TILA because the Court has already rejected Plaintiff's contention that he was entitled to four, instead of three, copies of the notice of the right to cancel. For the foregoing reasons, the Court DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE [*27] these allegations in the seventh cause of action.

H. Resulting and constructive trust

Finally, Plaintiff's eighth and ninth causes of action are titled "resulting trust" and "constructive trust," respectively. In his eighth cause of action, Plaintiff appears to argue that if the foreclosure sale is allowed to go through, there should be a resulting trust created. (Compl. P 106.) In his ninth cause of action, Plaintiff alleges that any foreclosure sale of the Property would be "improper and contrary to law," and therefore Defendant should be required to hold the Property as a constructive trustee for the benefit of Plaintiff. (Id. PP 108-110.) However, as Defendant correctly points out, neither a "constructive trust" nor a "resulting trust" is an independent cause of action; rather, each of these is merely a type of a remedy. See Batt v. City & County of S.F., 155 Cal. App. 4th 65, 82, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 716 (2007) ("A constructive trust is 'not an independent cause of action but merely a type of remedy,' and an equitable remedy at that." (internal citations omitted)); Stansfield v. Starkey, 220 Cal. App. 3d 59, 76, 269 Cal. Rptr. 337 (1990) ("In their third amended complaint appellants alleged, as causes of action, a resulting [*28] trust and a constructive trust. But neither is a cause of action[,] only a remedy." (internal citations omitted)). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss in this regard and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE Plaintiff's causes of action for resulting and constructive trust. Plaintiff's request for a resulting or a constructive trust as a remedy, however, remains viable--provided Plaintiff is successful on the merits of one of his other causes of action.

II. Motion to strike

A. Request for punitive damages

Defendant moves to strike Plaintiff's request for punitive damages, arguing that it is not adequately supported by factual allegations in the Complaint. In doing so, Defendant relies on mostly California cases that set forth a heightened pleading standard for plaintiffs seeking punitive damages under Section 3294(a) of the California Civil Code.

The Court declines to grant the motion to strike on these grounds. Section 3294 provides for recovery of punitive damages where a plaintiff establishes by clear and convincing evidence that a defendant acted with "oppression, fraud, or malice." CAL. CIV. CODE § 3294(a). However, while Section 3294 governs Plaintiff's substantive claim for punitive [*29] damages, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure govern the punitive damages claim procedurally with respect to the adequacy of pleadings. See Clark v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 231 F.R.D. 405, 406-07 (C.D. Cal.2005); Jackson v. East Bay Hosp., 980 F. Supp. 1341, 1353 (N.D. Cal. 1997); Bureerong, 922 F. Supp. at 1480. Pursuant to these rules, a pleading need only contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief" and "a demand for the relief sought." FED. R. CIV. P. 8(a)(2), (3). Moreover, with respect to "[m]alice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind," the Federal Rules provide that these allegations "may be alleged generally." FED. R. CIV. P. 9(b).

In the present case, the Complaint contains sufficient allegations to support the request for punitive damages. See, e.g., Compl. P 27 ("Defendants even went so far as to blatantly misrepresent and overstate Plaintiff's income on his loan application . . . ."); id. ("Defendants intentionally misled Plaintiff . . . ."); id. P 30 ("Defendants knew and should have known that Plaintiff's loans would likely result in default and foreclosure . . . ."); id. P 38 ("Defendants [*30] did whatever it took to sell more loans, faster . . . ."). The fact that these allegations might be conclusory is not relevant at this stage because under the federal pleading standards, the plaintiff may rely on conclusory averments of malice or fraudulent intent to plead the mental state required by Section 3294. See Clark v. Allstate Ins. Co., 106 F. Supp. 2d 1016, 1019 (S.D. Cal. 2000) ("In federal court, a plaintiff may include a "short and plain" prayer for punitive damages that relies entirely on unsupported and conclusory averments of malice or fraudulent intent."); accord Align Tech., Inc. v. Fed. Ins. Co., 673 F. Supp. 2d 957, 965 (N.D. Cal. 2009); Clark v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co., 231 F.R.D. at 406-07.

Accordingly, because Defendant failed to demonstrate that these allegations otherwise constitute "redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter," the Court DENIES the motion to strike in this regard. The Court, however, does not express any opinion as to whether these allegations satisfy the substantive requirements of Section 3294(a). To the extent Defendant challenges the sufficiency of the factual allegations underlying the claim for punitive damages, the [*31] proper medium is a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), not Rule 12(f).

B. Reference to conduct that is not actionable under TILA

Defendant next asks the Court to strike the following allegation in paragraph 57 of the Complaint with respect to the TILA requirements: "It also requires the lender to offer other loan products that might be more advantageous for the borrower under the same qualifying matrix." According to Defendant, this allegation impermissibly expands the scope of TILA because TILA does not dictate the terms and conditions under which credit can be extended.

However, in enacting TILA, the Congress expressly found that "[t]he informed use of credit results from an awareness of the cost thereof by consumers." 15 U.S.C. § 1601(a). Thus, TILA's purpose was "to assure a meaningful disclosure of credit terms so that the consumer will be able to compare more readily the various credit terms available to him and avoid the uninformed use of credit, and to protect the consumer against inaccurate and unfair credit billing and credit card practices." Id. Arguably, there is a relation between this congressional intent and Plaintiff's allegations that the lender should be required [*32] to "offer other loan products that might be more advantageous for the borrower." Accordingly, because it is not entirely clear to the Court that the challenged allegation in paragraph 57 of the Complaint "could have no possible bearing on the subject of the litigation," the Court DENIES the motion to strike in this regard. See Platte Anchor Bolt, 352 F. Supp. 2d at 1057 ("A motion to strike should not be granted unless the matter to be stricken clearly could have no possible bearing on the subject of the litigation." (citations omitted)).

C. Prayer for relief under TILA

Defendant next asks the Court to strike Plaintiff's request for actual and statutory damages as well as for "equitable restitution and disgorgement of profits obtained by Defendants" in connection with Plaintiff's TILA claim. The Court has already determined that Plaintiff's TILA claim for damages is barred by the applicable one-year statute of limitations. See 15 U.S.C. § 1640(e). This includes both actual and statutory damages. See id. § 1640(a). As for Plaintiff's request for equitable restitution and disgorgement, the Court agrees with Defendant that these are not remedies that are available under TILA. See, e.g., [*33] Christ v. Beneficial Corp., 547 F.3d 1292, 1298 (11th Cir. 2008) ("Because we do not expect Congress to 'expressly preclude' remedies, we do not read TILA to confer upon private litigants an implied right to an injunction or other equitable relief such as restitution or disgorgement." (citation omitted)); Perrone v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 232 F.3d 433, 439 (5th Cir. 2000) ("If Congress had meant for restitution to be the measure of actual damages [under TILA], it could have easily said so in the statute. It did not. The fact that restitution is an available remedy for some purposes does not mean that Congress intended for this to be the measure of all other damages."). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion to strike and STRIKES WITH PREJUDICE the following paragraphs of the Complaint as they relate to the TILA claim:

> 59. An actual controversy now exists between Plaintiff, who contends that he has the right to damages for Defendants' violations related to the loan on the Subject Property alleged in this complaint, and Defendants.
> 60. As a direct and proximate result of Defendants' violations, Plaintiff has incurred and continues to incur damages in an amount according to proof [*34] but not yet ascertained including without limitation, statutory damages and all amounts paid or to be paid in connection with the transaction.
> 61. Defendants were unjustly enriched at the expense of Plaintiff who is therefore entitled to equitable restitution and disgorgement of profits obtained by Defendants.

D. Prayer for relief under the unfair competition law

Finally, Defendant asks the Court to strike Plaintiff's request for damages as it relates to Plaintiff's UCL claim. As Defendant correctly argues, and Plaintiff concedes, Section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code limits the plaintiff's remedies to restitution and injunctive relief. See Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1144, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003) ("While the scope of conduct covered by the UCL is broad, its remedies are limited. A UCL action is equitable in nature; damages cannot be recovered." (internal citations omitted)); Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 179 ("Prevailing plaintiffs [under the UCL] are generally limited to injunctive relief and restitution. Plaintiffs may not receive damages, much less treble damages, or attorney fees." (internal citations omitted)). Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the [*35] motion to strike in this regard and STRIKES WITH PREJUDICE the following paragraph of the Complaint as it relates to the UCL claim:

> 85. By reasons of the foregoing, Plaintiff has suffered and continues to suffer damages in a sum not yet ascertained, to be proven at trial.

CONCLUSION

I. Motion to dismiss

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART the motion to dismiss. Specifically, the Court ORDERS as follows:

- The Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss and DISMISSES WITH PREJUDICE the following causes of action: (1) the first cause of action to the extent it alleges a TILA claim for damages; (2) the second cause of action for RESPA violations, (3) the third cause of action for rescission; (4) the seventh cause of action to the extent it alleges a duty of care for a violation other than Defendant's alleged misstatement of Plaintiff's income and the value of the Property on the loan application; and (5) the eighth and ninth causes of action for resulting and constructive trusts.

- The Court GRANTS the motion to dismiss and DISMISSES WITH LEAVE TO AMEND the following causes of action: (1) the first cause of action to the extent it alleges a TILA claim for rescission; [*36] (2) the fourth cause of action for violation of the unfair competition law; (3) the fifth cause of action for unjust enrichment; and (4) the sixth cause of action for predatory lending. Plaintiff shall have thirty (30) days from the filing of this Order to file a First Amended Complaint.

- The Court DENIES the motion to dismiss in all other regards.

II. Motion to strike

The Court also GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART the motion to strike. Specifically, the Court GRANTS the motion and STRIKES WITH PREJUDICE paragraphs 59, 60, and 61 of the Complaint as they relate to Plaintiff's TILA claim, and paragraph 85 of the Complaint as it relates to Plaintiff's UCL claim. The Court DENIES the motion to strike in all other respects.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

In this putative class action, two Louisville residents have sued Insight Communications Company (the dominant local cable television provider) for alleged violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. (We thus have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331.) Plaintiffs claim that Insight illegally requires its customers who desire to purchase certain of its cable services to rent from it a set-top cable box in order to receive the content. Insight has moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a cognizable Sherman Act claim. That motion [*2] will be granted and the complaint dismissed, but the court will grant the plaintiffs' request to file an amended complaint curing the flaws we locate herein.

I

The following facts are drawn from the face of the amended complaint. Insight sells its cable television services in a number of tiers. At the lowest ("basic cable") level, a subscriber can simply plug a cable into his modern "cable ready" television and begin receiving the content he has purchased. (A customer with an older television may have to acquire a cable box, but such users are not included in the plaintiffs' proposed class definition.) Higher levels of service--designated "Premium Cable Services"--require additional equipment even for owners of new TVs. These premium services include specialty channels such as HBO and Showtime as well as "pay-per-view" and "on demand" programming.

Cable boxes serve two basic functions. First, they allow the customer to receive video signals and to navigate among the various channels provided by the cable company. Second, they provide security, allowing the customer access only to those channels for which he has paid. Two companies, Motorola and Scientific Atlanta, dominate the cable box [*3] manufacturing market, with Motorola working under contract with Insight. According to the complaint, neither manufacturer will sell its cable boxes to the general public. Instead, Motorola sells them to Insight, which then leases them to its subscribers. The problem arises, the plaintiffs allege, because Insight requires its customers to rent the cable boxes it provides in order to receive Premium Cable Services. Cable customers cannot buy the boxes on the open market, or acquire them from some other source. The plaintiffs admit that, pursuant to a regulation that went into effect on July 1, 2007, an alternative technology ("CableCARD") has been available to fulfill the security function of the cable box, but argue that Insight has inhibited the practical availability and effectiveness of this option in order to coerce its customers into renting Insight cable boxes. Plaintiffs also allege that Insight has "limited the effectiveness of CableCARDs," such that the alternative technology is so undesirable as to give consumers no real choice but to rent an Insight cable box. As a result, no rental or purchase markets have developed for cable boxes, and the plaintiffs allege that they are [*4] coerced to spend more money renting the necessary equipment from Insight than it would be worth if purchased outright.

Insight has no real competition among cable television providers in many of the areas in which it operates. Barriers to entry are high, as significant infrastructure is required for the delivery of cable television throughout a community. The main competitors are satellite television providers, but their services are unavailable to many households, by dint of their location in areas without a clear view of the sky or in apartments where satellite dishes are specifically forbidden by the terms of the lease. Insight is also able to "bundle" its television services with broadband internet access and phone service, a tactic satellite providers cannot employ. Plaintiffs therefore maintain that satellite services do not serve as adequate substitutes for Insight's land-based cable television.

II

A complaint "only survives a motion to dismiss if it 'contain[s] sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Courie v. Alcoa Wheel & Forged Prods., 577 F.3d 625, 629 (6th Cir. 2009) (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009)). [*5] This raises the bar from where Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957) had left it: Whereas under Conley a court was to dismiss a facially well-pleaded complaint only if its contents were so outlandish as to be utterly incapable of proof, Iqbal (along with its predecessor, Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)) advises us to toss out a case unless the allegations meet some minimum standard of plausibility. Courie, 577 F.3d at 629-30. Specifically, "[a] claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). While we must take the complaint's factual allegations as true in making this assessment, we need not accept the truth of legal conclusions or draw unwarranted factual inferences. Directv, Inc. v. Treesh, 487 F.3d 471, 476 (6th Cir. 2007); Gregory v. Shelby County, 220 F.3d 433, 446 (6th Cir. 2000).

III

Plaintiffs allege that Insight's policy of requiring premium cable subscribers to rent Insight cable boxes constitutes an illegal "tying" of one product (the cable box) to another (the cable [*6] service). To make out such a claim at this stage, the complaint must successfully allege five elements: (1) the existence of two separate products (i.e. a tying product and a tied product); (2) that the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market, such that it is able to coerce consumers into buying the tied product; (3) that the tying arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the market for the tied product; (4) that the seller of the tying product has a direct economic interest in the sale of the tied product; and (5) that the plaintiff has suffered an antitrust injury as a result of the tying arrangement. CTUnify, Inc. v. Nortel Networks, Inc., 115 Fed. Appx. 831, 834 (6th Cir. 2004) (unpublished) (citations omitted). Cf. ABA Section of Antitrust Law, 1 Antitrust Law Developments 177 (6th Ed. 2007) (hereinafter Antitrust Law Developments).

A. Two Separate Products

According to the Supreme Court, "the answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 19, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984), abrogated [*7] on other grounds by Ill. Tool Works Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006). The question is whether the products in question are "distinguishable in the eyes of buyers." Id. In Jefferson Parish, the Court held that anesthesiological services were sufficiently distinct from the balance of the defendant hospital's package of offerings to give rise to a finding that two separate products existed. Id. at 23. The critical question was whether "there is a sufficient demand for the purchase of anesthesiological services separate from hospital services to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer anesthesiological services separately from hospital services," and the court found that the answer was "[u]nquestionably" affirmative. Id. at 21-22. The Court reiterated this definition in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992), holding that repair services and replacement parts were separate products subject to the prohibition on tying. This was the case even despite the defendant's claim that the two products were inextricably linked, in that either one was more or less useless without the other. Id. at 463 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19 n.30).

Plaintiffs [*8] here have adequately alleged the existence of two separate products. Absent Insight's allegedly illegal tying behavior, a market for cable boxes might well develop in the same way that there exist markets for modems and telephones, without which Internet and phone services are useless. Insight already offers multiple cable box products (such as, for instance, boxes offering Digital Video Recording capability (see Am. Compl. P 22)), and bills its customers separately for the box rental and for the service itself (id. at P 21). We reject the defense's suggestion that a finding of separate products requires "that an independent market now exists--from the comsumer's point of view--for the "tied" product." (Def.'s Br. 14 (emphasis added).) By that logic a firm could safely engage in anticompetitive activity provided he maintained such a complete monopoly as to prevent anyone else from selling the product in question--but that result is precisely the sort of thing that the antitrust laws are meant to avoid. The question is not whether a market exists in the sense of several firms already competing in the marketplace, but rather in the sense that there exists "sufficient demand" for the [*9] purchase of the tied product separately from the tying product "to identify a distinct product market" from the point of view of the consumer. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21-22. Here the plaintiffs have alleged that such demand exists: they and others in the putative class would like to buy cable boxes on the open market, but are foreclosed from doing so by the defendant's behavior and the consequent dearth of other options for obtaining the equipment. This claim is certainly "plausible" in this court's view, Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949, and there appears to be unanimous agreement on this point among the other courts who have addressed this question in recent months. See *In re Time Warner Inc. Set-Top Cable TV Box Antitrust Litig., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22369 at 17-18 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 5, 2010); *Parsons v. Bright House Networks, LLC, No. 2:09-cv-0267-AKK, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55277, 10-12 (N.D. Ala. Feb. 23, 2010); *In re Cox Enterprises, Inc. Cable Television Box Antitrust Litig., No. 09-ML-2048-C, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58417, 11-12 (W.D. Okla. Jan. 19, 2010). We accordingly conclude that the plaintiffs have met the Rule 12(b)(6) [*10] standard with respect to their obligation to identify two separate products.

B. Economic Power and Coercion

Although this element is listed singly in the relevant Sixth Circuit precedent, see CTUnify, 115 Fed. Appx. at 834, it apparently encompasses a number of prongs. The question is whether the defendant wields sufficient economic power in the market for the tying product such that it is able to force buyers to accept the tied product. See id. In order to show this to be the case, the plaintiffs must allege the existence of a relevant market in terms of both the tying product, see Ky. Speedway, LLC v. Nat'l Ass'n of Stock Car Auto Racing, Inc., 588 F.3d 908, 917 (6th Cir. 2009), and a geographic area, see Mich. Div.--Monument Builders of N. Am. v. Mich. Cemetery Ass'n, 524 F.3d 726, 733 (6th Cir. 2008). They then must allege that the defendant has the power to coerce customer to buy the tied product, see Ill. Tool Works, 547 U.S. at 46, and of course that the defendant actually exercised that power, see Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 461-62, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). We conclude that, as drafted, the Amended Complaint insufficiently alleges actual coercion, and that it must therefore [*11] be dismissed. Because any newly filed complaint will have to change the allegations regarding the product market definition and Insight's power within that market, we will skip over those elements at present.

Without actual coercion, there is no restraint of trade and no Sherman Act claim. In a tying case the coercion takes the form of conditioning the availability of the tying product on the purchase of the tied product. See id. There is no dispute that the defendant's Premium Cable Services are available only with the aid of either a cable box or a television with CableCARD technology. Nor is there any allegation that Insight prevented its customers from using CableCARDs. The question is whether the existence of CableCARDs in the marketplace is sufficient to vitiate the plaintiffs' conditioning claim.

Plaintiffs allege that Insight has used its market power "to inhibit and thwart the effectiveness of CableCARD technology" (Am. Comp. P 32), and that consumer electronics manufacturers have "repeatedly complained that Insight and other cable companies have engaged in practices to prevent the CableCARD from becoming an effective option for consumers who no longer wish to pay rental fees [*12] for cable boxes" (id. P 33). Further, they allege that Insight has "limited the effectiveness of CableCARDs," such that consumers are unlikely to prefer that technology to Insight's cable boxes. (Id. at P 35.) The main limit on CableCARDs' actual effectiveness appears to be that the device is (at present) not capable of two-way communication. (See Pl.'s Br. 10 (citing Annual Assessment of the Status of Competition in the Market for the Delivery of Video Programming, Thirteenth Annual Report, MB Docket No. 06-189, FCC 07-207, at P 263 (Rel. Jan. 16, 2009) (hereinafter "Thirteenth Annual Report")); Reply 9.) The definition of the tying product, Premium Cable Services, spec-ifically includes "pay per view" and "on demand" video programming (Am. Compl. P 18), at least some of which is not available without the two-way connection that CableCARDs do not offer (see Pl.'s Br. 10 (citing Thirteenth Annual Report P 263)).

The Southern District of New York recently addressed precisely the same question, and concluded that dismissal was warranted. *In re Time Warner, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22369, at 26. The court ruled that because CableCARDs are a suitable replacement for those [*13] Premium Cable Services requiring only one-way communications, the plaintiffs' definition of the tying product (identical to the one now before this court) as including such services was fatal to its claim of coercion. Id. A customer desiring only one-way premium services (such as access to HBO and Showtime) had no need to rent a cable box. Id. This court finds itself in agreement with Judge Castel's analysis. The facts alleged might support a claim that those consumers wishing to buy two-way services are coerced into leasing a cable box, but the Amended Complaint does not so limit either the putative class or the product market. There is therefore in the court's view no plausible allegation of coercion as to the whole of the designated tying product; according to the amended complaint, only a part of that product is conditioned on rental of the tied product. [1]

While we will grant the motion to dismiss (via separate [*15] order), we are also in agreement with Judge Castel that a re-drafted complaint could make out a plausible claim for relief. See *id. at 28. The Federal Rules direct the court to "freely give leave [to amend a pleading] when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). Accordingly we will follow his lead, and (at plaintiffs' request) grant leave to file a second amended complaint to cure the defect. We admonish the plaintiffs to take care to ensure that any future pleading contains sufficient factual allegations to fulfill each of the elements of their claim, with specific reference to any newly asserted definition of the relevant tying product.

End of Document

Plaintiffs also reprise an argument, based on Eastman Kodak, that Judge Castel rejected in In re Time Warner. Their assertion is that "[a] coercive scheme may be found even if the tying arrangement leaves the consumer with some choice, or even if the coercion is not 100% effective in meeting the defendants' anticompetitive goal." (Resp. 21.) We again join Judge Castel in finding this argument mistaken. In Eastman Kodak, the defendant required buyers of its replacement parts either to purchase repair services from Kodak or to promise to service their own machines; this prevented Kodak's clients from hiring third-party repairmen. 504 U.S. at 458. The result was to condition the availability of one product on an agreement not to buy a second product from a third-party. Actual coercion was therefore present. Here, however, there is no adequate allegation of conditioning, because CableCARDs provide an alternative to Insight customers who have no use for two-way communications. See *In re Time Warner, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22369, at 23-24.

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (In Chambers) Order Denying Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Emulex's First Amended Complaint (Fld 2-4-10) AND Defendant's Motion to Strike Plaintiff's Defamation Claim Pursuant to CCP Section 425.16 (fld 2-4-10)

Defendant Broadcom Corporation ("Broadcom") moves to dismiss the First Amended Complaint ("FAC") of Plaintiffs Emulex Corporation (a Delaware corporation) and Emulex Corporation (a California subsidiary) (collectively, "Emulex") under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Broadcom also moves to strike Emulex's third claim for relief pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16 ("the anti-SLAPP statute").[1] Emulex opposes.

[1] "SLAPP is an acronym for "Strategic Lawsuit Against Public Participation."

This action involves a dispute between two competitors in the market for ten gigabit per second ethernet controllers ("10GbE controllers"), which are chipsets typically placed on the motherboards of server computers to allow the server to transmit and receive information over an ethernet network. (FAC ¶ 4.) The 10GbE controllers are sold by Broadcom and Emulex to original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs") that produce server motherboards. (Id. ¶¶ 3-4.) Broadcom has historically enjoyed a dominant share of the 10GbE controller market, currently [*2] holding 70 to 75 percent of the market.[2] (Id. ¶ 4.)

Emulex is a new entrant to the 10GbE controller market, having recently introduced a new set of controllers that allows fibre channel networking capability on a ten gigabit ethernet network, a technology referred to as Fibre Channel Over Ethernet ("FCoE"). (Id. ¶¶ 25-27.) Ethernet protocols have a tendency to suffer from certain latency issues—e.g., dropped or out-of-order packets—that slow the transmission of data. (Id. ¶ 21.) Thus, for some critical applications, businesses are forced to maintain a separate network, known as a storage area network, which typically uses fibre channel protocol, which is less prone to latency issues. (Id.) Emulex's FCoE-capable controllers, or Converged Network Adapters ("CNAs"), potentially allow businesses to converge their storage area networks with their ethernet networks. (Id. ¶ 27.)

Emulex alleges that Broadcom is behind the curve in FCoE technology and has resorted to exclusionary and anticompetitive conduct intended to drive Emulex from the market. It contends that Broadcom engaged in a two-pronged assault on Emulex. First, Broadcom attempted to buy Emulex in April throught July 2009. (Id. ¶¶ [*3] 30-31.) Second, Emulex alleges that Broadcom engaged in "a campaign of false, misleading and deceptive commercial statements" designed to dissuade OEMs from purchasing Emulex's controllers or CNAs. (Id. ¶¶ 32-33.) Although Emulex alleges that the campaign was extensive, it admits to knowing only of six statements, as follows:

(1) Emulex has a "track record of underperformance," and its management has an "inability to deliver satisfactory results." (Id. ¶¶ 33, 77.)

(2) Emulex needs Broadcom because it is merely a storage connectivity company. (Id.)

(3) Customers should not buy FCoE products from Emulex because Broadcom's acquisition of Emulex was a foregone conclusion. (Id.)

(4) Emulex's alleged infringement of Broadcom's patents "cuts across [Emulex's] entire product line" and threatens its entire business. (Id. ¶ 35.)

(5) Emulex's alleged patent infringement was "significant and pervasive," "cuts across [Emulex's] entire product line," and "covers a broad part of their business today in fibre channel and fibre channel over ethernet." (Id. ¶ 36.)

(6) Emulex's suit against Broadcom was "a diversionary tactic to take the focus off of Emulex's alleged infringement. Contrary to Emulex's misleading [*4] statements, we believe their infringement is likely to extend far beyond the examples cited in Broadcom's complaint." (Id. ¶ 37, 86.)

In its first two claims for relief, Emulex alleges that Broadcom's statements constitute monopolization or attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. (Id. ¶¶ 50-73.) Emulex's third cause of action is for libel and slander. (Id. ¶¶ 74-94.) Broadcom now moves to dismiss the FAC in its entirety and to strike the libel and slander claim.

II. MOTION TO DISMISS

A. Legal Standard

Under Rule 12(b)(6), a defendant may move to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. A plaintiff must state "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atlantic Corp. v.

[2] Here, and elsewhere, the Court simply recites the allegations of the FAC and makes no factual findings regarding the correct definition of the relevant market or market share.

Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A claim has "facial plausibility" if the plaintiff pleads facts that "allow[] the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). In resolving a 12(b)(6) motion under Twombly, the Court follows a two-pronged approach. First, the Court must accept all well-plead factual allegations as true, but "[t]hread-bare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice." Id. at 1949. Nor [*5] must the Court "accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). Second, assuming the veracity of well-pleaded factual allegations, the Court must "determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Id. This determination is context-specific, requiring the Court to draw on its experience and common sense, but there is no plausibility "where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct." Id.

B. Discussion

1. Antitrust Claims

Broadcom argues that Emulex's allegations, even if taken as true, cannot amount to a violation of the Sherman Act because they do not overcome the presumption that speech in the marketplace has a de minimis effect on competition. See Am. Prof'l Testing Serv., Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Prof'l Publ'ns, Inc., 108 F.3d 1147, 1152 (9th Cir. 1997). In Harcourt Brace, the Ninth Circuit found that false or misleading advertising could constitute exclusionary conduct for a Sherman Act Section 2 claim.[3] However, recognizing the difficulty in distinguishing actionable false statements from puffing, the speculative effect of speech in the marketplace, and buyer distrust of a seller's statements about rivals, the court set a high bar for antitrust claims premised on disparaging statements. [*6] Id. The court "suggest[ed] that such claims should presumptively be ignored." Id. (citing 3 Phillip Areeda & Donald F. Turner, Antitrust Law ¶ 737b (1978)) (emphasis in original).

Thus, in the Ninth Circuit, a competitor's statements about rivals are presumed to have a de minimis effect on competition. To overcome this presumption, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the statements were "(1) clearly false, (2) clearly material, (3) clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, (4) made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter, (5) continued for prolonged periods, and (6) not readily susceptible of neutralization or other offset by rivals." Id. (quoting Nat'l Ass'n of Pharm. Mfrs. v. Ayerst Labs., 850 F.2d 904, 916 (2d Cir. 1988)). The plaintiff "must satisfy all six elements to overcome de minimis presumption."[4] Id. (emphasis in original).

Though Harcourt Brace itself was decided on a motion for judgment as a matter of law, courts have routinely applied the de minimis presumption at the pleading stage. See, e.g., TYR Sport Inc. v. Warnaco Swimwear Inc., 679 F. Supp. 2d 1120, 1133 (C.D. Cal. 2009); Tate v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 230 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1079-80 (N.D. Cal. 2002); Ayerst, 850 F.2d at 916-17. However, the Court is mindful that at the pleading stage, all well-pleaded allegations are taken as true and all reasonable inferences drawn in the plaintiff's favor. See Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949.

Broadcom contends that Emulex's antitrust claims fail to [*7] satisfy the six factor Harcourt Brace test. The Court considers each factor in turn.

a. Clearly False

[3] The Seventh Circuit, by contrast, does not recognize an actionable antitrust theory of false advertising or disparagement. Sanderson v. Culligan Int'l Co., 415 F.3d 620, 623 (7th Cir. 2005); Schachar v. Am. Acad. of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397, 399 (7th Cir. 1989).

[4] Some circuits do not require plaintiffs to satisfy every element. See, e.g., Ayerst, 850 F.2d at 916-17; Am. Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. Am. Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 323 F.3d 366, 371 & n.6 (6th Cir. 2003).

Broadcom contends that Emulex's monopolization claims are not actionable because the statements upon which they are based constitute puffery. Puffery is "exaggerated advertising, blustering, and boasting upon which no reasonable buyer would rely." Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1145 (9th Cir. 1997) (citing 3 J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 27.04[4][d] at 27-52 (3d ed. 1994)). Whether a statement is non-actionable puffery or an actionable statement of fact depends on the degree of generality or specificity of the statement. Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1053 (9th Cir. 2008). "The 'puffing' rule amounts to a seller's privilege to lie his head off, so long as he says nothing specific." Castrol Inc. v. Pennzoil Co., 987 F.2d 939, 945 (3d Cir. 1993) (quoting W. Page Keeton, et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 109, at 756-57 (5th ed. 1984)).

The Court finds that the first statement—that Emulex has a "track record of underperformance" and an "inability to deliver satisfactory results"—is classic puffery. These are general assertions of "underperformance" and "[un]satisfactory results" upon which no buyer would reasonably rely. Though Emulex frames the statement as "misrepresenting statistics" about Emulex, it offers no specific [*8] reference to statistics that would push the statement over the line from general to specific. See TYR, 679 F. Supp. 2d at 1137-38 (finding statement that competitor's product was "inferior" was puffery, but statement touting "a 2% advantage" was not).

On the other hand, the Court cannot say at the pleading stage that the second statement—that Emulex was merely a storage connectivity company—is puffery. The Court sees two possible interpretations of this statement: (1) Emulex specialized in storage connectivity and lacked the expertise to compete in the ethernet controller market, or (2) Emulex only manufactured storage connectivity products. The first interpretation would constitute puffery as a general statement of opinion. See Coastal Abstract Serv., Inc.v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 173 F.3d 725, 731 (9th Cir. 1999) (finding statement that rival was "too small" to handle business was puffery). The second interpretation, however, is specific enough to be proven false. Because all inferences are drawn in Emulex's favor at this stage, the Court finds the statement actionable.

As for the third statement—that customers should not buy from Emulex because its acquisition by Broadcom was a "foregone conclusion"—the Court finds this to be non-actionable opinion rather than an actionable statement of fact. In [*9] determining whether a statement is one of fact or opinion, courts must look at the full context of the statements. Information Control Corp. v. Genesis One Computer Corp., 611 F.2d 781, 783-84 (9th Cir. 1980). The third statement was made in the context of Broadcom's hostile takeover attempt. (See FAC ¶¶ 30-31.) Thus, the only reasonable interpretation is that the statement is a prediction about the success of the tender offer rather than a representation that an actual deal is in place. Therefore, the statement is non-actionable puffing. See Morris v. Princess Cruises, Inc., 236 F.3d 1061, 1067 (9th Cir. 2001) ("Whether a statement is an actionable statement of 'fact' or mere 'puffing' depends upon a number of factors, including . . . whether the statement relates to the present or the future."); see also Global Telemedia Int'l, Inc. v. Doe 1, 132 F. Supp. 2d 1261, 1268-69 (C.D. Cal. 2001) (finding statement that company was a "sinking ship" to be opinion). The statement that customers should not buy from Emulex is clearly non-actionable opinion.

The Court finds that the fourth comment, made to a stock analyst—that Emulex's alleged patent infringement "cuts across [its] entire product line" and threatened the entire business—does not constitute puffery. It is specific enough to be proven false and, as alleged, is a statement of fact rather than opinion. See Ideal Instruments, Inc. v. Rivard Instruments, Inc., 434 F. Supp. 2d 598, 624 (N.D. Iowa 2006) (finding that accusations of patent infringement were statements of [*10] fact rather than opinion).

Similarly, the fifth statement,—a second set of comments about Emulex's alleged patent infringement—though couched as opinion, could plausibly be interpreted as a statement of fact. The full statement is as follows:[5]

[5] Though on a motion to dismiss the Court is ordinarily limited to considering the pleadings, the Court may also consider evidence "on which the complaint 'necessarily relies' if: (1) the complaint refers to the document; (2) the document is central to the plaintiff's claim; and (3) no party questions the authenticity of the copy attached to the 12(b)(6) motion." Marder v. Lopez, 450 F.3d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 2006). Broadcom has submitted a transcript of the technology conference referred to in the FAC. (See FAC ¶ 36; Req. for Judicial Notice ("RJN"), Ex. 5.) Emulex argues that the transcript cannot be considered on this motion

> Q. [Y]esterday or the day before Broadcom filed a suit against Emulex. Could you talk a little bit about what's underlying that and the patents that you are claiming they infringe, what do they apply to?
> A. Yes. So, as you know, we are a pretty vigorous competitor and compete in some fairly tough markets. And certainly as we looked at the Emulex acquisition, we looked at their business and saw a fair bit of complementarity in terms of the networking side of things.
> > They made some fairly strong statements about being competitors of Broadcom, and, as you know, we compete aggressively. And so, we took a hard look at their IP and our IP and what they were selling, and were surprised to discover that there was significant and pervasive infringement, we believed, of our IP, which really cuts across their entire product line. And so, as you know, we are vigorous defenders of our IP and we filed suit.
> > I think when you look at it, the core of what they do and [*11] we do in our enterprise space is - enterprise networking technology and data networking technology and whether it relates to TCP/IP offload or CERTES or other things - and we can have a conversation and there's 10 different patents, and Peter has a list of what each one of them covers - we feel that the infringement is pervasive. We feel that it covers a broad part of their business today in fibre channel and fibre channel over ethernet.

(RJN, Ex. 5.)

The Court notes that Broadcom's statements bear similarities to the non-actionable statements of opinion in Information Control—the statements (1) are littered with phrases indicating opinion, (2) were made within days of filing of the patent complaint, and (3) were made at a trade conference to industry professionals and stock analysts who would be expected to know about the litigation. See id. at 784. However, the statement at issue in Information Control was about the opposition's motive for filing a lawsuit; that is distinguishable from the statements here, which assert widespread infringement based on due diligence done on Emulex's intellectual property. (RJN, Ex. 5.) Even though the assertions are couched as opinions, they imply knowledge [*12] of certain facts supporting that opinion. See Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co., 497 U.S. 1, 18-19, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1990).

Finally, the statement that Emulex's suit against Broadcom was "a diversionary tactic to take the focus off of Emulex's alleged infringement" is clearly a statement of opinion. Information Control, 611 F.2d at 784 (finding statement that lawsuit was "a device by which [the opposing party] was attempting to avoid payment of its obligations" was opinion). Additionally, the statement that "we believe [Emulex's] infringement is likely to extend far beyond the examples cited in Broadcom's complaint" is a future prediction that is too vague to be proven false. Unlike the prior statements that Emulex's infringement affected an entire product line or the entire business, this statement merely asserts a likelihood that infringement would extend "far beyond" the infringement contentions in the litigation. This is too vague to be actionable.

b. Clearly Material

Broadcom does not argue that the alleged misrepresentations are not material, though it does not concede that they are. (Mot. Br. 17 n.8.) Accordingly, the Court will not address this element.

c. Clearly Likely to Induce Reasonable Reliance

Broadcom argues that Emulex fails to adequately allege reasonable reliance, noting that the [*13] FAC contains no allegation of actual reliance. Broadcom has cited no authority requiring an allegation of actual reliance and the Ninth Circuit's phrasing of the test—"likely to induce reasonable reliance"—suggests otherwise. Indeed, in other related contexts, a plaintiff need not even prove actual reliance to prevail on a false advertising claim. Southland Sod, 108 because it questions the reliability of the transcription. (Pl.'s Objections to Def.'s RJN at 3.) However, Emulex's claim rests not just on the oral statements made, but on the transcript hosted on Broadcom's website. (See FAC ¶ 36.) Emulex does not contest that this is the actual internet transcript referred to in the complaint. Therefore, the Court may consider the transcript under the incorporation by reference doctrine.

F.3d at 1146 ("Publication of deliberately false comparative claims gives rise to a presumption of actual deception and reliance.") (quoting U-Haul Int'l, Inc. v. Jartran, Inc., 793 F.2d 1034, 1040-41 (9th Cir. 1986))).

Broadcom also argues that because the audience for the false statements—stock analysts, journalists, and industry professionals—are generally knowledgeable and skeptical about charges made by Broadcom against Emulex in the context of a public dispute, they are unlikely to rely on the alleged misrepresentations. However, the FAC alleges that the 10GbE controller market is at a turning point because OEMs are attempting to quickly design next-generation servers, need to "lock in" a specific controller for the next several years, and are risk-averse and want a supplier that will be around long-term. (FAC ¶¶ 41-42.) Taking these allegations as true, it is certainly plausible that an OEM could be swayed by statements [*14] that Emulex's widespread patent infringement threatened its entire business.

d. Made to Buyers Without Knowledge of the Subject Matter

Broadcom contends that the FAC fails to adequately allege that the alleged misrepresentations were made to buyers without knowledge of the subject matter. Broadcom notes that the audience for the statements are likely to be sophisticated parties, less likely to be induced by Broadcom's representations. However, the FAC alleges that OEMs are "highly risk-averse" and, because of market conditions requiring quick action, less likely to be able to adequately investigate suppliers' claims. (Id.) Moreover, with respect to the statements regarding Emulex's alleged patent infringement, it is plausible that this highly-technical legal and fact-specific information is outside the general knowledge of OEMs, industry professionals, and analysts. The Court cannot say at the pleading stage that the potential customers had adequate information as to the patent infringement statements.

However, with respect to the claim that Emulex is merely a storage connectivity company, the Court finds that this statement is well within the knowledge of the OEMs and industry professionals. [*15] As discussed above, to the extent that the statement can be interpreted as a criticism of Emulex's ability to compete in the ethernet controller or converged controller market, the statement is puffery. See, supra, Part II.B.1.a. On the other hand, if the statement is interpreted as a factual assertion that Emulex produces only storage connectivity products, the Court finds it implausible that OEMs and industry professionals would not know or have the capability of easily determining that Emulex produces other products as well. See Walgreen Co. v. AstraZeneca Pharm. L.P., 534 F. Supp. 2d 146, 152 (D.D.C. 2008) (dismissing antitrust disparagement claim where statements regarding pharmaceuticals were made to medical professionals knowledgeable of the subject matter). As Emulex has alleged, it launched its CNAs in April 2008, a year prior to the first of the alleged misrepresentations. (Id. ¶ 27.) It is implausible that these sophisticated customers were not aware. The Court finds that this statement does not satisfy this element.

e. Continued for Prolonged Periods

Broadcom argues that Emulex fails to adequately allege that the statements continued for a prolonged period. The only remaining actionable statements are the two statements regarding Emulex's alleged patent [*16] infringement. One was made on September 14, 2009 and the other on September 16, 2009. (Id. ¶¶ 84-85.) The Court finds as a matter of law that three days is an insufficient period to satisfy this element of the Harcourt Brace test.

Even considering all six of the alleged statements, the Court finds that the statements were not continued, i.e., sustained, for a prolonged period sufficient to satisfy this element. Harcourt Brace suggests that only "systematic" campaigns of disparagement are likely to have any more than a speculative effect on rivals: "buyer distrust . . . should caution us against attaching much weight to isolated examples of disparagement." 108 F.3d at 1152 (quoting Areeda & Turner, supra, ¶ 737b). Although the FAC does not give dates for the first three statements, it is apparent that they took place during the course of Broadcom's failed takeover attempt from April 21, 2009 to July 9, 2009. (See FAC ¶¶ 76-77.) As noted above, the two patent infringement statements were made over a three day period in September 2009. (Id. ¶¶ 84-85.) The final statement, asserting that Emulex's lawsuit was a "diversionary tactic," was made on November 9, 2009. (Id. ¶ 86.) Though the statements began in April 2009 and ended [*17] in November 2009, they were sporadic and isolated and not "continued" for the entire seven months. This is not the sort of sustained or systematic campaign capable of significantly affecting competition.

Emulex invites the Court to dispense with the "prolonged period" requirement, arguing that the realities of the 10GbE controller market, as alleged, dictate that a short period of statements can have a lasting effect, given OEMs' risk-aversion and reluctance to change controller suppliers. (See id. at 42, 44.) In the Second Circuit, Emulex's argument may be tenable, as the "prolonged period" element is not required. See Ayerst, 850 F.2d at 916-17. However, the Ninth Circuit requires that every element of the Harcourt Brace test be met. 108 F.3d at 1152. Emulex cannot get around that requirement by alleging certain market conditions.

The Court does not credit the FAC's conclusory allegations of a secret campaign of disparagement. (See FAC ¶¶ 8, 33, 43, 46-47, 83.) The validity of Emulex's antitrust claims must stand on the statements actually alleged, and cannot be propped up by allegations of secret statements of which Emulex admits no knowledge. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557.

In the defamation context, the defamatory statements must be plead with specificity. Kahn v. Bower, 232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1612 n.5, 284 Cal. Rptr. 244 (Ct. App. 1991) ("The [*18] general rule is that the words constituting an alleged libel must be specifically identified, if not pleaded verbatim, in the complaint."); *Chaconas v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, 713 F. Supp. 2d 1180, 2010 WL 1910748, at 8 (S.D. Cal. May 10, 2010); Jacobson v. Schwarzenegger, 357 F. Supp. 2d 1198, 1216 (C.D. Cal. 2004). Emulex's bare allegations of "materially false representations" would certainly not be sufficient to state a defamation claim because they do not identify the substance of what was said. E.g., Jacobson, 357 F. Supp. 2d at 1216. By the same logic, Emulex cannot cobble together an antitrust claim—which, under Harcourt Brace, is necessarily grounded on a systematic campaign of defamatory statements—by alleging that Broadcom made a series of "materially false representations" without identifying the substance of those statements.

In Twombly, the Supreme Court found that the plaintiffs could not state a claim for conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Sherman Act purely on the basis of allegations of parallel conduct and conclusory allegations of an illicit agreement or conspiracy. Id. at 564-66. The bare allegations of agreement were simply legal conclusions, see id. at 564 & n.9, and the allegation of parallel conduct did not indicate anything more than legitimate, unilateral actions of each defendant, id. at 566. Similarly, Emulex's allegations of "materially false representations," see FAC ¶ 8, are essentially [*19] legal conclusions rather than factual allegations, and Emulex pleads no other facts making plausible a secret campaign of disparagement. Just as a bare allegation of conspiracy does not suffice to plead a Sherman Act § 1 claim, a bare allegation of a secret campaign of materially false statements does not suffice for a Sherman Act § 2 claim.

Emulex notes that, in other contexts, pleading on information and belief is sufficient to state a claim where certain information is particularly in the defendant's knowledge and control. Boykin v. Keycorp, 521 F.3d 202, 215 (2d Cir. 2008). In Boykin, for example, the plaintiff was permitted to allege internal company policies of the defendant on information and belief. See id. However, a disparagement claim is a different animal; the disparaging statements are necessarily outside the defendant's control, as there would be no disparagement if the defendant kept things to itself. This is not the sort of information that can be pled on information and belief.

However, the FAC also alleges that the transcripts and audio of one of the disparaging statements were "made accessible to the public, including Broadcom's and Emulex's customers and potential customers, on Broadcom's website," (FAC ¶ 36), and that [*20] other statements were "dispersed widely, repeatedly and continuously in part because they have been distributed by and hosted on Broadcom's website," (id. ¶ 43). Emulex argues that, because the statements were available on the website for an extended period of time, they "continued for a prolonged period" under the Harcourt Brace test. At the hearing, Emulex analogized Broadcom's website to a billboard, where the alleged misrepresentation would be continually viewed by passersby. Emulex notes that anyone seeking information about Broadcom by visiting its site would view the misrepresentations. Broadcom resisted the analogy, arguing that the statements were archived on subdirectories of the main page, so that a visitor would have to click on several links to reach the statements.

The Court recognizes that there may be some difference, in terms of the scope of public dissemination, between a statement on the main page of a website, which may be fairly analogized to a billboard, and a statement archived on a subdirectory of the website, which is closer in analogy to a newspaper advertisement accessible in archives. This, however, is a particularly factual question inappropriate for dismissal [*21] on the pleadings. Taking the allegations of statements on the website in the light most favorable to Emulex, the Court finds that Emulex has plausibly pled that those statements continued for prolonged periods.[6]

f. Not Readily Susceptible of Neutralization or Other Offset

Finally, Broadcom contends that Emulex has not sufficiently alleged that the statements were not susceptible of neutralization. Broadcom argues that Emulex has not adequately explained why it could not rebut the alleged misrepresentations with its own speech.

However, Emulex points out that it has alleged that it is a new entrant into the relevant market and thus does not have relationships with the OEMs allowing it to sufficiently rebut Broadcom's statements. (Id. ¶ 46.) A nascent firm is often less able to neutralize misrepresentations by a dominant firm:

> [M]isrepresentations and organized deception by a dominant firm may have [Sherman Act] § 2 implications when used against a nascent firm just as it is entering the market. Such a firm has no established customer base and typically lacks the resources to answer the dominant firm's deception effectively.

3A Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 782b (2007). [*22] Based on Emulex's allegations, the Court finds that it has plausibily pled that it is unable to neutralize the patent infringement statements. See Z-Tel Commc'ns, Inc. v. SBC Commc'ns, Inc., 331 F. Supp. 2d 513, 532 (E.D. Tex. 2004).

However, with respect to the statement that Emulex is only a storage connectivity company, the Court fails to see how Emulex could not easily rebut the statement by simply demonstrating to the OEMs that it was producing and selling CNAs and ethernet controllers. Indeed, Emulex alleges that it launched the CNAs a year before the misrepresentations began. (FAC ¶ 27.) The Court finds it implausible that Emulex could not effectively neutralize the statement that it was limited to storage connectivity products.[7]

To summarize, the Section 2 monopolization and attempted monopolization claims survive the Harcourt Brace de minimis presumption based on the fourth and fifth statements as posted on Broadcom's website, which regard Emulex's alleged patent infringement. The claim is dismissed with regard to the first, third, and sixth statements, which constitute puffery, and the second statement, which was made to an audience knowledgeable of the subject matter and was readily susceptible to neutralization.[8]

Broadcom makes several additional attacks on [*23] the antitrust claims. First, Broadcom argues that Emulex has failed to allege antitrust injury. Antitrust injury is injury that "reflects the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Broadcom asserts that Emulex pleads only injury to itself, not to competition. The Court disagrees. Favorably construed, the FAC alleges that Broadcom's disparagement has the effect of forestalling or preventing the entry of an innovative new firm into the market, which harms consumers

[6] The Court only considers the two specifically-alleged statements regarding patent infringement as posted on the website. The remaining statements are either puffery, made to audiences with knowledge of the subject matter, or readily susceptible of neutralization.

[7] Again, if the statement is interpreted as asserting Emulex's inability to compete in the 10GbE controller market, the statement is puffery. See, supra, Part II.B.1.a.

[8] The Court therefore declines to consider whether an antitrust claim based on the first three statements—relating to the takeover attempt—is preempted by securities laws.

"because the quantity, quality and variety of products in the marketplace are being reduced . . . and Broadcom will be able to charge supracompetitive prices." (FAC ¶ 58.) Emulex alleges that Broadcom's conduct "is causing delay in the marketplace of the adoption of new, superior technology . . . that will benefit consumers." (Id.) As a result, Emulex alleges, "customers will be deprived of choice in products, will pay higher prices, will receive inferior quality product, and will have no choice but to continue to employ older and less efficient technologies." (Id. ¶ 61.) These allegations, coupled with the allegations detailing the market conditions and [*24] barriers facing a new entrant, plausibly plead antitrust injury under Twombly.

Second, Broadcom contends that Emulex has failed to allege that Broadcom has market power in the relevant market because Emulex does not actually compete in the alleged market. "Because market definition is a deeply fact-intensive inquiry, courts hesitate to grant motions to dismiss for failure to plead a relevant product market." Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 199-200 (2d Cir. 2001). Here, Emulex has alleged a market for 10GbE controllers suitable for server motherboards in the United States. (FAC ¶¶ 4, 22.) Emulex alleges that Broadcom enjoys a 70 to 75 percent share of this market. (Id.) This is sufficient to plead market power. See Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 924-25 (9th Cir. 1980). Emulex alleges that its 10GbE controllers with FCoE functionality competes in the 10GbE controller market. (FAC ¶ 27.)

However, Broadcom argues that Emulex does not actually compete in the 10GbE controller market, noting allegations made by Emulex in a separate securities action against Broadcom that the parties competed in a "converged connectivity" market. (See RJN, Ex. 3 ¶¶ 152-55.)[9] In that complaint, Emulex alleged that it is a "market leader" and "Broadcom has struggled to compete in this new converged market." (Id. ¶¶ [*25] 154-55.)

In essence, Broadcom asks the Court to dismiss Emulex's current complaint because it potentially conflicts with allegations it made in a complaint in another action. In other words, Broadcom seeks the application of judicial estoppel, which "precludes a party from gaining an advantage by taking one position, and then seeking a second advantage by taking an incompatible position." Whaley v. Belleque, 520 F.3d 997, 1002 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted). In determining whether to apply the doctrine, courts consider "(1) whether a party's later position is 'clearly inconsistent' with its original position; (2) whether the party has successfully persuaded the court of the earlier position[;] and (3) whether allowing the inconsistent position would allow the party to 'derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party.'" United States v. Ibrahim, 522 F.3d 1003, 1009 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 750-51, 121 S. Ct. 1808, 149 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2001)). The Court finds that Broadcom fails on all three counts. First, the prior allegation of a "converged" market is not inconsistent with Emulex's current allegation that its converged product competes in the 10GbE controller market. Second, Broadcom has not shown that any court was persuaded by Emulex's prior position. And finally, Broadcom has not shown that permitting Emulex's [*26] current allegations of market definition and market power would unfairly prejudice Broadcom.

Accordingly, Emulex has adequately pled market power in the relevant market.

2. Libel and Slander Claim

Broadcom seeks dismissal of Emulex's libel and slander claim on a number of grounds. First, Broadcom argues that the statements are non-actionable puffery. As discussed above in Part II.B.1.a, the Court finds that three of the statements are puffery: (1) that Emulex has a "track record of underperformance" and an "inability to deliver satisfactory results"; (2) that Broadcom's acquisition of Emulex was a "foregone conclusion"; and (3) that Emulex's suit was a "diversionary tactic" and that "their infringement is likely to extend far beyond the examples cited in Broadcom's complaint." The Court finds that the remaining three statements are actionable statements of fact as alleged.

[9] On a motion to dismiss, the Court may consider matters that are the proper subject of judicial notice, such as a publicly-filed complaint. See Zucco Partners, LLC v. Digimarc Corp., 552 F.3d 981, 991 (9th Cir. 2009).

Second, Broadcom argues that the two statements related to Broadcom's patent suit against Emulex are privileged, and therefore non-actionable, under California Civil Code section 47(d). That statute provides that "a fair and true report in, or a communication to, a public journal" about a judicial proceeding is privileged. Cal. Civ. Code § 47(d). The requirement that the report [*27] be "fair and true" is not strictly applied; it need only capture the "the substance, the gist, [or] the sting" of the actual statements or events. Sipple v. Found. for Nat'l Progress, 71 Cal. App. 4th 226, 244, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 677 (Ct. App. 1999) (quoting Kurata v. L.A. News Publ'g Co., 4 Cal. App. 2d 224, 227, 40 P.2d 520(1935)). However, a misrepresentation of "substantial character" is not privileged. Crane v. Ariz. Republic, 972 F.2d 1511, 1519 (9th Cir. 1992).

As Emulex alleges, Broadcom stated that Emulex's patent infringement "cuts across [their] entire product line," threatens their entire business, and "covers a broad part of their business." (FAC ¶¶ 84-85.) Emulex alleges that the patent infringement allegations cover only a small part of their product line and affects a small fraction of their total business. (Id. ¶ 88.)

In each of Broadcom's infringement allegations in the patent complaint, Broadcom contends that Emulex's infringing products "includ[e] but [are] not limited to [certain specified products] and [] other electronic devices that incorporate similar circuitry and/or have similar features and/or functionality." (RJN, Ex. 4 ¶¶ 34, 40, 46, 52, 58, 64, 70, 76, 82, 88.) Thus, the infringement allegations are not limited to those products specifically enumerated—Broadcom's statements extend to all products with similar circuitry, features, or functionality. Although the statement that the infringement [*28] "cuts across [Emulex's] entire product line," is not specifically alleged in the complaint, it is a fair characterization of the "gist and sting" of the allegations.

In Sipple, the court applied the litigation reporting privilege to an article about a custody dispute involving testimony of spousal abuse by the plaintiff. 71 Cal. App. 4th at 245. The Court found that "although [the article] expands on specific incidents of abuse, [it] does not change the gist or sting of the courtroom statements or the complexion of the affair." Id. Similarly, Broadcom's statements here certainly expand on the allegations in the complaint, but they do not substantially change the gist of those allegations—that some indeterminate number of Emulex's products infringe their patents.

Thus, under the broad application of Section 47(d), see id. at 240, Broadcom's statements asserting infringement that "cuts across [Emulex's] entire product line" and "covers a broad part of their business," is a "fair and true report" of their patent complaint. Accordingly, the statements are privileged and not actionable.

The litigation privilege does not, however, apply to Broadcom's statement that Emulex is just a storage connectivity company. Accordingly, Emulex's libel [*29] and slander claim survives only as to that statement.

III. ANTI-SLAPP MOTION

A. Legal Standard

California's anti-SLAPP statute allows for pre-trial dismissal of strategic lawsuits against public participation ("SLAPPs"). Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.16. The statute aims to identify, early in the litigation process, "meritless first amendment cases aimed at chilling expression through costly, time-consuming litigation." Metabolife Int'l, Inc. v. Wornick, 264 F.3d 832, 839 (9th Cir. 2001); see also Wilcox v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 816, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 (Ct. App. 1994).

To succeed under an anti-SLAPP motion, a defendant must "make a prima facie showing that the plaintiff's suit arises from an act by the defendant made in connection with a public issue in furtherance of the defendant's right to free speech under the United States or California Constitution." Batzel v. Smith, 333 F.3d 1018, 1024 (9th Cir. 2003).

"The burden then shifts to the plaintiff to establish a reasonable probability that the plaintiff will prevail on his or her defamation claim." Id. In other words, "the plaintiff must demonstrate that 'the complaint is legally sufficient and supported by a prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by plaintiff is credited.'" Metabolife, 264 F.3d at 840 (quoting Wilcox, 27 Cal. App. 4th at 823).

Where an anti-SLAPP motion is brought on the grounds that the plaintiff's claim is legally deficient, the Court should adjudicate the motion [*30] under the standards for a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. See Lauter v. Anoufrieva, 642 F. Supp. 2d 1060, 1109 (C.D. Cal. 2009); In re Bah, 321 B.R. 41, 45 n.6 (BAP 9th Cir. 2005). "In other words, the court must read the complaint broadly, take all well-pleaded allegations as true, and dismiss with leave to amend." In re Bah, 321 B.R. at 45 n.6.

B. Discussion

Broadcom must first make a showing that the anti-SLAPP statute applies to Emulex's third claim for relief for libel and slander. Broadcom must show (1) that the claim arises from a protected activity, and (2) that no exceptions under the anti-SLAPP statute apply. See Brill Media Co., LLC v. TCW Group, Inc., 132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 330-31, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 (Ct. App. 2005). While Broadcom bears the burden of proving that Emulex's claim arises from a protected activity, Emulex had the burden of demonstrating that an anti-SLAPP exemption applies. *Simpson Strong-Tie Co. v. Gore, 49 Cal. 4th 12, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117, 2010 WL 1948283, at 8 (Cal. May 17, 2010). As discussed in the Court's prior order regarding discovery, this motion is to be construed under the Rule 12(b)(6) standard. (See Docket No. 35 at 4.)

Emulex begins by arguing that its claim arises from commercial speech and is therefore exempted from the anti-SLAPP statute under California Code of Civil Procedure section 425.17(c). In relevant part, this provision reads:

> [The anti-SLAPP statute] does not apply to any cause of action brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services [*31] . . . arising from any statement or conduct by that person if both of the following conditions exist:
> (1) The statement or conduct consists of representations of fact about that person's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services, that is made for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services, or the statement or conduct was made in the course of delivering the person's goods or services.
> (2) The intended audience is an actual or potential buyer or customer, or a person likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence, an actual or potential buyer or customer . . . .

Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.17(c).

Without "adopt[ing] a per se rule excluding all competitor's statements from anti-SLAPP protection," California courts hold that "in most cases a competitor's statements regarding its competition would not fall within section 425.16, subdivision (e)(4)." See, e.g., Integrated Healthcare Holdings, Inc. v. Fitzgibbons, 140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 526, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517 (2006); see also Globetrotter Software, Inc. v. Elan Computer Group, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 2d 1127, 1130 (N.D. Cal. 1999) (holding that the statements of one company regarding a competitor company do not satisfy the "issue of public interest" requirement of the anti-SLAPP statute).

Broadcom argues that the commercial speech exception does not apply because Emulex has not alleged [*32] that the purpose of the charged speech was to obtain approval for, promote, or secure sales of Broadcom's goods or services. See Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.17(c)(1). Broadcom contends that the first three statements relating to Broadcom's takeover attempt were made for the purpose of closing on the tender offer, rather than the purpose of selling goods. (See FAC ¶¶ 77-79, 93.) Broadcom also argues that the remaining statements were made for various purposes, including hostility and revenge for prior slights. (Id. ¶¶ 80, 93.)

However, as even Broadcom admits, Emulex has alleged that the statements were made for the purpose of selling Broadcom's goods. (Mot. Br. 15.) The FAC alleges that the takeover statements "were made with malice to further Broadcom's commercial interests and promote its own technologically deficient, but market share dominating, 10GbE Controllers," and the remaining statements were made "in an effort to promote Broadcom's own products." (FAC ¶¶ 82, 87; see also id. ¶¶ 28, 33, 34, 77, 89, 93.) Because this motion is governed by the Rule 12(b)(6) standards, the Court must take these allegations as true. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) ("Malice, intent, knowledge, and other conditions of a person's mind may be alleged generally."). It is certainly [*33] plausible that Broadcom's derogatory statements questioning Emulex's viability and urging customers not to buy from Emulex were made for the purpose of boosting or maintaining Broadcom's own sales.

Broadcom argues that Emulex's allegations of a commercial purpose do not suffice because it also alleges that the statements were motived by other purposes, such as hostility or an effort to close the tender offer. Broadcom contends that the commercial speech exception applies only where the speech is "entirely" or "purely" commercial speech, such that the sole purpose of the speech is for promoting sales of goods or services. The Court declines to adopt such a rigid rule. Nothing in the language of the anti-SLAPP statute suggests that a statement motivated by multiple purposes would be necessarily outside the scope of Section 425.17(c)(1).

Broadcom's cited authorities do not support its contention. Hoffman v. Capital Cities/ABC, Inc., 255 F.3d 1180 (9th Cir. 2001), did not involve the anti-SLAPP statute at all; it dealt with the application of the "commercial speech" doctrine in the realm of First Amendment law. See id. at 1184-85. Similarly, Hilton v. Hallmark Cards, 599 F.3d 894 (9th Cir. 2010), though citing Section 425.17(c), involved commercial speech in the First Amendment context. Id. at 905 n.7. Broadcom presents no authority applying First Amendment "commercial speech" jurisprudence to Section 425.17(c), notwithstanding [*34] Hilton's puzzling citation. Though courts often refer to Section 425.17(c) by shorthand as "the commercial speech" exception, the actual language of the statute does not contain the words "commercial speech" nor give any indication of a relation to First Amendment commercial speech doctrine. See Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.17(c).

In Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro Inc., 152 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434 (Ct. App. 2007), the court found that a statement giving an update on a lawsuit and criticizing a competitor's litigation tactics was not within the commercial speech exception because the statements were not about the competitor's operations, goods, or services. Id. at 1054. The court did not address the "purpose" element, much less find that a statement motivated by multiple ends could not be commercial speech.

In Girafa.com, Inc. v. Alexa Internet, Inc., No. C-08-02745 RMW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78260, 2008 WL 4500858 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 6, 2008), the court found that allegations of patent infringement within a complaint were not made for the purpose of promoting or selling goods or services. *Id. at 5. It found that the purpose of the statements was to plead a legal claim of infringement; that the claim might drive the competitor out of business and thereby increase the defendant's sales was "too attenuated" to be an intended purpose. Id. Emulex's complaint is distinguishable. First, all of the statements were made outside judicial [*35] proceedings.[10] Second, Emulex alleges that the statements were made to directly influence OEMs into shunning Emulex's goods. (FAC ¶¶ 44-46.) This is not the sort of attenuated causal chain that Girafa.com found to be insufficient to demonstate a commercial purpose.

Finally, in Taheri Law Group v. Evans, 160 Cal. App. 4th 482, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 847 (Ct. App. 2008), the court found that advice given by a lawyer to a client regarding a pending legal matter was not within the commercial speech exception. Id. at 491. That is clearly distinguishable from the charged speech here, made to customers, industry professionals, and stock analysts. The statement in Taheri that the legislature intended to exempt "disputes that are purely commercial," does not imply that mixed-motive statements are necessarily outside the scope of the commercial speech exception. See id. (emphasis added).

[10] The Court acknowledges that the Girafa.com court stated that "it is not relevant to [Section] 425.17(c)(1) whether [defendant] claimed that [plaintiff's] service infringes in a lawsuit or on a weblog." Id. However, the Court respectfully disagrees. The medium in which a statement is made can give great insight into the speaker's motivation. When an accusation of infringement is made solely to customers without the filing of any lawsuit, one can presume that the intent was to influence customers rather than seek legal redress. The medium may, in some cases, be the message.

In its reply brief, Broadcom argues for the first time that the charged statements were not made to an audience of customers or those likely to influence customers.[11] The Court disagrees. Emulex clearly alleges that the first three statements were made to Emulex's customers. (FAC ¶ 77.) The fourth statement was made to a stock analyst for the alleged purpose "to harm Emulex through communications to these analysts, [*36] customers, and potential customers." (Id. ¶ 84.) The Court finds that it is plausible that customers might be influenced by a stock analyst, especially in an industry where customers are concerned about a supplier's viability. (See id. ¶ 42.) The fifth statement was made at a technology convention to "industry professionals, stock analysts, and journalists," and the final statement was made to "the press." (Id. ¶ 85, 86.) This plausibly pleads audiences that are "likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence" customers. See Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 425.17(c).

Accordingly, the Court finds that Broadcom has failed to carry its burden of demonstrating that the alleged statements do not fall within the Section 425.17(c) commercial speech exception to the anti-SLAPP statute. Thus, the anti-SLAPP statute is not applicable.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the motion to dismiss is DENIED. The first and second claims survive as to the fourth and fifth statements posted on Broadcom's website. The third claim survives [*37] as to the second statement.

The special motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

CHESLER, District Judge

This matter comes before the Court upon the motion to dismiss the Complaint and to strike certain allegations in the Complaint, filed by Defendant Amgen Inc. ("Amgen") [docket entry 10]. Plaintiff Warren General Hospital ("Plaintiff" or "Warren General") opposes the motion. The Court has considered the papers submitted by the parties, and pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 78, rules on the motion without oral argument. For the reasons discussed below, the Court grants Amgen's motion and dismisses the Complaint in its entirety. [1]

[1] In light of the dismissal of the entire Complaint, the Court does not address the portion of the motion seeking an order striking certain allegations of the Complaint.

I. BACKGROUND

Warren [*2] General initiated this antitrust action seeking relief for Amgen's allegedly unlawful scheme of tying discounts and rebates on Amgen's White Blood Cell Growth Factor (WBCGF) products, branded as Neupogen and Neulasta, to purchases of its Red Blood Cell Growth Factor (RBCGF) product, branded as Aranesp. It filed the Complaint as a putative class action on behalf of all > direct purchasers who purchased Aranesp, Neupogen and Neulasta through an Amgen contract, such as an APC or Momentum Rebate, Momentum II or Enhanced Momentum II contract, which tied the rebates and/or discounts received on purchases of Neupogen and Neulasta to purchases of Aranesp during the period January 1, 2003 to the present.

(Compl., P 70.) The Complaint seeks damages for Amgen's alleged violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, based on Plaintiff's view that Amgen implemented an allegedly anti-competitive pricing and sales scheme to leverage its monopoly over the WBCGF market to gain control over the RBCGF market. The relevant facts, which the Court summarizes based on the allegations of the Complaint, are as follows:

Amgen manufactures and sells two [*3] different kinds of drugs involved in treating conditions associated with chemotherapy. One of these is WBCGF. Amgen's two WBCGF products command a 98% market share of WBCGF drug sales. The other is Amgen's RBCGF drug known as Aranesp. Aranesp competes with only one other RBCGF drug. The competitor RBCGF drug is manufactured by Ortho Biotech Products, L.P. and sold under the brand name Procrit. Both WBCGF and RBCGF drugs are needed to treat cancer patients.

Warren General purchased both Amgen's WBCGF products and the RBCGF drug, Aranesp, during the class period. Warren General and other end users of the drugs transacted their purchases from Amgen pursuant to contracts identified in the Complaint as the Amgen Portfolio Contract ("APC"), Momentum Rebate, Momentum II and Enhanced Momentum II. [2] (Compl., P 27.) The contracts are negotiated by a Group Purchasing Organization ("GPO") on behalf of member hospitals. [3] The Enhanced Momentum II contract, pursuant to which Warren General made purchases, structures the transaction so that Amgen sells Aranesp, Neupogen and Neulasta to wholesalers, which in turn sell to hospitals. Plaintiff acknowledges in its brief that it purchased through wholesaler [*4] Amerisource Bergen. [4]

Plaintiff alleges that Amgen offered substantial rebates to end user purchasers, such as Warren General, on the condition that they reach certain dollar volume requirements in their combined purchases of Amgen's RBCGF and

[2] The Court notes, for the sake of clarity, that APCs apply to oncology clinics, whereas the Momentum contracts pertain to hospital customers. The Court also notes that the parties agree that, as documents explicitly referred to and relied on by the Complaint, the contracts may be considered by the Court on this motion to dismiss, even though the documents are extraneous to the Complaint. In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 (3d Cir.1997); Pension Benefit Guar. Corp. v. White Consol. Indus., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993).

[3] Plaintiff's Opposition Brief defines GPOs as "organizations that negotiate standardized contracts with manufacturers and suppliers of medical devices on behalf of their members." Pl. Br. at 25 (quoting Natchitoches Parish Hosp. Svc. Dist. v. Tyco Int'l Ltd., 247 F.R.D. 253, 256 (D.Mass. 2008)). According to the helpful description of GPOs provided by the court in Natchitoches, > GPOs pool the purchasing power of their members and leverage that power to negotiate lower prices. GPOs do not purchase any products, nor do they sign or otherwise enter into the contracts that they negotiate on behalf of their members. Instead, [*5] GPOs negotiate standard form, or model, contracts that the members themselves sign and enter into with manufacturers.

[4] The name of Plaintiff's wholesaler does not appear in the Complaint, but the Court takes judicial notice of it for the factual narrative of this Opinion.

WBCGF drugs. Under Amgen's pricing scheme, each account was given dollar volume usage targets that, once reached, allowed the clinic to earn a specified level of rebate. The greater the purchases of Amgen products, the greater the rebate earned. To obtain sufficient rebates on their WBCGF purchases and avoid losing money on the drugs, purchasers had to meet their dollar volume targets on Aranesp. The Complaint alleges that Amgen set the purchasing requirements and rebate levels knowing how the purchasers would be reimbursed for their WBCGF drugs by Medicare. It alleges that Amgen knew that "[a]bsent achieving the Aranesp purchase requirements, and thereby obtaining the highest possible rebates from [*6] Amgen, Plaintiff and the class would be reimbursed by Medicare less than the cost of the WBCGF drugs." (Compl., P 31.)

The Complaint alleges that the rebate and pricing scheme forced purchasers to buy less Procrit (the competing RBCGF drug) and more Aranesp in order to attain the higher rebates. It further alleges that these rebates were essential to end users to avoid losing money on the reimbursement they received from Medicare for administering Amgen's WBCGF drugs. Warren General contends that even though Aranesp had a higher list and acquisition price per dose than Procrit, its only viable option was to purchase all or nearly all of its RBCGF drugs from Amgen. According to the Complaint, this allegedly illegal tying scheme caused market share for Aranesp to grow and the competitor's market share to drop. Plaintiff claims, in sum, that > Amgen's efforts to use its monopoly power in the WBCGF drug market to coerce direct purchasers such as hospitals, doctors and oncology clinics into buying substantial amounts of Aranesp caused those purchasers to substantially overpay for RBCGF drugs, 1) to avoid losing money on their essential purchases of Amgen's WBCGF drugs, as well as 2) causing [*7] overpayments on those purchasers' bundle of combined RBCGF and WBCGF drugs, and 3) because Amgen's illegal tying scheme impaired and foreclosed Ortho's ability to effectively compete in the RBCGF market, which would have led to lower prices on RBCGF drugs, and finally 4) because Aranesp was more expensive per dose than Procrit.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

Amgen's principal basis for seeking dismissal of the Complaint in its entirety is Warren General's lack of antitrust standing as an indirect purchaser. Because Amgen has challenged Plaintiff's statutory standing to bring this suit, the Court reviews the motion to dismiss according to the standards applicable to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Maio v. Aetna, Inc., 221 F.3d 472, 482 n. 7 (3d Cir. 2000).

A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) may be granted only if, accepting all well-pleaded allegations in the complaint as true and viewing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, a court finds that plaintiff's claims have facial plausibility. Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1965, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). This means that the Complaint must contain sufficient factual allegations [*8] to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, assuming the factual allegations are true. Id. at 1965; Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 234 (3d Cir. 2008). The Supreme Court has made clear that "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1964-65; see also Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) ("While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations.").

In evaluating a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a court may consider only the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, matters of public record, and undisputedly authentic documents if the complainant's claims are based upon those documents. See Pension Benefit Guar. Corp., 998 F.2d at 1196. The issue before the Court "is not whether plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence in support of the claims." Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d at 1420 (quoting Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974)).

B. Standing under Illinois Brick

Plaintiff claims it has been injured by the subject tying arrangement, in violation [*9] of federal antitrust laws and accordingly seeks damages from Amgen. Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, authorizes any person injured by a violation of the antitrust laws to sue for treble damages, costs and attorneys' fees. It is, however, well-established under the rule known as the Illinois Brick doctrine, that only direct purchasers have standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act to seek damages for antitrust violations. Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 735, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977); see also Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 494, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968) (holding that direct purchaser is injured under Section 4 of Clayton Act by full amount of overcharge and foreclosing antitrust defendant from defending on grounds that overcharge was passed on to indirect purchasers). With very few and narrowly tailored exceptions, a party that has made a purchase indirectly through a middleman, rather than directly from the manufacturer accused of committing an antitrust violation, is barred under Illinois Brick from bring suit. Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 207, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990). The Supreme Court has identified three rationales for the direct purchaser rule of Illinois Brick: [*10] (1) it eliminates the complications of apportioning overcharges among purchasers in a chain of distribution, which is especially difficult in light of the wide range of considerations influencing a company's pricing decisions; (2) it eliminates a pass-on defense for manufacturers, which would reduce the effectiveness of Section 4 actions by diminishing the recovery available to a plaintiff; and (3) it eliminates the risk of multiple recoveries. Id. at 206-207, 212.

In this case, there is no question that Warren General purchased Amgen's WBCGF and RBCGF from a middleman wholesaler. Its allegations throughout the Complaint that it is a "direct purchaser" merely parrots the Illinois Brick requirement, without providing any factual basis to support this assertions. The Court need not assume the truth of legal conclusions. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949 ("the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions."). In fact, the Complaint's characterization of Warren General as a direct purchaser is squarely contradicted by the purchase contracts on which the Complaint relies, which demonstrate that Warren General pays a wholesaler, [*11] not Amgen for the products based on prices which have been set by the wholesaler. When there is a disparity between a complaint's allegations and the written instruments on which the allegations or claims are based, the written instrument controls. ALA, Inc. v. CCAir, Inc., 29 F.3d 855, 859 n.8 (3d Cir. 1994). [5]

Warren General acknowledges that it purchases the Amgen WBCGF and RBCGF products from a wholesaler. It nevertheless argues that the mechanics of the transaction should not bar its antitrust action because insofar as the antitrust injury is concerned, the wholesaler is irrelevant and Warren General should be deemed the direct purchaser. It contends that the challenged tying arrangement does not implicate any overcharge experienced by the wholesaler but rather centers on the availability of rebates to the end user. Those rebates are negotiated directly between Amgen and the GPO to which Warren General belongs, and the purchases are made pursuant to the hospital's GPO-negotiated contract with Amgen. The rebates are then payable directly from Amgen to Warren General. Warren General maintains that although the transactions are structured so that the WBCGF and RBCGF products are purchased from Amgen by wholesaler Amerisource Bergen, which in turn sells them to the hospital, the crux of antitrust injury lies in the volume of RBCGF Warren General [*13] and other end users are forced to make to qualify for the rebates on WBCGF. Thus, Plaintiff argues that it should not be subject to a hypertechnical application of Illinois Brick because it bears the antitrust overcharge in the first instance. In other words, according

[5] In an attempt to establish that it is a direct purchaser, Warren General also points out that Amgen has admitted, through pleadings publicly filed in other lawsuits, that many clinics buy WBCGF from Amgen. This argument is unavailing. First, that a hospital or clinic buys from Amgen does not necessarily mean it purchases the product directly from the manufacturer, as opposed to somewhere along the distribution chain. Second, the relationship between Amgen and "many clinics" or other unidentified end users is simply irrelevant. The question the Court must address is whether the Plaintiff in this case, Warren General, has alleged facts in support of its claim that it is a direct purchaser of RBCGF and WBCGF from Amgen. It is well-established that bringing a lawsuit as a class action does not dispense with the requirement that a named plaintiff must itself have standing to sue. [*12] Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 357, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996); O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 494, 94 S. Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974); Winer Family Trust v. Queen, 503 F.3d 319, 326 (3d Cir. 2007).

to Warren General, the wholesaler is completely unaffected by the tying scheme and thus Amgen would not face the risk of additional lawsuits brought by Amerisource Bergen or any other wholesaler.

Essentially, Warren General asks this Court to carve out an exception from the Illinois Brick doctrine to accommodate a business arrangement in which, according to Plaintiff's argument, the end user alone bears the tying scheme overcharge and the middleman could not have an antitrust claim. The Court declines to do so. Warren General has cited no authority in which either the Supreme Court, the Third Circuit, or any other court of appeals has recognized an exception for situations involving direct interaction between an indirect purchaser and the manufacturer.

Indeed, the antitrust jurisprudence indicates that courts are loath to recognize exceptions to the Illinois Brick doctrine. See, e.g., UtiliCorp United Inc., 497 U.S. at 208 [*14] (refusing to create exception for situation in which middleman passed on entire overcharge to indirect purchaser); Delaware Valley Surgical Supply, Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson, 523 F.3d 1116, 1123-24 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that, under Illinois Brick rule, hospital that bought medical supplies from distributor lacked standing, even though price paid by hospital was set partly by GPO-negotiated agreement with manufacturer). The Court acknowledges that this is not a situation in which there appears to be particular difficulty in apportioning the alleged overcharge borne by the indirect purchaser. The Supreme Court, however, has held that for the direct purchaser rule of Illinois Brick to serve its purpose of maintaining stability and avoiding extensive fact-based litigation in antitrust suits, it must be applied as a bright-line rule, even if the rule's rationales are not significantly furthered in a particular case. UtiliCorp United Inc., 497 U.S. at 211-12, 216. It expressly rejected adopting an approach to Illinois Brick that would create exceptions to fit the peculiarities of certain markets or business arrangements. Id. at 210-11. The Supreme Court reasoned:

> The rationales underlying [*15] Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick will not apply with equal force in all cases. We nonetheless believe that ample justification exists for our stated decision not to "carve out exceptions to the [direct purchaser] rule for particular types of markets." The possibility of allowing an exception, even in rather meritorious circumstances, would undermine the rule. As we have stated:
> "[T]he process of classifying various market situations according to the amount of pass-on likely to be involved and its susceptibility of proof in a judicial forum would entail the very problems that the Hanover Shoe rule was meant to avoid. The litigation over where the line should be drawn in a particular class of cases would inject the same 'massive evidence and complicated theories' into treble-damages proceedings, albeit at a somewhat higher level of generality."
> In sum, even assuming that any economic assumptions underlying the Illinois Brick rule might be disproved in a specific case, we think it an unwarranted and counterproductive exercise to litigate a series of exceptions. Having stated the rule in Hanover Shoe, and adhered to it in Illinois Brick, we stand by our interpretation of § 4.

Id. at 216-217 [*16] (quoting Illinois Brick, 431 U.S., at 744-745) (citations omitted).

Guided in large part by the Supreme Court's reasoning in UtiliCorp United, the Ninth Circuit refused to carve out an exception for an indirect purchaser hospital in Delaware Valley, a case which is factually similar to the one at bar. Delaware Valley Surgical Supply, Inc., 523 F.3d at 1123-24. The case involved allegations that the defendant manufacturer Johnson & Johnson had impermissibly leveraged its monopoly power in sutures to create a monopoly in the market for endomechanical products by offering rebates and discounts on the condition that a buyer purchase the bulk of both kinds of products from Johnson & Johnson. Id. at 1118. The plaintiff hospital, Bamberg County Memorial Hospital and Nursing Center ("Bamberg Hospital"), urged the court to adopt a new exception to Illinois Brick that would, in the hospital's view, be "better attuned to the business relationships between health care providers and manufacturers." Id. at 1123. The hospital did not dispute that it placed orders for medical supplies through independent distributors. Id. at 1122. It argued that it was nevertheless the direct victim of the manufacturer's [*17] antitrust violations and resulting artificially high prices because the hospital's GPO had negotiated the price with the manufacturer and the injury stemmed from the GPO-negotiated contract between Bamberg Hospital and the manufacturer. Id. at 1122-23. Bamberg Hospital further argued that it would have a greater incentive than a distributor to bring an antitrust claim based on a manufacturer's price negotiations with a

GPO. Id. at 1123. The Delaware Valley court held that the established and deliberately strict rule under Illinois Brick did not permit the Court to deviate from the rule in consideration of the facts of the subject transaction. Id. at 1123-24. "The Court's firm rule does not provide us the leeway to make a policy determination on a case-by-case basis as to whether standing should be recognized when there are special business arrangements." Id. at 1124 (citing Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 744).

Despite Warren General's arguments to the contrary, the Third Circuit adheres to Illinois Brick's bright-line rule barring indirect purchasers from pursuing damages for federal antitrust violations. Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 258-59 (3d Cir. 2010); [*18] see also Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 424 F.3d 363, 371 (3d Cir. 2005) (observing that Supreme Court has held that absence of an Illinois Brick concern in an individual case does not warrant removing the bar on indirect purchaser claim); McCarthy v. Recordex Svc., Inc., 80 F.3d 842, 849-854 (3d Cir. 1996) (discussing various cases in which Third Circuit applied Illinois Brick rule). The Court has considered Warren General's position that an Illinois Brick exception makes sense in the factual scenario presented by this case because, among other reasons, recognizing Warren General's standing "will serve to promote 'the vigorous enforcement of antitrust laws'" whereas the middleman wholesaler lacks any incentive to challenge the allegedly unlawful tying arrangement. (See Pl. Br. at 20 (quoting UtiliCorp United Inc., 497 U.S. at 214)). It remains clear, however, that Warren General is an indirect purchaser of the Amgen products at issue. Whatever the potential merits of the exception proposed by Warren General may be, this Court holds the view that such a matter is one for the Supreme Court or the Legislature to decide.

In the alternative, Warren General maintains [*19] that, even if considered an indirect purchaser, it should be permitted to proceed with the suit under the cost-plus exception to the Illinois Brick doctrine. The Supreme Court has recognized an Illinois Brick exception for situations in which the overcharged buyer has a pre-existing cost-plus contract. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736; Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 494. The cost-plus exception applies when the customer is committed to buying a fixed quantity of the manufacturer's product regardless of price. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736; Mid-West Paper Prods. Co. v. Continental Group, Inc., 596 F.2d 573, 577 and n.9 (3d Cir. 1979). The Supreme Court reasoned that because the indirect purchaser's commitment to buy a fixed quantity of the product insulates the direct purchaser from market responses to the overcharge, the effect of the overcharge on the indirect purchaser is not complicated by the need to recreate whether and how much of the overcharge is borne by the indirect purchaser. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736.

Warren General's cost-plus argument is simply not applicable. The facts alleged in the Complaint do not demonstrate or even remotely suggest that Warren General had an agreement [*20] with Amgen to purchase a fixed amount of Aranesp. The pricing scheme described provided that Warren General had to reach a target volume of Aranesp purchases to qualify for rebates on the combined purchase of Aranesp and WBCGF drugs. This rebate schedule, however, does not equate with a commitment by the indirect purchaser to purchase a certain amount of Aranesp, notwithstanding Warren General's position that the rebates were essential to economic viability.

Thus, the Court concludes, based on the allegations of the Complaint and the documents on which it relies, that Warren General lacks standing, as an indirect purchaser, to pursue its claims for damages against Amgen for the complained-of antitrust violations. Accordingly, the Complaint will be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6).

C. Definition of Unlawful Tie

In addition to the standing deficiency discussed above, the Complaint also fails for failure to allege an unlawful tie under federal antitrust law. An essential element of a tying claim is that the sale of one product be conditioned on the sale of another. N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). "Tying is selling one good (the tying product) on the condition [*21] that the buyer also purchase another, separate good (the tied product)." Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 213 (3d Cir. 2005).

In this case, Warren General's tying theory is that Amgen leveraged its control over the WBCGF market to coerce purchases of its RBCGF products and thereby drive out competition from the RBCGF market. The Complaint does not, however, allege that Amgen attempted to achieve this by conditioning the sale of WBCGF drugs on a buyer's purchase of its RBCGF product, Aranesp. Rather, the alleged coercion and improper leveraging of its monopoly (to adopt the Complaint's characterization) occurred in the form of setting target purchase amounts to earn rebates on the WBCGF drugs, without which rebates, Plaintiff maintains, Amgen knew its buyers would lose money. The Complaint alleges, in other words, that Amgen conditioned the availability of rebates and discounts on one product, the WBCGF drugs, on a buyer's purchase of another, Amgen's RBCGF drug.

Under Third Circuit law, this allegation fails to set forth the conditioned sale element of an antitrust tying claim. SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1061 n.3 (3d Cir. 1978) (observing, in dicta, that [*22] Supreme Court has defined a tie-in as "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product" (quoting N. Pac. Ry., 356 U.S. at 5)). The Complaint neither expressly charges nor inferentially alleges that Amgen will not sell WBCGF unless a buyer also purchases Aranesp. Amgen, rather, has created a pricing and discount scheme that a buyer may take advantage of if it buys both Amgen products. This arrangement does not present a tying problem. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984) ("Where the buyer is free to take either product by itself there is no tying problem even though the seller may also offer the two items as a unit at a single price."). Having failed to plead facts establishing an essential element of an antitrust tying claim, Warren General's Complaint must be dismissed.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this Court will dismiss the Complaint in its entirety pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) for Plaintiff's lack of statutory standing, and alternatively, for failure to plead a prima facie tying claim. An appropriate form of order will be filed together with this Opinion.

The antitrust laws are not intended to apply to actions taken by state governments. The U.S. Supreme Court has established a general immunity from antitrust liability for state governmental actors acting pursuant to state law, a concept now often denominated "Parker immunity" or "state action immunity." In a later case involving California's effort to enforce resale price maintenance, the Supreme Court has developed a two-part test for state action immunity. First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself.

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A court needs apply the two-part Midcal test only when the state statute or ordinance is preempted by the federal antitrust laws. Challenges to state action not preempted by the Sherman Act fail. Preemption occurs only if there is an irreconcilable conflict between the state statute and the antitrust laws: The decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court in this area instructs, therefore, that a state statute, when considered in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.

Whether state regulation is preempted depends largely on the character of the regulation. If the state acts unilaterally, such as by imposing rent controls, such action cannot be preempted by the antitrust laws and the antitrust challenge fails. If, however, the state empowers a private actor to violate the antitrust laws, by, for example, imposing price controls on downstream distributors, then the state has created a hybrid restraint that is preempted if it constitutes a per se violation of the antitrust laws.

The U.S. Supreme Court has substantially clarified and revised the two-pronged Midcal test as it applies to municipal ordinances. First, though the first prong requires a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy of antitrust immunity for the municipality, the prong is satisfied when anticompetitive conduct is a foreseeable result of the state's authorizing statute. Explicit statements by the state legislature that it anticipated anticompetitive effects are not required. Second, the final prong, requiring active state supervision of the regulatory scheme, is not required when the defendant is itself a municipality and not a private actor.

A municipality is shielded from antitrust liability if its activity is undertaken pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy authorizing anticompetitive conduct. A state policy is clearly expressed when the state statute authorizing anticompetitive conduct clearly contemplates such a result, or where the anticompetitive effects logically would result. In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, an entity seeking state action immunity must show: (1) that it is a political subdivision of the state; (2) that, through statutes, the state generally authorizes the political subdivision to perform the challenged action; and (3) that, through statutes, the state has clearly articulated a state policy authorizing anticompetitive conduct.

[*811] DUBINA, Chief Judge:

Hillsborough County established a franchise system for waste collection, one now challenged under the antitrust laws by a service provider and a customer. The district court held that the franchise system implemented by the county constituted a hybrid restraint--one where the government enforces the anticompetitive practices of private parties. According [2] to the district court, because such a hybrid restraint existed, it could not address the antitrust immunity of the state actors. The district court's conclusion was incorrect, and we reverse its order denying immunity. Even if the Sherman Act preempts a state practice, if it is undertaken by state actors pursuant to an expressed anticompetitve state policy, then those actors are immune from liability.

I. BACKGROUND

Appellant Hillsborough County, Florida ("the county"), together with Intervenor-Appellants Waste Management, Inc. of Florida and Republic Services of Florida (collectively "Appellants") appeal the district court order denying the county's motion to dismiss federal antitrust claims brought by Danner Construction Co. and Gateway Roll-Off Services, LP (collectively "Danner and Gateway") on the basis of state action immunity.

In 1983, the Florida legislature passed the Hillsborough County Solid Waste Disposal and Resource Recovery Act. 1983 Fla. Laws 166 (Chapter 83-415) ("the Act"). The Act empowered the county to take "exclusive control over the collection and disposal of solid waste" within the county. Id. at 169-70 (Section 4). The Act forbids any person or entity, except the [3] county or its franchisees and licensees, to collect or dispose of solid waste within the county. Id.

Pursuant to the Act, the county passed an ordinance to implement its regulatory power over the area's waste disposal. See Hillsborough County, Fla. Ordinance 96-34 (Nov. 13, 1996) amended by Ordinance 97-8, Ordinance 97-11, Ordinance 03-15 ("the ordinance"). The ordinance established a two-pronged franchise system for waste disposal, one for residential customers and one for commercial customers. The county awards franchises within the service area to waste disposal services, id. § 3(k), and the Board of County Commissioners determines the collection charges assessed to residential customers. Id. § 3(i). For commercial entities, the county also awards franchises to disposal services, id. § 4(g), but it does not set collection rates, leaving those to negotiation between the franchisees and commercial customers. Id. § 4(f).

Danner, a commercial customer located within the county, and Gateway, a disposal service not awarded a franchise by the [*812] county, filed suit to enjoin continued application of the ordinance. Danner and Gateway alleged that the ordinance caused them harm by artificially [4] inflating the cost of commercial waste disposal services and unlawfully barring service providers from competing in the market. Danner and Gateway asserted violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (2006) (Counts I and II) and various violations of state law (Counts III-V).

Acting pursuant to the ordinance, the county awarded three franchises to waste disposal services for the county's commercial entities. Danner and Gateway allege that the county's restriction on the size of the competitive market essentially authorizes the franchisees to collude and impose fixed prices on their customers. They argue that this arrangement gives the franchisees a degree of governmental power over their customers, who are forced to use their services, referring to it in the antitrust lexicon as a "hybrid restraint" because it allows private parties to enforce their pricing decisions with governmental authority. Additionally, they argue that the Act under which the ordinance was promulgated requires the county to impose price controls on commercial collection service. Finally, they argue that the county's creation of a two-tiered pricing system--where the franchisees must charge below-market rates [5] to residential customers and therefore must recoup their losses from commercial customers--forces the price-fixing they allege.

The county moved to dismiss the complaint's antitrust claims (Counts I and II) on the basis of state action immunity. [1] The Intervenor-Appellants are two of the three franchisees of the county that perform commercial waste disposal, and the district court permitted them to intervene after it denied the county's motion. Appellants now collectively challenge the district court order denying the motion to dismiss on the basis of state action immunity.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN2[] We review de novo the denial of a motion to dismiss based on state action immunity. See Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Med. Ctr., 980 F.2d 1381, 1384 (11th Cir. 1984) (applying de novo review to legal question of state action immunity).

III. DISCUSSION

The first key principle governing this dispute is that HN3[] the antitrust laws were not intended to apply to actions taken by state governments. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-51, 63 S. Ct. 307, 313, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943). In Parker, the Supreme Court established a general immunity from antitrust liability for state governmental actors acting pursuant to state law, a concept now often denominated "Parker immunity" [*813] or "state action immunity." See id. In a later case involving California's effort to enforce resale [7] price maintenance, the Supreme Court developed a two-part test for state action immunity. See Cal. Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980). "First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself." Id. at 105, 100 S. Ct. at 943 (internal quotation marks omitted) (ultimately holding that the state did not adequately supervise the private pricing decisions that it enforced).

[1] The county actually moved to dismiss the entire complaint, but the district court order addressed only the federal antitrust claims and ordered the county to answer the remainder of the complaint. On appeal, we address only the decision respecting the federal antitrust claims. We have jurisdiction to hear this appeal under the collateral order doctrine because the immunity asserted here includes immunity from suit. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 1291, 1292 (2006); Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 546, 69 S. Ct. 1221, 1225-26, 93 L. Ed. 1528 (1949) (establishing three-part test for collateral orders excepted from the final [6] judgment requirement for appealability); Martin v. Mem'l Hosp. at Gulfport, 86 F.3d 1391, 1394-97 (5th Cir. 1996) (explaining that orders denying claims of state action immunity are immediately appealable under Cohen); Commuter Transp. Sys., Inc. v. Hillsborough County Aviation Auth., 801 F.2d 1286, 1289-90 (11th Cir. 1986) (holding that HN1[] an order denying summary judgment on state action immunity grounds was immediately appealable).

The second key principle is that HN4[] we need apply the two-part Midcal test only when the state statute or ordinance is preempted by the federal antitrust laws. See [Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 662 n.9, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 3301 n.9, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982)]. Challenges to state action not preempted by the Sherman Act fail. See [Fisher v. City of Berkeley, Cal., 475 U.S. 260, 270, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 1051, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986)] (holding that ordinance was not a per se violation of the Sherman Act and concluding that "[w]e need not address whether . . . [it] would be exempt under the state-action doctrine from antitrust scrutiny"). Preemption occurs only if there is an "irreconcilable [8] conflict" between the state statute and the antitrust laws:

> Our decisions in this area instruct us, therefore, that a state statute, when considered in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.

HN5[] Whether state regulation is preempted depends largely on the character of the regulation. If the state acts unilaterally, such as by imposing rent controls, such action cannot be preempted by the antitrust laws and the antitrust challenge fails. [Fisher, 475 U.S. at 270, 106 S. Ct. at 1051] (holding that city's rent control ordinance was not an unlawful price-fixing scheme because the city acted unilaterally). If, however, the state empowers a private actor to violate the antitrust laws, by, for example, imposing price controls on downstream distributors, then the state has created a "hybrid restraint" that is preempted if it constitutes a per se violation of the antitrust laws. [Id. at 267-68, 106 S. Ct. at 1050]; [9] [324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 342-43, 107 S. Ct. 720, 724-25, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987)] (holding that New York's resale price maintenance scheme for liquor was preempted by the Sherman Act).

The third and final key principle relates only to applying state action immunity to municipal ordinances that are preempted by the antitrust laws. HN6[] The Supreme Court substantially clarified and revised the two-pronged Midcal test as it applies to municipal ordinances in [Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985)]. First, though the first prong requires a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy of antitrust immunity for the municipality, the prong is satisfied when anticompetitive conduct is a "foreseeable result" of the state's authorizing statute. [Id. at 42, 105 S. Ct. at 1718]. Explicit statements by the state legislature that it anticipated anticompetitive effects are not required. Id. Second, the final prong, requiring active state supervision of the regulatory scheme, is not required [*814] when the defendant is itself a municipality and not a private actor. [Id. at 46-47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720].

HN7[] A municipality is shielded from antitrust liability if its activity [10] is undertaken "pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy" authorizing anticompetitive conduct. [Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 40-41, 105 S. Ct. at 1717]. A state policy is "clearly expressed" when the state statute authorizing anticompetitive conduct "clearly contemplates" such a result, or where the "anticompetitive effects logically would result." [Id. at 42, 105 S. Ct. at 1718]. In this circuit, an entity seeking state action immunity must show: "(1) that it is a political subdivision of the state; (2) that, through statutes, the state generally authorizes the political subdivision to perform the challenged action; and (3) that, through statutes, the state has clearly articulated a state policy authorizing anticompetitive conduct." [Fed. Trade Comm'n v. Hosp. Bd. of Dirs. of Lee County, 38 F.3d 1184, 1187-88 (11th Cir. 1994)].

We assume, without deciding, that the challenged ordinance is preempted by the Sherman Act. [2] Even so, the county has demonstrated that all three criteria of the state action immunity test are satisfied. There is no dispute that the county is a political subdivision of the state. The parties tussle over the second and third criteria, which are really just an extrapolation [11] of the "clearly expressed state policy requirement" contained in Town of Hallie. An examination of the Hillsborough County Solid Waste Disposal and Resource Recovery Act, 1983 Fla. Laws 166, resolves both questions in the county's favor.

HN8[] The Act explicitly provides that "the county shall have exclusive control over the collection and disposal of solid waste." Id. at 169-70 (Section 4). It further provides that "[n]o [12] person except the county, its franchisee, licensee, leasee [sic], or other designated person shall . . . engage in the collection and disposition of solid waste." Id. Such language confers on the county the right to exert control over the solid waste collection and to limit or exclude private competitors from the market.

The final prong of this circuit's state action immunity test turns on the presence of a clearly articulated policy permitting anticompetitive conduct. In general, HN9[] this court has held that when the state confers on a municipality the power to regulate the provision of public services, it does so mindful of the inevitable anticompetitive effects such power will have. See, e.g., McCallum v. City of Athens, Ga., 976 F.2d 649, 654 (11th Cir. 1992) (holding that state action immunity shielded city from antitrust claims stemming from its exclusive operation of waterworks, as authorized by statute). The provisions of section 4 of the Act, as discussed above, show that the state intentionally conferred upon the county exclusive power to administer and regulate waste collection. That anticompetitive results were foreseeable is a given--such a grant of exclusivity implies anticompetitive [13] purpose. *See Commuter [815] Transp. Sys., Inc. v. Hillsborough County Aviation Auth., 801 F.2d 1286, 1290 (11th Cir. 1986) (applying state action immunity to claims against state agency that regulated the number of limousine operators that could service the local airport pursuant to its authority to develop and administer public airports).

An additional indication that the legislature foresaw the anticompetitive effects of ordinances promulgated under the Act appears in section 19. In that section, the legislature specifically exempted from application of the Florida Antitrust Act the exercise of powers under the Act. 1983 Fla. Laws 176. This serves as another indication that the state legislature was imminently aware of the anticompetitive results that would flow from the exclusivity arrangement.

Danner and Gateway repeatedly assert that the county ordinance and its application are not saved by state action immunity because they do not comply with the Act's terms. Specifically, they argue that the Act requires the county, when implementing a franchise system, to establish rate controls on the commercial collection services. They contend that the county's failure to establish rate controls [14] prevents state action immunity from shielding the county because no state law allows the county to enact incomplete or uncompliant regulations.

Danner and Gateway's general legal assertion--that a challenged ordinance must comply with state law in order to be shielded by that law--has great logical appeal. The problem they face is not the legal concept, however, but the application of that concept to the case at hand. Simply put, Danner and Gateway's interpretation of the Act, and their contention that it requires the county to set the rates for collection services, is inaccurate.

Danner and Gateway repeatedly point to two provisions of the Act that they claim require the county to set rates for commercial collection: sections 5(8) and 8. See 1983 Fla. Laws 172-74. Both of these sections speak specifically to "solid waste disposal and resource recovery system[s]," a term defined under the Act dealing with the "facilities" used to store and convert solid waste, such as landfills. 1983 Fla. Laws 168 (Section 2(8)). HN10[] These sections do clearly establish the county's authority to regulate rates charged by these "facilities," but nowhere do they speak of the county's obligation to set rates [15] for those who collect and take the waste to these facilities. Because there is no actual provision of the Act which requires the county to set rates for the collection of waste, the contention that the ordinance fails to comply with the state authorization is erroneous. [3]

[3] Danner and Gateway also argue that the ordinance conflicts with other provisions of state law not related to the enabling statute. For our purposes, the fact that a local ordinance may conflict with a different state law may present a state law cause of action, but the noncompliance does not rise to the level of a federal antitrust violation.

The crux of the district court's decision was this: "the County has engaged in a 'hybrid restraint' on trade, as alleged by Danner, [and] the County has committed a per se violation of the Sherman Act and is not entitled to immunity under the Parker doctrine." As the framework discussed above reveals, this conclusion was legal error; HN11[] even if the Sherman Act preempts a state law or municipal ordinance, the court must still conduct the Parker/Midcal inquiry to determine if the defendant is entitled to immunity. See Midcal, 445 U.S. at 103, 100 S. Ct. at 942 (holding that the challenged [16] practice violated the Sherman Act but [*816] continuing to examine it under Parker); Fisher, 475 U.S. at 265, 106 S. Ct. at 1048 ("Legislation that would otherwise be pre-empted under Rice may nonetheless survive if it is found to be state action immune from antitrust scrutiny under Parker . . . ."). Our analysis of the applicability of state action immunity shows that the county is immune from this suit even if its actions are preempted by the Sherman Act.

Even the district court, in spite of its faulty application of the state action immunity framework, acknowledged that Parker state action immunity should shield the county's conduct under the ordinance. The authorizing state legislation contemplated, and most likely intended, the anticompetitive effects that resulted when the county promulgated its ordinance. The ordinance complies with the authorizing statute, which allows the county to take exclusive control of waste collection. Because the county has acted pursuant to a clearly articulated anticompetitive policy of the state, we conclude that its actions are immune from antitrust liability.

IV. CONCLUSION

This antitrust challenge to a traditional area of state and municipal regulation [17] fails because of the applicability of state action immunity. The county, acting in its authorized capacity as regulator of waste collection services, is immune from antitrust liability as a state actor. None of the federal antitrust claims now on appeal can stand against the county, and the district court should have ordered dismissal. We reverse the district court order denying dismissal of Counts I and II and remand for further proceedings regarding the remaining counts.

Concur

MARTIN, concurring:

I concur in the majority's analysis of the state action immunity issue but write separately to elaborate on its assumption that the challenged ordinance is preempted by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See Slip. Op. at 9.

The majority's discussion of the "second key principle" suggests that preemption may be found only when the challenged statute or ordinance conflicts with Section 1 on it face. Slip. Op. at 7 (citing Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 661, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 3300, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982)). As the Supreme Court stated in Rice, this occurs when the "conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation." Rice, 458 U.S. at 661, 102 S. Ct. at 3300 (emphasis [18] added in part). If in at least one case, the conduct must be analyzed under the rule of reason, the law, in the abstract, does not conflict with Section 1. Id.

But federal preemption may also be found when a plaintiff challenges particular applications of a state or local law. 1 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P 217d & n.93, at 372-73, P 221, at 42 (3rd ed. 2006). Such an "as applied" challenge asks whether a particular application of the law conflicts with Section 1 in that it results in a restraint of trade that is either per se illegal or illegal under the rule of reason. The two-part Midcal test for state action immunity thus applies not only to a law that conflicts with Section 1 on its face, as the majority suggests, but also to a law that conflicts with Section 1 only in its application. [1] Id.

[*817] As the majority correctly notes, we need not consider whether state action immunity applies unless the statute or ordinance conflicts with the Sherman Act. Slip. Op. at 6. Thus, with respect to facial challenges, there is no need to engage in the immunity inquiry if the challenged statute or ordinance does not result in an per se illegal restraint of trade in all cases. Rice, 458 U.S. at 662 n.9, 102 S. Ct. at 3301 n.9. This is true because absent such a finding a facial challenge fails as a matter of law. See id. at 661-62 & n.9, 102 S. Ct. at 3300 & n.9 ("Analysis under the rule of reason requires an examination of the circumstances underlying a particular economic practice, and therefore does not lend itself to a conclusion that a statute is facially inconsistent with federal antitrust laws.").

But the same is not true when the plaintiff brings an "as applied" challenge. This is because the success of an "as applied" challenge does not turn on a finding that all applications of the challenged law would be per se illegal. Thus, [20] we must go further and ask whether the challenged statute or ordinance, as it is applied to the plaintiff, results in a restraint of trade that is either per se illegal or unlawful under the rule of reason. Only if we answer that question affirmatively does it become necessary to consider whether state action immunity applies.

The majority is correct that we may assume without deciding that the county's ordinance conflicts with Section I. [2] The majority is also correct in noting that Danner and Gateway have been less than clear in describing their challenge to the county's ordinance as facial, "as applied," or both. [3] To the extent they bring a facial challenge, I therefore assume that the challenged conduct constitutes (1) a hybrid restraint that is (2) a per se violation of Section 1 in all cases. Insofar as plaintiffs are making an "as applied" challenge, I assume that the challenged conduct constitutes (1) a hybrid restraint that is (2) either per se illegal or unlawful under the rule of reason. In either case, the majority correctly holds that state action immunity applies. I therefore concur in the majority's state action analysis and its conclusion that Danner and Gateway's antitrust [21] claims must be dismissed.

City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 266-69, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 1049-50, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986)*; see also 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 345 n.8, 107 S. Ct. 720, 726 n.8, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987). This is so because a unilateral restraint [19] cannot conflict with Section 1 in light of the fact that it lacks the necessary element of concerted action. Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266-69, 106 S. Ct. at 1049-50.

[2] This is typical because resolution of the state action immunity issue may avoid the sometimes-thorny question of whether the conduct contemplated by the statute or ordinance falls within a category of restraints that are per se illegal, or failing that, having to undertake the fact-intensive inquiry required by the rule of reason.

[3] At oral argument, Danner and Gateway declined to label their challenge. I read their complaint, however, as only a challenge to how the county has applied the ordinance. On its face, the ordinance does not limit the number of exclusive franchisees. The county could therefore grant franchises to all players in the marketplace, including Gateway. Neither does the ordinance mandate or provide a formula by which the county must set residential rates. The ordinance therefore does not require the county to set the "below market" residential rates that allegedly force the franchisees to collude on the commercial side of their businesses.

HN2[] Unregistered Firearm, Elements

The felon in possession of a firearm statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 922(g)(1), makes it a crime for any person who has been convicted in any court of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year to possess a firearm or ammunition that has traveled in interstate or foreign commerce. The business practices exception" to § 922(g)(1), set out in 18 U.S.C.S. § 921(a)(20), excludes from the definition of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year any federal or state offenses pertaining to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, restraints of trade, or other similar offenses relating to the regulation of business practices. Thus, a felon in possession of a firearm who has been convicted of one of the types of violations itemized in § 921(a)(20)(A) cannot be found guilty under § 922(g)(1) on the basis of that conviction.

HN3[] Conspiracy, Elements

A conviction for conspiracy under 18 U.S.C.S. § 371 requires that the Government show: (1) an agreement between two or more persons to pursue an unlawful objective; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the unlawful objective and voluntary agreement to join the conspiracy; and (3) an overt act by one or more of the members of the conspiracy in furtherance of the objective of the conspiracy. Thus, § 371 requires that the Government prove as an element that the conspiracy was targeted at a specific offense or unlawful objective. Consequently, if the targeted offense requires the Government to prove an effect upon competition as an element of the offense, then the conspiracy conviction falls within the business practices exception to the felon in possession of a firearm statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 922(g)(1).

HN4[] Larceny & Theft, Elements

To prove a violation of 47 U.S.C.S. § 605(e)(4), the Government must show that the defendant: (1) manufactured, assembled, modified, imported, exported, sold, or distributed; (2) any electronic, mechanical, or other device or equipment that was primarily of assistance in the unauthorized decryption of satellite cable programming or direct-to-home satellite services; (3) while knowing or having reason to know that the device or equipment was primarily of assistance in the unauthorized decryption of satellite cable programming or direct-to-home satellite services. These elements do not require any proof of an effect upon competition.

For the conviction to fall within the business practices exception to the felon in possession of a firearm statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 922(g)(1), the Government must have been required to prove, as an element of the predicate offense, that competition was affected; possible incidental effects are not relevant. Under 17 U.S.C.S. § 506(A), the Government is not required to prove any effect upon competition.

In evaluating whether a conspiracy conviction under 18 U.S.C.S. § 371 falls within the business practices exception to the felon in possession of a firearm statute, 18 U.S.C.S. § 922(g)(1), courts must evaluate the elements of 18 U.S.C.S. § 371 and the target offenses of the conspiracy. Governments > Legislation > Vagueness

HN9[] Legislation, Vagueness

Whether a statute is unconstitutionally vague is a question of law, which is reviewed de novo. The vagueness doctrine bars enforcement of a statute that either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application. A principal element of the vagueness doctrine is the requirement that a legislature establish minimal guidelines to govern law enforcement. The touchstone of the analysis, however, is whether the statute, either standing alone or as construed, made it reasonably clear at the relevant time that the defendant's conduct was criminal.

According to its terms, 18 U.S.C.S. § 921(a)(20)(A) excludes those federal or state offenses pertaining to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, restraints of trade, or other similar offenses relating to the regulation of business practices. In the final phrase, the word "similar" limits the term "offenses," so that it refers back to the three enumerated offenses and is further limited by the phrase "relating to the regulation of business practices." Accordingly, the statute is not vague because an ordinary individual would have notice that the § 921(a)(20)(A) exception applies only if he or she committed an enumerated or similar offense related to the regulation of business practices.

Antitrust law is designed to protect trade and commerce from restraints, monopolies, price fixing, and price discrimination. While it is almost impossible to formulate an all inclusive definition of "unfair trade practice," implicit in the term itself is the requirement that the practice adversely affect either competitors or consumers. Likewise, "restraint of trade" has a definite meaning at common law and includes contracts for the restriction or suppression of competition in the market, agreements to fix prices, divide marketing territories, apportion customers, restrict production and the like practices, which tend to raise prices or otherwise take from buyers or consumers the advantages which accrue to them from free competition in the market.

Federal appellate courts review a district court's application of the sentencing guidelines de novo and its factual findings for clear error. In determining whether a guidelines enhancement applies, the district court is allowed to draw reasonable inferences from the facts, and those inferences are fact findings reviewed for clear error. A factual finding is clearly erroneous when the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. A factual finding is not clearly erroneous if it is plausible in light of the record as a whole.

The enhancement applies where the firearm facilitated, or had the potential of facilitating, the other felony offense. Thus, to obtain an enhancement under U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 2K2.1(b)(6), the Government must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the firearm facilitated, or had the potential of facilitating another felony offense and that the defendant used or possessed the firearm in connection with that offense.

[*701] CARL E. STEWART, Circuit Judge:

James Ray Coleman was charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1). He sought dismissal on the ground that his underlying felony conviction was not a valid predicate offense. The underlying felony conviction was pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 371 for conspiracy to pirate encrypted satellite signals and to infringe a copyright. Coleman alleged that the conviction should fall within the 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20)(A) exception to § 922(g)(1) for offenses relating to the regulation of business practices. The district court ruled that Coleman's prior conviction did not fall within the § 921(a)(20)(A) exception and that the exception was not unconstitutionally [2] vague, and denied the motion to dismiss. Coleman then conditionally pleaded guilty, and now appeals the denial of the motion to dismiss. He also appeals the assignment of a four-point increase to his offense level for "possession of a firearm in connection with another felony offense" for stalking under LA. REV. STAT. § 14:40.2. We AFFIRM.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

A. Factual Background

Frankie Manley called 911 to report that James Ray Coleman was on his way to her residence to kill her, her adult granddaughter, and himself. Deputies from the East Carroll Parish Sheriff's Office responded [*702] to the call and, upon arrival, found a visibly intoxicated Coleman at his shop across the street from the Manley residence. When asked if he "had anything on him," it was discovered that he had a pistol in his waistband.

Manley explained to the deputies that Coleman had been living at her residence, but that she had asked him to leave three days earlier because of his drinking problem. Manley told officers that Coleman called her several times a day begging her to allow him to return and threatening her if she did not. He did this for three days straight, and became upset each time Manley refused [3] to allow him to return. He became belligerent and threatened her and her granddaughter. Manley believed her life was in danger and was so upset that she could not write a statement. Coleman was arrested for felonious stalking under Louisiana law.

B. Procedural History

Coleman was charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1). Coleman filed a Motion to Dismiss the indictment, alleging that the underlying felony conviction was not a valid predicate offense because it fell within the 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20)(A) exception to § 922(g)(1) for offenses relating to the regulation of business practices, and that Coleman was therefore not prohibited from possessing a firearm under § 922(g)(1). Coleman's underlying felony conviction was a 1994 conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 371 for conspiracy to manufacture or distribute equipment for decrypting satellite cable signals in violation of the Communications Act of 1934, 47 U.S.C. § 605(e)(4), and to willfully infringe a copyright in violation of the Criminal Copyright Infringement Statute, 17 U.S.C. § 506(a). See United States v. Coleman, No. 1:92-10016-3 (W.D. La. Feb. 4, 2009).

The district court denied the [4] Motion to Dismiss. Relying on Dreher v. United States, 115 F.3d 330, 332 (5th Cir. 1997), the district court found that the offense of conspiracy pursuant to § 371 is not excepted from the scope of the felon in possession statute by § 921(a)(20)(A). The district court also stated that even if it were to consider the target offenses of the conspiracy, Coleman's prior conviction would still qualify as a predicate felony for purposes of the firearm statute because theft of copyright-protected satellite programming was not an unfair business practice. In addition, the court rejected Coleman's argument that the statute was unconstitutionally vague. Coleman then entered a conditional plea of guilty, reserving his right to appeal the denial of his motion to dismiss the indictment.

At sentencing, the Presentence Investigation Report (PSR) calculated Coleman's offense level at 15 with a criminal history category of I, yielding a Guidelines sentencing range of 18 to 24 months. After hearing testimony from an East Carroll Parish Sheriff's Deputy who participated in Coleman's arrest, the district court concluded that Coleman had possessed the firearm in connection with another felony offense--the [5] Louisiana offense of felonious stalking--and increased his offense level by four. Coleman objected to this increase and the court overruled his objection. The court then imposed a 21-month term of imprisonment to be followed by a three-year term of supervised release. Coleman did not object to the reasonableness of his sentence.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Evaluating a Predicate Offense under the Business Practices Exception

Coleman first asserts that the district court erred by denying his Motion to [*703] Dismiss the indictment. He claims that his § 371 conviction for conspiracy to violate § 605(e)(4) and § 506(a) falls within the "business practices exception" created by § 921(a)(20)(A) for offenses "pertaining to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, restraint of trade, or other similar offenses relating to the regulation of business practices." HN1[] Because Coleman's motion to dismiss the indictment was based on the interpretation of a federal statute, this court reviews the denial of the motion de novo. See United States v. Perez-Macias, 335 F.3d 421, 425 (5th Cir. 2003).

HN2[] The "felon in possession of a firearm" statute, 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1), makes it a crime "for any person who has been convicted [6] in any court of, a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year . . ." to possess a firearm or ammunition which has traveled in interstate or foreign commerce. The "business practices exception" to § 922(g)(1), set out in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(20), excludes from the definition of a "crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year . . . any federal or state offenses pertaining to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, restraints of trade, or other similar offenses relating to the regulation of business practices . . . ." Thus, a felon in possession of a firearm who has been convicted of one of the types of violations itemized in § 921(a)(20)(A) cannot be found guilty under § 922(g)(1) on the basis of that conviction.

In Dreher v. United States, this court applied a framework for evaluating whether a prior felony conviction falls within the § 921(a)(20)(A) business practices exception. 115 F.3d at 330. The defendant had been convicted of conspiracy to commit mail fraud and mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 371, 1341 and 1342. Id. at 331. He petitioned for a declaratory judgment that he was not a convicted felon under § 922(g)(1) because the predicate [7] offenses fell within the business practices exception. Id. The defendant argued that the court should evaluate the conduct underlying the convictions-- billing for services not rendered. The Dreher court, however, reasoned that "the plain meaning of the term 'offenses' in the context of the statute is the charged violation of law, not the facts underlying the violation of law." Id. at 332. The court evaluated whether the elements that the Government was required to prove under 18 U.S.C. §§ 371 and 1341 depended "on whether they have an effect upon competition." [1] Id. at 332-33. It analyzed the statutes as follows:

> The "offenses" (or violations of law) of which Dreher was convicted are conspiracy to commit mail fraud and mail fraud, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 371, 1341. To prove conspiracy under § 371, the government must show: (1) an agreement between two or more persons to commit [*704] an unlawful act and (2) an overt act by one of the conspirators in furtherance of the agreement. See United States v. Schmick, 904 F.2d 936, 941 (5th Cir. 1990). To convict under § 1341, the government must prove (1) a scheme to defraud; (2) intent to defraud; and (3) use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme. [8] See United States v. Nguyen, 28 F.3d 477, 481 (5th Cir. 1994).

Id. at 332. The court then held that "[b]ecause violations of §§ 371 & 1341 in no way depend on whether they have an effect upon competition, they are not 'offenses' that are excluded from the § 921(a)(20) definition of 'crimes punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year.'" Id. at 333.

The defendant in Dreher had been convicted of both conspiracy to commit mail fraud under § 371 and mail fraud under § 1341. Id. at 332. Both or either of those convictions could have potentially functioned as predicate offenses under § 922(g)(1). Consequently, the court's evaluation of the elements under both § 371 and § 1341 does not necessarily clarify whether, in cases such as the present one, the court must evaluate the elements of the offense underlying a conspiracy conviction where there is no conviction for the underlying offense. Additionally, although Dreher specifically rejected any examination of the facts underlying the charged crime, it did not clearly address whether the court might examine the violation of the law that is the target of the charged conspiracy.

The Government asserts that, consistent with the categorical approach of Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 110 S. Ct. 2143, 109 L. Ed. 2d 607 (1990), the district court properly [10] evaluated only the elements of the charged offense for the prior conviction to determine whether an offense falls within the business practices exception. The Government claims that the offenses that were the target of the conspiracy are merely underlying facts and are irrelevant to Dreher's elements test. If we were to apply the approach advocated by the Government, we would not consider the target offenses of the conspiracy conviction, but would analyze only the elements of conspiracy pursuant to § 371. This reasoning would require the conclusion that any conspiracy conviction pursuant to § 371 would qualify as a predicate offense under § 922(g)(1).

We reject such a conclusion. According to the Government's position, a conviction under § 371 invariably qualifies as a predicate offense under § 922(g)(1), even where the "unlawful act" that was the object of the conspiracy is one of the offenses listed in § 921(a)(20)(A). But, for example, given that the language of § 921(a)(20)(A) exempts "any Federal or State offenses pertaining to antitrust violations," conspiracy to commit an antitrust violation would be an offense "pertaining to antitrust violations." (emphasis added).

Moreover, [11] HN3[] a conviction for conspiracy under § 371 requires that the Government show: (1) an agreement between two or more persons to pursue an unlawful objective; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the unlawful objective and voluntary agreement to join the conspiracy; and (3) an overt act by one or more of the members of the conspiracy in furtherance of the objective of the conspiracy. United States v. Peterson, 244 F.3d 385, 389 (5th Cir. 2001) (citing United States v. Dadi, 235 F.3d 945, 950 (5th Cir. 2000)). Thus, § 371 requires that the Government prove as an element that the conspiracy was targeted at a specific offense or "unlawful objective." [2] [*705] See United States v. White, 571 F.3d 365, 372 (4th Cir. 2009) ("[t]he Conspiracy Offense cannot be divorced from its . . . objective"). Consequently, if the targeted offense requires the Government to prove an effect upon competition as an element of the offense, then the conspiracy conviction falls within the business practices exception.

[1] Like this court in Dreher, other circuits have similarly adopted an elements test to determine whether a predicate offense has an effect on competition or on consumers for purposes of determining the applicability of § 921(a)(20). See United States v. Schultz, 586 F.3d 526, 530 (7th Cir. 2009) (holding that in order for an offense to fall within § 921(a)(20)(A)'s exception, the Government must "have been required to prove, as an element of the predicate offense, that competition or consumers were affected; possible incidental effects are not relevant."); United States v. Stanko, 491 F.3d 408, 421 (8th Cir. 2007) (holding that a prior conviction under the Federal Meat Inspection Act (FMIA) was not excepted by § 921(a)(20)(A) because "none of the provisions of the FMIA require the Government to prove an effect upon competition or [9] commerce as an element of the offense."); United States v. Meldish, 722 F.2d 26, 28 (2d Cir. 1983) (refusing to apply the business practices exception where the defendant's prior conviction "in no way depends upon whether it has an effect on competition or consumers.").

We therefore conclude that the district court erred by evaluating only § 371; the analysis under § 921(a)(20)(A) also requires an examination of the elements of the target offense of the conspiracy conviction. As the district court correctly held in the alternative, however, even considering the target offenses of the conspiracy, Coleman's prior offense qualifies as a predicate felony for purposes of § 922(g)(1). The first offense [3] charged as [13] the target of Coleman's conspiracy conviction was 47 U.S.C. § 605(e)(4), the Communications Act of 1934. HN4[] To prove a violation of § 605(e)(4), the Government must show that the defendant: (1) manufactured, assembled, modified, imported, exported, sold, or distributed; (2) any electronic mechanical, or other device or equipment that was primarily of assistance in the unauthorized decryption of satellite cable programming or direct-to-home satellite services; (3) while knowing or having reason to know that the device or equipment was primarily of assistance in the unauthorized decryption of satellite cable programming or direct-to-home satellite services. These elements do not require any proof of "an effect upon competition." Dreher, 115 F.3d at 332.

Coleman argues that the legislative history of the Communications Act indicates that the purpose of § 605 is to protect the competitive nature of the satellite industry and prohibit unfair trade practices. HN5[] Courts have looked to the legislative history of a statute in order to determine whether it falls within the business practices exception. See, e.g., Stanko, 491 F.3d at 416-17 ("[T]he statement of congressional findings . . . includes concerns about the effects of unwholesome meat on competition and markets. These concerns, however, are subordinate to the FMIA's primary public-health purpose. . . "); United States v. McLemore, 792 F. Supp. 96, 98 (S.D. Ala. 1992) ("[O]dometer rollback is prohibited by 15 U.S.C. §§ 1984 and 1990c(a) [*706] as an unfair trade practice exactly because of its 'effect on competition and consumers.' This interpretation is supported by the legislative history of the Truth in Mileage Act of 1986."). But legislative history remains secondary to an examination of the elements [15] of the statute. See Stanko, 491 F.3d at 416-17 ("[M]ore significantly, none of the provisions of the FMIA require the Government to prove an effect on competition or consumers as an element of the offense."). Regardless, even taking into account legislative history, this court has stated that HN6[] § 605(e)(4)'s "purpose is to proscribe the piracy of programming signals, whether they be for commercial or personal use." United States v. Harrell, 983 F.2d 36, 39 (5th Cir. 1993).

The other offense charged as the target of Coleman's conspiracy conviction was 17 U.S.C. § 506(a), the Criminal Copyright Infringement Statute. HN7[] To prove a violation of § 506(a), the Government must show that the

[2] As described in the Fifth Circuit's pattern jury instructions:

> Title 18, United States Code, Section 371, makes it a crime for anyone to conspire with someone else to commit an offense against the laws of the United [12] States. . . . For you to find the defendant guilty of this crime, you must be convinced that the government has proved each of the following beyond a reasonable doubt: First: That the defendant and at least one other person made an agreement to commit the crime of _ (describe) as charged in the indictment; Second: That the defendant knew the unlawful purpose of the agreement and joined in it willfully, that is, with the intent to further the unlawful purpose; and Third: That one of the conspirators during the existence of the conspiracy knowingly committed at least one of the overt acts described in the indictment, in order to accomplish some object or purpose of the conspiracy.

FIFTH CIRCUIT CRIMINAL PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS (2001) § 2.20.

[3] We evaluate both the alleged target offenses of the conspiracy conviction because it is unclear from the record which of the two target offenses (or both) provided the basis for the conspiracy conviction. Where there is only one conspiracy count and the finder of fact was required to find that the conspiracy has as its object each of the target offenses, then it would presumably be sufficient to deny the exception if there was at least one [14] target offense that did not meet it. However, if the conviction could have been based on either target offense, and we cannot discern which one it was based on, then both must be evaluated.

defendant: (1) willfully infringed; (2) a valid copyright; (3) for commercial advantage, for private financial gain, or in a manner otherwise prohibited by the statute. See 17 U.S.C. § 506(a). For the conviction to fall within the business practices exception, the Government must "have been required to prove, as an element of the predicate offense, that competition . . . [was] affected; possible incidental effects are not relevant." Schultz, 586 F.3d at 530; see also Dreher, 115 F.3d at 332. Under § 506(a), [16] the Government would not have been required to prove any effect upon competition.

We hold that HN8[] in evaluating whether a § 371 conspiracy conviction falls within the business practices exception, courts must evaluate the elements of § 371 and the target offenses of the conspiracy. Here, the conspiracy conviction for the target offenses of § 605(e)(4) and § 506(a) does not fall within the business practices exception. Coleman's prior conspiracy conviction is therefore a predicate offense for purposes of § 922(g)(1), and we affirm the conviction.

B. Constitutionality of the Business Practices Exception

In his second point of error, Coleman asserts that the phrase in § 921(a)(20) excluding as predicate offenses "any . . . offenses pertaining to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, restraints of trade, or other similar offense relating to the regulation of business practices" is unconstitutionally vague. HN9[] Whether a statute is unconstitutionally vague is a question of law, which this court reviews de novo. United States v. Rudzavice, 586 F.3d 310, 315 (5th Cir. 2009) (citing United States v. Monroe, 178 F.3d 304, 308 (5th Cir. 1999)).

The vagueness doctrine "bars enforcement of 'a statute [17] which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application.'" United States v. Lanier, 520 U.S. 259, 266, 117 S. Ct. 1219, 137 L. Ed. 2d 432 (1997) (quoting Connally v. Gen. Constr. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391, 46 S. Ct. 126, 70 L. Ed. 322 (1926)). A principal element of the vagueness doctrine is "the requirement that a legislature establish minimal guidelines to govern law enforcement." Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 357, 103 S. Ct. 1855, 75 L. Ed. 2d 903 (1983) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The touchstone of the analysis, however, "is whether the statute, either standing alone or as construed, made it reasonably clear at the relevant time that the defendant's conduct was criminal." Lanier, 520 U.S. at 267.

[*707] Addressing § 921(a)(20), the dissent in United States v. Stanko stated that it "is a criminal statute that is impermissibly vague." 491 F.3d at 420 (Bright, J., dissenting) (citing Kolender, 461 U.S. at 357). The Stanko dissent explained that to apply the exemption for "similar offenses" under § 921(a)(20), courts must determine which business offenses are similar to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, and restraints of trade. Id. at 420-21. [18] It reasoned that "[t]he complete absence of Congressional guidance and scarcity of federal precedent leaves the meaning of the similar offenses clause unconstitutionally vague, and thus the class of individuals who may possess a firearm without the threat of prosecution is in part undefined." Id. at 421.

Rejecting the conclusion that § 921(a)(20) is unconstitutionally vague, the Stanko majority explained that "Congress used the comparative term 'similar' to modify 'offenses,' rather than saying 'any other offenses' or simply 'other offenses.'" Id. at 414. "The term 'similar' indicates an intent to limit the business practices clause's reach to offenses which are 'comparable' or 'nearly corresponding' to the enumerated offenses." Id. (citing WEBSTER'S THIRD NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY 2120 (2002)). Because "the general phrase 'or other similar offenses relating to the regulation of business practices' refers back for its meaning to the three types of offenses Congress specifically enumerated," the court concluded that "the plain meaning of the statute indicates Congress's intent to limit the offenses that fall within the § 921(a)(20)(A) exclusion to those pertaining to antitrust violations, [19] unfair trade practices, restraints of trade, or offenses similar to them." Id.

The Seventh Circuit in United States v. Schultz also rejected a vagueness challenge to the "similar offenses" clause of § 921(a)(20). 586 F.3d at 531. The Schultz court explained that:

> HN10[] According to its terms, § 921(a)(20)(A) excludes those "[f]ederal or state offenses pertaining to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, restraints of trade, or other similar offenses relating to the regulation > of business practices." In the final phrase, the word "similar" limits the term "offenses," so that it refers back to the three enumerated offenses, and is further limited by "relating to the regulation of business practices." Accordingly, an ordinary individual would have notice that the § 921(a)(20)(A) exception applies only if he or she committed an enumerated or similar offense related to the regulation of business practices.

Id.

Consistent with the reasoning of Stanko and Schultz, the business practices exception is not unconstitutionally vague because it requires that the excluded offenses be a specific type of business offense or similar to such specific offenses relating to the regulation of business practices. [20] HN11[] "Antitrust law" is "designed to protect trade and commerce from restraints, monopolies, price fixing, and price discrimination." BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, 104 (8th ed. 2004). While it is "almost impossible to formulate an all inclusive definition of 'unfair trade practice' . . . implicit in the term itself is the requirement that the practice adversely affect either competitors or consumers . . . ." Stanko, 491 F.3d at 416. Likewise, "restraint of trade" has a definite meaning at common law and includes "contracts for the restriction or suppression of competition in the market, agreements to fix prices, divide marketing territories, apportion customers, restrict production and the like practices, which tend to raise prices or otherwise take from buyers or consumers the advantages which [*708] accrue to them from free competition in the market." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 497, 60 S. Ct. 982, 84 L. Ed. 1311 (1940).

These exempted offenses demonstrate that Congress intended to exclude under § 921(a)(20)(A) only commercial crimes violating statutes designed to prevent "an adverse economic effect on competition or consumers." Dreher, 115 F.3d at 332. The elements test used to determine whether an offense falls within [21] the business practices exclusion is specific and overall gives fair warning as to which offenses meet the definition of a "crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year" and which are excluded pursuant to the exception in § 921(a)(20)(A). We therefore affirm the district court's conclusion that § 921(a)(20)(A) is not unconstitutionally vague.

C. U.S.S.G. § 2K2.1(b)(6) Enhancement

Finally, Coleman argues that the district court erred in assigning a four-point increase to the offense level for "possession of a firearm in connection with another felony offense." The felony offense to which the court referred was stalking under LA. REV. STAT. § 14:40.2, and Coleman claims there is insufficient evidence in the record to support a finding that he possessed a firearm while making any type of threat against the victim.

HN12[] This court reviews the district court's application of the Sentencing Guidelines de novo and its factual findings for clear error. United States v. Delgado-Martinez, 564 F.3d 750, 751 (5th Cir. 2009). In determining whether a Guidelines enhancement applies, the district court is allowed to draw reasonable inferences from the facts, and these inferences are fact [22] findings reviewed for clear error. United States v. Caldwell, 448 F.3d 287, 290 (5th Cir. 2006). The district court's determination of the relationship between the firearm and another offense is a factual finding. United States v. Condren, 18 F.3d 1190, 1199-1200 (5th Cir. 1994). "A factual finding is clearly erroneous when the reviewing court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. Cooper, 274 F.3d 230, 238 (5th Cir. 2001) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). A factual finding is not clearly erroneous if it is plausible in light of the record as a whole. Id.

HN13[] U.S.S.G. § 2K2.1(b)(6) provides that "[i]f the defendant used or possessed any firearm or ammunition in connection with another felony offense . . . increase by four levels." The commentary to § 2K2.1(b)(6) states that the enhancement applies where the firearm "facilitated, or had the potential of facilitating," the other felony offense. U.S.S.G. § 2K2.1(b)(6), cmt. n.14. Thus, to obtain an enhancement under § 2K2.1(b)(6), the Government must establish by a preponderance of the evidence "that the firearm 'facilitated, or had the potential [23] of facilitating' another felony offense and that the defendant used or possessed the firearm in connection with that offense." United States v. Anderson, 559 F.3d 348, 357 (5th Cir. 2009).

LA. REV. STAT. 14:40.2(A) provides as follows:

> HN14[] Stalking is the intentional and repeated following or harassing of another person that would cause a reasonable person to feel alarmed or to suffer emotional distress. Stalking shall include, but not be limited to the intentional and repeated uninvited presence of the perpetrator at another person's home . . . or any place which would cause a reasonable person to be alarmed, or to suffer emotional distress as a result of verbal or behaviorally implied threats of death, bodily injury, sexual assault, kidnapping, or any other statutory criminal act to himself [*709] or any member of his family or any person with whom he is acquainted.

HN15[] Stalking is a felony offense if the defendant "is found . . . to have placed the victim . . . in fear of death or bodily injury by the actual use of or the defendant's having in his possession during the instances which make up the crime of stalking a dangerous weapon or is found . . . to have placed the victim in reasonable fear of [24] death or bodily injury." LA. REV. STAT. § 14:40.2(B)(2)(a). Louisiana defines "harassing" as "the repeated pattern of verbal communications or nonverbal behavior without invitation which includes but is not limited to making telephone calls, transmitting electronic mail, [or] sending messages via a third party. . . ." LA. REV. STAT. § 14:40.2(C)(1).

At sentencing, East Carroll Parish Sheriff's Deputy Brandon Wiltcher, who was present at the time of Coleman's arrest, testified that Manley made two 911 calls to request assistance and protection from Coleman. The first 911 call informed authorities that Coleman had stated that he was on his way to Manley's residence to kill her, her granddaughter, and himself. She called a second time shortly thereafter to report that Coleman was attempting to enter the residence and was making verbal threats to kill Manley and her granddaughter. When deputies arrived on the scene, Coleman was across the street from the Manley residence and armed with a pistol carried in his waistband. Deputy Wiltcher also testified that for three days Coleman had called Manley's home several times a day, making threats against her and her granddaughter. [4]

Coleman's contention that he did not possess the gun "in connection with" the felony stalking offense for purposes of § 2K2.1(b)(6) is without merit. Regardless, at a minimum possession of the gun "had the potential of facilitating" the felony stalking offense. See § 2K2.1(b)(6), cmt. n.14. Coleman correctly notes that the deputies did not see him in possession of a firearm at the time he made the threats to the Manleys that day and or on the previous days. There was likewise no testimony that either of the victims saw him with a weapon when he threatened them. However, the deputies arrived soon after the second 911 call and found Coleman immediately across the street from the Manley residence and armed. As the Government argues, it is logical to infer and quite plausible that Coleman had the firearm with him only moments before his arrest [26] when he was attempting to enter the Manleys' residence. Further, Coleman had previously threatened to kill the Manleys and himself.

It is entirely reasonable to infer that Coleman intended to accomplish these threats with the firearm in his possession at the time that he was arrested. The district court's finding of fact that Coleman possessed the firearm in connection with the commission of another felony is therefore not clearly erroneous and we affirm the four-point increase to Coleman's offense level.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed, we AFFIRM Coleman's conviction and sentence.

Opinion

ORDER

In this antitrust action, Plaintiffs challenge the legitimacy of the fixed interchange fee that one member of the Star ATM Network charges another member when a customer of the second member uses an ATM owned by the first. Now pending before the Court is Defendants' joint motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint ("TAC") on the ground that Plaintiffs have again failed to allege a legally adequate "relevant market." [1]

Having held oral argument on May 14, 2010 and carefully considered the submissions of the parties, the Court hereby GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendants' joint motion. The Court finds that Plaintiffs' alleged single-brand, derivative aftermarket is not a legally [*9] cognizable relevant market. At the same time, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' "all ATM Networks" market is both legally cognizable and adequately pled. Plaintiffs' TAC is therefore sufficient to survive the pleadings stage.

BACKGROUND

[1] Bank of America, N.A. ("BANA") has also filed a motion to dismiss on grounds unique to it. The Court will address BANA's motion in a separate order.

I. The Star Network [2]

This case challenges the right of a non-proprietary network to set network-wide "interchange" fees that govern the amount of money paid by an ATM card issuer -- generally a bank -- to a foreign ATM owner when the ATM is used by the issuer's customer. Customers at most commercial banks receive ATM cards that allow them to make withdrawals from their accounts electronically. Typically, these ATM cards permit withdrawals not only from ATM machines at the bank where they hold their accounts, but also from ATM machines elsewhere. Such "foreign ATM transactions" involve four parties: (1) the "cardholder," i.e. the customer who retrieves money from the ATM machine; (2) the "card-issuer bank," i.e. that bank at which [*10] the customer holds an account and from which the customer has received an ATM card; (3) the "ATM owner," i.e. the entity that owns the ATM machine from which the customer withdraws money on his account; and (4) the "ATM network," i.e. the entity that administers the agreements between various card-issuer banks and ATM owners and thereby ensures that customers can withdraw money from one network member's ATM as readily as from another's.

Foreign ATM transactions involves multiple fees. Generally, a customer must pay two fees -- one to the ATM owner for the use of that entity's ATM machine (known as a "surcharge"), and one to the bank at which he has an account (known as a "foreign ATM fee"). But that is not all. Out of the money that a customer pays directly to his own bank, the bank then also pays two fees. The first of the bank's fees is known as a "switch fee" and is paid directly to the ATM network. The second of the bank's fees -- and the one at issue in this lawsuit -- is known as an "interchange fee" and is paid directly to the owner of the foreign ATM. Since 2003, the interchange fee has been set at $ 0.46 for on-premise transactions (i.e., transactions at ATMs deployed on a [*11] bank's premises), and $ 0.54 for off-premise transactions.

In this case, Plaintiffs contest the legality of only the interchange fee. They contend that the manner in which this fee is set and administered violates antitrust laws. In their TAC, Plaintiffs allege that certain members of the Star ATM network had "fixed the interchange fee." TAC P 1.

The Star Systems, Inc. ("Star") network of ATM services was founded by a number of banks over twenty years ago. TAC P 70. Star has over 5,400 members nationwide. TAC P 74. It is one of approximately twenty-five ATM networks in the country. TAC P 69.

Until 1996, interchange fees and foreign ATM fees were the sole sources of revenue on foreign ATM transactions for bank issuers and ATM owners. TAC P 81. In 1996, Star and other ATM networks dropped their bans against customer surcharges. TAC P 82. As a result, ATM owners began imposing surcharges, with banks now charging users of foreign ATMs around one to three dollars per foreign transaction. TAC P 83. Plaintiffs allege that those surcharges are artificially inflated because the Star network continues to impose an arbitrary interchange fee, which gets passed on to customers through the foreign [*12] ATM fees. TAC P 93. Plaintiffs further allege that the interchange fee was set through an illegal agreement of the Defendants, who controlled Star's Board of Directors. TAC PP 92-109. Plaintiffs contend that the banks enforced their illegal agreement by requiring all Star members -- both banks and non-banks that own ATMs in the network -- to abide by the fixed interchange fee. TAC P 67.

II. Procedural History

On a previous motion to dismiss, this Court ruled that the Plaintiffs' allegations, if true, would establish that the Defendants had engaged in illegal price-fixing. See Brennan v. Concord EFS, Inc., 369 F. Supp. 2d 1127 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (Walker, J.). In its ruling, the Court first noted that the Plaintiffs' objection is not to the existence of an interchange fee, but rather to its fixed nature. Id. at 1132. In other words, Plaintiffs did not contend that it would be impermissible for a card-issuing bank to compensate foreign ATM owners, but only that they may not decide collectively what compensation to render. Further, the court noted that the Complaint had described a "naked" attempt to fix prices, as opposed to an attempt to fix price that the Star network members determined [*13] was "ancillary" to a legitimate, procompetitive venture. Id. at 1133. In other words, Plaintiffs alleged that Defendants fixed the interchange fee because they could, not because a fixed fee was necessary to sustain the ATM network. Because the Defendants could not defend against such allegations of "naked price fixing" without invoking evidence that was beyond the scope of the Complaint, the Court denied the motion to dismiss. Id. at 1138.

Shortly after the ruling on the motion to dismiss, Defendants filed a motion for partial summary judgment on the ground that, as of February 2001, the Star network ceased to be owned by a group of banks but instead was operated by Concord as a proprietary network. Taking a different tack, the Court issued a Memorandum and Order on November 30, 2006, terminating Concord's motion and directing the parties to address the fundamental question of whether a per se analysis applies to this case. The Court observed that "if Defendants can set forth evidence to support plausible, procompetitive justifications for their agreement to fix the interchange fee," then the per se rule would not apply. Mem. & Order at 5 (Docket No. 360).

Defendants moved for summary [*14] judgment on August 3, 2007, having adduced evidence bearing on the applicability of the per se rule. In an order issued on March 24, 2008, the Court granted Defendants' motion and held that rule of reason analysis applies to this case, thereby determining that the price-fixing challenged by Plaintiffs is not the kind of naked horizontal restraint that lacks any redeeming virtue. In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 554 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1016-17 (N.D. Cal. 2008).

Given substantial uncertainty in the law regarding which mode of analysis to apply, the Court subsequently certified for appeal the issue of whether the per se or rule of reason rubric should be employed in this case. The Ninth Circuit declined to take the matter up, which led to Plaintiffs' SAC.

After Plaintiffs' filed their SAC, Defendants moved to dismiss it on a number of grounds, including that Plaintiffs had failed to properly allege a relevant market, as required by antitrust law. In their SAC, Plaintiffs had defined the relevant market as the "provision of Foreign ATM Transactions routed over Star," which they identified as "wholly derivative from and dependent on the market for deposit accounts." SAC P P 119, 121. Defendants [*15] maintained that this single-brand, derivative aftermarket failed as a matter of law because the SAC lacked any allegations that consumers were locked into their deposit account relationship. Such lock-in was, in Defendants' view, a prerequisite to a finding that a derivative aftermarket exists.

In an order issued September 2009, the Court granted Defendants' motion to dismiss the SAC. The Court agreed with Defendants that the existence of customer "lock-in" was a crucial component of a derivative aftermarket theory and that Plaintiffs had failed "to plead a viable theory suggesting that once a customer signs up for a bank account, he is 'locked in' to that bank's services." Order at 18. Because Plaintiffs informed the Court at oral argument that they could add such allegations to a subsequent complaint, the Court granted Defendants' motion with leave to amend. Id.

III. Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint

In response to the Court's Order, Plaintiffs submitted a Third Amended Complaint. In their TAC, Plaintiffs attempt to correct the deficiencies in their "relevant market" allegations by doing two things. First, they allege a second, broader relevant market, composed of all "ATM Networks," [*16] rather than just the Star Network. TAC P 113.

Second, in an effort to bolster their previously alleged relevant market -- i.e., the derivative aftermarket composed over only those transactions routed over the Star Network -- they identify a number of alleged "monetary and non-monetary" switching costs that "economically lock[] in [bank customers to] their deposit accounts." TAC P 121. According to Plaintiffs, the monetary costs that impede customers from switching banks include: (1) "maintenance fees that Banks charge when consumers do not maintain minimum amounts in their deposit accounts"; (2) "forfeiture of 'rewards points'"; (3) "fees to obtain checks for new accounts"; (4) "funds that must remain in existing accounts to ensure that outstanding checks and recurring automated payments clear"; (5) "funds that must remain in both existing and new accounts to satisfy minimum deposit amount requirements"; and (6) "funds tied up in a new account placed on hold." TAC P 122.

The non-monetary costs include time expended to (1) "investigate options and open new accounts"; (2) "close existing accounts"; (3) "notify parties . . . to whom recurring payments are payable"; (4) "notify employer(s) [*17] and others to re-route direct deposits"; and (5) "learn the new Bank's online banking system." TAC P 123.

Now pending before the Court is Defendants' joint motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' TAC. Defendants maintain that Plaintiffs have again failed to plead a legally cognizable relevant market.

LEGAL STANDARD

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure tests the legal sufficiency of the pleadings. De La Cruz v. Tormey, 582 F.2d 45, 48 (9th Cir. 1978). A complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim where the factual allegations do not raise the right to relief above the speculative level. Bell Atlantic v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). Conversely, a complaint may not be dismissed for failure to state a claim where the allegations plausibly demonstrate that the pleader may be entitled to relief. Id. In ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a court must construe the pleadings in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint, as well as any reasonable inferences to be drawn from them. Broam v. Bogan, 320 F.3d 1023, 1028 (9th Cir. 2003).

The allegations in the complaint may not evade antitrust [*18] requirements by merely alleging a bare legal conclusion. Rutman Wine Co. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987). "[A] district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed," particularly in light of the fact that "antitrust discovery can be expensive." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558 (internal citation and quotation omitted). Plaintiffs alleging antitrust claims must set forth enough "factual matter" to "nudge[] their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible." Id. at 570.

DISCUSSION

The Defendants have collectively moved to dismiss Plaintiffs' TAC on the ground that neither of Plaintiffs' two alleged relevant markets are legally cognizable under antitrust law. The Court agrees with Defendants that Plaintiffs' single-brand, derivative aftermarket theory fails as a matter of law. However, the Court also finds that Plaintiffs' "all ATM Networks" market is both plausible and sufficiently pled. In particular, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that the Defendants and Star possess market power in this broader market. The Court therefore GRANTS Defendants' [*19] motion to dismiss with respect to Plaintiffs' single-brand "relevant market," but DENIES the motion with respect to the broader "all ATM Networks" market.

A. "Relevant Market" Principles

Under rule of reason analysis, "the plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the restraint produces significant anticompetitive effects within a relevant market." Tanaka v. Univ. of S. Cal., 252 F.3d 1059, 1063 (9th Cir. 2001). "The term 'relevant market' encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description. The geographic market extends to the area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternate sources of supply." Oltz v. St. Peter's Cmty. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1446 (9th Cir. 1988) (internal citation and quotations omitted).

"There is no requirement that [the market definition] elements of the antitrust claim be pled with specificity." Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008). "An antitrust complaint therefore survives a Rule 12(b)(6) motion unless it is apparent from the face of the complaint that the alleged market suffers a fatal legal defect." Id. The existence of a "relevant market" is typically a factual [*20] inquiry for the jury. Id. However, a complaint may be dismissed if the market definition is "facially unsustainable." Id.; see, e.g., Tanaka, 252 F.3d at 1063 (affirming dismissal where plaintiffs failed to identify an appropriate product market); Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1104 (9th Cir. 1999) (affirming dismissal of monopolization claim where plaintiffs did not "sufficiently identify the markets affected by Defendants' alleged antitrust violations"); Apple, Inc. v.

Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1190, 1203 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (dismissing claim because plaintiff's assertion of a relevant market "contravenes the pertinent legal standards").

"For antitrust purposes, a 'market is composed of products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced - price, use and qualities considered.'" Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1163 (9th Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). "[T]he relevant market must include the group or groups of sellers or producers who have actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business." Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045 (citation omitted). Plaintiffs must plead [*21] facts showing that their product market "bear[s] a rational relation to the methodology courts prescribe to define a market for antitrust purposes -- analysis of the interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand, and it must be plausible." Chapman v. New York State Div. for Youth, 546 F.3d 230, 237 (2d Cir. 2008) (citation omitted).

B. Plaintiffs First Relevant Market: "Foreign ATM Transactions Routed Over the Star Network"

As in their SAC, Plaintiffs allege in their TAC that one "relevant product market for assessing Defendants' collusive conduct is the provision of Foreign ATM Transactions routed over Star." TAC P 114. They define this market as "wholly derivative from and dependent on the market for deposit accounts." TAC P 116. Thus, Plaintiffs allege that a single-brand, derivative market exists for "Star Network" foreign ATM transactions.

"[T]he law permits an antitrust claimant to restrict the relevant market to a single brand of the product at issue." Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1048. However, "[s]ingle brand markets are, at a minimum, extremely rare." Psystar, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1198. "[C]ourts have usually rejected the claim that one brand is its own market when there [*22] are competing brands." Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 100 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1078 n.6 (C.D. Cal. 1999). For the reasons explained below, the Court finds that this is not one of the "extremely rare" instances in which a valid single-brand market exists.

Plaintiffs' "Star Network"-only derivative aftermarket theory can be summarized in the following way: After entering the market for bank demand deposit accounts, consumers choose a particular bank and open an account. The bank then issues its new customer an ATM card. If the customer's bank uses the Star Network, then the foreign ATM transactions that the customer conducts are routed over Star and the customer's bank incurs Star's supracompetitive interchange fee.

Per Plaintiffs' theory, the market for demand deposit accounts is a "foremarket" that gives rise to a "derivative aftermarket" consisting of foreign ATM transactions that are routed over the network that the customer's new bank has chosen. Moreover, because customers are "economically locked into" their chosen bank, they are "locked-in" to their bank's choice of foreign ATM network providers, which, in some cases, will be the Star Network. In other words, according [*23] to Plaintiffs, once a customer selects a bank that uses th Star Network to route foreign ATM transactions, that customer is "locked into" the Star Network because it would cost the customer too much to switch to a new bank that uses a different ATM network. In such cases, then, the other ATM networks are not "reasonably interchangeable" with the Star Network and the Star Network is its own "relevant market."

Although Plaintiffs' theory seems plausible at first glance, it suffers from a fatal defect: the market for demand deposit accounts and the market for ATM Network services involve two different sets of consumers. Individuals, businesses, and others purchase deposit accounts; banks purchase ATM Network services. As a result, the market for Star's services, as well as the market for ATM networks generally, is not a derivative aftermarket, in the anti-trust sense, of the market for demand deposit accounts. It is entirely separate.

Two seminal single-brand, aftermarket cases, Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992), and Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038 (9th Cir. 2008), illustrate the contours of an appropriate single-brand, derivative [*24] aftermarket theory and reveal the error in Plaintiffs' approach. The Kodak case arose as a result of the initial purchase by consumers of Kodak brand photocopiers. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 458. Because photocopiers, like many durable goods, require servicing and replacement parts, a consumer who purchased a Kodak copier was forced to participate in the "derivative aftermarket" for replacement parts and services for the copier. In other words, the foremarket for photocopiers begot an aftermarket in replacement parts and services. Moreover, "[b]ecause service and parts for Kodak equipment [were] not interchangeable with other manufacturers' services" and because the consumer could not respond to unappealing prices for Kodak replacement and services by returning to the foremarket and purchasing a different brand of copier, "the relevant market from the Kodak equipment owner's perspective [was] composed of only those companies that service Kodak machines." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 455. Under these conditions, the Supreme Court concluded that the market for replacement parts and services for a single brand of copiers, Kodak, was a cognizable relevant market. See id.

Similarly, the Ninth Circuit [*25] held in Newcal that plaintiffs had stated a valid "relevant market," where plaintiffs alleged a single-brand market for "lease-buyouts" and "lease-end services" for IKON brand photocopiers. Newcal, 513 F.3d 1045-50. As in Kodak, customers who had leased IKON photocopiers (in the foremarket for photocopier leases) were thrust into the "derivative aftermarket" for "replacement copiers and lease-end services." Id. at 1049. In addition, the "unique contractual relationship" between IKON and the lessees of its equipment (1) allegedly created switching costs that prevented lessees from returning to the foremarket for photocopier leases if they were unhappy with IKON's "lease-buyout" and "lease-end services" and (2) rendered IKON's "lease-buyout" and "lease-end services" unique and not interchangeable with other brands in the aftermarket. Id. at 1050-51. The Court therefore concluded that Plaintiff had stated a plausible single-brand market composed of "lease-end services" for IKON copiers. Id. at 1051.

As these two cases show, a valid single-brand, derivative aftermarket follows a particular model: First, a consumer purchases a particular brand of a good or service. Second, the nature of [*26] that good or service requires the same consumer to purchase a follow-on good or service in a derivative aftermarket. In Kodak, the "derivative aftermarket" was replacement parts and services for photocopiers, while, in Newcal, it was lease buy-out and lease-end services for photocopiers. Third, a "single brand" market exists in the derivative aftermarket if something about the good or brand of good purchased by the consumer in the foremarket (1) prevents the consumer from returning to the foremarket and switching to a different brand if the consumer is unhappy with the price of the follow-on good in the aftermarket and (2) the particular brand's follow-on good is not reasonably interchangeable with follow-on goods of other brands. In Kodak, for instance, the cost of a new photocopier precluded a customer from responding to supracompetitive prices in the market for replacement Kodak parts and services by returning to the foremarket and purchasing a copier from a different manufacturer. In addition, Kodak-brand replacement parts and services were not "reasonably interchangeable" with non-Kodak brand replacement parts and services. In Newcal, the unique contractual relationship between [*27] IKON and its lessees made it difficult for those lessees both to return to the foremarket for photocopier leases and switch to another brand of photocopier and to choose any brand other than IKON for "lease-buyout" and "lease-end services" in the aftermarket.

The "derivative aftermarket" identified by Plaintiffs in this case -- i.e., the market for transactions routed over the Star Network -- does not follow this pattern. Under Plaintiffs' theory, the foremarket consists of the market for demand deposit accounts purchased by consumers and the aftermarket consists of foreign ATM transactions. Plaintiffs are correct that foreign ATM transactions are an aftermarket of the demand deposit market in that consumers who open deposit accounts are, in essence, thrust into the market for foreign ATM transactions.

Plaintiffs' theory breaks down, however, with its allegation that the Star Network is the single-brand to which consumers are "locked-in." Consumers purchase and own a Bank A-brand deposit account, not a Star Network-brand deposit account. Thus, to the extent that a single-brand, derivative aftermarket exists for foreign ATM transactions from a consumer's perspective, it exists for each [*28] individual bank brand, not for the particular ATM Network that the individual bank has chosen. In other words, just like the purchase of a Kodak brand copier leads to a single-brand aftermarket in Kodak brand replacement parts, the purchase of a Bank A demand deposit account would lead to an aftermarket in Bank A foreign ATM transaction services. If anything, then, Bank A, with whom the consumers have a contractual relationship, would be the single-brand, not the Star Network.

To put this point another way, banks, not consumers, purchase foreign ATM Network services, such as those offered by Star. In order for a single-brand, derivative aftermarket to exist for Star's services, a bank, not the bank's customers, would have to be locked-in to the purchase of Star's services as a result of a purchase that the bank had made in some foremarket, just as purchasers of Kodak brand copiers are locked in to the purchase of Kodak brand replacement parts. Here, there is no foremarket purchase that constrains a bank's choice of network providers to the Star Network. Banks are presumably free to choose the foreign ATM Network provider that makes the most economic sense for it. Moreover, viewed from [*29] the bank's perspective, it is obvious that a customer's choice of a particular bank does not limit the bank's choice of network providers.

The error inherent in Plaintiffs' theory is further underscored by the fact that, if the Court were to accept Plaintiffs' theory, the number of potential single-brand, derivative aftermarkets would be substantial. For example, a single brand market would also exist for the particular computer software package that each bank uses to process a customer's foreign ATM transactions and for the particular individual each bank employs to monitor those transactions. A bank's customer is locked-in to these choices (and their associated costs) in the same manner that the customer is locked-in to his or her bank's decision to use the Star Network (and pay its associated interchange fee). The Court cannot accept such an expansive interpretation of the single-brand, aftermarket theory.

In sum, the market for Star services is not a single-brand, derivative aftermarket of the market for demand deposit accounts. The consumers who purchase demand deposit accounts do not participate in the market for Star's services. Moreover, the entities that do participate in the [*30] market for Star's services, banks, are not locked into Star's services as a result of the purchase of some previous product and are certainly not limited to Star's product by virtue of a customer's decision to open a deposit account.

For all of the above reasons, Plaintiffs' "derivative aftermarket" theory fails as a matter of law. Accordingly, Defendants' motion is GRANTED with respect to this theory.

C. Plaintiffs' Second Relevant Market: "Foreign ATM Transactions Routed Over ATM Networks"

Defendants concede that Plaintiffs' "'all ATM networks' market set forth in their TAC at least is theoretically plausible." Mtn. at 3. But, they maintain, this alleged "relevant market" is insufficient to support Plaintiffs' antitrust claims because Plaintiffs "do not, and cannot, allege any facts credibly supporting the conclusion that Star has market power in [the] highly competitive [all ATM Networks] market." Id. For the reasons discussed below, the Court disagrees.

An antitrust defendant possesses market power when the defendant "(1) [*31] can profitably set prices above its costs and (2) enjoys some protection against rival's entry or expansion that would erode such supracompetitive prices and profits." Areeda et al., Antitrust Law, P 501 (2d ed. 2005). As the Ninth Circuit explained in Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421 (9th Cir.1995),

> Market power may be demonstrated through either of two types of proof. One type of proof is direct evidence of the injurious exercise of market power. If the plaintiff puts forth evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices, that is direct proof of the injury to competition which a competitor with market power may inflict, and thus, of the actual exercise of market power. See FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986). The more common type of proof is circumstantial evidence pertaining to the structure of the market. To demonstrate market power circumstantially, a plaintiff must: (1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run. See [*32] Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Serv., 823 F.2d 1215, 1232 (8th Cir.1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1026, 108 S. Ct. 751, 98 L. Ed. 2d 763 (1988); Ball Memorial Hosp., 784 F.2d at 1335.

Id. at 1434.

In this case, Plaintiffs allege, in detail, that Defendants have set interchange fees at a level that is well above their costs and have maintained these supracompetitive prices (and the resulting profits) for many years. For instance, Plaintiffs allege that "[w]hen fees were originally fixed at $ .40 for on-premises and $ .60 for off-premises ATMs in 1984, they were set based on cost data. . . ." TAC P 135. They also aver that "[a]s of 1993, at least one ATM Network estimated the cost [of providing cash to other Banks' customers] to be approximately 25 cents per transaction" and that the "cost has only decreased over time as the costs of technology -- especially telecommunications costs -- have declined rapidly." TAC P 136.

These plausible factual allegations, which the Court must accept as true, lead to the reasonable inference that the cost to a bank of providing cash to another bank's customer has declined substantially since 1984 and is now well-below $ 0.25 per transaction. Yet, according to other allegations in the Plaintiffs' [*33] TAC, Star's Interchange Fee has not dropped accordingly. In fact, Star's current Interchange Fee of $ 0.46 per on-premises transaction is 15% higher than the fee Star charged in 1984. TAC P 135-37. It is also higher than the $ 0.45 fee that Star charged in 1990 and substantially higher than the estimated 1993 cost of $ 0.25 per transaction.

These facts, taken together, indicate that the Defendants, acting through Star, have been able to establish a fee for providing cash to other banks' customers that is well above their costs, and have done so since at least 1993. If true, this prolonged period of substantially-above-cost pricing provides a strong indication that the Defendants and Star possess market power in the ATM Networks market. See Areeda P 501 ("For antitrust purposes, therefore, market power is the abilities (1) to price substantially above the competitive level and (2) to persist in doing for a significant period of time without erosion by new entry or expansion.").

Plaintiffs also allege that the ATM Networks market "exhibit[s] economies of density or economies of ubiquity within a geographic area" that "inhibit new entrants, because a new entrant is at a substantial disadvantage [*34] to an established, wide-spread network (such as Star)." TAC P 141. These alleged barriers to entry help explain why Star and the Defendants have managed to reap supracompetitive profits for an extended period and thereby provide further support for Plaintiffs' allegation that Star possesses market power in the all ATM Networks market. See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434 (noting that the existence of significant barriers to entry in a market provide circumstantial evidence of the defendants' market power within that market).

In addition, Plaintiffs assert that Star is "the largest ATM Network in the United States," that "Star processes far more Foreign ATM Transactions than any other ATM Network," and that "in some geographic areas Star is dominant to the point that consumers would be hard-pressed to avoid paying Star's fixed Interchange Fee." TAC P P 11, 69, 74, 120. Though these allegations fall short of demonstrating that Star owns a "dominant share of [the all ATM Networks] market," Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434, they nonetheless would, if true, establish that Star has become the largest competitor in the all ATM Networks market, even though it has charged supracompetitive prices for many [*35] years. These allegations therefore also provide circumstantial evidence of Star's market power.

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' "market power" allegations fail because Plaintiffs have not alleged that the Defendants and Star have the ability to affect marketwide prices and output in the all ATM Networks market. Mtn. at 11; Reply at 6. Though Plaintiffs do not expressly allege that Defendants' conduct has had an affect on marketwide prices and output, that conclusion can be reasonably inferred from the allegations Plaintiffs do make.

First, Plaintiffs allege that Star is the largest competitor in the "all ATM Networks" market. TAC P P 11, 69, 74. Star is therefore not, according to Plaintiffs' factual allegations, a niche player whose actions have little impact on the overall market.

Second, and crucially, Plaintiffs assert that Defendants and Star have charged an interchange fee that is well-above their costs for at least two decades. If Defendants and Star lacked market power, such appealing profit margins would attract competition from new or existing competitors and lead to a decline in prices and average profits. See Areeda P 501. Yet, that has not occurred. In fact, Star has maintained [*36] the same interchange fee for 20 years, despite steep declines in costs. These facts are not consistent with a highly competitive market in which Star lacks market power. Moreover, because price and output are inversely correlated, the fact that Star, the market leader, has charged supracompetitive interchange fees for two decades implies that marketwide output -- i.e., the number of foreign ATM transactions -- has been lower than it would have been had Star charged a competitive interchange fee. Thus, Plaintiffs have implicitly alleged that Defendants' conduct has had an adverse impact on marketwide prices and output.

In sum, Plaintiffs plausibly allege that Defendants and Star have been able to "profitably set prices above . . . costs" for a prolonged period of time due to entry barriers and other factors. Because such an ability is the hallmark of market power, see Areeda P 501, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have adequately pled that Defendants and Star possess market power in the relevant market.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, the Court hereby:

(1) GRANTS Defendants' joint motion to dismiss with respect to Plaintiffs' single-brand, derivative aftermarket theory;

(2) DENIES Defendants' [*37] motion with respect to Plaintiffs' "All ATM Networks" relevant market theory.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

The policy must authorize the municipal entity both to regulate the conduct and to "suppress competition," but the latter purpose is inferred if suppression is a foreseeable result of a broad delegation.

HN8[] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

The Equal Protection Clause is usually deployed in cases involving state or local curtailment of personal constitutional rights and ordinarily against generic distinctions made in statutes or regulations. But economic interests can also be protected, although more latitude is allowed to the government; and individual inequalities, as opposed to ones imposed generically, are potentially -- although not easily -- reached by so-called "class of one" discrimination claims.

HN9[] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

Case law places the burden on the plaintiff in class-of-one Equal Protection cases to show identity of entities and circumstances to a high degree.

[*9] BOUDIN, Circuit Judge. Rectrix Aerodrome Centers, Inc. ("Rectrix") is a tenant at the Barnstable Municipal Airport that provides certain aviation services to planes using the airport. It sued the Barnstable Municipal Airport Commission ("BMAC"), [1] two airport commissioners, two airport managers, and its outside counsel, claiming that

[1] Any city or town that establishes an airport must also establish an airport commission, "which shall have the custody, care and management of the municipal airport of said city or town." Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 90, § 51E (2010). Massachusetts law confers they prevented Rectrix from competing with BMAC in the sale of jet fuel. The district court dismissed some of Rectrix's claims and on others granted summary judgment against Rectrix. The facts are as follows.

Beginning in 2002, Rectrix operated a hangar at the Barnstable Municipal Airport for private jets. Rectrix's lease with BMAC provided that it could apply to BMAC to expand the scope of Rectrix's operations and become what is known in the industry as a "fixed base operator" or [*10] "FBO"--a service center that provides such things as fuel, oil, and hangar storage. At the time, BMAC had in place a code of rules and regulations, which the parties refer to as the "minimum standards," that imposed standards of operation and maintenance on FBOs at the airport. Rectrix says it did not see a copy of the minimum standards until 2004.

These standards (which have since been altered) provided in Article III.e as follows:

> A Fixed base operator shall provide all fuel services, including the sale and storage of 80-octane, 100-octane, and jet fuel, for as long as these grades are normally available for resale. The Barnstable Municipal Airport Commission may limit the types [3] of fuel to be sold.

Not surprisingly, in this controversy about Rectrix's ability to sell jet fuel, Rectrix relies heavily on the first sentence; Barnstable, on the second.

According to BMAC, at least since 1979 it has reserved for itself the right to sell jet fuel at the airport, has declined to allow FBOs to do so, refused specifically on a prior occasion in 1983 to allow another FBO (Griffin Avionics, Inc.) to sell jet fuel, and has the blessing of both Massachusetts law and the Federal Aviation Administration ("FAA") for its right to follow this policy. Rectrix claims that revenues generated by jet fuel sales were illegally diverted to help support the town as well as the airport, but BMAC disputes any charge of unlawful conduct.

BMAC also asserts that when Rectrix first became a tenant in 2002, it had full notice of this reservation. BMAC points to a set of so-called "self service standards"--which are distinct from the minimum standards referenced above--dated August 15, 2000, that Rectrix received prior to signing its lease; this document says that "[a]s the proprietor of the Barnstable Airport, the Airport Commission reserves the exclusive right unto itself to sell jet fuel on [4] the Barnstable Airport." The lease thereafter signed with Rectrix in August 2002 gave it the right to operate a hangar for corporate jets, but not to conduct FBO operations, and contained the following terms:

> 2a. It is further agreed that Lessee shall not conduct or permit to be conducted on said premises any flight schools, or aircraft refueling activities specifically related to, and including resale of aviation or jet fuels, all subject to (2b) below.
> 2b. Lessee may at any time during the term of this Lease or additional terms thereof, submit in writing to the Barnstable Municipal Airport Commission, Lessee's desire to modify or expand its scope of operation. Lessee agrees that any change in its scope of operation may be subject to negotiable rates and charges, with agreed upon terms and conditions to be executed by both parties on separate letters of agreement.

Rectrix says it first learned of the minimum standards (as opposed to the self-service standards) in May 2004 and that it obtained a copy of those standards only in June 2004. Soon after, in October 2004, Rectrix requested permission to expand its operations and become a full-service FBO; it says it wanted to become a full-service [5] FBO at this point because it believed that the minimum standards would give it the right to sell jet fuel. [2]

[*11] Rectrix says that to prevent it from selling jet fuel, BMAC refused to give proper consideration to its application to become an full-service FBO, delayed approval on other applications as well, and imposed operating restrictions that complicated Rectrix's ability to serve its customers. It says that it in various respects has been treated, to its disadvantage, differently than Griffin Avionics. After arguments back and forth with BMAC, Rectrix began the law suit that has led to this appeal.

[2] upon such commissions various powers relating to airport operations, including, among other things, the powers to lease land, acquire property, set charges and rentals, expend funds, and promulgate rules and regulations. Id. §§ 51F-51J.

[2] There is no evidence that Rectrix was granted permission to become a full-service FBO, but Rectrix's agreement with BMAC was modified to expand the size of its leasehold and the parties agreed to terms for Rectrix's self-fueling of aircraft it owned (or managed or leased under an exclusive contract of least 60 days); the memorandum specifically precluded Rectrix from selling fuel to third parties.

In its complaint filed in federal district court, Rectrix asserted a variety of claims against BMAC and the individuals named above arising under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations [6] Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. (2006), the Constitution and section 1983, 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (2006), and federal and state antitrust laws, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (2006); Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93, §§ 1-14A (2010), along with various common law claims.

The district court granted a motion to dismiss Rectrix's antitrust claims, Rectrix Aerodome Ctrs., Inc. v. Barnstable Mun. Airport Comm'n, 534 F. Supp. 2d 201 (D. Mass. 2008) ("Rectrix I"), and later granted summary judgment in favor of Barnstable on its RICO and section 1983 claims, Rectrix Aerodome Ctrs., Inc. v. Barnstable Mun. Airport Comm'n, 632 F. Supp. 2d 120 (D. Mass. 2009) ("Rectrix II"). The district court then declined to retain supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims. Id. at 132.

Rectrix now appeals both the grant of the motion to dismiss and the grant of summary judgment, both rulings being subject to de novo review. Gargano v. Liberty Int'l Underwriters, Inc., 572 F.3d 45, 48 (1st Cir. 2009); Paparo v. M/V Eternity, 433 F.3d 169, 172 (1st Cir. 2006). We address first the RICO and antitrust claims, both of which directly attack BMAC's restriction on jet fuel sales; the remaining claim, complaining of a civil [7] rights violation under section 1983 and the Constitution, is considered thereafter.

RICO. Rectrix's first, and most detailed, argument on appeal is that the district court erred in rejecting Rectrix's RICO claim. HN1[] A civil RICO claim, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), requires proof of several elements including the existence of a racketeering "enterprise" and its conduct through a "pattern" of racketeering activity, which requires at least two acts of racketeering so related, id. § 1961(4)-(5); the acts are ones specified in the statute and include mail and wire fraud as possible predicate acts. Id. §§ 1961(1), 1962(c).

Rectrix's claim of fraud rests at bottom on the proposition that it was entitled under the minimum standards then in force to sell jet fuel, that the defendants falsely represented that Rectrix lacked that right and concealed the minimum standards until they were discovered by Rectrix in mid-2004, and that these acts of misrepresentation and concealment reflected a pattern of fraudulent acts that damaged Rectrix and are within the purview of the RICO statute. Rectrix also says that the defendants diverted revenues thus gained to Barnstable for its municipal use in violation of law [8] and sought to conceal this as well.

The answer, as the district court ruled, Rectrix II, 632 F. Supp. 2d at 126-27, is that the minimum standards did not entitle Rectrix to sell jet fuel. Those standards provide that an FBO operator must supply fuel, including jet fuel, but qualify this in the next sentence by saying that BMAC "may limit the types of fuels to be sold." [*12] Before the lease was signed, and before Rectrix ever sought FBO status, the self-service standards BMAC gave to Rectrix told it that BMAC "reserves the exclusive right unto itself to sell jet fuel on the Barnstable Airport," and the lease itself expressly forbade Rectrix from selling any fuel.

Rectrix counters that the first sentence of the minimum standards describes jet fuel as a "grade" and the second sentence merely reserves BMAC's right to limit the particular "types" within the grade (Rectrix claiming there are separate "types" of jet fuel, such as Jet A-1, Jet A, and Jet B); but the straightforward reading is that the word "types" refers to the varieties given in the prior sentence, i.e., 80-octane, 100-octane, and jet fuel. In addition, the lease itself forbids Rectrix from providing any fuel.

It appears that the [9] FAA itself is content to have municipal airports reserve jet fuel sales to themselves, seemingly so as to allow airports to fund maintenance and improvements. [3] Rectrix says that it was improper for BMAC to funnel any of the jet fuel profits for municipal use and that BMAC committed further acts of fraud by concealing this diversion from the FAA. But whether or not the diversion occurred or was improper--the district court made no finding--it was the reservation to BMAC of exclusive rights, not the diversion of BMAC profits, that caused damage to Rectrix.

Finally, Rectrix complains that when it sought FBO status, BMAC engaged in delays, proposed burdensome terms and otherwise hindered its application and operations. But nothing in the lease compels BMAC to surrender its exclusivity, and so long as BMAC maintained its exclusive rights, the premise of the RICO claim--that [10] BMAC had no such exclusive rights--fails.

BMAC's minimum standards could have stated expressly its position that no one except itself could sell jet fuel at the airport instead of leaving this to the self-service standards and the lease. The lack of such a statement may explain some of its other actions, including its alleged delay in turning over the minimum standards and in processing Rectrix's request for FBO status. But given the qualification in the minimum standards, the explicit restrictions in the self-service standards and the lease with Rectrix amply establish that Rectrix never had a right under its lease or airport regulations to sell jet fuel at the airport.

Antitrust law. Alternatively, Rectrix claims that restricting Rectrix from selling jet fuels at the airport violates HN2[] section 2 of the Sherman Act, which forbids monopolization, attempted monopolization and conspiracies to monopolize. 15 U.S.C. § 2. The district court rejected this claim without reaching the merits, relying on federal antitrust law's so-called state action doctrine (quite different from the constitutional doctrine that shares the same name) and a leading precedent of this court. Rectrix I, 534 F. Supp. 2d at 203-06.

The [11] state action doctrine was originally adopted by the Supreme Court in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 347-52, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), to immunize from attack under the federal antitrust laws a regulatory scheme, adopted by statute, by which California required raisin growers to deliver the majority of their raisins into a [*13] common pool in exchange for set payments--a practice that might be treated as unlawful price fixing if arranged without state approval. HN3[] The Sherman Act, said the Court, does not automatically forbid the state from imposing restrictions on competition that private citizens could not have adopted for themselves. Id. at 351-52. From this decision has flowed a host of refining decisions, one subset of which is concerned with actions taken by municipalities.

Although not automatically treated as states, municipal entities (like BMAC) can invoke state action immunity--as can municipal officials acting for them, Fisichelli v. Town of Methuen, 956 F.2d 12, 15-16 (1st Cir. 1992) (Breyer, C.J.)--if they act pursuant to a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" state policy to displace competition with regulation. [4] The policy must authorize the municipal entity both to regulate the conduct [12] and to "suppress competition," City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 372, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991); but the latter purpose is inferred if suppression is a foreseeable result of a broad delegation, id. at 373; Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42-43; Fisichelli, 956 F.2d at 14.

The defendants' claim of immunity rests on the language of Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 90, §§ 51D-51M, the Massachusetts statute governing municipal airports. HN4[] One provision grants the power to "airport commission[s]" to "adopt rules and regulations for the use of municipal airports," id. § 51J; others grant airports authority to "determine the charges or rentals for the use of any properties, facilities, installations, landing fees, concessions, uses and services," id. § 51H, and to lease airport land for up to 20 years "under such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, for hangars, shops, storage, industrial purposes, offices and other space rental, and for concessions," id. § 51F.

This may seem [13] a rather bland basis for attributing to the state legislature a purpose to allow the suppression of competition, but the case law has interpreted the protection hospitably. Hovenkamp, supra, § 20.6, at 753-54 &

n.12. In all events, HN5[] the Massachusetts statute involved here goes out of its way to include a section specifically prohibiting exclusive contracts related to transportation to and from the airport, id. § 51M, which surely suggests that the legislature did perceive that the airport might otherwise employ exclusivity restrictions (and chose to ban only this narrow set).

The most direct precedent is this court's reading of very similar language in the enabling statute that governs the Massachusetts Port Authority--the entity that runs Boston's Logan Airport--as conferring state action immunity on the authority. Interface Group, Inc. v. Mass. Port Auth., 816 F.2d 9, 12-14 (1st Cir. 1987); Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 91 app., §§ 1-3, 1-14 (2010). Cases from other circuits have similarly found that municipal airports can benefit from state action immunity; of course, these decisions involved different statutes, but the operative language was in many instances similar and, anyway, their basic [14] outlook is consistent with our reading of the Massachusetts statute. [5]

[*14] District court cases are in some tension in their construction of like statutes. New York Airlines, Inc. v. Dukes County, 623 F. Supp. 1435, 1451 (D. Mass. 1985), said that Massachusetts law governing municipal airports "[did] not on [its] face demonstrate a clear intent on the part of the state to displace competition . . . in the management of [15] [airports]." But this case preceded both the Supreme Court's Omni decision and our decision in Interface, which control this panel. Williams v. Ashland Eng'g Co., 45 F.3d 588, 592 (1st Cir. 1995).

In its reply brief and at oral argument, Rectrix argued that provisions in HN6[] Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 90, §§ 51H, 51J, say that in the contracts airports execute "the public shall not be deprived of its rightful, legal and uniform use of such properties, facilities and installations" and that airports' "rules and regulations shall conform to and be consistent with the laws of the commonwealth." Apart from the rule that arguments not made in the opening brief are waived, e.g., Sandstrom v. ChemLawn Corp., 904 F.2d 83, 86 (1st Cir. 1990), this language does not negate an expectation that exclusivity arrangements might be employed.

Cases like Omni reflect an ambivalence, shared by Congress as well, e.g., 15 U.S.C. §§ 34-36 (restricting damages in antitrust suits against local governments and their officials acting in an "official capacity"), as to how far municipalities ought to be restricted by the antitrust laws. States and their subordinate units commonly mingle governmental services, regulation and [16] financial self-interest, while being subjected in some measure to restrictions that do not apply to private entities engaged in the same activities. [6]

The evolution of the state action doctrine as applied to municipalities is far from over, but our own Interface decision is sufficient to resolve this case. It is worth adding that Rectrix is mistaken in its notion that its antitrust claim would otherwise face fair sailing. How far the antitrust laws require property owners to allow outsiders onto their property to compete with them in selling goods or services is disputable, and private owners--for example, shopping centers--commonly enter into leases with clauses that limit competition. [*15] Civil rights. Rectrix's remaining federal claim was brought under HN7[] 42 U.S.C. § 1983, which creates civil liability for civil rights violations by state and local governments, and the right invoked by Rectrix is the right of equal protection guaranteed under the Fourteenth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. This claim differs from the RICO and antitrust claims because its main target is not the restriction of jet fuel sales but other alleged disparities in the treatment of Rectrix and other airport tenants.

The specifics of Rectrix's claim have evolved over time. In the district court, Rectrix claimed that another tenant--Griffin Avionics--was allowed to use a public ramp to which Rectrix was denied access and claimed that a third tenant Silvia Aviation received various forms of preferential treatment. Rectrix II, 632 F. Supp. 2d at 129. [18] On appeal, Rectrix makes no mention of Silvia but tries to add two further alleged instances of discrimination favoring Griffin, which were at best only partially developed in the district court. [8]

HN8[] The Equal Protection Clause is usually deployed in cases involving state or local curtailment of personal constitutional rights (e.g., against racial discrimination) and ordinarily against generic distinctions made in statutes or regulations. But [19] economic interests can also be protected, although more latitude is allowed to the government; and individual inequalities, as opposed to ones imposed generically, are potentially--although not easily--reached by so-called "class of one" discrimination claims. E.g., Vill. of Willowbrook v. Olech, 528 U.S. 562, 564, 120 S. Ct. 1073, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1060 (2000) (per curiam); Wojcik v. Mass. State Lottery Comm'n, 300 F.3d 92, 104-05 (1st Cir. 2002).

The single clearly developed and specific claim of alleged discrimination was supported by only one sentence in an affidavit from Rectrix's CEO that reads (in full):

> Additionally, on occasions where Rectrix needs additional space to park aircraft (an issue necessitated in part by defendants' refusal to grant Rectrix's request for additional ramp space), Rectrix has been told that it cannot use various public areas of the Airport, although Griffin Avionics and other Airport tenants have been able to use the same space.

The district court, Rectrix II, 632 F. Supp. 2d at 129-30, said that this claim failed because Rectrix did not show that it was similarly situated to the other, allegedly favored tenants or users--a settled requirement for equal protection claims, e.g., Vill. of Willowbrook, 528 U.S. at 564; [20] Buchanan v. Maine, 469 F.3d 158, 177-78 (1st Cir. 2006).

In claiming that Griffin (and unnamed other companies) was allowed greater use of airport space outside its leased premises, Rectrix provided no details about the comparability of Griffin to itself and the precise circumstances of the episodes; it cites letters it wrote asking for more ramp space, but none even mentions Griffin's supposed better treatment. Still fewer details were provided on the other allegations Rectrix now says were instances of [*16] pro-Griffin discrimination. See note 8, above. The district court properly relied on holdings in our earlier HN9[] cases that place the burden on the plaintiff in class-of-one cases to show such identity of entities and circumstances to a high degree. See Rectrix II, 632 F. Supp. 2d at 130. Rectrix argues that the principal case cited-- Cordi-Allen v. Conlon, 494 F.3d 245, 251-52 (1st Cir. 2007)--was a land-use case and so its language should not apply here. But core equal protection concerns aside, class-of-one plaintiffs face the same burden outside of the land-use context as well. See, e.g., Buchanan, 469 F.3d at 178; Pagan v. Calderon, 448 F.3d 16, 34-37 (1st Cir. 2006).

Further, the reason [21] articulated in Cordi-Allen for requiring a strict showing of comparability applies with full force here. Drawing distinctions is what legislators and regulators do every day: without this comparability sieve, every routine governmental decision at the state and local level--of which there are millions every year--could become a class-of-one case in federal court. Cf. Engquist v. Or. Dep't of Agric., 553 U.S. 591, 128 S. Ct. 2146, 2156-57, 170 L. Ed. 2d 975 (2008); Vill. of Willowbrook, 528 U.S. at 565-66 (Breyer, J., concurring in result); Pagan, 448 F.3d at 34-35.

[8] First, Rectrix complains that the airport discriminated between Griffin and Rectrix with respect to fuel tank usage. However, Rectrix never developed this claim below: rather, Rectrix complained that BMAC allowed third parties to use Griffin's fuel tank while not allowing Rectrix to use Air Cape Cod's fuel tank; but at most these allegations would indicate discrimination between Air Cape Cod and Griffin or between other third parties and Rectrix--not between Griffin and Rectrix. Second, Rectrix says the airport refused to provide timely fuel service to Rectrix's customers and imposed on it a fueling policy that did not apply to Griffin. But below, Rectrix did not mention Griffin in connection with these allegations, much less show discrimination.

To sum up, Rectrix was a commercial tenant of the airport and, given the self- service standards and lease terms, had no right and no reasonable expectation of being able to sell jet fuel at the airport and so no fraud claim whatever. The antitrust claim, dubious on the merits, is barred by the state action doctrine given the Massachusetts statute. And so far as its equal protection claim is aimed to secure a general right to make jet fuel sales, no private entity at the airport has the privilege sought by Rectrix.

Affirmed.

[*250] OPINION & ORDER

Plaintiff, Sterling Merchandising, Inc. ("Sterling"), brings this action against defendant [*251] corporations, Nestle, S.A., Nestle Holdings, Inc., Nestle Puerto Rico, Inc. ("Nestle PR"), and Payco Foods Corporation ("Payco")(collectively, "Nestle" or "Defendants"), alleging antitrust violations and injury stemming from the merger of two local ice cream distributors, and several subsequent business practices. The complaint charges Defendants with: conspiracy to monopolize, and unlawful restraint of trade in violation of Sections 1 & 3 of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 1, 3; monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, exclusive dealing in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Antitrust Act ("Clayton Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 14; unlawful restraint of trade in violation of the Puerto Rico Anti-Monopoly Act, 10 P.R. Laws Ann., §§ 257-276; [3] and monopolization and attempted monopolization in violation of Section 260 of the Puerto Rico Anti-Monopoly Act, 10 P.R. Laws. Ann., § 260. Defendants have moved this court for summary judgment on Counts I through VIII of the Amended Complaint, which allege violations of Sherman Act Sections 1, 2, and 3 (15 U.S.C. §§ 1-3), Clayton Act § 3 (15 U.S.C. § 14), and the Puerto Rico Anti-Monopoly Act (10 P.R. Laws Ann. §§ 257-276).

Given the complex nature of the present suit, and after an unsuccessful effort at mediation, this Court held a special hearing for the parties to further present any relevant arguments regarding the motion currently under review. Docket # 221. Taking into account the arguments presented there, and after reviewing the facts and the pertinent law, summary judgment DISMISSING WITH PREJUDICE Sterling's federal claims shall be GRANTED, while all state law causes of action shall be DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Background

Relevant Cast

Sterling is an ice cream distributor, founded by John Williams ("Williams") and Stanley Pasarell ("Pasarell") in 1993. PSUF # 1. From its beginnings, the company has had the exclusive rights to distribute Edy's Ice Cream ("Edy's") in Puerto Rico, a brand manufactured by Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc. ("Dreyer's"). Id. Williams and Pasarell each own 50% shares in Sterling. DSUF # 11(a)&(b). Williams is President and Pasarell is Chairman of the Board. Id.

Nestle S.A., headquartered in Vevey, Switzerland, is currently the largest ice cream manufacturer in the world. PSUF # 4. A subsidiary, Nestec S.A., is responsible for the analysis and review of merger, acquisition, and divestiture proposals within the Nestle corporate structure. DOSUF # 5. Nestle S.A. operates in Puerto Rico through separate marketing subsidiaries that sell their products in the market. DSUF # 166. These include Nestle PR, [5] which owns 100% of the shares of Payco. DSUF # 2. Dreyer's, manufacturer of Edy's, is also a subsidiary of Nestle S.A. [2] DSUF # 182.

[1] Accompanying the Motion for Summary Judgment was Defendants' Statement of Uncontested Facts ("DSUF")(Docket # 191), to which Plaintiff replied with its Opposition to Statement of Uncontested Material Facts ("POSUF")(Docket # 198). Defendants replied [4] (Docket # 208-3), and Plaintiff sur-replied (Docket # 212). Plaintiff also submitted its own Statement of Material Facts in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment ("PSUF")(Docket # 197), Defendant replied (DOSUF)(Docket 208-33), and Plaintiff sur-replied (Docket # 213).

[2] Dreyer's entered into an agreement in 2002, with an effective date of June 26, 2003, whereby it combined with Nestle Ice Cream Company, LLC to form Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream Holdings, Inc.

[*252] Thomas Ward ("Ward") was the President and principal owner of Payco until the merger with Nestle PR in 2003, with the exception of the period between 1999 and 2001. DSUF # 9(a); POSUF # 9(a). However, even during said period, Ward acted as Chief Executive Officer ("CEO") and Chairman of the Board. Id. Valerie Cornut ("Cornut") is currently CEO of Payco, a position she has held since 2005. POSUF # 9(b).

Dr. Thomas Overstreet ("Overstreet") is an economist at CRA International, where he holds the position of Vice President. Sterling retained his services "to conduct an economic analysis of the issues raised in the Complaint filed in this matter." DSUF # 15(a). Sterling's other expert is David W. Whitehouse, a marketing specialist, who conducted two surveys about the ice cream market in Puerto Rico. DSUF # 15 (b). [3] Defendants' experts are David Scheffman, an economist and [6] Director of LECG, LLC, an international consulting company, and Jose J. Villamil, President and CEO of Estudios Tecnicos, Inc., an economics and planning consulting firm in Puerto Rico. DSUF # 16.

Unilever is a major Nestle competitor in the ice cream business, producing brands such as Breyers and Ben and Jerry's. DSUF # 6. Breyers is distributed by Payco, while Sterling distributes other Unilever products, such as Ben and Jerry's ice cream. See DSUF # 19, DUSF # 17, PSUF # 3.

Market Structure

Beginning in 2002, Nestle managers studied and discussed purchasing Payco, along with other strategies within the Puerto Rico market. PSUF # 8. Nestle also expanded its presence in the world wide ice cream market after 2000, and in 2003 acquired Dreyer's. DSUF # 182. The Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") investigated and approved Nestle Holdings, Inc.'s acquisition of Dreyer's, but did not include Puerto Rico in its analysis. PSUF # 60. The FTC also required Defendants to provide advance written notification of the acquisition of any direct store delivery ice cream distribution business for $ 7.5 million or more in the United States, except for those in Puerto Rico. PSUF # 61.

Dreyer's products first entered the Puerto Rico market in 1992, and in 1993 the company assigned the exclusive right to distribute its Edy's line to [8] Sterling. DSUF # 176. Sterling has distributed Dreyer's branded products in Puerto Rico since 1993. DSUF # 25. Since as early as April, 2001, Edy's has been, and continues to be, the number one selling ice cream brand in Puerto Rico. [4] DSUF # 26. In August, 2000, Sterling purchased selected assets from Caribbean Fruitti, an ice [*253] cream distributor in Puerto Rico, and thereby acquired the distribution rights to certain Unilever brands including Good Humor ice cream products. DSUF # 27. Sterling also added J & J Snacks, Rich's Ice Cream and Turkey Hill products to their offerings between 2005 and 2006. DSUF # 28. The amount and variety of ice cream brands and products offered in the relevant market has not diminished significantly since Nestle PR's acquisition of Payco. [5] DSUF ## 32-33.

[3] Defendants have also filed a Motion to Strike the Rebuttal Declaration of Dr. Thomas Overstreet (Docket # 206), which was filed in response to Defendant' Motion for Summary Judgment, and after the window for expert discovery had closed in the case management calendar. Inasmuch as said declaration incorporated sales data produced after his original report was delivered and expounded upon his existing theories, Defendants' motion is DENIED. However, the report also includes new theories of liability, including foreclosure in certain sub-segments of the ice cream market, which were presented after the closure of expert discovery. These are an improper attempt to reformulate arguments regarding the relevant market, and shall be struck from the record. The present case is not as extreme as Lohnes v. Level 3 Communications, Inc., 272 F.3d 49, 59 (1st. Cir. 2001), which is cited by Defendants. Nevertheless, the new theories regarding sub-regions would require new market definitions and expert work [7] for both parties, and should thus not proceed at this advanced stage.

[4] This fact was not properly controverted with evidence to the contrary.

[5] Prior to the 2003 merger, the following brands, and possibly others, were available in Puerto Rico: Breyer's, Haägen Dazs, Blue Bunny, M&M Mars (Snickers, Dove, M&Ms), Payco, Flav-o-Rich, various private labels, Healthy Choice, Lady Richmond, Rich & Creamy, Blue Bell, and Carrusel, Nestle imported range, Edy's, Ben & Jerry's, Unilever [9] (Good Humor), Barbers, Nestle products; Budget Saver, Tofutti, Natural Fruit Corp, Parmalat -- Kinnett, Hood, Schoep's. As of 2008 the market included a Nestle PR entered the Puerto Rico ice cream distribution market in 1998 via the acquisition of Mantecados Nevada, Inc.'s ("Nevada") ice cream manufacturing and distribution business. DSUF # 21. Prior to the acquisition of a local distributor, Nestle PR sold its branded ice cream products, mostly imported from the U.S. mainland, via local distributors, including [10] Sterling, Payco, and Nevada. PSUF # 9. Nevada ran an ice cream factory in addition to its distribution business, so Nestle PR offered ice cream products that were manufactured in the Puerto Rico factory, as well as Nestle branded products. PSUF # 10. The company's ice cream sales volume in this period (1999-2001) fluctuated between $ 18.1 million and $ 18.6 million. PSUF # 11. Nearly contemporaneously, Payco reported sales of $ 27.8 million, $ 29.1 million, and $ 31.1 million in 2000, 2001 and 2002, respectively. PSUF # 15.

From the time of the 1998 Nevada acquisition until the Payco merger in June 2003, Nestle PR's ice cream division suffered heavy losses. DSUF # 22. In response to this reality, and before the 2003 merger with Payco, Nestle PR approached Sterling about a possible joint approach for retail space, but this option was never seriously pursued. PSUF # 155. This did not lead to an agreement, and because Nestle PR was not economically successful, it began merger talks with Payco in 2001, and the two merged on June 11, or July 1, 2003 through Nestle's acquisition of 50% of Payco's stock, which was controlled by Ward. [6] DSUF ## 23 & 209; PSUF [*254] ## 22 & 27. On September 2, 2005, [11] Nestle PR acquired the remaining 50% of Payco's shares from Ward. DSUF # 210. After the Nestle PR/Payco merger, Ward remained as President and CEO of Payco until 2005. PSUF # 53.

The [12] Puerto Rico Office of Monopolistic Affairs ("PROMA") reviewed and ultimately approved the Nestle PR / Payco transaction, conditioned upon various stipulations. [7] DSUF # 30. The then head of PROMA, Jose Diaz Tejera, has no knowledge that the terms of the agreement have ever been breached. DUSF # 31. After the merger, all of the sales of ice cream that were previously made by Nestle PR, including all Nestle brands, were shifted to Payco. DSUF # 214.

During the years prior to the Nestle PR/Payco merger, Nestle explored the possibility of strategic collaboration, and even a possible merger with Sterling. PSUF # 51. Nestle also studied the possibility of exchanging its Unilever line for Sterling's Edy's line in order to promote brand alliance rationalization. PSUF ## 86 & 90. This included discussions with Sterling's co-owner, Pasarell, about the possible purchase of his share of the company. PSUF # 88.

similar number of options for the consumer: Breyer's, Haägen Dazs, Nestle, Nestle Gold, Nestle Payaso, Nestle Nevada, Nestle impulse products, Dole, M&M Mars (Snickers, Dove, M&Ms), Payco, Flav-o-Rich, various private labels, Healthy Choice, Lady Richmond, Rich & Creamy, Blue Bell, and Carrusel, Edy's, Unilever (Good Humor), Natural Fruit Corp., Rich Ice Cream and Products, Turkey Hill, Schoeps, Ben & Jerry's, Hunter Farms, Budget Saver, J&J Snack, Old Meeting House, Gianni of New York ("Gianni") ice cream, and Gianni Italian ice. Plaintiffs have disputed the presence of Blue Bunny, and the relevance of various limber companies. They have not been included in this Court's analysis.

[6] Plaintiffs allege that the motivation for this merger was ". . . that Nestle executives responsible for investigating and approving the acquisition of Payco intended to monopolize ice cream distribution business in Puerto Rico and exclude or limit competitors such as Sterling, Unilever and Wells Dairy." POSUF # 23. Contemporaneous to this merger, between 2002 and 2005, Sterling and Nestle management discussed different possibilities for merger, purchase, or the sharing of distribution rights. DSUF ## 203-208. No agreement was ever reached. Part of Nestle P.R.'s pre merger difficulties were due to Payco's distribution network. "As Nestle recognized that continued competition with Payco would likely lead to further losses, acquiring Payco became an attractive option," because the local company controlled the best locations and key distribution channels. PSUF ## 24 & 28. Furthermore, this Court notes that the exact date of the merger is contested, but finds said fact to be immaterial for present purposes.

[7] PROMA staff expressed concern about the transaction's potential anti-competitive effects. PSUF # 46. Plaintiffs dispute this fact, however, their objections are centered on the merits of the decision, and not its existence. PROMA staff noted that the Payco/Nestle PR combination could create restrictions on competition, but the transaction was eventually approved, in part due to the fact that the Commonwealth wanted Nestle to continue operating its local ice cream factory. POSUF # 30. The approval was made official on March 25, 2003 (DSUF # 223), and stipulated that Nestle PR and Payco would not enter into exclusive contracts which closed more than 35% of the market to competition. DSUF # 224. Nestle P.R. also agreed that it would seek PROMA's [13] approval before granting the distribution rights over Edy's ice cream, unless Sterling should acquire the distribution rights to either Breyer's or Blue Bunny ice cream (or any other brand with similar sales). PSUF # 49. PROMA defined the relevant market as dedicated to the distribution and sale of ice cream. PSUF # 47.

In the mid-1990s, Ward acquired Payco and began distributing various brands of ice cream. These came to include Payco, Lady Richmond, Carrusel, Flav-O-Rich, Unilever's Breyer's ice cream line, Masterfood Interamerica's Mars novelty ice cream line, and Wells' Dairy, Inc.'s ("Wells' Dairy") Blue Bunny line of ice cream products. DSUF ## 17-20; PSUF # 13. Prior to the Nestle PR / Payco merger in 2003, Blue Bunny ice cream [14] products were Payco's most successful ice cream line. DSUF # 36. The merger caused Wells' Dairy to terminate its distributor agreement with Payco, because Payco started to distribute two of Blue Bunny ice cream's main competitors, Breyers and Nestle Gold. DSUF ## 36-37. Before Blue Bunny terminated its distribution agreement with Payco, it was at one time available in approximately 80 percent of stores selling take home ice cream in Puerto Rico. PSUF # 65. Wells' Dairy then granted a newly formed distributor, Palm Industries, Inc. ("Palm"), the right to distribute Blue Bunny ice cream products in Puerto Rico. DSUF # 38. Palm only survived until 2006, when Wells' Dairy formed a subsidiary in Puerto Rico, Wells' Dairy Puerto Rico, to self-distribute Blue Bunny take home products. DSUF # 38. On October 8, 2008, Wells Dairy informed Puerto Rico retailers that it would cease distributing Blue Bunny branded ice cream and novelty products no later than December 15, 2009. DSUF # 45.

[*255] After the 2003 Nestle PR/Payco merger there was analysis of whether Unilever would continue to provide Payco with some of its products, such as Breyer's ice cream. In undertaking this analysis, Unilever considered [15] factors such as the reality that Defendants, by acquiring Dreyer's and Payco, became its distributor and also main competitor. Nevertheless, Breyer's was concerned that switching to Sterling could result in litigation due to breach of contract, and also the potential difficulties of single-brand self-distribution. PSUF # 113. After weighing its options, Unilever decided to stay with Payco, and in early 2006, entered into a new agreement with Nestle PR/Payco by which the company was appointed as the exclusive distributor of Unilever's Breyers as well as Good Humor brand packaged ice cream products in Puerto Rico. [8] PSUF ## 116 & 117.

Standard of Review

The Court may grant a motion for summary judgment when "the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." FED.R.CIV.P. 56 (c); See also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); Ramirez Rodriguez v. Boehringer Ingelheim, 425 F.3d 67, 77 (1st Cir. 2005). [16] In reaching such a determination, the Court may not weigh the evidence. Casas Office Machs., Inc. v. Mita Copystar Am., Inc., 42 F.3d 668 (1st Cir. 1994). At this stage, the court examines the record in the "light most favorable to the nonmovant," and indulges all "reasonable inferences in that party's favor." Maldonado-Denis v. Castillo-Rodriguez, 23 F.3d 576, 581 (1st Cir. 1994).

Once the movant has averred that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case, the burden shifts to the nonmovant to establish the existence of at least one fact in issue that is both genuine and material. Garside v. Osco Drug, Inc., 895 F.2d 46, 48 (1st Cir. 1990) (citations omitted). "A factual issue is 'genuine' if 'it may reasonably be resolved in favor of either party and, therefore, requires the finder of fact to make 'a choice between the parties' differing versions of the truth at trial.'" DePoutot v. Raffaelly, 424 F.3d 112, 116 (1st Cir. 2005) (citing Garside, 895 F.2d at 48 (1st Cir. 1990)).

In order to defeat summary judgment, the opposing party may not rest on conclusory allegations, improbable inferences, and unsupported speculation. See Hadfield v. McDonough, 407 F.3d 11, 15 (1st Cir. 2005) [17] (citing Medina-Munoz v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 896 F.2d 5, 8 (1st Cir. 1990). Nor will "effusive rhetoric" and "optimistic surmise" suffice to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Cadle Co. v. Hayes, 116 F.3d 957, 960 (1st Cir. 1997). Once the party moving for summary judgment has established an absence of material facts in dispute, and that he or she is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, the 'party opposing summary judgment must present definite, competent evidence to rebut the motion.' Mendez-Laboy v. Abbott Labs., 424 F.3d 35, 37 (1st Cir. 2005) (quoting Maldonado-Denis v. Castillo Rodriguez, 23 F.3d 576, 581 (1st Cir. 1994). "The non-movant must Id.; see also *Kelly v. United States, 924 F.2d 355, 358 (1st Cir. [256] 1991) (warning that "the decision to sit idly by and allow the summary judgment proponent to configure the record is likely to prove fraught with consequence."); Medina-Munoz, 896 F.2d at 8, quoting Mack v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 871 F.2d 179, 181 (1st Cir. 1989) (holding [18] that "[t]he evidence illustrating the factual controversy cannot be conjectural or problematic; it must have substance in the sense that it limns differing versions of the truth which a fact finder must resolve.").

Applicable Law & Analysis

Relevant Market

There are three retail distribution channels in the ice cream market 1) take-home, 2) impulse (single-serving packages sold for immediate consumption), and 3) food service customers (restaurants, hotels, ice cream parlors, etc.). PSMF # 189. The market shares of said distribution channels are approximately two thirds take-home, and one fourth impulse, with the remainder being food service customers, who make up less than one tenth of total ice cream consumption. [9]

Sterling has presented the relevant product market as the Puerto Rico market for the distribution and sale of ice cream products. DSUF # 46. PROMA also defined the relevant product market as the distribution of ice cream products, including the three segments in its definition. [10] POSUF # 47. Defendants have not offered a competing definition. Id. Moreover, Sterling's definition [19] of the relevant geographic market, Puerto Rico, is unchallenged. Defendants' expert has not attempted to create a counter theory regarding the relevant product market. POSUF # 48; PSUF # 187.

Instead, Defendants signal that Sterling failed to include many important ice cream vendors in its relevant market definition, these include Baskin-Robbins [11] (DSUF ## 66-70), McDonald's (DSUF # 71-74), and "limbers," [12] a Puerto Rican version of the popsicle (DSUF ## 75-78). However, Defendants' own internal documents identify Sterling and Wells/Palm as principal competitors, and do not identify McDonald's, Baskin Robbins, or other retailers as part of the competitive landscape. POSUF # 58; DSUF # 58.

Defendants also criticize Sterling for not performing an econometric cross-elasticity of demand calculation to support its product market definition. Docket ## 47-48. They claim that Sterling has not performed an analysis of the reasonable interchangeability of use between products, or a price study, that are alleged to be part of the relevant market and potential substitutes. DSUF ## 49 & 52. Sterling does not deny that its expert ". . . has not produced econometric or regression computations relating specifically to cross-elasticity, but Plaintiff disputes Defendants' statement or implication that Plaintiff has not conducted an in-depth economic analysis concerning the characteristics and [*257] firms in the relevant product and geographic market." POSUF # 48.

The rule of reason governs this Court's analysis of the relevant market. Recetas Por Menos, Inc. V. Five Development Corp., 368 F.Supp. 2d 124, 132 (D.P.R. 2005). When proving monopoly through indirect evidence, a [9] This Court notes that Plaintiff posits its relevant market as the combination of these three segments.

[10] This conclusion is buttressed by practical idicia used by Overstreet, Plaintiff's expert. Internal Nestle documents refer to its competitors as Sterling, and Palm industries, excluding ice cream retailers. Accordingly, Sterling's expert determined that the data was not amenable to econometric analysis. Id.

[11] Baskin-Robbins distributed to a limited number of grocery stores at one point, but has since terminated this facet of its business. POSUF # 68.

[12] The name comes from a visit to the Island by Charles [20] Lindbergh in the 1920s.

market power analysis requires the prior identification of the relevant market, which is bifurcated into a test regarding the relevant product market and another focusing on the relevant geographic [21] market. Id. at 131; Eastern Food Services, Inc. v. Pontifical Catholic University Services Assn, 357 F.3d 1, 5-6 (1st Cir. 2004). Because Defendants do not contest Sterling's assertion that the relevant geographic market is the entire geographic territory of Puerto Rico, this Court will accept Sterling's definition for the purpose of all further analysis. However, Defendants' objection to Plaintiff's market definition requires this Court's review.

Supreme Court case law establishes that "[t]he outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v. U.S., 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 1524, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962); see also Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 307 (3rd Cir. 2007). This analysis concerns the fact that the ". . .ability of customers to turn to other suppliers restrains a firm from raising prices above the competitive level, [so] the definition of the relevant market rests on a determination of available substitutes." Federal Trade Comn v. Cardinal Health, Inc., 12 F.Supp. 2d 34, 46 (D.D.C. 1998). To wit, the competing products that [22] customers in the market view as substitutes for the product in question. Id. Accordingly, the central question is whether there are reasonable alternatives to the product in question.

In addition to this first test, a practical, fact-driven, approach may also guide a court's analysis as to, "[t]he boundaries of [. . .] submarket[s], [which] may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the products' peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325. This entails taking into consideration the economic and commercial realities of a particular industry. Cardinal Health, 12 F.Supp. 2d at 46. Failure to define this market may lead to the dismissal of the anti-trust complaint. Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 307.

Sterling alleges that the market in question is a secondary market for the distribution and sale of ice cream, which is a market for distribution services and wholesale marketing to intermediaries, and not for the sale of ice cream directly to its end consumers. Defendants [23] contest that ice cream retailers are direct competitors for their business, and that excluding retailers from the relevant market definition is a fatal flaw on Sterling's part. They argue that if the price of Edy's, or another similar brand, were to rise sufficiently at a supermarket or impulse location, consumers would migrate to retail firms such as McDonald's and Baskin-Robbins.

Whether one examines a sub-market, or a separate market for services, Sterling's arguments prevail on this point, at least so far as a genuine dispute of material fact exists. It is telling that during the relevant period, all of the companies involved have engaged in practically the same economic activity, which is importing [*258] ice cream into Puerto Rico and distributing it to supermarkets, restaurants, and impulse locations. None of the parties engages in significant retail activity, [13] and they mutually consider each other to be their primary competitors. It is doubtful that another unmentioned group of existing sellers and producers in the relevant geographic market could have, during the pendency of this action, deprived the parties in this complaint of significant amounts of business. Newcal Instustries, Inc., 513 F.3d at 1045. [24] While Defendants allege that firms such as McDonald's and Baskin-Robbins should be included in the ice cream market, their internal business communications belie the relevance of the retail ice cream market for Sterling and Nestle/Payco's operations. The consumers in this market are the retailers, not the end customers for the product.

This Court understands that the parties involved in the lawsuit provide a specific service that is distinguishable from the business of selling ice cream directly to consumers. Furthermore, even if the relevant market includes competitors such as Baskin-Robbins and McDonald's, there is most certainly a dispute of fact as to the existence of a submarket. Newcal Instustries, Inc. v. Ikon Office Solution, 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008). Therefore, Defendants' prayer for summary judgment dismissing all claims for failure to properly define the relevant product market is DENIED.

[13] The "limber" companies could be different, but Defendants have not presented evidence that "limber" distribution has had anything but a de minimis effect on the ice cream distribution market.

Antitrust Injury

Sterling alleges damages on two main fronts. First it avers that Nestle [25] PR/Payco's exclusive contracts with some Puerto Rico retailers have illegally restricted them from enjoying a market share commensurate with their products' performance in competitive scenarios. Secondly, Nestle allegedly coordinated a "price squeeze" and restricted product support for Dreyer's products that Sterling distributes (i.e. Edy's). The Nestle PR/Payco merger allegedly led to ". . . a panoply of anti-competitive conduct including price increases to Sterling, denial of new products, and so forth." Docket # 198. Sterling argues that "but for" these activities, it would have achieved greatly higher sales, and enjoyed the profits these sales would have produced.

Specific antitrust standing is dependent on Sterling being able to show a plausible antitrust injury, ". . . linked to an illegal presence in the market[,] . . . which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). The injury must originate in proscribed anti-competitive activity, "by reason of that which made the [activity] unlawful," id. at 488, and it must also [26] be sufficiently direct, non-speculative, and measurable to the extent that causality is not in doubt. Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc., v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 533, 102 S.Ct. 8907, 906 (1983).

The need for direct causality born from a specific anti-competitive act is of special importance, because "antitrust claims are concerned not with wrongs directed against the private interest of an individual business but with conduct that stifles competition." *E. The Sterling damages model asks this Court to assume that "but for" the Nestle PR/Payco merger, the company would have had more than double the market share it had in 2003, when the period of Defendants' alleged anti-competitive and monopolistic actions began. Overstreet's damages model assumes that Sterling's sales accounted for roughly 50% of Supermax and Pueblo ice cream volume, and uses this volume as a benchmark. [14] DSUF # 234. It concludes that Sterling could have enjoyed up to a 50% market share, "but for" Payco's allegedly anti-competitive [28] exclusivity agreements. DSUF # 230. Another benchmark used are depot center sales, of which Sterling alleges it enjoys 50% market share, and Walmart, which does not use exclusives, where Sterling enjoys 42% market share. DSUF ## 226-231.

Consistent with Plaintiff's theory of the case, its expert, Overstreet affirms that none of the ice cream distributors in Puerto Rico had market power prior to the summer of 2003, and before said date the market was competitive. DSUF ## 79 & 80. Overstreet, concedes that Payco, Nestle PR, Wells', Sterling and Dreyer's did not have monopoly or unilateral market power prior to the Nestle PR/Payco merger. DSUF # 144. If the base-line for a competitive environment in the ice cream market was the pre-merger landscape (see DSUF ## 79 & 80, 144), then [14] Sterling's expert accepted on its face the report of the company's executives that Sterling's sales accounted for the ice cream volume in SuperMax and Pueblo stores. DSUF # 235.

Sterling should have to show how it was harmed, and how "but for" the merger and the alleged illegal activity, it would have achieved, through legitimate competition, greater sales, market share, profits, etc.

The primary reality undermining [29] Sterling's request for "but for" damages, is that the inference that the company has been unfairly hindered either by the exclusives or by product price increases is implausible in light of Sterling's increased profits, sales, and market share. Far from showing that the merger hurt their business, the record shows that Plaintiff was better off during the relevant period.

[*260] Despite the allegedly competitive marketplace, between fiscal years 2001 and 2003, Sterling's sales declined from $ 8.07 million to $ 7.01 million. DSUF # 90. However, after the Nestle PR/Payco merger, Sterling's sales increased, expanding to $ 12.02 million by the end of 2008, a 70% increase over the company's 2003 results. DSUF # 90. By contrast, some products distributed by Nestle PR/Payco lost market share and access to important locations. See, e.g., DSUF ## 119, 134, & 139

The same trend is observable in Sterling's gross profit, which rose by an annual rate of 12% between 2003 and 2008, and during which time its operating income increased by 300%. In 2007, Sterling's gross profit was 60% higher than in 2003. DSUF # 93. Moreover, Sterling's market share grew, from approximately 12.6% in 2002 to 20.7 % in 2007, and [30] the company is expanding its ice cream distribution operations by building new and larger facilities. [15] DSUF ## 96-97 & 100; PSUF # 196. In contrast, the Nestle PR/Payco joint venture lost nearly $ 5 million in sales revenue to Sterling and other competitors in its first six months of operations. DSUF # 139.

Regarding the market as a whole, Puerto Rico's ice cream distribution industry has grown in terms of total sales since 2003. DSUF # 98. There is insufficient data in the record of the case to evaluate how much Puerto Rico consumers paid at the retail level before the 2003 Nestle PR/Payco merger, and whether during the pre-merger period price increases to consumers were greater than or less than the rate of inflation, and supplier price increases. [16] [31] DSUF ## 82-85. What the record does show is that inflation in Puerto Rico averaged 11.9% annually between 2003 and 2007, encompassing the relevant period for this action. DSUF # 87. Despite this, both Blue Bunny and Edy's ice cream retailed for lower prices in 2007 than in 2001. DSUF # 141.

Furthermore, Sterling alleges that exclusivity contracts between Defendants and many Puerto Rico retailers after the Nestle PR/Payco merger caused it antitrust injury. However, exclusive contracts have been used in the Puerto Rico ice cream business since the 1990s. DSUF # 113. Payco's sales of ice cream to exclusive accounts decreased from $ 15.16 million in 2004 to $ 10.62 million in 2007. DSUF # 116. Sterling's internal documents show that Payco's exclusive accounts foreclosed 28.2% of the Puerto Rico ice cream market in 2004, 30.8% in 2005, 29.4% in 2006, and 19.5% in 2007. DSUF # 118. Moreover, these exclusive contracts were at the distribution level, and not directed at consumers. DSUF # 127. Defendants' [32] 100% exclusive agreements are virtually all one or two years in duration. [17] Docket # 128. Additionally, Overstreet [*261] did not find any evidence that Defendants ever sold ice cream products at prices below their cost. DSUF # 142.

Nevertheless, it is not contested that Defendants' gross margins were higher in stores with exclusivity agreements. PSUF # 158.After the merger, Sterling managed to move into various supermarkets that had previously been

[15] For much of the relevant period, Sterling did not carry "cheap and sweet" ice cream lines, which are an important seller at many supermarkets catering to lower income customer bases. DUSF ## 102-104. Furthermore, an important customer, Unilever, complained that Sterling does not have specific routes for impulse, single serving, ice cream sales. DSUF # 110. These factors may have limited Sterling's growth vis a vis Nestle PR/Payco.

[16] Sterling responds to this fact with an affidavit by one of its lawyers of a review of advertised prices. POSUF # 84. However, this Court finds said evidence insufficient to controvert these facts.

[17] A small number of Payco's agreements surpassed two years, including those with Mr. Special, Supermax, and Blockbuster that were for three years. See Docket # 191-88 at 30-33. Sterling points out Payco's 5 year deal with Ralph's as an example of an illegally long contract, but this was not 100% exclusive. Id. at 30. Plaintiff admits that it was 90% exclusive. POSUF # 211. Additionally, Plaintiff alleges that Payco and Nestle PR colluded regarding the terms of the Ralph's agreement about the payment terms to the supermarket chain. Id.

covered by Payco exclusives. DSUF # 129. These stores included Grande and Pitusa supermarkets, and, in 2007, Sterling also obtained a 30% exclusive agreement with Econo stores, which had previously been a Nestle PR/Payco [33] exclusive retailer. DSUF ## 132 & 133.

In terms of other competitors, Nestle PR/Payco distributes Unilever's Breyers brand to most retailers, but Econo and military bases receive the brand through other routes. DSUF ## 150-151. Matosantos Commercial Co. distributed Baskin Robins to Supermercados Grande, but stopped doing so in 2007. DSUF # 157. At the end of 2008, Gianni of New York ("Gianni"), an ice cream and Italian ice distributor entered the Puerto Rico market, distributing to various supermarkets. DSUF # 160.

If the market place was competitive when Payco alone utilized exclusives, why should the same practice, at very similar levels, somehow injure Plaintiff now that Payco and Nestle PR have merged? Exclusives have existed in the Puerto Rico marketplace since before the merger, and have not increased as a total percentage of market share since 2003. Beyond the fact that exclusive dealing is not per se illegal, and that in the present case Defendants' contracts have not violated the law, as will be discussed further below in Section II, the pre-existence of the practice prior to the merger weakens any claim for antitrust injury.

While Sterling's business concerns regarding Defendants' [34] acquisition of Dreyer's, who manufactures its marquee product (Edy's), are legitimate from a business point of view, they do not involve any overt anti-competitive act. To wit, the acquisition was approved by the FTC (PSUF # 60), and Defendants have not withdrawn Edy's, nor have they significantly increased the unit price to Sterling. DSUF # 87. Accordingly, prices to consumers have stayed stable and volume of sales has increased, strongly suggesting that the competitive structure of the market has not been harmed, thus precluding antitrust injury.

Furthermore, allegations regarding price increases, along with the non-assignment of some product lines (i.e. Skinny Cow), also cannot be linked to tangible damages. The facts of the case show that Sterling's business was not in rapid expansion before the merger (DSUF # 90), nor did it appear to be in a position to dominate the local market. After the merger, however, Sterling's sales grew by 70% (see DSUF # 90), and its market share grew from the low teens to over 20% during the relevant period. More importantly, the company's gross profit increased by 60% (DSUF ## 96-97), and it has not faced significant increases in its input costs for [35] the products it purchases from Dreyer's. (DSUF ## 82-85 & 141). This expansion has been made possible through aggressive price competition and the successful entry into new retail outlets, previously controlled by Payco in the pre-merger period and then by Defendants during the [*262] relevant period for this action. See, e.g., DUSF # 129.

Sterling argues that the benchmark that should be used are those stores where no exclusives are in place, namely Walmart and depot centers, where they have achieved between 40% and 50% sales shares. This Court finds the suggested benchmark speculative for various reasons. Foremost is that exclusive dealing contracts are not illegal per se, and it is not reasonable to completely exclude their existence from the market when envisioning a competitive marketplace. Moreover, in the pre-merger period Sterling's market share was nowhere near this large, and it is unrealistic to posit that the company's sales and market presence would have grown four-fold had the Nestle PR/Payco merger never occurred.

Proving antitrust injury requires establishing a causal relationship between an illegal, anti-competitive act and actual damages, or at minimum plausible "but for" [36] damages. This Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to present facts supporting a plausible theory of damages. As a result, Plaintiff's damages model is too speculative and improbable to survive summary judgment.

This holding alone would support dismissal of all of Plaintiff's federal antitrust claims. However, for the purpose of thoroughness, we will discuss each cause of action individually. The discussion will address Plaintiff's three factual groupings of claims. Namely:

I. Plaintiff's first and fourth causes of action for Unlawful Restraint of Trade in Violation of Sections 1 & 3 of the Sherman Act and Exclusive Dealing in Violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

II. Plaintiff's second and third causes of action for Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

III. Plaintiff's fifth cause of action for Conspiracy to Monopolize in Violation of Sections 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act.
IV. Plaintiff's sixth, seventh, and eighth causes action, and Defendant's Counterclaim, brought under Commonwealth Antimonopoly law.

I. Unlawful Restraint of Trade (Causes of Action I and IV: Sherman Act Section 1; Clayton Act Section 3)

The central component of Sterling's [37] claims for unlawful restraint of trade under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act are Defendants' exclusivity agreements with some Puerto Rico retailers. Section 3 of the Clayton Act prohibits arrangements that have a probability to ". . . substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." 18 U.S.C. § 15. Likewise, Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires a similar, but subtly different showing, that ". . . the alleged agreement involved the exercise of power in a relevant economic market, that this exercise had anti-competitive consequences, and that those detriments outweighed efficiencies or other economic benefits. This is the rule of reason calculus." Stop & Shop Supermarket Co. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Rhode Island, 373 F.3d 57, 61 (1st Cir. 2004).

Sterling's claims for unlawful restraint of trade, and illegal exclusive dealing, are focused on contracts between Defendants and retailers for the exclusive use of freezer space in Puerto Rico stores and supermarkets. The Amended Complaint alleges that this practice has foreclosed, or cut off, a sufficient portion of the relevant market [*263] from the entrance of new competitors, [38] violating antitrust law, and stifling meaningful competition. However, because the Amended Complaint has not alleged that the exclusive dealing arrangements in question (i.e. the "exclusives") are per se violations, this Court must balance the efficiencies gained by their implementation and contrast these with any harm to the structure of the market place. Id. at 62 (citing Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)).

Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires substantial foreclosure. Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1059 (8th Cir. 2000). A similar analysis applies to exclusive dealing claims under Section 3 of the Clayton Act. In other words, some instances of limited foreclosure may be acceptable, and an antitrust plaintiff must show that the exclusivity has "anti-competitive effects outweighing the legitimate economic advantages that it might provide." Eastern, 357 F.3d at 5. Harm to competition requires that the practice ". . . create or enhance market power - meaning the power to control prices or exclude competition . . .," but market power is not in itself sufficient to "condemn the conduct" because potential benefits must also be weighed. Id. [39] Therefore, when analyzing a practice, which is not per se illegal, under the rule of reason the courts must consider ". . . both a practice's likely anti-competitive effects and its beneficial business justifications." Leegin Creative, 551 U.S. at 909.

Case law has established that exclusivity agreements can promote reduced-costs, stable long-term supply, and "predictable prices," and as such are to be reviewed favorably. Stop & Shop, 373 F.3d at 66; see also Eastern, 357 F.3d at 8 (elaborating "it is widely recognized that in many circumstances [exclusivity contracts] may be highly efficient - to assure supply, price stability, outlets, investment, best efforts or the like-and pose no competitive threat at all."). Accordingly, given the tendency to liberally review "exclusives," for them to be found illegal, they must have harmed the very structure of the relevant market, and not competitors or competing interests. This determination is made by examining if they have foreclosed a sufficiently large, or crucial, part of the market to effectively block competitors from entering or expanding to compete for new business.

First Circuit case law uses market share figures as initial guides [40] for determining if foreclosure rates are facially dubious or presumably harmless, but a significant share is only a presumptive signal of market power as entry barriers may be low. Eastern, 357 F.3d at 6. The inference of market power requires an antitrust plaintiff to "plead and prove that a firm has a dominant share in a relevant market, and that significant 'entry barriers' protect that market." Broadcom, 401 F.3d at 307. In the case at bar, Plaintiff challenges the levels of foreclosure caused by Nestle PR/Payco exclusives, which are ". . . unlikely to be of concern when they are less than 30 or 40 percent" of the market." Stop & Shop, 373 F.3d at 68. In other words, "low numbers make dismissal easy," but high numbers do not guarantee success for a plaintiff. Id. (citing Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 45-

46, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984); Areeda & Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy, The Law of Competition and Its Practice, 3d). Beyond First Circuit case law, PROMA's decision approving the Nestle PR/Payco merger echoes this threshold rule by proffering a 35% market share as the highest possible permissible limit for foreclosure due to the Nestle PR/Payco exclusives. This [41] limit [*264] has never been exceeded on a Puerto Rico wide basis. DSUF # 118-119.

In the present case, sales from stores participating in Nestle PR/Payco exclusivity agreements have never exceed 30.8% of total market share and averaged just under 27% for the relevant period, dropping to under 20% for the final year. This fact weighs strongly in favor of Defendants because, as previously stated, ". . . foreclosure levels are unlikely to be of concern where they are less than 30 or 40 percent." [18] Stop & Shop, 373 F.3d at 68. These numbers are below the range of concern, and should not be considered anti-competitive. However, beyond this threshold approach, the practices underlying the abovementioned foreclosure percentages predate the Nestle PR/Payco merger, and have actually decreased since said merger.

In the post-merger period, the percentage of supermarkets covered by exclusives did not increase, and both Sterling's market share and total sales have grown. Presently, a Sterling brand, Edy's, is Puerto Rico's number one brand of ice cream. Sterling has also managed [42] to enter (and establish preeminence with its Edy's brand) major Puerto Rico supermarkets, such as Grande, Pitusa, and Econo, where Defendants' brands had previously enjoyed exclusivity. DUSF # 129. Sterling's inroads into new Puerto Rico retailers are not isolated instances of competitive success in the ice cream market. Gianni products also entered various important supermarket chains since 2007, and have maintained their presence to date. In fact, Nestle PR/Payco's combined market share is currently lower than in the pre-merger period. [19]

In responding to the Motion for Summary Judgment, Sterling points to higher than acceptable foreclosure rates in some sub-regions of the Commonwealth. The argument is specious as the market Plaintiff defined for purposes of the present suit is the sale and distribution of ice-cream in all of Puerto Rico. Analyzing sub-regions or sub-markets would call for not only local data supporting individual claims for each region and market, but also fragmenting Plaintiff's broad claims into many market-specific ones. In addition, Plaintiff also makes arguments about foreclosure rates in take-home sales of ice cream (see PSUF # 203 (citing that these could have been as high as 36% during the relevant period)), but these too are misplaced as they do not address the relevant antitrust market. The problem with Plaintiff's analysis regarding take-home sales is not the veracity of the data they proffer; rather it is that their data describes markets beyond the scope of this case.

By agreeing with Plaintiff that the correct relevant market is the sale and distribution of ice cream in Puerto Rico, this Court precludes [44] itself from making conclusions about antitrust violations in sub-markets, not properly established in the four corners of the complaint. Other courts [*265] have rejected similar gerrymandering of markets attempting to artificially show high levels of foreclosure. See Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430 (3rd Cir. 1997). The Amended Complaint is not framed to include sub-regions or sub-markets, and it is therefore unnecessary to examine foreclosure rates outside those of the already defined relevant market. Doing so would lead to false analogies and unsubstantiated conclusions.

As mentioned above, exclusive dealing is only considered a threat to competition in "very discrete circumstances," mostly concerning long-term foreclosure (i.e. contracts for longer than two years). Eastern, 357 F.3d at 8. Even [18] In fact, PROMA's guidelines would have allowed Nestle/Payco exclusive to have constituted up to 35% of the relevant market.

[19] Even accepting arguendo that said agreements could be construed as illegal, the entry of Gianni, coupled with Sterling's strong growth, clearly suggest the competitive structure of the market has not been impaired, and the market appears to have equal or greater competitiveness than it did prior to the 2003 merger. It is therefore impossible for this Court to infer "but for" damages, where their calculation, even in the light most favorable to Sterling, "would 'necessitate wide ranging' speculation." Sullivan v. Tagliabue, 25 F.3d 43, 51 (1st Cir. 1991). The rule of reason does not permit an inference that Sterling has experienced real anti-competitive [43] prejudice, and would have been any more or less successful had these agreements not existed.

given market concentration, if the exclusionary contracts are short-term in nature, or entrance is easy, substantial foreclosure cannot be demonstrated. Id. at 8-9.

The tradition of exclusive dealing contracts in Puerto Rico ice cream distribution dates to at least the 1990s, and the undisputed facts reveal that the present levels are well below their pre-Nestle PR/Payco [45] merger peak. In this context, low market-wide rates of foreclosure are sufficient for this Court to sustain the legality of the exclusives. Nevertheless, the record also reflects that most of the exclusivity agreements in question were for periods of between one and two years. The First Circuit has found that agreements of this length are lawful, because any possible interruption to competition that they might cause is only for a short period after which competitors may gain entry to foreclosed outlets. Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227. 236-238 (1st Cir. 1983). This Court notes a small number of the exclusivity agreements are for more than three years. See Docket # 191-88 & 200-8 - 200-13. Nevertheless, these do not constitute a sufficient portion of the relevant market to sustain an antitrust claim.

Of course, this Court agrees with Plaintiff that there is no automatic percentage where market foreclosure rates either ratify the legality of exclusivity agreements or make them per se illegal. The law does not seek to immunize potentially illegal activity in restraint of trade, but exclusive dealing contracts are not disfavored, and the present case demonstrates [46] no substantial harm to the market

Arguing against the low foreclosure rates' significance, Sterling repeatedly urges this Court to examine the practical effects of the exclusives, and not a more bright-line approach, and mentions various barriers to entry, [20] and suggest that the market has had no new entries since the 1990s. This is not supported by the record, which shows that Gianni is a recent, [*266] albeit smaller entry, and those retailers such as Costco, Sam's, and Econo have begun to market their own private label brands, and that distribution channels remain open. Omega Environmental v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1164 (9th Cir. 1997). Furthermore, this Court disagrees with Plaintiff's proposition that Law 75 creates a disincentive to the entry of new ice cream brands to the local market. On the contrary, Law 75 can potentially protect smaller distributors by guaranteeing them a stable product supply and business relationship, granted they meet reasonable sales expectations. Furthermore, prices have remained relatively stable, volume has grown, and so have Sterling's revenues. Therefore, even adopting the holistic view of the illegal behavior, as put forth by Sterling, does not [47] bolster its claims of unreasonable foreclosure.

In addition to the exclusive dealing charges, Plaintiff also refers to per se illegal horizontal agreements and the allegedly unlawful coordination of activities between Nestle PR and Payco before their merger. These both must be examined as part of a merger occurring nearly seven years ago. Absent other facts suggesting an intentional strategy to restrain trade and foreclose the market, Ward's statements about controlling the local marketplace (see supra at 12-13) can only be interpreted as isolated incidents (PSMF # 43) and do not constitute facts sufficient to support a claim under the relevant statutes, more so when market data does not support Plaintiff's conclusion that the exclusionary contracts "choked" competition.

In sum, exclusive dealing contracts are a frequent practice in retail/wholesale food sales and distribution. Given their long-term presence before the Nestle PR/Payco merger (DSUF # 113), there is minimal cause for concern. Joyce Beverages, Inc.. 555 F.Supp. 271, 277-278 (S.D.N.Y. 1983). The exclusivity agreements under analysis are licit, and have not negatively affected the structure [49] of the market. Moreover, the record does not reflect illegal horizontal agreements in the pre-merger period, and Plaintiff has not shown significant price increases to consumers, despite years of inflation. Therefore, Plaintiff's claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act for illegal restraint of trade and under Section 3 of the Clayton Act for illegal exclusive dealing are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

[20] To bolster its antitrust claims based on market foreclosure in detriment to competition, Sterling alleges that there are high entry barriers to the local ice cream distribution market, including: 1) the necessity of establishing a Direct Store Delivery System ("DSD system"), 2) purchasing trucks and freezers, 3) establishing sufficient route density, 4) obtaining ice cream brands to distribute, 5) failed entry by previous competitors, 6) market concentration between incumbents, 7) Puerto Rico Law 75, and 8) Payco's exclusivity agreements. PSUF # 198-199. Plaintiff alleges that Puerto Rico is a unique market because of its small size, and that local supermarkets, allegedly unlike those in the United States, do not have sufficient freezer warehouse capacity to store ice cream as inventory, requiring investment in a DSD system. As a result, ice cream must be frequently delivered in smaller quantities to in-store freezers, versus more infrequent deliveries to storage freezers, which is allegedly how the market works in the continental United States. Plaintiff alleges that this leads market entrants in Puerto Rico to face higher capital costs [48] because they must invest in greater refrigeration technology and more frequent routes.

II. Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization (Causes of Action II and II: Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act)

Case law has firmly established that "[t]he purpose of the [Sherman] Act is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market." Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 457. Finding [*267] anti-competitive conduct requires identifying acts that ". . . harm the competitive process, and thereby harm consumers [. . .as opposed to] harm to one or more competitors . . ." U.S. v. Microsoft, 253 F.3d 34, 58, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001); see also Cargill v. Monfort of Colo., 479 U.S. 104, 107, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986)(stating "Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anti-competitive effect either of the violation or of anti-competitive acts made possible by the violation."). Such prohibited conduct includes exclusionary acts, or others with an anti-competitive exclusionary effect, which "tend[] to destroy competition itself." Spectrum, 506 U.S. at 447. Therefore, courts should [51] not search for malice in business dealing, rather they should look for those which may lead to lessened competition, Brooke Group Ltd, 509 U.S. 209, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993), in the sense that the potential injury is, as mentioned in the damages section, only "of the type that the statute was intended to forestall." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 59 (citing Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 487-488). If potentially anti-competitive conduct is found to exist, then this Court must discern if the conduct also has pro competitive effects, and using the rule of reason, balance the harms. Id. However, this must focus on the acts, and not on "the intent behind it." Id.

Establishing monopolization also requires a showing that the defendant possesses market power, which is the ability to negatively affect competition in the relevant market. Coastal Fuels, 79 F.3d at 196. Here, the relevant market has been established, so this Court must ask if Defendants are able to set prices substantially above costs, and also if they enjoy protection from the entry or expansion of rivals who could challenge potentially supra-competitive pricing. Id. (citing Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421 (9th Cir. 1995). In other [52] words, "[m]arket power is the power to 'force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.'" Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. 451, 464, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)(citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14). Furthermore, "merely possessing monopoly power is not itself an anti-trust violation." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 51.

Likewise, attempted monopolization under Section 2 requires showing that the defendant has acted in a predatory or anti-competitive manner within the market place, that this reflects a "specific intent to monopolize," and that there is a "dangerous probability of success." Ramallo Bros. Printing, Inc. v. El Dia, Inc., 392 F. Supp. 2d 118, 130 (D.P.R. 2005)(citing Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)). Actual monopolization must be dangerously threatened, because ". . .the notion that proof of unfair or predatory conduct alone is sufficient to make out the offense of attempted monopolization is contrary to the purpose and policy of the Sherman Act." Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456-457.

In light of this general framework for Section 2 of the Sherman Act, this Court must first ask if Defendants have market, or monopoly, power within the Puerto Rico ice cream [53] market. The 2003 merger certainly created a dominant firm, which is also linked in a corporate relationship with the producer of Edy's, the star product for Sterling. While this market landscape certainly raises a red flag at first glance, it does not necessarily lead to [*268] Plaintiff's assertion that Defendants exercise market power. Market power exists only when competitors lack capacity to increase short run output, allowing for the monopolist to unilaterally restrict output in order to charge higher prices. Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434. Therefore, such a conclusion requires answering whether prices can be set to supra-competitive levels.

The record shows that Defendants cannot control prices, and that Sterling, and other competitors, continue to successfully compete. Namely, the uncontested facts do not reflect that prices are being set well above costs, nor does the record show that prices to consumers have grown significantly in the years following the merger. Furthermore, the price of ice cream offered to Sterling from Dreyer's has remained virtually flat for nearly a decade, despite high rates of inflation. Such price stability suggests Nestle PR/Payco cannot set prices well above [54] costs, which would be required for a finding of monopoly power. Coastal, 79 F.3d at 196. This, combined with the steady increase in sales volume in the whole relevant market, weighs heavily against any inference that Defendants are able to raise prices by restricting output.

In building its case that a monopoly exists in the relevant market, Plaintiff again reverts to arguments regarding alleged entry barriers, such as Puerto Rico's small size, the high fixed capital costs of distributing ice cream, and Law 75. It is established in antitrust law that an entry barrier is a cost that is greater for a new competitor than for established rivals. Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1428 (9th Cir. 1993)(referencing 2 Areeda & Hovencamp, Antitrust Law parr. 409e at 303). These factors are equally challenging to Nestle PR/Payco, and may play to Sterling's benefit, given that it distributes an already popular brand in a small market. Regarding the exclusives, these could potentially act as barriers, but as discussed in the previous section, this Court does not find them to be illegal, and they have not stopped Sterling's strong expansion, nor various new entries into the market. [55] Sterling's sales and market share have increased during the relevant period to this action. [21] DSUF ## 97 & 129. Thus, the presence of new competitors, and Sterling's own expansion, weigh heavily against a finding of market power. Ramallo Bros., 392 F. Supp. 2d 118.

Nevertheless, it is illustrative to discuss Plaintiff's specific averments regarding anti-competitive conduct. Specifically, Sterling alleges: i) that the merger was an illegal attempt to create a monopoly, and that ii) Defendants directed Dreyer's to stop selling SkinnyCow to Sterling and that they increased the price of Edy's to weaken Sterling.

A. The Merger

A first obstacle faced by Sterling in questioning the merger, is that the uncontested facts of the case establish that Nestle PR purchased Payco after years of stagnation and losses in Puerto Rico. Accordingly, the company's share of the Puerto Rico ice cream distribution market may [56] be attributed to an historical accident of necessity, or a legitimate boardroom decision, whereby Nestle PR had to acquire a more viable competitor in order to survive. Plaintiff points to various conversations, [*269] mostly involving Ward and other representatives of Defendants, both in Switzerland and Puerto Rico, that suggest the combination aimed at creating a dominant firm. These are insufficient to bear the weight of an anti-trust claim, where damage to competition, not malice, is the operative test.

Sterling has also pointed to many instances of market share being a sine qua non requirement for success in Puerto Rico. PSUF # 69. Of course, such an argument is facially incongruent with the position that the Nestle PR/Payco merger hurt competition, because, if 40% market share is necessary as suggested by this fact, then no more than two firms could exist. PSUF # 69. Sterling's claims further fall short because nothing on the record suggests the Puerto Rico consumer is paying monopoly prices for ice cream. Even more, as in Brunswick, the Nestle/Payco combination seems to have enhanced competition.

[21] As previously stated, Gianni recently entered the market, and while presumably on a smaller scale than both Plaintiff and Defendants' businesses, its entry is still significant for this Court's analysis, and Econo and Costco have also begun to self-distribute ice cream in their stores.

Beyond the record painting a picture of sustained growth for Sterling, entry into the market [57] by a new competitor (Gianni), shows entry barriers are not insurmountable and that the ice cream market remains highly competitive. Sterling argues as if it had a right to an ideal relationship with Dreyer's where its own business needs would dictate the price and variety of products supplied. Antitrust law does not pretend to provide such a guarantee, rather a competitive marketplace. Therefore, Sterling's monopolization claim simply cannot prosper. [22]

As to the charge that Dreyer's, Nestle S.A., and Nestle PR, illegally shared confidential data regarding Sterling's business, these facts do not substantiate any claim of an anti-competitive strategy by Defendants. The allegations of data sharing are too vague to point to any real harm to competition, and this, even if illegal for other reasons, does not point to an antitrust violation. In light of [58] the above, this Court finds that Defendants do not possess and have not exercised monopoly power in the relevant market, and that the alleged anti-competitive acts were not illegal.

B. Price Squeeze

In both 2004 and 2005, Dreyer's reduced the price support for Edy's ice cream given to Sterling, first by $ 0.10 per unit (from seventy-five cents per unit to sixty-five cents per unit), and then by an additional five-cents per unit for a total of 15 cents. DSUF ## 190-194; PSUF ## 139&142. [23] Price changes during the relevant period were limited to 15 cents per gallon. These were the only increases over almost a decade, when inflation in Puerto Rico neared 11% annually. DSUF # 87. During the relevant period, the price of Edy's has remained stable at $ 2.36. Between 2000 and 2001, Sterling received a forty-cent promotional allowance, this increased to seventy five cents in 2002, which was reduced by fifteen cents between 2004-2005, as mentioned above. See Docket # 191-88 at 17. Accordingly, the present net price to Sterling for Edy's is 10% less than it was in 2000. Id.

There is a controversy of [59] fact as to how and why Dreyer's, possibly in conjunction [*270] wth Nestle officials, made the decision to reduce the price support to Sterling in 2004 and 2005. See, e.g., PSUF ## 93 & 95. Plaintiff alleges that the company responded to Ward's plan to squeeze Sterling, while Defendants allege that price increases were due to raw material price increases. DOSUF # 146. Sterling also alleges that Dreyer's assigned a product line, Skinny Cow, to Nestle PR/Payco after having previously encouraged Sterling to distribute the product before the merger. PSUF # 147 & 149. Defendants deny this assertion, citing the existence of an existing agreement with Dreyer's. DOSUF # 149.

Plaintiff points to a range of documents regarding Defendants' business analysis of the Puerto Rico ice cream market, as proof of intent to monopolize. These ideas included the idea of swapping the Breyers line for the Edy's line (PSUF # 31), and eliminating Blue Bunny from the Payco portfolio (DSUF # 30), which eventually occurred due to Wells' initiative. Ward made comments to Nestle during the merger negotiations that he believed that this would eliminate Blue Bunny as a competitor in the Puerto Rico market. PSUF # 39. During [60] the negotiations for the Nestle PR and Payco acquisition, Ward, who had a personal interest in Payco's market position, promoted eliminating Sterling's price subsidy as a way of pressuring the distributor and strengthening the company's value for the second stage of the Payco acquisition. PSUF # 121 & 127. Defendants allege these statements regarding price increases to Sterling were made by Ward acting as a self-interested party during the sale of Payco, and in no way reflected Nestle's position, nor did it reflect the fact that Dreyer's is a separate operational entity.

[22] This Court also finds that Sterling's attempted monopolization claim must be dismissed for failing to establish a dangerous probability that Nestle will achieve market power. The merger occurred over 6 years ago and the market remains "robustly competitive." Springfield Terminal Ry. v. Canadian Pac. Ltd., 133 F.3d 103, 110 (1st Cir. 1997).

[23] Defendants allege that price increases were due to raw material price increases. DOSUF # 146.

Ward continued his campaign to eliminate the Edy's price support after the merger. PSUF ## 134 & 138. However, Nestec and Nestle PR executives informed Ward that his language and tactics were not acceptable under the corporate guidelines of each entity, and that they did not conform to the companies' established marketing policies. DOSUF # 138.

Sterling argues that Defendants acted in an illegal predatory fashion when Dreyer's withheld SkinnyCow and increased the price per unit of Edy's in Puerto Rico. However, this Court can identify no antitrust case law supporting the proposition that Dreyer's was obliged to grant [61] distributorship of SkinnyCow to Sterling. Doing so might have been a magnanimous act towards a successful business partner, but businesses do not have a legal obligation to act loyally and Sterling has not shown why Dreyer's had an antitrust duty to deal with them.

In further argumentation, Sterling also alleges size-reductions in the Edy's half-gallon product line. However, this has not been sufficiently established in the uncontested facts, and appears to reflect general marketing practices, not any specific strategy regarding the Puerto Rico market. Furthermore, the record does not show that Sterling had to reduce prices to consumers as a result of the size change, nor that sales decreased.

In the context of "price squeeze" claims, the Supreme Court has held that ". . . a defendant with no antitrust duty to deal with its rivals has no duty to deal under the terms and conditions preferred by those rivals." Pacific Bell Telephone Co. v. Linkline Communications, Inc. 129 S.Ct. 1109, 1123, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009). Linkline reiterated that the courts are ". . . ill suited 'to act as central planners, identifying the proper price, quantity, and other terms of dealing.'" 129 S. Ct. at 1121 (citing *Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of [271] Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 410, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004)). [62] In the present action, Dreyer's and Defendants may well have a "duty to deal" with Sterling on the wholesale level that arises out of the Puerto Rico fair dealership law and their particular contract, but this is not an antitrust question. Thus, Linkline renders Sterling's price squeeze and denial of new products claims toothless, because "[a]n upstream monopolist with no duty to deal is free to charge whatever wholesale price it would like; anti-trust law does not forbid lawfully obtained monopolies from charging monopoly prices." Id. at 1122.

Even before Linkline, claims by distributors were disfavored. For example, the ramifications on efficiency of a vertical merger, such as a producing firm (Nestle PR) acquiring existing distributors (Payco), and then reducing costs by only dealing with wholly-owned distributors, may constitute an injury-in-fact, but not an antitrust injury as long as alternative sources of product exist. Serpa Corp. v. McWane, Inc., 14 F.Supp.2d 147, 150 (D.Mass. 1998)(citing Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 432-33 (1997 Supp.)). Accordingly, "an intermediary distributor may only bring anti-trust claims when it: i) is injured by the direct anti-trust violation [63] of a rival; ii) suffers directly as a result of illegal distribution restraints, or iii) qualifies as an exception." Id.; see also Florida Seed Co., Inc. V. Monsanto Co., 915 F.Supp. 1167, 1175 (M.D. Ala. 1995). Moreover, "[w]here, as here, output is expanding at the same time prices are increasing, rising prices are equally consistent with growing product demand. Under these conditions, a jury may not infer competitive injury from price and output data absent some evidence that tends to prove that output was restricted or prices were above a competitive level." Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 237.

Dreyer's is a separate corporate entity from all Defendants, but they are nonetheless owned and ultimately controlled by said company, thus barring conspiracy claims involving these two entities for the alleged "panoply of anti-competitive conduct." [24] On the other hand, if Dreyer's pricing and product allocation activities are found anti-competitive then they could be liable for damages under Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 736, n. 16, 97 S.

[24] Sterling also alleges conspiracy claims related to the price increase. These are unfounded because the parties are commonly owned, and any discussions regarding joint marketing strategies occurred during the process of the Nestle/Payco merger. Even if this were not the case Sterling's conspiracy claim would be very weak, because any price increases occurred after the merger and involve actions permitted under Linkline. Therefore, even Sterling's conspiracy claims are hindered by the need to show plausible causality between prohibited conduct and actual injury. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)(stating ". . . respondents must show more than a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws; they must show an injury to them resulting from the illegal conduct. . ." so injury does not result from ". . . alleged conspiracies . . . that tend to benefit respondents. . .").

Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). This point of law is not in controversy, and the question remains if any acts seen as predatory or conspiratorial can be construed from the [64] record of this case.

Sterling avers that Dreyer's decision to assign some new brands to Payco is proof of a conspiracy to cripple its distribution business. This Court can find no reason why new brands, such as Skinny Cow, must have necessarily been offered to Sterling. Under Trinko [65] no claim on that front exists. Sterling has not been terminated as a distributor for Dreyer's products, and continues to distribute, Edy's, [*272] Puerto Rico's leading brand. Under such circumstances, the relationship can hardly be construed as predatory, and Sterling has brought no actions against Dreyer's for breach of contract or breach of fiduciary duty.

As has been discussed, Sterling's "price squeeze" and foreclosure claims are stymied by evidence of a competitive marketplace, and the merger of competitors is not in and of itself sufficient to prove antitrust damages. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 107. This Court agrees with Defendants that there is a dearth of evidence indicating increased consumer pricing or restricted output in the Puerto Rico ice cream market during the relevant period. Dreyer's never took any steps to make distributing Edy's unprofitable for Sterling. And there is even less indication that prices have risen to a supra-competitive level as required by the Clayton and Sherman Acts. Pool Water Products v. Olin Corp, 258 F.3d 1024, 1034 (9th Cir. 2001)(stating ". . . the antitrust laws are only concerned with acts that harm allocative efficiency and raise the price of goods [66] above their competitive level or diminish their quality.")(internal citations omitted). Puerto Rico consumers have not been hurt by either increased prices or reduced selection.

In light of the foregoing, this Court concludes that no monopoly has existed during the relevant period. Therefore, Plaintiff's claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act for monopolization are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

Furthermore, the attempted monopolization claims also fail. First Circuit case law establishes that the requisite "dangerous probability" of monopolization cannot be shown when a plaintiff continues to compete and expand in the relevant market. Ramallo Bros., 392 F. Supp. 2d 118. Here, Sterling's success and continued growth acts as a poison pill for their claims of attempted monopolization. Furthermore, Springfield Terminal Railway v. Canadian Pacific, Ltd., 133 F.3d 103, 110 (1st Cir. 1997), held that an attempted monopolization claim is to be presumed implausible if the challenged conduct has continued for over two years without damage to the competitive structure of the relevant market. The challenged merger in the present case took place in 2003, the information sharing was contemporaneous [67] to the merger, the alleged price squeeze occurred in 2005 and 2006, and Payco's exclusives have existed since the 1990s. These facts do not permit an inference that there is a dangerous probability of success in monopolizing the market in question. Therefore, Plaintiff's Section 2 Sherman Act attempted monopolization claims are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

III. Conspiracy to Monopolize (Claim V; Sections 2 and 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act)

Sterling's final cause of action is for conspiracy under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, for alleged collusion between Nestle PR and Payco beginning in 2001 up until their 2003 merger. The standard for a conspiracy claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, includes the following elements which require showing: "(1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy among two or more independent actors; 2) that unreasonably restrains trade; and 3) is in, or substantially affects, interstate or foreign commerce." Dyno Nobel, Inc. v. Amotech Corp., 63 F.Supp. 2d 140, 147 (D.P.R. 1999)(citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). The test for a Section 2 claim for conspiracy to monopolize is similar, although with a slightly higher [68] burden of [*273] proof. Id. at 150. To wit, a plaintiff must show: "(1) the existence of a conspiracy, (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize." Id. (citing United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 225, 67 S. Ct. 1560, 91 L. Ed. 2010 (1947)). In other words, Sterling must show that the different Nestle actors and Payco shared a similar intent. However, Sterling's allegations that Nestle and Payco have illegally conspired to monopolize the ice cream distribution market necessarily fail as to all post-merger acts, because the coordinated acts of parent companies and their subsidiaries cannot constitute a Sherman Act claim for conspiracy. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 776. This Court understands that said rule applies to both Section 1 and Section 2 claims.

Moreover, the record does not contain evidence of any conspiratorial acts, beyond the declarations of Ward during the process of promoting the sale of his business, Payco, to Nestle, a potential buyer. Such "boardroom ruminations" should not be construed as predatory behavior. William Inglis / Sons Baking Co. v. ITT Cont'l Baking Co., 668 F.2d 1014, 1028 (9th Cir. 1981). Other discussions of coordinated marketing alluded [69] to by Sterling occurred after Nestle and Payco had entered into the merger process with PROMA, and have caused no conceivable damage to Sterling, whose business has grown.

It is important to note that the two companies were in the process of exploring a merger, and conducting due diligence. In this sense, the allegation that the two were sharing financial information is specious. Antitrust law is not intended to stand as an obstacle to potential mergers and acquisitions. Adopting such a strict view, as proposed by Plaintiff, would substantially hinder legitimate business undertakings. Moreover, no link has been proffered between this alleged improper sharing of information and a cognizable injury to Sterling. Therefore, the company is not entitled to a favorable inference regarding this exchange of information, because they have failed to proffer a plausible theory of injury. As such, the required link of an act unreasonably restraining trade cannot be met.

The alleged illegal sharing of information led to the eventual combination of Nestle PR and Payco, which was approved by PROMA. This Court does not find that the merger itself was conspiratorial, and it did not lead to an uncompetitive [70] market place. Such a merger, even if it creates a large or dominant firm, is not per se illegal. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 116.

Also at issue here is the sharing of financial information in the pre-merger period, and the acquisition of 90% of retail freezer space at Ralph's. Docket # 196 at 53-54. Defendants allegedly colluded by discussing the possible ramifications of Payco potentially losing Unilever, a major Nestle competitor if the merger were to go through. See PSUF 106. Moreover, no valid conspiracy claim can be brought against commonly-owned companies. Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 752. Therefore, any claims based on acts occurring after the merger, which was finalized either on June 11 or July 2, 2003, are facially without merit. The undisputed facts of the case show that said agreement with Ralph's was signed in August, 2003, well after the merger. Even if discussions occurred in the months leading up to the combination, this Court finds that they could not sustain a charge of conspiracy as they would be an inextricable part of the acquisition.

The rhetoric cited by Plaintiff in its efforts to oppose summary judgment is eye-opening, but ultimately fails to sustain the [*274] theory of a pre-merger [71] conspiracy alleged in the Amended Complaint. [25] Therefore, given the absence of facts plausibly supporting a clear conspiracy, and the apparent lack of antitrust damages related to these acts, Plaintiff's claims for conspiracy under both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman act are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

IV. Commonwealth Antimonopoly Claims

The remainder of Sterling's claims are grounded on Puerto Rico law. Exercising jurisdiction over pendent state law claims once the federal law claims are dismissed is discretional. See Newman v. Burgin, 930 F. 2d 955, 963-964 (1st Cir. 1991)(holding that "the power of a federal court to hear and to determine state-law claims in non-diversity cases depends upon the presence of at least one substantial federal claim in the lawsuit…[and] the district court has considerable authority whether or not to exercise this power, in light of such considerations [72] as judicial economy, convenience, fairness to litigants, and comity). Because this Court will grant summary judgment as to the federal law claims, it will not exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims. Therefore, Sterling's claims arising from Puerto Rico law and Payco's Counterclaim for tortious interference are DISMISSED without prejudice.

[25] The Court has not discussed in detail said allegations, or Defendants' replies thereto, because they have not been linked to any specific acts creating antitrust injury or affecting the relevant market. Such a lack of causality to any antitrust harm leaves the allegations moot, even if the facts were proven true.

Conclusion

The applicable law and the undisputed facts of this case demonstrate that Sterling has not established antitrust injury with respect to either its Sherman Act or Clayton Act claims, nor has it established the necessary elements for any of the federal antitrust violations alleged in the Amended Complaint. Accordingly, Defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED and Plaintiff's federal claims are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. Sterling's state law claims shall be DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE, as will be Defendant's Counterclaim.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER ON DEFENDANTS CHASE AND MERS' F.R.Civ.P. 12 MOTION TO DISMISS

(Doc. 8.)

INTRODUCTION

Defendants Chase Home Finance LLC ("Chase") and Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. ("MERS") seek to dismiss as meritless and time barred plaintiff Edith Manabat's ("Ms. Manabat's") claims arising from her defaulted home loan. This Court considered Chase and MERS' F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss on the record and VACATES the August 2, 2010 hearing, pursuant to this Court's sua sponte dismissal of the claims against Chase and MERS.

BACKGROUND

Ms. Manabat's Home Loan

In December 2006, Ms. Manabat obtained a $ 476,772 adjustable rate loan from defendant Sierra Pacific Mortgage Co., Inc. ("Sierra Pacific") to purchase her Bakersfield property ("property"). Ms. Manabat took title to the property by way of a grant deed recorded on December 22, 2006. [1]

The loan was secured by a Deed of Trust ("DOT") encumbering [*2] the property and recorded on December 22, 2006. The DOT identifies Sierra Pacific as lender, Greenhead Investments, Inc. ("Greenhead") as trustee, and MERS as beneficiary.

After Ms. Manabat failed to make loan payments, a Notice of Default and Election to Sell Under Deed of Trust ("NOD") was recorded on February 24, 2009. The NOD indicated that past due payments plus permitted costs and expenses was $ 34,168.78.

A Substitution of Trustee was recorded on April 3, 2009 by which defendant NDEx West, LLC ("NDEx") substituted as trustee under the DOT in place of Greenhead. Pursuant to an Assignment of Deed of Trust recorded on April 7, 2009, all beneficial interest under the DOT was assigned to U.S. Bank National Association ("U.S. Bank").

A Notice of Trustee's Sale was recorded on July 29, 2009 for the property.

Ms. Manabat's Claims

Ms. Manabat proceeds on her complaint ("complaint") filed March 23, 2010 in Kern County Superior Court prior to Chase and MERS' removal to this Court. The complaint accuses Chase, MERS and the other defendants of "negligent, fraudulent, and unlawful conduct concerning a residential mortgage purchase loan transactions [sic] with plaintiff." The complaint alleges [*3] 16 claims, 11 of which target Chase and/or MERS and which will be discussed below. The complaint seeks to recover actual, statutory and punitive damages and to enjoin non-judicial foreclosure of the property.

DISCUSSION

F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) Motion To Dismiss Standards

Chase and MERS contend that the complaint attempts to avoid Ms. Manabat's loan obligations although it alleges no wrongdoing by Chase or MERS, "relies on boilerplate allegations and fails to state essential elements of the claims" to fail as a matter of law.

"A trial court may dismiss a claim sua sponte under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). . . . Such dismissal may be made without notice where the claimant cannot possibly win relief." Omar v. Sea-Land Service, Inc., 813 F.2d 986, 991 (9th Cir. 1987); see Wong v. Bell, 642 F.2d 359, 361-362 (9th Cir. 1981). Sua sponte dismissal may be made before process is served on defendants. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 324, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1989) (dismissals under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(d) are often made sua sponte); Franklin v. Murphy, 745 F.2d 1221, 1226 (9th Cir. 1984) (court may dismiss frivolous in forma pauperis action sua sponte prior to service of process on defendants).

A F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss [*4] is a challenge to the sufficiency of the pleadings set forth in the complaint. "When a federal court reviews the sufficiency of a complaint, before the reception of any evidence either by affidavit or admissions, its task is necessarily a limited one. The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims." Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974); Gilligan v. Jamco Development Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997). A F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) dismissal is proper where there is either a "lack of a cognizable legal theory" or "the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balisteri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990); Graehling v. Village of Lombard, Ill., 58 F.3d 295, 297 (7th Cir. 1995).

In resolving a F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion, a court must: (1) construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff; (2) accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true; and (3) determine whether plaintiff can prove any set of facts to support a claim that would merit relief. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-338 (9th Cir. 1996). [*5] Nonetheless, a court is not required "to accept as true allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Sciences Securities Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008) (citation omitted). A court "need not assume the truth of legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations," U.S. ex rel. Chunie v. Ringrose, 788 F.2d 638, 643, n. 2 (9th Cir.1986), and a court must not "assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated . . . laws in ways that have not been alleged." Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S.Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). A court need not permit an attempt to amend if "it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by an amendment." Livid Holdings Ltd. v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005).

"While a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitlement to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the [*6] elements of a cause of action will not do." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1964-65, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal citations omitted). Moreover, a court "will dismiss any claim that, even when construed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, fails to plead sufficiently all required elements of a cause of action." Student Loan Marketing Ass'n v. Hanes, 181 F.R.D. 629, 634 (S.D. Cal. 1998). In practice, "a complaint . . . must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562, 127 S.Ct. at 1969 (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984)).

> To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." . . . A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. . . . The plausibility [*7] standard is not akin to a "probability requirement," but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. (Citations omitted.)

After discussing Iqbal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals summarized: "In sum, for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief." Moss v. U.S. Secret Service, 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S.Ct. at 1949).

The U.S. Supreme Court applies a "two-prong approach" to address a motion to dismiss:

> First, the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions. Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice. . . . Second, only a complaint that states a plausible claim for relief survives a motion to dismiss. . . . Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief will . . . be a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense. . . . [*8] But where the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged -- but it has not "show[n]"-"that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 8(a)(2).

> In keeping with these principles a court considering a motion to dismiss can choose to begin by identifying pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth. While legal conclusions can provide the framework of a complaint, they must be supported by factual allegations. When there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief.

For a F.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) motion, a court generally cannot consider material outside the complaint. Van Winkle v. Allstate Ins. Co., 290 F.Supp.2d 1158, 1162, n. 2 (C.D. Cal. 2003). Nonetheless, a court may consider exhibits submitted with the complaint. Van Winkle, 290 F.Supp.2d at 1162, n. 2. In addition, a "court may consider evidence on which the complaint 'necessarily relies' if: (1) the complaint refers to the document; [*9] (2) the document is central to the plaintiff's claim; and (3) no party questions the authenticity of the copy attached to the 12(b)(6) motion." Marder v. Lopez, 450 F.3d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 2006). A court may treat such a document as "part of the complaint, and thus may assume that its contents are true for purposes of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6)." United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 908 (9th Cir.2003). Such consideration prevents "plaintiffs from surviving a Rule 12(b)(6) motion by deliberately omitting reference to documents upon which their claims are based." Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 706 (9th Cir. 1998). [2] A "court may disregard allegations in the complaint if contradicted by facts established by exhibits attached to the complaint." Sumner Peck Ranch v. Bureau of Reclamation, 823 F.Supp. 715, 720 (E.D. Cal. 1993) (citing Durning v. First Boston Corp., 815 F.2d 1265, 1267 (9th Cir.1987)). Moreover, "judicial notice may be taken of a fact to show that a complaint does not state a cause of action." Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Metropolitan Engravers, Ltd., 245 F.2d 67, 70 (9th Cir. 1956); see Estate of Blue v. County of Los Angeles, 120 F.3d 982, 984 (9th Cir. 1997). [*10] A court properly may take judicial notice of matters of public record outside the pleadings'" and consider them for purposes of the motion to dismiss. Mir v. Little Co. of Mary Hosp., 844 F.2d 646, 649 (9th Cir. 1988) (citation omitted).

With these standards in mind, this Court turns to Chase and MERS' challenges to Ms. Manabat's claims.

Truth In Lending Act

The complaint's first claim alleges against MERS a violation of the Truth In Lending Act ("TILA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1601, et seq., and its implementing Regulation Z, 12 C.F.R. §§ 226, et seq., that Ms. Manabat was not provided a notice of cancellation or Consumer Handbook on Adjustable Rate Mortgage to entitle her to rescind the "loan transaction."

Residential Mortgage Transaction Exemption

Chase [*11] and MERS contend that Ms. Manabat is unable to seek TILA rescission because Ms. Manabat took "a purchase money loan."

A "residential mortgage transaction" is exempt from TILA rescission. 15 U.S.C. § 1635(e)(1). A "residential mortgage transaction" is defined as "a transaction in which a mortgage, deed of trust, purchase money security interest arising under an installment sales contract, or equivalent consensual security interest is created or retained against the consumer's dwelling to finance the acquisition or initial construction of such dwelling." 15 U.S.C. § 1602(w); *Turczynski v. Friedman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78902, 2007 WL 4556923, * 4 (E.D. Cal. 2007)* ("The transaction for which plaintiff seeks rescission was a 'residential mortgage transaction,' within the meaning of §

---

[2] "We have extended the 'incorporation by reference' doctrine to situations in which the plaintiff's claim depends on the contents of a document, the defendant attaches the document to its motion to dismiss, and the parties do not dispute the authenticity of the document, even though the plaintiff does not explicitly allege the contents of that document in the complaint." Knievel v. ESPN, 393 F.3d 1068, 1076 (9th Cir. 2005) (citing Parrino, 146 F.3d at 706).

1602(w) (security interest sought against plaintiff's dwelling for the purpose of acquiring it), and was therefore expressly exempt from TILA's disclosure and rescission rights . . .")

Chase and MERS correctly point to the complaint's allegations that Ms. Manabat obtained a "purchase money loan" to bar her TILA rescission claim. There is no statutory right of rescission "where the loan at issue involves the creation of a first lien to [*12] finance the acquisition of a dwelling in which the customer resides or expects to reside." Betancourt v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 344 F. Supp. 2d 1253, 1261 (D. Colo. 2004); see *Watts v. Decision One Mortgage Co., LLC., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19668, 2009 WL 648669, 4 (S.D. Cal. 2009) (dismissing with prejudice TILA rescission claim in that "while home equity loans and refinancing transactions would be amenable to rescission, Plaintiff's purchase money mortgage is not"); *Kamara v. Columbia Home Loans, LLC, 654 F. Supp. 2d 259, 2009 WL 2230733, 3 (E.D. Pa. 2009) ("Here, it is undisputed that the loan was obtained to finance the acquisition of the plaintiff's dwelling. Rescission therefore is not available for the loan at issue. This claim is dismissed."); *Wellman v. First Franklin Home Loan Services, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68389, 2009 WL 243961, 2 (S.D. Cal. 2009) ("'residential mortgage transactions' such as Plaintiff's purchase money mortgage, are expressly excluded from coverage"); *Manown v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68392, 2009 WL 2406335, 5 (S.D. Cal. 2009) ("Plaintiffs are not entitled to seek rescission for their purchase money mortgage.")

Chase and MERS are correct that "the recorded documents confirm that the Loan was a purchase money [*13] loan." Ms. Manabat acquired property title by a grant deed recorded on December 12, 2006, the same date on which the DOT was recorded. The DOT identifies Ms. Manabat as "borrower." The complaint alleges that the loan was to purchase Ms. Manabat's property. The grant deed and DOT demonstrate that they are part of a purchase money transaction in which the DOT permitted Ms. Manabat to acquire the property. Ms. Manabat's loan transaction is residential mortgage transaction exempt from TILA rescission. The TILA rescission claim fails as a matter of law.

Rescission Limitations Period

Chase and MERS further contend that a TILA rescission claim is time barred.

TILA's "buyer's remorse" provision allows borrowers three business days to rescind, without penalty, a consumer loan that uses their principal dwelling as security. Semar v. Platte Valley Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 791 F.2d 699, 701 (9th Cir. 1986);15 U.S.C. § 1635(a). TILA rescission may be extended up to three years if the lender fails to comply with TILA disclosure requirements. Semar, 791 F.2d at 701-702; 15 U.S.C. § 1635(f).

15 U.S.C. § 1635(f) addresses the outer most limit to seek rescission:

> An obligor's right of rescission shall [*14] expire three years after the date of consummation of the transaction or upon the sale of the property, whichever occurs first, notwithstanding the fact that the information and forms required under this section or any other disclosures required under this part have not been delivered to the obligor . . . (Bold added.)

The U.S. Supreme Court has described as "manifest" Congress' intent to prohibit rescission after the three-year period has run:

> Section 1635(f), however, takes us beyond any question whether it limits more than the time for bringing a suit, by governing the life of the underlying right as well. The subsection says nothing in terms of bringing an action but instead provides that the "right of rescission [under the Act] shall expire" at the end of the time period. It talks not of a suit's commencement but of a right's duration, which it addresses in terms so straightforward as to render any limitation on the time for seeking a remedy superfluous. There is no reason, then, even to resort to the canons of construction that we use to resolve doubtful cases, such as the rule that the creation of a right in the same statute that provides a limitation is some evidence that the [*15] right was meant to be limited, not

Beach v. Ocwen Fed. Bank, 523 U.S. 410, 417, 419, 118 S.Ct. 1408, 140 L. Ed. 2d 566 (1998).

The complaint alleges, and matters subject to judicial notice reflect, that Ms. Manabat's loan was consummated in December 2006 to render her rescission remedy expired prior to March 23, 2010 filing of Ms. Manabat's complaint. TILA rescission is time barred.

Failure To Tender

Chase and MERS challenge TILA rescission as barred in that Ms. Manabat "fails to satisfy the tender requirement." Chase and MERS hold Ms. Manabat "to make a tender offer to pay the lender what she received in the original mortgage transaction (minus interest, finance charges, etc)."

The "voiding of a security interest may be judicially conditioned on debtor's tender of amount due under the loan." American Mortgage Network, Inc. v. Shelton, 486 F.3d 815, 821 (4th Cir. 2007).

15 U.S.C. § 1635(b) governs the return of money or property when a borrower has rescinded effectively:

> . . . Within 20 days after [*16] receipt of a notice of rescission, the creditor shall return to the obligor any money or property given as earnest money, downpayment, or otherwise, and shall take any action necessary or appropriate to reflect the termination of any security interest created under the transaction. If the creditor has delivered any property to the obligor, the obligor may retain possession of it. Upon the performance of the creditor's obligations under this section, the obligor shall tender the property to the creditor, except that if return of the property in kind would be impracticable or inequitable, the obligor shall tender its reasonable value. Tender shall be made at the location of the property or at the residence of the obligor, at the option of the obligor. If the creditor does not take possession of the property within 20 days after tender by the obligor, ownership of the property vests in the obligor without obligation on his part to pay for it. The procedures prescribed by this subsection shall apply except when otherwise ordered by a court.

12 C.F.R. § 226.23(d) address rescission effects and provides:

> (2) Within 20 calendar days after receipt of a notice of rescission, the creditor shall [*17] return any money or property that has been given to anyone in connection with the transaction and shall take any action necessary to reflect the termination of the security interest.
> (3) If the creditor has delivered any money or property, the consumer may retain possession until the creditor has met its obligation under paragraph (d)(2) of this section. When the creditor has complied with that paragraph, the consumer shall tender the money or property to the creditor or, where the latter would be impracticable or inequitable, tender its reasonable value. At the consumer's option, tender of property may be made at the location of the property or at the consumer's residence. Tender of money must be made at the creditor's designated place of business. If the creditor does not take possession of the money or property within 20 calendar days after the consumer's tender, the consumer may keep it without further obligation. (Bold added.)

Neither TILA nor its Regulation Z "'establishes that a borrower's mere assertion of the right of rescission has the automatic effect of voiding the contract.'" Yamamoto v. Bank of New York, 329 F.3d 1167, 1172 (9th Cir. 2003) (quoting Large v. Conseco Financing Servicing Corp., 292 F.3d 49, 54-55 (1st Cir. 2002)). [*18] The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, relying on Large, explained:

> Instead, the "natural reading" of the language of § 1635(b) "is that the security interest becomes void when the obligor exercises a right to rescind that is available in the particular case, either because the creditor > acknowledges that the right of rescission is available, or because the appropriate decision maker has so determined. . . . Until such decision is made the [borrowers] have only advanced a claim seeking rescission."

Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172 (quoting Large, 292 F.3d at 54-55)).

A rescission notice is not automatic "without regard to whether the law permits [borrower] to rescind on the grounds asserted." See Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172. Entertaining rescission automatically "makes no sense . . . when the lender contests the ground upon which the borrower rescinds." Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172. "In these circumstances, it cannot be that the security interest vanishes immediately upon the giving of notice. Otherwise, a borrower could get out from under a secured loan simply by claiming TILA violations, whether or not the lender had actually committed any." Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1172 (italics in original).

Moreover, [*19] although 15 U.S.C. § 1635(b) "provides for immediate voiding of the security interest and return of the money within twenty days of the notice of rescission, we believe this assumes that the notice of rescission was proper in the first place." In re Groat, 369 B.R. 413, 419 (Bankr. 8th Cir. 2007). A "court may impose conditions on rescission that assure that the borrower meets her obligations once the creditor has performed its obligations." Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1173. The Ninth Circuit has explained that prior to ordering rescission based on a lender's alleged TILA violations, a court may require borrowers to prove ability to repay loan proceeds:

> As rescission under § 1635(b) is an on-going process consisting of a number of steps, there is no reason why a court that may alter the sequence of procedures after deciding that rescission is warranted, may not do so before deciding that rescission is warranted when it finds that, assuming grounds for rescission exist, rescission still could not be enforced because the borrower cannot comply with the borrower's rescission obligations no matter what. Such a decision lies within the court's equitable discretion, taking into consideration all [*20] the circumstances including the nature of the violations and the borrower's ability to repay the proceeds. If, as was the case here, it is clear from the evidence that the borrower lacks capacity to pay back what she has received (less interest, finance charges, etc.), the court does not lack discretion to do before trial what it could do after.

Yamamoto, 329 F.3d at 1173 (affirming summary judgment for lender in absence of evidence that borrowers could refinance or sell property); see American Mortgage, 486 F.3d at 821 ("Once the trial judge in this case determined that the [plaintiffs] were unable to tender the loan proceeds, the remedy of unconditional rescission was inappropriate."); LaGrone v. Johnson, 534 F.2d 1360, 1362 (9th Cir. 1974) (under the facts, loan rescission should be conditioned on the borrower's tender of advanced funds given the lender's non-egregious TILA violations and equities heavily favoring the lender). [3]

Neither the complaint nor record references Ms. Manabat's notice to rescind or tender of indebtedness. Chase and MERS correctly contest Ms. Manabat's attempt to rescind. The complaint does not address conditions precedent to permit rescission. The complaint is not a timely, valid rescission notice. The complaint's silence on Ms. Manabat's tender of or ability to tender loan proceeds is construed as her concession of inability to do so. "Clearly it was not the intent of Congress to reduce the mortgage company to an unsecured creditor or to simply permit the debtor to indefinitely extend the loan without interest." American Mortgage, 486 F.3d at 820-821. Without Ms. Manabat's meaningful tender, TILA rescission is an empty remedy, not capable of being granted. The absence of a sufficiently alleged notice of rescission and tender of loan proceeds dooms a TILA rescission claim to warrant its dismissal.

[3] The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals agrees with the Ninth Circuit that 15 U.S.C. § 1635(b) does not compel a creditor to remove a mortgage lien in the absence of the debtor's tender of loan proceeds:

> Congress did not intend to require a lender to relinquish [*21] its security interest when it is now known that the borrowers did not intend and were not prepared to tender restitution of the funds expended by the lender in discharging the prior obligations of the borrowers.

Powers v. Sims & Levin, 542 F.2d 1216, 1221 (4th Cir. 1976).

Damages Limitations [*22] Period

Chase and MERS argue that a TILA damages claim is barred by the one-year limitations period.

A TILA damages claims is subject to 15 U.S.C. § 1640(e), which provides that an action for a TILA violation must proceed "within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation." "TILA requires that any claim based on an alleged failure to make material disclosures be brought within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation." Hallas v. Ameriquest Mortg. Co., 406 F.Supp.2d 1176, 1183 (D. Or. 2005). The limitations period runs from the date of a transaction's consummation which is the time that a consumer becomes contractually obligated on a credit transaction. Monaco v. Bear Stearns Residential Mortgage Corp., 554 F.Supp.2d 1034, 1039 (C.D. Cal. 2008). The Ninth Circuit noted in Meyer v. Ameriquest Mortgage Co., 342 F.3d 899, 902 (9th Cir. 2003):

> The failure to make the required disclosures occurred, if at all, at the time the loan documents were signed. The [plaintiffs] were in full possession of all information relevant to the discovery of a TiLA violation and a § 1640(a) damages claim on the day the loan papers were signed.

Ms. Manabat consummated her loan in [*23] December 2006 and filed her complaint on March 23, 2010, more than three years after her loan transaction to render a TILA damages claim time barred.

The complaint lacks a viable TILA claim.

California Civil Code Sections 2923.5* And *2923.6

The complaint's second claim alleges that MERS violated California Civil Code section 2923.5 ("section 2923.5") in that MERS "failed to make contact with plaintiff thirty (30) days prior to the filing and service of the Notice of Default to discuss the plaintiff's financial situation and explore options for the plaintiff to avoid foreclosure and provide a toll-free HUD telephone number." "As a result," the claim continues, "MERS failed to declare in the Notice of Default that it had made the required contact . . ."

Section 2923.5(a)(2) requires a "mortgagee, beneficiary or authorized agent" to "contact the borrower in person or by telephone in order to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options for the borrower to avoid foreclosure." Section 2923.5(b) requires a default notice to include a declaration "from the mortgagee, beneficiary, or authorized agent" of compliance with section 2923.5, including attempt "with due diligence to contact [*24] the borrower as required by this section."

The record reveals that the NOD included the necessary declaration to satisfy section 2923.5. The complaint lacks a cognizable claim that Chase or MERS was required to modify Ms. Manabat's loan in that section 2923.5 imposes no such mandate. Section 2923.5 requires only contacts or attempted contacts to "assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options for the borrower to avoid foreclosure." See Cal. Civ. Code, § 2923.5(a)(2). An alleged section 2923.5 claim fails.

The complaint's third claim alleges that MERS violated California Civil Code section 2923.6 ("section 2923.6") in that it "failed to offer a modification to the existing principal [sic] to the existing principal on the loan."

Chase and MERS note that section 2923.6 "does not mandate that the lender provide the borrower with a loan modification" in that "such action is only encouraged."

Section 2923.6(b) notes the California Legislature's intent that a mortgagee "offer the borrower a loan modification or workout plan if such modification or plan is consistent with its contractual or other authority." "[N]othing in Cal. Civ. Code § 2923.6 imposes a duty on servicers of loans [*25] to modify the terms of loans or creates a private right of action for borrowers." *Farner v. Countrywide Home Loans, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5303, 2009 WL 189025, at 2 (2009). In Vikco Ins. Services, Inc. v. Ohio Indem. Co., 70 Cal.App.4th 55, 62-63, 82 Cal.Rptr.2d 442 (1999), the California Court of Appeal explained the absence of a private right of action arising from a statute silent on the issue:

> Adoption of a regulatory statute does not automatically create a private right to sue for damages resulting from violations of the statute. Such a private right of action exists only if the language of the statute or its legislative history clearly indicates the Legislature intended to create such a right to sue for damages. If the Legislature intends to create a private cause of action, we generally assume it will do so '"directly[,] … in clear, understandable, unmistakable terms ….' (Citation.)" (Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies (1988) 46 Cal.3d 287, 294-295 [250 Cal.Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58] (Moradi-Shalal); see also Crusader Ins. Co. v. Scottsdale Ins. Co., supra, 54 Cal.App.4th at pp. 125-137 (because a judge may not insert what has been omitted from a statute, legislative intent alone determines whether [*26] a statute creates a new private right to sue); Schaefer v. Williams (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 1243, 1248 [19 Cal.Rptr.2d 212] (nothing in Elections Code creates a private cause of action to enforce a pledge to follow fair campaign practices; "Surely, if the Legislature had intended to create such a private action, it would have done so by clear and direct language"); Nowlon v. Koram Ins. Center, Inc. (1991) 1 Cal.App.4th 1437, 1444-1445 [2 Cal.Rptr.2d 683] (absent some express provision for civil liability, courts cannot assume a private cause of action for negligence may be brought any time a legislative enactment is violated).)

Neither a private right of action nor actionable duty is discernable from section 2923.6 to defeat a claim based on its violation. Section 2923.6 does not require a lender to enter into a loan modification to serve the parties' best interests.

Ms. Manabat lacks actionable claims under sections 2923.5 and 2923.6.

Wrongful Foreclosure -- Note Possession

The complaint's fourth claim alleges "wrongful foreclosure" against Chase and MERS in that they lack "possession of the Promissory Note" and "are not 'person[s] entitled to enforce' the security interest on the Property, [*27] as that term is defined in Commercial Code § 3301 [('section 3301')]."

Chase and MERS explain that Ms. Manabat incorrectly alleges that Chase and MERS must possess the promissory note to initiate foreclosure in that section 3301 "permits non-holders of notes to enforce the provisions of the deeds of trust securing the obligation. Section 3301 provides: '"Person entitled to enforce' an instrument means (a) the holder of the instrument, (b) a nonholder in possession of the instrument who has the rights of a holder . . ." (Bold added.)

Chase and MERS further correctly note that under California law, a lender may pursue non-judicial foreclosure upon default with a deed of trust with a power of sale clause. "Financing or refinancing of real property is generally accomplished in California through a deed of trust. The borrower (trustor) executes a promissory note and deed of trust, thereby transferring an interest in the property to the lender (beneficiary) as security for repayment of the loan." Bartold v. Glendale Federal Bank, 81 Cal.App.4th 816, 821, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 226 (2000). A deed of trust "entitles the lender to reach some asset of the debtor if the note is not paid." Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell, 10 Cal.4th 1226, 1235, 44 Cal.Rptr.2d 352, 900 P.2d 601 (1995).

If [*28] a borrower defaults on a loan and the deed of trust contains a power of sale clause, the lender may non-judicially foreclose. See McDonald v. Smoke Creek Live Stock Co., 209 Cal. 231, 236-237, 286 P. 693 (1930). The California Court of Appeal has explained non-judicial foreclosure under the applicable California Civil Code sections:

> The comprehensive statutory framework established to govern nonjudicial foreclosure sales is intended to be exhaustive. . . . It includes a myriad of rules relating to notice and right to cure. It would be inconsistent with the comprehensive and exhaustive statutory scheme regulating nonjudicial foreclosures to incorporate another unrelated cure provision into statutory nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings.

Moeller v. Lien, 25 Cal.App.4th 822, 834, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 777 (1994); see I.E. Assoc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 39 Cal.3d 281, 285, 216 Cal.Rptr. 438, 702 P.2d 596 (1985) ("These provisions cover every aspect of exercise of the power of sale contained in a deed of trust.")

Under California Civil Code section 2924(a)(1), a "trustee, mortgagee or beneficiary or any of their authorized agents" may conduct the foreclosure process. Under California Civil Code section 2924(b)(4), [*29] a "person authorized to record the notice of default or the notice of sale" includes "an agent for the mortgagee or beneficiary, an agent of the named trustee, any person designated in an executed substitution of trustee, or an agent of that substituted trustee." "Upon default by the trustor, the beneficiary may declare a default and proceed with a nonjudicial foreclosure sale." Moeller, 25 Cal.App.4th at 830, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 777.

A "trustee or mortgagee may be liable to the trustor or mortgagor for damages sustained where there has been an illegal, fraudulent or wilfully oppressive sale of property under a power of sale contained in a mortgage or deed of trust." Munger v. Moore, 11 Cal.App.3d 1, 7, 89 Cal.Rptr. 323 (1970).

"Under Civil Code section 2924, no party needs to physically possess the promissory note." Sicairos v. NDEX West, LLC, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11223, 2009 WL 385855, *3 (S.D. Cal. 2009) (citing Cal. Civ. Code, § 2924(a)(1)). Rather, "[t]he foreclosure process is commenced by the recording of a notice of default and election to sell by the trustee." Moeller, 25 Cal.App.4th at 830, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 777. An "allegation that the trustee did not have the original note or had not received it is insufficient [*30] to render the foreclosure proceeding invalid." Neal v. Juarez, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98068, 2007 WL 2140640, *8 (S.D. Cal. 2007).

In the case at hand, the DOT includes of power of sale to permit MERS as DOT beneficiary and Chase as loan servicer to commence non-judicial foreclosure. Ms. Manabat's challenge to produce an original note is unsupported. The complaint alleges no facts of failure to comply with the statutory scheme for non-judicial foreclosure. A purported unlawful foreclosure claim fails as a matter of law, especially in the absence of allegations of misconduct in the foreclosure proceedings.

Wrongful Foreclosure -- Loan Modification

The complaint's fifth claim alleges that Chase and MERS "failed to suspend the foreclosure action to allow plaintiff to be considered for alternative foreclosure prevention options."

Chase and MERS construe the claim as premised on their "purported failure to provide Plaintiff with a loan modification in violation of the Home Affordable Modification Program ('HAMP')." Chase and MERS explain that HAMP is part of the Troubled Assets Relief Program ("TARP") which was enacted as a subchapter of the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act ("EESA"), 12 U.S.C. §§ 5201, et seq. TARP [*31] directs the Treasury Department and other federal agencies to modify loans which they own or control and expands the "HOPE for Homeowners" program by altering eligibility and increasing the ability of the Department of Housing and Urban Development to help families keep their homes. 12 U.S.C. §§ 5211-5212, 5219-5220.

Treasury Department guidelines require TARP recipients to suspend foreclosures and consider alternative prevention options. With TARP, Congress provided a private right of action for those directly harmed by the actions of the Secretary of the Treasury Department. See 12 U.S.C. § 5229(a). However, courts limit the private right of action to claims against the Secretary of the Treasury Department. "12 U.S.C. § 5229(b)(1) shows Congress' intent to limit private action under TARP solely to actions against the Secretary as provided in § 5229, and not extend any obligations or liabilities to those receiving TARP funds. Thus, the Court finds that there is no implied private right to sue fund recipients under TARP." Pantoja v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 640 F.Supp.2d 1177, 1185 (N.D. Cal. 2009). Chase and MERS correctly conclude that by omission of reference to claims against [*32] other than the Treasury Secretary, "Congress did not intend to create a private right of action for violation of HAMP against lenders that received HAMP funds." The complaint's fifth claim fails in the absence of an underlying private right of action.

Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act

The complaint's eleventh claim alleges that Chase and MERS are "debt collectors under California's Rosenthal Fair Debt Collections Act, Civil Code § 1788.2(c)" and acted "unfairly and unlawfully" to collect a debt from Ms. Manabat by pursuing non-judicial foreclosure.

Chase and MERS fault the claim's failure to allege that they are debt collectors under the Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act ("RFDCPA"), Cal. Civ. Code, §§ 1788, et seq. Chase and MERS further take issue with the claim's failure "to allege what acts Defendants took in violation of the RFDCPA or any fact which would support these allegations."

The RFDCPA's purpose is "to prohibit debt collectors from engaging in unfair or deceptive practices in the collection of consumer debts and to require debtors to act fairly in entering into and honoring such debts." Cal. Civ. Code, § 1788.1(b). The RFDCPA defines "debt collector" as [*33] "any person who, in the ordinary course of business, regularly, on behalf of himself or herself or others, engages in debt collection." Cal. Civ. Code, § 1788.2(c). "[F]oreclosure does not constitute debt collection under the RFDCPA." Izenberg v. ETS Services, LLC, 589 F.Supp.2d 1193, 1199 (C.D. Cal. 2008). The "law is clear that foreclosing on a property pursuant to a deed of trust is not a debt collection within the meaning of the RFDCPA or the FDCA [Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692, et seq.]." *Gamboa v. Trustee Corps, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19613, 2009 WL 656285, * 4 (N.D. Cal. 2009)*. As this Court has explained previously, "[l]ogic suggests that non-judicial foreclosure is not a debt collector's act under California Civil Code section 1788.2(c)." Swanson v. ECM Mortgage Corp., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107912, 2009 WL 3627925 (E.D. Cal. 2009).

The RFDCPA claim is barred in that complaint points to only non-judicial foreclosure, which as discussed above is proper pursuant to the DOT's power of sale provision. Moreover, the claim is doomed with failure to allege applicable RFDCPA violations or violated RFDCPA sections. The complaint's reference to California Civil Code section 1788.13(i) is unavailing given the propriety of [*34] non-judicial foreclosure and the lack of Chase or MERS' debt collector status under RFDCPA. The RFDCPA claim is subject to dismissal.

Unconscionability

The complaint's twelfth unconscionability claim alleges that Chase and MERS "prepared the pre-printed form documents that plaintiff was required to sign as a condition plaintiff's [sic] 'take it or leave it' manner with no opportunity for plaintiff to negotiate the mortgage interest or payment terms" and "defendants . . . used their superior bargaining power to convince plaintiff that he [sic] could not obtain more favorable mortgage terms from any other lender."

Chase and MERS contend that California Civil Code section 1670.5 ("section 1670.5") unconscionability is not an actionable claim but rather "a defense to contract formation."

Section 1670.5(a) provides:

> If the court as a matter of law finds the contract or any clause of the contract to have been unconscionable at the time it was made the court may refuse to enforce the contract, or it may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable clause, or it may so limit the application of any unconscionable clause as to avoid any unconscionable result.

Unconscionability [*35] has "procedural" and "substantive" elements. A & M Produce Co. v. FMC Corp., 135 Cal.App.3d 473, 486, 186 Cal.Rptr. 114 (1982). The procedural element focuses on: (1) "oppression," which "arises from an inequality of bargaining power which results in no real negotiation and 'an absence of meaningful choice'"; and (2) "surprise" which "involves the extent to which the supposedly agreed-upon terms of the bargain are hidden in a prolix printed form drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms." A & M Produce, 135 Cal.App.3d at 486, 186 Cal.Rptr. 114 (citations omitted). The substantive element turns on "allocation of risks between the parties, and therefore that a contractual term is substantively suspect if it reallocates the risks of the bargain in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner" to constitute a "one-sided" result without "justification" for it. A & M Produce, 135 Cal.App.3d at 487, 186 Cal.Rptr. 114 (citations omitted).

Chase and MERS point to the complaint's absence of facts that they engaged in "oppression, surprise, or overly-harsh conduct in connection with the originating of the Loan." Chase and MERS further note their lack of involvement in loan [*36] origination given that "Sierra Pacific was the lender and contracting party."

Chase and MERS are correct that they are not subject to an unconscionability claim to warrant dismissal of the claim against them.

Civil Conspiracy

The complaint's thirteenth claim alleges that Chase, MERS and other defendants "were acting in concert with each other and ratified and approved the above-described fraudulent conduct by the other defendants" and committed "acts pursuant to an agreement by and between each of the other of these defendants to defraud plaintiff into entering the subject loan agreements."

Chase and MERS fault the absence of allegations that they "knew that a tort was planned or concurred in the tortious scheme with knowledge of its unlawful purpose" and of facts "as to the formation and operation of the alleged conspiracy."

"[C]ivil conspiracy is not an independent tort." Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp., 40 Cal.App.4th 1571, 1581, 47 Cal.Rptr.2d 752 (1995). "Conspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration." [*37] Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal.4th 503, 510-511, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994) (citing Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co., 24 Cal.3d 773, 784,157 Cal.Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 (1979)). "Standing alone, a conspiracy does no harm and engenders no tort liability. It must be activated by the commission of an actual tort." Applied Equipment, 7 Cal.4th at 511, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475. "The essence of the claim is that it is merely a mechanism for imposing vicarious liability; it is not itself a substantive basis for liability." Berg & Berg Enterprises, LLC v. Sherwood Partners, Inc., 131 Cal.App.4th 802, 823, 32 Cal.Rptr.3d 325 (2005).

The civil conspiracy elements are: "(1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) wrongful conduct in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) damages arising from the wrongful conduct." Kidron, 40 Cal.App.4th at 1582, 47 Cal.Rptr.2d 752. "The conspiring defendants must also have actual knowledge that a tort is planned and concur in the tortious scheme with knowledge of its unlawful purpose." Kidron, 40 Cal.App.4th at 1581, 47 Cal.Rptr.2d 752; see Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co., 24 Cal.3d 773, 784-786, 157 Cal.Rptr. 392, 598 P.2d 45 (1979) ("a plaintiff is [*38] entitled to damages from those defendants who concurred in the tortious scheme with knowledge of its unlawful purpose"); People v. Austin, 23 Cal.App.4th 1596, 1607, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 885 (1994) ("without knowledge of the illegal purpose there is no basis for inferring an agreement"). "The effect of charging . . . conspiratorial conduct is to implicate all . . . who agree to the plan to commit the wrong as well as those who actually carry it out. Black v. Sullivan, 48 Cal.App.3d 557, 566, 122 Cal.Rptr. 119 (1975).

The conspiracy claim fails in the absence of facts to support necessary elements. Of key importance, the complaint lacks allegations of facts of wrongful conduct attributable to Chase and MERS directly or through their concurrence in a tortious scheme with knowledge of its unlawful purpose. The complaint fails to allege facts of Chase and MERS' agreement between themselves or with others to plan to commit wrongs along with actual commission of an actionable tort. As such, the conspiracy claim is subject to dismissal.

Unfair Competition Law

The complaint's fourteenth claim accuses Chase and MERS of "unlawful business and/or practices within the meaning of California Business and Professions Code §§ 17200, et seq. [*39] ['Unfair Competition Law' ('UCL')]."

Standing

Chase and MERS argue that Ms. Manabat lacks standing to purse a UCL claim in absence of cognizable injury or damage.

California Business and Professions Code section 17204 limits standing to bring a UCL claim to specified public officials and a private person "who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition."

Business and Professions Code section 17203 addresses UCL relief and provides in pertinent part:

> Any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction. The court may make such orders or judgments . . . as may be necessary to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition. (Bold added.)

"In a suit under the UCL, a public prosecutor may collect civil penalties, but a private plaintiff's remedies are 'generally limited to injunctive relief and restitution.'" Kasky v. Nike, Inc., 27 Cal.4th 939, 950, 119 Cal.Rptr.2d 296, 45 P.3d 243 (2002) (quoting Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999)).

Quality [*40] correctly notes the complaint's absence of facts of Ms. Manabat's money or property allegedly lost due to a UCL violation. The UCL claim offers an insufficient, bare allegation that unlawful business practices have "damaged plaintiff's creditworthiness." The complaint lacks sufficient allegations of Ms. Manabat's standing to warrant dismissal of the UCL claim.

Unfair, Fraudulent Or Deceptive Business Practices

Chase and MERS further challenge the claim's failure to allege anything constituting an "unlawful" business practice.

"Unfair competition is defined to include 'unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising.'" Blank v. Kirwan, 39 Cal.3d 311, 329, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58 (1985) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200). The UCL establishes three varieties of unfair competition -- "acts or practices which are unlawful, or unfair, or fraudulent." Shvarts v. Budget Group, Inc., 81 Cal.App.4th 1153, 1157, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 722 (2000). An "unlawful business activity" includes anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law. Blank, 39 Cal.3d at 329, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718 (citing People v. McKale, 25 Cal.3d 626, 631-632, 159 Cal.Rptr. 811, 602 P.2d 731 (1979)). [*41] "A business practice is 'unlawful' if it is 'forbidden by law.'" Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 98 Cal.App.4th 1158, 1169, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 79 (2002) (quoting Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 377, 383, 6 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 826 P.2d 730 (1992)).

The UCL prohibits "unlawful" practices "forbidden by law, be it civil or criminal, federal, state, or municipal, statutory, regulatory, or court-made." Saunders v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1999). The UCL "thus creates an independent action when a business practice violates some other law." Walker, 98 Cal.App.4th at 1169, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 79. According to the California Supreme Court, the UCL "borrows" violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices independently actionable under the UCL. Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.4th 377, 383, 6 Cal.Rptr.2d 487, 826 P.2d 730 (1992).

A fellow district court has explained the borrowing of a violation of law other than the UCL:

> To state a claim for an "unlawful" business practice under the UCL, a plaintiff must assert the violation of any other law. Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 180, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999) [*42] (stating, "By proscribing 'any unlawful' business practice, section 17200 'borrows' violations of other law and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.") (citation omitted). Where a plaintiff cannot state a claim under the "borrowed" law, she cannot state a UCL claim either. See, e.g., Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 93 Cal.App.4th 700, 718, 113 Cal.Rptr.2d 399 (2001). Here, Plaintiff has predicated her "unlawful" business practices claim on her TILA claim. However, as discussed above, Plaintiff's attempt to state a claim under TILA has failed. Accordingly, Plaintiff has stated no "unlawful" UCL claim.

Rubio v. Capital One Bank (USA), N.A., 572 F.Supp.2d 1157, 1168 (C.D. Cal. 2008).

"Unfair" under the UCL "means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cal-Tech Communications, 20 Cal.4th 163 at187, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548.

The "fraudulent" prong under the UCL requires a plaintiff to "show deception to some [*43] members of the public, or harm to the public interest," Watson Laboratories, Inc. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F.Supp.2d 1099, 1121 (C.D. Ca. 2001), or to allege that "members of the public are likely to be deceived." *Medical Instrument Development Laboratories v. Alcon Laboratories, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41411, 2005 WL 1926673, at 5 (N.D. Cal. 2005).

"A plaintiff alleging unfair business practices under these statutes [UCL] must state with reasonable particularity the facts supporting the statutory elements of the violation." Khoury v. Maly's of California, Inc., 14 Cal.App.4th 612, 619, 17 Cal.Rptr.2d 708 (1993).

The complaint is insufficient to establish that Chase or MERS engaged in unfair business practices under the UCL. In the absence of violation of a borrowed law, a UCL claim fails in that it cannot rest on alleged irregularities in the loan transaction or aborted foreclosure proceedings. The complaint lacks claims under the federal and state statutes addressed above. The complaint points to no predicate violation of law. The complaint lacks reasonable particularity of facts to support a UCL claim. The complaint's bare reference to federal and state statutes and common law claims provides not the [*44] slightest inference that Ms. Manabat has a viable UCL claim. The UCL claim lacks particularity of fraudulent circumstances, such as a misrepresentation, for a UCL claim. The complaint lacks allegations of ongoing wrongful business conduct or a pattern of such conduct. The complaint lacks facts to hint at a wrong subject to the UCL to warrant the UCL claim's dismissal against Chase and MERS.

Injunctive Relief

The complaint's fifteenth claim seeks to enjoin MERS "from conducting a foreclosure sale during the pendency of this action."

Chase and MERS explain that the complaint's injunctive relief claim fails in the absence of a viable claim to support it.

"Equity will not interpose its remedial power in the accomplishment of what seemingly would be nothing but an idly and expensively futile act, nor will it purposely speculate in a field where there has been no proof as to what beneficial purpose may be subserved through its intervention." Karlsen, 15 Cal.App.3d at 117, 92 Cal.Rptr. 851. "Injunctive relief is a remedy and not, in itself, a cause of action, and a cause of action must exist before injunctive relief may be granted." Shell Oil Co. v. Richter, 52 Cal.App.2d 164, 168, 125 P.2d 930 (1942). [*45] Neither a viable claim nor "an independent duty" supports injunctive relief to doom the injunctive relief claim.

Quiet Title

The complaint's sixteenth claims "seeks to quiet title against the claim of defendant MERS and all other persons or parties that may claim against the Property."

Chase and MERS fault the quiet title claim as "procedurally deficient" and lacking necessary elements.

California Code of Civil Procedure section 760.010 provides for an action "to establish title against adverse claims to real or personal property or any interest therein." California Code of Civil Procedure section 761.020 mandates a "verified" complaint for a quiet title action to include:

1. A legal description and street address of the subject real property;
2. The title of plaintiff as to which determination is sought and the basis of the title;
3. The adverse claims to the title of the plaintiff against which a determination is sought;
4. The date as of which the determination is sought; and
5. A prayer for the determination of the title of the plaintiff against the adverse claims.

Chase and MERS correctly note that the complaint is unverified and fails to establish "adverse claims" to Ms. Manabat's title. [*46] Neither Chase nor MERS holds a claim adverse to Ms. Manabat's title in that a deed of trust "carries none of the incidents of ownership of the property, other than the right to convey upon default on the part of the debtor in payment of his debt." Lupertino v. Carbahal, 35 Cal.App.3d 742, 748, 111 Cal.Rptr. 112 (1973). The quiet title remedy "is cumulative and not exclusive of any other remedy, form or right of action, or proceeding provided by law for establishing or quieting title to property." Cal. Code Civ. Proc., § 760.030. MERS, as DOT beneficiary, and Chase, as loan servicer, lack an interest in the property subject to a quiet title claim. Chase and MERS correctly note that a quiet title claim is premature given that a foreclosure sale has not occurred.

Moreover, a quiet title claim is doomed in the absence Ms. Manabat's tender of her debt. "It is settled in California that a mortgagor cannot quiet his title against the mortgagee without paying the debt secured." Shimpones v. Stickney, 219 Cal. 637, 649, 28 P.2d 673 (1934); see Mix v. Sodd, 126 Cal.App.3d 386, 390, 178 Cal.Rptr. 736 (1981) ("a mortgagor in possession may not maintain an action to quiet title, even though the [*47] debt is unenforceable"); Aguilar v. Bocci, 39 Cal.App.3d 475, 477, 114 Cal.Rptr. 91 (1974) (trustor is unable to quiet title "without discharging his debt"). With the complaint's absence of a meaningful ability or willingness to tender Ms. Manabat's indebtedness, her quiet title claim fails.

Accounting

The complaint's seventeenth claim alleges that the "amount of money still owed any defendant or any other beneficiary claimant is unknown to plaintiff and cannot be determined without an accounting."

Chase and MERS contend that an accounting is unwarranted in the absence of a fiduciary relationship with Ms. Manabat.

An accounting cause of action is equitable and may be sought where the accounts are so complicated that an ordinary legal action demanding a fixed sum is impracticable. Civic Western Corp. v. Zila Industries, Inc., 66 Cal.App.3d 1, 14, 135 Cal.Rptr. 915 (1977). A suit for an accounting will not lie where it appears from the complaint that none is necessary or that there is an adequate remedy at law. Civic Western, 66 Cal.App.3d at 14, 135 Cal.Rptr. 915. An accounting will not be accorded with respect to a sum that a plaintiff seeks to recover and alleges in his complaint to be [*48] a sum certain. Civic Western, 66 Cal.App.3d at 14, 135 Cal.Rptr. 915.

"A right to an accounting is derivative; it must be based on other claims." Janis v. California State Lottery Com., 68 Cal.App.4th 824, 833-834, 80 Cal.Rptr.2d 549 (1998). Moreover, as an equitable matter, an accounting frequently "presents a fiduciary relation between the parties in the nature of a trust which brings it especially within equitable remedies." Kritzer v. Lancaster, 96 Cal.App.2d 1, 6, 214 P.2d 407 (1950).

The complaint lacks allegations of complexity or a fiduciary relationship to warrant an accounting to plaintiffs. "A debt is not a trust and there is not a fiduciary relation between debtor and creditor as such." Downey v. Humphreys, 102 Cal. App. 2d 323, 332, 227 P.2d 484 (1951). "The same principle should apply with even greater clarity to the relationship between a bank and its loan customers." Price v. Wells Fargo Bank, 213 Cal.App.3d 465, 476, 261 Cal.Rptr. 735 (1989). Moreover, the complaint does not allege that Chase and MERS owe Ms. Manabat money to invoke an accounting. Ms. Manabat lacks a derivative basis for an accounting given the failure of her claims. The complaint fails to invoke [*49] this Court's equity powers to provide Ms. Manabat accounting relief to warrant dismissal of the accounting claim.

Attempt At Amendment And Malice

Ms. Manabat's claims are insufficiently pled and barred as a matter of law. Ms. Manabat is unable to cure her claims by allegation of other facts and thus is not granted an attempt to amend.

Moreover, this Court surmises that Ms. Manabat has brought this action in absence of good faith and that Ms. Manabat exploits the court system solely for delay or to vex defendants. The test for maliciousness is a subjective one and requires the court to "determine the . . . good faith of the applicant." Kinney v. Plymouth Rock Squab Co., 236 U.S. 43, 46, 35 S. Ct. 236, 59 L. Ed. 457 (1915); see Wright v. Newsome, 795 F.2d 964, 968, n. 1 (11th Cir. 1986); cf. Glick v. Gutbrod, 782 F.2d 754, 757 (7th Cir. 1986) (court has inherent power to dismiss case demonstrating "clear pattern of abuse of judicial process"). A lack of good faith or malice also can be inferred from a complaint containing untrue material allegations of fact or false statements made with intent to deceive the court. See Horsey v. Asher, 741 F.2d 209, 212 (8th Cir. 1984). An attempt to vex or delay provides further grounds [*50] to dismiss this action against Chase and MERS.

CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For the reasons discussed above, this Court:

1. DISMISSES with prejudice this action against Chase and MERS;

2. DIRECTS the clerk to enter judgment against plaintiff Edith Manabat and in favor of defendants Chase Home Finance LLC and Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. in that there is no just reason to delay to enter such judgment given that Ms. Manabat's claims against Chase and MERS and their alleged liability are clear and distinct from claims against and liability of other defendants. See F.R.Civ.P. 54(b); and
3. ORDERS Ms. Manabat's counsel, no later than July 1, 2010, to file papers to show cause why this Court should not dismiss this action against defendants Sierra Pacific Mortgage Company, Inc., McMillan Tuscany, LLC, NDEx West, LLC and Priority Posting and Publication.

This Court ADMONISHES Ms. Manabat and her counsel that this Court will dismiss this action against defendants Sierra Pacific Mortgage Company, Inc., McMillan Tuscany, LLC, NDEx West, LLC and Priority Posting and Publication if Ms. Manabat's counsel fails to comply with this order and fails to file timely papers to show cause why this [*51] Court should not dismiss this action against defendants Sierra Pacific Mortgage Company, Inc., McMillan Tuscany, LLC, NDEx West, LLC and Priority Posting and Publication.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[ ] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Because even beneficial legitimate contracts or combinations restrain trade to some degree, § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, has long been interpreted to prohibit only those contracts or combinations that are unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The selection of a mode of antitrust analysis is a question of law over which the court of appeals exercises plenary review.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN3[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Most restraints are analyzed under the traditional rule of reason. The rule of reason requires the fact-finder to weigh all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. The inquiry is whether the restraint at issue is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition. A plaintiff bears an initial burden under the rule of reason of showing that the alleged combination or agreement produced adverse, anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets. The plaintiff may satisfy this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects or the defendant's market power. If a plaintiff meets his initial burden of adducing adequate evidence of market power or actual anti-competitive effects, the burden shifts to the defendant to show that the challenged conduct promotes a sufficiently pro-competitive objective. To rebut, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the restraint is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN4[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Some categories of restraints, such as horizontal price-fixing and market allocation agreements among competitors, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable. Such plainly anticompetitive agreements or practices are deemed to be illegal per se, without an elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice. Per se liability is reserved for only those agreements that are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality. Accordingly, the courts are reluctant to adopt per se rules where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN5[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

In addition to the traditional rule of reason and the per se rule, courts sometimes apply what amounts to abbreviated or quick look rule of reason analysis. It is an intermediate standard and applies in cases where per se condemnation is inappropriate but where no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of an inherently suspect restraint. In such cases, an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets. In other words, quick look analysis carries the day when the great likelihood of anticompetitive effects can easily be ascertained. Under quick look analysis, the competitive harm is presumed, and the defendant must promulgate some competitive justification for the restraint. If no legitimate justifications are set forth, the presumption of adverse competitive impact prevails and the court condemns the practice without ado. If the defendant offers sound pro-competitive justifications, however, the court must proceed to weigh the overall reasonableness of the restraint using a full-scale rule of reason analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN6[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

There is often no bright line separating the different modes of analysis for determining whether a business combination unreasonably restraints. There is always something of a sliding scale in appraising reasonableness, but the sliding scale formula deceptively suggests greater precision than can be hoped for. Nevertheless, the quality of proof required should vary with the circumstances. The categories of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like "per se," "quick look," and "rule of reason" tend to make them appear. Regardless of the standard used, the purpose of the inquiry is always to assess the effect of the conduct on competition: Whether the ultimate finding is the product of a presumption or actual market analysis, the essential inquiry remains the same--whether or not the challenged restraint enhances competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN7[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

There is generally no categorical line to be drawn between restraints that give rise to an intuitively obvious inference of anticompetitive effect and those that call for more detailed treatment. What is required, rather, is an enquiry meet for the case, looking to the circumstances, details, and logic of a restraint. The object is to see whether the experience of the market has been so clear, or necessarily will be, that a confident conclusion about the principal tendency of a restriction will follow from a quick (or at least quicker) look, in place of a more sedulous one. Thus, the three modes of analysis (per se, quick look, and rule of reason) should be viewed as a single inquiry that, depending on the circumstances, may sometimes be conducted by applying various presumptions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN8[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Even where anticompetitive effects are obvious, quick look condemnation is proper only after assessing and rejecting the logic of proffered procompetitive justifications. Although competitive harm is initially presumed under quick look, if the defendant offers sound procompetitive justifications, the court must proceed to weigh the overall reasonableness of the restraint using a full-scale rule of reason analysis. Where procompetitive justifications are proffered, their logic must be assessed and rejected in order to avoid reverting to full-scale rule of reason analysis. The burden remains on the challenger to demonstrate that the proffered procompetitive effect does not plausibly result in a net procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition. If, after examining the competing claims of anticompetitive and procompetitive effects, it remains plausible that the net effect is procompetitive or that there is no effect on competition, then the obvious anticompetitive effect that triggers abbreviated analysis has not been shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN9[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Once a defendant comes forward with plausible procompetitive justification for the challenged restraint, the quick look presumption disappears and the overall reasonableness of the restraint is assessed using a full-scale rule of reason analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN10[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The application of the quick look analysis is a question of law to be determined by the court, and therefore the concept of quick look has no application to jury inquiry.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Fiduciary Duties > Business Judgment Rule

HN11[] Fiduciary Duties, Business Judgment Rule

Under Delaware law, the business judgment rule is a presumption that in making a business decision the directors of a corporation acted on an informed basis, in good faith and in the honest belief that the action taken was in the best interests of the company. Thus, the burden is on the party challenging the decision to establish facts rebutting the presumption. The business judgment rule presumption can be rebutted by establishing that the board was either interested in the outcome of the transaction or lacked the independence to consider objectively whether the transaction was in the best interest of its company and all of its shareholders. To establish that a board was interested, a plaintiff must allege facts as to the interest of the individual members of that board. Thus, a plaintiff must normally demonstrate that a majority of the director defendants have a financial interest in the transaction.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Fiduciary Duties > Business Judgment Rule

HN12[] Fiduciary Duties, Business Judgment Rule

The Delaware Supreme Court has defined "interest" to mean that directors can neither appear on both sides of a transaction nor expect to derive any personal financial benefit from it in the sense of self-dealing, as opposed to a benefit which devolves upon the corporation or all stockholders generally. In the absence of self-dealing, it is not enough to establish the interest of a director by alleging that he received any benefit not equally shared by the stockholders. Such benefit must be alleged to be material to that director. Materiality means that the alleged benefit was significant enough in the context of the director's economic circumstances, as to have made it improbable that the director could perform her fiduciary duties to the shareholders without being influenced by her overriding personal interest. In determining the sufficiency of factual allegations made by a plaintiff as to a director's interest, the Delaware Supreme Court requires the application of a subjective actual person standard to determine whether a particular director's interest is material and debilitating.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Fiduciary Duties > Business Judgment Rule

HN13[] Fiduciary Duties, Business Judgment Rule

A director is considered interested where he or she will receive a personal financial benefit from a transaction that is not equally shared by the stockholders.

[*824] OPINION OF THE COURT

SCIRICA, Circuit Judge.

Men's professional tennis is a worldwide enterprise and every year, professional tennis players compete in various tournaments around the world. The principal men's professional tennis events are the four Grand Slams, the Davis Cup, and the ATP Tour, a worldwide professional tennis circuit organized [2] by the Association of Tennis Professionals ("ATP"). This lawsuit arises out of the reorganization of the ATP Tour--known as the Brave New World plan--designed to revitalize its popularity, enabling it to better compete with other sports and entertainment events. The redesigned format channeled more top-tier players to the top-tier ATP tournaments and also redesignated the tier categories of some tournaments. The changes included a downgrade of the Hamburg, Germany tournament from the first tier to second tier status.

Dissatisfied with the downgrade, Hamburg tournament owners, the German and Qatar Tennis Federations (the "Federations"), sued ATP and certain of its officers and directors. The suit alleged that the Brave New World plan violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and that ATP's Directors breached fiduciary duties owed to the Federations. At trial, the District Court granted ATP's motions for judgment as a matter of law, dismissing the personal liability claims against the Directors for alleged antitrust violations and breach of fiduciary duty. The antitrust claims against ATP were submitted to a jury, which returned a verdict for ATP. The jury found the Federations failed to [3] prove ATP entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy with any separate entity under § 1 of the Sherman Act, and did not establish a relevant product market under § 2.

The Federations appeal the jury verdict on § 1 of the Sherman Act, asserting the District Court erred in instructing the jury on a "single entity or enterprise defense," and in failing to instruct on the "quick look" mode of analysis. The Federations also appeal the judgment as a matter of law dismissing the antitrust claims against the Directors and the breach of duty of loyalty claim against Director Charles Pasarell. We will affirm the jury verdict on the Sherman Act § 1 claim based on the Federations' failure to prove the relevant market. Consequently, the question of personal director liability for antitrust claims is moot. We also will affirm the judgment as a matter of law dismissing the breach of duty of loyalty claim against Director Pasarell because neither he individually nor the ATP Board of Directors as a whole were materially self-interested when they voted in favor of the Brave New World plan.

Initially an association of the world's top men's professional tennis players, ATP evolved into a non-profit [4] corporation consisting of a membership of men's professional tennis players and organizers of men's professional tennis tournaments. ATP operates a worldwide tennis tour [*825] composed of the member tournaments, culminating in ATP's end-ofseason championship tournament, the Tennis Masters Cup. [1] Tennis players earn prize money and ATP ranking points through playing in ATP tournaments.

ATP ranking points determine each player's world ranking. The player rankings are important because they govern entry into and seeding in the Grand Slams [2] as well as ATP top-tier tournaments--the most important professional tennis tournaments. In turn, these tournaments award the most prize money and ranking points.

ATP tournament members are divided into three categories: (1) Tier I (formerly "Masters Series"); (2) Tier II (formerly "International Series Gold"); (3) Tier III (formerly "International Series"). The categories of tournaments are distinguished by different levels of minimum prize money and different amounts of ranking points awarded on the basis of performance.

ATP is governed by a seven-member Board of Directors--three elected by tournament members (representing different geographic regions), three elected by player members, and a Chairman/President. ATP's Bylaws give the ATP Board discretion over the Tour's format.

In 2007, the Board voted to adopt several [6] changes to the ATP Tour. According to ATP, this restructuring was necessitated by market changes and conditions: ATP was losing ground in the sports and entertainment markets. ATP's market research revealed that tennis fans wanted to see the top tennis players play against each other more often. ATP perceived that a growing decline in player participation in its top-tier events undermined its prestige and also the profile of the sport, leading to a decline in ticket sales and weakening the member tournaments' ability to secure television coverage and sponsorships. By strengthening its top-tier events and simplifying its tournament structure, ATP believed it could better compete with other sports events and other forms of entertainment, and also award more prize money to the players.

The Brave New World plan's objective was to increase the value and appeal of top-tier tournaments by channeling top players to compete in them. It also aimed to make the progression of the Tour easier for fans to follow by clearly communicating each tournament's tier and differentiating between the different tiers. To achieve these goals, the Brave New World plan altered the number of ranking points awarded [7] to winning players in different tiers of tournaments. Tier I tournaments would award 1000 points instead of 500; Tier II tournaments would award 500 points instead of a range between 250 and [*826] 300; Tier III tournaments would award 250 points instead of a range between 175 and 250. Additionally, the Brave New World plan renamed the tournament tiers to correspond to the new ranking points system: Tier I became the "ATP World Tour Masters 1000"; Tier II became the "ATP World

[1] In 2009, the Tennis Masters Cup was replaced by the Barclays ATP World Tour Finals.

[2] The four Grand Slams (Australian Open, French Open, Wimbledon, and US Open) and the Davis Cup are not ATP tournaments and are regulated by the International Tennis Federation ("ITF"). But the Grand Slams have agreed to use ATP entry and ranking systems as the basis for determining entry and seeding of men's professional players into their events (Wimbledon has its own method of seeding calculation, which also takes [5] into account players' past performances on grass over the previous two years, as well as their ATP ranking). In return, playing in the Grand Slams is mandatory for top ATP players. The Grand Slams also agreed not to organize a year-end event competing with the ATP's Tennis Masters Cup and ATP agreed not to combine the Masters Cup with the Women's Tennis Association's year-end event. Additionally, ATP has an agreement with ITF not to schedule ATP events against Davis Cup matches and to award ATP ranking points to Davis Cup tournaments.

Tour 500"; and Tier III became the "ATP World Tour 250." The new ranking point distribution was designed in part as an incentive for the top tennis players to play the ATP top-tier events.

The Brave New World plan also reconfigured the Tour calendar to create geographic "swings" or "seasons" around the Grand Slams because of their size, prestige, history, and popularity, and their significantly greater amount of prize money. Thus, the Brave New World plan scheduled the top-tier ATP tournaments in the weeks before the Grand Slams with corresponding court surfaces--e.g., the Tier I tournament in Madrid, Spain on a clay surface was scheduled in the weeks before the French Open, a Grand Slam tournament also on clay. According [8] to ATP, scheduling their tournaments in this way attracts the top tennis players because of their desire to play on the same surface as the upcoming Grand Slam tournaments.

Notably, the Brave New World plan also amended ATP rules so that qualifying players were required, under threat of sanctions--suspension, loss of ranking, and loss of ability to earn ranking points--to play all Tier I events, at least four Tier II events, and at least two Tier III events. Further, all qualifying players were also required to play in the year-end Tennis Masters Cup championship. In addition, the Brave New World plan imposed a "Special Events" rule on the top 50 players, prohibiting them from participating in any non-ATP, non-Grand Slam events during the weeks of and surrounding ATP events. As noted, these changes were prompted by the decline in top player participation in ATP tournaments. In turn, ATP increased the tournaments' minimum prize money levels to benefit the players.

The Brave New World plan also spurred significant capital investments in facilities on the part of the tournaments--the Tier I and Tier II tournaments committed to approximately $ 864 million in capital investments. ATP undertook [9] to create a more unified branding approach for the Tour and increased spending on promotion and marketing. It projected a $ 9 million marketing amount for 2009; previous budgets provided for only $ 800,000 in 2005 and 2006, and $ 5 million in 2007 and 2008. It also enhanced pooling for existing broadcast and digital media rights.

In sum, ATP designed the Brave New World plan as a comprehensive plan to address the perceived decline of ATP in the sports and entertainment markets. Concluding that fans desired a better structured Tour, featuring the best players playing against each other more often, ATP decided to simplify the Tour's format and to introduce regulations ensuring top player participation in ATP top-tier tournaments. Both ATP and the member tournaments committed to make investments to improve the quality of the Tour and promote it more effectively. The tournament members agreed to increase the prize money levels to compensate the players for agreeing to play in more top-tier events.

B.

Plaintiff German Tennis Federation promotes tennis in Germany and claims to be the world's largest national tennis federation, with approximately 1.7 million members. It stages an annual clay-court [10] tournament in Hamburg, Germany. From 1990 to 2009, Hamburg tournament was a [*827] Tier I ATP tournament. Under the Brave New World plan, the Hamburg tournament was demoted to Tier II. The overall number of Tier I events remained at nine, with the addition of Shanghai, China. [3] In Tier II, the number of events was increased from nine to eleven. Plaintiff Qatar Tennis Federation was established in Qatar and has owned and operated a Tier III tournament in Doha, Qatar. It also owns a 25% stake in Hamburg tournament.

ATP contends the Hamburg tournament was demoted to Tier II because of its lack of significant investment, a decrease in attendance, unfavorable weather, and the decline of interest in tennis in Germany. ATP asserts that Hamburg tournament can succeed as a Tier II tournament.

[3] The Federations contend that initially the Brave New World plan downgraded the Monte Carlo tournament to Tier II. But after Monte Carlo sued ATP, the parties settled with Monte Carlo having a hybrid status--it awards 1,000 ranking points but is not a mandatory tournament for players.

The Federations sued ATP alleging its adoption of the Brave New World plan violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and constituted [11] a breach of the directors' fiduciary duties. The § 1 claim contended defendants conspired and combined to control the supply of top men's professional tennis players' services, establishing a favored class of tournaments in which top-player participation was mandatory, while precluding other tournaments from competing for such player services. Similarly, the § 2 claim alleged monopolization, attempt to monopolize, and conspiracy to monopolize the market for men's professional tennis players' services. Plaintiffs also asserted the ATP directors' adoption of the Brave New World plan breached their fiduciary duties of due care, loyalty, and good faith owed to the Federations.

The case was tried to a jury. At the close of the Federations' case, the District Court granted ATP's Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a) motions for judgment as a matter of law on all claims of personal liability against the Directors for alleged antitrust violations and breach of fiduciary duties. The court held that personal civil liability for antitrust violations is limited to participation in inherently unlawful acts. The court reasoned that under antitrust law, only per se violations are inherently unlawful. Finding that [12] the alleged conduct could not be classified as classic per se violations, the court concluded that individual directors could not be liable. Addressing the breach of fiduciary duty claims against the Directors, it found the Federations failed to satisfy their initial burden of rebutting the presumption of the business judgment rule by showing the Directors violated any of their fiduciary duties. Accordingly, the District Court granted defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law and dismissed all claims against the individual Directors.

The court then addressed proposed jury instructions. ATP submitted a proposed instruction on the "single entity or enterprise defense," stating that where entities "are commonly controlled or substantially integrated in their operations, they may be considered a 'single entity' or 'single enterprise' under the antitrust laws." The Federations objected, arguing that the instruction misstated the law and created a significant risk of confusion. Overruling the Federations' objections, the District Court gave the "single entity or enterprise defense" jury instruction as proposed by ATP. The court also considered whether the alleged restraints should [13] be analyzed under "quick look" or the full rule of reason analysis. The court instructed the jury on the latter.

[*828] The jury returned a verdict for ATP on all claims. On the Sherman Act § 1 claim, it found the Federations did not prove ATP "entered into contract(s), combination(s) or conspiracy(ies) with any separate entity or entities." And on the Sherman Act § 2 claim, it found the Federations did not establish "the existence of any relevant product market(s) within any geographic market(s)."

The Federations filed a timely appeal of the Sherman Act § 1 claim against ATP and the Directors and the breach of fiduciary duty of loyalty claim against Director Charles Pasarell. Specifically, they contend the District Court erred by instructing the jury on the single entity defense, refusing to instruct the jury to apply "quick look" analysis, and granting defendants' motion for judgment as a matter of law on all claims against the individual Directors. [4]

II.

A.

Even assuming, arguendo, that the District Court erred in instructing the jury on the single entity defense, the Federations could not have succeeded on their Sherman Act § 1 claim because they failed to prove "the existence of any relevant product market(s) within any geographic market(s)." [5] On the § 1 claim, the jury found no concerted action, so it did not reach the issue of relevant market. But on the Sherman Act § 2 claim, the jury did find the Federations failed to prove the existence of a relevant market.

[4] The District Court had subject-matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337 based on claims alleged under Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 and 26, and under 28 U.S.C. § 1367 for supplemental state law claims. We have appellate jurisdiction [14] under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

[5] Because the Federations did not carry their burden of proving a relevant market, we do not need to decide whether the District Court's single entity instruction was given in error. See infra Part III.

The Federations contend that market definition and proof under § 2 differ from those under § 1, arguing that insufficient § 2 market proof does not establish insufficiency under § 1. In Columbia Metal Culvert Co., Inc. v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Corp., 579 F.2d 20 (3d Cir. 1978), we said that "inquiries into the scope of competition under § 1 and § 2 are not precisely the same." Id. at 27 n.11. But in this case, the Federations asserted identical market [15] definitions under §§ 1 and 2, as evidenced by the jury instructions. [6] Cf. Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 724 n.3 (3d Cir. 1991) ("On this record, however, the plaintiffs do not [*829] present a sufficiently close factual issue to demarcate a distinction between product market definitions in section 1 and section 2 cases . . . ."). The jury verdict forms posed the same question regarding proof of the relevant market for the purposes of §§ 1 and 2 claims: "Have Plaintiffs proven by a preponderance of the evidence the existence of a relevant product market within a relevant geographic market?" App. 5, 10, 14, 18. Therefore, the jury's conclusion that the Federations failed to prove a relevant market under § 2 is equally applicable to § 1 analysis. See Fraser v. Major League Soccer, L.L.C., 284 F.3d 47, 59-61 (1st Cir. 2002) (affirming the judgment on § 1 claims based on the jury finding that plaintiffs failed to establish a relevant market under § 2).

B.

The Federations also contend they did not need to prove a relevant market because the District Court should have instructed the jury to conduct a "quick look" analysis, which does not require detailed market analysis. The Federations proposed a "quick look" jury instruction that the alleged restraints caused substantial harm to competition as a matter of law, so that the jury needed only consider "whether the restraint produces countervailing competitive benefits," and if so, "balance [18] the competitive harm against the competitive benefit." App. 451. But the District Court reasoned that "[t]he evidence [presented] could perhaps be evidence of . . . antitrust violations, but only after one engaged in a detailed examination of the industry in question, and furthermore, only after taking the industry in question to be top-tier men's professional tennis, rather than, for example, professional sports or spectator events more generally." Id. at 25. The court concluded that "the plaintiffs failed to show evidence [of acts] that have no purpose except to stifle competition . . . ." Id. Accordingly, the court required the jury to analyze the alleged restraint under full rule of reason principles and rejected the proposed "quick look" instruction. [7] HN1[] Because even beneficial legitimate contracts or combinations restrain trade to some degree, § 1 of the Sherman Act has long been interpreted to prohibit only those contracts or combinations that are "unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions." Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619 (1911). Historically, "[t]hree general standards have emerged for determining whether a business combination unreasonably restraints [19] trade under [§ 1]." United States v. Brown Univ., 5 F.3d 658, 668 (3d Cir. 1993).

[6] Giving the jury an overview of the rule of reason analysis for the purposes of § 1, the court stated: "[Y]ou must first determine whether Plaintiffs have carried their burden to show that any challenged restraint has resulted [16] or is likely to result in a substantial harm to competition in a relevant product or geographic market(s)." App. 257 (Antitrust Jury Instruction 10--Antitrust Claims: Sherman Act Section 1--Rule of Reason--Overview). Explaining the requirement of proof of competitive harm, the court repeated: "[I]t is Plaintiffs' burden to show that the harm to competition occurred in an identified market, known as a 'relevant market.' There are two aspects to a relevant market. The first aspect is known as the relevant product market. The second aspect is known as the relevant geographic market." Id. at 258 (Antitrust Jury Instruction 11--Antitrust Claims: Sherman Act Section 1--Rule of Reason--Proof of Competitive Harm). Closely following the Model Jury Instructions, the court then instructed the jury on the substance of the relevant market inquiry. Id. at 261 (Antitrust Jury Instruction 13--Rule of Reason--Proof of Relevant Market). Later, describing the elements of the monopolization claim under § 2, the court explained: "Plaintiffs must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendants had monopoly power in a relevant market." Id. at 272 (Antitrust Jury Instruction 21--Monopolization: [17] Relevant Market--General). Using the nearly identical language as for the rule of reason instructions, the court continued: "There are two aspects you must consider in determining whether plaintiff has met its burden to prove the relevant market by a preponderance of the evidence. The first is the relevant product market; the second is the relevant geographic market." Id. No relevant market inquiry instructions specific to § 2 claims were proposed or provided. See also ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Model Jury Instructions in Civil Antitrust Cases A-6 (2005) (suggesting that the instruction describing the relevant market for the purposes of § 1 claim incorporate the § 2 relevant market instructions).

Brown, 5 F.3d at 668 (quoting GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 49). The inquiry is whether the restraint at issue "is one that promotes competition or one that suppresses competition." Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978). "The plaintiff bears an initial burden under the rule of reason of showing that the alleged combination or agreement produced adverse, anticompetitive effects [20] within the relevant product and geographic markets." Brown, 5 F.3d at 668. "The plaintiff may satisfy this burden by proving the existence of actual anticompetitive effects," or defendant's market power. Id. "If a plaintiff meets his initial burden of adducing adequate evidence of market power or actual anti-competitive effects, the burden shifts to the defendant to show that the challenged conduct promotes a sufficiently pro-competitive objective." Id. at 669. "To rebut, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the restraint is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective." Id.

HN4[] Some categories of restraints, such as horizontal price-fixing and market allocation agreements among competitors, "because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable." Id. (quoting N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958)). "Such 'plainly anticompetitive' agreements or practices are deemed to be 'illegal per se,'" id. (quoting Prof'l Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 692), without an "elaborate inquiry into the reasonableness of a challenged business practice," id. (quoting Arizona v. Maricopa County Med. Accordingly, the courts are reluctant "to adopt per se rules . . . where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious." State Oil Co., 522 U.S. at 10 (internal quotation marks omitted).

HN5[] "In addition to the traditional rule of reason and the per se rule, courts sometimes apply what amounts to abbreviated or 'quick look' rule of reason analysis." It is "an intermediate standard" and "applies in cases where per se condemnation is inappropriate but where no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitve character of an inherently suspect restraint." Brown, 5 F.3d at 669 [22] (internal quotation marks omitted); see FTC v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 459, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986); NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109 (1984); Prof'l Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 692. In such cases, "an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements [*831] in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets." Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 770, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999). In other words, "quick-look analysis carries the day when the great likelihood of anticompetitive effects can easily be ascertained." Id. Under "quick look" analysis, the competitive harm is presumed, and "the defendant must promulgate 'some competitive justification' for the restraint." Brown, 5 F.3d at 669 (quoting NCAA, 468 U.S. at 110). "If no legitimate justifications are set forth, the presumption of adverse competitive impact prevails and 'the court condemns the practice without ado.'" Id. (quoting Chicago Prof'l Sports Ltd. P'ship v. NBA, 961 F.2d 667, 674 (7th Cir. 1992)). "If the defendant offers sound pro-competitive justifications, however, the court must proceed to weigh the overall reasonableness of the restraint using a full-scale rule of reason analysis." Id.

HN6[] "[T]here is [23] often no bright line separating" the different modes of analysis. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104 n.26. "'There is always something of a sliding scale in appraising reasonableness, but the sliding scale formula deceptively suggests greater precision than we can hope for. . . . Nevertheless, the quality of proof required should vary with the circumstances.'" Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. at 779 (quoting Philip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1507, at 402 (1986)). "[The] categories of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like 'per se,' 'quick look,' and 'rule of reason' tend to make them appear." Id. Regardless of the standard used, the purpose of the inquiry is always to assess the effect of the conduct on competition: "Whether the ultimate finding is the product of a presumption or actual market analysis, the essential inquiry remains the same--whether or not the challenged restraint enhances competition." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104. As the Supreme Court summarized:

> HN7[] [T]here is generally no categorical line to be drawn between restraints that give rise to an intuitively obvious inference of anticompetitive effect and those that call for more detailed treatment. What is required, rather, [24] is an enquiry meet for the case, looking to the circumstances, details, and logic of a restraint. The object is to see whether the experience of the market has been so clear, or necessarily will be, that a confident conclusion about the principal tendency of a restriction will follow from a quick (or at least quicker) look, in place of a more sedulous one.

Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. at 780-781. Thus, the three modes of analysis should be viewed as a single inquiry that, depending on the circumstances, may sometimes be conducted by applying various presumptions. See generally 7 Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1511, at 418 (2d ed. 2000).

C.

The Federations contend that the Brave New World plan "allocates and divides the player services market among horizontal competitors" and "[t]his obviates competition among favored tournaments for the player services vital for success, while making it impossible for other tournaments . . . to compete for such services." Appellant's Br. 48. The Federations allege an output-limiting horizontal restraint. Nevertheless, the per se rule does not apply because for a tennis tour, like other sports leagues, "horizontal restraints on competition [25] are essential if the product is to be available at all." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 101; see also Broad. Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 23, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 [*832] L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979) (rejecting per se treatment "where the agreement on price is necessary to market the product at all"); Worldwide Basketball & Sport Tours, Inc. v. NCAA, 388 F.3d 955, 959 (6th Cir. 2004) ("Because there is no doubt that horizontal restraints are necessary to make the kind of league competition at issue available, the rule of reason applies."); Law v. NCAA, 134 F.3d 1010, 1019 (10th Cir. 1998) ("[C]ourts consistently have analyzed challenged conduct under the rule of reason when dealing with an industry in which some horizontal restraints are necessary for the availability of a product . . . .").

Under "quick look," the rationale for presuming competitive harm without detailed market analysis is that the anticompetitive effects on markets and consumers are obvious. Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. at 770. Although the Federations contended the Brave New World Plan restrained the "top player services" market, the definition of the relevant market was one of the most contested issues at trial--so much so that after all the evidence was presented [26] the District Court saw the bounds of the relevant market as "ambiguous." App. 25. Because "the contours of the market" here are not "sufficiently well known or defined to permit the court to ascertain without the aid of extensive market analysis whether the challenged practice impairs competition," "quick look" is not appropriate and proof of relevant market is required under full-scale rule of reason. Worldwide Basketball & Sport Tours, 388 F.3d at 961.

Further, HN8[] even where anticompetitive effects are obvious, "quick look" condemnation is proper only after assessing and rejecting the logic of proffered procompetitive justifications. Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. at 771; see N. Tex. Speciality Physicians v. FTC, 528 F.3d 346, 362 (5th Cir. 2008). Although competitive harm is initially presumed under "quick look," "[i]f the defendant offers sound procompetitive justifications, . . . the court must proceed to weigh the overall reasonableness of the restraint using a full-scale rule of reason analysis." Brown, 5 F.3d at 669; see also Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. 756, 771, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999) (holding that full rule of reason analysis was required where challenged restraint "might plausibly be thought to have a net [27] procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition"); Bogan v. Hodgkins, 166 F.3d 509, 514 n.6 (2d Cir. 1999) (observing that courts must apply the full rule of reason once defendant has introduced "sound allegations of procompetitive benefit"). Where procompetitive justifications are proffered, their logic must be assessed and rejected in order to avoid reverting to full-scale rule of reason analysis. "[T]he burden remains on the challenger to demonstrate that the proffered procompetitive effect does not plausibly result in 'a net procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition.'" N. Tex. Speciality Physicians, 528 F.3d at 362 (quoting Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. at 771). "If, after examining the competing claims of anti-and procompetitive effects, it remains plausible that the net effect is procompetitive or that there is no effect on competition, then "[t]he obvious anticompetitive effect that triggers abbreviated analysis has not been shown." Id. (quoting Cal. Dental, 526 U.S. at 778); see also 11 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1911c, at 305 (2d ed. 2005) (explaining that when defendant offers preliminary evidence suggesting that the challenged restraint [28] is justified, and the court finds such evidence plausible, the restraint must be "subjected to general rule of reason analysis requiring full consideration of power and anticompetitive effects").

[*833] ATP proffered evidence of procompetitive justifications for the Brave New World plan. The plan was developed to make the ATP Tour more competitive with other spectator sports and entertainment products by improving the quality and consistency of its top-tier events. The modifications to the tour calendar, increase of investment, higher payments to players, and expanded geographic reach were all designed to improve the Tour. Such rules and regulations can be procompetitive where they enhance the "character and quality of the 'product.'" NCAA, 468 U.S. at 102.

In fact, the Federations seem to concede that ATP offered procompetitive justifications. But they would have the jury balance the proffered procompetitive justification against the presumed anticompetitive harm. They argue that under "quick look," the jury's inquiry "starts from the premise--already determined by the court as a matter of law--that the restraint's anticompetitive effect is evident without need for detailed market analysis, [29] requiring no proof by plaintiff of market definition or power." Appellant's Reply Br. 7. The Federations misapprehend the reasonableness analysis. HN9[] Once a defendant comes forward with plausible procompetitive justification for the challenged restraint, the "quick look" presumption disappears and the overall reasonableness of the restraint is assessed using a full-scale rule of reason analysis. Brown, 5 F.3d at 669. HN10[] "The application of the quick look analysis is a question of law to be determined by the court," and therefore the concept of "quick look" has no application to jury inquiry. ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Model Jury Instructions in Civil Antitrust Cases A-8 n.2 (2005). The jury was properly instructed to analyze the alleged restraints under the rule of reason, and their finding that the Federations failed to prove the relevant market defeats the Sherman Act § 1 claim. [8]

III.

On the Sherman Act § 1 claim, the jury also found the Federations did not prove [*834] that ATP entered into "contract(s), combination(s) or conspiracy(ies) with any separate entity or entities." In other words, the jury did not find the requisite concerted action to support a § 1 claim. The Federations assert the jury reached this conclusion based on the "single entity or enterprise defense" instruction, which allowed the jury to find that defendants' actions

[8] The Federations also appeal the District Court's grant of judgment as a matter of law on all antitrust liability claims against individual ATP directors. Relying on Murphy Tugboat Co. v. Shipowners & Merchs. Towboat Co., 467 F. Supp. 841 (N.D. Cal. 1979), aff'd sub nom. Murphy Tugboat Co. v. Crowley, 658 F.2d 1256 (9th Cir. 1981), [30] the District Court held "that civil liability for antitrust violations is limited to participation in inherently unlawful acts, that is, [] per se violation[s] of antitrust law." App. 24. It concluded that "the evidence [in this case] shows the individuals' conduct was not the type of inherently wrongful activity that gives rise to personal liability under antitrust law," but "seem[s] within or at least bordering that gray area of socially acceptable economically justifiable business conduct that the law, in fact, permits." Id. at 25.

The Federations argue that the District Court's limitation of directors' personal liability to per se antitrust violations is legally incorrect. We question the persuasive value of Murphy Tugboat. *See, e.g., Monarch Marking Sys., Inc. v. Duncan Parking Meter Maint. Co., No. 82 C 2599, 1986 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28261, 1986 WL 3625, at 2 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 13, 1986); Gregory Walker, Note, The Personal Liability of Corporate Officers in Private Actions Under the Sherman Act: Murphy Boat in Distress, 55 Fordham L. Rev. 909 (1987) (criticizing Murphy Tugboat approach to corporate officers' personal liability for antitrust violations). But we need not decide whether the District Court erred in [31] imposing a limitation on directors' personal liability and dismissing the antitrust claims against them. Because the Federations could not sustain their antitrust claims and failed to prove an antitrust violation, they would not be able to sustain the same claim against the Directors. Therefore, even assuming the District Court erred in granting summary judgment on the antitrust claims against the directors, plaintiffs cannot prevail on these claims.

were undertaken as a single entity, instead of as independent actors. The Federations contend the instruction misstated the law and thus was given in error. [9]

To [32] prevail under § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must first establish a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy." Section 1 applies only to concerted action and does not proscribe independent action by a single entity, regardless of its purpose and effect on competition. *Am. Needle, Inc. v. NFL, No. 08-661, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4166, 2010 WL 2025207, at 5 (U.S. May 24, 2010); Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984). [10]

Under Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984), in certain cases, distinct legal entities are incapable of concerted action for the purposes of § 1 and must be viewed as a single entity. [11] Although Copperweld did not set clear parameters for what constitutes a single economic entity beyond the parent-subsidiary context, "it nonetheless encouraged the courts to analyze the substance, not the form, of economic arrangements." [12] Siegel Transfer, Inc. v. Carrier Express, Inc., 54 F.3d 1125, 1132 (3d Cir. 1995); see *Am. Needle, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4166, 2010 WL 2025207, at 8 ("As Copperweld exemplifies, [33] 'substance, not form, should determine whether a[n] . . . entity is capable of conspiring under § 1.'" (quoting Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 773 n.21)). Courts have applied the single-entity concept to [*835] joint ventures of separately owned entities. In determining whether Copperweld applies to joint ventures, courts have focused primarily on whether the venture "bring[s] together the economic power of actors which were previously pursuing divergent interests and goals." [13] Siegel Transfer, 54 F.3d at 1137. "The key is whether the alleged 'contract, combination . . ., or conspiracy' is concerted action--that is, whether it joins together separate decisionmakers." *Am. Needle, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4166, 2010 WL 2025207, at 8. "The relevant inquiry, therefore, is whether there is a 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy' amongst separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, such that the agreement deprives the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking, and therefore of diversity of entrepreneurial interests, and thus of actual or potential competition." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). Indisputably, joint ventures can be economically beneficial. But "the fact that joint venturers [34] pursue

[10] Independent action by a single entity can still be scrutinized under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 205 (3d Cir. 1992).

[11] In Copperweld, the Supreme Court held that "the coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single [35] enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act." 467 U.S. at 771. The Court reasoned that § 1 scrutiny is not justified because "[a] parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest," and when they agree to a course of action, "there is no sudden joining of economic resources that had previously served different interests." Id. The antitrust laws treat concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior because "[c]oncerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk." Id. at 768-69. Concerted action "deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes and demands." Id. at 769. But although parent and wholly owned subsidiaries are distinct corporate entities and independent legal persons, they nevertheless compose a single economic entity for antitrust scrutiny because "[t]hey share a common purpose," id. at 771. Since they always have a "unity of purpose or a common design," id., they are "incapable of conspiring with each other for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act," id. at 777.

[12] Courts have extended Copperweld to situations involving sibling-subsidiaries of the same parent corporation, see Eichorn v. AT&T Corp., 248 F.3d 131 (3d Cir. 2001), [36] subsidiaries owned by the same co-owners who maintained control over them, see Century Oil Tool, Inc. v. Prod. Specialties, 737 F.2d 1316 (5th Cir. 1984), and franchisors and franchisees, see Williams v. I.B. Fischer Nev., 999 F.2d 445 (9th Cir. 1993).

Kennel Club, Inc., 407 F.3d 1027, 1035 (9th Cir. 2005)* (holding that a national club and its regional affiliates were incapable of conspiring as separate entities because they were not competitors and maintained an economic unity); City of Mt. Pleasant v. Associated Elec. Coop., 838 F.2d 268 (8th Cir. 1988) (holding that a rural electrical cooperative consisting of three tiers of cooperatives with interlocking ownership was a single entity because member cooperatives shared a common goal of providing low-cost electricity).

the common interests of the whole is generally not enough, by itself, to render them a single entity." Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 322 F.3d 1133, 1148 (9th Cir. 2003). "[A] commonality of interest exists in every cartel." Id. (quoting L.A. Mem'l Coliseum v. NFL, 726 F.2d 1381, 1389 (9th Cir. 1984)). The formalities should not detract from the necessity to examine the economic realities of the restraints imposed on competition by a joint venture. See *Am. Needle, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4166, 2010 WL 2025207, at 6 ("[W]e have eschewed such formalistic distinctions in favor of a functional consideration of how the parties involved in the alleged anticompetitive conduct actually operate."). The focus of the inquiry under § 1 of the Sherman Act centers on diminution of competition that would otherwise exist. *Id. at 8. When the agreement joins together independent centers of decisionmaking, "the entities are capable of conspiring under § 1, and the court must decide whether the restraint of trade is an unreasonable and therefore illegal one." *Id. at 9.

B.

At trial, ATP contended it constitutes a single enterprise, and under Copperweld, its internal decisions cannot violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. It asserted each of its tournament members is dependent on the others to produce a common product--a marketable annual professional tennis tour that competes with other forms of entertainment, within and without the [37] sports arena. ATP maintained its members do not compete but instead cooperate to produce the Tour, and its adoption of the Brave New World plan was the core activity of producing this product. For their part, the Federations contended ATP operates in the market for top tier men's professional tennis players, and individual tournaments compete to attract top players. They asserted the Brave New World plan was an agreement unreasonably restraining trade in this alleged market. Both parties presented expert testimony. The District Court concluded "there [were] at least underlying facts that [were] critical to" a determination of "whether the ATP and its members function as a single business entity," and that these facts are "beyond [the] Court's purview and in need [*836] of attention by a jury." App. 36. Accordingly, the court gave the jury ATP's proposed single enterprise instruction.

C.

In the context of the professional sports industry, courts have historically subjected sports leagues to antitrust scrutiny under § 1 of the Sherman Act. In NCAA v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984), decided eight days after Copperweld, the Supreme Court considered a § 1 challenge to the NCAA's restrictions [38] on member institutions' ability to enter into separate contracts to televise their football games. The Court acknowledged that "a certain degree of cooperation is necessary" to preserve the "type of competition that [the NCAA] and its member institutions seek to market." Id. at 117. But the Court concluded that because the challenged plan "prevent[ed] member institutions from competing against each other," they had "created a horizontal restraint--an agreement among competitors on the way in which they will compete with one another." Id. at 99. After analyzing the reasonableness of the alleged restraint, the Court held it violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 120.

Many other courts have resisted single entity arguments involving sports industries. [14] But the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Chicago Professional Sports Limited Partnership v. NBA, 95 F.3d 593 (7th Cir. 1996) ("Bulls NFL, 34 F.3d 1091, 1099 (1st Cir.1994)* [40] (refusing to hold as a matter of law that the NFL is a single entity under Copperweld); L.A. Mem'l Coliseum Comm'n v. NFL, 726 F.2d 1381, 1388-89 (9th Cir. 1984) (rejecting the NFL's argument for single entity treatment because "[w]hile the NFL clubs have certain common purposes . . . NFL policies are not set by one individual or parent corporation, but by the separate teams acting jointly"); Mid-South Grizzlies v. NFL, 720 F.2d 772, 778, 787 (3d Cir. 1983) (describing ways in which NFL teams compete with each other); *N. Am. Soccer League v. II"), suggested that a sports league can sometimes be viewed as a single entity for antitrust purposes. Id. at 598 ("We see no reason why a sports league cannot be treated as a single firm . . . ."). The court concluded that Copperweld's rule is not limited to the circumstances where cooperating [39] parties have a "complete unity of interest." Id. Recognizing that whether the NBA "is more like a single firm . . . or like a joint venture . . . is a tough question" because "it has characteristics of both," the court concluded that "the league looks more or less like a firm depending on which facet of the business one examines." Id. at 599. "From the perspective of fans and advertisers . . . 'NBA Basketball' is one product from a single source," "[b]ut from the perspective of college basketball players who seek to sell their skills, the teams are [*837] distinct," and "the league looks more like a group of firms acting as a monopsony." Id. Remanding to the district court for determination of the issue, the court observed: "Sports are sufficiently diverse that it is essential to investigate their organization and ask Copperweld's functional question one league at a time--and perhaps one facet of a league at a time . . . ." Id. at 600.

The parties in Bulls II settled after the case was remanded, but the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit revisited the issue in American Needle, Inc. v. NFL, 538 F.3d 736 (7th Cir. 2008), rev'd, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4166, 2010 WL 2025207 (U.S. May 24, 2010). Guided by principles enunciated in Bulls II, the court affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment for the NFL on a claim stemming from its practice of centralized licensing of intellectual property. Id. at 744 (concluding "the NFL teams are best described as a single source of economic power when promoting NFL football though licensing the teams' intellectual property"). But the Supreme Court reversed, finding the court's reasoning unpersuasive. *2010 U.S. LEXIS 4166, 2010 WL 2025207, at 10. The Court observed that each of the teams in the NFL is a "substantial, independently owned, and independently managed business." *Id. at 9. The Court further noted [42] the NFL teams "compete with one another, not only on the playing field, but to attract fans, for gate receipts and for contracts with managerial and playing personnel." Id. Specifically relevant to the case, the Court found "the teams compete in the market for intellectual property." *Id. at 9. Therefore, the Court concluded "[d]ecisions by NFL teams to license their separately owned trademarks collectively and to only one vendor are decisions 'that depriv[e] the marketplace of independent centers of decisionmaking,' and therefore of actual or potential competition." Id. (quoting Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 770).

Similarly, the agreement among the ATP's tournament members in the Brave New World Plan might have deprived the marketplace of potential competition. Professional sports teams or tournaments always have an interest in obtaining the best players possible. Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996). The record in this case indicates that the individual tennis tournaments traditionally compete for player talent. An agreement restricting this competition should not necessarily be immune from § 1 scrutiny merely because the tournaments cooperate in various aspects of producing [43] the ATP Tour. "The justification for cooperation is not relevant to whether that cooperation is concerted or independent action." *Am. Needle, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4166, 2010 WL 2025207, at 11. The necessity of cooperation does not "transform[] concerted action into independent action." Id. "The mere fact that the teams operate jointly in some sense does not mean that they are immune." Id.

But we need not decide whether the single enterprise instruction was given in error. As noted, even if the jury had found concerted action, the Federations' antitrust claims still fail because they did not satisfy their burden of proving a relevant market. [15]

Supp. 771, 778 (D. Md. 1994) (holding that the PGA could not conspire with its regional [41] sections as a matter of law), aff'd in relevant part, 52 F.3d 322 (4th Cir. 1995) (Table); NFL v. N. Am. Soccer League, 459 U.S. 1074, 1077, 103 S. Ct. 499, 74 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1982) (Rehnquist J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (arguing that the NFL is a single entity because it "competes as a unit against other forms of entertainment").

[15] In American Needle, the Supreme Court emphasized that "teams that need to cooperate are not trapped by antitrust law," *id. at 12, because "'[t]he special characteristics of this industry may provide a justification' for many kinds of agreements." Id. (quoting Brown, 518 U.S. at 252). "When 'restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all,' per se rules of illegality are inapplicable, and instead the restraint must be judged according to the flexible Rule of Reason." Id. (quoting NCAA, 468 U.S. at 101). As we explained supra Part II.C, [44] given the circumstances of this case, the District Court correctly instructed the jury to evaluate the alleged restraints under the full rule of reason.

In their complaint, the Federations asserted claims of breach of fiduciary duties of loyalty, due care, and good faith against six individual directors of ATP, all of whom voted in favor of the Brave New World plan. The District Court granted ATP's motion for judgment as a matter of law on these claims. The Federations appeal the judgment only in relation to their claim of breach of duty of loyalty by Director Charles Pasarell. Notably, they do not appeal the judgment in relation to their breach of fiduciary duty claims against the other five directors.

As noted, ATP is governed by a seven-member Board of Directors--three elected by tournament members, each representing a geographic region ("Tournament Representatives"), three elected by player members ("Player Representatives"), and a Chairman/President. Section 12.9 of ATP's Bylaws requires certain corporate actions to be approved by two affirmative votes of both the three Tournament Representatives and the three Player Representatives. The Brave New World plan required such an [45] approval. The European Tournament Representative, Zejlko Franulovic, voted against most provisions of the Brave New World plan, citing concerns about restrictions on competition. Accordingly, the votes of the other two Tournament Representatives were necessary for adoption of the Brave New World plan.

Director Pasarell served as a Tournament Representative from 1990. At the same time, he also was employed as Tournament Director of the Indian Wells Masters Series Event and held a 24% ownership in the Indian Wells tournament. Indian Wells is a tournament member of ATP. The Federations claimed that his vote in favor of the Brave New World plan constituted a breach of duty of loyalty because it was self-interested.

The District Court rejected the Federations' argument, concluding that they failed to rebut the business judgment rule presumption with sufficient evidence that Pasarell was materially self-interested in the Brave New World transaction. The District Court observed that although Pasarell, like other tournament owners, stood to benefit from any projected success of the Brave New World plan, Indian Wells was already among the most financially successful tournaments, and did not need [46] the Brave New World plan to make money. Further, the court also held that the other directors were not materially self-interested and the Federations do not appeal that finding.

B.

HN11[] Under Delaware law, the business judgment rule "is a presumption that in making a business decision the directors of a corporation acted on an informed basis, in good faith and in the honest belief that the action taken was in the best interests of the company." Aronson v. Lewis, 473 A.2d 805, 812 (Del. 1984), overruled on other grounds by Brehm v. Eisner, 746 A.2d 244 (Del. 2000). Thus, "[t]he burden is on the party challenging the decision to establish facts rebutting the presumption." Id. The business judgment rule presumption can be rebutted by establishing "that the board was either interested in the outcome of the transaction or lacked the independence to consider objectively whether the transaction was in the best interest of its company and all of its shareholders." *Orman v. Cullman, 794 A.2d 5, 22 [839] (Del. Ch. 2002). [16] "To establish that a board was interested[,] . . . a plaintiff must allege facts as to the interest . . . of the individual members of that board." Id. Thus, a plaintiff must normally [47] demonstrate "that a majority of the director defendants have a financial interest in the transaction . . . ." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Malpiede v. Townson, 780 A.2d 1075, 1084-85 (Del.

[16] The presumption can also be rebutted by showing that "one or more directors less than a majority of those voting" suffers from a material and disabling interest and that "the interested director controls or dominates the board as a whole or [that] the interested director fail[ed] to disclose his interest in the transaction to the board and a reasonable board member would have regarded the existence of the material [48] interest as a significant fact in the evaluation of the proposed transaction." Cinerama, Inc. v. Technicolor, Inc., 663 A.2d 1156, 1168 (Del. 1995) ("Technicolor III") (alteration in original) (quoting Cinerama, Inc. v. Technicolor, Inc., 663 A.2d 1134, 1153 (Del. Ch. 1994)); see also In re Transkaryotic Therapies, Inc., 954 A.2d 346, 363 (Del. Ch. 2008). Because the Federations do not allege Pasarell controlled the ATP Board or failed to disclose his interest in Indian Wells, the only issue relevant to this appeal is whether the Board as a whole was interested and/or lacked independence. See Orman, 794 A.2d at 23.

2001) (concluding that the claim of breach of fiduciary duty of loyalty was insufficient because it alleged self-interest of only one director); Brehm v. Eisner, 746 A.2d 244, 257 (Del. 2000) (determining whether a majority of the board was disinterested and independent); Cinerama, Inc. v. Technicolor, Inc., 663 A.2d 1156, 1168 (Del. 1995) ("Technicolor III") (affirming Court of Chancery determination that "if actual self-interest is present and affects a majority of directors approving a transaction, the entire fairness standard applies" (emphasis added)).

C.

The Federations cannot prevail on their claim of breach of duty of loyalty because they failed to rebut the business judgment rule presumption. The District Court found that Pasarell was not materially self-interested in his Brave New World vote. HN12[] The Delaware Supreme Court has defined "interest" to "mean[] that directors can neither appear on both sides of a transaction nor expect to derive any personal financial benefit from it in the sense of self-dealing, as opposed to a benefit which devolves upon the corporation or all stockholders generally." Aronson, 473 A.2d at 812. [49] "[I]n the absence of self-dealing, it is not enough to establish the interest of a director by alleging that he received any benefit not equally shared by the stockholders. Such benefit must be alleged to be material to that director." [17] Orman, 794 A.2d at 23 (citing Cede & Co. v. Technicolor, Inc., 634 A.2d 345, 363 (Del. 1993), modified, 636 A.2d 956 ("Technicolor II")). "Materiality means that the alleged benefit was significant enough 'in the context of the director's economic circumstances, as to have made it improbable that the director could perform her fiduciary duties to the . . . shareholders without [*840] being influenced by her overriding personal interest.'" Id. (omission in original) (quoting In re Gen. Motors Class H S'holders Litig., 734 A.2d 611, 617 (Del. Ch. 1999)). "In determining the sufficiency of factual allegations made by a plaintiff as to . . . a director's interest . . . the Delaware Supreme Court . . . requires the application of a subjective 'actual person' standard to determine whether a particular director's interest is material and debilitating . . . ." Id. at 24 (quoting Technicolor III, 663 A.2d at 1167).

Pasarell was not materially self-interested because he did not stand to obtain any unique benefits from the Brave New World plan. HN13[] "A director is considered interested where he or she will receive a personal financial benefit from a transaction that is not equally shared by the stockholders." Rales v. Blasband, 634 A.2d 927, 936 (Del. 1993); see also Aronson, 473 A.2d at 812. The Brave New World plan was designed to benefit [51] all the ATP top tier tournaments--Pasarell's supposed benefits from the Brave New World plan were not unique. Moreover, Pasarell's alleged interest could not be subjectively material because the evidence showed that Indian Wells was already doing well financially, attracting top tennis players before the Brave New World plan was adopted. Therefore, the alleged benefit was not "significant enough in the context of the director's economic circumstances" to interfere with Pasarell's ability to perform his fiduciary duties "without being influenced by [his] overriding personal interest." In re Gen. Motors Class H S'holders Litig., 734 A.2d at 617. Because the Federations failed to show Pasarell was self-interested, his vote is entitled to the protection of the business judgment rule. [18]

[17] The materiality requirement is not applicable to [50] cases involving "classic self-dealing" where a director "stand[s] on both sides of a transaction." HMG/Courtland Props., Inc. v. Gray, 749 A.2d 94, 113-115 (Del. Ch. 1999). Although the Federations label Pasarell's vote as "self-dealing" instead of "self-interested," such characterization is misleading because Pasarell's Brave New World vote did not involve Indian Wells transacting with ATP. Pasarell's financial stake in Indian Wells was not "antithetic to the corporate interest in a . . . proposed course of action." 1 David A. Drexler et al., Delaware Corporation Law and Practice § 15.05[1]. The Federations allege that Pasarell received a special benefit. Thus, they must show materiality of the interest to rebut the business judgment rule presumption. See generally id.

[18] Further, regardless of whether Pasarell's vote was materially self-interested, to rebut the business judgment rule presumption, the Federations would need to show that the ATP Board was materially self-interested. But because the Federations do not now dispute that the remaining five directors, who voted for the Brave New World plan, were not materially self-interested, the disinterested directors made [52] up the majority of the Board (six out of seven) and the majority of directors voting to approve the Brave New World plan (five out of six). Therefore, the Federations cannot establish that the majority of the ATP directors were materially self-interested. The Federations emphasize that the Brave New World plan could not have been adopted without Pasarell's vote. They argue that the disinterested majority rule should not apply here because the ATP Bylaws' "super-majority" voting provisions made simple majority approval insufficient to adopt the Brave New World plan.

For these reasons, we will affirm the jury verdict for defendants on the Sherman Act § 1 claim, and the District Court's judgment as a matter of law for defendant Pasarell on the breach of fiduciary duty of loyalty claim.

Because we hold the District Court was correct in its finding that Pasarell was not self-interested, we do not need to decide how the super-majority voting provisions might affect the self-interest inquiry. However, we note that the Delaware Supreme Court has previously addressed a similar issue. In Technicolor III, the corporation's certificate of incorporation included a provision which could be repealed with a recommendation made through a unanimous vote of qualified directors. 663 A.2d at 1170-71. The directors voted unanimously to recommend repealing the provision, but one of the directors was found to have been interested, [53] and plaintiffs argued that the transaction was therefore voidable. The Delaware Supreme Court affirmed the Court of Chancery's conclusion that the unanimity provision in the charter "should not be construed to include an implied exclusion of interested directors from eligibility to participate in the unanimous vote." Id. at 1171. Similarly, Pasarell's necessary vote, even if materially interested, is not excluded by the super-majority provision of the ATP Bylaws. The provision states that "two affirmative votes of the Tournament Tour Board Representatives plus two affirmative votes of the Player Tour Board Representatives" are required. App. 2692. Like the provisions in Technicolor III, the bylaws here do not require exclusion of the interested votes, and Technicolor III suggests that no such exclusion can be implied. But although in Technicolor III the board's actions were examined under the business judgment rule and found not to have breached the duty of loyalty, neither the Court of Chancery nor the Delaware Supreme Court explicitly stated that the super-majority voting requirement does not affect the applicability of the business judgment rule presumption. As noted, because Pasarell [54] was not self-interested, we do not need to decide this issue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Summary judgment is appropriate where there are no genuine issues of material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Where reasonable minds will not differ as to an issue of material fact, the court may properly grant summary judgment. All reasonable inferences are construed in favor of the non-moving party. Summary judgment is reviewed on appeal de novo.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN2[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

New Mexico courts, unlike federal courts, view summary judgment with disfavor, preferring a trial on the merits. Federal courts, on the other hand, following the "Celotex trilogy," have become more inclined to grant summary judgment and substantially increased the availability of summary judgment and encouraged greater use of the motion by trial courts. The Celotex trilogy favored greater use of summary judgment and gave strong rhetorical support to summary judgment as a means of case management and resolution.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

The New Mexico Supreme Court continues to refuse to loosen the reins of summary judgment, as doing so would turn what is a summary proceeding into a full-blown paper trial on the merits. The supreme court does not wish to grant trial courts greater authority to grant summary judgment than has been traditionally available in New Mexico. Permitting trial courts a license to quantify or analyze the evidence in a given case under whatever standard may apply would adversely impact the jury system and infringe on the jury's function as the trier of fact and the true arbiter of the credibility of witnesses. By the supreme court's refusal to align our state's approach with that of the federal courts, it does not intend to imply that summary judgment is never appropriate.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN4[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

In New Mexico, summary judgment may be proper when the moving party has met its initial burden of establishing a prima facie case for summary judgment. By a prima facie showing is meant such evidence as is sufficient in law to raise a presumption of fact or establish the fact in question unless rebutted. Once this prima facie showing has been made, the burden shifts to the non-movant to demonstrate the existence of specific evidentiary facts which would require trial on the merits. A party may not simply argue that such evidentiary facts might exist, nor may it rest upon the allegations of the complaint. Rather, the party opposing the summary judgment motion must adduce evidence to justify a trial on the issues. Such evidence adduced must result in reasonable inferences. An inference is not a supposition or a conjecture, but is a logical deduction from facts proved and guess work is not a substitute therefor. When disputed facts do not support reasonable inferences, they cannot serve as a basis for denying summary judgment. Only when the inferences are reasonable is summary judgment inappropriate.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN5[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Materiality of Facts

In addition to requiring reasonable inferences, New Mexico law requires that the alleged facts at issue be material to survive summary judgment. To determine which facts are material, the court must look to the substantive law governing the dispute. The inquiry's focus should be on whether, under substantive law, the fact is necessary to give rise to a claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

As substantive law is the filter through which the New Mexico Supreme Court applies summary judgment, and to construe state law in harmony with federal law, N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-15, the supreme court must first undertake an analysis of substantive federal antitrust law. To establish a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must be able to show: (1) concerted action, (2) by two or more persons, (3) which unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. It is important to note that Section 1 is not violated when the alleged conspirators act independently. The essence of a Section 1 claim is the existence of an agreement. Unilateral action simply does not support liability; there must be a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful agreement. Concerted action is established where two or more distinct entities have agreed to take action against the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN7[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Contrary to most markets, it is not always obvious whether firms in an oligopoly have acted independently. Firms in a concentrated market might in effect share monopoly power, setting their prices at a profit-maximizing, supracompetitive level by recognizing their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions. An oligopolist's price and output decisions will have a noticeable impact on the market and on its rivals. For example, in a market served by three large companies, each firm must know that if it reduces its price and increases its sales at the expense of its rivals, they will notice the sales loss, identify the cause, and probably respond. Because of their mutual awareness, oligopolists' decisions may be interdependent although arrived at independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Where there are very few sellers (firms) within a market, the actions of one seller will have a noticeable effect on the actions taken by the other sellers. The other sellers may perform a cost-benefit analysis and react to the actions of the leader, producing results similar to an unlawful price-fixing agreement, but actually resulting from lawful, independent action. This tacit collusion or independent conduct describes the process, not in itself unlawful, by which firms in a concentrated market might in effect share monopoly power, setting their prices at a profit-maximizing, supracompetitive level by recognizing their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions. In an oligopolistic setting, the distinction between lawful, independent conduct and illegal conduct is most at issue when circumstantial evidence is used to prove the existence of an agreement to fix prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Circumstantial Evidence

HN9[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

To prove a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, plaintiffs can produce direct or circumstantial evidence of an illegal agreement to fix prices. Direct evidence of such an agreement is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted. In contrast, circumstantial evidence necessarily requires that inferences be drawn. While direct evidence, the proverbial smoking-gun, is generally the most compelling means by which a plaintiff can make out his or her claim, it is also frequently difficult for antitrust plaintiffs to come by.

HN10[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

As a result of the need to draw inferences from circumstantial evidence and the likelihood that parallel conduct in an oligopoly stems from lawful, independent conduct, federal courts require antitrust plaintiffs to present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Without requiring such a showing, pro-competitive conduct, the conduct that the antitrust laws are designed to protect, may be deterred. Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy and plaintiffs must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed them.

HN11[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

As a result of the limited inferences that can be drawn from circumstantial evidence and the interdependent nature of an oligopoly, the plaintiffs must present more than evidence of parallel pricing to prove the existence of an agreement between the defendants to fix prices. Although parallel business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement, it falls short of conclusively establishing agreement or itself constituting a Sherman Act offense. Evidence of parallel pricing without more is inherently ambiguous in the oligopolistic setting because there are so many different means, lawful and unlawful, by which parallel pricing can be achieved.

HN12[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

It is the judge's duty to review the evidence presented by the plaintiffs and make a threshold legal determination as to whether it tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently. If the evidence offered by the plaintiff is ambiguous and can equally lead to the conclusion that the alleged conduct was the result of independent action as opposed to illegal conduct, the plaintiff has failed to establish a genuine issue of material fact that there was a conspiracy.

HN13[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

To assist in determining which evidence would tend to exclude independent action, federal courts have created "plus factors." Any showing that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action can qualify as a plus factor. These plus factors remove the plaintiff's evidence from the realm of equipoise and render that evidence more probative of conspiracy than of conscious parallelism. In determining whether evidence constitutes a plus factor, i.e., tends to exclude independent conduct, the court should consider the following: If a benign explanation for the action is equally or more plausible than a collusive explanation, the action cannot constitute a plus factor, the evidence presented by the plaintiffs must be economically sensible or plaintiffs must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim. In addition, a showing that the defendants' behavior would not be reasonable or explicable (i.e. not in their legitimate economic self-interest) if they were not conspiring to fix prices or otherwise restrain trade also constitutes a plus factor. The requirement of tending to exclude independent conduct necessarily requires that the court view the plaintiffs' evidence in light of the defendants' evidence to determine whether the plaintiffs' evidence tends to exclude the possibility that defendants were acting independently.

HN14[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The phrase "plus factors" refers simply to the additional facts or factors required to be proved as a prerequisite to finding that parallel action amounts to a conspiracy. Whether the courts want to call them plus factors or not, the requirement that the plaintiffs tend to exclude independent conduct does not change.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN15[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

The New Mexico Antitrust Act states that every contract, agreement, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, any part of which trade or commerce is within this state, is unlawful, N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-1. To prove a cause of action under the Antitrust Act the Legislature requires that the Antitrust Act shall be construed in harmony with judicial interpretations of the federal antitrust laws. This construction shall be made to achieve uniform application of the state and federal laws prohibiting restraints of trade and monopolistic practices, N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-15. It is therefore the duty of the courts to ensure that New Mexico antitrust law does not deviate substantially from federal interpretations of antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN16[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Material facts are those necessary to give rise to a claim, and to give rise to a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim, evidence that tends to exclude independent action by the defendants is necessary to show that there was an unlawful agreement. The United States Supreme Court has explicitly stated that when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. Without this showing, an essential element of the conspiracy claim is absent and there can be no issue of material fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN17[] Sherman Act, Claims

The inadequacy of showing parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market, and that plus factors are the tool for reviewing the evidence presented. The requirement that only reasonable inferences can be drawn from ambiguous evidence is a substantive component of federal antitrust law, and that Plaintiffs must present evidence tending to exclude independent conduct to ensure uniform application of federal and state laws, N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN18[] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Sherman Act

Retail pricing is influenced by so many variables that the cigarette oligopoly cannot exert collective control over it through independent conduct. Cigarette wholesalers, who buy direct from cigarette manufacturers at wholesale list prices, set prices for retailers, who then set retail prices for consumers. All levels of pricing are affected by various manufacturer discounts and promotions. Therefore, to coordinate in an effective manner at the retail level the cigarette companies would have been required, without communicating, to establish parallel practices with respect to each of these variables, many of which, like consumer stickers or coupons, were difficult to monitor. This complexity explains why independent conduct is an improbable means of coordinating parallel retail pricing and why Brooke Group suggests that independent conduct should be rejected as a likely explanation in that circumstance. This conclusion, however, cannot be logically extended to wholesale list prices, which are simply determined by the manufacturers. It would be unreasonable to draw conclusions about the existence of tacit coordination or supracompetitive pricing from data that reflect only list prices, because in an oligopoly setting price competition is most likely to take place through less observable and less regulable means than list prices.

[*284] [*717] CHAVEZ, Justice.

[1] In this class action lawsuit, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants engaged in an agreement to fix the [*2] price of cigarettes from 1993 to 2000. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of Defendants, because although Plaintiffs offered evidence of parallel pricing, they failed to establish a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether any evidence, in addition to the parallel pricing, tended to exclude independent conduct on Defendants' part, as required by federal substantive law. On appeal, the Court of Appeals [285] [*718] rejected the federal "plus factor" approach, and instead held that Plaintiffs could prove a conspiracy by parallel conduct alone, as long as independent conduct was an implausible explanation. Romero v. Philip Morris, Inc.,

2009-NMCA-22, PP 24, 44, 2009 NMCA 22, 145 N.M. 658, 203 P.3d 873. The Court of Appeals also concluded that when looking at the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, a genuine issue of material fact existed, therefore precluding summary judgment. Id. PP 43-44. Romero v. Philip Morris Inc., 2009-NMCERT-2, 145 N.M. 705, 204 P.3d 30.

[2] We granted Defendants' petition for writ of certiorari to consider two issues. First, we consider whether the Court of Appeals applied the incorrect standard for summary judgment. Second, we consider whether the [*3] Court of Appeals correctly applied federal substantive law regarding alleged agreements to fix prices. Although we agree with the summary judgment standard applied by the Court of Appeals, we hold that the Court of Appeals did not correctly apply federal substantive law as required by NMSA 1978, Section 57-1-15 (1979). Under federal substantive antitrust law, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (2006), evidence of parallel price increases alone is not sufficient in the context of an oligopoly to prove an agreement to fix prices. Such evidence is always ambiguous, and therefore plaintiffs who allege a price-fixing agreement must also provide evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that parallel price increases were the result of independent conduct. Because federal law limits the inferences available to a jury to those that are reasonable, plaintiffs relying upon circumstantial evidence cannot survive summary judgment, as a matter of law, unless the evidence tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Independent conduct is also referred to in case law as "conscious parallelism," "tacit collusion," or "legal independent conduct." We therefore affirm the district [*4] court's grant of summary judgment and reverse the Court of Appeals.

BACKGROUND

[3] The following facts are undisputed. Plaintiffs are "[p]ersons in the State of New Mexico . . . who purchased cigarettes indirectly from Defendants, or any parent, subsidiary or affiliate thereof, at any time from November 1, 1993 to the date of the filing of this action [April 10, 2000]." The original Defendants were Philip Morris, R.J. Reynolds ("RJR"), Brown & Williamson ("B&W"), Lorillard, and Liggett. The events leading up to this lawsuit were set in motion in response to a Philip Morris strategy beginning with an event known as "Marlboro Friday." [1] Prior to Marlboro Friday, Philip Morris, the market leader, had been steadily losing market share to discount and deep discount cigarettes since 1980, when Liggett pioneered the development of generic cigarettes. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 212, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993). In an attempt to regain market share, Philip Morris announced Marlboro Friday on April 2, 1993, "a nationwide promotion on Marlboro that reduced prices at retail by approximately 20 percent, an average of 40[cents] per pack." In response, RJR and B&W instituted similar [*5] promotions. As part of its strategy, Philip Morris announced on July 20, 1993, that there would be a similar reduction on all premium brands, discount brands, and deep discount brands starting on August 9, 1993. Defendants RJR and B&W also followed these price reductions. After these decreases, Defendants began to increase their wholesale list prices on premium and discount cigarettes in near lock-step fashion. Some increases were due to settlements with the 50 states, some because of increases in federal excise taxes, and others were simply planned. Even with these increases, wholesale list prices did not exceed pre-Marlboro Friday levels until August 3, 1998, or when adjusted for inflation, ongoing settlement costs, and federal excise taxes, the list prices did not surpass pre-Marlboro Friday amounts until August 1999. During the time period of the alleged agreement to fix prices, 1993 to 2000, Defendants were engaged in competition with one another regarding promotions at [286] [*719] the retail level, resulting in a direct reduction of the retail prices of cigarettes.

[4] Plaintiffs filed this class action lawsuit on April 10, 2000, alleging violations of New Mexico antitrust and consumer protection laws. See NMSA 1978, §§ 57-1-1 to -15 (1979, as amended through 1987); NMSA 1978, §§ 57-12-1 to -22 (1967, as amended through 1999). Defendants filed motions for summary judgment. In granting the motion for summary judgment, the district court held that Plaintiffs had met their initial burden of showing a pattern of parallel behavior, but failed to meet their second burden of showing the existence of plus factors that would tend to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. Plaintiffs argued that the following were plus factors that tended to exclude Defendants' independent conduct: (1) the economics of the marketplace; (2) Defendants' strong motivation to conspire; (3) the fact that Defendants condensed the price tiers to facilitate their conspiracy; (4) Defendants acted contrary to their own self-interests; (5) alleged conspiratorial meetings in foreign markets; (6) Defendants had engaged in past conspiracies, such as misrepresenting the health consequences of smoking; [*7] (7) Defendants monitored their conspiracy through monthly factory shipment data reports prepared by Management Science Associates ("MSA"); (8) opportunities to conspire, including inter-firm communications and meetings; and (9) pricing decisions were made by those in high-level positions. However, the district court relied on the Eleventh Circuit case of Williamson Oil Co. v. Philip Morris USA, 346 F.3d 1287, 1300 (11th Cir. 2003), to reject Plaintiffs' plus factors. The district court also held that even with the presentation of plus factors, "there still exists the opportunity for the defendant[s] to rebut the inference of collusion by presenting evidence establishing that no reasonable fact-finder could conclude that they entered into a price-fixing conspiracy." Plaintiffs appealed.

[5] On appeal, the Court of Appeals acknowledged that "Marlboro Friday and the industry-wide price reductions that occurred afterward represented the triumph of competition over oligopolistic price coordination." Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 27; see also id. P 44. Although the Court affirmed summary judgment in favor of Lorillard and Liggett because the evidence showed that they had merely acted "consistent [*8] with conscious parallelism," id. P 46, the Court reversed summary judgment in favor of Philip Morris, RJR, and B&W because "[a]pplying Brooke Group, and relying on the opinions of Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. [Keith] Leffler, we think that a reasonable factfinder could view conscious parallelism as a relatively implausible explanation for the anticompetitive scenario that played out following Marlboro Friday," Romero, 2009-NMCA-022, P 44. The Court acknowledged that New Mexico follows "federal case law interpreting Section 1 of the Sherman Act for substantive rules defining the scope of liability under [the New Mexico Antitrust Act] NMAA Section 1." Id. P 18. It held that "behavior of market participants characterizable as mere conscious parallelism does not satisfy the conspiracy element requirement of NMAA Section 1," id. P 22, and noted that federal courts have recognized the "doctrine of conscious parallelism as a substantive principle of antitrust law," id. P 23. The Court also noted that federal law requires plaintiffs to present evidence of "plus factors" that tend to exclude the possibility of independent conduct. Id. PP 23-24. However, it did not follow federal precedent regarding [*9] plus factors, but held that "the sounder approach for a New Mexico court is to engage in an independent and rigorous evaluation of the evidence in deciding whether or not the plaintiffs' evidence tends to suggest a degree of coordination that exceeds the parallelism that could be accomplished through lawful conscious parallelism." Id. P 24 (emphasis added). In addition, the Court held that "[t]he non-existence of conscious parallelism is not a separate element of the plaintiff's case." Id. P 25.

> If the plaintiff comes forward with evidence that would allow a reasonable factfinder to exclude lawful conscious parallelism as the most likely explanation for the parallelism proved by the plaintiff, then the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case that would defeat summary judgment. [287] [*720] At trial, then, the burden of negating the exculpatory inference of lawful conscious parallelism simply merges into the plaintiff's ultimate burden of convincing the factfinder that the parallelism proved by the plaintiff was more likely than not the result of a conspiracy.

Id. The Court of Appeals then constructed a hypothetical situation in which the jury could find that Defendants entered into an agreement [*10] to fix prices. Id. PP 27-30. Although rejecting the concept of plus factors, the Court held that > [t]estimony by a qualified economics expert that the character or degree of parallelism actually exhibited by prices exceeds the parallelism that economic theory predicts would result from independent competitive behavior is precisely the type of evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently . . . [and] constitutes an extremely forceful "plus factor" . . . .

Id. P 32. The Court also held that "Dr. Leffler's testimony is sufficient to meet Plaintiffs' burden of production," id., and that "conscious parallelism in a complex, multi-variable industry is 'improbable,'" id. P 35 (citation omitted). In its conclusion, the Court of Appeals noted numerous ways in which the parallelism cited by Plaintiffs could not reasonably have been the result of Defendants' independent conduct. Id. PP 44-45.

[6] As stated previously, we granted certiorari to determine whether the Court misapplied the summary judgment standard and whether the Court failed to follow substantive federal antitrust law. We reverse the Court of Appeals and affirm the district court's grant of summary [*11] judgment.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT

[7] Defendants argue that the Court of Appeals applied the incorrect summary judgment standard by referring to the "traditional stringent standard that a movant must meet." Id. P 15. The standard, as articulated by the Court of Appeals, is to "view the facts in a light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment and draw all reasonable inferences in support of a trial on the merits." Id. P 17 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). This was a correct statement of the standard for summary judgment in New Mexico:

> HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate where there are no genuine issues of material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Where reasonable minds will not differ as to an issue of material fact, the court may properly grant summary judgment. All reasonable inferences are construed in favor of the non-moving party.

Montgomery v. Lomos Altos, Inc., 2007-NMSC-2, P 16, , 141 N.M. 21, 150 P.3d 971 (filed 2006) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). "Summary judgment is reviewed on appeal de novo." Juneau v. Intel Corp., 2006-NMSC-2, P 8, 139 N.M. 12, 127 P.3d 548 (filed 2005).

[8] HN2[] New Mexico courts, unlike federal [*12] courts, view summary judgment with disfavor, preferring a trial on the merits. Compare Handmaker v. Henney, 1999-NMSC-43, P 21, 128 N.M. 328, 992 P.2d 879 (noting that "the policy in New Mexico disfavor[s] summary judgment"), and Pharmaseal Lab., Inc. v. Goffe, 1977- NMSC 071, 90 N.M. 753, 756, 568 P.2d 589, 592 (1977) ("Summary judgment is a drastic remedy to be used with great caution."), with Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 327, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986) ("Summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole . . . ."), and 11 James William Moore, Moore's Federal Practice § 56.03[1] (3d ed. 2007) (discussing the trend in the federal courts to use summary judgment as a means of case management and resolution). Federal courts, on the other hand, following the "Celotex trilogy," [2] have become more inclined to grant summary judgment and "substantially increased the availability of summary judgment and encouraged greater use of the motion by trial courts." 11 Moore, supra § 56.03[1], at 56-23. The Celotex trilogy favored greater use [288] [*721] of summary judgment and "gave strong rhetorical support to summary judgment as a [*13] means of case management and resolution." 11 Moore, supra § 56.03[1], at 56-23; see also § 56.03[2][c], at 56-28 (noting that Matsushita abrogated "big case" and "defendant motive and state of mind" exceptions to summary judgment and allowing summary judgment where it traditionally had not been allowed (internal quotation marks omitted)); § 56.03[3], at 56-30 (noting that Anderson requires the courts to consider the substantive evidentiary burden at the summary judgment stage, thus creating a heightened evidentiary burden for those opposing summary judgment); § 56.03[5], at 56-36 (noting that Celotex held that movant for summary judgment could meet burden by demonstrating absence of support for essential element of claim and not just affidavits).

[9] HN3[] We continue to refuse to loosen the reins of summary judgment, as doing so would "turn what is a summary proceeding into a full-blown paper trial on the merits." Bartlett v. Mirabal, 2000-NMCA-36, P 32, 128 N.M. 830, 999 P.2d 1062 (internal quotation marks and citation [*14] omitted). We do not wish to grant trial courts greater authority to grant summary judgment than has been traditionally available in New Mexico. See id. PP 37-38. "Permitting trial courts a license to quantify or analyze the evidence in a given case under whatever standard may apply . . . would adversely impact our jury system and infringe on the jury's function as the trier of fact and the true arbiter of the credibility of witnesses." Id. P 38. By our refusal to align our state's approach with that of the federal courts, we do not intend to imply that summary judgment is never appropriate.

[10] HN4[] In New Mexico, summary judgment may be proper when the moving party has met its initial burden of establishing a prima facie case for summary judgment. See Roth v. Thompson, 1992 - NMSC 011, 113 N.M. 331, 334-35, 825 P.2d 1241, 1244-45 (1992). "By a prima facie showing is meant such evidence as is sufficient in law to raise a presumption of fact or establish the fact in question unless rebutted." Goodman v. Brock, 1972- NMSC 043, 83 N.M. 789, 792-93, 498 P.2d 676, 679-80 (1972) (citations omitted). Once this prima facie showing has been made, the burden shifts to the non-movant "to demonstrate the existence of specific evidentiary [*15] facts which would require trial on the merits." Roth, 113 N.M. at 335, 825 P.2d at 1245. "A party may not simply argue that such [evidentiary] facts might exist, nor may it rest upon the allegations of the complaint." See Dow v. Chilili Coop. Ass'n, 1986 - NMSC 084, 105 N.M. 52, 55, 728 P.2d 462, 465 (1986). Rather, "[t]he party opposing the summary judgment motion must adduce evidence to justify a trial on the issues." Clough v. Adventist Health Sys., Inc., 1989- NMSC 056, 108 N.M. 801, 803, 780 P.2d 627, 629 (1989) (citation omitted). Such evidence adduced must result in reasonable inferences. See Montgomery, 2007-NMSC-2, P 16. "An inference is not a supposition or a conjecture, but is a logical deduction from facts proved and guess work is not a substitute therefor." Stambaugh v. Hayes, 1940- NMSC 048, 44 N.M. 443, 451, 103 P.2d 640, 645 (1940) (citation omitted). When disputed facts do not support reasonable inferences, they cannot serve as a basis for denying summary judgment. Only when the inferences are reasonable is summary judgment inappropriate.

[11] HN5[] In addition to requiring reasonable inferences, New Mexico law requires that the alleged facts at issue be material to survive summary judgment. To determine which facts are material, [*16] the court must "look to the substantive law governing the dispute," Farmington Police Officers Ass'n v. City of Farmington, 2006-NMCA-077, P 17, 139 N.M. 750, 137 P.3d 1204. The inquiry's focus should be on whether, under substantive law, the fact is "necessary to give rise to a claim." Eoff v. Forrest, 1990 - NMSC 033, 109 N.M. 695, 702, 789 P.2d 1262, 1269 (1990); see also Martin v. Franklin Capital Corp., 2008-NMCA-152, P 6, 145 N.M. 179, 195 P.3d 24 ("An issue of fact is 'material' if the existence (or non-existence) of the fact is of consequence under the substantive rules of law governing the parties' dispute."); Parker v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 1995- NMCA 086, 121 N.M. 120, 124, 909 P.2d 1, 5 (Ct. App. 1995) ("A fact is material for the purpose of determining whether a motion for summary judgment is meritorious if it will affect the outcome of the case."). In [289] [*722] this case, substantive federal antitrust law is the filter through which we must determine whether genuine issues of material fact exist. See § 57-1-15.

FEDERAL SUBSTANTIVE ANTITRUST LAW: PROVING THE CONSPIRACY

[12] HN6[] As substantive law is the filter through which we apply summary judgment, and to construe our law in harmony with federal law, see § 57-1-15, [*17] we must first undertake an analysis of substantive federal antitrust law. To establish a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff "must be able to show: (1) concerted action, (2) by two or more persons, (3) which unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce." In re Med. X-ray Film Antitrust Litig., 946 F. Supp. 209, 215 (E.D.N.Y. 1996); see also 15 U.S.C. § 1. It is important to note that Section 1 is not violated when the alleged conspirators act independently. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) ("Independent action is not proscribed.").

> The essence of a Section 1 claim is the existence of an agreement. Unilateral action simply does not support liability; there must be a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful agreement. Concerted action is established where two or more distinct entities have agreed to take action against the plaintiff.

Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). HN7[] Contrary to most markets, it is not always obvious whether firms in an oligopoly have acted independently. See In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Litig., 385 F. Supp. 2d 403, 420 n.24 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) [*18] (defining oligopoly as "control or domination of a market by a few large sellers, creating high prices and low output similar to those found in a monopoly" (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). "[F]irms in a concentrated market might in effect share monopoly power, setting their prices at a profit-maximizing, supracompetitive level by recognizing their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions." Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 227.

> [A]n oligopolist's price and output decisions will have a noticeable impact on the market and on its rivals. . . . [For example,] in a market served by three large companies, each firm must know that if it reduces its price and increases its sales at the expense of its rivals, they will notice the sales loss, identify the cause, and probably respond. . . . Because of their mutual awareness, oligopolists' decisions may be interdependent although arrived at independently.

VI Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law*: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application* P 1429a (2d ed. 2003). To summarize, HN8[] where there are very few sellers (firms) within a market, the actions of one [*19] seller will have a noticeable effect on the actions taken by the other sellers. The other sellers may perform a cost-benefit analysis and react to the actions of the leader, producing results similar to an unlawful price-fixing agreement, but actually resulting from lawful, independent action. This "[t]acit collusion [or independent conduct] . . . describes the process, not in itself unlawful, by which firms in a concentrated market might in effect share monopoly power, setting their prices at a profit-maximizing, supracompetitive level by recognizing their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions." Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 227 (emphasis added). In an oligopolistic setting, the distinction between lawful, independent conduct and illegal conduct is most at issue when circumstantial evidence is used to prove the existence of an agreement to fix prices.

[13] HN9[] To prove a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiffs can produce direct or circumstantial evidence of an illegal agreement to fix prices. See Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764. Direct evidence of such an agreement is "explicit and requires no inferences to establish the [*20] proposition or conclusion being asserted." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 118 (3d Cir. 1999). In contrast, circumstantial evidence necessarily requires that [290] [*723] inferences be drawn. See Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1300 ("The problem with this reliance on circumstantial evidence, however, is that such evidence is by its nature ambiguous, and necessarily requires the drawing of one or more inferences in order to substantiate claims of illegal conspiracy."). "While direct evidence, the proverbial 'smoking-gun,' is generally the most compelling means by which a plaintiff can make out his or her claim, it is also frequently difficult for antitrust plaintiffs to come by." Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 465 (3d Cir. 1998).

[14] HN10[] As a result of the need to draw inferences from circumstantial evidence and the likelihood that parallel conduct in an oligopoly stems from lawful, independent conduct, federal courts require antitrust plaintiffs to present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); [*21] see also Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 763 (noting that "it is of considerable importance that independent action by the manufacturer, and concerted action on nonprice restrictions, be distinguished from price-fixing agreements"); Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1300 (holding that evidence tending to exclude independent conduct is necessary only when the plaintiff relies on circumstantial evidence to prove a conspiracy). Without requiring such a showing, pro-competitive conduct, the conduct that the antitrust laws are designed to protect, may be deterred. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 593-94. "[C]onduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy . . . [and plaintiffs] must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [them]." Id. at 588 (citations omitted).

[15] HN11[] As a result of the limited inferences that can be drawn from circumstantial evidence and the interdependent nature of an oligopoly, the plaintiffs must present more than evidence of parallel pricing to prove the [*22] existence of an agreement between the defendants to fix prices. Although "parallel business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement, it falls short of conclusively establish[ing] agreement or . . . itself constitut[ing] a Sherman Act offense." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 553, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted) (alterations in original); see also In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d at 122 ("[N]o conspiracy should be inferred from ambiguous evidence or from mere parallelism when defendants' conduct can be explained by independent business reasons."). Evidence of parallel pricing without more is inherently ambiguous in the oligopolistic setting because there are so many different means, lawful and unlawful, by which parallel pricing can be achieved. See VI Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra P 1431b (discussing the numerous explanations for parallel pricing, including "imperfect express collusion, merely interdependent behavior, and fairly independent and non-interdependent conduct").

[16] HN12[] It is the judge's duty to review the evidence presented by the plaintiffs and make a threshold legal determination as to [*23] whether it tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently. See Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1304 (holding that the judge does not act as fact-finder, but only makes a determination of the "reasonableness of the inferences that c[an] be drawn from the evidence, [which are] threshold legal determinations that appropriately [are] made by the district court"). If the evidence offered by the plaintiff is ambiguous and can equally lead to the conclusion that the alleged conduct was the result of independent action as opposed to illegal conduct, the plaintiff has failed to establish a genuine issue of material fact that there was a conspiracy. See Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 763; Blauwkamp v. Univ. of N.M. Hosp., 114 N.M. 228, 232, 836 P.2d 1249, 1253 (Ct. App. 1992) (holding that failure to establish an essential element [291] [*724] of plaintiff's claim is sufficient grounds for summary judgment); see also In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d at 118 (noting that plaintiffs must "meet [a] demanding standard of proof required in the context of an antitrust case"); Bell Atl. Corp., 550 U.S. at 554 (recognizing "proof of a § 1 conspiracy must include evidence tending to [*24] exclude the possibility of independent action").

[17] HN13[] To assist in determining which evidence would tend to exclude independent action, federal courts have created "plus factors." "[A]ny showing . . . that 'tend[s] to exclude the possibility of independent action' can qualify as a 'plus factor.'" Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1301 (citation omitted). These "'plus factors' . . . remove [the plaintiff's] evidence from the realm of equipoise and render that evidence more probative of conspiracy than of conscious parallelism." Id. In determining whether evidence constitutes a plus factor, i.e., tends to exclude independent conduct, the court should consider the following: "[I]f a benign explanation for the action is equally or more plausible than a collusive explanation, the action cannot constitute a plus factor," id. at 1310; the evidence presented by the plaintiffs must be economically sensible or plaintiffs must "come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim," Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 587; see also In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 320 F. Supp. 2d 1, 12 (D.D.C. 2004) ("[I]n the face of economic factors dictating that the nonmoving party's theory is irrational, [*25] that party must submit evidence to establish that the theory remains practical and genuine despite economic evidence to the contrary."). In addition, "a showing that the defendants' behavior would not be reasonable or explicable (i.e. not in their legitimate economic self-interest) if they were not conspiring to fix prices or otherwise restrain trade" also constitutes a plus factor. Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1301 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The requirement of tending to exclude independent conduct necessarily requires that the court view the plaintiffs' evidence in light of the defendants' evidence to determine whether the plaintiffs' evidence tends to exclude the possibility that defendants were acting independently. See Rule 1-056(C) NMRA (stating that the judge must review "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories and admissions on file, together with the affidavits"); see also Clough, 108 N.M. at 804-05, 780 P.2d at 630-31 (determining that plaintiff's antitrust conspiracy claim should not survive summary judgment by considering plaintiff's evidence in light of evidence presented by defendants). HN14[] The phrase "'plus factors' refers simply to [*26] the additional facts or factors required to be proved as a prerequisite to finding that parallel action amounts to a conspiracy." VI Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra P 1433e. Whether the courts want to call them plus factors or not, the requirement that the plaintiffs tend to exclude independent conduct does not change.

NEW MEXICO ANTITRUST PLAINTIFFS MUST PRESENT EVIDENCE TENDING TO EXCLUDE THE POSSIBILITY THAT DEFENDANTS ACTED INDEPENDENTLY

[18] Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violatedHN15[] the New Mexico Antitrust Act, which states that "[e]very contract, agreement, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, any part of which trade or commerce is within this state, is unlawful." Section § 57-1-1. To prove a cause of action under the Antitrust Act the Legislature requires that "the Antitrust Act shall be construed in harmony with judicial interpretations of the federal antitrust laws. This construction shall be made to achieve uniform application of the state and federal laws prohibiting restraints of trade and monopolistic practices." Section 57-1-15 (emphasis added). It is therefore the duty of the courts to ensure that New Mexico antitrust law does not deviate substantially [*27] from federal interpretations of antitrust law. See State v. Guerra, 2001-NMCA-031, P 14, 130 N.M. 302, 24 P.3d 334 ("The word 'shall' as used in a statute is generally construed to be mandatory.").

[19] Federal substantive law as it relates to oligopolies controls in this case. [292] [*725] There is no doubt that the tobacco industry, in which five companies manufacture more than 97% of the cigarettes sold in the United States, is a classic oligopoly. See Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1291. Because the cigarette industry is an oligopoly, it is likely that when one tobacco company (i.e., Philip Morris) acts in a certain manner (i.e., Marlboro Friday and subsequent price increases), the other firms (RJR, B&W, Lorillard, and Liggett) will determine whether it is in their best interest to follow the leader's actions. As we will discuss below, when Philip Morris began raising prices after Marlboro Friday, RJR's and B&W's conduct in following subsequent price increases was just as likely due to their own independent analysis of what was in their best interests as it was the result of an illegal price-fixing agreement. Therefore, Plaintiffs must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that [*28] Defendants acted independently or they can not meet their burden of establishing a genuine issue of material fact. Because Plaintiffs rely on circumstantial evidence to prove the existence of a price-fixing agreement, see Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 20, if they have not presented evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that Defendants acted independently, they have not met their burden of establishing a genuine issue of material fact.

[20] HN16[] Material facts are those "necessary to give rise to a claim," Eoff, 109 N.M. at 702, 789 P.2d at 1269, and to give rise to a Section 1 claim, evidence that tends to exclude independent action by the defendants is necessary to show that there was an unlawful agreement. See Bell Atl. Corp., 550 U.S. at 557 ("An allegation of parallel conduct is thus much like a naked assertion of conspiracy in a § 1 [Sherman Act] complaint: it gets the complaint close to stating a claim, but without some further factual enhancement it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of 'entitle[ment] to relief.'"); see also Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 763 ("On a claim of concerted price-fixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry [*29] its burden of proving that there was such an agreement."). The United States Supreme Court has explicitly stated that "when allegations of parallel conduct are set out in order to make a § 1 claim, they must be placed in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." Bell Atl. Corp., 550 U.S. at 557. Without this showing, an essential element of the conspiracy claim is absent and there can be no issue of material fact.

[21] In rejecting the plus factor approach used by the federal courts and holding that parallel conduct can be enough to prove a conspiracy, the Court of Appeals fails to construe the New Mexico Antitrust Act in harmony with judicial interpretations of federal antitrust law required by Section 57-1-15. See Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 24. This ignores the United States Supreme Court's holding that HN17[] "[t]he inadequacy of showing parallel conduct or interdependence, without more, mirrors the ambiguity of the behavior: consistent with conspiracy, but just as much in line with a wide swath of rational and competitive business strategy unilaterally prompted by common perceptions of the market," [*30] Bell Atl. Corp., 550 U.S. at 554, and that plus factors are the tool for reviewing the evidence presented, see VI Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra P 1432a ("We conclude that the Sherman Act § 1 requirement of a contract, combination, or conspiracy is not satisfied by uniform anticompetitive pricing that results merely from recognized interdependence without the addition of any facilitators."). Contrary to the holding of the Court of Appeals that proof tending to exclude independent conduct is not a separate element of Plaintiffs' case, Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 25, we hold that the requirement that only reasonable inferences can be drawn from ambiguous evidence is a substantive component of federal antitrust law, and that Plaintiffs must present evidence tending to exclude independent conduct to ensure uniform application of federal and state laws. See § 57-1-15.

[22] In reversing the district court and holding that an agreement to fix prices can [293] [*726] be shown only with parallel conduct, the Court of Appeals requires a different quantum of proof than the federal court and, as a result, fails to construe our law in harmony with federal law. The Court of Appeals assumes that a jury could find a conspiracy, [*31] see Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, PP 27-30, without discussing Defendants' evidence that the in-tandem increases, shifts in market share, and supposed behavior contrary to self-interest were just as likely the result of independent, rational business decisions made to maximize profits, rather than an agreement to fix prices, because any alternative other than following the price increases was a losing option. In its hypothesis, the Court of Appeals errs in accepting certain plus factors with no discussion of whether they actually tend to exclude independent conduct. Id. P 29 (discussing signaling and clandestine communications). Additionally, in assuming the jury could find a conspiracy based solely on parallel behavior, the Court allows an inference that is per se unreasonable. Id. Rather than reviewing Plaintiffs' evidence in light of all of the evidence presented, the Court asserts that it just upheld its "obligation to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-movant and to allow the non-movant the benefit of any reasonable inferences supported by the evidence . . . ." Id. P 31. The Court fails to use substantive federal antitrust law as the filter to first determine whether [*32] genuine issues of material fact exist in favor of summary judgment. Instead, the Court employs New Mexico's summary judgment standard to overcome the strict requirements of substantive law. This is exactly the rationale rejected in Matsushita. See 475 U.S. at 587-88 ("Respondents correctly note that '[o]n summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts . . . must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.' But antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." (citation omitted)).

[23] We also disagree with the Court of Appeals in Romero that both Dr. Leffler's opinion and Brooke Group set forth "major points of departure" from the plus factor approach discussed in Williamson Oil. The Court noted that Dr. Leffler stated that "[t]he economic evidence indicates that it is highly unlikely that independent competitive behavior explains the price restructuring and price changes for cigarettes during the alleged conspiracy period." Id. P 32 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court also held that "Dr. Leffler's opinion testimony, if believed, would permit a reasonable factfinder to exclude lawful [*33] parallelism as the most likely explanation for the parallelism demonstrated by cigarette prices during the class period." Id. Although the Court held that it was "not inclined to appoint [itself an] amateur econo[mist] and attempt to second guess Dr. Leffler's reasoning," id. P 39, it did not give consideration to the fact that there were several ambiguities in Dr. Leffler's opinion that were drawn out in his deposition. While Dr. Leffler opined that the parallel price increases were not the result of lawful parallelism, he also agreed that the factors he used to determine the existence of a price-fixing conspiracy could not "tell you one way or the other whether you have conscious parallelism or you've got something beyond conscious parallelism like a price fixing agreement." He also offered the opinion that an explicit agreement was a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act as opposed to oligopolistic coordination and there was no explicit agreement in this case. Dr. Leffler stated that rational oligopolists would act to maximize profits, rational oligopolists would have matched the Marlboro Friday price reduction, and RJR and B&W were most likely acting to maximize their profits [*34] by failing to re-widen the price gap. Dr. Leffler even went so far as to acknowledge that the cigarette industry "responded as I would have expected them to respond . . . [t]o match the price cut and then to anticipate future price increases, to extend the oligopoly cooperation to the discount sector."

[24] In general, Dr. Leffler's report concludes that following Marlboro Friday, Defendants' actions amounted to illegal price-fixing. However, his statements and responses in his deposition demonstrate that he actually thought it was just as likely that Defendants would have behaved in the same [294] [*727] manner if they were acting independently and not under an illegal price-fixing agreement, because to act any other way would have been less profitable and, as such, against their economic interest.

[25] Without becoming amateur economists, the Court of Appeals could have easily recognized inconsistencies between Dr. Leffler's report and his deposition. Based on these ambiguities in the evidence, it would have been necessary under substantive antitrust law to hold that the evidence did not tend to exclude independent conduct because it was also consistent with independent conduct. See Holiday Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 231 F. Supp. 2d 1253, 1270 (N.D. Ga. 2002) [*35] ("If, when considered in its entirety, [the evidence] is totally ambiguous or to the opposite effect, it is not relevant and may not be relied upon by the jury."). By holding that such ambiguous evidence tended to exclude independent conduct and would allow the jury to reach a reasonable inference, the Court of Appeals failed to ensure uniform application of state and federal antitrust law.

[26] The Court of Appeals also relied heavily on several facets of the United States Supreme Court's analysis in Brooke Group to bolster both its reliance on Dr. Leffler's opinion and its conclusion that independent action was an unlikely explanation for the parallel pricing observed during the period of the alleged agreement to fix prices. Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, PP 33-37, 40. In each instance, however, reliance on Brooke Group is premised on a misreading of the Supreme Court's analysis. While the Court of Appeals correctly observed that Brooke Group recognizes the "inherent limitations" of independent conduct and that it is an "improbable" explanation for "multivariable coordination," that conclusion was based on an analysis of "the net price in the market" or retail pricing, not on list or wholesale [*36] prices, which underlie the basis of the claim in the instant case. Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 239. Similarly, while Brooke Group did analyze "the likelihood that tacit collusion could result in industry-wide, in-tandem increases in the prices of both generic and premium cigarettes," Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 40, it did so only in the context of retail pricing.

[27] HN18[] Retail pricing is influenced by so many variables that the cigarette oligopoly cannot exert collective control over it through independent conduct. See Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 239 (noting that retail prices are determined in part by "list prices, but also by a wide variety of discounts and promotions to consumers and by rebates to wholesalers"). Cigarette wholesalers, who buy direct from cigarette manufacturers at wholesale list prices, set prices for retailers, who then set retail prices for consumers. All levels of pricing are affected by various manufacturer discounts and promotions. Therefore, "to coordinate in an effective manner [at the retail level] . . . the cigarette companies would have been required, without communicating, to establish parallel practices with respect to each of these variables, many of which, [*37] like consumer stickers or coupons, were difficult to monitor." Id. at 239. This complexity explains why independent conduct is an improbable means of coordinating parallel retail pricing and why Brooke Group suggests that independent conduct should be rejected as a likely explanation in that circumstance. Id. This conclusion, however, cannot be logically extended to wholesale list prices, which are simply determined by the manufacturers. Brooke Group is very clear that "it would be unreasonable to draw conclusions about the existence of tacit coordination or supracompetitive pricing from data that reflect only list prices," because "in an oligopoly setting . . . price competition is most likely to take place through less observable and less regulable means than list prices." Id. at 236 (emphasis added).

[28] Despite these significant distinctions between Brooke Group and the instant case, the Court of Appeals nonetheless suggests that "Defendants' theory of the present case seems . . . easily as complex as the recoupment theory rejected in Brooke Group." Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 36. The Court holds that only a "single-tier market" can be effectively [295] [*728] controlled by legal oligopolistic coordination, [*38] because a two-tier wholesale market is too complex and has too many variables, making independent conduct an implausible explanation for parallel pricing. Id. P 40 ("The present case does not involve the type of simple price leadership in a single-tier market that characterized the tobacco industry prior to the introduction of generic cigarettes."). Finding the two-tier system complex, the Court of Appeals rejects independent conduct as a plausible explanation for the observed list pricing. Id. P 37 ("[L]awful oligopolistic coordination was incapable of containing the competition from non-premium cigarettes.").

[29] The point of Marlboro Friday and subsequent price reductions, however, was to simplify the wholesale pricing scheme, collapsing the market from ten pricing tiers to two, so there would be a less complex pricing system. Due to the interdependent nature of an oligopoly, "oligopolistic rationality" can "provide for price increases through . . . price leadership[]" if the other firms believe that following the pricing leader will maximize their profits. VI Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra P 1429a-b (internal quotation marks omitted) (discussing interdependent decision-making and how the [*39] actions of one firm may result in the independent decision of other firms to follow if doing so will maximize profits). To stem the flow of market share into the discount sector, Philip Morris realized the need to close the price gap between premium and discount cigarettes, and set about undertaking this task with Marlboro Friday and the subsequent price reductions in the premium and discount sectors. With the price gap closed and only two price tiers remaining, Philip Morris was able to take advantage of the expected "oligopolistic rationality" when prices began to ascend to pre-Marlboro Friday levels. Dr. Leffler opined that RJR and B&W were acting as rational oligopolists by following Philip Morris in subsequent price increases to prevent further price cuts similar to Marlboro Friday. Compliance was ensured by the looming threat of continued revenue losses should Philip Morris institute a second Marlboro Friday. [3] By relying on "oligopolistic rationality" and having condensed the ten-tier system to two tiers, Philip Morris used its dominant market position and the inherent interdependencies of the cigarette oligopoly to force the other manufacturers to comply with its subsequent [*40] price increases in both pricing tiers. These strategic moves were all part of Philip Morris's strategy to "box in its competitors" and advance its own competitive position.

[30] Prior to Marlboro Friday, Philip Morris attempted to box in its competitors and reduce the discount-premium price gap by independently raising generic and discount cigarette prices. However, this attempt failed. Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 37. No discount cigarette manufacturers responded because with ten pricing tiers and the large price gap between discount and premium cigarettes, discount cigarettes could continue to grow revenue by cannibalizing the premium cigarette market share; it was not in their interest at that point to follow Philip Morris's price leadership, and they had no incentive to do so. Contrary to the Court of Appeals's conclusion that "[t]his evidence [supports] Dr. Leffler's opinion that by itself, lawful oligopolistic coordination [*41] was incapable of containing the competition from non-premium cigarettes," Romero, 2009-NMCA-22, P 37, this initial failure to control discount list prices simply explains Philip Morris's rationale and motivation for both Marlboro Friday and its subsequent pricing strategy. Philip Morris needed to simplify the pricing structure and exert its market influence before the oligopoly would respond to its price leadership.

[31] Nothing about the cigarette oligopoly's coordination of the wholesale two-tier market is multi-variable or complex as described in Brooke Group. Retail pricing, not list pricing, is multi-variable and complex and makes independent conduct an improbable [296] [*729] explanation for parallel pricing. See Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 239. Therefore, simultaneous coordinated pricing in both tiers does not, by itself, tend to exclude independent conduct due to complexity. Rather the opposite is true. It is undisputed by Plaintiffs that Philip Morris's Marlboro Friday was the initiation of a highly competitive strategy. That strategy did not end on Marlboro Friday, but persisted throughout the alleged conspiracy as Philip Morris worked to maintain a narrow price gap between discount and [*42] premium cigarettes and worked to raise prices in both tiers. With this strategy, Philip Morris maintained its newly-acquired market share and increased its revenue, while manufacturers that depended on the discount sector lost market share and revenue. Philip Morris sought to regain market share it had lost to the discount sector prior to Marlboro Friday, and over a roughly six-year period, it increased wholesale prices to regain the status quo prior to Marlboro Friday.

[32] The result of Philip Morris's market dominance was that premium cigarettes and discount cigarettes became subject to interdependent conduct, whereas prior to Marlboro Friday only premium cigarettes were subject to such oligopolistic control. Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Leffler, stated that Marlboro Friday "caused a restructuring in the industry and a change in the competitive relationships." As a result of this restructuring, oligopolistic functioning and rationale extended to the discount sector where there had been no such functioning prior to Marlboro Friday. Indeed, Dr. Leffler even acknowledged in his deposition that the industry merely "extend[ed] the oligopoly cooperation to the discount sector." As oligopolistic [*43] control is lawful in the premium price tier, there is no rationale for arguing that it is illegal in the discount price tier. For these reasons, the Court of Appeals's reliance on Brooke Group was misplaced.

[33] Thus, we must determine whether Plaintiffs' proffered evidence of plus factors tends to exclude the possibility that Defendants acted independently. Plaintiffs cite to the following plus factors, in addition to parallel pricing, as tending to exclude the possibility that Defendants acted independently: (1) the economies of the marketplace, such as a highly concentrated market, cigarette fungibility, high barriers to entry in the industry, absence of close substitutes, and a history of collusion; (2) a strong motivation to conspire, resulting from the desperate times facing the cigarette industry, including "a dramatic decline in its sales as a result of . . . increased public awareness of the detrimental health effects of smoking"; (3) the condensation of price tiers to facilitate the conspiracy; (4) actions contrary to self-interest, including Philip Morris's pre-announcing its price reductions and Defendants' failure to attempt to re-widen the price gap by reducing discount prices; [*44] (5) conspiratorial meetings in other markets; (6) a smoking and health conspiracy; (7) the manner in which Defendants monitored the conspiracy through Management Science Associates ("MSA") [4] ; (8) opportunities to conspire; and (9) pricing decisions made at high levels. Although the ambiguities in Dr. Leffler's opinion have previously been discussed, see supra, PP 23-25, we will further review the evidence presented by Dr. Leffler, since this is the only plus factor cited by the Court of Appeals.

[34] We reject Plaintiffs' plus factors for reasons similar to those set forth in Williamson Oil Co. because Defendants' conduct is just as consistent with lawful, independent action as it is with price fixing, and therefore it does not tend to exclude independent conduct. We briefly discuss Plaintiffs' [*45] plus factors to address why they do not tend to exclude the possibility of independent conduct by Defendants. (1) The majority of the economies of the marketplace to which Plaintiffs cite are nothing more than inherent characteristics of an oligopoly and cannot tend to exclude independent action. [297] [*730] See Holiday Wholesale Grocery Co., 231 F. Supp. 2d at 1305. In fact, Plaintiffs' expert agreed that these factors are "conducive to collusion, whether it be in the form of tacit collusion [independent conduct] or some kind of explicit agreement fixing prices," and that "looking at [these] structural factors alone, just like prices, does not allow you . . . to distinguish between whether the prices in this industry are the result of price fixing conspiracy on the one hand or conscious parallelism on the other hand." In addition, the history of collusion cited by Plaintiffs is based on a 1946 violation of the Sherman Act. See Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946). However, Plaintiffs do not explain how a case from more than fifty years ago is indicative of a present day price-fixing agreement, especially when only one of the current Defendants, RJR, was a defendant in the 1946 [*46] case. See Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1317-18. (2) The motivation to conspire cited by Plaintiffs cannot serve as tending to exclude independent conduct because "[p]rofit is a legitimate motive in pricing decisions, and something more is required before a court can conclude that competitors conspired to fix pricing in violation of the Sherman Act." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d at 134-35. (3) When Philip Morris took action to condense the price tiers, it is just as likely that they did so to reduce the price gap and maximize profits as to facilitate a price fixing agreement, and thus this does not tend to exclude independent conduct. (4) Plaintiffs argue that Defendants took actions contrary to self-interest by pre-announcing price decisions and failing to re-widen the price gap. Philip Morris argues that the June 20, 1993 pre-announcement of a price decrease to take effect twenty days later was not a signal to the other cigarette manufacturers, but was made to allow wholesalers and retailers to avoid an immediate reduction in the value of their inventory and to accommodate the burden of implementing a price reduction. See id. at 133 (holding that advance price announcements [*47] can serve an important purpose in the industry). In addition, failure to re-widen the price gap does not tend to exclude independent conduct. Plaintiffs' expert testified that RJR and B&W were acting as rational oligopolists in following Philip Morris's price reduction, and that RJR and B&W made rational business decisions not to re-widen the price gap because they would not have made more money doing so. See VI Areeda &Hovenkamp, supra P 1429b (discussing that other firms in an oligopoly will follow the price leader "when they believe that it will maximize industry profits"). (5) The alleged conspiratorial meetings in other markets cannot serve as tending to exclude independent conduct because Plaintiffs offered no support to connect the actions in foreign markets with the actions in the United States. In addition, Plaintiffs' expert testified that he knew of no such connection and price changes in the United States were independent of those in the international market. (6) Similarly, concluding that an alleged smoking and health conspiracy facilitated coordination of a conspiracy in this case would require the jury to engage in speculation, and therefore it does not tend to exclude [*48] independent conduct. See Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1316-17; Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 595. (7) The manner in which Defendants monitored the conspiracy through MSA is not evidence tending to exclude independent conduct because there is an equally rational legal explanation for this such as to "devise

[4] "[MSA] provides data collection, processing, and storage services to numerous Fortune 500 companies, including American Express, MCI, Coca-Cola, and Michelin Tires." "MSA Inc. shipment-to-wholesale data are aggregated, historical data on manufacturer shipments of cigarettes to wholesalers that manufacturers provide to MSA Inc. for processing, and do not contain any cigarette pricing information."

competitive strategies, gauge the success of their promotions, monitor the impact of new styles or packing on the market, and determine whether increased promotional spending was needed in certain geographic areas to compete with competitors' programs." In addition, Dr. Leffler acknowledged under oath that the information exchanged was not pricing information. As this information is ambiguous at best, it can not be seen as tending to exclude independent conduct. See Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1315. (8) Plaintiffs allege that Defendants had many opportunities to conspire because high-ranking officials from each manufacturer met on numerous occasions. However, the fact that Defendants may have met does not reasonably lead to the inference that they conspired to discuss price fixing. "[M]ere contacts and communications, or the mere opportunity to conspire, among antitrust [*49] defendants is insufficient evidence [298] [*731] from which to infer an anticompetitive conspiracy . . . ." Clough, 108 N.M. at 804, 780 P.2d at 630 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1319. (9) Finally, pricing decisions made at high levels do not tend to exclude independent conduct as "[f]irms routinely consolidate decisionmaking authority in high ranking officers for a multitude of wholly legitimate reasons." Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1319. In light of the ambiguous nature of Plaintiffs' plus factors, we hold that they do not tend to exclude independent conduct.

[35] We also affirm the district court's ruling that "even after going through the plus factors, there still exists the opportunity for the defendant to rebut the inference of collusion by presenting evidence establishing that no reasonable fact-finder could conclude that they entered into a price-fixing conspiracy." Plaintiffs and the Court of Appeals erred in failing to acknowledge any legitimate rational explanations for the actions taken by Defendants. Plaintiffs ignore both retail competition and the effect that competition had on the "actual 'transaction' prices." Defendants [*50] competed "vigorously" on retail pricing, spending a combined total of over $ 25 billion. This competition led to RJR and B&W filing a lawsuit against Philip Morris alleging violations of the Sherman Act and unfair competition for conduct that occurred in the midst of the alleged conspiracy. See R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Philip Morris Inc., 199 F. Supp. 2d 362 (M.D.N.C. 2002). RJR and B&W argued that Philip Morris "designed and executed Retail Leaders to monopolize and restrain trade in the United States cigarette market by paying retailers for advantageous display and signage space which Plaintiffs say restricts information needed by consumers, disrupts the price-setting mechanism of the market, and limits Plaintiffs' abilities to promote their products." Id. at 365. It would be unreasonable to infer that companies who fiercely competed at the retail level to the extent of suing one another would at the same time agree to fix prices.

[36] Plaintiffs also fail to explain the economic rationale for Defendants competing so fiercely on retail promotions that would undermine any benefit they may have been receiving from a price-fixing conspiracy at the wholesale level. See Williamson Oil Co., 346 F.3d at 1321 [*51] ("[I]f prices are fixed . . . there is no rational reason to undertake extremely significant and expanding retail promotional expenditures, which are a paradigmatically competitive activity."). From 1994 to 1999, Philip Morris's increased spending on retail promotions increased by $ 1.651 billion, which equaled 60% of its operating income. From 1993 to 1999, RJR's increased spending on retail promotions increased by $ 570 million, which was 141.6% of its operating income. B&W increased its spending on retail promotions from 1992 to 1998 by $ 492.5 million. This retail competition caused retail prices to vary, "even among brands that were priced identically at list."

[37] In addition, market shares did not remain static but shifted and resulted in clear winners, such as Philip Morris, and clear losers, such as RJR and B&W. Philip Morris walked away a winner by ensuring that the price gap remained at a desirable level, while RJR and B&W, both of which had relied heavily on discount cigarettes, lost market share. During the period of the alleged conspiracy, Philip Morris's market share grew from 42.2% to 50.5%; RJR's share shrunk from 30.6% to 23.0%; and B&W's share declined from 16.6% to [*52] 11.7%. These shifts in market share also resulted in substantial revenue adjustments, further highlighting the winners and losers. For example, "in 1999 alone [Philip Morris] realized an additional $ 2.9 billion in revenues as a result of its cumulative increase in market share since 1993." In 1999, RJR was down approximately $ 3 billion in annual revenues compared to 1993, and B&W lost $ 1.3 billion in annual revenues from 1993 to 1999. Plaintiffs offer no evidence to explain why RJR and B&W would participate in a conspiracy that would result in lost market share and revenue. Rather, it is more likely that RJR and B&W acted as they did because it was the best option for them to follow out of a number of bad options. Philip Morris argued that each price increase subsequent to Marlboro Friday was for legitimate business reasons and independently made. Philip Morris stated that Plaintiffs [299] [*732] had produced no evidence to support the allegation that the pricing actions taken were "intended to accomplish anything other than to advance [Philip Morris's] economic self-interest." There is no doubt that Marlboro Friday was a competitive act. In fact, Plaintiffs' economic expert stated that RJR [*53] and B&W were acting to maximize their profits in the way they reacted to Marlboro Friday and that any other options, such as attempting to reduce the price gap, would have led to inferior profits. In other words, Defendants had no choice but to follow the lead of Philip Morris and Plaintiffs failed to present evidence showing otherwise.

[38] Defendants made a prima facie case supporting summary judgment by providing evidence of fierce retail competition that undermined the plausibility of a price-fixing agreement, demonstrating that wholesale prices remained lower than pre-Marlboro Friday levels and did not exceed pre-Marlboro Friday levels until almost five years later, and by highlighting the ambiguities in Dr. Leffler's opinion. This evidence showed that Defendants "'had no rational economic motive to conspire, and . . . their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations.'" Clough, 108 N.M. at 804, 780 P.2d at 630 (quoting Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 475 U.S. at 596-97). In reviewing Plaintiffs' plus factors, we find that the district court properly granted summary judgment.

CONCLUSION

[39] Failing to produce evidence tending to exclude independent action, Plaintiffs have [*54] not raised a genuine issue of material fact that there was an agreement between Defendants to fix the prices of cigarettes. Therefore, we reverse the Court of Appeals and affirm summary judgment in favor of all Defendants.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' JOINT MOTION TO DISMISS AND GRANTING PLAINTIFFS LEAVE TO AMEND

On June 23, 2010, the Court held a hearing on defendants' joint motion to dismiss the complaint. For the reasons set forth below, the Court GRANTS defendants' joint motion to dismiss and GRANTS plaintiffs leave [*6] to amend the complaint.

BACKGROUND

On October 20, 2009, plaintiffs [1] filed an individual complaint in this Court against numerous domestic and foreign defendants for violations of state and federal antitrust laws. Pursuant to the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation's April 20, 2007 transfer order consolidating pretrial proceedings for a number of actions and this Court's July 3, 2007 related case pretrial order # 1, the Clerk of this Court designated this case as related to MDL No. 1827, M 07-1827.

The amended complaint, filed on January 29, 2010, alleges a global price-fixing conspiracy by suppliers of liquid crystal display (LCD) panels [2] used in mobile wireless handsets, two-way radios, computer monitors, televisions and other electronic products. Amended Compl. PP 1-6. Plaintiff AT&T Mobility is a provider of mobile wireless telecommunications services and sells mobile handsets to its customers. Id. P 5. Plaintiff AT&T [3] is a provider of voice and data communications [*7] services, including traditional and long-distance services, internet access services, private enterprise network services, and other telecommunications services. Id. P 6. The amended complaint alleges that during the conspiracy period (1996-2006), AT&T Mobility purchased more than 300 million mobile wireless handsets for resale to its customers, and that "as a result of defendants' conspiracy to fix the price of LCD Panels, the prices of these handsets containing LCD Panels were also were artificially inflated." Id. P 5. In addition, plaintiffs allege that defendants' conspiracy raised the price of LCD panels incorporated into products such as desktop computers and notebook computers that AT&T Mobility and AT&T purchased for their own internal use between 1996 and 2006. Id. PP 5-6. Plaintiffs' claims are based on both their direct purchases of products from defendants, as well as indirect purchases through original equipment manufacturers (OEMs).

Plaintiffs' first claim for relief seeks treble damages and injunctive relief under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act. Plaintiffs' second claim for relief seeks treble damages under California's Cartwright Act. "In the alternative" to the federal and Cartwright Act claims, plaintiffs' third claim for relief alleges claims under California's Unfair Competition law, as well as the antitrust, consumer protection, unfair trade and deceptive practices laws of twenty other states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Id. P 190.

[1] Plaintiffs are AT&T Mobility LLC; AT&T Corp.; AT&T Services, Inc.; Bellsouth Telecommunications, Inc.; Pacific Bell Telephone Company; AT&T Operations, Inc.; AT&T Datacomm, Inc.; and Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

[2] As discussed infra, the amended complaint defines "LCD panels" as including three different types of panels using three different technologies: thin film transistor (TFT) panels, color super-twist nematic (CSTN) panels, and monochrome super-twist [*8] nematic (MSTN) panels. Id. P 16.

[3] With the exception of AT&T Mobility, the amended complaint refers to all of the other plaintiffs collectively as "AT&T." Id. P 26.

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). This "facial plausibility" standard requires the plaintiff to allege facts that add up to "more than [*9] a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). While courts do not require "heightened fact pleading of specifics," a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 544, 555.

In deciding whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief can be granted, the court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). However, the court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).

If the Court dismisses the complaint, it must then decide whether to grant leave to amend. The Ninth Circuit has "repeatedly held that a district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000) [*10] (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

DISCUSSION

I. Contacts with states/due process

Defendants move to dismiss all of plaintiffs' state law claims on the ground that the complaint does not allege sufficient contacts between the respective states and plaintiffs' claims to satisfy Due Process. In particular, defendants argue that plaintiffs' failure to allege that they bought the products at issue in California, or any of the other states whose laws they seek to invoke, requires dismissal of the state law claims. Defendants rely on several cases in which courts have dismissed state antitrust claims, either for lack of standing or on due process grounds, where the plaintiffs did not allege that they purchased price-fixed products in those states. See, e.g., Pecover v. Electronics Arts Inc., 633 F. Supp. 2d 976, 984 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (dismissing antitrust claims under laws of 18 states in which plaintiffs did not purchase products); In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig. ("GPU"), 527 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1027-29 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (dismissing for lack of standing antitrust claims under laws of states in which plaintiffs did not purchase products, and striking all references [*11] to a nationwide class under California law because extraterritorial application of California law would violate due process). Defendants also argue that plaintiffs do not explain why or under what circumstances the Court would apply, "in the alternative" to California law, the laws of the numerous other states to any of the claims alleged in the amended complaint.

To decide whether the application of a particular State's law comports with the Due Process Clause, the Court must examine "the contacts of the State, whose law [is to be] applied, with the parties and with the occurrence or transaction giving rise to the litigation." Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hague, 449 U.S. 302, 308, 101 S. Ct. 633, 66 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1981) (emphasis added); see also Phillips Petroleum v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 821-22, 105 S. Ct. 2965, 86 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1985) (Due Process requires a "significant contact or significant aggregation of contacts" between the plaintiff's claims and the state at issue). In a price-fixing case, the relevant "occurrence or transaction" is the plaintiff's purchase of an allegedly price-fixed good. See GPU, 527 F. Supp. 2d at 1028-29.

With regard to California, plaintiffs contend that the application of California law comports with Due Process because defendants [*12] did business in California, certain defendants maintained offices and/or sales agents in California, and because one of the AT&T plaintiffs is headquartered in California. However, these allegations do not provide a link between plaintiffs' claims that they purchased price-fixed products and California. Plaintiffs also rely on various defendants' plea agreements, which state that "acts in furtherance of this conspiracy were carried out in the Northern District of California." The plea agreements state that the "acts in furtherance" of the conspiracy were sales of TFT-LCD panels and products to customers within the Northern District. See, e.g., Plea Agreement at 4, United States v. LG Display Co., (Docket No. 14 in CR 08-803). However, the fact that some defendants have admitted to selling price-fixed goods to customers in this District does not establish the requisite connection with California because those plea agreements do not state, nor have plaintiffs alleged, that any defendants sold products to any of the plaintiffs in California.

In addition, plaintiffs argue that there is a sufficient nexus between their claims and all of the various state laws because plaintiffs conduct a [*13] substantial amount of business in each of the states. Again, however, the fact that plaintiffs have a presence in the various states does not establish a link between plaintiffs' antitrust claims and the States. Plaintiffs also argue that they expect that defendants will assert, as a defense under the various state laws, that plaintiffs passed-on the alleged overcharges when AT&T sold the finished products to end consumers. Plaintiffs do not cite any authority for the proposition that Due Process can be satisfied by on the location of a plaintiff's resale of a product.

The Court agrees that in order to invoke the various state laws at issue, plaintiffs must be able to allege that "the occurrence or transaction giving rise to the litigation" -- plaintiffs' purchases of allegedly price-fixed goods -- occurred in the various states. Allstate Ins. Co., 449 U.S. at 308. The Court GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss all of the state law claims and GRANTS plaintiffs leave to amend the complaint to allege each plaintiffs' contacts with each State -- here, purchases of price-fixed goods -- in order to satisfy Due Process. Because Due Process requires the court to apply "an individualized choice [*14] of law analysis to each plaintiff's claims," Georgine v. Amchem Prods.., 83 F.3d 610, 627 (3d Cir. 1996), the amended complaint shall contain plaintiff-specific allegations. In addition, if plaintiffs decide to plead claims "in the alternative" in the amended complaint, plaintiffs shall explain under what circumstances plaintiffs would pursue the alternative claims. [4]

II. Allegations regarding non-TFT technology

The amended complaint alleges that the conspiracy had the effect of "raising, fixing, maintaining, [*15] and/or stabilizing the prices of" LCD panels that utilized three different technologies: TFT panels, color super-twist nematic ("CSTN") panels, and monochrome super-twist nematic ("MSTN") panels. Compl. PP 16, 154. The amended complaint's factual allegations regarding a price-fixing conspiracy all relate to TFT-LCD panels, and there are no allegations specifically regarding price-fixing STN-LCD panels.

Defendants contend that plaintiffs have not alleged any facts to support their assertion that the alleged conspiracy encompassed LCD panels using CSTN or MSTN technology. These two super-twist nematic panel technologies (also referred to as "STN" or "passive matrix") are older technologies with slower response times than TFT-LCD panels (referred to as "active matrix"). Defendants contend that plaintiffs do not support their broader conspiracy claims with any factual allegations that are separately and specifically directed to STN panels. Defendants also note that neither the class cases nor the DOJ's investigation into the LCD industry have alleged any price-fixing conspiracy related to STN LCD panels.

Plaintiffs respond that the complaint satisfies Twombly because in light of the admitted [*16] conspiracy to fix the price of TFT-LCD panels, it is plausible that defendants also conspired to fix the prices of STN-LCD panels because these panels are close substitutes for TFT-LCD panels. Plaintiffs have also cited information, not contained in the complaint, in support of their assertion that STN-LCD panels are close substitutes for TFT-LCD panels. See Opposition at 10:7-17; Murray Decl. Ex. 7. Plaintiffs rely on cases in which courts have held that an admitted

[4] Relying on this Court's earlier decision in the MDL class actions, defendants have also separately moved to dismiss plaintiffs' indirect purchaser claims under Puerto Rico's antitrust statute. In the MDL, the Court held that indirect purchasers do not have standing under Puerto Rico's antitrust statute because that statute is to be construed in harmony with federal antitrust law, and there has been no repeal of Illinois Brick in Puerto Rico. Plaintiffs' opposition concedes that dismissal of their Puerto Rico indirect purchaser claims is appropriate. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' indirect purchaser claims under the Puerto Rico antitrust statute.

conspiracy to fix the price of one product makes plausible the allegation that the same defendants also conspired to fix the product of a related product. See, e.g., In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 661 (7th Cir. 2002); In re SRAM Antitrust Litig., 580 F. Supp. 2d 896, 903 (N.D. Cal. 2008); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig. 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 576-77 (M.D. Pa. 2009). However, as defendants note, in these cases there were specific factual allegations to support the conspiracy claims with respect to the specific products or markets at issue, in addition to allegations concerning guilty pleas with respect to the other products or markets. For example, in SRAM the complaint contained [*17] allegations about the susceptibility of the SRAM market to collusion, as well as specific communications between the defendants about the price and demand for SRAM. 580 F. Supp. 2d at 902. Judge Wilken held that the plaintiffs could rely on the guilty pleas entered by numerous defendants in the DRAM litigation because "the same actors associated with certain Defendants were responsible for marketing both SRAM and DRAM." Id. at 903. However, Judge Wilken also noted that "[a]lthough the allegations regarding the DRAM guilty pleas are not sufficient to support Plaintiffs' claims standing on their own, they do support an inference of a conspiracy in the SRAM industry." Id.; see also In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litigation, 295 F.3d at 661 (reversing summary judgment in favor of defendants where plaintiffs adduced evidence of agreement to fix prices of high fructose corn syrup, as well as admission by one defendant that it fixed prices on two related products during overlapping time period); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d at 551-52, 557 (allegations of price-fixing in Canadian chocolate market supported allegations of price-fixing in U.S. chocolate [*18] market where plaintiffs alleged specific anticompetitive conduct in U.S. as well as integration of the two markets).

"To state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, . . . claimants must plead not just ultimate facts (such as a conspiracy), but evidentiary facts which if true, will prove" a conspiracy. Kendall v. VISA U.S.A. Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008). Here, the amended complaint does not contain any specific factual allegations that defendants conspired to fix prices of STN-LCD panels, and the Court cannot infer the existence of such an expanded conspiracy based solely on allegations of price-fixing in the TFT-LCD market. The Court GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss and GRANTS plaintiffs leave to amend. [5]

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the [*19] Court hereby GRANTS defendants' joint motion to dismiss and GRANTS plaintiffs leave to amend the complaint. (Docket No. 35 in C 09-4997 SI, and Docket No. 1558 in M 07-1827 SI). The amended complaint shall be filed no later than July 23, 2010.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

[5] Plaintiffs' opposition asserts that newly discovered evidence "confirms the validity of their STN allegations." Opposition at 12:20. Defendants dispute the significance of the deposition and email excerpts cited by plaintiffs in their opposition. The Court makes no finding at this time about whether the evidence described in plaintiffs' opposition would support allegations of a conspiracy to fix prices of STN-LCD panels.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' JOINT MOTION TO DISMISS

On June 23, 2010, the Court held a hearing on defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint. For the reasons set forth below, the Court GRANTS defendants' joint motion to dismiss and GRANTS plaintiff leave to amend the complaint.

BACKGROUND

On October [*6] 20, 2009, plaintiff Motorola, Inc. ("Motorola") filed an individual complaint in the Northern District of Illinois against numerous domestic and foreign defendants for violations of state and federal antitrust laws. Pursuant to the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation's April 20, 2007 transfer order consolidating pretrial proceedings for a number of actions and this Court's July 3, 2007 related case pretrial order # 1, the case was designated as related to MDL No. 1827, M 07-1827, and transferred to this Court.

The amended complaint, filed on January 29, 2010, alleges a global price-fixing conspiracy by suppliers of liquid crystal display (LCD) panels. Motorola is a provider of mobile wireless telecommunications services and sells mobile wireless devices and two-way radios; both of these products incorporate LCD panels. Amended Compl. PP 23, 25. Motorola brings suit based on its own purchases of LCD panels and products, as well as purchases made abroad by a number of Motorola subsidiaries that have assigned their claims to Motorola. Id. P 24. [1] Motorola brings this action to recover its damages for purchases made during the conspiracy period (1996-2006). The amended complaint [*7] alleges that "[D]efendants' and their co-conspirators' conspiracy raised the price of LCD Panels above the price that would have prevailed in a competitive market." Id. P 6. Motorola alleges that during the conspiracy period, hundreds of millions of its products contained LCD panels. The complaint notes that a number of defendants have pled guilty to participating in an LCD panel price-fixing conspiracy, and that in their pleas, defendants Sharp and Epson specifically identified Motorola as a customer that was overcharged for LCD panels. Id. PP 4-5.

The amended complaint also alleges that during the conspiracy period,

> [T]he domestic U.S. and worldwide purchasing process at Motorola was managed and overseen by a supply chain organization, including procurement and manufacturing teams, based in Motorola's northern Illinois operations. From its Illinois headquarters, Motorola directed and [*8] approved the prices and quantities of LCD Panels purchased throughout the world and incorporated into Motorola mobile wireless devices and two-way radios. These procurement and manufacturing teams based in the United States were also responsible for all phases of procurement of LCD panels, including at various times, evaluating, qualifying, and selecting LCD Panel suppliers, drafting requests for quotes for LCD Panels, negotiating agreements with LCD Panel suppliers, coordinating purchases of LCD Panels to meet worldwide production goals, overseeing quality control, and managing stocks of LCD Panels.

[1] The Motorola subsidiaries that have assigned their claims to Motorola Inc. are Motorola Asia Limited, Motorola (China) Investment Limited, Hangzhou Motorola Cellular Equipment Co. Ltd., Motorola (China) Electronics Limited, Motorola Electronics Pte. Ltd., and Motorola Trading Center Pte. Ltd. Id. PP, 24.

Id. P 25. "Motorola also negotiated LCD Panel prices with Defendants on behalf of its ODMs and EMS [2] providers who assembled mobile devices for delivery to Motorola. The price of those LCD Panels was likewise artificially-elevated, causing damage to Motorola." Id. P 26.

Motorola's first claim for relief seeks treble damages and injunctive relief under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and Sections 4 [*9] and 16 of the Clayton Act. The second claim for relief seeks treble damages under California's Cartwright Act. "In the alternative," to the federal and Cartwright Act claims, the third claim for relief alleges violations of the Illinois Antitrust Act. Id. P 179. "In the further alternative" to the first three claims, the fourth claim for relief alleges claims under California's Unfair Competition Law, as well as the antitrust, consumer protection, unfair trade and deceptive practices laws of thirteen other states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Id. P 187.

LEGAL STANDARDS

I. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) allows a party to challenge a federal court's jurisdiction over the subject matter of the complaint. As the party invoking the jurisdiction of the federal court, the plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that the court has the requisite subject matter jurisdiction to grant the relief requested. See Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of America, 511 U.S. 375, 376-78, 114 S. Ct. 1673, 128 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1994) (citation omitted). A complaint will be dismissed if, looking at the complaint as a whole, it appears to lack federal jurisdiction either "facially" [*10] or "factually." Thornhill Publishing Co., Inc. v. General Tel. & Elecs. Corp., 594 F.2d 730, 733 (9th Cir. 1979). When the complaint is challenged for lack of subject matter jurisdiction on its face, all material allegations in the complaint will be taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. NL Indus. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986).

II. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6)

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court must dismiss a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). This "facial plausibility" standard requires the plaintiff to allege facts that add up to "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). While courts do not require "heightened fact pleading of specifics," a plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 544, 555.

In deciding whether [*11] the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief can be granted, the court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). However, the court is not required to accept as true "allegations that are merely conclusory, unwarranted deductions of fact, or unreasonable inferences." In re Gilead Scis. Sec. Litig., 536 F.3d 1049, 1055 (9th Cir. 2008).

If the Court dismisses the complaint, it must then decide whether to grant leave to amend. The Ninth Circuit has "repeatedly held that a district court should grant leave to amend even if no request to amend the pleading was made, unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1130 (9th Cir. 2000) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

[2] The amended complaint states that "ODM" means any original design manufacturer of an LCD Product, and "EMS provider" means any electronics manufacturing services provider of an LCD Product. Id. PP 21-22.

DISCUSSION

I. Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA)

Defendants contend that the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over Motorola's claims to the extent they are based on foreign purchases of LCD panels and products. Motorola concedes that it cannot assert any claims [*12] based on the sale of LCD panels to Motorola subsidiaries abroad if the panels never entered the United States. What is in dispute is whether Motorola can seek to recover based on foreign-sold panels that were subsequently incorporated into Motorola products that Motorola and others -- but not defendants -- shipped to and sold in the United States.

The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, 15 U.S.C. § 6a ("FTAIA"), enacted in 1982, amends the Sherman Act and "excludes from [its] reach much anti-competitive conduct that causes only foreign injury." F. Hoffman-LaRoche, Ltd. v. Empagran (Empagran I), 542 U.S. 155, 158 (2004). The FTAIA establishes a general rule that the Sherman Act "shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 6a. The FTAIA then "provides an exception to this general rule, making the Sherman Act applicable if foreign conduct '(1) has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on domestic commerce, and (2) such effect gives rise to a [Sherman Act] claim.'" In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litig., 546 F.3d 981, 985 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Empagran [*13] I and 15 U.S.C. § 6a). This exception is known as the "domestic injury exception" of the FTAIA. Id. The Supreme Court has explained that the FTAIA, > initially lays down a general rule placing all (nonimport) activity involving foreign commerce outside the Sherman Act's reach. It then brings such conduct back within the Sherman Act's reach provided that the conduct both (1) sufficiently affects American commerce, i.e., it has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on American domestic, import or (certain) export commerce, and (2) has an effect of a kind that antitrust law considers harmful, i.e., the "effect" must "giv[e] rise to a [Sherman Act] claim."

Empagran I involved vitamin sellers around the world that agreed to fix prices, leading to higher vitamin prices in the United States and independently leading to higher vitamin prices in other countries such as Ecuador. Empagran I, 542 U.S. at 159. The Supreme Court held that "a purchaser in the United States could bring a Sherman Act claim under the FTAIA based on domestic injury, but a purchaser in Ecuador could not bring a Sherman Act claim [*14] based on foreign harm." Id. "[O]ur courts have long held that application of our antitrust laws to foreign anticompetitive conduct is nonetheless reasonable, and hence consistent with principles of prescriptive comity, insofar as they reflect a legislative effort to redress domestic antitrust injury that foreign anticompetitive injury has caused." Id. at 165 (emphasis in original).

A. Imports

Motorola first asserts that the products at issue are "imports" that are not subject to the FTAIA. The FTAIA establishes a general rule that the Sherman Act "shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 6a. In other words, Sherman Act claims based on "imports" are not barred by the FTAIA. "The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act does not define the term' import,' but the term generally denotes a product (or perhaps a service) has been brought into the United States from abroad." Turicentro, S.A. v. American Airlines Inc., 303 F.3d 293, 303 (3d Cir. 2002).

Motorola contends that the relevant inquiry to determine whether something is an "import" is not whether defendants directly imported price-fixed goods [*15] into the United States, but "whether Defendants' price-fixed goods were imported into the United States as they intended." Opposition at 12:15-16. Motorola primarily relies on

In re Air Cargo Shipping Services Antitrust Litigation, Case No. 06-cv-1775(JG) (VVP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, 2008 WL 5958061 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2008) (Report and Recommendation). In that case, the plaintiffs alleged that domestic and foreign airlines conspired to price-fix airfreight shipping services. In analyzing whether the plaintiffs' price-fixing claims were permitted under the Sherman Act, the Air Cargo court first identified the relevant conduct. *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, [WL] at*12-13*. Noting that "'[t]he relevant inquiry is whether the conduct of the defendants -- not the plaintiffs -- involves import trade or commerce,'" the court found that the relevant conduct was "defendants' global conspiracy to fix the prices charged for the service of transporting air cargo from abroad into the United States." *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, [WL] at 13 (quoting Kruman v. Christie's Intern. PLC, 284 F.3d 384, 395 (2d Cir. 2002)). Second, the court concluded that the relevant conduct constituted "import commerce" because "the conspiracy alleged targeted the transportation of goods by airfreight, [*16] a primary vehicle of modern import commerce. . . . It follows that conduct directed at fixing the cost of airfreight necessarily affects the commerce in the goods transported by airfreight. The inseparable connection between airfreight and the commerce in imported goods is sufficient to draw the conclusion that the defendants' price-fixing conduct targeting such a primary channel of import trade and commerce 'involves import trade or import commerce' within the meaning of the FTAIA." *2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107882, [WL] at 14.

Here, the relevant conduct is defendants' alleged price-fixing of LCD panels, which were sold both in the United States and abroad. Unlike Air Cargo, however, there is no "inseparable connection" between foreign-purchased LCD panels or products containing LCD panels, and import commerce. A number of courts have held that the FTAIA's "import commerce" exclusion applies only where the defendants are directly involved in the importation of goods or services into the United States. In Turicentro, foreign travel agent plaintiffs sued an airline trade association and United States airline members, alleging that the defendants conspired to lower their sales commissions. The plaintiffs argued that the [*17] defendants "imported" their travel agent services for the purposes of selling airline tickets. Turicentro, 303 F.3d at 303. The Third Circuit held that the defendants' conduct did not involve "import commerce" because "Defendants did not directly bring items or services into the United States." Id.

The court reasoned:

> The alleged conspiracy in this case was directed at commission rates paid to foreign travel agents based outside the United States. That some of the services plaintiffs offered were purchased by United States customers is not dispositive under this inquiry. Defendants were allegedly involved only in unlawfully setting extra-territorial commission rates. Their actions did not directly increase or reduce imports into the United States.

Id.

Similarly, in Animal Science Products, Inc. v. China National Metals & Minerals Import & Export Corporation, 702 F. Supp. 2d 320, No. CIV. 05-4376 (GEB), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35243, 2010 WL 1324918 (D.N.J. Apr. 1, 2010), a third party intermediary purchased the defendants' goods overseas, resold them to the plaintiffs in the United States, and assigned its rights to the plaintiffs. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35243, [WL] at 27-28. In analyzing the plaintiffs' argument that the goods were "imports," the [*18] court stated that "the term 'importer' employed in the introductory language of the FTAIA would be best read as referring to the 'main force' behind the physical movement of goods to the United States; such inquiry is, by definition, unamenable to any hard-and-fast rule and must be resolved on a case-by-case basis." *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35243, [WL] at 33. The court held that if the defendants were not the importers, and the actual importers were various intermediaries and end-consumers, the goods were not "imports" under the FTAIA. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35243, [WL] at 36. [3]

"The dispositive inquiry is whether the conduct of the defendants, not plaintiffs, involves 'import trade or commerce.'" Turicentro, 303 F.3d at 303. Motorola does not allege that the foreign-purchased products were imported into the United States by defendants; to the contrary, the complaint alleges that the foreign-purchased products were brought to the United States by Motorola affiliates. Although Motorola argues that defendants "intended" for the foreign-purchased [*19] LCD panels and products to be brought to the United States, Motorola has not cited any authority adopting such an expansive definition of "import." In the Court's view, a definition that depends on intent would be difficult to apply. Moreover, given the global nature of the economy, defining "imports" as goods that foreign companies "intended" to ultimately make their way into the United States for resale would potentially sweep in much conduct excluded by the FTAIA.

[3] In Air Cargo, there was a factual question as to whether some of the defendants were the actual importers of the goods, and thus the court granted the plaintiffs leave to amend the complaint. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35243, [WL] at 42.

Motorola also relies on the definition of "import trade" contained in the Tariff Act of 1930. That statute defines "import trade" as including "[t]he importation into the United States, the sale for importation [into the United States], or the sale within the United States after importation" of infringing products. 19 U.S.C. § 1337(a)(1)(B)-(E). In addition, Motorola argues that various defendants in this case have embraced abroad definition of "importation" in civil patent lawsuits brought in federal court. However, neither the Tariff Act's definition of "import trade" nor positions that defendants have taken in unrelated litigation arising under different statutes is relevant to evaluating whether a good is an "import" [*20] under the FTAIA.

Motorola has not made factual allegations sufficient to claim that its foreign purchases represent "imports" excepted from the FTAIA.

B. Domestic injury exception

Alternatively, Motorola argues that its foreign purchases fall under the "domestic injury" exception to the FTAIA. Under this exception, foreign conduct is actionable if it "(1) has a 'direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect' on domestic commerce, and (2) 'such effect gives rise to a [Sherman Act] claim.'" Empagran I, 542 U.S. at 159 (quoting § 6a) (alteration in Empagran I). In situations like this one, where a global price-fixing conspiracy is alleged to have affected prices both in the United States and abroad, courts have held that "the 'gives rise to' language of § 6a . . . requires a plaintiff to establish a direct or proximate causal relationship" between the alleged anticompetitive effects in the United States and the plaintiff's alleged foreign injury. In re Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) Antitrust Litigation, 546 F.3d 981, 987-88 (9th Cir. 2008) (relying on Empagran S.A. v. F. Hoffmann-LaRoche, Ltd. (Empagran II), 417 F.3d 1267, 1271 n.5, 368 U.S. App. D.C. 18 (D.C. Cir. 2005)).

Motorola argues that defendants' [*21] conduct has a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on domestic commerce because defendants sold millions of price-fixed LCD panels to Motorola, knowing and intending that a significant portion of those panels would be incorporated into Motorola mobile wireless devices destined for import into, and sale and use in, the United States. Motorola relies on allegations such as the following: "The activities of defendants and their co-conspirators, as described herein, involved U.S. import trade or commerce and/or were within the flow of, were intended to, and did have a direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect on U.S. domestic and import trade or commerce. In particular, defendants' and their co-conspirators' conspiracy directly and substantially affected the price of LCD Panels and products which contained LCD Panels ('LCD Products') purchased in the United States. These effects give rise to Motorola's antitrust claims." Amended Compl. P 15.

While defendants dispute whether Motorola's allegations meet the first prong of the "domestic injury" exception, they also argue that the Court need not even address that question because Motorola has failed to plead [*22] facts sufficient to show, under the second prong of the exception, that any such domestic effects "gave rise to" Motorola's Sherman Act claims based on foreign purchases. The Ninth Circuit has held that the "gives rise to" language of § 6a of the FTAIA requires a plaintiff to establish proximate cause between the alleged anticompetitive effects in the United States and the plaintiff's foreign injury, where foreign purchases are alleged. DRAM, 546 F.3d at 987-88. In DRAM, a British computer manufacturer, Centerprise, sued American and foreign manufacturers and sellers of DRAM. Centerprise claimed that the domestic effect of the defendants' anti-competitive behavior -- higher DRAM prices in the United States -- gave rise to its foreign injury of having to pay higher DRAM prices abroad because the defendants could not have raised prices worldwide and maintained their global price-fixing arrangement without fixing the DRAM prices in the United States. Id. at 984. The district court held that Centerprise had sufficiently alleged that the defendants' conduct had a "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable" effect on U.S. domestic commerce, but had not sufficiently alleged that such [*23] domestic effect gave rise to Centerprise's foreign injury. The Ninth Circuit affirmed:

> The defendants' conspiracy may have fixed prices in the United States and abroad, and maintaining higher U.S. prices might have been necessary to sustain higher prices globally, but Centerprise has not shown that the higher U.S. prices proximately caused its foreign injury of having to pay higher prices abroad. Other actors or forces may have affected the foreign prices. In particular, that the conspiracy had effects in the United States and abroad does not show that the effect in the United States, rather than the overall price-fixing conspiracy itself, proximately caused the effect abroad.

Id. at 988. The Ninth Circuit also held that a "direct correlation between prices does not establish a sufficient causal relationship." Id. at 989-90 (citing Empagran II at 1271 n.5, and In re Monosodium Glutamate Antitrust Litig., 477 F.3d 535, 539-40 (8th Cir. 2007), for proposition that proximate cause is not met by allegations that "there was a single global price kept in equipoise by the maintenance of super-competitive prices in the U.S. market").

Defendants argue that Motorola has not alleged how any domestic [*24] effects caused its foreign injuries. Defendants also argue that the alleged effects on import commerce could not have proximately caused the alleged foreign injuries as a matter of law. Defendants contend that Motorola's foreign injuries occurred when the panels were purchased abroad, before Motorola imported those panels (as contained in finished products) into the United States. Defendants argue that no foreign injury could be caused by something that occurred after that injury was allegedly suffered. *See In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., F. Supp. 2d , Civil Action No. 05-666, MDL Docket No. 1682, 702 F. Supp. 2d 548, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32220, 2010 WL 1388183, at*3 (E.D.Pa.Mar. 31, 2010)* (the "FTAIA imposes a two-step dance, first with one foot (the domestic effects) and then with the other (the foreign antitrust injury). We hold that under the FTAIA the domestic effects must occur first and then proximately cause the foreign antitrust claim.").

The Court agrees with defendants that the amended complaint does not allege any facts showing how Motorola's foreign injuries were proximately caused by any domestic effects of defendants' conduct. [4] Similar to the complaint in DRAM, Motorola's complaint generally alleges [*25] that defendants engaged in a "global conspiracy" that impacted "global prices" and that Motorola's foreign affiliates "suffered injury as a result of defendants' antitrust violations." Amended Compl. PP 2, 24, 27. Under DRAM, these allegations fall far short of alleging that the domestic effect of defendants' conduct gave rise to Motorola's foreign injuries. Motorola also relies on defendants' criminal pleas; however, these criminal pleas, which admit to criminal antitrust violations in the Northern District, have no bearing on whether the domestic effects of defendants' conduct caused Motorola's foreign injuries. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss Motorola's foreign injury claims, with leave to amend. [5]

II. Contacts with states/due process

Defendants move to dismiss all of Motorola's state law claims on the ground that the complaint does not allege sufficient contacts between the respective states and Motorola's claims to satisfy Due Process. In particular, defendants argue that Motorola's failure to allege that it bought the products at issue in California, or in any of the other states whose laws it seeks to invoke, requires dismissal of the state law claims. Defendants rely on several

[4] The Court finds it unnecessary to resolve whether Motorola has sufficiently alleged a domestic effect. In addition, in light of the dismissal of the federal claims based on foreign-sold products, the Court does not address the parties' arguments about whether Motorola's claims based on foreign-sold panels contained in finished products that it purchased from intermediary non-party manufacturers should be dismissed because they are barred by the indirect purchaser [*26] standing doctrine.

[5] In light of the Court's dismissal of the federal claims based on foreign purchases, as well as the dismissal of the state claims for failure to plead contacts sufficient to meet Due Process, the Court does not separately address defendants' arguments that the Court lacks jurisdiction over Motorola's foreign injury claims under state law.

cases in which courts have dismissed state antitrust claims, either for lack of standing or on due process grounds, where the plaintiffs did not allege that they purchased price-fixed products in those states. See, e.g., Pecover v. Electronics Arts Inc., 633 F. Supp. 2d 976, 984 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (dismissing antitrust claims under laws of 18 states [*27] in which plaintiffs did not purchase products); In re Graphics Processing Units Antitrust Litig. ("GPU"), 527 F. Supp. 2d 1011, 1027-29 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (dismissing for lack of standing antitrust claims under laws of states in which plaintiffs did not purchase products, and striking all references to a nationwide class under California law because extraterritorial application of California law would violate due process). Defendants also argue that Motorola does not explain why or under what circumstances the Court would apply, "in the alternative" to federal law and the Cartwright Act, the Illinois statute, or "in the further alternative," the laws of the numerous other states.

To decide whether the application of a particular State's law comports with the Due Process Clause, the Court must examine "the contacts of the State, whose law [is to be] applied, with the parties and with the occurrence or transaction giving rise to the litigation." Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hague, 449 U.S. 302, 308, 101 S. Ct. 633, 66 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1981) (emphasis added); see also Phillips Petroleum v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 821-22, 105 S. Ct. 2965, 86 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1985) (Due Process requires a "significant contact or significant aggregation of contacts" between the plaintiff's [*28] claims and the state at issue). In a price-fixing case, the relevant "occurrence or transaction" is the plaintiff's purchase of an allegedly price-fixed good. See GPU, 527 F. Supp. 2d at 1028-29.

With regard to California, Motorola contends [6] that the application of California law comports with Due Process because defendants did business in California, and certain defendants maintained offices and/or sales agents in California. However, these allegations do not provide a link between Motorola's claims that it purchased price-fixed products and California. Motorola also relies on various defendants' plea agreements, which state that "acts in furtherance of this conspiracy were carried out in the Northern District of California." The plea agreements state that the "acts in furtherance" of the conspiracy were sales of TFT-LCD panels and products to customers within the Northern District. See, e.g., Plea Agreement at 4, United States v. LG Display Co., (Docket No. 14 in CR 08-803). However, the fact that some defendants have admitted to selling price-fixed goods to customers in this District does not establish the requisite connection with California because those plea agreements do not [*29] state, nor has Motorola alleged, that any defendants sold products to Motorola in California.

In addition, Motorola argues that there is a sufficient nexus between its claims and all of the various state laws because it conducts a substantial amount of business in each of the states. Again, however, the fact that Motorola has a presence in the various states does not establish a link between Motorola's antitrust claims and the States. Motorola also argues that it expects that defendants will assert, as a defense under the various state laws, that Motorola passed-on the alleged overcharges when it sold the finished products to end consumers. Motorola does not cite any authority for the proposition that Due Process can be satisfied by the location of [*30] a plaintiff's resale of a product.

The Court agrees that in order to invoke the various state laws at issue, Motorola must be able to allege that" the occurrence or transaction giving rise to the litigation" -- which is Motorola's purchase of allegedly price-fixed goods -- occurred in the various states. Allstate Ins. Co., 449 U.S. at 308. The Court GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss all of the state law claims and GRANTS Motorola leave to amend the complaint to allege contacts with each State -- here, purchases of price-fixed goods -- in order to satisfy Due Process. In addition, if Motorola decides to plead claims "in the alternative" or "further alternative" in the amended complaint, Motorola shall explain under what circumstances Motorola would pursue the alternative claims.

III. Allegations regarding non-TFT technology

[6] Motorola incorporates by reference the arguments made by AT&T in opposition to defendants' motion to dismiss AT&T's state law claims on the same Due Process grounds. Accordingly, this order discusses AT&T's arguments as if they were advanced by Motorola in the first instance. However, as defendants' note, some of AT&T's arguments -- such as the fact that one of the AT&T plaintiffs is headquartered in California -- do not apply to Motorola.

The amended complaint alleges that the conspiracy had the effect of "raising, fixing, maintaining, and/or stabilizing the prices of" LCD panels that utilized three different technologies: TFT panels, color super-twist nematic ("CSTN") panels, and monochrome super-twist nematic ("MSTN") panels. Amended Compl. PP 19. The amended complaint's factual allegations regarding [*31] a price-fixing conspiracy all relate to TFT-LCD panels, and there are no allegations specifically regarding price-fixing CSTN-LCD or MSTN-LCD panels.

Defendants contend that Motorola has not alleged any facts to support its assertion that the alleged conspiracy encompassed LCD panels using CSTN or MSTN technology. These two super-twist nematic panel technologies (also referred to as "STN" or "passive matrix") are older technologies with slower response times than TFT-LCD panels (referred to as "active matrix"). Defendants contend that Motorola does not support its broader conspiracy claims with any factual allegations that are separately and specifically directed to STN panels. Defendants also note that neither the class cases nor the DOJ's investigation into the LCD industry have alleged any price-fixing conspiracy related to STN LCD panels.

In response, Motorola adopts the entire argument set forth by AT&T in its opposition to defendants' joint motion to dismiss the same allegations of a broader conspiracy in AT&T's amended complaint. Opposition at 22:6-9. As such, Motorola responds that the complaint satisfies Twombly because in light of the admitted conspiracy to fix the price of [*32] TFT-LCD panels, it is plausible that defendants also conspired to fix the prices of STN-LCD panels because these panels are close substitutes for TFT-LCD panels. Motorola also cites information, not contained in the complaint, in support of its assertion that STN-LCD panels are close substitutes for TFT-LCD panels. See Docket No. 51 in 09-4997 (Murray Decl. Ex. 7). In reviewing a motion to dismiss, however, the Court cannot consider information that is not contained in the complaint. See Cervantes v. City of San Diego, 5 F.3d 1273, 1274 (9th Cir. 1993).

Motorola also relies on cases in which courts have held that an admitted conspiracy to fix the price of one product makes plausible the allegation that the same defendants also conspired to fix the price of a related product. See, e.g., In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litig., 295 F.3d 651, 661 (7th Cir. 2002); In re SRAM Antitrust Litig., 580 F. Supp. 2d 896, 903 (N.D. Cal. 2008); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig. 602 F. Supp. 2d 538, 576-77 (M.D. Pa. 2009). However, as defendants note, in these cases there were specific factual allegations to support the conspiracy claims with respect to the specific products or [*33] markets at issue, in addition to allegations concerning guilty pleas with respect to the other products or markets. For example, in SRAM the complaint contained allegations about the susceptibility of the SRAM market to collusion, as well as specific communications between the defendants about the price and demand for SRAM. 580 F. Supp. 2d at 902. Judge Wilken held that the plaintiffs could rely on the guilty pleas entered by numerous defendants in the DRAM litigation because "the same actors associated with certain Defendants were responsible for marketing both SRAM and DRAM." Id. at 903. However, Judge Wilken also noted that "[a]lthough the allegations regarding the DRAM guilty pleas are not sufficient to support Plaintiffs' claims standing on their own, they do support an inference of a conspiracy in the SRAM industry." Id.; see also In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litigation, 295 F.3d at 661 (reversing summary judgment in favor of defendants where plaintiffs adduced evidence of agreement to fix prices of high fructose corn syrup, as well as admission by one defendant that it fixed prices on two related products during overlapping time period); In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 602 F. Supp. 2d at 551-52, 557 [*34] (allegations of price-fixing in Canadian chocolate market supported allegations of price-fixing in U.S. chocolate market where plaintiffs alleged specific anticompetitive conduct in U.S. as well as integration of the two markets).

"To state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, . . . claimants must plead not just ultimate facts (such as a conspiracy), but evidentiary facts which if true, will prove" a conspiracy. Kendall v. VISA U.S.A. Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008). Here, the amended complaint does not contain any specific factual allegations that defendants conspired to fix prices of STN-LCD panels, and the Court cannot infer the existence of such an expanded conspiracy based solely on allegations of price-fixing in the TFT-LCD market. The Court GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss and GRANTS plaintiff leave to amend.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court hereby GRANTS defendants' joint motion to dismiss and GRANTS Motorola leave to amend the complaint. (Docket No. 26 in C 09-5840 SI, and Docket No. 1560 in M 07-1827 SI). The amended complaint shall be filed no later than July 23, 2010.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER RE POST-JUDGMENT MOTIONS

I. INTRODUCTION

After years of litigation, and on the eve of trial, defendants brought a motion contending, among other things, that they were immune from damages in this action by virtue of certain provisions of the Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 42 U.S.C. §§ 11101, et seq. ("HCQIA"). The Court agreed and entered judgment in defendants' favor. Plaintiff now seeks to vacate that judgment under Rule 59(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff has also filed a motion challenging defendants' cost bill. Defendants, in turn, move for an award of attorney fees under HCQIA.

For the reasons set out below, the motion to vacate and the motion for attorney fees will be denied. In the unusual circumstances of this case, costs will not be allowed.

II. DISCUSSION [1]

A. Motion to vacate

"Rule 59(e) permits a court to alter or amend a judgment, but it 'may not be used to relitigate old matters, or to raise arguments or present evidence that could have [*5] been raised prior to the entry of judgment.'" Exxon Shipping Co. v. Baker, 554 U.S. 471, 128 S.Ct. 2605, 2617 n.5, 171 L. Ed. 2d 570 (2008) (quoting 11 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2810.1, pp. 127-128 (2d ed.1995)). Despite plaintiff's valiant effort to characterize his motion as being based on deposition testimony taken after the underlying motion was briefed, the points he attempts to make are, at most, refinements of arguments he advanced previously and/or are based on case law and legislative history that he could have presented previously. Thus, the motion to vacate can and will be denied on the grounds that plaintiff has not made the threshold showing that the circumstances warrant reconsidering the decision already reached. [2]

[1] The factual background of this action has been recounted in multiple prior orders and is well known to the parties. It will not be repeated here.

[2] Defendant HCA, Inc. correctly points out that plaintiff did not challenge the additional independent basis on which it was granted summary judgment. Thus, there would be no basis to vacate the judgment as to HCA in any event.

The motion also fails on the merits. Plaintiff lays heavy emphasis on a footnote in Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 111 S. Ct. 1842, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366 (1991). In Pinhas, the question was whether a doctor's antitrust claim needed to include averments showing a "factual [*6] nexus between the alleged boycott and interstate commerce" to support jurisdiction under the Sherman Act. Id. at 325. At no time was the Court asked to construe HCQIA or to decide its effect. The case had been dismissed at the pleading stage. Id.

In explaining its conclusion that federal jurisdiction existed, the Court observed that the peer review process is "congressionally regulated." Id at 332. It was in that context that the Court inserted footnote 12, which states in full:

> See Health Care Quality Improvement Act of 1986, 100 Stat. 3784, 42 U.S.C. § 11101 et seq. The statute provides for immunity from antitrust, and other, actions if the peer-review process proceeds in accordance with § 11112. Respondent alleges that the process did not conform with the requirements set forth in § 11112, such as adequate notice, representation by an attorney, access to a transcript of the proceedings, and the right to cross-examine witnesses. According to the House sponsor of the bill, "[t]he immunity provisions [were] restricted so as not to protect illegitimate actions taken under the guise of furthering the quality of health care. Actions … that are really taken for anticompetitive purposes will [*7] not be protected under this bill." 132 Cong.Rec. 30766 (1986) (remarks of Rep. Waxman).

Nothing in this footnote represents a holding that supports a different result here. The Pinhas plaintiff had alleged non-compliance with § 11112--averments presumed true at the procedural juncture of that case. Here, in contrast, the Court has found on summary judgment that plaintiff failed to rebut the presumption of procedural compliance embodied in § 11112. [3]

Plaintiff seizes on the Pinhas court's quotation of Representative Waxman's comments, and has also provided other excerpts of the legislative history that are to a similar effect. The most these materials show, however, is that members of Congress were attempting to strike a balance. However hopeful Representative Waxman may have been that "illegitimate actions" would not be protected, the statute as actually enacted created an objective standard rendering subjective motivations irrelevant. Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 734 (9th Cir.1992). Here, plaintiff appears to be suggesting, in essence, that if a plaintiff has a colorable anti-trust claim, there can be no immunity under HCQIA. The stated purpose of the statute, however, was to address the concern that, "[t]he threat of private money damage liability under Federal laws, [*9] including treble damage liability under Federal antitrust law, unreasonably discourages physicians from participating in effective professional peer review." § 11101(4). By suggesting that the potential presence of a viable antitrust claim strips defendants of immunity, plaintiff is asking the Court to rewrite the statute. Accordingly, the motion to vacate is denied.

B. Motion for attorney fees

Section 11113 of HCQIA provides, "[t]he court shall, at the conclusion of the action, award to a substantially prevailing party defending against any such claim the cost of the suit attributable to such claim, including reasonable attorney's fee, if the claim, or the claimant's conduct during the litigation of the claim, was frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation, or in bad faith." (Emphasis added.) The Ninth Circuit has explained that, "[t]he

[3] To the extent plaintiff is suggesting that the Supreme Court's reference in footnote 12 to "adequate notice, representation by an attorney, access to a transcript of the proceedings, and the right to cross-examine witnesses," somehow means those particular items are always required, he is asking far too much from this dicta. It is apparent the Court was merely referring to the Pinhas plaintiff's particular complaints, and to the items set out in § 11112 (b). As explained in the order granting summary judgment, however, § 11112(b), only provides a "safe harbor"--it also expressly provides that a failure to comply with all of its provisions, "shall not, in itself, constitute failure to meet the standards of subsection (a)." [*8] See Smith v. Ricks, 31 F.3d 1478, 1485 (9th Cir. 1994) ("we reject as dicta any suggestion in Austin that a hospital [must] satisfy § 11112(b) in order to receive immunity.") Nor is the footnote a sufficient basis for reading out of the statute the provision of § 11112 (a) allowing for "such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances."

policy behind this provision is clear: Congress wanted to encourage professional peer review by limiting the threat of unreasonable litigation expenses." Ricks, supra, 31 F.3d at 1487.

Defendants' fee motion initially sought to recover all of the millions of dollars they had incurred over the years this litigation was pending. On its own motion, the [*10] Court issued an order advising that defendants at most might be entitled to recover fees reasonably attributable to litigating and prevailing on the HCQIA immunity defense, and requesting that defendants submit a revised claim limited to such fees. The Court authorized defendants to respond to the points made in that order as well. Defendants thereafter submitted a revised claim for approximately $ 160,000 in attorney fees. Defendants expressly reserved the right to appeal the Court's prior order limiting the potential fee recovery, but offered little argument that the limitation was not warranted.

At this juncture, the Court must decide the question it previously left open--whether plaintiff's claim, or conduct during litigation, was "frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation, or in bad faith" so as to support an award of attorney fees. Defendants argue, essentially, that the Court's order finding immunity under HCQIA plainly demonstrates that the action was frivolous from the outset--everything upon which immunity was based existed and was known to plaintiff before he first filed suit. Plaintiff, in turn, argues essentially that the action was not frivolous because, contrary to [*11] this Court's conclusion, there is no HCQIA immunity.

The issue of whether or not this action was frivolous or was pursued in bad faith does not turn, however, on the correctness of this Court's application of HCQIA immunity. The years of litigation in which defendants engaged before raising the HCQIA issue again undermines their arguments. If it had been clear and obvious from the outset that immunity applied, defendants, who were at all times represented by reputable and competent counsel, surely would have raised the issue sooner. Although the Court eventually ruled in defendants' favor, it does not appear to have been intuitive even to those practicing in this field that the statute would necessarily operate to bar the claims. Accordingly, the motion for attorney fees is denied in its entirety.

C. Bill of Costs

Under Rule 54 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, ordinarily costs are taxed by the Clerk in the first instance, and only if a party seeks Court review of the Clerk's determination does he or she file a motion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54 (d) (1). Here, plaintiff began by filing a motion directly on the Court's calendar. Defendants noted the procedural impropriety, but elected to [*12] respond on the merits, and the Court heard the motion. Then, while the motion was under submission, the Clerk, acting in the ordinary course of business, taxed the cost bill, allowing only $ 49,326.33 of the $ 99,895.94 claimed. That effectively disposes of all of the particularized objections plaintiff raised to the cost bill, and those objections will not be considered further.

Remaining to be decided is whether costs should be completely disallowed under the particular circumstances of this case. In Association of Mexican-American Educators v. State of California, 231 F.3d 572, 591-92 (9th Cir. 2000), the Ninth Circuit rejected any implication from prior cases that costs could only be disallowed to a prevailing party as punishment for misconduct. The court explained that Rule 54 "creates a presumption in favor of awarding costs to a prevailing party, but vests in the district court discretion to refuse to award costs." Id. at 591. A district court disallowing costs must "explain why a case is not "ordinary" and why, in the circumstances, it would be inappropriate or inequitable to award costs." Id. at 592.

Here, even after the Clerk's rejection of approximately half the costs claimed, [*13] defendants are seeking to recover a substantial sum of money they spent over approximately six years of litigation. Virtually none of those costs would have been incurred in the first instance had defendants acted promptly to enforce their HCQIA immunity. Thus, for much the same reasons as set forth in the Court's April 19, 2010 order regarding the attorney fee claim, it would be inequitable for defendants to recover costs in this action. It was in defendants' power to avoid those costs in the first instance. Having failed to do so, for whatever reason of strategic choice or strategic error, they must now bear their own costs. [4]

[4] At the hearing, defendants proposed submitting a revised cost bill claiming only those costs associated with presenting the HCQIA defense, much as they revised their attorney fee claim. Although defendants likely would have incurred some costs even Extra Equipamentos E Exportacao Ltda. v. Case Corp., 541 F.3d 719 (7th Cir. 2008), [*14] cited by defendants, does not compel a different result. Although there the court rejected as "frivolous" an argument that costs should be denied based on a defendants' delay in raising a defense, the record in that case provided no clear indication as to when defendants could have successfully first raised the defense, how much discovery would have first been necessary, and the like. Declining to turn what is supposed to be a summary procedure for awarding costs "into an inquest on the winning party's litigation strategy," the court rejected the mere length of litigation as a basis to withhold costs.

This Court agrees that the cost bill procedure should not ordinarily include any second guessing into how much sooner the litigation might have ended had the defendants made other or different tactical choices along the way. The facts here, though, are highly unusual. Again, by defendants' own arguments, the defense was available from the outset and required virtually no discovery. Defendants actually made a summary judgment motion in 2007 without raising the defense. Under these circumstances no "inquest" is necessary to conclude that defendants should have presented the defense long [*15] before they did.

III. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs' motion to vacate the judgment is denied. Defendants' motion for attorney fees is denied. Plaintiffs' objection to the cost bill is sustained on the grounds that it would be inequitable for defendants to recover costs, on the particular facts of this action. The parties shall bear all their own costs.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

if they had presented the defense without delay, it is not persuasive that any significant costs are fairly attributable to presenting the HCQIA defense, on the particular factual record of this case. Accordingly, the request to submit a revised cost bill is denied.

[*1081] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

On April 22, 2010, the undersigned United States District Judge heard oral argument on Defendants SuperValu Inc. ("SuperValu") and C&S Wholesale Grocers, [2] Inc.'s ("C&S") (collectively "Defendants") Motion to Dismiss [Docket No. 24]. Plaintiffs Blue Goose Super Market, Inc. ("Blue Goose"), Charles W. Prather Company, Inc. d/b/a Prather's IGA ("Prather's"), D&G, Inc. d/b/a Gary's Foods ("Gary's Foods"), DeLuca's Corporation ("DeLuca's"), and Robert Warren Wentworth Jr., Inc. d/b/a Rangeley IGA's ("Rangeley IGA") (collectively "Plaintiffs") Motion for Partial Summary Judgment [Docket No. 28] was argued at the same hearing. For the reasons set forth below, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss is denied and Plaintiffs' [*1082] Motion for Partial Summary Judgment is denied.

II. BACKGROUND

This is multidistrict litigation of four antitrust lawsuits against SuperValu and C&S, two of the largest wholesale grocers in the United States. Consol. Am. Class Action Compl. ("Compl.") [Docket No. 18] ¶ 1. SuperValu's business is largely concentrated in the Midwest while C&S's business is primarily in New England. Id. Plaintiffs operate retail grocery stores in those regions and purchased wholesale grocery products and related services directly from SuperValu and C&S. Id. ¶¶ 5-9.

Plaintiffs' antitrust claims against Defendants stem from events that transpired after Fleming [3] Companies, also a wholesale grocer, filed for bankruptcy in 2003. Id. ¶ 25. In July of that year, C&S agreed to purchase Fleming's wholesale grocery operations, including its three distribution facilities in the Midwest. Id. ¶¶ 25-26. Shortly after the purchase, C&S and SuperValu began negotiating an asset transfer. See Beckett Decl. [Docket No. 26], Ex. C; Bruckner Aff. [Docket No. 30], Ex. B (Asset Exchange Agreement). On September 6, 2003, Defendants entered into an Asset Exchange Agreement ("AEA" or "Agreement"), under which C&S transferred to SuperValu the recently acquired Fleming Midwest operations, which included three operating distribution facilities, retail supply agreements, notes, leases, franchise agreements, and customer goodwill, and SuperValu transferred its New England operations, which included three operating distribution facilities, a distribution facility SuperValu had closed in 2001, retail supply agreements, notes, leases, franchise agreements, and customer goodwill, to C&S. Id. §§ 1.1, 1.3; Bruckner Aff., Exs. B-1, B-3. At the time of the asset transfer, SuperValu had been competing against C&S in New England for several years, but C&S had not been competing [4] against SuperValu in the Midwest. Compl. ¶ 21; Pls.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J. [Docket No. 29] at 3.

The Agreement also included non-compete provisions. C&S agreed (1) not to enter into a supply agreement or other arrangement to supply product to any of the Fleming customers it was transferring to SuperValu for the two years following the closing date of the AEA and (2) not to solicit any of those Fleming customers for the five years following the closing of the AEA. Asset Exchange Agreement §§ 5.8(a), 3.11. SuperValu made reciprocal two and five-year commitments regarding the customers served by the New England operations it was transferring to C&S. Id. §§ 4.9, 6.2. The former Fleming facilities in the Midwest acquired by SuperValu were closed shortly after the closing of the Agreement, and C&S closed the New England facilities it had acquired from SuperValu in the spring of 2004. Compl. ¶¶ 1, 37; Beckett Decl., Ex. I; Bruckner Aff., Ex. G.

On December 31, 2008, the first of the four lawsuits that have been consolidated for this multidistrict litigation was filed. Plaintiffs claim that Defendants violated section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by executing the [5] AEA, which they allege "had no legitimate business purpose and was simply a sham transaction by Defendants to conceal their secret, illegal non-compete agreement allocating the New England market and customers to C&S and the Midwest market and customers to SuperValu." Compl. ¶ 37. Plaintiffs assert that Defendants' Agreement amounts to a "restraint of trade and commerce, the purpose and effect of which is to allocate customers and territories for full-line grocery wholesale goods and services, to suppress competition and allow [*1083] Defendants to charge supra-competitive prices in the Midwest and New England." Id. ¶ 76. Plaintiffs allege injury by paying supra-competitive prices for wholesale groceries and related services from Defendants.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss

Defendants move to dismiss the sole count of Plaintiffs' Complaint, which asserts claims for treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, for alleged violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a party may move to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). In [6] considering a motion to dismiss, the pleadings are construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and the facts alleged in the complaint must be taken as true. Hamm v. Groose, 15 F.3d 110, 112 (8th Cir. 1994); Ossman v. Diana Corp., 825 F. Supp. 870, 879-80 (D. Minn. 1993). Any ambiguities concerning the sufficiency of the claims must be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party. Ossman, 825 F. Supp. at 880.

Under Rule 8(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, pleadings "shall contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." A pleading must contain "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw a reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Determining whether a complaint states a plausible claim for relief is "a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. "But where the well-pleaded facts [7] do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but not 'shown'—that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)).

1. Statute of Limitations

Defendants' first asserted ground for dismissal is that Plaintiffs' antitrust claims are time barred. "Actions seeking damages pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act are subject to the four-year statute of limitations provided in section 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15b." Little Rock Cardiology Clinic, P.A. v. Baptist Health, 573 F. Supp. 2d 1125, 1132 (E.D. Ark. 2008). The earliest of the four lawsuits was filed on December 31, 2008, and, thus, Defendants argue Plaintiffs are time barred from asserting any antitrust claims that accrued prior to December 31, 2004. Because Defendants executed the AEA in September 2003 and completed their closures in the spring of 2004, Defendants conclude, Plaintiffs' antitrust claims accrued well before December 31, 2004. Plaintiffs respond that their claims are not time barred because (1) the fraudulent concealment doctrine tolled the limitations period and (2) the continuing violation doctrine restarted the limitations [8] period with each overt act—i.e., each instance of Defendants charging supra-competitive prices.

a. Fraudulent Concealment

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants concealed the existence of their unlawful market and customer allocation agreement from its inception, thus tolling the entirety of the four-year statute of limitations until November 2008 when the alleged conspiracy was discovered by Plaintiffs' counsel. [*1084] Compl. ¶¶ 44-50. "The general doctrine that the statute of limitation does not run while the defendant's offense is 'fraudulently concealed' has been adopted in antitrust litigation." II Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovencamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 320e (3d ed. 2007); Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1051 (8th Cir. 2000) ("The statue can be tolled under certain circumstances, such as where a defendant has engaged in fraudulent concealment."). To toll the statute of limitations based on fraudulent concealment, Plaintiffs must prove that (1) Defendants concealed Plaintiffs' cause of action, (2) Plaintiffs failed to discover the cause of action, and (3) Plaintiffs exercised due diligence in attempting to discover the claim. In re Milk Prods. Antitrust Litig., 84 F. Supp. 2d 1016, 1022 (D. Minn. 1997).

The [9] parties disagree over the standard to be applied in determining whether Plaintiffs have satisfied the first requirement of fraudulent concealment. Defendants contend that there must be an affirmative act that is separate and apart from the acts creating the alleged cause of action and that Plaintiffs have failed to allege any such act. See *In re Monosodium Glutamate Antitrust Litigation, No. CIV. 00MDL1328PAM, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1969, 2003 WL 297287, at 3 (D. Minn. Feb. 6, 2003) (holding that "[f]raudulent concealment of a conspiracy encompasses something more than the acts involved in the conspiracy itself, which is by nature a crime of secrecy and cover-up" and that fraudulent concealment instead requires "acts, other than the acts constituting the conspiracy, that demonstrate fraudulent concealment of that conspiracy"). Plaintiffs respond that fraudulent concealment is not limited to affirmative acts separate and apart from the conspiracy itself but also is established if the violation was self-concealing in nature. See *United Power Ass'n, Inc. v. L.K. Comstock & Co., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18874, 1992 WL 402906, at 6 (D. Minn. Oct. 27, 1992) (citing cases).[1]

Deciding the correct standard for the first requirement is not necessary because, the Court concludes, Plaintiffs have failed to exercise due diligence in attempting to discover their claims and, therefore, fail to satisfy the third requirement of a fraudulent concealment claim. When Plaintiffs questioned Defendants about the price increases, material information underlying the antitrust claims was available. There was publicly available information that Defendants had agreed to an AEA to transfer all of SuperValu's New England facilities and customer accounts to C&S in exchange for C&S transferring all of its Midwest facilities and customer supply agreements. See, e.g., Becket Decl., Exs. D, E, F, J, L, O. The closure of the facilities following the [11] execution of the AEA also was publicly known. See, e.g., id., Exs. J, K, L, M, N. Plaintiffs argue that "[t]he mere fact that both Defendants withdrew from each other's markets is not necessarily an illegal territorial allocation, because each Defendant may still be free to re-enter." Pls.' Mem. in Opp'n to Mot. to Dismiss [Docket No. 53] at 33. While that may be, the events that had transpired, culminating in the facility closures completed by the spring of 2004, certainly should have alerted Plaintiffs that Defendants' agreement could have the effect of allocating markets, territories, or customers, which might in turn lead to loss in competition. Indeed, when alleged price [*1085] increases were implemented shortly after Defendants' exit from each other's markets, a serious concern should have arisen that the price increases might be related to the asset exchange.

Plaintiffs insist they did not discover, nor could they have discovered, the antitrust causes of action until November 2008 when Plaintiffs' counsel learned from a former SuperValu executive the secret terms of the covenant not to compete included in the AEA. In further support of the claim that they could not have made the discovery [12] earlier, Plaintiffs argue that when Gary's Foods contacted SuperValu as early as 2004 and 2005 to question the high prices, SuperValu did not disclose that it and C&S "had entered an agreement not to compete in the Midwest, which would have explained why C&S . . . was not a competitive alternative in the Midwest and how SuperValu could get away with charging the supra-competitive prices it did." Compl. ¶¶ 51-52. Similarly, in the same time period, DeLuca's questioned C&S about high prices, and C&S responded that the increased prices were caused by unavoidable business conditions rather than disclosing that it had entered into a non-compete agreement with SuperValu, "which would have explained why SuperValu . . . was not a competitive alternative in New England and how C&S could get away with charging the supra-competitive prices it did." Id. ¶¶ 53-54.

Plaintiffs' position is unrealistic and untenable. In essence, their argument is that Defendants' responses to customer inquiries about being charged higher prices—a relatively routine dialogue in the conduct of business—did not and could not put Plaintiffs on notice of their antitrust claims because Defendants did not explicitly admit [13] the alleged anticompetitive foundation and motive behind the price increases. As one court aptly observed in responding to a similar argument, "[t]o permit a claim of fraudulent concealment to rest on no more than an alleged failure to own up to illegal conduct upon this sort of timid inquiry would effectively nullify the statute of limitations in these cases. It can hardly be imagined that illegal activities would ever be so gratuitously revealed." Pocahontas Supreme Coal Co., Inc. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 828 F.2d 211, 218-19 (4th Cir. 1987).

[1] A a third, intermediary standard exists in addition to the "separate and [10] apart" standard urged by Defendants and the "self-concealing" standard urged by Plaintiffs. See Supermarket of Marlington, Inc. v. Meadow Gold Dairies, Inc., 71 F.3d 119, 122 (4th Cir. 1995). Under that "affirmative acts" standard, "a plaintiff must prove that the defendants affirmatively acted to conceal their antitrust violations, but the plaintiff's proof may include acts of concealment involved in the antitrust violation itself." Id.

The publicly available information coupled with the events that had transpired should have allowed Plaintiffs to "put two and two together." The AEA was executed, Defendants exited each others' markets and, according to the allegations of the Complaint, Plaintiffs then began almost immediately experiencing higher prices. In short, the necessary information suggesting Defendants' potential increased market power gained through the AEA and of their use of that power to "charge supra-competitive prices" was available to Plaintiffs. Cf. Hamilton County Bd. of Comm'rs v. Nat'l Football League, 491 F.3d 310, 315 (6th Cir. 2007) ("[T]he County well [14] understood the material facts underlying its antitrust claim: evidence of the NFL's potential monopoly power and its use of that power . . . .").

Having knowledge of information and activities that "would create notice and 'excite attention'" required Plaintiffs to inquire, and "merely asserting that they have diligently pursued their claims is not a sufficient allegation." Milk Prods., 84 F. Supp. 2d at 1024. Plaintiffs must show that they were reasonably diligent in attempting to discover the existence of the underlying conspiracy. See *Monosodium Glutamate, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1969, 2003 WL 297287, at 3 (citing Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 194-95, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997)). Plaintiffs allege in non-specific, conclusory fashion that their inquiries about higher prices on several occasions [*1086] between 2003 and 2005 show that they were reasonably diligent. However, Plaintiffs fail to allege the specific questions posed in those inquiries or that Plaintiffs ever pursued their inquiries further after receiving SuperValu's response that "if [Gary's Foods] felt it could get lower prices from a supplier other than [SuperValu] it could and should have changed to that supplier" or C&S's response to DeLuca's that the prices were [15] due to "unavoidable business conditions." Compl. ¶¶ 51-54. Nor is it alleged that any Plaintiff requested an explanation and supporting information from Defendants for the higher prices. See Hinds County, Miss. v. Wachovia Bank N.A., 620 F. Supp. 2d 499, 521 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (holding that due diligence is not adequately pleaded when a plaintiff fails to make allegations of "'specific inquiries [or to] detail when such inquiries were made, to whom, regarding what, and with what response.'") (quoting In re Merrill Lynch Ltd. P'ships Litig., 154 F.3d 56, 60 (2d Cir. 1998)). Importantly, given the nature of the conspiracy alleged by Plaintiffs' antitrust claims, there are no allegations that any plaintiff ever contacted either SuperValu or C&S to ask them why the companies had withdrawn from the New England and Midwest markets, respectively; rather, they asked only about the increase in prices. Thus, the allegations here are in stark contrast to Heaven & Earth, Inc. v. Wyman Properties Limited Partnership, where the antitrust plaintiff went beyond merely questioning the defendant about higher prices and requested additional information supporting the defendant's claimed reasons for the [16] higher prices. *2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20348, 2003 WL 22680935, at 2, 6 (D. Minn. Oct. 21, 2003).

The Court concludes that the mere questioning of the higher prices on several occasions fails to show due diligence in attempting to discover the antitrust claims. Accordingly, the fraudulent concealment doctrine does not operate to toll the statute of limitations.

b. Continuing Violation

Plaintiffs next argue they have alleged facts to show a continuing violation by Defendants. In Klehr, the Supreme Court explained that under the continuing violation doctrine, "each overt act that is part of the violation and that injures the plaintiff . . . starts the statutory period running again, regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times." 521 U.S. at 189 (quotation omitted). In the context of an alleged conspiracy, each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendants, a cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act, allowing the plaintiff to recover for the damages from that act. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 328, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). "The typical antitrust continuing violation occurs in a price-fixing conspiracy, [17] actionable under Section 1 of the Sherman Act . . . when conspirators continue to meet to fine-tune their cartel agreement." Midwestern Mach. Co., Inc. v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 392 F.3d 265, 269 (8th Cir. 2004). To trigger the continuing violations doctrine, a new overt act "must be more than the unabated inertial consequences of the initial violation." Id. at 270. Rather, the act must be a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act, and it must inflict new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff. Varner v. Peterson Farms, 371 F.3d 1011, 1019 (8th Cir. 2004); see also Concord Boat, 207 F.3d at 1052 (holding that "acts that simply reflect or implement a prior refusal to deal or acts that are merely unabated inertial consequences (of a single act) do not restart the statute of limitations.") (quotation omitted).

[*1087] Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have alleged no new, independent acts within the limitations period. Defendants reason that the higher prices claimed to be a result of a loss of competition are the effects of the allegedly unlawful market and customer allocation, not overt acts that restart the statute of limitations. Thus, they contend, the continuing [18] violations doctrine does not apply. Plaintiffs respond that the overt acts they have alleged (charging supra-competitive prices) were not the natural consequence of the conspiracy to allocate and were not necessarily contemplated by the terms of Defendants' Agreement. Accordingly, Plaintiffs conclude that the continuing violation doctrine applies.

In Midwestern Machinery, implementing the anticompetitive policies at issue—a merger between airlines challenged as substantially lessening competition and having the tendency to create a monopoly, in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18—required no new, independent actions to be taken to realize an anticompetitive benefit, and, thus, implementation amounted only to a reaffirmation of the adoption of the previous policies. 392 F.3d at 269-72. The alleged anticompetitve conspiracy in this case to allocate the Midwest market and customers to SuperValu and the New England market and customers to C&S.[2] However, realizing an anticompetitive benefit from the alleged conspiracy required SuperValu and C&S to undertake new and independent acts of charging supra-competitive prices that were not expressly contemplated by the terms [19] of the Agreement. Contra In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 261 F. Supp. 2d 188, 228-29 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (concluding that acts taken subsequent to the execution of an agreement were not continuing violations when the acts were "contemplated by, and needed to implement, the fixed terms of the challenged agreements"). Thus, the alleged charging of supra-competitive prices amounts to more than the mere reaffirmation of the prior market/customer allocation. Closing the exchanged facilities effectuated the alleged allocation conspiracy; charging supra-competitive prices, however, is not effectuated if and until Defendants raise their prices.

Defendants characterize the diminished competition caused by SuperValu's continued absence from New England and C&S's continued absence from the Midwest and the alleged price increases as the "unabated inertial consequences" or "detrimental effects" of the alleged allocation conspiracy. Defs.' Reply Mem. in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss [Docket No. 56] at 3. While the failure or refusal to reenter the markets is appropriately characterized as an inertial consequence, the alleged charging of supra-competitive prices is not a mere detrimental effect. On the contrary, [*1088] price increases are new and independent acts.

Defendants attempt to equate their transaction [21] to a merger or total acquisition for the purpose of then arguing that ongoing, post-acquisition sales are merely reaffirmations of the merger or acquisition rather than independent predicate acts. See Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss [Docket No. 25] at 19-21. The attempt is unavailing for several reasons. First, the allegations of the Complaint, if true, are that Defendants have taken on a use of their acquisition of each other's assets through the Agreement "in a way that is not inherent in the acquisition itself." Areeda, supra, ¶ 320c5. Professors Areeda and Hovencamp explain:

> [S]uppose that a merger gave a firm the structural power to engage in predatory pricing. A damages action challenging such a merger would fail as long as predation were merely possible or even likely. As a result, the statute of limitation would not run on such a damage claim. However, once unlawful predation began and the

[2] As noted above, the typical continuing violation occurs in a price-fixing conspiracy. Conceptually, price-fixing conspiracies and market allocation conspiracies are similar: "The analogy between price-fixing and division of markets is compelling. It would be a strange interpretation of antitrust law that forbade competitors to agree on [prices], thus eliminating price competition among them, but allowed them to divide markets, thus eliminating all competition among them." Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wis. v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406, 1415 (7th Cir. 1995). [20] Given the similarities, the continuing violations doctrine can apply in a market allocation conspiracy. See Columbia Steel Casting Co., Inc. v. Portland Gen. Elec. Co., 111 F.3d 1427, 1444 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding, in an antitrust action alleging an agreement between two utility companies to a market allocation, that the utility company's refusal to allow a customer in its territory to have its power needs supplied by the other utility company was an overt act that restarted the statute of limitations under the continuing violations doctrine).

> plaintiff could show that the merger facilitated the predation, then the statute of limitation would not bar a challenge to the merger itself, in addition to the predatory pricing suit.

Id.[3] Similarly, the Agreement in this case resulted in an allegedly unlawful exchange of facilities. [22] The exchange itself did not injure Plaintiffs; rather, any injury to Plaintiffs occurred when Defendants began to charge supra-competitive prices.

Second, the transaction at issue in cases such as Midwestern Machinery and Concord Boats were total acquisitions or mergers that resulted in a single remaining company after the acquisition or merger. Refusing to apply the continuing violation doctrine to an alleged conspiracy to enter into a transaction that results in only one remaining company is intuitively well founded given that more than one party is needed for a conspiracy to continue. The transaction between SuperValu and C&S is of a fundamentally different character, as both companies continued to conduct business after the transaction. That SuperValu and C&S exchanged assets as part of their alleged allocation conspiracy does not [23] change the analysis. Had SuperValu and C&S agreed not to compete in their home markets without first exchanging assets, the subsequent charging of supra-competitive prices undoubtedly would constitute new and independent acts that restart the statute of limitations. No principled reason supports distinguishing the subsequent charging of supra-competitive prices merely because the parties exchanged facilities as part of the execution of the alleged allocation conspiracy.

Third, even if it were appropriate to consider the transaction between C&S and SuperValu as equivalent to a merger or total acquisition, Defendants' position regarding the statute of limitations and the continuing violation doctrine fails to recognize the distinction between a competitor lawsuit and a purchaser lawsuit. In the context of monopolization and predatory pricing, Professors Areeda and Hovencamp comment:

> Customers of the monopolist are not injured until after the monopolist causes them injury through higher prices, which may occur later than the exclusionary practices creating the monopoly. For example, competitors are injured immediately by predatory pricing, but customers would not be injured until much later, [24] when the predation has done [*1089] its work and the monopolist raises its price. Once customers have reason to know of the violation and their damages are sufficiently ascertainable to justify an antitrust action, the statute begins to run against them.

Areeda, supra, ¶ 320c4. This rationale also is applicable to the transaction here. The competitors of SuperValu and C&S were injured (if at all and if of a nature to confer antitrust standing) as soon as the conspiracy was effectuated, and, thus, the statute of limitations on an action by such competitors began to run immediately. However, customers, including Plaintiffs, would not be injured until later, when Defendants used their newly-acquired market power to charge supra-competitive prices.

In sum, the acts alleged in support of Plaintiffs' claim of a continuing violation are appropriately characterized as new and independent acts that inflicted new and accumulating injury rather than unabated, inertial consequences or reaffirmations of a previous conspiracy. Therefore, Plaintiffs are not time barred from asserting claims for injuries caused by supra-competitive prices charged within the limitations period, i.e., in the four years immediately [25] preceding the filing dates of the complaints in these four antitrust actions. See Klehr, 521 U.S. at 189 (holding that the commission of a "separate new overt act" does not permit a plaintiff to recover for the injury caused by old overt acts that do not fall within the limitations period).

2. Injury

[3] As Judge Gibson observed in Midwestern Machinery, whether the distinctive use—distinctive in the sense that it is not inherent in the acquisition itself—is viewed as a "continuing violation or a different holding and use, the idea is the same" in terms of the implications for statute of limitations issues. 392 F.3d at 281 n.15 (Gibson, J, dissenting).

Defendants next move to dismiss, arguing Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently allege injury from the non-compete provisions in the AEA. Specifically, it is argued Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts showing that "but for the non-compete provisions, SuperValu would have re-entered New England and C&S would have entered the Midwest." Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss at 27. Defendants explain that the Complaint reveals that it was "barriers to entry," not the non-compete agreement, that prevented (1) C&S, after it acquired Fleming's Midwest facilities, from entering the Midwest; and (2) SuperValu, after it transferred its New England facilities, from re-entering New England. Id.

The Complaint alleges that (1) the AEA and the non-compete provisions amounted to a market and customer allocation conspiracy, (2) the purpose and effect of that conspiracy was to reduce competition in the [26] Midwest and New England to enable Defendants to charge supra-competitive prices in those markets, and (3) the conspiracy injured Plaintiffs when Defendants took advantage of the ill-gotten increased market power realized through the loss in competition and began charging Plaintiffs supra-competitive prices for wholesale grocery goods and related services. Compl. ¶¶ 1-3, 34-35, 37-43, 63, 76, 79-82. Plaintiffs therefore allege an adequate causal connection between the alleged allocation conspiracy and the claimed injury.

Defendants seemingly argue that the Complaint is inadequate because it fails to rule out that there are "barriers to entry" that would have existed and prevented C&S from entering the Midwest and SuperValu from re-entering New England even if Defendants had never entered into the AEA and the non-compete provisions. This argument is doubly flawed. First, if Plaintiffs' allegations are true, it was Defendants' conspiracy, which included the exiting of the New England and Midwest markets, that erected barriers preventing C&S from entering the Midwest and SuperValu from re-entering New England. Second, Plaintiffs need not rule out, especially at this early stage of the litigation, [27] other possible causes of their alleged injuries. See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 89 [*1090] S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969) (holding that "a plaintiff need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury under [section 4 of the Clayton Act]").

3. Plausibility

Lastly, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to allege plausible grounds, as required by Twombly, to support their claim that the AEA "was a 'sham' designed to disguise a 'secret' market allocation." Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss at 28. The Twombly "plausibility" standard requires a complaint to plead allegations establishing the elements of the underlying theory of relief. See 550 U.S. at 554-56. Plaintiffs' characterization of the AEA as a "sham" transaction is not their pleaded claim for relief but rather an evidentiary explanation of the alleged purpose of the AEA—to disguise, hide, or make the non-compete provision look less suspicious from an antitrust perspective. The claim for relief pleaded in the Complaint is predicated on an unlawful market and customer allocation conspiracy that resulted in injury to Plaintiffs, namely, being charged [28] supra-competitive prices. Plaintiffs have pleaded facts that, if proven, show a causal connection between the allegedly unlawful conspiracy and their alleged injuries. See Braden v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 588 F.3d 585, 594 (8th Cir. 2009) (holding that the dismissal standard established by the Supreme Court in Twombly and Iqbal requires that "the complaint . . . be read as a whole, not parsed piece by piece to determine whether each allegation, in isolation, is plausible"); In re Pressure Sensitive Labelstock Antitrust Litig., 566 F. Supp. 2d 363, 373 (M.D. Pa. 2008) ("Nothing in Twombly . . . contemplates [a] 'dismemberment' approach to assessing the sufficiency of a complaint. Rather, a district court must consider a complaint in its entirety without isolating each allegation for individualized review."). Dismissal on the ground that Plaintiffs failed to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face is denied.

B. Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) provides that summary judgment shall issue "if the pleadings, the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material [29] fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); see Matsushita Elec. Indus.

Plaintiffs move for summary judgment on one issue: whether the non-compete provisions in the AEA constitute a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act.[4] Section 1 of the Sherman Act [*1091] proscribes "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. "Certain agreements, such as horizontal price fixing and market allocation, are thought so inherently anticompetitive that each is illegal per se without [30] inquiry into what harm it has actually caused." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984); see also United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972) (holding that "[h]orizontal territorial limitations . . . are naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition" and are "per se violations of the Sherman Act") (quotation omitted) (alterations in original). As the Supreme Court has explained, however, "[o]ther combinations, such as mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements, hold the promise of increasing a firm's efficiency and enabling it to compete more effectively" and, as such, "are judged under a rule of reason, an inquiry into market power and market structure designed to assess the combination's actual effect." Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 768.

"Resort to per se rules is confined to restraints . . . that would always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). Only when the challenged conduct is "manifestly anticompetitive," Continental T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49-50, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977), and "lack[s] . . . any redeeming virtue" should it be subjected to per se treatment, Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985).

Plaintiffs argue restraints on competition in Defendants' transaction constitute a horizontal[5] allocation of customers and markets or territories subject to the per se rule.[6] Defendants respond that the transaction is not a market/customer allocation but rather some other combination, such as a merger or acquisition, that has the potential for procompetitive efficiencies and is therefore subject to the rule of reason. This dispute presents [32] a question of law for the Court. See In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 105 F. Supp. 2d 682, 693 (E.D. Mich. 2000) ("[W]hether to apply a per se or rule or reason mode of analysis in determining the reasonableness of the challenged restraint of trade, is a question of law for the Court.").

In arguing for the applicability of the per se rule, Plaintiffs rely heavily on the Supreme Court's decision in Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc. 498 U.S. 46, 111 S. Ct. 401, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1990) (per curiam). In Palmer, two providers of bar review courses—BRG of Georgia, which provided courses exclusively in Georgia, and HBJ, the Nation's largest provider of bar review courses—entered into an agreement giving BRG an exclusive license [*1092] to [4] If successful on their motion, Plaintiffs will have established the first element of their claims. See Admiral Theatre Corp. v. Douglas Theatre Co., 585 F.2d 877, 883-84 (8th Cir. 1978) (stating that the three elements of a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act are (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among the defendants in restraint of trade; (2) as a [31] direct and proximate result thereof plaintiffs have been injured in their business and property; and (3) the damages that the plaintiffs sustained are capable of reasonable ascertainment and are not speculative or conjectural).

[5] There appears to be no dispute that Defendants compete at the same level of the market, and, thus, any agreement between them would qualify as horizontal. See Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elec. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988) ("[R]estraints imposed by . . . competitors have traditionally been denominated as horizontal restraints . . . .").

[6] The Court's understanding is that Plaintiffs allege the conspiracy to be both a customer allocation conspiracy and a market or territory allocation conspiracy.

market [33] HBJ's material in Georgia. Id. at 47. The agreement included non-compete provisions that prohibited HBJ from competing with BRG in Georgia and prohibited BRG from competing with HBJ in any state outside of Georgia. Id. The Supreme Court held that the arrangement was a per se violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, being "anticompetitive regardless of whether the parties split a market within which both do business or whether they merely reserve one market for one and another for the other." Id. at 49-50. Plaintiffs argue that the same rationale applies here because Defendants' non-compete provisions effectively reserve the Midwest for SuperValu and New England for C&S.

Any restraint on competition that resulted from the transaction between C&S and SuperValu is different from the market/territorial allocations found per se unlawful in Palmer and many other cases cited by Plaintiffs. Particularly problematic to characterizing the alleged conspiracy in this case as a market or territorial allocation is that the non-compete provisions did not entirely prohibit SuperValu from serving and soliciting all customers in the New England region or C&S from serving and soliciting all customers [34] in the Midwest region. Rather, they prohibited Defendants from serving and soliciting only the customers in those regions whose supply contracts were exchanged as part of the AEA. Assuming arguendo, as Plaintiffs contend, the exchanged contracts comprised the entirety of SuperValu's New England customers and the entirety of C&S's would-be Midwest customers, nothing in the non-compete provisions prohibited either party from serving or soliciting customers who were being served by other wholesale grocers. Nor did the non-compete provisions prohibit SuperValu from serving or soliciting New England customers who, at the time of the AEA, were being served by C&S. Similarly, the non-compete provisions did not prohibit C&S from serving or soliciting Midwest Customers who, at the time of the AEA, were being served by SuperValu. Finally, the non-compete provisions did not prohibit Defendants from competing over new customers in either market. The transaction between Defendants is not a true allocation of entire markets or territories. See, e.g., Cardizem CD, 105 F. Supp. 2d at 701 (noting, in characterizing an alleged conspiracy as a market/territorial allocation, that the conspiracy "allocate[d] [35] the entire U.S. market . . . to [one competitor]") (emphasis added). To the contrary, SuperValu was free to re-enter the New England market to serve or solicit any customer there who was not being served by SuperValu at the time of the AEA, and C&S was free to serve or solicit any customer in the Midwest market who was not being served by Fleming at the time of the AEA.

Plaintiffs argue the harm posed by Defendants' transaction is exacerbated because, unlike the fact pattern in which one company buys all or part of the business of another company and the seller agrees not to compete with the buyer, the transaction here also involved "mutual agreements between competitors not to compete for customers or territories." Pls.' Reply Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J. [Docket No. 59] at 7. But "the fact that a market restriction is unilateral rather than bilateral does not determine whether it is naked or ancillary, and unilateral promises can come in both varieties, just as bilateral promises can." Areeda, supra, ¶2134d (emphasis added).

The alleged conspiracy is probably more appropriately described as a customer allocation. See United States v. Cooperative Theatres of Ohio, Inc., 845 F.2d 1367, 1372 (6th Cir. 1988) [36] (explaining that "a horizontal agreement between two competitors to refrain from seeking business from each [*1093] other's existing accounts . . . is plainly a form of customer allocation"). Unlike a market allocation, which, as explained above, requires a restraint on competition affecting the entire market to be thought of as a true "market allocation," it matters not in a customer allocation that the non-compete provisions forbid competition only over the customers who were exchanged and preserves the ability of the conspirators to compete over all other customers in the affected regions. See id. at 1371 (rejecting the argument that an alleged customer allocation conspiracy should not be subjected to per se treatment because it was limited in scope in that it prohibited the conspirators from actively soliciting only certain customers and preserved competition over other customers); Augusta News Co. v. Hudson News Co., 269 F.3d 41, 48 (1st Cir. 2001) ("[T]wo competitors may not agree not to compete for customers whether identified individually or by class—for example, that one will serve only customers in Massachusetts while the other will serve only those in Maine.").

Even if the transaction [37] at issue here qualifies as a customer allocation, questions remain as to whether the transaction can avoid per se treatment because the non-compete provisions—the restraint on trade that is the genesis of Plaintiffs' attack on Defendants' transaction—qualify as ancillary restraints. Under the ancillary restraint doctrine, "some agreements [that] restrain competition may be valid if they are subordinate and collateral to another legitimate transaction and necessary to make that transaction effective." Los Angeles Mem'l Coliseum Comm'n v. Nat'l Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1395 (9th Cir. 1984) (quotation omitted).

> All horizontal restraints are alike in that they eliminate some degree of rivalry between persons or firms who are actual or potential competitors. . . . At one time, . . . the Supreme Court stated . . . that the rule for all horizontal restraints was one of per se illegality. . . . The alternative formulation was that . . . a naked horizontal restraint, one that does not accompany a contract integration, can have no purpose other than restricting output and raising prices, and so is illegal per se; an ancillary horizontal restraint, one that is part of an integration of [38] the economic activities of the parties and appears capable of enhancing the group's efficiency, is to be judged according to its purpose and effect.

Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 792 F.2d 210, 229, 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142 (D.C. Cir. 1986). Thus, "the effect of a finding of ancillarity is to remove the per se label from restraints otherwise falling within that category." Coliseum Comm'n, 726 F.2d at 1395 (quotation omitted).

"Ancillary agreements . . . are agreements that, while horizontal, have the potential to promote competition." Woman's Clinic, Inc. v. St. John's Health Sys., Inc., 252 F. Supp. 2d 857, (W.D. Mo. 2002) (citing Polk Bros. Inc. v. Forest City Entm't, 776 F.2d 185, 189 (7th Cir. 1985)). Such agreements are usually between (1) "the seller of property or business and the buyer not to compete with the buyer in such a way as to detract from the value of the property just sold;" or (2) "the buyer and seller of property or a business not to use the purchased property in competition with the business retained by the seller." Id. (citing United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, 281 (6th Cir. 1898), aff'd as modified by Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 S. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136 (1899)). [39] Determining whether an agreement is ancillary requires a court to consider whether, at the time the agreement was made, it was necessary to promote the enterprise [*1094] and productivity of an underlying arrangement. Id.

Defendants argue that there are "some plausible procompetitive benefits" resulting from their transaction and that the non-compete provisions in the AEA are reasonably necessary to make that transaction effective. Specifically, Defendants cite as procompetitive benefits that the exchange allowed them to integrate the assets and businesses acquired from each other into their existing operations, consolidate customer volume into existing distribution facilities, and realize a benefit from customer goodwill and the ability to use certain trade names, all which allowed them to achieve "economies of scale and lowering costs" through "increases in throughput, capacity utilization, and overall efficiency." Defs.' Mem. in Opp'n to Mot. for Partial Summ. J. [Docket No. 48] at 17-25.

Although not conceding the procompetitive benefits claimed by Defendants as plausible results from the transaction, Plaintiffs respond that the non-compete provisions were unnecessary and unrelated to the [40] claimed benefits. Plaintiffs argue that the restraint on competing over customers is not necessary to achieve the efficiency-enhancing benefits claimed by Defendants in the exchange of the warehouses, inventory, and related assets. With regard to the exchanged customers, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants cannot justify the restraint on competing over customers by invoking the value of those customer accounts as assets and insisting that the restraint is necessary to ensure that value is realized.

On the current record, whether the transaction between SuperValu and C&S plausibly achieved procompetitive benefits and whether the non-compete agreements were ancillary to AEA in the sense that they were necessary to protect the value of the assets being exchanged and realize economic integration cannot be resolved on summary judgment. In the context of a transfer of business assets accompanied by a non-compete agreement, "a per se approach does not seem warranted unless the restriction has no integrative prospects whatsoever." Areeda, supra, ¶2134e. Here, if Defendants show, for example, that the acquisition of the distribution facilities and the customer contracts allowed them to serve more [41] retail grocers through fewer, more efficient distribution facilities, there would be a procompetitive benefit to the transaction. And ensuring that the additional customers would continue to be served through those facilities by executing the non-compete provisions seems reasonably necessary to realize the procompetitive benefit of increased efficiency.

The Supreme Court has cautioned:

> [T]he per se rule is appropriate only after courts have had considerable experience with the type of restraint at issue, and only if courts can predict with confidence that it would be invalidated in all or almost all instances under the rule of reason. It should come as no surprise, then, that we have expressed reluctance to adopt per se rules with regard to restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

Leegin, 551 U.S. at 886-87 (citations and quotation omitted). With these cautionary words in mind, "a departure from the rule-of-reason standard must be based upon demonstrable economic effect rather than . . . formalistic line drawing." Continental T. V., 433 U.S. at 58-59. The Court is unaware of any cases that have [42] involved circumstances closely resembling the circumstances surrounding the transaction in this case. Accordingly, "there is no long experience with . . . [this type of] practice [to conclude] [*1095] that the practice produces many pernicious results and almost no beneficial ones." S. Volkswagen, Inc. v. Centrix Fin., LLC, 357 F. Supp. 2d 837, 850 (D. Md. 2005).

Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on the issue of whether the non-compete provisions should be subjected to per se unlawful treatment is denied. The outstanding issues regarding the per se rule and ancillarity discussed above also extinguish Defendants' position that the Court should instead grant them, the non-moving party, a summary judgment ruling that the rule of reason applies.

IV. CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, and all the files, records, and proceedings herein, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED Defendants' Motion to Dismiss [Docket No. 24] is DENIED and Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment [Docket No. 28] is DENIED.

HN1[ ] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

An appellate court reviews de novo a dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). All allegations of material fact are taken as true and are construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. On a motion to dismiss in an antitrust case, a court must determine whether an antitrust claim is "plausible" in light of basic economic principles. The plaintiff must plead enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits contracts, combinations in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracies, in restraint of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. To state a claim under § 1, a plaintiff must allege facts that, if true, will prove: (1) the existence of a conspiracy, (2) intention on the part of the co-conspirators to restrain trade, and (3) actual injury to competition.

Competitive bidding is not required before entering into an exclusive licensing agreement, but its presence or absence is a factor to be considered in determining the applicability of the antitrust laws. So long as the agreement is the result of independent business judgment, is not the result of an intention to restrain trade, or does not actually injure competition, it is immaterial whether it was secured through a competitive bidding process.

HN7[] Sherman Act, Scope

While concerted conduct is subject to sanction under Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, if it merely restrains trade, unilateral conduct is subject to sanction under Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, only if it either actually monopolizes or threatens monopolization. In other words, an entity cannot be held liable for antitrust violations if it simply unilaterally increases its prices, absent a showing that it either conspired with another entity in order to restrain trade, or acted in a market in which it holds or is attempting to hold a monopoly. Congress treated concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior because concerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk.

Harm to consumers in the form of higher prices resulting from competitive restraints has long been held to constitute an actual injury to competition in the Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, context. It is difficult to image a more typical example of anti-competitive effect than higher prices.

HN11[] Sherman Act, Claims

Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, claims may be premised upon predatory conduct that is aimed at achieving or maintaining a monopoly in a given market. A claim for monopolization of trade has two elements: the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and the acquisition or perpetuation of this power by illegitimate "predatory" practices. Similarly, to state a claim for attempted monopolization, the plaintiff must allege facts that, if true, will prove: (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Even "unethical and deceptive practices" are protected from antitrust liability where they are either directly aimed at or "incidental" to a valid effort to influence government action. However, predatory activities aimed at private standards-setting bodies do not enjoy such categorical protection from liability. The Supreme Court has pointed to the "procompetitive advantages" of private standards-setting organizations whose decisions are insulated from being biased by members with interests in stifling product competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN14[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

A relevant market, for antitrust purposes, can be broadly characterized in terms of the "cross-elasticity of demand" for or "reasonable interchangeability" of a given set of products or services. A court considers whether the product and its substitutes are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose, as well as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors.

[*498] AMENDED OPINION

SCHROEDER, Circuit Judge:

This appeal is about whether the plaintiff, Coalition for ICANN Transparency, Inc., using antitrust statutes drafted in the late 19th century, has successfully stated claims in connection with the administration of the Internet domain name system, so essential to the operation of our sophisticated 21st century communications network. [*499] The district court ruled that the plaintiff failed. With the benefit of extensive briefing, collegial discussions and amicus participation on appeal from other players in the domain name system, we hold that the plaintiff has stated claims under both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2. We reverse and [2] remand for further proceedings.

I. Overview

Plaintiff Coalition for ICANN Transparency ("CFIT") is an organization composed of participants in the Internet domain name system ("DNS"), including website owners. The heart of the IT industry is located in the Silicon Valley, which lies within the Northern District of California. CFIT filed its complaint in 2005 in the Northern District against defendant Verisign, the corporation that acts as the sole operator of the ".com" and ".net" domain name registries.

VeriSign operates each registry pursuant to a contract with the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers ("ICANN"), a non-profit oversight body that coordinates the DNS on behalf of the United States Department of Commerce. Pursuant to these contracts, VeriSign receives a certain price for registering each domain name. It is not disputed that there can only be one operator for each domain name registry at any one time. Therefore, the only viable competition can take place in connection with obtaining a new contract after expiration of the old one. The .com agreement entered into by ICANN and VeriSign in 2006, after no competitive bidding, provides that the price of domain names [3] can increase by seven percent over four of the six succeeding years. The .net agreement, which was entered into as a result of competitive bidding, contained price caps that were set to expire on December 31, 2006, leaving no limitation on the price that could be charged for .net names. Each contract has a presumptive renewal provision.

CFIT's complaint endeavored to state claims against Verisign under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and under California's counterpart, the Cartwright Act, for conspiracy in restraint of trade in connection with the terms of the .com and .net contracts' pricing and renewal provisions. In essence, CFIT sought to show that the prices were artificially high and that the renewal provisions wrongfully restrained competition for successor contracts.

The complaint also endeavored to state claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, alleging that Verisign's conduct in obtaining the anti-competitive provisions constituted monopolization or attempted monopolization of the .com and .net registration markets. In addition, the complaint sought an injunction against Verisign's proposed service for registration of expiring domain names, on the ground it constituted an attempted [4] monopolization of that allegedly separate market.

The district court, after some discovery and several opportunities for CFIT to amend the complaint, dismissed the action with prejudice for failure to state claims under state or federal law in connection with either the .com or the .net contract. It held that CFIT had not sufficiently alleged that either the terms of the contracts or Verisign's conduct in obtaining the contracts amounted to antitrust violations. The court also held that CFIT failed sufficiently to allege that a market for expiring domain names existed separate and apart from the market for newly registered domain names.

In this appeal, CFIT contends that the district court failed to appreciate the seriousness of the allegations of anticompetitive conduct and that, in rejecting the existence of a separate market for expiring [*500] domain names, the district court improperly relied on already outdated authority from earlier in this young century. We now agree with CFIT, at least with respect to the claims challenging the terms and award of the .com contract and asserting the existence of a separate market for expiring domain names. We therefore reverse.

II. The Players

Plaintiff [5] CFIT is a non-profit corporation composed of DNS stakeholders, including domain name registrars and owners of domain names (registrants). CFIT alleges that its members, including both registrars and registrants, have an interest in ensuring that conditions in the domain name registration market remain fair and competitive.

ICANN is a nonprofit corporation that was created in 1998, in response to a policy directive of the Department of Commerce, to administer the domain name system on the Department's behalf. ICANN is charged by the Department of Commerce with selecting and entering into agreements with registry operators such as VeriSign. ICANN was named as a defendant in CFIT's original complaint and in its First Amended Complaint, but CFIT dropped ICANN as a defendant in the Second Amended Complaint, from which this appeal arises. It seeks to maintain claims only against VeriSign.

Defendant VeriSign is a corporation that, through its contractual relationship with ICANN, acts as the sole operator of the .com and .net domain name registries. This means that VeriSign manages the definitive databases of registered .com and .net domain names. VeriSign has held this position since 2001, [6] prior to which its predecessor-in-interest, Network Solutions, Inc. ("NSI"), managed the databases.

III. Nature and Terms of the Agreements

VeriSign has been the sole operator of the .com and .net registries since 2001, when it entered into two separate agreements with ICANN (the "2001 .com Agreement" and the "2001 .net Agreement," respectively). Those agreements supercede ICANN's previous agreements with NSI. The 2001 Agreements imposed on VeriSign a price cap of $ 6 per year for registration, renewal, or extension of any domain name. Each of the 2001 Agreements contained a renewal provision that allowed ICANN to place the contract up for competitive bidding upon its expiration.

When the 2001 .net Agreement expired in 2005, there was a competitive bidding process that resulted in the selection of VeriSign's bid. VeriSign entered into a new agreement with ICANN (the "2005 .net Agreement"). Before the 2001 .com Agreement was due to expire in 2007, however, VeriSign and ICANN agreed to extend it with a new contract (the "2006 .com Agreement"). Both the 2006 .com Agreement and the 2005 .net Agreement provide for automatic renewal upon expiration unless a court or arbitrator issues a final [7] order finding VeriSign to be in breach of the Agreement, and VeriSign fails to cure the breach. The 2006 .com Agreement also increases the maximum price VeriSign can charge for domain name registrations. The previous contract's $ 6 cap was maintained until December 31, 2006, but the new contract provides that cap may be increased seven percent per year in four of the following six years. The 2005 .net Agreement does not contain an express price increase provision. Its price cap of $ 4.25 per domain name expired on December 31, 2006, leaving no cap in its place.

[*501] IV. CFIT's Claims

CFIT's complaint included claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2. CFIT sought to state a Section 1 claim, for conspiracy in restraint of trade, in connection with the pricing and renewal provisions of both the 2005 .net Agreement and the 2006 .com Agreement. CFIT claimed that VeriSign and ICANN conspired to restrain trade by setting prices for VeriSign's registry services that were substantially above the prices that would result from a competitive market. Moreover, CFIT alleged that VeriSign and ICANN violated Section 1 by imposing a presumptive renewal provision in both the 2006 [8] .com and 2005 .net Agreements, all but ensuring Verisign's continued market dominance by reducing or eliminating competition for successor contracts.

CFIT's first claim under Section 2 was for monopolization and attempted monopolization of the .com and .net markets. CFIT alleged that VeriSign engaged in improper and predatory conduct, including financial pressure, vexatious litigation, and negative press coverage, in order to induce ICANN to enter into agreements with terms that unlawfully favored VeriSign. CFIT claimed that VeriSign eventually settled its allegedly vexatious suit against ICANN by offering to pay ICANN a multi-million dollar fee in exchange for favorable terms in the 2006 .com and 2005 .net Agreements, thus doing away with any competition for the next contract.

CFIT's second claim under Section 2 concerned the existence of a separate market for expiring domain names. Expiring domain names are names that have fallen back, or are about to fall back into the registry database as a result of non-renewal by their current owners. CFIT alleged that expiring domain names are sufficiently distinct from other types of domain names as to constitute a separate market for antitrust [9] purposes.

CFIT further alleged that VeriSign planned to "leverage" its monopoly in the .com and .net markets into the market for expiring names. According to CFIT's complaint, pursuant to a term in the 2006 .com Agreement permitting VeriSign to launch new registry-related services, VeriSign planned to launch a Central Listing Service ("CLS") to replace the current system for registration of expiring domain names. CFIT alleged that Verisign's proposed CLS system will allow it to leverage its existing monopoly in the .com and .net registration markets to achieve a monopoly of the market for expiring domain names.

V. Legal Analysis

HN1[] We review de novo a dismissal for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). William O. Gilley Enters., Inc. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 588 F.3d 659, 662 (9th Cir. 2009) (per curiam). All allegations of material fact are taken as true and are construed in the light most favorable to CFIT. Id. "On a motion to dismiss in an antitrust case, a court must determine whether an antitrust claim is 'plausible' in light of basic economic principles." Id. (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). CFIT must plead "enough facts [10] to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570.

A. CFIT's Claims Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "contracts, combination[s] in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspirac[ies], in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To state a claim under Section 1, a plaintiff must allege [*502] facts that, if true, will prove: (1) the existence of a conspiracy, (2) intention on the part of the co-conspirators to restrain trade, and (3) actual injury to competition. Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir. 2008) (citing Les Shockley Racing Inc. v. Nat'l Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1989)).

CFIT sought to state a Section 1 claim in connection with the pricing and renewal provisions of the 2006 .com Agreement and the 2005 .net Agreement. CFIT alleged that ICANN and VeriSign conspired to set artificially high prices for Verisign's services and to ensure that VeriSign would receive successor contracts with ICANN without having to go through a competitive bidding process. We conclude that CFIT adequately alleged a Section 1 violation with respect to the 2006 .com Agreement.

1. Renewal

CFIT challenged [11] the renewal term in both the .com and .net contracts providing that VeriSign will receive automatic renewal upon expiration of each contract unless a court or arbitrator issues a final order finding VeriSign to be in breach of the Agreement, and VeriSign fails to cure the breach. CFIT alleged the renewal term unlawfully restrains competition because the provision that would trigger a competitive re-bid for the contract is "illusory," and that "at the time they executed the Agreement[s], both ICANN and VeriSign understood that [the provision] never would be triggered." CFIT alleged that the threat of losing each contract in a competitive re-bid is essential to protect competition in that it "benefits consumers by keeping prices in check, … by maintaining solid and reliable performance of the registry, and by preventing the registry from undertaking abusive practices that would financially benefit the registry at the expense of the end-user's experience." The district court found that CFIT's complaint was insufficient to state a challenge to the renewal provision, concluding that CFIT's allegation regarding the illusory nature of the re-bid provision was "conclusory and speculative," [12] and insufficient to allege a violation of antitrust law.

We have expressly held, however, that HN3[] concerted action between co-conspirators to eliminate competitive bidding for a contract is an actionable harm to competition. Harkins Amusement Enters., Inc. v. Gen. Cinema Corp., 850 F.2d 477, 487 (9th Cir. 1988). In Harkins, the defendants were distributors and exhibitors of films who "rigged" a bidding process in order to ensure that the exhibitors would obtain licenses to display films released by the distributors, thus excluding from competition the plaintiff, a rival film exhibitor. Id. at 487-88. We found a Section 1 violation for injury to competition even though the only entity harmed, in the particular circumstances of that case, was the plaintiff. Id. at 488. The allegation in this case regarding the elimination of competitive bidding at the expiration of each successive registry agreement means that any other potential registry operator is excluded from competition, making the alleged harm to competition in this case even more severe than that at issue in Harkins.

CFIT's complaint is not limited to alleging that the renewal provision harms individual competitors in the DNS. Rather, [13] CFIT alleged that competition itself has been eliminated as a result of VeriSign and ICANN's conspiratorial conduct. This is precisely the type of allegation required to state an injury to competition. Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 738 (9th Cir. 1992) (HN4[] to state injury to competition, plaintiff must allege conduct that "actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant"). CFIT has also [*503] alleged that consumers are harmed by this anti-competitive restraint, in the form of higher prices for registration of domain names, and potentially lower-quality services. In combination with the allegations regarding the existence of the conspiracy between VeriSign and ICANN as well as the intent to restrain competition, these allegations of harm to competition are sufficient to state a claim under Section 1. Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1047.

Because HN5[] restraint of trade claims under Section 1 do require the showing of a conspiracy whose members intended to restrain trade, see id., we conclude that CFIT's allegations regarding the renewal provision in the contracts is made out only with respect to the .com contract. CFIT has adequately pled the existence of a conspiracy between VeriSign [14] and ICANN, and that VeriSign had the intent to restrain trade when it entered into the .com contract. Beyond ICANN's decision not to use competitive bidding to reach the .com agreement, CFIT has also alleged that ICANN was economically motivated to conspire with VeriSign because VeriSign agreed to share its monopoly profits with ICANN and to cease its predatory behavior, which had put ICANN in financial jeopardy. However, the .net contract was reached after a competitive bidding process. CFIT has not adequately alleged that conspiratorial conduct to restrain trade was involved in the making of the .net agreement. CFIT has not alleged, with sufficient specificity, that the bidding process used to reach the 2005 .net Agreement was in any way rigged. Harkins, 850 F.2d at 484. CFIT's allegations concerning ICANN and Verisign's adoption of the presumptive renewal provision are therefore sufficient to make out a Section 1 claim for restraint of trade with respect to the 2006 .com Agreement alone.

In so holding, we observe that HN6[] competitive bidding is not required before entering into an exclusive licensing agreement, but its presence or absence is a factor to be considered in determining the [15] applicability of the antitrust laws. See Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692-96, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978); Harkins, 850 F.2d at 487. So long as the agreement is the result of independent business judgment, is not the result of an intention to restrain trade, or does not actually injure competition, it is immaterial whether it was secured through a competitive bidding process. See Kendall, 518 F.3d at 1047.

2. Pricing

CFIT further alleged in its complaint that the seven-percent-per-year increase in the allowable fee under the 2006 .com Agreement exceeds the rate competitive market conditions would produce. CFIT's complaint stated that if the

.com Agreement had been put out for competitive bidding, "the costs of domain name registrations would have fallen to at least as low as $ 3.00 per domain name, with at least the same level and quality of services provided by VeriSign." Counsel for CFIT stated at oral argument before the district court that potential competitors of VeriSign had stated publicly that, if awarded the .com contract, they could and would offer registry services at or below $ 3 per domain name.

The district court held that CFIT had not stated a cognizable claim [16] regarding the pricing provisions in the 2006 .com Agreement, finding that an increase in the price of services, standing alone, did not give rise to antitrust liability. The district court relied primarily on Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536 (9th Cir. 1991), in which this court held that a high price alone is not an antitrust violation. [*504] We stated in Alaska Airlines that while "setting a high price may be a use of monopoly power, … it is not in itself anticompetitive." Id. at 549. (quoting Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 294 (2d Cir. 1979)).

The district court's reliance on Alaska Airlines was misplaced, however, because the pricing claims at issue in that case were monopolization claims arising solely under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. See id. at 541 n.8. In this case, by contrast, CFIT's allegation is that the pricing provision in VeriSign and ICANN's 2006 .com Agreement unlawfully restrains trade, in violation of Section 1. Alaska Airlines itself distinguishes between the proper inquiries the court should undertake in the Section 1 and Section 2 contexts: HN7[] "While concerted conduct is subject to sanction [under Section 1] if it merely [17] restrains trade, unilateral conduct is subject to sanction [under Section 2] only if it either actually monopolizes or threatens monopolization." Id. at 541 (citing Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-69, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984)). In other words, an entity cannot be held liable for antitrust violations if it simply unilaterally increases its prices, absent a showing that it either conspired with another entity in order to restrain trade, or acted in a market in which it holds or is attempting to hold a monopoly. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 768-69 ("Congress treated concerted behavior more strictly than unilateral behavior …. [because] [c]oncerted activity inherently is fraught with anticompetitive risk.").

In this case, CFIT's allegation is not that VeriSign took unilateral action to increase the price of its services, but that VeriSign and ICANN undertook concerted action to restrain trade by imposing prices higher than market rate and under conditions hostile to competition. Applying the correct inquiry for Section 1 violations, we conclude that CFIT has adequately alleged that the pricing provision in VeriSign and ICANN's 2006 .com Agreement unlawfully restrains trade. CFIT has [18] alleged the existence of a conspiracy, and that VeriSign and ICANN had the intent to impose terms for pricing and price increases that restrained trade. CFIT's allegations concerning the prices alternative registry operators would offer, were they able to compete with VeriSign for successor contracts, are adequate to state a claim of actual injury to competition, in that potential competitors are allegedly unable to bid for operation of the .com registry, and that consumers are allegedly unable to benefit from the positive effects of that competition. HN8[] Harm to consumers in the form of higher prices resulting from competitive restraints has long been held to constitute an actual injury to competition in the Section 1 context, see Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 791 (9th Cir. 1996) ("[I]t is difficult to image a more typical example of anti-competitive effect than higher prices . . . ."), and CFIT's complaint adequately alleges that such injury has occurred and is still occurring. CFIT's complaint is therefore sufficient to state a claim under Section 1 in connection with the pricing provisions of the 2006 .com Agreement.

CFIT also attempted to allege a Section 1 violation [19] in connection with the pricing terms in the 2005 .net Agreement. The .net contract imposed an initial price cap of $ 4.25 per domain name registration, but provided that this cap would expire on December 31, 2006, leaving no price limitation in place. Although this claim involved terms comparable to those in the .com contract, CFIT has not made out a Section 1 violation for the .net pricing agreement. The .net contract was reached as a result [*505] of competitive bidding, not conspiratorial action. CFIT's assertion that some terms of the agreement changed after Verisign's bid was accepted, without allegations of materiality, does not suffice to state a claim for existence of a conspiracy and the intent to restrain trade. See id.

B. CFIT's Claims Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act

CFIT also asserted claims under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, alleging first that Verisign's predatory conduct in obtaining the anti-competitive provisions described above constituted monopolization or attempted monopolization of the .com and .net registration markets. CFIT's second Section 2 claim alleged the existence of a separate market for expiring domain names, and attempted monopolization of that market. With [20] respect to the latter claim, the district court held that CFIT failed to state a claim because it failed to allege that expiring names are sufficiently distinct from other types of names. With respect to the former, the district court held that CFIT also failed to state a claim for predatory conduct. The district court, apparently construing CFIT's claim as pertaining solely to VeriSign's initiation of litigation against ICANN, held that CFIT failed to state a claim because it alleged only that Verisign's allegedly vexatious litigation against ICANN was "oppressive and costly," not that it was "baseless." In making this determination, the court relied on the doctrine that HN9[] litigation activity is immune from antitrust liability unless it is "a mere sham." See Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) (quoting E.R.R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 144, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961)); see also United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965).

1. Predatory Conduct

CFIT alleged that the 2006 .com Agreement and the 2005 .net Agreement were reached through improper conduct by VeriSign, including financial pressure and vexatious [21] litigation against ICANN. CFIT alleged that in order to get ICANN to agree to the terms VeriSign desired, VeriSign paid lobbyists to support its position, "stacked" ICANN's public meetings with VeriSign supporters, hired purportedly independent organizations and individuals to advocate VeriSign's position, paid bloggers to attack ICANN's reputation, planted news stories critical of ICANN in mainstream media, threatened ICANN with litigation, arbitration, and government investigation, and indeed eventually brought suit against ICANN in federal and state court. VeriSign's suit against ICANN was settled, allegedly as a result of VeriSign's offer to pay ICANN a fee of between $ 6 and $ 12 million in exchange for the favorable terms in the agreements. VeriSign and ICANN's Settlement Agreement expressly provided that VeriSign "will not participate in, contribute monies for, encourage or provide other support for any activities by or for third parties that seek to undermine ICANN's role [as 'the appropriate technical coordination body for the DNS'], and it will immediately cease any such ongoing activities." Settlement Agreement between ICANN and VeriSign, http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/agreements/verisign/ICANN-VRSN-settlement-agreement-2005.pdf, [22] at 1.

In concluding that CFIT failed to state a claim for predatory conduct, the district court erroneously construed the allegation in the complaint as pertaining solely to VeriSign's litigation against ICANN, rather than to the predatory and [*506] harassing activities that accompanied that litigation. The district court's reliance on the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine therefore was misplaced, because HN10[] Noerr-Pennington immunizes only litigation activity, not other forms of threats or harassment.

We have long held that HN11[] Section 2 claims may be premised upon predatory conduct that is aimed at achieving or maintaining a monopoly in a given market. We have explained that a claim for monopolization of trade has two elements: "the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and .... the acquisition or perpetuation of this power by illegitimate 'predatory' practices." Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 541-42 (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Co., 472 U.S. 585, 596 n.19, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985); Catlin v. Wash. Energy Co., 791 F.2d 1343, 1348 (9th Cir. 1986)). Similarly, to state a claim for attempted monopolization, the plaintiff must allege facts that, if true, will prove: "(1) that the defendant [23] has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Cascade Health Solutions v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 893 (9th Cir. 2008) (quoting Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)).

CFIT has alleged that Verisign's predatory litigation activity was aimed at coercing ICANN to perpetuate Verisign's role as exclusive regulator of the .com domain name market by awarding VeriSign the 2006 .com Agreement without any competitive bidding, and by agreeing to the terms that favored VeriSign. These allegations meet the requirements articulated in Cascade Health Solutions for stating an attempted monopolization claim. 515 F.3d at 893.

Moreover, the Supreme Court has held that HN12[] an entity may be prosecuted for an antitrust violation on the basis of improper coercion of a standards-setting body. In Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 495-97, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988), the Court imposed antitrust liability on the defendant, a manufacturer of steel electrical conduits. This liability was for predatory actions undertaken to coerce the National Fire Protection Association ("NFPA"), [24] a body that published product standards and building codes, to publish standards barring the use of plastic conduits, a rival product which the plaintiff manufactured. The activities undertaken by the defendant in Allied Tube included such conduct as packing NFPA meetings with paid supporters of the defendant who would advocate for the banning of plastic pipes. Id. at 496. The Court noted that HN13[] even such "unethical and deceptive practices" are protected from antitrust liability where they are either directly aimed at or "'incidental' to a valid effort to influence government action." Id. at 499 (citing Noerr, 365 U.S. at 140-41). However, the Court explained that predatory activities aimed at private standards-setting bodies, like NFPA, do not enjoy such categorical protection from liability. The Court pointed to the "procompetitive advantages" of private standards-setting organizations whose decisions are insulated from "being biased by members with interests in stifling product competition." Id. at 501. In concluding that the defendant's predatory activities subjected it to liability, the Court emphasized the fact that the NFPA, the body the defendant sought to coerce, was a private [25] organization without any accountability to the public. Id. at 502.

[*507] CFIT has essentially alleged that ICANN is a private standards-setting body akin to the NFPA. ICANN administers the DNS and is responsible for entering into agreements with registry operators like VeriSign. According to the complaint, ICANN's mission includes a commitment to promoting competition for the contracts. CFIT's allegations further state that ICANN, like the NFPA, is a private body with no public accountability. These allegations are consistent with the view held by commentators on the subject, who have, indeed, identified Allied Tube as providing the strongest argument in favor of imposing antitrust liability on those who seek to coerce ICANN. See Michael Froomkin & Mark A. Lemley, ICANN and Antitrust, 2003 U. Ill. L. Rev. 1, 72-73 (2003) (noting that "given ICANN's private status, VeriSign will face antitrust liability for persuading a private company in a position of power to grant it control over a market," and naming Allied Tube as the "closest analogue"). We hold, therefore, that pursuant to The Supreme Court's holding in Allied Tube, CFIT has adequately alleged that Verisign's improper coercion of ICANN [26] and attempts to control ICANN's operations in its own favor violated Section 2.

CFIT also attempted to state a claim of predatory conduct in the .net registration market. The complaint's allegations did not reflect any assertion that Verisign's predatory activities had any bearing on the competitive bidding process that resulted in the 2005 .net Agreement. Accordingly, we hold that CFIT's claim of predatory conduct is made out with respect to the 2006 .com Agreement only.

2. Expiring Domain Names Market

The issue presented with respect to the claim of attempted monopolization of expiring domain names is whether the existence of a separate market was adequately pled. CFIT alleged that expiring domain names are more valuable than other names because, in all likelihood, they have already been advertised by the previous owner and already have web traffic. CFIT alleged that expiring domain names are in higher demand and command higher prices due to their unique features. In other words, expiring names differ from, and are more valuable than, names not previously used.

HN14[] A relevant market, for antitrust purposes, "can be broadly characterized in terms of the 'cross-elasticity of demand' for or [27] 'reasonable interchangeability' of a given set of products or services." M.A.P. Oil Co., Inc. v. Texaco Inc., 691 F.2d 1303, 1306 (9th Cir. 1982) (quoting United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). We consider whether "the product and its substitutes are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose," as well as "industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." Id. (citations omitted).

The district court relied on two out-of-circuit, district court cases to conclude that the complaint failed adequately to allege that the market for expiring domain names is separate from the market for other types of domain names. See Weber v. Nat'l Football League, 112 F. Supp. 2d 667 (N.D. Ohio 2000); Smith v. Network Solutions, Inc., 135 F. Supp. 2d 1159 (N.D. Ala. 2001). In Weber, the plaintiff brought a Section 2 claim against two professional football teams, the New York Jets and the Miami Dolphins, who sought to prevent the plaintiff from registering [28] the domain [*508] names "jets.com" and "dolphins.com." 112 F. Supp. 2d at 673. The plaintiff alleged that the market "should be defined by the demand for the domain names 'jets.com' and 'dolphins.com.'" Id. The court rejected the plaintiff's claim that the relevant market for antitrust purposes should be circumscribed to the market for a particular name, holding instead that the market should be "defined very broadly, in terms of domain names in general." Id. at 673-74.

Weber is similar to this case only insofar as it also involved antitrust claims defining a market for domain names. We agree with that court that HN15[] a market should not be defined in terms of a single domain name. CFIT's complaint, however, does not define the relevant market so narrowly. Rather, it alleges that expiring domain names, as a group, are sufficiently distinguishable from other domain names so as to constitute a separate market. Weber did not deal with an alleged market for expiring domain names.

The second case, Smith v. Network Solutions, did address the question of whether a separate market for expiring domain names was adequately alleged. In Smith, the court considered a claim that the defendant, VeriSign's predecessor-in-interest, [29] maintained an unlawful monopoly by failing expeditiously to release newly expired domain names for re-registration. 135 F. Supp. 2d at 1166-67. The plaintiff alleged that the particular expiring domain names it wished to acquire constituted a separate market for antitrust purposes. Id. at 1168. The court rejected this proposed market definition, finding no appreciable difference between those particular expiring names and other types of names.

The court broadly observed that "there is no inherent difference in character, for purposes of interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, between domain names that are 'expired' . . . and those that are not." Id. at 1169. It did so, however, because it viewed the proposed market of some particular expiring domain names as too small. Thus, the decision in Smith, like Weber, was premised upon the court's reluctance to approve an overly narrow market definition consisting of one or a few domain names. See Smith, 135 F. Supp. 2d at 1169 ("Taken to its logical conclusion, Plaintiff's argument implies that each individual domain name is a relevant market unto itself for antitrust purposes, subject the entity 'controlling' the name at a particular [30] time … to a charge of monopolization.").

CFIT's claims are not so narrowly drawn. Its complaint relates to all expiring domain names, not just those a particular plaintiff wishes to acquire. Moreover, to the extent that the Smith court may have viewed expiring domain names as interchangeable with other names, it may well be that expiring domain names did not have a significant enough presence in 2001 for the court to consider a possible claim that, in the aggregate, they amounted to a separate market. According to the complaint, that is no longer the case. Moreover, amicus in this case, the Internet Commerce Association ("ICA"), points out that when Smith and Weber were decided, "the present expired domain name market barely existed," and that today's conditions were "unanticipated only a few years ago."

Here CFIT's complaint alleges that every word in the English language is already registered as a domain name, and that desirable domain names can be difficult to come by. On appeal, our understanding of the distinct role and value of expiring domain names has also been significantly aided by the explanation provided by the ICA. As cogently explained by [*509] ICA, expiring domain names often [31] carry with them a history of established web traffic and advertising support; when such names do expire, they "still maintain much of [their] prior inbound traffic," making them more valuable than domain names that have never before been registered. The district court, of course, did not have the benefit of briefing by amicus. With the benefit of this aid to our understanding, we are not prepared to affirm the district court's ruling that no separate market exists. We therefore reverse and remand for further proceedings.

C. Claims Concerning the .Net Market

Although we conclude that CFIT has adequately stated facts sufficient to nudge its Section 1 and 2 claims "across the line from conceivable to plausible" with regard to Verisign's activities in the .com registration market, Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570, we cannot reach the same conclusion for the allegations about the .net market. All of the specific allegations of the complaint concerning predatory conduct leading to the pricing and renewal provisions of a contract relate to the 2006 .com Agreement. The complaint, in its present form, contains no allegation that predatory or conspiratorial conduct was involved in the process of reaching [32] the 2005 .net Agreement. CFIT may have viable claims with respect to the .net market, but the district court will be in a better position to determine whether it does if CFIT is given an opportunity to amend its conclusory allegations to allege more specific conduct or anticompetitive effect. We therefore remand the .net claims so that CFIT may be afforded that opportunity. In considering any possible amendments, the district court is directed to take into account the pleading requirements of the Supreme Court decisions in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), and Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

Finally, we observe that our review in this appeal is limited to whether the facts alleged in the complaint state plausible causes of action for violations of the Sherman Act. Although the complaint alleges that the Department of Commerce approved the 2006 .com Agreement, the role of the Department in developing that agreement or overseeing its administration has not been developed. We therefore do not consider the effect that government supervision may have in displacing the utility of antitrust supervision. See, e.g., Gordon v. N.Y. Stock Exch., Inc., 422 U.S. 659, 95 S. Ct. 2598, 45 L. Ed. 2d 463 (1975). [33] We acknowledge, however, that while CFIT stated plausible Section 1 and 2 claims with respect to the .com market, proving actual injury to competition under Section 1 or dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power under Section 2 may be difficult in light of the amendments made by the Department of Commerce to its Cooperative Agreement with VeriSign and the Department's asserted commitment to "fulfill its stewardship responsibilities in connection with Verisign's provision of .com registry services." Amendment 30 to the Cooperative Agreement between the Department of Commerce and VeriSign (Nov. 29, 2006), http://www.ntia.doc.gov/ntiahome/domainname/agreements/amend30_11292006.pdf, at 3.

VI. Conclusion

We REVERSE the district court's grant of VeriSign's motion to dismiss CFIT's complaint for failure to state a claim, and [*510] REMAND to the district court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

Retail pharmacies sued pharmaceutical manufacturers under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.), alleging the manufacturers had unlawfully conspired to fix the prices of their brand-name pharmaceuticals. The pharmacies also alleged that they had been injured by the manufacturers' unfair business practices and were entitled to relief under the unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.). The trial court granted the manufacturers' motion for summary judgment, concluding that a pass-on defense was available under the Cartwright Act. The trial court further concluded that the pharmacies lacked standing to pursue the UCL claim because, having recouped the overcharge, they had not lost money or property, as required under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17204. (Superior Court of Alameda County, No. RG04172428, Ronald M. Sabraw and Harry R. Sheppard, Judges.) The Court of Appeal, First District, Division Two, No. A116798, affirmed the trial court's judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal and remanded the matter for further proceedings. The court held that under the Cartwright Act, as under federal law, generally no pass-on defense is permitted. Instead, in an antitrust price-fixing case, the presumptive measure of damages is the amount of the overcharge paid by the plaintiff. The court found that no exception to the general rule applied in this case. Accordingly, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment for the manufacturers on the basis of a pass-on defense. The pharmacies had standing to pursue their UCL claim. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17204, requires only that a party have lost money or property, and the pharmacies indisputably lost money when they paid an allegedly illegal overcharge. The court declined the manufacturers' invitation to turn this facially simple threshold condition into a requirement that the pharmacies prove compensable loss at the outset. The pharmacies' claim for injunctive relief was sufficient to preclude summary judgment. The manufacturers identified no obstacle that would preclude the pharmacies from obtaining injunctive relief if they established the manufacturers were engaged [*759] in an unfair business practice. Opinion [1069] [670] WERDEGAR, [*5] J.—When a group of companies conspires to fix prices at higher than a competitive level, the resulting overcharge is paid in the first instance by the direct purchaser of the cartel's goods. In markets where the direct purchaser is not also the ultimate purchaser, but an intermediary between the cartel and the consumer (the indirect purchaser), several questions arise: First, who should be permitted to sue for price fixing, the direct purchaser, the indirect purchaser, or both? Second, how should damages be allocated? Should an antitrust conspirator be permitted to raise as a defense that the direct purchaser passed on some or all of the overcharge to indirect purchasers downstream in the chain of distribution?

Under federal antitrust law, the answer to these questions is settled. In Hanover Shoe v. United Shoe Mach. (1968) 392 U.S. 481 [20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224] (Hanover Shoe), the United States Supreme Court held antitrust violators ordinarily could not assert as a defense that any illegal overcharges had been passed on by a plaintiff direct purchaser to indirect purchasers. Instead, the full measure of the overcharge is recoverable by the direct purchaser. In a related decision nine years later, the Supreme [*6] Court concluded only direct purchasers, not indirect purchasers, could sue for price fixing. (Illinois [1070] Brick Co. v. Illinois (1977) 431 U.S. 720 [52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061] (Illinois Brick).)

Under state antitrust law, only the first question—who may sue—is settled. In 1978, in direct response to Illinois Brick, the Legislature amended the state's Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16700 et seq.) [1] [671] to provide that unlike federal law, state law permits indirect purchasers as well as direct purchasers to sue (§ 16750, subd. (a)). This left open the further question how damages should be allocated. Does the Cartwright Act permit a pass-on defense, or in this respect are state and federal law the same?

We conclude that under the Cartwright Act, as under federal law, generally no pass-on defense is permitted. While the text of the Cartwright Act does not answer the question, the Legislature's actions in response to Illinois Brick and related federal statutory amendments reveal a clear legislative preference for the Hanover Shoe rule. As well, that rule is the one most closely in accord [*764] with the Legislature's overarching goals [*7] of maximizing effective deterrence of antitrust violations, enforcing the state's antitrust laws against those violations that do occur, and ensuring disgorgement of any ill-gotten proceeds. Accordingly, we reverse the Court of Appeal, which held that a pass-on defense was available and that it entitled the alleged price-fixing defendants here to summary judgment.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On appeal from a grant of summary judgment, we review and recite the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party (here, plaintiffs). (Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal.4th 826, 843 [107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493].)

name pharmaceutical products in Canada where, unlike in the United States, the products are subject to government pricing restrictions.

Pharmacies filed suit under section 1 of the Cartwright Act (Stats. 1907, ch. 530, § 1, pp. 984–985, as amended; §§ 16720, 16726) and the unfair competition law (UCL) (§ 17200 et seq.), alleging Manufacturers had unlawfully conspired to fix the prices of their brand-name pharmaceuticals in the United States market, including in California. The complaint alleged [*765] Manufacturers [672] had agreed to set artificially high prices for their products, and had acted in concert to restrain reimportation of their lower priced foreign drugs into the United States and to restrict price competition from generics. As a result, the complaint alleged, Manufacturers were able to maintain prices for their drugs in California, as elsewhere in the United States, at levels 50 to 400 percent higher than for the same drugs sold outside the United States. Pharmacies alleged they consequently had been [1071] forced to pay an overcharge, the differential between the conspiracy-inflated prices set by Manufacturers and the prices Pharmacies would have paid in a competitive market. They sought [*10] treble damages, restitution, and injunctive relief.

Each Manufacturer answered, denying Pharmacies' allegations and asserting as an affirmative defense that Pharmacies' claims were barred on the ground Pharmacies passed on any alleged overcharge to third parties and therefore did not suffer a compensable injury.

Pharmacies filed a motion for summary adjudication of Manufacturers' pass-on defense, arguing that the defense was unavailable under the Cartwright Act in light of Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481, the subsequent legislative history of the Cartwright Act, and public policy. Manufacturers responded with a cross-motion for summary judgment, arguing that under the plain language of the Cartwright Act, a pass-on defense was available and defeated both the Cartwright Act and UCL claims. [4]

Evidence presented in connection with the cross-motions established the following essentially undisputed facts. Manufacturers sell their drugs to wholesalers at a price referred to as the wholesale acquisition cost. In turn, various independent entities use the wholesale acquisition [*11] cost to calculate and publish benchmark drug prices, termed the average wholesale price, for use in the industry. Wholesalers resell the drugs to Pharmacies at prices based on a percentage of the average wholesale price. Because the published average wholesale price is a fixed percentage above the price charged by Manufacturers to wholesalers, any price increases by Manufacturers will increase the average wholesale price proportionally. As a result, when Manufacturers increase their prices, the costs of drugs to Pharmacies increase by the same percentage amount.

In turn, Pharmacies sell the drugs to two groups of consumers: (1) those with third party insurance or a drug benefit plan offered by either a private entity or the government, which in turn pays customers' claims on their behalf, and (2) uninsured (or cash-paying) consumers. For the first group, [*766] those covered by third party payers, Pharmacies are reimbursed at a contractually or statutorily fixed amount, predetermined as a percentage of the average wholesale price, plus a dispensing fee; this reimbursement is greater than Pharmacies' acquisition costs. For the second group, the cash-paying consumers, Pharmacies establish the [*12] retail prices unilaterally. Though not required to be, these prices traditionally have been based on a set percentage of the average wholesale price as well, plus in some instances an additional dispensing fee.

Currently, consumers covered by third party payers comprise the bulk of Pharmacies' customers. It appears the percentage of cash-paying consumers has declined over time, with the consequence that the degree of price-setting discretion Pharmacies have has fallen as well.

Pharmaceutical, Inc.; Ortho Biotech, Inc.; GlaxoSmithKline PLC; Pfizer, Inc.; Hoffmann-La Roche Inc.; Aventis Pharmaceuticals, Inc.; Amgen, Inc.; Merck & Co., Inc.; Bristol-Myers Squibb Company; Wyeth; Johnson & Johnson Health Care Systems Inc., which apparently does not manufacture, market, or distribute [*9] pharmaceutical products; and Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, a United States-based nonprofit trade association.

[4] This motion assumed arguendo that Manufacturers had engaged in price fixing. For purposes of this appeal, we do likewise.

[*673] In light of this evidence, the trial court granted Manufacturers' summary judgment cross-motion and denied as moot Pharmacies' summary adjudication motion. It held a pass-on defense was available under the Cartwright Act: A defendant could reduce or eliminate its liability upon proof that the plaintiff had passed on the alleged price overcharge and thereby limited its damages or suffered no injury. The trial court interpreted the evidence before it as showing that Pharmacies had passed on all of Manufacturers' overcharges to consumers and had thus sustained no damages under the Cartwright Act. The pass-on defense similarly defeated Pharmacies' UCL claim; the trial court concluded Pharmacies lacked standing to pursue [*13] the claim because, having recouped the overcharge, they had not "lost money or property," as required under section 17204.

The Court of Appeal affirmed. It rejected the argument that the Legislature had approved application to the Cartwright Act of Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481, and its bar against pass-on defenses. [1072] Relying instead on its reading of the plain meaning of the Cartwright Act's damages provision (§ 16750, subd. (a)), the Court of Appeal concluded a pass-on defense was available and was fatal to Pharmacies' claims because they could show no "damages sustained" (ibid.). It likewise rejected Pharmacies' UCL claims on the grounds that Pharmacies were not entitled to restitution and lacked standing to challenge Manufacturers' alleged unfair business practices.

We granted review to address a significant issue of first impression: whether under the Cartwright Act an antitrust defendant can defeat liability by asserting a pass-on defense. Rptr. 3d 28]* ["[T]his issue of the availability of a 'pass-on defense' in antitrust law still remains an open question in California … ."]; *J. P. Morgan & Co., Inc. v. DISCUSSION

I. Hanover Shoe and Its Antecedents

In Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481, the United States Supreme Court considered whether the pass-on defense should be available to defendants found to have charged excess prices under federal antitrust law. The United States had obtained a judgment against United Shoe Machinery Corporation (United Shoe) under section 4 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 4) for monopolizing the market for shoe manufacturing machinery. Relying on this judgment, shoe manufacturer Hanover Shoe, Inc. (Hanover Shoe), sought to recover the "damages by him sustained" under section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15); United Shoe argued in response that Hanover Shoe had likely incorporated any overcharge it paid United Shoe into the prices it charged its customers for shoes, and accordingly had sustained no damage.

In a seven-to-one decision authored by Justice White, the United States Supreme Court rejected United Shoe's assertion of a pass-on defense. [5] It held that "when a buyer shows that the price paid by him for [674] materials purchased for use in his business is illegally [*15] high and also shows the amount of the overcharge, he has made out a prima facie case of injury and damage within the meaning of § 4" of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15). (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 489.)

Explaining this conclusion, the Supreme Court pointed out that however a buyer responds to illegal overcharges, he inevitably will be damaged. First, if the buyer does nothing and absorbs the loss, he suffers lost profits because, while revenue is static, his costs have been increased by the amount of the overcharge. (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 489.) Second, "if the buyer, responding to the illegal price, maintains his own price but takes steps to increase his volume or to decrease other costs, his right to damages is not destroyed. Though he may manage to maintain his profit level, he would have made [*16] more if his purchases from the defendant had cost him less." (Ibid.) Third, "the buyer is equally entitled to damages if he raises the price for his own product." (Ibid.) In this last scenario, to the extent the higher price costs the buyer sales, he is injured by his loss of sales; to the extent it does not cost [*768] him sales, because demand for his product is inelastic, his marginal profit would have been higher had his costs, illegally enhanced, been lower. In sum: "As long as the seller continues to charge the illegal price, he takes from the buyer more than the law allows. At whatever price the buyer sells, the price he pays the seller remains illegally high, and his profits would be greater were his costs lower." (Ibid.)

[5] Justice Stewart dissented on the threshold question whether United Shoe had been shown to violate the antitrust laws and accordingly did not reach the issue of how to determine damages. (See Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 513 (dis. opn. of Stewart, J.).) The seven members of the Supreme Court to consider the pass-on defense thus were unanimous in rejecting it.

[1073] The Supreme Court offered two additional reasons why acceptance of the pass-on defense would be problematic. First, it would require a fact finder to decide a host of imponderables: whether in the absence of the illegal overcharge the plaintiff would have priced his product differently, what impact such a different price would have had on total sales "in the real economic world rather than an economist's hypothetical model" (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 493), [*17] and whether the price change might have been pursued anyway even in the absence of the initial overcharge. "Since establishing the applicability of the passing-on defense would require a convincing showing of each of these virtually unascertainable figures, the task would normally prove insurmountable." (Ibid.) Proof of such factors would depend on massive and complex showings and rebuttals, potentially sidetracking every antitrust trial in a host of issues collateral to the central claim—whether the defendant had engaged in illegal anticompetitive conduct. (Ibid.)

Second, broad acceptance of the defense would create a risk that no one would be left with a sufficiently significant injury to be motivated to seek relief; individual end consumers, each harmed to the tune of a few pennies or dollars only, might have insufficient motivation even to pursue a class action. Consequently, "those who violate the antitrust laws by price fixing or monopolizing would retain the fruits of their illegality because no one was available who would bring suit against them" (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 494), and enforcement of the antitrust laws would be compromised.

Hanover Shoe's view of how [*18] properly to measure damages was not novel; as Justice White pointed out, a long line of Holmes and Brandeis opinions had adopted the same understanding. (See Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at pp. 489–490.) Writing for the court in Chattanooga Foundry v. Atlanta (1906) 203 U.S. 390 [51 L. Ed. 241, 27 S. Ct. 65], Justice Holmes explained why a pass-on defense was inconsistent with the law's [675] general take on damages: "A man is injured in his property when his property is diminished. … [W]hen a man is made poorer by an extravagant bill we do not regard his wealth as a unity, or the tort, if there is one, as directed against that unity as an object. We do not go behind the person of the sufferer. We say that he has been defrauded or subjected to duress, or whatever it may be, and stop there." (Id. at p. 399.) Several years later, he explained again why a pass-on defense [*769] should not stand as a bar to allegations of excessive rate charges under federal transportation law: "The only question before us is … whether the fact that the plaintiffs were able to pass on the damage … prevents their recovering the overpayment … . The answer is not difficult. The general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at [*19] least, is not to go beyond the first step. … The plaintiffs suffered losses … when they paid. Their claim accrued at once in the theory of the law and it does not inquire into later events." (Southern Pac. Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Co. (1918) 245 U.S. 531, 533–534 [62 L. Ed. 451, 38 S. Ct. 186].) To similar effect in rejecting a pass-on defense in the context of an illegal overcharge by railroad yards, Justice Brandeis wrote for the court: "Neither the fact of subsequent reimbursement … , nor the disposition which may hereafter be made of the damages recovered, is of any concern to the wrongdoers." (Adams v. Mills (1932) 286 U.S. 397, 407 [76 L. Ed. 1184, 52 S. Ct. 589].) To allow a pass-on defense would undermine the enforcement of the statutory scheme (there, the Interstate Commerce Act (49 U.S.C. former § 8)): "[T]he purpose of that section would be defeated if the tortfeasors were permitted to escape reparation by a plea that the ultimate incidence of the injury was not upon those who were compelled in the first instance to pay the unlawful charge." (Adams v. Mills, at p. 408.)

This rejection of using overcharge pass-ons as a defense occurs not because the law is blind to their existence, but rather because its eyes are open to their [*20] ubiquity. Justice Holmes, again: The disregard of pass-ons is in part a recognition of "the endlessness and futility of the effort to follow every transaction to its ultimate result. [Citation.] Probably in the end the public pays the damages [1074] in most cases of compensated torts." (Southern Pac. Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Co., supra, 245 U.S. at p. 534.) The Hanover Shoe court certainly acknowledged that a buyer faced with an overcharge might seek to pass on that overcharge. (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at pp. 489, 493.) What the court also recognized, however, was how much deeper down the rabbit hole one could go. Price fixing has primary consequences: the overcharge to direct purchasers. It may have secondary consequences: the pass-on to indirect purchasers. It may have tertiary consequences: the price increase may result in lost sales or profits, or lost market share for a buyer forced to compete with sellers not subject to the overcharge. (Id. at pp. 489–493.) [6] To trace every consequence of a monopoly or a price-fixing conspiracy is to encounter Holmes's “futility of the effort to follow every transaction to its ultimate result.” (Southern Pac. Co., at p. 534.) Hanover Shoe recognized [*21] fully the difficulties inherent in tracing an antitrust violation to its ultimate [*770] consequences. (See Hanover Shoe, at p. 493.) The rule it [676] adopted, which accounts only for the primary consequence (the overcharge), recognizes that to stop after consideration of primary and secondary consequences (the overcharge and any pass-on) would fail to properly account for a host of tertiary consequences and thus underestimate the impact of the overcharge, but that attempting to actually account for those tertiary consequences would often be both impractical, given the difficulties of proving “in the real economic world” (ibid.) the ultimate impacts of a price change, and a severe impairment to deterrence (id. at p. 494).

With this background, we turn to the issue in this case. Does the rule of Hanover Shoe, that a defensive pass-on theory may not be used to defeat an antitrust damages [*22] claim, apply under the Cartwright Act?

II. The Cartwright Act and the Pass-on Defense

A. The Cartwright Act's Text and Early History

HN1[] CA(1)[] (1) We begin with the language of the statute. If the text is sufficiently clear to offer conclusive evidence of the statute's meaning, we need look no further. (Microsoft Corp. v. Franchise Tax Bd. (2006) 39 Cal.4th 750, 758 [47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216, 139 P.3d 1169].) If it is susceptible of multiple interpretations, however, we will divine the statute's meaning by turning to a variety of extrinsic sources, including the legislative history (e.g., Lexin v. Superior Court (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1050, 1080–1081 [103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 767, 222 P.3d 214]), the nature of the overall statutory scheme (e.g., Tonya M. v. Superior Court (2007) 42 Cal.4th 836, 844–845 [69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96, 172 P.3d 402]), and consideration of the sorts of problems the Legislature was attempting to solve when it enacted the statute (e.g., Burris v. Superior Court (2005) 34 Cal.4th 1012, 1018 [22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 876, 103 P.3d 276]).

HN2[] CA(2)[] (2) Section 16750, subdivision (a) authorizes anyone “injured in his or her business or property” by actions forbidden under the Cartwright Act (§ 16700 et seq.) to recover three times the “damages sustained.” Aside from an increase in the multiplier, to treble damages from the original double damages, this language has been [*23] carried forward essentially without change from the original version of the act. [7]

We reject at the outset Manufacturers' contention that the choice of the words “damages sustained” (§ 16750, subd. (a)) or “damages by him sustained” (Stats. 1907, ch. 530, § 11, p. 987) establishes a particular legislative intent on the question whether a [1075] pass-on defense should be available. The express text says only that a party must have been “injured” by a Cartwright Act violation and may recover the resulting “damages sustained”; it says nothing about how the injury or damages are to be quantified. In the antitrust context, one might measure the damages from a violation any number of ways: e.g., the excess amount a party paid the [*24] violator (the overcharge) (see Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at pp. 487–490); the sales a party lost as a result of the overcharge (lost sales) (see Hanover Shoe, at p. 493; Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc. (1990) 497 U.S. 199, 224 [111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807] (dis. opn. of White, J.); B.W.I. Custom Kitchen [677] v. Owens-Illinois, Inc.,

[6] One can imagine still more remote consequences as well, such as changes in the value of a business as a going concern, or changes in buying patterns by consumers who substitute purchases of other products, with consequent positive and negative effects on the various distributors in the market. And so on, and so on.

[7] As originally enacted, the Cartwright Act's private damages provision read: “In addition to the criminal and civil penalties herein provided, any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation or association or partnership, by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor … to recover twofold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit.” (Stats. 1907, ch. 530, § 11, p. 987.)

supra, 191 Cal. App. 3d at p. 1353); the lost profit opportunity a party suffered due to increased costs (lost profits) (see Hanover Shoe, at p. 493 & fn. 9); or the impact on the value of a business as a going concern due to lost market share (see B.W.I. Custom Kitchen, at p. 1353). Put another way, one could in theory measure injury by considering only the primary consequences of a price conspiracy (the overcharge), as Hanover Shoe did; by considering only the primary and secondary consequences (the overcharge and pass-on), as Manufacturers argue; or by considering the primary, secondary, and tertiary consequences (as, for instance, B.W.I. Custom Kitchen, at p. 1353, theorized one might have to). The words of the statute themselves dictate no particular choice among these options, nor any particular conclusion as to whether a pass-on defense should be available.

That the text of the [*25] Cartwright Act is ambiguous on this point is further illustrated by the fact the United States Supreme Court, interpreting the essentially identical language of the federal Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 12 et seq.), reached a conclusion diametrically opposite to that of the Court of Appeal in this case. Construing the Clayton Act's damages provision ("damages by him sustained"), [8] the Supreme Court concluded defensive use of a pass-on theory was prohibited (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at pp. 489–494); construing the Cartwright Act's damages provision ("damages sustained"), [9] the Court of Appeal here concluded such use of a pass-on theory was permitted, indeed compelled. Nor is Hanover Shoe an anomaly; addressing a federal damages provision mirroring that of the Cartwright Act, the Supreme Court in Adams v. Mills, supra, 286 U.S. at pages 406–408, likewise rejected the defendants' pass-on theory. [10] This divergence illustrates not that [*772] either conclusion must be wrong, only that reasonable jurists may—from a text as opaque as "damages sustained"—arrive at widely differing conclusions, and that that text is thus susceptible of being read as supporting more than one rule for measuring damages. [*26] [11] The question we face is how to measure "damages sustained," and nothing in the Cartwright Act's language, [1076] as enacted in 1907 or thereafter amended, resolves that question. Insofar as the text of the Cartwright [678] Act is concerned, the question is an open one.

We reject as well a second interpretive argument pressed by Manufacturers and adopted by the Court of Appeal: that at the beginning of the 20th century there was an existing, generally understood meaning for "damages by him sustained," and we therefore should presume the Legislature intended that meaning when it used the phrase in the Cartwright Act.

The general principle that we should assume the Legislature uses words in accordance with their commonly understood meaning is sound. In State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc. (1988) 46 Cal.3d 1147 [252 Cal. Rptr. 221, 762 P.2d 385], for example, we interpreted ambiguous [*28] provisions of the Cartwright Act by considering whether extant law established an accepted meaning for the chosen terms. Because our research disclosed an accepted understanding that a prohibition against a "combination" did not extend to mergers, we [10] At issue was a claim under section 8 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 U.S.C. former § 8), which created liability for "the full amount of damages sustained" because of overcharges and other violations.

[11] Manufacturers argue that Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481, is not evidence of textual ambiguity because it was not a statutory interpretation case. We disagree. The United States Supreme Court itself has indicated Hanover Shoe resolved "a question of statutory interpretation," namely, the "proper construction of § 4 of the Clayton Act [15 U.S.C. § 15]." (California v. ARC America Corp. (1989) 490 U.S. 93, 103 [104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661].) More fundamentally, while it is true Hanover Shoe did not discuss how best to interpret the phrase "damages by him sustained," that omission implicitly acknowledges that an exegesis of those few words would have yielded no answers. Tasked [*27] with interpreting a statute, courts resort to all manner of tools to divine intent. Where in one case the text or legislative history may produce a clear answer, in another it may lead only to a dead end. Courts do not often catalogue every blind alley; that Hanover Shoe did not address the statutory text's opacity is of no significance. That the Supreme Court relied on nontextual tools to construe the Clayton Act is significant; it demonstrates the court's conclusion that the text itself was not restrictive enough to specify a unique measure of damages—that it was, in short, ambiguous.

concluded the Legislature surely knew of and adopted that understanding when it passed the Cartwright Act. (State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc., at pp. 1160–1163.)

That principle has no similar application here. We can discern no contemporaneous consensus with respect to the phrase "damages by him sustained." The Cartwright Act was passed in 1907 as part of a wave of turn-of-the-century state and federal legislation intended to stem the power of monopolies and cartels. (Landry & Hornbeck, One Hundred Years in the Making: The Cartwright Act in Broad Outline (2008) 17, No. 2, J. Antitrust and Unfair Competition Section of State Bar 7, 7–8; State of California ex rel. Van de [*773] Kamp v. Texaco, Inc., supra, 46 Cal.3d at pp. 1154–1156; see generally Limbaugh, Historic Origins of Anti-trust Legislation (1953) 18 Mo. L.Rev. 215.) It was based in part on other recently enacted state laws aimed at the same problems. (State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc., at pp. 1160–1162 [*29] & fn. 14; Hibner & Cooper, The Cartwright Act at 100—A History of Complementary Antitrust Enforcement—A Celebration (2008) 17, No. 2, J. Antitrust and Unfair Competition Section of State Bar 81, 91–92.) The phrase "damages sustained" or "damages by him sustained" was routinely employed in the remedial provisions of the antitrust statutes of the time. [12] However, our review of out-of-state and federal decisions in the years preceding the Cartwright Act's 1907 adoption discloses nothing (never mind a consensus) speaking to how the "damages by him sustained" should be measured or allocated between direct and indirect purchasers who seek to sue for antitrust loss.

Certainly the California cases relied on by Manufacturers and the Court of Appeal do not establish any consensus as to how damages were to be measured. In De Costa v. Mass. Mining Co. (1861) 17 Cal. 613, 617, a nuisance case, we explained that the damages for creating an unwanted ditch on another's property were confined to the injury sustained, the diminution in the value of the property in its [679] present condition, rather than the full cost of remediation (filling in the ditch). In Utter v. Chapman (1869) 38 Cal. 659, 664–666, a breach of contract case, we explained that the plaintiff steamship operator could not automatically recover the full contract price for shipping grain the defendant failed to provide. The plaintiff had a duty to mitigate by finding substitute employment for his steamer, such as transporting grain for other parties, and, to the extent he was able to do so, his damages were thereby diminished. In Hicks [1077] v. Drew (1897) 117 Cal. 305, 314–315 [49 P. 189], a tort action for injury to real property, we indicated damages should be measured based [*31] on the net impact of the defendant's actions, offsetting any benefit to the plaintiff against any loss.

These contract and tort cases are unhelpful on the question of how to measure the "damages sustained" in an antitrust case. They express in a variety of contexts the truism that damages are to compensate for actual loss, but this, again, begs the question before us: how to measure actual loss in the context of an intermediary-purchaser antitrust action for price fixing.

Notably as well, in 1907 an antitrust claim for civil money damages was a wholly new kind of claim, part of the "dramatically enhanced sanctions imposed by the [Cartwright] Act." (State of California ex rel. Van de Kamp v. Texaco, Inc., supra, 46 Cal.3d at p. 1167.) At common law, no such private claim existed; remedies for illegal agreements and restraints on trade were confined to proceedings to hold the agreements void and unenforceable and to revoke corporate privileges. (Ibid.) Thus, no reason exists to assume the Legislature intended to incorporate any particular existing method of measuring damages derived from statutory or common law precedent, including the common law contract and tort damage measures on which [*32] Manufacturers rely. [13]

More generally, we consider it implausible that the Legislature had any specific intent on the question we face. Certainly nothing in what minimal legislative history has survived from the Cartwright Act's 1907 enactment sheds any direct light on the question. The economic theories that underlie an antitrust claim are sufficiently complex that we may safely surmise the fine points of whether enforcement by direct and indirect purchasers should be permitted or preferred, and what precise proof of passed-on costs, lost sales, and lost profits should become the grist of an antitrust trial, were not at the forefront of the Legislature's mind when enacting what was then a pioneering law. Certainly by its choice of the generic phrases “damages by him sustained” and “injured in his business or property,” [*33] the Legislature did not presume to resolve these complex questions.

Two early Court of Appeal Cartwright Act cases relied on by Manufacturers do not lead us to a different conclusion. Krigbaum v. Sbarbaro (1913) 23 Cal.App. 427 [138 P. 364] is a case about antitrust causation, i.e., the notion that to have an antitrust claim one must establish a causal nexus between one's injury and the alleged unlawful restraint of trade. (See Associated General Contractors v. Carpenters (1983) 459 U.S. 519, 540–542 [74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897]; Vinci v. Waste Management, Inc. (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 1811, 1814 [43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 337].) In Krigbaum, the plaintiff alleged the defendants had [680] conspired to monopolize the market for vineyard-quality land, but his injury arose not from any restraints on trade accomplished by the alleged trust; rather, it arose from specific actions the defendants took to interfere with a particular real estate transaction he had brokered. (Krigbaum, [*775] at pp. 433–434.) Because the plaintiff had not alleged causation, a demurrer to his Cartwright Act claim was properly sustained. (Ibid.) Krigbaum has nothing to say on the general topic that concerns us: when (as here) causation has [*34] been properly alleged, how are antitrust damages to be measured?

Equally unilluminating is Overland P. Co. v. Union L. Co. (1922) 57 Cal.App. 366 [207 P. 412], another antitrust causation case. The plaintiff, a printing and publishing company, alleged the defendant printing trade association had agreed to limit bidding for certain printing jobs, thereby driving up prices. As the Court of Appeal there correctly explained, nothing about this arrangement caused the plaintiff injury; instead, the decision of the plaintiff's competitors not to bid for work reduced the competition for the plaintiff and likely benefited it. (Id. at pp. 374–375.) Here, in contrast, Pharmacies are not Manufacturers' competitors but their indirect customers, and they [1078] have properly alleged that Manufacturers' price-fixing conspiracy caused them injury in the form of higher prices. As with Krigbaum v. Sbarbaro, supra, 23 Cal.App. 427, nothing in the Overland P. court's discussion speaks to how we should measure the damages of those plaintiffs who have alleged causation.

HN3[] CA(3)[] (3) In the absence of textual guidance, we must turn elsewhere. We thus look to the Legislature's subsequent amendments to related parts of the Cartwright Act, and [*35] we consider as well “the object which [the Cartwright Act] seeks to achieve and the evil which it seeks to prevent … .” (Judson Steel Corp. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1978) 22 Cal.3d 658, 669 [150 Cal. Rptr. 250, 586 P.2d 564]; see also Burris v. Superior Court, supra, 34 Cal.4th at p. 1018 [“we must consider the human problems the Legislature sought to address in adopting [the statute]”].)

Consideration of these sources leads us to conclude the federal Hanover Shoe rule (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 494) is most consistent with legislative intent and applies equally to state claims under the Cartwright Act. Every indication available from the Legislature demonstrates that, given a choice, it would prefer an enforcement regime in which Hanover Shoe is the law. In particular, the Legislature's actions at two closely related points in time are telling: (1) in 1977, following Congress's passage of the Hart-Scott-Rodino amendments to the federal Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 12 et seq.); and (2) in 1978, in the immediate aftermath of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. 720.

[13] Nor do generic contract and tort damage cases address the significant antitrust-only policy concerns that have motivated the United States Supreme Court in its reading of the Sherman and Clayton Acts (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.; id., § 12 et seq.) and that must influence our reading of the Cartwright Act.

1. Cartwright Act amendment in response to federal legislation [*36]

a. The Hart-Scott-Rodino Act

Congress amended the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 12 et seq.) by passing the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act). The Hart-Scott-Rodino Act authorized state attorneys general to file parens patriae suits [14] on behalf of injured [681] consumers for violations of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.). (15 U.S.C. § 15c(a)(1).) Congress created the remedy out of concern that consumers, the indirect purchasers who typically bear the brunt of antitrust violations in the form of higher prices, had no existing effective redress because the small amounts of their injuries made individual suits impracticable, and consumer class actions had proven a disappointing vehicle for antitrust enforcement. (H.R.Rep. No. 94-499, 2d Sess. (1976), reprinted in 1976 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News, pp. 2573–2577.) The Hart-Scott-Rodino Act was designed to fill the remedial gap that "sometimes result[ed] in the unjust enrichment of antitrust violators and undermine[d] the deterrent effect of the treble damage action." (Id. at pp. 2573–2574.) The remedial provisions of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act focused on achieving full disgorgement of all illegal [*37] antitrust profits, using fluid recovery and the cy près doctrine if necessary, because "[t]he only alternative—retention of the profits by the adjudicated wrongdoer—is unconscionable and unacceptable." (Id. at pp. 2585–2586; see also id. at p. 2585 ["[T]he premise of § 4D [codified at 15 U.S.C. § 15d] is that defendants should be made to disgorge all measurable profits from an antitrust violation … ."].)

Notably, the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act originally contained no language to address the possibility that indirect purchasers might recover damages (through their respective attorneys general) when in some instances those same damages might already have been recovered by direct purchasers under the Hanover Shoe rule prohibiting a pass-on defense (see Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 494). [*38] The problem of [1079] potential double recovery under Hanover Shoe was solved by a Senate amendment excluding from parens patriae damage awards any amount that "duplicates amounts which have been awarded for the same injury." (15 U.S.C. § 15c(a)(1); see Sen.Rep. [*777] No. 94-803, 2d Sess., p. 44 (1976).) As the Senate Report accompanying the amendment explained, the proviso was inserted to "assure that defendants are not subjected to duplicative liability, particularly in a chain-of-distribution situation where it is claimed that middlemen absorbed all or part of the illegal overcharge," and to thereby eliminate any perceived tension between authorizing indirect purchaser suits and following Hanover Shoe. (Sen.Rep. No. 94-803, supra, at p. 44.) [15] Specifically, the amendment was intended to codify In re Western Liquid Asphalt Cases (9th Cir. 1973) 487 F.2d 191, a case that relied on the sufficiency of consolidation, interpleader, compulsory joinder, and the like, rather than a bar on indirect purchaser suits, to eliminate double recovery problems. (Id. at p. 201.) "Where the choice is between a windfall to intermediaries or letting guilty defendants go free, liability is imposed." (Sen.Rep. No. [*39] 94-803, supra, at p. 44, citing Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 494.)

[*682] The Hart-Scott-Rodino Act was thus of a piece with Hanover Shoe. First, consistent with the policies spelled out by the United States Supreme Court, it reflected Congress's belief that it was better to overdeter antitrust violations than to underdeter them, as well as Congress's desire to create a remedial framework that maximized the likelihood violators would be required to fully disgorge price-fixing profits. (See H.R.Rep. No. 94-499, supra, reprinted in 1976 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News, pp. 2573–2586.) Second, the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act expressly contemplated that antitrust [*40] violators might be sued by both direct and indirect purchasers, and that rather than limiting direct purchaser recoveries—by repudiating Hanover Shoe—or limiting indirect purchaser suits, the problem of duplicative recoveries could be addressed by allowing damages already paid to be offset against subsequent damages claims. (See 15 U.S.C. § 15c(a)(1).)

[14] " ' "Parens patriae," literally "parent of the country," refers traditionally to [the] role of [the] state as sovereign and guardian of persons under legal disability [¶] … [¶] State attorney generals [sic] have parens patriae authority to bring actions on behalf of state residents for anti-trust offenses and to recover on their behalf.' " (Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. County of Stanislaus (1997) 16 Cal.4th 1143, 1148, fn. 6 [69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329, 947 P.2d 291].)

[15] Bill author Representative Peter Rodino made the same point, explaining on the House floor that the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act had been specifically tailored, through Senate amendments to the bill that became new section 4C(a)(1) of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15c(a)(1)), to allow the Hanover Shoe no pass-on defense rule to coexist hand in hand with the bill's new parens patriae suits on behalf of indirect purchasers. (Remarks of Rep. Rodino, Debate on H.R. No. 8532, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., 122 Cong. Rec. H30878–H30879 (daily ed. Sept. 16, 1976).)

b. The legislative response to the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act

The Legislature moved quickly to incorporate the remedial framework of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act into the Cartwright Act, enacting a statute that precisely tracked the federal act and authorized the Attorney General to sue for Cartwright Act violations on behalf of consumers. (§ 16760, added by [*778] Stats. 1977, ch. 543, § 1, p. 1747.) [16] Notably for our purposes, the Legislature adopted as well the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act's damages provision. (Compare § 16760, subd. (a)(1) [any award must exclude damages "which duplicate[] amounts which have been awarded for the same injury"] with 15 U.S.C. § 15c(a)(1) [same].) As we have discussed, that provision was specifically designed to account for duplicative damage awards resulting from allowing indirect purchasers to recover damages when, under [*41] the Hanover Shoe no pass-on defense rule (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 494), direct purchasers might already have been [1080] awarded those same damages. Section 16760, subdivision (a)(1), in parallel with the corresponding provision in the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act, thus took as its premise that under the Cartwright Act direct purchasers could themselves recover overcharges that might in theory have been passed on to indirect purchasers, that is, the Hanover Shoe rule. Evidently, then, the Legislature presumed that such a rule would apply to the Cartwright Act as well.

CA(4)[] (4) Two additional factors suggest the Legislature took as a given the application of Hanover Shoe's no pass-on defense rule to the Cartwright Act. First, HN4[] we may presume that when the Legislature borrows a federal statute and enacts it into state law, it has considered and is aware of the legislative history behind that enactment. (People v. Butler (1996) 43 Cal.App.4th 1224, 1244 [51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150]; see also American Civil Liberties Union Foundation v. Deukmejian (1982) 32 Cal.3d 440, 447 [186 Cal. Rptr. 235, 651 P.2d 822] [the [683] legislative history of a federal statute may be used to interpret a state statute based on it].) Second, Assembly Bill No. 1162's legislative history indicates members of the Legislature were in fact aware of the legislative history behind, and the import of, the various portions of the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act they incorporated into state law. The Assembly Judiciary Committee's materials for Assembly Bill No. 1162 include by way of [*43] explanation for the bill and its purpose excerpts from the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act's legislative history, including remarks from Representative Rodino describing at length how the no-duplicative-recovery provision of title 15 United States Code section 15c(a)(1) was adopted to accommodate the effects of applying the Hanover Shoe rule. (See Assem. [*779] Com. on Judiciary, Worksheet on Assem. Bill No. 1162 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) as introduced Mar. 29, 1977 [attachments excerpting Sept. 16, 1976 remarks of Rep. Rodino].)

Manufacturers argue it would be absurd to conclude the Legislature that passed Assembly Bill No. 1162 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.), strengthening consumer antitrust protections, also approved the Hanover Shoe rule, which might in a hypothetical case impair consumer recoveries. Manufacturers posit a scenario in which an intermediary purchaser (such as Pharmacies here) sues first, recovers the full measure of any overcharge under Hanover Shoe, and leaves nothing for the ultimate consumers (because § 16760's duplicative-liability language would exclude the previous recovery from an antitrust defendant's future liability).

[16] See Assembly Office of Research, third reading analysis of Assembly Bill No. 1162 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) as amended May 17, 1977, page 1 ("The bill is modeled directly on federal law"); Senate Committee on Judiciary, Analysis of Assembly Bill No. 1162 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) as amended May 17, 1977, page 2 ("This bill would enact into California law essentially the same provisions which were enacted last year by Congress and put into Federal law"). Notably, the text of section 16760 shows the Legislature shared Congress's preference for maximizing deterrence and ensuring full disgorgement of profits generated by antitrust [*42] violations: section 16760 expressly authorizes the use of cy près and fluid recovery to maximize distribution to those harmed, with any excess to go to the Attorney General as costs or to the state as unclaimed property, rather than reverting to the wrongdoer. (§ 16760, subd. (e)(1)–(3).)

We have no difficulty reconciling Assembly Bill No. 1162's consumer-protecting [*44] provisions with tacit approval of the Hanover Shoe rule. In the abstract, both rules are intended to achieve the same goal: maximum deterrence and disgorgement. If the Hanover Shoe rule enhances enforcement and deters to some degree future antitrust violations, consumers benefit. As for the specific hypothetical, it posits a scenario in which an antitrust suit is filed, a full award is made against the defendants, and the case becomes final, all before the four-year statute of limitations expires and before the Attorney General has any opportunity to file suit. The Legislature could easily have assumed that this would be a rare scenario indeed, and that the short statute of limitations (at least in comparison with the time it takes to resolve an antitrust case), combined with the availability of devices such as joinder, interpleader, and case consolidation, would make such a scenario the exception rather than the rule. (See Union Carbide Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal.3d 15, 24 [201 Cal. Rptr. 580, 679 P.2d 14] [noting that where suits are pending at the same time, consolidation can be employed, and the practical likelihood of sequential suits is " 'remote' " because " '[t]he extended nature of antitrust actions, [*45] often involving years of discovery, combines with the short four-year statute of limitations to make it impractical for potential plaintiffs to sit on their rights until after entry of judgment in the earlier suit' "].) [17]

[1081] In short, the Legislature decided to include in its new parens patriae statute a protection against the occasional potential for double recovery that arises when indirect purchasers can sue but direct purchasers are not subject [*780] to a pass-on [684] defense, a provision created under the specific belief that Hanover Shoe would apply. From this, we may infer the Legislature approved application of Hanover Shoe to the Cartwright Act.

2. Cartwright Act amendment in response to Illinois Brick

a. The sequel to Hanover Shoe: Illinois Brick

Nine years after Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481, [*46] the United States Supreme Court was pressed to decide whether the bar on defensive use of a pass-on theory (the claim a direct purchaser could not sue because it had passed on any overcharge) should be extended to the offensive use of a pass-on theory (the claim by an indirect purchaser that it, too, had suffered antitrust injury because overcharges had been passed on to it by the direct purchaser and perhaps additional intermediary indirect purchasers). In Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. 720, a sharply divided court concluded that just as defendants could not raise a pass-on theory as a defense, so indirect purchasers could not use a pass-on theory to sue for overcharges arising from antitrust violations.

Plaintiff the State of Illinois sued concrete block manufacturers for price fixing in violation of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), alleging that the manufacturers had illegally increased prices and those increases were passed on to masonry contractors, who passed them on to general contractors, who charged more in their bids to build buildings for the State of Illinois and other government entities. (Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. at pp. 726–727.) Again writing for the majority, [*47] Justice White explained that the availability of a pass-on defense should be symmetric. First, allowing offensive but not defensive pass-on claims would create a risk of double recovery in those cases where both direct and indirect purchasers sued, with a defendant paying the entirety of any overcharge to the direct purchaser and some additional amount to the indirect purchaser. (Id. at pp. 730–731.) Second, the uncertainties involved in tracing overcharges and the risk of overcomplicating antitrust trials extended equally to offensive pass-on cases as to defensive pass-on cases. (Id. at pp. 731–732.) Third, Hanover Shoe "rest[ed] on the judgment that the antitrust laws will be more effectively enforced by concentrating the full recovery for the overcharge in the direct purchasers rather than by allowing every plaintiff potentially affected by the overcharge to sue only for the amount it could show was absorbed by it." (Illinois Brick, at p. 735.) Because no exception applied that would have allowed defensive use of a pass-on theory—and because Hanover Shoe was still sound law and should not be overruled—Illinois could not use a pass-on theory offensively and, as an indirect purchaser, [*48] could recover nothing.

[17] This case is perhaps far more typical. Pharmacies, intermediary purchasers, filed suit in 2004; had any consumers sought recovery of the same amounts Pharmacies seek (i.e., recovery for the years 2000–2004), they would have had to file suit long before now, and their actions could have been consolidated or coordinated without any risk of an award in this case impairing relief in any such hypothetical other case.

The dissenters agreed fully that Hanover Shoe was good law, but concluded the same considerations that animated it dictated a rule allowing indirect purchaser suits. (See Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. at pp. 749–750 (dis. opn. of Brennan, J.).) In Hanover Shoe, the court had chosen to run the risk of overcompensating a plaintiff rather than underdeterring antitrust violations and allowing antitrust violators to retain their ill-gotten gains. In an offensive pass-on case, there was no danger that recognizing pass-on charges would allow a defendant to escape liability; rather, allowing a pass-on claim would advance the goal of preventing wrongdoers from escaping punishment. (Illinois Brick, at pp. 752–753.) The dissenters asserted that " '[t]he attempt to transform a rejection of a defense because it unduly hampers antitrust [685] enforcement into a reason for a complete refusal to entertain the claims of a certain class of plaintiffs seems an ingenious attempt to turn the decision [in Hanover Shoe] and its underlying rationale on its head.' " (Id. at pp. 753–754.) The majority's [1082] concerns about double recovery, the dissenters argued, could be addressed fully through [*49] procedural devices (joinder, interpleader, and the like) in instances where double recovery was a risk, without resort to the majority's blanket ban on indirect purchaser suits. (Id. at pp. 761–764.)

b. The legislative response to Illinois Brick

Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. 720, evoked an immediate legislative response. Within months of the decision, Assembly Bill No. 3222 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) was introduced to prevent Illinois Brick from having any effect on judicial interpretation of the Cartwright Act. [18] This "Illinois Brick repealer" bill passed both houses unanimously and wrote into the Cartwright Act a repudiation of Illinois Brick's ban on indirect purchaser suits, allowing suit by any injured person "regardless of whether such injured person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant." (§ 16750, subd. (a), added by Stats. 1978, ch. 536, § 1, p. 1693; see Union Carbide Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 36 Cal.3d at pp. 19–20 [explaining that § 16750 was [*782] amended to repudiate the Illinois Brick bar against indirect purchaser recovery].) [19] Reviewing the legislative history behind this enactment, we find indications the Legislature fully embraced the Illinois Brick dissent, [*50] including—critically for our purposes—its view that Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481, was a sound rule of law.

Passage of the Illinois Brick repealer statute was driven by the fear that indirect purchasers might be stripped of their standing to sue under the Cartwright Act because, under the reasoning of the Illinois Brick majority, application of the Hanover Shoe rule under the Cartwright Act could be interpreted as dictating that outcome. Rejecting that reasoning, the Assembly Judiciary Committee's summary of Assembly Bill No. 3222 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) cited with approval Illinois Brick's "vigorous dissent." (Assem. Com. on Judiciary, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 3222 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) as introduced Mar. 27, 1978, p. 1.) It spelled out the dissent's critique of the [686] majority's bar on indirect purchaser suits and indicated that as the "dissent noted … the implementation problems cited [*52] by the majority[20] could be addressed by the application of existing procedural requirements, e.g.,

[18] At the time, federal antitrust cases were treated as "applicable" (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. (1968) 69 Cal.2d 305, 315 [70 Cal. Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481]) and "authoritative" (Shasta Douglas Oil Co. v. Work (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 618, 625 [28 Cal. Rptr. 190]) on Cartwright Act questions. Consequently, the Legislature feared Illinois Brick's rule would be applied equally to the Cartwright Act. (Sen. Com. on Judiciary, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 3222 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) as introduced Mar. 27, 1978, p. 1 [bill introduced to "prevent a federal case interpretation of the Sherman Act precluding an indirect purchaser's standing to sue in antitrust actions [i.e., Illinois Brick] being applied to actions under the Cartwright Act"]; id. at p. 2 [explaining the bill was needed because federal antitrust decisions like Illinois Brick were "considered 'persuasive' in interpreting the provisions of the Cartwright Act"].)

[19] California was not alone in this. To date, 25 states and the District of Columbia have passed Illinois Brick repealer statutes; numerous others have interpreted existing state law to [*51] allow indirect purchaser suits. (Karon, "Your Honor, Tear Down that Illinois Brick Wall!" The National Movement Toward Indirect Purchaser Antitrust Standing and Consumer Justice (2004) 30 Wm. Mitchell L.Rev. 1351, 1361–1362.) The Cartwright Act amendment and other like Illinois Brick repealer statutes have subsequently been upheld against preemption challenges. (California v. ARC America Corp., supra, 490 U.S. at pp. 105–106.)

[20] These implementation problems were those that would arise if indirect purchaser suits were permitted at the same time that Hanover Shoe's bar on a pass-on defense remained in place. (See Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. at pp. 737?747 (maj. opn.); id. at pp. 761–764 (dis. opn.).)

mandatory joinder of the direct purchaser, interpleader, parens patriae." (Assem. Com. on Judiciary, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 3222 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) as introduced Mar. 27, 1978, pp. 1–2.) The Judiciary Committee's analysis thus accepted that allowing indirect purchaser suits would require courts to reconcile the existence of such suits with the Hanover Shoe no pass-on defense rule, and cited with approval the Illinois Brick dissent's proposed methods for reconciliation.

[1083] Nowhere in this or any other committee report did the Legislature suggest reconciliation could or should instead occur by repudiating Hanover Shoe under the Cartwright Act. Rather, the existence of the Hanover Shoe rule was taken as a given; the relevant debate was whether indirect purchaser suits could be accommodated in a world where [*53] Hanover Shoe was the law. The Legislature, like the Illinois Brick dissent, apparently preferred procedural devices to a blanket ban on indirect purchaser suits and passed Assembly Bill No. 3222 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) to clarify that that preference was part of [*783] existing Cartwright Act law. (See Assem. Com. on Judiciary, Analysis of Assem. Bill No. 3222 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) as introduced Mar. 27, 1978, p. 2 [measure is "declarative of existing law"].) As with the passage of Assembly Bill No. 1162 (1977–1978 Reg. Sess.) the previous year, the Legislature's adoption of this amendment indicates acceptance of Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481.

C. Broader Legislative Policy Considerations

In divining the Legislature's intent, we consider as well overarching legislative goals evident from the Legislature's adoption and amendment of the Cartwright Act over the years.

From its inception, the Cartwright Act has always been focused on the punishment of violators for the larger purpose of promoting free competition. (See Stats. 1907, ch. 530, p. 984 [the Cartwright Act is "An act to define trust and to provide for criminal penalties and civil damages, and punishment of [entities connected with trusts], and to promote [*54] free competition in commerce and all classes of business in this state"].) It is, like antitrust laws generally, about " ' " 'the protection of competition, not competitors.' " ' " (Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 163, 186 [83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527].) Private damage awards are just a tool by which these procompetitive purposes are carried out: " 'The main purpose of the anti-trust laws is to protect the public from monopolies and restraints of trade, and the individual right of action for treble damages is incidental and subordinate to that main purpose.' " (Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp. (1957) 152 Cal. App. 2d 418, 443 [313 P.2d 936]; see also Bruce's Juices v. Amer. Can Co. (1947) 330 U.S. 743, 751 [91 L. Ed. 1219, 67 S. Ct. 1015] [private damage remedies provide "a strong and reliable motive for enforcement"]; Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal.3d 903, 913 [221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375] [private treble damages are designed " 'to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws' "].)

[*687] As the Cartwright Act's primary concern is with the elimination of restraints of trade and impairments of the free market, we can and should select the damages rule most consistent with that focus. The goal of deterring antitrust violations [55] and concerns that a given private party may receive a windfall are not of equal weight. The Legislature's adoption of a double damages remedy (Stats. 1907, ch. 530, § 11, p. 987), later amended to treble damages (§ 16750, subd. (a)*), demonstrates as much: double and treble damages may overcompensate injured plaintiffs, but they do so in order to maximize deterrence.

These relative priorities offer useful guidance. In cases where no consumers have come forward and the choice is between allowing an antitrust [*784] violator to retain the full measure of profits from its violation or requiring their disgorgement to an innocent direct or intermediary purchaser who paid those monies and was forced to cope with the violation, the Legislature surely would prefer the latter, thereby maximizing deterrence and the probability of full disgorgement. [21] To allow defendants universally to assert a [1084] pass-on defense, even in cases such as this

[21] In a closely related vein, we previously have approved the use of fluid recovery funds under the Cartwright Act precisely because they [*56] might be the only way to "ensure that the policies of disgorgement or deterrence are realized" and because Cartwright Act defendants should not be "permitted to retain ill gotten gains simply because their conduct harmed large numbers of people in small amounts instead of small numbers of people in large amounts." (State of California v. Levi Strauss & that present no risk of duplicative recovery, would hamper enforcement by reducing incentives to sue and police antitrust violations.

As Hanover Shoe itself recognized, a universal pass-on defense would hamper enforcement in a second way. Allowing a pass-on defense would plunge parties and courts into minitrials attempting to trace every penny of an initial overcharge, as well as seeking to measure the further ramifications that an overcharge might have in the form of lost sales and other tertiary consequences. (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at pp. 492–493.) " '[T]he task of disentangling overlapping damages claims is not lightly to be imposed upon potential antitrust litigants, or upon the judicial system.' " (Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., supra, 497 U.S. at p. 211.) While the Legislature [*57] when it enacted the Illinois Brick repealer statute imposed that task for the small universe of cases in which multiple levels of purchasers might sue, rejection of the Hanover Shoe rule would extend that burden to nearly every case. Accepting the rule, in contrast, streamlines antitrust trials, renders the process of proving antitrust damages less daunting, and ultimately enhances enforcement.

Manufacturers raise one overarching policy concern of their own. They object that Pharmacies simply were not damaged by the alleged price-fixing conspiracy and the law should not countenance a rule that permits a windfall to undamaged plaintiffs.

This objection misconceives both the nature of the Hanover Shoe rule in general and its potential application here. The Hanover Shoe court recognized that a purchaser forced by a monopoly or price-fixing cartel to pay higher prices might well be injured by that antitrust violation even in instances where it appeared the purchaser could pass on some or all of that overcharge downstream to others. (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 493, fn. 9 ["The mere fact that a [688] price rise followed an unlawful cost increase does not show [*785] that the sufferer of the cost [*58] increase was undamaged."]; see also Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., supra, 497 U.S. at pp. 208–211.) A purchaser might lose profits or sales, and perhaps market share as well, vis-à-vis another purchaser/distributor not subject to the same overcharge. Recognizing the difficulty of proving the precise amount of other forms of injury, the Hanover Shoe court selected the amount of the initial overcharge as the measure of damages, not because the initial overpayment was the only injury, but because it was the most readily measured, and because measuring damages in this way would, in the long run, best serve the various goals of antitrust law. (See Hanover Shoe, at pp. 492–494; cf. 2A Areeda et al., Antitrust Law (3d ed. 2007) ¶ 395, p. 377 ["[T]he most commonly used measure of damages, viz., the overcharge, is an ambiguous proxy for the actual damages suffered."].)

Some or all of the injuries identified in Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. 481, and Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., supra, 497 U.S. 199, are in play here. Evidence in the record indicates Pharmacies' contracts with third party payers were sometimes negotiable, and rates changed over time. Given an opportunity to do so, Pharmacies [*59] might have been able to prove lost profits on third party payer sales, that is, that in the absence of overcharges they could have negotiated reimbursement rates that would have increased the gap between their acquisition costs and reimbursement rates. Evidence in the record also indicated Pharmacies had seen fewer and fewer cash-paying customers over time and thus had unilateral pricing discretion for a smaller percentage of their sales. Given an opportunity to do so, Pharmacies might have been able to prove lost profits (because they could have maintained the same retail prices for cash-paying customers, while obtaining their drugs from wholesalers at a lower acquisition cost (see Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., at p. 209; Hanover Shoe, at p. 493, fn. 9)) or lost sales (due to cash-paying customers, who are sensitive to higher prices, filling fewer prescriptions than they would have if both acquisition costs and corresponding retail prices [1085] were lower). [22] Finally, Pharmacies alleged the value of their businesses as going concerns had declined due to lost sales, lost profits, and competition from foreign distributors not subject to Manufacturers' overcharges. As the cross-motions [*60] below focused on the pass-on defense, Pharmacies were not called on to bring forward evidence in support of this allegation. Of course, the rule of Hanover Shoe obviates the need for the parties and the trial court to develop and consider proof of these other forms of injury, not because they do not exist, but because, as noted, enforcement of the antitrust laws works better if the initial amount of the overcharge is [*786] chosen as a default measure of all the injuries a price-fixing conspiracy may engender for a given purchaser. [23]

Co. (1986) 41 Cal.3d 460, 472 [224 Cal. Rptr. 605, 715 P.2d 564].) The same considerations are in play here, where rejection of the Hanover Shoe rule would allow alleged antitrust violators to escape without sanction.

[22] Indeed, the possibility that in this latter scenario Pharmacies did not lose sales as a result of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy rests on the rather unlikely proposition that cash-paying customers' demand for drugs is wholly inelastic to price.

[*689] At its core, Manufacturers' argument is that the Cartwright Act should be read to go beyond the primary consequence of the price conspiracy (the overcharge) to consider the secondary consequence of the conspiracy (the pass-on), but that it should blind itself to the tertiary consequences (lost sales, lost profits, and so on). The Court of Appeal as well implicitly accepted Hanover Shoe's focus on overcharges as the measure of damages and its corresponding disregard for tertiary consequences, but rejected that case insofar as it disregarded secondary consequences (the pass-on). But these two aspects of Hanover Shoe go hand in hand: Hanover Shoe found it acceptable to ignore tertiary consequences only because it also disregarded secondary consequences. [*62] Put differently, Hanover Shoe is not a case about what constitutes injury, but about how to measure damages. That a purchaser passes on an overcharge does not mean it lacks for injury or damages. The Hanover Shoe court disregarded all tertiary damages for measurement purposes because, and only because, it also disregarded the secondary pass-on for measurement purposes. Conversely, one cannot rationally admit evidence of a pass-on, under a theory of mitigation, while also excluding evidence that the pass-on in fact failed to mitigate fully the loss occasioned by the original overcharge. (See Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at pp. 491–494; B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., supra, 191 Cal. App. 3d at p. 1353.) [24] Instead, the choice in [1086] measuring damages is between a rule that for policy reasons considers only the overcharge (the Hanover Shoe rule) and one that considers all the consequences of the overcharge.

D. Conclusion

CA(5)[] (5) The inferences we draw from the Legislature's actions and responses to developments in federal antitrust law, as well as its actions in enacting and amending the Cartwright Act over the years, all point in the same direction: For state antitrust purposes, the Hanover Shoe rule [690] should apply even as indirect purchasers are allowed to sue. We therefore conclude, HN5[] under the Cartwright Act as under federal law, that

---

[23] Manufacturers argue, and the Court of Appeal agreed, that Pharmacies waived these other forms of injury. The record does not support this claim. Pharmacies expressly did not concede that they had suffered no other injuries as a result of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy. Rather, they waived any attempt to prove other injuries because those injuries' existence and measure were legally irrelevant under Hanover [*61] Shoe, the rule Pharmacies contended applied under the Cartwright Act. As we agree that Hanover Shoe applies, we need not consider whether, had we concluded it did not, Pharmacies should have been permitted to prove injuries other than the overcharge in this case. (Cf. B.W.I. Custom Kitchen v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., supra, 191 Cal. App. 3d at p. 1353 [if the pass-on defense applies, plaintiffs should have the opportunity to prove other injuries].)

[24] We are aware of no statute or case that adopts such an in-between rule, and Manufacturers have cited none. The irrationality of such a rule is inferable as well from the United States Supreme Court's own precedents. To prevail on a pass-on defense in those rare instances [*63] where it has been permitted under federal law, a defendant must show the plaintiff could not have raised rates otherwise (Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., supra, 497 U.S. at p. 209; Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 493, fn. 9) and did not lose sales, because the quantity to be purchased was controlled by a preexisting "cost-plus" contract (Kansas v. UtiliCorp United Inc., at p. 218; Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. at p. 736; Hanover Shoe, at p. 494; see also Hovenkamp, The Indirect-Purchaser Rule and Cost-Plus Sales (1990) 103 Harv. L.Rev. 1717, 1720 [cost-plus contracts involve both a fixed markup and a fixed quantity to be delivered]). In essence, Supreme Court precedent recognizes that a pass-on defense (based on evidence of secondary consequences) is only presentable in circumstances that foreclose the possibility of tertiary consequences (lost sales and profits). Only then can one fairly say in defense that the plaintiff has suffered no injury as the result of an illegal overcharge.

In contrast, in stable markup cases such as this one, where a purchaser's resale price is fixed as a direct function of its acquisition price so as to pass on any overcharge, the resale market's response [*64] to that overcharge-inflated resale price is not fixed and may be different than it would have been in the absence of the overcharge—and that different response (e.g., lower sales) may injure the plaintiff.

a pass-on defense generally may not be asserted. Instead, in an antitrust price-fixing case, the presumptive measure of damages is the amount of the overcharge paid by the plaintiff.

While a pass-on defense is generally precluded, a few instances remain in which it will still be available. First, Hanover Shoe recognized an exception for "cost-plus" contracts (Hanover Shoe, supra, 392 U.S. at p. 494) and, given the Legislature's endorsement of Hanover Shoe, that exception would apply to the Cartwright Act as well. Second, in light of the Illinois Brick repealer [65] statute (§ 16750, subd. (a)*), cases may arise where application of the Hanover Shoe rule raises the prospect of duplicative recovery. In instances where multiple levels of purchasers have sued, or where a risk remains they may sue, trial courts and parties have at their disposal and may employ joinder, interpleader, consolidation, and like procedural devices to bring all claimants before the court. In such cases, if damages must be allocated among the various levels of injured purchasers, the bar on consideration of pass-on evidence must necessarily be lifted; the defendants may assert a pass-on defense as needed to avoid duplication in the recovery of damages.

CA(6)[] (6) We need not address in detail the scope of these two exceptions, for neither applies here. Manufacturers have not sought to establish that any cost-plus contract exception would apply. Nor does it appear any wholesaler, consumer, or parens patriae suits have been filed that might pose a risk of duplicative recovery, and the statute of limitations for the period at issue has long since expired. Accordingly, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment for Manufacturers on the basis of a pass-on defense.

III. The Unfair Competition [*66] Law

In a claim closely related to their Cartwright Act claims, Pharmacies also alleged they had been injured by Manufacturers' unfair business practices and [788] were entitled to relief under the UCL (§ 17200 et seq.*). The Court of Appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment to Manufacturers on the UCL claims, concluding Pharmacies lacked standing and, additionally, were ineligible for any relief. We consider each ground in turn.

A. Standing

CA(7)[] (7) "The purpose of a standing requirement is to ensure that the courts will decide only actual controversies between parties with a sufficient interest in the subject matter of the dispute to press their case with vigor." (Common Cause v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal.3d 432, 439 [261 Cal. Rptr. 574, 777 P.2d 610].) In 2004, the electorate substantially revised the UCL's standing requirement; where once private suits could be brought by "any person acting for the interests of itself, its members or the general public" (former § 17204, as amended by Stats. 1993, ch. 926, § 2, p. 5198), now HN6[] private standing is limited to any "person who has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property" as a result of unfair competition (§ 17204, as amended by Prop. 64, as approved [*67] by voters, Gen. Elec. (Nov. 2, 2004) § 3; see Californians for Disability Rights v. Mervyn's, LLC (2006) 39 Cal.4th 223, 227–228 [46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 57, 138 P.3d 207]). The intent of this change was to confine standing to those actually injured by a defendant's business practices and to curtail the prior practice of filing suits on behalf of " 'clients who have not used the defendant's [1087] product or service, viewed the defendant's advertising, or had any other business dealing with the defendant … .' " [691] (Californians for Disability Rights, at p. 228, quoting Prop. 64, § 1, subd. (b)(3).)

While the voters clearly intended to restrict UCL standing, they just as plainly preserved standing for those who had had business dealings with a defendant and had lost money or property as a result of the defendant's unfair business practices. (Prop. 64, § 1, subds. (b), (d); see § 17204.) Under that standard, Pharmacies have established standing. To distribute their pharmaceuticals, Manufacturers depend on a network of wholesalers and retailers. Pharmacies acted as retailers for Manufacturers' drugs and thus had indirect business dealings with Manufacturers. (See Shersher v. Superior Court (2007) 154 Cal.App.4th 1491, 1499–1500 [65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 634] [indirect [*68] purchases may support UCL standing].) They lost money: the overcharges they paid. (See Hall v. Time Inc. (2008) 158 Cal.App.4th 847, 854 [70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 466] [§ 17204 standard is satisfied when the plaintiff has "expended money due to the defendant's acts of unfair competition"].) Finally, that loss was the result of an unfair business practice: Pharmacies paid more than they otherwise would have because of a price-fixing conspiracy in violation of state law. The voters' intent that under Proposition 64 suits be limited to those who suffer injury in fact is satisfied here. (See Chattanooga Foundry v. Atlanta, supra, [*789] 203 U.S. at p. 396 ["A person whose property is diminished by a payment of money wrongfully induced is injured in his property."].)

CA(8)[] (8) While Manufacturers argue that ultimately Pharmacies suffered no compensable loss because they were able to mitigate fully any injury by passing on the overcharges, this argument conflates the issue of standing with the issue of the remedies to which a party may be entitled. HN7[] That a party may ultimately be unable to prove a right to damages (or, here, restitution) does not demonstrate that it lacks standing to argue for its entitlement to them. (See Southern Pac. Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Co., supra, 245 U.S. at p. 534 [*69] ["The plaintiffs suffered losses … when they [over]paid. Their claim accrued at once in the theory of the law and it does not inquire into later events."]; Adams v. Mills, supra, 286 U.S. at p. 407 ["In contemplation of law the claim for damages arose at the time the extra charge was paid," notwithstanding any subsequent reimbursement].) The doctrine of mitigation, where it applies, is a limitation on liability for damages, not a basis for extinguishing standing. (See Pool v. City of Oakland (1986) 42 Cal.3d 1051, 1066 [232 Cal. Rptr. 528, 728 P.2d 1163] [" 'The rule of [mitigation of damages] comes into play after a legal wrong has occurred, but while some damages may still be averted … .' " (quoting Prosser & Keeton, Torts (5th ed. 1984) § 65, p. 458)].) This is so because mitigation, while it might diminish a party's recovery, does not diminish the party's interest in proving it is entitled to recovery.

Nothing in the text of section 17204 or Proposition 64 suggests the voters intended to provide otherwise when they remade the UCL's standing requirements. Rather, section 17204 requires only that a party have "lost money or property," and Pharmacies indisputably lost money when they paid an allegedly illegal overcharge. [*70] We decline Manufacturers' invitation to turn this facially simple threshold condition into a requirement that plaintiffs prove compensable loss at the outset. [25]

[*692] B. Remedies

CA(9)[] (9) The Court of Appeal affirmed summary judgment on a second, overlapping ground: Pharmacies were not entitled to any remedy. Pharmacies' complaint seeks two forms of relief: restitution and an injunction. We need consider only the latter. HN8[] If a party has standing under section 17204 (as Pharmacies [1088] do here), it may seek injunctive relief under section 17203. (See [*790] § 17204 [authorizing without limitation "[a]ctions for relief pursuant to this chapter" to be brought by parties who satisfy the provision's standing requirement].) Manufacturers' papers identify no obstacle that would preclude Pharmacies from obtaining injunctive relief if they establish Manufacturers were engaged in an unfair business practice. [*71] [26]

CA(10)[] (10) The Court of Appeal held Pharmacies were barred from seeking injunctive relief because, it concluded, they had suffered no monetary loss. To the extent this holding rests on the conclusion Pharmacies lacked standing under section 17204, it is erroneous; [*72] as discussed ante, Pharmacies have standing. To the extent the holding rests on the conclusion that even if Pharmacies had standing, they could not seek injunctive

[25] Doing so would render the UCL's standing requirement substantially more stringent than other state unfair competition statutes such as the Cartwright Act, under which Pharmacies' standing is undisputed. Again, we see nothing in the text or history of Proposition 64 that suggests the voters intended such a result.

[26] In this court, Manufacturers argue that Pharmacies have waived reliance on their complaint's request for injunctive relief to defeat summary adjudication. This argument misplaces the relevant burden. If Manufacturers sought summary judgment on the ground Pharmacies could obtain no relief on their UCL claim, it was incumbent on Manufacturers, as the moving party, to show that each form of relief sought by Pharmacies was unavailable. While Manufacturers attempted that showing with respect to the request for restitution, their moving papers simply ignored Pharmacies' request for injunctive relief.

In any event, the issue whether the availability of injunctive relief bars summary adjudication was decided by the Court of Appeal and fully briefed before us by the parties. It involves HN9[] a pure issue of law, reviewable de novo. We may exercise our discretion to consider it. (See People v. Superior Court (Laff) (2001) 25 Cal.4th 703, 712, fn. 3 [107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 323, 23 P.3d 563].)

relief unless they could also seek restitution, it similarly is erroneous.HN10[] Section 17203 makes injunctive relief "the primary form of relief available under the UCL," while restitution is merely "ancillary." (In re Tobacco II Cases (2009) 46 Cal.4th 298, 319 [93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20].) Nothing in the statute's language conditions a court's authority to order injunctive relief on the need in a given case to also order restitution. Accordingly, the right to seek injunctive relief under section 17203 is not dependent on the right to seek restitution; the two are wholly independent remedies. (See ABC Internat. Traders, Inc. v. Matsushita Electric Corp. (1997) 14 Cal.4th 1247, 1268 [61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112, 931 P.2d 290] [§ 17203 "contains … no language of condition linking injunctive and restitutionary relief"]; Prata v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal.App.4th 1128, 1139 [111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296] [plaintiff could pursue injunctive relief even though restitution was unavailable].)

As the claim for injunctive relief is sufficient to preclude summary judgment, we need not decide, and express no opinion on, the further [*73] question whether Pharmacies may eventually be entitled to restitution.

DISPOSITION

For the foregoing reasons, we reverse the Court of Appeal's judgment and remand for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 governs antitrust class action suits. Under both Rule 23(a) and Rule 23(b), the plaintiffs bear the burden of establishing the prerequisites for class certification. Under Rule 23(a), the plaintiffs must establish numerosity, commonality, typicality and adequacy of representation. Further, under Rule 23(b)(3), the plaintiffs must establish that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. Those two requirements are commonly known as predominance and superiority.

HN2[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Although, in the past, courts typically determined whether the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) and (b) were met via a reading of the pleadings, recently, the First Circuit has expressed a strong preference that the district court move beyond the pleadings when certifying a class. Taking into consideration the latest mandates from the First Circuit, the court has allowed parties to the instant case to present evidence, such as affidavits and expert reports, to support their arguments in favor of or against certification of a settlement class in the instant case. When considering the evidence proffered by parties, the court has also been cognizant that its duty is to evaluate the plaintiff's evidence critically without allowing the defendant to turn the class-certification proceeding into an unwieldy trial on the merits. Even in the context of certifying a settlement class, the district court must conduct a rigorous analysis of the prerequisites established by Rule 23 before certifying a class. However, despite that heightened scrutiny, the law favors class action settlements. When evaluating the evidence proffered by the parties in favor of or against certification of a settlement class, the court has employed the preponderance of the evidence standard.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

HN3[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Numerosity

The numerosity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) specifically mandates that the class be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable. Rule 23(a)(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The second requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2) is that there are questions of law or fact common to the class. Only a single common question of fact or law is necessary to meet that requirement. Typically, in antitrust cases, courts have held that the existence of an alleged conspiracy or monopoly is a common issue that will satisfy the commonality requirement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN5[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

There is considerable overlap between this requirement of commonality and the criteria of typicality and predominance as questions, such as common impact and proof of damages, are relevant to all three under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. The predominance criterion is far more demanding than the commonality criterion. However, the requirement of commonality has been described as a low bar as courts typically provide that criteria with a permissive application. Thus, the commonality requirement is relatively toothless in comparison with the related requirements of typicality and predominance.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN6[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Typicality

The third requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3), typicality, is satisfied where the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class. In assessing this requirement, the court is directed to focus less on the relative strengths of the named and unnamed plaintiffs' case than on the similarity of the legal and remedial theories behind their claims. The requirement of typicality, like commonality, does not require that all putative class members share identical claims. Rather, typicality determines whether a sufficient relationship exists between the injury to the named plaintiff and the conduct affecting the class, so that the court may properly attribute a collective nature to the challenged conduct. In other words, where such a relationship is shown, a plaintiff's injury arises from or is directly related to a wrong to the class, and that wrong includes the wrong to the plaintiff. Thus, a plaintiff's claim is typical if it arises from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of other class members, and if his or her claims are based on the same legal theory.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Adequacy of Representation

HN7[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Adequacy of Representation

The fourth and final requirement of fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4) is adequacy of representation, under which the court must determine that the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. That requirement aims to uncover conflicts of interest between named parties and the class they seek to represent. Along that vein, it is well established that a class representative must be part of the class and possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the class members. The United States Supreme Court has noted that the adequacy-of-representation requirement tends to merge with the commonality and typicality criteria which serve as guideposts for determining whether maintenance of a class action is economical and whether the named plaintiff's claim and the class claims are so interrelated that the interests of the class members will be fairly and adequately protected in their absence. That requirement also addresses the adequacy of class counsel, factoring in their competency and conflicts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Typicality

HN8[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Adequacy of Representation

The adequacy of representation criterium of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) should be read in tandem with the commonality and typicality criteria.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) mandates that, in order to certify a class under that section of the Rule, the court must find that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members. That predominance criterion is far more demanding than the commonality requirement. In antitrust actions, common issues do not predominate if the fact of antitrust violation and the fact of antitrust impact cannot be established through common proof. However, the United States Supreme Court has noted that predominance is a test readily met in certain cases alleging violations of the antitrust laws. Accordingly, even where there are some individualized damage issues in a proposed antitrust class action, common issues may predominate when liability can be determined on a class-wide basis.

HN10[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, forbids agreements in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states; 15 U.S.C.S. § 3 forbids agreements in restraint of trade or commerce in any territory of the United States. Thus, in order to prevail upon their claims, the plaintiffs must show that a conspiracy existed that unreasonably restrained trade and that affected interstate or interterritory commerce. For the purposes of a Sherman Act claim, price fixing is usually considered to be per se unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN11[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Sherman Act

With respect to the per se illegal nature of a price-fixing conspiracy under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, et seq., the First Circuit has stated: few agreements are deemed so pernicious that they are condemned per se and without regard to the power of the parties to accomplish their aims, regardless of justification, and without any need to show an actual or potential adverse affect on consumer welfare. The classic cases are agreements to set prices, fix output or engage in horizontal market division. The categorical descriptions of per se offenses are quite misleading for anyone not well versed in antitrust. For example, price-fixing in its literal sense is not considered per se: virtually every sale is an agreement on price. The only price-fixing agreements that are condemned per se are agreements (1) between competitors; (2) as to competing products or services; (3) where, in addition, the agreement is not part of a larger, legitimate economic venture.

HN12[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A court may not shirk its duties under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 by citing the necessity of making determinations based upon the credibility of competing experts. Rather, the court must act as finder of fact, making such credibility determinations in order to grant or deny class certification under Rule 23 That preliminary credibility determination does not preclude a different view at the merits stage of the case.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN13[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

It is within a court's wide discretion to conduct hearings to resolve credibility disputes prior to making its Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 ruling. Resolving expert disputes in order to determine whether a class certification requirement has been met is always a task for the court, even where a credibility determination must be made.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Superiority

HN14[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Superiority

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) sets forth a requirement that a class action be superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. That superiority requirement is designed to ensure that the class action will achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote uniformity of decision as to persons similarly situated, without sacrificing procedural fairness or bringing about other undesirable results. In that manner, the Rule aims to provide for the vindication of the rights of groups of people who individually would be without effective strength to bring their opponents into court. Further, the Rule itself provides a non-exhaustive list of factors which the court may consider in determining whether the requirement of superiority is fulfilled: (A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and (D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action. Rule 23(b)(3).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN15[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The fundamental duty of the court when it reviews a settlement agreement for approval is to determine whether the proposed settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(2). At the preliminary approval stage, the court need not make a final determination regarding the fairness, reasonableness and adequateness of a proposed settlement; rather, the court need only determine whether it falls within the range of possible approval. An illegal or collusive settlement agreement will not fall within the range of possible approval.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN16[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

For the purposes of assessing the appropriateness of preliminary approval of the settlement agreements in class actions, the United States Court for the District of Puerto Rico has adopted the standard set forth by the Third Circuit in In Re General Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tanks Prod. Liab. Litig. Under the standard, the court makes four findings, a presumption of fairness attaches to the court's determination, and preliminary approval is appropriate. Those four findings are that: (1) the negotiations occurred at arm's length; (2) there was sufficient discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected.

HN17[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico finds that In Re Microsoft does not forbid approval of any settlement agreement which might affect competition, but, rather, cautions against approval of an agreement which allows the settling defendant to use the agreement to its advantage in entering a market in which it was previously not a strong competitor. The Court believes to find otherwise would run afoul of the basic principle that antitrust laws in the United States exist not to protect competitors, but, rather, to protect competition itself as it would serve to protect the market shares of individual competitors rather than ensuring the maintenance of healthy, robust competition in the marketplace.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure dictate that the Court must direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by the proposal. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(1).

Judges: DANIEL R. DOMINGUEZ, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DANIEL R. DOMINGUEZ

[*128] OPINION AND ORDER

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

The instant case is an antitrust action brought under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 3, and is comprised of a compilation of cases sent to this District Court to be handled as a multi-district litigation. The Fourth Amended Complaint (Docket No. 501) remains sealed to present day, so the Court shall only briefly outline the relevant facts, and shall restrict itself to those facts which appear in both the original unsealed Complaint (Docket No. 1) and the Fourth Amended Complaint, as well as information ascertainable from the public docket.

Plaintiffs in the instant case purport to represent a potential class comprised of direct purchasers of waterborne cabotage between Puerto Rico and the United States, its territories and possessions. Plaintiffs purchased the cabotage [18] from Defendants, who are eight[1] companies that provide cabotage services and six individual officers of those companies. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy to illegally fix waterborne cabotage prices[2] between the U.S. and Puerto Rico which spanned several years. Plaintiffs buttress this allegation with assertions regarding finances of the companies and the market itself as well as assertions based upon the existence of an ongoing criminal investigation by the Department of Justice ("DOJ").

[*129] On July 8, 2009, Plaintiffs and Defendants Horizon Lines, Inc., Horizon Lines, LLC, Horizon Logistics Holdings, LLC, Horizon Logistics, LLC and Horizon Lines of Puerto Rico, Inc. (collectively "Horizon Defendants") filed a motion for preliminary approval of a settlement agreement reached between those parties (Docket No. 375). Under the terms of the proposed settlement agreement, Plaintiffs have three options: (1) they may opt out of the class to pursue individual remedies against the Horizon Defendants; (2) they may elect to receive a pro rata share of a $20,000,000 total settlement payment to be made by the Horizon Defendants to Plaintiffs; or (3) they may utilize a base rate freeze on future contracts with the Horizon Defendants. In exchange, Plaintiffs will request the dismissal with prejudice of claims against Horizon Defendants.

On December 11, 2009, Plaintiffs and Defendant Alexander Chisholm (hereinafter "Defendant Chisholm") filed a joint motion for preliminary approval of a settlement agreement reached between these parties (Docket No. 597). Under this agreement, Plaintiffs agree [20] to dismiss the claims against Defendant Chisholm in exchange for his cooperation in the ongoing litigation.

Additionally, on February 5, 2010, Plaintiffs and Defendants Crowley Maritime Corporation and Crowley Liner Services (collectively "Crowley Defendants") filed a motion for preliminary approval of a settlement agreement reached between those parties (Docket No. 680). The terms of the settlement agreement reached between these parties is substantially identical to that reached between Plaintiffs and Horizon Defendants, except that the Crowley Defendants' liability for cash payments shall total $13,750,000 rather than the $20,000,000 figure named in the Horizon Settlement Agreement.

The only remaining party who has filed objections to the Court's preliminary approval of the aforementioned settlement agreements is Defendant Sea Star Lines (hereinafter "Sea Star").[3] Although several of the issues, particularly those related to the notice to be sent to potential members of the Settlement Class members or to discovery, have since been resolved via re-drafting or clarifications made in subsequent filings and in open court, Sea Star continues to emphasize two objections. Namely, Sea Star's [21] objections at this stage are that Plaintiffs have failed to show that the proposed settlement class meets the requirements of Federal Rule of Procedure 23 and that Plaintiffs have not provided evidence that the proposed base rate freeze is competitively neutral.

II. THE SETTLEMENT CLASS

[1] At the outset of the case, an additional Defendant, Trailer Bridge, Inc., was named. However, the Court has recently granted a motion to dismiss (Docket No. 722) as to this Defendant. Accordingly, the Court shall not consider Trailer Bridge's filings in the instant Opinion and Order. Likewise, as Defendants Crowley Maritime Corporation and Crowley Liner Services have at this time filed a settlement agreement between themselves and Plaintiffs and have represented to the Court that they will no longer oppose the approval of other settlement agreements in the instant case (Docket No. 667), the Court shall not directly address their filings herein.

[2] "Prices" in this context include [19] both the negotiated costs of shipping and the various surcharges imposed by cabotage providers.

[3] Early in the litigation, Defendant Leonard Shapiro moved to join Sea Star's motion in opposition to the motion for preliminary approval of the settlement agreement with Horizon Defendants (Docket No. 338).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 HN1[] governs antitrust class action suits. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 23; see also ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments vol. I 886 (6th ed.2007). Under both Rule 23(a) and Rule 23(b), Plaintiffs bear the burden of establishing the prerequisites for class certification. In Re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 231 F.R.D. 52, 67 (D.Mass.2005). Under Rule 23(a), Plaintiffs must establish numerosity, commonality, typicality and adequacy of representation. Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a). Further, under Rule 23(b)(3), Plaintiffs must establish "that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members" and that "a class action [22] is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(b)(3). These two requirements are commonly known as "predominance" and "superiority." In Re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 18 (1st Cir.2008).

HN2[] Although, in the past, courts typically determined whether the aforementioned requirements of Rules 23(a) and (b) were met via a reading of the pleadings, recently, the First Circuit has expressed a strong preference that the Court move beyond the pleadings when certifying a class. See College of Dental Surgeons of Puerto Rico v. Connecticut General Life Ins. Co., 585 F.3d 33, 41 (1st Cir.2009); see also In Re PolyMedica Corp. [*130] Sec. Litig., 432 F.3d 1, 6 (1st Cir.2005). Taking into consideration the latest mandates from the First Circuit, the Court has allowed parties to the instant case to present evidence, such as affidavits and expert reports, to support their arguments in favor of or against certification of a settlement class in the instant case. When considering the evidence[4] proffered by parties, the Court has also been cognizant that its duty is to "evaluate the plaintiff's evidence critically [23] without allowing the defendant to turn the class-certification proceeding into an unwieldy trial on the merits." In Re New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 17 (quoting In Re PolyMedica, 432 F.3d at 17). Even in the context of certifying a settlement class, the "district court must conduct a rigorous analysis of the prerequisites established by Rule 23 before certifying a class." Smilow v. Southwestern Bell Mobile Sys., 323 F.3d 32, 38 (1st Cir.2003). "[H]owever, despite this heightened scrutiny . . . the law favors class action settlements." In Re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 68 (quoting In Re Lupron Mktg. And Sales Practices Litig., 228 F.R.D. 75, 88 (D.Mass.2005)) (internal quotations omitted).

In each of the settlement agreements, the Settlement Class is defined as follows:

> All persons (excluding governmental entities, Defendants, co-conspirators, and the present and former parents, predecessors, subsidiaries and affiliates of the foregoing) [24] who purchased Puerto Rican Cabotage directly from any of the Defendants or their co-conspirators, or any present or former parent, subsidiary or affiliate thereof, at any time during the period from May 1, 2002, until April 17, 2008.

Thus, the Court shall analyze the certification of the Settlement Class as it pertains to all the proposed settlement agreements collectively rather than treating each settlement's Settlement Classes as distinct entities.

A. RULE 23(A) REQUIREMENTS

The Court therefore proceeds first to review the sufficiency of the material presented by Plaintiffs in favor of certification of a settlement class at this preliminary stage under the criteria set forth under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a).

1. NUMEROSITY

HN3[] The numerosity requirement of Rule 23(a) specifically mandates that "the class [be] so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(1). The Court finds that this numerosity requirement is easily met here. As noted by Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Lamb, at least 3,000 customers were affected by Defendants' alleged conspiracy. See Affidavit of Dr. Russell Lamb, ¶4. Joinder of such a multitudinous group of Plaintiffs would clearly be [25] impracticable. Accordingly, the Court finds that the numerosity requirement is met in the instant case.

[4] When evaluating the evidence proffered by the parties in favor of or against certification of a settlement class, the Court has employed the preponderance of the evidence standard. See In Re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 320 (3d Cir.2009).

2. COMMONALITY

HN4[] The second requirement of Rule 23(a) is that "there are questions of law or fact common to the class." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(2). Only a single common question of fact or law is necessary to meet this requirement. See Manual for Complex Litigation §21.132 (4th ed.2004); see also 1 Herbert B. Newberg & Alba Conte, Newberg on Class Actions §3.10 (4th ed.2002). Typically, in antitrust cases, "courts have held that the existence of an alleged conspiracy or monopoly is a common issue that will satisfy" the commonality requirement. 1 Herbert B. Newberg & Alba Conte, Newberg on Class Actions §3.10 (4th ed.2002); see also Natchitoches Parish Hosp. Svc. Dist. v. Tyco Int'l, Ltd., 247 F.R.D. 253, 264 (D.Mass.2008).

HN5[] There is considerable overlap between this requirement of commonality and the criteria of typicality and predominance as questions, such as common impact and proof of damages, "are relevant to all three." In Re New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 19 (internal citations omitted); see also Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997) (noting that "the [26] predominance [*131] criterion is far more demanding" than the commonality criterion). However, the requirement of commonality has been described as a "low bar" as courts typically provide this criteria with "a permissive application." In Re New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 19 (internal citations and quotations omitted). Thus, the commonality requirement is relatively toothless in comparison with the related requirements of typicality and predominance.

In the instant case, Plaintiffs have identified seven issues which they allege are common to all Plaintiffs. The first of these is whether Defendants engaged in a conspiracy to allocate customers, rig bids and fix prices.[5] The second issue is the precise identity of the participants in the alleged conspiracy. The third common issue cited by Plaintiffs includes the meetings, communications and other collusive acts allegedly performed by Defendants while perpetrating the conspiracy. The next common issue cited is the duration of the conspiracy. Additionally, Plaintiffs cite the effect of Defendants' conduct on the prices of cabotage and the appropriate measure of damages sustained by Plaintiffs as issues common to all Plaintiffs.

Sea Star makes no claim that Plaintiffs have failed to fulfil the commonality requirement of the class certification analysis. Plaintiffs in the instant case have provided preliminary evidence supporting their allegation that a price-fixing conspiracy existed between Defendants. Even without considering any of the other factors presented by Plaintiffs, the Court finds that the supported allegation regarding the antitrust conspiracy targeting local cabotage purchasers, standing alone, is sufficient to establish commonality. See 1 Herbert B. Newberg & Alba Conte, Newberg on Class Actions §3.10 (4th ed.2002); see also Natchitoches, 247 F.R.D. at 264; see also In Re Compact Disk Minimum Advertised Price Antitrust Litig., 216 F.R.D. 197, 204 (D.Maine 2003).

3. TYPICALITY

HN6[] The third requirement of Rule 23(a), typicality, is satisfied where "the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(3). In assessing this requirement, the Court is directed to focus "less on the relative strengths of the named and unnamed plaintiffs' case than on the similarity of the legal and remedial [28] theories behind their claims." In Re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 69 (quoting Jenkins v. Raymark Indus., Inc., 782 F.2d 468, 472 (5th Cir.1986)). The requirement of typicality, like commonality, "does not require that all putative class members share identical claims." Natchitoches, 247 F.R.D at 264 (quoting In Re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 531 (3d Cir.2004)). Rather,

[5] See supra note [27] 2 regarding the relevant definition of "prices."

> [t]ypicality determines whether a sufficient relationship exists between the injury to the named plaintiff and the conduct affecting the class, so that the court may properly attribute a collective nature to the challenged conduct. In other words, where such a relationship is shown, a plaintiff's injury arises from or is directly related to a wrong to the class, and that wrong includes the wrong to the plaintiff. Thus, a plaintiff's claim is typical if it arises from the same event or practice or course of conduct that gives rise to the claims of other class members, and if his or her claims are based on the same legal theory.

Id. (quoting In Re Am. Med. Sys., Inc., 75 F.3d 1069, 1082 (6th Cir.1996)); see also 1 Herbert B. Newberg & Alba Conte, Newberg on Class Actions §3.13 (4th ed.2002).

Sea Star contests [29] Plaintiffs assertion that they meet the typicality requirement for class certification. Specifically, their arguments rest upon an averment that Plaintiffs have not provided sufficient details regarding the negotiations held between Plaintiffs and Defendants, the volume of goods transported or the type of goods transported. Further, Sea Star notes that Defendants operated between different ports and using different vessels. On the other hand, Plaintiffs emphasize that they all suffered a common injury in the form of the allegedly anti-competitive pricing structures created by Defendants. Plaintiffs also assert that the allegedly collusive actions undertaken by Defendants mandate [*132] that a common set of facts apply to the claims of the entire class.

Both parties' arguments regarding the adequacy requirement rely on expert opinions submitted to the Court. Sea Star's arguments rest primarily upon affidavits and declarations submitted by now-settling Defendants Crowley Liner Services, Inc. and Crowley Maritime Corporation (Docket No. 593), which were subsequently withdrawn when those Defendants reached a settlement agreement with Plaintiffs (Docket No. 728). The Court, however, acting out [30] of an abundance of caution, will continue to consider these submissions herein in order to avoid any unfairness to Sea Star, who originally objected alongside the Crowley Defendants, but who is the only non-settling business entity Defendant remaining at this time. Thus, the Court is faced with a battle of conflicting experts regarding the typicality and predominance requirements for class certification.

Although Sea Star urges the Court to deny certification for lack of typicality based upon dissimilarities between Plaintiffs, the Court disagrees with the propriety of such an outcome. After all, typicality is not tantamount to identicality, and the Court need not ascertain whether all Plaintiffs are situated in exactly the same manner as each other in order to find typicality. See *In Re Carbon Black Antitrust Litig., No. 03-10191, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 660, 2005 WL 102966 at 12 (Jan.18, 2005 D.Mass.) (finding that the claims of representatives of a proposed class were sufficiently typical, even where they paid for diverse products under a variety of agreements involving varied terms or volumes).

Here, Plaintiffs are the purported representatives of a class of natural persons and business entities who purchased [31] cabotage from Defendants during the time period when Defendants allegedly engaged in an illegal price-fixing scheme. Although Sea Star's assertion that the terms and events surrounding their individual contracts with Defendants, the type of vessel upon which their cabotage shipped, the port from which the cabotage shipped and the volume of cabotage shipped vary bears some weight, the Court reads this argument as improperly mandating identicality, rather than typicality. See *In Re Carbon Black Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 660, 2005 WL 102966 at 12 (finding typicality even where purchasers did not buy identical volumes of a product or under the same contractual terms).

All Plaintiffs and members of the proposed class are entities who purchased cabotage from Defendants at a price which was allegedly inflated to a supra-competitive level by Defendants' alleged anti-competitive price-fixing scheme. Although the exact details of the individual contracts and shipping terms vary between Plaintiffs and Defendants, the claims of Plaintiffs and members of the proposed class all involve the same illegally collusive behavior by Defendants which led to Plaintiffs and members of the proposed class paying supra-competitive [32] prices for cabotage. Thus, Plaintiffs and members of the proposed class share the same legal theory as their claims arise out of the same conduct or practice by Defendants. See In Re Insurance Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 579 F.3d 241, 265 (3d Cir.2009); see also In Re Compact Disk Minimum Advertised Price Antitrust Litig., 216 F.R.D. 197, 205 (D.Maine 2003). Specifically, "[t]he course of conduct pled in this case is the agreement to fix prices and the legal theory will be a[n antitrust] violation for all class members." *In Re Carbon Black Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 660, 2005 WL 102966 at 12. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' claims are sufficiently typical of those of the Proposed Class to meet this requirement.

4. ADEQUACY OF REPRESENTATION

HN7[] The fourth and final requirement of Rule 23(a) is adequacy of representation, under which the Court must determine that "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a)(4). This requirement aims to "uncover conflicts of interest between named parties and the class they seek to represent." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 625. Along this vein, it is well established that a class representative must [33] be part of the class and possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the class members." Id. at 625-26 [*133] (quoting East Tex. Motor Freight System, Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403, 97 S.Ct. 1891, 52 L. Ed. 2d 453 (1977)). The Supreme Court has noted that "[t]he adequacy-of-representation requirement tends to merge with the commonality and typicality criteria . . . which serve as guideposts for determining whether maintenance of a class action is economical and whether the named plaintiff's claim and the class claims are so interrelated that the interests of the class members will be fairly and adequately protected in their absence." Id. at 626 n.20. This requirement also addresses the adequacy of class counsel, "factor[ing] in [their] competency and conflicts." Id.

As a preliminary matter, the Court finds that class counsel meet the adequacy requirement. Class counsel are properly experienced, have no known conflicts of interest and, in light of the vigorous nature in which they have already pursued the instant case on behalf of Plaintiffs, the Court harbors at this stage no doubt that they can competently pursue both Plaintiffs' claims and those of the entire proposed class. See e.g. [34] In Re Compact Disc, 216 F.R.D. at 205 (finding counsel adequate based, in part, upon "the quality of their pleadings, diligence in investigating and prosecuting the matter, and extensive experience").

Sea Star hotly contests Plaintiffs' adequacy as class representatives, however. Plaintiffs have supplemented their assertions regarding adequacy with affidavits of several named Plaintiffs. Sea Star attacks the sufficiency of these affidavits,[6] calling them overly "sweeping." Further, Sea Star asserts that Plaintiffs have failed to show adequacy as they proffer no evidence that members of the class know of the litigation or the terms of the settlement agreements, do not show that there is sufficient supervision of counsel by Plaintiffs and that they do not proffer evidence regarding the rates actually paid for cabotage. Plaintiffs, in turn, argue that they have all paid the same illegally inflated rates as members of the Proposed Class and, accordingly, share the common goal of maximizing recovery for the illegally inflated pricing on Puerto Rican cabotage.

As stated above, HN8[] the adequacy criterium of Rule 23(a) should be read in tandem with the commonality and typicality criteria. As already discussed, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have met these two criteria, based upon the common injury suffered in the form of illegally inflated prices, and a common legal theory based upon Defendants' alleged violations of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs, like other members of the proposed class, have the same

[6] Sea Star attached to its Motion Submitting Documents Pursuant to Court Orders of November 12 and November 13, 2009 (Docket No. 595) evidentiary [35] objections to the affidavits proffered by Plaintiffs. First, Sea Star objects to the affidavit of Defendant Chisholm, asserting that it is unreliable because his settlement agreement with Plaintiffs was, at that time, undisclosed. As it has since been disclosed, the Court finds this argument MOOT. Sea Star then objects to the statements made by Defendant Chisholm in his affidavit as lacking foundation, lacking personal knowledge and unduly prejudicial. The Court OVERRULES these objections. See e.g Manual for Complex Litigation §21.21 (4th ed.2004) ("The judge need not decide at the certification stage whether such expert testimony satisfies standards for admissibility at trial."). Sea Star also objects to the affidavit of Carlos Trigueros, arguing that the affidavit should be stricken in its entirety as it is too vague, and arguing that portions of it should be stricken for lack of foundation and for providing inadmissible opinions on legal issues. The Court OVERRULES these objections. Sea Star also objects to the affidavit of Maria V. Arbelaez, Roberto Medina, Melba J. Jordan, David Klau and Rafael Gonzalez based upon the same grounds. The Court OVERRULES these objections as well for [36] the reasons cited above.

incentives to maximize recovery for the wrongs allegedly perpetrated on them by Defendants. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have suffered the same injury and share the same interest as members of the proposed class.

Although Sea Star attacks the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' showing that they meet the adequacy requirement of 23(a), if the Court were to create precedent by denying the motion for class certification based upon these arguments, it would sanction an untenably heightened standard. In order to rebut Sea Star's assertions of insufficiency, Plaintiffs would have to present the Court with a near-unreachable level of detail as to the alignment of their interests with those of the members of the proposed class. [37] In order to present [*134] the Court with evidence regarding the proposed class' knowledge of the terms of the settlement agreements and potential conflicts, Plaintiffs would likely need to poll members of the proposed class, other than themselves, who have, to date, not even received notice of the proposed settlements. In fact, such notice shall not be issued until the Court, if it deems fit, later orders that notice of the settlements be sent to potential class members. Even common sense, therefore, dictates that Plaintiffs' request for certification of a settlement class should not be denied due to failure to present such evidence as the possibility of gathering such evidence is stymied by the Court's decision whether or not to grant class certification. To deny class certification based upon an insufficient showing of adequacy for the reasons argued by Sea Star, therefore, might create precedent for cases that would ultimately preclude certification of any large class whose members were not easily identified and polled by their proposed representatives prior to moving for class certification. The Court shall not create such precedent herein. Accordingly, having found that Plaintiffs have [38] the same interest in pursuing a remedy for injuries suffered as a result of Defendants' alleged antitrust price-fixing conspiracy as members of the potential class and that Plaintiffs have no readily ascertainable conflict of interest with members of the proposed class, the Court shall not deny their motion for class certification for lack of adequacy.

B. RULE 23(B) REQUIREMENTS

As the Court has determined that Plaintiffs meet the requirements for class certification that arise under Rule 23(a), it shall now turn to discuss the predominance and superiority requirements of Rule 23(b).

1. PREDOMINANCE

Rule 23(b)(3) HN9[] mandates that, in order to certify a class under that section of the Rule, the Court must find "that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(b)(3). This "predominance criterion is far more demanding . . . than the commonality requirement." In Re New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 20 (quoting Amchem, 521 U.S. at 624) (internal quotations omitted). In antitrust actions, such as the instant action, "common issues do not predominate if the fact of antitrust violation and the fact of antitrust [39] impact cannot be established through common proof." Id. However, the Supreme Court has noted that "[p]redominance is a test readily met in certain cases alleging . . . violations of the antitrust laws." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 625. Ultimately, this requirement "does not require an entire universe of common issues, but does require a sufficient constellation of them." In Re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 70 (quoting Waste Mgt. Holdings, Inc. v. Mowbray, 208 F.3d 288, 298 (1st Cir.2000)) (internal quotations omitted). Accordingly, "[e]ven where there are some individualized damage issues [in a proposed antitrust class action], common issues may predominate when liability can be determined on a class-wide basis." Natchitoches, 247 F.R.D. at 269 (quoting In Re Visa Check/Master Money Antitrust Litig., 280 F.3d 124, 139 (2d Cir.2001)) (internal quotations omitted).

"Section 1 [of the Sherman Act] HN10[] forbids agreements 'in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states'; [and] section 3 forbids agreements 'in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory of the United States.'" Cordova & Simonpietri Insurance Agency, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank N.A., 649 F.2d 36, 36 (1st Cir.1981) (quoting 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 [40] & 3). Thus, in order to prevail upon their claims, Plaintiffs must show that a conspiracy existed that unreasonably restrained trade and that affected interstate or interterritory commerce. See

Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N. America, 829 F.Supp.529, 535 (D.R.I.1993), aff'd 23 F.3d 14 (1st Cir.1994). For the purposes of a Sherman Act claim, price fixing is usually considered to be per se[7] unlawful. *Eastern [135] Food Svcs., Inc. v. Pontifical Catholic Univ. Svcs. Assoc., 357 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir.2004).

Here, Sea Star bases its arguments against class certification for lack of predominance upon several contentions. First, Sea Star argues that Plaintiff's expert, Dr. Lamb, did not establish a presumption of class-wide impact. Sea Star rests this argument upon the assertions of the Crowley Defendants' experts,[8] which, in turn, are based upon evidence that Defendants served the varying needs of their customers via different ports and with different types of vessels. Sea Star also asserts that the Court may not presume common impact simply because the instant case is a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy. Finally, Sea Star challenges the methodology for calculating damages proffered by Dr. Lamb as untested and unworkable. Plaintiffs, in turn, focus on the alleged conspiracy to price-fix and the market-wide effects of that alleged conspiracy, particularly [42] as related to the issues outlined above during the Court's discussion of commonality.

Thus, as to this criterium, the controversy between Sea Star and Plaintiffs centers around the varying opinions of the experts. HN12[] The Court may not shirk its duties under Rule 23 by citing the necessity of making determinations based upon the credibility of competing experts at this stage. See In Re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 324 (3d Cir.2009). Rather, the Court must act as finder of fact, making such credibility determinations in order to grant or deny class certification under Rule 23. Id. The Court notes that this preliminary credibility determination "does not preclude a different view at the merits stage of the case." Id.

HN13[] It is within the Court's wide discretion to conduct hearings to resolve credibility disputes prior to making its Rule 23 [43] ruling; however, in the instant case, the Court finds that such hearings are unnecessary. See id. The Court has received ample evidence from all parties in the form of "affidavits, documents [and] testimony" and bases its conclusions upon a combination thereof. See id. Accordingly, the Court's function in determining whether the predominance requirement is fulfilled in the instant case shall be to review the expert reports in order to resolve the disputes that underlie parties' respective positions regarding predominance. See In Re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d at 324 (explaining that "[r]esolving expert disputes in order to determine whether a class certification requirement has been met is always a task for the court," even where a credibility determination must be made); see also In Re New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 20. In this manner, the Court shall predict "how specific issues will play out in order to determine whether common or individual issues predominate in a given case." In Re New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 20 (quoting Mowbray, 208 F.3d at 298).

a. DR. RUSSELL L. LAMB

In support of their petition for class certification, Plaintiffs offer the expert opinion [44] of Dr. Russell L. Lamb. In Dr. Lamb's affidavit, he asserts that, due to the highly concentrated nature of the industry, the high barriers to entry

---

[7] HN11[] With respect to the per se illegal nature of a price-fixing conspiracy, the First Circuit has stated:

> few agreements are deemed so pernicious that they are condemned 'per se' and without regard to the power of the parties to accomplish their aims, regardless of justification, and without any need to show an actual or potential adverse affect on consumer welfare. The classic cases are agreements to set prices, fix output or engage in horizontal market division. . . The categorical descriptions of per se offenses are quite misleading for anyone not well versed in antitrust. For example, price-fixing in its literal sense is not considered per se: virtually every sale is an agreement on price. The only [41] price-fixing agreements that are condemned per se . . . are agreements (1) between competitors (2) as to competing products or services (3) where, in addition, the agreement is not part of a larger, legitimate economic venture.

Augusta News Co. v. Hudson News Co., 269 F.3d 41, 47 (1st Cir.2001) (internal citations omitted) (emphasis ours).

[8] As already stated above, although the Crowley Defendants later withdrew their experts' affidavits, due to fairness considerations and acting out of an abundance of caution, the Court has chosen to review these reports as they relate to Sea Star's arguments against class certification and preliminary approval of the settlement agreements.

into the market, the lack of economically viable substitutes for waterborne cabotage, the stable demand for Puerto Rican cabotage during the class period and the generally substitutable nature of Puerto Rican cabotage between Defendants, the impact on members of the proposed class [*136] may be shown by common proof. Affidavit of Dr. Lamb, ¶11.

Dr. Lamb rests his assertion regarding market concentration upon figures that show that, between 2002 and 2008, 99.9-100% of the Puerto Rican cabotage market share was held by the original Defendants[9] in the instant action. Id., Tables 1 & 2. These same figures show that the remaining Defendants controlled between 20.6% and 33.5% of the market individually. Id. Further, the Herfindahl-Hirschmann Index ("HHI"), which measures the degree of industry concentration, ranked the Puerto Rican Cabotage industry concentration as 2,702 in 2008, a figure that the Department of Justice ("DOJ") considers highly concentrated. Id. at ¶18. Citing Richard Posner, Dr. Lamb concluded that "the stable market shares here indicate [45] a lack of competition between the defendants." Id. at ¶18.

In support of his assertion that there are high barriers to entry in the Puerto Rican cabotage market, Dr. Lamb notes that the Jones Act itself acts as a primary barrier. Id. at ¶¶20-21. Specifically, Dr. Lamb states that the entry barriers created by the Jones Act restrict the possibility of entry into the market by new players due to the necessity of high capital investment and substantial infrastructure investment, as well as long lead times associated with building new containerships. Id. at ¶21. Further, Dr. Lamb notes that federal regulation of the Puerto Rican cabotage industry also acts as a barrier to entry. Id. at ¶22.

Dr. Lamb next opines that "[d]emand for ocean freight shipping services is a derived demand, which depends on the demand for the final goods being purchased by the consumer." Id. at ¶23. Additionally, Dr. Lamb states that there is a large trade imbalance [46] in the Puerto Rican cabotage industry, as imports from the U.S. to Puerto Rico greatly outweigh exports from Puerto Rico to the U.S. Id. at ¶25. Dr. Lamb also asserts that "[t]he demand for maritime freight shipping services is [generally] characterized by low price elasticity," where static elasticity "means that a price fixing conspiracy could profitably raise price above competition levels." Id. at ¶24. Further, Dr. Lamb notes that, during the relevant period, "demand for Puerto Rican shipping was static or declining." Id. at ¶26.

The last assertion upon which Dr. Lamb bases his conclusions is that Defendants' services are interchangeable, a proposition that Sea Star vehemently contests. Dr. Lamb rests this assertion upon several factors. First, Dr. Lamb notes that, because Defendants "generally serve the entire eastern seaboard of the United States," providing services along the "limited number of shipping routes between the U.S. and Puerto Rico," and because each port is served by at least two Defendants, "no single defendant has a monopoly on Cabotage to a geographic market in the U.S. mainland." Id. at ¶28. Additionally, based upon Defendants' own filings and statements, Dr. [47] Lamb postulates that "[b]ecause defendants offer Cabotage for many different kinds of goods, no defendant has a monopoly in transport of a particular good, and competition occurs on the basis of price rather than some sort of specialized service." Id. at ¶29. Dr. Lamb also hypothesizes that, based upon the available evidence, "but for the alleged misconduct . . . more vigorous competition would have served to reduce prices." Id. at ¶29.

Based upon these assertions, Dr. Lamb reaches several conclusions as to matters which would be shown by common proof as to all class members. First, Dr. Lamb notes that, because the Puerto Rican cabotage industry is highly concentrated, it would have been "impossible for class members to" substitute other services for those provided by Defendants. Id. at ¶31. Dr. Lamb also states that the effect of a cartel would have been to raise prices to supra-competitive levels. Id. at ¶32. Whereas under other circumstances, this would lead to the entry of new competitors into the marketplace, the high entry barriers present in the Puerto Rican cabotage market prevented such an occurrence here and, accordingly, Defendants [*137] were able to raise prices to a supra-competitive [48] level and maintain them at that level throughout the relevant time-period. Id. Further, Dr. Lamb postulates that "[b]ecause there are few economically viable substitutes, class members would have had no choice but to purchase Cabotage services at the inflated prices which would have resulted from the alleged misconduct." Id. at ¶34. Further, Dr. Lamb states that, if not for the alleged conspiracy, because demand for cabotage was stable or even weak during the relevant time-period, Defendants would have competed with each other to gain new customers, which would have resulted in lower cabotage prices. Id. at ¶35. Thus, Dr. Lamb concludes that the class members were injured as a result of the alleged conspiracy as they had paid supra-competitive prices for Puerto Rican cabotage. Id. Dr. Lamb notes that in "industries characterized by static or declining demand," such as the Puerto Rican cabotage industry during the relevant time-period, collusion of the type alleged in the instant action should be relatively easy to detect. Id. at ¶36. Finally, because each port in the U.S. served by a Defendant was served by another Defendant, Dr. Lamb asserts that Puerto Rican cabotage was substitutable [49] across Defendants, so, in a competitive market, they would have competed against each other, primarily upon the basis of price. Id. at ¶37. It follows, therefore, that, because price competition did not exist due to the alleged conspiracy, that class members were harmed because they paid a price for cabotage that was inflated in comparison with the price which they would have paid if not for the alleged conspiracy. Id. at ¶38.

[9] The Court notes that Defendant Trailer Bridge, whose motion to dismiss the Court recently granted, held a market shares between 12.5-15.6%, leaving the remaining Defendants with an 84.3-87.5% market share during the relevant time-period. Id. at Tables 1 & 2.

In his affidavit, Dr. Lamb also presents the Court with a proposed methodology for measuring damages on a class-wide basis. This methodology encompasses a two-step process, which Dr. Lamb indicates is typical for cases involving price-fixing. Id. at ¶39. Under the first step, a model is developed in order to explain the prices to determine which prices were higher as the result of the alleged conspiracy. Id. at ¶39. In order to calculate this "overcharge," Dr. Lamb proposes to utilize a modified benchmark analysis informed by multiple regression analyses to account for other factors which affected prices of the cabotage during the relevant time-period. Id. at ¶40-57. Under the second step of the proposed method for measuring damages, the "overcharge" is applied [50] to the dollar value of sales that occurred so that the Court may determine the class-wide overcharge paid by class members. Id. at ¶39.

b. DR. MARK A. ISRAEL

In response to Dr. Lamb's affidavit, Defendants offer the affidavits of two counter-experts. The first of those experts is Dr. Mark A. Israel. His affidavit serves primarily as an attempt to debunk the theories, assertions and opinions set forth by Dr. Lamb in his affidavit, particularly those as to class-wide impact of the alleged conspiracy. See Affidavit of Dr. Mark A. Israel, ¶8.

First, Dr. Israel notes that the existence of a cartel does not necessarily indicate that members of the cartel "were successful in raising prices to the entirety of the class." Id. at ¶10. Next, Dr. Israel alleges that Dr. Lamb's emphasis on the high concentration is, standing alone, insufficient to establish class-wide impact. Id. at ¶12. Further, Dr. Israel emphasizes that the differences between routes, vessels and container types are factors that he believes show that Defendants' services were, in fact, not interchangeable. Id. at ¶13.

Specifically, Dr. Israel breaks down the "eastern seaboard" described by Dr. Lamb into its component parts, showing [51] that Defendants' businesses cater to varying regions. Id. at ¶15. Dr. Israel asserts that these variances will require the performance of route-specific analyses in order to determine class-wide impact. Id. at ¶16. Dr. Israel also argues that the difference in rates for cabotage imported to Puerto Rico from the U.S. and exported to the U.S. from Puerto Rico also weighs against easily determining class-wide impact. Id. at ¶¶ 18-19.

Next, Dr. Israel notes that, at least in some cases, travel time for the goods being shipped is a factor that informed customers' decisions when negotiating contracts for Puerto Rican cabotage. Id. at ¶¶ 20-21. Additionally, Dr. Israel emphasizes that the [*138] variety in types, sizes and permanency of containers utilized by Defendants played a role in the competition between Defendants for market share. Id. at ¶24. Therefore, Dr. Israel concludes that "demonstrating class-wide impact across all routes, carriers, and containers with common proof is unlikely" as factors other than price may have informed class members' decisions. Id. at ¶24.

Dr. Israel then utilizes shipment data provided by the Horizon Defendants to find that such data is "incompatible with class-wide [52] impact." First, Dr. Israel states that this data shows a heterogeneity in price changes across customers, routes and container types which would preclude demonstration of class-wide impact. Id. at ¶26.

Further, upon analysis of the data, Dr. Israel finds that there is no commonality as to rate increases and decreases, either in direction or in magnitude. Id. at ¶¶26, 34. Dr. Israel then uses this data to rebuke a portion of the affidavit given by Defendant Chisholm, in which he claimed that the alleged price-fixing "impacted almost all pricing within each shipping category." Id. at ¶32.

Finally, Dr. Israel addresses Dr. Lamb's methodology for estimating damages in a price-fixing case. Id. at ¶35. Dr. Israel does not contest the properness of the method outlined by Dr. Lamb. Id. Rather, he emphasizes that Dr. Lamb did not actually perform the analysis in order to report on the results in his affidavit. Id.

c. DAVID ST. AMAND

Defendants second expert is David St. Amand.[10] Mr. St. Amand's first assertion is that cabotage carriers do not provide a fungible service as they are "not purchased based on 'price alone.'" Affidavit of David St. Amand ¶4. Mr. St. Amand further states that a determination [53] of whether cabotage is shipped pursuant to tariff rates "can only be determined through transaction data for each carrier in the trade." Id. at ¶5. Like Dr. Israel, Mr. St. Amand emphasizes the varied types of ships employed by Defendants, the various ports serviced by Defendants, and the range of equipment utilized by Defendants. Id. at ¶¶26-28. Mr. St. Amand also hypothesizes that, if Defendants had offered truly fungible services, "one would expect a much lower range of rates and standard deviation for similar containers moving on the same voyage" than that which is shown in data obtained from Horizon Lines. Id. at ¶29.

Mr. St. Amand proceeds to note that the impact of the alleged conspiracy would affect north-bound shippers differently than south-bound shippers. Id. at ¶30. Additionally, Mr. St. Amand notes that some purchasers of cabotage were Non Vessel Operating Common Carriers ("NVOCCs"), who act as brokers for other customers. Id. at ¶33. Finally, Mr. St. [54] Amand opines that the use of filed tariffs for some shipments impacts pricing, as do surcharges, and claims that Dr. Lamb fails to address these issues in his affidavit. Id. at ¶¶34-42.

d. THE COURT'S ANALYSIS

As the Court was presented with a battle of the experts as to predominance in the instant case, it has resolved the disputes between the experts, making credibility determinations where necessary in order to determine whether the predominance criterium has been met. See e.g. In Re Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 324. As an initial matter, the Court notes that it is presented with a horizontal price-fixing claim, which is considered per se illegal if, as in the instant case, the conspiracy is between competitors for competing services and serves no legitimate goal. Augusta News, 269 F.3d at 47. Defendants in the instant case are providers of Puerto Rican cabotage who allegedly engaged in a price-fixing conspiracy related to the shipment of goods between the U.S. and Puerto Rico. Although Defendants arguably provide a number of distinct yet related services, utilizing several varieties of containers and vessels, under the umbrella of "Puerto Rican cabotage," the Court finds that, [55] under the terms of the alleged conspiracy, the intent was to fix prices generally for Puerto [*139] Rican cabotage, a service provided by all Defendants. The Court must thus find that Defendants are competitors who provide the same service to class members. Thus, Plaintiffs have pled and supported, via their expert's affidavit, a per se antitrust violation. Consequently, through evidence as to the existence of the conspiracy itself, Plaintiffs could prove the fact of the violation through common proof.

In their affidavits, the experts disagreed as to class members' ability to prove antitrust impact through common proof. The primary disagreements as to impact arise in the affidavits of Dr. Israel and Dr. Lamb. Upon a careful review of the affidavits, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently shown by the preponderance of the evidence that the predominance requirement is met here. The Court explains below.

[10] The Court has already stricken portions of Mr. St. Amand's affidavit under Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), at Docket No. 735. Accordingly, those portions are not discussed herein.

First, it is apparent from the materials submitted that the Puerto Rican cabotage industry is highly concentrated, a state which results in a lack of true competition among market participants. Further, high entry barriers make it difficult for new participants to enter the market. [56] Additionally, the static elasticity during the relevant time-period indicates that a conspiracy, such as that alleged here, could impose supra-competitive[11] prices on purchasers of Puerto Rican cabotage.

Additionally, Defendants service the eastern seaboard, and no Defendant holds a true monopoly in any one city. Thus, competition is based largely upon price for various cabotage services. Although there are some mixed variables, such as vessel type and container type, the Court will not hold that these variables are sufficient to defeat a finding of predominance here. Plaintiffs and other class members have alleged and shown through circumstantial evidence that, because they had no economically viable substitute for the various Puerto Rican cabotage services provided by Defendants, they paid supra-competitive prices for the services purchased.

At trial, Defendants might submit evidence that not every Plaintiff or class [57] member suffered identically the impact of these supra-competitive prices, as those pertaining to various sub-groups of cabotage services may have borne a lesser or greater impact from the conspiracy. However, once again, the Court's inquiry here is not whether all potential class members are identically situated, but, rather, whether the issues, particularly those pertaining to the violation and to impact, which are common to all class members predominate over those which are not. See e.g. Kohen v. Pacific Invest. Mgt. Co. LLC, 571 F.3d 672, 678 (7th Cir.2009) (upholding the grant of class certification even where "some of the class members probably were net gainers"). Although class members may have purchased slightly varying forms of cabotage from Defendants, the Court holds that common issues predominate here. Although Sea Star appears to argue that the Court must find a galaxy, or even a universe, of common issues in order to find that the predominance requirement is satisfied, the Court need only find a constellation. See In Re Relafen, 231 F.R.D. at 70. Accordingly, the Court finds that both an antitrust violation and an antitrust impact may be shown through common proof as to [58] the class; thus, the predominance requirement is met.

Further, Dr. Lamb has set forth a reputable and workable model for determining damages as to individual class members in his affidavit. The Court emphasizes that there is no requirement that Plaintiffs present the Court with a detailed accounting of the damages suffered by each class member at this phase. Thus, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have set forth a damages assessment model which takes into account the individualized damage issues that pertain to class members. Therefore, at this initial stage and despite Defendants' expert's assertions to the contrary, the Court will not find that Plaintiffs have failed to establish predominance based upon Dr. Lamb's damages model.

[*140] 2. SUPERIORITY

Rule 23(b) HN14[] also sets forth a requirement that "a class action [be] superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(b)(3). This superiority requirement is designed to ensure that the class action will "achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote . . . uniformity of decision as to persons similarly situated, without sacrificing procedural fairness or bringing about other [59] undesirable results." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 615. In this manner, the Rule aims to provide for the "vindication of the rights of groups of people who individually would be without effective strength to bring their opponents into court." Id. at 617 (internal quotation omitted). Further, the Rule itself provides a non-exhaustive list of factors which the Court may consider in determining whether the requirement of superiority is fulfilled:

> (A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members;

[11] This is not to say that prices might not have fluctuated both up and down during the relevant time-period. Rather, the Court simply notes that supra-competitive prices were possible during that time, whether those prices increased or decreased from one year to another.

(C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and (D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(b)(3).

Sea Star does not object to a finding that Plaintiffs have met the second prong of the Rule 23(b)(3) inquiry. The proposed settlements in the instant case will present a solution to the claims of a sizeable group of direct purchasers of Puerto Rican cabotage against the majority of the Defendants in the instant case. Because the case is being settled [60] at an early phase, this will save class members large sums in litigation expenses and also represents an exercise in judicial economy. Further, the use of a class for settlement purposes here allows smaller purchasers to pursue complex antitrust claims which they otherwise might not have the resources to pursue. Accordingly, the Court finds that the superiority requirement of Rule 23(b)(3) is met. Thus, having determined that all the requirements for certification of a settlement class have been met, the Court hereby GRANTS Plaintiffs' motion to certify a settlement class as defined above.

III. PRELIMINARY APPROVAL OF SETTLEMENT AGREEMENTS

HN15[] The fundamental duty of the Court when it reviews a settlement agreement for approval is to determine whether the proposed settlement is "fair, reasonable and adequate." See Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e)(2); see also In Re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 360 F.Supp.2d 166, 192 (D.Mass.2005). At the preliminary approval stage, the Court need not make a final determination regarding the fairness, reasonableness and adequateness of a proposed settlement; rather, the Court need only determine whether it falls within the range of possible approval. *Scott v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., No. 06-286, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117205, 2008 WL 4820498 at 3 (D.N.H. 2008); [61] see In Re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 534-35 (3d Cir.2004); see also Colella v. Univ. of Pittsburgh, 569 F.Supp.2d 525, 527 (W.D.Pa.2008). An illegal or collusive settlement agreement will not fall within the range of possible approval. See *Scott, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117205, 2008 WL 4820498 at 3.

HN16[] For the purposes of assessing the appropriateness of preliminary approval of the settlement agreements reached in the instant case, the Court has adopted the standard set forth by the Third Circuit in In Re General Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tanks Prod. Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 785 (3d Cir.1995), and applied by the District Court for the District of Massachusetts in In Re Lupron Market. And Sales Prac. Litig., 345 F.Supp.2d 135, 137 (D.Mass.2004). Under the standard set forth in these cases, where the Court makes four findings, "a presumption of fairness attaches to the court's determination" and preliminary approval is appropriate. In Re Lupron, 345 F.Supp.2d at 137 (quoting In Re General Motors, 55 F.3d at 785) (internal quotations omitted). Those four findings are that: "(1) the negotiations occurred at arm's length; (2) there was sufficient discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement [62] are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected." Id.

[*141] The negotiations for settlement in the instant case were long and arduous, spanning a considerable time-period. Further, the settlement agreements were reached after a great deal of dispute between parties as to the terms of the agreements. Accordingly, the Court finds that the negotiation of the settlement agreements indeed occurred at arm's length. Further, the Court finds that parties were sufficiently informed by the limited discovery which has occurred in the instant case. Plaintiffs have received information pursuant to the criminal proceedings related to the instant case, as well as information given by Mr. Chisholm. Further, Plaintiffs have been able to probe into Settling Defendants' ability to make payments to fulfill the terms of the settlement agreements. Thus, the Court finds that sufficient discovery occurred to weigh towards finding the terms of the settlement agreements to be fair. Further, having reviewed the curricula vitae of Plaintiffs' counsel, the Court is sufficiently convinced that the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation.

The fourth factor, [63] however, is not so easily assessed here. At this time, the Court cannot ascertain what percentage of the class objects to the terms of the settlement agreements. Nevertheless, the ability of class members to object rests upon the Court's certification of a settlement class, preliminary approval of the settlement agreements and approval of notice to be sent to class members. Thus, the Court does not find that the lack of information as to objectors within the class weighs against preliminary approval of the settlement agreements.

The primary disagreement between Sea Star and Plaintiffs at this stage relates to the so-called "base rate freeze" provision included in the Crowley and Horizon settlement agreements. Under the terms of those settlement agreements, class members would be given the choice of opting for either a base rate freeze on contracts with Settling Defendants or a cash payout. Sea Star asserts[12] that the "base rate freeze" is illegal and places the judicial imprimatur upon a deal which would act to "distort" competition in the cabotage industry.

Sea Star rests its argument against preliminary approval of the Crowley and Horizon settlement agreements upon the case of In Re Microsoft Corp. Antitrust Litig., 185 F.Supp.2d 519(D.Md.2002). Specifically, in its most recent motion, Sea Star reads this case to require that Plaintiffs show that the settlement agreements do not have a "potential adverse impact upon competition." In that MDL, the District Court for the District of Maryland was asked to approve a settlement agreement under which Microsoft was released from the claims of a nationwide settlement class in return for making contributions to a foundation that, once established, would provide computer technology to impoverished schools. Id. at 521. Notably, in that case, class members had no right to personally receive any payments from the settlement; thus, class members' only options were to opt out or to agree to fund the foundation with the proceeds of the settlement agreement. Id. The Court denied preliminary approval, holding first that the record was insufficiently developed [65] for the court to value the class claims to determine the adequacy of the settlement, then holding that the foundation which was to be created under the settlement agreement was critically underfunded. Id. at 528. The Court noted that it had concerns regarding the settlement's potential adverse impact upon competition, as, because of the foundation's underfunding, it could well serve to "provide a means for flooding a [market]. . .. in which Microsoft has not traditionally been the strongest player." Id.

Although Sea Star reads this case to generally forbid preliminary approval of a settlement offer where any negative impact upon competition might hypothetically occur, the Court reads it more narrowly. HN17[] The Court finds that In Re Microsoft does not forbid approval of any settlement agreement which might affect competition, but, rather, cautions [*142] against approval of an agreement which allows the settling defendant to use the agreement to its advantage in entering a market in which it was previously not a strong competitor. The Court believes to find otherwise would run afoul of the basic principle that antitrust laws in the United States exist not to protect competitors, but, rather, to [66] protect competition itself as it would serve to protect the market shares of individual competitors rather than ensuring the maintenance of healthy, robust competition in the marketplace. See e.g. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-o-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488-89, 97 S.Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). The In Re Microsoft court itself noted that, if the foundation were better funded, its concerns regarding competition might be alleviated as Microsoft would then be in a position of competing with other software manufacturers, rather than dominating the market supplied by the foundation. In Re Microsoft, 185 F.Supp.2d at 529. Thus, although, in some cases, such as in In Re Microsoft, the Court might find that the terms of a settlement agreement allow a settling defendant an unreasonable advantage, in cases where a settlement agreement still allows competitors to continue to compete with the settling defendant, the Court finds no convincing reason for refusal to approve the settlement agreement.

In the instant case, Sea Star retains the option of competing with the prices set by the two-year base rate freeze under the terms of the settlement agreements. Further, purchasers of Puerto Rican cabotage frequently [67] utilize a number of carriers at any given time and are not required to sign exclusive contracts with Settling Defendants in order to opt for the base rate freeze. Further, class members will have the option of electing a cash payout from the funds established by the Crowley and Horizon Defendants' settlement agreements, entirely foresaking the base rate freeze option. Under these circumstances, the Court does not find that the settlement agreements are outside of the range of possible approval. Thus, the Court GRANTS preliminary approval to the Crowley and Horizon settlement agreements. Both parties, however, are invited to brief the base rate freeze issue further prior to the final hearing regarding settlement approval pursuant to the deadlines set forth below. Further, the Court finds that the negotiation of the Chisholm settlement agreement falls within the range of possible approval, GRANTS preliminary approval and shall hear any further arguments for or against approval of this settlement agreement at the final fairness hearing.

[12] The Court notes that Sea Star's assertions regarding the impact of the base-rate freeze were based upon opinions of Mr. David [64] St. Amand which were stricken from the record at Docket No. 735 when the Court found him utterly unqualified to give testimony as to antitrust economics.

IV. NOTICE

HN18[] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure dictate that the Court "must direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound [68] by the proposal." Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(e)(1). Having reviewed the proposed notices to class members submitted by Plaintiffs and Settling Defendants (Docket Nos. 680, 743 & 746), the Court finds that the proposed notices are reasonable.

Thus, the Court adopts by reference the proposed orders submitted at Docket Nos. 680, 743 and 746 regarding the procedure for ensuring that class members receive notice of the settlement agreements, as well as the time and place of the FINAL FAIRNESS HEARING regarding approval of the settlement agreements, which is to be held on OCTOBER 26, 2010 at 9:00 AM.

Class members shall be mailed notice of each settlement agreement within twenty (20) days of entry of this order. Five (5) days after notice is mailed, notice shall be published in the newspapers listed in parties' proposed orders at Docket Nos. 680, 743 and 746. Thereafter, class members shall be provided sixty (60) days in which to submit notice that they will be opting out of the class, object to the terms of the settlement agreement or to submit a proof of claim form where applicable.

V. CONCLUSION

The Court hereby GRANTS CERTIFICATION OF THE SETTLEMENT CLASS (Docket Nos. 449, 597 & 680) and GRANTS PRELIMINARY [69] APPROVAL to the Chisholm, Crowley and Horizon Settlement Agreements (Docket Nos. 375, 597 & 680). Notice shall be given to class members in the manner described above and in the proposed [*143] orders submitted at Docket Nos. 680, 743 and 746. The FINAL FAIRNESS HEARING is hereby set for OCTOBER 26, 2010 at 9:00 AM. Any further briefs regarding the base rate freeze to be submitted by Plaintiffs or Non-Settling Defendants are due on or before October 1, 2010. Any response brief regarding the base rate freeze is due on or before October 15, 2010.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

"Swim 2.4 miles! Bike 112 miles! Run 26.2 miles! Brag for the rest of your life!" [1] A triathlon is a multi-sport endurance event consisting of swimming, cycling, and running in immediate succession over various distances. Neither regular business relations nor litigation is customarily a component of a triathlon. Thus, this case. This is a small claims action brought against a triathlon organizer for services rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant counterclaims claiming plaintiff misappropriated advertising space and apparel, a failure to perform and unfair competition. The parties once shared a love of triathlon and worked together to promote the local event. Now they get their rush, not from adrenaline or endorphins [2], but from casting charges and aspersions [*2] against each other.

The arrangement between the parties is notable by the absence of any written agreement or any writing at all specifying what plaintiff was to do or how much he would be paid. The plaintiff and the principal officer of the defendant had known each other for about ten years through participation in triathlons and running. The defendant operated the Westchester triathlon in 2008 and 2009. At some point, plaintiff began providing design services and web site programming services for defendant. Defendant paid plaintiff on a series of invoices for the 2008 and 2009 events, but stopped payment on the last issued check in the amount of $ 2,000.00. The plaintiff claimed he had an agreement with the defendant to perform the work but never testified that there was any agreement as to the amount he would be paid. Instead, plaintiff said he set his price based upon [3] a standard set by an industry association.

Recovery under the theory of quantum meruit is not appropriate where an express contract governed the subject matter involved. Parker Realty Group, Inc. v. Petigny, 14 NY3d 864, 903 N.Y.S.2d 325, 929 N.E.2d 387, 2010 WL 1790975 [2010]. Plaintiff has failed to prove an express agreement here.

To state a cause of action to recover in quantum meruit, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the performance of services in good faith; (2) the acceptance of the services by the person to whom they are rendered; (3) an expectation of compensation therefor; and (4) the reasonable value of the services allegedly rendered. Miranco Contracting, Inc. v. Perel, 57 AD3d 956, 871 NYS2d 310 [2nd Dept, 2008]. Here, plaintiff performed services although the defendant claims the services were not performed properly and were not performed in good faith. While plaintiff claims an expectation of payment, the defendant claims the services were part of a continuing pattern of volunteered services. The reasonable value is disputed. There is no doubt that defendant accepted plaintiff's services and that the plaintiff expected to be paid therefor.

Performance and acceptance of services are held to give rise to a legal [4] inference of a promise to pay the reasonable value of such services. This inference, however, does not arise where, because of the relationship of the parties it is natural that such service should be rendered without expectation of pay. Moors v. [*3] Hall, 143 AD2d 336, 338, 532 NYS2d 412, 414 [2nd Dept, 1988]. The question of whether a party had a reasonable expectation of compensation for services rendered is a matter for the trier of fact to determine based on the evidence before it. In re Alu, 302 AD2d 520, 755 NYS2d 289 [2nd Dept, 2003].

The defendant claims that the services were not performed in good faith since (1) plaintiff was virtually the only person to be paid for working on the events as most of the workers at the triathlon were volunteers working for the not for profit event that raised funds for charities; (2) the plaintiff used his relationship to misappropriate goods and intellectual property from the defendant for his own use or the benefit of his brother's cycle shop; and (3) plaintiff's work was shoddy and involved use of publicly available materials.

Allegations are insufficient "to state a cause of action in quantum meruit where none of the services allegedly performed [5] are so distinct from the duties of employment and of such nature that it would be unreasonable for the employer to assume that they were rendered without expectation of further pay" (Freedman v. Pearlman, 271 AD2d 301, 304, 706 N.Y.S.2d 405 [1st Dept 2000]; LaJaunie v. DaGrossa, 159 AD2d 349, 349, 552 N.Y.S.2d 628 [1st Dept 1990] [such a claim requires "that the allegedly uncompensated duties performed were distinct in character from those duties for which plaintiff was compensated"]). Root v. Swig Equities, LLC, 27 Misc 3d 1222[A], 910 N.Y.S.2d 765, 2010 NY Slip Op 50843[U], 2010 WL 1945730 (Table) [Sup Ct New York County,

[2] Endorphins are endogenous opioid polypeptide compounds. A widely publicized effect of endorphin production is the so-called "runner's high", which is said to occur when strenuous [2] exercise takes a person over a threshold that activates endorphin production. Endorphins are released during long, continuous workouts, when the level of intensity is between moderate and high, and breathing is difficult. "The Reality of the "Runner's High", UPMC Sports Medicine. University of Pittsburgh Schools of the Health Sciences.

2010]. Here, there was a mixture of admittedly volunteer services performed by plaintiff and services for which plaintiff seeks payment. Defendant relies on the assumption that the plaintiff's services were rendered without the expectation of further pay. This assumption is further bolstered by the not-for-profit nature of the defendant's events and the mixture of services offered by plaintiff. However, the defendant's issuance of the final $ 2,000.00 check to pay plaintiff the amount he billed strongly suggests that there was not only an expectation of payment on the plaintiff's part, but acquiescence on the defendant's part. The parties [6] could have easily protected themselves by reducing their understanding to writing, thus leaving no doubt as to what was to be done and how much was to be paid for the work, if anything.

The plaintiff rests his value of his services on a published industry-suggested standard. Defendant claims that the industry standard rate is excessive and violates the Sherman Act, 15 USC § 1, and the Donnelly Act, [*4] General Business Law § 340. Sherman Act and Donnelly Act prohibitions extend to instances of price fixing that occur in connection with a trade association published rate schedule, even when association members are not compelled to set prices accordingly. United States v. Nationwide Trailer Rental Sys., Inc., 156 F Supp 800, 805 [D. Kans.], aff'd per curiam, 355 U.S. 10, 78 S. Ct. 11, 2 L. Ed. 2d 20 [1957]. Publication alone is a per se violation of the antitrust laws, when the intent is to confer a particular benefit to members and thereby "have a definite effect on prices." Plymouth Dealers' Association v. United States, 279 F2d 128, 133-134 [9th Cir. 1960].

In interpreting the Donnelly Act, New York courts generally follow federal case law analyzing the Sherman Act. People v. Rattenni, 81 NY2d 166, 171, 613 N.E.2d 155, 597 NYS2d 280 [1993]; [7] X.L.O. Concrete Corp. v. Rivergate Corp., 83 NY2d 513, 634 N.E.2d 158, 611 NYS2d 786 [1994](there is no difference in the language of the Sherman and Donnelly Acts, or the public policies sought to be protected therein, which suggest that Federal precedents should not govern); & Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Abrams, 71 NY2d 327, 335, 520 N.E.2d 535, 525 NYS2d 816 [1988](State antitrust law "should generally be construed in light of Federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language or the legislative history justify such a result). Indeed, the Donnelly Act has been called the "little Sherman Act". [3] Id. at 333, 525 NYS2d at 818. See also State of New York v. Mobil Oil Corp., 38 NY2d 460, 463, 344 N.E.2d 357, 381 NYS2d 426 [1976].

Authority is not conclusive on whether setting a price according to a suggested range of fees subverts competition and thus, falls within the ambit of the Sherman and Donnelly Acts. See U.S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 60 S Ct 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940) [8] (expanding the meaning of price fixing to include establishment of a range of prices); But see U.S. v. Trenton Potteries, Co., 273 U.S. 392, 47 S Ct 377, 71 L. Ed. 700 (1927) (reaching only the question of reasonableness but not addressing the particular machinery by which an unlawful restraint is made) and Nationwide Trailer Rental Sys., Inc., 156 F Supp 800at 805 (holding defendant organization liable for having a fixed rate, as opposed to a range of prices). See also, Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 95 S. Ct. 2004, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1975).

[5] Defendant faces other hurdles in advancing federal and state antitrust violations as a defense in the present action. As a defense to an action based on contract, the plea of illegality based on violation of the Sherman Act has not met with much favor in the Supreme Court. This has been the case notably where the plea has been made by a purchaser in an action to recover from him the agreed price of goods sold. Kelly v. Kosuga, 358 U.S. 516, 79 S Ct 429, 3 L. Ed. 2d 475 [1959]. See also, Viacom International Inc. v. Tandem Productions, Inc., 526 F2d 593 [2d Cir. 1975]. Federal courts permit antitrust defenses to contract actions only when the enforcement of the contract itself would violate the [9] antitrust laws. The defense has been narrowly construed and confined to circumstances where there is a violation of the antitrust laws inhering in the sale. See e.g., Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 81 S Ct 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 [1961].

New York courts that have considered interposition of antitrust defenses in contract actions have followed the rule and rationale of Kelly. Winters Bros. Recycling Corp. v. H.B. Millwork, Inc., 72 AD3d 942, 900 NYS2d 99 [2nd Dept, 2010]. See also, Dachowitz v. Bergman, 113 Misc 2d 236, 239, 448 NYS2d 381 [Sup Ct, New York County 1982];

[3] According to former New York State Assistant Attorney General Francis J. Serbaroli, who was assigned to the Antitrust Bureau of the Department of Law, the Bureau charged with enforcement of the Donnelly Act, the Sherman Act is the big Donnelly Act.

This court rejects this defendant's invocation of federal and state antitrust laws in defense of this contract claim on the facts proved at trial. A source of controversy that seems to underlie this case is the ownership of the intellectual property created by plaintiff. While not a part of the direct claims of the parties, it was implied that the defendant had refused to pay the plaintiff unless he conveyed all intellectual property rights to the defendant. The defendant implies that plaintiff's retention of these rights operated as an offset or defense. [*6] Defendant obtains no support for its intellectual property claims over material created by Mr. Whelan, and finds no refuge in the "work for hire" doctrine. 17 USC § 101. The Copyright Act of 1976 provides that copyright ownership "vests initially in the author or authors of the work." 17 USC § 201(a). As a general rule, the author is the party who actually creates the work, that is, the person who translates an idea into a fixed, tangible expression entitled to copyright protection. 17 USC § 102. The Act carves out an important exception, [11] however, for "works made for hire." [4] If the work is for hire, "the employer or other person for whom the work was prepared is considered the author" and owns the copyright, unless there is a written agreement to the contrary. 17 USC § 201(b).

Since the work was performed by plaintiff as an independent contractor, rather than employee, of defendant, it was not work for hire under 17 USC § 101. Community for Creative Non-Violence v. Reid, 490 U.S. 730, 109 S Ct 2166, 104 L. Ed. 2d 811 [1989]. Mr. Whelan exercised significant control over the details of the work -- details apparently subsumed by defendant's attempt to produce a comparable product after severing its professional relationship with plaintiff. The work performed was tangential to the defendant's business and proceeded without any assurance to the employer of future assignments. Carter v. Helmsley-Spear, Inc., 71 F3d 77 [2nd Cir. 1995]. In the absence of an agency relationship, the defendant must point to an agreement (express or implied) existing prior to the material's creation, that secures its right to assert ownership. *Playboy Enterprises, [7] Inc. v. Dumas, 53 F3d 549, 559 [2d Cir., 1995].This it has not done.

On the balance of the defendant's counterclaim, the [13] defendant has proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the website did not fully function properly, that the plaintiff misappropriated apparel, and that misappropriated the defendant's web site by "giving" advertising space to favored third parties without approval of the defendant and without payment to the defendant.

Providing the parties with substantial justice according to the rules and principles of substantive law (UCCA 1804, 1807; see Cosme v Bauer, 27 Misc. 3d 130[A], 910 N.Y.S.2d 404, 2010 NY Slip Op 50638[U] [App Term, 9th Jud Dist April 8, 2010]; Ross v Friedman, 269 AD2d 584, 707 N.Y.S.2d 114 [2000]; & Williams v Roper, 269 AD2d 125,

[4] Under 17 USC 101, A "work made for hire" is--

(1) a work prepared by an employee within the scope of his or her employment; or

(2) a work specially ordered or commissioned for use as a contribution to a collective work, as a part of a motion picture or other audiovisual work, as a translation, as a supplementary work, as a compilation, as an instructional text, as a test, as answer material for a test, or as an atlas, if the parties expressly agree in a written instrument signed by them that the work shall be considered a work made for hire. For the purpose of the foregoing sentence, a "supplementary work" is a work prepared for publication as a secondary adjunct to a work by another author for the purpose of introducing, concluding, illustrating, explaining, revising, commenting upon, or assisting in the use of the other work, such as forewords, afterwords, pictorial illustrations, maps, charts, tables, editorial notes, musical arrangements, answer [12] material for tests, bibliographies, appendixes, and indexes, and an "instructional text" is a literary, pictorial, or graphic work prepared for publication and with the purpose of use in systematic instructional activities.

Illinois Brick does not preclude indirect purchasers from suing for injunctive relief for an antitrust violation, and they have standing to sue under 15 U.S.C.S. § 26 of the Clayton Act.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) allows a court to certify a class that seeks final injunctive relief respecting the class as a whole, *Fed. R. Civ. HN5[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A court of appeals reviews an order granting class certification for abuse of discretion. A district court abuses its discretion when its class certification decision rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law or an improper application of law to fact.

HN7[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

A district court may certify a lawsuit as a class action if the suit meets the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) and (b). Rule 23(a) mandates first, that the class be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, second, that the class share common questions of law or fact, third, that the class representatives possess claims or defenses that are typical of all class members, and fourth, that the class representatives be able to fairly and adequately represent the class interests. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a). If those requirements are satisfied, a district court may certify the class for one of the purposes enumerated in Rule 23(b).

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Maintainability

HN8[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Maintainability

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) permits class certification if the defendant has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2).

HN9[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Maintainability

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) permits certification whenever questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Maintainability

HN10[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

A district court must specify which provision of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b) supports certification of a class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Commonality

HN11[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

Because Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) allows a district court to certify a class only if, first, all class members share common questions of law or fact that predominate over other issues in the case, and, second, a class action is superior to other methods of adjudicating the members' claims, courts have come to refer to these twin prerequisites for certification as the "predominance" requirement and the "superiority" requirement. The predominance requirement is similar to the commonality requirement in Rule 23(a)(2), which says that the class must share common questions of law or fact. However, the question of predominance imposes a more stringent obligation on the reviewing court to ensure that issues common to the class truly overshadow those pertinent to individuals or to subgroups of class members. It is therefore appropriate to analyze the commonality and predominance factors together, with particular focus on the predominance requirement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

HN12[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

A district court must evaluate predominance and superiority by considering the following four factors enumerated in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3): (A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and (D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). The court may also consider additional factors pertinent to class certification issues. The factors listed in Rule 23(b)(3) are described as nonexhaustive. When presented with a motion to certify a class for settlement purposes only, the court need not consider the likely difficulties associated with managing the class action through trial.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN13[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Regardless of the purposes for which class certification is sought, a court is not required to rest its certification order solely upon the pleadings. The requirements set out in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 are not mere pleading rules. Instead, the court should perform a rigorous analysis that delves beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements for class certification are satisfied.

HN14[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Maintainability

For purposes of class certification, the predominance of an issue depends upon the value that addressing it will yield for all class members. The predominance inquiry tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation. The issue need not be dispositive of the case, but it must be significant to every class member's claim. Courts have described as predominant those issues which present a common nucleus of fact, an overriding question, or an essential common link among class members. Issues are not predominant if they are common to all class members but their resolution does little to bring the case to conclusion. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) advisory committee's note to the 1966 amendment indicates that common issues will not predominate if an individualized assessment of liability is necessary notwithstanding resolution of them. Thus, the predominance inquiry requires the court to identify class members' claims and to ask whether the class can support any of the elements of those claims through common proof.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Maintainability

HN15[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Commonality

There may be situations where variations in state laws are so significant so as to defeat commonality and predominance even in a settlement class certification.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN16[] Sherman Act, Claims

Under the Sherman Act, to establish antitrust liability for horizontal price-fixing, a plaintiff must show that (1) a defendant entered a contract, combination, or conspiracy with at least one other entity; (2) the agreement constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade; (3) the agreement produced anticompetitive effects in the relevant market; and (4) the plaintiff was injured as a result.

A claim for monopolization requires a plaintiff to prove that (1) the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the defendant acquired, maintained, or attempted to acquire or maintain that power through means other than growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN19[] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

While state antitrust statutes frequently track the Sherman Act in terms of their substantive elements of proof, they vary significantly with regard to the standing that they extend to indirect purchasers. The variance is mainly a function of whether a state has chosen to follow the Sherman Act principles regarding standing laid down by the United States Supreme Court in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois. In that case, the Court decided that only direct purchasers of a product or service may sue for an antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN20[] Purchasers, Indirect Purchasers

Some states have elected to follow the United States Supreme Court's lead in Illinois Brick. Other states, however, have diverged from Illinois Brick and have enacted statutes known as "Illinois Brick repealers." Those statutes reject the rule that antitrust recovery is limited to parties that dealt directly with the defendant and instead extend antitrust standing to indirect purchasers, including consumers. Finally, a third set of jurisdictions allow indirect purchasers to seek antitrust recovery, but only if the state joins the suit in a parens patriae capacity. Idaho Code Ann. §§ 48-108(2), -113(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN21[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In some states with Illinois Brick repealers, indirect purchasers may personally advance a claim for antitrust recovery against a defendant that has fixed prices. In other states, however, they may do so only with the assent of the state attorney general. And in states without a repealer statute, recovery is usually foreclosed entirely. At least twenty-five states and the District of Columbia have implemented Illinois Brick repealers or extended antitrust standing to indirect purchasers through judicial decision; the remaining states have not.

Antitrust standing for indirect purchasers in states without an Illinois Brick repealer statute is ordinarily but not always foreclosed. HN25[] Class Actions, Certification of Classes

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit does not say that nuanced differences among state laws will prevent the certification of a class, nor is a state-by-state cataloguing of differences in state law necessary every time a multi-jurisdiction class is certified. The difference between having a claim under state law and having none is no mere nuance and cannot be solved by any reconfiguration of a nationwide class short of changing it from a nationwide class to one or more classes that exclude those who have no claim.

HN26[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

An indirect purchaser located in a state that has an Illinois Brick repealer, such as New York, may sue and recover for a price-fixing or monopolization harm, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(6), but an identical indirect purchaser in a neighboring state without a repealer, such as New Jersey, may not. It is hard to imagine a greater disparity between two class members. Whereas the New York purchaser may recover for an antitrust violation if he can prove the existence of a price-fixing agreement or monopoly market power resulting in higher prices, the New Jersey purchaser has no legal right to recover--or even to bring a lawsuit--regardless of whether he can conclusively prove the existence of a restraint and antitrust impact. Thus, while both purchasers may have felt the effects of the same antitrust conduct, the purchasers do not share common legal or factual issues because the antitrust activity gives rise to a right of action for only one purchaser. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 requires that a class possess at least one issue of law or fact that affects all class members' claims. The natural result of those differences is that there can be no certification of a nationwide class of state indirect purchaser plaintiffs because there is no common question of law or material fact.

It is improper to certify a nationwide class when the legal right shared by class members purportedly arises under the laws of multiple jurisdictions, but only some of those jurisdictions extend standing to class members to enforce that right.

It is not suggested that a district court must conduct a state-by-state analysis every time there exists some difference in the state law underlying class members' claims. However, when the parties propose to use class certification mechanisms in a manner that materially changes substantive rights, the district court has a duty to ensure that such use does not create a right of recovery where none existed before. The obligation is imposed on district courts to ensure that the plaintiffs have satisfied their burden under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 before certifying a class. Hence, district courts must remain attuned to significant variations in state law and reject proposed classes that allow the plaintiffs to recover damages through the class certification procedure when they would be unable to do so in an individual action.

For purposes of class certification, a lack of substantive rights cannot be wished away by the promise of easier litigation management. Proponents of class certification for any purpose, including settlement, retain the burden of demonstrating that all class members share common legal or factual issues and that those issues predominate over matters requiring individual proof. Nothing in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 can be read to authorize separate, liberalized criteria for settlement classes. The test presupposes that everyone in the class at least has a cause of action.

Independent of any stipulations, district courts are obligated to consider carefully all relevant evidence and make a definitive determination that the requirements of *Fed. R. Civ. Courts are required to exercise undiluted, even heightened, attention to issues of commonality and predominance in the settlement context because those inquires are designed to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions. Thus, parties cannot salvage an improper certification order by saying that the defendant has stipulated out of existence defects in the commonality and predominance of the class claims.

Consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws are no more uniform among the fifty states than are antitrust statutes. In fact, they are less so. Some states without Illinois Brick repealers allow indirect purchasers to invoke consumer protection statutes to gain antitrust relief. Other states preclude indirect purchasers from doing so because they have adopted Illinois Brick standing requirements and view any utilization of consumer protection statutes to recover for antitrust harm as circumventing that policy decision. A third group requires indirect purchaser consumer protection actions to proceed as parens patriae suits, while other statutes lack such requirements.

HN36[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The common law of unjust enrichment varies among the states, with some jurisdictions mandating proof of elements not required by others. Evidence of antitrust activity may provide a basis for an unjust enrichment claim in some states. Other states preclude recovery for antitrust injuries on an unjust enrichment theory. With respect to the substantive elements of unjust enrichment, some states require plaintiffs to prove that the defendant's conduct rises to the level of fraud. Others do not. Some allow an unjust enrichment claim only if the plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law. Others lack that requirement. In short, a claim of unjust enrichment is packed with individual issues and therefore precludes a finding of predominance in a nationwide class action context.

HN39[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

The mandate of Erie Railroad Co. prevents a district court from invoking federal procedural rules to extend recovery to a state law plaintiff when state courts would not recognize the plaintiff's harm as grounds for relief. In giving federal courts "cognizance" of equity suits in cases of diversity jurisdiction, Congress never gave, nor did the federal courts ever claim, the power to deny substantive rights created by state law or to create substantive rights denied by state law. Thus, a district court abuses its discretion when it approves a settlement based on a supposed state law violation that the plaintiff could not have asserted in state court.

In many cases, it will be evident that all class members share common legal or factual questions, even if the precise elements of proof for their claims vary among jurisdictions. Under such circumstances, a district court need not conduct an extensive inquiry into substantive state law to formally establish commonalities that are apparent. District courts in their sound discretion will determine the level of analysis to undertake when deciding whether variations in state law warrant detailed examination and a description of similarities and differences. In a case where the class includes many people who could not pursue claims in an individual action, that more searching inquiry is needed, as the plaintiffs have tried to use class action procedures to create a bridge to recovery where otherwise none would exist.

[*138] OPINION OF THE COURT

JORDAN, Circuit Judge.

For more than one hundred years, De Beers S.A. and other entities within the De Beers family of companies (hereinafter collectively "De Beers") have fixed prices in the wholesale market for gem-quality diamonds through a web of pricing and output-purchase agreements with competitors. In the late 1990s, however, De Beers's market power began to wane as new suppliers entered the market and competitors refused to cooperate with De Beers's pricing efforts. Amidst these structural changes to the market, plaintiffs brought the present claims under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, and under the antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws of all fifty states and the District of Columbia. Plaintiffs then entered into settlement negotiations with De Beers, which ultimately resulted in a proposed settlement that divided the [3] plaintiffs into two putative classes and created a settlement fund of $ 295 million. Although several plaintiffs objected to the settlement, the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey overruled the objections, certified the two classes, and approved the settlement agreement. The objectors then filed these appeals. For the reasons that follow, we will vacate the judgment of the District Court and remand for further proceedings.

I. Factual Background

Throughout the twentieth century, De Beers fixed prices in the market for rough gem-quality diamonds by, among other things, executing output-purchase agreements with competitors, establishing a market-wide cartel to set production limits, and restricting wholesalers from reselling diamonds outside of certain geographic territories. Wholesalers, known as "sightholders," were, and continue to be, screened by De Beers based on various criteria and are required to purchase diamonds at ten annual distribution events called "sights." Sightholders constitute De Beers's exclusive channel for distribution of its diamonds, and they resell those diamonds to jewelry manufacturers and retailers as rough diamonds, or as cut-and-polished [4] stones, or as components of finished jewelry products.

A. Deterioration Of De Beers's Market Power

De Beers carried out its cartel activities -- including distribution to sightholders -- through the Central Selling Organization ("CSO"), [1] an entity established by De Beers for the purpose of coordinating its actions with those of its competitors. Historically, the CSO was responsible for purchasing diamonds from De Beers's competitors, establishing pricing formulas, and setting output restrictions. The [*139] CSO's network of agreements and De Beers's status as founder of the CSO had for many years given De Beers nearly complete control over the market for rough gem diamonds.

That hold on the diamond industry began to slip, however, during the latter part of the twentieth century, and, by the mid-1990s, it was weakening fast. In 1993, Russia's state-controlled diamond company, ALROSA, flooded the market with low-quality gems to earn cash in the face of financial pressures on the government. In response, De Beers dropped the price of low-grade stones. That action prompted cartel-member [5] Rio Tinto, which operates Argyle Diamond Mines of Australia ("Argyle"), to cease dealing with the CSO in 1996. Rio Tinto's Argyle mine, like ALROSA, began selling larger numbers of low-quality diamonds than De Beers had previously sold through the CSO.

With the low-end of the market moving beyond its control, De Beers turned its attention to higher-quality gems. It initially attempted to retain control over the production and sale of high-grade diamonds by purchasing its competitors' output, as it had done for many decades before. For example, in 1999, it entered into an output purchase agreement with competitor BHP Billiton ("BHP") under which it acquired 35% of BHP's total diamond production. That agreement ended in 2002, and again De Beers's efforts to maintain dominance began to fade, as the market for high-quality stones saw the entrance of new competitors and as old competitors brought new mines into production. By 2006, in the overall market for rough gem diamonds, state-owned companies in Angola and the Democratic Republic of Congo collectively controlled 19% of global production; ALROSA controlled 17%, and De Beers controlled approximately 45%. Other competitors, including [6] Rio Tinto, controlled the remaining share of the market. [2]

B. Present Litigation

The present case dates from 2001, when two price-fixing lawsuits were filed in the United States District Courts for the District of New Jersey and the Southern District of New York. Between 2002 and 2005, five additional lawsuits were filed in state and federal courts across the country, bringing the total number of suits against De Beers to seven. Three of the cases were initiated in state court in Arizona, California, and Illinois. The Illinois case was removed to federal court and was later consolidated with the remaining four lawsuits -- all of which had been filed in various federal district courts -- in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. [7] [3] While only the five federal cases are presently before us, all seven cases are pertinent to this set of appeals because the settlement agreement that the parties ultimately reached applied to all actions, including the ones in state court.

1. Identity of the Plaintiffs

The plaintiffs in the seven cases can be divided into two categories, based on the claims that they assert. The first category [*140] consists of direct purchasers that acquired rough gem diamonds directly from De Beers or one of its competitors. The direct purchasers advanced claims of price-fixing and monopolization, citing §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-2, for which they sought damages and injunctive relief under §§ 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26. [4]

The second category of plaintiffs consists of indirect purchasers, which are entities or individuals that acquired either rough or cut-and-polished gem diamonds but did not do so directly from De Beers or its competitors. Consumers and jewelry retailers fall into this category, as do middlemen who acquired diamonds from sightholders or from another indirect purchaser. The indirect purchasers sought recovery for the same antitrust injury as did the direct purchasers but brought their claims under state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment law. These plaintiffs could only rely on state law as a route to monetary relief because they lack standing to bring a

[2] These statistics represent shares of the market for all rough gem diamonds, without regard to their quality. The parties have not indicated whether that market can be further segmented based on stone quality or whether suppliers of rough gem diamonds exercise similar measures of control in the market for cut-and-polished stones. A separate market also exists for industrial-grade diamonds, but that market is not pertinent to this appeal.

[3] All references to the "District Court" are to the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey.

[4] HN1[] Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act do not themselves create private rights of action. Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act authorize plaintiffs harmed by activity that violates §§ 1 and 2 to bring a suit for damages and injunctive relief. See Port Dock & Stone Corp. v. Oldcastle Ne., Inc., 507 F.3d 117, 121 (2d Cir. 2007) ("Although [8] [plaintiff's] substantive claims arise under section 2 of the Sherman Act … the private right of action is provided by section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15.").

federal antitrust claim for damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 735-36, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). They did, however, seek injunctive relief for those antitrust violations under § 16 of the Clayton Act. See Mid-W. Paper Prods. Co. v. Cont'l Group, 596 F.2d 573, 594 (3d Cir. 1979) (HN2[ ] "Illinois Brick does not preclude indirect [9] purchasers from suing for injunctive relief[,] and … they have standing to sue under § 16 … .").

Thus, these two categories of plaintiffs assert claims that overlap but are also distinct. The direct purchasers' claims for damages arise only under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 4 of the Clayton Act. The indirect purchasers' damages claims implicate only state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment law. Both categories of plaintiffs also assert claims under § 16 of the Clayton Act for injunctive relief against continued price-fixing and monopolization by De Beers.

2. De Beers's Participation in These Actions

De Beers initially refused to appear in the lawsuits because it asserted that courts in the United States lacked personal jurisdiction over it and that any judgment entered by those courts would be a legal nullity. By September 2004, defaults or default judgments had been entered against De Beers in six of the seven actions. In May 2005, counsel for De Beers approached plaintiffs' counsel to discuss settlement of the indirect purchasers' claims. Those discussions produced a settlement of the indirect purchasers' claims in four of the cases (the "indirect purchaser [10] settlement"). Under the indirect purchaser settlement, De Beers agreed not to contest certification of a settlement class of indirect purchasers, and further agreed to establish a settlement fund of $ 250 million to be paid to class members. De Beers also agreed to a stipulated injunction that restrained it from violating U.S. antitrust law, and it consented to the District Court's jurisdiction for the purpose of enforcing the injunction.

On November 30, 2005, the District Court entered an order (the "November 30 [*141] order") that preliminarily approved the settlement agreement and conditionally certified a settlement class of indirect purchasers under Rules 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. [5] HN3[ ] Rule 23(b)(2) allows a court to certify a class that seeks "final injunctive relief … respecting the class as a whole," FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(2), whereas Rule 23(b)(3) authorizes certification when "questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members," FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(3). Hence, the Court preliminarily approved the class under Rule 23(b)(2) for the purpose of entering the stipulated injunction and likewise [11] approved the same class under Rule 23(b)(3) in order to distribute the proceeds of the settlement fund.

De Beers then entered into settlement negotiations with the direct purchasers and ultimately reached a settlement agreement with them in March 2006. That agreement mirrored the indirect purchaser settlement: De Beers agreed not to contest certification of a direct purchaser settlement class and to create a fund of $ 22.5 million to satisfy class members' Sherman Act claims. De Beers also [12] agreed to increase the indirect purchaser class settlement fund by $ 22.5 million because the lawsuits filed by the direct purchasers included as plaintiffs some indirect purchasers who had not participated in the earlier settlement. Finally, De Beers agreed to injunctive relief that was substantively identical to that imposed under the indirect purchaser settlement.

On March 31, 2006, the District Court amended its November 30 order to conditionally certify both the direct and indirect purchaser settlement classes under Rules 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3), and to preliminarily approve a combined settlement for both classes. The proposed combined settlement agreement provided for a fund of $ 295 million to be paid to both the direct and indirect purchaser classes. The direct purchasers were to receive $ 22.5 million of the fund, while $ 272.5 million was allotted to the indirect purchaser claims. The combined settlement also provided for entry of a stipulated injunction that, among other things, required De Beers to comply with all federal and state antitrust laws, limited De Beers's ability to purchase diamonds from third-party producers, and prohibited De Beers from restricting the geographic [13] territory within which sightholders could resell De Beers diamonds. De Beers also agreed to subject itself to personal jurisdiction in the United States for enforcement of the combined settlement agreement. The parties stipulated that the injunction would take effect in April 2006 even though, at that time, the Court had not yet entered a final order certifying the class and approving the settlement agreement.

[5] Prior to 2003, Rule 23 expressly authorized district courts to conditionally certify a class. See FED. R. CIV. P. 23(c)(1) (2002) (providing that a class certification order "may be conditional, and may be altered or amended before the decision on the merits.") In 2003, however, the provision allowing for conditional certification was removed because "[a] court that is not satisfied that the requirements of Rule 23 have been met should refuse certification until they have been met." FED. R. CIV. P. 23 (2010) advisory committee's note to the 2003 amendments. However, as none of the parties challenge the District Court's certification order on the basis of that change, we will not discuss it further.

C. Class Certification And Settlement Proceedings

After preliminarily approving the new settlement agreement, the District Court allowed class members to lodge objections to the class certification and the settlement. [6] [*142] Class objectors filed a total of thirty-four objections. All objections pertained to the proposed certification of, and recovery by, the indirect purchaser class; none of the direct purchasers objected to the settlement.

The objectors raised two challenges to the propriety of certifying the two settlement classes. First, they argued that a nationwide class of indirect purchasers should not have been certified for the purpose of administering a monetary settlement of state law claims because antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment laws vary widely from state to state. [7] According to the objectors, those differences are of such magnitude that common questions of law or fact do not predominate with regard to the indirect purchaser class, thus making certification inappropriate under Rule 23(b)(3). Second, the objectors asserted that a nationwide class of both direct and indirect purchasers should not have been certified for the purpose of implementing injunctive relief because the market for rough gem diamonds became competitive during the pendency of this litigation. That competitive increase, they say, rendered an injunction to enforce compliance with antitrust statutes unnecessary and accordingly divested the indirect purchasers of antitrust standing to seek relief under Rule 23(b)(2).

The District Court overruled both objections. Regarding Rule 23(b)(3) certification, the Court concluded that, while antitrust and consumer protection statutes vary from state to state, those differences are not so significant that they override class commonalities. Specifically, the Court held that class members share common issues of fact regarding whether De Beers actually fixed the price of rough gem diamonds and whether such price-fixing caused the plaintiffs to suffer an antitrust injury. The Court further noted that "De Beers … demanded a release of potential damage claims in all 50 states" as a condition of the settlement and that certification of a nationwide class was therefore appropriate, even though the law of many jurisdictions limits or denies the right of indirect purchasers to recover for antitrust injuries. (App. at 279.) The Court also observed that the alleged harm was national in scope and that resolving all federal and state antitrust claims simultaneously "benefit[ed] all class members by spreading litigation costs among Plaintiffs." (App. at 284.)

With [16] respect to the Rule 23(b)(2) injunctive relief, the Court held, without addressing objectors' description of competitive advances in the market, that "all class members will continue to suffer … harm." (App. at 285.) The Court rejected the objectors' argument that the class lacked antitrust standing, concluding that De Beers had stipulated as a factual matter that its conduct caused antitrust injury to all members of the direct and indirect purchaser classes. Thus, according to the Court, De Beers's concession provided a factual basis upon which to predicate class members' antitrust standing because "De Beers has waived the right to demand proof of the substantive elements of the [antitrust] claims." (Id.)

[*143] Accordingly, on May 22, 2008, the Court entered a final order certifying the direct and indirect purchaser classes under Rules 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3). As ultimately certified, the direct purchaser class includes all

[6] The District Court referred the case to a special master for the purpose of recommending a distribution plan for the indirect purchaser settlement award and for evaluating a fee request filed by plaintiffs' counsel. As we conclude that the Court improperly certified the indirect purchaser class, see infra Part III.A, the objections to the distribution [14] plan and fee award are moot, and we need not recount the special master's recommendation on those matters.

[7] The [15] objectors did not oppose certification of the direct purchaser class for the purpose of adjudicating Sherman Act claims.

sightholders who acquired rough gem diamonds directly from De Beers between September 20, 1997 and March 31, 2006. The indirect purchaser class includes all indirect purchasers who acquired gem diamonds between January 1, 1994 and March 31, 2006, regardless of whether their [17] stones were supplied by De Beers or by one of its competitors. [8] Also on May 22, 2008, the Court entered a previously agreed-upon injunction. The injunction is framed to remain in effect for five years from its date of issuance, thus expiring on May 22, 2013. The objectors then filed the present appeals.

II. Jurisdiction And Standard Of Review

The District Court possessed federal question jurisdiction over the direct purchasers' Sherman Act antitrust claim for damages pursuant to § 4(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), and over both the direct and indirect purchasers' claims for injunctive relief under § 16 of that Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. Original jurisdiction over the federal claims also arose under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337(a). The District Court had supplemental jurisdiction over the indirect purchasers' state-law antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367. [18] HN4[] We have jurisdiction to review final orders of the District Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

HN5[] We review an order granting class certification for abuse of discretion. In re Schering Plough Corp. ERISA Litig., 589 F.3d 585, 595 (3d Cir. 2009). A district court abuses its discretion when its class certification decision "rests upon a clearly erroneous finding of fact, an errant conclusion of law or an improper application of law to fact." Id. (quoting In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 312 (3d Cir. 2008)).

III. Discussion

The appellants are objectors who challenged the District Court's order certifying the indirect purchaser class under Rule 23(b)(3) and both classes under Rule 23(b)(2). The appellees are the named representatives of the indirect purchaser class, who of course support the District Court's order. [9]

HN7[] A district court may certify a lawsuit as a class action if the suit meets the requirements of Rules 23(a) and 23(b). Rule 23(a) mandates first, that the class be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, [*144] second, that the class share common questions of law or fact, third, that the class representatives possess claims or defenses that are typical of all class members, and fourth, that the class representatives be able to fairly and adequately represent the class interests. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a). If those requirements are satisfied, a district court may certify the class for one of the purposes enumerated in Rule 23(b). As previously noted, HN8[] Rule 23(b)(2) [20] permits class certification if the defendant "has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief … is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(2). Again, as already noted, HN9[] Rule 23(b)(3) permits certification whenever "questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and … a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(3). HN10[]

[8] The parties have not explained, nor does the record reveal, why the indirect purchaser class reaches back to 1994, but the direct purchaser class dates only from 1997. Whatever the reasons may be for this disparity, no one has suggested that they are pertinent to the present appeals.

[9] On June 11, 2009, plaintiffs filed a motion to dismiss the appeal on the grounds that the objectors lack standing to appeal the Rule 23(b)(2) certification order because the injunction restrains only De Beers, not the objectors. We reject that argument. HN6[] An unnamed class member has standing to appeal a class certification order provided that the member objected [19] to the settlement and is bound by the court's judgment. Devlin v. Scardelletti, 536 U.S. 1, 7-10, 122 S. Ct. 2005, 153 L. Ed. 2d 27 (2002); accord Bell Atl. Corp. v. Bolger, 2 F.3d 1304, 1307-10 (3d Cir. 1993). In this case, the objectors contested certification before the District Court. As class members, they are bound by the Court's judgment and by the terms of the settlement agreement, which release De Beers from antitrust liability. The objectors therefore have standing to pursue appeals, and we will enter a separate order denying the motion to dismiss.

The District Court must specify which provision of Rule 23(b) supports certification of the class. In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 309 (3d Cir. 1998).

In this case, the objectors challenge the propriety of certification under either Rule 23(b)(2) or 23(b)(3). Because the Court's Rule 23(b)(3) certification order presents a broader range of issues than its Rule 23(b)(2) counterpart, we address the certification of the damages class before turning to the class claims for injunctive relief.

A. Certification Under Rule 23(b)(3)

HN11[] Because Rule 23(b)(3) allows a district court to certify a class [21] only if, first, all class members share common questions of law or fact that predominate over other issues in the case, and, second, a class action is superior to other methods of adjudicating the members' claims, courts have come to refer to these twin prerequisites for certification as the "predominance" requirement and the "superiority" requirement. The predominance requirement is similar to the commonality requirement in Rule 23(a)(2), which says that the class must share common questions of law or fact. However, the question of predominance imposes a more stringent obligation on the reviewing court to ensure that issues common to the class truly overshadow those pertinent to individuals or to subgroups of class members. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 579 F.3d 241, 266 (3d Cir. 2009). It is therefore "appropriate to analyze the [commonality and predominance] factors together, with particular focus on the predominance requirement." Id. (internal quotation omitted).

HN12[] A district court must evaluate predominance and superiority by considering the following four factors enumerated in Rule 23(b)(3):

> (A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution or [22] defense of separate actions;
> (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members;
> (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and
> (D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action.

FED. R. CIV. P. 23(b)(3). The court may also consider additional factors pertinent to class certification issues. See Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 615-16, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997) (describing factors listed in Rule 23(b)(3) as "nonexhaustive"). When presented with a motion to certify a class for settlement purposes only, as in this case, the court need not consider the likely difficulties [*145] associated with managing the class action through trial. Id. at 620. HN13[] Regardless of the purposes for which class certification is sought, though, the court is not required to rest its certification order solely upon the pleadings. See In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 316 (3d Cir. 2008) ("[T]he requirements set out in Rule 23 are not mere pleading rules."). Instead, the court should perform a "rigorous analysis" that "delve[s] beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements [23] for class certification are satisfied." Id. (quoting Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 167 (3d Cir. 2001)).

The only issue under Rule 23(b)(3) that the objectors challenge on appeal is the District Court's finding of predominance with regard to the state law claims against De Beers. HN14[] The predominance of an issue depends upon the value that addressing it will yield for all class members. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 623 (indicating that the "predominance inquiry tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation"). The issue need not be dispositive of the case, In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 202 F.R.D. 12, 29 (D.D.C. 2001), but it must be significant to every class member's claim. See 2 ALBA CONTE & HERBERT NEWBERG, NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS, § 4:25, at 173 (4th ed. 2002) (recounting that courts have described as predominant those issues which present a "common nucleus of fact," an "overriding question," or an "essential common link among class members"). Issues are not predominant if they are common to all class members but their resolution does little to bring the case to conclusion. Cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) [24] advisory committee's note to the 1966 amendment (indicating that common issues will not predominate if an individualized assessment of liability is necessary notwithstanding resolution of them). Thus, the predominance inquiry requires the court to identify class members' claims and to ask whether the class can support any of the elements of those claims through common proof. Simer v. Rios, 661 F.2d 655, 672 (7th Cir. 1981); cf. Ins. Brokerage, 579 F.3d at 269 (affirming class certification because plaintiffs possessed class-wide proof of antitrust injury, even though the amount of each members' damages required individualized proof).

The District Court found that the shared antitrust harm sustained by all indirect purchasers predominated over other issues in the case, making those claims appropriate for class treatment. Thus, the District Court's certification order grouped antitrust claims under the laws of all fifty states and the District of Columbia into a single class. The objectors challenge the District Court's finding of predominance, arguing that differences in state law prevent the allegedly common harm associated with De Beers's price fixing from gaining predominance over [25] legal issues shared by only limited segments of the class. More specifically, the objectors say that different states have very different laws governing whether indirect purchasers even have an antitrust claim and that those substantive differences in state law prevent common issues of law and fact from predominating in this case. They likewise argue that differences among state consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws prevent a finding of predominance. Finally, they argue that the District Court's certification order is procedurally improper because the order fails to identify the state law claims that will receive class treatment. We take up each of those contentions in turn.

1. Predominance of Common Legal and Factual Questions

The objectors' primary attack on the class certification and settlement order asserts [*146] that variations in state antitrust statutes prevent common class issues from gaining predominance over individual legal issues. We have recognized that HN15[] "there may be situations where variations in state laws are so significant so as to defeat commonality and predominance even in a settlement class certification." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig. (Warfarin Sodium II), 391 F.3d 516, 524, 529-30 (3d Cir. 2004) [26] (certifying a class of consumer deception claims under the law of all fifty states while recognizing that the entire class also shared a single, common deception claim under the law of Delaware, where the allegedly deceptive communications had originated). However, neither we nor our sister courts of appeals have considered whether variations among state antitrust statutes are so far-reaching that those differences overshadow commonalities when a class of indirect purchasers seeks certification on a nationwide basis. We must therefore consider for the first time whether a national class of indirect purchaser claimants under state law is "sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 623.

a. State Antitrust Statutes

HN16[] Under the Sherman Act, to establish antitrust liability for horizontal price-fixing, a plaintiff must show that (1) a defendant entered a contract, combination, or conspiracy with at least one other entity; (2) the agreement constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade; (3) the agreement produced anticompetitive effects in the relevant market; and (4) the plaintiff was injured as a result. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 442 (3d Cir. 1997) [27] (reiterating elements of proof under § 1 of the Sherman Act). HN17[] A claim for monopolization requires the plaintiff to prove that (1) the defendant possesses "monopoly power in the relevant market" and (2) the defendant acquired, maintained, or attempted to acquire or maintain that power through means other than "growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966) (setting forth the elements of proof under § 2 of the Sherman Act). HN18[] Many states have enacted antitrust statutes that proscribe the same conduct as the Sherman Act. 14 HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW P 2401a, at 314 (2d ed. 2006).

HN19[] While state antitrust statutes frequently track the Sherman Act in terms of their substantive elements of proof, they vary significantly with regard to the standing that they extend to indirect purchasers. The variance is mainly a function of whether a state has chosen to follow the Sherman Act principles regarding standing laid down by the Supreme Court in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). In that case, the Court decided that only direct purchasers of a product or service [28] may sue for an antitrust injury. Id. at 734-36. The Supreme Court's theory for denying standing to indirect purchasers was that "the antitrust laws will be more effectively enforced by concentrating the full recovery for the overcharge in the direct purchasers rather than by allowing every plaintiff potentially affected by the overcharge to sue only for the amount it could show was absorbed by it." Id. at 735. Hence, the Court viewed direct purchaser standing as the most efficient way to ensure that companies or individuals engaging in anticompetitive conduct were called to account for their actions. Id. at 741.

HN20[] Some states have elected to follow the Supreme Court's lead in Illinois Brick. [*147] See, e.g., Wilson v. Gen. Motors Corp., 190 N.J. 336, 921 A.2d 414, 416-17 (N.J. 2007); Johnson v. Microsoft Corp., 106 Ohio St. 3d 278, 2005 Ohio 4985, 834 N.E.2d 791, 798 (Ohio 2005); Major v. Microsoft Corp., 2002 OK CIV APP 120, 60 P.3d 511, 513 (Okla. Civ. App. 2002). Other states, however, have diverged from Illinois Brick and have enacted statutes known as "Illinois Brick repealers." Those statutes reject the rule that antitrust recovery is limited to parties that dealt directly with the defendant and instead extend antitrust standing to indirect purchasers, including [29] consumers. See, e.g., CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 16750(a); MICH. COMP. LAWS § 445.778(2); N.Y. GEN. BUS. LAW § 340(6). Finally, a third set of jurisdictions allow indirect purchasers to seek antitrust recovery, but only if the state joins the suit in a parens patriae capacity. See IDAHO CODE §§ 48-108(2), -113(1); Siena v. Microsoft Corp., 796 A.2d 461, 464-65 (R.I. 2002).

Thus, HN21[] in some states with Illinois Brick repealers, indirect purchasers may personally advance a claim for antitrust recovery against a defendant, such as De Beers, that has fixed prices. In other states, however, they may do so only with the assent of the state attorney general. And in states without a repealer statute, recovery is usually foreclosed entirely. [10] At least twenty-five states and the District of Columbia have implemented Illinois Brick repealers or extended antitrust standing to indirect purchasers through judicial decision; the remaining states have not. [11]

[10] HN22[] Standing in those states is ordinarily but not always foreclosed. The following states lack Illinois Brick repealers but have extended indirect purchaser standing through judicial decisions:

Arizona (Bunker's Glass Co. v. Pilkington PLC, 206 Ariz. 9, 75 P.3d 99, 109 (Ariz. 2003) [30] (en banc))

Iowa (Comes v. Microsoft Corp., 646 N.W.2d 440, 449-50 (Iowa 2002))

North Carolina (Hyde v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 123 N.C. App. 572, 473 S.E.2d 680, 687 (N.C. Ct. App. 1996))

Tennessee (*Sherwood v. Microsoft Corp., No. M2000-01850-COA-R9-CV, 2003 Tenn. App. LEXIS 539, 2003 WL 21780975, 16 (Tenn. Ct. App. July 31, 2003)).

[11] HN23[] The following states and territories have enacted Illinois Brick repealers that allow indirect purchasers to bring private suits for damages:

Alabama (ALA. CODE § 6-5-60(a))

California (CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 16750(a))

District of Columbia (D.C. CODE § 28-4509(a))

Kansas (KAN. STAT. § 50-161(b))

Maine (ME. REV. STAT. tit. 10, § 1104(1))

In short, this is not a case in which a class of plaintiffs possesses numerous disparate claims but shares an overriding common cause of action under a common body of law. Instead, all parties agree that the claims within the indirect purchaser class implicate the law in every jurisdiction in the nation and that no jurisdiction provides a claim shared by all, or even by [*148] a majority, of the class members. These variations in state antitrust law are not trivial. [12] They represent fundamental policy differences among the several states, and they are in consequence as different as it is possible to be, with some states giving substantive antitrust rights to indirect purchasers, other states giving more limited rights, and others denying such rights altogether.

[12] Our concurring colleague says we have "attempted to address the specific nuances of the [32] substantive laws of the fifty states." (Concurring at 12 (internal quotation marks omitted).) That is a misapprehension. HN25[] We are certainly not saying that nuanced differences among state laws will prevent the certification of a class, nor are we suggesting that a state-by-state cataloguing of differences in state law is necessary every time a multi-jurisdiction class is certified. We are saying that the difference between having an antitrust claim under state law and having none is no mere nuance and cannot be solved by any reconfiguration of the nationwide class short of changing it from a nationwide class to one or more classes that exclude those who have no claim. The concurrence acknowledges this necessity by saying that, "[i]f … neither state nor federal law provides a New Jersey resident with a right to relief, then the class should be redefined so that it does not include persons whose right to relief is governed by New Jersey law." (Id.)

For example, HN26[] an indirect purchaser located in a state that has an Illinois Brick repealer, such as New York, may sue and recover for a price-fixing or monopolization harm, see N.Y. GEN. BUS. LAW § 340(6), but an identical indirect purchaser in [33] a neighboring state without a repealer, such as New Jersey, may not, see Sickles v. Cabot Corp., 379 N.J. Super. 100, 877 A.2d 267, 276 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2005) (refusing to extend antitrust liability under the New Jersey Antitrust Act to indirect purchasers). It is hard to imagine a greater disparity between two class members. Whereas the New York purchaser may recover for an antitrust violation if he can prove the existence of a price-fixing agreement or monopoly market power resulting in higher prices, the New Jersey purchaser has no legal right to recover -- or even to bring a lawsuit -- regardless of whether he can conclusively prove the existence of a restraint and antitrust impact. Thus, while both purchasers may have felt the effects of the same antitrust conduct, the purchasers do not share common legal or factual issues because the antitrust activity gives rise to a right of action for only one purchaser. See Ins. Brokerage, 579 F.3d at 266 (noting that Rule 23 requires that a class possess at least one issue of law or fact that affects all class members' claims). The natural result of those differences is that there can be no certification of a nationwide class of state indirect purchaser [34] plaintiffs because there is no common question of law or material fact. HN27[] It is improper to certify a nationwide class when the legal right shared by class members purportedly arises under the laws of multiple jurisdictions, but only some of those jurisdictions extend standing to class members to enforce that right. [13]

Plaintiffs seek to minimize these legal disparities by characterizing them as little [*149] more than impediments to litigation that would make trial management difficult but that may safely be ignored for settlement purposes. That argument places management issues above the more basic question of substantive law. It is akin to suggesting that a really good cook, by means of superior kitchen management, can make a cake out of nothing. HN29[] The lack of substantive rights cannot be wished away by the promise of easier litigation management. Proponents of class certification for any purpose, including settlement, retain the burden of demonstrating that all class members share common legal or factual issues and that those issues predominate over matters requiring individual proof. In re Gen. Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prods. Liab. Litig., 55 F.3d 768, 799 (3d Cir. 1995) (holding that nothing in Rule 23 "can be read to authorize separate, liberalized criteria for settlement classes"). That test presupposes that everyone in the class at least has a cause of action. The variations in state law identified by the objectors preclude the requisite finding of predominance under Rule 23(b)(3) [36] because indirect purchasers do not have a right to recover in all states, and, therefore, no question of law or fact regarding their legal rights is uniform throughout the class. Cf. Prudential, 148 F.3d at 315 (stating that HN30[] certification of a nationwide class of state-law claims is appropriate if the plaintiffs possess similar rights under the laws of all states such that the court can readily control for differences among various jurisdictions).

The predominance requirement of Rule 23 is not the only statutory provision to stand as an obstacle to certification. As just discussed, the District Court's certification order extends antitrust remedies that, in many instances, have no root in state substantive law. As such, the order contravenes HN31[] the Rules Enabling Act, which prohibits a court from interpreting procedural rules in a manner that creates new substantive rights. See 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) (stating that federal courts may not interpret procedural rules in a manner that "enlarge[s]… any substantive right"); see also Windham v. Am. Brands, Inc., 565 F.2d 59, 65-66 (4th Cir. 1977) (cautioning that HN32[] each plaintiff in a federal antitrust action must offer individual proof of damages [37] and that the failure to require such proof contravenes the Rules Enabling Act by allowing a plaintiff to recover in the absence of individual harm). By certifying a class, the District Court ran afoul of the Act because its order effectively granted relief to individuals to whom De Beers had no antitrust liability.

[13] Again, HN28[] we are not suggesting that a district court must conduct a state-by-state analysis every time there exists some difference in the state law underlying class members' claims. However, when the parties propose to use class certification mechanisms in a manner that materially changes substantive rights, the district court has a duty to ensure that such use does not create a right of recovery where none existed before. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 320 (imposing on district courts the obligation to ensure that the plaintiffs have satisfied their burden under Rule 23 before certifying a class). Hence, district courts must remain attuned to the kind of significant variations in state law at issue here and reject proposed classes that allow plaintiffs to recover damages through the class certification procedure when they would be unable to do so in an individual [35] action.

Nor can these foundational problems be overcome, as plaintiffs suggest, by relying upon De Beers's willingness to stipulate to liability in all fifty states. Plaintiffs argue that "[w]hen a settlement is reached, the defendant elects not to contest the allegations of the complaint, and district courts are entitled to rely on those allegations to demonstrate commonality." (Plaintiff-Appellees' Ans. Br. at 46.) That is simply incorrect. HN33[] Independent of any stipulations, district courts are obligated "to consider carefully all relevant evidence and make a definitive determination that the requirements of Rule 23 have been met before certifying a class." Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 320. Were it otherwise, the door would swing wide to collusive settlements. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620 (requiring courts to exercise "undiluted, even heightened, attention" to issues of commonality [38] and predominance in the settlement context because those inquires are designed "to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions"). Thus, plaintiffs and De Beers cannot salvage an improper certification order by [*150] saying that De Beers has stipulated out of existence defects in the commonality and predominance of the class claims.

The objections in this case pertain to the predominance of class claims and to the standing of individual class members to bring claims under state law. The District Court had to consider both of those issues, apart from the pleadings and stipulations, when evaluating the motion to certify a class. Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 316. HN34[] A defendant's decision not to contest the requirements of Rule 23 does not relieve a district court of its independent obligation to ensure that those requirements are satisfied. The District Court did not adequately satisfy that obligation and abused its discretion in finding that common issues of law or fact predominate so as to warrant certification of a nationwide class of state antitrust claims.

b. State Consumer Protection and Unjust Enrichment Law

A similar problem exists with regard to the District [39] Court's certification of consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims for class-wide treatment. HN35[] Consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws are no more uniform among the fifty states than are antitrust statutes. In fact, they are less so. Some states without Illinois Brick repealers allow indirect purchasers to invoke consumer protection statutes to gain antitrust relief. See, e.g., Mack v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 673 So. 2d 100, 107 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996); Ciardi v. F. Hoffmann-La Roche, Ltd., 436 Mass. 53, 762 N.E.2d 303, 312 (Mass. 2002); Arthur v. Microsoft Corp., 267 Neb. 586, 676 N.W.2d 29, 37-38 (Neb. 2004). Other states preclude indirect purchasers from doing so because they have adopted Illinois Brick standing requirements and view any utilization of consumer protection statutes to recover for antitrust harm as circumventing that policy decision. See, e.g., Sickles, 877 A.2d at 277; Major, 60 P.3d at 517; Vacco v. Microsoft, 260 Conn. 59, 793 A.2d 1048, 1064-66 (Conn. 2002); Blewett v. Abbott Labs., 86 Wn. App. 782, 938 P.2d 842, 844 (Wash. Ct. App. 1997). A third group requires indirect purchaser consumer protection actions to proceed as parens patriae suits. Blewett, 938 P.2d at 847, while other statutes lack such requirements, [40] see, e.g., D.C. CODE § 28-4509(a); MICH. COMP. LAWS § 445.778(2); N.D. CENT. CODE § 51-08.1-08(3).

HN36[] The common law of unjust enrichment likewise varies among the states, with some jurisdictions mandating proof of elements not required by others. Evidence of antitrust activity may provide a basis for an unjust enrichment claim in some states. See Freeman Indus. LLC v. Eastman Chem. Co., 172 S.W.3d 512, 524-26 (Tenn. 2005) (allowing an indirect purchaser price-fixing claim to proceed under an unjust enrichment theory); see also D.R. Ward Constr. Co. v. Rohm & Haas Co., 470 F. Supp. 2d 485, 507-08 (E.D. Pa. 2006) (same with respect to Arizona law). Other states preclude recovery for antitrust injuries on an unjust enrichment theory. Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 8 N.Y.3d 204, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 1018, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760 (N.Y. 2007); cf. Coastal Envt'l. Specialists, Inc. v. Chem-Lig Int'l, Inc., 818 So. 2d 12, 19 (La. Ct. App. 2001) (holding that a plaintiff may not invoke unjust enrichment principles to obtain a remedy for a harm that is adequately redressed by other areas of law). With respect to the substantive elements of unjust enrichment, some states require plaintiffs to prove that the defendant's conduct rises to the level [41] of fraud. See Mantiply v. Mantiply, 951 So.2d 638, 655 (Ala. 2006); Heldenfels Bros., Inc. v. City of Corpus Christi, 832 S.W.2d 39, 41 (Tex. 1992). Others do not. See Rhue v. Rhue, 189 N.C. App. 299, 658 [*151] S.E.2d 52, 59 (N.C. Ct. App. 2008); Anderson v. DeLisle, 352 N.W.2d 794, 796 (Minn. Ct. App. 1984). Some allow an unjust enrichment claim only if the plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law. Harris Group, Inc. v. Robinson, 209 P.3d 1188, 1205 (Colo. Ct. App. 2009); Harvell v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 2006 OK 24, 164 P.3d 1028, 1035 (Okla. 2006). Others lack that requirement. Jones v. Sparks, 297 S.W.3d 73, 78

(Ky. Ct. App. 2009); Williams Twp. Bd. of Supervisors v. Williams Twp. Emerg. Co., Inc., 986 A.2d 914, 923 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2009). In short, "the claim of unjust enrichment is packed with individual issues" and therefore precludes a finding of predominance in this nationwide class action context. Clay v. Am. Tobacco Co., 188 F.R.D. 483, 501 (S.D. Ill. 1999).

Amidst the welter of differing statutes and decisions across the country on these issues, at least one thing emerges clearly: HN37[] evidence of price-fixing and monopolization does not give rise in every state to an unjust enrichment or consumer protection [42] claim for indirect purchasers. Thus, while De Beers's price-control activity, as a practical matter, may have harmed all indirect purchasers, that injury cannot provide a basis for the certification granted here because it does not give rise to a legal right to recovery in all of the jurisdictions implicated by a nationwide class. See Chiang v. Veneman, 385 F.3d 256, 273, 46 V.I. 679 (3d Cir. 2004) (HN38[] "In order to predominate, the common issues must constitute a 'significant part' of the individual cases." (quoting Jenkins v. Raymark Indus., Inc., 782 F.2d 468, 472 (3d Cir. 1986))). The District Court therefore abused its discretion when it found that consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws were sufficiently similar to warrant certification as a class. [14] Cf. Thorogood v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 547 F.3d 742, 746-48 (7th Cir. 2008) (reversing class certification order in a consumer deception case because, while all consumers had purchased the alleged deceptively marketed product, differences among state law precluded a finding of common legal issues).

c. Federalism Concerns

It is no mere afterthought to note that, even ignoring the obstacles posed by Rule 23, principles of federalism counsel against certifying a class in this matter. HN39[] The mandate of Erie Railroad Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938), prevents a district court from invoking federal procedural rules to extend recovery to a state law plaintiff when state courts would not recognize the plaintiff's harm as grounds for relief. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. v. Pac. Indem. Co., 557 F.2d 51, 56 n.8 (3d Cir. 1977) ("In giving federal courts 'cognizance' of equity suits in cases of diversity jurisdiction, [44] Congress never gave, nor did the federal courts ever claim[,] the power to deny substantive rights created by State law or to create substantive rights denied by State law."). Thus, a district court abuses its discretion when, as happened here, it approves a settlement based on a supposed state law antitrust violation that the plaintiff could not have asserted in state court.

[*152] HN40[] Sacrificing the principles of federalism to obtain the benefits of a settlement is a poor trade. Certain states have categorically refused to allow indirect purchasers to bring a price-fixing claim as a matter of substantive law. E.g., Wilson, 921 A.2d at 416-17; Johnson, 834 N.E.2d at 798; Major, 60 P.3d at 513; Abbott Labs., Inc. (Ross Labs. Div.) v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503, 507 (Tex. 1995). The policy decisions of those states are "fundamental aspect[s] of our federal republic and must not be overridden in a quest to clear the queue in court." In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012, 1020 (7th Cir. 2002). By allowing the indirect purchasers to effectuate a settlement without regard to those policy decisions, the District Court wrongly allowed the sovereignty of the states to be subordinated to De Beer's [45] desire to resolve all indirect purchaser claims simultaneously.

Our holding today is not a repudiation of all nationwide class actions based upon state law. In fact, HN41[] we have previously approved the use of class litigation as a means of resolving state law claims, recognizing that in certain cases such certification may be entirely proper. See Warfarin Sodium II, 391 F.3d at 529-30 (certifying a nationwide class under state consumer protection statutes on the basis that class members had uniformly been overcharged for the defendant's product and had a right to recover under the law of all fifty states). [15] Nor are we

[14] It is inapposite to say, as does our concurring colleague, that every plaintiff "might have some valid claim" in addition to an antitrust or [43] consumer protection action and that such claims might be susceptible to common elements of proof. (Concurrence at 13 (emphasis in original).) That is pure speculation, for, if such claims exist, the plaintiffs did not bring them. Every claim alleged in the complaints seeks recovery for price-fixing and monopolization by De Beers. The claims themselves are brought under a variety of statutory labels, but at their core they all seek damages flowing from De Beers's antitrust conduct, which is categorically foreclosed to indirect purchasers in many states without Illinois Brick repealers.

requiring [*153] district courts to undertake rigorous state-by-state analyses in all cases. [16] We hold only that a district court abuses its discretion when, as in this case, it certifies a nationwide class of litigants whose claims

[15] Plaintiffs argue that Warfarin Sodium II compels us to uphold the District Court's certification order, and our concurring colleague believes that we "dismiss[] out of hand" the controlling effect of that decision. (Concurring Op. at 1.) Not so, though we evidently do view that case differently. In Warfarin Sodium II, a nationwide class of plaintiffs sued DuPont Pharmaceuticals Company for deceptive advertising after DuPont claimed that Coumadin, an anticoagulation drug, produced certain benefits not associated with the generic form marketed by its competitors. 391 F.3d at 522-24. Plaintiffs, including indirect purchasers of Coumadin, brought claims for monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, the consumer protection laws of all fifty [47] states and the District of Columbia, and the state antitrust statutes in states with Illinois Brick repealers. Id. at 524 & n.8. All class members also advanced a claim under the Delaware Consumer Fraud Act, DEL. CODE tit. 6, § 2513, on the ground that the allegedly deceptive communications originated from DuPont's Delaware-based headquarters. Warfarin Sodium II, 391 F.3d at 528. The District Court approved a settlement class, which we upheld on appeal over the protests of an objector who argued that variations among state consumer protection statutes defeated predominance. Id. at 529-30.

Warfarin Sodium II is not controlling because the plaintiffs in that case shared a common claim under the Delaware Consumer Fraud Act. Id. at 528. Evidence pertaining to DuPont's distribution of deceptive marketing materials was common to all class members, and all class members suffered a similar harm by purchasing Coumadin under false pretenses. Id. Thus, unlike the plaintiffs in this case, the plaintiffs in Warfarin Sodium II shared a single, common claim that gave rise to an identical right to recovery under a single state statute for every member of the class. The same evidence used to support [48] this class-wide claim was also relevant to the consumer protection claims under the laws of other states, making class issues predominant over individual ones.

The nationwide consumer protection claims certified in Warfarin Sodium II are critically different than the antitrust claims in this case because they were founded upon deceptive marketing practices, which were properly cognizable under the laws of all fifty states. See id. at 529-30 (implying that certification was proper for settlement purposes because the law in all fifty states provided some form of relief for DuPont's deceptive marketing practices). In contrast, many states do not permit plaintiffs to invoke consumer protection remedies for the antitrust harms that the indirect purchasers have suffered.

Warfarin Sodium II's certification of a class for the purpose of settling indirect purchasers' antitrust claims is also distinguishable from this case. Unlike in Warfarin Sodium II, the District Court here included indirect purchasers from all states in a single class, even though indirect purchasers in many states lack standing to bring antitrust claims. Those members share no common question with the rest of the class because [49] no amount of factual similarity with other class members will confer a right to recover upon them. They are categorically precluded from obtaining antitrust recovery regardless of whether De Beers's price-fixing and monopolization activity disadvantaged them. Thus, the certification of this class, unlike in Warfarin Sodium II, has created a remedy for class members who have no substantive right to receive it.

Warfarin Sodium II's certification under state antitrust statutes is unpersuasive in this context because the class at issue in that case did not include claims under the laws of states without Illinois Brick repealers. Thus, we never considered whether an indirect purchaser in a state without a repealer could use a class settlement as a means of obtaining recovery that the purchaser could not receive had he brought the suit in his individual capacity. We do not construe Warfarin Sodium II as approving such a result. In fact, we noted in Warfarin Sodium II that "there may be situations where variations in state laws are so significant as to defeat commonality and predominance, even in a settlement class." Id. at 529.

There can be no greater variation in state law than exists in [50] the present case, where a plaintiff in one state has access to a remedy that is foreclosed to an identical plaintiff situated across state lines. Thus, we have not, as the concurrence suggests, departed from our holding in Warfarin Sodium II that HN42[] a class may include plaintiffs whose claims differ significantly if all members share at least one common issue. We have instead recognized that a plaintiff who has no right to relief cannot join in the same class as a plaintiff who does, and that, if those two plaintiffs are included in a single proposed class, then the court may not certify that class because no common issue predominates with respect to both plaintiffs.

[16] HN43[] In many cases, it will be evident that all class members share common legal or factual questions, even if the precise elements of proof for their claims vary among jurisdictions. Under such circumstances, a district court need not conduct an extensive inquiry into substantive state law to formally establish commonalities that are apparent. District courts in their sound discretion will determine the level of analysis to undertake when deciding whether variations in state law warrant detailed examination and a description [51] of similarities and differences. In a case like this -- where the class includes many people implicate the laws of multiple jurisdictions, despite the fact that only some of those jurisdictions recognize the claims for which recovery is sought. [17] It may be [*154] that the antitrust and consumer protection statutes in a more limited number of states are sufficiently similar that common issues of law or fact would predominate with respect to plaintiffs [46] in those jurisdictions. However, it was improper for the District Court to certify a nationwide class of plaintiffs based on state law when many states withhold antitrust standing from indirect purchasers and where the variability in consumer protection and unjust enrichment law in a context like this is extreme. Accordingly, we will vacate the District Court's certification order under Rule 23(b)(3) and remand this case for further proceedings.

On remand, the District Court should entertain renewed motions to certify classes that, at least as to state law claims, are not nationwide [54] in scope, if such motions are made. For example, HN47[] to obtain certification of an indirect purchaser class, plaintiffs would have to show that all class members share a right to recover for antitrust harms, such that one or more common issues affect all members' claims. We express no opinion regarding whether such a class can be formed or, if it can, which states' laws are sufficiently similar that plaintiffs in those states could be joined as class members. It would, however, be improper for the District Court to include in an indirect purchaser class plaintiffs whose claims arise in states that foreclose indirect purchasers from recovering for price-fixing or monopolization. Of course, the plaintiffs are not required to file new class certification motions, and nothing prevents them from prosecuting their claims in an individual capacity.

2. Failure to Identify Class Claims*

who could not pursue claims in an individual action -- that more searching inquiry was needed, as the plaintiffs have tried to use class action procedures to create a bridge to recovery where otherwise none would exist.

[17] We briefly note that the indirect purchasers face factual obstacles to class certification notwithstanding the legal defects discussed above because competition in the market for rough gem diamonds waxed and waned during the class period. The class includes all indirect purchasers who acquired diamonds between January 1, 1994 and March 31, 2006, regardless of whether they obtained stones from De Beers or from a competitor. The record, however, reflects that many of De Beers's competitors did not participate in the alleged price-fixing conspiracy throughout that period.

As a result, some class members purchased diamonds in a market that was heavily influenced by De Beers while others did not. Gary French, an expert retained by plaintiffs to calculate damages and show class-wide antitrust impact, explained that > during 1999 there was a substantial drop in the price of imported diamonds. [52] This drop in price corresponds to a period of time when it is known that De Beers … [was] selling off part of the stockpile of diamonds held in reserve. Thus, the per-unit value of rough diamonds fell closer to what may be considered "competitive" levels during the sell off.

(App. at 435.) French later testified that, in 2001, "De Beers temporarily allowed the market to set prices which led to a subsequent drop in polished diamond prices." (App. at 5020.)

Plaintiffs who purchased diamonds before 2001 may have different rights to recovery depending on whether their supplier was actively cooperating with De Beers price-setting efforts. See Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 207 (3d Cir. 2005) (indicating that HN44[] a § 1 plaintiff must prove that the defendant joined a conspiracy to restrain trade). Similarly, those who acquired diamonds in 2001, when De Beers allowed market forces to dictate pricing, likely have no antitrust claim because they made their purchases in a competitive market. See Angelico v. Lehigh Valley Hosp., Inc., 184 F.3d 268, 273-74 (3d Cir. 1999) (HN45[] requiring plaintiffs to show that they have suffered an antitrust injury -- i.e., an injury to competition -- to obtain [53] standing to bring an antitrust claim).

Thus, the class, as currently defined, includes members that acquired diamonds in a market controlled by the CSO, members that purchased diamonds from competitors that were not participating in the CSO's price-fixing activities, and members that have no antitrust injury whatsoever. Hence, class members have not sustained a uniform injury as the result of De Beers's antitrust conduct. Instead, their injuries depend upon when they purchased their diamonds and from whom they purchased them, and those injuries can be established only through individual proof. The class is therefore unworkable as these factual differences would defeat class certification notwithstanding the legal defects in the District Court's certification order that we have discussed above. See Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311-12 (HN46[] "[T]he task for plaintiffs at class certification is to demonstrate that the element of antitrust impact is capable of proof at trial through evidence that is common to the class rather than individual to its members.").

If the District Court ultimately determines that certification of a more limited class of indirect purchasers is appropriate under Rule 23, any certification order that the Court issues must contain greater detail than the one currently on appeal. HN48[] Under Rule 23(c), each class certification order must contain "(1) a [55] readily discernible, clear, and precise statement of the parameters defining the class or classes to be certified, and (2) a readily discernible, clear, and complete list of the claims, issues or defenses to be treated on a class basis." In re Constar Int'l Inc. Sec. Litig., 585 F.3d 774, 782 (3d Cir. 2009) [*155] (quotations omitted); see also FED. R. CIV. P. 23(c)(1)(B) ("An order that certifies a class action must define the class and the class claims, issues, or defenses … .").

As the objectors correctly note, the District Court's class certification order does not comport with the second requirement. The final order of certification adequately delineates the parameters of the indirect purchaser class, defining class membership to include purchasers in the United States who acquired any gem diamond from an entity other than De Beers or another rough diamond mining or production company, such as ALROSA, Rio Tinto, or BHP. It also identifies five legal issues supposedly common to the class. [18] But the order does not identify what state law claims or defenses will receive class treatment.

The District Court recognized that the indirect purchasers were advancing state antitrust, consumer protection, and unjust enrichment claims, and that "variations exist between the antitrust and consumer protection laws of different states." (App. at 279.) However, the Court never identified pertinent state antitrust or consumer protection statutes, explained the relevant state common law of unjust enrichment, or described how those statutes and the common law affect class-wide rights. Nor did the Court indicate whether the class antitrust issues that it [57] actually identified would affect the consumer protection and unjust enrichment claims. The failure to do so constitutes an abuse of discretion. Cf. Wachtel ex rel. Jesse v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 453 F.3d 179, 185 (3d Cir. 2006) (concluding that HN49[] a district court abuses its discretion when it articulates general issues of fact common to the class but fails to identify the particular claims that would be subject to class treatment).

Thus, the District Court's class certification order is deficient because the precise claims subject to class treatment are not "readily discernible from the text" of the order and the accompanying opinion. Id. On remand, any certification order [19] must identify with particularity both the prerequisites for membership in the class and the issues or claims that will be resolved on a class-wide basis. This means that the order should identify class issues and explicitly state whether those issues apply to the indirect purchasers' antitrust, consumer protection, or unjust enrichment claims, or to some combination of the three. While the District Court need not follow a particular formula when setting forth class-wide issues, we have recommended that the [58] format of an enumerated list can bring clarity to matters subject to class adjudication and facilitates appellate review of a certification order. Id. at 188 n.10. Accordingly, we will remand this case both because the indirect purchaser class as currently defined [*156] is

[18] The five issues are as follows:

> (a) Whether [D]efendants combined or conspired with others to fix, raise, [56] stabilize and maintain the prices of polished diamonds;
> (b) Whether [D]efendants monopolized or combined or conspired with others to monopolize the supply of polished diamonds;
> (c) Whether [D]efendants' conduct caused the prices of polished diamonds to be maintained at higher levels than would exist in a competitive market;
> (d) Whether [P]laintiffs and the Class[es] are entitled to injunctive relief; and
> (e) Whether [D]efendants' conduct caused injury to the business or property of [P]laintiffs and the other [Class and] Subclass Members and, if so, the appropriate class-wide measure of damages.

(App. at 1:276 (alterations in original).)

[19] We express no opinion regarding whether a class could properly be certified following remand and provide guidance regarding the content of a certification order only to aid the District Court in disposing of a class certification motion, should the parties choose to file one.

overbroad and because the District Court's certification order did not sufficiently identify those claims and issues subject to the class treatment.

B. Certification Under Rule 23(b)(2)

HN50[] Rule 23(b)(2) applies only when a class seeks injunctive relief. It has no application "to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Beck v. Maximus, Inc., 457 F.3d 291, 301 (3d Cir. 2006). The relief sought in a Rule 23(b)(2) action must benefit the entire class, and the class representatives bear the burden of demonstrating that "the interests of the class members are so like those of the individual representatives [59] that injustice will not result from their being bound by such judgment in the subsequent application of principles of res judicata." Baby Neal for and by Kanter v. Casey, 43 F.3d 48, 59 (3d Cir. 1994).

As HN51[] with any claim for injunctive relief, the plaintiffs may not base a demand for an injunction solely upon past harm that they have suffered. The plaintiffs must demonstrate that, regardless of their past harm, they are likely to suffer harm in the future. See In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 14 (1st Cir. 2008) ("Past exposure to illegal conduct does not in itself show a present case or controversy regarding injunctive relief … if unaccompanied by any continuing, present adverse effects." (alteration in original) (quoting O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 495-96, 94 S. Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974))). If the harm against which injunctive relief is sought dissipates during the course of the litigation, the basis for class certification likewise dissolves, and the class must be decertified. Id. at 14-16 (vacating certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class to enjoin cross-border arbitrage in the market for new automobiles, because, following commencement of the action, the exchange [60] rate between the U.S. dollar and the Canadian dollar fell, undercutting the economic viability of future anticompetitive arbitrage opportunities).

The District Court certified the direct and indirect purchaser classes under Rule 23(b)(2) for the purpose of awarding injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. HN52[] Unlike in a claim for damages, indirect purchasers seeking injunctive relief for an antitrust harm under § 16 do have standing. In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig. (Warfarin Sodium I), 214 F.3d 395, 399-400 (3d Cir. 2000). Section 16, however, creates no substantive rights. Mid-W. Paper Prods. Co. v. Cont'l Group, Inc., 596 F.2d 573, 589-90 (3d Cir. 1979). But to have standing under § 16, a plaintiff must establish a prospective threat of loss or damage as a result of conduct prohibited elsewhere in antitrust law. Warfarin Sodium I, 214 F.3d at 400. Here, the proponents of class certification relied upon De Beers's alleged price-fixing and monopolization in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act to substantiate their right to injunctive relief.

The objectors argue that all class members lack standing to seek injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton [61] Act because they have not shown an imminent threat of prospective antitrust injury. They aver that De Beers's price-fixing conduct ended in mid-2006, causing competition within the diamond industry to increase and rendering the injunction unnecessary.

Plaintiffs offer a two-fold response. They first rely on the District Court, which held that "the injunction … is part of a compromise that De Beers entered into willfully" and that, "as such, De Beers has waived the right to demand proof of substantive elements of the claims." (App. at 285.) They say, in other words, [*157] that De Beers's willingness to stipulate to liability is sufficient in and of itself to establish a prospective threat of antitrust harm. That logic is unpersuasive, however, because, again, HN53[] a defendant's willingness to stipulate to liability for the purpose of effectuating a class action settlement does not relieve the Court of its independent obligation to ensure that the facts of the underlying case adequately establish a basis for liability. Ins. Brokerage, 579 F.3d at 257 ("Confronted with a request for settlement-only class certification, … [the] specifications of [Rule 23]… designed to protect absentees by blocking [62] unwarranted or overbroad class definitions … demand undiluted, even heightened, attention … ." (quoting Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620 (second alteration in original) (internal quotations omitted))). Thus, De Beers's decision not to contest the propriety of the injunction does not provide a basis for affirming the District Court's Rule 23(b)(2) certification order.

Plaintiffs and De Beers alternatively argue that the injunction, which took effect in mid-2006, was itself responsible for producing the pro-competitive trends in the diamond industry, and that the injunction is necessary to maintain those competitive advances. However, such a conclusion is not supported by the record. Experts retained by both the plaintiffs and De Beers identified numerous causes of increased competition in the diamond industry, including:

. The opening of Rio Tinto's Argyle mine in Australia in the mid-1980s, which ultimately became the largest production mine in the world in terms of carats.

. Argyle's severance of ties with the CSO in 1996, after which Rio Tinto began marketing diamonds independently of De Beers.

. The opening of new mines by competitors in Canada, beginning in the late 1990s and running through [63] 2003.

. The exploration and opening of new mines in Angola in the late 1990s.

. The 2002 cessation of the purchase agreement between De Beers and BHP, which marked the end of De Beers's ability or willingness to purchase large quantities of competitors' diamonds.

. Limitations imposed by the European Commission in early 2006 on the amount of ALROSA diamonds that De Beers was permitted to purchase.

. Increases in global diamond production by De Beers's competitors, which caused De Beers to lose market share.

According to the plaintiffs' and De Beers's experts, these factors appear to have caused De Beers's market share to fall from approximately 65% in 2000 to 45% by 2006. Plaintiffs' own experts indicated that, following mid-2006, market forces controlled diamond pricing so pervasively that the price from that point to the present provides a competitive benchmark against which to determine the amount of plaintiffs' damages as a result of price-fixing during the class period. At no point did any of the plaintiffs' or De Beers's experts mention the injunction in their damage calculations or conclude that it had any effect whatsoever on diamond prices. Moreover, neither the plaintiffs nor [64] De Beers cite any place in the record reflecting such an effect.

Thus, while mid-2006 increases in competition may have roughly coincided with the District Court's issuance of the injunction, the record cannot support the conclusion that the injunction played a meaningful role in producing those competitive gains. Plaintiffs face no significant threat of future antitrust harm in the [*158] absence of the injunction because, according to their experts, the market has become increasingly competitive from 2006 onward, and "there is no longer any guarantee that the prices De Beers sets will hold in the marketplace." [20] (App. at 4323.) Plaintiffs therefore lack antitrust standing under § 16 of the Clayton Act, and we will vacate the District Court's order certifying the injunctive class under Rule 23(b)(2). See New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 14-16 (vacating a district court's Rule 23(b)(2) certification order because changes in market conditions caused the threat of future antitrust injury to disappear). [21]

[20] Our concurring colleague says that we have mischaracterized the expert testimony by concluding that plaintiffs face no significant threat of future antitrust harm. (Concurring Op. at 18.) [65] However, the plaintiffs' own expert opined that "De Beers is no longer able to control the quantities [of diamonds] available to the market as it had been in the past," and that it has therefore lost the ability to set the price of rough diamonds. (App. at 4321, 4323.) An industry commentator cited by that expert concluded that, by July 2007, "De Beers [was] no longer providing the steady hand that controlled supply and kept prices stable. Prices might now be volatile, subject to the normal ups and downs of the marketplace." (Id. at 4318.) Further, the European Commission has closed an antitrust investigation against De Beers on the ground that the entry of new diamond producers "means that there is now more competition on the rough diamonds market." (App. at 4319.) Thus, we have noted only what the experts, including the plaintiffs' experts, have said: that the market has grown competitive to the point that De Beers cannot control the market price.

[21] The objectors alternatively challenge the substantive provisions of the injunction as inadequate to ensure that competitive forces continue to prevail in the market for rough gem diamonds. As we conclude that plaintiffs lack standing to [66] pursue injunctive relief, we need not decide whether the terms of the injunction are sufficient to safeguard competitive market forces.

IV. Conclusion

Though the District Court brought skill, experience, and much labor to its handling of this matter, [22] we are compelled to conclude, for the reasons stated, that it abused its discretion in certifying the settlement classes under Rules 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3). Accordingly, we will vacate its judgment and remand the case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. [23]

Concur by: RENDELL

Concur

[*159] RENDELL, Circuit Judge, concurring in the judgment.

I agree with the disposition chosen by the majority, namely remand, because the District Court [68] failed to analyze the issues of commonality and predominance. However, I believe that the majority's opinion suffers from two overarching flaws. First, the majority dismisses out of hand our previous precedential opinion, In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litigation, 391 F.3d 516 (3d Cir. 2004) ("Warfarin II"), a case that concerned remarkably similar claims and issues. Second, the majority undertakes its own analyses of predominance and plaintiffs' entitlement to injunctive relief, rather than allowing the District Court on remand to evaluate these issues in the first instance. The majority's approach is thus inconsistent with both our precedent and our role as a reviewing court.

I.

The majority opinion conflates two distinct inquiries: "Do common questions predominate?" and "Who should be included in the class?" Our court addressed each of these issues in Warfarin II. Curiously, the majority attempts to distinguish Warfarin II in a footnote. To my mind, Warfarin II binds us and should control our mode of analysis, if not the ultimate ruling on the issue of predominance as well. If we were to follow Warfarin II, I suggest that the District Court on remand could revisit the two inquiries [69] noted above and "tweak" the class and its definition rather than "gut" it as the majority suggests. [1]

[22] The concurrence observes that, after years of proceedings, hundreds of pages of recommendations by the special master, and a lengthy opinion by the District Court considering over thirty timely objections, the objection of one person has become the undoing of a class certification. In our colleague's eyes, we have wielded "a sword rather than a scapel." (Concurring Op. at 2 n.1.) The concurrence thus seems to imply that our decision is an overreaction to a minor problem and evidences a lack of appreciation for the labor involved in achieving a settlement. That is not the case. We acknowledge with gratitude, as does the concurrence, the intense effort invested by the [67] District Court in addressing this litigation. Nonetheless, the objection regarding the lack of predominance of class issues in this case raises an insurmountable hurdle to certification of the indirect purchaser class, as already described. As we have said, HN54[] two plaintiffs cannot be joined in a single class to adjudicate the same set of facts when those facts give only one of them a legally cognizable claim. That a single objector raised this problem makes it no less salient than if all of the remaining class members had pointed it out.

[23] The objectors have also appealed two orders that awarded attorney's fees and approved payment of certain expenses to the settlement administrator. Those challenges are necessarily vacated in light of our conclusion that the class as currently defined was not amenable to certification. We express no opinion regarding the reasonableness of the fee award or the expenses incurred by the settlement administrator, and those issues are subject to reconsideration by the District Court at an appropriate time.

[1] The proceedings leading up to the approval of the class and the proposed settlement required considerable judicial time and attention. The litigation began nine years ago and involved seven class actions that were ultimately consolidated before the District Court. The parties reached a preliminary settlement in 2005, and the District Court conditionally certified the class and appointed retired District Judge Alfred Wolin as a Special Master to review issues related to the settlement agreement. After two years of proceedings, Judge Wolin wrote a 175-page Report and Recommendation regarding notice to class members and the

In Warfarin II we were called upon to determine whether the certification of a settlement class was proper in a case arising out of DuPont Pharmaceuticals' alleged dissemination of misleading information about a competitor's product. 391 F.3d at 522. The Warfarin plaintiffs alleged that DuPont had engaged in conduct that allowed it to maintain a 67% [71] market share and charge "supracompetitive" prices. Id. at 523. The specific claims asserted were remarkably similar to the claims asserted here. The plaintiffs alleged [*160] that DuPont had violated federal antitrust law, the antitrust statutes of the so-called "indirect purchaser" states, the consumer fraud and deceptive practices statutes of all fifty states and the District of Columbia, and the prohibitions on tortious interference and unjust enrichment contained in the common law of every state. Id. at 524-25. Here, plaintiffs allege that De Beers controlled most of the world's supply of diamonds, and imposed rigid constraints on the purchase and resale of those diamonds. According to plaintiffs, De Beers has artificially limited the supply of rough diamonds, controlled who can purchase them and when they can be purchased, and influenced the prices at which the diamonds can be resold. These activities allowed De Beers to inflate diamond prices and achieve a market share of 65% by 2000. Plaintiffs claim that De Beers's conduct violated federal antitrust law and the antitrust, consumer protection, or unjust enrichment laws of every state and the District of Columbia.

Moreover, the threshold [72] issue in Warfarin II was the same as it is here: did common issues predominate? In addressing the predominance issue, we engaged in an extensive discussion as to commonality and predominance:

> As the Supreme Court noted in [Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997)], "[p]redominance is a test readily met in certain cases alleging consumer[] fraud or violations of the antitrust laws." This case falls squarely into that category: plaintiffs have alleged that DuPont engaged in a broad-based campaign, in violation of federal and state consumer fraud and antitrust laws, to deceive consumers, [third-party payors], health care professionals, and regulatory bodies into believing that generic warfarin sodium was not an equivalent alternative to Coumadin. These allegations naturally raise several questions of law and fact common to the entire class and which predominate over any issues related to individual class members, including the unlawfulness of DuPont's conduct under federal antitrust laws as well as state law, the causal linkage between DuPont's conduct and the injury suffered by the class members, and the nature of the relief to which class members are entitled.
> Moreover, proof [73] of liability for DuPont's conduct under § 2 of the Sherman Act and the Delaware Consumer Fraud statute depends on evidence which is common to the class members, such as evidence that DuPont made misrepresentations about Coumadin and generic warfarin sodium permitting DuPont to monopolize the market for warfarin sodium and charge supracompetitive prices for Coumadin, while discouraging class members to purchase the lower-priced generic competitor. In other words, while liability depends on the conduct of DuPont, and whether it conducted a nationwide campaign of misrepresentation and deception, it does not depend on the conduct of individual class members. Similarly, proof of liability does not depend on evidence that DuPont made deceptive communications to individual class members or of class members' reliance on those communications; to the contrary, DuPont's alleged deceptive conduct arose from a broad-based, national campaign conducted by and directed from corporate headquarters, and individual reliance on the misrepresentations was irrelevant to liability. Finally, the fact that plaintiffs allege purely an economic injury as a result of DuPont's conduct (i.e., overpayment for warfarin [74] sodium), and not any distribution of settlement funds, an 87-page Report and Recommendation regarding the award of attorneys' fees and reimbursement of costs, and two supplemental reports. Of the tens of millions of class members, thirty-four filed timely objections. The District Court considered these objections in a lengthy opinion, and ultimately decided to grant final class certification and approval of the settlement. Only one of these objections is the subject of the majority's [70] opinion.

Although the fact that the District Court conducted such intricate proceedings is not controlling, it is clear that the settlement was welcomed by nearly all affected, and that the alleged flaws form the basis for only a few complaints. As noted in an amicus brief filed by a trade association of jewelry manufacturers and retailers urging affirmance, "a small number of consumers with modest claims and little financial interest in the outcome of the appeal" are being allowed to prevent "[a]n industry in financial straits" from recovering some of what it lost as a result of De Beers's conduct. Amicus Br. at 4. I submit that the wholesale rejection of what the District Court accomplished, based on the concerns raised by just one objector among tens of millions of class members, uses a sword rather than a scalpel and is uncalled for.

> physical injury, further supports a finding of [*161] commonality and predominance because there are little or no individual proof problems in this case otherwise commonly associated with physical injury claims.

Id. at 527-29 (citations and footnote omitted).

We then considered the objection that "variations in and inconsistencies between the state consumer fraud and antitrust laws of the fifty states defeat the commonality and predominance requirements of Rule 23." Id. at 529. We described concerns as to manageability that may arise in class certifications for purposes of litigation, but commented that these concerns did not apply to the Warfarin class, which was certified "solely for purposes of settlement." Id. We noted that this was "key." Id. We then stated that, leaving case management issues aside, "there may be situations where variations in state laws are so significant so as to defeat commonality and predominance even in a settlement class certification," but concluded that "this is not such a case." Id. at 529-30. [2] On this issue, we said:

> We agree with the District Court that the fact that there may be variations in the rights and remedies available to injured [75] class members under the various laws of the fifty states in this matter does not defeat commonality and predominance. In [In re Prudential Insurance Co. America Sales Practice Litigation Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283 (3d Cir. 1998)], we noted that a "finding of commonality does not require that all class members share identical claims," and we rejected an objector's contention that predominance was defeated because claims were subject to the laws of fifty states. . . . In certifying a nationwide settlement class, the District Court was well within its discretion in determining that variations between the laws of different states were insufficient to defeat the requirements of Rule 23.

Id. at 530 (citations omitted).

Accordingly, we affirmed the District Court's ruling that common questions predominated. Id. at 528. [3]

[2] In Amchem, the Supreme Court cautioned that the requirements of Rule 23 (other than manageability) "demand undiluted, even heightened, attention in the settlement context," in part because settlements deprive courts of "the opportunity, present when a case is litigated, to adjust the class, informed by the proceedings as they unfold." 521 U.S. at 620. However, the Amchem Court also recognized that "[p]redominance is a test readily met in certain cases alleging consumer or [76] securities fraud or violations of the antitrust laws." Id. at 625. We determined that Warfarin II fell "squarely into that category." 391 F.3d at 528.

[3] The majority distinguishes this case from Warfarin II on the basis that the Warfarin plaintiffs "shared a common claim under the Delaware Consumer Fraud Act." Maj. Op. at 42 n.15. However, we did not even address the Delaware statute in analyzing predominance; indeed, we acknowledged that "that there may be variations in the rights and remedies available to injured class members under the various laws of the fifty states." 391 F.3d at 530. Our discussion of the Delaware statute was limited to the issue of commonality; we referred to it as one of several reasons why commonality existed in the class. Id. at 528-29.

The majority also distinguishes Warfarin II on the basis that its "nationwide consumer protection claims . . . were founded upon deceptive marketing practices, which were properly cognizable under the laws of all fifty states." Maj. Op. at 43 n.15. Yet our analysis in Warfarin was much broader than the majority suggests. Rather [77] than engaging in an independent analysis of whether every state's consumer protection law permits claims based on deceptive marketing practices, we considered the "consumer fraud and antitrust laws of the fifty states" as a whole, and concluded that "the fact that there may be variations in the rights and remedies available to injured class members under the various laws of the fifty states in this matter does not defeat commonality and predominance." 391 F.3d at 529-30 (emphases added).

Finally, the majority appears to distinguish Warfarin II as not having "included indirect purchasers from all states in a single class." Maj. Op. at 43 n.15. However, Warfarin II made no such distinction; to the contrary, we specifically noted that indirect purchasers were included in the class, and the class was defined as "[a]ll consumers or Third Party Payors in the United States who purchased and/or paid all or part of the purchase price of Coumadin dispensed during the period March 1, 1997 through and including August 1, 2001." 391 F.3d at 525. Although it may be true, as the majority contends, that there are potential class [*162] While the claims here, and the state laws implicated, are similar to those in Warfarin II, the District Court did not engage in a meaningful analysis or discussion of the issue of predominance. The Court acknowledged that "variations exist between the antitrust and consumer protection laws of different states." App. 279. However, the Court then indicated that it would be inappropriate to "weigh" claims for a variety of reasons, [4] and concluded, without any analysis whatsoever, that, as in Warfarin II, the variations were insufficient to defeat commonality and predominance. App. 280.

I agree with the majority that more should have been done by the District Court than merely citing Warfarin II. The concern with "weighing" claims does not do away with the need to address "predominance" in the process of class certification, and the District Court has an obligation to satisfy itself that it is not presented with a case where the "variations in state laws are so significant so as to defeat commonality and predominance even in a settlement class certification." Warfarin II, 391 F.3d at 529-30. Although the Court is free to conclude that the predominance requirement is "readily met" here, see Amchem, 521 U.S. at 625, because any differences in state law are "relatively minor" or can be addressed "by grouping similar state [80] laws together and applying them as a unit," see Prudential, 148 F.3d at 315, its analysis must demonstrate that it has actually considered the scope and effect of any such differences, as well as the effect of any choice-of-law considerations, see In re Life USA Holding Inc., 242 F.3d 136, 147 (3d Cir. 2001). The District Court's opinion does not assure us that the Court considered these issues, and it does not provide us with any reasoning that would allow us to review the Court's conclusion that none of the differences in state law "are sufficient to defeat commonality and predominance." App. 280.

[*163] Nonetheless, it is for the District Court on remand to review the claims, the relevant state laws, and the choice-of-law issues in reaching the conclusion as to predominance. I submit that all we must do is to tell the District Court to perform this analysis. It is for that Court, not our court, see Maj. Op. at 27-40, to conduct this analysis in the first instance. [5]

In conducting that analysis, the District Court need not survey state law on a claim-by-claim basis. While purporting to "review" the District Court's analysis, the majority engages in such a survey. This is not only a departure from our role as an appellate court, it is inconsistent with our analyses in both Warfarin II and Prudential. In Warfarin II, we never attempted to address the specific nuances of "the substantive laws of the fifty states" ourselves. See 391 members who do not have a right to recover against De Beers, the District [78] Court should be allowed to make that determination on remand, and then adjust the class definition if necessary.

[4] The District Court determined that

> [w]eighing claims, particularly Consumer claims, by different state laws would not be appropriate in this case for the following reasons:
>> a) De Beers, in the pursuit of a global settlement, demanded a release of potential damage claims in all 50 states; without class member releases from all 50 states, the settlement amount likely would have been less.
>> b) A nationwide class of consumers had been certified in the Null case.
>> c) All class members benefit from the additional [79] value of the injunctive relief obtained.
>> d) Weighting class member claims based on the relative strength of different state law claims would be imprecise at best, would greatly add to the cost and complexity of processing claims, and would diminish the funds available for claimant recovery.
>> e) A nationwide antitrust class action is an expedient vehicle to resolve the disparate claims of the Direct Purchasers and the Indirect Purchaser Subclasses.

App. 279.

[5] It could be that the claims and laws here are sufficiently similar to those set forth and implicated in Warfarin II, thereby making the analysis fairly simple. There are, for instance, overlapping issues regarding "indirect [81] purchasers" in both cases. See Maj. Op. at 14; Warfarin II, 391 F.3d at 525. But the District Court must analyze these issues to provide us with a basis for review.

F.3d at 529-30. Nor did we require the district court to explore the "variations among state antitrust statutes" without regard to whether such variations were mitigated by the other causes of action asserted by plaintiffs, as the majority does here, see Maj. Op. at 27. Rather, we reached the straightforward conclusion that "the fact that there may be variations in the rights and remedies available to injured class members under the various laws of the fifty states in this matter does not defeat commonality and predominance." Warfarin II, 391 F.3d at 530. Similarly, [82] in Prudential, the plaintiffs alleged violations of federal securities law, "common law fraud, breach of contract, bad faith, negligent misrepresentation, negligence, unjust enrichment, and breach of state consumer fraud statutes." 148 F.3d at 292. Although we acknowledged that "the class claims are subject to the laws of the fifty states," we approved the district court's approach of finding predominance "by grouping similar state laws together and applying them as a unit" in order to overcome "relatively minor differences in state law." Id. at 315. We did not require the district court to determine whether consumer protection or unjust enrichment laws, for instance, were "uniform among the fifty states," as the majority attempts to do here. Maj. Op. at 33.

Moreover, the majority sets forth discrete surveys of state antitrust law, unjust enrichment law, and consumer protection law, without ever addressing the salient issue of whether every class member might have some valid claim under state or federal law. [6] If every class member does have a valid claim of some kind, then the next question is whether those claims can be grouped in such a way that common issues predominate. Thus, the [83] majority misstates the focus of our inquiry when it proclaims that we must decide, as a matter of first impression, "whether variations among state antitrust statutes" defeat predominance, Maj. Op. at 27, and whether there is an "overriding common cause of action under a common body of law," Maj. Op. at 32. Rather, the question is whether the liability of De Beers is "capable of proof on a class-wide basis." In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 579 F.3d 241, 269 [*164] (3d Cir. 2009). The salient issue, therefore, is whether the common issues of fact and law presented by plaintiffs' claims, when examined together, outweigh any individual issues, such that a nationwide class of indirect purchasers can be certified. Although I agree with the majority that Rule 23 "presupposes that everyone in the class at least has a cause of action," Maj. Op. at 35, nothing in Rule 23, nothing in Amchem, and nothing in our decisions requires that everyone in the class have precisely the same cause of action. [7] If De Beers's conduct gave rise to different types of claims, predominance can be satisfied as long as those claims can be grouped together in a way that allows them to be proven on a class-wide basis. [84] [8]

The majority also concludes that predominance is not satisfied if the class includes certain members who may have no claim at all under the applicable state or federal law. But that fact should not affect predominance; rather, these people simply should not be included in the class that is certified. If, for instance (as the majority suggests), neither state nor federal law provides a New Jersey resident with a right to relief, then the class should be redefined so that it does not include persons whose right to relief is governed by New Jersey law. Issues regarding what the applicable law would be, including choice of law, can be decided on briefs.

[6] I agree with the majority's statement that De Beers's price-fixing and monopolization conduct is at the core of plaintiffs' claims. See Majority Op. at 36 n.14. However, plaintiffs challenge that conduct under a variety of laws, not just antitrust laws, and it is for the District Court to determine, in the first instance, whether those other laws provide the plaintiffs with valid causes of action.

[7] For the same reason, I disagree with the majority's claim that its approach serves the interests of federalism and ensures compliance with the Rules Enabling Act by preventing class actions from "extend[ing] recovery to a state law plaintiff when state courts would not recognize the plaintiff's harm as grounds for relief." Maj. Op. at 40. Our approach in Warfarin II and Prudential is premised upon the understanding that if a defendant's conduct gives rise to one cause of action in one state, and a different cause of action in another state, then it can be appropriate to hear both claims in a single class action. This approach respects the states' recognition of different causes of action, and does not "enlarge . . . any substantive right" in violation of the Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).

[8] At [85] the same time, however, we have never required district courts, as part of the class certification process, to evaluate every nuance of each potential class member's claims. That type of inquiry would only mire district courts in endless class certification proceedings while failing to address the actual requirements of Rule 23. To the extent that there is a question about whether a specific class member is entitled to recover from the defendant, it should be addressed as part of the claims process, not the certification proceeding.

Warfarin [86] II is instructive on this point as well, for, after concluding that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that variations in state law did not affect predominance, we addressed arguments that certain persons--fixed co-pay consumers and third-party payors--should be "excluded" from the class because they, respectively, lacked "viable" claims or "standing." Id. at 530-31. However, we concluded that each group suffered direct, cognizable injury and was properly included. Id. Here, if the District Court determines that there are persons without any "viable" claims, the class simply should not include them. The issue is not one of predominance. Rather, it is one of an entitlement, or a right, to be in the class in the first place, and the resulting definition of the class can be tailored accordingly. The District Court has the duty to ensure that the class includes only those with real "claims." Id.

Thus, Warfarin II provides a road map, if not controlling reasoning, that should be our guide. The majority fails to afford it the respect it is due, and embarks on its own analysis. I suggest that it errs on both counts.

[*165] II.

The majority also vacates the certification [87] of a class for injunctive relief based on a belief that the diamond market has become competitive. I suggest that this issue should be addressed on remand as well.

In Warfarin I, we laid out three straightforward requirements for plaintiffs to show that they are entitled to injunctive relief under section 16 of the Clayton Act. They must show "a threat of loss"; "that the injury in question is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent"; and that "there is a significant threat of injury from a violation of the antitrust laws." In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig. ("Warfarin I"), 214 F.3d 395, 399 (3d Cir. 2000) (internal quotation marks, alterations, and citations omitted).

The majority opines that De Beers's market share of 45% (as of 2008) is so small as to preclude any significant threat of future injury from its conduct. Yet the District Court never addressed this argument, see App. 284-86, and the majority relies for its independent analysis on expert reports written in 2008 for a very different purpose: the parties' attempt to identify a valid methodology for calculating damages. Although the opinions do indicate that the experts believed that "De Beers has [88] lost its dominant share" of the market, App. 4321, and that "the market for rough diamonds has become much more competitive since mid-2006," App. 4323, the experts did not opine, as the majority suggests, that "[p]laintiffs face no significant threat of future antitrust harm." Maj. Op. at 54. The District Court should have the opportunity to consider on remand whether De Beers continues to possess enough market power to pose a significant threat of harm to plaintiffs, rather than having that inquiry foreclosed by the majority's reliance on expert reports that addressed a different issue. [9] [9] I am also unpersuaded by the majority's disagreement with the propriety of accepting De Beers's stipulation to a risk of future harm. On this issue, the majority invokes Amchem's caution that the "specifications of [Rule 23]--those designed to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions--demand undiluted, even heightened, attention in the settlement context." 521 U.S. at 620. But De Beers is not stipulating that Rule 23(b)(2) is satisfied; indeed, the majority does not even address whether this case satisfies the Rule's requirement that "the party opposing the class [89] has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). Rather, De Beers's stipulation addresses the question of whether plaintiffs face "threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws," as they must in order to satisfy section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26. Nothing in Amchem, Warfarin I, or the Clayton Act itself prevents De Beers from stipulating that such a threat exists.

An appellate court reviews a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. The appellate court views all facts in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, and affirms only when the evidence shows that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A genuine issue of material fact exists if the summary judgment evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmovant.

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To determine whether a state statute is preempted by the Sherman Act, courts apply a two-step analysis. First, a court inquires whether the state legislation mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute. That is, the court asks whether the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation. Second, the court considers whether the state statute is saved from preemption by the state action immunity doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > Preemption

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Because states are permitted to enact legislation that impacts competition without necessarily running afoul of the Sherman Act, the preemption analysis under the Sherman Act is different than the preemption analysis under other statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN6[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Section 1 of the Sherman Act outlaws every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Section 1 addresses joint action by private parties that restrains trade. While the Act is not specific as to which types of conduct it prohibits, courts have found illegal a broad range of actions including monopolization, price fixing, territorial divisions, output restrictions, group boycotts, and refusals to deal. These activities are considered pernicious to competition and, with the exception of monopolization, are generally considered per se violations of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN7[] Sherman Act, Scope

A hybrid violation of the Sherman Act arises when what appears to be a state-administered price stabilization scheme is really a private price-fixing conspiracy, concealed under a gauzy cloak of state involvement. Although governmental intrusions into the market are generally acceptable, not all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. When the government's action grants private actors a degree of private regulatory power, it is a nonmarket mechanism merely enforcing private marketing decisions and thus not immunized from the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN8[] Sherman Act, Scope

The hybrid restraint cases under the Sherman Act have hinged on a state's decision to let producers dictate market conditions to others, for example, by posting prices that then become legally binding on buyers and other producers. Where the state establishes a state regulatory scheme that does not require or allow any input from private parties, it cannot be classified as a hybrid restraint.

HN9[] Tobacco Products, State Regulation

See La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 13:5061(6).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN10[] Sherman Act, Scope

A state statute is not preempted merely because the state scheme might have an anticompetitive effect. If any conflict between a state law and the Sherman Act meant that the state law were preempted, the States' power to engage in economic regulation would be effectively destroyed. This cannot be the case, for the function of government may often be to tamper with free markets, correcting their failures and aiding their victims. State police powers and regulatory authority extend legitimately to a range of anticompetitive schemes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN11[] Sherman Act, Scope

The Sherman Act makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state. The Sherman Act applies to "persons" rather than states and aims to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations. However, a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

HN12[] Sherman Act, Defenses

Any action in restraint of trade is only immune on state-action grounds if it satisfies a two-part test: the anticompetitive policy not only must be (1) clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy, but also must be (2) actively supervised by the state itself. However, a state's own acts in the antitrust area are always immune, suggesting that the two-part "Midcal test" is only needed to decide whether private conduct pursuant to a state statute gets Parker immunity. In other words, a state need not show it actively supervises private parties, as long as the state itself, acting as sovereign, created the restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

HN13[] Sherman Act, Defenses

A State is immune from antitrust liability unless the passage of the regulation was an attempt to give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

No violation of the Sherman Act can be predicated upon mere attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws. Where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the Act can be made out. These decisions rest upon the fact that under the American form of government the question of whether a law of that kind should pass, or if passed be enforced, is the responsibility of the appropriate legislative or executive branch of government so long as the law itself does not violate some provision of the United States Constitution.

[*371] EMILIO M. GARZA, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiff-Appellant Xcaliber International Limited LLC ("Xcaliber") appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the Attorney General of Louisiana (the "State"). Xcaliber manufactures and sells discount cigarettes. The case presents a challenge to an amendment to the state law implementing the tobacco settlement between the largest manufacturers of cigarettes and most of the states. Xcaliber claims that the amendment is preempted by federal antitrust law and violates the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses.

I

Since 2003, Xcaliber has manufactured tobacco products and distributed them primarily in Louisiana, [2] Kansas, and Oklahoma. Louisiana is one of many states that, during the mid-1990s, sued the country's largest tobacco manufacturers to recover health care costs related to smoking. In 1998 these states signed the Master Settlement Agreement (the "MSA"), which settled the litigation between them and four major tobacco manufacturers ("Original Participating Manufacturers" or "OPMs").

The MSA released OPMs from all tobacco-related legal claims initiated by the states. In return, each OPM agreed to make annual payments into a collective fund with each OPM's contribution determined primarily by multiplying an agreed sum that increased each year by each OPM's respective cigarette market share. The total of all payments was then to be allocated among the states based on a fixed formula, with Louisiana receiving approximately 2.26 percent of the total as its "allocable share." The MSA also placed various restrictions on each OPM. For example, it (1) banned political lobbying; (2) restricted trade association activities; (3) [*372] prevented legal challenges to various state tobacco laws; and, (4) prohibited some forms of advertising.

Other tobacco manufacturers were later given the opportunity to join [3] the MSA. Those who did are referred to as Subsequent Participating Manufacturers ("SPMs"). SPMs that joined the MSA within ninety days were given special treatment (i.e., "grandfathered in"). These "exempt" SPMs do not pay a per cigarette amount on current sales until those sales exceed the level of their 1998 sales or 125% of their 1997 sales. The combination of the OPMs and SPMs are collectively referred to as PMs (i.e., participating manufactures). Tobacco manufacturers, like Xcaliber, that are not PMs are referred to as Non-Participating Manufacturers ("NPMs").

Standing alone, the MSA would put PMs at a cost disadvantage in comparison to NPMs since only the PMs are required to pay a per-cigarette amount under the terms of the MSA. As a result of the MSA, PMs must raise prices in order to stay profitable at a rate similar to the pre-MSA rate while satisfying their payments under the MSA. Thus, absent some mechanism to impose similar per-cigarette costs on NPMs, NPMs could sell at lower prices and potentially increase their market share.

To neutralize this effect, the MSA requires each state to enact legislation, which in Louisiana is codified at LA. REV. STAT. §§ 13:5061)5063. HN1[] The [4] statute requires every NPM selling cigarettes in Louisiana to either (1) become a PM under the MSA's terms, or (2) deposit money annually into an escrow account. See § 13:5063. The amount to be deposited is calculated by multiplying the numbers of cigarettes sold in the state by a fixed charge listed in the amended statute that increases over time. See § 13:5063(C)(1). The amount is roughly the same as that paid by PMs, currently .025 cents per cigarette. The interest accrued on the escrowed funds is paid out to the NPM, and the principal is either paid to Louisiana to satisfy a future judgment entered against such NPM, or returned to the NPM if twenty-five years pass without such a judgment. See § 13:5063(C)(2).

Until 2003, the statute also contained the following provision:

> (b) To the extent that a [NPM] establishes that the amount it was required to place into escrow in a particular year was greater than the state's allocable share of the total payments that such manufacturer would have been required to make in that year under the [Agreement]. . . had it been a [PM], the excess shall be released from escrow and revert back to such [NPM].

§ 13:5063(C)(2)(b) (emphasis added) (the "Original [5] Escrow Provision"). The Original Escrow Provision created a loophole. An NPM could recover funds that it placed into escrow in a particular state to the extent that those funds exceeded the amount the state would receive from that manufacturer as its allocable share, had the manufacturer been a PM. Thus, by concentrating its distribution to just a few states, an NPM could recover a greater percentage of the total money it placed into escrow because those states were allowed to retain only their relatively small percentage shares. [1]

[*373] In order to close this loophole, Louisiana, along with every settling state except Missouri, amended the Original Escrow Provision. It now reads:

[1] If an NPM distributed its cigarettes nationally, and its distribution patterns approximated those of the national market, its payment obligations on its national sales would be apportioned 100 percent among the settling states, with the result that something close to 100 percent of its payments would, in the aggregate, be retained under the Original Escrow Provision. However, if an NPM were to concentrate its business to a single state, such as Louisiana, it would make 100 percent of its sales there and would be able to recoup the payments on all but roughly 2.26 percent, which is Louisiana's approximate allocable share. While the PMs would be required [6] to continue 100 percent of their payments under the MSA, an NPM that focused on a single regional area could be virtually exempt from the payments, thereby gaining a competitive advantage.

> HN2[] To the extent that a [NPM] establishes that the amount it was required to place into escrow on account of units sold in the state in a particular year was greater than the [MSA] payments . . . that such [NPM] would have been required to make on account of such units sold had it been a [PM], the excess shall be released from escrow and revert back to such [NPM].

LA. REV. STAT. § 13:5063 (C)(2)(b) (emphasis added) (the "Allocable Share Revocation" or "ASR"). The ASR establishes a limit on the amount of escrow funds that will be released back to an NPM in a particular year. By removing the "state's allocable share" language, the ASR limits the release to the amount the NPM would have paid as a PM on the same amount of sales, rather than the State's allocable share of this amount. For example, if an NPM makes half of its total sales in Louisiana, under the amendment, [7] the NPM will be entitled to a release only to the extent that its escrow deposit exceeds what its MSA payment would have been on the number of cigarettes represented by half of its total sales. Instead of basing the escrow release on the fiction of national pay-in followed by a release based on the State's allocable share, the release is tied directly to the number of cigarettes actually sold in the State.

Because Xcaliber distributes products in only a few states, it formerly utilized the loophole in the original statute, but can no longer do so post-amendment. According to Xcaliber, as a result of the ASR, the barriers against NPMs have been heightened dramatically, and the ability of an NPM to compete within a regional market has been destroyed.

Xcaliber filed suit against the Louisiana Attorney General, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief based on violations of the First Amendment and the Commerce, Equal Protection, and Due Process Clauses, and the corresponding clauses of the Louisiana Constitution. Xcaliber sought only to prevent the enforcement of the ASR. It did not seek to invalidate the entire MSA and its implementing legislation. The district court dismissed each claim [8] under Rule 12(b)(6). Xcaliber appealed, [2] and this court reversed and remanded. On remand, Xcaliber amended its complaint to add a claim that the ASR is in violation of, and preempted by, the Sherman Act. Both parties moved for summary judgment. The district court denied Xcaliber's motion and granted summary judgment in favor of the State. This appeal followed. [3]

[2] Xcaliber did not challenge the dismissal of its Commerce Clause claim in the previous appeal. Therefore, that claim is no longer part of the suit.

[3] Xcaliber asserted no claim for direct relief under the First Amendment on summary judgment and does not advance a direct claim under the First Amendment on appeal. Also, Xcaliber's briefing on its Equal Protection and Due Process claims only discusses the United States Constitution. Accordingly, any separate arguments based on the Louisiana Constitution are waived. See In re Texas Mortgage Servs., Inc., 761 F.2d 1068, 1073, 74 (5th Cir. 1985).

Xcaliber contends that the Sherman Act preempts the ASR. HN4[] To determine whether a state statute is preempted by the Sherman Act, we apply a two-step analysis, as set forth by the Supreme Court in Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982). [4] First, we inquire whether the state legislation "mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or . . . places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute." Id. at 661. That is, we ask whether "the conduct contemplated by the statute is in all cases a per se violation." Id. Second, we consider whether the state statute is saved from preemption by the state action immunity doctrine. See Id. at 662 n.9 (citing [10] Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943)).

The only change effected by the ASR is to remove the language that tied the escrow release to the State's allocable share of tobacco settlement payments under the MSA. The ASR does not change how much an NPM must pay per cigarette, nor [*375] does it allow other market participants to change [12] that amount. It only changes how much of the total amount paid is released back to the NPM. See LA. REV. STAT. § 13:5063 (C)(2)(b). [5]

HN6[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which is the basis of Xcaliber's complaint, outlaws "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Section 1 addresses joint action by private parties [13] that restrains trade. See Parker, 317 U.S. at 351. While the Act is not specific as to which types of conduct it prohibits, courts have found illegal a broad range of actions including monopolization, price fixing, territorial divisions, output restrictions, group boycotts, and refusals to deal. See Broad. Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979); *White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 260, 83 S. Ct. 696, 9 L. These activities are considered pernicious to competition and, with the exception of monopolization, are generally considered per se violations of the antitrust laws.

[4] Xcaliber argues that Rice is not the correct standard and cites to other preemption cases that supposedly show that the proper inquiry is much broader. We find Xcaliber's complaints about Rice to be misguided. First, the preemption cases Xcaliber cites do not involve the Sherman Act. HN5[] Because states are permitted to enact legislation that impacts competition without necessarily running afoul of the Sherman Act, see Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 64, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982), the preemption analysis under the Sherman Act is different than the preemption analysis under other statutes. Second, even if Rice applies only to facial challenges, the point does not help Xcaliber because its complaint presents a facial challenge. Rather than seeking a private remedy against private parties or an injunction against enforcement of the statute in some specific, limited situation, Xcaliber seeks a declaratory judgment that the ASR is preempted by the Sherman Act and an injunction against the enforcement of the ASR in all situations. That is, Xcaliber claims the ASR is unconstitutional under the Supremacy Clause in its every application. Accordingly, [11] we apply the Rice per se analysis rather than rule of reason analysis. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 661. We also note that the other courts that have considered a claim that the MSA or its related legislation is preempted by the Sherman Act have applied Rice. See Grand River Enters. Six Nations, Ltd. v. Beebe, 574 F.3d 929, 936 (8th Cir. 2009); KT & G Corp. v. Att'y Gen. of State of Okla., 535 F.3d 1114, 1126 (10th Cir. 2008); Sanders v. Brown, 504 F.3d 903, 910 (9th Cir. 2007), cert. denied, 553 U.S. 1031, 128 S. Ct. 2427, 171 L. Ed. 2d 229 (2008); S & M Brands, Inc. v. Summers, 393 F. Supp. 2d 604, 628 (M.D. Tenn. 2005), aff'd, 228 Fed. Appx. 560; Tritent Int'l Corp. v. Ky., 467 F.3d 547, 554 (6th Cir. 2006); Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Spitzer, 357 F.3d 205, 222, reh'g denied, 363 F.3d 149 (2d Cir. 2004), on remand, Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Cuomo, 592 F. Supp. 2d 684, 696 (S.D.N.Y. 2009), appeal docketed, No. 09-0547 (2d Cir. Feb. 10, 2009).

[5] We note that Xcaliber's Sherman Act argument is undermined by an obvious incongruity between its allegations and the relief it seeks. Xcaliber specifically limits its complaint to the ASR. We have difficulty understanding why an agreement implemented pursuant to the MSA, but inadvertently advantageous to Xcaliber, would be acceptable while a modification of that same scheme that closes a loophole would violate antitrust law and be preempted. It would seem that Xcaliber's logic would require us to invalidate the entire statutory structure implementing the MSA rather than just the ASR. A related Fifth Circuit case for which oral argument was recently held presents a challenge to the MSA itself. See S&M Brands Inc. v. James Caldwell, No. 09-30985.

Given the traditional scope of antitrust violations and the limited effect of the ASR, we cannot say that the ASR "mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases." On its face, the ASR does not force or allow private parties to collude, set prices, divide markets, or in any other manner violate antitrust law. The ASR simply alters the amount of money to be refunded [14] to NPMs by changing how much of the NPMs' annual escrow payments are released. We agree with the Tenth Circuit, see KT&G, 535 F.3d at 1128, that nothing in the text of the ASR removes from tobacco manufacturers the ability to unilaterally set their own prices for products or determine their output. See also Grand River, 574 F.3d at 938; Sanders, 504 F.3d at 911; Tritent, 467 F.3d at 557. Accordingly, we have little trouble concluding that the ASR does not "mandate or authorize conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases." Rice, 458 U.S. at 661.

Likewise, we cannot say that the ASR "places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust law in order to comply with the statute." Id. Since the ASR does not affect PMs, the only parties potentially facing "irresistible pressure" from the ASR are NPMs. Although the ASR forces NPMs to charge a higher price for their products to maintain the same level of profitability, it does not pressure them to conspire together to set a specific price, to carve up markets, or otherwise to violate antitrust law. See Sanders, 504 F.3d at 911. Neither the [*376] plain language of the Sherman Act nor the courts' [15] interpretation of it necessarily equate charging a higher price with violating antitrust law. Moreover, we do not understand Xcaliber to argue that it is somehow pressured into violating the antitrust laws. [6] Since the only parties affected by the ASR are not violating the antitrust laws))indeed, even according to Xcaliber, NPMs are the victims of other parties' violations of the antitrust laws rather than the violators))it follows that the ASR does not irresistibly pressure private parties to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.

Xcaliber also contends that the ASR violates the Sherman Act under a hybrid restraint analysis. [7] HN7[] A hybrid violation arises when "what appears to be a state[-]. . . administered price stabilization scheme is really a private price-fixing conspiracy, concealed under a 'gauzy cloak of state involvement.'" Fisher v. City of Berkeley, Cal., 475 U.S. 260, 269, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986) (citing Cal. Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 106, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980)). [16] Although governmental intrusions into the market are generally acceptable, see id. at 264, "[n]ot all restraints imposed upon private actors by government units necessarily constitute unilateral action outside the purview of § 1." Id. at 267. When the government's action grants "private actors . . . a degree of private regulatory power," it is a "nonmarket mechanism merely enforc[ing] private marketing decisions" and thus not immunized from the antitrust laws. Id. at 268.

The cases that have found violations of the antitrust laws based on hybrid restraints have dealt with situations in which the government gave regulatory authority to private parties. As the Ninth Circuit has noted, HN8[] the hybrid restraint cases "hinged on a state's decision to let producers dictate market conditions to others))for example, by 'posting' prices that then became legally binding on buyers and other producers." Sanders, 504 F.3d at 918 (referencing Fisher, 475 U.S. 260, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206; Midcal, 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L.

[6] Rather, as discussed infra, Xcaliber alleges that the ASR effectively allows the PMs to conduct their business as though they were part of an output cartel, thereby destroying competition and forcing NPMs from the market.

[7] The case law is not entirely clear as to whether the hybrid restraint analysis is a separate means of satisfying Rice's per se violation requirement or another means of addressing Parker state-action immunity under the second prong of Rice. Compare Fisher v. City of Berkeley, Cal., 475 U.S. 260, 267-70, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986) (concluding that a housing ordinance was not a hybrid restraint and therefore not addressing whether the ordinance would be exempt from antitrust scrutiny under the Parker state-action doctrine), and KT&G, 535 F.3d at 1133 (declining to address the state-action doctrine after having found no hybrid restraint in a case essentially identical to this case), with Cal. Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 103-06, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980) [17] (addressing concepts that later courts have treated as elements of the hybrid restraint analysis as part of discussion of Parker state action immunity, after having found a per se violation), and Sanders, 504 F.3d at 911 (finding no per se violation under Rice but addressing Parker state-action immunity through a discussion of cases generally associated with the hybrid restraint analysis).

Ed. 2d 233; 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987); Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 71 S. Ct. 745, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 60 Ohio Law Abs. 81 (1951)). Here, since the ASR establishes a [*377] state regulatory scheme that does not require or allow any input from private parties, it cannot be classified as a hybrid restraint. See Grand River, 574 F.3d at 939; [18] KT & G, 535 F.3d at 1131; Sanders, 504 F.3d at 919.

Although we could conceivably end our preemption analysis at this point, see Rice, 458 U.S. at 662 n.9; KT&G, 535 F.3d at 1133, we nonetheless address Xcaliber's state-action immunity argument because neither the first prong of Rice nor the hybrid restraint analysis fully captures Xcaliber's argument. Xcaliber alleges that the ASR, together with the MSA and statutes implementing it, enables and implements an output cartel whose purpose and effect is to protect PM's market shares and drive NPMs out of business, all resulting in raising prices to supra-competitive levels. In effect, Xcaliber alleges that the OPMs are using Louisiana to impose a private anti-competitive conspiracy. According to Xcaliber, Louisiana acted entirely at the behest of the OPMs, which exercised control over Louisiana via the threat of reduced payments under the MSA if Louisiana refused to enact the ASR.

Absent some provision for imposing similar costs on NPMs, the MSA would put PMs at a competitive disadvantage since, under the MSA, PMs are required to make per-cigarette payments, which increase their cost of doing business. Without the burden of these additional [19] costs, NPMs would, all things being equal, be able to charge lower prices and increase their market share. With the express purpose of counteracting this effect, see LA. REV. STAT. § 13:5061(6), [8] Louisiana passed statutes that effectively require the NPMs either to raise their prices to cover their escrow payment obligations--which has the effect of prohibiting the NPMs from undercutting the PMs' prices--or to abandon the Louisiana market.

Thus, we have no doubt that Louisiana purposefully sought to increase the costs [20] of NPMs to a level comparable to those faced by PMs. [9] The Original Escrow Statute failed to accomplish that purpose, and Louisiana passed the ASR to rectify the problem. However, the critical issue is not whether Louisiana sought to impair the competitiveness of the NPMs, but whether Louisiana runs afoul of federal antitrust law by doing so.

HN10[] A state statute is not preempted merely "because the state scheme might have an anticompetitive effect." Community [*378] Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 64, 102 S. [8] LA. REV. STAT. § 13:5061(6) provides:

> HN9[] It would be contrary to the policy of this state if tobacco product manufacturers who determine not to enter into such a settlement could use a resulting cost advantage to derive large, short-term profits in the years before liability may arise without ensuring that the state will have an eventual source of recovery from them if they are proven to have acted culpably. It is thus in the interest of the state to require that such manufacturers establish a reserve fund to guarantee a source of compensation and to prevent such manufacturers from deriving large, short-term profits and then becoming judgment-proof before liability may arise.

[9] Since the ASR explicitly aimed, at least in part, at counteracting the competitive advantage that NPMs would enjoy absent some mechanism for enforcing per-cigarette costs on NPMs, the analysis does not turn on whether Xcaliber presented sufficient evidence of anticompetitive effect to survive summary judgment. Indeed, for purposes of our antitrust analysis, we assume that Xcaliber has demonstrated that the ASR increases the costs of NPMs, at least in part, in order to undermine their competitive advantage over PMs.

authority extend legitimately to a range of anticompetitive schemes. [10] The ASR, like these other regulations, alters the competitive environment for market participants.

As the Court noted in Parker, HN11[] "[t]he Sherman Act makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state." 317 U.S. at 351. The Court highlighted that the Sherman Act applies to "persons" rather than states and aims "to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations." Id. However, the Court also said that "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action [22] is lawful." Id. (citations omitted).

Xcaliber alleges that the entire regulatory structure created by the MSA, its implementing legislation, and the ASR represents a private conspiracy enacted by the legislature at the behest of the OPMs. That is, the legislature, by passing the legislation, attempted to authorize a private conspiracy that would clearly violate the antitrust laws but for the State's involvement. [11]

[*379] As evidence that the Louisiana legislature acted at the OPMs' behest in passing the ASR, Xcaliber points to the timing of the legislation, which was passed soon after it began appearing as a talking point in the corporate literature of the OPMs. See Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Spitzer, 447 F. Supp. 2d 230, 259-60 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). [25] Xcaliber also points out that Louisiana would risk losing substantial amounts of money due under the MSA if it refused to pass the ASR. Xcaliber quotes commentary from the Louisiana House floor that the ASR had to be passed exactly as written. According to Xcaliber, this evidence demonstrates that the ASR is plainly not a unilateral, sovereign act, but rather was passed at the insistence of OPMs in order to continue their control of the market.

[10] Obvious examples include public utilities, zoning ordinances, and enterprise zones.

[11] Although Xcaliber brought suit only against the State, its antitrust theory essentially requires us to find that Louisiana is authorizing conduct that would be illegal as a private conspiracy. By asserting a theory that depends on private violations in a suit against the State, Xcaliber has muddled the various lines of antitrust authority from the Supreme Court. As a result of this confusion, Xcaliber has placed undue emphasis on the State's failure to address the two-prong test established in Midcal. As explained in Sanders:

> A series of Supreme Court cases holds that HN12[] any action in restraint of trade is only immune [on state-action grounds] if it satisfies a two-part test: The anticompetitive policy not only must be (1) "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as [23] state policy," but also must be (2) "actively supervised by the state itself." Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105 (quoting City of Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 410, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (plurality opinion)) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also 324 Liquor, 479 U.S. at 343-44; Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1988); FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 631, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992). Other Supreme Court cases, however, explicitly hold that a state's own acts in the antitrust area are always immune; these cases suggest that the two-part "Midcal test" is only needed to decide whether private conduct pursuant to a state statute gets Parker immunity. In other words, a state need not show it "actively supervises" private parties, as long as the state itself, acting as sovereign, created the restraint of trade. See Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 568-69, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984); City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 377-79, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991).

504 F.3d at 915)16 (citations altered); Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 46, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) (declining to impose active supervision requirement when defendant was a municipality); see also Earles v. State Bd. of Certified Pub. Accountants of La., 139 F.3d 1033, 1040-42 (5th Cir. 1998) [24] (recognizing that different state-action test applies based on the status of the defendant); Indep. Taxicab Drivers' Employees v. Greater Houston Transp., 760 F.2d 607, 610 n.5 (5th Cir. 1985) (same). We find the Ninth Circuit's explanation of why Hoover rather than Midcal should apply to cases challenging a state's action in passing the MSA and its implementing legislation to be persuasive. See Sanders, 504 F.3d at 917)18; see also Grand River, 574 F.3d at 939)41. Thus, Xcaliber's arguments that the State is not entitled to the protection of the state-action doctrine because it has failed to satisfy both of the Midcal prongs are unavailing. HN13[] The State is immune from antitrust liability unless the passage of the ASR was an attempt to "give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." Parker, 317 U.S. at 351.

Xcaliber's evidence, however, amounts to little more than speculation. Louisiana has articulated its reasons for entering into the MSA and how the ASR advances its goals. See LA. REV. STAT. § 13:5061. The actual effect of the statute seems to bear out the legislature's belief that the ASR would further its expressly stated goals. The MSA has brought about a substantial reduction in cigarette consumption and substantial reimbursements to the states for the public costs of cigarette consumption. By implementing the ASR, Louisiana has ensured these beneficial achievements are not corrupted by allowing NPMs to sell cigarettes at prices unburdened by any payment obligation, and potentially to dodge liability by closing up shop and selling elsewhere. [26] Louisiana has articulated reasonable goals, linked to its public health needs, that support its decision to pass the ASR.

Although we recognize that Louisiana was under considerable financial pressure to pass the ASR, we are extremely hesitant to embrace an argument that depends on our finding that the tobacco lobby captured the Louisiana legislature. Although PMs may have lobbied in favor of passing the ASR, it does not follow that the Louisiana legislature acted solely at their behest or that lobbying itself can be the basis of a Sherman Act violation. Indeed, in addressing private parties' violations of the Sherman Act, the Court has noted that HN14[] "[n]o violation can be predicated upon mere attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws." Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor-Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 135, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961). The Court continued:

> [W]here a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the Act can be made out. These decisions rest upon the fact that under our form of government the question of whether a law of that kind should pass, or if passed be enforced, is the responsibility [27] of the appropriate legislative or executive branch of government so long as the law itself does not violate some provision of the Constitution.

[*380] Id. at 136 (internal citations omitted). Although we recognize that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, see Noerr, 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464; United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965), is not entirely applicable to the instant case, we nonetheless find that it supports our reasoning. It would be highly incongruous for a private party to be immune from antitrust liability predicated on its attempts to influence the legislature, but for the legislature to run afoul of antitrust law when it passes a statute after lobbying by private parties. See Hoover, 446 U.S. at 579-80 ("[W]here the action complained of . . . was that of the State itself, the action is exempt from antitrust liability regardless of the State's motives in taking the action.").

In conclusion, we hold that the district court correctly granted summary judgment in favor of the State on Xcaliber's Sherman Act claim.

IV

Xcaliber contends that the ASR violates the Equal Protection Clause. According to Xcaliber, we should review the statute under strict scrutiny because the ASR coerces [28] Xcaliber into relinquishing its First Amendment rights to freedom of speech, association, and petition. [12] The basic argument is that the ASR makes doing business as an NPM so unattractive that it compels NPMs to join the MSA, thereby waiving their First Amendment rights. Xcaliber also argues that even if strict scrutiny does not apply, the ASR nonetheless violates the Equal Protection Clause under rational-basis review.

Xcaliber contends that it presented the district court with sufficient evidence of compulsion to join the MSA to be granted summary judgment, or, at the least, to preclude summary judgment for the State. The evidence falls into two broad categories: price and non-price. Regarding price, Xcaliber claims that it demonstrated that NPMs pay a higher cost per cigarette than PMs generally, and a much higher cost than the exempt SPMs. Xcaliber also contends that PMs pay less than the amounts they theoretically owe under the MSA because they are able to withhold [29] payments based on disputes over adjustments built into the MSA. Regarding non-price coercion, Xcaliber contends that it demonstrated: the large scale exclusion of NPMs from retail outlets based on retailers' and distributors' unfounded fear of potential liability; the greater administrative costs associated with escrow compliance for NPMs than for PMs complying with the MSA; the inability of NPMs to dispute and withhold payments, which is a routine practice of PMs; and the harm flowing from Louisiana's policy of holding escrow deposits in accounts generating extremely low interest rates.

[12] The State has not disputed Xcaliber's claim that joining the MSA would burden Xcaliber's First Amendment rights. We assume without deciding that joining the MSA would in fact burden Xcaliber's First Amendment rights.

Regarding price, according to the plain language of the ASR, Xcaliber is entitled to a refund for any amount it deposits greater than the payment it would have made as a PM. See LA. REV. STAT. § 13:5063 (C)(2)(b). If Xcaliber's allegations are true and NPMs are indeed paying more, Louisiana has provided Xcaliber with a remedy under the ASR. Nevertheless, Xcaliber has chosen not to pursue that remedy and instead asked us to invalidate the ASR on constitutional grounds. Under these circumstances, a federal court, properly mindful of fundamental [*381] principles of state sovereignty and constitutional avoidance, [30] must be extremely hesitant to strike down a state statute on constitutional grounds when such a drastic remedy may not be necessary. See Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 216, 95 S. Ct. 2268, 45 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1975) (HN15[] "[W]hen considering a facial challenge it is necessary to proceed with caution and restraint, as invalidation may result in unnecessary interference with a state regulatory program.").

Xcaliber's allegations of non-price coercion are undermined by the limited relief it seeks. Because Xcaliber seeks only to invalidate the ASR and not the entire MSA statutory structure, the relevant comparison is not simply between NPMs under the ASR and PMs. We also must consider how granting the relief sought would remedy the harms of which Xcaliber complains. That is, we must also compare NPMs under the ASR with NPMs under the Original Escrow Statute. Having done so, it is apparent that none of the non-price coercion that Xcaliber alleges would be remedied by a declaratory judgment that the ASR is unconstitutional. Even without the ASR, NPMs would still face exclusion from retail outlets, bear greater administrative costs, and be unable to dispute payments. Similarly, Louisiana would still hold the escrow [31] deposits in accounts generating the same interest rates. [13] Because the non-price coercion of which Xcaliber complains will exist whether or not we declare the ASR unconstitutional, we do not consider it an adequate reason for subjecting the ASR to heightened constitutional scrutiny.

HN16[] A statute is only subject to heightened scrutiny on an Equal Protection challenge if it "proceeds along suspect lines [or] infringes fundamental constitutional rights." See FCC v. Beach Commc'ns, Inc., 508 U.S. 307, 313, 113 S. Ct. 2096, 124 L. Ed. 2d 211 (1993). Since we are not persuaded by Xcaliber's arguments implicating the First Amendment, Xcaliber's Equal Protection claim is subject to rational-basis review. Id. HN17[] Under rational-basis review, the ASR "must be upheld against equal protection challenge if there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the classification." Id.

We agree with the other circuits who have addressed this issue, see Grand River, 574 F.3d at 944)45; KT&G, 535 F.3d at 1137)40, [32] and hold that the ASR does not violate the Equal Protection Clause under rational-basis review. Louisiana has articulated several reasons for passing the MSA legislation, see LA. REV. STAT. § 13:5061(1)-(5), and explained why the ASR is important to furthering the goals of the MSA. See id. § 13:5061(6). This explanation is easily sufficient to uphold the ASR under rational-basis review. See KT&G, 535 F.3d at 1140 (citing numerous cases that have upheld the MSA and its related statutes against Equal Protection claims).

V

Xcaliber contends that the ASR violates the Due Process Clause. Relying principally on Bell v. Burson, 402 U.S. 535, 91 S. Ct. 1586, 29 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1971), Xcaliber argues that a deprivation based on a future, hypothetical finding of judicial liability is an adjudicative deprivation that requires pre-deprivation process directed at determining whether the liability actually exists. According to Xcaliber, since the [*382] ASR does not provide any pre-deprivation process, it violates the Due Process Clause.

---

[13] This reasoning also undermines Xcaliber's complaints about the PMs' ability to withhold disputed payments and the treatment of the exempt PMs, which exist regardless of whether or not the ASR is in effect.

This issue turns on whether the state action prompting the escrow payments is properly characterized as legislative or adjudicative. HN18[] Generally speaking, legislative actions are non-individualized determinations [33] that affect a wider class of individuals, whereas adjudicative actions involve individualized assessments that affect a smaller number of people in a more exceptional manner. Compare Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 239 U.S. 441, 445, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915), with Londoner v. Denver, 210 U.S. 373, 385, 28 S. Ct. 708, 52 L. Ed. 1103 (1908); see also Jackson Court Condominiums, Inc. v. City of New Orleans, 874 F.2d 1070, 1074 (5th Cir. 1989); United States v. LULAC, 793 F.2d 636, 648 (5th Cir. 1986).

In Bell, the Court evaluated a Georgia statute that suspended an uninsured motorist's vehicle registration and driver's license when that motorist was involved in an accident, unless the motorist first posted security to cover the amount of damages claimed by the aggrieved parties in the accident reports. The Court held that the statute deprived the uninsured motorist of property without due process. See Bell, 402 U.S. at 542. The Court made clear, however, that "[i]f the statute barred the issuance of licenses to all motorists who did not carry liability insurance or who did not post security, the statute would not, under our cases, violate the Fourteenth Amendment." Id. at 539.

According to the State, the ASR does not [34] offend Bell because it imposes a security-posting requirement on all cigarette manufacturers that have not settled their potential liability to the State. Xcaliber argues that the "generally applicable" exception does not apply because the escrow provisions are limited to NPMs. Although Xcaliber is correct that the ASR applies only to NPMs, it does not follow that the statute is not generally applicable. Since the PMs have agreed to make payments in exchange for a release from liability, the NPMs are the only potentially liable parties. The ASR generally applies to all NPMs, the only manufacturers that may in the future be found liable to the State for the damages inflicted by their products. See KT&G, 535 F.3d at 1141-42.

The problem in Bell was not that liability was generally involved, but that the payments were tied to specific accidents, and therefore to actual liability. Under the statute at issue in Bell, uninsured motorists were required to post security after they had been in an accident. 402 U.S. at 535. Because the posting of security essentially turned on an assessment of the individual's fault in causing the accident, liability was an important factor in the deprivation. [35] See Logan v. Zimmerman, 455 U.S. 422, 433, 102 S. Ct. 1148, 71 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1982) (quoting Bell, 402 U.S. at 541). By contrast, the ASR requires NPMs to create an escrow account as a precondition to selling cigarettes in Louisiana. Although the payout of escrowed funds to satisfy a judgment will ultimately depend on an individualized assessment of liability, the initial depositing of funds does not. Put differently, "the escrow reserves are not specific to any particular litigation; rather, they are legislative preconditions for the privilege of engaging in future cigarette sales in the individual states." Grand River, 425 F.3d at 174.

Since we conclude that Louisiana's decision to require NPMs to make escrow deposits is legislative in character, no further process is required, see *Jackson [383] Court Condominiums, 874 F.2d at 1074, and Xcaliber's argument fails.

VI

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the State.

Opinion

FINAL JUDGMENT

WHEREAS, Plaintiff, United States of America, filed its Complaint on May 22, 2007, the United States and Defendants, Daily Gazette Company and MediaNews Group, Inc., by their respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law, and without this Final Judgment constituting any evidence against or admission by any party regarding any issue of fact or law;

AND WHEREAS, Defendants agree to be bound by the provisions of this Final Judgment pending its approval by the Court;

AND WHEREAS, the essence of this Final Judgment is the prompt adoption of certain procedures and prohibitions by Defendants to assure that competition is not substantially lessened;

AND WHEREAS, the United States requires Defendants to agree to certain procedures and prohibitions for the purpose of remedying the [*3] loss of competition alleged in the Complaint;

AND WHEREAS, Defendants have represented to the United States that the actions required below can and will be made and that Defendants will later raise no claim of hardship or difficulty as grounds for asking the Court to modify any of the provisions contained below;

NOW THEREFORE, before any testimony is taken, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law, and upon consent of the parties, it is ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED:

I.Jurisdiction

This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of and each of the parties to this action. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against Defendants under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. § 18), and Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2).

II.Definitions

As used in this Final Judgment:

A. "Charleston Daily Mail" means the Daily Newspaper of that name distributed in the Charleston, West Virginia Area.

B. "Charleston Gazette" means the Daily Newspaper of that name distributed in the Charleston, West Virginia Area.

C. "Charleston Newspapers" means the unincorporated joint venture operating under the laws of West Virginia, with [*4] its principal place of business in Charleston, West Virginia, its successors and assigns, and its subsidiaries, divisions, groups, affiliates, partnerships and joint ventures, and their shareholders, directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees.

D. "Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P." means the Delaware Limited Partnership formed on May 7, 2004.

E. "Charleston, West Virginia Area" means Kanawha and Putnam Counties in West Virginia.

F. "Daily Newspaper" means a print publication which is published no fewer than five days per week and in which a substantial portion of the content is devoted to the dissemination of news and editorial opinion.

G. "Editorial Content" means the news, feature, and opinion content of, and the format, dress, makeup, and design of, a Daily Newspaper.

H. "Failing Firm" means a firm that has satisfied all of the conditions stated in the U.S. Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission Horizontal Merger Guidelines as applied by the Department of Justice and/or federal courts to newspapers published in a joint operating agreement under the Newspaper Preservation Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1801-1804.

I. "Final Judgment" includes the following agreements attached [*5] as Exhibit A: Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement for Charleston Newspapers Holdings L.P; Amended and Restated Operating Agreement of Daily Gazette Holding Company, LLC; Second Amended and Restated Joint Operating Agreement; the Put/Call Agreement; and the Charleston Newspapers Holdings L.P. Warrant to Purchase Class B Limited Partnership Units Initially Constituting a 20% Percentage Interest.

J. "Gazette Company" means defendant Daily Gazette Company, a privately-held corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, with its principal place of business in Charleston, West Virginia, its successors and assigns, and its subsidiaries, divisions, groups, affiliates, partnerships and joint ventures, and their shareholders, directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees. Without limiting the foregoing, Gazette Company shall include Charleston Newspapers.

K. "Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail" includes the masthead, trademarks, copyrights, trade names, service names and service marks of the Charleston Daily Mail; its subscriber lists and advertiser lists; print and electronic archives; associated web sites and URLs (including [*6] "dailymail.com"); and all legal rights associated with these assets.

L. "MediaNews Group" means defendant MediaNews Group, Inc., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business in Denver, Colorado, its successors and assigns, and their shareholders, subsidiaries, divisions, groups, affiliates, partnerships and joint ventures, and their directors, officers, managers, agents, and employees. Without limiting the foregoing, MediaNews Group shall include Charleston Publishing Company.

M. "Person" means any natural person, corporate entity, partnership, joint venture, association, government entity, trust, or other business or legal entity, whether private or governmental.

N. "Publication" means all activities associated with the business of offering a Daily Newspaper to the public as a commercial endeavor, including but not limited to, editing, writing, printing, circulating, operating, marketing, and distributing such Daily Newspapers and selling advertisements and promotions therein.

O. "Relating to" or "Relates to" means in whole or in part constituting, containing, concerning, discussing, describing, analyzing, identifying, [*7] or stating.

P. "United States" means the Department of Justice, Antitrust Division.

Q. The terms "and" and "or" have both conjunctive and disjunctive meanings.

III. Applicability

This Final Judgment applies to Gazette Company and MediaNews Group, as defined above, and all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV. Required And Prohibited Conduct

A. (1) Within 5 business days after the entry of this Final Judgment, Gazette Company and MediaNews Group shall enter into, and abide by the terms of, the Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement for Charleston Newspapers Holdings L.P.; the Amended and Restated Operating Agreement of Daily Gazette Holding Company, LLC; the Second Amended and Restated Joint Operating Agreement; the Put/Call Agreement; and the Charleston Newspapers Holdings L.P. Warrant to Purchase Class B Limited Partnership Units Initially Constituting a 20% Percentage Interest, which are incorporated into this Final Judgment and attached hereto as Exhibit A. Gazette Company and MediaNews Group shall operate Charleston Newspapers, Charleston Newspapers Holdings L.P., [*8] the Charleston Gazette and the Charleston Daily Mail in accordance with the terms of the agreements in Exhibit A. No agreement in Exhibit A may be modified, amended, superseded or terminated without the prior written approval of the United States for the term of the Final Judgment. Upon entering into the contracts in Exhibit A, any existing agreements between Gazette Company and MediaNews Group relating to the Publication of any Daily Newspaper in Charleston, West Virginia, other than those contained in Exhibit A, shall be void and shall not be enforced thereafter. Except as expressly authorized by the agreements in Exhibit A, Gazette Company and MediaNews Group shall not directly or indirectly enter into any agreement for the term of this Final Judgment that relates to the Publication of any Daily Newspaper in Charleston, West Virginia, other than agreements entered into with third parties in the ordinary course of business, without the prior written consent of the United States.

(2) Defendants shall not, without the prior written consent of the United States, pledge or otherwise offer as security or collateral, the assets comprising the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily [*9] Mail, in whole or in part, for credit or other consideration, to a greater extent than such assets were pledged or offered as security or collateral as of December 11, 2009.

B. The Charleston Daily Mail shall continue to be published as a Daily Newspaper. The publication of the Charleston Daily Mail as a Daily Newspaper shall not be terminated unless it is a Failing Firm and the United States has given its prior written approval, which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld. Prior to receiving written approval from the United States to terminate publication of the Charleston Daily Mail as a Daily Newspaper, Gazette Company and MediaNews Group may not establish a termination date for the Charleston Daily Mail. The United States shall, within 90 days after Defendants have substantially complied with requests for information by the United States pursuant to Section VI of this Final Judgment (unless such deadline is altered by mutual agreement of the parties), provide notice to the Defendants stating whether Defendants have established to the satisfaction of the United States that the Charleston Daily Mail is a Failing Firm. Disputes regarding the application of the provisions of this [*10] Section IV(B) may be submitted to the Court for resolution.

C. If during the term of this Final Judgment the Charleston Daily Mail shall cease publication as a Daily Newspaper, or the operating agreement between Defendants governing Charleston Newspapers is dissolved or terminated, or Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P. is dissolved or terminated (collectively referred to as "Termination Events"), ownership of the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail shall, after the prior satisfaction of the claims of all creditors of Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P. in accordance with the provisions of Section 7.3 of the Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement for Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P., immediately be transferred to MediaNews Group at no cost. Within ninety days prior to the occurrence of any of the Termination Events, Gazette Company shall hire, subject to the approval of the United States, an appraiser experienced in the newspaper industry to perform an assessment of the fair market value, separately, of each asset comprising the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail. To the extent the valuations determine that any assets comprising the Intellectual [*11] Property of the Charleston Daily Mail may be freely disposed of by Gazette Company under the terms of Section 7.8 of the United Bank Loan Agreement or the equivalent provision of any future credit agreement, Gazette Company shall transfer those assets to MediaNews Group (or its assignee) at no cost. In the event Gazette Company is unable to transfer immediately all or some of the assets comprising the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail due to any security interest or lien held on those assets by any creditor, Gazette Company shall use its good faith efforts to (1) persuade any such creditor to release the security interest or lien on those assets; (2) assist any third party seeking such a release; or (3) transfer the assets as soon as possible in the next fiscal year (to the extent permissible under the United Bank Loan Agreement or any future credit agreement). Any assets that are released by the creditors shall be transferred to MediaNews Group (or its assignee) at no cost. In the event that the Charleston Daily Mail's print and electronic archives are not transferred to MediaNews Group, Charleston Newspapers will grant to MediaNews Group (or its assignee) a royalty-free [*12] license to use the Charleston Daily Mail's print and electronic archives for the sole purpose of continuing to publish the Charleston Daily Mail for so long as MediaNews Group (or its assignee) publishes the Charleston Daily Mail as a Daily Newspaper in Charleston. Except as expressly authorized by this Final Judgment, Gazette Company shall not directly or indirectly transfer to any other Person the ownership of some or all of the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail without the prior written consent of the United States. If during the term of this Final Judgment the ownership of some or all of the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail is transferred from Gazette Company to any other Person, Gazette Company shall not reacquire any part of the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail during the term of this Final Judgment. Transfer of title to the Intellectual Property of the Charleston Daily Mail by Gazette Company shall be made free and clear of any liens or other encumbrances to the free transfer of title by the acquirer (including but not limited to rights of first refusal).

D. The Editorial Content of the Charleston Daily Mail shall be determined [*13] solely by MediaNews Group and the staff of the Charleston Daily Mail. The Editorial Content of the Charleston Gazette shall be determined solely by Gazette Company and the staff of the Charleston Gazette. Gazette Company shall not, directly or indirectly, take any action to influence the Editorial Content of the Charleston Daily Mail, nor shall MediaNews Group, directly or indirectly, take any action to influence the Editorial Content of the Charleston Gazette. Gazette Company and MediaNews Group shall not enter into any agreement limiting the separate and independent determination of the Editorial Content of their respective Daily Newspapers.

E. Gazette Company and MediaNews Group shall not take any action with the intent to cause the Charleston Daily Mail to become a Failing Firm. Neither Gazette Company nor MediaNews Group shall discriminate against, or cause Charleston Newspapers to discriminate against, the Charleston Daily Mail in performing circulation sales or advertising sales activities.

F. Commencing no later than thirty (30) days after the entry of this Final Judgment and continuing for a period of no less than six (6) months thereafter, Defendants shall cause Charleston [*14] Newspapers to offer the Charleston Daily Mail at a discount of no less than fifty (50) percent off the regular subscription price to all new subscribers. Charleston Newspapers shall inform prospective new subscribers of this discount in any subscription solicitation efforts that it undertakes (including telemarketing, door-to-door, and kiosk sales efforts; single-copy promotions; and solicitations on the Charleston Daily Mail's website). During this period, Charleston Newspapers may not extend this same discount, or any greater discount, to subscribers of the Charleston Gazette. For purposes of this paragraph IV(F), a new subscriber is any person who purchases a subscription to the Charleston Daily Mail and who has not subscribed to the daily Charleston Daily Mail or the daily Charleston Gazette within sixty (60) days of making such purchase.

V.Affidavits

Within sixty (60) calendar days of the entry of this Final Judgment in this matter, and every year thereafter until the expiration of this Final Judgment, Defendants shall deliver to the United States an affidavit as to the fact and manner of their compliance with Section IV of this Final Judgment. Assuming the information set forth [*15] in the affidavit is true and complete, any objection by the United States to information provided by Defendants, including limitation on information, shall be made within fourteen (14) calendar days of receipt of such affidavit.

VI.Compliance Inspection

A. For the purposes of determining or securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or of determining whether the Final Judgment should be modified or vacated, or determining whether to consent to any proposed agreement per Section IV(A), or whether to approve a termination of publication per Section IV(B), or whether to consent to any transfer per Section IV(C), and subject to any legally recognized privilege, from time to time authorized representatives of the United States, including consultants and other persons retained by the United States, shall, upon written request of an authorized representative of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to defendants, be permitted:

(1) access during defendants' office hours to inspect and copy, or at the option of the United States, to require defendants to provide hard copy or electronic copies of, all books, ledgers, accounts, records, data, [*16] and documents in the possession, custody, or control of defendants, relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

(2) to interview, either informally or on the record, defendants' officers, employees, or agents, who may have their individual counsel present, regarding such matters. The interviews shall be subject to the reasonable convenience of the interviewee and without restraint or interference by defendants.

B. Upon the written request of an authorized representative of the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, defendants shall submit written reports or response to written interrogatories, under oath if requested, relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may be requested.

C. No information or documents obtained by the means provided in this Section shall be divulged by the United States to any person other than an authorized representative of the executive branch of the United States, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party (including grand jury proceedings), or for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

D. If at the time [*17] information or documents are furnished by defendants to the United States, defendants represent and identify in writing the material in any such information or documents to which a claim of protection may be asserted under Rule 26(c)(1)(G) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and defendants mark each pertinent page of such material, "Subject to claim of protection under Rule 26(c)(1)(G) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure," then the United States shall give defendants ten (10) calendar days notice prior to divulging such material in any legal proceeding (other than a grand jury proceeding).

VII.Retention of Jurisdiction and Expiration of Final Judgment

This Court retains jurisdiction to enable any party to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, including the agreements of the parties attached hereto as Exhibit A, to modify any of their provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of their provisions. Unless this Court grants an extension, this Final Judgment shall expire five (5) years from the date of its entry. The expiration of this Final Judgment [*18] shall not trigger the termination of the agreements contained in Exhibit A. After the expiration of this Final Judgment, the agreements contained in Exhibit A will be governed by their own terms.

VIII.Public Interest Determination

Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest. The parties have complied with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, including making copies available to the public of this Final Judgment and the Competitive Impact Statement. No public comments were received. Based upon the record before the Court, entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

EXHIBIT A

AMENDED AND RESTATED LIMITED PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENT FOR CHARLESTON NEWSPAPERS HOLDINGS, L.P. A DELAWARE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP

__, 2009

THIS AMENDED AND RESTATED LIMITED PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENT is entered into as of __, 2009 by and among Daily Gazette Holding Company, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company ("DGHC") and Charleston Publishing Company, a Delaware corporation ("CPC").

RECITALS

WHEREAS, the Partnership was formed on May 7, 2004 in connection with the [*19] transactions contemplated by that certain Master Restructuring and Purchase Agreement (the "Master Restructuring Agreement") entered into on May 7, 2004, by Daily Gazette Company, MediaNews Group, Inc. (now known as Affiliated Media, Inc.) ("MNG"), CPC and the Joint Venture;

WHEREAS, the Partnership has managed and will, pursuant to the Second Amended and Restated Joint Venture Agreement dated as of even date herewith (the "JOA"), continue to manage the business and affairs of the Joint Venture; and

WHEREAS, DGHC and CPC desire to amend various provisions of the Limited Partnership Agreement dated May 7, 2004 (the "Prior Partnership Agreement"), by and among DGHC, CPC and ABRY/Charleston, Inc. to restate it in its entirety and to supplement it, as herein provided;

NOW, THEREFORE, the parties agree as follows:

ARTICLE I

Definitions

1.1 Definitions. As used herein, the following terms shall have the following meanings:

1.1.1 Act: the Delaware Revised Uniform Limited Partnership Act, 6 Del. Code, as it may be amended from time to time, and any successor to such Act.

1.1.2 Affiliate: with respect to any Person, any other Person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by such Person or [*20] under direct or indirect common control with such Person.

1.1.3 Adjusted Capital Account: with respect to any Partner, the deficit balance, if any, in such Partner's Capital Account as of the end of the relevant Fiscal Year or other period, after giving effect to the following adjustments:

(i) Crediting to such Capital Account any amounts that such Partner is obligated to restore to the Partnership pursuant to this Agreement or as otherwise described Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(c) or is deemed to be obligated to restore pursuant to the penultimate sentences of Treasury Regulations Sections 1.704-2(g)(1) and 1.704-2(i)(5); and

(ii) Debiting from such Capital Account the items described in Treasury Regulations Sections 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(d)(4), 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(d)(5) and 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(d)(6).

The foregoing definition of Adjusted Capital Account is intended to comply with the provisions of Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(d) and shall be interpreted consistently therewith.

1.1.4 Agreement: this Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement, as it may be amended from time to time.

1.1.5 Capital Account: with respect to any Partner, the account maintained [*21] for such Partner in accordance with the capital accounting rules of Section 704(b) of the Code and the provisions of Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv). Subject to any contrary requirements of the Code and the Treasury Regulations issued thereunder, each Partner's Capital Account shall equal (1)(i) the amount set forth as such Partner's capital account as of the date hereof as set forth on Exhibit B; (ii) the amount of money which has been contributed by that Partner to the Partnership after the date hereof, if any; (ii) the fair market value, determined without regard to Code Section 7701(g) of the property, if any, which has been contributed by that Partner to the Partnership after the date hereof (net of any liabilities that are secured by such contributed property or that the Partnership or any other Partner is considered to assume under Code Section 752); (iii) allocations which have been made to that Partner of Net Profit and items of income and gain pursuant to Article V after the date hereof; and (iv) other additions which have been made in accordance with the Code after the date hereof, decreased by (2)(i) the amount of cash which has been distributed to that Partner [*22] by the Partnership after the date hereof; (ii) allocations which have been made to that Partner of Net Loss and items of loss and deduction pursuant to Article V after the date hereof; (iii) the fair market value, determined without regard to Code Section 7701(g), of any property which has been distributed to that Partner by the Partnership after the date hereof (net of any liabilities that are secured by such distributed property or that such Partner is considered to assume or take under Code Section 752); and (iv) other deductions which have been made in accordance with the Code after the date hereof.

1.1.6 Capital Contribution: with respect to any Partner, any cash or other property that such Partner has contributed to the capital of the Partnership pursuant to the terms of this Agreement.

1.1.7 Certificate of Limited Partnership: the certificate of limited partnership of the Partnership, as amended.

1.1.8 Class A Limited Partner: a Person owning Class A Limited Partner Units that has been admitted to the Partnership as a Limited Partner pursuant to the terms of this Agreement.

1.1.9 Class A Limited Partnership Interest: the Partnership Interest with respect to the Class A Limited Partner [*23] Units.

1.1.10 Class A Limited Partner Unit: any Partnership Unit having the rights and obligations specified in this Agreement with respect to a Class A Limited Partner Unit.

1.1.11 Class B Limited Partner: a Person owning Class B Limited Partner Units that has been admitted to the Partnership as a Limited Partner pursuant to the terms of this Agreement.

1.1.12 Class B Limited Partner Unit: any Partnership Unit having the rights and obligations specified in this Agreement with respect to a Class B Limited Partner Unit.

1.1.13 Code: the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended.

1.1.14 Depreciation: with respect to each Fiscal Year, an amount equal to the depreciation, amortization or other cost recovery deduction allowable with respect to an asset for such Fiscal Year, except that if the Gross Asset Value of an asset differs from its adjusted basis for federal income tax purposes at the beginning of such Fiscal Year, Depreciation shall be determined in the manner that is described in Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(g)(3) or Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-3(d)(2), as applicable.

1.1.15 Fair Market Value of the Partnership: has the meaning given such term in Section 5.2.3(b).

1.1.16 [*24] Fiscal Year: the calendar year or, in the case of the first and the last fiscal years, the fraction thereof commencing on the date on which the Partnership is formed under the Act or ending on the date on which the winding up of the Partnership is completed, as the case may be.

1.1.17 General Partner: DGHC and any successor General Partner.

1.1.18 General Partner Unit: any Partnership Unit having the rights and obligations specified in this Agreement with respect to a General Partner Unit.

1.1.19 GP Board: has the meaning given such term in Section 4.5.2.

1.1.20 Gross Asset Value: with respect to any asset, the asset's adjusted basis for Federal income tax purposes, except as follows:

(i) The initial Gross Asset Value of any asset contributed by a Partner to the Partnership after the date hereof shall be the gross fair market value of such asset as determined by the contributing Partner and the General Partner;

(ii) The Gross Asset Value of each Partnership asset shall be adjusted to equal its gross fair market value, as determined by the General Partner, as of the following times: (a) the acquisition of an additional interest in the Partnership by any new or existing Partner in exchange [*25] for more than a de minimis Capital Contribution; (b) the distribution by the Partnership to a Partner of more than a de minimis amount of Partnership property as consideration for an interest in the Partnership; and (c) the liquidation of the Partnership within the meaning of Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(g). However, the adjustments which are described in clauses (a) and (b) above shall be made only if the General Partner reasonably determines that such adjustments are necessary or appropriate to reflect the relative economic interests of the Partners in the Partnership;

(iii) The Gross Asset Value of any Partnership asset distributed to any Partner shall be adjusted to equal the gross fair market value of such asset on the date of distribution, as determined by the distributee Partner and the General Partner; and

(iv) The Gross Asset Value of each Partnership asset shall be increased (or decreased) to reflect any adjustments to the adjusted basis of such asset pursuant to Code Section 734(b) or Code Section 743(b), but only to the extent that such adjustments are taken into account in determining Capital Accounts pursuant to Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(m) [*26] and Section 5.3.8. However, Gross Asset Value shall not be adjusted pursuant to this clause (iv) to the extent that an adjustment pursuant to clause (ii) is necessary or appropriate in connection with a transaction that would otherwise result in an adjustment pursuant to this clause (iv).

If the Gross Asset Value of an asset has been determined or adjusted pursuant to clauses (i), (ii) or (iv) of this definition, such Gross Asset Value shall thereafter be adjusted by the Depreciation taken into account with respect to such asset for purposes of computing Net Profit and Net Loss.

1.1.21 Indemnified Person: has the meaning given such term in Section 4.7.

1.1.22 JOA: has the meaning given such term in the Recitals to this Agreement, as such agreement may be amended from time to time.

1.1.23 Joint Venture: Charleston Newspapers, an unincorporated West Virginia joint venture.

1.1.24 Limited Partner: any Class A Limited Partner or Class B Limited Partner.

1.1.25 Limited Partner Unit: any Class A Limited Partner Unit or Class B Limited Partner Unit.

1.1.26 Mail: The Charleston Daily Mail.

1.1.27 MNG: has the meaning given such term in the Recitals to this Agreement, and includes any successor or [*27] assign.

1.1.28 Net Cumulative Profit: with respect to a Partner, an amount equal to the excess, if any, of (i) the aggregate Net Profits and items of income and gain allocated to such Partner pursuant to Article V for all Fiscal Years (or other periods) after the date hereof, over (ii) the aggregate Net Loss and items of loss and deduction allocated to such Partner pursuant to Article V for all Fiscal Years (or other periods) after the date hereof.

1.1.29 Net Profit and Net Loss: with respect to each Fiscal Year or other period, an amount which is equal to the Partnership's taxable income or loss for such year or period, as determined in accordance with Code Section 703(a) (for this purpose, all items of income, gain, loss or deduction that are required to be stated separately pursuant to Code Section 703(a)(1) shall be included in taxable income or loss), with the following adjustments:

(i) Any income of the Partnership that is exempt from Federal income tax and not otherwise taken into account in computing Net Profit or Net Loss shall be added to such taxable income or loss;

(ii) Any expenditures of the Partnership described in Code Section 705(a)(2)(B), or treated as Code Section 705(a)(2)(B) [*28] expenditures pursuant to Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(i), and which are not otherwise taken into account in computing Net Profit or Net Loss, shall be subtracted from such taxable income or loss;

(iii) In the event the Gross Asset Value of any Partnership asset is adjusted pursuant to clause (ii) or (iii) of the definition of Gross Asset Value, the amount of such adjustment shall be taken into account as gain or loss from the disposition of such asset for purposes of computing Net Profit or Net Loss;

(iv) Gain or loss resulting from any disposition of Partnership property with respect to which gain or loss is recognized for Federal income tax purposes shall be computed by reference to the Gross Asset Value of the property disposed of, notwithstanding that the adjusted tax basis of such property differs from its Gross Asset Value;

(v) In lieu of the depreciation, amortization and other cost recovery deductions that are taken into account in computing such taxable income or loss, there shall be taken into account Depreciation for such Fiscal Year or other period;

(vi) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary that may be contained in the definition of the terms "Net Profit" [*29] and "Net Loss," any items that are specially allocated pursuant to Section 5.3 or 5.4 hereof shall be excluded in computing Net Profit or Net Loss; and

(vii) For purposes of this Agreement, any deduction for a loss on a sale or exchange of Partnership property which is disallowed to the Partnership under Code Section 267(a)(1) or 707(b) shall be treated as a Code Section 705(a)(2)(B) expenditure.

The amounts of the items of Partnership income, gain, loss, or deduction available to be specially allocated pursuant to Section 5.3 or 5.4 shall be determined by applying rules analogous to those set forth in this definition of Net Profit and Net Loss.

1.1.30 Newspapers: The Charleston Gazette, The Saturday Gazette-Mail, The Sunday Gazette-Mail and the Mail collectively, and a "Newspaper" means any one of the Newspapers.

1.1.31 Nonrecourse Deductions: losses, deductions or Code Section 705(a)(2)(B) expenditures that are attributable to Nonrecourse Liabilities of the Partnership. The amount of Nonrecourse Deductions for a Fiscal Year shall be determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(c).

1.1.32 Nonrecourse Liability: has the meaning set forth in Treasury Regulations Sections 1.704-2(b)(3) [*30] and 1.752-1(a)(2).

1.1.33 Partner: any of the General Partner and the Limited Partners individually, and "Partners" means each of the General Partner and the Limited Partners collectively.

1.1.34 Partner Nonrecourse Debt: has the meaning set forth in Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(b)(4).

1.1.35 Partner Nonrecourse Debt Minimum Gain: has the meaning set forth in Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(i)(2). The amount of Partner Nonrecourse Debt Minimum Gain shall be determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(i)(3).

1.1.36 Partner Nonrecourse Deductions: losses, deductions or Code Section 705(a)(2)(B) expenditures that are attributable to Partner Nonrecourse Debt. The amount of Partner Nonrecourse Deductions for a Fiscal Year shall be determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(i)(2).

1.1.37 Partner Ratio Percentage: with respect to any Class B Limited Partner, the percentage obtained by dividing the Percentage Interest of such Class B Limited Partner by the General Partner's Percentage Interest.

1.1.38 Partnership: Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P., a Delaware limited partnership.

1.1.39 Partnership Interest: means the entire ownership [*31] interest of a Partner in the Partnership at any particular time, including all of its rights and obligations hereunder and under the Act.

1.1.40 Partnership Minimum Gain: has the meaning set forth in Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(b)(2). The amount of Partnership Minimum Gain for a Fiscal Year shall be determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(d).

1.1.41 Percentage Interest: with respect to any Class B Limited Partner and the General Partner, means the ratio of the number of Units held by such Partner divided by the total number of Class B Limited Partner Units and General Partner Units outstanding.

1.1.42 Person: means any individual, partnership, joint venture, association, corporation, trust, estate, limited liability company, limited liability partnership or any other legal entity.

1.1.43 Put/Call Agreement: a put/call agreement entered into by a Class B Limited Partner, DGHC and the Partnership in connection with the exercise by the Warrant Holder of its right to purchase Class B Limited Partner Units pursuant to the terms of the Warrant, in substantially the form attached to the Warrant as Exhibit B thereto.

1.1.44 Regulatory Allocations: has the meaning [*32] given such term in Section 5.4.

1.1.45 Subsidiary: means any Person (including the Joint Venture) that is controlled by the Partnership.

1.1.46 Tax-Adjusted Percentage Interests: with respect to any Class B Limited Partner, the percentage determined by dividing (i) such Class B Limited Partner's Percentage Interest by (ii) one (1) minus the Tax Rate; and with respect to the General Partner, the percentage determined as one (1) minus the Tax-Adjusted Percentage Interest of such Class B Limited Partner. By way of illustration, if such Class B Limited Partner's Percentage Interest is 6.42% and the Tax Rate is 40%, such Class B Limited Partner's Tax Adjusted Percentage Interest shall be 10.70% and the General Partner's Tax-Adjusted Percentage Interest shall be 89.30%.

1.1.47 Tax Distributions: distributions made pursuant to Section 5.1.2.

1.1.48 Tax Gross-Up Amount: has the meaning given such term in Section 5.2.3 (a)(ii)(4).

1.1.49 Tax Rate: the highest effective combined rate of federal, state and local income and franchise tax applicable to corporations doing business in Charleston, West Virginia.

1.1.50 Tax Shortfall: has the meaning given such term in Section 5.1.2(b).

1.1.51 Transfer: has [*33] the meaning given to such term in Section 6.1.1.

1.1.52 Transferee: any Person that acquires a Partnership Interest from a Partner in accordance with the provisions of this Agreement.

1.1.53 Treasury Regulations: the Income Tax Regulations that have been promulgated under the Code, as such regulations may be amended from time to time.

1.1.54 Unit: an undivided share of the interests in the Partnership of all the Partners, which include General Partner Units, Class A Limited Partner Units, and Class B Limited Partner Units, as set forth on Exhibit A attached hereto, as amended from time to time.

1.1.55 Value of the Partnership's Business: has the meaning given such term in Section 5.2.3.

1.1.56 Warrant: that certain warrant, dated as of even date herewith, granted to the Warrant Holder by the Partnership to purchase Class B Limited Partner Units.

1.1.57 Warrant Holder: CPC or any permitted transferee of the Warrant.

ARTICLE II

Formation of the Partnership

2.1 Formation. The Partnership was formed as a Delaware limited partnership pursuant to the terms of the Act and the Prior Partnership Agreement. The rights and liabilities of the Partners shall be determined pursuant to the Act and this Agreement. [*34] To the extent the rights or obligations of any Partner are different by reason of any provision of this Agreement than they would be in the absence of such provision, this Agreement shall, to the extent permitted by the Act, control.

2.2 Partners. As of the date hereof, DGHC is the sole General Partner of the Partnership, CPC is the sole Class A Limited Partner of the Partnership and there is no Class B Limited Partner.

2.3 Name. The name of the Partnership is "Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P." The business of the Partnership may be conducted under that name or, upon compliance with applicable laws, any other name that the General Partner deems appropriate or advisable.

2.4 Purpose. The purposes of the Partnership shall be (i) to own, directly and indirectly, all the interests in the Joint Venture, (ii) to engage in the business, directly and indirectly, of owning, operating and managing newspaper properties, including managing the business and affairs of the Joint Venture in accordance with the JOA, (iii) to borrow or raise money, to guarantee the obligations of others, and to secure the payment thereof by mortgage upon or pledge of the whole or any part of the property of the Partnership, [*35] (iv) to exercise all rights, powers, privileges and other incidents of ownership or possession with respect to securities or other assets held or owned by the Partnership, and (v) to do any act and thing and to enter into any contract incidental to, or necessary, proper or advisable for, the accomplishment of such purposes as determined by the General Partner in its sole discretion, including without limitation, entering into the JOA, the Warrant and a Put/Call Agreement and performing thereunder.

2.5 Place of Business. The principal place of business of the Partnership is c/o Daily Gazette Company, 1001 Virginia Street, East, Charleston, West Virginia 25301, subject to change by the General Partner upon notice to all Partners.

2.6 Agent for Service of Process. The agent of the Partnership for service of process in Delaware is the Corporation Service Company, 2711 Centerville, Road, Suite 400, Wilmington, Delaware 19808, subject to replacement from time to time by direction of the General Partner.

2.7 Term. The term of the Partnership commenced on the date the Certificate of Limited Partnership was filed with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware, and shall continue until June [*36] 30, 2024, unless sooner terminated as provided in this Agreement.

2.8 Tax Matters. The parties acknowledge that for income tax purposes, the Partnership shall be treated as the continuation of the Joint Venture following the deemed merger of the Joint Venture and the Partnership.

ARTICLE III

Capital of the Partnership

3.1 Transfers to Partnership. DGHC and CPC each made the transfers to the Partnership specified on Exhibit A and received the Units specified in Exhibit A.

3.2 Future Capital Contributions; Capital Assets.

3.2.1 The Limited Partners shall have no obligation to make any further contributions to the capital of the Partnership, subject to CPC's obligation to reimburse the Joint Venture for any expenses paid by the Joint Venture on behalf of CPC in accordance with the provisions of the JOA.

3.2.2 DGHC shall in the future make such additional contributions to the capital of the Partnership as shall be necessary in its reasonable judgment to (1) fund acquisitions of capital assets necessary for the business and operations of the Partnership and/or the Joint Venture; (2) fund acquisitions of capital assets necessary for the business and operations of the editorial departments of each [*37] of the Newspapers to the extent such editorial departments' tangible capital assets on the date hereof require supplementation or replacement, (3) provide the Partnership and the Joint Venture with adequate working capital, and (4) ensure that the Partnership has adequate funds to make on a timely basis the cash distributions to CPC contemplated by Section V J (1) through (3) of the JOA, provided this is not intended to impose any greater obligation on the General Partner than is imposed on general partners generally under applicable law. The General Partner shall not have any personal liability for the repayment of the Capital Contributions of any other Partner; provided that the General Partner shall promptly return to the Partnership or to the Partner or Partners entitled thereto any distributions received by the General Partner in excess of those to which the General Partner is entitled under this Agreement.

3.3 Interest on Capital Contributions. No interest shall be paid by the Partnership on Capital Contributions.

3.4 Liability Limited to Capital. Except as otherwise provided under applicable law, the liability of a Limited Partner shall be limited to the total amount of Capital [*38] Contributions which such Limited Partner has made or is required to make pursuant to Section 3.1 hereof, and the Limited Partners shall have no further personal liability to contribute money to or in respect of the liabilities or obligations of the Partnership, nor shall the Limited Partners, as such, be personally liable for any obligation of the Partnership. A Limited Partner may, under certain circumstances, be required by law to return to the Partnership, for the benefit of the Partnership's creditors, amounts previously distributed. No Limited Partner shall be obligated by this Agreement to pay those distributions to or for the account of the Partnership or any creditor of the Partnership. However, if any court of competent jurisdiction holds that, notwithstanding the provisions of this Agreement, a Limited Partner must return or pay over any part of those distributions, the obligation shall be that of such Limited Partner alone and not of any other Partner. Any payment returned to the Partnership by a Partner or made directly by a Partner to a creditor of the Partnership shall be deemed a Capital Contribution by such Partner.

3.5 Withdrawal of Capital. A Partner shall not be entitled [*39] to withdraw any part of its Capital Contribution or to receive any distribution from the Partnership, except as provided in this Agreement or the JOA.

ARTICLE IV

Management of the Partnership

4.1 General Partner. DGHC shall serve as the General Partner of the Partnership.

4.2 Partnership Powers. In furtherance of its purposes, the Partnership is hereby authorized to enter into any kind of lawful activity and to enter into, perform and carry out contracts of any kind in connection with the purposes of the Partnership.

4.3 Authority, Responsibilities and Powers of General Partner. Subject to Section 4.5.2 hereof, the General Partner shall have complete authority over and exclusive control and management of the business and affairs of the Partnership and all of the rights, powers and privileges of partners of a general partnership and of general partners of a limited partnership under the laws of the State of Delaware. The General Partner shall devote such time to the Partnership as it may reasonably deem to be required for the achievement of its purposes. In connection with such management, the General Partner (i) may delegate such general or specific authority to the officers and employees [*40] of the Partnership and its Affiliates with respect to the business and day-to-day operations of the Partnership and its Affiliates as it may from time to time consider desirable, and the officers and employees of the Partnership may exercise the authority granted to them, and (ii) may employ on behalf of the Partnership any other Persons to perform services for the Partnership, including Affiliates of any Partner.

4.4 No Management Participation by any Limited Partner. Subject to Section 4.5.2, no Limited Partner shall take part in, or at any time interfere in any manner with, the management, conduct or control of the business and operations of the Partnership, nor have any right or authority as such to act for or bind the Partnership in any manner whatsoever. No Partner shall have the power, right or authority to remove DGHC as the General Partner.

4.5 Scope of Authority of the General Partner.

4.5.1 Subject to Section 4.5.2 and 4.5.3 hereof, all decisions to be made on behalf of the Partnership shall be made by the General Partner and all actions to be taken or documents to be executed on behalf of the Partnership shall be taken and executed by the General Partner.

4.5.2 While the general [*41] authority to manage the day-to-day business and affairs of the General Partner shall be vested in its members, the management of the General Partner shall be delegated to a board of managers of the General Partner (the "GP Board") consisting of up to five individual managers appointed by Daily Gazette Company and in no event may the GP Board consist of more than five managers without the consent of the managers appointed pursuant to Section 5(b) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s), as applicable; provided, however, that in no event may the GP Board consist of more than five managers unless not fewer than forty percent (40%) are appointed by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s), as applicable. Unless and until the Warrant Holder exercises its rights under the Warrant to purchase any Class B Limited Partner Units, Daily Gazette Company shall delegate its right to appoint two (2) of the members of the GP Board (or such greater number as required by Section 5(b)(ii) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC) to the Warrant Holder, and upon the purchase by the Warrant Holder of any Class B Limited Partner Units pursuant to [*42] the Warrant, Daily Gazette Company shall delegate its right to appoint two (2) of the members of the GP Board (or such greater number as required by Section 5(b)(ii) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC) to the Class B Limited Partner(s). If there is more than one Class B Limited Partner, then the right to appoint two (2) of the members of the GP Board (or such greater number as required by Section 5(b)(ii) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC) will be vested solely in the Class B Limited Partner that supervises editorial and reportorial functions of the Mail pursuant to Section 9.1 hereof. Neither the Warrant Holder nor the Class B Limited Partner(s) may appoint current employees of the Joint Venture, Daily Gazette Company, DGHC, the Partnership or Daily Gazette Publishing Company, LLC to represent it on the GP Board. The GP Board shall only have the power and authority to act by the vote of the constituent managers and no individual manager, in the capacity of manager, shall have the power or authority to bind the General Partner. Voting by the managers shall be on a per capita basis. Actions may be taken by the GP Board by, but only by, a majority vote of the managers; provided, however, [*43] that actions by the GP Board concerning (x) the budgeted Editorial Expenses (as that term is defined in the JOA) for The Charleston Gazette and the Mail or (y) "news hole" and color usage allocations for The Charleston Gazette and the Mail shall require the prior approval of at least 75% of the managers of the GP Board (i.e., if the GP Board consists of four managers, not fewer than three managers must vote in favor of the particular action, and if the GP Board consists of five managers, not fewer than four managers must vote in favor of the particular action). Either Daily Gazette Company or, as applicable, the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) may at any time, by written notice to the other, remove its managers, with or without cause, and substitute managers to serve in their stead. No manager shall be removed from office, with or without cause, without the consent of the Person that designated him. Each member of the GP Board appointed by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) may act (or refrain from acting), and the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) may instruct such members of the GP Board, in their capacity as such, to act (or refrain [*44] from acting) solely according to the interests (or the perceived interests) of the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) and none of the foregoing shall be deemed to breach any fiduciary duty that, pursuant to this Agreement or at law or in equity, the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) otherwise would be deemed to have to the Partnership, the General Partner or Daily Gazette Company. The GP Board shall hold such meetings no less frequently than once per calendar quarter and at such times and places as shall be determined by the members of the GP Board. Special meetings of the GP Board may be called at any time by agreement of the members of the GP Board. The GP Board may establish such procedures for the conduct of meetings as may be agreed by the members of the GP Board.

4.5.3 Without the written consent of the Limited Partners, or except as specifically authorized in this Agreement, the General Partner may not:

(a) Do any act in contravention of this Agreement, the JOA or the Certificate of Limited Partnership.

(b) Do any act that would make it impossible to carry on the ordinary business of the Partnership.

(c) Change the purposes of the Partnership as set [*45] forth in Section 2.4 hereof.

(d) Dissolve the Partnership.

(e) Make any disposition of assets contributed by CPC to the Partnership on the date of the Prior Partnership Agreement that would impair the ability of the Partnership to make the terminating distributions to CPC that are contemplated by Section 7.3 hereof (provided no consent of the Limited Partners will be required for any disposition of such assets pursuant to any foreclosure action of the Joint Venture's lenders).

4.6 Liability. If any provision herein shall, under applicable law, subject any Limited Partner to liability as a general partner of the Partnership, such provision shall be deemed suspended and of no force and effect until such time as the effectiveness of such provision does not subject such Limited Partner to such liability.

4.7 Indemnification. The Partnership shall indemnify the General Partner and its Affiliates and the employees, officers, directors, each member of the GP Board, shareholders, partners, members and agents of such Persons (each an "Indemnified Person") and shall defend and hold the Indemnified Persons harmless from any claim, demand, judgment, cost or expense (including attorneys' fees, which [*46] shall be paid as incurred) arising out of or related to any act or omission by such Indemnified Persons on behalf of the Partnership, except for any act or omission which is finally adjudicated to have constituted willful misconduct on the part of such Indemnified Person. In no event shall any Indemnified Person be liable to the Partnership or to any other Partner, except for conduct which is finally adjudicated to have constituted willful misconduct on the part of such Indemnified Person. Any Person who is within the definition of "Indemnified Person" at the time of any act or omission shall be entitled to the benefits of this Section 4.7 as an "Indemnified Person" regardless of whether such Person continues to be within the definition of "Indemnified Person" at the time of his or its claim for indemnification or exculpation hereunder.

4.8 Partnership Expenses. The Partnership shall pay for all necessary and reasonable direct expenses of the Partnership.

4.9 Other Ventures. Subject to the terms of the JOA, neither Daily Gazette Company, nor any Partner, may engage in other ventures in the Charleston, West Virginia market that are competitive with that of the Partnership or any of its [*47] Subsidiaries. For purposes of this Section 4.9, any competitive venture undertaken by an Affiliate of a Partner in the Charleston, West Virginia market will be deemed to be a competitive venture undertaken by such Partner and a breach of this Agreement by such Partner.

ARTICLE V

Distributions and Allocations

5.1 Distributions.

5.1.1 Distributions to Class A Limited Partner. With respect to each Fiscal Year that the Class A Limited Partner produces editorial and news copy for the Mail, the General Partner shall cause the Partnership to distribute cash to the Class A Limited Partner in an amount equal to the cash received by the Partnership with respect to its interest in the Joint Venture, pursuant to and subject to the terms of paragraphs (1), (2) and (3) of Section V J of the JOA. Such cash shall be distributed by the Partnership to the Class A Limited Partner as soon as reasonably practicable following its receipt by the Partnership.

5.1.2 Tax Distributions.

(a) During each Fiscal Year, the General Partner shall cause the Partnership to distribute cash to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and to the General Partner in an amount equal to the excess, if any, of (i) the product of (1) the Net [*48] Cumulative Profit allocated to such Partner and (2) the Tax Rate with respect to such Fiscal Year, over (ii) the aggregate distributions to such Partner after the date hereof pursuant to Section 5.1.4 and this Section 5.1.2 (such excess being such Partner's "Tax Shortfall"). For purposes of this Section 5.1.2(a), distributions made within 120 days of the end of any Fiscal Year may be designated by the General Partner as Tax Distributions with respect to such Fiscal Year and shall be treated for purposes of this Section 5.1.2(a) as having been made during such Fiscal Year.

(b) If the aggregate amount to be distributed by the Partnership pursuant to Section 5.1.2(a) is less than the aggregate amount of the Tax Shortfall for all Partners, then the amount to be distributed will be distributed among the Partners pro rata in accordance with the amounts of their respective Tax Shortfalls.

5.1.3 Distributions to General Partner. With respect to a Fiscal Year, after the distributions required by Sections 5.1.1 and 5.1.2, the General Partner shall cause the Partnership to distribute cash in an amount not to exceed $650,000 to the General Partner. The distributions provided in this Section 5.1.3 [*49] shall be made only to the extent such distributions are not prohibited by the Partnership's credit agreements or other agreements to which the Partnership is a party.

5.1.4 Other Cash Distributions. During a Fiscal Year; after the distributions required by Sections 5.1.1, 5.1.2 and 5.1.3, the General Partner may cause the Partnership to distribute additional cash at such times and in such amounts as the General Partner may determine to be appropriate in its sole discretion, in the following order and priority:

(a) If the product of the Partner Ratio Percentage of any Class B Limited Partner and the sum of all distributions to the General Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2 is greater than the sum of all distributions to such Class B Limited Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2, cash shall be distributed to such Class B Limited Partner in the amount of such excess;

(b) If the sum of all distributions to any Class B Limited Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2 is greater than the product of Partner Ratio Percentage of such Class B Limited Partner and the sum of all distributions to the General Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2, cash shall be distributed to the General Partner in the amount of such [*50] excess;

(c) Thereafter, cash shall be distributed to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and the General Partner pro rata in accordance with their Capital Account balances until such Capital Account balances are zero; and

(d) Any additional cash shall be distributed to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and the General Partner in accordance with their Percentage Interests.

5.1.5 Withholding. Any amount that has been withheld pursuant to the Code or any provision of any state or local tax law with respect to any payment or distribution to the Partnership or the Partners shall be treated as an amount which was distributed to a Partner pursuant to Section 5.1 hereof for all purposes of this Agreement.

5.2 Allocations of Net Profit and Net Loss.

5.2.1 Net Profit. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, Net Profit of the Partnership for each Fiscal Year shall be allocated as follows:

(a) first, Net Profit shall be allocated so as to offset any Net Loss allocated to the General Partner pursuant to Section 5.2.2(c);

(b) second, Net Profit shall be allocated to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and to the General Partner so as to offset any Net Loss allocated to them pursuant to Section 5.2.2(b), pro [*51] rata in proportion to the amount of Net Loss to be offset; and

(c) thereafter, Net Profit shall be allocated to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and the General Partner in accordance with their Tax-Adjusted Percentage Interests.

5.2.2 Net Loss. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, Net Loss of the Partnership for each Fiscal Year shall be allocated as follows:

(a) first, Net Loss shall be allocated to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and to the General Partner so as to offset any Net Profit allocated to them pursuant to Section 5.2.1(c) (to the extent not distributed pursuant to Section 5.1), pro rata in proportion to the amount of Net Profit to be offset.

(b) second, Net Loss shall be allocated to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and the General Partner in accordance with their Percentage Interests until the Class B Limited Partner's or Partners' Adjusted Capital Account balance is zero; and

(c) thereafter, all remaining Net Loss shall be allocated to the General Partner.

5.2.3 Allocations of Net Profit and Net Loss Following Dissolution.

(a) Notwithstanding Sections 5.2.1 and 5.2.2, following the dissolution of the Partnership pursuant to Article VII, beginning in the Fiscal Year in [*52] which such dissolution occurs or beginning in any Fiscal Year prior to the Fiscal Year in which such dissolution occurs if the Partnership's Federal income tax return for such prior Fiscal Year has not yet been required to be filed (not including extensions), items of income, gain, loss and deduction described in clause (iii) of Section 1.1.29 that are attributable to the adjustment to the Gross Asset Value of assets distributed in kind to the Class A Limited Partner pursuant to Section 7.3.2 (if any) shall be allocated to the Class A Limited Partner, and thereafter, all remaining items of income, gain, loss and deduction shall be allocated among the Partners so as to cause the credit balance in each Partner's Capital Account to equal the amount of distributions such Partner would be entitled to receive if the Partnership were to distribute an amount equal to the aggregate credit balances in all Partners' Capital Accounts (after such allocations of income and gain, loss and deduction) in accordance with the following:

(i) First, the Partnership would distribute to the Class A Limited Partner cash in an amount equal to the aggregate cash distributed to the Partnership pursuant to clause [*53] (2)(a) of Section VI B of the JOA;

(ii) Second, the Partnership would distribute to each Class B Limited Partner cash in an amount equal to the following:

(1) the product of such Class B Limited Partner's Percentage Interest and the Fair Market Value of the Partnership; plus

(2) the excess (only if such amount is greater than zero) of (A) the product of such Class B Limited Partner's Partner Ratio Percentage and the sum of all distributions to the General Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2 over (B) the sum of all distributions to such Class B Limited Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2; less

(3) the excess (only if such amount is greater than zero) of (A) the sum of all distributions to such Class B Limited Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2 over (B) the product of such Class B Limited Partner's Partner Ratio Percentage and the sum of all distributions to the General Partner pursuant to Section 5.1.2; plus

(4) an amount equal to the excess, if any, of (A) the quotient obtained by dividing Net Cumulative Profits allocated to such Class B Limited Partner by one (1) minus the Tax Rate then in effect, over (B) Net Cumulative Profits allocated to such Class B Limited Partner (such amount being the [*54] "Tax Gross-Up Amount").

(iii) Thereafter, the Partnership would distribute all remaining cash and other assets of the Partnership to the General Partner.

(b) For purposes of this Section 5.2.3, the "Fair Market Value of the Partnership" shall equal:

(i) the Value of the Partnership's Business, plus

(ii) any current assets of the Partnership, calculated as of the date of dissolution, as defined and determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, less

(iii) the sum of $2,448,300 (which the parties agree shall represent the amount of the unfunded accrued benefit obligation for the Charleston Newspapers Retirement Benefit Plan as of the date of dissolution), and $506,731 (which the parties agree shall represent the amount of the unfunded accrued benefit obligation for the Charleston Newspapers Post Retirement Medical Benefit Program as of the date of dissolution), less

(iv) any debts and liabilities of the Partnership and reserves for unmatured, contingent or unforeseen liabilities of the Partnership (other than unfunded obligations under the Charleston Newspapers Retirement Benefit Plan and Post-Retirement Medical Benefit Program), calculated as of the date of dissolution, [*55] as defined and determined in accordance with Section 7.3 and generally accepted accounting principles, less

(v) the costs of an investment banking firm or appraisal firm or firms selected to determined the Fair Market Value of the Partnership, less

(vi) the amount determined in Sections 5.2.3(a)(ii)(2) and 5.2.3(a)(ii)(3), if any.

The "Value of the Partnership's Business" shall be the going concern value of the Partnership as of the date of dissolution as determined by mutual agreement of the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) or by appraisals in accordance with this Section 5.2.3.

In determining the Value of the Partnership's Business, the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s), or the appraisers selected to determine the Fair Market Value of the Partnership, as the case may be, (1) shall assume that the value of any business is the cash price at which the assets of such business as a going concern would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller (neither acting under compulsion) in an arms-length transaction, on terms and subject to conditions and costs applicable in the newspaper publishing industry, (2) shall assume that all assets used in [*56] the operation of the business of the Partnership and its Subsidiaries, whether owned by or licensed to the Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries (and all other assets of any Affiliate of the Partnership that are used by the Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries), were entirely owned directly by the Partnership, (3) shall not take into account expenditures in respect of any management agreements entered into by the Joint Venture. In the event the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) do not agree on the Fair Market Value of the Partnership within twenty days, then within fifteen days of the expiration of such twenty day period (or such longer period as the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) mutually agree), each of the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) shall select a nationally recognized appraiser with experience in the newspaper industry to prepare, using the methodology described in this paragraph, a written appraisal setting forth such appraiser's determination of the Fair Market Value of the Partnership. If either the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) fail to so appoint an appraiser within such fifteen day period, [*57] then its right to do so shall lapse and the appraisal made by the one appraiser who is timely appointed shall be the Fair Market Value of the Partnership. If two appraisals are made, unless the higher of the two appraisals is more than 110% more than the lower appraisal, the Fair Market Value of the Partnership will be the average of the two appraisals, and if the higher of the two appraisals is more than 110% more than the lower of the appraisals, the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) shall jointly select a third appraiser, and the Fair Market Value will be the average of the two of the three appraisals that are closest together in amount. All appraisals will be made within twenty days of appointment of such appraiser and must separately identify the amount of each of the items described in clauses (i) through (vi) of Section 5.2.3(b). A written notice of the results of each such appraisal shall be given to the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s). The General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) will each pay the fees of the appraiser selected by it, and the General Partner and the Class B Limited Partner(s) will share equally the fees of the [*58] third appraiser, if any. The General Partner and each Member will cooperate fully with each appraiser's attempt to determine the Fair Market Value of the Partnership.

5.3 Special Allocations.

5.3.1 Limited Partners.

(a) The Partnership shall specially allocate to the Class A Limited Partner (in its capacity as such) items of Partnership income for each Fiscal Year in an amount equal to the cash distributed to the Class A Limited Partner (in its capacity as such) pursuant to Section 5.1.1. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Agreement, except Section 5.2.3 and this Section 5.3.1, no other items of income, gain, loss or deduction shall be allocated to the Class A Limited Partner (in its capacity as such).

(b) The Partnership shall specially allocate to the General Partner items of Partnership income and gain in the amount of $650,000 for each Fiscal Year.

5.3.2 Minimum Gain Chargeback. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Article V to the contrary, if there is a net decrease in Partnership Minimum Gain for any Fiscal Year, each of the General Partner and each Class B Limited Partner shall be specially allocated items of Partnership income and gain for such Fiscal Year (and [*59] if necessary, for succeeding Fiscal Years) in an amount equal to such Partner's share of the net decrease in Partnership Minimum Gain as determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(g). Allocations pursuant to the previous sentence shall be made in proportion to the respective amounts required to be allocated to each Partner pursuant thereto. However, this Section 5.3.2 shall not apply to the extent that the circumstances which are described in Treasury Regulations Sections 1.704-2(f)(2), 1.704-2(f)(3), 1.704-2(f)(4) or 1.704-2(f)(5) exist. The items of Partnership income and gain that are to be allocated pursuant to this Section 5.3.2 shall be determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Sections 1.704-2(f)(6) and 1.704-2(j)(2). This Section 5.3.2 is intended to comply with the minimum gain chargeback requirement of Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(f) and shall be interpreted consistently therewith.

5.3.3 Partner Minimum Gain Chargeback. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Article V, except Section 5.3.2, to the contrary, if, during any Fiscal Year, there is a net decrease in Partner Nonrecourse Debt Minimum Gain attributable to a Partner Nonrecourse [*60] Debt, each of the General Partner and each Class B Limited Partner with a share of that Partner Nonrecourse Debt Minimum Gain attributable to such Partner Nonrecourse Debt (as determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(i)(5)) as of the beginning of such Fiscal Year shall be specially allocated items of Partnership income and gain for the Fiscal Year (and, if necessary, for succeeding Fiscal Years) in an amount equal to such Partner's share of the net decrease in the Partner Nonrecourse Debt Minimum Gain attributable to such Partner Nonrecourse Debt in accordance with Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(i)(4). Allocations pursuant to the previous sentence shall be made in proportion to the respective amounts required to be allocated to each Partner pursuant thereto. The items of Company income and gain to be allocated pursuant to this Section 5.3.3 shall be determined in accordance with Treasury Regulations Sections 1.704-2(i)(4) and 1.704-2(j)(2). This Section 5.3.3 is intended to comply with the minimum gain chargeback requirement in Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(i)(4) and shall be interpreted consistently therewith.

5.3.4 Qualified Income Offset. In [*61] the event that any Partner unexpectedly receives any of the adjustments, allocations or distributions described in Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(d)(4), 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(d)(5) or 1.704-1(b) (2)(ii)(d)(6), items of Partnership income and gain shall be specially allocated to such Partner in an amount and manner sufficient to eliminate, to the extent required by the Treasury Regulations, any deficit balance of such Partner's Adjusted Capital Account as quickly as possible. However, an allocation shall be made pursuant to this Section 5.3.4 if, and only to the extent that, such Partner would have a deficit balance in its Adjusted Capital Account after all of the other allocations that are provided for in this Article V have been tentatively made as if this Section 5.3.4 were not a part of this Agreement.

5.3.5 Gross Income Allocation. In the event that any Partner has a deficit Capital Account at the end of any Fiscal Year that is in excess of the sum of (i) the amount such Partner is obligated to restore to the Partnership pursuant to this Agreement or as otherwise described in Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(ii)(c), (ii) the amount such Partner is deemed to [*62] be obligated to restore pursuant to the penultimate sentence of Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(g)(1) and (iii) the amount such Partner is deemed to be obligated to restore pursuant to the penultimate sentence of Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-2(i)(5), such Partner shall be specially allocated items of Partnership income and gain in the amount of such excess as quickly as possible. However, an allocation shall be made pursuant to this Section 5.3.5 if, and only to the extent that such Partner would have a deficit Capital Account in excess of such sum after all of the other allocations that are provided for in this Article V have been tentatively made as if Section 5.3.4 and this Section 5.3.5 were not a part of this Agreement.

5.3.6 Nonrecourse Deductions. Nonrecourse Deductions for any Fiscal Year or other period shall be specially allocated to the General Partner.

5.3.7 Partner Nonrecourse Deductions. Any Partner Nonrecourse Deductions for any Fiscal Year or other period shall be specially allocated to the Partner who bears the economic risk of loss with respect to the Partner Nonrecourse Debt to which such Partner Nonrecourse Deductions are attributable in accordance with [*63] Treasury Regulation Section 1.704-2(i).

5.3.8 Section 754 Adjustment.

(a) To the extent an adjustment to the adjusted tax basis of any Partnership asset pursuant to Code Section 734(b) or 743(b) is required pursuant to Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(m)(4) to be taken into account in determining Capital Accounts as a result of a distribution other than in liquidation of a Partner's Partnership Interest, the amount of such adjustment shall be treated as an item of gain (if the adjustment increases the basis of such asset) or loss (if the adjustment decreases the basis of the asset) from the disposition of the asset and shall be taken into account for purposes of computing Net Profit and Net Loss.

(b) To the extent an adjustment to the adjusted tax basis of any Partnership asset pursuant to Code Section 734(b) or Code 743(b) is required, pursuant to Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(m)(2) or 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(m)(4), to be taken into account in determining Capital Accounts as the result of a distribution to a Partner in complete liquidation of its interest, the amount of such adjustment to Capital Accounts shall be treated as an item of gain (if the adjustment [*64] increases the basis of the asset) or loss (if the adjustment decreases such basis) from the disposition of the asset and shall be specially allocated to the Partners as Net Profit or Net Loss in the event Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(m)(2) applies, or to the Partner to whom such distribution is made in the event Treasury Regulations Section 1.704-1(b)(2)(iv)(m)(4) applies.

5.4 Curative Allocations. The allocations set forth in Sections 5.3.2, 5.3.3, 5.3.4, 5.3.5, 5.3.6, 5.3.7 and 5.3.8 hereof (the "Regulatory Allocations") are intended to comply with certain requirements of the Treasury Regulations. It is the intent of the Partners that, to the extent possible, all Regulatory Allocations shall be offset either with other Regulatory Allocations or with special allocations of other items of income, gain, loss, or deduction pursuant to this Section 5.4. Therefore, notwithstanding any other provision of this Article V (other than the Regulatory Allocations), the General Partner shall make such offsetting special allocations of income, gain, loss, or deduction in whatever manner it determines appropriate so that, after such offsetting allocations are made, each Partner's [*65] Capital Account balance is, to the extent possible, equal to the Capital Account balance such Partner would have had if the Regulatory Allocations were not in this Agreement. In exercising its discretion under this Section 5.4, the General Partner shall take into account future Regulatory Allocations under Sections 5.3.2 and 5.3.3 that, although not yet made, are likely to offset other Regulatory Allocations previously made under Sections 5.3.6 and 5.3.7.

5.5 Tax Allocations; Code Section 704(c).

5.5.1 Except as otherwise provided in this Section 5.5, each item of income, gain, loss and deduction of the Partnership recognized for income tax purposes shall be allocated to the Partners in accordance with the allocation of the corresponding "book" items pursuant to Sections 5.2, 5.3 and 5.4.

5.5.2 In accordance with Code Section 704(c) and the Treasury Regulations thereunder, income, gain, loss and deduction with respect to any property contributed to the capital of the Partnership shall, solely for tax purposes, be allocated among the Partners so as to take account of any variation between the adjusted basis of such property to the Partnership for Federal income tax purposes and its initial [*66] Gross Asset Value in accordance with Code Section 704(c) and the Treasury Regulations thereunder, provided, however, that no such Section 704(c) allocations shall be made to the Class A Limited Partner (in its capacity as such).

5.5.3 In the event that the Gross Asset Value of any Partnership asset is adjusted pursuant to clause (ii) of the definition of Gross Asset Value, subsequent allocations of income, gain, loss and deduction with respect to such asset shall take account of any variation between the adjusted basis of such asset for Federal income tax purposes and its Gross Asset Value in accordance with Code Section 704(c) and the Treasury Regulations thereunder, provided, however, that no such Section 704(c) allocations shall be made to the Class A Limited Partner (in its capacity as such).

5.5.4 Any elections or other decisions relating to such allocations shall be made by the Tax Matters Partner in any manner that reasonably reflects the purpose and intention of this Agreement. Allocations that are made pursuant to this Section 5.5 are made solely for purposes of Federal, state and local taxes and shall not affect, or in any way be taken into account in computing, any Partner's [*67] Capital Account or share of Net Profit, Net Loss or other items or distributions pursuant to any provision of this Agreement.

5.6 Allocation in Event of Transfer. If a Partnership Interest is Transferred in accordance with Article VI of this Agreement, the Net Profit and Net Loss of the Partnership shall be calculated as of the end of the month immediately prior to the month in which the transfer is effective. The transferor Partner shall be allocated an amount which is equal to the Net Profit and Net Loss of the Partnership that is allocable to the period ending on the last day of the month immediately prior to the Transfer. The Transferee shall be allocated an amount which is equal to the Net Profit and Net Loss of the Partnership that is allocable to the remainder of the calendar year. As of the effective date of such Transfer, the Transferee shall succeed to the Capital Account of the transferor Partner with respect to the Transferred Partnership Interest. This Section 5.6 shall apply for purposes of computing a Partner's Capital Account and for Federal income tax purposes.

ARTICLE VI

Transfer of Partnership Interests

6.1 Limitations on Transfers.

6.1.1 Except as provided in Section 6.1.2, [*68] no sale, assignment, transfer, pledge, hypothecation or other disposition (any or all of the foregoing, a "Transfer") of a Partnership Interest will be effective nor will any purported Transferee become a Partner or otherwise be entitled to any of the attributes of ownership of the Partnership purportedly Transferred.

6.1.2 The restrictions of Section 6.1.1 shall not apply to:

(a) a Transfer pursuant to Article VII;

(b) in the case of the Class A Limited Partner, a Transfer of its entire Class A Limited Partnership Interest approved by the General Partner, which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld (the Class A Limited Partner acknowledges and agrees that the General Partner's ability to grant consent to a Transfer is circumscribed by certain contractual restrictions under the Joint Venture's financing arrangements and the withholding of consent by the General Partner in order to comply with these contractual restrictions will not be considered unreasonable);

(c) in the case of a Class B Limited Partner, a Transfer permitted by and made in accordance with the provisions of the Put/Call Agreement to which such Class B Limited Partner is a party;

(d) in the case of the General Partner [*69] or any permitted Transferee of the General Partner, any Transfer to an Affiliate of the General Partner and any other Transfer so long as at the time of such Transfer the Joint Venture is current in the distributions and payments required to be made to the Class A Limited Partner pursuant to Section V J(1) through (4) of the JOA, and provided that if the Joint Venture is not so current, the General Partner shall obtain the consent of the Class A Limited Partner prior to any Transfer pursuant to this Section 6.1.2(d);

(e) a Transfer pursuant to a foreclosure action by the Joint Venture's lenders; or

(f) any Transfer of all or any portion of the ownership interests in the Class A Limited Partnership Interest or the Partnership Interest with respect to any of the Class B Limited Partner Units to MNG or an Affiliate of MNG so long as (1) all of the other requirements of this Article VI have been complied with and (2) MNG or an Affiliate of MNG holds and maintains, directly or indirectly, voting control of such Transferee following such Transfer.

6.2 Transferees.

6.2.1 Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained herein, no Partnership Interest may be transferred unless such Transfer [*70] is made in accordance with the provisions of this Article VI and the transferor and the Transferee have complied with the following conditions:

(a) the transferor has executed and delivered to the General Partner a copy of the assignment of the Partnership Interest to Transferee in form and substance reasonably satisfactory to the General Partner; and

(b) the Transferee, if not already a party to this Agreement, becomes a party to this Agreement, assumes all of the obligations hereunder of its transferor in respect of such Partnership Interest and agrees to be bound by the terms and conditions hereof in the same manner as the transferor.

6.2.2 Upon compliance with Section 6.1 and 6.2.1, any Transferee shall be substituted as a Partner for, and shall enjoy the same rights and be subject to the same obligations as, its predecessor as a Partner hereunder, and the General Partner shall prepare and file as soon as practicable, if required by law, an amendment to the Certificate of Limited Partnership and any other qualification documents. Exhibit A hereto shall also be amended to reflect such Transfer.

6.2.3 If there is a permitted Transfer of a Partnership Interest under this Agreement:

(a) [*71] In the case of a Transfer by any Partner, such Partner shall, upon the effectiveness of such Transfer, be released and discharged from any further liability under this Agreement in respect of such Partnership Interest, provided, however, that such transferring Partner shall remain liable to the Partnership for any Partnership distributions wrongfully paid to or received by such transferring Partner or that are required by law to be returned to the Partnership; and

(b) If requested to do so by any transferring Partner or by the Transferee by notice given to the Partners, the Partnership shall make an election under Section 754 of the Code (and a corresponding election under applicable state and local law). Upon the request of any Partner, the Partnership shall also make a timely election under Section 754 of the Code upon a distribution of property or money to a Partner.

6.3 Transfers of Interests in Partners.

6.3.1 The transfer of a majority of the issued and outstanding capital stock (or equivalent interest) of a Partner or a controlling interest of a Partner, however accomplished, whether in a single transaction or in a series of related or unrelated transactions, and whether directly [*72] or by transfer of stock (or equivalent interest) of a direct or indirect parent corporation or other entity or otherwise, shall be deemed to be a purported Transfer of an interest in the Partnership for purposes of this Agreement.

6.3.2 Except as provided in Section 6.3.3, MNG agrees that it will not Transfer (whether voluntarily, involuntarily or by operation of law) all or any part of its ownership interests in the Class A Limited Partner, without the consent of the General Partner, which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld (MNG acknowledges and agrees that the General Partner's ability to grant consent to a Transfer is circumscribed by certain contractual restrictions under the Joint Venture's financing arrangements and the withholding of consent by the General Partner in order to comply with these contractual restrictions will not be considered unreasonable).

6.3.3 The restriction of Section 6.3.1 shall not apply and no consent of the General Partner shall be required for (x) a Transfer directly or indirectly by MNG or CPC of its ownership interests in the Class A Limited Partner or any Class B Limited Partner to an Affiliate of MNG so long as (1) all of the other requirements [*73] of this Article VI have been complied with and (2) MNG or a MNG Affiliate holds and maintains, directly or indirectly, voting control of such Transferee following such Transfer, and (y) the grant of a security interest in the ownership interests in the Class A Limited Partner or any Class B Limited Partner.

6.4 Other Consents and Requirements. Any Transfer must be in compliance with all requirements imposed by any state securities administrator having jurisdiction over the Transfer and the United States Securities and Exchange Commission.

6.5 Assignment Not In Compliance. Any Transfer in contravention of any of the provisions of this Article VI (whether voluntarily, involuntarily or by operation of law) shall be void and of no effect, and shall neither bind nor be recognized by the Partnership.

6.6 Pledge. Each Partner and any permitted Transferee of each Partner may collaterally assign its Partnership Interest and its attendant rights under this Agreement to the Joint Venture's lenders for security purposes. Each Limited Partner may at any time assign its Partnership Interest and its rights under this Agreement as collateral security to Persons extending financing to such Limited Partner [*74] or any of its Affiliates (and such Persons may at any time foreclose on such security interest).

6.7 Division of Partnership Interests. The several rights and obligations inherent in the Capital Account and Partnership Interest are indivisible except in equal proportions, such that the assignment of a specified percentage of a Partner's Partnership Interest may only represent an equal percentage of the total Capital Account that was attributable to such Partner's Partnership Interest prior to the assignment.

6.8 Withdrawal of Partners. No Partner may withdraw from the Partnership except upon the transfer of its Partnership Interest permitted under the provisions of this Agreement or upon the dissolution and winding up of the Partnership in accordance with the provisions of Article VII. For purposes of this Agreement, the term "withdrawal" does not include the happening of any event described in Section 17-402(a)(4) or (5) of the Act, and no Partner shall cease to be a Partner solely upon the happening of such event(s). The withdrawal of a Partner shall not alter the allocations and distributions to be made to the Partners pursuant to this Agreement.

6.9 Issuance of Partnership Interests. [*75] Subject to the provisions of any Put/Call Agreement, the General Partner may cause the Partnership to issue additional Partnership Interests to any Person and may admit to the Partnership as additional Partners the Person acquiring such Partnership Interests, if such Persons were not previously admitted as Partners. The Persons acquiring such Partnership Interests shall have the rights and be subject to the obligations set forth in this Agreement as it may be amended in accordance with Section 9.8 in connection therewith. A Person admitted as a new Partner shall only be entitled to distributions and allocations of Net Profit and Net Loss attributable to the period beginning on the effective date of its admission to the Partnership, and the Partnership shall attribute Net Profit and Net Loss to the period before the effective date of the admission of a new Partner and to the period beginning on the effective date of the admission of a new Partner by the closing of the books method. The Partnership will not issue any additional Class A Limited Partner Units to any other Person without the consent of the Class A Limited Partner and will not issue Class B Limited Partner Units to any other [*76] Person without the consent of the holders of the majority of the Class B Limited Partner Units.

ARTICLE VII

Dissolution and Liquidation

7.1 Events of Dissolution. The Partnership shall be dissolved, terminated and liquidated upon the happening of any of the following events:

(a) the expiration of the term of the Partnership as set forth in Section 2.7;

(b) at such time as the JOA shall expire or otherwise terminate;

(c) upon mutual agreement of the Partners; or subject to any provision of this Agreement that limits or prevents dissolution, the happening of any event that, under applicable law, causes the dissolution of a limited partnership.

7.2 Liquidation. Upon dissolution of the Partnership for any reason, the Partnership shall immediately commence to wind up its affairs in accordance with this Article VII. A reasonable period of time shall be allowed for the orderly termination of the Partnership's business, discharge of its liabilities, and distribution or liquidation of the remaining assets so as to enable the Partnership to minimize the normal losses attendant to the liquidation process. The dissolution and liquidation of the Partnership shall be conducted and supervised by the General [*77] Partner, who is hereby authorized and empowered to execute on behalf of the Partnership any and all documents necessary or desirable to effectuate the dissolution and liquidation of the Partnership and the transfer of any property of the Partnership.

7.3 Priority on Liquidation. The General Partner shall, to the extent feasible, liquidate and/or distribute the assets of the Partnership as promptly as shall be practicable consistent with the other provisions hereof. Such assets, or the proceeds of such liquidation, shall be applied as follows:

7.3.1 first, to the payment of the debts and liabilities of the Partnership, in the order of priority provided by law (excluding any loans by any Partner to the Partnership);

7.3.2 second, the Partnership shall distribute to the Class A Limited Partner the Mail masthead, all trademarks, copyrights, trade names, service names and service marks of the Mail, subscriber and advertiser lists, print and electronic archives of the Mail, associated websites and URLs (including "dailymail.com") and all legal rights associated with these assets, subject to such dispositions, additions or substitutions relating thereto which may have occurred in the ordinary [*78] course of the operations of the Partnership or the Joint Venture subsequent to the date hereof, including in particular, any and all lists of advertisers and subscribers to Mail, together with copies of any contracts with such subscribers relating to Mail and any executory contracts for the purchase of advertising in Mail, free and clear of any lien, encumbrance, right or interest (including any option or any license or other right of use) of or in favor of a third party, transfer restriction (including any right of first offer or refusal or similar provision) or any other similar right or interest whatsoever;

7.3.3 third, to the payment of loans by any Partner to the Partnership and the payment of the expenses of liquidation;

7.3.4 fourth, to the setting up of any reserve which the General Partner may deem reasonably necessary for contingent or unforeseen liabilities or obligations of the Partnership or any liability or obligation not then due and payable; provided, however, that any such reserve shall be paid over by the General Partner into a Partnership account established for such purpose, to be held in such account for the purpose of disbursing such reserves in payment of such [*79] liabilities, and, at the expiration of such holdback period as the General Partner shall deem advisable, to distribute the balance thereafter remaining in the manner herein provided; and

7.3.5 fifth, to payment to the Partners, in accordance with the following order of priority:

(a) First, the Partnership shall distribute to the Class A Limited Partner, subject to the prior satisfaction of the claims of all creditors, cash in an amount equal to the aggregate cash distributed to the Partnership from the Joint Venture pursuant to clause (2)(a) of Section VI B of the JOA.

(b) Thereafter, the Partnership shall distribute all remaining assets to the Class B Limited Partner(s) and the General Partner in accordance with their respective Capital Account balances.

7.4 Statements on Liquidation. Each of the Partners shall be furnished with a statement which shall set forth the assets and liabilities of the Partnership as at the date of dissolution and as at the date of complete liquidation, the share of each Partner thereof, and a reasonably detailed report of the manner of disposition of the assets of the Partnership. Upon compliance with the foregoing distribution plan and completion of the winding [*80] up process, the Partnership shall be terminated and the General Partner shall cause the cancellation of the Certificate of Limited Partnership and all qualifications of the Partnership as a foreign limited partnership in jurisdictions other than the State of Delaware and shall take such other action as may be necessary to terminate the Partnership.

7.5 Return of Capital or Partition. No Partner shall have any right to receive its Capital Contribution or any profit of the Partnership or to obtain a partition of assets of the Partnership or to cause the dissolution of the Partnership other than as provided in this Agreement. The General Partner shall not be personally liable for the return of the Capital Contributions of the Limited Partners, or of any portion thereof, it being expressly understood that any such return shall be made solely from Partnership assets.

ARTICLE VIII

Records and Accounting

8.1 Books and Records. At all times during the continuance of the Partnership, the General Partner shall keep or cause to be kept books of account of the transactions of the Partnership consistent with the provisions of the JOA. The books of account, records and all documents and other writings [*81] of the Partnership shall be kept and maintained at the principal office of the Partnership or of the General Partner. Each Partner and its representatives shall, upon reasonable notice to the General Partner, have access to such books, records and documents during reasonable business hours and may inspect and make copies of any of them at its own expense.

8.2 Bank Accounts. The General Partner may from time to time open and maintain on behalf of the Partnership a bank account or accounts with such depositaries as the General Partner shall determine, in which monies received by or on behalf of the Partnership shall be deposited. All withdrawals from such accounts shall be made upon the signature of such Person or Persons as the General Partner may from time to time designate.

8.3 Required Filings. The General Partner shall cause the Partnership to file, on or before the dates the same may be due, giving effect to extensions obtained, all reports, returns and applications which may be required by any taxing authority or other governmental body having jurisdiction. The General Partner shall timely deliver to each of the Partners such information, including Schedules K-1, as may be necessary [*82] for the preparation by such Partner of its Federal, state or other tax returns.

ARTICLE IX

Miscellaneous

9.1 Supervision of Editorial Staff. In order to fulfill its obligations under the JOA, CPC shall exercise exclusive supervision over all editorial and reportorial functions of the Mail. CPC shall select the staff, designate all editors and newsroom managers, make all newsroom assignments, and set all editorial policies for the Mail. DGHC, as General Partner of the Partnership, shall cause the Joint Venture to employ the employees selected by CPC and to assign those employees to work exclusively as the staff of the Mail. CPC shall have complete control and authority over the editors and other staff of the editorial department of the Mail (including the exclusive authority to determine the number, identity and salaries of the editorial department of the Mail and to make hiring and firing decisions, so long as the Editorial Expense for the Mail does not exceed the approved budgeted amount for the Mail). The term "editorial department" as used herein shall include the news, editorial, editorial promotion and photographic functions of the Mail.

9.2 Notices. All notices, demands and other [*83] communications which may or are to be given hereunder or with respect hereto shall be in writing, shall be given either by personal delivery, facsimile or by certified or special express mail or recognized overnight delivery service, first class postage prepaid, or when delivered to such delivery service, charges prepaid, return receipt requested, and shall be deemed to have been given or made when personally received by the addressee, addressed as follows:

9.3 Further Assurances. The Partners will execute and deliver such further instruments and do such further acts and things as may be required to carry out the intent and purposes of this Agreement.

9.4 Agreement in Counterparts. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts and all counterparts so executed shall constitute one agreement binding on all the parties hereto notwithstanding that all the parties hereto are not signatories to the original or to the same counterpart.

9.5 Captions. Captions contained in this Agreement are inserted as a matter of convenience and in no way define the scope of this Agreement or the intent of any provision hereof.

9.6 Construction. None of the provisions of this Agreement shall be for the benefit of or be enforceable by any creditor of the Partnership or of any Partner (subject to the security interest and other rights in favor of the Joint Venture's lenders).

9.7 Successors. Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Agreement, all provisions of this Agreement shall be binding upon, inure to the benefit of, and [*85] be enforceable by or against the successors and permitted assigns of the parties hereto.

9.8 Amendments.

9.8.1 This Agreement may be modified or amended only upon the written agreement of each of the Partners (and subject to any applicable contractual restrictions under the Joint Venture's financing arrangements), except that this Agreement may be amended from time to time by the General Partner without the consent of the Limited Partners:

(a) to reflect the rights and obligations of a Person admitted as a Partner upon the issuance of Partnership Interests pursuant to Section 6.9 and any change in the rights and obligations of any existing Partner upon the issuance to any Person of partnership interests pursuant to Section 6.9, provided that the consent of an affected Limited Partner and/or the Warrant Holder shall be required to the extent such amendment adversely affects the interests of such Limited Partner and/or the Warrant Holder, as the case may be;

(b) to change the Partnership's principal office or other place of business;

(c) to change the Partnership's method of allocating income and loss for tax purposes to the extent required by new or changes to Treasury Regulations, Internal [*86] Revenue Service announcements or rulings, or final courts decisions, provided that the consent of an affected Limited Partner and/or the Warrant Holder shall be required to the extent such amendment adversely affects the interests of such Limited Partner and/or the Warrant Holder, as the case may be;

(d) to add to the representations, duties or obligations of the General Partner (other than duties or obligations relating to the editorial and reportorial functions of the Mail); and

(e) to cause to be deleted from this Agreement any provision or part of any provision that is found by a court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid or unenforceable in any respect, which provision may be deleted from this Agreement by the General Partner to the extent of such invalidity or unenforceability without in any way affecting the remaining parts of such provision or the remaining provisions of this Agreement.

No change in the number of General Partner Units or Class B Limited Partner Units (whether by an amendment or otherwise) will be effective unless it has been executed or approved in writing by the holders of a majority of the Class B Limited Partner Units (or, prior to the exercise in full of [*87] the Warrant (or the termination of the Warrant), the Warrant Holder).

9.8.2 The General Partner will give notice to the Limited Partners (and, prior to the exercise in full (or termination) of the Warrant, the Warrant Holder) ten days prior to any modification or amendment to this Agreement pursuant to this Section 9.8.

9.8.3 The General Partner will cause the Partnership to prepare and file any amendment to the Certificate of Limited Partnership that may be required to be filed under the Act as a consequence of any amendment to this Agreement.

9.9 Governing Law. This Agreement and the rights and obligations of the Partners shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of Delaware, without regard to its conflicts of laws principles.

9.10 Integration. This Agreement amends and restates the Prior Partnership Agreement in its entirety. This Agreement, together with the JOA and the Warrant, constitute the entire agreement among the parties hereto pertaining to the subject matter hereof and supersedes all prior agreements (oral or written) and understandings pertaining thereto. In the event of any conflict between this Agreement and the JOA, this Agreement shall [*88] control.

9.11 Severability. The invalidity of any article, section, subsection, clause or provision of this Agreement shall not affect the validity of the remaining articles, sections, subsections, clauses or provisions hereof.

9.12 Representations by Partners. Each Partner represents and warrants to the other Partners and the Partnership that this Agreement is and will remain its valid and binding agreement, enforceable in accordance with its terms. Each Partner represents and warrants to the Partnership and the other Partners that: (i) it is fully aware that its Partnership Interest is not being registered under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, and has been issued and sold in reliance upon federal and state exemptions for transactions not involving a public offering, that its Partnership Interest cannot and will not be sold or transferred except in a transaction that is exempt from registration under federal and state securities laws, and that such Partner is an "accredited investor" within the meaning of Regulation D under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended.

9.13 Non-Disclosure. Each Partner agrees that, except as otherwise consented to by the General Partner, all non-public [*89] information furnished to it or to which it has access pursuant to this Agreement will be kept confidential and will not be disclosed by such Partner or by any of its agents, representatives or employees, in any manner whatsoever, in whole or in part, except that:

(a) each Partner shall be permitted to disclose such information to those of its (and its Affiliates') Affiliates, agents, representatives and employees who need to be familiar with such information in connection with such Partner's investment in the Partnership and who agree to maintain the confidentiality thereof in accordance with the provisions of this Section 9.13;

(b) each Partner shall be permitted to disclose such information to its Affiliates;

(c) each Partner shall be permitted to disclose information to the extent required by law, including federal or state securities laws or regulations, by the rules and regulations of any stock exchange or association on which securities of such Partner or any of its Affiliates are traded or by subpoena or other legal process so long as such Partner shall have first given the Partnership notice in advance of such disclosure (so that the Partnership may attempt to contest the necessity [*90] of disclosing such information) to the extent practicable under the circumstances;

(d) each Partner shall be permitted to disclose information to the extent necessary for the enforcement of any right of such Partner arising under this Agreement;

(e) each Partner shall be permitted to disclose information to a permitted Transferee or a prospective Permitted Transferee, so long as such Person agrees (in a writing which provides the Partnership with an independent right of enforcement) to be bound by the provisions of this Section;

(f) each Partner shall be permitted to disclose information that is or becomes generally available to the public other than as a result of a disclosure by such Partner, its agents, representatives, or employees; and

(g) each Partner shall be permitted to disclose information that becomes available to such Partner on a nonconfidential basis from a source (other than the Partnership, any other Partner, or their respective agents, representatives, and employees) that, to the best of such Partner's knowledge, is not prohibited from disclosing such information to such Partner by a legal, contractual, or fiduciary obligation to the Partnership or any other Partner or [*91] hat is derived by such Partner or its agents without reliance on information the disclosure of which is prohibited by this Section 9.13.

9.14 Execution of Papers. The Partners agree that they will not unreasonably refuse to execute such instruments, documents and papers as the General Partner deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the intent of this Agreement.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have each caused this Agreement to be duly executed by their respective officers duly authorized.

2. THE COMPANY AND ITS BUSINESS

(a) Formation. The Company was formed on April 12, 2004, pursuant to the provisions of the Act. Except as provided in this Agreement, all rights, liabilities, and obligations among the Member, the Company, and other Persons, shall be as provided in the Act, and this Agreement shall be construed in accordance with the provisions of the Act. To the extent that the rights or obligations of the Member are different by reason of any provision of this Agreement than they would be in the absence of such provision, this Agreement shall, to the extent permitted by the Act, control.

(b) Filing of Certificate of Limited Liability Company. The Member has caused the Certificate to be filed with the Secretary of State of Delaware and shall cause the Certificate to be filed or recorded in any other public office where filing or recording is required or advisable. The Member shall do, and continue to do, all [*96] other things that are required or advisable to maintain the Company as a limited liability company existing pursuant to the laws of the State of Delaware.

(c) Company Name. The name of the Company shall be "Daily Gazette Holding Company, LLC." The business of the Company may be conducted under that name or, upon compliance with applicable laws, any other name that the Member deems appropriate or advisable. The Member shall file any assumed name certificates and similar filings, and any amendments thereto, that the Member considers appropriate or advisable.

(d) Term of the Company. The term of the Company commenced on the date of the filing of the Certificate with the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware and shall continue until the Company is dissolved and its affairs wound up in accordance with the Act and Article 8 of this Agreement.

(e) Purpose of the Company. The purpose of the Company is to do all lawful acts and things necessary, appropriate, proper, advisable, incidental to, or convenient for the furtherance and accomplishment of the foregoing purpose.

(f) Authority of the Company. The Company shall be empowered and authorized to do all lawful acts and things necessary, appropriate, [*97] proper, advisable, incidental to, or convenient for the furtherance and accomplishment of its purposes.

(g) Principal Office and Other Offices; Registered Agent. The address of the Company's registered office which is required to be maintained by the Company in the State of Delaware pursuant to Section 18-104 of the Act shall be located at Corporation Service Company, 2711 Centerville Road, Suite 400, Wilmington, Delaware 19808, and the name of the Company's registered agent at such address is Corporation Service Company. The principal office of the Company shall be c/o Corporation Service Company, 2711 Centerville Road, Suite 400, Wilmington, Delaware 19808. The Company may maintain any other offices at any other places that the Board of Managers deems advisable. The Company may, upon compliance with the applicable provisions of the Act, change its principal office or registered agent from time to time at the discretion of the Board of Managers.

(h) Foreign Qualification. The Company shall take all necessary actions to be authorized to conduct business legally in all appropriate jurisdictions, including registration or qualification of the Company as a foreign limited liability company [*98] in those jurisdictions that provide for registration or qualification.

(i) Fiscal Year. The fiscal year of the Company shall be the calendar year. The Company shall have the same fiscal year for income tax purposes and for financial accounting purposes.

3. COMPANY CAPITAL

(a) Capital Contributions. The Member shall make such capital contributions to the Company as it deems appropriate.

(b) Disbursements. Subject to Section 5 hereof, the Company shall pay all costs and expenses of the Company business. The Company may set aside funds for any items that are proper Company purposes, as determined by the Board of Managers.

4. CASH DISTRIBUTIONS; ALLOCATIONS OF PROFITS AND LOSSES

(a) Distributions. All cash of the Company available for distribution shall be distributed to the Member at such times and in such amounts as the Board of Managers may determine.

(b) Allocations of Profits and Losses. All profits and losses of the Company shall be allocated to the Member.

5. RIGHTS AND POWERS OF THE MEMBER; BOARD OF MANAGERS.

(a) Management Rights Generally. The responsibility and control of the management and conduct of the Company's day-to-day activities and operations shall be vested in the Member, subject [*99] to Section 5(b) below.

(b) Board of Managers.

(i) The business and affairs of the Company shall be managed by or under the direction of a Board of Managers (the "Board of Managers") and all actions outside of the ordinary course of business of the Company, to be taken by or on behalf of the Company, shall require the approval of the Board of Managers. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement, the Board of Managers shall have the duties, powers and rights of the board of directors of a corporation organized under the General Corporation Law of the State of Delaware (it being understood and agreed, nonetheless, that the individual Managers appointed by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) as provided below represent the interests of the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s)).

(ii) The Board of Managers shall consist of up to five individual Managers appointed by the Member and in no event may the Board of Managers consist of more than five Managers without the consent of the Class B Managers; provided, however, that in no event may the Board of Managers consist of more than five Managers unless not fewer than forty percent (40%) of the Managers are Class [*100] B Managers. Unless and until the Warrant Holder exercises its rights under the Warrant to purchase any Class B Limited Partner Units, the Member shall delegate its right to appoint two (2) of the Managers (or such greater number as required by the first sentence of this section) to the Warrant Holder, and upon the purchase by the Warrant Holder of any Class B Limited Partner Units pursuant to the Warrant, the Member shall delegate its right to appoint two (2) of the Managers (or such greater number as required by the first sentence of this section) to the Class B Limited Partner(s). If there is more than one Class B Limited Partner, then the right to appoint two (2) of the Managers (or such greater number as required by the first sentence of this section) will be vested solely in the Class B Limited Partner that supervises editorial and reportorial functions of The Charleston Daily Mail pursuant to Section 9.1 of the Partnership Agreement. Neither the Warrant Holder nor the Class B Limited Partner(s) may appoint current employees of the Joint Venture, the Member, the Company, the Partnership or Daily Gazette Publishing Company, LLC to represent it on the Board of Managers.

(iii) The [*101] Board of Managers shall only have the power and authority to act by the vote of the constituent Managers and no individual Manager, in the capacity of Manager, shall have the power or authority to act as the agent or representative of the Company or to otherwise bind the Company. Voting by the Managers shall be on a per capita basis. Actions may be taken by the Board of Managers by, but only by, a majority vote of the Managers; provided, however, that actions by the Board of Managers concerning (x) the budgeted Editorial Expenses (as that term is defined in the JOA) for The Charleston Gazette and The Charleston Daily Mail or (y) "news hole" and color usage allocations for The Charleston Gazette and The Charleston Daily Mail shall require the prior approval of at least 75% of the Managers (i.e., if the Board of Managers consists of four Managers, not fewer than three Managers must vote in favor of the particular action, and if the Board of Managers consists of five Managers, not fewer than four Managers must vote in favor of the particular action); provided further that no Manager appointed by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s), as the case may be, shall participate [*102] in any decisions concerning the news, editorial policy or content of The Charleston Gazette or The Charleston Gazette-Mail or have any connection with the news and editorial operations of The Charleston Gazette or The Charleston Gazette-Mail, and all such decisions shall be made exclusively by the Managers appointed by the Member. Either the Member or, as applicable, the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) may at any time, by written notice to the other, remove its Managers, with or without cause, and substitute Managers to serve in their stead. No Manager shall be removed from office, with or without cause, without the consent of the Person that designated such Manager. Each Manager appointed by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) may act (or refrain from acting), and the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) may instruct such Managers, in their capacity as such, to act (or refrain from acting) solely according to the interests (or the perceived interests) of the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) and none of the foregoing shall be deemed to breach any fiduciary duty that, pursuant to this Agreement or at law or in equity, the [*103] Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s) otherwise would be deemed to have to the Company, the Partnership or the Member. The Board of Managers shall hold such meetings no less frequently than once per calendar quarter and at such times and places as shall be determined by the Managers. Special meetings of the Board of Managers may be called at any time by agreement of the Managers. The Board of Managers may establish such procedures for the conduct of meetings as may be agreed by the Managers.

(c) Officers. The Board of Managers may appoint such officers, from time to time, as the Board of Managers deems necessary and advisable.

(d) Authority of the Member. Subject to the management of the business and affairs of the Company by the Board of Managers pursuant to Section 5(b) hereof, the Member shall have all powers necessary to manage and control the day-to-day activities and operations of the Company.

(e) Admission of Additional Members. The Member, in its discretion, may admit additional members to the Company on terms and conditions agreed to by the Member and the Person being admitted as an additional member; provided, however, that the Board of Managers shall not consist [*104] of more than five Managers without the consent of the Class B Managers and in no event may the Board of Managers consist of more than five Managers if fewer than forty percent (40%) of the Managers are Class B Managers.

(f) Limitation of Liability of the Member and Managers. The debts, obligations, and liabilities of the Company, whether arising in contract, tort, or otherwise, shall be solely the debts, obligations, and liabilities of the Company; and the Member and the Managers shall not be obligated personally for any such debt, obligation, or liability of the Company solely by reason of being the Member or a Manager, except and only to the extent as otherwise expressly required by law.

(g) Indemnification.

(i) In any threatened, pending, or completed claim, action, suit, or proceeding to which the Member or a Manager was or is a party or is threatened to be made a party by reason of its activities on behalf of the Company, the Company shall indemnify and hold harmless such Member and Manager against losses, damages, expenses (including attorneys' and accountants' fees), judgments, and amounts paid in settlement actually and reasonably incurred in connection with such claim, action, [*105] suit, or proceeding, except that the Member and the Managers shall not be indemnified for actions constituting the improper receipt of personal benefits, willful misconduct, recklessness, or gross negligence with respect to the business of the Company; provided, however, that to the extent the Member or a Manager has been successful on the merits or otherwise in defense of any action, suit, or proceeding to which it was or is a party or is threatened to be made a party by reason of the fact that it was or is a Member or Manager of the Company, or in defense of any claim, issue, or matter in connection therewith, the Company shall indemnify such Member and Manager and hold him harmless against the expenses (including attorneys' and accountants' fees) actually incurred by such Member and Manager in connection therewith.

(ii) Expenses (including attorneys' and accountants' fees) incurred in defending a civil or criminal claim, action, suit, or proceeding shall be paid by the Company in advance of the final disposition of the matter upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of the Member or a Manager to repay such amount if such Member or Manager is ultimately determined not to be [*106] entitled to indemnity.

(iii) For purposes of this Section 5(g), the termination of any action, suit, or proceeding by judgment, order, settlement, or otherwise adverse to the Member or a Manager shall not, of itself, create a presumption that the conduct of such Member or Manager constitutes willful misconduct, recklessness, or gross negligence with respect to the business of the Company.

6. PERMITTED TRANSACTIONS

(a) Other Businesses. The Member, the Managers and their respective affiliates, agents, and representatives, may engage in or possess an interest in other business ventures of any nature or description, independently or with others, whether currently existing or hereafter created and whether or not competitive with or advanced by the business of the Company. The Company shall not have any rights in or to the income or profits derived therefrom.

(b) Transactions with the Company. The Company may, in the sole discretion of the Board of Managers, contract with any Person (including the Member or any Person affiliated with the Member or in which the Member may be interested) for the performance of any services which may reasonably be required to carry on the business of the Company, [*107] and any such Person dealing with the Company, whether as an independent contractor, agent, employee, or otherwise, may receive from others or from the Company profits, compensation, commissions, or other income incident to such dealings.

7. ASSIGNMENT, TRANSFER, OR SALE OF INTERESTS IN THE COMPANY

Subject to the Put/Call Agreement, the Company may sell, assign, pledge, or otherwise encumber or transfer all or any part of its interest in the Company to any Person.

8. DISSOLUTION AND TERMINATION OF THE COMPANY

(a) Events of Dissolution. The Company shall dissolve upon the earlier to occur of:

(i) an election to dissolve the Company made by the Board of Managers, subject to any restriction in any agreement to which the Company is a party; or

(ii) the happening of any event that, under the Act, causes the dissolution of a limited liability company.

(b) Actions on Dissolution. Upon the dissolution of the Company, the Board of Managers shall act as liquidator to wind up the Company. The proceeds of liquidation shall be applied first to the payment of the debts and liabilities of the Company (including any loans to the Company made by the Member), the expenses of liquidation, and the establishment [*108] of any reserves that the liquidator deems necessary for potential or contingent liabilities of the Company. Remaining proceeds shall be distributed to the Member as provided in Section 4(a). Upon the dissolution and winding up of the Company, the liquidator shall file a certificate of cancellation with the Secretary of State of Delaware in accordance with Section 18-203 of the Act. Upon the completion of the distribution of Company assets and the proceeds of liquidation as provided in this Section 8(b), the Company shall be terminated.

9. BOOKS, RECORDS, AND RETURNS

(a) Books of Account and Records. A copy of this Agreement and any other records required to be maintained by the Act shall be maintained at the principal office of the Company at the location specified in Section 2(g). All such books and records shall be available for inspection and copying by the Member or its duly authorized representatives during ordinary business hours. The Company shall keep accurate books and records of the operation of the Company which shall reflect all transactions, be appropriate and adequate for the Company's business and for carrying out the provisions of this Agreement.

(b) Deposit of Company [*109] Funds. All revenues, assessments, loan proceeds, and other receipts of the Company will be maintained on deposit in interest-bearing and non-interest bearing accounts and other investments as the Board of Managers deems appropriate.

10. MISCELLANEOUS

(a) Captions. All section or paragraph captions contained in this Agreement are for convenience only and shall not be deemed part of this Agreement.

(b) Pronouns, Singular and Plural Form. All pronouns and any variations thereof shall be deemed to refer to the masculine, feminine, and neuter as the identity of the Person or Persons referred to may require, and all words shall include the singular or plural as the context or the identity of Persons may require.

(c) Further Action. The parties shall execute and deliver all documents, provide all information, and take, or forbear from, all actions that may be necessary or appropriate to achieve the purposes of this Agreement.

(d) Entire Agreement. Except as to matters with respect to which additional agreements are referenced herein, this Agreement contains the entire understanding among the parties and supersedes any prior understandings and agreements between them regarding the subject matter [*110] of this Agreement.

(e) Agreement Binding. This Agreement shall be binding upon the successors and assigns of the parties.

(f) Severability. If any provision or part of any provision of this Agreement shall be invalid or unenforceable in any respect, such provision or part of any provision shall be ineffective to the extent of such invalidity or unenforceability only, without in any way affecting the remaining parts of such provision or the remaining provision of this Agreement.

(g) Counterparts. This Agreement may be signed in counterparts with the same effect as if the signature on each counterpart were upon the same instrument.

(h) Governing Law. This Agreement shall be governed, construed, and enforced in accordance with the laws of the State of Delaware (without regard to the choice of law provisions thereof).

(i) Amendment. This Agreement shall not be amended without the prior written consent of the Warrant Holder or, if applicable, the Class B Limited Partner(s).

(j) No Third-Party Beneficiaries. With the exception of the Warrant Holder, the Class B Limited Partner(s) and the Class B Managers, this Agreement is not intended to, and shall not be construed to, create any right enforceable [*111] by any Person not a party hereto, including any creditor of the Company or of the Member.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned have executed this Agreement to be effective as of the date first above written.

SECOND AMENDED AND RESTATED

JOINT OPERATING AGREEMENT

BY AND AMONG

DAILY GAZETTE COMPANY, A WEST VIRGINIA CORPORATION; DAILY GAZETTE HOLDING COMPANY, LLC, A DELAWARE LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY; CHARLESTON NEWSPAPERS, A WEST VIRGINIA UNINCORPORATED JOINT VENTURE; CHARLESTON NEWSPAPERS HOLDING, L.P., A DELAWARE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP; DAILY GAZETTE PUBLISHING COMPANY, LLC, A DELAWARE LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY; AND CHARLESTON PUBLISHING COMPANY, A DELAWARE CORPORATION

__, 2009

THIS SECOND AMENDED AND RESTATED JOINT OPERATING AGREEMENT (this "JOA") is dated as of __, 2009 by and among Daily Gazette Company, a West Virginia corporation ("DGC"); Daily Gazette Holding Company, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company ("DGHC"); Charleston Newspapers, a West Virginia unincorporated joint venture (the "Joint Venture"); Charleston Newspapers [*112] Holdings, L.P., a Delaware limited partnership (the "Limited Partnership"); Daily Gazette Publishing Company, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company ("DGPC"); and Charleston Publishing Company, a Delaware corporation ("CPC").

WHEREAS, DGHC, the Joint Venture, the Limited Partnership, DGPC and CPC previously entered into an Amended and Restated Joint Venture Agreement dated as of May 7, 2004 (the "Prior JVA"), pursuant to which the Joint Venture prior to the date hereof managed and operated The Charleston Gazette ("Gazette"), The Sunday Gazette-Mail ("Gazette-Mail") and The Charleston Daily Mail ("Mail") (collectively, the "Newspapers" and individually a "Newspaper"), except for the news and editorial departments of Gazette and Gazette-Mail, on one hand, and Mail, on the other, which have remained separate and independent;

WHEREAS, simultaneously with the execution of this agreement, DGC and CPC and certain affiliated parties are effectuating certain transactions relating to the ownership and management of the Joint Venture and which are described herein;

WHEREAS, DGC, CPC, DGHC, DGPC, the Limited Partnership and the Joint Venture desire to amend various provisions of the Prior JVA, [*113] to restate it in its entirety and to supplement it, as herein provided;

WHEREAS, the purpose and intent of the JOA is to provide a plan of common operation of the Newspapers, so as to (1) provide efficient newspaper operations, (2) produce high quality newspapers that are attractive to readers and advertisers and (3) maintain the separate identities and free editorial and news voices of the Newspapers; and

WHEREAS, the JOA will continue to maintain as separate and independent the respective news and editorial operations of the Newspapers consistent with the requirements of the Newspaper Preservation Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1801 et seq.;

NOW THEREFORE, in consideration of the mutual promises contained herein and other good and valuable consideration, the parties hereby agree as follows:

I. THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP

A. General. On May 7, 2004, a limited partnership (the "Limited Partnership") was formed by DGHC, as the sole General Partner, CPC, as the sole Class A Limited Partner, and ABRY/Charleston, Inc., as the sole Class B Limited Partner. Prior to the date hereof, ABRY/Charleston, Inc.'s entire interest as a Class B Limited Partner in the Limited Partnership was redeemed by the Partnership. [*114] Simultaneously herewith, the Limited Partnership is granting to CPC (in its capacity as the holder of the Warrant and any permitted transferee of the Warrant, the "Warrant Holder") a warrant (the "Warrant") to subscribe for and purchase up to an aggregate number of Class B Limited Partner Units in the Limited Partnership that constitute a twenty percent (20%) Percentage Interest (as defined in the Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement of the Limited Partner dated as of the date hereof (the "Limited Partnership Agreement"), by and among DGHC and CPC, the Limited Partnership) as of the date of exercise, subject to adjustment as provided therein.

B. Future Capital Contributions; Capital Assets. CPC and any other limited partners of the Limited Partnership shall have no obligation to make any further contributions to the capital of the Limited Partnership. DGHC shall in the future make such additional contributions to the capital of the Limited Partnership as shall be necessary in its reasonable judgment to (1) fund acquisitions of capital assets necessary for the business and operations of the Limited Partnership and/or the Joint Venture; (2) fund acquisitions of capital assets [*115] necessary for the business and operations of the editorial departments of each of the Newspapers to the extent such editorial departments' tangible capital assets on the date hereof require supplementation or replacement, (3) provide the Limited Partnership and the Joint Venture with adequate working capital, and (4) ensure that the Limited Partnership and the Joint Venture have adequate funds to make on a timely basis the cash distributions and payments contemplated by Section V J (1) through (4) of this JOA. DGHC may from time to time cause the Limited Partnership or the Joint Venture to distribute and transfer to it one or more capital assets of the Limited Partnership so long as after such transfer the Limited Partnership and the Joint Venture shall have, as a result of their remaining capital assets and any other capital assets which DGHC shall at the time contribute or make available to the Limited Partnership and/or the Joint Venture pursuant hereto, capital assets whose adequacy and suitability for the Limited Partnership's and/or the Joint Venture's performance of the business and operations of the Newspapers are substantially the same as prior to such transfer.

C. Management [*116] of Partnership and General Partner. The Limited Partnership shall be managed exclusively by DGHC as the General Partner of the Limited Partnership. The members of DGHC have delegated the management of DGHC to a board of managers consisting of up to five individual managers, and in no event may the board of managers consist of more than five managers without the consent of the managers appointed pursuant to Section 5(b) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s), as applicable; provided, however, that in no event may the board of managers consist of more than five managers unless not fewer than forty percent (40%) are appointed by the Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s), as applicable. DGC will appoint the members of DGHC's board of managers; provided, however, that until and unless the Warrant Holder exercises its rights under the Warrant and purchases any Class B Limited Partner Units, DGC will delegate to the Warrant Holder the right to appoint two (2) of the members of DGHC's board of managers (or such greater number as required by Section 5(b)(ii) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC) and, upon the purchase by the Warrant [*117] Holder of any Class B Limited Partner Units pursuant to the Warrant, DGC will delegate to the Class B Limited Partner(s) the right to appoint two (2) of the members of DGHC's board of managers (or such greater number as required by Section 5(b)(ii) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC). If there is more than one Class B Limited Partner, then the right to appoint two (2) of the members of DGHC's board of managers (or such greater number as required by Section 5(b)(ii) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC) will be vested solely in the Class B Limited Partner that supervises editorial and reportorial functions of the Mail pursuant to Section V H hereof. The Warrant Holder or the Class B Limited Partner(s), as applicable, may not appoint any person who is, at the time of his or her appointment, an employee of the Joint Venture, DGC, DGHC, the Limited Partnership or DGPC to represent it on DGHC's board of managers.

II. THE JOINT VENTURE

A. Continuation of Joint Venture. By this JOA, the Limited Partnership and DGPC shall continue the conduct of a joint venture for the publication of the Newspapers; provided (1) that there shall continue to be no merger, combination or amalgamation of the editorial [*118] or reportorial staff of Gazette and Gazette-Mail, on the one hand, and Mail, on the other hand, (2) that CPC shall continue to independently determine the editorial, news policy and content of Mail and (3) that DGHC shall continue to independently determine the editorial, news policy and content of Gazette and Gazette-Mail.

B. Name and Place of Business. The Joint Venture shall continue to be conducted under the name "Charleston Newspapers" from its place of business at 1001 Virginia Street, East, City of Charleston, County of Kanawha, State of West Virginia.

C. Ownership of and Title to Property. All of the parties hereto hereby confirm and agree that the ownership of and title to all real property and all tangible personal property used in and useful to the Joint Venture is exclusively in the Joint Venture rather than in any other party to this JOA, jointly or individually, and without regard to whether any property was contributed by any party to this JOA to the Joint Venture, was otherwise made available to the Joint Venture by any party to this JOA or was otherwise acquired by the Joint Venture, except that certain property is owned by G.M. Properties, Inc., a West Virginia corporation, [*119] of which all the outstanding shares are owned by the Joint Venture.

D. Revenues, Expenses and Obligations. The Joint Venture shall receive all income and revenues of the Joint Venture and shall pay all expenses incurred or assumed by it. No party hereto shall be or shall become liable upon any contract or other obligation of the Joint Venture or any other party hereto, unless such party shall expressly assume such contract or other obligation or liability is imposed by law.

E. Management of Joint Venture. Subject to the provisions of this JOA concerning the editorial independence of the Newspapers and such other limitations as are expressly set forth in this JOA or the Limited Partnership Agreement, the Limited Partnership shall have complete authority over and exclusive control and management of the business and affairs of the Joint Venture. The Limited Partnership may delegate such general or specific authority to the officers and employees of the Joint Venture with respect to the business and day-to-day operations of the Joint Venture as it may from time to time consider desirable, and the officers and employees of the Joint Venture may exercise the authority granted to them. The [*120] Joint Venture shall indemnify, defend and hold harmless DGPC and the Limited Partnership and its partners (and their respective shareholders, members, partners, directors, managers, officers, employees and agents) from any liability, loss or damage suffered by them by reason of any act or omission by them in connection with the business of the Joint Venture; provided, however, that indemnification shall not be available for any claim that results from the willful misconduct of such person or the breach by such person of its obligations under this JOA or other agreements to which such person may be subject. The Limited Partnership shall not be liable, in damages or otherwise, to the Joint Venture or its direct or indirect partners for any act or omission in the absence of willful misconduct.

III. EDITORIAL INDEPENDENCE

Preservation of the editorial independence of the Newspapers is the essence of this JOA. DGHC and CPC each agree to strictly maintain the separateness of their respective limited liability company and corporate identities, as the case may be, and to retain the editorial independence of Gazette and Gazette-Mail, on the one hand, and Mail, on the other hand. CPC agrees that [*121] neither it nor any affiliate shall have any connection with the news or editorial operations of Gazette or Gazette-Mail. The separate editorial and reportorial staffs of Gazette and Gazette-Mail, on the one hand, and Mail, on the other hand, shall be independent and shall not be merged, combined or amalgamated, and their editorial policies shall be independently determined. DGHC agrees that neither it nor any affiliate shall have any connection with the news or editorial operations of Mail. Actions of DGHC with respect to Mail shall be confined exclusively to its role as General Partner of the Limited Partnership and in such role to cause the Joint Venture to print, sell and distribute the Newspapers, and to solicit and sell advertising space therein, and to perform such other functions as are described in this JOA.

IV. TERM

Unless sooner terminated in accordance with the terms hereof, this JOA shall continue in effect from the date hereof through the close of business on June 30, 2024. This JOA shall thereupon be automatically renewed for additional five-year terms unless any party hereto gives written notice to the contrary to each of the other parties hereto at least 12 months prior [*122] to the end of the then-current term.

V. CONTINUING OPERATIONS

A. General. On and after the date hereof the Joint Venture shall control, supervise, manage and perform all operations (other than the news and editorial operations of the Newspapers) involved in producing, printing, selling and distributing the Newspapers; to determine press runs, press times, page sizes and cutoffs of the Newspapers; to determine whether supplemental products will be distributed in or with one or more Newspapers, including whether and how certain products will be distributed to non-subscribers; to purchase newsprint, materials and supplies as required; to solicit and sell advertising space in the Newspapers; to collect the Newspapers' circulation and advertising accounts receivable; to provide or make available to each Newspaper such parking, subscriptions, messenger services, and data processing services as are reasonable and appropriate (the costs for which shall be borne by the Joint Venture and which shall not be an Editorial Expense); and to make all determinations and decisions and do any and all acts and things necessarily connected with the foregoing activities, including maintaining insurance coverage [*123] that is normal and appropriate for similarly-situated businesses. The parties recognize that DGHC as General Partner of the Limited Partnership shall have general charge and supervision of the business of the Newspapers, but shall treat each of the Newspapers as separate and distinct editorial products, and shall have no duties or authority with respect to the news or editorial functions of Mail.

B. Production. On and after the date hereof, the Joint Venture shall print the Newspapers on equipment owned or leased by the Joint Venture in plant or plants located at such place or places as the Joint Venture may determine, and all operations under this JOA, except the operation of the Newspapers' editorial departments, shall be carried on and performed by the Joint Venture with equipment from the Joint Venture's plant or plants or by independent contractors or agents selected by the Joint Venture. During the term of this JOA, CPC agrees to produce Mail's editorial and news copy, and DGHC agrees to produce Gazette's and Gazette-Mail's editorial and news copy, on equipment which is provided by the Joint Venture or which is compatible with the equipment used by the Joint Venture in its production [*124] facilities.

C. Advertising and Circulation.

(1) In general and subject to the exceptions set forth in clauses (a) through (d) below, the Joint Venture shall have complete control of and the right to determine the advertising and circulation rates for each of the Newspapers, and the Joint Venture shall use its reasonable efforts to sell advertising space in each Newspaper and to sell, promote and distribute each Newspaper as widely as practicable, consistent, however, with the objective of enhancing the overall economic performance of the Joint Venture and the Newspapers considered together in a manner that does not have a material adverse impact on the cash flow of the Joint Venture and the ability of the Joint Venture to make on a timely basis the cash distributions to the Limited Partnership and the payments to CPC contemplated by Section V J (1) through (4) hereof.

(a) The Joint Venture may not reduce the primary circulation area of Mail as of August 1, 2009 without CPC's approval.

(b) For a six month period commencing within a reasonable time after the date hereof, the Joint Venture will promote Mail by offering subscriptions at a 50% discounted rate. This promotion will be applicable [*125] solely to Mail.

(c) Except as set forth in clause (b) above or as otherwise approved by CPC, the Joint Venture will offer the same promotions for Mail and Gazette to potential subscribers.

(d) The Joint Venture will not discriminate against Mail in advertising, promotions or other sales or marketing efforts.

(2) The Joint Venture shall be free to select and alter from time to time the national advertising representative(s) for each of the Newspapers and the commission payable to such national advertising representative(s) and any other terms of such arrangement(s) shall be determined by the Joint Venture; provided, however that the Joint Venture will not discriminate against Mail in advertising, promotions or other sales or marketing efforts.

(3) The Joint Venture will pay to each of the Publisher of Mail and the Circulation Director of the Joint Venture a bonus for increases in Mail's average daily paid print circulation (as stated in the most recent six month audit conducted by the Audit Bureau of Circulations or other reputable third party media auditor). If the average daily paid print circulation of Mail for a six month audit period is greater than the average daily paid print circulation [*126] for the immediately preceding six month audit period, the bonus will be $3.00 per each additional subscriber and will be paid within a reasonable time after the Joint Venture receives the applicable six month audit.

D. Publication Schedule. DGHC shall publish Gazette daily on weekdays and Saturday mornings and Gazette-Mail on Saturday and Sunday mornings, and CPC shall publish Mail daily on weekday mornings. The Joint Venture will not change the press deadlines, delivery targets, number of editions and days of publication of Mail without CPC's approval. If at any time DGHC determines in the good faith exercise of business judgment as General Partner of the Limited Partnership that the continuation of any scheduled publication of any edition(s) of Gazette or Gazette-Mail is no longer in the best interests of those Newspapers and the Joint Venture considered together, then, subject to the Newspaper Preservation Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1801 et seq. (the "Act"), within thirty days after written notice by the Limited Partnership to CPC, the scheduled publication of such edition(s) may be discontinued. The Joint Venture will not discontinue publication of Mail without CPC's approval unless (i) the [*127] incremental revenue from Mail fails to cover Mail's incremental costs and the discontinuation of Mail can be effected by satisfying the failing firm test as applicable to joint operating agreement newspapers under the Act and (ii) the U.S. Department of Justice approves the discontinuation of publication of Mail.

E. Office Space and Equipment. On and after the date hereof, the Joint Venture shall furnish reasonably adequate office space for the separate use of the editorial departments of the Gazette, on the one hand, and Mail on the other hand. Such space shall be furnished with furniture and equipment which in the Joint Venture's reasonable judgment is sufficient and technologically adequate for each Newspaper's news and editorial operations.

F. Other Services. The parties recognize that in addition to the operations with respect to the Newspapers contemplated by this JOA, the Joint Venture may also utilize its production and other facilities, personnel, and agents for any other lawful activities it may deem appropriate, including distributing news, advertising or other information to non-subscribers; distributing or making available all or a portion of the information or advertising [*128] in the Newspapers to subscribers by means of electronic distribution, microfilm, microfiche or mail; commercial printing, including commercial printing of other newspapers; distribution services; and any other activities not inconsistent with its principal business; provided, however, that such activities shall not unreasonably interfere with the printing or distribution of the Newspapers.

G. Future Purchases. On and after the date hereof, subject to Section V H, the Joint Venture shall be responsible for the purchase of all inventory, supplies, equipment and services as it deems to be necessary or desirable in connection with the operation of the Newspapers and other functions as are described in this JOA. In the event of shortages of inventory, supplies, equipment or services, no Newspaper shall be unfairly favored or discriminated against as regards the other.

H. News and Editorial Matters. DGHC and CPC shall furnish complete news and editorial services necessary and appropriate for the publication of their respective Newspapers in the manner provided in this JOA.

(1) Each of DGHC and CPC shall have complete and exclusive control and direction of the editorial department and editorial [*129] policies of its respective Newspapers and shall be responsible for and shall bear all of its respective Editorial Expense (as defined below). Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, each of DGHC and CPC shall have the exclusive right to determine the editorial format, dress, makeup and news and feature content of its respective Newspapers (including the content of all advertisements and advertising matter), and each shall have complete control and authority over the editors and editorial department staff of its respective Newspapers (including the exclusive authority to determine the number, identity and salaries of the editorial department of its respective Newspapers and to make hiring and firing decisions, so long as the Editorial Expense for each Newspaper does not exceed the budgeted amount for such Newspaper for the applicable year determined in accordance with Section V J(8) below). The term "editorial department" as used herein shall include the news, editorial, editorial promotion and photographic functions of the applicable Newspaper. DGHC and CPC each recognize the importance of the editorial quality of their respective Newspapers and each of them agrees to use [*130] reasonable efforts to provide editorial products for their Newspapers which are compatible with the needs of the Charleston, West Virginia area newspaper market and to preserve with respect to their Newspapers a high standard of newspaper quality and journalistic excellence.

(2) The amount of reading content (sometimes known as "news hole") and the amount of color usage of each of the Newspapers shall be determined by the board of managers of the Limited Partnership during the annual budgeting process; provided, however, that the news hole and color usage allocations will be budgeted at the same level for both Mail and Gazette. Each Newspaper may elect to publish pages in excess of their news hole and/or exceed the amount of color usage determined for such Newspapers by the Joint Venture, provided the Joint Venture has the production capacity to accommodate such excesses. However, if any of the Newspapers exceeds its budgeted news hole allocation or color usage, then any newsprint and other production costs attributable to such excess shall be borne by such Newspaper, and upon being invoiced therefor by the Joint Venture, DGHC or CPC, as appropriate, shall reimburse the Joint Venture [*131] for such expense. If, from time to time following the determination by the Joint Venture of the news hole allocation, the Joint Venture shall require a greater news hole allocation for one or more editions of one or more of the Newspapers, the Newspapers shall have no obligation to reimburse the Joint Venture for any additional expense the Joint Venture may incur as a consequence thereof, and the Joint Venture shall reimburse the Newspapers promptly upon being invoiced therefor for any additional expenses the Newspapers may incur as a consequence thereof.

(3) DGHC, independently of CPC, shall develop standards for determining the acceptability of advertising copy for publication in Gazette and Gazette-Mail. CPC, independently of DGHC and the Joint Venture, shall develop standards for determining the acceptability of advertising copy for publication in Mail.

(4) Except as provided otherwise herein, the term "Editorial Expense" as used in this JOA shall mean all costs and expenses associated with the news and editorial departments of each Newspaper, including but not limited to: (a) compensation, including payroll taxes, retirement, pension, health and death benefits, worker's compensation [*132] insurance and group insurance of news and editorial employees; (b) severance pay of news and editorial employees; (c) travel and other expenses of news and editorial employees; (d) press association assessments and charges; (e) charges for news services and editorial wire services; (f) charges for the right to publish news and editorial features, daily or weekly comics and other editorial material of every kind and character; (g) the cost of news and editorial materials, printing, stationery, office supplies and postage for the news and editorial department; (h) donations; (i) the cost of editorial promotions; (j) telegraphic, telephone, long-distance telephone and intemet access charges of the news and editorial departments; (k) charges for the purchase, rental, repair and maintenance of editorial department cameras and related photographic equipment (provided, however, that the term "Editorial Expense" shall not include any cost, charge or expense related to any camera or other equipment made available to the editorial departments of the Newspapers pursuant to Section V E of this JOA, or to any equipment that is an integral part of the production process even though located in the [*133] news and/or editorial department of a Newspaper, or related to any editorial department capital assets owned by either Newspaper); (1) the cost of liability insurance and insurance with respect to libel and right of privacy and similar hazards; and (m) the cost of any Charleston, West Virginia based executive-level management of Mail. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the following shall not be included in the term "Editorial Expense" and shall be separately borne by the Newspaper which incurs them: (i) certain uninsured liabilities for published or excluded material as provided in Section VII B, (ii) costs for excess news hole allocation or color usage as provided in Section V H(2), (iii) costs related to material changes from present, usual or customary practices as provided in Section V H(5), (iv) any interest, indebtedness, amortization, organizational costs or other costs or expenses relating to Mail and (v) except as described in (m) above, any portion of any salaries, expenses, overhead or corporate allocation attributable to any non-Charleston, West Virginia based ownership, management or supervision of Mail.

(5) All Editorial Expense of the editorial departments of Gazette and [*134] Gazette-Mail shall be borne by DGHC, and all Editorial Expense of the editorial department of Mail shall be borne by CPC; provided, however, that costs resulting from any material change by any Newspaper from its present, usual or customary practices that result in additional future newsprint, production or other costs to be incurred on the part of the Joint Venture shall be borne by such Newspaper, and upon being invoiced therefor by the Joint Venture, DGHC or CPC, as appropriate, shall reimburse the Joint Venture for such costs.

I. Accounting Matters. The Joint Venture shall cause to be maintained full and accurate books of account and records showing all transactions hereunder. Such books and records shall be kept on the basis of a year ending December 31 and under the accounting methods currently employed by DGC in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, and shall at all times be kept at the principal place of business of the Joint Venture. The independent auditors of the Joint Venture shall be the independent auditors of DGC. Any changes in accounting method shall be consistent with accepted accounting principles and with changes made generally by DGC, and CPC [*135] shall receive prompt notice of any such changes that could reasonably be expected to have an adverse effect on its interests under this JOA or the Limited Partnership Agreement. CPC and its respective authorized agents or representatives shall have access to and may inspect such books and records at any time and from time to time during ordinary business hours. Statements shall be rendered and settlements under this JOA shall be made on a monthly basis on the 15th day following the end of each monthly accounting period, with annual adjustments as soon as practicable at the conclusion of each year during the term of this JOA. An annual statement shall be furnished by the Joint Venture to the Limited Partnership not later than the 31st day of March of each year, summarizing in reasonable detail and fairly reflecting the transactions and the results of operations under this JOA during the preceding year. All payments shown to be due by CPC, DGHC or the Joint Venture shall be paid within thirty (30) days after the delivery of the applicable statement.

J. Distributions to Partners.

(1) For each year of this JOA, the Joint Venture shall distribute to the Limited Partnership cash equal to the [*136] amount actually expended or accrued as a current liability in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles by CPC for Editorial Expenses during such year; provided, however, that the amount distributed by the Joint Venture to the Limited Partnership pursuant to this Section V J(1) shall not, in respect of any year, exceed the budgeted amount for such year determined by the Joint Venture in accordance with Section V J(8) below; and provided further that the amount to be distributed by the Joint Venture to the Limited Partnership shall be reduced by any obligation of CPC to reimburse the Joint Venture for expenses paid by the Joint Venture on behalf of CPC. The Limited Partnership shall in turn distribute such net amount to CPC.

(2) If, for any year, with the prior written concurrence of the Joint Venture, CPC makes a permanent reduction in its editorial workforce in accordance with the requirements of applicable laws, regulations and agreements, and if and to the extent the severance costs associated with such reduction are not included in CPC's applicable budgeted Editorial Expenses for such year determined in accordance with Section V J(8) below, then (a) the Joint Venture [*137] shall, in addition to the cash amounts described in subsection (1) above, distribute to the Limited Partnership in cash an amount equal to that portion of such severance costs that is reasonable and required to be incurred for such year pursuant to applicable laws, regulations or agreements, and that in any event does not exceed the costs DGHC would have incurred if DGHC had made corresponding reductions.

(3) The distributions described in subsection (1) above shall be made on a monthly basis in increments of 1/12 of the applicable budgeted amount determined by the Joint Venture, subject to adjustment by the Joint Venture at the end of each year so that such aggregate distributions for the year are in such amounts as the Joint Venture shall determine (based on such records and evidence as the Joint Venture may request from CPC) are equal to the amounts expended or accrued by CPC for such year as provided in Section V J(8), but no greater than the budgeted Editorial Expenses of Mail for such year. The distributions described in subsection (2) above shall also be made on a monthly basis and shall be in such amounts as the Joint Venture shall determine (based on such records and evidence [*138] as the Joint Venture may request from CPC) are equal to the amounts expended or accrued by CPC for such period within the applicable budget amounts, with such subsequent adjustment as may be appropriate.

(4) In addition to the distributions to the Limited Partnership and, in turn, to CPC provided for in Sections V J (1)—(3) above, there also shall be paid to CPC a fee for its services in the management and supervision of the news and editorial operations of the Mail. The management fee shall be paid on May 7 of each year during the term of this JOA (each date a "Payment Date"). The amount of the management fee payable on May 7, 2010 shall be $225,000. For each Payment Date after May 7, 2010, the management fee payable to CPC shall be $225,000 adjusted to reflect the aggregate change since May 7, 2010 in the Consumer Price Index. The "Consumer Price Index" for purposes of this JOA shall mean "The Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers (CPI-U) for the U.S. City Average for All Items, 1982-84 = 100" released by the U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, or any similar replacement index. For each Payment Date after May 7, 2010, the management fee payable to CPC shall [*139] also be adjusted annually on a non-cumulative basis as follows:

(a) If Mail's average daily paid print circulation for the most recent 12 month audited period exceeds the average daily paid print circulation for the immediately preceding 12 month audited period by more than 1%, the management fee payable on such Payment Date will be increased by $25,000.

(b) If Mail's average daily paid print circulation for the most recent 12 month audited period is the same as the average daily paid print circulation for the immediately preceding 12 month audited period or if Mail's average daily paid print circulation for the most recent 12 month audited period exceeds the average daily paid print circulation for the immediately preceding 12 month audited period by 1% or less, the management fee payable on such Payment Date will be increased by $10,000.

(c) If Mail's average daily paid print circulation for the most recent 12 month audited period decreases by 1% or less from the average daily paid print circulation for the immediately preceding 12 month audited period, the management fee payable on such Payment Date will be decreased by $10,000 (provided that in no event will the management fee payable [*140] on any Payment Date be reduced to an amount below $225,000).

(d) If Mail's average daily paid print circulation for the most recent 12 month audited period decreases by more than 1% from the average daily paid print circulation for the immediately preceding 12 month audited period, the management fee payable on such Payment Date will be decreased by $25,000 (provided that in no event will the management fee payable on any Payment Date be reduced to an amount below $225,000).

For purposes of the adjustments described in clauses (a) through (d) above, Mail's average daily paid print circulation will be determined based on 12 month audits conducted by the Audit Bureau of Circulations or other reputable third party media auditor.

(5) Except for the foregoing distributions to the Limited Partnership, and except for such cash as the Limited Partnership may from time to time determine is necessary or desirable to retain in the Joint Venture for working capital purposes, the Joint Venture shall (subject to any applicable contractual restrictions under the Joint Venture's financing arrangements) distribute all remaining cash (including without limitation the proceeds from any sale or disposition [*141] of Joint Venture capital assets) equally to the Limited Partnership and DGPC. Such distributions shall be made from time to time as determined by the Limited Partnership, but no such distributions shall be made at any time when the Joint Venture is not current in making the distributions to the Limited Partnership and the payments to CPC described in Section V J(1) through (4) hereof.

(6) Pending the distributions contemplated by this Section V J, DGHC shall be authorized to manage the Joint Venture's cash pursuant to the corporate-wide policies of DGC.

(7) All income, gain, profits, losses, and expenses of the Joint Venture shall be allocated between the Limited Partnership and DGPC in proportion to the cash distributed to them pursuant to this Section V J.

(8) For each year of this JOA, the budgeted Editorial Expenses for Mail and Gazette shall be in amounts determined by the board of managers of DGHC and approved by at least 75% of the members of the board of managers (i.e., if the board consists of four members, not fewer than three members must vote in favor, and if the board consists of five members, not fewer than four members must vote in favor); provided, however that for Mail's [*142] 2010 annual Editorial Expense budget the staffing level in Mail's news and editorial departments will be budgeted at thirty-two (32) full time employees. Any Editorial Expense budget may be adjusted by action of the board of managers of DGHC (subject to the 75% supermajority voting requirement) from time to time during the course of a year of this JOA to take appropriate account of developments in products or technologies, material changes in any Newspaper's editorial workforce, or other material changes which may occur relative to any Newspaper's operations or circulation in any given year.

VI. TERMINATION

A. Termination.

(1) If DGHC or CPC defaults by failing to make any payment hereunder when due or by otherwise failing to fulfill in any material respect any of its obligations under this JOA and the party in default does not correct its default within ninety (90) days after receipt from the other of written notice specifying the default, then the non-defaulting party may, at its election, terminate this JOA upon ninety (90) days' prior written notice.

(2) If publication of Mail is discontinued in accordance with the terms of this JOA or the Limited Partnership is dissolved, terminated [*143] and liquidated, this JOA shall terminate.

B. Action After Termination.

(1) It is understood that, as soon as practicable after the termination of this JOA by lapse of time or otherwise, the Limited Partnership shall, subject to the prior satisfaction of the claims of all creditors (other than the partners of the Limited Partnership) and the payment of the fee provided in Section V J(4), distribute to CPC, the Mail masthead, all trademarks, copyrights, trade names, service names and service marks of the Mail, the Mail subscriber and advertiser lists, print and electronic archives of the Mail, associated web sites and URLs (including "dailymail.com") and all legal rights associated with these assets, subject to such dispositions, additions or substitutions relating thereto which may have occurred in the ordinary course of the operations of the Limited Partnership or the Joint Venture or in satisfaction of the claims of creditors subsequent to the formation of the Limited Partnership, including, in particular, any and all lists of subscribers to Mail, together with copies of any contracts with such subscribers relating to Mail and any executory contracts for the purchase of advertising [*144] in Mail, free and clear of any lien, encumbrance, right or interest (including any option or any license or other right of use) of or in favor of a third party, transfer restriction (including any right of first offer or refusal or similar provision) or any other similar right or interest whatsoever.

(2) Upon the termination of this JOA by lapse of time or otherwise, the Joint Venture shall dissolve and shall distribute its assets as follows:

(a) That portion of any distributions to which the Limited Partnership may be entitled but which has not yet been distributed for the period up to the date of termination pursuant to Section V J(1) through (3) hereof, shall be distributed to the Limited Partnership.

(b) All other assets of the Joint Venture shall be distributed equally to DGPC and the Limited Partnership.

(3) A partial accounting and partial settlement under this JOA shall be made as promptly as practicable and a final accounting and final settlement shall be made not later than the 31st day of March of the year following the year in which this JOA is terminated.

VII. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

A. Certain Liabilities; Force Majeure. Except as otherwise provided in this JOA, no party shall [*145] be charged with or held responsible for any contract, debt, claim, demand, damage, suit, action, obligation or liability arising by reason of any act or omission on the part of any other party, and no party shall be liable to any other for any failure or delay in performance under this JOA occasioned by war, riot, act of God or the public enemy, strike, labor dispute, shortage of any supplies, failure of supplier or workmen, or any cause beyond the control of the party required to perform, and such failure or delay shall not be considered a default hereunder.

B. Liabilities for Published or Excluded Material. The Joint Venture shall obtain insurance to insure each of the Newspapers against liability for libel and right of privacy in such amount as it deems appropriate, with the premiums for such insurance being an Editorial Expense as provided in Section V H(4). However, the entire cost and expense of defending, settling, paying and discharging any liability or other claim which is not covered by the libel insurance obtained by the Joint Venture (excluding any such cost or expense which is not covered as a result of the application of any deductible amount or co-payment requirement [*146] provided under the insurance policy) for Gazette and Gazette-Mail on account of anything published in or excluded from Gazette or Gazette-Mail, or arising by reason of anything done or omitted to be done by the editorial departments thereof, shall be borne by DGHC; and any similar cost and expense on account of anything published in or excluded from Mail, or arising by reason of anything done or omitted to be done by the editorial department thereof, shall be borne by CPC. DGHC and CPC each agree to indemnify and hold the other party, the Joint Venture and the Limited Partnership harmless against any cost, expense or liability which such other party, the Joint Venture or the Limited Partnership may suffer or incur as a result of any such action or inaction for which the indemnifying party is responsible as provided above.

C. Contravention of Law. Nothing contained in this JOA shall be construed to permit any party acting jointly or by unified action to engage in any predatory pricing, predatory practice or any other conduct which would be unlawful under any antitrust law as engaged in by any single entity. The parties hereto further mutually agree that if any part or provision of this [*147] JOA shall hereafter become, or be determined by action in any proper court to be, in contravention of law, this JOA shall not thereby be considered or adjudged to be a nullity, but that all parties shall, and each hereby agrees, immediately to take, or authorize such action to be taken, to reform this JOA, or to modify, alter or supplement any of its provisions, as may be necessary to permit the intention and purpose of the parties hereto to be properly and lawfully carried out.

D. Further Assurances. From time to time on and after the date hereof, each of the parties hereto will execute all such instruments and take all such actions as the other party shall reasonably request in connection with carrying out and effectuating the intention and purpose hereof and all transactions and things contemplated by this JOA, including, without limitation, the execution and delivery of any and all confirmatory and other instruments and the taking of any and all actions which may reasonably be necessary or desirable to complete the transactions contemplated thereby.

E. Assignments and Transfers.

(1) Except as authorized under the Limited Partnership Agreement, CPC may not sell, assign or transfer [*148] (including any pledge or hypothecation), any of its rights or interests under this JOA or pertaining to the Joint Venture or the Limited Partnership or the Newspapers to any person without the prior written consent of DGHC, which shall not be unreasonably withheld. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, except as authorized under the Limited Partnership Agreement, a controlling interest in the capital stock of CPC may not be sold, assigned or transferred to any person without the prior written consent of DGHC, which shall not be unreasonably withheld. No consent of DGHC shall be required for a transfer relative to the Limited Partnership or any interests therein that is expressly authorized and made in compliance with the transfer provisions under the Limited Partnership Agreement, and, the foregoing transfer restrictions shall not apply to any transfer of any right or interest under this JOA or pertaining to the Joint Venture or the Newspapers to MNG or an affiliate of MNG so long as MNG or an affiliate of MNG holds and maintains, directly or indirectly, voting control of such transferee following such transfer. CPC acknowledges and agrees that DGHC's ability to grant consent [*149] to a transfer is circumscribed by certain contractual restrictions under the Joint Venture's financing arrangements and the withholding of consent by DGHC in order to comply with these contractual restrictions will not be considered unreasonable.

(2) DGC, DGHC, the Limited Partnership, DGPC and the Joint Venture may, without the consent of CPC, sell, assign or transfer a part or all or substantially all of the assets of Gazette and Gazette-Mail as a going concern to any person and assign a part or all of their rights and obligations under this JOA to the purchaser thereof, or sell, assign or transfer part or all of their direct or indirect interests in DGHC, the Limited Partnership, DGPC and the Joint Venture to any person, so long as (1) at the time of such sale the Joint Venture is current in the distributions required to be made to the Limited Partnership and the payments required to be made to CPC pursuant to Section V J(1) through (4) hereof, and (2) the purchaser assumes (in the case of an assets sale) all of the obligations of the assignors pursuant to this JOA. In the event DGC, DGHC, the Limited Partnership, DGPC or the Joint Venture engages in an assets sale contemplated by [*150] this Section VII E, they shall, effective on the closing thereof, be released and discharged from any further liability under this JOA. No consent of CPC shall be required for (i) a pledge by DGC, DGHC, the Limited Partnership, DGPC or the Joint Venture of their rights under this JOA or their direct or indirect interests in DGHC, the Limited Partnership, DGPC and the Joint Venture to the Joint Venture's lenders for security purposes or a transfer of such interests and rights pursuant to any foreclosure action by the Joint Venture's lenders or any transfer in lieu of foreclosure.

F. Other Ventures. Neither DGC nor any Partner of the Limited Partnership may engage in other ventures in the Charleston, West Virginia market that are competitive with that of the Limited Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries (including the Joint Venture). For purposes of this Section VII F, any competitive venture undertaken by an affiliate of a Partner in the Charleston, West Virginia market will be deemed to be a competitive venture undertaken by such Partner.

G. Entire Agreement. This JOA amends and restates the Prior JVA in its entirety.

H. Notices. All notices, requests, demands, claims and other communications [*151] which may or are to be given hereunder or with respect hereto shall be in writing, shall be given either by personal delivery, facsimile or by certified or special express mail or recognized overnight delivery service, first class postage prepaid, or when delivered to such delivery service, charges prepaid, return receipt requested, and shall be deemed to have been given or made when personally received by the addressee, addressed as follows:

I. Announcements/Disclosures. The parties agree that, except as required by law, and then only upon the maximum advance notice to the other parties which is practicable under the circumstances, they will make no public announcement concerning this JOA and the transactions contemplated hereby prior to the first mutually agreed upon announcement thereof without the consent of the other parties as to the form, content, and timing of such announcement or announcements.

J. Headings. Titles, captions or headings contained in this JOA are inserted only as a matter of convenience and for reference and in no way define, limit, extend or describe the scope of this JOA or the intent of any provisions hereof.

K. Governing Law. This JOA shall be construed and enforced in accordance with the internal laws of the State of West Virginia.

L. Modifications. This JOA shall be amended only by an agreement in writing and signed by the party against whom enforcement of any waiver, modification or discharge is sought (subject to any applicable contractual restrictions under the Joint Venture's [*153] financing arrangements).

M. Specific Performance. In addition to any other remedies the parties may have, each party shall have the right to enforce the provisions of this JOA through injunctive relief or by a decree or decrees of specific performance.

N. No Third Party Beneficiaries. Nothing in this JOA, express or implied, shall give to anyone other than the parties hereto (and the parties entitled to indemnification hereunder) and their respective permitted successors and assigns any benefit, or any legal or equitable right, remedy or claim, under or in respect of this JOA.

O. Nature of Relationship. Nothing contained in this JOA shall constitute the parties hereto as alter egos or joint employers or as having any relationship other than as specifically provided herein and in any other agreement to which they are subject. DGHC and CPC each will retain and be responsible for (and will indemnify the other parties, the Joint Venture and the Limited Partnership against) all of their respective debts, obligations, liabilities, and commitments which have not been expressly assumed by the Joint Venture pursuant to this JOA or the Limited Partnership, or for which the Joint Venture was not [*154] already liable under the Prior JVA.

O. Survival. The expiration or termination of this JOA shall not abrogate the rights and obligations of the parties under Section VII (B) or any other provision of this JOA that contemplates actions to be taken after the expiration or termination of this JOA.

P. Dispute Resolution. The terms of Exhibit A attached hereto, which include provisions related to the procedures pursuant to which the parties shall resolve any disputes, claims or controversies arising under, out of or in connection with this JOA are incorporated herein by this reference as if set out herein in full.

Exhibit Ato Amended and Restated Joint Operating Agreement

Dispute Resolution

(a) Any dispute, claim or controversy arising under, out of, in connection with or relating to this JOA, or any course of conduct, course of dealing, statements (oral or written), or actions of any party relating to this JOA, including any claim based on or arising from an alleged tort (each, a "Dispute"), shall be resolved solely in the following manner:

(i) Pre-arbitration procedures.

(A) Each party shall cause one of its senior officers to first meet with the other party's senior officer and attempt to resolve the Dispute by agreement.

(B) Failing resolution, either party may submit to the other party a written request for non-binding mediation. Within ten (10) business days after such written request is made, the parties shall attempt to agree on a single mediator. If the parties cannot agree on a mediator within such period, either party may proceed to implement the arbitration provisions of clause (a)(ii) below.

(C) Mediation shall take place at the place or places and at the time or times set by the mediator, [*156] but shall not be held in public. The rules of procedure, evidence and discovery with respect to any mediation shall be as directed by the mediator. Neither party may be represented at hearings before the mediator by an attorney but the parties may consult with counsel outside the hearing room and counsel may assist in preparing any written materials to be used in the mediation, including statements and briefs.

(D) The mediator shall facilitate communications between the parties and assist them in attempting to reach a mutually acceptable resolution of the Dispute by agreement. The mediator shall make no binding determinations, findings, or decisions.

(E) The mediator's expenses shall be borne equally by the parties.

(F) At any point in the mediation process after the initial meeting with the mediator, either party may declare in writing that an impasse exists, and thereafter either party may proceed to implement the arbitration provisions of clause (a)(ii) below. If the parties have not resolved their dispute pursuant to the provisions of this clause (a)(i) within thirty (30) days after appointment of the mediator, the parties shall immediately proceed to implement the arbitration provisions [*157] of clause (a)(ii) below.

(ii) Arbitration.

(A) All Disputes between the parties that are not resolved under clause (a)(i) above shall be finally resolved by arbitration in accordance with the rules of JAMS (or its successor) described below, subject to the limitations of this clause (a)(ii).

(B) Except as provided in clause (a)(ii)(C), with respect to a Dispute in which the claim, counterclaim or amount in controversy does not exceed Two Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000) (a "Minor Dispute"), a single arbitrator shall decide the Minor Dispute in accordance with the JAMS Streamlined Arbitration Rules and Procedures then in effect (the "Streamlined Rules"). In the event the parties are unable to agree upon an arbitrator, the arbitrator shall be appointed by JAMS under the Streamlined Rules. The arbitrator shall determine the Minor Dispute in accordance with the terms of this JOA and the laws designated in Section VII K of the JOA and shall have authority to render a maximum award of Two Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000), including all damages of any kind and costs, fees and the like.

(C) With respect to a Dispute in which (x) the claim, counterclaim or amount in controversy [*158] exceeds Two Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000), or (y) the resolution of the Dispute may give a party a right to terminate this JOA ("Major Dispute"), any such Major Dispute shall be decided by a majority vote of three arbitrators. In the event the parties are unable to agree on the three arbitrators, the three arbitrators shall be appointed by JAMS under the JAMS Comprehensive Arbitration Rules and Procedures then in effect (the "Comprehensive Rules"). The three arbitrators shall determine the Major Dispute in accordance with the terms of this JOA and the laws designated in Section VII K of this JOA. The majority of the three arbitrators may grant any award, remedy or relief ("Award") that they deem just and equitable and within the scope of this JOA. The majority of the arbitrators may also grant such ancillary relief as is necessary to make effective the Award, including injunctive relief and/or specific performance. In all arbitration proceedings in connection with a Major Dispute, the arbitrators shall make specific, written findings of fact and conclusions of law. In all Major Disputes, the parties shall, in addition to the limited statutory right to seek vacation or modification [*159] of any Award pursuant to applicable law, have the right to seek vacation or modification of any Award that is based in whole, or in part, on an incorrect or erroneous ruling of law by appeal to an appropriate court having jurisdiction; provided, however, that any application for vacation or modification of an Award based on an incorrect ruling of law must be filed in a court having jurisdiction pursuant to clause (c) below within thirty (30) days from the date the Award is rendered. The findings of fact made by the arbitrators shall be binding on all parties and shall not be subject to further review except as otherwise allowed by applicable law.

(D) The non-prevailing party, as determined by the arbitrator or arbitrators, shall be required to pay all of the arbitrator's fees and shall reimburse the prevailing party for any advances made by such party in respect of such fees.

(E) The arbitrator(s) shall not have the power to award (i) damages inconsistent with this JOA or (ii) punitive damages or any other damages not measured by the prevailing party's actual damages, and the parties expressly waive their right to obtain such damages in arbitration or in any other forum. In no event, [*160] even if any other portion of these provisions is held to be invalid or unenforceable, shall the arbitrator(s) have power to make an award or impose a remedy that could not be made or imposed by a court deciding the matter under the law designated in Section VII K of this JOA.

(F) The arbitrator(s) shall have the authority to order the parties to produce documents or things for inspection and to provide appropriate discovery to each other, including the depositions of witnesses and the exchange of expert reports.

(G) Neither the parties nor any arbitrator may disclose the existence, content or results of the arbitration, except as necessary to enforce an Award or comply with legal or regulatory requirements. Before making any such disclosure, a party shall give written notice to all other parties and shall afford these parties a reasonable opportunity to protect their interests.

(H) Except as otherwise provided in clause (a)(ii)(C) above, the result of the arbitration will be binding on the parties, and judgment on the arbitrator's Award may be entered in a court designated in clause (c) below.

(I) At the request of either party, arbitration proceedings shall include an oral hearing for [*161] the presentation of oral testimony and oral argument. Written presentations may also be received. The parties shall have the right to cross-examine witnesses, if requested. The arbitrator(s) shall have the authority to administer oaths and to issue orders requiring the presence of witnesses at the hearing if consistent with the law designated in Section VII K of this JOA, or to apply to a court designated in clause (c) below to issue such orders.

(J) All arbitration hearings will be commenced within sixty (60) days of demand for arbitration by any party, provided, upon a showing of cause, the arbitrator or arbitrators may extend the commencement of such hearing for up to an additional thirty (30) days.

(b) Limitations on Arbitration Requirement.

(i) No provision of, nor the exercise of any rights under, this JOA regarding arbitration shall limit the right of either party to join the other party in litigation in the event of any litigation or proceeding commenced by any third party against a party to this JOA in which the other party is an indispensable party or potential third party defendant (e.g., where such other party may be obligated to indemnify the defendant in such third party [*162] action).

(ii) No provision of, nor the exercise of any rights under, this JOA regarding arbitration shall limit the right of either party to seek provisional or ancillary judicial remedies with respect to any Dispute, such as preliminary injunctive relief, sequestration, attachment, garnishment, or the appointment of a receiver from a court having jurisdiction before, during or after the pendency of any arbitration. The institution and maintenance of an action for such judicial remedies shall not constitute a waiver of the right of any party, including the claimant in such action, to submit to arbitration nor render inapplicable the compulsory arbitration provisions hereof.

(iii) Nothing in this JOA shall be deemed to limit applicability of any otherwise applicable statutes of limitation and any waivers contained in this JOA. No provision in this Exhibit regarding submission to jurisdiction and/or venue in any court is intended or shall be construed to be in derogation of the provisions in this Exhibit for arbitration of any Dispute.

(c) WITH RESPECT TO ANY SUIT, ACTION OR PROCEEDING RELATING TO ANY AWARD OR ANY ACTION, INCLUDING A SUMMARY OR EXPEDITED PROCEEDING, TO COMPEL ARBITRATION [*163] OF ANY DISPUTE TO WHICH THIS EXHIBIT APPLIES, AND FOR ANY OTHER MATTER SO DESIGNATED IN THIS EXHIBIT, EACH PARTY IRREVOCABLY (1) CONSENTS AND SUBMITS TO THE EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OF ANY UNITED STATES FEDERAL COURT OR WEST VIRGINIA STATE COURT SITTING IN THE CITY OF CHARLESTON IN THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, (2) WAIVES ANY OBJECTION THAT IT MAY HAVE AT ANY TIME TO THE LAYING OF VENUE OF ANY SUCH SUIT, ACTION OR PROCEEDING BROUGHT IN SUCH COURT, (3) WAIVES ANY CLAIM THAT ANY SUCH SUIT, ACTION OR PROCEEDING BROUGHT IN ANY SUCH COURT HAS BEEN BROUGHT IN AN INCONVENIENT FORUM, (4) WAIVES THE RIGHT TO OBJECT, WITH RESPECT TO ANY SUCH CLAIM, SUIT, ACTION OR PROCEEDING BROUGHT IN ANY SUCH COURT, THAT SUCH COURT DOES NOT HAVE JURISDICTION OVER THE PARTY, AND (5) WAIVES ALL RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY.

PUT/CALL AGREEMENT

PUT/CALL AGREEMENT, dated as of __ (the "Effective Date"), among DAILY GAZETTE HOLDING COMPANY, LLC, a limited liability company organized under the laws of the State of Delaware ("DGHC"); CHARLESTON NEWSPAPERS HOLDINGS, L.P., a limited partnership organized under the laws of the State of Delaware (the "Limited Partnership"); and __, a __ (the "Class B Partner").

RECITALS

WHEREAS, [*164] the parties desire to enter into this Agreement to set forth certain agreements with respect to the Class B Partner's ownership of its Class B Limited Partner Units, including put rights and call rights;

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the foregoing and the mutual covenants and agreements set forth herein, the parties agree as follows:

"Unit" means an undivided share of the interests in the Limited Partnership of all the Partners, which include the General Partner Units and Class B Limited Partner Units.

"Unpaid Tax Liabilities" means the sum of (i) all unpaid Transfer Tax Liabilities, plus (ii) all unpaid Taxes of the Class B Partner due and owing, (but, in the case of any Tax attributable to income or gain allocated to the Class B Partner by the Limited Partnership, only to the extent that such Tax would have been paid by the Class B Partner if the Class B Partner had used the full amount of all distributions received by it from the Limited Partnership after such Tax became due and payable to pay such Tax and all other Taxes arising thereafter), plus Tax Interest attributable thereto.

ARTICLE II

RESTRICTION ON TRANSFER

2.1 Restriction on Transfer of Class B Limited Partner Units.

(a) Permitted Transfer. Except as otherwise specifically provided in Section 2.1(c), the Class B Partner shall have the right to sell, exchange, transfer, pledge, hypothecate, assign or otherwise dispose of [*170] (any of the foregoing transactions referred to herein as a "Transfer") all or any part of its Class B Limited Partner Units to any Person.

(b) Transfer to an Affiliate. The Class B Partner shall be permitted to Transfer its Class B Limited Partner Units to an Affiliate of the Class B Partner and to assign its Class B Limited Partner Units and its rights under this Agreement as collateral security to Persons extending financing to such Limited Partner or any of their Affiliates (and such Persons may at any time foreclose on such security interest).

(c) Restriction on Transfer. Notwithstanding anything contained in Sections 2.1(a) or 2.1(b) to the contrary, the Class B Partner shall not have the right to Transfer all or any part of its Class B Limited Partner Units to any Person that is, or that is an Affiliate of a Person that is, a publisher of a general circulation daily newspaper (other than a newspaper published by the Joint Venture) whose principal newsroom is located in Kanawha County, West Virginia, or Putnam County, West Virginia; provided, however, that the foregoing restriction shall not apply to a publisher of a general circulation daily newspaper with a circulation market [*171] share in Kanawha and Putnam Counties of 5% or less. Any Transfer that is made in violation of this Section 2.1(c) shall not be permitted and shall be null and void for all purposes.

(d) Transfer Tax Liabilities. Upon a Transfer of any Class B Limited Partner Units by the Class B Partner pursuant to this Section 2.1, the Class B Partner and/or the transferee of such Class B Limited Partner Units shall be liable for all Taxes and Tax Interest, resulting from such Transfer ("Transfer Tax Liabilities") and shall not be entitled to receive any tax distributions under the Limited Partnership Agreement in respect thereof (provided that this Section 2.1(d) shall not affect the Class B Partner's rights to receive distributions in accordance with the Limited Partnership Agreement).

(e) Transfer in Compliance with the Limited Partnership Agreement; Agreement to be Bound by this Agreement. No Transfer may be made pursuant to this Section 2.1 unless such Transfer is also made in accordance with Article VI of the Limited Partnership Agreement and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the transferee of any Class B Limited Partner Units pursuant to this Section 2.1, if not already a party [*172] to this Agreement, shall execute and deliver an agreement to the General Partner by which it agrees to become a party to this Agreement, assume all of the obligations hereunder of its transferor with respect to the Class B Limited Partner Units transferred to it and be bound by the terms and conditions hereof in the same manner as the transferor with respect to such Units. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, any and all Class B Limited Partner Units transferred pursuant to this Section 2.1 shall remain subject to, and shall enjoy the rights under, the Tag-Along Right, Drag-Along Right, Put and Call provisions set forth in Articles III, IV and V hereof and the Class B Limited Partner shall continue to have the Class B Partner Board Right set forth in Article VII hereof and the Limited Partnership Agreement. No Transfer may be made pursuant to this Section 2.1 unless such Transfer is also made in accordance with all applicable laws, including federal and state securities laws.

ARTICLE III

TAG-ALONG RIGHTS

3.1 Tag-Along Rights

(a) If the General Partner proposes to Transfer any General Partner Units ("Transferor Units"), to one or more Persons who is not an Affiliate of the [*173] General Partner (each such Person, a "Buyer"), then, as a condition to such transfer, the General Partner shall cause the Buyer to include an offer (the "Tag-Along Offer") to the Class B Partner to purchase from the Class B Partner, at the option of the Class B Partner, that number of Class B Limited Partner Units as determined in accordance with Section 3.1(b), on the same terms and conditions as are applicable to the Transferor Units (with the portion of the purchase price payable to the Class B Partner being the aggregate amount of the purchase price for all Units included in such sale multiplied by the Tax-Adjusted Residual Class B Partner Percentage). The General Partner shall provide a written notice (the "Tag-Along Notice") of the Tag-Along Offer to the Class B Partner, which may accept the Tag-Along Offer by providing a written notice of acceptance of the Tag-Along Offer to the General Partner within thirty (30) days of the delivery of the Tag-Along Notice. Subject to Section 3.1(e), if the Class B Partner fails to accept a Tag Along Offer within thirty (30) days of delivery of the Tag-Along Notice, the Class B Partner shall cease to have any rights hereunder with respect to [*174] such Tag-Along Offer.

(b) The Class B Partner shall have the right (a "Tag-Along Right") to sell pursuant to the Tag-Along Offer the percentage of its Class B Limited Partner Units then held equal to the percentage of General Partner Units proposed to be sold by the General Partner (which percentage of General Partner Units may be reduced in the sole discretion of the General Partner and the Buyer).

(c) The Class B Partner's Tag-Along Right shall not apply to any (i) pledge by the General Partner of Units for security purposes under any bona fide loan transaction; (ii) Transfer of Units pursuant to a foreclosure action under any bona fide loan transaction; or (iii) Transfer of Units by the General Partner to an Affiliate. If the General Partner Transfers any General Partner Units to an Affiliate of the General Partner, such Affiliate transferee shall become a party to and be bound by the terms of this Agreement to the same extent as the General Partner.

(d) If the Class B Partner fails to accept a Tag-Along Offer within thirty (30) days of delivery of the Tag-Along Notice, the Buyer shall have one hundred twenty (120) days, commencing on the thirtieth (30th) day after delivery of the [*175] Tag-Along Notice to the Class B Partner, in which to purchase on terms no more favorable to the transferor than the terms set forth in the Tag-Along Offer from the General Partner the number of Transferor Units with respect to which the Tag-Along Notice was delivered. If such purchase and sale is not consummated on terms no more favorable to the transferor than the terms set forth in the Tag-Along Offer within such one hundred twenty (120) day period, any Transfer of the Transferor Units shall again be subject to the provisions of this Section 3.1.

(e) The provisions of this Section 3.1 shall apply to a sale of any membership interest in the General Partner to the same extent as such provisions apply to a sale of Units by the General Partner.

ARTICLE IV

DRAG-ALONG RIGHTS

4.1 Drag-Along Rights. In the event the General Partner proposes to Transfer all of its General Partner Units for cash, in a single transaction or a series of related transactions, to a Person that is not an Affiliate of the General Partner, the General Partner shall have the right (the "Drag-Along Right") to cause the Class B Partner to sell all of its Class B Limited Partner Units to such Person on the same terms and [*176] conditions as the General Partner proposes to Transfer its General Partner Units (with the portion of the purchase price payable to the Class B Partner being the aggregate amount of the purchase price for all Units included in such sale multiplied by the Tax-Adjusted Residual Class B Partner Percentage). The General Partner may exercise its Drag-Along Right by giving written notice of such exercise (the "Drag-Along Notice") to the Class B Partner not fewer than ten (10) days prior to the consummation of the Transfer that is the subject of the Drag-Along Right. The Drag-Along Notice shall contain a copy of any definitive documentation pursuant to which Transfer is to be made and will state the name and address of the purchaser and the anticipated closing date of such Transfer. Upon delivery of the Drag-Along Notice, the Class B Partner shall be obligated to Transfer and deliver its Class B Limited Partner Units on the terms and conditions applicable to the Transfer and shall use commercially reasonable efforts to cooperate in the Transfer and take all necessary actions to enter into appropriate Transfer or transaction documents. The Class B Partner's indemnification obligations under [*177] the transaction documents governing a Transfer pursuant to this Section 4.1 shall be limited to the amount of any portion of the proceeds paid for the Class B Limited Partner Units sold in such transaction that is held in escrow for such purpose and not paid to the Class B Partner, such transaction documents shall not require the Class B Partner to make any representations other than those with respect to the Class B Partner's ownership of and its ability to Transfer the Class B Limited Partner Units to be sold in such transaction and any indemnification obligations shall be limited to breach of such representations only.

ARTICLE V

PUT AND CALL RIGHTS

5.1 Put and Call Rights.

(a) Class B Partner Put Right. Upon the cessation of the publication of The Charleston Daily Mail, the Class B Partner shall be required to sell to the General Partner (or an Affiliate or designee thereof) and the General Partner (or an Affiliate or designee thereof), shall be required, subject to the terms and conditions set forth in this Agreement, to purchase from the Class B Partner all, but not less than all, of the Class B Limited Partner Units. Additionally, at any time from and after the termination of the [*178] JOA by lapse of time or otherwise and/or dissolution and/or termination of the Joint Venture or upon the occurrence of any event which constitutes or results in a Change of Control (as defined below) of the Joint Venture, the Class B Partner shall have the right to sell to the General Partner (or an Affiliate or designee thereof) and the General Partner (or an Affiliate or designee thereof), shall be required, subject to the terms and conditions set forth in this Agreement, to purchase from the Class B Partner all, but not less than all, of the Class B Limited Partner Units. The obligation or right to sell and obligation to buy set forth in the preceding two sentences shall be referred to herein as the "Put". With respect to the Put described in the second sentence of this Section 5.1(a), if the Class B Partner elects to exercise the Put, it shall send written notice thereof to the General Partner (the "Put Notice"). The General Partner's designation of an Affiliate or other designee to purchase the Class B Limited Partner Units in connection with the exercise of the Put will not relieve the General Partner of its obligations hereunder. For purposes of this Section, "Change of Control"

[*179] means any event, transaction or occurrence as a result of which DGC ceases to control the General Partner, and "control" means the possession, direct or indirect, of the power to direct or cause the direction of the management and policies of a person, whether through the ownership of voting securities, by contract, or otherwise.

(b) General Partner Call Right. At any time from and after the termination of the JOA by lapse of time or otherwise and/or the dissolution and/or termination of the Joint Venture, the General Partner (or an Affiliate or designee thereof) shall have the right to purchase from the Class B Partner, and the Class B Partner shall be required, subject to the terms and conditions set forth in this Agreement, to sell to the General Partner (or an Affiliate or designee thereof), all, but not less than all, of the Class B Limited Partner Units (such right to purchase, the "Call"). If the General Partner elects to exercise the Call, it shall send written notice thereof to the Class B Partner (the "Call Notice").

(c) Purchase Price. The purchase price to be paid to the Class B Partner upon the exercise of the Put or Call (the "Put/Call Purchase Price") shall be equal to [*180] (A) the amount that would be distributed to the Class B Partner under Section 7.3 of the Limited Partnership Agreement if the Limited Partnership were to sell its assets on the Put/Call Closing Date for the Fair Market Value of the Partnership and the income, gain, loss and deduction arising from such sale were allocated among the Partners in accordance with Section 5.2.3 of the Limited Partnership Agreement, but without giving effect to any allocation of income or gain attributable to the Tax Gross-Up Amount (as defined in the Limited Partnership Agreement), and the Limited Partnership were then liquidated in accordance with Article VII of the Limited Partnership Agreement on the Put/Call Closing Date, minus (B) the amount of any Unpaid Tax Liabilities or other outstanding liabilities of the Class B Partner (other than liabilities for Taxes and Tax Interest). The Fair Market Value of the Partnership shall be determined as of the Put/Call Closing Date by mutual agreement of the General Partner and the Class B Partner or by appraisals in accordance with the terms hereof. In the event the General Partner and the Class B Partner do not agree on the Fair Market Value of the Partnership [*181] within twenty days, then within fifteen days of the expiration of such twenty day period (or such longer period as the General Partner and the Class B Partner mutually agree), each of the General Partner and the Class B Partner shall select a nationally recognized appraiser with experience in the newspaper industry to prepare, using the methodology described in Exhibit A attached hereto, a written appraisal setting forth such appraiser's determination of the Fair Market Value of the Partnership. If either the General Partner and the Class B Partner fail to so appoint an appraiser within such fifteen day period, then its right to do so shall lapse and the appraisal made by the one appraiser who is timely appointed shall be the Fair Market Value of the Partnership. If two appraisals are made, unless the higher of the two appraisals is more than 110% more than the lower appraisal, the Fair Market Value of the Partnership will be the average of the two appraisals, and if the higher of the two appraisals is more than 110% more than the lower of the appraisals, the General Partner and the Class B Partner shall jointly select a third appraiser, and the Fair Market Value will be the average [*182] of the two of the three appraisals that are closest together in amount. All appraisals will be made within twenty days of appointment of such appraiser and must separately identify the amount of each of the items described in clauses (i) through (vi) of Section 5.2.3(b) of the Limited Partnership Agreement. A written notice of the results of each such appraisal shall be given to the General Partner and the Class B Partner. The General Partner and the Class B Partner will each pay the fees of the appraiser selected by it, and the General Partner and the Class B Partner will share equally the fees of the third appraiser, if any. The General Partner and each Member will cooperate fully with each appraiser's attempt to determine the Fair Market Value of the Partnership.

(d) Closing. The closing of the transaction pursuant to the exercise of the Put or Call, as the case may be, shall take place at the principal offices of the Limited Partnership no later than the thirtieth (30th) day following the final determination of the Put/Call Purchase Price; provided that such date shall be extended as necessary and for so long as necessary to permit the parties to comply with applicable law to obtain [*183] all regulatory approvals, if any, necessary to consummate such transaction (such 30th day, as it may be extended, the "Put/Call Closing Date"). The General Partner shall be responsible (solely at the General Partner's expense) for obtaining all approvals and consents necessary to permit the General Partner and Class B Partner to consummate such transactions (other than any such approvals or consents that are unique to the Class B Partner). Each party agrees to use its commercially reasonable efforts to cooperate in obtaining any regulatory approvals necessary to consummate such transaction as promptly as possible. If the closing of the transaction pursuant to the exercise of the Put has not occurred by the tenth (10th) day after the Put/Call Closing Date, the General Partner shall pay to the Class B Partner at the closing interest in an amount equal to 14.5% of the Put/Call Purchase Price accruing daily on the basis of a 360-day year and compounding at the end of each 90-day period after the Put/Call Closing Date. At the closing of the Put or Call, as the case may be, the General Partner shall pay the Put/Call Purchase Price and any interest accrued thereon to the Class B Partner in [*184] cash or immediately available funds and the Class B Partner shall deliver instruments, in form and substance reasonably satisfactory to the General Partner, assigning all of its interest in the Class B Limited Partner Units to the General Partner free and clear of all liens, claims and encumbrances of any nature whatsoever (other than those arising under this Agreement, the Limited Partnership Agreement or the JOA or in favor of any lender(s) to the Limited Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries) against payment of the Put/Call Purchase Price therefor.

ARTICLE VI

PREEMPTIVE RIGHTS

6.1 Class B Partner Preemptive Rights. Prior to issuing any New Units to any Person ("New Unit Offerees"), the Limited Partnership shall offer (the "New Unit Offer") the Class B Partner an opportunity to purchase all or a portion of its Pro Rata Portion of such New Units upon the same terms and conditions offered to the New Unit Offerees, The Limited Partnership shall make such New Unit Offer by providing the Class B Partner with notice (the "New Unit Notice") setting forth: (i) the Class B Partner's Pro Rata Portion of such New Units; (ii) the consideration to be paid for each of the New Units; and (iii) all [*185] other material terms of such New Units. The Class B Partner may elect to accept the New Unit Offer by delivering written notice of its acceptance to the Limited Partnership within thirty (30) days after delivery of the New Unit Notice (the "Election Notice") setting forth the number of New Units the Class B Partner wishes to purchase. If the Class B Partner elects to purchase all or a portion of its Pro Rata Portion of such New Units, the sale thereof shall be consummated on the closing date applicable to all New Unit Offerees. In the event the Class B Partner elects not to exercise its right pursuant to this Section 6.1, fails to timely give an Election Notice or fails to purchase the New Units allocated to it at the closing designated therefor by the Limited Partnership, the Class B Partner shall cease to have any rights hereunder with respect to such New Unit Offer, provided that if there is any material change to the terms of the New Unit Offer following such non-exercise or failure, the Class B Partner's rights under this Section 6.1 will be reinstated.

6.2 Issuance of New Units. In the event the Limited Partnership issues any New Units for no consideration or for consideration [*186] which is less than the fair market value of such New Units at the time of sale (as mutually determined by the General Partner and the Class B Partner or if the General Partner and Class B Partner cannot agree, pursuant to an appraisal process similar to the process set forth in Section 5.1(c) and at the Limited Partnership's expense) and the New Units are entitled to a portion of the net equity value of the Limited Partnership on liquidation and/or distributions under the Limited Partnership Agreement, then the Limited Partnership Agreement shall be amended to change the terms of the Class B Limited Partner Units so that, after giving effect to such amendment, the value of the net equity of the Limited Partnership and distributions by the Limited Partnership to which the Class B Partner is entitled by virtue of its ownership of Class B Limited Partner Units is the same as the value of the net equity of the Limited Partnership and distributions by the Limited Partnership to which the Class B Partner was entitled prior to giving effect to such issuance and such amendment (the intention of the parties being such amendment will afford the Class B Partner a benefit of the type afforded [*187] by a customary weighted-average antidilution adjustment). The parties will act in good faith to agree upon and execute such amendment to the Limited Partnership Agreement, which shall also provide for additional distributions to be paid to the Class B Partner on the date such amendment becomes effective in order to give effect to the terms of such amendment with respect to distributions (if any) made by the Limited Partnership after such issuance but prior to such amendment becoming effective.

6.3 Termination of Preemptive Rights. The Class B Partner's preemptive rights pursuant to this Article VI shall terminate upon the completion of a successful underwritten public offering by the Limited Partnership (or any corporate successor thereto).

6.4 Application of Article VI to Joint Venture. The provisions of this Article VI shall apply mutatis mutandis if the Joint Venture or any other Subsidiary of the Limited Partnership issues any new equity interests (other than any such equity interest issued to the Limited Partnership or another Subsidiary or the Limited Partnership).

ARTICLE VII

DGHC BOARD REPRESENTATION

7.1 Class B Partner Board Representation. The Class B Partner (together with any [*188] other Class B Limited Partners) shall have the right to appoint two (2) members to the board of managers of DGHC or such greater number as required by Section 5(b)(ii) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC (the "Class B Partner Board Right"), which board of managers shall be governed by the Limited Partnership Agreement and the Operating Agreement of DGHC attached hereto as Exhibit B. The board of managers shall consist of up to five individual managers and in no event may the board of managers consist of more than five managers without the consent of the managers appointed by the Class B Partner(s) pursuant to Section 5(b) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC; provided, however, that in no event may the board of managers consist of more than five managers unless not fewer than forty percent (40%) of the managers are appointed by the Class B Partner(s) pursuant to Section 5(b) of the Operating Agreement of DGHC. If there is more than one Class B Limited Partner, then the Class B Partner Board Right will be vested solely in the Class B Limited Partner that supervises editorial and reportorial functions of the The Charleston Daily Mail pursuant to Section 9.1 of the Limited Partnership Agreement. [*189] In no event may the Class B Limited Partner(s) appoint as members to the board of managers of DGHC any person who is, at the time of his or her appointment, an employee of the Joint Venture, DGC, DCHC, the Limited Partnership or Daily Gazette Publishing Company, LLC.

ARTICLE VIII

MISCELLANEOUS

8.1 Registration Rights. The parties agree that prior to the consummation of any public offering of the Limited Partnership (or any corporate successor thereto), the parties will agree on a registration rights agreement which will include one demand registration and an unlimited number of piggyback registrations with respect to the Class B Partner's securities of the Limited Partnership (or any corporate successor thereto), in each case, at the Limited Partnership's (or any corporate successor thereto's) expense, containing customary terms and conditions and otherwise in form and substance reasonably acceptable to the parties.

8.2 Assignment. This Agreement shall be binding upon and inure only to the benefit of and be enforceable against the parties hereto and their respective permitted successors and assigns. Nothing in this Agreement, express or implied, is intended to confer upon any Person, other [*190] than the parties hereto and their respective permitted successors and assigns, any rights or remedies under or by reason of this Agreement. The Class B Partner may assign this Agreement and such party's rights hereunder to any Permitted Transferee hereunder. The General Partner may assign this Agreement and its rights hereunder to any of its Affiliates, to a successor General Partner or as collateral for a loan or other financing; provided that no such assignment shall release the General Partner from any obligation hereunder.

8.3 Amendment. This Agreement may not be amended except by a written instrument signed by the General Partner, the Limited Partnership and the Class B Partner.

8.4 Governing Law. This Agreement shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of West Virginia, without regard to its conflicts of law principles.

8.5 Notices. All notices and other communications given or made pursuant hereto shall be in writing and shall be deemed to have been duly given or made as of the date delivered if delivered by hand, by telecopier device or by overnight courier service to the parties at the following addresses:

8.6 Severability. If any term or other provision of this Agreement is invalid, illegal or incapable of being enforced by any rule of law or public policy, all other conditions and provisions of this Agreement shall nevertheless remain in full force and effect so long as the economic or legal substance of the transactions contemplated hereby is not affected in any manner adverse to any party. Upon such determination that any term or other provision is invalid, illegal or incapable of being enforced, the parties hereto shall negotiate in good faith to modify this Agreement so as to effect the original intent of the parties as closely as possible in an acceptable manner to the end that transactions contemplated hereby are fulfilled to the greatest extent possible.

8.7 Counterparts. This Agreement may be executed in one [*192] or more counterparts, each of which shall be an original, but all of which taken together shall constitute one and the same agreement.

8.8 Headings. The section headings used in this Agreement are for reference purposes only and shall not affect the meaning or interpretation of any term or provision of this Agreement.

8.9 Integration. This Agreement (together with the Limited Partnership Agreement and the JOA) represents the entire understanding of the parties with reference to the matters set forth herein. This Agreement supersedes all prior negotiations, discussions, correspondence, communications and prior agreements among the parties relating to the subject matter herein.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties have caused this Put/Call Agreement to be duly executed as of the date first above written.

Appraisal [*193] Methodology

In determining the Fair Market Value, the appraiser will use the following methodology:

> The appraiser shall determine the Fair Market Value of the Partnership based on the going concern value of the Partnership as of the relevant date. In determining the Partnership's going concern value, the appraiser (i) shall assume that the value of any business is the cash price at which the assets of such business as a going concern would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller (neither acting under compulsion) in an arms-length transaction, on terms and subject to conditions and costs applicable in the newspaper publishing industry, (ii) shall assume that all assets used in the operation of the business of the Partnership and its Subsidiaries, whether owned by or licensed to the Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries (and all other assets of any Affiliate of the Partnership that are used by the Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries), were entirely owned directly by the Partnership, and (iii) shall not take into account expenditures in respect of any management agreements entered into by the Joint Venture.

Exhibit B

Operating Agreement of DGHC

NEITHER THIS WARRANT NOR [*194] THE CLASS B LIMITED PARTNER UNITS TO BE ISSUED UPON EXERCISE HEREOF HAS BEEN REGISTERED UNDER THE SECURITIES ACT OF 1933, AS AMENDED (THE "SECURITIES ACT"). NO SALE OR OTHER DISPOSITION OF THIS WARRANT OR THE CLASS B LIMITED

PARTNER UNITS ISSUABLE UPON EXERCISE HEREOF MAY BE MADE WITHOUT AN EFFECTIVE REGISTRATION STATEMENT RELATED THERETO OR PURSUANT TO AN EXEMPTION FROM REGISTRATION UNDER THE SECURITIES ACT. THIS WARRANT IS ALSO SUBJECT TO CERTAIN ADDITIONAL TRANSFER RESTRICTIONS PROVIDED FOR HEREIN.

CHARLESTON NEWSPAPERS HOLDINGS, L.P.

WARRANT TO PURCHASE CLASS B LIMITED PARTNER UNITS INITIALLY CONSTITUTING A 20% PERCENTAGE INTEREST

This certifies that Charleston Publishing Company, a Delaware corporation ("Holder"), is entitled to subscribe for and purchase from Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P., a Delaware limited partnership (hereinafter, the "Partnership"), up to an aggregate number of duly authorized, validly issued, fully paid and nonassessable Class B Limited Partner Units equal to the Warrant Units Amount, at a purchase price per Class B Limited Partner Unit equal to the Warrant Price (as defined below), subject to the provisions and upon the terms and conditions hereinafter [*195] set forth. Capitalized terms used herein and not otherwise defined herein shall have the meanings assigned to them in that certain Amended and Restated Limited Partnership Agreement for Charleston Newspapers Holdings, L.P. by and among Daily Gazette Holding Company, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company ("DGHC"), and Charleston Publishing Company (as it may be amended from time to time, the "Partnership Agreement").

The purchase price of each Class B Limited Partner Unit shall be the price per Class B Limited Partner Unit determined in accordance with Exhibit A attached hereto and set forth in an addendum to this Warrant executed by Holder and the Partnership (the "Warrant Price"). The maximum number of Class B Limited Partner Units to be issued upon exercise of this Warrant (as adjusted from time to time, the "Warrant Units Amount") shall be equal to the number of Class B Limited Partner Units that constitute a twenty percent (20%) Percentage Interest in the Partnership (subject to adjustment as provided below (as adjusted from time to time, the "Warrant Percentage Amount") as of the date of exercise. The term "Class B Units" shall mean, unless the context otherwise requires, the [*196] Class B Limited Partner Units and other property at the time receivable upon the exercise of this Warrant. The term "Warrant(s)" as used herein shall include this Warrant and any warrant(s) delivered in substitution or exchange therefor as provided herein.

1. Method of Exercise; Payment.

The purchase right represented by this Warrant may be exercised by Holder, in whole or in part, by:

a. the surrender of this Warrant at the principal office of the Partnership located at c/o Daily Gazette Company, 1001 Virginia Street, East, Charleston, WV 25301, Attn: Ms. Elizabeth Chilton, President, together with a written notice of Holder's election to exercise this Warrant, which notice shall specify the number of Class B Units (or the Percentage Interest of the Partnership) to be purchased;

b. the payment to the Partnership, by wire transfer of immediately available funds to an account designated by the Partnership, of an amount equal to the aggregate Warrant Price of the Class B Units being purchased;

c. if Holder is not already a party to the Partnership Agreement, the execution and delivery by Holder of an amendment to the Partnership Agreement (in a form prepared by Holder and reasonably acceptable [*197] to the General Partner) pursuant to which Holder will become a party to the Partnership as a Class B Limited Partner and agree to be bound by the terms and conditions of the Partnership Agreement (a "Partnership Amendment"); and

d. if Holder is not already a party to a put/call agreement in substantially the form attached to this Warrant as Exhibit B (a "Put/Call Agreement"), the execution and delivery by Holder of a Put/Call Agreement.

Class B Units purchased pursuant to this Warrant shall be uncertificated. Unless this Warrant has been fully exercised or has expired, a new Warrant representing the Class B Units with respect to which this Warrant shall not then have been exercised shall be issued to Holder as soon as practicable after each exercise of this Warrant, and in any event within thirty (30) days after the surrender of this Warrant. Each exercise of this Warrant shall be deemed to have been effected immediately prior to the close of business on the date on which items (a) and (b) above have been satisfied, and the person entitled to receive the Class B Units issuable upon such exercise shall be treated for all purposes as the holder of such Class B Units of record as of the [*198] close of business on such date.

2. Certain Agreements.

Upon surrender of this Warrant pursuant to Section 1:

a. the Partnership will cause the General Partner to immediately execute and deliver to Holder the Partnership Amendment executed and delivered by Holder pursuant to Section 1(c) above; and

b. the Partnership will (and the Partnership will cause the General Partner to) immediately execute and deliver to Holder the Put/Call Agreement executed and delivered by Holder pursuant to Section 1(d) above.

3. Covenant of Non-Impairment.

The Partnership will not, by amendment of the Partnership Agreement or through reorganization, consolidation, merger, dissolution, issue or sale of Partnership Interests or other securities, sale of assets or any other voluntary action, avoid or seek to avoid the observance or performance of any of the terms of this Warrant, but will at all times in good faith assist in the carrying out of all such terms and in the taking of all such action as may be necessary or appropriate in order to protect the rights of Holder against dilution or other impairment.

4. Adjustment of Percentage Interest.

At the end of each of the 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013 and 2014 fiscal years [*199] of the Partnership, the Warrant Percentage Amount shall be subject to adjustment as follows:

a. If the Daily Mail's percentage share of the Combined Circulation for the most-recently ended 12-month audit period exceeds the Daily Mail's percentage share for the immediately preceding 12-month audit period by more than one (1) percentage point, then the Warrant Percentage Amount will increase one (1) percentage point.

b. If the Daily Mail's percentage share of the Combined Circulation for the most-recently ended 12-month audit period is more than one (1) percentage point lower than the Daily Mail's percentage share for the immediately preceding 12-month audit period, then the Warrant Percentage Amount will decrease one (1) percentage point.

For purposes of determining adjustments to be made pursuant to this Section 3, the terms set forth below shall have the meanings assigned to them below:

i. "Daily Mail": The Charleston Daily Mail.

ii. "Charleston Gazette": The Charleston Gazette.

iii. "Daily Print Circulation": the average weekday paid print circulation of a newspaper as stated in the most recent 12-month audit conducted by the Audit Bureau of Circulations or other reputable third party [*200] media auditor.

iv. "Combined Circulation": the sum of the Daily Print Circulation of the Daily Mail and the Charleston Gazette.

5. Term; Termination.

This Warrant may be exercised in whole or in part at any time and from time to time, on or after [insert date] and shall terminate three (3) years thereafter. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this Warrant shall terminate immediately upon the cessation of the publication of The Charleston Daily Mail.

6. No Partner Rights.

Holder shall not, solely by virtue hereof, be entitled to any rights of a partner of the Partnership prior to any exercise of this Warrant, and nothing contained in this Warrant shall be construed as imposing any obligation on Holder to purchase any Partnership Interest or as imposing any liabilities on Holder as a partner of the Partnership (prior to any exercise of this Warrant), whether such obligation or liabilities are asserted by the Partnership or by creditors of the Partnership.

7. Transfer.

This Warrant may not be sold, assigned, disposed, hypothecated, pledged or otherwise transferred in whole or in part; provided, however, (x) Holder may assign this Warrant to any of Holder's Affiliates, provided that such Affiliate [*201] agrees to be bound by the provisions of this Warrant and (y) Holder may assign its rights under this Warrant as collateral security to persons or entities extending financing to Holder or any of its Affiliates (and such persons or entities may at any time foreclose on such security interest). The term "Holder" as used herein shall include any transferee to whom this Warrant has been transferred in accordance with this Section 7. Any transfer or attempted transfer in violation of this Section 7 shall be null and void. The term "Affiliate" as used herein shall mean, with respect to any person or entity, any other person or entity directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by such person or entity or under direct or indirect common control with such person or entity.

8. Securities Act of 1933.

In addition to (and not in limitation of) the restrictions set forth in Section 6 above, Holder, by acceptance hereof, agrees that, absent an effective registration statement under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended (the "Securities Act"), covering the disposition of the Warrant or Class B Units issued or issuable upon exercise hereof, Holder will not sell or transfer any or all of such [*202] Warrant or Class B Units unless such sale or transfer will be exempt from the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act and an opinion of counsel reasonably satisfactory to the Partnership regarding such exemption is delivered to the Partnership. Holder consents to the Partnership's making a notation on its records in order to implement such restriction on transferability. Holder represents that it is an "accredited investor" within the meaning of Rule 501 under the Securities Act.

9. Remedies.

The Partnership stipulates that the remedies at law of Holder, in the event of any default or threatened default by the Partnership in the performance of or compliance with any of the terms of this Warrant, are not and will not be adequate and that, to the fullest extent permitted by law, such terms may be specifically enforced by a decree for the specific performance of any agreement contained herein or by an injunction against a violation of any of the terms hereof or otherwise.

10. Loss or Mutilation.

Upon receipt by the Partnership of evidence satisfactory to it (in the exercise of reasonable discretion) of the ownership of and the loss, theft, destruction or mutilation [*203] of this Warrant and (in the case of loss, theft, or destruction) of indemnity satisfactory to it (in the exercise of reasonable discretion), and (in the case of mutilation) upon surrender and cancellation thereof, the Partnership will execute and deliver in lieu hereof a new Warrant of like tenor.

11. Successors.

All the covenants and provisions of this Warrant shall bind and inure to the benefit of Holder and the Partnership and their respective successors and permitted assigns.

12. Notices.

All notices and other communications given pursuant to this Warrant shall be in writing and shall be deemed to have been given when personally delivered or when mailed by prepaid registered, certified or express mail, return receipt requested. Notices should be addressed as follows:

a. If to Holder, then to:

Affiliated Media, Inc.

Attention: Steven E. Blumenthal

Such addresses for notices may be changed by any party by written notice to the other party pursuant to this Section 12.

13. Amendment.

This Warrant may be amended only by an agreement in writing signed by the Partnership and Holder.

14. Construction of Warrant.

Captions contained in this Warrant are inserted as a matter of convenience and in no way define the scope of this Warrant or the intent of any provision hereof. None of the provisions of this Warrant shall be for the benefit of or be enforceable by any creditor of the Partnership, any Partner or Holder. This Warrant, together with the exhibits attached hereto and the Partnership Agreement and the JOA, constitute the entire agreement between the parties hereto pertaining to the subject matter hereof and supersedes all prior agreements (oral or written) and understandings pertaining thereto. In the event of any conflict between this Warrant and any other agreement, this Warrant shall control. The invalidity of any article, section, subsection, clause [*205] or provision of this Warrant shall not affect the validity of the remaining articles, sections, subsections, clauses or provisions hereof.

15. Governing Law.

This Warrant and the rights and obligations of the parties hereto shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of Delaware, without regard to its conflicts of law principles.

Exhibit A

Methodology for Determining Price per Class B Limited Partner Unit

The Warrant Price will be the appraised value of a Class B Limited Partner Unit as of the date of this Warrant, as determined promptly following the execution and delivery of this Warrant by a nationally-recognized appraiser with experience in the newspaper industry that is reasonably acceptable to both Daily Gazette Company and the Holder.

Each of the following appraisers are hereby deemed to be "reasonably acceptable" to both Daily Gazette Company and the Holder:

Dirks, Van Essen & Murray

In determining the price per Class B Limited Partner Unit, the appraiser will use the following methodology:

The appraiser shall determine [*206] the fair market value of the Partnership based on the going concern value of the Partnership as of the relevant date, with the following adjustments. In determining the Partnership's going concern value, the appraiser (i) shall assume that the value of any business is the cash price at which the assets of such business as a going concern would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller (neither acting under compulsion) in an arms-length transaction, on terms and subject to conditions and costs applicable in the newspaper publishing industry, (ii) shall assume that all assets used in the operation of the business of the Partnership and its Subsidiaries, whether owned by or licensed to the Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries (and all other assets of any Affiliate of the Partnership that are used by the Partnership or any of its Subsidiaries), were entirely owned directly by the Partnership, and (iii) shall not take into account expenditures in respect of any management agreements entered into by the Joint Venture. The Warrant Price with respect to any Class B Limited Partner Unit shall be an amount equal to (x) the fair market value of the Partnership as of the date [*207] of this Warrant (as determined in accordance with the preceding sentence) multiplied by (y) the Percentage Interest in the Partnership represented by such Class B Limited Partner Unit as of the date of exercise of the Warrant.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c), any party may move for judgment on the pleadings at any time after the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). For the purposes of the motion, the allegations of the nonmoving party must be accepted as true, while the allegations of the moving party which have been denied are assumed to be false. Judgment on the pleadings is proper when the moving party clearly establishes on the face of the pleadings that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. When brought by the defendant, a motion for judgment on the pleadings under Rule 12(c) is a means to challenge the sufficiency of the complaint after an answer has been filed. A motion for judgment on the pleadings is therefore similar to a motion to dismiss. When the district court must go beyond the pleadings to resolve an issue on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the proceeding is properly treated as a motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The purpose of summary judgment is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN3[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

The party moving for summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying the evidence which it believes demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The nonmoving party must then identify specific facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law, thus establishing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN4[] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

When evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the court views the evidence through the prism of the evidentiary standard of proof that would pertain at trial. The court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, including questions of credibility and of the weight that particular evidence is accorded. The court determines whether the nonmoving party's specific facts, coupled with disputed background or contextual facts, are such that a reasonable jury might return a verdict for the nonmoving party. In such a case, summary judgment is inappropriate. However, where a rational trier of fact could not find for the nonmoving party based on the record as a whole, there is no genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Cross Motions

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

HN5[] Motions for Summary Judgment, Cross Motions

Although the district court has discretion to consider materials in the court file not referenced in the papers opposing summary judgment, it need not do so. The district court need not examine the entire file for evidence establishing a genuine issue of fact. However, when the parties file cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court must consider all of the evidence submitted in support of both motions to evaluate whether a genuine issue of material fact exists precluding summary judgment for either party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint may be dismissed against a defendant for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted against that defendant. Dismissal may be based on either the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. For purposes of evaluating a motion to dismiss, the court must presume all factual allegations of the complaint to be true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party. Any existing ambiguities must be resolved in favor of the pleading.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Computer & Internet Law > Civil Actions > Damages

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN7[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Mere conclusions couched in factual allegations are not sufficient to state a cause of action. The complaint must plead enough facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. A claim is plausible on its face when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Thus, for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the nonconclusory factual content, and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief. Courts may dismiss a case without leave to amend if the plaintiff is unable to cure the defect by amendment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

See Cal. Penal Code § 502(e)(1).

Computer & Internet Law > Civil Actions > Damages

HN9[] Civil Actions, Damages

Cal. Penal Code § 502(c)(2), (3), and (7) require that the defendant's actions be taken without permission. However, the statute does not expressly define the term without permission.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN10[] Legislation, Interpretation

In interpreting any statutory language, the court looks first to the words of the statute. If the language is unambiguous, the statute should be interpreted according to the plain meaning of the text. The structure and purpose of a statute can provide guidance in determining the plain meaning of its provisions. Statutory language is ambiguous if it is capable of being understood in two or more possible senses or ways. If a statutory provision is ambiguous, the court turns to the legislative history for guidance.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

HN11[] Criminal Offenses, Data Crimes & Fraud

Cal. Penal Code § 502(c)(2) holds liable any person who knowingly accesses and without permission takes, copies, or makes use of any data from a computer, computer system, or computer network, or takes or copies any supporting documentation, whether existing or residing internal or external to a computer, computer system, or computer network.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

Cal. Penal Code § 502(c)(3) holds liable any person who knowingly and without permission uses or causes to be used computer services.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

HN13[] Criminal Offenses, Data Crimes & Fraud

Cal. Penal Code § 502(c)(7) holds liable any person who knowingly and without permission accesses or causes to be accessed any computer, computer system, or computer network.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

HN14[] Criminal Offenses, Data Crimes & Fraud

Using a computer network for the purpose that it was designed to serve, even if in a manner that is otherwise improper, is not the kind of behavior that the legislature sought to prohibit when it enacted Cal. Penal Code § 502.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Governments > Legislation > Vagueness

HN15[] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

It is a fundamental tenet of due process that no one may be required at peril of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes. Thus, a criminal statute is invalid if it fails to give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden. Where a statute has both criminal and noncriminal applications, courts must interpret the statute consistently in both contexts. In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, to survive vagueness review, a statute must (1) define the offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited; and (2) establish standards to permit police to enforce the law in a non-arbitrary, nondiscriminatory manner.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

HN16[] Criminal Offenses, Data Crimes & Fraud

In order to avoid rendering Cal. Penal Code § 502 constitutionally infirm, the United States District Court for the Northern District of California finds that a user of internet services does not access or use a computer, computer network, or website without permission simply because that user violated a contractual term of use.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Computer & Internet Law > Criminal Offenses > Data Crimes & Fraud

HN17[] Criminal Offenses, Data Crimes & Fraud

If a violation of a term of use is by itself insufficient to support a finding that the user's access was without permission in violation of Cal. Penal Code § 502, the issue becomes what type of action would be sufficient to support such a finding. The United States District Court for the Northern District of California finds that a distinction can be made between access that violates a term of use and access that circumvents technical or code-based barriers that a computer network or website administrator erects to restrict the user's privileges within the system, or to bar the user from the system altogether. Limiting criminal liability to circumstances in which a user gains access to a computer, computer network, or website to which access was restricted through technological means eliminates any constitutional notice concerns, since a person applying the technical skill necessary to overcome such a barrier will almost always understand that any access gained through such action is unauthorized. Thus, the court finds that accessing or using a computer, computer network, or website in a manner that overcomes technical or code-based barriers is without permission, and may subject a user to liability under § 502.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

HN18[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

To state a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim for monopolization, the claimant must show that the alleged monopolist (1) possesses monopoly power in the relevant market (2) through the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident, (3) that causes antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

HN19[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has held that merely introducing a product that is not technologically interoperable with competing products is not violative of 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Anticompetitive conduct is an element of a claim for attempted monopolization under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN21[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL) prohibits any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. "he broad scope of the statute encompasses both anticompetitive business practices and practices injurious to consumers. An act or practice may be actionable as unfair under the UCL even if it is not unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN22[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

An act or practice is unfair under California's Unfair Competition Law if that conduct threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. Likewise, the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct is not unfair toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of pro-competitive conduct.

HN23[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Strike

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f), the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter. However, motions to strike are generally regarded with disfavor because of the limited importance of pleading in federal practice, and because they are often used as a delaying tactic. Accordingly, such motions should be denied unless the matter has no logical connection to the controversy at issue and may prejudice one or more of the parties to the suit.

When considering a motion to strike, the court must view the pleading in a light most favorable to the pleading party.

ORDER DENYING FACEBOOK'S MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS; DENYING THE PARTIES' CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT; GRANTING FACEBOOK'S MOTION TO DISMISS DEFENDANTS' COUNTERCLAIMS; DENYING FACEBOOK'S MOTION [*3] TO STRIKE DEFENDANTS' AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

I. INTRODUCTION

Facebook, Inc. ("Plaintiff" or "Facebook") brings this action against Power Ventures, Inc. ("Defendant" or "Power") alleging, inter alia, violations of the California Comprehensive Computer Data Access and Fraud Act, Cal. Penal Code § 502 ("Section 502"). Facebook alleges that Power accessed the Facebook website in violation of Facebook's Terms of Use, and when Facebook tried to stop Power's unauthorized access, Power circumvented Facebook's technical barriers. Power brings counterclaims against Facebook alleging, inter alia, violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2.

Presently before the Court are Facebook's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) or, in the Alternative, Partial Summary Judgment of Liability Under California Penal Code § 502; [1] Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment; [2] and Facebook's Motion to Dismiss Counterclaims and Strike Affirmative Defenses. [3] The Court conducted a hearing on June 7, 2010. Based on the papers submitted to date and oral argument, the Court DENIES Facebook's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, DENIES the parties' Cross-Motions for Summary Judgment, GRANTS [*4] Facebook's Motion to Dismiss Defendants' counterclaims for violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, GRANTS Facebook's Motion to Dismiss Defendants' UCL counterclaim, and DENIES Facebook's Motion to Strike Defendants' Affirmative Defenses.

II. BACKGROUND

[1] (hereafter, "Facebook's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings," Docket Item No. 56.)

[2] (Docket Item No. 62.)

[3] (hereafter, "Facebook's Motion to Dismiss," Docket Item No. 58.)

A. Factual Background

A detailed outline of the factual allegations in this case may be found in the Court's May 11, 2009 Order Denying Motion to Dismiss and Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motion for More Definite Statement. [4] The Court will address the facts of the case, as they relate to the present Motions, in the Discussion section below.

B. Procedural History

In its May 11 Order, the Court denied Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's claims for copyright infringement, violation of the Digital Millennium Copyright Act ("DMCA"), trademark infringement under federal law, trademark infringement under state law, and violation of the California Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), and granted Defendants' Motion for a [*5] More Definite Statement with respect to Plaintiff's UCL claim.

On October 22, 2009, the Court issued an Order Granting Facebook's Motion to Dismiss Counter-Complaint and Strike Affirmative Defenses. (hereafter, "October 22 Order," Docket Item No. 52.) In its October 22 Order, the Court found that the counterclaims, as stated in Defendants' Answer and Counter-Complaint, were insufficient because they consisted only of conclusory recitations of the applicable legal standard and a general "reference [to] all allegations of all prior paragraphs as though fully set forth herein." (Id. at 3.) Similarly, the Court found Defendants' affirmative defenses deficient because they referenced the introductory section without delineating which allegations supported each affirmative defense. (Id. at 3-4.) The Court granted leave to amend the counterclaims and affirmative defenses. (Id. at 4.) On November 23, 2010, Defendants filed the Amended Answer and Counterclaims of Defendants Power Ventures, Inc. and Steve Vachani. (hereafter, "Amended Answer," Docket Item No. 54.) On February 26, 2010, Judge Fogel recused himself from the case. (See Docket Item No. 72.) On March 2, 2010, the case was reassigned [*6] to Judge Ware. (See Docket Item No. 73.)

Presently before the Court are the parties' various Motions. The Court addresses each Motion in turn.

III. STANDARDS

A. Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

HN1[] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), any party may move for judgment on the pleadings at any time after the pleadings are closed but within such time as not to delay the trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). "For the purposes of the motion, the allegations of the non-moving party must be accepted as true, while the allegations of the moving party which have been denied are assumed to be false." Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner and Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1550 (9th Cir. 1990). Judgment on the pleadings is proper when the moving party clearly establishes on the face of the pleadings that no material issue of fact remains to be resolved and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Id. When brought by the defendant, a motion for judgment on the pleadings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) is a "means to challenge the sufficiency of the complaint after an answer has been filed." New. Net, Inc. v. Lavasoft, 356 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1115 (C.D. Cal. 2004). A motion for judgment [*7] on the pleadings is therefore similar to a motion to dismiss. Id. When the district court must go beyond the pleadings to resolve an issue on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the proceeding is properly treated as a motion for summary judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c); Bonilla v. Oakland Scavenger Co., 697 F.2d 1297, 1301 (9th Cir. 1982).

B. Motion for Summary Judgment

[4] (hereafter, "May 11 Order," Docket Item No. 38.)

HN2[] Summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The purpose of summary judgment "is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses." Celotex v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986).

HN3[] The moving party "always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying the evidence which it believes demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. The non-moving party must then identify specific facts "that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing [*8] law," thus establishing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e).

HN4[] When evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the court views the evidence through the prism of the evidentiary standard of proof that would pertain at trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). The court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party, including questions of credibility and of the weight that particular evidence is accorded. See, e.g. Masson v. New Yorker Magazine, Inc., 501 U.S. 496, 520, 111 S. Ct. 2419, 115 L. Ed. 2d 447 (1992). The court determines whether the non-moving party's "specific facts," coupled with disputed background or contextual facts, are such that a reasonable jury might return a verdict for the non-moving party. T.W. Elec. Serv. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors, 809 F.2d 626, 631 (9th Cir. 1987). In such a case, summary judgment is inappropriate. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. However, where a rational trier of fact could not find for the non-moving party based on the record as a whole, there is no "genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

HN5[] Although the district court has discretion to consider materials in the [*9] court file not referenced in the opposing papers, it need not do so. See Carmen v. San Francisco Unified School District, 237 F.3d 1026, 1028-29 (9th Cir. 2001). "The district court need not examine the entire file for evidence establishing a genuine issue of fact." Id. at 1031. However, when the parties file cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court must consider all of the evidence submitted in support of both motions to evaluate whether a genuine issue of material fact exists precluding summary judgment for either party. The Fair Housing Council of Riverside County, Inc. v. Riverside Two, 249 F.3d 1132, 1135 (9th Cir. 2001).

C.Motion to Dismiss

HN6[] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a complaint may be dismissed against a defendant for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted against that defendant. Dismissal may be based on either the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990); Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 533-34 (9th Cir. 1984). For purposes of evaluating a motion to dismiss, [*10] the court "must presume all factual allegations of the complaint to be true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party." Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). Any existing ambiguities must be resolved in favor of the pleading. Walling v. Beverly Enters., 476 F.2d 393, 396 (9th Cir. 1973).

However, HN7[] mere conclusions couched in factual allegations are not sufficient to state a cause of action. Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986); see also McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 810 (9th Cir. 1988). The complaint must plead "enough facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A claim is plausible on its face "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Thus, "for a complaint to survive a motion to dismiss, the non-conclusory 'factual content,' and reasonable inferences from that content, must be plausibly suggestive of a claim entitling the plaintiff to relief." Moss v. U.S. Secret Serv., 572 F.3d 962, 969 (9th Cir. 2009). [*11] Courts may dismiss a case without leave to amend if the plaintiff is unable to cure the defect by amendment. Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1129 (9th Cir. 2000).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Statutory Standing

As a threshold matter, Defendants contend that Facebook does not have standing to bring its Section 502 claim because it has not made an adequate showing that it has suffered damage or loss within the meaning of the statute. [5]

Section 502(e)(1) provides:

> HN8[] In addition to any other civil remedy available, the owner or lessee of the computer, computer system, computer network, computer program, or data who suffers damage or loss by reason of a violation of any of the provisions of subdivision (c) may bring a civil action against the violator for compensatory damages and injunctive relief. Compensatory damages shall include any expenditure reasonably and necessarily incurred by the owner or lessee to verify that a computer system, computer network, computer program, or data was or was not altered, damaged, or deleted by the access. . . .

Facebook relies [*12] solely on the undisputed facts from the pleadings to support its Motion. In their Amended Answer, Defendants admit that: (1) Facebook communicated to Defendant Steven Vachani ("Vachani"), the purported CEO of Power.com, its claim that "Power.com's access of Facebook's website and servers was unauthorized and violated Facebook's rights, including Facebook's trademark, copyrights, and business expectations with its users;" [6] (2) "Vachani offered to attempt to integrate Power.com with Facebook Connect," a Facebook program that "permits integration with third party websites," but "Vachani communicated concerns about Power's ability to integrate Power.com with Facebook Connect on the schedule that Facebook was demanding;" [7] and (3) "Facebook implemented technical measures to block users from accessing Facebook through Power.com," but nonetheless "Power provided users with tools necessary to access Facebook through Power.com." [8]

In support of their contention that Plaintiff did not suffer damage or loss, Defendants provide the declaration of Vachani, in which he states [*13] that Facebook had no cause for concern over Power's access to its website, and that "in its communications with [Vachani], Facebook never suggested any concern that its computers or data had been altered, deleted, damaged, or destroyed." [9] Vachani further declares that to his knowledge, "Facebook did not . . . make any expenditure to verify that its computers or data had not been altered, deleted, damaged, or destroyed." (Id.)

Upon review of the pleadings and evidence presented, the Court finds that the undisputed facts show that Facebook suffered some damage or loss as a result of Power's actions. Specifically, Defendants' admissions that Facebook attempted to block Power's access and that Power provided users with tools that allowed them to access the Facebook website through Power.com adequately demonstrates that Facebook expended resources to stop Power from committing acts [*14] that Facebook now contends constituted Section 502 violations. Although Defendants contend that any steps that Facebook took to block Power's access to the Facebook website were de minimus, and would involve only a "a few clicks of a mouse . . . and ten keystrokes," [10] Section 502 sets no threshold level of damage or loss that must be reached to impart standing to bring suit. Under the plain language of the statute, any amount of damage or loss may be sufficient.

P. 12(c)* or, in the Alternative, Partial Summary Judgment of Liability Under California Penal Code § 502(c) P 12, hereafter, "Vachani Decl.," Docket Item No. 65.)

Moreover, Defendants provide no foundation to establish that Vachani has personal knowledge of what steps Facebook took, or would reasonably have to take, to block Power's access to the Facebook website. Since information regarding Facebook's technical measures, and the cost Facebook expended implementing those measures, is likely to be in Facebook's possession and not Power's, the Court finds that Vachani's declaration alone cannot defeat Plaintiff's standing.

Defendants further contend that to impart standing, damage or loss must amount to an "injury." (Defendants' Reply re Summary Judgment at 4.) The statute defines an "injury" as "any alteration, deletion, damage, or destruction of a computer system, computer [*15] network, computer program, or data caused by the access, or the denial of access, to legitimate users of a computer system, network, or program." Cal. Penal Code § 502(b)(8). However, Defendants provide no authority for equating damage and loss with injury beyond the observation that the terms are synonyms. (Defendants' Reply re Summary Judgment at 4.) In fact, the only place in Section 502 that the term injury appears, other than the clause defining the term itself, is in the criminal liability provision, which has no bearing on the civil provision granting a private right of action. See § 502(d) (setting more stringent penalties for violations that result in an injury).

Since the undisputed facts demonstrate that Facebook has suffered some damage or loss in attempting to block Power's access to the Facebook website, the Court finds that Facebook has standing to bring suit pursuant to Section 502(e). The Court proceeds to examine Defendants' liability under Section 502.

B. Defendants' Section 502 Liability

Facebook contends that the undisputed facts prove that Defendants violated Section 502. (Facebook's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings at 1.) Facebook bases its Section 502 claim [*16] solely on facts that Defendants admit in their Amended Answer, which Facebook contends show beyond dispute that Power accessed the Facebook website in violation of the Facebook terms of use, and that when Facebook tried to stop Power, Power worked around Facebook's technical barriers. (Id.) Defendants respond, inter alia, that there is no evidence that Power ever accessed the Facebook website without the express permission of the user and rightful owner of the accessed data. [11]

On May 5, 2010, the Court granted the Electronic Frontier Foundation's ("EFF") Motion to File Amicus Curiae in support of Defendants' Motion. [12] EFF contends that in order to avoid constitutional vagueness concerns, the Court must construe the statutory phrase "without permission" narrowly to exclude access to a website or computer network that merely violates a term of use. [13] Allowing criminal liability [*17] based only on violation of contractual terms of service, EFF contends, would grant the website or network administrator essentially unlimited authority to define the scope of criminality and potentially expose millions of average internet users to criminal sanctions without any meaningful notice. (Id.)

The Court finds that HN9[] all of the subsections of Section 502(c) that potentially apply in this case require that the defendant's actions be taken "without permission." See Cal. Penal Code § 502(c)(2), (3), (7). However, the statute does not expressly define the term "without permission." HN10[] In interpreting any statutory language, the court looks first to the words of the statute. Lamie v. U.S. Trustee, 540 U.S. 526, 534, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1024 (2004). If the language is unambiguous, the statute should be interpreted according to the plain meaning of the text. Id. at 534. The [*18] structure and purpose of a statute can provide guidance in determining the plain meaning of its provisions. K-Mart Corp. v. Cartier, Inc., 486 U.S. 281, 291, 108 S. Ct. 1811, 100 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1988). Statutory language is ambiguous if it is capable of being understood in two or more possible senses or ways. Chickasaw Nation v. United States, 534 U.S. 84, 90, 122 S. Ct. 528, 151 L. Ed. 2d 474 (2001). If a statutory provision is ambiguous, the court turns to the legislative history for guidance. SEC v. McCarthy, 322 F.3d 650, 655 (9th Cir. 2003).

Here, the Court first looks to the plain language of the statute. However, the term "without permission" can be understood in multiple ways, especially with regard to whether access is without permission simply as a result of violating the terms of use. Thus, the Court must consider legislative intent and constitutional concerns to determine whether the conduct at issue here falls within the scope of the statute. See F.C.C. v. Fox Television Stations, Inc., 556 U.S. 502, 129 S. Ct. 1800, 1811, 173 L. Ed. 2d 738 (2009) (noting that "the canon of constitutional avoidance in an interpretive tool, counseling that ambiguous statutory language be construed to avoid serious constitutional doubts").

1. Plain Language of the Statute

Here, Facebook does not [*19] allege that Power has altered, deleted, damaged, or destroyed any data, computer, computer system, or computer network, so the subsections that require that type of action are not applicable. However, the Court finds that the following subsections of Section 502 do not require destruction of data, and thus may apply here:

(1) HN11[] Section 502(c)(2) holds liable any person who "[k]nowingly accesses and without permission takes, copies, or makes use of any data from a computer, computer system, or computer network, or takes or copies any supporting documentation, whether existing or residing internal or external to a computer, computer system, or computer network;"

(2) HN12[] Section 502(c)(3) holds liable any person who "[k]nowingly and without permission uses or causes to be used computer services;" and

(3) HN13[] Section 502(c)(7) holds liable any person who "[k]nowingly and without permission accesses or causes to be accessed any computer, computer system, or computer network."

To support its claim that Defendants violated these provisions, Facebook relies solely on facts that Defendants admitted in their Amended Answer. Specifically, Facebook points to Defendants' admissions that: (1) "Power permits users [*20] to enter their account information to access the Facebook site through Power.com;" [14] (2) "Defendants developed computer software and other automated devices and programs to access and obtain information from the Facebook website for aggregating services;" [15] (3) Facebook communicated to Vachani its claims that "Power.com's access of Facebook's website and servers was unauthorized and violated Facebook's rights, including Facebook's trademark, copyrights, and business expectations with its users;" [16] (4) "Facebook implemented technical measures to block users from accessing Facebook through Power.com;" [17] and (5) "Power provided users with tools necessary to access Facebook through Power.com." [18] Since all three of the subsections at issue here require that Defendants' acts with respect to the computer or computer network be taken without permission, the Court analyzes that requirement first.

[14] (Amended Answer PP 18, 45, 50.)

Defendants and EFF contend that Power's actions could not have been without permission because Power only accessed the Facebook website with the permission of a Facebook [*21] account holder and at that account holder's behest. (See Defendants' Opposition re Summary Judgment at 11; Amicus Brief at 11.) Facebook, on the other hand, contends that regardless of whatever permission an individual Facebook user may have given to Power to access a particular Facebook account, Power's actions clearly violated the website's terms of use, which state that a Facebook user may not "collect users' content or information, or otherwise access Facebook, using automated means (such as harvesting bots, robots, spiders, or scrapers) without [Facebook's] permission." [19]

Since Power admits that it utilized "automated devices" to gain access to the Facebook website, the Court finds that it is beyond dispute that Power's activities violated an express term of the Facebook terms of use. [20] The issue then becomes whether an access or use that involves a violation [*22] of the terms of use is "without permission" within the meaning of the statute. In the modern context, in which millions of average internet users access websites every day without ever reading, much less understanding, those websites' terms of use, this is far from an easy or straightforward question. Without clear guidance from the statutory language itself, the Court turns to case law, legislative intent, and the canon of constitutional avoidance to assist in interpreting the statute, and then analyzes whether the acts at issue here were indeed taken without permission.

2. Caselaw

Since the California Supreme Court has not directly addressed the question of whether the violation [*23] of a term of use constitutes access or use without permission pursuant to Section 502, the Court looks to analogous state appellate court cases and federal court cases from this district for guidance as to the statute's proper construction. The Court also considers cases interpreting the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act ("CFAA"), the federal corollary to Section 502, in evaluating how broad an application Section 502 should properly be given.

EFF relies on two state appellate cases for the proposition that Section 502 should not apply to persons who have permission to access a computer or computer system, but who use that access in a manner that violates the rules applicable to that system. Chrisman v. City of Los Angeles, 155 Cal. App. 4th 29, 32, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 701 (Cal. Ct. App. 2007); Mahru v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. App. 3d 545, 549, 237 Cal. Rptr. 298 (Cal. Ct. App. 1987). In Chrisman, the court found that a police officer did not violate Section 502 when, while on duty, the officer "accessed the Department computer system [] for non-duty-related activities." 155 Cal. App. 4th at 32. The court found that at essence, Section 502 is an anti-hacking statute, and "[o]ne cannot reasonably describe appellant's improper computer [*24] inquiries about celebrities, friends, and others as hacking." Id. at 35. The officer's "computer [20] This, of course, assumes that Power was in fact subject to the Facebook terms of use, an issue which was not briefed by either party. However, the terms of use state, "By accessing or using our web site . . . , you (the 'User') signify that you have read, understand and agree to be bound by these Terms of Use . . . , whether or not you are a registered member of Facebook." queries seeking information that the department's computer system was designed to provide to officers was misconduct if he had no legitimate purpose for that information, but it was not hacking the computer's 'logical, arithmetical, or memory function resources,' as [the officer] was entitled to access those resources." Id. While Chrisman does not address the specific issue before the Court here, and focuses on the statutory definition of "access" rather than "without permission," the Court finds that the case helps to clarify that HN14[] using a computer network for the purpose that it was designed to serve, even if in a manner that is otherwise improper, is not the kind of behavior that the legislature sought to prohibit when it enacted Section 502.

In Mahru, the court found that the director and part owner of a data-processing firm was not liable under Section 502 when he instructed the company's chief computer operator to make specified changes in the names of two files in a former customer's computer program in retaliation for that customer terminating its contract with the company. 191 Cal. App. 3d at 547-48. [*25] These changes had the effect of preventing the former customer's employees from being able to run their computer programs without the assistance of an expert computer software technician. Id. In finding that Section 502 had not been violated by the company's actions, the court stated:

> The Legislature could not have meant, by enacting section 502, to bring the Penal Code into the computer age by making annoying or spiteful acts criminal offenses whenever a computer is used to accomplish them. Individuals and organizations use computers for typing and other routine tasks in the conduct of their affairs, and sometimes in the course of these affairs they do vexing, annoying, and injurious things. Such acts cannot all be criminal.

Id. at 549. However, the court in Mahru based its finding of no liability in part on documentary evidence establishing that the company, and not the former customer, owned the computer hardware and software, which explains why the company's manipulation of files stored on that computer hardware was merely vexatious and not unlawful hacking. The Court finds that Mahru is not applicable to the circumstances here, where it is undisputed that Power accessed data stored [*26] on Facebook's server.

In support of its contention that Facebook users cannot authorize Power to access Facebook's computer systems, Facebook relies on a previous order in this case and another case from this District. On May 11, 2009, Judge Fogel issued an order denying Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's copyright infringement, DMCA, and trademark infringement claims. In addressing Plaintiff's copyright infringement claim, Judge Fogel found that, "[v]iewing the allegations in the FAC as true, the utilization of Power.com by Facebook users exceeds their access rights pursuant to the Terms of Use. Moreover, when a Facebook user directs Power.com to access the Facebook website, an unauthorized copy of the user's profile page is created." (May 11 Order at 6-7.) The Court finds that whether or not Facebook users' utilization of Power.com exceeds their access rights under Facebook's terms of use is not the issue presented in these Motions. Instead, the Court must determine whether such a violation of the terms of use constitutes use "without permission" within the meaning of Section 502, a question that the May 11 Order did not directly address.

Finally, in Facebook, Inc. v. ConnectU [*27] LLC, Judge Seeborg found that a competing social networking site violated Section 502 when it accessed the Facebook website to collect "millions" of email addresses of Facebook users, and then used those email addresses to solicit business for itself. 489 F. Supp. 2d 1087, 1089 (N.D. Cal. 2007). In that case, Judge Seeborg found unavailing ConnectU's contention that it did not act without permission because it only "accessed information on the Facebook website that ordinarily would be accessible only to registered users by using log-in information voluntarily supplied by registered users." Id. at 1090-91. Judge Seeborg found that ConnectU was subject to Facebook's terms of use and rejected ConnectU's contention that "a private party cannot define what is or what is not a criminal offense by unilateral imposition of terms and conditions of use." Id. at 1091. The court held that "[t]he fact that private parties are free to set the conditions on which they will grant such permission does not mean that private parties are defining what is criminal and what is not." Id.

The Court finds that of the cases discussed so far, the holding in ConnectU is most applicable to the present case. However, [*28] the Court respectfully disagrees with ConnectU in one key respect. Contrary to the holding of ConnectU, the Court finds that allowing violations of terms of use to fall within the ambit of the statutory term "without permission" does essentially place in private hands unbridled discretion to determine the scope of criminal liability recognized under the statute. If the issue of permission to access or use a website depends on adhering to unilaterally imposed contractual terms, the website or computer system administrator has the power to determine which actions may expose a user to criminal liability. This raises constitutional concerns that will be addressed below.

Although cases interpreting the scope of liability under the CFAA do not govern the Court's analysis of the scope of liability under Section 502, CFAA cases can be instructive. EFF points to several CFAA cases for the proposition that the CFAA prohibits trespass and theft, not mere violations of terms of use. See, e.g., LVRC Holdings LLC v. Brekka, 581 F.3d 1127, 1130 (9th Cir. 2009) ("[F]or purposes of the CFAA, when an employer authorizes an employee to use a company computer subject to certain limitations, the employee [*29] remains authorized to use the computer even if the employee violates those limitations."); Diamond Power Int'l, Inc. v. Davidson, 540 F. Supp. 2d 1322 (N.D. Ga. 2007) ("Under the more reasoned view, a violation for accessing 'without authorization' occurs only where initial access is not permitted."); But see Shurgard Storage Ctrs., Inc. v. Safeguard Self Storage, Inc., 119 F. Supp. 2d 1121, 1125-29 (W.D. Wash. 2000) (finding employee may be held liable under CFAA for taking employer information from the company's computer system to his next job on the ground that he was "without authorization" when he "allegedly sent [the employer's] proprietary information to the defendant").

While there appears to be some disagreement in the district courts as to the scope of the term "without authorization" in the CFAA context, the Court finds the Ninth Circuit's opinion in LVRC Holdings to be particularly useful in construing the analogous term in Section 502. In that case, the Ninth Circuit found that access to a computer may be "authorized," within the statutory meaning of the term, even if that access violates an agreed upon term of using that computer. In general, the Court finds that the more [*30] recent CFAA cases militate for an interpretation of Section 502 that does not premise permission to access or use a computer or computer network on a violation of terms of use. However, since none of the cases discussed provides a definitive definition of without permission under Section 502, the Court now looks to the legislative purpose of the statute to the extent that it can be discerned.

3. Legislative Purpose

Section 502 includes the following statement of statutory purpose:

> It is the intent of the Legislature in enacting this section to expand the degree of protection afforded to individuals, businesses, and governmental agencies from tampering, interference, damage, and unauthorized access to lawfully created computer data and computer systems. The Legislature finds and declares that the proliferation of computer technology has resulted in a concomitant proliferation of computer crime and other forms of unauthorized access to computers, computer systems, and computer data.
> The Legislature further finds that protection of the integrity of all types and forms of lawfully created computers, computer systems, and computer data is vital to the protection of the privacy of individuals [*31] as well as to the well-being of financial institutions, business concerns, governmental agencies, and others within this state that lawfully utilize those computers, computer systems, and data.

Cal. Penal Code § 502(a).

Facebook contends that this language evidences legislative intent to address conduct beyond "straightforward hacking and tampering." (Facebook's Reply re Summary Judgment at 2.) Specifically, Facebook contends that the legislature's use of the phrases "protection . . . from . . . unauthorized access" and "protection of the integrity of all types and forms of computers, computer systems, and computer data" demonstrates a far-reaching legislative purpose to protect the entire commercial computer infrastructure from trespass. (Id. at 2-3.)

The Court declines to give the statute's statement of legislative intent the sweeping meaning that Facebook ascribes to it. Section 502(a) speaks in general terms of a "proliferation of computer crime and other forms of unauthorized access to computers," but does not offer any further guidance as to what specific acts would constitute such crime or unauthorized access. It is far from clear what conduct the legislature believed posed a threat [*32] to the integrity of computers and computer systems, or if the legislature could even fathom the shape that those threats would take more than twenty years after the statute was first enacted.

Thus, the Court does not assign any weight to the statute's statement of legislative intent in construing the liability provisions of Section 502.

4. Rule of Lenity

EFF contends that interpreting Section 502 broadly to allow liability where the absence of permission is based only on the violation of a contractual term of use or failure to fully comply with a cease and desist letter would render the statute unconstitutionally vague, stripping the statute of adequate notice to citizens of what conduct is criminally prohibited. (Amicus Brief at 24-28.) EFF further contends that giving the statute the broad application that Facebook seeks could expose large numbers of average internet users to criminal liability for engaging in routine web-surfing and emailing activity. (Id.)

HN15[] "It is a fundamental tenet of due process that '[n]o one may be required at peril of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes." Lanzetta v. New Jersey, 306 U.S. 451, 453, 59 S. Ct. 618, 83 L. Ed. 888 (1993). Thus, a criminal [*33] statute is invalid if it "fails to give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden." United States v. Harriss, 347 U.S. 612, 74 S. Ct. 808, 98 L. Ed. 989 (1954). Where a statute has both criminal and noncriminal applications, courts must interpret the statute consistently in both contexts. Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1, 11 n.8, 125 S. Ct. 377, 160 L. Ed. 2d 271 (2004). In the Ninth Circuit, "[t]o survive vagueness review, a statute must '(1) define the offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited; and (2) establish standards to permit police to enforce the law in a non-arbitrary, non-discriminatory manner.'" United States v. Sutcliffe, 505 F.3d 944, 953 (9th Cir. 2007).

The Court finds that interpreting the statutory phrase "without permission" in a manner that imposes liability for a violation of a term of use or receipt of a cease and desist letter would create a constitutionally untenable situation in which criminal penalties could be meted out on the basis of violating vague or ambiguous terms of use. In the words of one commentator, "By granting the computer owner essentially unlimited authority to define authorization, the contract standard [*34] delegates the scope of criminality to every computer owner." [21] Users of computer and internet services cannot have adequate notice of what actions will or will not expose them to criminal liability when a computer network or website administrator can unilaterally change the rules at any time and are under no obligation to make the terms of use specific or understandable to the general public. Thus, HN16[] in order to avoid rendering the statute constitutionally infirm, the Court finds that a user of internet services does not access or use a computer, computer network, or website without permission simply because that user violated a contractual term of use. [22]

HN17[] If a violation of a term of use is by itself insufficient to support a finding that the user's access was "without permission" in violation [*35] of Section 502, the issue becomes what type of action would be sufficient to support such a finding. The Court finds that a distinction can be made between access that violates a term of use and access that circumvents technical or code-based barriers that a computer network or website administrator erects to restrict the user's privileges within the system, or to bar the user from the system altogether. [23] Limiting criminal liability to circumstances in which a user gains access to a computer, computer network, or website to

[22] This is not to say that such a user would not be subject to a claim for breach of contract. Where a user violates a computer or website's terms of use, the owner of that computer or website may also take steps to remove the violating user's access privileges.

[23] See generally Kerr, supra note 20.

which access was restricted through technological means eliminates any constitutional notice concerns, since a person applying the technical skill necessary to overcome such a barrier will almost always understand that any access gained through such action is unauthorized. Thus, the Court finds that accessing or using a computer, computer network, or website in a manner that overcomes technical or code-based barriers is "without permission," and may subject a user to liability under Section 502.

Applying this construction of the statute here, the Court finds that Power did not act "without permission" within the meaning of Section 502 [*36] when Facebook account holders utilized the Power website to access and manipulate their user content on the Facebook website, even if such action violated Facebook's Terms of Use. However, to the extent that Facebook can prove that in doing so, Power circumvented Facebook's technical barriers, Power may be held liable for violation of Section 502. Here, Facebook relies solely on the pleadings for its Motion. In their Answer, Defendants do not directly admit that the tools Power provided to its users were designed to circumvent the technical barriers that Facebook put in place to block Power's access to the Facebook website. Thus, the Court finds that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Power's access or use of the Facebook website was "without permission" within the meaning of Section 502.

EFF contends that even if Power evaded the technical barriers that Facebook implemented to deny it access, Power's conduct does not fall within the scope of Section 502 liability. (Amicus Brief at 19-28.) More specifically, EFF contends that it would be inconsistent to allow liability for ignoring or bypassing technical barriers whose sole purpose is to enforce contractual limits [*37] on access while denying liability for violating those same contractual limits when technological means of restricting access are not employed. (Id. at 19.) Thus, according to EFF, Power's efforts to circumvent Facebook's IP-blocking efforts did not violate Section 502 because Facebook was merely attempting to enforce its Terms of Use by other means. [24] (Id. at 23-24.) The Court finds EFF's contentions unpersuasive in this regard. EFF has not pointed to any meaningful distinction between IP address blocking and any other conceivable technical barrier that would adequately justify not finding Section 502 liability in one instance while finding it in the other. Moreover, the owners' underlying purpose or motivation for implementing technical barriers, whether to enforce terms of use or otherwise, is not a relevant consideration when determining the appropriate scope of liability for accessing a computer or network without authorization. There can be no ambiguity or mistake as to whether access has been authorized when one encounters a technical block, and thus there is no potential failure of notice to the computer user as to what conduct may be subject to criminal liability, as when [*38] a violation of terms of use is the sole basis for liability. [25]

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Facebook's Motion for Judgment on the [*39] Pleadings, and DENIES the parties' Cross-Motions for Summary Judgment as to Facebook's Section 502 cause of action.

C. Defendants' Counterclaims

Facebook moves to dismiss Defendants' causes of action for violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act ("Section 2") on the ground that Defendants have failed to allege sufficient facts to state a claim for monopolization or attempted monopolization. (Facebook's Motion to Dismiss at 4-9.)

[24] The Court notes that although both parties discuss IP address blocking as the form of technological barrier that Facebook utilized to deny Power access, Facebook's use of IP-blocking and Power's efforts to avoid those blocks have not been established as undisputed facts in this case. However, for purposes of this Motion, the Court finds that the specific form of the technological barrier at issue or means of circumventing that barrier are not relevant. Rather, the issue before the Court is whether there are undisputed facts to establish that such avoidance of technological barriers occurred in the first instance.

[25] As Facebook contends in its Amicus Reply, the Court finds that evidence of Power's efforts to circumvent Facebook's technical barrier is also relevant to show the necessary mental state for Section 502 liability. (Amicus Reply at 10-11.) Since the facts relating to such circumvention efforts are still in dispute, the Court finds that there is also a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Defendants possessed the requisite mental state.

HN18[] To state a Section 2 claim for monopolization, the claimant must show that the alleged monopolist (1) possesses monopoly power in the relevant market (2) through the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident, (3) that causes antitrust injury. Verizon Commc'ns v. Trinko, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004).

Since the Court finds that the element of willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power is dispositive, the Court addresses this issue first. Defendants allege, in pertinent part:

> Facebook has acquired and maintained market power through two devices: Facebook solicited (and continues to solicit) internet users to provide their account names [*40] and passwords for users' email and social networking accounts, such as Google's Gmail, AOL, Yahoo, Hotmail, or other third party websites. Facebook then uses the account information to allow the user to access those accounts through Facebook, and to run automated scripts to import their lists of friends and other contacts—i.e., to "scrape data"-from those third-party sites into Facebook. This practice fueled Facebook's growth by allowing Facebook to add millions of new users, and to provide users with convenient tools to encourage their friends and contacts to join Facebook as well. On information and belief it is estimated that at least approximately 35% to 50% of Facebook's "132 million active users" . . . registered with Facebook as a result of an invitation generated using this device.
> Facebook simultaneously prohibited (and prohibits) users from using the same type of utility to access their own user data when it is stored on the Facebook site. Thus, Facebook prohibits users from logging into Facebook through third-party sites, such as Power.com, and also restricts users from running automated scripts to retrieve their own user data from the Facebook site.

(Amended Answer P 174.)

> Facebook [*41] has also maintained its monopoly power by systematically threatening new entrants, such as Power.com and others, who seek to attract users through the same device . . . that Facebook itself used to fuel its own growth. On information and belief, for approximately the past 36 months, Facebook has threatened dozens of new entrants since 2006 with baseless intellectual property claims, and has engaged in systematic and widespread copyright misuse . . . to discourage market entry and to stifle competition from new entrants.

(Amended Answer P 176.)

The Court finds that Defendants' allegations cannot support a Section 2 monopolization claim. Defendants cite no authority for the proposition that Facebook is somehow obligated to allow third-party websites unfettered access to its own website simply because some other third-party websites grant that privilege to Facebook. In fact, HN19[] the Ninth Circuit has held that merely introducing a product that is not technologically interoperable with competing products is not violative of Section 2. See Foremost Pro Color, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 703 F.2d 534 (9th Cir. 1983).

In response to Facebook's Motion, Defendants merely assert that Facebook's actions [*42] are anticompetitive because Defendants have alleged so, and that the Court must accept this allegation as true at the motion to dismiss stage. [26] In maintaining this position, Defendants miss the fact that he issue of whether or not a particular practice is anticompetitive is determinative of an essential element of a monopoly claim, and is thus a question of law that may be determined by the Court. The Court is not obligated to accept as true Defendants' allegations that amount to conclusions of law, and the Court rejects Defendants' naked assertion here that Facebook's practices are predatory. Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286.

The Court likewise finds that Defendants' allegation that Facebook maintained monopoly power by threatening potential new entrants to the social networking market with baseless intellectual property lawsuits cannot support a Section 2 claim. If Facebook has the right to manage access to and use of its website, then there can be nothing anticompetitive about taking legal action [*43] to enforce that right. Furthermore, whether or not a particular lawsuit is "baseless" is a legal conclusion, and thus the Court need not accept Defendants' allegations as to the merits of Facebook's lawsuits as true. Again, Defendants cite no authority for the proposition that filing lawsuits against competitors for infringing on one's intellectual property rights can be deemed an anticompetitive or predatory practice.

[26] (Defendants' Opposition to Motion of Facebook, Inc. to Dismiss Counterclaims and Strike Affirmative Defenses at 4-5, hereafter, "Defendants' Opposition re Motion to Dismiss," Docket Item No. 63.)

In light of the Court's finding that Defendants do not plead sufficient facts to satisfy one of the essential elements of their Section 2 claim, the Court need not address the sufficiency of Defendants' pleadings as to the remaining elements. Since HN20[] anticompetitive conduct is also an element of a claim for attempted monopolization under Section 2, the Court finds that Defendants' pleadings are deficient as to that claim as well. See Coalition for ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 567 F.3d 1084, 1093 (9th Cir. 2009).

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Facebook's Motion to Dismiss Defendants' counterclaims for violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Since Defendants have already had the opportunity to amend their counterclaims once, the Court dismisses these claims [*44] with prejudice.

D.UCL Claim

Facebook moves to dismiss Defendants' UCL claim on the ground that if Facebook's conduct is not anticompetitive under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, a UCL claim cannot be premised on that same conduct. (Facebook's Motion to Dismiss at 8-9.)

HN21[] The UCL prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. "The broad scope of the statute encompasses both anticompetitive business practices and practices injurious to consumers. An act or practice may be actionable as 'unfair' under the unfair competition law even if it is not 'unlawful.'" Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp., 93 Cal. App. 4th 363, 375, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001).

In Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tele. Co., [27] the court concluded that HN22[] an act or practice is "unfair" under the UCL if that conduct "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Likewise, > the determination that the conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade necessarily implies that the conduct [*45] is not "unfair" toward consumers. To permit a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct.

Chavez, 93 Cal. App. 4th at 375.

Here, the Court has found that Facebook's conduct is not anticompetitive. Thus, Defendants cannot premise their UCL claim on Facebook's conduct under either the unlawful or the unfair prong. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Facebook's Motion to Dismiss as to Defendants' UCL counterclaim with prejudice.

E.Affirmative Defenses

Facebook moves to strike Defendants' affirmative defenses of misuse of copyright and fair use. (Facebook's Motion to Dismiss at 9-11.)

[27] 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999).

HN23[] Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f), "the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." However, "[m]otions to strike are generally regarded with disfavor because of the limited importance of pleading in federal practice, and because they are often used as a delaying tactic." Neilson v. Union Bank of Cal., N.A., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1152 (C.D. Cal. 2003); [*46] see, e.g., Cal. Dep't of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc., 217 F. Supp. 2d 1028 (C.D. Cal. 2002). Accordingly, such motions should be denied unless the matter has no logical connection to the controversy at issue and may prejudice one or more of the parties to the suit. SEC v. Sands, 902 F. Supp. 1149, 1166 (C.D. Cal. 1995); LeDuc v. Kentucky Central Life Ins. Co., 814 F. Supp. 820, 820 (N.D. Cal. 1992). HN24[] When considering a motion to strike, the court "must view the pleading in a light most favorable to the pleading party." In re 2TheMart.com, Inc. Securities Litig., 114 F. Supp. 2d 955, 965 (C.D. Cal. 2000).

Here, the Court previously struck Defendants' affirmative defenses because they "contain[ed] no factual allegations." (October 22 Order at 3.) Instead, the pleadings merely referred back to the "Introduction and Background" section with the phrase "conduct, as described herein." (Id. at 4.) The Court found such barebones pleading inadequate, but gave Defendants leave to amend. In their Amended Answer, Defendants plead in much greater detail their misuse of copyright and fair use affirmative defenses. (Amended Answer PP 161-68.) The Court finds that Defendants' amended [*47] allegations are sufficient to provide Facebook with "fair notice of the defense." See Mag Instrument, Inc. v. JS Prods., 595 F. Supp. 2d 1102, 1107 (C.D. Cal. 2008).

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Facebook's Motion to Strike Defendants' Affirmative Defenses.

V. CONCLUSION

The Court DENIES Facebook's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, DENIES the parties' Cross-Motions for Summary Judgment, GRANTS Facebook's Motion to Dismiss Defendants' counterclaims for violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act with prejudice, GRANTS Facebook's Motion to Dismiss Defendants' UCL counterclaim with prejudice, and DENIES Facebook's Motion to Strike Defendants' Affirmative Defenses.

On August 23, 2010 at 10 a.m., the parties shall appear for a Further Case Management Conference. On or before August 13, 2010, the parties shall file a Joint Case Management Statement. The Statement shall include an update on the parties' discovery efforts and proposed schedule on how this case should proceed in light of this Order.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

JOHN GLEESON, United States District Judge:

In October 2009, the plaintiffs in the above-captioned putative class action filed a Second Amended Complaint against The Coca-Cola Company ("Coca-Cola") and Energy Brands Inc., d/b/a/ Glaceau ("Glaceau") (collectively "defendants"), alleging claims of: (1) unlawful business acts and practices in violation of California Business and Professions Code ("Cal. BPC") § 17200 et seq. ("Unfair Competition Law" or "UCL"); Cal. BPC § 17500 et seq. ("False Advertising Law" or "FAL"); and California's Consumers Legal Remedies Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 1750 et seq. ("CLRA"); [*2] (2) unfair business acts and practices in violation of California UCL; (3) fraudulent business acts and practices in violation of California UCL; (4) misleading and deceptive advertising in violation of California FAL; (5) untrue advertising in violation of California FAL; (6) unfair methods of competition or unfair or fraudulent acts or practices in violation of § 1770(a)(7) of the CLRA; (7) deceptive acts or practices in violation of New York General Business law ("GBL") § 349; (8) false advertising in violation of New York GBL § 350; (9) violation of New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act ("NJCFA"), N.J.S.A. 56:8-1 et seq.; (10) breach of an express warranty; (11) breach of an implied warranty of merchantability; (12) deceit and/or misrepresentation; and (13) unjust enrichment. The claims are brought on behalf of three purported classes of plaintiffs: "[a]ll California Residents who purchased vitaminwater at any time from January 15, 2005 to [the] present," (the "California Class"); "[a]ll New York residents who purchased vitaminwater at any time from January 30, 2003 to [the] present," (the "New York Class"); and "[a]ll New Jersey residents who purchased vitaminwater at any time from January [*3] 22, 2003 to [the] present" (the "New Jersey Class"). [1] Claims one through six are brought on behalf of the California class, claims seven and eight on behalf of the New York Class, claim nine on behalf of the New Jersey Class, and claims ten through thirteen on behalf of all three classes.

The defendants have moved to dismiss on grounds of: (1) federal preemption and (2) failure to satisfy the pleading standards of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 8 and 9(b). For the reasons set forth below, defendants' motion is granted with respect to claims nine, ten and eleven and denied in all other respects.

BACKGROUND

The following facts are drawn from the Second Amended Complaint ("Sec. Am. Compl.") and are assumed to be true for the purposes of this motion.

A. The Parties

Plaintiff Batsheva Ackerman is a resident of New York. Plaintiffs Ruslan Antonov, James Koh and Jerrad Pelkey are residents of California. Plaintiffs Jack Petty and Phyllis Valentine are residents [*4] of New Jersey. Defendant Coca-Cola is a Georgia corporation headquartered in Atlanta, Georgia, and describes itself, according to the Second Amended Complaint, as the largest manufacturer, distributor and marketer of nonalcoholic beverage concentrates and syrups in the world. Defendant Glaceau, a wholly owned subsidiary of Coca-Cola, produces the beverage "vitaminwater," [2] is headquartered in Whitestone, New York.

B. Procedural History

This lawsuit is a hybrid of five substantially similar cases that had been previously filed in California, New York and New Jersey. Suit was commenced in this court by plaintiff Batsheva Ackerman by the filing of a complaint on January 29, 2009 on behalf of herself and a class consisting of all New York State residents who purchased vitaminwater within three years of the filing of the Complaint.

An amended complaint filed on May 26, 2009 added Ruslan Antonov, James Koh and Jerrad Pelkey as plaintiffs, representing a class of "all California residents who purchased vitaminwater at any time from January 15, 2005 to

[1] Each class excludes "officers and directors of Defendants, members of their immediate families, and the[ir]. . . legal representatives, heirs, successors or assigns and any entity in which they have or have had a controlling interest."

[2] Plaintiffs refer to the product as "VitaminWater." This opinion adopts defendants' lower-case spelling of "vitaminwater."

the present." Id. at P 30. [*5] Antonov, Koh and Pelkey had previously been plaintiffs in suits filed in California federal courts, alleging similar claims. [3]

On June 1, 2009, defendants filed a motion with the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPML") for transfer of this case, together with another pending case, Thomas Mason, et al. v. The Coca-Cola Company and Energy Brands, Inc., Case No. 1:09-cv-00220-NLH-JH (D.N.J., filed Jan. 14, 2009) ("the New Jersey Action"), to the Northern District of California for coordinated pretrial management pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1407. Defendants filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Procedure 12(b)(6) on June 22, 2009. On July 6, 2009, the Honorable Charles P. Sifton stayed the briefing schedule for that motion until the JPML ruled on defendants' motion for coordination and transfer. [4] On August 6, 2009, the JPML denied defendants' motion to transfer. [5] Plaintiffs filed the Second Amended Complaint on October 6, 2009, adding as [*6] plaintiffs Jack Petty and Phyllis Valentine, who had been plaintiffs in the New Jersey Action. On October 26, 2009, defendants filed the instant motion to dismiss.

This court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d), because the aggregate claims of the class exceed $ 5,000,000 and minimal diversity exists between the proposed class members and defendants.

C. The Federal Regulatory Scheme

The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S.C. § 343 et seq. ("FDCA"), was [*7] enacted in 1938 as a successor to the 1906 Pure Food and Drugs Act, 34 Stat. 768,, repealed by Act of June 25, 1938, ch. 675, § 902(a), 52 Stat. 1059, which had been the first comprehensive federal legislation designed to protect consumers from fraud or misrepresentation in the sale of food and drugs. See generally, James T. O'Reilly, Food and Drug Administration § 3:1-13 (3d ed. 2009). The FDCA empowers the Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") to (a) protect the public health by ensuring that "foods are safe, wholesome, sanitary, and properly labeled," 21 U.S.C. § 393(b)(2)(A); (b) promulgate regulations pursuant to this authority; and (c) enforce its regulations through administrative proceedings. See 21 C.F.R. § 7.1 et seq. The FDCA deems a food as "misbranded" if its labeling "is false or misleading in any particular." 21 U.S.C.A. § 343(a). There is no private right of action under the statute. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804, 810, 106 S. Ct. 3229, 92 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1986).

In 1990 Congress amended the FDCA by enacting the Nutrition Labeling and Education Act (the "NLEA"), codified as amended at 21 U.S.C. §§ 301, 321, 337, 343, 371. "The NLEA was passed to 'clarify and to strengthen the Food and [*8] Drug Administration's legal authority to require nutrition labeling on foods, and to establish the circumstances under which claims may be made about the nutrients in foods.'" Nutritional Health Alliance v. Shalala, 144 F.3d 220 (2d Cir. 1998) (citing H.R. Rep. No. 101-538, at 7 (1990)). The NLEA amended the FDCA in several significant respects: it expanded the coverage of nutrition labeling requirements; it changed the form and substance of ingredient labeling on packages; it imposed limitations on health claims; it standardized the definitions of all nutrient content claims; and it required more uniform serving sizes. See The Impact of the Nutrition Labeling and Education Act of 1990 on the Food Industry, 47 Admin. L. Rev. 605, 606 (1995). The NLEA also added a preemption provision to Section 403A of the FDCA. It states, in relevant part:

> Except as provided in subsection (b), [6] no State or political subdivision of a State may directly or indirectly establish under any authority or continue in effect as to any food in interstate commerce

[4] This matter was originally assigned to the late Judge Charles P. Sifton. It was transferred to me on November 24, 2009.

[5] The JPML found that: (1) the litigation involved only two actions; (2) common questions of fact were not sufficiently complex and/or numerous to justify transfer; (3) alternatives to transfer existed which could minimize duplicative discovery and/or inconsistent pretrial rulings; and (4) plaintiffs in the New Jersey Action had attempted to dismiss their action and join in the complaint in the Eastern District of New York, which would have negated the multidistrict character of the litigation. See MDL Order, In re: Glaceau Vitamin Water Mktg. and Sales Practices Litig., MDL No. 2080 (August 6, 2009).

> (5) any requirement respecting any claim of the type described in section 343(r)(1) of this title [i.e., nutrition levels and health-related [*9] claims], made in the label or labeling of food that is not identical to the requirement of section 343(r) of this title . . . .

21 U.S.C. § 343-1(a)(5) ("Section 403A").

Section 343(r)(1) of the NLEA describes claims in the labeling of food [7] that "expressly or by implication," "characterize [] the level of any nutrient" or "characterize [] the relationship of any nutrient . . . to a disease or health related condition . . . ." 21 U.S.C. § 343(r)(1). The FDA has promulgated regulations concerning three different kinds of claims of the type described in Section 343(r)(1): express nutrient-content claims, implied nutrient-content claims, and health claims. See 21 C.F.R. §§ 101.13 (defining express and implied nutrient-content claims), 101.14 (defining health claims). An express nutrient-content claim is a direct statement about the level or range of a nutrient in a food, such as "low sodium" or "100 calories." 21 C.F.R. § 101.13(b)(1). An "implied nutrient-content claim" is a statement suggesting "that a nutrient [*10] or an ingredient is absent or present in a certain amount," such as "high in oat bran," (suggesting a high dietary fiber content), a statement such as "as much fiber as an apple," which suggests a nutrient level comparable to a specified reference food, or a "general nutritional claim," (a subcategory of an implied nutrient claim) consisting of an express or implied claim that the nutrient content of a food may help consumers maintain healthy dietary practices. See 21 C.F.R. §§ 101.13(b)(2)(i)-(ii); 21 C.F.R. § 101.65. A claim that a product is "healthy" is generally an implied nutritional content claim. [8] "Health claims" by contrast, specifically "characterize [] the relationship of any substance to a disease or health-related condition." 21 C.F.R. 101.14.

[6] 21 U.S.C. § 343-1(b) provides a mechanism by which a state may petition the FDA for an exemption from the FDCA's preemption provision. It is not relevant to the instant suit.

[7] Plaintiffs alternately refer to vitaminwater as a food or "dietary supplement." See, e.g., Sec. Am. Compl. P 15 (referring to vitaminwater as a "dietary supplement beverage."). Although neither party asserts that this distinction is significant to the present suit, it is quite clear that vitaminwater is in fact a food rather than a dietary supplement. See Final Rule, Food Labeling; Requirements for Nutrient Content Claims, Health Claims, and Statements of Nutritional Support for Dietary Supplements, 62 Fed. Reg. 49859, 49862 (Sept. 23, 1997) [*11] ("whether a product is a dietary supplement or a conventional food will depend on how it is labeled. To be a dietary supplement, a product must bear the term 'dietary supplement' as part of its common or usual name."). See also FDA Draft, Guidance for Industry: Factors that Distinguish Liquid Dietary Supplements from Beverages, Considerations Regarding Novel Ingredients, and Labeling for Beverages and Other Conventional Foods (December 2009) (noting in non-binding recommendation that "Beverages are conventional foods under the [FDCA]. Even when the label of a liquid product characterizes it as a dietary supplement, the product may not in fact be a dietary supplement."), available at http://www.fda.gov/Food/GuidanceComplianceRegulatoryInformation/GuidanceDocuments/ucm192702.htm (last visited July 2, 2010); see generally Leah A. Satine, Is my Yogurt Lying? Developing and Applying a Framework for Determining Whether Wellness Claims on Probiotic Yogurts Mislead, 63 Food & Drug L.J. 537, 545-46 (2008) (noting that the FDA has interpreted the category of dietary supplements narrowly in circumstances where a product contains properties of both conventional foods and dietary supplements).

[8] The [*12] FDA has explained that while use of the term "healthy" typically constitutes an implied nutrient content claim, it could, in some circumstances, constitute a health claim where it is used in reference to a disease or health-related condition. See Final Rule, Food Labeling; General Requirements for Health Claims for Food:

> In the case of the word "healthy," the agency does not believe that the use of this word would normally be a health claim. "Healthy" has a wide variety of meanings in addition to ones that would satisfy the second basic element of a health claim. For example, "healthy" can certainly imply general nutritional well-being. Thus, while a claim such as "Eat a diet low in fat for a healthy heart" may be a health claim, "Eating five fruits or vegetables a day is a good way to a healthy lifestyle" is not. Moreover . . . [the] FDA may also regulate the term "healthy" . . . as an implied nutrient content claim.

58 Fed. Reg. 2478-01, 2483-84 (Jan. 6, 1993).

D. The State Regulatory Schemes

California, New York and New Jersey broadly prohibit the misbranding of food in language largely identical to that found in the FDCA. California's Sherman Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Law (the "Sherman [*13] Law"), Health & Saf. Code § 109875 et seq., provides that food is misbranded "if its labeling is false or misleading in any particular." Id. The Sherman Law explicitly incorporates by reference "[a]ll food labeling regulations and any amendments to those regulations adopted pursuant to the [FDCA]," as the food labeling regulations of California. Cal. Health & Saf. Code, § 110100, subd. (a). New York's Agriculture and Marketing law similarly provides in relevant part that food shall be deemed misbranded "[i]f its labeling is false or misleading in any particular," and incorporates the FDCA's labeling provisions found in 21 C.F.R. part 101. Agriculture and Markets Law § 201(1); N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 1, § 259.1. Likewise, New Jersey law provides that "a food shall . . . be deemed misbranded . . . [i]f its labeling is false or misleading in any particular," and incorporates by reference the FDCA's labeling regulations in 21 C.F.R. part 101. N.J.S.A. 24:5-17 (a), N.J. Admin. Code tit. 8, § 24-3.6. California, New York, and New Jersey each also discourage the misbranding of food through the availability of remedies pursuant to the respective state's consumer protection laws.

DISCUSSION

A. [*14] The Standard of Review

Motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) test the legal, not the factual, sufficiency of a complaint. See, e.g., Sims v. Artuz, 230 F.3d 14, 20 (2d Cir. 2000) ("At the Rule 12(b)(6) stage, 'the issue is not whether a plaintiff is likely to prevail ultimately, but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims.'" (quoting Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 701 (2d Cir. 1998))). Accordingly, I must accept the factual allegations in the complaint as true, Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93-94, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (2007) (per curiam), and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Bolt Elec., Inc. v. City of New York, 53 F.3d 465, 469 (2d Cir. 1995). However, "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

In Iqbal, the Supreme Court provided additional guidance regarding the consideration of motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). Citing its earlier decision in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007), the Court explained:

> To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, [*15] accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), the circumstances of fraud or mistake must be pleaded with particularity. See, e.g., Campaniello Imports, Ltd. v. Saporiti Italia S.p.A., 117 F.3d 655, 663 (2d Cir. 1997).

When considering a motion to dismiss, a court may examine (1) the factual allegations in the complaint, which are accepted as true; (2) documents attached to the complaint as exhibits or incorporated in it by reference; (3) matters of which judicial notice may be taken; and (4) documents either in the plaintiff's possession or of which the plaintiff had knowledge and relied on in bringing suit. Brass v. Am. Film Techs., Inc., 987 F.2d 142, 150 (2d Cir. 1993).

B. Plaintiffs' Claims

Plaintiffs' state law claims are premised on twelve allegedly misleading statements made in connection with the labeling of vitaminwater:

1. The description of the product as [*16] a "Nutrient-Enhanced Water Beverage";
2. The phrase "vitamins + water = all you need" on the product label;

3. Flavor names such as "rescue" and "defense";
4. The name "vitaminwater" itself;
5. The statement "vitamins + water = what's in your hand" on in-store advertising materials;
6. The statement "this combination of zinc and fortifying vitamins can . . . keep you healthy as a horse" on the label of vitaminwater's "defense" flavor;
7. The statement "specially formulated to support optimal metabolic function with antioxidants that may reduce the risk of chronic diseases, and vitamins necessary for the generation and utilization of energy from food" on the label of vitaminwater's "rescue" flavor;
8. The statement "specially formulated to provide vitamin [A] (a nutrient known to be required for visual function), antioxidants and other nutrients [that] scientific evidence suggests may reduce the risk of age-related eye disease" on the label of vitaminwater's "focus" flavor;

9. The statement "specially formulated with bioactive components that contribute to an active lifestyle by promoting healthy, pain-free functioning of joints, structural integrity of joints and bones, and optimal generation [*17] and utilization of energy from food" on the label of vitaminwater's "balance" flavor;
10. The statement "specially formulated with nutrients required for optimal functioning of the immune system, and the generation and utilization of energy from food to support immune and other metabolic activities" on the label of vitaminwater's "defense" flavor;
11. The statement "specially formulated with [B] vitamins and theanine. The [B] vitamins are there to replace those lost during times of stress (physical and mental). Theanine is an amino acid found naturally in tea leaves and has been shown to promote feelings of relaxation. This combination can help bring about a healthy state of physical and mental being" on the label of vitaminwater's "B-relaxed" flavor;
12. The statement "specially formulated with nutrients that enable the body to exert physical power by contributing to structural integrity of the musculoskeletal system, and by supporting optimal generation and utilization from food" on the label of vitaminwater's "Power-C" flavor. [9]

Plaintiffs no longer contend that the particular vitamins in vitaminwater fail to provide the benefit claimed. [10] Rather, they claim that vitaminwater's labeling [*18] and marketing is misleading because it: (1) "bombard[s] consumers with a message of purported benefits, and draw[s] consumer attention away from the significant amount of sugar in the product," Sec. Am. Compl. P 6; (2) portrays vitaminwater as healthy when it is essentially a snack food that provides nutritional benefits solely because it has been specifically fortified to do so, see Sec. Am. Compl. P 57; and (3) suggests that vitaminwater contains nothing but vitamins and water. See Sec. Am. Compl. P 26.

C. Preemption

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' claims should all be dismissed because they are expressly preempted by federal law, or in the alternative, because they are barred by implied conflict preemption.

Under the Supremacy Clause, U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl.2, state laws that "interfere with, or are contrary to the laws of Congress, made in pursuance of the constitution" are invalid. Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat) 1, 211, 6 L. Ed. 23 (1824). An otherwise valid state law is preempted if: (1) Congress expressly preempts the state law; (2) Congress completely occupies the law's field of operation; (3) compliance with both federal and state law is impossible; or (4) the state law presents an obstacle to the achievement of the full purposes and objectives of [9] The initial complaint identified numerous additional allegedly misleading statements. See Compl. P 18. Plaintiffs' papers on the instant motion suggest that they excluded from the Second Amended Complaint the statements most clearly regulated by the FDA so their suit would escape the bar of federal preemption. See infra note 19. Although it would not have altered the outcome of the motion, I do not consider the statements plaintiffs excluded from their Second Amended Complaint. See Harris v. City of New York, 186 F.3d 243, 249 (2d Cir. 1999) ("It is well established that an amended complaint ordinarily supersedes the original, and renders it of no legal effect." (quoting Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1128 (2d Cir. 1994))).

[10] A [*19] claim to that effect was included in the initial complaint. See Complaint P 5 (alleging that "certain vitamins purported to be contained in vitaminwater beverages are not benefiting consumers the way Defendants' claim (e.g., are incapable of being absorbed by the body or fail to maintain a potency between date of bottling and date of consumption).").

Congress. See Wis. Pub. Intervenor v. Mortier, 501 U.S. 597, 603-07, 111 S. Ct. 2476, 115 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1991). The Supreme [*20] Court has instructed that the task of determining whether a federal statute has preempted state law is guided by two basic principles. First, "the purpose of Congress is the ultimate touchstone in every pre-emption case." Wyeth v. Levine, 129 S. Ct. 1187, 1194, 173 L. Ed. 2d 51 (2009) (quoting Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 U.S. 470, 485, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 (1996)). "Second, [i]n all pre-emption cases, and particularly in those in which Congress has legislated . . . in a field which the States have traditionally occupied, . . . we start with the assumption that the historic police powers of the States were not to be superseded by the Federal Act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress." Id. at 1194-95 (quoting Lohr, 518 U.S. at 485) (quotation marks omitted). The presumption against preemption has been recognized in matters of public health and safety, including the regulation of food and drugs. See, e.g., Hillsborough County, Fla. v. Automated Med. Labs., Inc., 471 U.S. 707, 105 S. Ct. 2371, 85 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1985); New York State Rest. Ass'n v. New York City Bd. of Health, 556 F.3d 114, 123 (2d Cir. 2009). Moreover, where Congress provides an express preemption clause, the presumption against preemption requires courts to read the clause [*21] narrowly. See Lohr, 518 U.S. at 485 (citing Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 U.S. 504, 518, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1992)).

Because Section 403A(a)(5) preempts any state requirement that is different than the FDCA's regulation in Section 343(r)(1), there are two ways plaintiffs may escape its preemptive force: (1) if the plaintiffs' claims seek to impose requirements that are identical to those imposed by the FDCA; or (2) if the requirements plaintiffs seek to impose are not with respect to claims of the sort described in Section 343(r)(1). With regard to the first exception, the Supreme Court has held that "in the context of express preemption provisions, 'the term "requirements". . . reaches beyond positive enactments, such as statutes and regulations, to embrace common-law duties."' In re PepsiCo, Inc., Bottled Water Mktg. and Sales Practices, 588 F. Supp. 2d 527, 532 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (citing Bates v. Dow Agrosciences L.L.C., 544 U.S. 431, 443, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687 (2005)); see also Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc., 552 U.S. 312, 325, 128 S. Ct. 999, 169 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2008) ("excluding common-law duties from the scope of pre-emption would make little sense"); Cipollone, 505 U.S. at 522 ("common-law damages actions. . . are premised on the existence of a legal duty, [*22] and it is difficult to say that such actions do not impose 'requirements or prohibitions'"). However, a state statute mirroring its federal counterpart does not impose any additional requirement merely by providing a damage remedy for conduct that would otherwise violate federal law, even if the federal statute provides no private right of action. See Bates, 544 U.S. at 432 (preemption of additional requirements "[does] not preclude States from imposing different or additional remedies") (emphasis in original); see also Medtronic, 518 U.S. at 513 (O'Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) ("[T]he threat of a [state law] damages remedy" does not impose a "requirement" where "the requirements imposed on [defendants] under state and federal law do not differ."). Accordingly, claims under state laws that parallel the FDCA's requirements are not preempted. [11]

A plaintiff's claims may avoid preemption under the second exception even if they seek to impose additional "requirements" on a defendant, as long as any such requirement is not "respecting any claim of the type described in Section 343(r)(1)." 21 U.S.C. § 343-1(a)(5). That section describes claims made in the label or labeling of food; thus, claims based on statements contained in an advertisement may not be preempted unless the advertisement qualifies as labeling under the FDCA. [12] In addition, Section 403A preempts only claims based on statements that

[11] The FDA has taken a similar position. See, e.g., Final Rule, Beverages: Bottled Water, 60 Fed. Reg. 57076, 57120 (Nov. 13, 1995) ("[I]f the State requirement does the same thing that the Federal law does, even if the words are not exactly the same, then it is effectively the same requirement as the Federal requirement [*23] . . . . the only State requirements that are subject to preemption are those that are affirmatively different from the Federal requirements on matters that are covered by section 403A(a) of the act.").

[12] Plaintiffs contend that defendants' preemption arguments cannot apply to the statement "vitamins + water = what's in your hand" because it was made on "in-store advertising" rather than labeling. See Pl. Br. at 3; Sec. Am. Coml. P 25. That contention rests on the erroneous assumption that a statement must be physically affixed to a product to constitute "labeling." [*25] The FDCA defines labeling to include "all labels and other written, printed, or graphic matter (1) upon any article or any of its containers or wrappers, or (2) accompanying such article." 21 U.S.C. § 321(m). The definition of "accompanying" has been interpreted broadly to include statements not attached to the product itself. See, e.g., Kordel v. U.S., 335 U.S. 345, 350, 69 S. expressly or by implication characterize the level of a nutrient or the relationship of a nutrient to a disease or health related condition; claims based on statements not falling into those categories are not preempted. Further, breach of warranty claims are generally not preempted because they are not requirements "'imposed under State law,' but rather imposed by the warrantor." Cipollone, 505 U.S. at 525-26; see also Bates, 544 U.S. at 444-45 [*24] (concluding warranty was "a contractual commitment that [defendant] voluntarily undertook by placing that warranty on its product," and therefore was not preempted by federal law). However, only those breach of warranty claims based on statements not required by federal regulations will avoid the bar of preemption; a breach of warranty claim premised on a statement that is mandated by federal statute would clearly impose a requirement contrary to federal law. See Horowitz v. Stryker Corp., 613 F. Supp. 2d 271 (E.D.N.Y. 2009) (citation omitted); see also Duvall v. Bristol-Myers-Squibb Co., 103 F.3d 324 (4th Cir. 1996) (in the context of a suit concerning allegedly defective medical device, express warranty claim is preempted only "to the extent that the claim is based on FDA-mandated labeling, packaging, or advertising.").

Accordingly, I must analyze the FDCA's labeling requirements for nutrition levels and health-related claims and then determine whether the plaintiffs' state law causes of action: (1) impose requirements that are identical to those imposed by federal law; or (2) impose additional requirements, but not respecting nutrition and health related claims.

1. Violation of FDA Regulations

Plaintiffs contend that their state law claims are not preempted because they are based on misleading statements that violate FDA regulations. Specifically, the Second Amended Complaint suggests that vitaminwater violates FDA regulations by: (1) making health claims or implied nutrient-content claims despite the high amount of sugar in the product; (2) making health or certain implied nutrient content claims despite the fact [*27] that vitaminwater has been fortified with vitamins in violation of the FDA's fortification policy; and (3) prominently featuring the name of some, but not all, of its ingredients in its product name and label. As explained below, the first argument has been rejected by the FDA, but the latter two accurately describe violations of FDA regulations, and accordingly may serve as a non-preempted basis of state law liability.

a. Use of Health or Implied Nutrient-Content Claims in Products with High Sugar Content

Congress has recognized that certain foods may be generally unhealthy, but nonetheless contain a nutrient that would, if considered alone, permit a health or nutritional content claim to be made about the product. In recognition of this fact, the FDCA authorizes regulations regarding "disqualifying nutrient levels;" that is, nutrient levels which would preclude any health claims from being made about that product. See 21 U.S.C. 343(r)(3)(A)(ii). [13] In 1993 the FDA issued a final rule regulating the nutrients that could be considered "disqualifying" for health-claim purposes, and identified only four such nutrients: total fat, saturated fat, cholesterol, or sodium. See 58 Fed. Reg. 2478, 2491 (Jan. 6, 1993); [*28] 21 C.F.R. § 101.14(a)(4) (defining "disqualifying nutrient levels" as "the levels of total fat, saturated fat, cholesterol, or sodium in a food above which the food will be disqualified from making a health claim.").

Ct. 106, 93 L. Ed. 52 (1948) (no physical attachment between the label and product is necessary); U.S. v. 24 Bottles Sterling Vinegar and Honey Aged in Wood Cider, 338 F.2d 157, 159 (2d Cir. 1964) ("The distinguishing characteristic of a label is that, in some manner or another, it is presented to the customer in immediate connection with his view and his purchase of the product."); see generally Louis Altman and Malla Pollack, 1A Callmann on Unfair Comp., Trademarks & Monopolies § 5:9 (4th Ed. 2009) ("The original distinction between labels and other advertising matter has . . . been blurred."); Sarah E. Taylor, and Harold J. Feld, Promoting Functional Foods and Nutraceuticals on the Internet, 54 Food & Drug L.J. 423, 446 (1999) (surveying case law and concluding "[i]f the matter is part of an integrated scheme to promote the product, [*26] with a readily discernible nexus between product sales and the matter, the representation will constitute labeling."). Because the statement "vitamins + water = what's in your hand" accompanied the sale of vitaminwater, it constitutes a statement made in the "labeling" under 21 U.S.C. § 321(m) and therefore does not enjoy any special exemption from the preemption provision of Section 403A.

[13] The statute does not explicitly use the term "disqualifying nutrient level"; that term is used in the FDA's implementing regulations, which are found at 21 C.F.R. § 101.14(a)(4).

The FDA received several comments during the notice and comment period proposing that sugar be included as a disqualifying nutrient. See 58 Fed. Reg. at 2491. However, it rejected these comments, determining that it "would not be appropriate to limit health claims on foods on the basis of added sugars" because there was "no sound basis" for doing so. Id. In particular, the FDA based its conclusion on the fact that "the public health community has not identified a dietary level above which consumption of sugars has been demonstrated to increase the risk of a disease," and the fact that no recommended Daily Reference Value for sugar had been established. Id.

In 1994, the FDA considered the related question of whether a specified level of sugar or calories should be a disqualifying nutrient for express [*29] or implied nutrient-content claims identifying a product as "healthy." Answering the question in the negative, the FDA concluded:

> The agency has not been persuaded by the comments that it is necessary to include a "low calorie" or "low sugar" criterion in the definition of "healthy" for the claim to be useful and not misleading to consumers. The information provided in the comments did not show that consumers expect "healthy" to be a claim about the caloric content of the food. Furthermore, the purpose of defining the term would be defeated if the term were defined so narrowly that it is appropriate only for people on weight-loss diets. Thus, the agency is not requiring that a food be "low calorie" or "low" in sugar to bear the term "healthy."

59 Fed. Reg. 24232, 24244 (May 10, 1994).

As a matter of federal law, therefore, the presence of sugar is not a disqualifying nutrient which would prohibit the defendants from "touting the purported benefits" (Sec. Am. Compl. P 3) of the other ingredients in their beverage, whether through health claims or express or implied claims of nutrient content. The FDA's decision to exclude sugar as a disqualifying ingredient is entitled to the same preemptive [*30] force as statutory law. See Nat'l Fuel Gas Supply Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Com'n of State of N.Y., 894 F.2d 571, 576 (2d Cir. 1990) ("Federal law need not be statutory to preempt state law. Regulations promulgated by an agency pursuant to its delegated authority may preempt similar state regulations." (citing Capital Cities Cable, Inc. v. Crisp, 467 U.S. 691, 104 S. Ct. 2694, 81 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1984))). Accordingly, any claim under state law solely premised on the notion that vitaminwater's high sugar content made its health or implied nutrient content claims misleading is preempted by the FDA's express decision to not recognize sugar as a disqualifying nutrient.

b. Use of Health or Implied Nutrient Content Claims of "Healthiness" in Products Fortified in Violation of FDA Fortification Policy

Plaintiffs allege that it is misleading to market vitaminwater as a product which "may help consumers maintain healthy dietary practices" when it is an essentially "a snack food that has been fortified to provide the claimed nutritional benefits." Sec. Am. Compl. P 57. See also id. at P 4 ("it is just another flavored, sugary snack food like Coca-Cola, except that Defendants chose not to carbonate it."). This contention bears some similarity [*31] to the claim discussed above but is distinct in contending that that the fortification of sugar water -- rather than the sugar content itself -- precludes defendants from claiming or implying that vitaminwater is a healthy beverage.

FDA regulations do not permit a health claim, or any nutrient content claim involving the word "healthy," (or any derivative) to be made about a food unless it contains, in the quantity customarily consumed at one sitting, [14] at least 10 percent of the recommended daily reference quantity [15] of vitamin A, vitamin C, calcium, iron, protein or

[14] This reference quantity, termed "Reference Amount Customarily Consumed per Eating Occasion," is defined in the case of beverages such as vitaminwater in 21 C.F.R. § 101.12(b) as 8 fl oz (240 mL). It serves as a mandatory reference quantity for the purposes of calculating whether the 10% threshold has been met, but qualifies only as a recommended quantity for the purpose of setting serving sizes in the product label. See id. at n.5.

[15] These reference quantities encompass two sets of daily recommended nutrient intake values: (1) Reference Daily Intakes ("RDIs") for vitamins and minerals, and (2) Daily Reference Values ("DRVs") for macronutrients. The relevant RDI's are: 5,000 International Units of Vitamin A, 60 milligrams of Vitamin C, 1,000 milligrams of Calcium, and 18 milligrams of Iron. See 21 C.F.R. § 101.9(c)(8)(iv). The relevant DRV's are: 50 [*33] grams of protein and 25 grams of fiber. See 21 C.F.R. § 101.9(c)(9).

fiber ("minimum nutrient levels"). See 21 C.F.R. § 101.14 (e)(6) (health claim); 21 C.F.R. § 101.65(d) (nutrient content claim). In the case of a claim that a product is "healthy," a manufacturer may fortify the product with nutrients in order to reach the required 10 percent nutrient threshold only if the addition of nutrients would be consistent with the FDA's fortification policy for foods set forth in 21 C.F.R. § 104.20, which bars the "indiscriminate addition of nutrients to foods." [16] See 21 C.F.R. § 101.65 (d)(2)(iv). With regard to health claims, the food must contain the threshold 10 percent level of nutrients "prior [*32] to any nutrient addition." See 21 C.F.R. § 101.14(e)(6). The FDA also does not permit the use of the words "more," "fortified," "enriched," "added," "extra," or "plus" with respect to a product containing added nutrients if the addition of the nutrients itself violates the fortification policy in Section 104.20. 21 C.F.R. § 101.54(e). [17]

The FDA regulations restricting health claims (or implied claims of "healthiness") to foods which meet certain minimum nutrient levels, colloquially termed "the jelly bean rule," [18] were developed in order to prevent food producers from encouraging the consumption of "junk foods" by fortifying them with nutrients. As the FDA has explained:

> [I]n order to preclude the fortification of foods solely for the purpose of making a claim, the nutrient or nutrients must not be derived from fortification or other additions to the food. Fortification of a food of little or no nutritional value for the sole purpose of qualifying that food for a health claim is misleading for several reasons. There is great potential to confuse consumers if foods like sugars, soft drinks, and sweet desserts are fortified to qualify for a health claim when, at the same [*35] time, dietary guidance as contained in USDA's Food Guide Pyramid, for example, states that "[T]hese foods provide calories and little else nutritionally. Most people should use them sparingly." Indiscriminate fortification of such foods with one nutrient would not make such foods consistent with dietary guidelines. Further, fortifying such foods is not consistent with FDA's fortification policy in § 104.20 that has been in effect for many years. The fundamental objective of FDA's policy on appropriate fortification of foods is to establish a uniform set of principles that serve as a model for the rational addition of nutrients to foods. In that policy, FDA clearly states its concern that random fortification of foods could result in deceptive or misleading claims for foods.

[16] The FDA Fortification Policy is itself non-binding but, as described above, is incorporated by reference into binding FDA regulations. As the FDA has explained:

> While it is true that the fortification policy is only a guideline, in the context of new § 101.54(e)(1) (ii), FDA has subjected the use of § 104.20 (21 C.F.R. 104.20) to notice and comment rulemaking. Interested persons were given notice that FDA intends to use that provision as more than a guideline. Such persons had an opportunity to object . . . . No comments did. Therefore, the fact that part 104 (21 CFR part 104) is generally intended to be used as a guideline has no significance here.

58 Fed. Reg. 2302, 2362. The defendants do not contend that the fortification policy is nonbinding.

[17] On December 10, 2008, the FDA sent a warning letter to defendant Coca-Cola advising that the FDA considered its product Diet Coke Plus, a soft drink fortified with vitamins and minerals, to be misbranded. The FDA's conclusion was based on the fact that Diet Coke Plus' use of the word "plus" violated 21 C.F.R. 101.54(e) because the addition of vitamins to "snack foods such [*34] as carbonated beverages" was contrary to the FDA's fortification policy. See December 10, 2008 FDA Warning Letter to Coca Coca available at http://www.fda.gov/ICECI/EnforcementActions/WarningLetters/2008/ucm1048050.htm. See generally Diet Coke Plus Proves to Be a Minus With the FDA, 16 No. 12 FDA Advertising and Promotion Manual Newsletter 11 (2009).

[18] See, e.g., Pauline M. Ippolito, What Can We Learn From Food Advertising Policy Over the Last 25 Years?, 12 Geo. Mason L. Rev. 939, 953 (2004) (explaining that the "'jelly bean rule' . . . is designed to ensure that an advertiser of jelly beans (or other sugar-based products) would not be able to make, for example, a heart disease claim under NLEA rules, even though the product is low in fat and saturated fat, and contains no cholesterol, and thus would meet all the other conditions for a heart-healthy claim.").

(proposed Dec. 21, 1995) ("The agency is concerned, however, that eliminating the 10 [*36] percent nutrient contribution requirement [would] permit misleading health claims on foods with little or no nutritional value such as candies and soft drinks or will encourage overfortification of the food supply (e.g., vitamin or mineral addition to soft drinks). The appearance of health claims on such foods would be inconsistent with Congress's intent when it enacted the health claims provisions.").

The "jelly bean rule" poses no bar to nutrient-content claims generally; it is applicable only to (1) health claims; and (2) nutrient-content claims that use the word "healthy" to suggest that a food because of its nutrient content may help consumers maintain healthy dietary practices. [*37] See 21 C.F.R. §§ 101.14 (e)(6); 101.65(d)(2). Vitaminwater's labeling contains claims in each of these two categories. [19]

(i) "Healthy" Implied Nutrient-Content Claims

The Second Amended Complaint identifies several statements allegedly made by defendants that constitute nutrient-content claims. The label of "Rescue"-flavored vitaminwater, for instance, contains the statement that it is "specially formulated to support optimal metabolic function with antioxidants that may reduce the risk of chronic diseases and vitamins necessary for the generation and utilization of energy from food." Because the statement "suggest[s] that a food because of its nutrient content may help consumers maintain healthy dietary practices" in connection with an "implicit claim or statement about a nutrient," it constitutes a general nutritional claim (a type of nutrient-content claim) under 21 C.F.R. § 101.65(d). Were [*39] this the sole nutrient-content claim, FDA regulations would not be violated, as the jelly-bean rule does not prohibit vitaminwater from making a nutrient content claim that does not use the word "healthy." However, vitaminwater contains at least two implied nutrient claims that do contain the word "healthy":

> (1). The statement on the "defense" flavor: "[I]f you've had to use sick days because you've actually been sick then you're seriously missing out, my friends. [S]ee, the trick is to stay healthy and use sick days to just um, not go in. [A]nd this combination of zinc and fortifying vitamins can help out with that and keep you healthy as a horse. [S]o drink up."
> (2). The statement on the "B-Relaxed" flavor claiming that the product "is specially formulated with [B] vitamins and theanine. The [B] vitamins are there to replace those lost during times of stress (physical or mental). Theanine is an amino acid naturally found in tea leaves and has been shown to promote feelings of relaxation. This combination can help bring about a healthy state of physical and mental being."

Sec. Am. Compl. PP 27-28 (emphasis added, alteration in original). [20] Not every use of the word "healthy" on a food [*40] label conveys an implied nutrient content claim; a violation of 21 C.F.R. § 101.65(d)(2) occurs only [19] Plaintiffs contend that the statements at issue are neither health claims nor implied nutrient content claims. As a result, they further contend, their "claims are completely outside the scope of the coverage of the FDCA and are [therefore] not preempted." See Pl. Br. at 6-7. In particular, plaintiffs contend that the Second Amended Complaint does not identify any implied nutrient content claim because the quoted statements "do not suggest that vitamins or other nutrients are present in a certain specific amount." Pl. Br. at 7 (emphasis in original).

This argument fails because neither the FDCA nor the FDA's implementing regulations require that a statement identify a specific nutrient by name or quantity in order to qualify as an implied nutrient-content claim. See, e.g., 21 C.F.R. § 101.65(c)(3) ("a claim that a food contains oat bran is a claim that it is a good source of dietary fiber; that a food is made only with vegetable oil is a claim that it is low in saturated fat; and that a food contains no oil is a claim that it is fat free."); 58 Fed. Reg. 2302, 2371 (Jan. 6, 1993) [*38] (describing "contains corn oil" as implied nutrient content claim that the product is low in fatty acids); 21 C.F.R. § 101.54(f)(4) (describing "high in antioxidants" as nutrient-content claim.). Defendants concede that vitaminwater's label contains at least some implied nutrient content claims. See Def. Br. at 8. In addition, as discussed infra, vitaminwater contains at least one clear example of a health claim.

[20] One additional implied nutrient-content claim containing the word "healthy" was included in the initial Complaint: VitaminWater's "multi-v," lemonade (vitamin a - zinc) flavor, was described as "specially formulated with 11 essential vitamins and minerals, from vitamin a to zinc, to provide the body with nutrients needed to remain healthy and active." Compl. P 18.

where it is used in a context suggesting that a food will, because of its nutrient content, help consumers maintain healthy dietary practices. See 59 Fed. Reg. 24232, 24235 (May 10, 1994). Here, the description of the product as a "Nutrient-Enhanced Water Beverage," the statement "vitamins + water = all you need," and flavor names that are associated with specific purported health benefits may collectively imply that the product will assist consumers in maintaining healthy dietary practices. By including the suggestion that the product will "keep you healthy" or "help bring about a healthy state of physical and mental being" alongside such statements, the quoted language implies that the nutrient content of vitaminwater may help consumers maintain healthy dietary practices. I conclude, therefore, in light of the language and context in which they are used, that the statements on the "defense" and "B-Relaxed" labels constitute implied nutrient content claims which use the word "healthy." Such claims are in violation of violation of FDA regulations because, as discussed below, vitaminwater [*41] achieves its nutritional content solely through fortification that violates FDA policy.

(ii) Health Claim

The label of vitaminwater's "focus" flavor states that it is "specially formulated to provide vitamin [A] (a nutrient known to be required for visual function), antioxidants and other nutrients [that] scientific evidence suggests may reduce the risk of age-related eye disease." Sec. Am. Compl. P 28 (alterations in original). That statement "expressly or by implication . . . characterizes the relationship of any substance to [the] disease or health-related condition," and accordingly is a health claim. [21] See 21 C.F.R. § 101.14(a)(1). Because vitaminwater does not meet the minimum nutritional requirements of 21 C.F.R. § 101.14(e)(6), any health claim about the product is contrary to FDA regulation. Id.

(iii) FDA Fortification Policy

Defendants have failed to establish that the fortification of vitaminwater complies with FDA fortification policy, which recognizes that "random fortification of foods could result in over-or underfortification in consumer diets and create [21] Although defendants [*42] have not contended that the above claim constitutes a "structure/function" claim, a relatively unregulated category of claim that are commonly present on food labels, the language of the claim suggests that it may have been drafted with that understanding in mind. As explained below, such a contention would have no merit. The term "structure/function" refers to an exception arising out of the FDCA's definition of the term "drug." Because the FDCA defines "drugs" as "articles intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease," but contains a limited exception for food products "intended to affect the structure or any function of the body," see 21 U.S.C. § 321(g)(1), food (and dietary supplement) labels may make claims about the effect a product has on the "structure or function" of the body without subjecting themselves to the heightened regulations applicable to health claims. See generally Satine, 63 Food & Drug L.J. 537, 549 ("Because of the absence of regulation for food labeling structure/function claims, they have become one of the biggest loopholes in the regime designed to prevent misleading labeling."); Ilene Ringel Heller, Functional [*43] Foods: Regulatory and Marketing Developments, 56 Food & Drug L.J. 197, 206 (2001) (same); U.S. Gen. Accounting Office, Food Safety: Improvements Needed in Overseeing the Safety of Dietary Supplements and "Functional Foods," at 18, 20 (2000) (noting that the FDA "has not clearly defined its standards for structure/function claims[,]. . . has taken no enforcement actions against questionable structure/function claims, and that "[w]hile NLEA requires FDA to rigorously review health claims before authorizing their use on product labels, there are no such requirements for structure/function claims") available at http://www.gao.gov/new.items/rc00156.pdf. Although the border between structure/function claims and health claims is in some cases difficult to delineate, the claim on vitaminwater's focus flavor that it may "reduce the risk of age-related eye disease," does not present a close question: the product explicitly claims it can reduce the risk of a class of diseases and uses that very word. See FDA Guidance for Industry: Structure/Function Claims, Small Entity Compliance Guide, Sec. D (January 9, 2002) (noting that claims using the word "disease" or "diseased" in connection with a reference [*44] to the product or its ingredients will generally exceed the bounds of the structure/function exception.), available at http://www.fda.gov/Food/GuidanceComplianceRegulatoryInformation/GuidanceDocuments/DietarySupplements/ucm103340.htm (last visited July 2, 2010).

nutrient imbalances in the food supply" and "could also result in deceptive or misleading claims for certain foods." 21 C.F.R. § 104.20. [22]

The FDA's fortification policy in 21 C.F.R. § 104.20 was enacted in 1980 and largely mirrors the aims of the FDA's 1943 [*45] fortification policy. The 1943 policy provided, inter alia:

> Enrichment of foods with nutrients that are supplied in adequate quantities by the diets of all significant population groups is not only wasteful but tends to confuse consumers as to their nutritional needs. . . [such enrichment] tends to confuse and mislead consumers through giving rise to conflicting claims of nutritional values and by creating an exaggerated impression of the benefits to be derived from the consumption of such foods.

Statement of Policy With Respect to the Addition of Nutritive Ingredients to Foods, 8 Fed. Reg. 9170-02 (July 3, 1943). See generally Institute of Medicine of the National Academies, Committee on Use of Dietary Reference Intakes in Nutrition Labeling, Dietary Reference Intakes: Guiding Principles for Nutrition Labeling and Fortification 49-51 (2003). [23]

The current policy in 21 C.F.R. § 104.20 reflects the same essential principle as the 1943 policy: fortification is not warranted absent some justification. In particular, the current policy states that "[t]he Food and Drug [*46] Administration does not encourage indiscriminate addition of nutrients to foods, nor does it consider it appropriate to fortify fresh produce; meat, poultry, or fish products; sugars; or snack foods such as candies and carbonated beverages," and recommends fortification in only four circumstances:

1. "[T]o correct a dietary insufficiency recognized by the scientific community. . ."
2. "[T]o restore such nutrient(s) to a level(s) representative of the food prior to storage, handling and processing. . ."
3. "[I]n proportion to the total caloric content. . . to balance the vitamin, mineral, and protein content . . . ."
4. "to avoid nutritional inferiority" when replacing a traditional food.

21 C.F.R. § 104.20(b)-(e). Defendants point out that vitaminwater is not carbonated, but do not contend that any of the four recommended bases for fortification are present. Even assuming that the fortification of sugar water with vitamins was not itself a violation of the fortification policy, there is no basis on which to conclude that any of the four sanctioned bases for fortification is applicable. The first two bases are on their face inapplicable because defendants do not allege that any relevant [*47] nutrient deficiency is present, or that any nutrients are lost in the production or the handling of the beverage. The third basis for fortification relates to foods that are fortified to contain 21 specified nutrients. See 21 C.F.R. § 104.20(d)(3). Defendants have not contended that those 21 nutrients are present in vitaminwater. Moreover, that provision contemplates the addition of nutrients to foods or beverages in specified, uniform quantities determined by reference to the caloric value of the product. In contrast, the Second Amended Complaint suggests that defendants fortify various flavors of vitaminwater with differing levels of vitamins in accordance with the specific purported benefit claimed on the product's label. See Sec. Am. Compl. P 28. The fourth basis for fortification is inapplicable because there is no basis on which to conclude that vitaminwater replaces a traditional food.

c. Use of Product Name That Includes Some, But Not All Ingredients

Plaintiffs allege that vitaminwater's labeling is misleading in that it uses a product name that includes of two of the product's ingredients (vitamins and water) but fails to mention one other notable ingredient (sugar). The FDA [*48] has recognized that such product names may mislead consumers:

---

[22] Defendants' briefs discuss this issue only in passing. Because federal preemption is ordinarily an affirmative defense to a plaintiff's suit, it is defendants' burden to establish the prerequisites for preemption. See Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 63, 107 S. Ct. 1542, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1987); see also Williams v. Gerber Prods. Co., 552 F.3d 934, 937 (9th Cir. 2008) (declining to address untimely preemption defense).

[23] Available at http://www.nal.usda.gov/fnic/DRI/DRI_Guiding_Principles_Labeling/guiding_principles_labeling_full_report.pdf.

> The labeling of a food which contains two or more ingredients may be misleading by reason (among other reasons) of the designation of such food in such labeling by a name which includes or suggests the name of one or more but not all such ingredients, even though the names of all such ingredients are stated elsewhere in the labeling.

21 C.F.R. § 101.18(b). The potential for confusion is heightened by the presence of other statements in vitaminwater's labeling, such as the description of the product as a "vitamin enhanced water beverage" and the phrases "vitamins + water = all you need" and "vitamins+water = what's in your hand" which have the potential to reinforce a consumer's mistaken belief that the product is comprised of only vitamins and water. A state law cause of action based on such statements is therefore not preempted by the FDCA.

In sum, plaintiffs' allegations sufficiently state a claim that defendants have violated FDA regulations by making health claims about vitaminwater even though it does not meet required minimum nutritional thresholds, by using the word "healthy" in implied nutrient content claims even though [*49] vitaminwater's fortification does not comply with FDA policy, and by using a product name that references only two of vitaminwater's ingredients, omitting the fact that there is a key, unnamed ingredient in the product. These claims are not preempted by the FDCA because they seek to impose requirements on the defendants that are identical to those imposed by the FDCA.

D. Implied Preemption

Defendants contend that implied conflict preemption bars plaintiffs' state law claims because those claims "pose [] an obstacle to the federal regulatory scheme with regard to claims about food containing sugar." Def. Br. at 10. [24] Because, as discussed above, I conclude that express preemption bars any claim solely premised on the notion that vitaminwater's high sugar content made its health or implied nutrient content claims misleading, it is not necessary to consider whether implied preemption would also bar such a claim. Plaintiffs' remaining claims are premised on conduct that is violative of federal regulations, and therefore do not raise implied conflict preemption concerns. [25]

E. Primary Jurisdiction

[24] There is no dispute that implied field preemption is inapplicable. See Transcript of Oral Argument on February 5, [*50] 2010 ("Tr.") at 8:3-13. See also Lockwood v. Conagra Foods, Inc., 597 F. Supp. 2d 1028, 1032 (N.D. Cal. 2009) ("Congress has explicitly stated that it does not intend to occupy the field of food and beverage nutritional labeling; instead, it permits states to regulate subject matters covered by the NLEA and its regulations provided that such state laws do not fall within the FDCA's express preemption provisions) (emphasis in original); Cipollone, 505 U.S. at 532 ("We resort to principles of implied pre-emption -- that is, inquiring whether Congress has occupied a particular field with the intent to supplant state law or whether state law actually conflicts with federal law -- only when Congress has been silent with respect to pre-emption.") (Blackmun, J., concurring) (internal citation omitted).

[25] Defendants contend in a footnote that plaintiffs' claims "implicate a federal interest embodied in the Dormant Commerce Clause" because "the burdens of additional labeling requirements would be clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits, if any, of telling the public something it already knows." Def. Br. at 15 n.7 (citing Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 90 S. Ct. 844, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1970)). [*51] Because plaintiffs' claims are premised on conduct that violates federal regulations, the Dormant Commerce Clause is not implicated. Moreover, Pike is inapposite; that case concerned state legislation, enacted for the primary purpose of promoting and preserving the reputation of Arizona farmers, which would have had the incidental effect of forcing plaintiff, a grower of cantaloupes, to construct a packing plant in Arizona. In concluding the burden imposed on interstate commerce exceeded the "minimal" interest of the state, the Court explicitly relied on the fact that the legislation did not concern the safety of food and was not designed to protect consumers from unfit goods. Id. at 143-46. In contrast, the legislation at issue here consists of state regulations that neither appear to be motivated by local protectionism nor have the effect of discriminating against out of state businesses in an area in which the states' regulatory interest is indisputable. See, e.g., Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U.S. 461, 472, 15 S. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223 (1894) ("If there be any subject over which it would seem the states ought to have plenary control . . . it is the protection of the people against fraud and deception in the [*52] sale of food products."). See generally 79 A.L.R. Fed. 246 Validity, Under Commerce Clause (Art I, § 8, Cl 3), of State Statutes Regulating Labeling of Food (2009).

Defendants contend that even if preemption does not bar plaintiffs' claims, the plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed under the doctrine of primary jurisdiction. I disagree.

As the Supreme Court explained in United States v. Western Pacific Railroad Company:

> The doctrine of primary jurisdiction, like the rule requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies, is concerned with promoting proper relationships between the courts and administrative agencies charged with particular regulatory duties. "Exhaustion" applies where a claim is cognizable in the first instance by an administrative agency alone; judicial interference is withheld until the administrative process has run its course. "Primary jurisdiction," on the other hand, applies where a claim is originally cognizable in the courts, and comes into play whenever enforcement of the claim requires the resolution of issues which, under a regulatory scheme, have been placed within the special competence of an administrative body; in such a case the judicial [*53] process is suspended pending referral of such issues to the administrative body for its views.

352 U.S. 59, 63-64, 77 S. Ct. 161, 1 L. Ed. 2d 126, 135 Ct. Cl. 997 (1956) (citing Gen. Am. Tank Car Corp. v. El Dorado Terminal Co., 308 U.S. 422, 433, 60 S. Ct. 325, 84 L. Ed. 361 (1940)). Dismissal on primary jurisdiction grounds "does not speak to the jurisdictional power of the federal courts," but rather "structures the proceedings as a matter of judicial discretion, so as to engender an orderly and sensible coordination of the work of agencies and courts." United States v. Bessemer & L.E.R. Co., 717 F.2d 593, 599, 230 U.S. App. D.C. 316 (D.C. Cir. 1983). While "[n]o fixed formula exists for applying the doctrine of primary jurisdiction," the Second Circuit has generally focused on four factors:

> . whether the question at issue is within the conventional experience of judges or involves technical or policy considerations within the agency's particular field of expertise;
> . whether the question at issue is particularly within the agency's discretion;
> . whether there exists a substantial danger of inconsistent rulings; and
> . whether a prior application to the agency has been made.

Ellis v. Tribune Television Co., 443 F.3d 71, 82-83 (2d Cir. 2006) (citing Nat'l Commc'ns Ass'n, Inc. v. AT&T Co., 46 F.3d 220, 222 (2d Cir. 1995)) [*54] (further citations omitted). The question whether defendants have violated FDA regulations and marketed a product that could mislead a reasonable consumer is one courts are well-equipped to handle, and is not an appropriate basis for invoking the primary jurisdiction doctrine. See Lockwood v. Conagra Foods, Inc., 597 F. Supp. 2d 1028 (N.D. Cal. 2009). In Lockwood, plaintiff consumers brought a putative class action under California's Unfair Competition Law, alleging that the defendant engaged in misleading conduct by advertising its pasta sauce as "all natural" when in fact it included high fructose corn syrup. In denying a motion to dismiss under the primary jurisdiction doctrine, the court observed that the FDA had already been asked to define the word natural, but it had declined to do so because it was not a priority in light of the limited resources possessed by the FDA. It found that "this is not a technical area in which the FDA has greater technical expertise than the courts -- every day courts decide whether conduct is misleading." Id. at 1035; *see also Torres-Hernandez v. CVT Prepaid Solutions, Inc., No. 3:08-cv-1057-FLW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105413, 2008 WL 5381227, at 4 (D.N.J. Dec. 17, 2008) (declining [*55] to dismiss on primary jurisdiction grounds and observing that "the case at bar [simply] requires this Court to determine whether Plaintiff and those similarly situated received what they bargained for."). That reasoning is applicable here as well: the FDA is aware of plaintiffs' concerns but lacks the resources to take enforcement action in every instance in which its policies are violated. [26] As in Lockwood, the ultimate issue is whether consumers could reasonably be misled by the violations, a question that courts are well-equipped to handle. Finally, deferral to the FDA is unlikely to result in a timely resolution of plaintiffs' claims. The FDCA does not provide a private right of action, and there is no reason to believe the plaintiffs could obtain a timely determination from the FDA concerning the merits of their claims. See Golden Hill Paugussett Tribe of Indians v. Weicker, 39 F.3d 51, 60 (2d Cir. 1994) (noting, in considering issue of primary jurisdiction, that "[t]here clearly is a public interest in reasonably prompt adjudication"). See also In re Farm Raised Salmon Cases, No. B18290 la, 2008 Cal. App.

[26] The Center For Science In the Public Interest ("CSPI"), co-counsel for plaintiffs in this suit, sent a petition for proposed rulemaking to the FDA in 1999, seeking daily reference values and additional labeling for "added sugars" in soft drinks and other products, and seeking corresponding changes to nutrient-content and health-claim regulations. See Def. Br. at 10.

F. Pleading Standards of Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 8(a) and 9(b).

1. Likelihood that Reasonable Consumers Would be Misled

Because each claim includes the requirement that a reasonable consumer could have been misled by defendants' conduct, I address that common element first. Viewing each allegedly misleading statement in light of its context on the label and in connection with the marketing of vitaminwater as a whole, I cannot conclude as a matter of law that a reasonable consumer could not be misled into believing that vitaminwater is a product that may help maintain healthy dietary practices and fail to appreciate that the product is not solely composed of vitamins and water. The FDA has recognized that product names such as "vitaminwater" can be deceptive in that [*57] such names may mislead consumers into believing the listed ingredients are the sole components of a beverage. See 21 C.F.R. § 101.18(b). The potential for confusion by consumers is heightened by the presence of (1) claims in vitaminwater's labeling, such as "vitamins + water = all you need" or "vitamins + water = what's in your hand; [27] (2) the description of the product as a "nutrient enhanced water beverage"; (3) the fact that several varieties of the product explicitly use the word "healthy" in connection with claims about vitaminwater's nutritional benefits; and (4) the inclusion of at least one health claim suggesting that a nutrient in vitaminwater may reduce the risk of a specific class of diseases. The plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that the collective effect of the challenged statements was to mislead a reasonable consumer into believing that vitaminwater is either composed solely of vitamins and water, or that it is a beneficial source of nutrients rather than a "food of little or no nutritional value [which has been fortified] for the sole purpose of claiming or implying that it is "healthy." 58 Fed. Reg. 2478, 2522. [28]

In finding vitaminwater's marketing and labeling to be potentially misleading, I have given substantial weight to the FDA's determination that fortification of a food in a manner that is not consistent with FDA's fortification policy may be misleading because it may lead consumers to consume foods that contain sugar or other sources of calories, but lack any inherent nutrients other than those that have been added through fortification. This conclusion has been incorporated into binding regulations, see 21 C.F.R. §§ 101.54(e); 101.65 (d)(2)(iv); 101.14 (e)(6), and has been expressed in multiple contexts. See 60 Fed. Reg. 66206, 66212 (noting that health claims on products that violate the FDA's fortification policy "would [*60] be misleading because consumers would be purchasing the food, in part, to achieve a more healthful diet, when, in fact, such foods are inconsistent with dietary guidelines. Further, such claims could be damaging if consumers are encouraged to replace wholesome and nutritious foods that are recommended in dietary guidelines with these foods."); 58 Fed. Reg. 2478, 2521 ("the value of health claims should not be trivialized or compromised by their use on foods of little or no nutritional value. . . [or by] claims intended to promote the consumption of a food that is incompatible with dietary guidelines would be misleading to consumers."); cf. FDA Compliance Policy Guide Fortification of Standardized Juices, CPG Sec. 510.700 (May 13, [27] Defendants contend that the phrase "vitamins [*58] + water = all you need" does not appear on the label of at least one flavor of vitaminwater, and that it is therefore "impossible for each [plaintiff] to have relied on a set of representations that included it." See Def. Br. at 20 n. 11. Such a fact is not contained in the Second Amended Complaint, and defendants provide no support for the quoted statement. When matters outside the pleadings are presented in connection with a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, "a district court must either exclude the additional material and decide the motion on the complaint alone or convert the motion to one for summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 and afford all parties the opportunity to present supporting material." Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 83 (2d Cir. 2000) (internal quotation marks omitted). Given the unsworn nature of the statement and the fact that no discovery has occurred, I decline to convert defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) motion into one for summary judgment and disregard defendants' assertion that the quoted language ("vitamins + water + all you need") does not appear on all flavors of vitaminwater.

[28] The Second Amended Complaint alleges that each plaintiff [*59] relied on the name "vitaminwater" and the statement "vitamins + water = all you need," but does not specifically allege which other statements, if any, each plaintiff relied on. Whether a consumer could reasonably have been misled by those phrases, even considered alone, cannot properly be decided on a motion to dismiss. Accordingly, even assuming the Second Amended Complaint asserts no further basis for plaintiffs' potential confusion, dismissal would not be warranted.

1988) ("It is therefore FDA's position that fortification of a food in a manner that is not consistent with FDA's fortification policy may be misleading. If the act of fortification is misleading, it follows that a common or usual name that reflects that act is also misleading."), available at http://www.fda.gov/ICECI/ComplianceManuals/CompliancePolicyGuidanceManual/ucm074434.htm (last visited July 2, 2010).

Defendants contend that no reasonable consumer could [*61] have been misled by vitaminwater's labeling because: (1) the FDA-mandated label on each bottle bears the true facts about the amount of sugar per serving; (2) the allegations about brand names like "vitaminwater," the one-word flavor names like "rescue," slogans like "vitamins + water = all you need," and sayings like "healthy as a horse" describe only puffery; and (3) no reasonable consumer could believe that vitamins and water are literally "all they need to survive" or all that "is in your hand" when holding a bottle that disclosed the presence of sugar.

The fact that the actual sugar content of vitaminwater was accurately stated in an FDA-mandated label on the product does not eliminate the possibility that reasonable consumers may be misled. This issue was squarely addressed in a recent case applying California law, Williams v. Gerber Products Co., 552 F.3d 934 (9th Cir. 2008). In Gerber, plaintiffs alleged that the labeling of Gerber's "Fruit Juice Snacks" was misleading in that it, inter alia, portrayed the product as nutritious and depicted a number of different fruits, even though the product did not contain the juice of any pictured fruit and the two most prominent ingredients [*62] were corn syrup and sugar. The district court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss, crediting their contention that no reasonable consumer could have been misled by the product because that the ingredients were specifically identified on the FDA-mandated panel. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit reversed, holding that the mere fact that an FDA-mandated nutritional panel provided accurate nutritional information on a product did not bar claims that reasonable consumers could be misled. The court explained as follows:

> Reasonable consumers should [not] be expected to look beyond misleading representations on the front of the box to discover the truth from the ingredient list in small print on the side of the box. . . . We do not think that the FDA requires an ingredient list so that manufacturers can mislead consumers and then rely on the ingredient list to correct those misinterpretations and provide a shield for liability for the deception. Instead, reasonable consumers expect that the ingredient list contains more detailed information about the product that confirms other representations on the packaging.

Gerber, 552 F.3d 934, 939-40. The same holds true here: the presence of a nutritional [*63] panel, though relevant, does not as a matter of law extinguish the possibility that reasonable consumers could be misled by vitaminwater's labeling and marketing. [29] Morever, even reasonable consumers may not read the nutritional label prior to every purchase of a new product. See Lester M. Crawford, D.V.M., Ph.D., Acting Commissioner of the FDA,

[29] The notion that the FDA-mandated nutritional facts would "cure" the potentially misleading impression that vitaminwater was a healthy beverage (rather than primarily sugar water) is further undermined by the characteristics of the label itself. For example, vitaminwater lists its sugar content and calorie total based on the assumption that one 20 ounce bottle contains 2.5 servings. This is consistent with FDA regulations, but the defendants could also have chosen to provide a "per bottle" calorie and sugar total. See 21 C.F.R. § 101.12(b) [*64] n.5; 21 C.F.R. § 101.9(b)(6) (Packages sold individually that contain 200% or more of the applicable reference amount may be labeled as a single serving if the entire contents of the package can reasonably be consumed at a single eating occasion). The FDA has recently considered changes to its policies regarding serving size designations. See Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking, Food Labeling: Serving Sizes of Products That Can Reasonably Be Consumed At One Eating Occasion; Updating of Reference Amounts Customarily Consumed; Approaches for Recommending Smaller Portion Sizes, 70 Fed. Reg. 17010, 17013 (2005) ("In general, focus group participants thought that having multiple servings listed on the label . . . was misleading and confusing."); see also Laura M. Tarantino, Acting Director, FDA Office of Nutritional Products, Labeling and Dietary Supplements, Letter to Food Manufacturers about Accurate Serving Size Declaration on Food Products (March 12, 2004) (encouraging manufacturers to label food packages as single-serving where entire contents of a package can reasonably be consumed at a single-eating occasion), available at http://www.fda.gov/Food/LabelingNutrition/FoodLabelingGuidanceRegulatoryInformation/InspectionCompliance/

At oral argument defendants suggested that no consumer could reasonably be misled into thinking vitaminwater was a healthy beverage or was composed only of vitamins and water because the sweet taste of vitaminwater puts consumers on notice that the product contains sugar. Tr. 4:22-5:17. At least one court has adopted a similar theory. *See McKinniss v. General Mills, Inc., No. CV 07-2521 GAF, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96107, 2007 WL 4762172, at 3 (CD. Cal. Sept. 18, 2007) (stating, in dismissing suit which alleged "Berry Berry Kix" was misleadingly marketed as containing fruit when it had none, that "a reasonable consumer would be expected to note, upon pouring the contents of the packaging into a cereal bowl, that the product contained no actual fruit."). This argument fails at this stage of the proceedings for three reasons. First, there is no evidence before me concerning vitaminwater's taste. [30] Second, even assuming arguendo that I could take judicial [*66] notice that vitaminwater tastes sweet, a reasonable consumer might believe it had been sweetened by something other than sugar. Finally, as plaintiffs noted at oral argument, adopting such a rule would essentially insulate defendants from liability so long as consumers were only deceived once by a product; a notion contrary to the consumer protection laws of New York, New Jersey and California. Tr. 15:13-18.

As for the defendants' argument that the statements at issue are nothing more than puffery, the statements are not merely exaggerated claims of quality or [*67] "[s]ubjective claims about products, which cannot be proven either true or false." Time Warner Cable, Inc. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 497 F.3d 144, 159 (2d Cir. 2007) (citations omitted). Rather, they describe the contents of a food product in ways consumers might reasonably rely on in choosing to purchase vitaminwater. Further, consumers who have some awareness that food product labeling is subject to government regulation (owing in part to the ubiquitousness of the FDA's "nutrition facts" label on food products) may reasonably be expected to rely on label claims as accurate depictions of a food's contents and nutritional value. As a New Jersey court observed in another context: "it seems clear that such an impression was precisely what defendant intended to convey. If that were not the case, it is difficult to understand what defendant had in mind." Miller v. Am. Family Publishers, 284 N.J. Super. 67, 80, 663 A.2d 643 (Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1995). Accordingly, I cannot conclude as a matter of law that the statements could not have been reasonably relied on by consumers. See e.g., Union Ink Co., Inc. v. AT&T Corp., 352 N.J. Super. 617, 645, 801 A.2d 361 (App. Div. 2002) (concluding that "[w]hether the advertisements contained [*68] material misstatements of fact, or were merely puffing, as alleged by defendants, presents a question to be determined by the trier of fact."); see also Williams v. Gerber Products Co., 552 F.3d at 938-39 ("whether a practice is deceptive, fraudulent, or unfair is generally a question of fact which requires 'consideration and weighing of evidence from both sides'" and therefore usually cannot be resolved through a motion to dismiss) (citation omitted).

2 California State Law Claims

a. Applicability of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)

Claims under California's Unfair Competition Law or False Advertising Law do not include fraud as an element, and therefore generally do not need to be pled with particularity. Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009). Nonetheless, such claims may be subject to Rule 9(b) if the claims are premised on allegations of fraud. Rombach v. Chang, 355 F.3d 164, 171 (2d Cir. 2004). Defendants argue that Rule 9(b) should apply to all of plaintiffs' California claims because the complaint is "fundamentally grounded in fraud or based on common law fraud elements." Def. Reply Br. at 6 (quotation marks omitted). Because, as further discussed below, [*69] I conclude that plaintiffs have pled each of their California state law claims with sufficient particularity to satisfy Rule

[30] Defendants appear to suggest the court could take judicial notice that vitaminwater tastes sweet because it is "common sense. . . that [in] anything that's packed or loaded with sugar, as the plaintiffs allege here, you can taste the presence of sugar." Tr. 5:6-9. I do not consider that assertion to be a fact "not subject to reasonable dispute" as required by Federal Rule of Evidence 201. Numerous products, such as ketchup (for instance) contain added sugar but are not necessarily considered sweet. See 21 C.F.R. § 155.194(a)(2)(ii) (specifying that a product identified as "ketchup" "catsup" "catchup" must contain sweeteners).

9(b), I do not address whether the Second Amended Complaint is "grounded in fraud" to a degree which would subject each of plaintiffs' California state law claims to that heightened pleading standard. [31]

b. Unlawful Business Practices and False Advertising (Claims 1, 4 and 5) [32]

Plaintiffs allege that defendants are liable for violating California's UCL through unlawful business practices, unfair business practices, and fraudulent business practices. Because the UCL prohibits "unfair competition," which it broadly defines as including "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising," Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, "it is violated where a defendant's act or practice is (1) unlawful, (2) unfair, (3) fraudulent, or (4) in violation of section 17500 (false [*71] or misleading advertisements)." Lozano v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 504 F.3d 718, 731 (9th Cir. 2007). In addition, violations of California's False Advertising Law constitute "unlawful" conduct for the purposes of the UCL. See Comm. on Children's Television, Inc. v. Gen. Foods Corp., 35 Cal. 3d 197, 210, 197 Cal. Rptr. 783, 673 P.2d 660 (Cal. 1983) ("[a]ny violation of the false advertising law . . . necessarily violates the unfair competition law"), superseded by statute on another ground, as stated in Californians for Disability Rights v. Mervyn's, LLC, 39 Cal. 4th 223, 227, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 57, 138 P.3d 207 (2006); see also Kasky v. Nike, Inc., 27 Cal. 4th 939, 949, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296, 45 P.3d 243 (Cal. 2002) (noting that the Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 defines unfair competition to include any act prohibited by California's False Advertising Law). Accordingly I consider plaintiffs' UCL "unlawful conduct" claim by analyzing whether plaintiffs have adequately pleaded a violation of California's False Advertising Law. [33]

California's False Advertising Law prohibits the dissemination in any advertising medium of any "statement" concerning real or personal property offered for sale, "which is untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500. A claim under the FAL may be based "not only advertising which is false, but also advertising which[,] although true, is either actually misleading or which has a capacity, likelihood or tendency to deceive or confuse the public." Kasky, 27 Cal. 4th at 951 (citations omitted). Accordingly, "a plaintiff must allege: (1) statements in the advertising are untrue or misleading, and (2) defendant knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have known, that the statements were untrue or misleading." VP Racing Fuels, Inc. v. Gen. Petroleum Corp., 673 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1086 (E.D. Cal. 2009) (citation omitted).

Defendants contend that plaintiffs have not adequately pled reliance or injury under the UCL. I disagree.

The UCL previously authorized "any person [*73] acting for the interests of itself [sic], its members or the general public" (former § 17204) to file an action for relief; standing to bring such an action did not depend on a showing of injury or damage. In the November 2, 2004 General Election, California voters approved Proposition 64, which imposed restrictions on a private individual's right to sue under the UCL or False Advertising law to those [31] Both parties rely heavily on Ninth Circuit cases regarding the applicability of Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard to plaintiffs' California state law claims. Ninth Circuit law does not bind this court with respect to the application of Rule 9(b) in this case. There is no dispute that, as a matter of California state law, plaintiffs California claims do not contain fraud as an element. Whether plaintiffs' claims must comply with the pleading burdens imposed by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) by virtue of the complaint "sounding in fraud" or being "grounded in fraud" is an issue of federal law, not state law. See Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Banc of Am. Sec. LLC, 254 F. Supp. 2d 390, 396 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (concluding that "[t]his Court is required to follow the precedent of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit with respect to the interpretation and application [*70] of Rule 9(b)," regardless of which state's law governs the underlying claim); see also Desiano v. Warner-Lambert & Co., 467 F.3d 85, 91 (2d Cir. 2006); Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1102 (9th Cir. 2003) (same). In any event, my conclusion that plaintiffs' California claims satisfy Rule 9(b) disposes of this issue.

[32] Plaintiffs separately allege claims under California's Business & Professions Code § 17500 et seq. for "false advertising" and "untrue advertising." Neither party has attempted to distinguish these two claims, and they are addressed as one here.

[33] Plaintiffs contend in the alternative that defendants have violated the "unlawful conduct" prong of the UCL through violations of California's Sherman law. See Sec. Am. Compl. P 61. Because I find that plaintiffs have adequately pled a violation of the "unlawful [*72] conduct" prong through violations of California's FAL, I do not address this alternative contention.

individuals who have "suffered injury in fact and ha[ve] lost money or property as a result of such unfair competition." Californians for Disability Rights, 39 Cal. 4th at 227; see also Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17203-04 (UCL), 17535 (FAL). Accordingly, the UCL and FAL now contain a reliance requirement. As the California Supreme Court explained in a recent case discussing the post-Proposition 64 standing requirements for a UCL fraud case:

> [T]here [*74] must be some connection between the injury and the defendant's conduct. . . . while a plaintiff must allege that the defendant's misrepresentations were an immediate cause of the injury-causing conduct, the plaintiff is not required to allege that those misrepresentations were the sole or even the decisive cause of the injury-producing conduct.

In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 325-29, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (Cal. 2009). See also *Laster v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., No. 05cv1167, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116228, 2009 WL 4842801, at 5 n.1 (S.D. Cal. Dec. 14, 2009) (applying the reliance requirement stated in In re Tobacco II to non-fraud UCL claim).

Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint identifies numerous specific statements alleged to be misleading, and alleges that those statements create "the central message. . . that VitaminWater is not a sugary soft drink. . . . [However] this message is false, misleading, deceptive, and unfair. Vitaminwater is not a beneficial fortified drink - it is just another flavored, sugary snack food like Coca-Cola, except that Defendants chose not to carbonate it." Id. at P 4. The Second Amended Complaint further alleges that:

> Each plaintiff relied on Defendants' false, misleading, and deceptive written misrepresentations [*75] that VitaminWater is a beneficial dietary supplement beverage including, but not limited to, "vitamins + water = all you need" and the name of the product itself- "VitaminWater" in deciding to purchase vitaminwater. Had Plaintiffs known the truth that the statements they relied on were false, misleading, deceptive, and unfair, they would have neither purchased VitaminWater nor paid the premium price Defendants charged for it.

Sec. Am. Compl. P 16. Such allegations adequately plead reliance for the purposes of the UCL. California courts have liberally construed the requirements for pleading reliance in cases in which it would be impractical to expect a plaintiff to recall with specificity each statement that he or she considered prior to making a purchase. See In re Tobacco II Cases at 329 ("[W]here, as here, a plaintiff alleges exposure to a long-term advertising campaign, the plaintiff is not required to plead with an unrealistic degree of specificity that the plaintiff relied on particular advertisements or statements."); see also Morgan v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 177 Cal. App. 4th 1235, 1262, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 768 (Cal. Ct. App. 2009) ("plaintiffs need not allege the specific advertisements the individual [*76] plaintiffs relied upon; it is sufficient for the plaintiff to provide a representative selection of the advertisements or other statements to indicate the language upon which the implied misrepresentations are based."); Walter v. Hughes Commc'ns, Inc., 682 F. Supp. 2d 1031, 1045 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (element of reliance satisfied by complaint that "roughly" identified representations relied on).

Plaintiffs have also adequately pled injury. California courts have held that a plaintiff who fails to receive the benefit bargained for because of a misrepresentation made by a defendant suffers sufficient injury to state a claim under the UCL. See, e.g., *Koh v. S.C Johnson & Son, Inc., No. C-09-00927 (RMW), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 654, 2010 WL 94265, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 6, 2010) (complaint adequately alleged injury under UCL through claims that plaintiff bought the product at a premium price in reliance on misleading suggestion that it was environmentally friendly); Chavez v. Blue Sky Natural Beverage Co., 340 Fed. Appx. 359 (9th Cir. 2009) (injury sufficiently pled where plaintiff purchased product because of misrepresentation that it was from New Mexico); see also Lozano, 504 F.3d at 734 (plaintiff "has properly stated [77] an injury that he did not receive the full value of his contract with [defendant]" due to its alleged failure to disclose certain facts about its billing practices). Accordingly, the allegations in the Second Amended Complaint adequately allege a violation of California's FAL (§ 17500 et seq*.), and in turn, California's UCL (§ 17200 et seq).

c. Unfair Business Practices (Claim 2)

A business practice is "unfair" for the purposes of a claim under the UCL when it "offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers."

[34] Wilner v. Sunset Life Ins. Co., 78 Cal. App. 4th 952, 965, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 (Ct. App. 2000) (citing State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Superior Court, 45 Cal. App.4th 1093, 1104, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (Sup.Ct. 1996)). "The test of whether a business practice is unfair 'involves an examination of [that practice's] impact on its alleged victim, balanced against the reasons, justifications and motives of the alleged wrongdoer. In brief, the court must weigh the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim." Id. To prevail, a plaintiff must establish that "the consumer injury is substantial, [*78] is not outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or to competition, and is not an injury the consumers themselves could reasonably have avoided." Daugherty v. American Honda Motor Co., Inc., 144 Cal. App. 4th 824, 839, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118 (2006). California state courts have indicated that a plaintiff may make out a prima facie case of unfair conduct by alleging wrongful conduct on the part of the defendant; the plaintiff needn't speculate at the pleading stage as to the defendant's countervailing interests. See Motors, Inc. v. Times Mirror Co., 102 Cal. App. 3d 735, 740, 162 Cal. Rptr. 543 (1980) ("[S]ince the complaint is unlikely to reveal defendant's justification, if th[e] pleading states a prima facie case of harm, . . . the defendant should be made to present its side of the story.").

Defendants have not raised any basis for dismissing plaintiffs claim based on the "unfair" prong of the UCL other than those already rejected in connection with the discussion of plaintiffs' claims under the "unlawful" prong of the UCL.

d. UCL Fraud (Claim 3)

Plaintiffs' third claim states a claim for fraudulent business practices under the UCL. Aside from the use of the term "fraud," a claim for fraudulent business practices under the UCL has little in common with the elements of common law fraud. "A [common law] fraudulent deception must be actually false, known to be false by the perpetrator and reasonably relied upon by a victim who incurs damages. None of these elements are required to state a claim for injunctive relief under the UCL." In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 312 [*81] (citation and quotation marks omitted). See also Capitol Records, Inc. v. MP3tunes, LLC, 611 F. Supp. 2d 342 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) ("Fraudulent as used in § 17200 does not refer to the common law tort of fraud but only requires a showing members of the public are likely to be deceived." (citing Express, LLC v. Fetish Group, Inc., 464 F. Supp. 2d 965, 980 (CD. Cal. 2006))). To prevail, a plaintiff "must produce evidence showing 'a likelihood of confounding an appreciable number of reasonably prudent purchasers exercising ordinary care.'" Clemens v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 534 F.3d 1017, 1025-26 (9th Cir. 2008) (citations omitted).

Courts have not been consistent regarding whether a UCL fraud claim must be pled with particularity. The California Supreme Court has held that the heightened pleading requirements generally applicable to fraud claims do not apply to a claim for "fraudulent" business practices under the UCL because the latter requires only that plaintiffs establish that members of the public are likely to be deceived, and contains no scienter requirement. See, e.g., Comm. on Children's Television, 35 Cal. 3d at 212 n.11 ("The requirement that fraud be pleaded with specificity . . [*82] . does not apply to causes of action under the [UCL]"); Morgan, 177 Cal. App. 4th at 1256 (same); *see also StreamCast Networks, Inc. v. IBIS LLC, No. CV 05-04239 (MMM), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97607, 2006 WL 5720345, at * 11 (CD. Cal. May 2, 2006)* ("To prevail on a claim that a business practice is fraudulent under § 17200, "[i]t is not necessary to show that the defendant intended to injure anyone.") (citation omitted). However, a number of recent cases from the Ninth Circuit and California district courts have held that claims of fraudulent business practices under the UCL are subject to Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading requirements where the claim is "grounded in fraud." See, e.g., Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009); see also Parrish v. Nat'l Football League Players Ass'n, 534 F. Supp. 2d 1081 (N.D. Cal. 2007). Even assuming plaintiffs' claims are subject to Rule 9(b), I conclude that they have met that standard.

[34] Neither party discusses the elements of a claim of unfair competition under California law, an issue that remains somewhat unsettled in light of the California Supreme Court's decision in Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Cel-Tech rejected the use of "amorphous" definitions of "unfair" (such as the definition in Wilner, supra) and held that [*79] a claim of unfair business practices requires "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech at 184-85. However, in a footnote, the court explicitly limited its holding to cases filed by business competitors, as opposed to consumers. Id at 187 n.12. Subsequent cases have not been uniform in their assessment of whether Cel-Tech altered the analysis of a claim of Unfair Business Practices in claims brought by consumers. The better view appears to be that Cel-Tech standard is inapplicable in a consumer action, in view of the fact that (1) the opinion's reference to antitrust law is sensible in a suit alleging anti-competitive conduct, but makes little sense in a consumer action; and (2) a contrary view would render Cel-Tech's footnote 12 meaningless. That position is supported by case law in the Ninth Circuit. See, e.g., Lippitt v. Raymond James Financial Services, Inc., 340 F.3d 1033, 1043 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing pre-Cel-Tech analysis in consumer UCL case); Nat'l Rural Telecommunications Co-op. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 2d 1059, 1075 (CD. Cal. 2003) [*80] ("The test annunciated in Cel-Tech, however, applies only to cases between direct competitors"); see also Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 93 Cal. App. 4th 700, 720, n.23, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 (2001) ("we are not to read Cel-Tech as suggesting that such a restrictive definition of 'unfair' should be applied in the case of an alleged consumer injury"); but see Scripps Clinic v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. App. 4th 917, 940, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 101 (Cal. Super. Ct. 2003) (contra).

Defendants contend that plaintiffs have not pled their claims with particularity because they have not identified which statements in vitaminwater's labeling were relied on by each individual plaintiff. Such a detailed complaint would be helpful, but it is not required by Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 9(b). [*83] [35] To satisfy the pleading requirements of Rule 9(b), a complaint must "(1) specify the statements that the plaintiff contends were fraudulent, (2) identify the speaker, (3) state where and when the statements were made, and (4) explain why the statements were fraudulent." Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1128 (2d Cir. 1994). Here plaintiffs have alleged that each plaintiff relied on at least two specific misleading statements (the name vitaminwater and the statement "vitamins + water = all you need"); explicitly identified a number of other statements made in vitaminwater's labeling which are alleged to have created that misleading impression, and identified the basis for plaintiffs' belief that the statements are deceptive. The California plaintiffs have identified the general locations where they purchased vitaminwater, the frequency with which they purchased vitaminwater, and (with the exception of plaintiff Ruslan Antonov) the specific flavors they purchased. See Sec. Am. Compl. PP 9, 10. Accordingly, the allegations underlying plaintiffs' California state law claims meet Rule 9(b)'s essential requirements of "provid[ing] a defendant with fair notice of a plaintiff's [*84] claim . . . safe guard [ing] a defendant's reputation from improvident charges of wrongdoing, and [] protect[ing] a defendant against the institution of a strike suit." Rombach v. Chang, 355 F.3d 164, 171 (2d Cir. 2004) (citing O'Brien v. Nat'l Prop. Analysts Partners, 936 F.2d 674, 676 (2d Cir. 1991)).

e. Unfair Methods of Competition or Unfair or Fraudulent Acts or Practices in Violation of § 1770(a)(7) of the CLRA (Claim 6)

California's CLRA, Cal. Civ. Code § 1750 et seq., prohibits specified "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices" in connection with the sale [*85] or lease of goods or services to a consumer. See Civ. Code, § 1770(a). Among the practices prohibited by the CLRA is "[r]epresenting that goods or services have sponsorship, approval, characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities which they do not have" and "[r]epresenting that goods or services are of a particular standard, quality, or grade, or that goods are of a particular style or model, if they are of another." Civ. Code, §§ 1770(a)(5) & (a)(7). [36] Civil Code section 1760 states that the CLRA "shall be liberally construed and applied to promote its underlying purposes, which are to protect consumers against unfair and deceptive business practices and to provide efficient and economical procedures to secure such protection." Neither party has attempted to distinguish plaintiffs' CLRA claims from the UCL claims discussed [35] California law also does not require such specificity. As California courts have recognized: "[w]hen an unfair-competition claim is based on an alleged fraudulent business practice -- that is, a practice likely to deceive a reasonable consumer - 'a plaintiff need not plead the exact language of every deceptive statement; it is sufficient for [the] plaintiff to describe a scheme to mislead customers, and allege that each misrepresentation to each customer conforms to that scheme." Linear Tech. Corp. v. Applied Materials, Inc., 152 Cal. App. 4th 115, 135, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 221 (Cal. Ct. App. 2007) (citation omitted).

---

above. Interpreting the CLRA liberally in accordance with its language, I conclude that defendants have adequately pled a violation of the CLRA through the same allegations that satisfy their claims under the UCL and FAL. [37]

3. New York State Law Claims

a. Gen. Bus. Law. §§ 349 & 350 (Claim 7 & 8)

"In order to show that Plaintiff is entitled to relief for a violation of New York General Business Law ("GBL") § 349, relating to deceptive business practices, or § 350, relating to false advertising, a plaintiff must show: (1) that the act, practice, or advertisement was consumer-oriented; (2) that the act, practice, or advertisement was misleading in a material respect, and (3) that the plaintiff was thereby injured. See Stutman v. Chem. Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 29, 731 N.E.2d 608, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892 (2000) (§ 349); Horowitz v. Stryker Corp., 613 F. Supp. 2d 271, 287 (E.D.N.Y. 2009) (§ 350) (citation omitted). The standard for whether an act or practice is misleading is an objective one, requiring a showing that a reasonable consumer would have been misled by the defendant's conduct. Marcus v. AT&T, 138 F.3d 46, 64 (2d Cir. 1998); Oswego Laborers' Local 214 Pension Fund v. Marine Midland Bank, 85 N.Y.2d 20, 26, 647 N.E.2d 741, 623 N.Y.S.2d 529 (N.Y. 1995)); but see Flattau v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., No. 85 Civ. 5487 (JFK), 1986 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16537, 1986 WL 14977, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Dec 12, 1986) [*87] (suggesting that courts should "not look to the average customer but to the vast multitude which the statutes were enacted to safeguard--including the ignorant, the unthinking and the credulous who, in making purchases, do not stop to analyze but are governed by appearances and general impressions.") (citation omitted). Claims under GBL §§ 349 and 350 are not subject to the pleading-with-particularity requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). See Pelman ex rel. Pelman v. McDonald's Corp., 396 F.3d 508, 511 (2d Cir. 2005) (GBL § 349); United Magazine Co. v. Murdoch Magazines Distrib., Inc., No. 00 Civ. 3367, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20878, 2001 WL 1607039, at *12 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 17, 2001) (GBL § 350). To prevail on a claim under GBL § 350, a plaintiff must demonstrate reliance on defendants' false advertising. However § 349 does not require proof of reliance. See Leider v. Ralfe, 387 F. Supp. 2d 283, 292 (S.D.N.Y. 2005); see also Stutman v. Chem. Bank, 95 N.Y.2d 24, 29, 731 N.E.2d 608, 709 N.Y.S.2d 892 (2000) ("[A]s we have repeatedly stated, reliance is not an element of a section 349 claim.").

Defendants contend that plaintiffs have failed to adequately plead claims under GBL sections 349 and 350 because they have not adequately alleged reliance or injury. [*88] Neither contention is persuasive. As noted above, reliance is not an element of a § 349 claim. Moreover, plaintiffs have adequately pled the reliance element of a claim under § 350 through the same allegations discussed above in connection with plaintiffs' California UCL claims. See Pelman, 396 F.3d at 512 (if plaintiffs' allegation of a generalized campaign to create a false impression is vague, "the cure for such deficiencies, in a claim not required to be plead with particularity, is a motion for a more definite statement under Rule 12(e), Fed. R. Civ. P., rather than dismissal") (citing Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 514-15, 122 S. Ct. 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2002)).

Injury is adequately alleged under GBL §§ 349 or 350 by a claim that a plaintiff paid a premium for a product based on defendants' inaccurate representations. See Jernow v. Wendy's Intern., Inc., No. 07 Civ. 3971 (LTS) (THK), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85104, 2007 WL 4116241, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 15, 2007) (citing Goshen v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York, 98 N.Y.2d 314, 324, 774 N.E.2d 1190, 746 N.Y.S.2d 858 (N.Y. 2002)). Defendants' contention that Small v. Lorillard Tobacco Co., Inc., 94 N.Y.2d 43, 720 N.E.2d 892, 698 N.Y.S.2d 615 (N.Y. 1999), compels a contrary conclusion is unpersuasive. In Lorillard, plaintiffs sued a number of tobacco [*89] companies, alleging that they had used deceptive commercial practices to sell their cigarettes to New Yorkers. Plaintiffs contended that their injury consisted of the fact that they had bought a product they otherwise would not have purchased and had become addicted to nicotine as a result of defendants' deceptive conduct. The Appellate Division, First Department, rejected plaintiffs' theory that the mere purchase of the product was sufficient to establish injury, holding that: "[i]f plaintiffs do not prove addiction, they cannot show that they were harmed." Small v. Lorillard Tobacco Co., 252 A.D.2d 1, 7, 679 N.Y.S.2d 593 (N.Y. App. Div. 1998). On plaintiffs' appeal to the New York Court of Appeals, the New York Attorney General submitted an amicus brief supporting plaintiffs' theory of injury and arguing that "[t]he [37] Pursuant to Civil Code section 1782, prior to a suit [*86] for damages under the CLRA, a plaintiff must notify the defendant of the alleged violation and allow the defendant an opportunity to remedy it. There is no dispute that this prerequisite has been met.

Appellate Division's holding, by removing a fundamental category of consumer injury from being actionable under § 349, threatens to severely undermine the statute's utility to injured consumers." Amicus Curiae Brief of the New York State Attorney General, 1999 WL 33660064, at *7 (Aug. 30, 1999). Agreeing, the Court of Appeals observed: "[t]he Attorney General may be right that a plaintiff [*90] might have a claim" where a consumer paid a higher price for a product as the result of a misrepresentation, such as in a case "where a distributor asserts that its bottled water is from a pure and pristine mountain stream while in reality, it was only tap water." Small v. Lorillard Tobacco Co., Inc., 94 N.Y.2d 43, 56 n.5, 720 N.E.2d 892, 698 N.Y.S.2d 615 (N. Y. 1999). Though the court concluded that dismissal was warranted because the plaintiffs had failed to allege that that the cost of cigarettes was affected by defendants' alleged misrepresentation, id. at 56, plaintiffs here explicitly allege that "[d]efendants command a premium price for vitaminwater by distinguishing it from soft drinks (including their own), and by marketing and advertising it as a fortified beverage, a dietary supplement in liquid form." Sec. Am. Compl. P 5. Accordingly, I conclude that plaintiffs' allegations of misleading marketing and labeling have adequately stated a claim under GBL §§ 349 and 350.

4. New Jersey State Law Claims

a. N.J. Consumer Fraud Act, N.J.S.A. 56:8-1 (Claim 9)

A party asserting a claim under New Jersey's Consumer Fraud Act ("NJCFA") must establish (1) wrongful conduct; (2) an ascertainable loss; and (3) and a causal [*91] relationship or nexus between the wrongful conduct and the loss. See Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs Local No. 68 Welfare Fund v. Merck & Co., Inc., 192 N.J. 372, 389, 929 A.2d 1076 (N.J. 2007).[38] The New Jersey Supreme Court has explained that the requirement of ascertainable loss in the NJCFA replaces the traditional reliance requirement of a common law tort claim. See id. Plaintiffs' NJCFA claims are based on allegations that defendants both affirmatively misrepresented and intentionally omitted material facts with intent to cause consumers to purchase vitaminwater. See Sec. Am. Compl. P 125. The heightened pleading standards of Rule 9(b) are therefore applicable to plaintiffs' claims under the NJCFA. See Frederico v. Home Depot, 507 F.3d 188, 202 (3d Cir. 2007).

Plaintiffs fail to [*92] plead their claims under New Jersey law with the requisite particularity. The Second Circuit has held that "[A] plaintiff should specify the time, place, speaker, and content of the alleged misrepresentations." Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 (2d Cir. 1986). In contrast to the detail in the Second Amended Complaint regarding the California claims, the Second Amended Complaint contains no information regarding: (1) when or how often during the class period the New Jersey plaintiffs purchased vitaminwater; (2) where they purchased vitaminwater, or whether any purchases occurred within the state of New Jersey; (3) what variety of vitaminwater they purchased. While Rule 9(b) is not designed to "require the impossible," and a plaintiff does not necessarily need to specify the precise time or date on which each allegedly misleading statements was made, see, e.g., Pollack v. Laidlaw Holdings, Inc.,

*No. 90 Civ. 5788 (DLC), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5909, 1995 WL 261518, at 9 (S.D.N.Y. May 3, 1995), the New Jersey state law claims are devoid of all but the most bare facts regarding plaintiffs' purchase of vitaminwater. Such allegations are insufficient to withstand Rule 9(b) scrutiny.

5. *Breach of Warranty Under NY, NJ [93] and CA Law (Claims 10 & 11)

The Second Amended Complaint alleges that defendants breached express and implied warranties that vitaminwater was "beneficial and had particular beneficial characteristics as set forth above." Sec. Am. Compl. PP 128, 132. The Supreme Court has held that breach of warranty claims do not impose an additional "requirement" under state law, because the duty to honor a promise voluntarily undertaken "[can] not fairly be said to be 'imposed

[38] Defendants have not contended that plaintiffs' NJCFA claims would be preempted or "subsumed" by the Products Liability Act ("PLA"), N.J.S.A. 2A:58C-1 et seq. (1987), and this opinion therefore does not address whether such a defense would have merit under New Jersey law. *See, e.g., Vercellono v. Gerber Products Co., No. 09-CV-2350 (DMC), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9477, 2010 WL 455388, at 6 (D.N.J. 2010) (dismissing CLA claim as preempted by PLA).

under state law,' but rather is best understood as undertaken by the manufacturer itself," and are therefore not preempted. Cipollone, 505 U.S. at 526. Nonetheless, plaintiffs have failed to plead a claim for violation of an express warranty. The Second Amended Complaint states that "Defendants provided Plaintiffs and other members of the Class with written and express warranties, including, but not limited to, warranties that their vitaminwater beverages were beneficial and had particular beneficial characteristics as set forth above." Plaintiffs do not allege that any bottle of vitaminwater contains the word "beneficial," do not state which words they allege to have created an express warranty, and do not clarify what is referred [*94] to by the words "as set forth above." Such conclusory language fails to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests" and does not adequately plead a claim for breach of an express warranty under state law. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (citation omitted). See, e.g., Lake v. Kardjian, 22 Misc. 3d 960, 874 N.Y.S.2d 751, 755 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2008) (finding plaintiff "has not identified any specific statements by [defendant] which would constitute an express warranty, and has thereby failed to establish the existence of a claim which would escape federal preemption and survive this motion to dismiss.")); Simmons v. Stryker Corp., No. 08-3451 (JAP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93306, 2008 WL 4936982, at *2 (D.N.J. Nov. 17, 2008) (dismissing express warranty claim where plaintiff did not identify source of warranty); Blennis v. Hewlett-Packard Co., No. C 07-00333 JF, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106464, 2008 WL 818526 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 25, 2008) (same).

Plaintiffs' claim for breach of an implied warranty of merchantability fails as well. [39] The law of all three states is similarly based on the Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC"). See Cal. Com. Code § 2314; N.J. Stats. § 12A:2-314; N.Y. U.C.C. § 2-314. Under the UCC, if a seller is a merchant, [*95] there is an implied contract that the goods will be of merchantable quality. See Denny v. Ford Motor Co., 87 N.Y.2d 248, 662 N.E.2d 730, 639 N.Y.S.2d 250 (N.Y. 1995) (citing section 2-314(2)(c) of the UCC). A warranty of merchantability, however, "does not mean that the product will fulfill a "buyer's every expectation" but rather simply "provides for a minimum level of quality." Viscusi v. Proctor & Gamble, No. 05-CV-01528 (DLI)(LB), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51307, 2007 WL 2071546, at *13 (E.D.N.Y. July 16, 2007) (citing Denny, 87 N.Y.2d at 259). See also Sugawara v. Pepsico, Inc., No. 2:08-cv-01335-MCE-JFM, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43127, 2009 WL 1439115, at *5 (E.D. Cal. 2009) (same) (citations omitted); see generally 18 Williston on Contracts § 52:76 (4th ed. 2009) (equating "merchantable" quality with "fitness for human use or consumption."). Even crediting each of the allegations of the complaint, plaintiffs cannot establish that vitaminwater failed to constitute a merchantable product.

6. Common Law Deceit/Misrepresentation Under NY, NJ and CA Law (Claim 12)

Under New Jersey law, "fraud or misrepresentation consists of the following elements: (1) a material misrepresentation of a presently existing or past fact; (2) knowledge of the falsity by the person making the misrepresentation; (3) intent that the misrepresentation be relied upon; (4) justifiable reliance of the misrepresentation; (5) resultant damage." Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 683 F. Supp. 1487, 1499 (D.N.J. 1988) (citations omitted); see also [*97] Frederico v. Home Depot, 507 F.3d 188, 200 (3d Cir. 2007) (substituting "reasonable reliance" as fourth element). Failure to disclose facts may constitute misrepresentation where the facts concealed were "'significant and material.'" Id. (citation omitted).

Under California law, "to state a claim for negligent misrepresentation, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the defendant made a misrepresentation of a past or existing material fact; (2) without reasonable grounds for believing it to be true; (3) with intent to induce another's reliance on the fact misrepresented; (4) ignorance of the truth and justifiable reliance thereon by the party to whom the misrepresentation was directed; and (5) damages." Stevens v. JPMorgan [39] Plaintiffs contend that defendants also breached an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. Such an allegation is not in the Second Amended Complaint. If it were, it would be dismissed. An implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose use arises "[w]here the seller at [*96] the time of contracting has reason to know any particular purpose for which the goods are required and that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods." Potler v. MCP Facilities Corp., 471 F. Supp. 1344, 1349 (E.D.N.Y. 1979). Plaintiffs allege that their "particular purpose" for purchasing vitaminwater was to drink a "healthy" beverage. However, the Second Amended Complaint does not allege that defendants knew any particular plaintiff purchased vitaminwater for that purpose. Consumers may seek beverages for a variety of purposes; indeed some may desire the beverage precisely because it contains high levels of sugar.

*Chase Bank, N.A., No. C 09-03116 (SI), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4170, 2010 WL 329963, at 6 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 20, 2010) (citing B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch, 55 Cal. App. 4th 823, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335, 342 (Ct. App. 1997)).

To sustain claim for intentional misrepresentation under New York law, a plaintiff must show that: (1) the defendant made a material false statement or omission; (2) the defendant intended to defraud the plaintiff; (3) the plaintiff reasonably relied upon the representation or omission; and (4) the plaintiff suffered [*98] damage as a result of such reliance. B & M Linen, Corp. v. Kannegiesser, USA, Corp., 679 F. Supp. 2d 474, 480 (S.D.N.Y. 2010). The Court of Appeals of New York has stated that "[A] negligent statement may be the basis for recovery of damages, where there is carelessness in imparting words upon which others were expected to rely and upon which they did act or failed to act to their damage, but such information is not actionable unless expressed directly, with knowledge or notice that it will be acted upon, to one to whom the author is bound by some relation of duty, arising out of contract or otherwise, to act with care if he acts at all." White v. Guarente, 43 N.Y.2d 356, 363-64, 372 N.E.2d 315, 401 N.Y.S.2d 474 (1977) (citation omitted).

Defendants contend that each deceit/misrepresentation claim must be dismissed because it has not been pled with sufficient particularity. Although the New Jersey claims must be dismissed because they are not pled with sufficient particularity, the New York and California claims have both adequately alleged a claim for intentional or negligent misrepresentation. As discussed above, the California claims have been pled with sufficient particularity. With respect to the New York claims, [*99] the Second Amended Complaint alleges that plaintiff Batsheva Ackerman purchased vitaminwater's "revive" and "multi-v" flavors at their premium price approximately one to two times per week between October 2007 and October 2008 from various drug stores such as Duane Reade located in New York. When considered alongside the allegations already discussed, this suffices to plead plaintiffs New York claims with particularity. Accordingly, a deceit/misrepresentation claim is adequately pled by the New York and California plaintiffs, but is dismissed with respect to the New Jersey plaintiffs.

7. Unjust Enrichment (Claim 13)

Unjust enrichment is an equitable remedy requiring "that a plaintiff show that a defendant benefitted at plaintiff's expense, and equity and good conscience require plaintiff to recover. Watts v. Jackson Hewitt Tax Serv. Inc., 579 F. Supp. 2d 334, 354 (E.D.N.Y. 2008) (citation omitted). "A disgruntled customer may only bring a claim if he received 'less than what he bargained for.' Id. (citing In re Canon Cameras, 237 F.R.D. 357, 359 (S.D.N. Y. 2006)). Defendants sole basis for dismissal of the unjust enrichment claim is that they believe all of the remaining claims fail [*100] as well. Because that premise has been rejected, the unjust enrichment claim will not be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, defendants' motion to dismiss claims nine, ten, and eleven is granted without prejudice to a timely amendment consistent with this opinion. The motion is denied in all other respects.

So Ordered.

Opinion

ORDER RE: FINAL ROUND OF DISPOSITIVE MOTIONS

Presently before the Court are the final round of dispositive Motions in preparation for the September 2010 trial:

(1) Plaintiffs' Motion to Vacate or Modify Court's Order [*4] Granting Norman Wright's Partial Summary Judgment Re Lack of Standing to Assert Price-Fixing or Bid-Rigging Claims; or Alternatively, Motion to Reinstate Plaintiffs' Per Se Illegal Bid Rigging Claim Against Norman S. Wright ("NSW"), Tempco, Inc., AMEC, Inc., and F.W. Spencer & Son, Inc. ("FWS");[1]

(2) Defendant NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Against Plaintiffs for Claims of Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, Exclusive Dealing and Tying;[2]

(3) Defendant FWS' Motion for Summary Judgment or in the Alternative Summary Adjudication;[3]

(4) Plaintiffs' Motion for Order Regarding Defendants' Claims of Indemnity or Contribution;[4]

[1] (hereafter, "Plaintiffs' Motion to Vacate Order Re Price-Fixing and Bid-Rigging Claims," filed under seal, Docket Item Nos. 1418, 1559.)

[2] (hereafter, "NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims," Docket Item No. 1431.) Defendant NSW's Motion to Seal Portions of this Motion is GRANTED. (Docket Item No. 1426.) In additional, all of Plaintiffs' Administrative Motions to Seal their Oppositions to Defendants' various Motions are GRANTED. (Docket Item Nos. 1476, 1483, 1536, 1542.)

[3] (hereafter, "FWS' Motion for Summary Judgment," Docket Item No. 1458.) Defendant FWS's Ex Parte Application Re Calendar Hearing Date for its Motion for Summary Judgment is denied as moot. (Docket Item No. 1412.)

[4] (hereafter, "Plaintiffs' Motion Re Indemnity," Docket Item No. 1455.) Plaintiffs' Motion for Oral Hearing on this Motion is DENIED. (Docket Item No. 1457.)

(5) Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Re Commercial Bribery Against both Defendants NSW and FWS;[5]

(6) Defendant NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment against Plaintiffs' Claims Under 15 U.S.C. § 13(c) and Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045;[6]

(7) Defendant NSW's Motion to Sever the Claims Against Defendant FWS;[7]

(8) Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Richard Sexton's Opinion and Testimony Based on Payroll Methodology;[8]

(9) Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Victor Neuman's Fifth Opinion and Testimony Re his Survey;[9] and

(10) Defendant NSW's Ex Parte Application for [*5] Leave to File a Motion for Terminating Sanctions.[10]

The Court conducted a hearing on June 28, 2010. Pursuant to the Court's June 18, 2010 Order,[11] the Court heard oral argument only on the following motions: (1) Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims, and (2) Defendant NSW's Motion Re Richard Sexton. The Court took all other motions under submission without oral argument. (See id. at 2-3.) On the same day, the Court conducted an evidentiary hearing pursuant to Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc.[12] in connection with Plaintiffs' proffered expert, Richard Sexton, and his opinion regarding market share based on his payroll methodology and data. (See id. at 1.)

Based on the papers submitted to date and oral argument, the Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims, GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Richard Sexton's Opinion Re market share based on payroll methodology, GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Victor Neuman's Opinion, and DENIES all other Motions.

A. Standards

1. Motion for Partial Summary Judgment

Although motions for partial summary judgment are common, [*6] Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which governs summary judgment, does not contain an explicit procedure entitled "partial summary judgment." However, partial summary judgment is inherent in that Rule 56(a) provided for summary judgment on "all or part of the claim." Thus, a party may move for summary judgment on the liability issues in a claim, leaving the issue of damages, for example, for trial.

The purpose of summary judgment "is to isolate and dispose of factually unsupported claims or defenses." Celotex v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). Thus, partial summary judgment may be used to dispose of a factually unsupported claim or affirmative defense.

As with a motion on the entire claim, under Rule 56(c), partial summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment [on a part of the claim or an affirmative defense] as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The moving party "always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying the evidence which it believes demonstrates the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. The non-moving [*7] party must then identify specific facts "showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e).

When evaluating a motion for partial or full summary judgment, the court views the evidence through the prism of the evidentiary standard of proof that would pertain at trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). The court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party, including questions of credibility and of the weight that particular evidence is accorded. See, e.g., Masson v. New Yorker Magazine, Inc., 501 U.S. 496, 520, 111 S. Ct. 2419, 115 L. Ed. 2d 447 (1992). The court determines whether the non-moving party's "specific facts," coupled with disputed background or contextual facts, are such that a reasonable jury might return a verdict for the non-moving party. T.W. Elec. Serv. v. Pac. Elect. Contractors, 809 F.2d 626, 631 (9th Cir. 1987). In such a case, partial summary judgment is inappropriate. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. However, where a rational trier of fact could not find for the non-moving party based on the record as a whole, there is no "genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986).

2. Fed. R. Evid. 702

Federal Rule of Evidence 702 requires that a testifying expert be "qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education." Fed. R. Evid. 702. The threshold for qualification is low, a minimal foundation of knowledge, skill, and experience suffices. Hangarter v. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co., 373 F.3d 998, 1015-16 (9th Cir. 2004); see also Thomas v. Newton Int'l Enterprises, 42 F.3d 1266, 1269 (9th Cir. 1994). When faced with a proffer of expert testimony, a district court must determine whether the testimony [*8] is both reliable and relevant. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 589, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993) ("Daubert I"). The court has broad discretion in assessing both requirements. See United States v. Alatorre, 222 F.3d 1098, 1100 (9th Cir. 2000).

The reliability requirement ensures "that an expert, whether basing testimony on professional studies or personal experience, employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field." Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 152, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1999). The offering party must show by a preponderance of the evidence (1) that the expert is qualified to render the opinion and (2) that the opinion offered has adequate support. Daubert I, 509 U.S. at 588-90. Expert testimony is not admissible if it is speculative. See Gen. Elec. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 146, 118 S. Ct. 512, 139 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1997). To satisfy the relevance requirement, the proffered expert testimony must assist the trier of fact in understanding or determining a fact in issue. Daubert I, 509 U.S. at 591. In assessing relevance, the court must look to the governing substantive legal standard. See Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 43 F.3d 1311, 1320 (9th Cir. 1995) ("Daubert II").

B. Discussion

The full factual background of this case has been laid out extensively in the Court's prior Orders.[13] The Court addresses the relevant facts and procedural history to the extent they implicate the present Motions below.

1. Plaintiffs' Motion to Vacate Order Re Price-Fixing and Bid-Rigging Claims

Plaintiffs move [*9] to vacate or modify the Court's October 15, 2009 Order. Plaintiffs contend that although they were not harmed by a conspiracy to fix high prices, they have standing to bring price-fixing claims because such conduct was the motive for other exclusionary acts aimed at eliminating independent competitors.[14]

In its October 15, 2009 Order, the Court held that "a competitor in the same market cannot have standing to assert a claim for a price-fixing scheme which results in artificially high prices." (October 15, 2009 Order at 4.) Even assuming Defendants colluded to drive up bidding prices, Plaintiffs would suffer no injury as a result, and thus Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring a claim arising from such conduct. (Id.) On November 13, 2009, the Court issued an Order Denying Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to File a Motion for Reconsideration. (hereafter, "November 13 Order," Docket Item No. 1173.) In its November 13 Order, the Court considered two additional cases that Plaintiffs presented in support of their standing to bring price-fixing and bid-rigging claims,[15] but the Court found that neither case provided a sufficient basis for reconsidering the October 15 Order.

Despite the Court's [*10] denial of their previous request for leave to move for reconsideration, and without requesting further leave as required under Civ. L.R. 7-9(a), Plaintiffs now ask the Court to vacate or modify its October 15, 2009 Order. Relying on Story Parchment Co., a case that the Court already addressed and found distinguishable in its November 13 Order, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants conspired to exclude them from the HVAC market so that Defendants could later fix artificially high prices. However, Plaintiffs fail to present the Court with any new evidence of predatory pricing, and instead merely assert a new theory of bid-rigging, contending that Defendants' bid-rigging practice was the motive for other exclusionary acts, supported only by the testimony of Defendants' expert stating that it would not be an "illogical assumption" that one motive of a bid-rigging conspiracy "might be to attempt to eliminate [a] competitor in order to return to bid-rigging."[16] Plaintiffs cannot meet their burden to show standing by putting forward a vague theory supported only by generalized evidence. Moreover, evidence, however tenuous, of Defendants' motive does not substitute for evidence that Defendants' alleged price-fixing [*11] or bid-rigging conduct caused Plaintiffs antitrust injury.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion to Vacate Order Re Price-Fixing and Bid-Rigging Claims.

Spencer & Son, Inc. (filed under seal).)

2. Defendant NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Re Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, Exclusive Dealing, and Tying Claims

a. Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization

Defendant NSW contends that Plaintiffs have not established that Defendant NSW has market or monopoly power in the relevant market, which is an essential element of all of their antitrust claims. (NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims at 2.)

The Ninth Circuit has defined the relevant market as the field in which meaningful competition exists, or "the group of sellers or producers who have the actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business." Image Technical Svcs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202-03 (9th Cir. 1997) (internal quotation and citation omitted). "Ultimately, what constitutes a relevant market is a factual determination for the jury." Id. at 1203. Once the relevant market is defined, the court must determine whether the defendant has monopoly power in that market. "Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition." Id. at 1202. A plaintiff may prove monopoly [*12] power, otherwise referred to as market power, by either direct or circumstantial evidence. Id. When proving monopoly power by circumstantial evidence, a plaintiff must show (1) "that the defendant owns a dominant share of the market" and (2) "that there are significant barriers to entry and . . . existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Id. The Ninth Circuit has recognized that "a market share of less than 50 percent is presumptively insufficient to establish market power" for a monopolization claim, while "a market share of 30 percent is presumptively insufficient to establish the power to control price" for an attempted monopolization claim. Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1438 (9th Cir. 1995).

i. Relevant Market

Here, both of the parties' respective experts agree that the relevant geographic market is Northern California, although they disagree as to whether Fresno and Reno should be included.[17] Both of the experts also agree that the relevant product market is the distribution, sale, and service of HVAC equipment for commercial, industrial, and institutional projects (including hi-rise apartment buildings but not single family homes).[18] However, the experts disagree as to whether the relevant [*13] product market includes both "wet-side" and "dry-side" products, or if it is limited to dry-side products only.[19] In light of the differences in opinion between the two experts regarding the relevant product market, the Court finds that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to that issue.

ii. Market Power

[17] (See Expert Report of Dr. Michael P. Akemann at 30-32, hereafter, "Akemann Report," Declaration of Michael P. Akemann in Support of Motion of Defendant Norman Wright Mechanical Equipment Corporation for Partial Summary Judgment Against Plaintiffs for Claims of Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, Exclusive Dealing, and Tying, Ex. 3, Attachment A (filed under seal); Videotaped Deposition of Richard J. Sexton, Ph.D. at 52:7-55:16, hereafter, "Sexton Depo.," Declaration of John F. McLean in Support of Motion of Defendant Norman Wright Mechanical Equipment Corporation for Partial Summary Judgment Against Plaintiffs' Claims of Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, Exclusive Dealing, and Tying, hereafter, "McLean Decl.," Ex. B (excluding Fresno and Reno from the relevant geographic market) (filed under seal).)

[18] (See Akemann Report at 33; Expert Report of Richard J. Sexton at 5-6, hereafter, "Sexton Report," McLean Decl., Ex. C.)

[19] (Compare Akemann Report at 34-35 (opining that the relevant product market includes both wet-side and dry-side products) with Sexton Report at 3-6 (opining that the relevant product market includes only dry-side products).) As the names would imply, wet-side refers to products that handle water, and dry-side refers to products that handle air. See, e.g., Akemann Report at 34.

The experts disagree even more strenuously as to the calculation of Defendant NSW's market share. Defendants' expert, Dr. Michael Akemann, concluded that Defendant NSW's market share averages between 22.1% and 23.2% for the period between 1997-2006, depending on whether Fresno is included in the geographic market. (Akemann Report at 35-42.) Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Richard Sexton, on the other hand, concluded that Defendant NSW's market share rose steadily from 35.2% in 2002 to 88.1% in 2007. (Sexton Report at 7-14.) Defendant NSW moves to exclude Dr. Sexton's opinion and testimony based on his payroll methodology.[20]

Plaintiffs offer Dr. Sexton's opinion as to Defendant NSWs' market share from 2002 to 2007. One of two methods of computing market share offered by Dr. Sexton is based on payroll data. (Sexton Report at 7-8.) "Payroll data" includes "payments to employees [*14] and to company officers, as well as fringe benefits including medical and pension." (Id. at 12.) Dr. Sexton computes Defendant NSW's market share by comparing its payroll in the relevant time period to the total payroll (based on Census Bureau data) in Northern California for "warm air heating and air-conditioning equipment and supplies merchant wholesalers." (Id. at 8, 14.)

To establish the reliability of his payroll method of computing market share, Dr. Sexton relies on the following book: Scherer, F. M., Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 56 (1980). (See Sexton Report at 7 n.1.) Dr. Sexton acknowledges that the book uses the term "employment," not "payroll," as one proxy for computing market share. (Sexton Depo. at 91:19-92:1.) Dr. Sexton has never seen employment or payroll discussed as a proxy for sales in any other publication, and he has never used payroll as a proxy for sales in any other antitrust case on which he worked. (Sexton Depo. at 85:9-87:22, 90:1-14.) Dr. Sexton admitted that different business in the industry may have different business models that yield different correlations between a company's payroll and its market share. (Sexton Depo. at 94:9-95:16, 96:17-98:1.) [*15]

In support of its motion to exclude Dr. Sexton's opinion, Defendant NSW offers a declaration of Professor Scherer, the author of the textbook, as well as a declaration from its expert Michael Akemann.[21] Professor Scherer states that he used the term "employment" to mean headcount. (Scherer Decl. ¶¶ 1-3.) He did not intend the term "employment" to include "payroll" because payroll is not a good proxy for measuring market share of sales in a market. (Id. ¶ 5.) Both Professor Scherer and Dr. Akemann state that they have never seen payroll used to compute market share in any literature or conference. (Id. ¶ 4; Akemann Decl. ¶ 4.)

At the evidentiary hearing, Dr. Sexton testified that he used payroll data as a proxy for market share of sales because he did not have all the necessary sales data for years 2003 to 2007. He confirmed that he has never seen employment or payroll discussed as a proxy for sales in any publication other than the book on which he relies, and that he has never used payroll as a proxy for sales in any other antitrust case on which he worked. Dr. Sexton testified that payroll market share is a reliable way to show sales market share because an increase in payroll correlates [*16] with an increase in sales. However, when questioned by the Court, Dr. Sexton could not provide an exact method by which he would compute an actual percentage of sales market share based on payroll market share. Dr. Sexton also testified that he chose not to use an alternative source of sales data published by McGraw-Hill called the "Dodge Report," which was used by Defendant NSW's expert, Dr. Akemann, because, in Dr. Sexton's opinion, the Dodge Report was not sufficiently reliable. Dr. Sexton conceded that the Dodge Report was available for the time period at issue. Dr. Akemann testified that the Dodge Report is reliable and is used by the U.S. Census Bureau in compiling certain of its reports. For the reasons stated on the record, and in light of Dr. Sexton's failure to demonstrate that payroll market share is a reliable way to compute an actual amount of sales market share—as opposed to the general statement that the two statistics are correlated—the Court finds Dr. Sexton's payroll data method of computing market share insufficiently reliable.

[20] (NSW's Motion Re Richard Sexton at 2.)

[21] (See Declaration of F.M. Scherer in Support of Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Dr. Richard Sexton's Opinion Calculating Market Share by Payroll Methodology, Analysis, and Data in Connection with NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, and at Trial, hereafter, "Scherer Decl.," Docket Item No. 1441; Declaration of Michael P. Akemann in Support of Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Dr. Richard Sexton's Opinion Calculating Market Share by Payroll Methodology, Analysis, and Data in Connection with NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, and at Trial, hereafter, "Akemann Decl.," filed under seal.)

Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Dr. Sexton's report and testimony to the extent he relies on the payroll methodology [*17] and data.[22] In light of the Court's finding that Dr. Sexton may not rely on his payroll methodology to calculate market share, the Court analyzes Plaintiffs' claims using only calculations of market share derived from sales data.

In his Report, Dr. Sexton provides a calculation of Defendant NSW's market share based on an analysis of sales data for the year 2002 only. (See Sexton Report at 8, Table 1.) In that year, Dr. Sexton estimates that Defendant NSW had a share in the relevant market of 35.2%. (See Sexton Report at 12, Table 1.) Dr. Akemann, on the other hand, provided calculations of Defendant NSW's market share for the years 1997-2006 ranging from 17.8% in 1997 to 22.1% in 2006, averaging 22.1% for the entire time span. (See Akemann Report at 35-42.) Plaintiffs and Defendant NSW each attack the sales-based market share calculations of the other's expert-Plaintiffs on the ground that Dr. Akemann included in his calculation products that are not part of the product market at issue in this case,[23] and Defendant NSW on the ground that Dr. Sexton erroneously included sales data for Defendant NSW's offices outside of the relevant geographic market.[24]

Even assuming Dr. Sexton's sales-based [*18] market share calculation for 2002 is accurate, Plaintiffs have failed to present any evidence that Defendant NSW's share of the relevant market exceeded the minimum threshold of 50% necessary for a monopolization claim. Since their own expert's calculation of 35.2% market share cannot overcome the presumption of insufficiency under Rebel Oil, the Court finds that there is no genuine issue of material fact as to an essential element of Plaintiffs' monopolization claim.[25]

As to Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim, Dr. Sexton's 35.2% market share calculation is a sufficient showing to meet the market power element under Rebel Oil. At his deposition, Dr. Sexton admitted that in calculating Defendant NSW's market share for 2002, he may have included sales data for Defendant NSW's offices in Los Angeles, the California Central Coast, Las Vegas, and the Pacific Islands.[26] Dr. Akemann recalculated Defendant NSW's market share using the same data as Dr. Sexton, but took out any sales associated with offices outside of the relevant geographic market, and reduced Dr. Sexton's market share figure to 28.2%.[27] Dr. Sexton stated in a

[22] On July 1, 2010, after the hearing, Plaintiffs filed a Supplemental Declaration of Dr. Sexton purporting to conduct a new analysis of market share in sales based on 2007 census data discussed at the hearing. (hereafter, "Supplemental Declaration," Docket Item Nos. 1735-1736.) The Court STRIKES the Supplemental Declaration as inappropriately filed without leave of the Court. Although Plaintiffs suggested at the hearing that discovery should be reopened for a limited purpose of allowing each expert to use the new 2007 census data to supplement their reports, the Court did not permit it because discovery has been closed and trial has been set for September. Moreover, both sides' experts conceded that the 2007 census data is not granular enough to provide sales data for the relevant market because it provides data only for the entire California market. Finally, as previously stated, the Court finds that Dr. Sexton's election, without sufficient cause, to not rely on an already available source of sales data, namely, the Dodge Report, is detrimental to his own report and opinion. In light of the Court's striking Dr. Sexton's Supplemental Declaration, the Court DENIES as moot Defendant NSW's Objections and Motion to Strike Dr. Sexton's Supplemental Declaration. (Docket Item No. 1743.)

[23] (Plaintiffs' Opposition to Motion by Norman Wright Mechanical Equipment Corp. For Partial Summary Judgment Against Claims of Monopolization, Exclusive Dealing and Tying at 16-17, hereafter, "Plaintiffs' Opposition to NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims," Docket Item No. 1524.)

[24] (NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims at 9.)

[25] Plaintiffs also fail to present any direct evidence of market power. To show market power through direct proof, a plaintiff must put forth "evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices, that is direct proof of the injury to competition which a competitor with market power may inflict, and thus, of the actual exercise of market power." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1421. Here, Plaintiffs have not provided any evidence that Defendant NSW has restricted output, causing prices to rise. To the contrary, Plaintiffs failed to rebut Dr. Akemann's expert opinion that the barriers into entry into the market are low, which would effective prevent Defendant NSW from reducing output. (See Akemann Report at 37-38.)

[26] (Sexton Depo. at 99:2-101:14, 151:6-153:6.)

subsequent declaration that he did not agree with Dr. Akemann's [*19] recalculation of Dr. Sexton's market share figure.[28]

The Court finds that the disagreement between the two experts as to whether Defendant NSW's market share exceeded 30% creates a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Plaintiffs have demonstrated sufficient market power to support an attempted monopolization claim. Furthermore, Dr. Akemann's own calculations of Defendant NSW's market share come exceedingly close to the 30% threshold-reaching 29.9% in 2004 when excluding Fresno from the geographic market. (Akemann Report, Ex. 1.) Since the 30% baseline for an attempted monopolization claim is not absolute, and only creates a presumption of insufficient market power,[29] the Court finds that summary adjudication of Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim is inappropriate on the basis of insufficient market share.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims as to Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claims on the ground that there is an insufficient showing of market share.

iii. Barriers to Entry

Defendant NSW contends that there are no significant barriers to entry for the HVAC distribution market in Northern California. (NSW's [*20] Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims at 9.) Plaintiffs respond that Defendant NSW's exclusive contracts to distribute certain HVAC products combined with evidence of flat spec'ing practices on HVAC projects are sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether there are significant barriers to entry.[30]

As the Ninth Circuit has explained,

> A § 2 plaintiff, establishing monopoly power by circumstantial evidence, must establish more than just market share. Even a 100% monopolist may not exploit its monopoly power in a market without entry barriers. A § 2 plaintiff must show that new competitors face high market barriers to entry and that current competitors lack the ability to expand their output to challenge a monopolist's high prices. Barriers to entry "must be capable of constraining the normal operation of the market to the extent that the problem is unlikely to be self-correcting." Common entry barriers include: patents or other legal licenses, control of essential or superior resources, entrenched buyer preferences, high capital entry costs and economies of scale.

Image Technical Servs., 125 F.3d 1195, 1208 (9th Cir. 1997).

Although Defendant NSW's expert opines that there are no significant barriers to entry for the HVAC [*21] distribution market in Northern California,[31] the Court finds that the evidence of Defendant NSW's exclusive contracts to distribute certain HVAC products and flat spec'ing practices on HVAC projects is sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether there are significant barriers to entry.

In sum, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' evidence of Defendant NSW's market share is insufficient to support Plaintiffs' monopolization claims, but sufficient to support Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claims. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims as to Plaintiffs' monopolization claims, but DENIES Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims as to Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claims.

b. Tying

Defendant NSW moves for summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' tying claims on the ground that Plaintiffs failed to define the relevant tying product market or demonstrate that Defendant NSW has market power in the tying product market. (NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims at 19-21.) Plaintiffs respond that Defendant NSW's coercion of engineers to flat-spec products represented exclusively by [*22] Defendant NSW functioned in each instance to create infinite market power with respect to each flat-spec'ed product. (Plaintiffs' Opposition to NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims at 11-12.)

A tying arrangement is an "agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 405 U.S. 438, 461, 92 S. Ct. 1029, 31 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1992). Such arrangements are proscribed by both Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 14. The analysis of a tying arrangement under both provisions are virtually the same. Airweld, Inc. v. Airco, Inc., 742 F.2d 1184, 1189 n.2 (9th Cir. 1984). The "essential characteristic" of an unlawful tying arrangement is the "seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have purchased elsewhere on different terms." Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984).

The Supreme Court has held that "in all cases involving a tying arrangement, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant has market power in the tying product." Illinois Tool Works, Inc. v. Independent Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 46, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006). As discussed in relation to Plaintiffs' monopolization claims, market power can only be demonstrated once the relevant market has been defined. [*23] See Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434.

Here, Plaintiffs do not allege a tying market in their pleadings, but assert two alternative definitions of the tying market in their Opposition brief. First, Plaintiffs contend that the tying product market is defined by the design specifications for each individual project on which flat spec'ing occurs. (Plaintiffs' Opposition to NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims at 11-12.) Plaintiffs contend that by definition, Defendant NSW has a 100% share of the market for a tying product where that product has been flat-spec'ed for a particular project and Defendant NSW is the exclusive distributor of that product. The Court finds that Plaintiffs define the tying market far too narrowly. While Defendant NSW's exclusive ability to distribute a flat spec'ed product may prevent competitors from participating in one particular project, it does not follow that competition is harmed as to any other project that involves HVAC products. Plaintiffs have simply failed to provide any evidence whatsoever that a single project where flat spec'ing occurs is a relevant market.

Plaintiffs second theory, although not stated explicitly, is that the tying product market is the broader market [*24] for HVAC product distribution. In fact, Plaintiffs themselves define the relevant market in this case as warm-air HVAC equipment sold to commercial, industrial, and institutional users or their agents. (Id. at 15.) Defining the market in this manner is equally problematic, however, for the opposite reason. The market for HVAC products generally includes both the alleged tying product and the tied products. Since by definition, tying can only occur between products in two distinct markets, a tying claim cannot be maintained where the market is defined to encompass both products.

Since Plaintiffs have failed to define an adequate tying market, it is impossible for Plaintiffs to demonstrate that Defendants have sufficient market power to sustain their tying claim. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims as to Plaintiffs' tying claims.

c. Exclusive Dealing

Defendant NSW moves for summary judgment on Plaintiffs' exclusive dealing claim on the grounds that (1) any contracts between Defendant NSW and manufacturers of HVAC parts did not foreclose competition in the relevant market, and (2) Plaintiffs have not adequately defined the relevant market. [*25] (NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims at 21-23.) Plaintiffs contend that each of the allegedly unlawful tying relationships inherently constitutes an exclusive deal under Section 3 of the Clayton Act.[32]

Under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, it is "unlawful for any person . . . make a sale or contract for sale of goods . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor . . . of the lessor or seller, where the effect . . . may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." 15 U.S.C. § 14. Antitrust law places this limit on exclusive dealing contracts, in which a buyer is obligated to deal only with a particular seller of a product or service, due to their "tendency to foreclose existing competitors or new entrants from competition in the covered portion of the relevant market during the term of the agreement." Omega Envtl. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1162 (9th Cir. 1997).

Unlike tying arrangements, however, exclusive dealing contracts are analyzed under the rule of reason. This is because, in addition to the potential competition-enhancing effects of exclusive dealing arrangements, "virtually every contract to buy forecloses or excludes alternative [*26] sellers from some portion of the market, namely the portion consisting of what was bought." Id. (citing Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 236 (1st Cir. 1983). Accordingly, "only those arrangements whose probable effect is to foreclose competition in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected" violate Section 3 of the Clayton Act. Id. (citing Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961)).

Here, Plaintiffs have produced evidence that for projects on which one part sold by Defendant NSW was flat spec'ed (i.e., determined to have no known equal and was therefore required for that project), Defendant NSW would submit a "bundled" bid in which the project owner would be required to purchase a bundle of parts from Defendant NSW.[33] Project owners understood that they had no choice but to accept the bundled bid, because if they did not, then Defendant NSW would simply refuse to sell the flat spec'ed part individually.[34] Defendant NSW's "bundling" gave it the power to charge supra-competitive prices.[35]

Plaintiffs also offer the opinion of their expert, Dr. Sexton, that the relevant product market is the dry-side HVAC equipment market for sale to commercial, industrial, and institutional users. (See Sexton Report at ¶¶ 1-2.) To show that the alleged exclusive dealing "substantially [*27] lessen[ed] competition or tend[ed] to create a monopoly," Plaintiffs offer the same evidence as offered for their other anti-trust claims. Since the Court has already found Plaintiffs' evidence sufficient to support a claim of attempted monopolization, the Court finds it sufficient to show that Defendant NSW's alleged exclusive dealing "tend[ed] to create a monopoly." Thus, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have presented sufficient evidence to create a triable issue of fact as to their claim for exclusive dealing.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims as to exclusive dealing.

3. Defendant FWS' Motion for Summary Judgment

[32] (Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendant NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Against Claims of Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, Exclusive Dealing, and Tying at 14, hereafter, "Opp'n to Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims," Docket Item No. 1524.) Thus, by Plaintiffs' own contention, their exclusive dealing claim is apparently not based on a theory involving contracts between Defendant NSW and manufacturers of HVAC parts.

[33] (See Declaration of Zane D. Negrych in Support of Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendant NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Against Claims of Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, Exclusive Dealing, and Tying, hereafter, "Negrych Decl.," Ex. D (Declaration of Michael Sabbaghian) at 27:14-30:6, Ex. E (Declaration of Mike Reppas) ¶ 10, Ex. G (Declaration of Grady Shirley) at 15:14-17:14, Ex. H (Deposition of John Stultz) at 283:11-285:25, Docket Item No. 1525.)

[34] (See, e.g., Negrych Decl., Ex. E ¶ 10.)

[35] (See Sexton Report ¶¶ 7, 10; Negrych Decl., Ex. D at 27:14-30:6, Ex. E ¶ 11.)

Defendant FWS moves for summary judgment as to all claims against it on the grounds, inter alia, that (1) Plaintiffs and Defendant FWS are not participants in the same market, and (2) Plaintiffs have not produced sufficient evidence that Defendant FWS conspired with Defendant NSW to exclude Plaintiffs from the HVAC market to create a triable issue of fact. (Defendant FWS' Motion for Summary Judgment at 1.)

To have antitrust standing, "the injured party [must] be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors." [*28] Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1508 (9th Cir. 1996) (internal quotations and citations omitted). However, antitrust standing is not strictly limited to competitors and consumers. Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1054 (9th Cir. 1999). "While consumers and competitors are most likely to suffer antitrust injury, there are situations in which other market participants can suffer antitrust injury. Not surprisingly, courts routinely recognize the antitrust claims of market participants other than consumers or competitors."[36]

Here, as previously discussed, it is undisputed that the relevant product market is the distribution, sale, and service of HVAC equipment for commercial, industrial, and institutional projects.[37] By Plaintiffs' own admission, Defendant FWS is a mechanical engineering contractor and sub-contractor, which specializes in the design and installation of HVAC systems, while Plaintiffs are representatives of manufacturers of HVAC [*29] systems.[38] Thus, it is clear that Defendant FWS is not a direct competitor of Plaintiffs. However, the fact that Defendant FWS does not directly distribute, sell, or service HVAC systems[39] does not mean they do not participate in the same market as Plaintiffs. In fact, Defendant FWS admits that as a mechanical engineering contractor, it is a customer of mechanical equipment representatives such as Plaintiffs and Defendant NSW.[40] The Court finds that as a customer of HVAC systems, Defendant FWS participates in the same market as Plaintiffs, who distribute and sell HVAC systems on behalf of the manufacturers.

In support of their contention that Defendant FWS conspired with Defendant NSW to exclude Plaintiffs from the relevant market, Plaintiffs present evidence that, among other things, (1) Defendant FWS earned abnormally high profits on the eight projects that it worked on with Defendant NSW,[41] and (2) contrary to its own policy, Defendant

[38] (Third Amended Complaint for Injunction and Treble Damages ¶¶ 1, 12, hereafter, "TAC" (filed under seal).)

[39] Plaintiffs represent in their Opposition that in design-build projects, Defendant FWS does sell HVAC products directly to owners, placing them in direct competition with Plaintiffs. (Plaintiffs' Opposition to F.W. Spencer's Motion for Summary Judgment or in the Alternative Summary Adjudication at 5 (filed under seal).) However, Plaintiffs do not present any evidence to support this contention. Thus, standing alone, this representation cannot create a triable issue of fact as to Defendant FWS' participation in the same market as Plaintiffs.

Spencer's Motion for Summary Judgment or in the Alternative Summary Adjudication ¶ 9, hereafter, "Brasso Decl.," Ex. 7 (filed under seal) (table attached to Plaintiffs' Expert Report showing that average contractor earning on a construction project is 2%, while Defendant FWS realized much higher earnings on the projects at issue here).)

FWS accepted Defendant NSW's high bid over Plaintiffs' lower bid on the Moscone Center Project.[42] When Plaintiffs' counsel confronted Defendant FWS principal William Spencer at deposition regarding Defendant FWS accepting Defendant NSW's higher bid over Plaintiffs' [*30] lower bid, Mr. Spencer responded, "I'm surprised-this must not be all-inclusive. That's all I could think of. Or maybe it wasn't-I don't know. But I know that we would normally use the lowest price." (Id. at 455:6-9.) The Court finds that Mr. Spencer's explanation, especially when viewed in connection with the evidence of Defendant FWS' abnormally-high profits, leaves open significant questions regarding the nature of the dealings between Defendant FWS and Defendant NSW that could lead a reasonable jury to infer that the two companies conspired to exclude Plaintiffs from the commercial HVAC market.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant FWS' Motion for Summary Judgment.[43]

4. Plaintiffs' and Defendant NSW's Motions Re Commercial Bribery

Plaintiffs and Defendant NSW each move for summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' claims for commercial bribery. Plaintiffs' Motion relies solely on Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045, while Defendant NSW's Motion relies on both Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045 and the Robinson-Patman Act Section 2(c), 15 U.S.C. § 13(c).

Plaintiffs contend that the evidence conclusively shows that both Defendants engaged in a scheme in which they bribed project owners to specify and purchase Defendant NSW's products rather than those of its competitors, such as [*31] Plaintiffs. (Plaintiffs' MSJ Re Bribery at 1.) Defendants contend that (1) the operative complaint does not contain a cause of action for commercial bribery under § 17045, (2) mechanical engineering firms and employees are not customers of Defendant NSW and therefore the alleged bribery is not within the scope of 15 U.S.C. § 13(c), (3) Plaintiffs have not shown the requisite flow of relevant persons or activities in interstate or international commerce, and (4) Plaintiffs have presented no evidence of harm to competition or any other damages.[44]

Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act states:

> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other [42] (Deposition of William D. Spencer, Vol. III at 433:7-19, 452:25-455:9, Brasso Decl., Ex. 3.) Defendant FWS objects to the admission of Mr. Spencer's deposition testimony on the grounds that (1) counsel objected to the form of the question and as to lack of personal knowledge at the time of the deposition, and (2) the testimony is irrelevant to the issue of Defendant FWS' involvement in causing antitrust injury to Plaintiffs. (Defendant FWS' Objections to Evidence Submitted by Plaintiffs in Support of Plaintiffs' Opposition to F.W. Spencer's & Son, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment at 7, Docket Item No. 1548.) Upon review of the deposition transcript, the Court finds that Mr. Spencer's answer is responsive and does not exhibit any confusion as to what was being asked. Furthermore, as the company principal, the Court finds that Mr. Spencer is likely to have personal knowledge of Defendant FWS' bidding practices. Finally, the Court finds that the testimony is relevant to establish that Defendant FWS' acceptance of Defendant NSW's higher bid was an aberration from regular company policy, which could lead a reasonable juror to infer anticompetitive conduct. Accordingly, the Court OVERRULES Defendant FWS' objection with regard to Mr. Spencer's deposition testimony.

[43] Defendant FWS contends that since it was only involved in 17 out of 154 projects at issue in this action, Defendant FWS cannot be held jointly and severally liable as a co-conspirator on the projects with which it had no involvement. (FWS' Motion for Summary Judgment at 10; FWS' Reply Re Summary Judgment at 6.) The Court finds that it is unnecessary for purposes of this Motion to make determinations as to Defendant FWS' potential co-conspirator liability for particular projects. To the extent that it seeks to limit the jury's consideration of its alleged liability to particular projects, Defendant FWS shall do so through motions in limine at the appropriate time.

The existence of an agency relationship is normally a question of fact, but it "becomes a question of law [*33] when the facts can be viewed in only one way." J. L. v. Children's Institute, Inc., 177 Cal. App. 4th 388, 403, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 5 (Cal. Ct. App. 2009).

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045 "closely parallels the federal Robinson-Patman Antidiscrimination Act." Diesel Electric Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Marco Marine San Diego, Inc., 16 Cal. App. 4th 202, 212, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 (Cal. Ct. App. May 5, 1993). Section 17045, entitled "Secret Payments or Allowances," is part of California's Unfair Practices Act ("UPA"). The purpose of the UPA is "to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented." ABC Int'l Traders, Inc. v. Matsushita Electric Corp., 14 Cal. 4th 1247, 1256, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112, 931 P.2d 290 (Cal. 1997). To that end, § 17045 provides:

> The secret payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions, or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, or secretly extending to certain purchasers special services or privileges not extended to all purchasers purchasing upon like terms and conditions, to the injury of a competitor and where such payment or allowance tends to destroy competition, is unlawful.

A violation of § 17045 requires (1) a "secret" allowance of an "unearned" discount, (2) "injury" to a competitor, and (3) the allowance must tend to destroy competition. Diesel Electric Sales, 16 Cal. App. 4th at 212. While competitive injury is an element of a claim under § 17045, it is not an element of a prima facie [*34] violation of § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act. See Blue Tree Hotels Inv. (Canada), Ltd. v. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc., 369 F.3d 212, 220 (2d Cir. 2004).

As an initial matter, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have included a claim for commercial bribery under § 17045 in their Third Amended Complaint. (See Docket Item No. 42 ¶¶ 78-94.) In support of their commercial bribery claims under both the Robinson-Patman Act and § 17045, Plaintiffs offer evidence that Defendant NSW purchased various gifts, some exceeding $10,000, hotel accommodations, fishing trips, and other travel for various of its customers and to mechanical engineers that worked with Defendant NSW's customers.[45] While some of the gifts appear to bear a connection (if only loosely) to goods purchased by the customers, other gifts appear to have no connection to any particular sale or purchase of goods.[46] Plaintiffs offer evidence that Defendant FWS, acting in concert with

[46] (Compare Brasso Decl. ISO Plaintiffs' MSJ Re Bribery, Ex. 1 with Brasso Decl. ISO Plaintiffs' MSJ Re Bribery, Ex. 3.)

Defendant NSW, paid a $25,000 "kickback" to one of Defendant NSW's customers.[47] Further, Plaintiffs present evidence that at least one of the alleged bribes was made directly to one of Defendant NSW's customers.[48] The issue becomes whether the alleged bribery occurred within the flow of commerce, whether the mechanical engineer firms acted as agents of Defendant NSW's customers, and [*35] whether Plaintiffs have been damaged by Defendants' alleged acts of bribery.

a. Bribery Activities Within the Flow of Commerce

Plaintiffs have presented evidence that at least one of the alleged bribes satisfies the Robinson-Patman Act's requirement that the alleged activity be "within the flow of commerce among the states or with foreign nations." Rotec Indus., 348 F.3d at 1122. Specifically, in at least one instance, evidence shows that goods were purchased by Defendant NSW as a gift in California for delivery to a mechanical engineer in Mexico.[49] This evidence establishes a triable issue of fact as to fulfillment of the interstate commerce requirement, since the evidence implies that the goods crossed the border from California to Mexico.

b. Mechanical Engineering Firms as Agents of Defendant NSW

To show that the mechanical engineering firms acted as agents of Defendant NSW's customers, Plaintiffs offer the opinion of their expert, Victor Neuman, that mechanical engineers generally act as agents of the owners of public projects (i.e., Defendant NSW's customers).[50] Mr. Neuman opines that as a result of bribing by Defendant NSW, "the content of the specifications prepared by mechanical design engineers [*36] favoring [Defendant NSW] strongly coerced customers of [Defendant NSW] to purchase [Defendant NSW's] bundled packages of products even when other less expensive substitutes like those sold by Plaintiffs were available."[51] In this manner, the mechanical engineers as agents allegedly acted contrary to the fiduciary duty owed to their principals—Defendant NSW's customers.

c. Damage and Competitive Injury

To show damage and competitive injury, Plaintiffs offer the opinion of their damages expert, Dr. Stephen Degnan, that Plaintiffs were damaged under several alternative damages models as a result of the allegedly anticompetitive conduct.[52] One of Dr. Degnan's opinions relies on the opinion of another of Plaintiffs' experts, Mr. Victor Neuman, that Plaintiffs would have won approximately 37% more projects on which they bid in the absence of Defendants'

[48] (See Brasso Decl. ISO Plaintiffs' MSJ Re Bribery, Ex. 7.) To the extent that § 17045 requires that the alleged bribes be "secret," the Court finds that Plaintiffs have presented sufficient evidence to raise a triable issue of fact as to the secrecy of the alleged bribes. (See Declaration of John Karamanos in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment against Norman Wright for Commercial Bribery ¶¶ 4-5, Docket Item No. 1451.)

Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045*, hereafter, "Brasso Decl. ISO Plaintiffs' Opp'n," Ex. 1, Expert Witness Report of Victor Neuman at 6, hereafter, "Neuman Report," Docket Item No. 1514, filed under seal.)

[51] (Neuman Report at 7.)

[52] (See id., Ex. 2, Expert Report of Dr. Steven Degnan at 15-19.)

allegedly anticompetitive conduct.[53] Since this opinion by Mr. Neuman is the subject of Defendant NSW's motion to exclude, the Court addresses it as a preliminary matter.[54]

Plaintiffs contend that Mr. Neuman's opinion is based on a reliable methodology and data, and that Defendant NSW's motion goes to the weight of the testimony, not admissibility. [*37] [55] Although Mr. Neuman claims that he based his opinion on a "nationwide survey" that he conducted,[56] Mr. Neuman's survey was actually based on "eleven responses from mechanical sales representatives" who represented one company, Tek-Air Systems (a customer of Defendant NSW) in 2010. (Id. at 17-18.) Mr. Neuman also attempted to survey 29 other mechanical sales representatives, but received no response.[57] Mr. Neuman conceded at his deposition that the eleven representatives who returned his phone calls were those with whom he had the closest personal relationship. (Id. at 99:7-18.)

Moreover, Mr. Newman report does not disclose his methodology (i.e., why he chose to survey those representatives as opposed to others), error rate, or whether the sample that he obtained was representative of the relevant industry or market. The report also does not explain why a nationwide survey bears on the issue of bid-win percentages in the Northern California market. In short, Mr. Neuman's report provides no explanation as to why his method of survey is reliable. The Court finds that Mr. Neuman's opinion based on survey evidence falls far short of meeting the reliability requirement of Rule 702. Thus, the Court finds that [*38] Mr. Neuman's opinion as to his survey is inadmissible.

However, although one model offered by Dr. Degnan is based on the inadmissible opinion testimony of Victor Neuman, Dr. Degnan has offered several alternative damages models.[58] The Court finds Dr. Degnan's other damages models, such as a "market forecast" model of Plaintiffs' sales in the absence of the anticompetitive conduct, sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact as to damages under Plaintiffs' commercial bribery claims.

In sum, the Court finds that both sides have presented sufficient evidence to raise a triable issue of fact under both the Robinson-Patman Act and § 17045 as to the existence of payments or commissions made by Defendants to Defendant NSW's customers for an improper purpose. Accordingly, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Re Bribery and DENIES Defendant NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Re Bribery.[59] The Court GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion to Strike the expert opinion and testimony of Victor Neuman based on his survey.

Miller in Support of Motion of Defendant NSW to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Victor Neuman's Fifth Opinion and any Testimony on his Survey in Connection with Motion for Partial Summary Judgment, and at Trial, hereafter, "Miller Decl.," Ex. [56] (See Neuman Report at 17-18.) Mr. Neuman is an engineer and Plaintiffs offer him as an expert in mechanical engineering. (Id. at 1-2.)

[57] (Miller Decl., Ex. B, Deposition of Victor Neuman at 95:9-19, hereafter, "Neuman Depo.")

[58] (See id., Ex. 2, Expert Report of Dr. Steven Degnan at 15-19.) Defendant NSW's motion to exclude is not directed to these other damages models.

[59] The Court DENIES Defendants' Objections and Motion to Strike Plaintiffs' evidence offered in support of Plaintiffs' MSJ Re Bribery, since the Court did not rely on the declarations of John Karamanos on the issue of damages and David Norman. The exhibits to the Brasso Declarations relied on by the Court are emails and invoices, which may constitute business records, and deposition transcripts. (See Docket Item Nos. 1489, 1522.)

5. Plaintiffs' Motion for Order Regarding Defendants' Claims of Indemnity or Contribution

Plaintiffs move for an Order finding void any agreement between Defendant [*39] NSW and Defendant FWS which purports to create any obligations of indemnity or contribution between them arising from Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. (Plaintiffs' Motion Re Indemnity at 1.) Plaintiffs contend that any such agreement is invalid because there is no right to contribution for claims brought under the Sherman Act or Clayton Act. (Id. at 2.) Defendant FWS responds that Plaintiffs lack constitutional standing to challenge any agreement between Defendants creating obligations of indemnity or contribution because Plaintiffs cannot show that they have suffered any injury as a result of such an agreement and because no claim for contribution or indemnity is before the Court.[60]

The Court finds that Plaintiffs' Motion is not ripe for adjudication. First, there are no claims for contribution or indemnity before the Court. Second, it appears that to the extent Defendants FWS and NSW have such an agreement, they have initiated state court proceedings to resolve any contribution or indemnity claims.[61] Finally, Plaintiffs contend that absent the Court's intervention, Defendant NSW will be less likely to settle since they could still be held responsible for any judgment imposed against Defendant FWS. [*40] However, Plaintiffs' contention that the Defendants' agreement is interfering with their settlement efforts is purely speculative. Plaintiffs do not provide any evidence indicating that either Defendant has been less amenable to settlement because of the possibility of a claim for indemnity or contribution in the event of a finding of liability.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion for Order Regarding Defendants' Claims of Indemnity or Contribution.

6. Defendant NSW's Motion to Sever Claims Against Defendant FWS

Defendant NSW moves to sever Plaintiffs' claims against Defendant FWS on the ground that the claims against Defendant FWS do not pertain to antitrust violations, but to Defendant FWS' allegedly improper receipt of monetary benefits under a certain San Francisco ordinance that pertains to bid discounts for minority businesses. (NSW's Motion to Sever at 2-3.) Plaintiffs contend that its antitrust claims are based on a conspiracy perpetrated by both Defendants and that there is no separate cause of action in the operative complaint.[62]

The Court finds no basis for severing claims at this time. Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy by both Defendants to commit the various anti-trust [*41] and commercial bribery violations. There is no separate cause of action based on "minority contracting." To the extent that Defendant NSW seeks to exclude testimony regarding "minority contracting" as unduly prejudicial to the jury, it may move in limine before trial to exclude such evidence.

Accordingly, the Court DENIES Defendant NSW's Motion to Sever.

7. Defendant NSW's Ex Parte Application for Leave to File Motion for Terminating Sanctions

[60] (FWS' Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Order Regarding Defendants' Claims of Indemnity or Contribution at 2, hereafter, "FWS' Opposition Re Indemnity," Docket Item No. 1500.) Defendant NSW did not oppose Plaintiffs' Motion Re Indemnity. (Statement of Non-Opposition by Defendant NSW to Plaintiffs' Motion for Order Regarding Defendants' Claims of Indemnity or Contribution, Docket Item No. 1501.)

[61] In its Opposition, Defendant FWS represents that in November 2008, it filed suit in San Mateo Superior Court against Defendant NSW on the indemnity provision of a purchaser order implicated in the present case. (FWS' Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion for Order Regarding Defendants' Claims of Indemnity or Contribution at 2, Docket Item No. 1500.) Defendant FWS further represents that in or about November 2009, it voluntarily dismissed the indemnity lawsuit against Defendant NSW subject to a "standstill agreement." (Id. at 2-3.)

[62] (Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendant NSW's Motion for an Order for Severance of the Claims Against Defendant FWS or, at a Minimum, Severance of Minority Contracting Claims at 1 4, Docket Item No. 1503.)

Defendant NSW moves ex parte for an application for leave to file a Motion for Terminating Sanctions against Plaintiffs on the ground that Plaintiffs have failed to produce, as ordered by the Court, settlement agreements between Plaintiffs and former co-Defendants. (NSW's Motion for Sanctions at 2.)

Upon review of Defendant NSW's Application, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' alleged failure to turn over the documents does not warrant terminating sanctions at this time. However, to the extent that to date, Plaintiffs have failed to turn over these documents, Defendant NSW may make a motion before the Magistrate Judge for a contempt order and related monetary sanctions for attorney fees as a result of having to seek yet another Court order for compliance. [*42] It is worth noting that the Ninth Circuit has denied Plaintiffs' motion to stay the Court's March 17, 2010 Order pending its writ of mandamus on this issue. (See Docket Item No. 1729.) Thus, there is no good cause for Plaintiffs not to comply with the Court's Order.

Accordingly, the Court ORDERS that on or before July 28, 2010, Plaintiffs shall comply with the discovery orders regarding these settlement agreements, namely, to deliver these documents to Defendants' counsel's office.[63] Failure to comply with this Order will provide further basis for the Court to award appropriate monetary sanctions against Plaintiffs.

C. Conclusion

In summary, the Court:

(1) DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion to Vacate Order Re Price-Fixing and Bid-Rigging Claims;
(2) GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendant NSW's Motion for Summary Judgment Re Antitrust Claims;
(3) DENIES Defendant FWS' Motion for Summary Judgment;
(4) DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Re Commercial Bribery Against Defendants;

(5) DENIES Defendant NSW's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment against Plaintiffs' Claims Under 15 U.S.C. § 13(c) and Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17045;
(6) DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion Re Indemnity;

(7) DENIES Defendant NSW's Motion to Sever the Claims Against [*43] Defendant FWS;
(8) GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Richard Sexton's Opinion and Testimony based on payroll methodology,
(9) GRANTS Defendant NSW's Motion to Exclude Plaintiffs' Expert Victor Neuman's Fifth Opinion and Testimony Re his Survey; and

(10) DENIES Defendant NSW's Ex Parte Application for Leave to File Motion for Terminating Sanctions. However, on or before July 28, 2010, Plaintiffs shall comply with the discovery orders regarding the settlement agreements, namely, to deliver the documents to Defendants' counsel's office.

In light of this Order and prior dispositive orders, only the following causes of action remain for trial:

(1) First Cause of Action for Breach of Statutes in Restraint of Trade as to the UCSF Project;[64]
(2) Second Cause of Action for Breach of Statutes in Restraint of Trade as to the Davis Projects;
(3) Third Cause of Action for Breach of Statutes in Restraint of Trade as to Other Construction Projects;
(4) Fourth Cause of Action for Violation of the False Claims Act;
(5) Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteenth Causes of Action for Interference with Business Relationship; and
(6) Fifteenth Cause of Action for Injunctive Relief.

[64] Under the First, Second and Third antitrust causes of action, Plaintiffs may try their claims for attempted monopolization and exclusive dealing.

Plaintiffs [*44] may not rely on theories of price-fixing or bid-rigging arrangements to support any of their causes of action.

Finally, in light of this Order, the parties shall meet and confer, in preparation for the August 23, 2010 Final Pretrial Conference, and file a Joint List of pending Motions in Limine. The parties shall withdraw any current pending in limines that are moot in light of this Order. The Joint List shall set out each Motion, its related docket entry, and the ground(s) on which the Motion is based. The Joint List shall be filed on or before August 6, 2010.

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS IN PART AND DENYING IT IN PART

Defendants' [*2] motion to dismiss plaintiffs' fourth amended complaint came on for hearing on January 20, 2010 before this court. Plaintiffs Virgil A. Baker, Charles B. Lowery, Elizabete Lowery, Ellanore Largent, and David Largent ("plaintiffs"), appeared through their counsel, Michael A. Bowse. Defendants Residential Funding Company LLC ("RFC") and Countrywide Home Loans ("Countrywide"), appeared through their respective counsel, Jan T. Chilton and Robert Bader. Having read all the papers submitted and carefully considered the relevant legal authority, the court hereby GRANTS defendants' motion in part and DENIES it in part, for the reasons stated at the hearing, and as follows.

BACKGROUND

This is an action alleging common law fraud, and violations of California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL").

The complaint arises from defendants' alleged involvement in the issuance of what are known as Option Adjustable Rate Mortgage ("ARM") Loans. Plaintiffs Virgil A. Baker, Charles B. Lowery, Elizabete Lowery, Ellanore Largent, and David Largent (collectively "plaintiffs") all entered into Option Arm Loans with defendant Aegis Wholesale Corporation ("Aegis"), [1] which loans were subsequently sold to either defendant [*3] Residential Funding Company LLC ("RFC") or defendant Countrywide Home Loans ("Countrywide").

The terms of the mortgages that all plaintiffs entered into with Aegis are similar. Plaintiffs generally allege that these Option ARM loans worked as follows:

The loans were all notable for having initial low "teaser" rates (ranging from 1% to 3%). These rates were subject to a quick and early rate adjustment, as follows: initially, the loans offered the low teaser interest rate, which resulted in an initial minimum monthly payment that was low. However, the interest rate on the loan was pegged to a variable index that changed over time. After only one month, the teaser rate adjusted to a new indexed rate, which increased the rate substantially from the low initial teaser rate to a higher index-based rate, which was and continues to be calculated by adding a "margin" (for e.g., 3%) to an indexed figure.

Despite the almost immediate rise in the applicable interest rate, however, plaintiffs' minimum monthly payment remained the same as that initially disclosed to the buyer upon closing, because the [*4] loan terms permit only one annual increase to the minimum monthly payment. Thus, because the initial monthly payment was based on a teaser interest rate and did not rise with the actual interest rate that soon thereafter was charged, plaintiffs' mortgages began to accrue interest each month in an amount greater than the amount of plaintiffs' monthly payments. The remaining interest not paid down each month was then added to the balance of unpaid principal and itself began accumulating interest. Consequently, the principal balance of plaintiffs' loans increased, even as plaintiffs made/make the minimum monthly payment disclosed on the loan documents. This situation is known as negative amortization, the result of which is an ultimate reduction in the borrower's equity.

In addition, the loan terms imposed a "payment cap" on the amount of each annual increase to the minimum monthly payment, limiting that increase to 7.5% (i.e., usually a small fraction of the new higher interest rate that was immediately adjusted 30 days after the loan closing). However, the terms also provided that, if the loan's overall unpaid principal balance reaches 115% of its original value, the payment cap no longer [*5] applied and the remaining principal would be paid off in equal monthly payments over the remaining term of the loan (i.e., is fully amortized).

Based on these facts, plaintiffs allege that the Option ARM loans, as disclosed in the Option ARM mortgage notes ("ARM Notes") and the Truth in Lending Disclosure Statements ("TILDS") issued to plaintiffs at closing, failed to materially disclose: (a) that the low teaser rate set forth in the ARM Note was only available for thirty days, if at all; (b) that the monthly payment amounts for the first three to five years provided to plaintiffs in the TILDS were insufficient to pay both the accrued interest and principal on the loans; (c) that negative amortization was absolutely certain to occur if plaintiffs made payments according to the schedule of monthly payments provided in the TILDS; and (d) that loss of equity and/or loss of plaintiffs' residences was also certain to occur if plaintiffs made payments according to the schedule set forth in the TILDS. See generally Fourth Amended Complaint ("FAC"), P 1.

On October 17, 2008, plaintiff Baker filed the instant action in Contra Costa County Superior Court, on behalf of himself and a national putative [*6] class similarly situated. Plaintiff named Aegis as a defendant. After the filing of a first and second amended complaint, plaintiff filed a third amended complaint on September 25, 2009. The third amended complaint added the Lowerys and Largents as named plaintiffs, and furthermore added Countrywide and RFC as named defendants. The third amended complaint collectively alleged two causes of action against defendants: fraudulent omissions; and violations of the California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), codified at Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

[1] Aegis declared bankruptcy, and it was dismissed from the case on December 15, 2009 (Docket No. 22).

On November 5, 2009, defendants removed the action to federal court, asserting jurisdiction under the Class Action Fairness Act ("CAFA").

In December 2009, defendants moved to dismiss the third amended complaint. On February 22, 2010, after a hearing on the motion, the court granted defendants' motion to dismiss. Specifically, the court (1) dismissed the first claim for fraudulent omissions for failure to plead fraud with particularity pursuant to FRCP 9(b); and (2) dismissed the second claim under California's UCL for failure to plead fraud with particularity under 9(b) (to the extent based on fraud), and for failure to allege the provisions of [*7] the Federal Trade Commissions Act that were violated (to the extent a FTCA claim was pled). In addition, to the extent the UCL claim was predicated on violations of the Truth in Lending Act ("TILA"), that portion of the claim was dismissed with prejudice, since it was time-barred. See generally Order Granting Defendants' Motions to Dismiss ("Dismissal Order"). Plaintiffs were given leave to once again amend their pleading.

On March 12, 2010, plaintiffs duly filed the operative fourth amended complaint. The complaint continues to allege the same two claims against defendants, stated by way of four causes of action: (1) fraudulent omissions (Largent plaintiffs against Countrywide); (2) fraudulent omissions (Baker and Lowery plaintiffs against RFC); (3) UCL violations (Largent plaintiffs against Countrywide); and (4) UCL violations (Baker and Lowery plaintiffs against RFC). See generally FAC.

Defendants again move to dismiss the fourth amended complaint.

DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standard

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) tests for the legal sufficiency of the claims alleged in the complaint. Ileto v. Glock, Inc., 349 F.3d 1191, 1199-1200 (9th Cir. 2003). Review is limited to the contents [*8] of the complaint. Allarcom Pay Television, Ltd. v. Gen. Instrument Corp., 69 F.3d 381, 385 (9th Cir. 1995). To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a complaint generally must satisfy only the minimal notice pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8.

Rule 8(a)(2) requires only that the complaint include a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). Specific facts are unnecessary - the statement need only give the defendant "fair notice of the claim and the grounds upon which it rests. Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081 (citing Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). All allegations of material fact are taken as true. Id. at 94. However, a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief "requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (citations and quotations omitted). Rather, the allegations in the complaint "must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level. Id.

A motion to dismiss should be granted if the complaint [*9] does not proffer enough facts to state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. See id. at 558-59. "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged-but it has not show[n] that the pleader is entitled to relief. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

In addition, when resolving a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court may not generally consider materials outside the pleadings. Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001). There are several exceptions to this rule. The court may consider a matter that is properly the subject of judicial notice, such as matters of public record. Id. at 689; see also Mack v. South Bay Beer Distributors, Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 (9th Cir. 1986) (on a motion to dismiss, a court may properly look beyond the complaint to matters of public record and doing so does not convert a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to one for summary judgment). Additionally, the court may consider exhibits attached to the complaint, see Hal Roach Studios, Inc. V. Richard Feiner & Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n.19 (9th Cir. 1989), and documents [*10] referenced by the complaint and accepted by all parties as authentic. See Van Buskirk v. Cable News Network, Inc., 284 F.3d 977, 980 (9th Cir. 2002).

Finally, in actions alleging fraud, "the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Under Rule 9(b), the complaint must allege specific facts regarding the fraudulent activity, such as the time, date, place, and content of the alleged fraudulent representation, how or why the representation was false or misleading, and in some cases, the identity of the person engaged in the fraud. In re GlenFed Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1547-49 (9th Cir.1994).

B. Legal Analysis

The gravamen of plaintiffs' complaint is rooted in the disclosures contained in the ARM Note and the TILDS handed to plaintiffs at the closing of their loans with Aegis. Defendants' dismissal motion raises four issues for resolution: (1) whether the Largent plaintiffs' fraudulent omissions claim against Countrywide is time-barred; (2) whether TILA preempts plaintiffs' state law claims; (3) whether plaintiffs have adequately alleged their claim for fraudulent omissions; and (4) whether plaintiffs have adequately alleged [*11] their UCL claim.

As a preliminary matter, when ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court may consider the facts alleged in the complaint, documents attached to the complaint, documents relied upon but not attached to the complaint when authenticity is not contested, and matters of which the court takes judicial notice. See Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 705-706 (9th Cir.1988). Here, plaintiffs have attached each plaintiffs' ARM Note and TILDS as exhibits to the complaint, and all parties make reference to these documents in their arguments. Thus they may properly be considered by the court.

1. Whether the Largents' Claim Against Countrywide is Time-Barred

Defendants contend that the Largents' fraudulent omissions claim against Countrywide is time-barred. Plaintiffs, who acknowledge that a three year statute of limitations applies to the claim and would normally bar the Largents' claim (since the Largents' loan closed on February 8, 2006, and they filed their complaint on September 25, 2009), assert that equitable tolling is applicable to save the claim. Plaintiffs base this argument on the Ninth Circuit's recent decision in Hatfield v. Halifax, 564 F.3d 1177 (9th Cir. 2009); and Cal. Code of Civ. Proc. §§ 474 [*12] and 583.210(a).

Neither the former nor the latter are sufficient to toll the Largents' claim. By virtue of the former, plaintiffs seek to invoke what is known as the class tolling doctrine. The class tolling doctrine provides that the commencement of a class action stops the running of the statute of limitation as to all claims that might be asserted by all members of the class. See Am. Pipe & Constr. Co. v. Utah, 414 U.S. 538, 554, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713 (1974)("[T]he commencement of a class action suspends the applicable statute of limitations as to all asserted members of the class who would have been parties had the suit been permitted to continue as a class action."); see also Crown, Cork & Seal Co. v. Parker, 462 U.S. 345, 350, 103 S. Ct. 2392, 76 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1983); see also Tosti v. City of Los Angeles, 754 F.2d 1485 (9th Cir. 1985). Hatfield embraces this rule, and held that a plaintiff's individual claims against defendants were equitably tolled by the timely filing of her nearly identical class action against the same defendants filed earlier in New Jersey state court. See Hatfield, 564 F.3d at 1184-85 (noting that California law permits equitable tolling and also, that "California courts have permitted [*13] a plaintiff to take advantage of tolling based on the filing of a prior class action," even where the plaintiff was only a putative class member in the earlier action).

Here, plaintiffs invoke the class tolling rule by claiming that the filing of a prior unrelated class action - Velazquez v. GMAC Mortgage et al., pending and then voluntarily dismissed in the Central District of California - tolls the statute of limitations on the Largents' claim, since the Largents were members of the putative class in Velazquez. However, as defendants point out, this argument contains a major flaw: Countrywide was never a named defendant in the Velazquez action. And nothing in the foregoing cases suggests that equitable tolling should be applied to a plaintiff's subsequent claims based on the pendency of an earlier filed action that was never brought against the later defendant.

Nor does reliance on the latter of plaintiff's cited authorities - Cal. Code of Civ. Proc. §§ 474 and 583.210(a) - help plaintiffs. Section 474 allows plaintiffs to name DOE defendants in an action, and section 583.210(a) provides that the summons and complaint may be served upon a defendant within three years after an action [*14] against the defendant is commenced. Plaintiffs appear to suggest that Countrywide was still within the three year limitation to be served as a DOE defendant in the Velazquez action, and that this worked to preserve plaintiffs' ability to apply tolling to claims against Countrywide in the present action, even though Countrywide was not officially named previously.

While creative, this argument is ultimately unpersuasive. Plaintiffs present no controlling authority that stands for the proposition that a plaintiff's claim against a named defendant in a subsequent action may have equitable tolling principles applied, based on the argument that the defendant might have been timely named as a DOE defendant in the prior action.

In the absence of any applicable tolling doctrine, the Largents' claim against Countrywide is untimely. Thus, the Largents' fraudulent omissions claim against Countrywide is DISMISSED.

2. Whether TILA Preempts State Law Claims

Defendants assert that TILA preempts plaintiffs' fraudulent omissions and UCL claims, because these state law claims are primarily premised on alleged misrepresentations contained in the TILDS - a disclosure document mandated by TILA. Furthermore, [*15] to the extent plaintiffs seek to impose disclosure obligations on defendants that are not contained in the TILDS, these obligations are in addition to and inconsistent with TILA, and thus preempted on that basis, too. As a corollary argument, defendants also contend that because the disclosures in the TILDS necessarily complied with TILA's disclosure requirements, such compliance also generally provides a safe harbor from plaintiffs' state law challenges to the TILDS disclosures under the UCL or fraudulent omissions causes of action.

TILA preempts state law claims pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1610. However, the preemption provisions of TILA do not preempt state law unless the state law is actually inconsistent with TILA. See *Silvas v. E*Trade Mortg. Corp., 514 F.3d 1001, 1007 (9th Cir. 2008)*; see also *Yang v. Home Loan Funding, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21837, 2010 WL 670958, * 10 (E.D. Cal. 2010)*. Different courts in the northern district have come to differing conclusions as to whether claims alleging UCL violations or fraudulent omissions are inconsistent with TILA, thereby triggering preemption. See, e.g., Plascencia v. Lending 1st Mortg., 583 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1099 (N.D. Cal. 2008)(J. Wilken)(no TILA preemption [*16] of UCL claims because UCL "does not, on its face, relate to the disclosure of information in connection with credit transactions, let alone impose disclosure requirements that are different than TILA's in any way"); see also Amparan v. Plaza Home Mortg., Inc., 678 F. Supp. 2d 961, 976 (N.D. Cal. 2008)(J. Fogel)(same); cf. Kajitani v. Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 647 F. Supp. 2d 1208, 1220 (D. Haw. 2008)(plaintiffs' common law fraud claim preempted to the extent it alleged misrepresentations in the disclosure documents required under TILA); *Yang, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21837, 2010 WL 670958, * 10*.

The court agrees with the reasoning expressed in Plascencia and Amparan. On their face, neither plaintiffs' fraudulent omissions claim nor the UCL claim conflict with TILA's provisions regarding the disclosure of information in connection with credit transactions. Nor do plaintiffs allegations contend that defendants were in fact required to make disclosures that contradict TILA's requirements. And while defendants raise the argument that it is the imposition of possible additional disclosures that plaintiffs argue should have been made that engender an actual conflict with TILA, the court is unpersuaded. See also *Brooks v. ComUnity Lending, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67116, 2010 WL 2680265, 5 (N.D. Cal. 2010). [*17] Finally, plaintiffs' claims are distinct from those advanced in the cases relied on by defendants here, because they are premised on defendants' alleged violation of an independent common law duty to disclose material information - not TILA violations per se. See FAC, PP 72-77, 89-94, 111, 135. All of which compels the conclusion that no preemption results. [2]

Defendants' safe harbor arguments under TILA raise similar issues. The California Supreme Court has explained that conduct affirmatively authorized by another statute may provide a defendant with a safe harbor from UCL liability: "Although the unfair competition law's scope is sweeping, it is not unlimited…. When specific legislation provides a 'safe harbor,' [*18] plaintiffs may not use the general unfair competition law to assault that harbor." Cal-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999)(to forestall an action under the unfair competition law, another provision must actually 'bar' the action or clearly permit the conduct"). However, as the state supreme court noted, there must be an actual conflict between TILA and the conduct alleged under the UCL in order for the safe harbor provision to kick in.

Again, the court is not persuaded that TILA clearly conflicts at this juncture with the claims asserted by plaintiffs, including plaintiffs' UCL claim. Thus, the court is also not persuaded that defendants' apparent compliance with certain TILA disclosure requirements - as reflected by either the TILDS or the ARM Notes - automatically provides a safe harbor from plaintiffs' state law challenges to nature of defendants' disclosures contained therein.

3. Whether the Fraudulent Omissions Claim is Properly Alleged

To state a claim for fraudulent concealment, a plaintiff must allege (1) concealment or suppression of a material fact; (2) a duty to disclose; (3) intentional concealment with the intent to defraud; (4) actual, justifiable [*19] reliance; and (5) resulting damages. Blickman Turkus, LP v. MF Downtown Sunnyvale LLC, 162 Cal. App. 4th 858, 868, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 325 (2008)(citing Mktg. West, Inc. v. Sanyo Fisher (USA) Corp., 6 Cal. App. 4th 603, 612-13, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859 (1992)). Defendants here make several arguments against plaintiffs' ability to state a claim for fraudulent omissions against RFC, including: [3] that the loan documents clearly set forth the terms of plaintiffs' loans and even the omissions that plaintiffs now claim are actionable; that defendants had no duty to disclose; that defendants cannot be held liable on the basis of Aegis' failure to disclose; and that plaintiffs fail to plead facts necessary to support a plausible claim that RFC aided and abetted Aegis' alleged misconduct.

The gist of plaintiffs' allegations are: that the loan documents in question, which include the ARM Note and the TILDS, failed to disclose that the initial teaser [*20] rate would increase dramatically after a month; that the monthly payment amounts listed in the TILDS for the first three to five years were insufficient to pay both principal and interest; that negative amortization was certain to occur if plaintiffs made payments according to the payment schedule; that the loan terms disclosed to plaintiffs in the documents were all underwritten and dictated by defendants; and that defendants were in the business of purchasing and securitizing Option ARM loans and purchased plaintiffs' loans pursuant to longstanding mortgage loan purchase agreements between defendants and Aegis; and that defendants knew that the terms disclosed to plaintiffs in the loan documents did not paint the whole picture of plaintiffs' liability for payments under the disclosed payment schedule. See FAC, PP 19-26, 28, 34-35, 50, 54, 55-56, 72-77, 90-94.

On balance, these allegations are sufficient to withstand defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' claim against RFC. First, while defendants are correct that the loan documents expressly disclosed certain items which form a part of plaintiffs' claim - i.e., the loan interest rate, the fact that plaintiffs' minimum payment could [*21] be lower than the actual interest being charged on a monthly basis, and the options for different payment structures that would allow plaintiffs to pay amortized payments - defendants do not dispute that the loan documents do not disclose that the payment schedule set forth is based on the initial teaser rate, or that, because of the immediately adjustable interest rate, combined with the limited yearly adjustments to the monthly minimum payment, plaintiffs would necessarily be entering into negatively amortizing loans if they continued to pay the minimum monthly payment initially disclosed. And while plaintiffs may not ultimately be able to prove that defendants' purported omissions render defendants liable here, plaintiffs are nonetheless entitled to have all the information provided to them in connection with their Option ARM loans considered collectively, in assessing whether the disclosures were clear, conspicuous, and complete. See, e.g., *Brooks, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67116, 2010 WL 2680265 at * 7*.

[2] It should also be noted that, even if preemption were to result, TILA only preempts state claims based on required written information, i.e. on deficient or false TILDS. See, e.g., Kajitani, 647 F. Supp. 2d at 1220. Thus, to the extent that plaintiffs' claims for fraud and under the UCL are based on false or misleading oral representations, or false or misleading written representations contained in the ARM Note, such claims would not be preempted by TILA at any rate. See id.

[3] Defendants also target plaintiffs' ability to state a fraudulent omissions claim against Countrywide. However, since the Largents' claim against Countrywide is being dismissed as time-barred, the only fraudulent omissions claim that remains is asserted by the Baker and Lowery plaintiffs against RFC.

Second, the court agrees with plaintiffs that, for purposes of the present motion to dismiss, plaintiffs have adequately alleged a duty to disclose, premised on California common law doctrine regarding the duty [*22] to disclose all material facts, once partial disclosure of material facts is undertaken. See FAC, P 89.

Finally, defendants overlook the fact that plaintiffs have alleged that RFC (and Countrywide) were involved in a scheme by which they expressly underwrote and approved all loan terms provided in the documents handed to plaintiffs, and that RFC had a contract with Aegis whereby it had both the financial incentive and a contractual basis on which to use Aegis as its intermediary in providing loans to consumers. Plaintiffs also plead that RFC pre-approved the Option ARM Notes, that it knew that the loan documents disclosed low payments in the TILDS that were predicated on an interest rate which would not exist after the first thirty days, that RFC was in fact aware of the material omissions contained in the loan disclosure statements, and that RFC even provided a stream of funding to Aegis that enabled Aegis to originate the subject Option ARM Notes. See, e.g., FAC, PP 94-95. This is sufficient to adequately plead defendant's liability for fraudulent omissions, as part of a common course of conduct, together with Aegis. It is also sufficient at this juncture as a basis from which to [*23] reasonably and at least plausibly infer that RFC aided and abetted Aegis' misconduct. See In re First Alliance Mortg. Co., 471 F.3d 977, 993 (9th Cir. 2006)(recognizing California's rule that aider and abettor liability may be imposed on "one who aids and abets the commission of an intentional tort if the person knows the other's conduct constitutes a breach of a duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other to so act").

The court accordingly DENIES defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' fraudulent omissions claim against defendant RFC.

4. Whether UCL Claim is Properly Alleged

Finally, defendants target plaintiffs' ability to state a valid UCL claim under any of the three prongs available under the UCL: the unfair, unlawful, or fraudulent prongs. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 (to state a claim pursuant to § 17200, a plaintiff must allege that a defendant engaged in an "unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice" or in "unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising"). Because the statute is written in the disjunctive, it applies separately to business practices that are (1) unlawful, (2) unfair, or (3) fraudulent. See Pastoria v. Nationwide Ins., 112 Cal. App. 4th 1490, 1496, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 148 (2003).

The [*24] court finds that plaintiffs have adequately alleged a claim under the UCL, at least with respect to the unlawful and unfair prongs specifically. An act is "unlawful" under section 17200 if it violates an underlying state or federal statute or common law. See Cel-Tech. Commc'ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999); Chabner v. United Omaha Life Ins. Co., 225 F.3d 1042, 1048 (9th Cir. 2000)(the UCL also incorporates other laws and treats violations of those laws as unlawful business practices independently actionable under state law); Saunders v. Super. Ct., 27 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-39, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 (1994). Here, plaintiffs allege that defendants have violated the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45. See FAC, PP 119-20, 143-44. Under the FTC Act, a practice is unfair if it causes substantial injury; which injury is not outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and the injury is one that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided. See 15 U.S.C. § 45(n). The court finds that, for the reasons detailed above in connection with plaintiffs' fraudulent omissions claim, these allegations are sufficient to adequately plead "unfair" conduct [*25] under the FTC Act, and therefor, "unlawful" conduct under the UCL.

Turning to the "unfair" prong, an act has been defined as "unfair" under the UCL if the act "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 187. Notwithstanding this pronouncement, the law is unsettled as to what constitutes an unfair business practice in consumer cases, and California appellate courts have also noted that "unfairness" under the UCL should be judged by the same standard used by the Federal Trade Commission in 15 U.S.C. § 45(n). See Camacho v. Auto. Club of South. Cal., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1394, 1403, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 770 (2006); Davis v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 179 Cal. App. 4th 581, 584, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 697 (2009).

On balance, and taking the state courts' collective guidance into account, the court finds that plaintiffs have adequately alleged defendants' participation in an "unfair" practice, for the same reasons as those just identified in connection with the "unlawful" prong. As such, defendants' motion to dismiss on this ground must be denied.

Third, the court notes that with respect [*26] to the parties' remaining arguments regarding plaintiffs' ability to sufficiently plead "fraudulent" practices under the UCL, whether a practice is deceptive or fraudulent "cannot be mechanistically determined under the relatively rigid legal rules applicable to the sustaining or overruling of a demurrer." Schnall v. Hertz Corp., 78 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 1167, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 (2000). Rather, the determination is a question of fact, requiring consideration and weighing of evidence from both sides before it can be resolved. See Gregory v. Albertson's, Inc., 104 Cal. App. 4th 845, 857, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 (2002); Schnall, supra, at 1167. The court finds that plaintiffs' allegations are sufficient - for the reasons described herein in connection with the plaintiffs' various UCL and fraudulent omissions claims against defendants, and consistent with the heightened pleading requirements that apply to specific allegations of fraud - to defeat defendants' motion.

Finally, to the extent that plaintiffs' UCL claim is premised on the Largent plaintiffs' proof that Countrywide is liable for fraudulent omissions against these plaintiffs, this claim is barred for the reasons explained above in connection with the Largents' fraudulent omissions [*27] claim specifically.

C. Conclusion

For all the foregoing reasons, the court hereby GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss with prejudice, to the extent they argue that the Largent plaintiffs' fraudulent omissions claim against Countrywide is time-barred; and DENIES defendants' motion, with respect to the remaining plaintiffs' fraudulent omissions claim against RFC, and all plaintiffs' UCL claims against both RFC and Countrywide. A case management conference will be held on August 19, 2010, at 2:00 p.m.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c), a party may move for judgment on the pleadings after the pleadings are closed but early enough not to delay trial. A court reviews the motion by using the same standard that applies when reviewing a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under R. 12(b)(6). The court views the facts in the complaint in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and will grant the motion only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff cannot prove any facts that would support his claim for relief. But the court need not ignore facts set forth in the complaint that undermine the plaintiff's claim nor give weight to unsupported conclusions of law.

HN3[] Regulated Industries, Sports

The United States Soccer Federation (USSF) has the authority to govern amateur, though not necessarily professional, soccer in the United States. This authority over amateur sports derives from the Ted Stevens Olympic and Amateur Sports Act (ASA), 36 U.S.C.S. § 220501 et seq. Congress enacted the ASA in 1978 to create a vertical structure for the management of certain amateur sports in the United States and to rectify the factional nature of amateur sports organizations in the United States at that time. Congress placed the U.S. Olympic Committee (the USOC) at the head of this vertical structure as a coordinating body for amateur sports in which Americans compete internationally. Immediately below the USOC in the chain of command are National Governing Bodies (the NGBs) for each sport included in the Olympic Games or Pan-American Games. The USOC recognizes one, and only one, amateur sports organization to act as NGB for each sport. 36 U.S.C.S. § 220521(a)

The United States Soccer Federation (USSF) is the National Governing Body (NGB) for soccer in the United States. As such, the USSF establishes national goals for soccer, is the coordinating body for amateur soccer in the United States, and represents the United States in the international soccer federation known as the Federation Internationale de Football Association (FIFA). 36 U.S.C.S. § 220523(a). In its role as NGB, USSF sets standards for eligibility and exercises jurisdiction over amateur soccer activities in the United States and American soccer teams in the Olympic, Paralympic, and Pan-American Games.

The Ted Stevens Olympic and Amateur Sports Act (ASA) gives National Governing Bodies (NGBs) what has been called monolithic control over the amateur sports that they govern. This type of control would normally violate the antitrust laws. Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2. Congress may, however, explicitly exempt an organization from the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1291 exempts certain sports telecasts from antitrust laws. The ASA does not expressly state that NGBs have such an exemption in the governing of amateur sports, but courts have consistently found that Congress implicitly exempted NGBs, in the oversight of amateur sports, from the antitrust laws.

Unjust enrichment is a quasi-contract theory that allows a court to infer the existence of a contract where none exists in order to prevent unjust results. To state a claim for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant retained a benefit to the plaintiff's detriment, and that the retention of that benefit violates fundamental principles of justice, equity, and good conscience. HN21[] Coercion & Duress, Economic Duress

It is difficult for a party to claim that its will was overborne by economic duress when it has had time for inquiry, examination, and reflection.

[*964] MEMORANDUM OPINION [2] AND ORDER

Before the Court are Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) by Defendants United States Soccer Federation (the "USSF") and Major League Soccer ("MLS"). For the reasons stated below, the motions are granted in part and denied in part.

Also before the Court are USSF's Request for Judicial Notice and its Motion entitled "Objections and Request to Strike Portions of Plaintiff's Declaration." For the reasons stated below, the Request for Judicial Notice is granted. The motion "Objections and Request to Strike Portions of Plaintiff's Declaration" is denied.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff ChampionsWorld, LLC is a now-defunct business entity which, from 2001 to 2005, sponsored professional, first-division soccer exhibitions in the United States involving international teams. Although ChampionsWorld filed for bankruptcy and ceased operations in 2005, its reorganization plan provides for the commencement and prosecution of this lawsuit as its only remaining material asset, to be liquidated and distributed among its creditors.

Defendant United States Soccer Federation ("USSF") is the National Governing Body for amateur soccer in the United States. Defendant [3] Major League Soccer ("MLS") is a first-division professional soccer league in the United States.

At the heart of the controversy is the question of whether the USSF has the [*965] authority to oversee professional, as well as amateur, soccer in the United States. The USSF claims that it has this power. ChampionsWorld argues that USSF improperly arrogated this power to itself and used it to unreasonably restrain trade and to extract over $ 3 million in arbitrary and "back-breaking" fees from ChampionsWorld and to cause it many millions more in damages, substantially contributing to ChampionsWorld's demise.

ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF's actions were part of an anticompetitive scheme to create a window of exclusivity for MLS by preventing other soccer entities or leagues from applying for first-division status in the United States. ChampionsWorld claims that USSF saw ChampionsWorld as a competitor to MLS because ChampionsWorld's matches between 2003 and 2005 had triple the attendance of MLS's matches. ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF organized MLS and underwrote its operations with $ 5 million in seed money, which was never repaid. ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF and MLS have significant [4] overlapping officers and board members and that the two entities have a "historically close and anticompetitive association."

Plaintiff's claims against Defendants sound in antitrust (Counts 1 through 3), the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") (Counts 4 and 5), and contract (Counts 6 through 10). Defendants move for judgment on the pleadings on all counts.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c), a party may move for judgment on the pleadings "[a]fter the pleadings are closed -- but early enough not to delay trial." A court reviews the motion by using the same standard that applies when reviewing a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). Buchanan-Moore v.

County of Milwaukee, 570 F.3d 824, 827 (7th Cir. 2009). The Court views the facts in the complaint in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and will grant the motion "only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff cannot prove any facts that would support his claim for relief." Id. But the Court need not ignore facts set forth in the complaint that undermine the plaintiff's claim nor give weight to unsupported conclusions of law. Id

III. DISCUSSION

A. [5] Judicial Notice

As a preliminary matter, USSF asks the Court to take judicial notice of certain public documents, such as excerpts of the Olympic Charter; statutes and regulations of the Federation Internationale de Football Association ("FIFA"); Constitution and Bylaws of the U.S. Olympic Committee ("USOC"); and a decision by the Bureau of the Players' Status Committee of FIFA. HN2[] Because these are public documents whose accuracy is easily verifiable and not subject to reasonable dispute, the request is granted. See, FED. R. EVID. 201(b); Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin v. Thompson, 161 F.3d 449, 456 (7th Cir. 1998).

Also, before the Court are USSF's objections and motion to strike portions of the declaration and exhibits attached to ChampionsWorld's brief in opposition to USSF's motion on the pleadings. USSF's objections and motion do not appear to have been properly noticed under Local Rule 5.3(b) and are therefore denied. The Court notes, however, that none of the materials that USSF has asked to strike had any bearing on the decision the Court issues today.

[*966] B. United States Soccer Federation's Authority to Govern Professional Soccer in the United States

Because the issue of USSF's [6] authority, or lack thereof, to govern professional soccer in the United States, is central to most of the claims and defenses in this case, the Court will address this issue before dealing with the motions for judgment on the pleadings on ChampionsWorld's separate claims.

1. Olympic and Amateur Sports Act

It is undisputed that HN3[] USSF has the authority to govern amateur, though not necessarily professional, soccer in the United States. This authority over amateur sports derives from the Ted Stevens Olympic and Amateur Sports Act, 36 U.S.C. §§ 220501 et seq. (the "ASA"). Congress enacted the ASA in 1978 to create a vertical structure for the management of certain amateur sports in the United States and to "rectify the factional nature of amateur sports organizations in this country at that time." Behagen v. Amateur Basketball Ass'n, 884 F.2d 524, 527 (10th Cir. 1988). Congress placed the U.S. Olympic Committee (the "USOC") at the head of this vertical structure as a coordinating body for amateur sports in which Americans compete internationally. Eleven Line, Inc. v. N. Tex. State Soccer Ass'n, Inc., 213 F.3d 198, 203 (5th Cir. 2000). Immediately below the USOC in the chain of command are [7] National Governing Bodies (the "NGBs") for each sport included in the Olympic Games or Pan-American Games. Id. The USOC recognizes one, and only one, amateur sports organization to act as NGB for each sport. 36 U.S.C. § 220521(a); Behagen, 884 F.2d at 528.

HN4[] USSF is the NGB for soccer in the United States. As such, the USSF establishes national goals for soccer, is the coordinating body for amateur soccer in the United States, and represents the United States in the international soccer federation known as the "Federation Internationale de Football Association" ("FIFA"). See, 36 U.S.C. § 220523(a). USSF has been a member of FIFA since 1913. In its role as NGB, USSF sets standards for eligibility and exercises jurisdiction over amateur soccer activities in the United States and American soccer teams in the Olympic, Paralympic, and Pan-American Games. See id.

In 1998, the ASA was amended to reflect changes in the conduct of Olympic events. HN5[] The statute was revised to prohibit NGBs from having "eligibility criteria related to amateur status or to participation in the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, or the Pan-American Games that are more restrictive than those of the appropriate international [8] sports federation." 36 U.S.C. § 220522(a)(14). Senator Ted Stevens, for whom the act is named, said, "The addition of the word 'Olympic' to the popularly used title 'Amateur Sports Act' is meant to take into account the participation of professional and quasi-amateur athletes in some of the sports of the Olympic Games and Pan-American Games, but at the same time continue to reflect the unique role the USOC and national governing bodies have in the national framework of truly amateur sports activities." 144 Cong. Rec. S5434-02, 1998 WL 259708, at *S5450.

HN6[] The ASA gives NGBs what has been called "monolithic control" over the amateur sports that they govern. Behagen, 884 F.2d at 529. This type of control would normally violate the antitrust laws. See, Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. Congress may, however, explicitly exempt an organization from the antitrust laws. See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. § 1291 (exempting certain sports telecasts from antitrust laws). The ASA does not expressly state that NGBs have such an exemption in the governing [*967] of amateur sports, but courts have consistently found that Congress implicitly exempted NGBs, in the oversight of amateur sports, from the antitrust laws. See, [9] Behagen, 884 F.2d at 529-30; Eleven Line, 213 F.3d at 203-04; JES Properties, Inc. v. USA Equestrian, Inc., 458 F.3d 1224, 1230-31 (11th Cir. 2006).

2. Defining "Amateur" and "Professional"

USSF claims, however, that it also has monolithic control over professional soccer in the United States. USSF argues that it derives this power from, surprisingly, the very same ASA that gives it power over amateur sports. At first glance, this argument seems counterintuitive, as the ASA (known as the "Olympic and Amateur Sports Act") repeatedly uses the word "amateur" to qualify such terms as "athlete," "competition," and "sports organization." See, e.g., 36 U.S.C. § 220501(b). The entire statute is, in fact, peppered with the word "amateur," while the word "professional" hardly, if ever, appears. See, e.g., 36 U.S.C. §§ 220523 and 220524 (defining authority and duties of NGBs).

USSF argues that "amateur" is a term of art and must not be read in its ordinary sense. Cf. Behagen, 884 F.2d at 526 n.1. USSF reaches the conclusion that it has authority over professional U.S. Soccer through the following line of reasoning:

(1) The International Olympic Committee ("IOC") rules provide that the international [10] federation for each sport has responsibility for determining eligibility requirements for its sport in the Olympic games.
(2) FIFA, the international federation for soccer, has allowed paid professionals to participate in Olympic soccer teams since 1984.

(3) Under the ASA, an "amateur athlete" is one who meets the eligibility standards of his or her sport's NGB. 36 U.S.C. § 220501(b)(1).
(4) As the NGB for soccer in the U.S., USSF must establish the eligibility criteria for amateur athletes.

(5) But USSF may not maintain eligibility standards more restrictive than FIFA's. See, 36 U.S.C. § 220522(a)(14).
(6) Since FIFA permits paid professional players to participate in the Olympics and related competitions, so must USSF.
(7) Since paid professional soccer players are eligible to participate in the Olympics, paid professional soccer players are amateur athletes under the ASA.

The Court cannot accept USSF's reasoning in the last step. Just because FIFA allows professionals to play in the Olympics, it does not necessarily follow that all professional soccer players are now "amateur" players for all purposes; nor that USSF has authority over all professional soccer players and, by extension, [11] all professional soccer matches because they are now "amateur" events.

If USSF's reasoning were correct, then it would also follow that because the Federation Internationale de Basketball Amateur ("FIBA"), the international association for amateur basketball, allows professional players in the Olympics, then the Amateur Basketball Association of the United States of America ("ABA/USA"), the NGB for amateur basketball in the United States, would have monolithic control over all professional basketball in the United States, including the National Basketball Association. It is extremely difficult to conclude from a reading of the plain text of the ASA or its legislative history that Congress intended such a result.

[*968] Indeed, the legislative summary of the amended Section 220522(a)(14) explains that this provision "would prohibit NGBs from having eligibility criteria that [are] more restrictive than its international sports federation for participation in events at the Olympic Games, Paralympic Games, and Pan-American Games." 144 Cong. Rec. S5434-02, 1998 WL 259708, at *S5451. Congress's intent in revising the ASA therefore appears to be to make a limited exception for the Olympics and related [12] competitions (i.e., Pan-American Games, Paralympics) that would recognize the entry of professional players into these events and still allow the USOC and its NGBs to maintain control over this narrow class of competitions.

Moreover, FIFA does not classify all professional soccer players as amateurs, so there is no requirement, even under FIFA's rules, for USSF to do so. FIFA's rules provide that a "professional" is "a player who has a written contract with a club and is paid more for his footballing activity than the expenses he effectively incurs. All other players are considered to be amateurs." FIFA's Regulations on the Status and Transfer of Players, § 2, art. 2. USSF's rules define a "professional player" as "a person who receives or has received payment for playing or who signs a professional form of this Federation. . . . An amateur player is any person other than a professional player." USSF Policy Manual, § 601-1. Thus, both FIFA and USSF define amateurs and professionals as separate, mutually exclusive categories.

USSF argues that these definitions are irrelevant because all that matters is how Congress defined "amateur," not how USSF and FIFA define it. But HN7[] where Congress [13] defines "amateur athlete" as an athlete who meets the NGB's eligibility standards, § 220501(b)(1), and insists that the NGB's standards may not be more restrictive than those of its international federation, § 220522(a)(14), USSF's and FIFA's definitions are highly relevant. USSF claims that the cited definitions are inapplicable because they relate to athlete registration requirements, not eligibility standards. Yet USSF cites no FIFA or USSF rule that provides "eligibility standards" that are different from the above definitions, except to say that FIFA and USSF allow professionals to participate in the Olympics.

3. USSF's Authority Under FIFA Rules

But USSF has still another argument. USSF claims that FIFA requires all games played in the U.S. by foreign teams to be approved by USSF. USSF argues, therefore, that it is legally obligated to exercise authority over professional soccer matches or risk discipline or expulsion from FIFA, which could result in the exclusion of U.S. teams from the Olympics and other international events. For this reason, USSF claims implied immunity from the antitrust laws regarding its oversight of professional soccer. See, Behagen, 884 F.2d at 529-30 (holding [14] NGB's seemingly anticompetitive conduct regarding amateur basketball exempt from antitrust laws because it was necessary to implement clear intent of Congress).

In support of its argument, USSF cites the recent arbitration decision by the FIFA Players' Status Committee regarding this controversy, which finds that

(1) FIFA's statutes give USSF authority to sanction professional soccer matches in the United States;

(2) Under this authority, USSF has the right to charge sanctioning fees and require the posting of a bond securing those fees; and

(3) USSF has the right to notify FIFA in the event that a FIFA-licensed match agent refuses to pay a sanctioning [*969] fee or post a performance bond.

The exercise of the above-named rights would arguably constitute unreasonable restraints of trade under the Sherman Act. See, Silver v. N.Y. Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 359-60, 83 S. Ct. 1246, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389 (1963) (holding HN8[] antitrust laws serve to protect freedom to compete unhindered by group actions of others), which is why USSF claims the antitrust exemption. But the FIFA arbitration rulings are of limited help to USSF because the Court of Arbitration for Sport ("CAS") has held that the FIFA Players' Status Committee "may consider disputes [15] only to the extent that they implicate FIFA's statutes and regulations." Stillitano v. USSF & FIFA, CAS 2009/A/1812, at 10.9. Indeed, it is clear that HN9[] FIFA has no power to grant USSF an exemption, either express or implied, from the antitrust laws. Only Congress may do this. Similarly, FIFA does not have, or claim to have, authority to interpret acts of Congress. Furthermore, it seems far-fetched to believe that FIFA would discipline USSF for obeying the antitrust laws of the United States.

4. Antitrust Exemption

USSF argues that, in enacting the ASA, Congress gave great deference to the Olympic movement as it already existed and expected international federations ("IFs") and NGBs to behave much as they were already doing. "Congress was not only aware," argues USSF, "but expected that the NGBs appointed under the Act would be subject to the rules and regulations of their respective IFs, and yet Congress chose not to limit or interfere with those obligations." Thus, argues USSF, Congress can be assumed to have approved USSF's authority over professional soccer, absent an express statement to the contrary.

This is turning the presumption upside down. HN10[] Antitrust exemptions are the exception, [16] not the rule. Surely, Congress expected NGBs generally to follow the rules of their international federations. But that does not mean that Congress intended for IFs to be able to unilaterally authorize their NGBs to violate the antitrust laws of the United States without Congressional approval of any kind. Furthermore, USSF offers no reason why Congress would have known of (and therefore tacitly approved) USSF's practice of sanctioning professional soccer matches at the time it passed or amended the ASA. It seems unlikely that this practice could have been apparent to Congress when it is only this year, after a lengthy arbitration process, that FIFA has clarified that it condones such a practice.

The fundamental issue before the Court is whether the ASA has so clearly granted monolithic control to NGBs over their respective professional sports that the ASA acts as an implied repealer of the antitrust laws, thereby exempting NGBs from liability under those laws. Cf. Silver, 373 U.S. at 347. HN11[] It is, however, "a cardinal principle of construction that repeals by implication are not favored." Id. at 357. Repeal by implication will be found only to the extent that there is a "plain repugnancy" [17] between the ASA and the antitrust laws; therefore, repeal by implication will be found only as necessary to make the ASA work, and even then only to the minimum extent necessary. See, Gordon v. N.Y. Stock Exchange, Inc., 422 U.S. 659, 682-83, 95 S. Ct. 2598, 45 L. Ed. 2d 463 (1975).

The Court finds that repeal by implication is necessary to make the ASA work only to the extent that it applies to amateur sports and to the Olympics and related events. To the extent that the Olympics allow professional athletes to participate, the ASA cannot work unless its antitrust exemption is extended to the [*970] NGBs' authority over those athletes, but only as it pertains to their participation in the Olympics and related events. To say that the ASA authorizes an NGB to exercise authority over the whole of a sport's professional activities is to read far more into the statute than its text and history can bear.

USSF does not cite any court decision that has held that an NGB has authority to govern an entire professional sport. In fact, it is well established that HN12[] baseball is the only professional sport that is exempt from antitrust laws and that "[o]ther professional sports operating interstate . . . are not so exempt." Flood v. Kuhn, 407 U.S. 258, 282-83, 92 S. Ct. 2099, 32 L. Ed. 2d 728 (1972). [18] The Supreme Court has expressed its view that the cases that led to baseball's exemption were an "aberration." Id. at 282. See also, American Needle, Inc. v. National Football League, 130 S.Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010) (applying antitrust law to National Football League). It would seem unwise for this Court or any other to establish a new aberration.

The Court therefore holds that, as a matter of law, HN13[] the ASA does not give USSF authority to govern professional soccer in the United States, except to the extent necessary for USSF to govern the participation of professional players in the Olympics and related events. USSF is not entitled to an exemption from the antitrust laws regarding professional soccer, except to the extent necessary for USSF to oversee Olympic and related events. USSF has no clear mandate from Congress to govern the whole of professional soccer in the U.S.

C. ChampionsWorld's Antitrust Claims (Counts 1 through 3)

In Counts 1 through 3 of its Complaint, ChampionsWorld makes claims against USSF and MLS for (1) vertical conspiracy to restrain competition under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, (2) conspiracy to monopolize under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and (3) attempt to monopolize, [19] also under Section 2.

ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF and MLS conspired together to damage ChampionsWorld's ability to compete by charging excessive sanctioning fees and requiring unreasonable performance bonds, all under color of an authority to govern professional soccer that USSF did not possess. ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF and MLS conspired to bring ChampionsWorld down in order to enhance MLS's position as the premier professional soccer league in the United States. The Court finds that these allegations sufficiently state causes of action under the Sherman Act for conspiracy to restrain trade (§ 1) and conspiracy and attempt to monopolize (§ 2). USSF, of course, counters that it had the authority to impose its fees and bonds based on its power under the ASA and its antitrust exemption. The Court has rejected this argument, as explained above. The Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings regarding Counts 1 through 3 are therefore denied.

D. ChampionsWorld's RICO Claims (Counts 4 and 5)

1. Count 4

MLS, but not USSF, is named as a Defendant in Count 4, which alleges RICO violations under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). ChampionsWorld alleges that under RICO, MLS is the "person" that used the [20] "enterprise" of USSF to engage in racketeering activities. See, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961(3) and 1961(4). ChampionsWorld alleges that since about 1993, MLS has exerted control over USSF and sought to perpetuate the [*971] false premise that USSF has legal authority to govern U.S. professional soccer.

MLS officials allegedly drafted the USSF policy of charging sanctioning fees and performance bonds of MLS's competitors, such as ChampionsWorld. ChampionsWorld alleges that MLS committed extortion under the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951, obtaining money from ChampionsWorld on at least two dozen occasions by the wrongful use of fear through economic threats and the color of official right. See, Evans v. United States, 504 U.S. 255, 261, 112 S. Ct. 1881, 119 L. Ed. 2d 57 (1992) (holding that Congress has expanded common-law definition of extortion to include acts by private individuals). ChampionsWorld also alleges mail and wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343. The Complaint specifies numerous instances of extortionate acts by USSF, too numerous to repeat in detail, allegedly done at the behest of MLS, which used interstate communications to wring money from ChampionsWorld, all based on USSF's purported power to govern professional [21] soccer.

USSF allegedly threatened, for example, to report ChampionsWorld to FIFA as a "promoter in bad standing," thereby damaging ChampionsWorld's standing in the international soccer community, if ChampionsWorld declined to pay its sanctioning fees. ChampionsWorld's allegations state the identity of persons falsely misrepresenting USSF's authority and, in many cases, the time, place, and content of the misrepresentation, and the method by which the misrepresentation was communicated to ChampionsWorld. See, Sears v. Likens, 912 F.2d 889, 893 (7th Cir. 1990).

MLS objects on the grounds that the alleged acts of wrongdoing emanated from USSF, not MLS. MLS also argues that the acts of mail and wire fraud are not pled with the specificity required by Rule 9(b). But ChampionsWorld alleges that certain fraudulent actions that emanated from USSF's office bore the signatures of MLS personnel who expressly signed in such capacities. Sunil Gulati, President of USSF and a board member of both USSF and MLS, was the alleged architect of USSF's sanctioning fee policy. ChampionsWorld specifically names at least five overlapping board members or officers of USSF and MLS who are alleged to have been [22] operating USSF for MLS's benefit by using USSF sanctioning fees to drive MLS's competitors out of business.

The Court finds that ChampionsWorld has sufficiently alleged a pattern of racketeering activities by MLS for Count 4 to survive a motion to dismiss under Rules 12(c) and 9(b). The cases that MLS cites to support its Rule 9(b) argument involve far less detailed allegations than ChampionsWorld provides. See, *Photofile, Inc. v. Graphicomp Sys., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13177, 1993 WL 375769, 4 (N.D. Ill. 1993); DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1248-49 (2d Cir. 1987). Furthermore, MLS's argument that ChampionsWorld has suggested no rational motive for MLS's alleged racketeering activities does not stand up. Surely, the demise of a business competitor would be beneficial to MLS. The Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings regarding Count 4 is denied.

2. Count 5

In Count 5, ChampionsWorld sets forth an alternative RICO claim that USSF and MLS and "DOES 1 through 10" (as-yet-unknown defendants) formed an "association-in-fact" and operated as a single unit to carry out the extortionate and fraudulent scheme described in Count 4, using their managers and employees. Under this theory, the association-in-fact [23] was the "person" and the employees were the "enterprise" used to carry out the pattern of racketeering activities on ChampionsWorld and other victims. ChampionsWorld alleges, plausibly, that if not restrained [*972] by this Court, Defendants will continue this pattern of extortionate and fraudulent behavior against other competitors.

USSF argues that this claim fails because ChampionsWorld has not pled sufficient facts to establish the existence of an association-in-fact or a pattern of racketeering activity. The Court has already found in its analysis of Count 4 that ChampionsWorld has sufficiently pled a pattern of racketeering activity.

As to whether ChampionsWorld has pled an association-in-fact, HN14[] an "enterprise" includes "any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4). ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF and MLS had legitimate purposes of promoting soccer in the U.S., but that the two had an additional, nefarious purpose to monopolize all professional U.S. soccer matches. ChampionsWorld alleges that the two organizations had a common purpose, with overlapping officers and an organizational structure that provided for continuity with differentiated [24] roles between the two entities. USSF allegedly founded MLS with $ 5 million in seed money, which MLS never paid back. DOES 1 through 10 allegedly dictated USSF's sanctioning fees with the purpose of harming MLS's competitors. These allegations sufficiently plead an "association-in-fact." The Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings regarding Count 5 is denied.

E. ChampionsWorld's Contract Claims (Counts 6 through 10)

1. Fraudulent Inducement Against USSF Only (Count 6)

ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF induced ChampionsWorld to pay unreasonable fees by falsely stating that USSF had the authority to govern U.S. professional soccer. ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF knew this claim was false and intended for ChampionsWorld to rely on it, that ChampionsWorld reasonably relied on the claim, and that this reliance proximately caused monetary loss to ChampionsWorld. This sufficiently states a claim under Illinois law. See, Dloogatch v. Brincat, 396 Ill. App. 3d 842, 920 N.E.2d 1161, 1166, 336 Ill. Dec. 571 (Ill. App. Ct. 2009).

2. Unjust Enrichment against USSF and MLS (Count 7)

HN15[] Unjust enrichment is a "quasi-contract" theory that allows a court to infer the existence of a contract where none exists in order to prevent unjust results. To state [25] a claim for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must allege "that the defendant retained a benefit to the plaintiff's detriment, and that the retention of that benefit violates fundamental principles of justice, equity, and good conscience." Wooley v. Jackson Hewitt, Inc., 540 F.Supp.2d 964, 978 (N.D. Ill. 2008). When the parties' relationship is governed by a valid contract, a plaintiff may not bring a claim of unjust enrichment unless the claim falls outside the contract or the plaintiff challenges the validity of the contract. Id.

ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF and MLS were unjustly enriched by the fees illegally imposed on it by USSF. Because ChampionsWorld also challenges the validity of the contracts under which these fees were imposed, it may plead unjust enrichment. Its claim is sufficiently pled against USSF.

MLS argues that there can be no claim of unjust enrichment against MLS because USSF alone is alleged to have received the fees. But ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF's sanctioning fee scheme also allowed MLS to demand fees from ChampionsWorld when the two groups put on doubleheader soccer matches. For example, in July 2003, USSF allegedly gave ChampionsWorld a [*973] discount for [26] sponsoring a doubleheader match with MLS. ChampionsWorld was then compelled to pay a $ 50,000 fee to MLS on the basis that MLS had conferred a benefit on ChampionsWorld by deigning to be a co-sponsor. This sufficiently states an unjust enrichment claim against MLS.

3. Restitution for Invalidity of Contracts Due to Lack of Consideration Against USSF Only (Count 8)

ChampionsWorld alleges that, in exchange for the sanctioning fees it paid to USSF, it received no goods or services of any kind -- nothing except USSF's promise to sanction ChampionsWorld's events. Since USSF had no authority to sanction professional events, that promise was illusory. Therefore, argues ChampionsWorld, the contracts were invalid due to lack of consideration.

HN16[] An illusory promise is one that, on closer examination, reveals that the promisor has not promised to do anything. An illusory promise is not sufficient consideration to support a contract. W.E. Erickson Const., Inc. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., 266 Ill. App. 3d 905, 641 N.E.2d 861, 864, 204 Ill. Dec. 431 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994). ChampionsWorld has therefore sufficiently stated a claim for restitution based on lack of consideration.

4. Restitution for Unconscionability of Contracts (Count 9) and for Unenforceability [27] Due to Economic Duress (Count 10) Against USSF Only

a. Timeliness (Counts 9 and 10)

USSF argues that ChampionsWorld may not seek restitution because (1) this action usually calls for rescission of the contract and (2) a party who seeks rescission due to unconscionability or duress must do so promptly. See, McBaldwin Fin. Co. v. DiMaggio, Rosario & Veraja, LLC, 364 Ill. App. 3d 6, 845 N.E.2d 22, 33, 300 Ill. Dec. 601 (Ill. App. Ct. 2006); *P.S. & E. West, Inc. v. Essex Group, Inc., 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6725, 1987 WL 14609, 7 (N.D. Ill. 1987).

HN17[] Whether a rescission is timely, depends on the facts of the case. Brandt v. Phipps, 398 Ill. 296, 75 N.E.2d 757, 767 (Ill. 1947). ChampionsWorld's pleadings state that it paid the exorbitant fees demanded by USSF from 2001 to 2004, then found out around fall 2004 that USSF did not have the authority to charge sanctioning fees. ChampionsWorld prepared to commence a lawsuit at that time seeking injunctive relief, but its financial situation had deteriorated to the point that it was unable to do so. ChampionsWorld filed for bankruptcy in January 2005 and ceased operations in May 2005. In March 2006, the Bankruptcy Court confirmed the plan under which this lawsuit was authorized. The Complaint was filed May 2, 2006. These circumstances [28] raise an issue for the trier of fact as to whether ChampionsWorld's restitution claims are timely. See id. (finding five year delay reasonable under facts of the case).

It could be argued that if ChampionsWorld had consulted an attorney regarding USSF's authority in 2001, it would have discovered USSF's fraud at that time and demanded rescission then. ChampionsWorld argues that it reasonably believed USSF's claims of authority. Whether its belief was reasonable and any delay therefore excusable is, in this case, a question for the trier of fact. The reasonableness of ChampionsWorld's reliance will depend on the precise facts giving rise to the reliance. See, Rest. 2d Torts § 545 (misrepresentation of law). Therefore, the restitution claims will not be dismissed for untimeliness.

b. Unconscionability (Count 9)

HN18[] Under Illinois law, a finding of unconscionablilty may be based on either procedural or substantive unconscionability or a combination of the two. *Kinkel v. [974] Cingular Wireless LLC, 223 Ill. 2d 1, 857 N.E.2d 250, 263, 306 Ill. Dec. 157 (Ill. 2006). "Procedural unconscionability consists of some impropriety during the process of forming the contract depriving a party of a meaningful choice." Id. at 264. Here, where [29] USSF is alleged to have misrepresented its authority over professional soccer and used its artificially enhanced bargaining power to compel ChampionsWorld to pay exorbitant fees, Plaintiff has sufficiently stated a claim for procedural unconscionability. See, *Levey v. CitiMortgage, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70210, 2009 WL 2475222, 4 (N.D. Ill. 2009) (finding procedural unconscionability could turn on acts of bad faith such as misrepresentation).

HN19[] The issue of substantive unconscionability concerns whether the terms themselves are commercially reasonable. Frank's Maint. & Eng'g, Inc v. C.A. Roberts Co., 86 Ill. App. 3d 980, 408 N.E.2d 403, 410, 42 Ill. Dec. 25 (Ill. App. Ct. 1980). ChampionsWorld alleges that USSF charged sanctioning fees between 9% and 20% of ChampionsWorld's gross (not net) receipts. ChampionsWorld alleges that FIFA, for example, charges at most a 2% sanctioning fee, while some European federations charge a nominal fee or none at all. ChampionsWorld alleges that the exorbitant fees largely contributed to its demise. This is adequate to state a claim for substantive unconscionability. USSF's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings for Count 9 is denied.

c. Economic Duress (Count 10)

HN20[] Economic duress is not generally treated as a cause [30] of action in tort, but rather as a defense to the enforceability of a contract or a basis for restitution or rescission. Lawless v. Central Prod. Credit Ass'n, 228 Ill. App. 3d 500, 592 N.E.2d 1210, 1217, 170 Ill. Dec. 530 (Ill. App. Ct. 1992). Here, ChampionsWorld pleads economic duress as a basis for restitution. "Economic duress occurs where undue or unjust advantage has been taken of a person's economic necessity or distress to coerce him into making the agreement." Rubin v. Laser, 301 Ill. App. 3d 60, 703 N.E.2d 453, 459, 234 Ill. Dec. 592 (Ill. App. Ct. 1998). There is no economic duress unless the defendant applies wrongful or unlawful pressure. Hurd v. Wildman, Harrold, Allen & Dixon, 303 Ill. App. 3d 84, 707 N.E.2d 609, 614, 236 Ill. Dec. 482 (Ill. App. Ct. 1999).

ChampionsWorld alleges that, even if USSF does have the authority to sanction professional U.S. soccer events, USSF took oppressive and undue advantage of its authority from the very beginning in negotiating sanctioning fees with ChampionsWorld. But HN21[] it is difficult for a party to claim that its will was overborne by economic duress when it has had time for "inquiry, examination, and reflection." J.D. Alexander v. Standard Oil Co., 97 Ill. App. 3d 809, 423 N.E.2d 578, 583, 53 Ill. Dec. 194 (Ill. App. Ct. 1981). ChampionsWorld alleges that it contracted with USSF from 2001 [31] to 2004 to put on soccer matches under USSF's auspices. Thus, ChampionsWorld was in a position from the beginning to reject USSF's terms and do business elsewhere. This is inconsistent with the idea that ChampionsWorld was in economic distress and that USSF took advantage of it. ChampionsWorld's allegations are insufficient to support its economic duress claim. USSF's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings as to Count 10 is granted.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, the Court rules as follows:

1. The United States Soccer Federation's and Major League Soccer's Motions for Judgment on the pleadings are denied as to Counts 1 through 9 of the Complaint.

[*975] 2. USSF's Motion to Dismiss Count 10 is granted; Count 10 is dismissed without prejudice.

3. The Court holds that, as a matter of law, the Olympic and Amateur Sports Act, 36 U.S.C. §§ 220501 et seq., does not give the United States Soccer Federation authority to govern professional soccer in the United States, except to the extent necessary for USSF to govern the participation of professional players in the Olympic Games and related events, such as Paralympics and Pan-American Games. USSF is not entitled to an exemption from the antitrust [32] laws regarding professional soccer, except to the extent necessary for USSF to oversee Olympic and related events.

4. USSF's Motion for Judicial Notice is granted.

5. USSF's Motion to Strike certain portions of ChampionsWorld's declaration and exhibits accompanying its brief is denied.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DECISION and ORDER

Plaintiffs commenced the instant action against Defendants claiming that they conspired amongst themselves to depress the wages of registered nurses in the Albany area in violation of antitrust laws. Presently before the Court is Defendant Ellis Hospital's ("Ellis") Renewed [*4] Motion for Summary Judgment.

I. FACTS

Plaintiffs are registered nurses ("RNs") who allege Defendant Hospitals entered into at least two restraints of trade in violation of the Sherman Act during the class period of June 20, 2002 through June 20, 2006. Count I alleges that Defendants engaged in a continuing conspiracy in restraint of trade to depress the compensation of RNs employed at hospitals in the Albany area. Count II alleges that Defendants have engaged in a continuing agreement to regularly exchange detailed and non-public information about compensation being paid or to be paid to their RN employees, which not only facilitated the enforcement of the wage suppression conspiracy but unreasonably restrained competition on RN compensation in its own right. Plaintiffs maintain that the alleged conspiracy had the effect of depressing compensation for hospital RNs in the Albany-Schenectady-Troy metropolitan area despite a nursing shortage.

In a Decision and Order dated July 28, 2008, the Court certified a class of registered nurses with respect to two issues: "whether there has been a violation of antitrust law and whether there has been injury to the class that the Sherman Act was designed [*5] to prevent." *Fleischman v. Albany Medical Center, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57188, 2008 WL 2945993, at 7 (N.D.N.Y. July 28, 2008). Following merits discovery, Plaintiffs moved the Court to amend the prior certification order to additionally certify the issues of impact and damages as to a narrower class of registered nurses. The Court denied Plaintiff's motion.

The following facts are undisputed. Ellis is a not-for-profit hospital located in Schenectady, New York. Ellis is the only defendant in this case whose nurses are represented by a labor union. Specifically, the New York State Nurses Association (NYSNA) has represented the Registered Nurses and Assistant Instructors employed by Ellis for the past forty years. Ellis and NYSNA have negotiated and entered into three collective bargaining agreements (CBAs) which cover the entire class period at issue. [1] These CBAs result from negotiations between Ellis and the NYSNA, during which Ellis and NYSNA exchanged a series of proposals and counter proposals regarding RN wages. The class period CBAs include Ellis's and NYSNA's agreements on all aspects of RN compensation for registered nurses at Ellis who are part of the bargaining unit represented by NYSNA.

It is similarly undisputed that Ellis participated in information exchanges with the other Defendants during the class period and collected RN wage data from the other Defendants. The parties dispute the extent and purpose of these exchanges and the role the collected data played in Ellis negotiations.

The parties also dispute the confidentiality of Ellis's CBAs. The parties agree that: (1) the Class Period CBAs were printed by NYSNA and distributed to hundreds of Ellis RN bargaining unit members; (2) no restrictions were placed on the RN's use or further dissemination of these agreements; and (3) RNs were not asked to return the agreements if they left employment with Ellis. Plaintiffs maintain that the NYSNA considered the CBAs to be confidential. They contend that the NYSNA "[g]enerally, . . . has not and does not, provide copies of its CBAs [to] Ellis management or nurses at other hospitals" and "[w]hile NYSNA provides the Department of [*7] Labor a copy of its contracts at the agency's request, it asks that the DOL keep the CBAs confidential." Furthermore, Plaintiffs argue that because no other hospital produced a copy of the CBAs during the course of litigation, the other Defendants did not possess the CBAs. Ellis, on the other hand, contends that the CBAs "between itself and NYSNA constitute non-confidential, publicly available information." They point to the fact that "[i]n some instances, local news outlets publicly reported the agreed-upon wage increases in the CBAs just days after ratification." Interestingly, however, Ellis attorneys designated the 2002, 2004, and 2006 CBAs as "highly confidential" under the Court's protective order. [2]

Presently before the Court is Ellis's "renewed motion for summary judgment based on its unique status [*8] as the lone defendant in this action whose [RNs] are unionized" and the nonstatutory labor exemption. See Mem. of Law in Support of Def. Ellis Hospital's Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment. "On December 11, 2006, this Court denied a motion for summary judgment by Ellis Hospital that was based on the same nonstatutory labor exemption to the antitrust laws that Ellis raises in its 'renewed' motion." See Plaintiffs' Mem. in Opp. to Def. Ellis Hospital's Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment.

In Ellis's renewed motion for summary judgment, it argues that: (1) "the undisputed evidence shows that the wage rates for Ellis RNs during the class period were established exclusively through federally-mandated collective bargaining between Ellis and the [NYSNA] and that these agreed upon wage rates are therefore shielded from plaintiff's antitrust attack by the nonstatutory labor exemption;" and (2) "because the wage rates contained in the collective bargaining agreements between itself and NYSNA constitute non-confidential, publicly available information, it did not violate the Sherman Act by occasionally sharing such information with other hospitals." See Mem. of Law in Support of Def. Ellis Hospital's [*9] Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment. Ellis argues that "[f]or these reasons, . . . it is entitled to summary judgment as against plaintiffs' claims that it violated the Sherman Act by '(i) allegedly participating in a conspiracy to depress the compensation of registered nurses in the Albany-Schenectady-Troy Metropolitan Statistical Area; and (ii) allegedly participating in a continuing agreement to exchange detailed and non-public RN compensation information that reduced compensation and depressed RN compensation.'"

[1] The CBA agreements [*6] at issue ("Class Period CBAs") are: (1) the "2002 CBA" covering March 1, 2002 through February 29, 2004; (2) the "2004 CBA" covering March 1, 2004 through February 29, 2006; and (3) the "2006 CBA" covering March 1, 2006 through February 28, 2010.

[2] Under the terms of the protective order, for a party to designate a document "confidential," it must have a good faith belief that the document "reflects or discloses its confidential or proprietary information." To designate something "highly confidential," the producing party must believe that the document contains "extremely sensitive confidential and/or proprietary information."

Plaintiffs oppose this motion, arguing that: (1) the nonstatutory labor exception does not protect Ellis from "anti-competitive activity . . . engaged in outside of and separate from the collective bargaining process with the nurses' union;" and (2) "aside from the challenged exchanges with other hospitals' human resource personnel, the CBAs and the included wage information were not shared with other hospitals' managements, competing unions, or nurses at other hospitals."

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), is warranted if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, [*10] if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." The party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden of showing, through the production of admissible evidence, that no genuine issue of material fact exists. Major League Baseball Properties, Inc. v. Salvino, 542 F.3d 290, 309 (2d Cir. 2008). Only after the moving party has met this burden is the non-moving party required to produce evidence demonstrating that genuine issues of material fact exist. Salahuddin v. Goord, 467 F.3d 263, 272-73 (2d Cir. 2006). The nonmoving party must do more than "rest upon the mere allegations … of the [plaintiff's] pleading" or "simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) ("When a motion for summary judgment is made [by a defendant] and supported as provided in this rule, the [plaintiff] may not rest upon the mere allegations ? of the [plaintiff's] pleading …."). Rather, "[a] dispute regarding [*11] a material fact is genuine if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." *Ross v. McGinnis, 00-CV-0275, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57188, 2004 WL 1125177, at 8 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 29, 2004) [internal quotations omitted] [emphasis added]. It must be apparent that no rational finder of fact could find in favor of the non-moving party for a court to grant a motion for summary judgment. Gallo v. Prudential Residential Servs., 22 F.3d 1219, 1223-24 (2d Cir. 1994); Graham v. Lewinski, 848 F.2d 342, 344 (2d Cir. 1988). In determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, the Court must resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences against the moving party. Schwapp v. Town of Avon, 118 F.3d 106, 110 (2d Cir. 1997) [citation omitted]; Thompson v. Gjivoje, 896 F.2d 716, 720 (2d Cir. 1990) [citation omitted].

III. DISCUSSION

Ellis argues that it is entitled to summary judgment because: (1) the nonstatutory labor exemption shields it from Plaintiffs' antitrust attack; and (2) occasionally exchanging non-confidential, publically available information with other hospitals does not violate the Sherman Act. The Court will address these claims seriatim.

*1. Whether the [12] Non-Statutory Labor Exemption Applies

Ellis argues that "the undisputed evidence shows that the wage rates for Ellis RNs during the class period were established exclusively through federally-mandated collective bargaining between Ellis and the New York State Nurses Association (NYSNA) and that these agreed-upon wage rates are therefore shielded from Plaintiffs' antitrust attack by the nonstatutory labor exemption." See Docket No. 348. Plaintiffs counter that the non-statutory exemption does not apply because they do not challenge Ellis' collective bargaining activities or agreements with NYSNA and challenge only Ellis' conspiracies with other, non-unionized hospitals. See Plaintiffs' Mem. in Opp. to Def. Ellis Hospital's Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment, at 12 ("Plaintiffs claim only that Ellis violated the antitrust laws by conspiring with other hospitals to suppress wages and share wage data outside of any collective bargaining relationship."). [*13] Ellis responds that by claiming the Ellis RNs have been underpaid as a result of alleged collusion between Ellis and other hospitals, Plaintiffs are in effect challenging the CBAs or the bargaining relationship between Ellis and the NYSNA.

"The non-statutory exemption has been inferred 'from federal labor statutes, which set forth a national labor policy favoring free and private collective bargaining; which require good-faith bargaining over wages, hours, and working conditions; and which delegate related rule making and interpretive authority to the National Labor Relations Board.'" Clarett v. National Football League, 369 F.3d 124, 130 (2d Cir. 2004) (quoting Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 518 U.S. 231, 236, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 135 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1996)). "The purpose of the nonstatutory exemption is to "reconcile [the] conflicting national policies [inherent in the labor and antitrust laws] - one protecting business competition, the other encouraging collective bargaining." Local 210, Laborers' International Union of North America v. Labor Relations Division Associated General Contractors of America, N.Y.S. Chapter, Inc., 844 F.2d 69, 79 (2d Cir. 1987).

In Local 201 the Second Circuit stated:

> [a]greements between a union [*14] and an employer are exempt from antitrust scrutiny if they are so intimately related to wages, hours and working conditions that the union's successful attempt to obtain the provisions through bona fide arm's length bargaining in pursuant of their own labor union policies, and not at the behest of or in combination with nonlabor groups, falls within the protection of the national labor policy and therefore is exempt from the Sherman Act.

Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79 (quoting Local Union No. 189, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, AFL-CIO v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 689-90, 85 S. Ct. 1596, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1965). The Second Circuit went on to articulate a two part test to determine whether the nonstatutory exemption applies:

> First, the agreement at issue must further goals that are protected by national labor law and that are within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining. Second, the agreement must not impose a "direct restraint on the business market [that] has substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions [that results from collective bargaining [*15] agreements].

Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79-80 (2d Cir. 1987) (internal citations omitted).

In the bench decision denying Ellis's original summary judgment motion this Court engaged in extensive discussion of the relevant case law and found that although "there is little doubt that the collective bargaining agreements between Ellis and the nurse's union fall within the scope of the nonstatutory antitrust exemption". . . "Ellis cannot use its collective bargaining agreement with the nurse's union to insulate any anticompetitive activity it may have engaged in outside of, and separate from, the collective bargaining process with the nurse's union." In sum, the Court stated that because "the Complaint alleges conduct that goes beyond the collective bargaining process between Ellis and the nurses' union," and "there is no evidence before the Court that sharing non-public compensation information with other hospitals was part of the give and take of a negotiation process" necessary to the collective-bargaining process, "it cannot be said that Ellis's activity falls within the nonstatutory labor exemption." As an example of behavior that would not be protected by the exemption, the Court explained [*16] that Ellis could have "negotiated its wages with the union and then engaged in compensation sharing with other hospitals to ensure that those other hospitals kept their wages down."

In a factually analogous case, *Reed v. Advocate Health Care, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22816, 2007 WL 967932, at * 2 (N.D.Ill. March 28, 2007)*, the defendant hospital maintained that "because the wages it pays its RNs are the result of a collective bargaining agreement ("CBA"), the nonstatutory exemption makes the labor laws exclusive and antitrust-related determinations 'inappropriate.'" The plaintiffs responded that "because they do not challenge [defendants'] collective bargaining activities or agreements with the [labor union] but rather certain agreements and collusion among [defendant] and various non-unionized hospitals, the nonstatutory exemption is inapplicable." *2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22816, [WL] at 3. The Court in Reed held that the nonstatutory labor exemption does not apply, and that no authorities cited "stand for the proposition that an employer is immune from suit under the antitrust laws merely because it happens to be a party to a CBA, particularly a CBA to which none of its alleged co-conspirator employers is a party." Id. The Court in Reed extensively [*17] quoted and concurred with the analysis of this Court's bench decision in which this Court denied Ellis' original motion for summary judgement.

Ellis's renewed motion for summary judgment again argues that because its wage rates were established exclusively through collective bargaining, they are shielded from anti-trust attack. This argument ignores the previous decision by the Court which holds that any alleged anticompetitive agreements with non-unionized hospitals to depress RN wages are not protected by the nonstatutory exemption. The fact that it is undisputed that "wage rates for Ellis RNs during the class period were established exclusively through federally mandated collective bargaining between Ellis and the [NYSNA]" does not shield Ellis from liability for these alleged anticompetitive agreements.

In this case, Ellis explains in its memorandum in support of summary judgment that it collected "some RN wage data from local hospitals" in preparation for negotiations "as part of its effort to stay ahead of the market." Plaintiffs dispute the purpose of these exchanges arguing that the evidence shows that "despite a severe, ongoing shortage of nurses in the market that caused both [*18] high nurse vacancies and high agency costs, Ellis had an agreement to exchange, and did exchange, detailed, nonpublic nurse wage information with its competitors in blatant violation of Department of Justice antitrust guidelines, leading to softened competition in the market and markedly suppressed wages." The nature and purpose of the information exchanges are questions of fact which the Court will not address on summary judgment. Thus, the nonstatutory antitrust exemption does not shield Ellis from liability.

2. Whether Ellis Hospital Violated the Sherman Act

Ellis maintains that "because the wage rates contained in the collective bargaining agreements between itself and NYSNA constitute non-confidential, publicly available information, it did not violate the Sherman Act by occasionally sharing some information with other hospitals." See Docket No. 348. The parties dispute the confidentiality of the CBAs. Plaintiffs argue that the CBAs, although distributed to the nurses in the bargaining unit, "contained nonpublic compensation information." Plaintiffs cite to the fact that no other hospital had a copy of the Ellis CBA as evidence that they were not public information. They also point [*19] out that Defendants requested that papers be filed under seal as "highly confidential." Ellis maintains that because the CBAs were distributed to all nurses in the bargaining unit and did not have to be returned if a nurse were to leave employment at Ellis hospital, the CBAs cannot be classified as confidential. In support of its argument, Ellis attaches the deposition of NYSNA Labor relations representative Strominger. See Strominger Dep., 69:1-10 (Defendants' Exhibit M).

> Q: Is there anything in those four collective bargaining agreements that are in front of you that the union considered confidential information?
> Mr. Tillou: Objection to the form of the question. Broad.
> A: Any, we know that anything in these documents is distributed to bargaining unit members, employer representatives, so - -
> Q: So its not confidential?
> A: No.

Thus, whether or not the CBAs at issue are confidential is a question of fact properly left to the finder of fact and not to be decided on summary judgment.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons Defendant Ellis Hospital's Renewed Motion for Summary Judgment is DENIED.

ORDER

Before this Court is Plaintiff Trailer Bridge, Inc.'s Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Re Illinois National Insurance Company's Duty to Defend (Doc. 11, filed December 15, 2009); Defendant Illinois National Insurance Company's Motion for Summary Judgment and Response in Opposition to Plaintiff Trailer Bridge's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (Doc. 21, filed January 25, 2010); and Plaintiff Trailer Bridge, Inc.'s Opposition to Defendant Illinois [*2] National Insurance Company's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 25, filed February 4, 2010).

I. Statement of Facts [1]

Plaintiff, Trailer Bridge, Inc. ("Trailer Bridge"), is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Jacksonville, Florida. Trailer Bridge offers integrated freight shipping services between the continental United States and Puerto Rico. At issue in this case is whether its insurer, Illinois National Insurance Company ("Illinois National"), has a duty to defend or indemnify Trailer Bridge in a separate action.

Illinois National issued Commercial General Liability Policy No. TGL 989-58-40 ("the Policy") to Trailer Bridge for the policy period July 1, 2004, to July 1, 2005. (Doc. 1-1, Exhibit 1, filed November 19, 2009). Subject to certain conditions, Illinois National agreed to pay any damages Trailer Bridge became legally obligated to pay because of "personal and advertising injury," and defend against any suit seeking those damages. Id. at 12. "Personal and advertising injury" is defined [*3] by the Policy as:

> injury . . . arising out of one or more of the following offenses:
> a. False arrest, detention or imprisonment;
> b. Malicious prosecution;
> c. The wrongful eviction from, wrongful entry into, or invasion of the right of private occupancy of a room, dwelling or premises that a person occupies, committed by or on behalf of its owner, landlord or lessor;
> d. Oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that slanders or libels a person or organization or disparages a person's or organization's goods, products or services;
> e. Oral or written publication, in any manner, of material that violates a person's right of privacy;
> f. The use of another's advertising idea in your "advertisement"; or > g. Infringing upon another's copyright, trade dress or slogan in your "advertisement"[.]

Id. at 21.

In 2008, various entities filed class action lawsuits against Trailer Bridge and other parties in different U.S. district courts. The actions shared factual questions relating to allegations that Trailer Bridge and others conspired to fix prices of cabotage services to and from Puerto Rico, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. On August 13, 2008, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict [*4] Litigation consolidated and transferred those cases, along with all related future actions, to the United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico for pre-trial administration. The underlying consolidated action is captioned In Re Puerto Rican Cabotage Antitrust Litigation, 571 F. Supp. 2d 1378 ("Antitrust Litigation").

On April 29, 2008, through May 7, 2008, Trailer Bridge provided Illinois National with copies of the initial class action complaints and requested that the company provide a defense to the suits. By letter dated August 19, 2008, Illinois National notified Trailer Bridge that the actions did not implicate coverage under the Policy. However, on May 18, 2009, Trailer Bridge retendered the individual complaints and the consolidated second amended complaint. After reviewing the pleadings, Illinois National again found that no coverage existed under the Policy. Thereafter, Illinois National also denied a defense to the Antitrust Litigation upon receipt of the consolidated third and fourth amended complaints.

On November 19, 2009, Trailer Bridge filed its Complaint in this Court for breach of contract and declaratory judgment. (Doc. 1). The two-count [*5] Complaint asserts that the complaint filed in the Antitrust Litigation alleges a personal and advertising injury offense, and thus, Illinois National 1) owes Trailer Bridge a duty to defend, and 2) breached the insurance contract by failing to provide a defense.

[1] This Court's use of the word "facts" is solely for purposes of deciding the Motions before it. Kelly v. Curtis, 21 F.3d 1544, 1546 (11th Cir. 1994) (citation omitted).

Trailer Bridge moved for summary judgment on the specific issue of whether Illinois National owes a duty to defend in the Antitrust Litigation. Illinois National submitted its memorandum in opposition and its cross motion for summary judgment on the issues of whether it owes Trailer Bridge a duty to defend and whether it has an obligation to indemnify.

a. Standard of Review

Summary judgment is proper if, following discovery, the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, affidavits, and admissions on file show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact in dispute and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986); Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. Further, when the essential facts of the case are not in dispute, it is appropriate for a district court to interpret an insurance contract to determine whether any ambiguities exist as a matter of [*6] law. Gulf Tampa Drydock Co. v. Great Atl. Ins. Co., 757 F.2d 1172, 1174 (11th Cir. 1985).

b. Choice of Law and Contract Construction

This case is before this Court on diversity jurisdiction. In diversity actions, the federal court must apply the substantive law of the state in which it sits, "except in matters governed by the Federal Constitution or by act of Congress." Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78, 58 S. Ct. 817, 82 L. Ed. 1188 (1938). Because the insurance contract was issued in Florida and the questions before this Court are ones of contract construction, it is undisputed that Florida law governs the meaning of the Policy and its application to the facts of this case. In the absence of precedents from Florida's courts, however, the case law of other jurisdictions that have examined similar policy provisions may be considered to determine the issues of state law as this Court believes the Florida Supreme Court would. State Farm Fire and Cas. Co. v. Steinberg, 393 F.3d 1226, 1231 (11th Cir. 2004).

"In insurance coverage cases under Florida law, courts look at the insurance policy as a whole and give every provision its 'full meaning and operative effect.'" State Farm Fire and Cas. Co., 393 F.3d at 1230 (quoting [*7] Hyman v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 304 F.3d 1179, 1186 (11th Cir. 2002)). "[I]nsurance contracts are construed according to their plain meaning. Ambiguities are construed against the insurer and in favor of coverage." Taurus Holdings, Inc. v. U.S. Fidelity and Guar. Co., 913 So.2d 528, 532 (Fla. 2005). "Although ambiguous provisions are construed in favor of coverage, to allow for such a construction the provision must actually be ambiguous." Id. Courts are not permitted to "rewrite contracts, add meaning that is not present, or otherwise reach results contrary to the intentions of the parties." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

c. Duty to Defend

In Florida, "the general rule is that an insurance company's duty to defend an insured is determined solely from the allegations in the complaint against the insured, not by the true facts of the cause of action against the insured, the insured's version of the facts or the insured's defenses." State Farm Fire and Cas. Co., 393 F.3d at 1230 (citing Amerisure Ins. Co. v. Gold Coast Marine Distribs., Inc., 771 So.2d 579, 580-81 (Fla. 4th DCA 2000)). The insurer must provide a defense in the underlying action if the complaint states [*8] facts that bring the injury within the policy's coverage. Id. "If the complaint alleges facts partially within and partially outside the scope of coverage, the insurer is obligated to defend the entire suit." Lazzara Oil Co. v. Columbia Cas. Co., 683 F. Supp. 777, 779 (M.D. Fla. 1988). The merits of the underlying suit have no bearing on whether the duty is owed. State Farm Fire and Cas. Co., 393 F.3d at 1230. "Furthermore, any doubt about the duty to defend must be resolved in favor of the insured. Coverage is determined from examining the most recent amended pleading, not the original pleading." Id. (citation omitted).

The parties agree that no material facts are in dispute. Illinois National's duty to defend depends entirely on interpretation of the Policy and its application to the allegations of the underlying complaint. Since these issues are matters of law, this question is appropriate for summary judgment.

The parties filed a Joint Notice to Court (Doc. 43, filed June 2, 2010) representing that Trailer Bridge was dismissed with prejudice from the Antitrust Litigation on April 30, 2010. Thus, the Fourth Amended Class Action Complaint

(Doc. S-1, filed May 12, 2010) ("Antitrust [*9] Complaint") is the most recent pleading in which Trailer Bridge is named as a party. The Antitrust Complaint alleges violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 3. [2] It claims the underlying defendants restricted competition through a continuing agreement to allocate customers, rig bids, and fix rates, surcharges, and other fees. (Doc. S-1 at 59-61). The Antitrust Complaint further alleges the underlying defendants attempted to conceal their scheme, in part, by making false and misleading public statements about the reasons for rate and surcharge increases. Id. at 54-57. As an example, it points to a portion of an interview given by Trailer Bridge's CEO in 2005. Id. at 56. He is quoted as stating "that customer decisions were driven by '[p]rice in an all-inclusive sense, which starts with the freight rate[.]'" Id.

The plaintiffs in the Antitrust Litigation took these statements to imply the underlying "Defendants could not rig bids or set and increase rates, surcharges or fees, and therefore were not doing so[.]" Id. They allegedly "lulled [the underlying] Plaintiffs and members of the class into believing that the price increases were the normal result of competitive market forces rather than the product of [the underlying] Defendants' anti-competitive efforts." Id.

Trailer Bridge argues that the above allegations against it "potentially evidence 'use of another's advertising idea in [its] advertisement' so as to fall within the potential coverage for offense section" of the Policy. (Doc. 11 at 2). It claims an implication of market driven pricing constitutes an advertising idea, id. at 13, and the Antitrust Complaint indicates the idea was already used by its co-defendants in the underlying action, thus making it an idea of another's. Id. at 10. [3]

i. Advertising Injury

Illinois National takes issue with Trailer Bridge's interpretation of the Policy. According to Illinois National, the Antitrust Complaint does not allege wrongful acts were committed in Trailer Bridge's "advertisement," or that Trailer Bridge used "another's advertising idea." Because the Antitrust Complaint fails to contain allegations comprising an advertising injury offense, it argues coverage is not implicated under the Policy.

The Policy states Illinois National has a duty to defend against any cases seeking damages because of personal and advertising injury. (Doc. 1-1, Exhibit 1, at 12). "Personal and advertising injury" is defined as injury arising out of specific, enumerated offenses, including "[t]he use of another's advertising idea in your 'advertisement[.]'" Id. at 21. The Policy defines "advertisement" as "a notice that is broadcast or published to the general public or specific market segments about your goods, products or services [*12] for the purpose of attracting customers or supporters." Id. at 19.

The disputed quotation derives from an article published by The Wall Street Transcript ("Periodical"). (Doc. 1-1, Exhibit 5, filed November 19, 2009). The article, based on an interview of Trailer Bridge's past CEO, covers multiple topics, ranging from what types of assets the company owns and descriptions of its services, to the CEO's general outlook on the relevant market. While it could conceivably lead to additional customers or supporters for Trailer Bridge, that in no way appears to be the article's purpose. Its purpose, instead, seems to be purely informational. The Periodical questioned the CEO so that it could provide a summary of the company and market to its readership. No representation is made that Trailer Bridge paid the Periodical to publish the article or directed its content in any way. Including quotes from Trailer Bridge's CEO, which happen to be beneficial to the company, does not transform the article into an advertisement of the company's. Notwithstanding, even if the Antitrust Complaint identified a relevant advertisement, it still fails to allege facts showing use of "another's advertising idea."

[2] This Court notes that sections of the Antitrust Complaint, which is currently filed under seal, are quoted within this Order. See Order (Doc. 40, signed April 22, 2010). All material discussed or quoted, however, is substantially similar to the allegations contained in the complaint filed in the public record. See Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint [*10] (Doc. 1-2, Exhibit 4, filed November 19, 2009).

[3] Trailer Bridge argues that multiple Policy exclusions, including the exclusion for injury arising out of criminal acts, do not apply in this case. Id. at 19-25; see Doc. 1-1, Exhibit 1, at 13. Illinois [*11] National fails to oppose the arguments, and merely claims that this Court need not consider their applicability at this time. (Doc. 21 at 31). Thus, for the purposes of this Motion, Illinois National has conceded the issue.

The [*13] Policy does not define "advertising idea." Yet, the Eleventh Circuit, applying Florida law, has construed the term to mean "any idea or concept related to the promotion of a product to the public." Hyman v. Nationwide Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 304 F.3d 1179, 1188 (11th Cir. 2002). Put another way, "[a]n advertising idea is a concept about the manner a product is promoted to the public." *Gemini Ins. Co. v. The Andy Boyd Co., Civil Action No. H-05-1861, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28394, 2006 WL 1195639, at 2 (S.D. Tex. May 3, 2006) (citing Hyman, 304 F.3d at 1188).

It is merely asserted that Trailer Bridge made misleading statements about the reasons for increased prices, specifically, representing "that customer decisions were driven by '[p]rice in an all-inclusive sense, which starts with the freight rate.'" (Doc. S-1 at 56). No effort was made to differentiate or promote any aspect of Trailer Bridge's products or services. Instead, the statement provided a brief explanation of the factors affecting price in the entire Puerto Rican cabotage market. Cf. American Simmental Ass'n v. Coregis Ins. Co., 282 F.3d 582, 587 (8th Cir. 2002) ("The plain and ordinary meaning of 'advertising idea' generally encompasses an idea for calling [*14] public attention to a product or business, especially by proclaiming desirable qualities so as to increase sales or patronage." (internal quotation marks omitted)); *Proxima Corp. v. Federal Ins. Co., 26 F.3d 132, at 1 [published in full-text format at 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 14843] (9th Cir. 1994) (unpublished table decision) (holding that the shape of a product was not an advertising idea because there was no allegation in the complaint "that the design itself [was] a trademark, or [was] intended to distinguish the product from others that might enter the market." (citation omitted)). Regardless of whether the statement lulled customers into believing rates were controlled by the free market, its purpose does not appear related to promoting Trailer Bridge's product.

Even assuming, however, the explanation amounted to an advertising idea, the Antitrust Complaint fails to allege it belonged to another. Under the Policy, the advertising idea used must be "another's" to meet the definition of the claimed offense. (Doc. 1-1, Exhibit 1, at 21). According to Trailer Bridge, the Antitrust Complaint implies the idea was used by its co-conspirators prior to the date of the CEO's interview. (Doc. 11 at 10; Doc. 25 at 9). It argues this, paired with the pleading's [*15] failure to allege or imply Trailer Bridge created the idea, "raise[s] the unavoidable inference that the subject 'advertising idea' originated with an entity other than Trailer Bridge." (Doc. 25 at 9).

Trailer Bridge asks this Court to infer too much. "[C]ourts need not stretch the allegations beyond reason to impose a duty on the insurer." Holloway Sportswear, Inc. v. Transp. Ins. Co., 58 F. App'x 172, 175 (6th Cir. 2003). Contrary to Trailer Bridge's argument, the broad assertion, "[f]rom 2002 through April 2008, Defendants . . . affirmatively and wrongfully concealed their unlawful conduct" through "misrepresentations . . . concerning the reasons for increases in rates, surcharges and other fees[,]" does not imply another individual originated or used the purported advertising idea prior to Trailer Bridge. (Doc. S-1 at 54-55; see Doc. 25 at 9).

As an alternative argument, Trailer Bridge contends that airlines routinely cite fuel surcharges as an explanation for the increase in their prices, which establishes it was another's idea. (Doc. 11 at 10). Notwithstanding, courts must look to the underlying complaint to determine the duty to defend, not the true facts of the cause of action [*16] against the insured or the insured's version of the facts. State Farm Fire and Cas. Co., 393 F.3d at 1230. Just as there is no mention of the purported advertising idea belonging to a co-conspirator, nowhere in the Antitrust Complaint is it implied that the idea was ever used by or belonged to an airline. The Antitrust Complaint simply fails to allege an advertising idea belonged in any way to another entity.

Having determined the Antitrust Complaint does not contain allegations supporting a qualifying offense, there can be no advertising injury arising therefrom. This alone is enough to relieve Illinois National of a duty to defend Trailer Bridge under the asserted Policy section. Nevertheless, for the sake of completeness, this Court will address Illinois National's additional arguments.

ii. Causation

Illinois National contends that even if the Court were to find the Antitrust Complaint contained allegations of an advertising injury, no causal connection lies between the damages sought by the underlying plaintiffs and an advertising injury. (Doc. 21 at 8, 27). "It was the inflated costs of [the underlying] defendants' cabotage services, and not the 'cover-up' or explanation for the [*17] surcharge, which gave rise to the underlying plaintiffs' damages." Id. at 8.

According to Trailer Bridge, though, "[i]t is of no moment that the asserted Ocean Shipping Antitrust Litigation claims alleged violations of antitrust law." (Doc. 11 at 7). All that is required is the Antitrust Complaint plead some injury arose out of the "use of another's advertising idea" offense. Id. at 16. This Court must construe the Policy language liberally in favor of the insured and strictly against the insurer. Id. at 8. To limit coverage to the situations described by Illinois National would be to rewrite the contract. Id.

The rule that an insurance policy should be interpreted liberally in favor of the insured applies only when there is more than one reasonable interpretation. See State Farm Fire and Cas. Co., 393 F.3d at 1230; Taurus Holdings, Inc., 913 So.2d at 532. The Policy specifically states Illinois National must provide a defense only to cases seeking sums that the insured would become legally obligated to pay as damages "because of" personal and advertising injury. (Doc. 1-1, Exhibit 1, at 12).

The Antitrust Complaint asserts the underlying defendants, > restrict[ed] competition by allocating [*18] customers, rigging bids, and fixing the prices of rates, surcharges and other fees for Puerto Rican cabotage . . . . Defendants' unlawful conduct resulted in artificially high, supra-competitive prices charged by Defendants and their co-conspirators to Plaintiffs . . . . Plaintiffs and members of the class seek to recover three times their overcharge damages plus interest, attorneys' fees and costs of litigation.

(Doc. S-1 at 60-61). Thus, it is apparent the underlying plaintiffs allege their injuries were caused by higher prices arising from price-fixing, not from the use of another's advertising idea in Trailer Bridge's advertisement. None of the damages sought by the underlying plaintiffs in the Antitrust Complaint are payments requested "because of" an advertising injury, but instead were strictly for antitrust injuries. Cf. Great Am. Ins. Co. v. Riso, Inc., 479 F.3d 158, 162 (1st Cir. 2007) (finding that the insurer did not have a duty to defend based, in part, on the fact "the damages to the . . . plaintiffs, if any occurred, were due to the higher costs caused by [the defendant's] higher prices, rather than any injury to the plaintiffs' reputations"); *Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh v. Alticor, Inc., Nos. 05-2479, 06-2538, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 22585, 2007 WL 2733336, at 6 (6th Cir. Sept. 19, 2007) [*19] ("Because the policies at issue in this matter do not purport to cover antitrust injuries, and because the damages sought by the [underlying] plaintiffs were only for such antitrust injuries, the policies issued by the plaintiff-insurers do not apply in this instance, and there was no duty to defend.").

"[T]he theories advanced and labels used in a complaint are subordinate to the facts alleged for the purpose of determining the duty to defend." *Harris Corp. v. Travelers Indem. Co., No. 96-166-CIV-ORL-19A, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23678, 1998 WL 1657171, at 2 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 19, 1998) (citing Lime Tree Vill. Cmty. Club Ass'n, Inc. v. State Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 980 F.2d 1402, 1405-06 (11th Cir. 1993)). Therefore, the mere inclusion of the term "marketing" within the Antitrust Complaint is not enough to bring the claim within the Policy's coverage. Cf. *Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 22585, 2007 WL 2733336, at 6. It appears the allegations regarding the purported use of the advertising idea were included simply to exemplify the efforts undertaken to hide the price-fixing scheme, an antitrust offense, so that the statute of limitations could be equitably tolled. (Doc. S-1 at 56-57). The relationship between the purported [*20] advertising injury and the damages claimed in the underlying action is too remote to say it is seeking damages "because of" the injury. This Court finds it very unlikely that the insured or the insurer intended coverage for the type of conduct alleged in the Antitrust Complaint.

d. Duty to Indemnify

The above analysis establishes that the allegations in the Antitrust Complaint are not covered by the Policy. Thus, Illinois National was not in breach for failing to provide a defense and holds no duty to indemnify Trailer Bridge. See, e.g., Philadelphia Indem. Ins. Co v. Yachtsman's Inn Condo Ass'n, Inc., 595 F. Supp.2d 1319, 1322 (S.D. Fla. 2009) ("[A] court's determination that the insurer has no duty to defend requires a finding that there is no duty to indemnify."); Fun Spree Vacations, Inc. v. Orion Ins. Co., 659 So.2d 419, 422 (Fla. 3d DCA 1995).

Accordingly, it is ORDERED and ADJUDGED:

1. Plaintiff Trailer Bridge, Inc.'s Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Re Illinois National Insurance Company's Duty to Defend (Doc. 11, filed December 15, 2009) is DENIED.

2. Defendant Illinois National Insurance Company's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 21, filed January 25, 2010) is GRANTED.

3. [*21] The Clerk is directed to enter judgment in favor of Defendant that it does not owe a duty to defend or indemnify for the underlying action, and CLOSE the file.

4. The Show Cause Order (Doc. 36, signed March 31, 2010) is DISCHARGED.

DECISION and ORDER

Plaintiffs commenced the instant action against Defendants claiming that they conspired amongst themselves to keep down the wages of registered nurses in the Albany area. Presently before the Court are: (1) Defendants' Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Orley Ashenfelter [Docket No. 355/358]; (2) Defendants' Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony [5] of Gregory Vistnes [Docket No. 344/356]; (3) Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 345]; and (4) Plaintiffs' Motion to Exclude Portions of Expert Testimony of Robert Willig [Docket No. 342/343].

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs allege that during the class period, June 20, 2002 to June 20, 2006, Defendants entered into at least two restraints of trade in violation of the Sherman Act. Count I alleges that Defendants engaged in a continuing conspiracy in restraint of trade to depress the compensation of RNs employed at hospitals in the Albany area. See Docket No. 1. Count II alleges that Defendants have engaged in a continuing agreement to regularly exchange detailed and non-public information about compensation being paid or to be paid to their RN employees, which not only facilitated the enforcement of the wage suppression conspiracy but unreasonably restrained competition on RN compensation in its own right. Id.

In a Decision and Order dated July 28, 2008, the Court certified a class of registered nurses with respect to two issues: "whether there has been a violation of antitrust law and whether there has been injury to the class that the Sherman Act was designed to prevent." [6] *Fleischman v. Albany Medical Center, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57188, 2008 WL 2945993, at 7 (N.D.N.Y. July 28, 2008). Following merits discovery, Plaintiffs moved the Court to amend the prior certification order [*138] to additionally certify the issues of impact and damages as to a narrower class of registered nurses. The Court denied Plaintiffs' motion. All Defendants have settled with Plaintiffs except Albany Medical Center and Ellis Hospital.

Presently before the Court are: (1) Defendants' Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Orley Ashenfelter; (2) Defendants' Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Gregory Vistnes; (3) Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment; and (4) Plaintiffs' Motion to Exclude Portions of Expert Testimony of Robert Willig. The facts as pertinent to each motion are set forth as follows.

a. Defendants Ellis and Albany Medical Center's Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Orley Ashenfelter

Defendants move to exclude Orley Ashenfelter, who will testify concerning anticompetitive effect, injury-in-fact, and damages. Ashenfelter "currently serves as the Joseph Douglas Green Professor of Economics at Princeton, where he specializes in labor economics, and was recently elected to serve [7] as President of the American Economic Association." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 3. He has previously served "as the director of the Office of Evaluation of the U.S. Department of Labor and had testified for the Federal Trade Commission in a variety of antitrust matters." Id. at 4.

Ashenfelter opines "the fees that Defendants paid for agency nurses, when appropriately adjusted, are equal to or less than competitive staff nurse wages because in a competitive market employees are paid what they are worth." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 5. Ashenfelter selects agency nurses as a benchmark because they are used as a substitute for staff nurses in the workplace and their wages are not set by the Defendant hospitals.

Ashenfelter first determined the rates paid to agency nurses by Defendants during the class period. He then estimated separate competitive wages by hospital and year and for specialty and non-specialty jobs, shift differentials and on-call status because agency nurse wage rates were separately set for each of these variables. Next, these rates were adjusted so as to account for the flexibility offered by agency nurses and the additional costs incurred to employ staff nurses [8] such as payroll taxes, workers compensation, human resources costs, and recruitment costs. Ashenfelter then compared this agency nurse wage benchmark to actual earnings of staff nurses, as reflected in payroll records. The analysis purports to take into account straight-time, overtime, shift differentials, on-call status, bonuses, and tuition. Ashenfelter concluded that Plaintiffs and most other staff nurses should have, on average, earned 21% more than they were actually paid.

Ashenfelter also opines that in a competitive market more RNs would have been employed. Ashenfelter's report explains that underutilization is an anticompetitive effect of the conspiracy to depress RN wages.

Defendants challenge the reliability of Ashenfelter's methodology arguing that it is inadmissible under Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), and should be excluded from consideration both on summary judgment and at trial. Specifically, Defendants argue that Ashenfelter's methodology should be excluded because: (1) it is based on an assumption that contradicts his claims of anticompetitive effect, impact, and damages; (2) the "but for wages" do not vary by the experience of the [9] nurse; (3) it is premised on the [*139] idea that Defendants made extensive long term use of agency nurses; (4) the "but for wages" are not credible; (5) the rate of employment of nurses in the Albany area is no different from the rate in New York state as a whole; (6) Ashenfelter did not assess whether there was a conspiracy or whether the anticompetitive effects resulted from a conspiracy or some other cause; (7) it applies only to the smaller subclass that the Court rejected; and (8) it is not reliable to prove impact and damages for the two named plaintiffs.[1]

Plaintiffs maintain that Defendants' criticisms are unfounded or go to the weight of the evidence, rather than its admissibility. Specifically, Plaintiffs respond that Ashenfelter's methodology is reliable and admissible because: (1) he employed widely acceptable and reliable methods; (2) he properly relied on widely accepted economic principles and peer reviewed materials; (3) his benchmark comparisons reliably show impact and measure damages; [10] (4) Defendants challenge results and not methodology; (5) agency bill rates allow reasonable estimation of competitive staff nurse wages; and (6) the validity of Ashenfelter's benchmark does not depend on whether the use of agency nurses was excessive.

b. Defendants Ellis and Albany Medical Center's Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Gregory Vistnes

Defendants also move to exclude Gregory Vistnes, who will testify that Defendants conspired to suppress nurse compensation or agreed to exchange confidential information for the purpose, or with the effect, of doing so. "Dr. Vistnes is a Vice President at Charles River Associates, an international economics and business consulting firm." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 1. He has also "served as Deputy Director for Antitrust in the Federal Trade Commission's Bureau of Economics" and "held several positions in the Economic Analysis Group of the U.S. Department of Justice's Antitrust Division, including Assistant Chief of the Economic Regulatory Section." Id. at 1-2.

Although Defendants seek to exclude all of the expert testimony of Vistnes, Defendants specifically dispute the reliability of two opinions; his facilitation opinion [11] and his softened competition opinion.

Vistnes' "facilitation opinion" asserts that "Defendants' information sharing made it easier [for Defendants] to form and maintain a wage-fixing agreement." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 6. Specifically, it concludes "that direct, regular exchanges of detailed compensation information made it easier for Defendants to coordinate on nurse compensation." Id. Plaintiffs contend that this opinion is based "on a thorough understanding of the economics literature on information exchange, . . . and a full examination of the discovery record regarding Defendants' 60+ information exchanges." Id. at 9.

Vistnes' "softened competition opinion" asserts that "the information exchanges in this case . . . reduced Defendants' incentive to compete." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 10. According to Vistnes, a softening of competition "means that competition is reduced, such that Defendants would raise nurse wages less often and in smaller amounts, causing them to hire less often and in smaller numbers." Id. at 13. The theory purports to contemplate and [*140] allow for disparities in pay and employment levels across hospitals. It contends that softening reduces the [12] hospitals' incentive to raise wages to gain a competitive advantage even if "rivals do not on all occasions immediately or exactly match that hospital's wage increase." Id. It theorizes that the incentive to increase wages may decrease because a hospital anticipates that the other hospitals will match the increased wages. This opinion "is based on a careful study of the details of those exchanges and the principles found in the economics literature regarding the competitive effect of information exchanges." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 14-15.

Defendants argue that Vistnes' opinions are neither reliable nor relevant. Specifically, Defendants argue that Vistnes' facilitation argument is unreliable because: (1) his methodology is not related to the facts of the case; (2) his opinion is connected to the facts of the case only through ipse dixits; and (3) his reliance on the analysis and opinions of Ashenfelter, does not provide a reliable foundation for his conclusion. See Defendants' Memo. at 7-13. Defendants argue that Vistnes' softened competition opinion is unreliable because: (1) the opinion is contradicted by the facts; and (2) he failed to link Defendants' information exchanges [13] and any harmful effect on competition. See Defendants' Memo. at 13-20.

[1] "But-for wages" are the wages which, according to Ashenfelter, staff nurses would have been paid but-for the alleged conspiracy. The but-for wages were computed using his benchmark methodology.

Plaintiffs responds that Vistnes is a highly qualified expert and his opinions are admissible. Alternatively, Plaintiffs argue that because Defendants challenge only two of Vistnes' numerous opinions, the unchallenged opinions should be admitted even if the Court finds the challenged opinions inadmissible.

c. Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment

Defendants Ellis Hospital ("Ellis") and Albany Medical Center ("AMC") have also filed a joint motion for summary judgment arguing that Plaintiffs "have no evidence of any agreement by Defendants to fix registered nurse compensation, no evidence of parallel wage movements, and no evidence to support Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants' conduct harmed competition or injured the Plaintiffs." [2] See Defendants' Memo. at 1.

Following extensive merits discovery, the following facts are undisputed. Albany Medical Center (AMC) is the largest Defendant. Although there is no formal policy preventing AMC from altering [14] the timing or procedure for setting compensation, RN compensation has traditionally been set in the following way: (1) "AMC establishes the amount of money available to compensate all AMC employees . . . during its annual budget process;" (2) "[i]n approximately August of each year, AMC's human resources department prepares a compensation proposal for the President's Council, a group comprised of AMC's President and CEO and its executive and senior vice presidents;" (3) "AMC's annual compensation proposal addresses all aspects of AMC's compensation for all employees;" (4) "AMC's annual compensation proposal reflects the human resources department's best estimate as to what AMC should budget for compensation for all AMC employees in the coming year"; (5) "AMC's President's Council may request additional information and make recommendations, which may result in modifications to the initial proposal, typically in September;" (6) "AMC's President's Cabinet can request additional modifications to [*141] the proposal as it shapes an annual budget;" (7) "[i]n October or November of each year, AMC's President's Cabinet meets with AMC's CEO to discuss the final budget document to be presented to the [15] Board of Directors;" (8) "[t]he final budget is submitted to the Finance Committee and then to the full Board of Directors for approval in early December of each year;" and (9) "AMC approves the market adjustments and merit increases in December, and they are effective in May of the following year. See Plaintiffs' Response to Defendants' Statement of Undisputed Facts at 3-10.

Ellis hospital is the only Defendant whose nurses are unionized and whose nurse wages are established, at least as to the bargaining unit, through a collective bargaining process with the New York State Nurses Association (NYSNA). See Plaintiffs' Response to Defendants' Statement of Undisputed Facts at 21. When Ellis prepares to negotiate a new collective bargaining agreement, its bargaining objectives and proposals are determined, at least in part, by human resources (HR), the finance department, nursing management, legal counsel, the CEO, and the COO. Id. at 24. The NYSNA and Ellis negotiate until they reach an agreement. Id. at 24-25.

Northeast Health (Northeast) operates two hospitals, Samaritan Hospital in Troy and Albany Memorial Hospital in Albany. Id. at 33. Although there is no formal policy preventing [16] Northeast from altering the timing or procedure for setting nurses compensation, it has traditionally been set as part of an annual budget process in the following way: (1) "[i]In August of each year, each department submits a budget request, which includes a compensation component, to the finance department;" (2) "[i]n September and early October, department administrators and the finance and human resources departments refine the budget requests;" (3) [i]n mid-October, Northeast's executive vice presidents consider the budget recommendations and decide on the need for a market adjustment;" (4) "[i]n mid-October, Northeast's human resources committee of the board reviews the budget recommendations;" and (5) "Northeast's finance committee of the board reviews and makes a final recommendation on the overall budget to the board of directors, and the board approved the budget in late November or early December." Id. at 33-36.

Seton Health System (Seton) is a member of Ascension Health, the nation's largest not-for-profit health care system and is the smallest Defendant. Id. at 41. "Each year as part of the budget planning process, Seton budgets a certain amount of funds for possible market [17] adjustments." Id. at 43. "Seton's budget process changed midway through the class period - in 2002 and 2003, Seton's fiscal year began January 1, and it established the budget the summer before; in 2004, Seton changed its fiscal year to begin July 1, and it reviewed employee compensation twice, in the summer of 2003 and in January 2004; and from 2005 forward, Seton's fiscal year began July 1, and its budget process began in January." Id. 43-44. Establishing RN compensation involves the human resources department, department directors, and nursing administrators as well as other executives. Id. at 44. The budget committee must approve all market adjustment proposals. Id. at 46.

[2] In addition to joining Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment, Ellis has also separately moved for Summary Judgment on alternate grounds. [Docket No. 347/348].

St. Peter's Hospital (St. Peter's) has been recognized twice as one of the top 100 hospitals in the nation. Id. at 56. Although there is no formal policy preventing St. Peters from altering the timing or procedure for making market adjustments, they have traditionally been set in the following way: (1) "St. Peter's sets its [*142] budget for market adjustments in September or October and makes market adjustments in the spring;" (2) "[d]uring the annual budget process, St. Peter's sets aside a pool of money to use for [18] market adjustments and divides the pool among those job titles where an adjustment is required;" (3) "St. Peter's human resources department makes a recommendation to the director and vice president of human resources regarding the amount St. Peter's should budget for market adjustments;" (4) "[t]he director and vice president of human resources then make a recommendation to the finance committee, which determines the amount of money to be given for the market adjustment." Id. at 57-60.

It is also undisputed that from 2003 through 2006 Defendants engaged in information exchanges regarding the compensation they paid to RNs. See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 3 n. 6 (Plaintiffs point to 60 documented instances but contend that based on the many surveys produced in discovery there were many more undocumented information exchanges conducted by telephone or in person. Furthermore, incomplete e-mail trails evidence that custodians deleted e-mails.) The parties dispute the purpose and scope that these exchanges played and the role they played in setting nurses wages. The record shows that the hospitals extensively shared information through group communications, e-mails, telephone calls, [19] and in person conversations with the other defendants. See e.g. Plaintiffs' Response to Defendants' Statement of Undisputed Facts at paragraphs 8, 18, 21, 23, 25, 49, 71, 72, 97, 103, 106, 130, 137; see also Ex. 23 (in March 2005, John Barnett of Ellis shares Ellis' current and future new graduate rate with Cathy Halakan of AMC) (a June 2005 e-mail from Sandra Castilla of AMC to Louise Franz of Ellis asking for and obtaining updated information on Ellis' wage and compensation practices including RN new hire and per diem rates) (in May 2004 Louise Franz of AMC sent an internal e-mail reporting that she receiving information from St. Peter's about St. Peter's current wage structure and its plan to move to a different model in June). These communications also included one-to-one email communications and one-to-one verbal discussions. Id.; see e.g. Ex. 25 (Louise Franz of AMC asked Kathleen Occhiogrosso for Seton for Seton's new RN rate and also provides AMC's new rate). Defendant collected the information on compensation and benefits gathered from other hospitals and complied reports and surveys which were shared with other defendant hospitals. Id. Additionally, "if a request for compensation [20] information was sent out to a group of hospital HR representatives via e-mail, some of them simply replied to the entire group . . . to share their hospitals current compensation information with the other hospitals." Id. There are also evidence of information sharing regarding merit and recruitment bonuses, tuition assistance, merit pay, health insurance co-payments, length of workweek, and loan forgiveness programs. Id.; see e.g. Ex. 25 (Erin Baker of St. Peter's provides Sandra Castilla of AMC with RN new hire, RN per diem rates, and merit increase information after Castilla stated that she needed updated information for AMC's 2006 Compensation and Benefits Budget).

Plaintiffs' argument is as follows. See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 1-2. During the class period, Defendants faced a serious nursing shortage. A nursing shortage should have led to intense competition for nurses. Instead, Defendants avoided competing by regularly sharing their most sensitive information about their nurse pay structure. Defendants would not have shared this information if [*143] their competitors used the information competitively to identify low paying hospitals and outbid them to attract more and better [21] qualified nurses. Plaintiffs, therefore, maintain that the practice continued only because it was accompanied by an agreement and recognition that the exchanged information would not be used as a strategic asset to compete for nurses, but rather to coordinate on wages and ensure that any incentive to compete was eliminated.

Defendants respond as follows. The process for setting compensation was based on a review of published survey data and internal analysis of compensation and employee needs. During the class period, nurse compensation was steadily increased and as a result, employment levels also increased. Defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment because Plaintiffs: (1) cannot show an agreement to fix nurse pay; (2) cannot establish that Defendants' exchange of compensation information unreasonably restrained competition; (3) have no evidence of harm to competition or injury; and (4) cannot show a causal link between Defendants' information exchange and either the alleged anticompetitive effects or their alleged injury. Plaintiffs oppose Defendants' motion arguing that: (1) no formal agreement is required and there is extensive evidence for circumstantial proof [22] of a per se claim; (2) they have produced evidence of an actual adverse effect on competition resulting from the information exchanges; and (3) their expert Ashenfelter has presented a legally appropriate benchmark analysis.

d. Plaintiffs' Motion to Exclude Portions of Expert Testimony of Robert Willig

Plaintiffs also move to exclude portions of the expert testimony of Robert Willig. They argue that "Willig should be limited to testifying as to matters where his expert knowledge can assist the jury in understanding the evidence" and the Court should prohibit Willig from offering any opinion concerning: (1) "[w]hether the fact discovery record in this case is probative or not of the alleged conspiracy; and (2) "[t]he information the Defendants did or did not consider in making their compensation decisions, and the effect or lack of effect particular information had on such decisions." See Plaintiffs' Memo. at 6-7. Defendants oppose this motion. They maintain that Willig's testimony satisfies the requirements of admissibility under Rule 702 of the Fed. R. Evidence and, thus, should not be excluded. See Defendants' Opposition Memo. at 1.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

a. Admissibility of an Expert

Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, [23] which governs the admissibility of expert and other scientific or technical expert testimony, provides as follows:

> If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case.

The Supreme Court interpreted the District Court's function under Rule 702 in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993). The Second Circuit reiterated this function in Amorgianos v. [*144] National R.R. Passenger Corp., 303 F.3d 256, 265 (2d Cir. 2002) stating:

> [t]he Supreme Court has made clear that the district court has a "gatekeeping" function under Rule 702 - it is charged with "the task of ensuring that an expert's testimony both rests on a reliable foundation and is relevant to the task at hand." Id. at 597, 113 S. Ct. 2786; accord Campbell, 239 F.3d at 184; [24] Federal Judicial Center, Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence 11 (2d ed.2000). In fulfilling this gatekeeping role, the trial court should look to the standards of Rule 401 in analyzing whether proffered expert testimony is relevant, i.e., whether it "'ha[s] any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence.'" Campbell, 239 F.3d at 184 (quoting Fed. R. Evid. 401) (alteration in original). Next, the district court must determine "whether the proffered testimony has a sufficiently 'reliable foundation' to permit it to be considered." Id. (quoting Daubert, 509 U.S. at 597, 113 S. Ct. 2786). In this inquiry, the district court should consider the indicia of reliability identified in Rule 702, namely, (1) that the testimony is grounded on sufficient facts or data; (2) that the testimony "is the product of reliable principles and methods"; and (3) that "the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case." Fed. R. Evid. 702. In short, the district court must "make certain that an expert, whether basing testimony upon professional [25] studies or personal experience, employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field." Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 152, 119 S. Ct. 1167.

District courts consider various factors in determining reliability: (1) "whether a theory or technique can be (and has been) tested;" (2) "whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication;" (3) a technique's "known or potential rate of error," and "the existence and maintenance of standards controlling the technique's operation;" and (4) whether a particular technique or theory has gained "general acceptance" in the relevant scientific community. See Amorgianos, 303 F.3d at 266. "These factors do not constitute a . . . definitive checklist or test, [r]ather, '[t]he inquiry envisioned by Rule 702 is . . . a flexible one, . . . and the gatekeeping inquiry must be tied to the facts of a particular case.'" Amorgianos, 303 F.3d at 266 (citing Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 150); see also Daubert, 509 U.S. at 593. "In undertaking this flexible inquiry, the district court must focus on the principles and methodology employed by the expert, without regard to [26] the conclusions the expert has reached or the district court's belief as to the correctness of those conclusions." Amorgianos, 303 F.3d at 266; see Daubert, 509 U.S. at 595. That being said, "conclusions and methodology are not entirely distinct from one another" and "[a] court may conclude that there is simply too great an analytical gap between the data and the opinion proffered." Amorgianos, 303 F.3d at 266 (quoting General Elec. Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 146, 118 S. Ct. 512, 139 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1997)); see Heller v. Shaw Indus., Inc., 167 F.3d 146, 153 (3d Cir. 1999) ("[A] district court must examine the expert's conclusions in order to determine whether they could reliably follow from the facts known to the expert and the methodology [*145] used."). "Once the district court has deemed the evidence sufficiently reliable so as to be admissible, it is "bound to consider the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff" when deciding motions for summary judgment or judgment as a matter of law." In re Joint Eastern & Southern Dist, Asbestos Litigation, 52 F.3d 1124, 1135 (2d Cir. 1995).

b. Summary Judgment

Summary judgment, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), is warranted if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, [27] and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." The party moving for summary judgment bears the initial burden of showing, through the production of admissible evidence, that no genuine issue of material fact exists. Major League Baseball Properties, Inc. v. Salvino, 542 F.3d 290, 309 (2d Cir. 2008). Only after the moving party has met this burden is the non-moving party required to produce evidence demonstrating that genuine issues of material fact exist. Salahuddin v. Goord, 467 F.3d 263, 272-73 (2d Cir. 2006). The nonmoving party must do more than "rest upon the mere allegations … of the [plaintiff's] pleading" or "simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-86, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); see also Fed. R. Civ .P. 56(e) ("When a motion for summary judgment is made [by a defendant] and supported as provided in this rule, the [plaintiff] may not rest upon the mere allegations … of the [plaintiff's] [28] pleading ….")‌. Rather, "[a] dispute regarding a material fact is genuine if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Ross v. McGinnis, 00-CV-0275, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9367, 2004 WL 1125177, at *8 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 29, 2004) [internal quotations omitted] [emphasis added]. It must be apparent that no rational finder of fact could find in favor of the non-moving party for a Court to grant a motion for summary judgment. Gallo v. Prudential Residential Servs., 22 F.3d 1219, 1223-24 (2d Cir. 1994); Graham v. Lewinski, 848 F.2d 342, 344 (2d Cir. 1988). In determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, the Court must resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences against the moving party. Schwapp v. Town of Avon, 118 F.3d 106, 110 (2d Cir. 1997) [citation omitted]; Thompson v. Gjivoje, 896 F.2d 716, 720 (2d Cir. 1990) [citation omitted].

III. DISCUSSION

a. Defendants' Ellis and Albany Medical Center's Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Orley Ashenfelter

Plaintiffs employed Orley Ashenfelter to use "standard economic tools to study whether staff nurses in this action suffered impact and damages as a result of Defendants' alleged conspiracy." [29] See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 4. Ashenfelter compared actual wages paid to staff nurses by the Defendant hospitals during the alleged conspiracy with wages that would be paid "but-for" the alleged conspiracy. Ashenfelter computed the "but-for" wages of staff nurses by using bill rates for agency nurses as a benchmark with which to compare staff nurse wages during the same period. He maintains that agency nurses "are an appropriate benchmark because: (1) agency nurses, as literal substitutes for staff nurses, perform the work that would otherwise be done by a staff nurse;" and [*146] (2) their bill rates, set by a national market, would not have been affected by the alleged conspiracy. Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 2. Ashenfelter determined that "Plaintiffs, and most other staff nurses, had indeed suffered injury as a result of Defendants' alleged collusive wage suppression." Id. at 2-3. He concluded "that, on average, staff nurses had earned $ 28.11 per hour during the class period, but that in a competitive market, they would have earned an average of at least $ 35.74 per hour." Id. at 7.

Defendants argue that Ashenfelter's testimony should be excluded because it is unreliable as [30] a matter of law. They do not challenge Ashenfelter's qualifications or the relevance of his testimony. Defendants instead challenge the reliability of his opinions, arguing that: (1) his benchmark theory is based on assumptions and is disconnected from the facts; (2) he failed to address whether a conspiracy existed and whether that conspiracy caused the wage suppression; and (3) his utilization theory does not take into consideration New York state specific conditions. The Court will address these arguments seriatim.

1. Whether the Methodology Used by Prof. Ashenfelter in Forming his Benchmark Theory is Reliable

The methodology used by Ashenfelter to determine that agency nurse bill rates and staff nurse wages should be comparable is based on the widely accepted economic concept of marginal revenue product (MRP). MRP is the "value that an employee creates for his or her employer." The concept promulgates that an employer will not "incur costs to employ a staff nurse or hire an agency nurse that, in total, exceed a nurses' [MRP]." In other words, according to economic theory, Ashenfelter opines that because agency nurses "are interchangeable with staff nurses, working instead of, and [31] alongside, staff nurses at the exact same hospitals performing the exact same tasks on the same day" the two types of nurses are worth the same to the hospitals.

Ashenfelter explains that agency nurse bill rates and staff nurse wages differ because agency bill rates "pay for all the costs of employing an agency nurse, not just her wages, and include an amount to compensate the agency nurse for scheduling flexibility." Staff nurse wages are usually lower than agency nurse bill rates because they do not include this flexibility premium and fail to account for fringe benefits and other costs of employing a full time employee. Ashenfelter's methodology purports to adjust the competitive agency bill rate to account for these variables. He opines that the "but-for" wages of staff nurses will equal the MRP of the agency nurse minus the value of the flexibility. [3] Conversely, the competitive wage of a staff nurses equals the MRP of the staff nurse minus the "non-earning costs of employing that nurse." From these economic computations, Ashenfelter opines that he is able to determine the extent to which Defendants' alleged conspiracy affected the wages of staff nurses during the class period.

The validity of the economic concept MRP is not challenged by the Defendants. Ashenfelter based his methodology on this accepted economic principle. His methodology took into consideration the flexibility premiums offered by agency nurses, staff nurse fringe benefits, and the costs of employing full time staff nurses and he took the necessary logical steps from agency [*147] bill rates to estimate the competitive wage of individual staff nurses.

Similarly, Defendants do not challenge the data used by Ashenfelter to compute the "but-for" wages. The but-for wages are computed using wage and pay-roll data and differences in pay grade depending on on-call status and specialty placements at each of the Defendant hospitals during each year of the class period. The underlying data applied to the methodology to compute "but-for" wages is undisputed.

[3] "But-for [32] wages" are the wages that Ashenfelter opines the staff nurses would expect to be paid in the absence of the alleged conspiracy.

Defendants argue that Prof. Ashenfelter's methodology is unreliable because: (1) it assumes that agency nurse rates are set in a national market; (2) it does not account for differences in experience; (3) it is based on the assumption [33] that Defendants made extensive long term use of Agency nurses; (4) the but-for wages created by his methodology are not credible; (5) the but-for wages barely change over the class period; (6) the methodology can only be applied to a subset of the nurses; and (7) the methodology cannot prove impact and damages for the two named plaintiffs.

a. Agency Nurse Wages are Set in a National Market

Defendants argue that Ashenfelter has "no basis to believe that there is any connection between the adjusted bill rates for agency nurses and the competitive wages of staff nurses." Defendants' Memo. at 7-8. Defendants contend that wages for the two groups must be set in the same market for agency nurses to be properly used as a benchmark. They argue that because (1) Ashenfelter's methodology assumes that wages for agency nurses are set in a national market; and (2) Ashenfelter has stated that the Defendant hospitals would have little influence over the national market for staff nurse wages, he in effect acknowledges either that there is no link between agency nurse's and staff nurse's wages or that Defendants have no power to suppress wages. [4]

Plaintiffs argue that the MRP theory does not require that staff nurse wages be set in the same market as agency nurse bill rates because "what matters is that the bill rate is equal to or less than the marginal revenue product of an agency nurse." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 14. They further claim that after proper adjustments, his methodology computes the actual competitive wage of the staff nurse based on the staff nurses' economic worth to the hospital. The fact that Defendants dispute Ashenfelter's methodology does not render the methodology unreliable. Experts are entitled to differing opinions as to the validity of the methodology, so long as the challenged methodology is grounded in reliable scientific principles and facts. See McCullock v. H.B. Fuller Co., 61 F.3d 1038, 1044 (2d Cir. 1995), ("[d]isputes as to . . . faults in [expert's] use of [particular scientific analysis] as a methodology . . . go to the weight, not the admissibility, of his testimony."). Because the Court has already concluded that Ashenfelter's methodology is based on a well accepted economic principle and uses undisputed [35] data, exclusion is not warranted.

b. Methodology does not take into account Experience

Defendants argue that work experience is not accounted for in Ashenfelter's methodology because agency nurse bill rates do not vary by experience and, therefore, "but-for" wages do not vary. They allege this overcompensates starting nurses and [*148] under compensates the most experienced nurses, rendering the methodology unreliable. See Defendants Memo. at 11-12.

Plaintiffs respond that "Ashenfelter took into account all available data, which allowed him to account for differences in competitive wages based on job type, hospital, year, shift differential, and on-call status." Plaintiffs' Memo. at 17. "The benchmark does not account for experience because the data [is] not available." Id. They maintain that the available data allows for a "conservative estimate of impact and damages based on a customized and highly comparable benchmark methodology." Id.

"Damages in antitrust cases 'are rarely susceptible to the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts.'" Litton Systems, Inc. v. American Tel . and Tel. Co., 700 F.2d 785, 823 (2d. Cir. 1983)(quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 123, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969)). [36] In Litton Systems, Inc., 700 F.2d at 823-24, the Second Circuit determined that "where there is a basis on which a jury can reasonably infer significant antitrust injury, [the court] should be very hesitant before determining that damages cannot be awarded." In Litton Systems, Inc., 700 F.2d at 823-24, the Second Circuit upheld the consideration of expert testimony which was based on assumptions about the size of the market and a company's share in that market. The court found that the estimates were based upon analysis of the industry data and a review of other studies and that the projections made were conservative. Id. "An antitrust plaintiff must provide only sufficient evidence to support a 'just and reasonable estimate' of damages." U.S. Football League v. National Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1378 (2d Cir. 1988) (quoting Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264, 66 S. Ct. 574, 90 L. Ed. 652 (1946)); see also Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 563, 51 S. Ct. 248, 75 L. Ed. 544 (1931) (proof of antitrust damages sufficient "if the evidence show[s] the extent of the damages as a matter of just and reasonable inference, although the result be only approximate."). A benchmark need not be perfect [37] to allow for this reasonable estimate of damages. See McDonough v. Toys R Us, Inc., 638 F. Supp.2d 461, 491 (E.D. Pa. 2009) ("His proposed benchmarks are not perfect, but they will give a reasonable estimate of damages." (internal citations omitted)).

Here, only the named Plaintiffs are pursuing damage claims and both named Plaintiffs are experienced nurses. Therefore, the critique that Ashenfelter's methodology may overcompensate inexperienced nurses is irrelevant. Ashenfelter's methodology is reliable for reasonably estimating the damages for the two named plaintiffs based on a variety of variables specific to those Plaintiffs.

c. No Evidence of Extensive Agency Use

Defendants next argue that "although Prof. Ashenfelter's [methodology] is premised on the idea that the Defendants made extensive long term use of agency nurses, he admits that he cannot distinguish between appropriate long term agency use and inappropriate agency use" and therefore his opinions are unreliable. Defendants' Memo. at 13.

Plaintiffs respond that Ashenfelter's methodology is not premised on the fact that Defendants made extensive use of agency nurses. They contend that excessive agency use is merely additional [38] evidence of wage suppression. Therefore, whether agency usage is considered excessive has no effect on the reliability of Ashenfelter's benchmark analysis. Furthermore, [*149] Plaintiffs argue that Defendants' business documents provide evidence that support the conclusion that agency use was excessive.

d. The But-For Wages are not Credible

Defendants also argue that Ashenfelter's methodology should be excluded as unreliable because the but-for wages are not credible and barely change over time. The Supreme Court in Daubert, 509 U.S. at 595, stated that "the district court must focus on the principles and methodology employed by the expert, without regard to the conclusions the expert has reached or the district court's belief as to the correctness of those conclusions." The district court however must still "examine the expert's conclusions in order to determine whether they could reliably follow from the facts known to the expert and the methodology used." Heller v. Shaw Indus., Inc., 167 F.3d 146, 153 (3d Cir. 1999); See Joiner, 522 U.S. at 146 ("[C]onclusions and methodology are not entirely distinct from one another. . . [N]othing in either Daubert or the Federal Rules of Evidence requires [39] a district court to admit opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert. A court may conclude that there is simply too great an analytical gap between the data and the opinion proffered.").

As previously stated, Ashenfelter's methodology is based on sound economic principles and applies undisputed facts. Defendants will have the opportunity to cross-examine Ashenfelter at trial as to the credibility of his results and the jury will be able to assign the appropriate weight to the expert's opinions. The methodology requires a step-by-step application of undisputed pay roll information into a methodology which this Court finds to be reliable. There is no analytical gap between this application and the results found by Ashenfelter.

2. Whether Ashenfelter's Opinions are Unreliable because he did not Study Whether a Conspiracy Existed and Whether the Conspiracy Caused the Wage Suppression

Next, Defendants argue that Ashenfelter's opinions are unreliable because he "simply assumed, upon direction from plaintiff's counsel, that the defendants unlawfully conspired either to exchange nurse wage information or suppress nurse wages" and never investigated [40] whether that assumption had merit. Defendants' Memo. at 20. They contend that "[t]he Court should not feel comfortable allowing Professor Ashenfelter to offer opinions on anticompetitive effect, impact, and damages flowing from the conspiracy when he did not even investigate whether the conspiracy even existed, or whether, even assuming it did exist, it was the cause of the effects he claims to have found." Id. at 20-21.

Ashenfelter's opinions focus exclusively on the issues of whether staff nurses suffered impact and damages and he offers no opinions as to liability. Plaintiffs admit that "[f]or the purposes of his report, Prof. Ashenfelter was asked to assume that Defendants conspired to suppress wages and exchanged wage-related information." Plaintiffs' Memo. at 4 n. 2. Ashenfelter does not rely on the assumption of liability in determining whether the staff nurses' wages were depressed. Ashenfelter's methodology focused on undisputed data and facts and was based on well accepted economic theory. The fact that he did not address whether a conspiracy existed or whether a conspiracy caused the wage suppression does not render his opinions, as to impact and damages, unreliable.

[*150] 3. Whether [41] Ashenfelter's Underutilization Opinions are Unreliable

Ashenfelter also studied underutilization in Albany hospitals. Plaintiffs describe underutilization as an "anticompetitive effect of Defendants' conspiracy" and offer it as evidence of Defendants' market power. To determine whether underutilization was present at Defendant Hospitals, Ashenfelter applied a formula for measuring utilization developed by Kevin Grumbach and others and published in a peer reviewed journal. When applying this formula:

> Prof. Ashenfelter gathered data on the number of full-time nurses, the average number of inpatient beds filled per day, the volume of outpatient services, and the complexity of services provided. He found nurse utilization in Albany to be a full 14% lower than in other cities nationwide. Notably, this estimate is conservative because the utilization measure for Albany includes hospitals that did and did not participate in the conspiracy to suppress wages.

Plaintiffs' Memo. at 7-8. Professor Ashenfelter's methodology to determine whether Albany nurses were underutilized compared Albany-area utilization of nurses to average nurse utilization in the country as a whole. Defendants argue that Ashenfelter's [42] nurse utilization analysis is unreliable because it does not take into account state specific factors that affect utilization from one state to another, such as budgetary or funding issues and laws and regulations. Defendant's expert "re-ran [the utilization] analysis using cities in New York state as a benchmark and found no significant difference between Albany's utilization rate and that of other New York cities." Defendants' Memo. at 19.

Defendants do not attack the methodology Plaintiffs use to determine the utilization rate of nurses or the data used to determine Albany's utilization rate. On the contrary, Defendants apply the same methodology and Albany-specific data when comparing the rate of utilization in Albany to a New York state benchmark. Defendants here challenge only Ashenfelter's decision to compare utilization in Albany to a national benchmark, as opposed to a New York state benchmark. Differences in expert opinion as to which benchmark is more reliable does not render Ashenfelter's opinions unreliable. Instead Defendants will have the opportunity to cross-examine Ashenfelter at trial as to the effects of state specific factors and the jury will be able to assign the [43] appropriate weight to the expert's opinions. Because the Defendants fail to challenge the methodology underlying the utilization theory, Ashenfelter's opinion that hospitals in Albany have a lower nurse utilization rate than hospitals nationwide is admissible.

Accordingly, Ashenfelter's opinions regarding impact and damages are admissible.

b. Defendants Ellis and Albany Medical Center's Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Gregory Vistnes

Plaintiffs have offered Dr. Vistnes to testify in support of their claims that Defendants conspired to suppress nurse compensation or agreed to exchange confidential information for the purpose, or with the effect of, doing so. Vistnes opines that Defendants' exchange of compensation information facilitated coordination among them and softened competition. Defendants argue that Dr. Vistnes' opinions should be excluded because they are unreliable, unsupported, and contradicted by the facts and evidence produced during discovery. Although Defendants take issue only with the softened competition and [*151] facilitation opinions they contend that all of his opinions should be excluded. Because Defendants advance no arguments relating to the other opinions [44] they are admissible.

1. Vistnes' facilitation opinion

Dr. Vistnes' facilitation opinion asserts that "the scope of the information that Defendant Hospitals shared, the frequency with which they shared their information, and the nature of the information that they shared, significantly increase[d] Defendant Hospitals' ability to establish and maintain an agreement to reduce competition for RNs." Expert Report of Gregory S. Vistnes at 2. Plaintiffs contend that Vistnes' opinion is based on "a thorough understanding of the economics literature on information exchange and a full examination of the discovery record regarding the exchanges." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 9. He explains that because information exchanges can both benefit and harm competition, expert testimony is necessary to help a jury understand the impact of the particular information exchanges in this case. Plaintiff's maintain that Vistnes' testimony will explain why his "detailed review of the record led him to conclude that the information exchanges in this case in fact reduced incentives to compete." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 10.

Defendants argue that this opinion should be excluded as unreliable and unsupported [45] because: (1) the conclusions are related to the facts only through ipse dixit; and (2) Vistnes relied on the analysis and opinions of Plaintiff's other expert in coming up with his own opinion. See Defendants' Memo. at 7, 10 and 12.

a. Whether the Conclusions are Related to the Facts

Defendants contend that Vistnes' conclusion - that information exchanges facilitated coordination of nurse compensation - is unreliable because Vistnes offered the opinion without understanding what role the information exchanges played in setting nurse compensation. Defendants allege Vistnes: (1) reached his conclusions without opining as to whether an agreement existed, what such an agreement would contain, and whether coordination actually occurred; (2) failed to distinguish between lawful and unlawful behavior; (3) "failed to examine the processes through which Defendants set their nurse compensation, and did not consider the reality of how, when, and why Defendants made their decisions regarding nurse compensation;" and (4) did not rely upon any data produced in discovery such as payroll or human resources data. See Defendants' Memo. at 7-11. Therefore, Defendants argue that Vistnes "reached his opinions [46] based upon an analysis that he conducted in a vacuum" and "jumped to his conclusions." Defendants' Memo. at 7-8.

(1) Opinion does not Address: Whether an Agreement Existed, What it Contained, or Whether Coordination Occurred

Plaintiffs argue that Vistnes is entitled to offer limited opinions and is not required to opine as to the ultimate issue in the case. They argue that Vistnes was not required to testify as to whether a conspiracy existed or whether coordination actually occurred for his opinions to be admissible. Vistnes' testimony is offered only to opine that the nature, frequency and scope with which Defendants shared information would make it easier for Defendants to establish and maintain an agreement to reduce RN competition. As a general matter this type of opinion testimony may be helpful to the trier of fact. See City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chemicals, Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 565 (11th Cir. 1998) ("data and testimony need not prove the plaintiffs' case by themselves; they must merely constitute one piece of the puzzle that [*152] the plaintiffs endeavor to assemble before the jury.").

In U.S. Information Systems, Inc. v. International Broth. of Electrical Workers Local Union Number 3, AFL-CIO, 313 F. Supp.2d 213, 240 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), [47] the Court explained that "an expert is permitted to testify that the 'climate' of a specific market was consistent with a conspiracy." See In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litigation, 93 F. Supp.2d. 1348, 1355 (N.D. Ga. 2000) (denying in part defendants' motion to exclude plaintiffs' expert testimony because the expert's proposed testimony "that the climate of the polypropylene market during the relevant time period was consistent with a finding that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices" would be "helpful to the trier of fact."). In U.S. Information Systems, Inc, 313 F. Supp.2d at 240, defendants claimed that the expert's reports and testimony were impermissibly "replete with conclusions about the existence of a conspiracy based upon conclusions of law." The court held that although the expert could not testify as to his legal conclusion:

> [h]e could . . . point to factors that would tend to show anticompetitive conduct in a market. He could not indicate whether he believed those factors existed here, and what the economic significance of those factors would be. He could also explain how certain conduct could affect a market through the use of hypothetical statements. [48] . .[the expert] could hypothesize that if certain conduct did occur, economists would expect the market to react in a particular way.

Id.

In this case, Vistnes seeks to testify that the information exchanges, engaged in by the Defendant hospitals, made it easier for Defendants to form and maintain a wage agreement. This type of opinion maybe helpful to the jury and is admissible.

(2) Opinion fails to Distinguish between Lawful and Unlawful Behavior

Defendants contend that "Vistnes' conclusions . . . will not assist the jury to understand the evidence because his opinions are as consistent with lawful behavior as unlawful behavior." Defendants' Memo. at 9. Plaintiffs argue that Vistnes' opinion is offered as evidence probative of a per-se unlawful wage fixing conspiracy and cannot be probative of lawful conduct. See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 8.

In Williamson Oil Co. v. Phillip Morris U.S.A., 346 F.3d 1287, 1322 (11th Cir. 2003), the court excluded some of the expert's testimony because "he did not differentiate between legal and illegal pricing behavior." The expert's conclusion was "that plaintiffs participated in an illegal price fixing conspiracy, and he expressed this opinion . [49] . . by saying that the manufacturer's participation in the MSA information sharing system created an inference of collusion." Id at 1323. The expert defined collusion to include conscious parallelism, which is legal behavior. Id. The court excluded the testimony as unhelpful to the jury because the expert did not differentiate between legal and illegal pricing behavior. Id.

Here, Vistnes does not define wage fixing to include legal activities. Vistnes does not suggest that any legitimate wage surveys facilitated a wage fixing agreement. Although he recognizes that information exchanges can in some situations increase competition, he testifies and opines that the information exchanges in this case do no such thing. Accordingly, his opinion would be helpful to the jury.

[*153] (3) Opinion not Related to the Facts of the Case because Vistnes failed to Examine Processes for Setting Nurse Compensation and did not Rely on Data Produced During Discovery

Defendants contend that Vistnes' opinions are unreliable because he failed to examine the process by which Defendant Hospitals set their nurse compensation and failed to rely on any data produced during discovery, such as payroll or human resource data. [50] They argue that "Dr. Vistnes cannot reliably conclude that the information exchanges made it easier for Defendants to coordinate if Dr. Vistnes himself did not understand how Defendants set nurse compensation - and what role the information exchanges played in those decisions - in the first instance." Defendants' Reply Memo. at 4. Plaintiffs respond that "Vistnes does not analyze data to determine whether the data [is] consistent with the existence of a conspiracy" because he "does not opine on the existence of the conspiracy." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 7. They maintain that Vistnes' opinion is supported by substantial economic literature and the record and does not require information on how compensation was set.

"An expert's testimony is admissible under Rule 702 as long as the processes or techniques that he used to formulate his opinions are reliable." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 594-95. In his report, Vistnes opines that:

> Information exchanges can facilitate coordination among rivals in two ways: they can provide a means by which rivals can monitor each other's conduct and ensure compliance with agreements to restrict competition; and they can provide rivals with a means by which [51] they can more readily reach agreement.

He explains that "anticompetitive agreements among rivals are more likely to endure over time if firms have a means by which they can monitor each other's conduct to ensure compliance with the terms of the agreement." According to Vistnes, "[i]nformation exchanges provide a mechanism to conduct such monitoring" because:

> rivals could monitor whether there is any cheating on an agreement to restrict competition for employees by sharing information about the wages they offer, the size of employees' annual salary increases, or the conditions under which employees qualify for overtime payments. The more readily that firms can use an information exchange to identify when a rival has cheated on an anticompetitive agreement, and which rival(s) cheated, the greater the risk that rivals can use the information exchange to monitor and enforce an anticompetitive agreement to restrict competition. Information exchanges that increase rivals' ability to monitor each other's conduct can also reduce the expected costs associated with punishment; these reduced costs can, in turn, facilitate coordination by increasing the profitability of sustaining an anticompetitive [52] agreement.

Additionally:

> Information exchanges that involve future terms of competition (e.g., prices or wages) can allow firms to communicate their plans for future prices or wages to their rivals and create a means by which rivals can communicate back how they will respond. Thus, information exchanges involving future or planned terms of competition can provide a means by which rivals can reach agreement.

See Expert Report of Gregory S. Vistnes at 4. In forming this opinions, Vistnes relied on economic theories published in various economic journals. See e.g. Per Baltzar [*154] Overgaard and H. Peter Mollgaard, "Information Exchange, Market Transparency and Dynamic Oligopoly," in Wayne Dale Collins (Ed.), Issues in Competition Law and Policy, American Bar Association (2008), at 1254; Michele Grillo, "Collusion and Facilitating Practices: A New Perspective in Antitrust Analysis," European Journal of Law and Economics, (September 2002) Vol. 14, N.2, pp. 151-169; Edward J. Green and Robert H. Porter, "Noncooperative Collusion under Imperfect Price Information," Econometrica, Vol. 52, No 1 (January 1984).

Armed with this background understanding, Vistnes then analyzed the communications between [53] Defendant hospitals and determined, among other things, that: (1) "[a]ll Defendants shared information, and they did so frequently throughout the time period at issue"; (2) "Defendants shared information over a wide range of terms, thus allowing them to monitor a wide range of variables over which they might compete for RNs and expanding the scope of variables over which competition was softened;" (3) shared data without ensuring anonymity, thus allowing Defendants to monitor compliance; and (4) collected and shared information without the benefit or safeguards of a third party administrator. See Expert Report of Gregory S. Vistnes, Ph.D at 7. Vistnes also opined from this analysis that he sees "no evidence suggesting that Defendant Hospitals' sharing of information regarding the terms by which they were competing, and planned to compete in the future, for RNs yielded any pro-competitive benefits that might offset the competitive harm associated with that information sharing." Id. at 8.

Defendants do not take issue with the economic theories or the literature used by Vistnes as a basis for his opinions. Similarly, they do not take issue with the communications which Vistnes analyzed. [54] Defendants do not dispute the validity of the communications or allege that Vistnes misunderstood the communications. Instead Defendants take issue with the fact that Vistnes failed to examine the process by which Plaintiff hospitals set their nurse compensation and, therefore, failed to test whether his economic theories applied in this case.

Vistnes' opinion is reliable pursuant to the standard articulated in Daubert, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993) (In this inquiry, the district court should consider the indicia of reliability identified in Rule 702, namely, (1) that the testimony is grounded on sufficient facts or data; (2) that the testimony "is the product of reliable principles and methods"; and (3) that "the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case."). Vistnes' lack of knowledge as to how the Defendant Hospitals set nurse compensation does not render his opinion unreliable because, following a full examination of the information exchanges at issue in this case, his opinion is limited to: (1) an explanation of how information exchanges increase the ability to establish and maintain an agreement to reduce competition for RNs when certain variables and [55] factors are present; and (2) his opinion that these variables were present in the information exchanges between Defendant Hospitals. Vistnes' facilitation opinion is supported by established economic theory and the undisputed facts surrounding the information exchanges. Accordingly, Vistnes' facilitation opinion is admissible.

b. Whether Vistnes Relied on Ashenfelter's Opinion

Defendants allege that "Dr. Vistnes attempted to bridge [the] gap in his analysis by relying on the analysis and conclusions of Plaintiff's other expert, Professor Orley [*155] C. Ashenfelter" as part of his analysis "of balancing the costs and gains of any conspiracy among the Defendants." Defendants' Memo. at 12. Defendants contend that Ashenfelter's opinions are not a reliable basis for Vistnes conclusions and that Vistnes failed to "independently verify any of Ashenfelter's findings." Id. Because this Court has already found that Vistnes' conclusions are independently reliable, Defendants' argument is without merit.

2. Vistnes' Opinion that the Information Exchanges Softened Competition

Defendants argue that Vistnes' softened competition opinion should be excluded because: (1) the conclusion is contradicted by the facts; [56] and (2) he failed to link Defendants' information exchanges and any harmful effect on competition.

a. Whether Vistnes' Opinion is Contradicted by the Facts

Defendants do not challenge the factual or economic underpinnings of Vistnes' opinion. Instead, Defendants allege that the facts necessary for any softening of competition as described by Vistnes are contradicted by the facts of the case; specifically that: (1) Defendants continued to raise compensation throughout the class period at different levels and rates; and (2) Defendants increased the number of nurses employed.

Vistnes softened competition opinion explains that:

> [a]n agreement to share information about future wages (or prices) can further magnify competitive problems associated with softening competition. If firms offer increased wages as a means of gaining a competitive advantage in labor markets, then providing advance notification to rivals about a firm's plans for future wages precludes that firm from using higher wages as a means of gaining an unanticipated competitive advantage over rivals. Thus, just by sharing information about historical wages can soften competition by reducing the lag between when one rival raises [57] wages and other rivals detect and can respond to those higher wages, sharing information about future wages can further reduce competition by completely eliminating any lag between when higher wages are offered and when rivals can detect and respond to those higher wages.

See Expert Report of Gregory S. Vistnes, Ph. D, June 22, 2009 at 6-7.

Therefore, Vistnes' opinion is not contradicted by the fact that hospitals continued to raise compensation and hire workers. Vistnes' opinion on its face does not require that all differences between hospitals be eliminated, the opinion merely states that competition will be reduced, raises will occur less often, and raises will be for smaller amounts. See Reply Report of Gregory S. Vistnes, Ph.D, December 4, 2009, at page 70 ("In a world with differentiation, however, there is no clear basis on which to assume that hospitals should all be paying their nurses the same amount, or that hospitals should be increasing wages by the same amount. Rather what is important is whether the information exchange led hospitals to offer lower wages than they otherwise would, and this outcome can occur even if hospitals do not eliminate all wage differentials."). [58] Therefore, Defendants criticisms are an insufficient basis to warrant precluding the testimony.

b. Whether Vistnes' Opinion Linked Information Exchanges to any Harm or Causation

Secondly, Defendants allege that Plaintiffs failed to link the information exchanges to any harm or causation. Specifically, they point out that Vistnes did not trace the timing and content of the information [*156] exchanges to the timing and content of Defendants' nurse compensation setting decisions.

Plaintiffs contend that "Dr. Vistnes' opinion that the information exchanges softened competition is based on a careful study of the details of those exchanges and the principles found in the economics literature regarding the competitive effect of information exchanges." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 14-15. They claim that, therefore, "[t]here is a solid basis from which to conclude that the particular exchanges under the particular circumstances of this case reduced Defendants' incentive to increase wages to gain a competitive advantage" which in and of itself is a reduction in competition. Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 15.

In McCullock v. H.B. Fuller Co., 61 F.3d 1038, 1044 (2d Cir. 1995), the Second Circuit held [59] that "[d]isputes as to . . . faults in [expert's] use of [particular scientific analysis] as a methodology . . . go to the weight, not the admissibility, of his testimony." Here, Defendants do not dispute the economic literature on which Vistnes bases his opinion, they only dispute that he fails to compare the timing of the exchanges to the changes in compensation. Defendants will have the opportunity to cross-examine Vistnes at trial as to his decision not to apply his conclusions to the timing of exchanges and compensation decisions, and the jury will be able to assign the appropriate weight to the expert's opinions. Furthermore, Vistnes' theory of softened competition purportedly does not lend itself to the sort of "tracing" promulgated by the Defendants. Individual information exchanges cannot be linked to particular compensation decisions because Vistnes' theory describes a cumulative effect on competition resulting from the timing, scope and nature of the information exchanges.

Accordingly, Vistnes opinions are admissible.

c. Defendants Ellis and Albany Medical Center's Joint Motion for Summary Judgment

Defendants move for summary judgment as to Counts I and II of Plaintiffs' Complaint. [60] Count I alleges that Defendants engaged in a continuing conspiracy to depress wages of RNs employed by Defendants in violation of Section 1 of Sherman Antitrust Act. Count II alleges that Defendants engaged in a continuing agreement to regularly exchange detailed and nonpublic information about the compensation being paid or to be paid to their RN employees in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Defendants maintain they are entitled to summary judgment as to: (1) Count I because there is no direct evidence of a compensation fixing conspiracy or evidence of parallel movement of Defendants' wages; and (2) Count II because Plaintiffs cannot establish market definition or causation. Additionally, Defendants maintain they are entitled to summary judgment as to both Counts because Plaintiffs cannot show harm to competition, injury in fact, or causation. Plaintiffs oppose the motion.

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act states, "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Specifically, this provision prohibits [61] "only unreasonable restraints of trade." Business Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988). "To establish a § 1 violation, a plaintiff must produce evidence sufficient to show: (1) a combination or some form of concerted [*157] action between at least two legally distinct economic entities; and (2) such combination or conduct constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade either per se or under the rule of reason. Top Markets, Inc. v. Quality Markets, Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 95-96 (2d Cir. 1998); see Capital Imaging Associated, P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Associates, Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir. 1993). In determining whether certain concerted action amounts to an unreasonable restraint, the action "is either analyzed (1) through the per se standard, which presumes that the questionable conduct has anticompetitive effects without comprehensive inquiry into whether the concerted actions produced adverse anticompetitive effects, or (2) through the so called rule of reason, a case- by-case method that involves consideration of all of the circumstances of a case to decide whether certain concerted action should be prohibited because it amounts to an anti-competitive practice." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litigation, 166 F.3d 112, 117-118 (3d Cir. 1999).

"To [62] survive [Defendants'] motion for summary judgment, [Plaintiffs] must establish that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether [Defendants] entered into an illegal conspiracy that caused [Plaintiffs] to suffer a cognizable injury." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). This showing has two components: (1) "[Plaintiffs] must show more than a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws; they must show an injury to them resulting from the illegal conduct;" and (2) "the issue of fact must be genuine." Id. Plaintiffs "must come forward with 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Id.

1. Count I - Per Se Claim

Defendants allege that they are entitled to summary judgment as to Count 1 because Plaintiffs cannot show an agreement to fix wages. Plaintiffs contend that they have "extensive evidence meeting the Matsushita standard for circumstantial proof of a per se claim." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 9.

"Generally, price-fixing [or in this case wage-fixing] agreements are considered a per se violation of the Sherman Act." In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 118 (citing United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 218, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940)). [63] "Per se violations include those types of restraints on competition that are in and of themselves considered unreasonable because 'their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable.'" Id. (quoting United States v. Cargo Service Stations, Inc., 657 F.2d 676, 682 n. 4 (5th Cir. Unit B 1981)); see Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). "Although the Sherman Act's language is arguably broad enough to include a 'purely tacit agreement to fix prices,' most courts agree 'that an express, manifested agreement, and thus an agreement involving actual verbalized communication, must be proved in order for a price-fixing conspiracy to be actionable under the Sherman Act.'" In re Ethylene Propylene Diene Monomer (EPDM) Antitrust Litigation, 681 F. Supp.2d 141, 165 (D. Conn. 2009) (citing In re High Fructose Corn Syrup Antitrust Litigation, 295 F.3d 651, 654 (7th Cir. 2002)). "To prove the existence of an express, manifested agreement, the antitrust plaintiff should present 'direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment [*158] to [64] a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" Id. (citing Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) (internal quotation omitted)); see also Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 252 (2d Cir. 1987) (holding that, "at a minimum," a jury must be able to conclude that "conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement" (quotation omitted)). Antitrust law, however, "limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. "Thus in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp.., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), [the Supreme Court] held that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing along, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. Therefore, "a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. (citing Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764).

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs do not have any direct evidence of an agreement to depress nurse pay and contend that "in order [65] to rely on circumstantial evidence to prove a Section 1 conspiracy claim [Plaintiffs] 'must first demonstrate that the defendants' actions were parallel.'" See Defendants' Memo. at 17-18 (quoting In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 907 F.2d 510, 514 (5th Cir. 1990)). Here, Plaintiffs do not purport to have direct evidence of a conspiracy, but instead argue they have extensive circumstantial proof of a per se claim.

As a preliminary matter, Plaintiffs contend that they do not have to prove parallel conduct. The Supreme Court has made clear that under Section 1 of the Sherman Act "'the crucial question' is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct 'stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express.'" Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Trombly, 550 U.S. 544, 553, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp.., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954)). "While a showing of parallel 'business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement,' it falls short of 'conclusively establishing agreement or . . . itself constituting a Sherman Act offense.'" Id. (quoting Theatre Enterprises, 346 U.S. at 540-541). Defendants [66] cite to In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 907 F.2d 510, 514 (1993), for the proposition that Plaintiffs must demonstrate that the defendants' actions were parallel to prove a Section 1 conspiracy claim. In this case, the Fifth Circuit held only that "[w]hen an antitrust plaintiff relies on circumstantial evidence of conscious parallelism to prove a § 1 claim, he must first demonstrate that the defendant's actions were parallel." Defendants cite to no case law that stands for the requirement that, to prevail, Plaintiffs must prove parallel pricing if they are not relying on conscious parallelism. Parallel pricing is merely "one such form of circumstantial evidence." In re Ethylene, 681 F. Supp.2d at 166. Accordingly, Plaintiffs need not prove parallel pricing in order to prevail on per-se claim based on circumstantial evidence. The issue, therefore, becomes whether Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient evidence to meet the Matsushita standard for circumstantial proof of a per se claim.

In Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 593-98, the Supreme Court held that a conspiracy case based on circumstantial [*159] evidence must be economically plausible and must exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators [67] acted independently.

a. Whether economically plausible

A conspiracy may be economically plausible if the defendants had a motive to engage in the conspiracy. In Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 592, the Court found that defendants had no motive to engage in a predatory pricing scheme absent some strong likelihood that the alleged conspiracy would eventually pay off. Because the Court did not find evidence that any alleged predatory pricing scheme was successful "petitioners had every incentive not to engage in the conduct with which they are charged, for its likely effect would be to generate losses . . . with no corresponding gains." Id. at 595. The Court held:

> [t]hat being the case, the absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a 'genuine issue for trial' exists . . . Lack of motive bears on the range of permissible conclusions that might be drawn from ambiguous evidence: if petitioners had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy.

Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 596-97.

Courts have also found circumstantial evidence [68] of an agreement through evidence of parallel pricing coupled with other "'plus factors' tending to establish that the defendants were not engaging merely in oligopolistic price maintenance or price leadership but rather in a collusive agreement to fix prices or otherwise restrain trade." City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcos Chemicals, Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 570 (11th Cir. 1998) (citing to Dunnivant v. Bi-State Auto Parts, 851 F.2d 1575, 1583 (11th Cir. 1988); Gainsville Util. Dep't v. Fla. Power & Light Co., 573 F.2d 292, 300-02 (5th Cir. 1978)); see In re Ethylene Propylene Diene Monomer Antitrust Litigation, 681 F. Supp. 2d 141 (D. Conn. 2009) ("[T]herefore, in addition to submitting evidence of parallel price increases, the plaintiffs must establish certain so-called 'plus' factors, 'which when viewed in conjunction with the parallel acts, can serve to allow a fact finder to infer a conspiracy.'") (quoting Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246 (2d Cir. 1987)).

The Court has already held that evidence of parallel pricing is not a prerequisite to a finding of an agreement based on circumstantial evidence. Plaintiffs argue that in a case involving wage fixing, as opposed to price fixing, parallel pricing would [69] be unexpected because the factors in employment decisions permit a conspiracy to operate without highly coordinated prices changes. A conspiracy to depress wages can continue to exist despite slight temporary differences in pay scales because these differences will not result in large scale employee movement. This is so because the costs associated with changing jobs may outweigh slight differences in pay. Secondly, Plaintiffs allege the conspiracy to depress wages is accomplished, not by coordinating wages, but instead, through the economic theory of softened competition. This theory posits that because the hospitals knew that any increase they made in wages would be known to the other hospitals, there was no incentive to increase wages so as to be more competitive than the others.

The "plus factors," however, are relevant to the determination of whether circumstantial evidence points to a conspiracy. Such "plus factors" include: (1) a motive to conspire, which can be evidence that the industry is susceptible to price-fixing; (2) noncompetitive behavior, i.e., [*160] evidence that the defendants acted contrary to their economic self interest; and (3) evidence of a traditional conspiracy, [70] such as a high level of inter-firm communications that would suggest that the defendants consciously agreed not to compete. In re Ethylene, 681 F. Supp.2d at 166 (citing to Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 253; In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 360 (3d Cir. 2004)).

Plaintiffs allege they have "strong circumstantial proof of the existence of the conspiracy. This proof includes the fact that: (1) Defendants' actions would be contrary to their economic interest if no conspiracy existed; (2) the structural characteristics of the market show that Plaintiff's allegations make economic sense; (3) the high degree of cooperation among Defendants created relationships conducive to reaching and maintaining a wage agreement; and (4) Defendants exchanged current prices.

(1) Contrary to Economic Interest

First, Plaintiffs argue that the information exchanges would be contrary to the Defendant's economic interest if no conspiracy existed. They argue that: (1) "no [71] hospital, facing a shortage of nurses, would directly disclose its pay structure to a competitor absent an agreement among those hospitals that the recipient will not use the information as a genuine competitor would do - to bid away nurses;" (2) "it is equally contrary to a hospital's independent self interest to operate short of critical staff without using the information it obtains from rivals to try and fill its vacancies from lower paying hospitals in the area;" and (3) "it makes no sense to freely give valuable market intelligence gained from one rival to another rather that use it to one's own advantage." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 9-12.

(2) Structure of the Market shows agreement makes economic sense

Second, Plaintiffs contend that the "structural characteristics of this market show that Plaintiffs' allegations made economic sense." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 13. They point to factors in the market such as: (1) the high cost of switching jobs; (2) the frequency of information exchanges; and (3) the potential for enormous gains because nurses represent the "largest single cost for the hospitals." See Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 13-14.

(3) High [72] Degree of Cooperation

Third, Plaintiffs allege that circumstantial evidence is particularly shown by the Defendants' continual and pervasive direct hospital-to-hospital exchanges of proprietary information about the amount they pay their nurses in the face of endemic shortages of nurses. In In re Ethylene, 681 F. Supp.2d at 173 the court explained:

> [w]ithout doubt, the key plus factor at summary judgment is the plaintiffs' evidence of an actual manifest agreement, i.e., evidence that includes 'customary indications of traditional conspiracy,' or 'proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown.' The plaintiffs have submitted documents memorializing meetings and discussions about prices and capacity issues they contend give rise to an inference of illegal collusion. Those documents indicate that the defendants were extremely chummy and treated each other more like colleagues than traditional competitors, and that the defendants' executives often communicated immediately before or after a . . . price increase.

[*161] The court held that "the plaintiffs' evidence [73] of the frequent and friendly communications between the defendants and the secrecy of their meetings [was] sufficient to allow a reasonable jury to infer that the defendants participated in an unlawful price-fixing conspiracy."

In this case, Defendant Hospitals exchanged wage information "through numerous e-mails, telephone calls, and in-person conversations at job fairs and professional association meetings." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 2; see Plaintiff's Response to Defendants' Statement of Undisputed Facts at paragraphs 8, 18, 23, 25, 49, 71, 72, 97, 103, 106, 130, 137. These communications discussed, among other things, staff RN pay ranges, RN new graduate rates, and shift differentials. Id. Plaintiffs maintain that "Defendants typically collected this information prior to budgeting and implementing RN pay adjustments." Id. Most significantly, these information exchanges contained current and future RN compensation information. Id.; see Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 211 (2d Cir. 2001)

("The Supreme Court has made clear that '[e]xchanges of current price information, of course, have the greatest potential for generating anti-competitive effects and although not per se unlawful [74] have consistently been held to violate the Sherman Act.'" (quoting Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 441 n. 16)).

Plaintiffs also argue that certain features of the information exchanges make it impossible for Defendants to yield pro-competitive results. These include: (1) the information exchange occurred "in the face of an acknowledged local shortage of nurses;" (2) "the information exchange is not public, that is, not shared with participants on both sides of the market;" and (3) "the information is shared directly with competitors, not through third parties who protect the anonymity of the shared data." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 11-12.

Considering the circumstantial evidence as a whole and construing it in the light most favorable to Plaintiff's, a reasonable jury could conclude that Defendants were engaged in collusive behavior.

b. Whether the Evidence Excludes the Possibility that the Alleged Conspirators Acted Independently

"Establishing an antitrust case on the basis of circumstantial evidence necessarily means that the evidence . . . is susceptible to differing inferences - the inference that, on the one hand, the defendants were engaged in illegally collusive behavior or that, on the [75] other hand, they were merely engaged in lawful, independent [wage setting]." In re Ethylene, 681 F. Supp.2d at 167. Therefore, pursuant to Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, and Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586, Plaintiffs "must present evidence that 'tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." "Important facts to evaluate in this analysis include: (1) whether the Defendants' actions, if taken independently, would be contrary to their economic self-interest; (2) whether the defendants have been uniform in their actions; and (3) whether the defendants have exchanged or have had the opportunity to exchange information relative to the alleged conspiracy; and (4) whether the defendants have a common motive to conspire." Re/Max Intern., Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1009 (6th Cir. 1999); see Wallace v. Bank of Bartlett, 55 F.3d 1166, 1168 (6th Cir. 1995). "Ordinarily, an affirmative answer to the first of these factors will consistently tend to exclude the likelihood of independent conduct." Id.

[*162] Here, Plaintiffs argue that if Defendants set compensation independently, their actions would have been contrary to their economic self interest. They maintain [76] that during a nursing shortage it would be against Defendants' best interests to exchange wage information because, absent an agreement, rivals would use the information to "poach" nurses and compete against each other. A rival would not be likely to exchange current and future wage information without entering into a prior agreement protecting it from competitors. The fact that but-for a wage agreement, Defendants would be acting against economic self interest is persuasive evidence that Defendants did not act independently. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have provided sufficient evidence of an agreement to with withstand summary judgment as to Count I.

2. Count 2 - Rule of Reason Claim

Defendants contend they are entitled to summary judgment as to Count II because Plaintiffs cannot show that Defendants' information exchanges harmed competition. Count II of Plaintiffs' Complaint alleges that "defendants and their co-conspirators have engaged in a continuing agreement to regularly exchange detailed and non-public information about the compensation being paid or to be paid to their RN employees" and that "[t]his agreement is an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the [77] Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1." In United States v. Citizens & Southern National Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 95 S. Ct. 2099, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1975), the Supreme Court held that "the dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Act." "Where the violation lies in the information exchange itself - as opposed to merely using the information exchange as evidence upon which to infer a price-fixing agreement . . . [the] exchange can be found unlawful under a rule of reason analysis." Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 198 (2d Cir. 2001); see Battipaglia v. N.Y. State Liquor Auth., 745 F.2d 166, 174-75 (2d Cir. 1984). Under the rule of reason analysis, the "test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition." F.T.C. v. Indiana Federation of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (2009) (quoting Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918)). "Before a factfinder may consider the harms and benefits of the challenged behavior, a plaintiff initially must show that 'the challenged action had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant [78] market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice.'" Top Markets, Inc., 142 F.3d at 96 (quoting Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543 (emphasis in original)). To satisfy this burden, Plaintiff must either: (1) show an actual adverse effect on competition; or (2) establish that Defendants had sufficient market power to cause an adverse effect on competition. See Top Markets, Inc., 142 F.3d at 96; see K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 128-129 (2d Cir. 1995); Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546 ("The plaintiffs may satisfy this burden without detailed market analysis by offering proof of actual detrimental effects, such as reduction of output. Yet, where the plaintiff is unable to demonstrate actual effects, it must at least establish that defendants possess the requisite market power so that their arrangement has the potential for genuine adverse effects on competition.")(internal citation omitted). "If plaintiff satisfies this burden, the burden then shifts to defendant to offer evidence [*163] that its conduct had pro-competitive effects." Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Fund v. Bayer AG, 604 F.3d 98, 104 (2d Cir. 2010). "If [79] defendant is able to offer such proof, the burden shifts back to plaintiff, who must prove that any legitimate competitive effects could have been achieved through less restrictive alternatives." Id.

Here Defendants argue that Plaintiffs cannot establish "a relevant market" or "that Defendants' information exchanges actually caused any anticompetitive suppression of nurse compensation." See Defendants' Memo. at 23.

a. Actual Adverse Effect on Competition

"In order to fulfill this requirement, the plaintiff must show more than just that he was harmed by defendants' conduct." K.M.B. Warehouse, 61 F.3d at 127; see Borger v. Yamaha Int'l Corp., 625 F.2d 390, 397 (2d Cir. 1980). "The overarching standard is whether defendants' actions 'diminish overall competition, and hence consumer welfare.'" Id. (quoting Graphic Prods. Distribs. v. Itek Corp., 717 F.2d 1560, 1571, 1573 (11th Cir. 1983). An actual adverse effect can be shown "by examining factors like reduced output, increased prices and decreased quality." Virgin Atlantic Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 264 (2d Cir. 2001).

In this case, Plaintiffs argue that they "have presented evidence of adverse effects on competition [80] arising from Defendants' agreement to trade nurse compensation data" by producing "both evidence that the Albany hospital nurse market is characterized by significant and persistent shortage of nurses . . . and evidence of depressed wages." Plaintiffs' Opposition Memo. at 19. Plaintiffs have introduced the expert testimony of Prof. Ashenfelter who employs economic methodology to show that RN wages were depressed during the class period and that nurses were underutilized in the Albany area. Ashenfelter compared the actual wages paid to staff nurses in the Defendant hospitals with actual wages paid to agency nurses to determine how much staff nurses should have been paid. He also used actual employment data in the Albany area and nationwide when determining utilization rates. This evidence, if believed, shows an actual adverse effect on all RNs in the defendants hospitals; that their wages were depressed and that hospitals were underutilizing staff nurses. C.f. Top Markets, Inc., 142 F.3d at 96 (unable to satisfy burden because "failed to demonstrate an actual detrimental effect on competition" because "[i]t relied almost entirely on the [an affidavit], which discussed potentially higher [81] prices but failed to allege prices were actually higher, failed to provide proof that the plaintiff's exclusion from the market had resulting in any decrease in quality of service to area shoppers, and failed to allege that other supermarkets were excluded from the market."); Virgin Atlantic Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 264 (unable to satisfy burden because plaintiff does not provide any hard data to support their expert's calculations and expert testimony rooted in hypothetical assumptions cannot substitute for actual market data"). Plaintiffs have likewise offered the expert testimony of Prof. Vistnes to explain the mechanism by which information exchanges lead to suppressed wages through the economic theory of softened competition. Evidence of suppressed wages and underutilization in conjunction with an explanation of how these information exchanges can lead to softened competition is sufficient to satisfy Plaintiffs' burden on summary judgment. Because Plaintiff' have demonstrated actual adverse effects they do not have to [*164] make a showing of sufficient market power. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 546 ("The plaintiffs may satisfy this burden without detailed [82] market analysis by offering proof of actual detrimental effects, such as reduction of output."). Accordingly, Plaintiffs have provided sufficient evidence of anticompetitive effect to with withstand summary judgment as to Count II.

3. Whether Plaintiffs have Evidence to Prove Harm to Competition or Injury-in-Fact Defendants contend they are entitled to summary judgment because Plaintiffs have failed to provide evidence of harm to competition or injury in fact. They allege that because Ashenfelter's benchmark methodology and analysis is speculative and lacks factual support it fails to prove anticompetitive effects and injury to the class. Defendants reargue the same points made in their joint motion to exclude the expert testimony Orley Ashenfelter. For the reasons stated previously in this opinion, the methodology is admissible for proving harm to competition and injury in fact. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have provided sufficient evidence of harm to competition or injury in fact to withstand summary judgment.

4. Whether Plaintiffs have Evidence to Prove Causation

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs cannot prove the alleged anti-trust injury was caused by Defendants' alleged violation of the [83] antitrust laws. They allege that the only way causation can be shown is to "'conduct an empirical inquiry into the effect of the information exchange on compensation decisions and resulting compensation outcomes' which 'requires a close examination of the scope, nature, and timing, of information exchanges juxtaposed against outcomes captured by actual compensation data.'" Defendants' Mem. at 33 (quoting Willig Report paragraph 76). Defendants submit that their own expert, Prof. Willig, "reviewed the information exchanges in painstaking detail - exchange by exchange - and evaluated their effects on Defendants' actual compensation decisions" finding no "systemic or causal link between RN compensation and the information exchanges." Id. at 35. Accordingly, Defendants contend that "Plaintiffs present[ed] no evidence that, in the absence of the direct information exchanges" would nurses have made more money. Id.

"The requirement that an antitrust plaintiff demonstrate that the alleged illegal acts were the cause of its damages is well established." Sound Ship Bldg. Corp. v. Bethlehem Steel Co. (Inc.), 533 F.2d 96, 98 (1976); See Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 114 n.9, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969). [84] This can be satisfied by setting forth "a theory or . . . set of facts in the depositions and other documents . . . [to] show a causal link." See Sound Ship Bldg., 533 F.2d at 98.

In this case Plaintiffs have set forth a theory of causation supported by expert testimony and economic theory. Plaintiffs' expert, Prof. Vistnes, is offered to explain how the theory of softening of competition and how information exchanges of current information can lead to depressed wages. Plaintiffs also offer the testimony of Ashenfelter to provide evidence that the wages were indeed suppressed. Plaintiffs argue that Dr. Vistnes' analysis does not allow for "evidence linking specific exchange of pay data to some specific pay decision, because that is not how the theory of softening competition works."

For purposes of summary judgment, the Court finds Plaintiffs' theory persuasive for inferring causation. Accordingly, [*165] Plaintiffs' evidence is sufficient to withstand Defendants' joint motion for summary judgment.

d. Plaintiff's Motion to Exclude Portions of Expert Testimony of Robert Willig

Robert Willig is Defendants' expert witness retained to: (1) "assess the collusion and information exchange claims and [85] their alleged effect on the compensation of members of the class"; (2) "opine on whether conditions in the Albany area have been conducive to the alleged coordination and conspiracy;" and (3) "to examine and respond to the analysis and opinion on these issues set forth by Plaintiffs' experts." See Defendants' Opposition Memo. at 1.

Plaintiffs argue that "the Court should prohibit Prof. Willig from offering any opinion in this case concerning: (1) [w]hether the fact discovery record in this case is probative or not of the alleged conspiracy; and (2) [t]he information the Defendants did or did not consider in making their compensation decisions, and the effect or lack of effect particular information had on such decisions." See Plaintiffs' Memo. at 6-7. Plaintiffs argue these opinions "supplant the role of the jury" because "[t]he jury is fully capable of reading the same lay documents and lay deposition testimony as Prof. Willig and deciding whether they contain evidence of the conspiracy and what they show about the basis of Defendants' compensation decisions." Id. at 1. Accordingly, Plaintiffs contend that "Willig's interpretation of the meaning and significance of such documents and [86] deposition testimony on pure factual questions is inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence." Id. Defendants oppose this motion arguing that "Prof. Willig's testimony satisfies the requirements for admissibility of expert testimony under Fed. Rule of Evidence 702." See Defendants' Opposition Memo. at 1.

Fed. R. Evidence 702 provides that "[i]f scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert . . . may testify thereto." "For an expert's testimony to be admissible under this Rule, however, it must be directed to matters within the witness' scientific, technical, or specialized knowledge and not to lay matters which a jury is capable of understanding and deciding without the expert's help." Andrews v. Metro North Commuter R. Co., 882 F.2d 705, 708 (1989); see McGowan v. Cooper Indus., Inc., 863 F.2d 1266, 1272 (6th Cir. 1988); Scott v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 789 F.2d 1052, 1055-56 (4th Cir. 1986); United States v. Binder, 769 F.2d 595, 602 (9th Cir. 1985); Strong v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours Co., 667 F.2d 682, 685-86 (8th Cir. 1981). Furthermore, the testimony [87] must "assist the trier of fact." Nimely v. City of New York, 414 F.3d 381, 397 (2d Cir. 2005). "Expert testimony that 'usurp[s] either the role of the trial judge in instructing the jury as to the applicable law or the role of the jury in applying that law to the facts before it,' by definition does not 'aid the jury in making a decision'; rather, it 'undertakes to tell the jury what result to reach,' and this 'attempts to substitute the expert's judgment for the jury's.'" Nimely, 414 F.3d at 397 (quoting Bilzerian, 926 F.2d at 1294; United States v. Duncan, 42 F.3d 97, 101 (2d Cir. 1994)).

1. Whether Willig can Testify as to the Absence of Conspiracy Evidence

Plaintiffs' argue that Willig makes overly broad statements concerning the absence [*166] of conspiracy evidence. [5] They argue that these statements "offer factual conclusions based solely on [Willig's] lay understanding of fact evidence" and are, thus, inadmissible. Plaintiffs' Reply Memo. at 1. Defendants counter that experts are entitled to offer testimony that "embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact." Fed. R. Evid. 704 (a); see United States v. Bilzerian, 926 F.2d 1285, 1294 (2d Cir. 1991) (an expert witness [88] may "opine on an issue of fact within the jury's province" and "factual conclusions may be included in an expert's testimony" as long as the expert does not state "ultimate legal conclusions based on those facts.").

Defendants contend that Willig's testimony "was informed by economic principles . . . regarding the importance of 'focal points', the economic incentives for hospitals to cheat on an alleged agreement to suppress RN wages, and the factors that make monitoring and enforcing such an agreement [89] more difficult in this market." Defendants' Opposition Memo. at 6. Therefore, they contend, Willig is not "offering his lay understanding of purely factual evidence, but interpreting that evidence in light of economic principles with which the average juror will be unfamiliar." Id.

In this case, Prof. Willig is not, as Plaintiffs suggest, merely looking at the evidence and determining that he does not think the evidence indicates the existence of a conspiracy. Instead, he is looking at the evidence and interpreting the likelihood of a conspiracy based on certain well accepted economic factors. "Economic literature recognizes three elements required for collusion to have sustained impact on a market: the parties to the alleged agreement must be able to '(1) reach consensus on the terms or focal point of an agreement, (2) detect cheating on

[5] The specific statements to which Plaintiffs object are: (1) "I have seen no evidence suggesting that such an agreement [to suppress nurse wages] existed;" (2) "there is no evidence to indicate that non-base wages, much less base wages, were the focal point of any alleged conspiracy;" (3) "[a]fter reviewing these information exchange documents, I have not found any evidence that suggests the presence of an agreement to fix wages or any evidence that rivals punished deviators that implemented significant rate increases of the type shown by AMC and NEH;" and (4) "[t]here is no evidence that a conspiracy was particularly directed at nurses in speciality departments." Plaintiffs' Memo. at 2.

the agreement, and (3) push deviations from the agreement.'" Defendants' Opposition Memo. at 7 (quoting Expert Report of Robert D. Willig at paragraph 9). Based on these elements Willig opines that: (1) "without 'focal point corresponding to the actual terms of the alleged agreement, a Defendants could not know how to comply with the alleged conspiracy, [90] monitor adherence to it by its rivals, or effectively enforce it;'" and (2) "'[m]arket conditions and the characteristics of the . . . services offered' affect the likelihood that collusion will lead to anticompetitive outcomes." Id. (quoting Expert Report of Robert D. Willig at paragraphs 11 and 9). He further opines that the type of agreement suggested by the Plaintiffs is unlikely based on the economic state of the market and the way in which the information exchanges took place. These opinions are informed by his background knowledge in economics and his ability to apply the facts to this information. A juror would not have this expertise or the ability to apply the factual information to Willig's background knowledge. Accordingly, his opinions maybe helpful to the jury and are admissible.

[*167] 2. Whether Willig can Testify as to the Information Defendants Considered in Making their Compensation Decisions, and the Effect of that Information on their Decisions

Plaintiffs argue that Willig's opinions regarding statements about Defendants' use of each other's compensation information are "outside the scope of his expertise, and invade[] the jury's province" because they are factual conclusions [91] based on "nothing more than his reading of the factual record." [6] Plaintiffs' Memo. at 3. They contend that "Prof. Willig has absolutely no economic principle or method of analysis for divining what factored into Defendants' compensation decisions." Id.

According to Defendants, Willig conducted an "economic analysis of whether there [was] a causal link between the levels and changes in RN compensation and the [] information exchanges." Defendants' Opposition Memo. at 10. In order to complete this analysis, Willig examined the "scope, nature, and timing of information exchange juxtaposed against outcomes captured by actual compensation data." Id. He determined that evidence was lacking to prove a causal connection. Defendants contend that the proposed testimony "will help the jury by showing them there is no connection between the alleged conduct and actual compensation decisions." Id. at 11.

In addition to testifying regarding these findings, Defendants also seek to allow Willig to "opine at trial regarding both Defendants' [use of information exchanges] in the compensation setting process and the ultimate effect they had on RN compensation." Defendants' Opposition [94] Memo. at 10. They argue that "Willig's analysis of the payroll data makes him especially qualified to render an opinion regarding the effect the information exchanges had

[6] The specific statements to which Defendants object include: (1) "The evidence supports the position that the information received by Ellis from other hospitals did not form the basis of compensation decisions or negotiation strategies. Nor does it appear to have had an incremental impact on such decisions to the detriment of Ellis nurses;" (2) "Based on these facts, it seems likely that knowledge gained from this informal salary survey led to wage changes [at Ellis] that were higher than would otherwise have been negotiated;" (3) "Dr. Vistnes has not shown, and I have not found, instances where these information exchanges led to Ellis negotiating wages with the NYSNA below that which would have existed but for these exchanges;" (4) "The information received by St. Peter's was not the basis of compensation decisions, although St. Peter's considered certain information received. Nor does the information disclosed in these exchanges indicate [92] that it had an incremental impact on compensation decisions that inured to the detriment of St. Peter's RNs;" (5) "There is no evidence or testimony indicating that St. Peter's used this information to modify its own shift differential practices in a manner that would have made its nurses worse off than without the information received by St. Peter's;" (6) "The information received by Seton was not the basis of compensation decisions, although Seton considered certain information from these exchanges. I find no evidence to suggest that the information subject to these exchanges had an incremental impact on compensation decisions that inured to the detriment of Seton RNs;" (7) "The information obtained from other hospitals appears to have contributed to Seton's decision to increase RN wages to remain market competitive;" (8) "Dr. Vistnes has not shown, and I have not found, instances where Seton set RN compensation at levels below that which would have existed but for these information exchanges;" and (9) "The information received by NEH does not appear to have been the basis for any compensation decision other than determining that its wages were not at competitive levels and required [93] significant increases. I find no evidence to suggest that the information shared through these exchanges had an incremental impact on compensation decisions which made NEH's RNs worse off than they would have been but for these information exchanges." Plaintiffs' Memo. at 3-4.

on compensation decisions. [*168] Id. Expert witnesses are not permitted to testify as to the "knowledge, motivations, intent, state of mind, or purposes" of others. See In re Fosamaz Products Liability Litigation, 645 F. Supp.2d 164, 192 (S.D.N.Y. 2009); In re Rezulin Products Liability Litigation, 309 F. Supp.2d 531, 546 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) ("[T]he opinions of these witnesses on the intent, motives, or states of mind of corporations, regulatory agencies and others have no basis in any relevant body of knowledge or expertise."); *Taylor v. Evans, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3907, 1997 WL 154010, at * 2 (S.D.N.Y. 1997)* ("[M]usings as to defendants' motivations would not be admissible if given by any witness - lay or expert."). Willig's expertise as an economist does not give him any specialized knowledge to discern the thought processes of those setting compensation at Defendant Hospitals. Id. ("regulatory expertise does not give her the ability to read minds.") Likewise, his expertise does not allow him to discern the effect the information learned in the information [95] exchanges had on others' compensation-setting decisions.

Accordingly, Willig is permitted to testify to his economic analysis comparing the timing of the information exchanges with the timing of compensation decisions and his opinion that he finds no connection or correlation between the two. Conversely, Willig will not be permitted to testify as to what information Defendants considered and the weight that information played in setting nurse compensation.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons Defendants' Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Orley Ashenfelter [Docket No. 355/358] is DENIED; Defendants' Joint Motion to Exclude Expert Testimony of Gregory Vistnes [Docket No. 344/356] is DENIED; Defendants' Joint Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 345] is DENIED; and Plaintiffs' Motion to Exclude Portions of Expert Testimony of Robert Willig is GRANTED IN PART.

Summary judgment is not disfavored in the antitrust context. The entry of summary judgment in favor of an antitrust defendant may actually be required in order to prevent lengthy and drawn-out litigation, which may have a chilling effect on competitive market forces. Furthermore, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences that can be drawn from ambiguous evidence. To avoid summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff must come forward with economically plausible evidence supporting the elements of its claim. When the evidence in the record is as consistent with permissible competition as it is with an illegal conspiracy, such evidence, standing alone, fails to support an inference of an illegal conspiracy. In the end, the plaintiff in an antitrust case responding to a summary judgment motion must overcome a "higher threshold," which is imposed in order to avoid deterring innocent conduct that reflects enhanced, rather than restrained, competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN4[] Sherman Act, Scope

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. It is well established that this provision prohibits only "unreasonable" restraints of trade. The "rule of reason" standard applies in this context.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN5[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

In order to survive summary judgment where the rule of reason applies, the plaintiff must show concerted action, antitrust injury, evidence that the conspiracy produced adverse, anticompetitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets, and evidence that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to the conspiracy were illegal.

The plaintiff may satisfy its burden by showing either actual anticompetitive effects or proof of the defendant's market power. The notion of "market power" in this context is defined as the ability to raise prices above those that would exist in a competitive market. The burden then shifts to the defendant to show a sufficient pro-competitive justification or objective for the challenged conduct. A restraint cannot be justified solely on the basis of social welfare considerations. The plaintiff then must demonstrate that the restraint itself is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective. In other words, even if an anticompetitive restraint is intended to achieve a legitimate objective, the restraint only survives a rule of reason analysis if it is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate objectives proffered by the defendant. The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.

HN6[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Section 2 of the Sherman Act targets persons who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. This offense of monopolization has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. As to the second element, a monopolist willfully acquires or maintains monopoly power when it competes on some basis other than the merits. In turn, the offense of attempted monopolization has the following three elements: (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. The final element requires an inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market as well as the defendant's economic power in that market. In turn, market share, while crucial, may not always be determinative. Once the plaintiff demonstrates harm to competition, the defendant then has to show that it is actually promoting a pro-competitive or legitimate business objective.

"Tying" is defined as selling one good (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchase another separate good (the tied product).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN9[] Sherman Act, Claims

A private antitrust plaintiff must establish that it suffered an "antitrust injury" as a result of the misconduct and therefore possesses the standing necessary to seek relief. The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition not competitors. Therefore, the injury prong requires: (1) harm of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent; and (2) an injury to the plaintiff which flows from that which makes defendant's acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

HN10[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

It is widely recognized that in many circumstances exclusive dealing arrangements may be highly efficient, to assure supply, price stability, outlets, investment, best efforts or the like, and pose no competitive threat at all. The competition to be an exclusive supplier may constitute a vital form of rivalry, and often the most powerful one, which the antitrust laws encourage rather than suppress.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

HN11[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit adopts the following general rule: the Sherman Act does not forbid sanctioning bodies and other sports-related organizations from freely (i.e., without any coercion or improper interference) adopting exclusive equipment requirements, so long as such organizations otherwise possess, in good faith, sufficient pro-competitive or business justifications for their actions. At the same time, the Third Circuit is not granting any kind of antitrust immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

HN12[] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish antitrust injury, a plaintiff must show harm to competition, not just harm to the plaintiff competitor.

Opinion

[*62] COWEN, Circuit Judge

The Plaintiff in this antitrust matter, a tire supplier, appeals from the order of the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania granting the respective motions for summary judgment filed by the Defendants, a tire supplier competitor and a motorsports sanctioning body. Plaintiff's claims arise out of the adoption of the so-called "single tire rule" by various sanctioning bodies in the sport of dirt oval track racing as well as the related exclusive supply contracts between these sanctioning bodies and the Defendant tire supplier. Plaintiff further challenges the District Court's denial of its motion for leave to amend its complaint. We will affirm.

I.

A.The Parties

We refer to the four companies listed as the Plaintiffs in the current matter by the name of the parent company, "STA." [1] STA manufactures and sells speciality tires for a variety of vehicles, such as aircraft, farming equipment, and racing cars. It specifically manufactures and sells a "house brand" known as "American Racer." This [3] American Racer line includes dirt track racing tires, asphalt track racing tires, ATV ("all terrain vehicle") racing tires, passenger performance tires, and race track equipment tires. Defendant Hoosier Racing Tire Corp. ("Hoosier") is a family-owned business, which focuses almost exclusively on the racing tire business (in contrast to STA, which sells a large variety of different kinds of speciality tires and is owned by a holding company named Polymer Enterprises, Inc.). Hoosier is the largest race tire manufacturer in the world that specializes in manufacturing racing tires.

STA, Hoosier, and the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. ("Goodyear") represent the three major competitors in the alleged market of tires for dirt oval track racing in the United States and Canada. There were at least five competitors in this market in the 1980s and the 1990s, namely, STA, which was previously known as McCreary, Hoosier, Goodyear, Firestone, and [4] M & H.

The evidence in the record indicates that Hoosier's market share in the dirt oval track market grew from 59.6% in 1998 to 65% in 2000. In terms of sales revenue, Hoosier's market share for dirt track racing tires increased from 69% in 2003 to 79% in 2007. For dirt sprint car tires, Hoosier's market share increased from 87% in 2003 to 94% in 2007. On the other hand, STA's share of the dirt tire market dropped from 29% to 19% between 2003 and 2007, while Goodyear's share remained the same at approximately 2%. STA's dirt sprint tire share likewise fell from 10% in 2003 to 5% in 2007, and Goodyear's share similarly went from 3% in 2003 to 1% in 2007.

Defendant Dirt Motor Sports, Inc. d/b/a World Racing Group ("DMS") is a motorsports sanctioning body. As explained in more detail in Section I.B, infra, DMS and the other sanctioning bodies organize and promote races and, in turn, promulgate rules governing these races. DMS, in particular, owns such well-known touring series as the "World of Outlaw Sprint Car Series" and the "Late Model Series." It sanctions over 5,000 races per year at over 200 dirt oval tracks in twenty-one states. [*63] In 2005, DMS acquired another sanctioning body known [5] as United Midwest Promoters ("UMP"). There are two other major sanctioning companies in the field of dirt oval track racing: (1) Amicus International Motor Contest Association ("IMCA") (sanctioning races at approximately 112 dirt oval tracks); and (2) WISSOTA Promotions, Inc. ("WISSOTA") (sanctioning races at approximately fifty-seven dirt oval tracks). Combined, DMS, IMCA, and WISSOTA sanction modified, late model, sprint, or stock car races at over 70% of the 636 weekly tracks in the United States.

B.The Role of Sanctioning Bodies and the "Single Tire Rule"

As the District Court recognized, the role played by sanctioning bodies in dirt oval track racing (and, in fact, in motorsports racing in general) is of special importance here. Track owners or promoters typically belong to a sanctioning body, which charges sanctioning fees in exchange for this privilege of membership. These bodies sanction races, and they formulate rules for such races. These sanctioning bodies (like the track owners and promoters) compete to attract car owners (generally known as "racers"), drivers, and fans to their respective races. Accordingly, the sanctioning bodies create various incentives in order to get [6] the most racers, drivers, and fans.

[1] The four Plaintiff companies are: (1) Race Tires America, Inc., a Division of Speciality Tires of America Inc.; (2) Speciality Tires of America, Inc.; (3) Speciality Tires of America (Pennsylvania), Inc.; and (4) Speciality Tires of America (Tennessee), LLC.

The record reveals that these sanctioning bodies often choose to adopt a "single tire rule." Such a rule generally requires that a specific tire type and brand be used on one or more wheel positions for one or more classes of cars for a series of races or racing seasons.

Significantly, the sanctioning bodies generally do not buy the tires themselves, and the tires are purchased by the participating racers and drivers. The organizations instead establish the tire parameters and requirements for the race. Some rules may define the permissible tire by merely a bead size or some other physical dimension. Other rules may require that the tires at one or more wheel locations be a particular type or brand. Tire rules that do not require a specific brand of tire are generally called "open tire rules."

Tires are not the only components of a race car subject to a single source or manufacturer rule. Sanctioning bodies make rules that may specify the appropriate carburetors, mufflers, chassis, or other kinds of equipment to be used. For example, Amicus United States Auto Club, Inc. ("USAC") has a "spec engine rule" for its Ford Focus Midget Series, which requires [7] the use of Ford engines. United Racing Club ("URC") has a rule requiring a single brand of cylinder heads, manufactured by the sanctioning body's sponsor. The International Race of Champions Series mandates that the drivers actually use identical cars. Regardless of the kind of equipment at issue, the record indicates that a sanctioning body makes these fundamental determinations based on an assessment of its own self-interest.

C.Single Tire Rules and Exclusive Agreements

Evidence in the record further demonstrates that STA has, at least in the past, supported the single tire rule. In fact, its own website takes credit for the concept itself, stating that:

> In the 1970's [sic], Joe Jacobs, the developer of the race tire business that eventually became Race Tires America, proposed and encouraged race tracks and promoters to adopt spec tire or track tire rules. Under this concept, track owners and promoters adopted a manufacturer's tire for a particular class of races for the duration of a racing season. [*64] The purpose of the rule was to avoid the almost constant pace of tire changes that were particularly costly to racers, and to encourage racer parity by removing the "'hot'" tire setups. [8] With all racers competing on a single tire design and compound, the tire wars would be quelled and race results would be more related to a driver's skill and ability and not a more expensive "'state-of-the-art'" tire. The acceptance of spec tire rules contributed to the success and popularity of dirt track racing in America.

(A484.) STA's website goes on to attack the abuse of such "spec tire rules," claiming that such abuse has resulted, inter alia, in the concentration of market power in the hands of a single monopolistic tire supplier, the loss of true competition between the few remaining tire suppliers, and harm to STA, other suppliers, track owners, promoters, and the drivers themselves. In this litigation, STA attempts to distinguish its prior support for the single tire rule by claiming that it merely promoted the adoption of a track rule that would remain in effect for a single racing season, in contrast to Hoosier's practice of entering into a series of exclusive supply contracts with major sanctioning bodies that, in turn, encompass thousands of races and last for periods of up to seven years.

In fact, the above statement from the website actually comes from a proposal by [9] STA for a "Declaration in Favor of Competition." The accompanying petition or "Declaration" expressly calls for: (1) the establishment of track tire rules based on various objective criteria; (2) the prohibition of "any rule, policy, or practice mandating or providing for the use of a single manufacturer's tire;" (3) the creation of "non-discriminatory compensation rates" to offset "the cost of driver point funds and driver amenities;" (4) the related prohibition against tire suppliers making "lump sum or flat fee" payments to the sanctioning bodies, promoters, and tracks, and (5) changes on the part of the tire suppliers in order to ensure adequate inventories and company representatives at all racing events. (Id.) The petition also goes on to condemn the fact that the single tire formula previously used to achieve competitive parity has since evolved into "a scheme allowing a single manufacturer to capture and monopolize the market for dirt race tires." (Id.) It appears that approximately 1300 racers, drivers, and other racing industry participants have actually signed STA's "Declaration in Favor of Competition."

Irish Saunders, the contract services manager for Hoosier, internally [10] circulated a sarcastic e-mail dated September 14, 2007, in response to this "Declaration in Favor of Competition." This e-mail purportedly described Hoosier's "Declaration in Favor of Taking Over the Industry," as proposed by the tire supplier's general manager, "Smash."

The District Court also reviewed the process that sanctioning bodies may use to select a particular supplier under the applicable tire rule. In short, a sanctioning body may decide to send a formal Request for Proposal ("RFP") to the various tire suppliers. The organization usually requires the supplier to provide sponsorship contributions. In general, these contributions may be used as part of the sanctioning body's "point funds." These point funds are generally paid to winning drivers at the end of the racing season, and they represent one of the major incentives used by sanctioning bodies to attract racers and drivers. Nevertheless, the money received by the sanctioning body may actually be used in whatever manner the sanctioning body itself wants, such as to fund its general [*65] operations. A sanctioning body, in turn, is certainly free to request a less expensive tire instead of greater financial contributions. Furthermore, [11] if a sanctioning body is satisfied with its current tire supplier, it may elect to remain with that supplier rather than solicit bids from the supplier's competitors.

According to STA, "[f]or the years 2003-2007, Hoosier knew of only seven instances (four of which were after RTA filed this suit) where sanctioning companies or tracks had requested competitive bids." (Appellants' Brief at 20 (citing A543-A544).) However, it still appears that the tire suppliers were generally aware when a contract exists and could seek to compete for the business if they wanted it. Tire suppliers have accordingly been successful in their efforts to take business away from their competitors over the years.

The record in this case indicates that STA itself has competed, often successfully, to become the exclusive supplier of tires to several sanctioning bodies. In fact, STA, either directly or through its distributors, has successfully procured single tire contracts to the exclusion of Hoosier. Its distributors are required by contract to "interact[] with track owners/promoters and Associations and to actively pursue track rule and other race tire business." (A1439.) Even after the filing of this lawsuit, [12] STA's distributors have continued to bid on exclusive tire supplier contracts, with some success. Furthermore, STA has repeatedly offered to pay money to the sanctioning bodies in exchange for an American Racer-only arrangement. For instance, Lias Tire, an STA distributor, recently won an exclusive agreement with URC, agreeing, inter alia, to pay $ 14,500.00 to this sanctioning body for the right to provide the exclusive tire at approximately thirty events in 2008. STA likewise has not instructed its distributors to cease making such exclusive deals or to refrain from offering or providing financial support to the sanctioning bodies.

Nevertheless, STA claims that Hoosier's exclusive single tire contracts foreclose competition. STA claims that these exclusive contracts date as far back as 1997, when Hoosier allegedly began to implement its "form contract" strategy.

Hoosier's form contract specifically obligates the sanctioning bodies and tracks "to insure that Hoosier Racing Tires are the only tires sold or run" in all events. (A1578-A1579 (emphasis omitted).) The form further provides that Hoosier would pay promotional money to the sanctioning body or track. These promotional fees are [13] unrestricted and accordingly may be used either for general operations or for point funds. In turn, the form contains a continuous renewal requirement, providing that the arrangement would be automatically renewed for another year unless written notice of intention to terminate was given by August 1. Such "nullification" of the agreement would allegedly release Hoosier from its obligation to provide at least some of the promised financial support. According to STA, "there is a strong incentive to renew, because non-renewal would jeopardize the prospect of a November payment" of the promised money. (Appellants' Brief at 12.) Hoosier's "Negotiating Guidelines" document also indicates that Hoosier seeks longer contracts based on the respective profit margins. Finally, Saunders sent out a January 24, 2007 e-mail, which was entitled "American Racer Pricing" and addressed at some length the issue of competition between STA and Hoosier.

Hoosier identifies over seventy exclusive contracts that it or its distributors have entered into with sanctioning bodies since 2003. Although referring in its appellate brief to other sanctioning bodies, STA generally [*66] focuses on five sanctioning bodies that [14] have selected Hoosier as their exclusive supplier: (1) IMCA; (2)

WISSOTA; (3) American Spring Car Series ("ASCS"); (4) USAC; and (5) DMS. In turn, the District Court itself considered at some length the practices of these five sanctioning bodies, and we will do so as well.

1.IMCA

IMCA sanctions races in the Midwest on both dirt and asphalt surfaces. It appears that, from the 1980s to approximately 2005, IMCA required its drivers to use the G-60 American Racer tire manufactured by STA. But this long-standing yet informal arrangement between STA and IMCA involved no set duration, no up-front money, no penalties, no automatic renewal, no enforcement mechanism, and was not even in writing. On the other hand, STA also evidently refused to disclose pricing information to IMCA or to explain a sharp increase in its tire prices.

In December 2003, IMCA sent an RFP to Goodyear, Hoosier, and STA for a three-year exclusive contract. Hoosier offered a five-year contract, informing the sanctioning body that this proposal was "very important to our overall business strategy." (A1418.) In addition, it evidently proposed substantial up-front money to IMCA, including a signing bonus, even though the sanctioning [15] body did not request any such up-front payments. It further offered to pay IMCA money based on the number of tires ultimately sold. IMCA eventually entered into a five-year automatically renewable exclusive contract with Hoosier, which would, inter alia, purportedly limit price increases in the future. STA meanwhile has continued to sell its G-60 American Racer tire to non-IMCA tracks, including at least one track that chose to drop its IMCA sanction.

2.WISSOTA

WISSOTA has its principal place of business in Minnesota and sanctions races in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Wyoming, and Canada. It appears that WISSOTA has had a Hoosier-only rule since 1984. Hoosier extended the contract to 2007 in exchange for Hoosier making a significant payment of money to be used to pay off a court judgment obtained by an excluded transmission manufacturer against the sanctioning body.

In October 2006, WISSOTA sent out an RFP to Goodyear, Hoosier, and STA. The sanctioning body's president, Terry Voeltz, advised STA that its racers and drivers wanted a low tire price without point funds. STA offered (through a distributor) a lower tire price than Hoosier (at least at the beginning of the [16] contract term). It also offered less financial support to the sanctioning body than Hoosier. On the other hand, Hoosier proposed a higher (initial) tire price, a higher annual payment to the sanctioning body, as well as additional payments to the individual WISSOTA track promoters themselves as part of a bonus program. In fact, these promoters (and WISSOTA board members) were already receiving bonus payments from Hoosier.

WISSOTA's board of directors then met in July 2007 to review the bids and select an exclusive tire supplier. WISSOTA's board decided to accept the Hoosier proposal. Voeltz testified at his deposition that STA essentially offered the same price as Hoosier after taking into account STA's higher price escalation over the course of the contract. The president indicated that he had expected to select American Racer tires but was surprised by STA's actual bid. In turn, STA informed WISSOTA in its own bid that "[t]he process that has led to this proposal has been open, honest and fair." (A1524.) STA's [*67] general manager, David Mateer, subsequently discussed the process with Voeltz, who indicated that STA could have gotten the contract if it had matched Hoosier's financial contribution. [17] However, such a matching proposal would have evidently reduced or eliminated STA's own profit margin.

3.ASCS

ASCS, headquartered in Oklahoma, runs sprint car races in several regional series as well as a national series. Since 1999, Hoosier has had automatically renewing and exclusive contracts with this sanctioning body. In 2007, STA recognized an opportunity to become the exclusive right-rear tire supplier for ASCS's "360 sprint car series." ASCS did not circulate a formal RFP, but STA still met with the sanctioning body and submitted a bid. Its bid attempted to match Hoosier's proposal and included a financial contribution in exchange for exclusivity. Nevertheless, ASCS ultimately chose to retain its Hoosier-only rule for the right-rear wheel position.

4.USAC

USAC, headquartered in Indiana, sanctions sprint car races on both dirt and asphalt races, primarily in the Midwest and West. It appears that Hoosier has had long-term contracts with this sanctioning body since before 1998, despite some tension between the sanctioning body leadership and certain members regarding these arrangements. In 1998, the USAC president actually informed these members that the sanctioning body would remain [18] under contract with Hoosier for only two more years, which evidently was an inaccurate assertion.

In 2003, USAC decided to implement a right-rear single tire rule for certain classes, and it accordingly sent out an RFP for a three-year contract. Goodyear, Hoosier, and STA submitted competing bids. STA proposed that, for two classes of cars (USAC midgets and sprint cars), the tire business would be split between various suppliers. STA likewise did not propose exclusivity for the "Silver Crown" series. Hoosier ultimately won the contract. Without sending out an RFP, USAC evidently renewed its exclusive contract with Hoosier for another three years in 2006. A USAC executive, Rolland Helmling, testified at his deposition that he was not aware of any particular reason for the length of the sanctioning body's contracts with Hoosier.

5.DMS

In 1994, STA, through its distributor, Lias Tire, won the bid to be the exclusive tire supplier for DMS's "Big-Block" and "358" modified races. Hoosier, however, successfully outbid STA in 1995. Since then, Lias Tire has not bid on another DMS contract.

Hoosier and DMS have evidently entered a series of exclusive contracts over an extended period of time. Hoosier's [19] exclusive dealings with UMP actually predate the sanctioning body's 2005 acquisition by DMS. Furthermore, DMS's president, Thomas Deery, went so far as to characterize tires sales as the "fuel" of UMP. (A1716.) Accordingly, the relevant contracts have required Hoosier to make financial contributions to the sanctioning body based on the number of tires ultimately sold to the racers and drivers participating in the races sponsored by UMP.

The District Court specifically pointed to the following four tire contracts between Hoosier and DMS: (1) a 2007-2008 exclusive contract for "UMP Modifieds" and other classes; (2) a 2007-2008 exclusive contract for "DIRT Northeast Big Block Modified"; (3) a 2007-2009 exclusive contract [*68] for the "World of Outlaw National Sprint Series"; and (4) a 2008-2010 exclusive contract for "UMP Late Models."

It appears that, at least prior to the commencement of this litigation, DMS did not select its tire suppliers through a formal bidding process. In fact, it evidently did not possess any specific procedures or protocols for selecting a tire supplier. The sanctioning body accordingly did not send any RFPs to STA prior to October 2007, and it otherwise rejected STA's [20] various inquires, stating at one point that Hoosier had more than doubled its financial support to DMS.

In October 2007, after the filing of this lawsuit, DMS sent out an RFP to seven different tire manufacturers. It specifically requested proposals for a one-year contract to be the exclusive tire supplier for "UMP DIRTcar Late Model Series." Only Goodyear, Hoosier, and STA responded. The Hoosier and Goodyear bids both contemplated an exclusive arrangement, but STA's own proposal contemplated "non-exclusivity." On the other hand, STA proposed a lower tire price than Hoosier. DMS ultimately deemed the STA bid to be non-responsive and awarded a three-year exclusive contract to Hoosier.

In a very similar process, DMS sent an RFP in October 2008 to seven tire manufacturers seeking proposals for a contract to be the exclusive tire supplier for the "UMP DIRTcar Modified (NE)" races. Yet again, the same three companies responded with bids, and, once again, DMS deemed STA's proposal as non-responsive because, unlike its competitors, it contemplated a non-exclusive relationship. DMS therefore ended up awarding Hoosier another exclusive contract for three years.

D. The Sprint Car Summit and Hoosier's [21] National Sprint Spec Tire

In July 2006, DMS, competing sanctioning bodies, promoters, and track operators held a "Sprint Car Summit" to address the decline in car counts and fans at "410 sprint car" races. Such "sprint" races are more likely to occur as part of a "touring" series of races. Touring series, in turn, typically showcase well-known drivers and promote rivalry between these prominent drivers and their local challengers. While STA was not invited, Hoosier was initially asked to attend. However, its invitation was eventually withdrawn. At the Summit, the attendees discussed several options for regenerating interest in sprint car racing, including possible tire improvements. After the Summit, the president of DMS, Deery, and its executive vice president, Benjamin Geisler, approached Hoosier, requesting that the tire manufacturer supply a less aggressive sprint tire that would promote movement and passing. They further discussed the possibility of entering into a contract to make Hoosier the exclusive tire supplier for sprint car races. On December 15, 2006, Hoosier accordingly entered into an exclusive three-year deal to provide right-rear tires for DMS's "World of Outlaws" [22] sprint touring series. On the same day, Hoosier issued a press release announcing that it had developed a "national sprint spec tire," which would be available in three different compounds.

As part of this December 15, 2006 contract, Hoosier promised to pay DMS to solicit competing sanctioning bodies and others to enter similar exclusive contracts with the tire supplier. Geisler contacted various sprint car tracks, asking them to adopt the "national sprint tire rule," and updated Hoosier itself as to which tracks and series were signing onto the rule. He specifically informed Hoosier that these "track/series deals" had to be completed quickly in order to "fend off any plans from American Racer." (A1603.) In particular, [*69] STA's per-tire price for its sprint product was approximately $ 20 less than the per-tire price offered by Hoosier for its new "national sprint tire."

Like DMS, other sanctioning bodies have entered into automatically renewable contracts with Hoosier, which require them to promulgate and enforce a Hoosier-only tire rule. For instance, USAC announced an open tire rule for certain sprint events in January 2007. When Tony Rose, an STA representative, heard about a meeting [23] between USAC and Hoosier, he asked USAC if he could attend, but was turned down. However, USAC ultimately adopted a Hoosier-only rule for the sprint events. In addition, a subsequent call by STA's general manager, Mateer, to USAC was not returned. Accordingly, STA's sprint tire sales have drastically fallen, even though a sprint racer won in 2006 using its American Racer tire.

It appears that the sprint tire contract between Hoosier and DMS expired after the current appeal was filed. According to both Hoosier and DMS, DMS chose not to renew the contract with Hoosier and instead entered into an exclusive contract with Hoosier's competitor, Goodyear.

STA additionally claims that Hoosier and WISSOTA used their collective market power to defeat a new sanctioning body called DTRA ("Dirt Track Racing Association"), which attempted to sanction tracks in WISSOTA's territory. Specifically, DTRA racers and drivers would have used less expensive Goodyear tires. But Paul Menting from Hoosier wrote to WISSOTA, stating, inter alia, that "this is a sanctioning body war that involves Hoosier because we are partners with Wissota" and that Hoosier "would desire to attack common threats as partners." (A1599.) [24] Hoosier declined to submit a proposal in response to DTRA's RFP, stating that, "[i]n order to continue properly servicing and supplying our existing contract business, we cannot at this time commit ourselves to fulfilling a Spec Tire contract." (A1600.) Hoosier, acting through a distributor, also purportedly refused to sell to another touring series known as Carolina Clash because the series allowed its racers and drivers to use what the series believed was the more popular, cheaper, and superior American Racer product.

E. The Alleged Costs and Benefits of the Single Tire Rule and Hoosier's Exclusive Contracts

The parties and the amici devote a great deal of attention to the alleged benefits and costs of, inter alia, the single tire rule and Hoosier's specific contractual arrangements with the various sanctioning bodies.

Mateer claimed that Hoosier's foreclosure rate in dirt late model racing is approximately 50%. According to STA, "Hoosier-only rules dictate tires in 76% of [the] late model touring series in the Midwest, 57% of the modified touring series, 60% of the late model 'crate' series, and 25 of 28 sprint car series." [25] (Appellants' Brief at 18 (citing A1714-A1715, A1710-A1713).)

STA further claims that the alleged practices have caused harm to the real consumers, namely the race car owners and drivers who actually purchase the tires themselves, in the form of, among other things, higher prices and less choice. The evidence in the record does indicate that Hoosier generally charges more per tire than STA. Providing yet another example, STA points out that the sanctioning body for the "Crate Racin USA" series adopted a Hoosier-only rule, even though Hoosier offered a per-tire price $ 50.00 higher than STA. In the time period after the formal announcement of the rule change but before its implementation, 40-45% of the drivers in this series continued [*70] to use American Racer tires. More broadly, many drivers have evidently chosen STA's American Racer tires when given the choice to do so, based on such grounds as better durability and therefore lower tire costs over the long term. For instance, Victor Lee, the 2008 winning driver of the "Battle of the Bluegrass" racing series, actually switched from Hoosier to American Racer, and claimed he cut his tire bill in half because of the purported superior durability [26] of the American Racer product. Similarly, race team owners complained to USAC that: "When USAC made Hoosier the spec tire, costs tripled." (A1481.)

On the other hand, STA's own expert, Dr. David Reitman, acknowledged the following:

> The sanctioning organization or promoter ultimately decides whether or not to enter into a contract with Hoosier requiring a Hoosier-only rule; however they make this decision in their own best interest, not necessarily in the interests of tire customers, taking into account the compensation offered by or negotiated with Hoosier. . . .

Unsurprisingly, the amici, Hoosier, and (especially) DMS turn to the rather extensive evidentiary record in this case in an attempt to establish that the single tire rule and the related exclusive contracts result in significant pro-competitive or sports-related benefits. Simply put, the following justifications or benefits have been offered for the rule itself and the related contracts: (1) supplier concerns; (2) safety; (3) parity; (4) controlling prices and costs; and (5) increasing car counts and the number of fans. In turn, the record contains, inter alia, the deposition testimony or statements of the following individuals [27] concerning these purported benefits: (1) Doug Bland, the owner of Springfield (Missouri) Raceway; (2) Kevin Coffey, the owner of Mountain Raceway; (3) Deery, president and chief operating officer of DMS; (4) Leonard ("Sam") Driggers, racing director of DMS; (5) Justin Fantozzi, Goodyear's marketing manager; (6) Helmling, a member of the board of directors of USAC; (7) Jacobs, the McCreary executive credited with developing the single tire rule; (8) Mateer, the general manager of STA; (9) Steve O'Donnell, vice president of racing operations for NASCAR; (10) Mooney Starr, the general manager of Batesville (Arkansas) Motor Speedway; and (11) Voeltz, WISSOTA's president. While acknowledging the extensive nature of the evidence presented, we focus on the statements made by the Plaintiff STA's own personnel as well as by DMS's employees, as the only sanctioning body actually named as a Defendant in this lawsuit.

STA's general manager agreed that limiting the number of tires bought by racers and drivers could be good for racing and that a single tire rule could reduce costs. Mateer explained that:

> If you showed up at the racetrack for the event with four tires that you had just purchased at [28] your tire dealer shop, and there's another tire supplier at the track showing off their brand spanking new product, and its considerably faster than the tires you just bought, those four tires you just bought are no longer competitive on that racetrack.

(A842.) Acknowledging, like STA's own website, his company's role in pioneering the single tire rule, Mateer stated that STA promoted the rule in order "[t]o eliminate the constant in-season product development that was requiring the racers to buy every trick new tire that came along." (A833.)

In addition, Jacobs actually testified at some length about the various advantages of the single tire rule in a 1982 deposition [*71] conducted as part of an antitrust lawsuit filed in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts by M & H against both Hoosier and several tracks and driving clubs who had adopted the rule and entered into an exclusive arrangement with Hoosier. M & H's challenge to the rule itself was ultimately rejected by the First Circuit. See M & H Tire Co. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 733 F.2d 973 (1st Cir. 1984). According to Jacobs, McCreary supported the single tire rule because it was a "viable marketing procedure [29] and method" and "a healthy way to sell race tires." (A411.) He further emphasized that the rule reduced tire costs because it countered the incentive for racers and drivers to get the newest and best tires for each and every race.

Driggers from DMS similarly testified that the car counts increased where a single tire rule is in effect:

> When you run an open tire rule in my race track area, which is primarily the midwest for the most part, you can run a World of Outlaw show or any of the high dollar sanction -- or series races around the country and your car count with open tire rule will be half of what it will be on my tire rule. Because of my tire rule, local guys can go run this race, pay the $ 100 entry fee, the pit pass or whatever else they have to pay and run this race and possibly go home with some money. If they have to go buy a four to six different tires to run this race to be competitive with an open tire rule and the best they are going to run is 18th or 19th and they are going to get 700 bucks, it cost them 1,200 bucks to make the 700 bucks so therefore, they go elsewhere. They go to a UMP sanctioned race where they don't have to buy anything.

According to Deery, [30] "[r]ace car specifications have been the cornerstone of motorsports' development and have allowed the sport to mature into a fully organized and recognizable event." (A1931.) The president of DMS further noted that "[m]ost of the nationally recognized divisions of racing have a common set of rules and are usually governed by a single sanctioning body." (Id.) Such rules specifically promote continuity and consistency, thereby benefitting both the racing competitors and the fans. Defending single tire rules, Deery claimed that, among other things, "spec tires save money, provide a level field, are safe and make for a more successful show." (A1934.)

For its part, STA vigorously claims that, at the very least, there are factual disputes with respect to the various benefits offered by its adversaries to justify the single tire rule and the related exclusive Hoosier contracts.

With respect to "supplier concerns," Hoosier itself evidently has only one tire plant. Hoosier's own contracts also contain a "Force Majeure" clause, excusing it from performance where, for instance, there is a work stoppage or an act of God. The record demonstrates that these kinds of problems are not unprecedented. [31] Specifically, the owner of the Fastrak dirt racing series allowed multiple tire suppliers to sell tires for its races after Goodyear was unable to fulfill its exclusive tire commitments due to labor issues.

DMS admitted that there has never been any specific concerns about tire safety in its open tire rule races. Similarly, Helmling from USAC was unaware of any safety issues when tire brands competed for business.

Turning to the concept of "parity," it appears that the Hoosier-only rule itself may permit the use of different kinds of [*72] Hoosier tires in the same race. For instance, UMP's rules evidently have allowed four different Hoosier tires to be used. In turn, some racers and drivers have requested, not less, but more tire choices, in order to have more options in the future. Helmling acknowledged at his deposition that the participants in USAC's open sprint races were in parity. Other witnesses testified that the whole concept of parity means having a different driver win every night. Nevertheless, there is evidence in the record indicating less variety of winners in Hoosier-only races.

According to STA, there is no evidence in the record showing that the failure to enter an exclusive [32] contract with Hoosier would result in higher costs. It likewise claims that there is no evidence whatsoever establishing that the Hoosier contracts have any effect on car counts or fan attendance. In fact, they point to evidence purportedly showing the opposite.

STA further asserts that, even if the rule otherwise possessed the claimed benefits, the single tire rule as practiced here does not represent the least restrictive means to serve these purported goals. It offers the following alternative: the adoption of a "limited compound competition" rule, which would allow racers to select from a specified list of tires from the various manufacturers. Alternatively, STA proposes that the sanctioning bodies could choose to limit the number of tires used over the course of a season. According to STA, the single tire rule also gives racers and drivers an incentive to cheat by treating their tires with chemicals, thereby requiring tire inspections before each race.

F. Procedural History

STA filed its initial complaint in the District Court on September 25, 2007. Naming Hoosier as the sole Defendant, it alleged: (1) monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) conspiracy to [33] restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act; (3) attempted monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act; (4) conspiracy to monopolize; and (5) a declaratory judgment claim. Less than a month later, STA filed an amended complaint adding DMS as the second Defendant.

On January 10, 2008, the District Court entered a scheduling order, which, among other things, established a deadline of May 30, 2008, for the amendment of pleadings. STA subsequently filed a second amended complaint to add two additional co-plaintiffs. On May 30, 2008, STA moved to amend the complaint a third time in order to add a new count alleging illegal tying under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The Court granted this unopposed request, and the third amended complaint was filed on June 23, 2008.

On November 19, 2008, STA once again sought leave to amend the complaint, this time wishing to add a count alleging a concerted refusal to deal or, in other words, a group boycott. This contested motion was denied by the District Court on December 16, 2008. According to the District Court, STA failed to demonstrate the requisite good cause, and the addition of yet another claim based on a new legal [34] theory would also be prejudicial to the other parties.

Hoosier and DMS filed motions for summary judgment, and STA likewise moved for partial summary judgment as to the defenses of unclean hands and in pari delicto. On September 15, 2009, the District Court granted the motions for summary judgment filed by Hoosier and DMS (and denied STA's motion as moot). It provided an extensive explanation for its ruling in an accompanying memorandum opinion. Simply put, the District Court found that: (1) "where, as here, a sanctioning body [*73] freely decides to adopt a single tire rule, and then freely selects a supplier, no antitrust violation is present as a matter of law -- either under Section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act"; and (2) "STA has not suffered an 'Antitrust Injury' and thus, does not have standing to bring this action." (A41 (emphasis omitted).)

STA filed a timely notice of appeal. USAC, National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing, Inc. ("NASCAR"), IMCA, and Grand-Am Road Racing have filed an amicus curiae brief.

II.

The District Court possessed jurisdiction over this antitrust matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331, 28 U.S.C. § 1337, and 15 U.S.C. § 15. We have appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. [35] HN1[] We further exercise plenary review over a District Court's grant of summary judgment. See, e.g., Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 423 F.3d 374, 380 (3d Cir. 2005).

As the District Court recognized, the resolution of a summary judgment motion is often an especially difficult task in the antitrust context, particularly in light of the inherent factual complexities typically involved as well as the paramount importance of motive and intent in the legal analysis. This case certainly is no exception.

Nevertheless, the District Court also properly acknowledged that HN2[] summary judgment is not disfavored in the antitrust context. The entry of summary judgment in favor of an antitrust defendant may actually be required in order to prevent lengthy and drawn-out litigation, which may have a chilling effect on competitive market forces. See, e.g., Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 541 (2d Cir. 1993). Furthermore, "'antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences' that can be drawn 'from ambiguous evidence.'" Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 380 (quoting Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986)). To avoid [36] summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff must come forward with economically plausible evidence supporting the elements of its claim. See, e.g., Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468-69, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992); Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587; Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 380. When the evidence in the record is as consistent with permissible competition as it is with an illegal conspiracy, such evidence, standing alone, fails to support an inference of an illegal conspiracy. See, e.g., Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588. In the end, the plaintiff in an antitrust case responding to a summary judgment motion must overcome a "higher threshold," which is imposed in order "to avoid deterring innocent conduct that reflects enhanced, rather than restrained, competition." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 357 (3d Cir. 2004).

The parties further agree that HN3[] this Court reviews the denial of a motion to amend under an abuse of discretion standard of review. See, e.g., E. Minerals & Chems. Co. v. Mahan, 225 F.3d 330, 339-40 (3d Cir. 2000).

III.

As highlighted by the extensive factual discussion in Section I, supra, this appeal presents the Court with an unusual and challenging set of circumstances. [37] Simply put, this case involves a relatively large number of entities, specifically the various sanctioning bodies governing the sport of dirt oval track racing in the United States and Canada, which, over an extensive period of time dating back decades, have [*74] adopted the single tire rule for various races and, in turn, have entered exclusive contracts with the major tire suppliers. Furthermore, even though the parties and the amici cite to a large number of prior cases from this Court, our sister circuits, and other courts, very few of these decisions appear to be directly on point. In turn, the decisions that are, more or less, on point are often distinguishable on a variety of grounds (or otherwise are not binding on this Court). Finally, the importance of this case goes far beyond the tire suppliers and sanctioning body actually named as the Plaintiffs and Defendants. In fact, our result and reasoning could have an effect beyond the world of dirt oval track racing (or even motorsports racing in general).

Having fully considered the numerous arguments of the parties and the amici, the record on appeal, the District Court's thorough and carefully reasoned ruling, and the governing legal [38] principles, we ultimately determine that the District Court properly ruled in favor of Hoosier and DMS. We reach this result based on the following considerations: (1) Hoosier clearly has not coerced, or otherwise improperly interfered with, the determinations of DMS and the other sanctioning bodies to adopt the single tire rule and to enter into the respective exclusive supply contracts; (2) the sanctioning bodies presented, in good faith, more than sufficient pro-competitive or business justifications for their actions; and (3) STA has otherwise not suffered any cognizable antitrust injury because it has had the opportunity to bid on exclusive supply deals and has in fact done so with some success.

A. Basic Principles of Antitrust Law

This Court has never directly considered the legality of a practice like the single tire rule or the specific kind of exclusive contracts entered by the sanctioning bodies and Hoosier. Nevertheless, there are certain fundamental and well-established legal principles that must guide our analysis. The District Court itself accurately summarized at least some of these principles in its summary judgment ruling.

HN4[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "[e]very [39] contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. It is well established that this provision prohibits only "unreasonable" restraints of trade. See, e.g., NCAA v. Bd. of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 98, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984). STA appears to agree that the "rule of reason" standard applies in this context. See, e.g., Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp., 79 F.3d 1358, 1368 (3d Cir. 1996).

HN5[] "In order to survive summary judgment in cases where [the rule of reason] applies, the plaintiff must show concerted action, antitrust injury, evidence that the conspiracy produced 'adverse, anti-competitive effects within the relevant product and geographic markets,' and evidence 'that the objects of and the conduct pursuant to the conspiracy were illegal.'" InterVest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 159 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Rossi v. Standard Roofing, Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 465 (3d Cir. 1998)). The plaintiff may satisfy its burden by showing either actual anti-competitive effects or proof of the defendant's market power. See, e.g., Orson, 79 F.3d at 1367. The notion of "market power" in this context is defined as [40] the ability to raise prices above those that would exist in a competitive market. See, e.g., id.

The burden then shifts to the defendant to show a sufficient pro-competitive justification or objective for the challenged conduct. See, e.g., id. at 1367-68. [*75] A restraint cannot be justified solely on the basis of social welfare considerations. See, e.g., United States v. Brown Univ., 5 F.3d 658, 678-79 (3d Cir. 1993). The plaintiff then must demonstrate that the restraint itself is not reasonably necessary to achieve the stated objective. See, e.g., Orson, 79 F.3d at 1368. In other words, "[e]ven if an anticompetitive restraint is intended to achieve a legitimate objective, the restraint only survives a rule of reason analysis if it is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate objectives proffered by the defendant." Brown Univ., 5 F.3d at 678-79 (citations omitted). "'The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition.'" Orson, 79 F.3d at 1367 (quoting Bd. of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918)).

HN6[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act targets [41] persons "who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of . . . trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 2. This offense of monopolization has two elements: "'(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481(quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). As to the second element, "[a] monopolist willfully acquires or maintains monopoly power when it competes on some basis other than the merits." LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 147 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc) (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605 n.32, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985)). In turn, the offense of attempted monopolization has the following three elements: "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) [42] (citation omitted). The final element requires an inquiry into the relevant product and geographic market as well as the defendant's economic power in that market. See, e.g., id. at 459. In turn, market share, while crucial, may not always be determinative. See, e.g., United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 54, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (en banc) (per curiam). Once the plaintiff demonstrates harm to competition, the defendant then has to show that it is actually promoting a pro-competitive or legitimate business objective. See, e.g., United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 187, 196-97 (3d Cir. 2005). HN7[] Ultimately, Section 2 is directed against conduct that "unfairly tends to destroy competition itself," as opposed to even "severe" competition. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 458 (citations omitted).

STA also claims that it has been the victim of unlawful "tying." HN8[] "'Tying is defined as selling one good (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchase another separate good (the tied product).'" Harrison Aire, 423 F.3d at 385 (quoting Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 475 (3d Cir. 1992) (en banc)).

HN9[] A private antitrust plaintiff [43] must further establish that it suffered an "antitrust injury" as a result of the misconduct and therefore possesses the standing necessary to seek relief. The antitrust laws were enacted "'for the protection of [*76] competition not competitors.'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977) (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). Therefore, the injury prong requires: "(1) harm of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent; and (2) an injury to the plaintiff which flows from that which makes defendant's acts unlawful." Gulfstream III Assocs. Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 425, 429 (3d Cir. 1993) (citing Int'l Raw Materials, Ltd. v. Stauffer Chem. Co., 978 F.2d 1318, 1327-28 (3d Cir. 1992)).

The District Court correctly recognized that exclusive supply contracts or exclusive dealing agreements have been frequently upheld when challenged on antitrust grounds. See, e.g., E. Food Servs., Inc. v. Pontifical Catholic Univ. Servs. Ass'n, Inc., 357 F.3d 1, 8 (1st Cir. 2004) (stating that exclusive dealing contracts are not disfavored by antitrust laws and ordinarily pose threat to competition only in very discrete circumstances); [44] Barr Labs, Inc. v. Abbott Labs, 978 F.2d 98, 111 (3d Cir. 1992) (recognizing that "existence of legitimate business justifications for the [exclusive dealing] contracts also supports the legality of the global contracts"). "Rather, HN10[] it is widely recognized that in many circumstances [exclusive dealing arrangements] may be highly efficient -- to assure supply, price stability, outlets, investment, best efforts or the like -- and pose no competitive threat at all." E. Food Servs., 357 F.3d at 8 (citation omitted). Expressly rejecting any assertion that exclusive deals are subject to a per se rule of illegality, the Seventh Circuit in Menasha Corp. v. News America Marketing In-Store, Inc., 354 F.3d 661 (7th Cir. 2004), appropriately explained that the competition to be an exclusive supplier may constitute "a vital form of rivalry, and often the most powerful one, which the antitrust laws encourage rather than suppress." Id. at 663 (citing Paddock Publ'ng, Inc. v. Chicago Tribune Co., 103 F.3d 42 (7th Cir. 1996)).

On the other hand, we agree with STA that such exclusive agreements are not exempt from antitrust scrutiny. In fact, the Third Circuit addressed exclusive dealing arrangements [45] in its en banc ruling in LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc), and, more recently, in United States v. Dentsply International, Inc., 399 F.3d 181 (3d Cir. 2005). In the en banc case, the Court upheld a jury verdict under Section 2 against 3M, a clearly dominant supplier in the transparent tape market that paid major retailers through a rebate program "designed to achieve sole-source supplier status" (and also entered exclusive dealing agreements with at least two retailers), LePage's, 324 F.3d at 157, and thereby cut off its plaintiff competitor from "key retail pipelines," id. at 160. In Dentsply, this Court reversed the trial court's judgment in favor of the defendant, ruling that an exclusivity policy imposed by an artificial teeth monopoly on its dealers violated Section 2. Dentsply, 399 F.3d at 184; see also, e.g., E. Food Servs., 357 F.3d at 8 (providing as "best example" of possible threat to competition situation in which market itself is already heavily concentrated and long-term exclusive contracts then "foreclose so large a percentage of the available supply or outlets that entry into the concentrated market is unreasonably constricted").

B. Application [46] of Legal Principles

We now come to the challenging task of applying these fundamental legal principles to the specific circumstances presented by this appeal. Like the District Court, we accept, for purposes of this Opinion, STA's definition of the relevant market, in short: the market for the sale of racing [*77] tires that race on dirt oval tracks in the United States and Canada. Further following the example set by the District Court (as well as the parties and the amici), our analysis focuses on the following components: (1) the fundamental if contested notion of "coercion"; (2) the various benefits and justifications offered in support of the single tire rule and the related exclusive contracts between Hoosier and the various sanctioning bodies; and (3) the antitrust standing requirement. At the outset, we acknowledge that these components overlap in practice, although they do represent rather distinct aspects of the antitrust inquiry. For the sake of clarity and to avoid unnecessary repetition, we accordingly: (1) in the coercion discussion, focus on the issue of whether the sanctioning bodies have been free to adopt the single tire rule and to enter into an exclusive supply agreement [47] with the supplier of their choice and also address the specific terms contained in Hoosier's contracts; (2) in the justification discussion, obviously turn to the various justifications and benefits offered in support of the single tire rule itself as well as the appropriate degree of deference to be accorded the determinations of sanctioning bodies and similar sports-related organizations; and (3) in the antitrust injury analysis, consider whether STA has had a real opportunity to compete with Hoosier for single tire business in this market.

1. "Coercion"

The notion of "coercion" occupied an especially important role in the District Court's reasoning. Hoosier, DMS, and the amici likewise emphasize this concept on appeal. For its part, STA vigorously contests the role of the concept itself, and, in the alternative, it contends that there are genuine issues of material fact as to whether Hoosier has actually "coerced," or otherwise colluded with, the various sanctioning bodies.

We do acknowledge that the District Court did not cite to any specific case or any other authority in support of its assertion that coercion constitutes an essential element of a successful antitrust claim in the [48] present circumstances. STA, among other things, quotes a leading antitrust commentator, who stated that "'it matters little whether one views exclusive dealing as "imposed" by the dominant firm or "agreed upon" by the dominant firm and its dealers.'" (Appellants' Brief at 35 (emphasis in quotation omitted) (quoting H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1800c5, at 20 (Aspen 2005)).)

We note, however, that this concept has played a key, if sometimes unexplored, role in the relevant case law, especially in the Section 2 context. For instance, the Court in Dentsply expressly noted that, among other things, the exclusivity policy at issue was "imposed by a manufacturer on its dealers," Dentsply, 399 F.3d at 184, and that, "[w]hile the [customers] might prefer to sell the [products] of multiple manufacturers, if faced with an 'all or nothing' choice they may accede to the dominant firm's wish for exclusive dealing," id. at 195 (quoting Areeda & Hovencamp, Antitrust Law P 1802e3, at 78-79 (2d ed. 2002)). Likewise, the en banc Court in LePage's confronted a situation in which the seller, which had clear monopoly power over the market, induced retailers to purchase a full line of products from it, including [49] products its competition did not make, with the intent of forcing any such competition from the market and then raising prices. LePage's, 324 F.3d at 157-63.

In Santana Products Inc. v. Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc., 401 F.3d 123 (3d Cir. 2005), the plaintiff toilet partition manufacturer brought claims under Sections 1 [*78] and 2 of the Sherman Act after the government selected its competitor's products based on the specifications chosen by the government's architects, alleging, inter alia, that the competitor and its representatives falsely claimed that the plaintiff's own products were a fire hazard. Id. at 125-28. This Court ultimately affirmed the summary judgment granted in favor of the competitor, rejecting the group boycott claim and instead concluding that there was no restraint where the decision to choose a product was in the hands of the decision-maker (i.e., the architects) for the consumer (i.e., the government). Id. at 133 ("Unlike cases where the alleged exclusionary conduct leaves the consumer with no input whatever, the decision to specify 'was always ultimately in the hands of the consumer.'" (quoting Stearns Airport Equip. Co., Inc. v. FMC Corp., 170 F.3d 518, 525 (5th Cir. 1999))). [50] Because the plaintiff failed to allege that the defendants "engaged in coercive measures that prevented [the plaintiff] from selling its products to any willing buyer or prevented others from dealing with [the plaintiff]," id. at 132, it was never really "excluded from competition," id. at 133. "'Without a showing of some other factor, we can assume that a customer will make his decision only on the merits,'" and the appropriate response in such circumstances "'would seem to be an increase in the losing party's sales efforts on future potential bids, not an antitrust suit.'" Id. (quoting Stearns, 170 F.3d at 525).

In the end, although we do not hold that coercion is an essential element of every successful antitrust claim, we conclude that coercion is a fundamental consideration in the present circumstances, namely, where various sports sanctioning bodies have freely adopted their own equipment rules and then freely entered into exclusive contracts with the respective suppliers. However, we add that Hoosier and DMS are not entitled to summary judgment merely because there is an absence of coercion or interference on the part of Hoosier. On the contrary, the sanctioning bodies must still [51] offer good faith justifications for the alleged conduct. As discussed in Section III.B.2, infra, DMS and the other sanctioning bodies do present more than adequate justifications for their actions.

STA, in turn, raises a variety of contentions in support of its theory that there are genuine issues of material fact with respect to the existence of either coercion on the part of Hoosier or, at the very least, collusion between Hoosier and the various sanctioning bodies, especially DMS. The District Court did acknowledge that Hoosier's standard form contract provides for payments to the sanctioning body, lasts for a lengthy period of time, contains an automatic renewal provision, and allegedly provides that, if the sanctioning body exercised its right not to renew, the remaining financial contribution to the sanctioning body would be forfeited. We likewise are particularly troubled by the so-called Sprint Summit and the resulting relationship between Hoosier and DMS. This Court nevertheless finds that the various contentions raised by STA fail to demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue of material fact as to whether its competitor has coerced or otherwise unduly interfered with the [52] decision-making process of the various sanctioning bodies.

Initially, we must not overlook the crucial and undisputed fact that, in the words of STA's own expert, "[t]he sanctioning organization or promoter ultimately decides whether or not to enter into a contract with Hoosier requiring a Hoosier-only rule . . . in their own best interest." (A1921.) In fact, it appears clear that the major sanctioning bodies themselves generally prefer the single tire and, at least sometimes, desire a Hoosier-only rule. [*79] The present circumstances actually resemble the situation described by the Seventh Circuit in Menasha:

> That retailers and manufacturers like exclusive deals implies that they serve the interests of these, the consumers of couponing services [provided by the plaintiff and its competitor defendant]. When the consumers favor a product or practice, and only rivals squawk, the most natural inference is that the complained-of practice promotes rather than undermines competition, for what helps consumers often harms other producers such as [the plaintiff].

Menasha, 354 F.3d at 663.

Furthermore, it appears that it is a common and generally accepted practice for a supplier to provide a sports sanctioning [53] body or similar sports-related organization financial support in exchange for a supply contract (although such practices, no matter how widely followed, cannot be characterized as totally innocuous). In fact, STA has actually engaged in such behavior and has specifically included offers of financial support in its various successful and unsuccessful proposals to the respective sanctioning bodies over the years. In turn, these financial contributions may be used as part of the sanctioning body's point funds, and such point funds constitute a crucial incentive offered by the sanctioning body to attract prospective racers and drivers to its own races. As to the amount and specific terms of the contributions, it is no more an act of coercion, collusion, or improper interference for Hoosier, STA, or any one else to offer more money to the sanctioning body than it is for such suppliers to offer the lowest tire prices. In any case, the sanctioning body itself remains free to pick the supplier that it believes will provide the best deal. Similarly, neither the lengthy duration of the Hoosier contracts nor their renewal terms represent real evidence of coercion or interference. The respective [54] sanctioning body simply may enter a contract with the tire supplier of its choice. If anything, the actual terms contained in Hoosier's form contract appear to be completely consistent with what one would actually expect to find in an exclusive supply arrangement. [2]

[*80] 2. Benefits and Justifications of the Single Tire Rule

Initially, the Court agrees with the position of the amici that motorsports sanctioning bodies, as well as similar organizations [56] in other sports, deserve a bright-line rule to follow so they can avoid potential antitrust liability as well as time-consuming and expensive antitrust litigation. In fact, this current lawsuit is the second federal antitrust case brought against Hoosier arising out of the single tire rule. In M & H Tire Co. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 733 F.2d 973 (1st Cir. 1984), the First Circuit rejected an antitrust challenge by a tire supplier, M & H, to the adoption of such a rule by several race tracks and driving clubs as well as their entry into an exclusive contract with Hoosier. Id. at 974-89. Likewise, there have been other antitrust lawsuits challenging the adoption of racing equipment rules of various kinds. See Brookins v. Int'l Motor Contest Ass'n, 219 F.3d 849 (8th Cir. 2000) (transmission rule); STP v. U.S. Auto Club, Inc., 286 F. Supp. 146 (S.D. Ind. 1968) (engine specification rule). While the sanctioning body defendants ultimately prevailed in all three cases, see Brookins, 219 F.3d at 852-55; STP, 286 F. Supp. at 171, it has undoubtedly come at considerable expense. Contrary to the pro-competitive purposes of antitrust law, this expense may have a very real anticompetitive [57] effect, especially on the smaller sanctioning bodies. Furthermore, if the Court fails to adopt a relatively clear rule here, motorsports sanctioning bodies, in the apt words of the amici, "will have to chart a narrow, and perhaps unsustainable, course, between (1) the Scylla of anti-competitive, expensive, and unsafe rules and (2) the Charybdis of the optimum rules for the sport accompanied by potential antitrust litigation and exposure, including the crippling expense in defending their [2] We also do not overlook the fact that it is the racers and the drivers that ultimately purchase the racing tires. Unlike in Dentsply and LePage's, we accordingly are not dealing with the case of a supplier entering exclusive arrangements with retailers, which purchase the products at issue for resale to the ultimate customers. It is undeniably troubling that the evidence in the record indicates that the interests of at least some of the racers, drivers, and others have evidently diverged from the interests (and actions of) the governing sanctioning bodies. For instance, more than one thousand racers, drivers, and other industry participants have actually signed STA's "Declaration in Favor of Competition," attacking the single tire formula as a monopolistic practice and calling for its replacement. On an even more basic level, it appears clear that, the more a tire supplier offers a sanctioning body in terms of financial [55] support, the more the racers and drivers have to pay for the tires themselves. At the very least, such circumstances further complicate this case, providing at least some support for STA's antitrust claims against Hoosier and DMS.

We, nevertheless find that such considerations ultimately do not assist STA. As already noted, the financial contributions do ultimately benefit the actual tire purchasers, either directly in the form of point funds or indirectly by providing the financial resources allowing the sanctioning bodies to function and hold the races in the first place. Furthermore (and as explained in more detail in Section III.B.3, infra), the purchasers otherwise remain free to "vote with their trailers" by not participating in a sanctioning body's races because of its adoption of a single tire rule or its entry into an exclusive deal with Hoosier. We further add that no racer or driver has actually joined STA as a Plaintiff in this litigation or otherwise filed an amicus curiae brief in its favor.

legitimate right to promulgate their own rules." (Amicus Brief at 9-10.) Nevertheless, we must be careful not to establish an overly broad rule detached from the specific facts now before us, especially in light of the highly fact-specific nature of the antitrust standards themselves.

Accordingly, sports-related bodies should be given leeway with respect to their adoption of equipment requirements as well as their related decision to enter exclusive contracts with the respective suppliers. As highlighted by the racing case law cited above, it appears that the courts have generally accorded sports organizations a certain degree of deference and freedom to act in similar circumstances. See, e.g., Am. Needle, Inc. v. NFL, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947, 2010 WL 2025207 (2010) [58] (exclusive football headwear license); McCormack v. NCAA, 845 F.2d 1338 (5th Cir. 1988) (NCAA football eligibility rules); Gunter Harz Sports, Inc. v. U.S. Tennis Ass'n, Inc., 665 F.2d 222 (8th Cir. 1981) (per curiam) (prohibition of double-strung tennis rackets); Hatley v. Am. Quarter Horse Ass'n, 552 F.2d 646 (5th Cir. 1977) (definition of "quarter horse"); Deesen v. Prof'l Golfers Ass'n, 358 F.2d 165 (9th Cir. 1966) (PGA eligibility rules); Toscano v. PGA Tour, Inc., 201 F. Supp. 2d 1106 (E.D. Cal. 2002) (same). Even STA appears to acknowledge that such organizations are entitled to some deference. However, the standard it offers, requiring, inter alia, that the rules be adopted by a neutral and unbiased body and that they do not result in any significant market foreclosure, does not seem very deferential. Among other things, such an approach would preclude sanctioning bodies from entering into an exclusive equipment contract with a supplier that already has a high share of the relevant geographic or product markets.

We further believe that a deferential approach is especially appropriate in light [*81] of the practical restraints faced by the sanctioning bodies in this [59] case. Even though they may, among other things, receive significant financial support from the suppliers, DMS and the other sanctioning bodies do not have unfettered discretion in adopting rules, entering exclusive arrangements, or imposing higher equipment costs on the racers and drivers. It is well established that the sanctioning bodies compete for racers and drivers, and these racers and drivers in turn are more than able to, in the words of amici, "vote with their trailers." (Amicus Brief at 14.) Fewer racers and drivers mean less for the sanctioning body in terms of the entry fees charged to the participating racers and drivers themselves as well as a possible decrease in the number of tickets and revenues earned from concessions and other sources of money (at the very least because the friends and families of non-participating racers and drivers would be much less likely to attend). In turn, this can lead to a "death spiral" because lower gate receipts and other forms of revenue mean lower prize purses, which means less interest among racers and drivers, which results in even less revenue to the sanctioning body, and so on. Ultimately, the sanctioning bodies which consistently [60] make the wrong business decisions face the prospect of going out of business. They, like other kinds of businesses, also have no long-term interest in the creation of a monopolist in their own supply chains. If Hoosier actually were a monopolist, not only could it charge racers and drivers whatever it wanted for tires, it could also reduce its monetary payments to the sanctioning body or eliminate such support altogether. See, e.g., Menasha, 354 F.3d at 663 ("Why would these entities shoot themselves in the feet by signing (retailers) or favoring (manufacturers) exclusive contracts that entrench [the defendant] as a monopolist that then can apply the squeeze."). Finally, the fact that not all races are governed by single tire rules shows that the sanctioning bodies can and do recognize that not all forms of racing in all parts of the country are identical and that such bodies are more than able to adopt the rule that best advances the particular kind of racing at issue.

This Court therefore approaches the actions of DMS and the other sanctioning bodies with a degree of deference and HN11[] we adopt the following general rule: the Sherman Act does not forbid sanctioning bodies and other sports-related [61] organizations from freely (i.e., without any coercion or improper interference) adopting exclusive equipment requirements, so long as such organizations otherwise possess, in good faith, sufficient pro-competitive or business justifications for their actions. At the same time, we wish to make it clear that we are not granting any kind of antitrust immunity. Cf., e.g., *Am. Needle, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947, 2010 WL 2025207, at 11 n.7 (attacking Seventh Circuit concerted action ruling for, inter alia, "carv[ing] out a zone of antitrust immunity for conduct arguably related to [NFL] league operations by reasoning that coordinated team trademark sales are necessary to produce 'NFL football'"). For instance, we are not confronted with a situation in which the sanctioning body offers absolutely no justification whatsoever for its actions or its justifications are offered in bad faith or are otherwise nonsensical. Instead, we will affirm the District Court's ruling because there are several good faith justifications for the sanctioning bodies' single tire rule.

We acknowledge that STA vigorously attacks the single tire rule itself, arguing that there were less restrictive alternatives. According to [62] STA, there are, at least, genuine issues of material fact [*82] with respect to each and every benefit and justification offered by Hoosier, DMS, and the amici in support of the rule itself. To a certain degree, such a vigorous if understandable attack actually serves to highlight our reluctance to second guess the decisions made by a sanctioning body regarding the basic rules and guidelines of its sport. In fact, STA's extensive challenge to the single tire rule constitutes an attack on the very raison d'etre of the sanctioning bodies, which exist in order to set certain ground rules and then run races in conformity with such rules. In any case, we agree with the District Court that the sanctioning bodies have properly adopted the single tire rule because they believe such a rule creates more exciting races, ensures equal access to a uniform product, leads to increased safety, and lowers the costs of tires by eliminating the so-called "tire wars."

In fact, STA's whole challenge to the single tire rule has a simple yet serious flaw. It was STA that actually pioneered and promoted the whole idea in the first place. STA's own website claimed credit for promoting "spec tire or track rules," [63] in which "track owners and promoters adopted a manufacturer's tire for a particular class of races for the duration of a racing season." (A484.) In turn, it claimed that such a rule had several benefits, including the avoidance of constant and costly tire changes and the encouragement of parity between racers and drivers, and that its adoption even contributed "to the success and popularity of dirt track racing in America." (Id.) Jacobs actually defended the rule as part of the M & H litigation. More recently, STA's general manager, Mateer, testified at his deposition in this litigation that limiting the number of tires bought by racers could be good for the sport itself and that a single tire rule also could reduce costs. Further acknowledging STA's own role in developing the rule, Mateer added that it was created in order "[t]o eliminate the constant in-season product development that was requiring the racers to buy every trick new tire that came along." (A833.)

We recognize that STA has turned against the rule itself, at least as in its more recent form. In turn, it attempts to explain its prior support for the rule and how Hoosier has usurped and distorted the rule into an anti-competitive [64] tool. STA certainly has a right to change its position, but the past support provided for the rule now challenged in this litigation cannot be overlooked so easily.

In any case, even setting aside STA's prior conduct, the record here clearly establishes that there are more than ample justifications for the single tire rule. DMS specifically discusses in some detail the statements made by eleven separate individuals regarding the various benefits arising out of a single tire rule. For instance, Driggers, who serves as the racing director for DMS, explained in some detail how the car counts increase under a single tire rule. Likewise, the sanctioning body's president, Deery, indicated that these equipment rules have long been recognized as a "cornerstone" of motor racing. (A1931.) Specifically defending the single tire rule, Deery asserted that "spec tires save money, provide a level field, are safe, and make for a more successful show." (A1934.)

In the end, we recognize that STA and others have serious issues with the single tire rule, at least in its current form. They otherwise remain free to argue that such a rule and the related exclusive contracts harm both the competitive process [65] and the sport of dirt oval track racing. In fact, the racers and drivers themselves are free to "vote with their trailers" by not participating in races conducted under a [*83] single tire or Hoosier-only rule. Following the District Court, we nevertheless find that DMS and the other sanctioning bodies possess good faith justifications, amply supported in the record, for adopting a well-established rule actually developed and defended by STA itself. In such circumstances (and in the absence of any coercion or improper interference on the part of the respective suppliers), such sports-related organizations should have the right to determine for themselves the set of rules that they believe best advance their respective sport (and therefore their own business interests), without undue and costly interference on the part of courts and juries.

3. Antitrust Injury

We next come to the question of antitrust injury and standing. HN12[] To establish antitrust injury, a plaintiff must show harm to competition, not just harm to the plaintiff competitor. See Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 488. We agree with the District Court that STA does not satisfy this requirement.

It is well established that competition among [66] businesses to serve as an exclusive supplier should actually be encouraged. See, e.g., Menasha, 354 F.3d at 663 (recognizing that competition to become exclusive supplier "is a vital form of rivalry, and often the most powerful one, which the antitrust laws encourage rather than suppress" (citation omitted)). In Section III.B.1, supra, this Court explained in some detail how the sanctioning bodies are free to adopt a single tire rule and then contract with the supplier of their choice without any undue interference or coercion on the part of Hoosier. Our focus now shifts to whether STA has been able to compete for this business.

We acknowledge that the process used by the various sanctioning bodies has too often been less than perfect. The District Court partly recognized as much, noting that the sanctioning bodies may elect to dispense with sending out a formal RFP to the various tire suppliers. In fact, DMS did not select its tire suppliers through a formal bidding process prior to the start of this litigation, and it evidently did not possess specific procedures or protocols for selecting a tire supplier. We similarly continue to be troubled by certain other aspects of the process [67] used to select a supplier, especially the fact that tire suppliers provide financial support to the sanctioning bodies, even though such bodies do not actually purchase the tires. See, supra, n.2.

Nevertheless, the record here clearly establishes the existence of competition on the part of the remaining suppliers for the valuable right to serve as an exclusive provider of tires. Accordingly, the District Court properly recognized that the suppliers themselves are generally well aware of what is going on in the marketplace, and they actually have been able to take business away from their competitors over the years. For instance, STA has continued to respond to RFPs from the various sanctioning bodies, and it has also attempted to win an exclusive contract even in the absence of a formal proposal from the sanctioning body itself. We note that STA evidently has had some success in this market, especially in the past. In fact, it has served as the exclusive tire supplier for a number of sanctioning bodies. [3]

[*84] In the end, STA never suffered the kind of injury that gives rise to an antitrust claim. On the contrary, it has had the clear [69] opportunity to compete and did compete, sometimes successfully, for the exclusive tire contracts. See, e.g., NicSand, Inc. v. 3M Co., 507 F.3d 442, 456 (6th Cir. 2007) (en banc) (HN13[] "When one exclusive dealer is replaced by another exclusive dealer, the victim of the competition does not state an antitrust injury." (citation omitted)); U.S. v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 430 (2d Cir. 1945) (Hand, J.) ("The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned upon when he wins."). Accordingly, the District Court was correct to grant summary judgment in favor of Hoosier and DMS because of this failure to meet the antitrust injury requirement. [4]

C.The Denial of the Motion for Leave to Amend

Finally, this Court must consider whether the District Court properly denied STA's request for leave to amend its complaint in order to add an express refusal to deal or group boycott claim to the five substantive causes of action it

[3] We specifically note that: (1) from the 1980s to approximately 2005, IMCA required its cars to use the G-60 American Racer tire manufactured by STA; (2) in 2006-2007, STA responded, [68] without success, to an RFP for an exclusive tire contract sent out by WISSOTA; (3) although there was no formal RFP, STA submitted a proposal to ASCS in 2007, in which it offered a financial contribution in exchange for exclusivity; (4) STA submitted a bid in response to USAC's RFP, although its bid, among other things, did not propose exclusivity; (5) an STA distributor won the bid to be UMP's exclusive tire supplier for certain races in 1994 but was then outbid by Hoosier in 1995; (6) after the filing of this lawsuit, STA responded with seemingly non-exclusive and ultimately unsuccessful bids to 2007 and 2008 RFPs from DMS; and (7) Lias Tire, an STA distributor, won an exclusive agreement with URC and further agreed to pay this sanctioning body $ 14,500.00 to be the single tire at approximately thirty (30) events.

Furthermore, Hoosier and DMS should not be held legally accountable for STA's recent pattern of submitting "non-exclusive" bids to the respective sanctioning bodies, even after the sanctioning bodies expressed a desire for an exclusive relationship.

[4] All six of STA's claims, including STA's illegal tying claim, were properly dismissed on this ground.

had already alleged. We find that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by rejecting a last-minute attempt to amend a pleading for the fourth [70] time.

Given the fact that this motion was filed sometime after the expiration of the May 30, 2008 deadline stated in the District Court's own scheduling order, the District Court purportedly applied the "good cause" standard of HN14[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 16(b)(4) (providing that "[a] schedule [set forth in a scheduling order] may be modified only for good cause and with the judge's consent"), as opposed to the more liberal approach to amendments established in HN15[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a)(2) (providing that "[t]he court should freely give leave when justice so requires"). It further stated that, unlike Rule 15(a)(2) and its focus on the question of prejudice to the non-moving party, Rule 16(b)(4) focuses on the moving party's burden to show due diligence. While the District Court indicated that we have yet to address this tension between Rule 15(a)(2) and Rule 16(b)(4), STA acknowledges on appeal that it had the burden to demonstrate good cause and due diligence (and the District Court itself ultimately found that the proposed amendment would in fact prejudice the other parties).

The District Court properly denied leave to amend. According to STA, it could not have discovered [71] the key facts supporting this new claim until it reviewed "hundreds of thousands of late-produced documents," which were not provided until after the deadline to amend had already passed. (Appellants' Brief at 57.) In turn, STA specifically takes issue with: (1) the District Court's statement that "'it is not easy [*85] for the Court to discern when Plaintiffs were, or should have been, aware of the basis for the group boycott claim;'" (2) the District Court's reliance on STA's failure to amend the scheduling order to seek more time for discovery (arguing that such a failure actually highlighted STA's own diligence); and (3) the District Court's finding of prejudice (on the grounds that STA never requested any additional discovery in its motion to amend). (Id. (citation omitted).) On the other hand, as a practical matter, it bears repeating that this was the fourth time that STA desired to amend its complaint in this already very complicated and highly contentious litigation, in which STA had already alleged multiple theories of relief. Furthermore, STA evidently informed the District Court that, "during an October 29, 2008 deposition of Hoosier's sales manager, Paul Mentink, Plaintiffs [72] learned that the 'Hoosier-only' rules known as the 'national sprint tire' rule . . . . originated from a July 2006 Sprint Summit meeting in Pittsburgh arranged by [DMS]." (A7 (citation omitted).) The District Court then, quite reasonably, noted that: (1) the original complaint actually included an attached copy of the December 15, 2006 statement by Hoosier announcing the creation of a new sprint car tire at the request of several sanctioning bodies and tracks; and (2) the previous complaints expressly alleged that Hoosier agreed with multiple sanctioning bodies to develop a new sprint tire that the sanctioning bodies would use in their races. The District Court also understandably wanted this complicated case to move forward to its ultimate resolution. In any case, any attempt to add a new claim would be moot given our ruling on the merits of STA's existing claims. Therefore, we are unable to find that the District Court abused its discretion here.

IV.

For the foregoing reasons we will affirm the District Court's rulings in favor of Hoosier and DMS.

Opinion

ORDER AND REASONS

Before the Court is the defendants' motion to dismiss. For the following reasons, the motion is DENIED.

Background

Gerald Paul Bodet, Jr. subscribes to premium cable television service through Charter Communications, Inc., and Charter Communications Holding Company LLC. [1] In this lawsuit, he submits that Charter forced him (and others similarly situated) [*2] to rent a cable set-top box as a condition of receiving premium cable service. This bundling of the set-top box rental and premium cable service, the plaintiff contends, creates a tying relationship in violation of the Sherman Act.

[1] The defendants are referred to jointly as Charter.

Charter is one of the five largest providers of cable multi-channel video programming distribution, providing service to customers in twenty-seven states. According to the FCC's 2009 Report, cable MPVD enjoys a nationawide market share of almost 70%. Like other cable MVPD providers, for a monthly fee, Charter offers two cable products: basic cable and premium cable. Basic cable consists of a relatively small number of networks or channels, including local channels. Premium cable includes a variety of additional programming and features, including an interactive programming guide, pay-per-view, on-demand, high definition channels, and a range of premium and speciality channels. Over three million people subscribe to premium cable through Charter. The tying product alleged here is premium cable.

The tied product is the set-top box, which performs two functions. It descrambles the cable signal so that a subscriber [*3] can access only those channels he has paid for. It also provides a two-way communication capability necessary for features like the interactive programming guide, pay-per-view, and on-demand. Charter does not manufacture set-top boxes, but instead purchases them from companies like Scientific Atlantic and Motorola before renting them to Charter customers. A set-top box can be purchased at a retail cost of about $110 and has a useful life of three to five years. The plaintiff insists that a customer who rents a set-top box soon pays more in rental fees than the worth of the box. Pursuant FCC regulations, Charter also provides customers with the option of renting a CableCARD that can be plugged into certain cable-ready televisions or non-Charter rented set-top boxes. The CableCARD performs the descrambling security function of the set-top box, but does not provide a customer with access to the two-way communication functions. The total number of Charter customers using a CableCARD is 30,165.

Bodet filed the present lawsuit on March 16, 2009, individually and on behalf of those similarly situated. He submits that in order to receive all of the premium cable functions, customers are forced [*4] by Charter, because of its market power, to rent set-top boxes from it. In May 2009, the case was dismissed pending a bankruptcy proceeding in which Charter was a debtor. The case was reopened on December 2009, and amended complaints were filed. Charter now moves to dismiss the plaintiff's third amended complaint.

Charter argues that the plaintiff has failed to state a claim for a Sherman Act tying violation. First, Charter submits that the plaintiff has failed to allege a plausible market. Charter points out that the plaintiff has excluded satellite MVPD and wireline MVPD from the premium cable product market although, Charter insists, these are reasonably interchangeable substitutes for Charter's premium cable service. Charter adds that the plaintiff fails to properly allege a product market because the plaintiff has made no allegations about the commercial realities of the industry within the relevant communities. Next, Charter submits that the plaintiff has failed to adequately allege Charter's market power in the tying market of premium cable. Charter insists that simply alleging that Charter has raised the price of its cable service or alleging that cable MVPD (including companies [*5] other than Charter) has a 69% nationwide market share is not enough to establish Charter's economic power. Finally, Charter submits that the plaintiff's complaint must fail because he has not properly alleged that Charter actually coerced its subscribers to rent set-top boxes in order to receive premium cable services. Charter points out that it provides a CableCARD, which allows customers to access premium and specialty channels without renting a set-top box and insists that, therefore, customers could not have been coerced into renting a set-top box.

The plaintiff responds first that satellite MVPD are not part of the relevant market because customers do not consider satellite MVPD interchangeable with cable MVPD. He points out that consumer surveys show that satellite customers are more satisfied with their service than cable users. He adds that satellite and cable cannot be interchangeable because they function optimally in different settings: Cable MVPD tends to operate best in more densely populated areas where its wires can reach a large number of people and justify the cost of the network, while satellite MVPD tends to operate best in rural areas, where there is more space to [*6] place dishes, fewer regulations prohibiting dishes, and more clear sight-lines for the dishes to access the satellite signal. Further, the plaintiff claims that cable MVPD offers premium services not offered by satellite, and satellite providers do not always carry local channels. Plaintiff adds that because cable MVPD and satellite require different equipment, a customer seeking to change its type of service will incur switching costs.

As to the inclusion of wireline providers, plaintiff insists that this type of service, including cable providers and fiberoptic telephone lines, do not dent Charter's market power for premium cable. Plaintiff submits that relatively few consumers have a wireline alternative. Plaintiff adds that even if wireline and satellite service were included in the relevant market, Charter would still have sufficient market power to illegally tie set-top box rental to its premium cable service.

Plaintiff submits that a tying claim is viable when a defendant possesses market power across approximately thirty percent of the market, see In re Wireless Tel. Sys. Antitrust Litig., 385 F. Supp. 2d 403, 418 (S.D.N.Y. 2005)), and insists that according to Charter's own [*7] press release, it has a penetration of services to forty percent of its potential customers. The plaintiff adds that Charter is one of the largest cable MVPD providers in the country and has repeatedly raised its prices for premium cable.

Plaintiff argues that Charter's market power is also demonstrated by the barriers to entry to the Premium Cable market. He points to the huge cost of building a wireline MVPD system and notes that cable MVPD providers have invested over $100 billion to construct advanced two-way fiberoptic networks. He adds that a tedious and costly franchising process in many localities creates a barrier to entry. For example, plaintiff claims that local franchising authorities often impose "build-out" requirements mandating that a new entrant overbuild all of the geographic area served by the incumbent cable MVPD provider and "level playing field" regulations requiring a new entrant to match all of the concessions provided by the incumbent. The plaintiff states that another entry barrier is created by incumbent cable MVPD providers offering valuable programming to which challengers do not have access. Additionally, the plaintiff points out that multiple dwelling [*8] units often have long term contracts with MVPDs with automatic renewal privileges that exclude challengers. These entry barriers, the plaintiff insists, prevent both satellite MVPD and other cable providers from competing with Charter.

Next, the plaintiff submits that he has properly defined the relevant geographic market as the areas in which Charter operates. This definition, plaintiff says, corresponds to the commercial realities because it defines the geographic market the same way the commercial realities have caused Charter to operate. Alternatively, the plaintiff submits that the geographic market is properly alleged as each of the local areas in which Charter operates: that is, certain communities in the twenty-seven states in which Charter operates.

Finally, the plaintiff insists that he has properly alleged coercion. He submits that the existence of the CableCARD does not prevent a finding of Charter's coercion. The plaintiff points out that Charter's website states that the CableCARD does not provide identical services to a set-top box. He adds that Charter's company representatives advise customers that they can only receive all premium cable services by renting a set-top [*9] box from Charter and that if the customers obtain a set-top box from any other source it will not work with Charter's cable MVPD system. Thus, the plaintiff insists, Charter explicitly conditions the sale of its premium cable on the rental of set-top boxes.

The plaintiff submits that CableCARDS are not substitutes for set-top boxes. CableCARDS do not provide access to the interactive programming guide, on-demand, or pay-per-view.

Law and Analysis

I.

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allows a party to move for dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Such a motion is rarely granted because it is viewed with disfavor. See Lowrey v. Tex. A & M Univ. Sys., 117 F.3d 242, 247 (5th Cir. 1997) (quoting Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1050 (5th Cir. 1982)). In considering a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Court "accepts 'all well-pleaded facts as true, viewing them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.'" See Martin K. Eby Constr. Co. v. Dallas Area Rapid Transit, 369 F.3d 464 (5th Cir. 2004) (quoting Jones v. Greninger, 188 F.3d 322, 324 (5th Cir. 1999)). But, in deciding whether [*10] dismissal is warranted, the Court will not accept conclusory allegations in the complaint as true. Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1050 (5th Cir. 1982). Indeed, the Court must first identify pleadings that are conclusory and, thus, not entitled to the assumption of truth. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, __ U.S. __, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). A corollary: legal conclusions "must be supported by factual allegations." Id. at 1950. Assuming the veracity of the well-pleaded factual allegations, the Court must then determine "whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement to relief." Id.

"'To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Gonzalez v. Kay, 577 F.3d 600, 603 (5th Cir. 2009)(quoting Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949 (2009))(internal quotation marks omitted). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quotation marks, citations, and footnote [*11] omitted). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. at 1949 ("The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully."). This is a "context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. "Where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557) (internal quotations omitted).

In deciding a motion to dismiss, the Court may consider documents that are essentially "part of the pleadings" — that is, any documents attached to or incorporated in the plaintiffs' complaint that are central to the plaintiff's claim for relief. Causey v. Sewell Cadillac-Chevrolet, Inc., 394 F.3d 285, 288 (5th Cir. 2004) (citing Collins v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, 224 F.3d 496, 498-99 (5th Cir. 2000)). Also, the Court is permitted to [*12] consider matters of public records and other matters subject to judicial notice without converting a motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment. See United States ex rel. Willard v. Humana Health Plan of Texas Inc., 336 F.3d 375, 379 (5th Cir. 2003).

II.

A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product." Schlotzsky's, Ltd. v. Sterling Purchasing & Nat'l Distrib., 520 F.3d 393, 405 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992)). Not all tying arrangements constitute antitrust violations. See Illinois Tool Works Inc. v. Independent Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 36, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006). To state a claim for an illegal tying arrangement, the plaintiff must allege: "(1) two separate products, the tying product and the tied product; (2) sufficient market power in the tying market to coerce purchase of the tied product; (3) involvement of a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied market; and (4) anticompetetive effects in the tied market." Bob Maxfield, Inc. v. Am. Motors Corp., 637 F.2d 1033, 1037 (5th Cir. 1981).

The Court's analysis [*13] of a tying arrangement "must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 18, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984) (abrogated on other grounds). The relevant market includes the characterization of the product itself and the geographic market in which the product is sold. R.D. Imports Ryno Indus., Inc. v. Mazda Distribs. (Gulf) Inc., 807 F.2d 1222, 1224-25 (5th Cir. 1987). "In ascertaining the relevant product market, courts consider the extent to which the seller's product is 'interchangeable in use' and the degree of 'cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it.'" Apani Sw., Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enters., Inc., 300 F.3d 620, 626 (5th Cir. 2002) (quoting C.E. Servs., Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241, 1245 (5th Cir. 1985)). "The cross-elasticity of demand for substitutes measures consumers' propensity to switch from one product to another, similar product when relative prices change." United Farmers Agents Assoc. v. Farmers Ins. Exchange, 89 F.3d 233, 236 n.2 (5th Cir. 1996). The geographic market is the area of effective competition, and it "must correspond to the commercial realities of the industry [*14] and be economically significant." Apani Sw., 300 F.3d at 626. Thus, in determining the geographic market, courts consider the size and cumbersomeness of the product, constraints on the free flow of competing goods into the area, and whether the area contains an appreciable segment of the product market. Id. at 626-27.

Market power, an essential element of the plaintiff's illegal tying claim, is "the power to force the purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14). It is "the ability to control prices or exclude competition." Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1386 (5th Cir. 1994). Market power can be inferred from "the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market." Id. Market power can also be demonstrated with evidence that a defendant has raised prices and driven out competition. See Breaux Bros. Farms, Inc. v. Teche Sugar Co., Inc., 21 F.3d 83, 87 n.3 (5th Cir. 1994) (quoting Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 477); see also Wilson v. Mobil Oil Corp., 984 F. Supp. 450, 458 (E.D. La. 1996). Courts may consider factors like "the strength of competition, [*15] probable development of the industry, the barriers to entry, the nature of the anticompetetive conduct, and the elasticity of consumer demand." Ginzburg v. Mem'l Healthcare Sys., Inc., 993 F. Supp. 998, 1026 (S.D. Tex. 1997) (quoting Pastore v. Bell Tel. Co. of Penn., 24 F.3d 508, 513 (3d. Cir. 1994)); see Tops Markets, Inc. v. Quality Markets, Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 98 (2d Cir. 1998). While the Supreme Court has explicitly found a thirty percent market share to be insufficient to show market power for a tying claim, Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 26, there is some suggestion that thirty percent may serve as a required minimum. Breaux Bros., 21 F.3d at 87 ("Some circuit courts have used 30% as a rough benchmark for the minimum amount of market power necessary to give rise to a per se violation of antitrust law."); see In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Lit., 385 F. Supp. 2d 403, 417 (S.D.N.Y. 2005).

Actual coercion is an indispensable element of a claim of illegal tying. Bob Maxfield, 637 F.2d at 1037. While "strong persuasion, encouragement, or cajolery to the point of obnoxiousness" is permitted, an antitrust violation occurs when the seller "coerces or forces its customer to buy the [*16] tied product in order to obtain the tying product." Id.

III.

The defendants do not dispute that the plaintiffs have sufficiently pled that premium cable and set-top boxes are two separate products, the tying product and the tied product respectively. Premium cable is a service, and the set-top box is the hardware used to access that service. Charter does not manufacturer set-top boxes, and according to the plaintiff, set-top boxes are available for retail sale.

The main issue here is whether the plaintiff has adequately plead the second element, that Charter has sufficient market power in the tying market to coerce purchase of the tied product. See Bob Maxfield, 637 F.2d at 1037. The plaintiff must also allege actual coercion. Id.

The plaintiff has defined the product market for the tied product as "premium cable," which includes both premium channels and two-way communication features like the interactive guide, pay-per-view, and On-Demand. The plaintiff insists that satellite MPVD and other fiberoptic and wireline MPVD should not be included as part of the product market because they are not substitutes. But, as an alternative, the plaintiff argues that even if satellite and fiberoptic [*17] MPVD are considered part of the product market, he has shown that Charter has market power. The Court finds that the product market must include satellite and fiberoptic MPVD that provide the same premium cable channels and two-way communication services as Charter. Despite the hardware costs a customer must incur when switching from cable MPVD to satellite MPVD, it would be a stretch of the imagination to suggest that, to the extent both MPVDs provide the same premium cable services, they do not provide the customer with reasonable alternatives for video-programming.

The geographic market is vaguely defined as either one market encompassing all the areas in which Charter operates or each local area in which Charter operates. While the defendant challenges the plaintiff's geographic market definition, the Court notes that this is not a case where the plaintiff has tried to define the geographic market so narrowly so as to ignore the commercial realties of effective competition. See Apani Sw., 300 F.3d at 626 (finding the plaintiffs' definition of geographic market inadequate where the plaintiff included only city-owned facilities and not other facilities in the city where the product, [*18] bottled water, was sold). The geographic market, as defined by the plaintiff here, includes all areas where Charter operates.

Thus, using these definitions, the plaintiff must show that Charter has sufficient market power in every area in which it operates to coerce customers for premium cable into renting set-top boxes as a condition of receiving the full premium cable product. The plaintiff's complaint alleges that out of all MPVD available to consumers nation wide, cable MPVD penetrates 69% of the market (compared to about 27% market share for satellite MPVD). While this statistic applies generally to all cable MPVD providers, [2] the plaintiff points out that Charter is one of the five largest cable companies nationally. Recognizing that being one of the largest does not necessarily reflect a dominant market share, [3] the plaintiff clarifies that "relatively few consumers have a second wireline alternative." [4] The plaintiff adds that due to the difference in premium operating environment between cable (urban) and satellite (rural), the market penetration by Charter in the more urban areas in which it provides service is likely even higher. Notably, the plaintiff does not explicitly [*19] allege Charter's market share in the markets in which it operates. To buttress its allegation of market power, the plaintiff adds that average cable MPVD prices (again, generally) have increased over 90% during the last ten years. He points out that Charter is able to bundle its MPVD services with broadband internet access and phone service, added features that satellite MPVD cannot offer. Further, the plaintiff notes that a potential cable MPVD competitor faces significant barriers to entry including infrastructure costs and burdensome franchise regulations. Although the plaintiff may have some hurdles to cross in proving that Charter has market power, the allegations in the complaint are sufficient to make such a finding plausible.

The plaintiff must also allege actual coercion. While he defines premium cable as including both premium channels as well as two-way communication features like the interactive guide, pay-per-view, and on-Demand, the plaintiff's allegations of actual coercion, concern the two-way communication features specifically. That is, the plaintiffs allege, and the defendants do not disagree, that in order to receive the complete premium cable [*21] product, a customer must rent a set-top box from Charter. Without the set-top box, the customer can, at best, receive only part of the premium cable product. The defendants suggest that coercion only occurs when the entire product is unavailable without purchase or rental of the tied product. See *In re Time Warner Inc. Set-Top Cable Television Box Antitrust Litig., No. 08-MDL-1995(PKC), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22369, 2010 WL 882989, at 8 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) ("As a matter of law, plaintiffs have failed to allege actual coercion with respect to those Premium cable Services that are available through the use of a CableCARD because they have not alleged that Time Warner's sale of all Premium Services was conditioned on the lease of a cable box."). [5] The Court is unwilling to subscribe to such a broad rule. In this case, the plaintiffs allege that without the set-top box, a customer cannot "access valuable Premium cable services that they have purchased." Plaintiffs also allege that a customer choosing to receive only premium cable channels by use of a CableCARD is also required to pay a monthly rental fee for the CableCARD and an installation fee. It is at least not irrational that coercion possibly occurs where a seller [*22] ensures that a valuable part of a tying product can only be accessed if the customer also rents the tied product from the seller.

Accordingly, the motion to dismiss is DENIED.

[2] If the FCC report, which is relied on in the plaintiff's complaint for the above allegations, is considered, Charter has a 6.2% share of the MPVD market nationwide. But, this statistic does little to clarify Charter's market share in the geographic markets in which it operates.

[3] Simply being one of the largest companies in a market "says nothing of a firm's ability to affect competition." Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 210 n.20 (4th Cir. 2002); [*20] see Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1387 (5th Cir. 1994) (finding that without more, descriptions that the defendant had the "lead product" and was the "market leader" were insufficient to show substantial market power). If the five largest companies each have eight percent of the market share, and the remaining competitors six percent each, it cannot be concluded that any one of the five largest companies has a predominant market share. See Dickson, 309 F.3d at 210 n.20.

[4] The FCC Report heavily relied on by the plaintiff in his complaint seems to confirm that "[A]lmost all consumers are able to obtain programming through over-the-air broadcast television, a cable service, and at least two [direct broadcast satellite] providers."

[5] In In re Time Warner, the Southern District of New York dismissed the plaintiff's complaint but granted leave to amend noting that two-way communication services might form a separate product that could be classified as the tying product. *2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22369, 2010 WL 882989, at 8. In finding that the plaintiffs had not shown coercion, the court distinguished another case where a district court, on similar facts, had found that actual coercion had been alleged because the plaintiffs in that case had alleged that they were charged higher fees for CableCARDs than for set-top boxes and the defendant had informed customers that CableCARDS were only available through the defendant for a monthly fee.
